Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Bouchard) agreed to.

Hon. Jake Epp (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-105 be amended in Clause 41 by striking out, in the French version, lines 15 and 16 at page 40 and substituting the following therefor:

'Code criminel s'applique, compte tenu des adapta-'

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this amendment removes an incorrect reference to the Criminal Code which had previously been corrected in the English version.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Bouchard) agreed to.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

That Bill C-105 be amended by adding immediately after line 38 at page 40 the following:

'44. No charge or complaint may be laid under sections 41, 42, and/or 43, except with the consent of the Minister'.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I moved this amendment as a safeguard. Even though I have disagreed with several Ministers of Transport over the years, I have found that all of them would not allow precipitous frivolous action to be taken against a citizen. That is the purpose of my amendment.

I do not hesitate to say that this Bill is far from perfect, but no one is perfect. It does not do much about railway safety other than spell out the kind of regulations the Minister or Governor in Council will be able to enact.

I want to thank the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary for their co-operation and willingness to be guided by a higher wisdom that came from the standing committee and a number of witnesses. The Government was most prepared to listen and accept reasonable proposals, and accepted some of our amendments during clause by clause study of the Bill.

It was wise to accept about a third of the 25 amendments that the Opposition Members proposed. The other amendments moved by the Government are acceptable, as we have already shown.

I hope the Government will be equally wise in the consideration of the two amendments moved by myself and the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), an amendment which he has been trying to pass in the House for a number of years.

The purpose of my amendment is to serve as a safeguard, not only for employees but also lower level management in the railroad. I realize that there are concerns that governments and Parliament should be careful about how much authority under the law they give to Ministers. It has been my experience over the years, watching ministers at both federal and provincial levels, that whenever they abused their power they did not last long. They were either kicked out by their leader or the voters.

One has to trust that a Minister in any portfolio, at any level of government, will use those powers with great discretion. Sometimes they have used too much discretion in exercising their powers.

Clause 41 of the Bill states that anyone who, among other things, violates a rule in force under Clause 19 or 20 is guilty of an offence, punishable on summary conviction. That has never occurred before in transportation legislation. We know that the implementation of these provisions is an experiment.

There is nothing in the Bill in its present form to prevent middle or senior management in a railway company from charging their own employees with violation of company rules. Do not think they would not do it. That was always the case under railway rules before.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, with great respect to my colleague, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties. It is approaching five o'clock and I believe you will find unanimous consent not to see the clock so that we can finish this Bill shortly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to that effect?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, for a minute I thought the Parliamentary Secretary did not want me to finish my speech. But I know my colleagues opposite are dying to hear me.

Under the normal railway rules the railway could charge an employee, discipline him, suspend him and bar any raise. This action could only be taken under railway rules. The only other way a railway employee could be charged is pursuant to the Criminal Code. An employee who is proven negligent in a train wreck could be charged with anything from murder to manslaughter, to criminal negligence. I have attended such court cases as a witness.

The purpose of the amendment is to protect employees, not only union employees but lower and middle management employees, from frivolous or malicious prosecutions by over-zealous employers.

• (1700)

The second major thrust of this Bill is to put responsibility for railway safety into the hands of the Minister. Railway safety is his first responsibility. The enforcement and application of the legislation is his second most important responsibility. Since the Minister is finally and totally responsible even with respect to something of which he is totally unaware, he is still responsible. If an employee was charged and taken out of service, if he lost pay and had to go to court on what was finally concluded to be a frivolous or malicious charge, then, of course, the court would find so and the employee would be reinstated with back pay and everything else. In the meantime there would have been months and months of grievance procedures, court cases and so on. All this amendment does is ask that the Minister in effect serve as a sort of final adviser to the Solicitor General as to whether or not a charge will be laid under the provisions of this Bill.

The Minister makes the final examination to ensure the change was not frivolous or malicious, and he could say so to the Department of Justice or to the Solicitor General, who would in turn pass it on to a Crown prosecutor. If a railway company on its own volition wanted to lay a charge, that is a different ball game. But under this Act, as it stands, someone in the railway itself could lay a charge. As a protection against frivolous and malicious charges, and also as a protection for whistleblowers, those who point out that such and such happened, I would ask that the Parliamentary Secretary agree with this amendment. It can not do any harm unless we have a bad Minister of Transport, and I do not think he is prepared to admit that. It cannot do any harm but it can do a great deal of good. I hope the Government will accept my amendment.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about it, when the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) lays an amendment down, it receives serious consideration because he has had many years of experience in transport, having worked for the railway himself, and he brings a great deal of expertise to this area. I have sympathy for his goal in the sense of him wanting to be able to block the railway companies from maliciously laying charges where he feels it is not appropriate. However, there are some problems with the motion which would state that no charge or complaint may be laid except with the consent of the Minister. Even as late as today I spoke again with the officials in the Department of Transport, who have given the matter a lot of thought. I spoke again personally with lawyers from the Department of Justice. We believe on balance that the problems that would be created by this type of consent being required of the Minister before a charge could be laid overrules the interests the Hon. Member for Regina West is trying to cover.

There are, according to the officials, very few cases where a political screen is put in before a charge can be laid. That in a sense is what the amendment does. There is one, I gather, in the Official Secrets Act, but that is a matter of high state treason and high state policy under the Canadian Security Intelligence Act. Another example of where it is used is with hate literature under the Criminal Code of Canada. These are very major actions and processes involving the very essence of the state whereas this is a Railway Safety Act. Therefore, the feeling is that it would be unusual to add to this normal statute, if you will, a similar type of political screening.

The normal rule is that the matter would be investigated by the police and by the safety inspectors. Provincial attorneys general might play a role. The federal Attorney General might play a role. However, it is felt that to give that power to a line department Minister, on balance, would be unwise. I ask Members to vote against my friend's amendment even though we respect what he is trying to do. I think there would be other remedies, perhaps in the court itself. Malicious prosecution would be available, perhaps with the court costs.

There would certainly be a remedy through the collective bargaining agreement. If management were to abuse this privilege, there is no doubt there would be hundreds of grievances laid down in other areas. There are all sorts of remedies under the collective bargaining agreement. I think that would be sufficient and I am, therefore, asking Members to vote against the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 5, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin)?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Benjamin: On division.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 6.

Hon. Jake Epp (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

That Bill C-105 be amended in Clause 44 by striking out line 36 at page 42 and substituting the following therefor:

"Referred to in paragraphs (1)(a) to (g) or (i) shall".

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, briefly, this amendment corrects the reference in subsection 44(1) to enable the payment of remuneration and allowances to a representative of the public on the Railway Safety Consultative Committee. In the way it was drafted, the public members could not be paid and that is not what we had intended.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard)?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Bouchard) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The last question is on Motion No. 7.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre) moved:

That Bill C-105 be amended in Clause 106 by striking out line 4 at page 63 and substituting the following therefor:

"seventy-five thousand dollars.""

He said: Mr. Speaker, the story behind this amendment began, I guess, in my experience five or six years ago when several of my constituents reported a problem with a fire that had occurred along the main line of the CPR. There were three farmyards that suffered fire damage as a result of a fire that had escaped from the property of the railway.

• (1710)

The farmers made inquiries about compensation. There were several outbuildings burned, one farm and some haystacks at another. The total damage was in the vicinity of $45,000 to $50,000 in terms of property and feed destroyed. They found the CPR very accommodating. They also found that no matter how accommodating everyone was to settle this matter, there was only $5,000 to distribute between the three people who had suffered losses. Thus they received approximately one-third of $5,000 each for an accumulated loss in the area of $50,000.

The problem I found when they complained to me about it was with respect to Section 338 of the old Railway Act. As a consequence I moved and prepared a motion which, luckily, was drawn and debated in this House which reads in part:

That this House recommend that the Government give serious consideration to amending Section 338 of the Railway Act to provide for increased compensation for victims of fire set by railway operations in order to reflect current replacement costs on items lost through property damage.

Subsequent to a short debate that motion was passed unanimously by the House. Since the Railway Act was recently opened up, I again approached the Government to remind it that it was the will of the House that that particular section be changed to reflect 1986 or 1987 costs. Since it is now 1988 we presume it would reflect 1988 costs, since this $5,000 limit has been in place in the Railway Act since 1903. As the House will know, one dollar in 1903 would buy at least 14 to 15 times more than it will buy today. As a consequence it was suggested that the $5,000 be raised to $75,000 as per this amendment.

There were some subsequent negotiations to attempt to provide an indexing component to this amendment. However, it was found to be very difficult to do something in that order. Thus I fear that subsequent Members of this House 40 or 50 years from now may find that they are having the same difficulty that my constituents had. However, at the moment we are bringing it up to debate with this amendment so that not only will justice be done for those people who have fires in the next year or two, but in fact we will be complying with the wishes of the House of Commons as declared in a motion some years ago.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Government is prepared to accept this amendment. This shows that once again Private Members of Parliament can be important in making public policy.

With respect to indexing in the future, it is also because of parliamentary reform that it is possible for a Member in a year or two to put forward an amending Bill that would increase this amount. It may well get on the votable list subject only to the financial restriction of the Royal Recommendation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 7 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion No. 7 (Mr. Althouse) agreed to.

Hon. Jake Epp (for Minister of Transport) moved that the Bill, as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a third time—

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent, now?

Mr. Benjamin: At the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my House Leader is not available. I do not think that I have any authorization or instruction to agree to complete third reading of this Bill. I am not sure if one of my colleagues knows either. We agreed to complete report stage—

Mr. McDermid: And third reading.

Mr. Benjamin: I just said that I am not sure what the deal was among the House Leaders. I do not want to make a mistake and get shot down in the next caucus meeting.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I can assure my colleague that it is my clear understanding that there was an all-Party agreement to finish third reading today. I am taking the hook off the Hon. Member and putting it on myself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Bill be read a third time, by unanimous consent, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp (Provencher (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I wish to thank members of the committee for the very good work that they put into this Bill. This is part of an overall reorganization of the Department of Transport. It started with Bill C-18, Bill C-19, Bill C-21, Bill C-52, and Bill C-105, which is the final step that will go before the Standing Committee on Transport. It is the Standing Committee that really has done yeoman's service on the part of all three Parties in getting this whole reorganization on transportation law through as public policy for the country.

I always feel that the back-benchers do not receive the credit that they deserve. In this Parliament alone there have been almost 200 bills passed. Yet none of those Bills can get through unless ordinary Members of Parliament sit for hours and hours in committees hearing hundreds of witnesses and then make recommendations to the House as a whole. Back-benchers do not receive enough credit from the public of Canada. I believe that they deserve it.

I am thanking the Members who have worked so hard and diligently on the Standing Committee on Transport.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to comment briefly on Bill C-105. Again, there was full co-operation on both sides when this Bill was considered in committee. The measures proposed in this Bill are long overdue, and it is too bad the accident at Hinton happened before we started this exercise. Mr. Speaker, I welcome the inclusion in this Bill of many of the recommendations of the Foisy Report, such as providing for rest periods, which is already being done. The report's recommendation for a new safety mechanism instead of the dead man's brake has also been implemented. The new system requires some kind of activity in the locomotive compartment, and otherwise the train stops automatically. So this measure has already been put into effect.

Judge Foisy also recommended including a provision that already exists under the Aeronautics Act, namely that physicians disclose any potentially hazardous condition an employee may have. The Bill acts on this recommendation as well. This is a very important measure, Mr. Speaker. The legislation would apply to designated categories of employees. When the employees consult their family doctor, if according to the latter, the patient has a condition that would be a threat to safe operations, he will have to point this out to the medical authorities of the railway company.

We did have some reservations and we wanted to be sure that in this case, the employee would be the first to be notified.

During our discussions in committee, committee members agreed to amend the Bill to ensure that reasonable steps were taken to first inform the person concerned, the employee.

This Bill also tells us that inspection, compliance, and enforcement of railway safety standards will be improved by granting broader powers to inspectors. What the Government does not tell us is that the present number of inspectors is probably not quite adequate. To ensure that safety is taken seriously, the Government will have to provide the necessary funding to employ inspectors in sufficient numbers so that they can carry out their responsibilities. This is definitely a priority, Mr. Speaker.

The report published on the use of drugs by railway employees is a clear indication that we must proceed with certain measures, and everyone seems to agree, employers, unions and workers. I consider it essential that assistance programs be set up for employees who are addicted to drugs or alcohol. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I proposed an amendment to Section 18 of the Bill, which was intended to establish and finance such programs. After discussion in committee, the proposal was reformulated and accepted. I believe that this amendment, Mr. Speaker, was most positive.

The environment is also a subject of concern to everyone; it is of great concern to the members of my party, Mr. Speaker. This Bill may also have an impact on the environment and that is why I have suggested some amendments. For example, paragraph 24(1)(e) of the Bill concerns the removal of trees, brush and weeds on railway lines. I have suggested that alternatives to chemicals be used for this purpose.

I consider this matter to be very important, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the members of the Committee for having kindly accepted this recommendation.

• (1720)

[English]

I also propose that Clause 41 of the Bill be amended in order that heavier fines would be levied in cases of contravention. This was also approved by the members of the committee.

Another matter the committee agreed upon was to ensure that there would be good representation of all concerned groups on the new railway safety consultative committee. This was also agreed to by all members of the committee.

The committee also agreed to retain Section 1 of the Railway Relocation and Crossing Act. Committee members have received numerous representations from municipalities across the country concerned about the loss of section 1. Again, the committee agreed to incorporate this Section in the present legislation.

Over-all the introduction of this legislation, including the measures relating to drug testing, have received widespread support from almost everyone concerned. The task force composed of government officials, the unions, and the railroads did a very good job collaborating with one another and coming out with fairly good proposals for change. All in all, outside of a few measures, the Liberal Party has no problem in supporting this legislation.

As I stated earlier, we will be keeping an eye open to ensure that the Government provides adequate funds to undertake the level of inspection necessary to police the various measures brought forward in this legislation.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to say a few words. Initially, I planned on only three minutes, but the Parliamentary Secretary made the mistake of mentioning Bills C-18 and C-19. That revived some bitter memories. He should not have mentioned them. I will not dwell on those at any great length, I promise.

Under the current regime of privatization, deregulation, the trade deal, et cetera, whether it is in the private sector, the public sector, or the Government, everybody states that safety will not be compromised. We have heard that from day one. We heard it as far back as the days of the late unlamented Otto Lang when he was Minister of Transport.

Mr. McDermid: I hear he is coming back.

Mr. Benjamin: Not if I can help it he is not. He is going to try in Saskatchewan, and that is NDP country now.

In terms of rail safety or transportation safety, inspection, maintenance, enforcement, and all the aspects that go into safe public transportation, it does not matter whether it is privately owned, publicly owned, or a combination of both. It does not matter whether it is privately owned in a municipality, or by a municipality, or a provincial government, or a national government. All of them are a public utility, which everyone has to use directly and indirectly. Therefore, no matter what the regime, a national Government has a responsibility that is unavoidable and which it cannot evade.

There have been moves in good directions. This Bill is one of them. The Aviation Safety Board, Accident Investigation Board, is a good move, even though it might have some problems at the moment. There are other areas in which Government and Parliament have moved. But it is not enough to say in a law that there will be adequate inspection and enforcement, that safety will not be compromised unless the law is truly implemented.

I have seen no great moves by the Government or the previous one to increase the number of inspectors, or increase the training of inspectors. In the crucial area of aviation safety we are desperately short of air traffic controllers. It takes three to five years before they are competent to be a controller on their own. We are short of air traffic controllers. All the positions such as air traffic controllers, train dispatchers, locomotive engineers are high stress positions and have to do with safety. They do not have to do with competence. Yet we find a strange dragging of feet on employee assistance programs.

Before I leave the safety matter, I wish to mention that yesterday afternoon I received a long-distance phone call from a lady in Alabama. She is still trying to find out how and why her son was killed in the Gander crash. What does one say? The only thing I can send her at the moment is an article in today's Maclean's magazine. None of us on either side of the House have a darned thing yet that we can say. Her Congressman and Senator have been getting absolutely nowhere. They have been getting roadblocked in the U.S. administration because Canada is not yet ready to tell them anything. She has made appeals to the U.S. Army, and I understand that she may have written to the Government of Canada.

The Aviation Safety Board must conduct inquiries with complete freedom and independence. It must also set up separate inquiries within an over-all inquiry. I know that that is the case. There may be an inquiry into icing and de-icing with another inquiry going on about engine failure, and a third one going on about fire on board the aircraft if forensic evidence points to people being dead or unconscious before the crash occurred.

I understand that there is some kind of disagreement or fratricidal war going on about that particular inquiry with the Aviation Safety Board. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will tell the Minister to sit down with those people and tell them to get their act together, complete the investigation and ensure that it is more than thorough.

I want Hon. Members to remember and reflect upon the outfit that owned that particular DC-8 aircraft. It was a bad operator. Goodness knows how many times it was charged and fined by the Federal Aviation Administration in the United States following the 1977 deregulation. Deregulation means that the most reputable, safe carrier in any mode, rail, air, or road, is forced to cut corners and to cheat in order to compete. That is why there must be an equity of treatment, enforcement and inspection in all modes of transportation. We cannot do it to one and not do it to the other. This means that the Government has to put in place, by my estimation, 300 to 400 more inspectors for rail, air, marine and road safety.

We have made some great advances in this area, but every year I look in the Estimates for an increase in inspectors. Every year I see that the number of inspectors will stay the same or will be decreased because of person-years or the amount of money available.

The proof is in the pudding. There has to be more bucks there. If the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) is having problems with the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I invite him to take not only his own colleagues but Members of the Opposition into his confidence and we will all kick them around.

If there is any one increase in taxes that taxpayers will not object to and will in fact applaud, it is an increase in taxes because of increased expenditures in transportation safety, inspection, enforcement and maintenance requirements. I have yet to find a taxpayer, even the most right-wing, wild-eyed Tory, who would object to a few bucks a year more in taxes to do that. The Government need have no qualms about increasing expenditures in that area because there will be no objection from the Canadian people. I said that transportation companies are public utilities, and they are, no matter who owns them.

I would like to say a word about employee assistance programs. During committee hearings, debate and when we discussed the Bill clause by clause, the discussions about the abilities of employees, competent, experienced, trained journeymen, in whatever capacity, got shifted to nothing but alcohol and drug abuse. That is the impression one got. However, there is more to it than that. I think the first priority should be to have employee assistance programs for stress.

If there is stress on the job or off the job which one cannot help but carry to work, it affects one's ability to carry out one's duties because other things are on one's mind and it can also lead to increased use of alcohol or drugs. I think that one is subsequent to the other. I would hope that the Minister would sit down with the railway management and the railway brotherhoods to help them reach a mutual agreement on an employee assistance program.

We can take as a model the program of the Chesapeake and Ohio. We heard a witness from St. Thomas, Ontario, and another from Cleveland, both involved in that railway operation, and we found that that operation has an excellent program which could be a model for our country, not only in the railway sector but in other modes of transportation.

The Minister needs to provide facilities, encouragement, persuasion, arm-twisting and anything else he has to do to have the railway management and the railway brotherhoods reach such a mutual agreement, whether it is a part of a collective agreement or is a separate document. However they want to do it is up to them, but it must be put in place. It can then serve as a model not only for rank and file employees but for management as well in a host of other industries.

Air Canada has in the main set the example for maintenance, safety, inspection and training. It has always been a leader. In fact, it has received international awards on two or three occasions, as I recall, because of that corporate leadership and its efficiency in its dealings with its employees, though there is the odd strike which will happen once in a while.

I want to illustrate the danger the Government will have to face up to when it comes to deregulation. A reputable carrier, whether it be CNR, CPR, Air Canada or Canadian Air International, is faced with competing with other outfits.

Some new companies have just started up, fly-by-night operations. They face international competition. CP, CN, Air Canada and Canadian Airlines have always had a standard higher than the minimum required by the Government of Canada or the regulatory agency. What we have done now is forced them to bring their standards down to what the Government minimum is. These companies need to be applauded for maintaining standards which are higher than the minimum requirements. Under the kind of regime this Government wants and what is going on south of the 49th parallel, those days are numbered unless and until the Government shows with funding and by example that no carrier publicly or privately owned will be allowed or will be tolerated which does not maintain maximum standards of maintenance, repair, inspection and all the other things that go into the safety of public transportation.

Let me illustrate what position our railroads are now put in because of deregulation. The transportation annex to the trade agreement got dropped, thank goodness. But, under deregulation, Canada will now allow competitive line rates. They are against the law in the United States. An American railroad can then come into Canada, siphon off business from CP and CN under competitive line rates, but CP and CN are not allowed to do the same in the United States. What are those two Canadian railroads to do? They will cut costs. They have to. They have been left no other choice. Two reputable corporations have been left no other choice but to cut costs.

When they cut costs, they cut corners and when they cut corners they cut safety. That is the inevitable result with this ideological hysteria and hypnotism of the Tories about deregulation. We are going to go full circle. Mark my words, Mr. Speaker. I plan on being here for several more years. You will see the Government of the day whether it is Tory, Liberal or NDP go full circle and reinstate regulations to make these corporations do what they refuse to do under deregulation or were not allowed to do under deregulation.

Sometimes you need to have regulations, not to stop corporations from doing something, but to make them do something. There is a great deal of difference. I do not think that is Government on somebody's back by having regulations that make corporations do something. It makes them do something in the interests, not only of efficient and safe transportation, but in the interests of the travelling public and in the interests of safety.

I hope the Government does not think that with this Bill it can rest on its laurels. We will be watching the Estimates very carefully. We will be rising to ask questions in Question Period when there is a shortage of inspectors. We will be raising Cain in the committee and in the House when it is obvious that safety, maintenance and inspection standards have not been complied with or are not at a level where the public can feel as safe as it is possible to feel.

We agree that this legislation should pass today. We hope the Government will proceed with total accident and safety regulations for all modes of transportation with an accident investigation board which covers rail, highway, marine—the whole ball of wax. On the committee I, for one, am prepared to work at this and to work hard. The quicker the better. Let us not rest on this Bill. There is a lot more to be done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It being 14 minutes before the hour of six o'clock, I would like to call it six o'clock on the understanding that the Private Member's Motion to be introduced and debated later today by the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) will remain in the same place and be discussed on Thursday of this week.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the motion of the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) to keep its place in the order of precedence?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to address the problem of those Members of Parliament who are speaking in the Adjournment Debate and who have 15 minutes to get here. I take it that the House will respect the order of those Members, namely, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He and I are here, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: If the Minister is going to answer, then I will sit down. This is an exceptional circumstance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the House agrees, we will proceed with the first Member listed for the Adjournment Debate and if the second Member is not here, we will adjourn for a few minutes.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—GUIDELINES ON ETHICAL CONDUCT OF RESEARCH INVOLVING HUMAN SUBJECTS

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) some days back about the guidelines on research involving human subjects, because just at that time the Medical Research Council of Canada had adopted a report dealing with that subject. This document is extremely timely because it raises central issues respecting the protection of human life in society.

The Medical Research Council accepted the report which I hold here as the MRC's guidelines on research involving human subjects. It requires all research funds to be in compliance with these guidelines.

By way of introduction, let me briefly make a few comments about this report and the guidelines. First, it is very clear that this document, and the members of the Medical Research Council Standing Committee on Ethics in Experimentation who authored it are experts in the subject. They come from diverse backgrounds reflecting medical, legal, ethical, theologic, and scientific backgrounds. No one can take lightly the conclusions they come to in the report. I would defer personally to any of them on this subject. I do not raise this subject in Parliament as an expert but simply as a concerned Canadian who sees many straws in the wind and an historic opportunity to weave those straws together into something new, a human life Act.

This document further sets out a fundamental principle on page 12:

> The Standing Committee believes that the basic ethical principle in research, as in health care, is respect for life. From this principle flow others: the concept of autonomy, the duty to beneficence, and the duty to justice.

From the principles one quickly gets into the practicalities. We find, for example, on page 32, with regard to research with fetuses and embryos, the following:

> At this time, the legal status of embryos and fetuses is not well-defined, nor is the social consensus. While issues of consent and autonomy may not therefore apply, clear ethical concerns arise from the inarguable fact that embryos and fetuses are human life forms.

Finally, I would refer to page 11 of this document which gave rise to my question to the Minister wherein the standing committee states its belief as follows:

> ... at this time the use of Guidelines within the current body of law is sufficient to reinforce the ethical conduct of research with human subjects.

The significant phrase there is "within the current body of law". It is at this juncture that I submit the Medical Research Council of Canada and those adopting this approach of guidelines only in this difficult area of human experimentation are perhaps pushing an empty wheelbarrow. To say that guidelines will suffice within the body of existing law is to refer to something that truly does not exist. The existing body of law in this area is clearly unsettled.

That is why I advocated on February 4 in this House the formation of a new federal statute which I call the human life Act. It would draw together in a single statute all aspects of intentional intervention in the human life cycle.

It would deal not only with the question of abortion, which is so galvanizing this country and this Parliament these days, but with other questions such as genetic engineering, surrogate motherhood, euthanasia, and on and on the list goes. The newspapers are full of it. The Toronto Star of March 29, 1988 had an article headlined "Genetic Tests Open Scary World of Super-Species". The subheading is "Gene-Splicing Promises Society Huge Pay-Offs, But Others Fear Biological Chaos".

We even have the religious press replete with concerns expressed on this subject. For example, the April issue of The United Church Observer had a series of articles under the general heading "Manufacturing a Miracle". One week after I called for a human life Act, the West German Government announced plans to ban research on human embryos, outlaw surrogacy, and curb artificial insemination. The new legislation will forbid surrogate motherhood, production of human embryos for research, measures allowing the choice of a child's sex in artificial insemination, and attempts to breed mixtures of humans and animals.

We have the Canadian Coalition for Reproductive Technologies seeking a royal commission on this subject. It states in its documents that as a society we are not ready to pass laws and that we need first to do the necessary research and engage in a broad, informed national debate. That debate is under way, and I want to see it brought to the floor of the House of Commons in new legislation that can encompass all these questions. The debate will take place this summer at the Fifty-Seventh Couchiching Conference, a well-known national forum for dialogue on public issues. That conference will deal with biological engineering, a blessing or curse.

I have been in touch with David Suzuki who popularizes questions of scientific research in this country. He has gone back to the whole question of genetic engineering and what the Nazis were busy with under the guise of science in Germany in the 1930s. That had as its dimension on one hand the elimination of millions of people, and on the other hand the biological efforts to create a master race. In a letter to me dated May 10, David Suzuki says:

> I think you've raised a very important issue and I agree we must not get bogged down on abortion alone. We have acquired great manipulative powers that take us into completely uncharted territory. I believe we need a Royal Commission to look at the issue.
> Please press on with your efforts.

Be it a royal commission, be it Bill C-107 dealing with patenting forms of human life, be it the report of the Law Reform Commission, I have much more on this subject that I want to bring forward in the discussion. However, given my limited time, I call upon the Government to take a broader initiative at this time and set all this discussion in the framework of a new human life Act.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is evident to the Hon. Member as well as others that one cannot address this issue in any depth in the three minutes I have, but I can make one or two points, and that is the purpose of my being here.

First, I want to commend the Hon. Member for his initiative and leadership, not only bringing this issue to the House but also for his efforts in the promotion of a human life Act.

Second, the MRC guidelines are not the first Canadian examination of these issues. It is important to note that this area is moving very quickly for us as a society and as members of the human race. Guidelines are important and they are a good piece of work; they flow from national agreements as well as the summit conference on bioethics which was held in April, 1987. The findings from that conference were taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the Venice Summit a month or two later. No matter the political, ethical, social, or religious make-up of nations, how do we deal with these issues is the question.

The Hon. Member made a very telling point, that the guidelines stress the fundamental importance of respect for human life as the key principle underlining the decisions by researchers and research ethic boards alike, and the difficult ethical decisions intrinsic with human subjects. In conjunction with the guiding principles of justice and of beneficence, this principle, as implemented through the practices developed in these guidelines, ensures that priority in research ethics will be given to protection of human life.

While that assurance is there, I do not think that is a complete answer. The reason I say that that is for the last two years plus is that I have been meeting with groups and asking: "What do we do with respect to developing medical technology? Is our moral and ethical position keeping pace with technology?"

I have said for some time, quite apart from the abortion question and the January 28 decision of the Supreme Court, that I feel personally—and it is difficult for a Minister to put it in that context, but I know the Hon. Member will know what I mean—that we have to explore the possibility of either a royal commission or a ministerial task force to broaden the base and come together as Canadians with a medical system which is considered one of the best in the world, concerning the ethics regarding the preservation of life that are as important a factor as medical technology, experimentation, or the medical breakthroughs we all celebrate.

I cannot go much beyond that other than to commend the Hon. Member and others in this House who have similar viewpoints on the need to explore these questions over the broad range which the Member has brought forward, and I thank him for that.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—DAMAGE INFLICTED BY EMISSIONS FROM UNITED STATES/ACID RAIN—DAMAGES SUFFERED BY MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCERS—POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter is acid rain tonight and specifically concerns the ineptness of the present Government in dealing with Washington. On the one hand one must recognize that the Government of Canada, in the last four years, has completed in a satisfactory manner the negotiations with provincial Governments on the reduction of acid gas pollution. In that way it completed the work initiated by the Liberal Government in 1983-84.

One must conclude at the same time, with a sense of regret, that the foreign policy of the Government on acid rain has been a series of mistakes and failures. We will recall that in 1985 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) raised the expectations of Canadians by emphasizing that he had a special relationship with President Reagan in Washington and that, on the basis of that special relationship, he would resolve the bilateral problem between Ottawa and Washington and obtain a commitment from the U.S.A. to cut its transboundary pollution.

In 1986 the Prime Minister made a fatal mistake by agreeing to and applauding the recommendation of the acid rain envoys to launch a clean coal technology program over the next five years in order to accelerate a process of research and demonstration projects south of the border.

I say that was a mistake. The Prime Minister's position on behalf of Canadians should have been that in the United States they should do what they want to do and what needs to be done, but that that which counts for us in Canada is the pollution which comes across the border, and that we want the Americans to join in the signing of the international protocol in Helsinki which requires signatories to cut SO2 pollution by at least 30 per cent by 1993.

Having raised expectations in 1985 and given the wrong signal to Washington in 1986, we come to the 1988 Summit and the purpose of my question today. Why at this stage, on the eve of completing the fourth year in office, did the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) not prepare a bill for damages which we incur yearly as a result of this transboundary pollution?

We have now entered a new phase. We have evidently given up on the special relationship with Washington. We have seen very meagre, if any, results flowing from the clean coal technology program announced and endorsed in 1986. It is, therefore, only sensible to conclude that in the fourth year of the administration, having seen no results from the special relationship and the clean coal technology program, Ottawa would have to use language which is understood in Washington, that is, the yearly presentation of a bill which would indicate the damage caused to Canada by the million of tonnes of pollution which crosses the border into Ontario, Quebec, and the Atlantic provinces.

It is for that reason, that I asked this question and prodded the Government. I asked it to prepare such a bill in anticipation of the summit to indicate the damage to our maple sugar producers, the damage to buildings and structures, and the damage to the Muskoka and other resorts, where the losses are reasonably easily quantifiable, where tourist traffic has been affected by the acidification of lakes which has killed the fish in those lakes. The bill should indicate the damage incurred in the growth of our forests, particularly in eastern Canada, as a result of this acidification of soil. It should indicate the damage caused to forestry, to fisheries, and, in some cases in southwestern Ontario, to agriculture.

I admit that in some cases the calculation of the damage may not be easy, while in some cases it may be readily available. Nevertheless, the effort must be made. In this respect we have not developed, even within Environment Canada, the necessary skills because of the cuts in person-years that have been applied as a result of the freeze on its budget. Environment Canada has not even kept up with inflation.

Tonight I want the Parliamentary Secretary to answer in the House the question I asked the Prime Minister. Why is Canada not getting to the point of developing the necessary knowledge and preparing a yearly bill for the damage being caused to our natural resources, to our tourist industry, and to all other facets of Canadian economic and natural resource activities, which it can present to Washington so as to demonstrate to the Americans that we mean business, that we are suffering damage and want compensation. I believe that is a reasonable request, in the fourth year of this administration.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is committed to finding a real and lasting solution to the serious environmental and economic damage being caused by acid rain. That is why our Government, unlike the previous Government, has implemented major emission reductions in Canada and has pressed the United States for targeted, mandated emission reductions necessary to stop damage to the Canadian environment.

I want to remind Hon. Members that this Government has been very clear in identifying to United States decision makers and the American public the costs, both environmentally and economically, related to acid rain damage.

More than 350,000 lakes in eastern Canada are vulnerable. Approximately 150,000 lakes have acidity levels at which detrimental effects begin to occur. Some 14,000 have already been acidified, which means they are essentially devoid of normal aquatic life.

More than 50 per cent of eastern Canada's forests grow in areas where rainfall is acidic. More than 80 per cent of all Canadians live in areas where acidic deposits exceed acceptable levels.

In addition to these environmental costs, economically, acid rain is endangering the natural resource base in an area of eastern Canada that measures about 2.6 million square kilometres. This resource base sustains approximately 8 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product and some 250,000 jobs.

We estimate that the annual value of acid rain damage in Canada at approximately $1 billion.

We have told the Americans that we will accept nothing less than an agreement which includes specific emission reduction targets and timetables that will reduce the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide from the United States into eastern Canada to about two million tonnes in a time frame compatible with our own control program.

If the Hon. Member is suggesting that Canada should be prepared to accept something other than the reductions required to protect our environment, that we might accept money rather than reductions, then I can only say to the Member that the Canadian environment is not for sale at any price. Submitting a bill implies that when it is paid the obligation has been met in full. This Government cannot and will not give the United States a way out of its internationally recognized obligation not to dump its garbage in its neighbour's yard. This Government is not prepared to sell the Canadian environment, at any cost, as a toxic waste dump site for continuing U.S. acid rain emissions.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—VIEWS OF RALPH NADER/MINISTER'S POSITION.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today with respect to a question I put to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) who is often referred to in this place as the Minister responsible for corporate affairs. On August 19, I asked the Minister a question about the high cost of prescription drugs. The Minister, in his wisdom or lack of it, responded in this way, and I quote from Hansard at page 8202:

> In Canada we have medicare, and we have social safety nets. Eighty-five per cent of the population is covered by drug plans, including virtually 100 per cent of senior citizens. No one who receives welfare goes without drugs. We have a tremendously beneficial health care system to which Bill C-22 is a positive addition.

This was said by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for the Government of Canada. I wish to read into the record a letter I recently received from an individual:

> I am writing you concerning the price of prescription drugs. I am a fifty-five year old woman with angina, my husband is a retired veteran on a fixed income, he cannot pay for my drugs on what he receives, and I'm not suppose to work; but had to take a part-time job to pay for my pills. When I started to take "Cardizen", the price was a little over $44.00; now the price is $93.89. The price goes up every two to three months, soon at this rate I won't be able to pay for them with what I make. I cannot get help for this as I'm not old enough.
> I am including a copy of my prescriptions from April 4, 1987 to April 11, 1988. There is no reason in this world why the price should go up that much. As far as I'm concerned, it is out and out robbery. I'm bringing this to your attention in hopes that you can do something about it.

That is the kind of letter we in Parliament have been receiving since the Government passed Bill C-22. Both in substance and in its effects, the Bill is causing havoc among those Canadians who do not have the necessary funds to pay for prescription drugs. As was alluded to in previous debates in this House and in committee, the Government has been challenged very vigorously and enthusiastically by Canadians, such as those in the United Church, the Royal Canadian Legion, and six provincial Governments across country. Senior citizens en masse have challenged the Government of Canada that it ought not to proceed with this particular legislation and have indicated that Canadians from coast to coast would have to pay for higher drug prices.

The Government has refused to listen to the calls that have come from all corners of the country. It has reacted in great haste, notwithstanding the enthusiastic opposition we put up in this House, to facilitate multinational corporations in their profit margins while the health of Canadians has been jeopardized.

I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to explain to Canadian people the rationale for increasing the price of the drug a 55 old woman with angina takes from $44 to $93.89. That is not a 10 per cent increase, nor a 20 per cent increase; it is close to a 102 per cent increase. Is this the justice, the sacred trust, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about in July, 1984? Or, is this nothing more than a sham that is being put to Canadians by a Canadian Government which seems to be in bed with the multinational corporations?

I suggest, with great sincerity and great respect to you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians have judged the Government and the actions and words of the Prime Minister. They will come to cast their final judgment in the next federal election. First and foremost on their minds will be the Government's attempt—in fact reality—to sock it to Canadians, to hose Canadians with higher drug prices.

I would have thought that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would have regarded his responsibilities as being first and foremost to Canadian consumers. Obviously, that is not his intention. His intentions are to facilitate the profit margins of the multinational corporations, laying aside the health of Canadians and the costs that they will incur in the ensuing weeks, months, and years ahead.

It is unfortunate for a Member to rise in this House to condemn the Government of Canada and all its Members who have aided and abetted this particular process and who have done so without concern for the dignity of those individuals such as the ones I have referred to this afternoon. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary can zero in and focus her attention on this very needy concern for those individuals in Canada who have to pay higher drug prices.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer my colleague, especially since I would like to come back to the nub of his question to the Minister concerning Ralph Nader, who as you know is well known as an ardent consumer advocate in the United States.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) answered Mr. Nader's open letter and in his reply, he clearly stated that the Government of Canada does not set policy based on the recommendations or interests of Americans or of any other country. That is clear. The policy surrounding the drafting of Bill C-22 was made in Canada by Canadians. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, this policy was made necessary as a result of a commission of inquiry on the pharmaceutical industry in Canada.

People tend to forget. The Hon. Member forgot to mention that his own party, the Government of which he was a distinguished member, had stated that the Drug Patent Act was obsolete and that it had to be changed even if, and I mean even if, it would be hard to get the legislation through.

Mr. Speaker, that is not hard to understand. The Liberals did not have the courage to make this amendment to the Drug Patent Act. They did nothing and we, the Conservative Government, were the ones who had the courage to bring in a bill meeting the needs of all, Canadians as well as drug consumers. The Hon. Member should keep in mind that 85 per cent of beneficiaries in Quebec, and in Canada, have part of their drug costs covered under Medicare and other programs.

The Bill also states that we have a board called . . .

[English]

The changes to the Patent Act also created the Patented Medicine Price Review Board to ensure consumer protection during the period of market exclusivity given by Bill C-22, and indeed throughout the entire patent life of a drug.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is clear. The Minister answered the questions raised by our hon. colleague adequately, I think, as he always does, and we agree with him on one point, namely that consumers are entitled to protection and that we are protecting and will continue to protect them; that this party, this Government, is aware of this matter; that the Hon. Member who spoke has done nothing about it. He should congratulate us rather than raise such questions.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Danis): The motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

PANEL RULING ON BEEF IMPORTED FROM EUROPE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in 1986, on a complaint by Canadian cattle producers, the Canadian Import Tribunal ruled on the importation of subsidized beef from the European Economic Community and imposed a countervailing duty on these imports.

Now a panel from the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade has ruled that Canadian cattle producers cannot bring a complaint against the EEC because they produce cattle, not beef. Where I come from beef is not manufactured by supermarkets, it comes, believe it or not, from beef. I do not know what the EEC GATT panel members were smoking, but it certainly was not Canadian tobacco.

Canadian cattlemen, together with their counterparts in Australia, New Zealand, and the United States, have now asked the Governments of their respective countries to intervene. I urge the Canadian Government to amend the procedures at the GATT at the next round in order to ensure that ridiculous decisions like this are not rendered in the future.

INTERNATIONAL MUSEUMS DAY

DISCUSSION PAPER ON FEDERAL POLICY

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there are over 2,000 museums in Canada serving Canadians in all parts of the country. They include small community museums which preserve the memories of our forefathers, and internationally renowned institutions, the collections of which vividly remind us that Canada's heritage is part of the world's heritage.

• (1405)

Today the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) released a discussion paper to stimulate public consideration of federal policy and program proposals for Canadian museums.

Next Saturday, Canada's new world-class National Art Gallery opens its doors to the public. Next month will feature a major international exhibition of the works of Degas.

In June the National Aviation Museum opens its new building to showcase Canada's national aviation collection.

I invite all Canadians to join in the celebration of our museums and the contribution they make to the lives of all of us on this, International Museums Day.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE BAND—REFERRAL OF LAND CLAIMS TO COURT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) has continually stonewalled Lubicon Lake Indian attempts to settle their land claims in northern Alberta. Now the Minister has thrown the question to the courts where it can drag on for years.

This comes at the very time when the Alberta Government and the Lubicon band had agreed on the need for a mediation tribunal.

The action of the Minister indicates a failure both of leadership and of good faith. Instead of acting in the interests of Lubicon people, the Minister has worked against them. He has been their adversary instead of their advocate.

He refused to act on an all-Party committee recommendation that the Honourable E. Davie Fulton, a former Conservative Justice Minister, be asked to mediate the dispute. By placing this issue in the courts at this time, the Minister has guaranteed that there will not be a just and mutually acceptable settlement.

The Lubicon will not accept the imposition of any settlement that does violence to their idea of themselves as a people and that divides families in the way that the Minister has proposed.

I call on the Government to withdraw this case from the courts and work toward a mediated solution, providing justice for the Lubicon people.

CANADIAN NEWS HALL OF FAME

ADMISSION OF DOUGLAS CREIGHTON

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the admission of Doug Creighton to the Canadian News Hall of Fame recognized not only an outstanding journalist, but, through him, all members of the working press.

Long before Douglas was head of a corporate empire, he was a newsman himself, as a police reporter, sports reporter, and managing editor.

His initiative as a founder of the Toronto Sun was an example of that entrepreneurial confidence which in recent years has renewed the Canadian economy and the Canadian spirit. Canada will always grow when it has citizens with this courage and creativity.

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the drought situation in western Canada continues to worsen daily and still the Government refuses to act. It is the driest spring in western Canada in 99 years. Sloughs, which no one can remember ever being without water, are dry.

Last weekend I visited the Milk River Ridge area of southern Alberta. Pasture lands are dry and bare with no grass for grazing. Dug-outs are dry with no water for livestock. Hay and feed supplies are dangerously low for cattle herds. Farmers are delaying planting because there is not enough moisture to germinate seeds. Still the Government refuses to act in the face of the prospect of the worst drought since the 1930's—a total disaster for thousands of farmers.

I call on the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to stop stalling and announce an action plan to provide emergency assistance to farmers for emergency water and feed supplies for livestock, a long-term drought mechanism, and an expanded long-term water storage program.

MEMORIAL CUP—CONGRATULATIONS TO MEDICINE HAT TIGERS

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my annual congratulations to the Medicine Hat Tigers, winners of the 1988 Memorial Cup.

The Tigers defeated the Windsor Spitfires 7 to 6 in the final game on Saturday, May 14.

As well as winning two Memorial Cup Championships in the past 12 months, five members of the Tigers played for the Canadian team that won the gold medal at the World Junior Championships in Moscow.

Best wishes to the team, George Maser, Russ Farwell, coach Barry Melrose, and team announcer Bob Ridley. While there may be a drought in western Canada, the Canadian junior champions are still reigning in Medicine Hat!

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COURT DECISION ORDERING REINSTATEMENT OF ROSANN CASHIN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Federal Court of Canada has ordered the CBC to reinstate Rosann Cashin and give her back-pay. I am pleased to see that decision.

What was Ms. Cashin's offence? Was it poor work? No. Failure to have objectivity? No. Having a high profile spouse? That is true, but not the whole story. Her real crime was that she uses the same name as her husband.

• (1410)

It is very important for Canadian women not to suffer this discrimination, that they be able to pursue their careers and not be barred from jobs because they have the same name as their husband. Many Canadian women do. Many couples share the same double-barrelled name. That is life at the present time.

I urge the CBC to respect this decision and not pursue its foolish appeal to another stage, and that it reinstate Rosann Cashin and let her get on with her job.

BY-ELECTIONS

CONSTITUENCY OF LAC-SAINT-JEAN—FORMER UTTERANCES OF LIBERAL CANDIDATE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, the federal Liberal candidate for the June 20 election in Lac-Saint-Jean, Mr. Gimaïel, said in this House on January 29, 1982, as reported on page 14479 of the Official Report of the Debates: "If the development of individual Canadians is to be achieved through socialization, the Liberal Party can be socialist. If the development of individual Canadians is to be achieved through a turn to the right, by more private enterprise, the Liberal Party can move to the right. If, to promote our development, the Liberal Party thinks we have to be communist, we will be communist. This is what being a Liberal means. Liberals are open to all ideas." That is what Mr. Gimaïel said.

On the weekend, his leader, Mr. Turner, promised him a Cabinet position. To date, he has promised 72 Cabinet posts and the election campaign has not yet begun. However, for sure 22 Liberal Members sitting here today, Mr. Speaker, who betray and challenge their leader will never become ministers, according to Mr. Turner. There is growing discontent in the federal Liberal caucus.

FREE TRADE

POSITION OF NATIONAL FEDERATION OF CONSUMER ASSOCIATIONS OF QUÉBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, to be more serious, unlike the Conservative Member . . . The Fédération nationale des Associations des consommateurs du Québec, which in May 1987 supported the Government's free trade proposal because it then believed that consumers would save money, announced yesterday that it was withdrawing its support and it called this Free Trade Agreement a "lemon."

First, it is a "lemon" because studies that it has conducted show that consumers will pay more with this Free Trade Agreement. Second, Quebecers and all Canadians are not assured of lower electricity and telephone rates as they have now. Third, the Quebec Consumers Association wonders who will pay for the $2 billion of income they will lose? The Consumers Association asks people to oppose the Free Trade Agreement signed by the Prime Minister of Canada.

BY-ELECTIONS

CONSTITUENCY OF LAC-SAINT-JEAN—LIBERAL CANDIDATE

Mr. Marcel Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Gimaïel is a man in the mold of the federal Liberal Party, a man without critical ideas or philosophy or direction, an irresponsible man who seeks power for power's sake and who doesn't care how he achieves that goal.

Mr. Gimaïel has already been promised a ministerial appointment, and like his Party, if he is given a chance, will let himself be influenced by polls, pressures from right or left, from the East or the West, from inside and outside this country.

The Leader of the Opposition and his Quebec lieutenant probably overlooked this when they forced him to run to defend what is left of a party that is so divided.

However, now that you know the political risk involved, you have a duty to demand the withdrawal of Mr. Gimaïel's candidacy, otherwise Canadians will conclude that this candidate is indeed cast in the same mold as the Liberal Party of Canada.

EDUCATION

REBUILDING OF COLLEGE MATHIEU AT GRAVELBOURG, SASK.—CALL FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, last weekend most of College Mathieu at Gravelbourg, Saskatchewan, was destroyed by fire. College Mathieu is the only French language boarding school in western Canada. The college is important to the well-being of the entire community of Gravelbourg and to Francophones throughout western Canada. Its importance is in part recognized by the fact that the college has been designated as a heritage site in Saskatchewan.

The directors of College Mathieu have already received assurances that special provincial assistance will be available for the rebuilding of the school. However, more funds are urgently required.

In recent weeks the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), and other federal Ministers have promised to provide the Francophone community in Saskatchewan with meaningful federal support. I suggest that an offer of immediate assistance to rebuild College Mathieu would be a clear sign that the Prime Minister and his colleagues meant what they said.

YOUTH

HIGH SCHOOL DROP-OUT RATE

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am personally concerned about the need for a concerted approach to deal with the employment issues facing Canada's youth.

Our Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) has spoken recently of a pending national youth strategy. He should be supported in his efforts to bring this plan to national prominence.

While youth unemployment has dropped from 18 per cent to 12 per cent, the Canadian high school drop-out rate is still approximately 30 per cent, the second highest rate in the industrialized world.

At present our country spends over $3 billion on unemployment insurance, welfare, and training programs for the young.

I believe it is time to establish and promote a unified approach which links classroom courses, on-the-job training, life skills education, and federal-provincial co-operation. We need a national will to keep kids in school, and show our young the value of education and meaningful work.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SOUTH-EAST NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST THAT 10-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD BE RETAINED

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has announced that from now on, the people of southeast New Brunswick, in the districts of Kent, Westmorland and Albert, will need sixteen weeks of insurable employment to qualify for unemployment insurance instead of the usual ten weeks. This will make life very difficult for people in the southeast, many of whom already have trouble finding ten weeks' employment.

Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in my region is still very high. According to Statistics Canada, it was 16.2 per cent in March and still over 12 per cent in April. Furthermore, the bankruptcy of Pêcheurs unis des Maritimes has added to the problem. Jobs will become even scarcer, and people will have even more trouble qualifying for unemployment insurance. I therefore ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to consider these factors and to maintain the ten week qualifying period.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS

TRIBUTE TO BUILDERS

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, a view from the Peace Tower of the urban landscape around our Parliament Buildings cannot but fill us with pride when we see the magnificent buildings housing the impressive new museums that will further enrich our Canadian cultural life. Mr. Speaker, I invite Hon. Members to pay tribute to these outstanding achievements of our architects, engineers and technicians and the Department of Public Works which so ably directed the construction of these buildings.

These impressive monuments which are also an investment in our national heritage are so many feathers in the cap of a department that tends to shun the limelight but plays such an important role in a Government that builds for the future of this country.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade who, in defending his trade deal, is acting as though giving away provincial jurisdiction to the American Government is a perfectly reasonable course of action. Never before has the Canadian Government in a trade negotiation caved in to foreign Governments by deliberately stripping provinces of their jurisdiction.

I want to ask the Minister to admit, as is the fact, that the Americans want him to override Canadian provincial jurisdiction in areas that go far beyond alcoholic beverages. Will he confirm that the trade deal as he proposes to achieve it steps on provincial jurisdiction over minimum prices of energy, national treatment of services, automobile insurance, agriculture, forestry, mining, construction, regional and industrial development incentives, real estate marketing, and engineering? Will he admit that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman was correct, I would certainly be worse than Rasputin.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to the question, which is not a question really but just a list of misapprehensions, the position is this. We cannot strip the provinces of their jurisdiction. The United States cannot strip the provinces of their jurisdiction. No one can strip the provinces of their jurisdiction over anything.

The Hon. Member is the justice critic for the Official Opposition. He knows that ultimately all those questions would be in the hands of the courts of the country, as they have been since 1867.

It is a ridiculous suggestion that the U.S. Congress is trying to urge us, or is attempting itself, to strip the provinces of jurisdiction. Under our system no one can strip them of one shred of jurisdiction that they now have. We are certainly not attempting it.

We have been most solicitous of the provincial jurisdiction, far more of course than in the period from 1980 to 1984 when, for four years, the hon. gentleman's Government spent their time trying to strip the provinces not only of their jurisdiction but of their resources and everything else they could think of.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION WHY WATER RESOURCES ARE NOT EXCLUDED FROM AGREEMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Canadians want to know what will be the real impact of this trade agreement.

Could the Minister explain why water is not excluded? Why should the Government give the United States unlimited access to our water resources? Will the Minister confirm that Canadian negotiators tried to exclude the sale of water resources from the trade agreement and that at the last minute, because of U.S. pressure, water resources were included?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is so silly and so jejune that one hardly knows how to attempt to answer. How can one answer such a silly question as that?

Water is not even the subject of a provision of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. The hon. gentleman can rest easy; no one is attempting to cut off his water, or anyone's water in Canada.

FORTUNE MAGAZINE ARTICLE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have repeatedly raised in the House an interview that the Prime Minister gave to Fortune magazine in March, 1985. That article states: "Mulroney is so ready for the leap that he is prepared to sell some of his country's abundant fresh water—a shocking thought in Canada . . .

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is not a quote.

Mr. Kaplan: It is a quote from the article. This is what Fortune stated: " . . . If a proposition makes economic sense and would help relations between the countries, he says", and Fortune quotes, "Why not?"

Are we then supposed to believe what the Minister is telling us today, or what the Prime Minister said in 1985?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about Leaders being ready to take the leap, but certainly the hon. gentleman's Leader is not ready to take the jump that he and his colleagues attempted to urge him to take.

Mr. Kaplan: Answer the question.

Mr. Broadbent: Pretty funny.

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, they do not like to hear that. The hon. gentleman is becoming uneasy. They might get the habit in the NDP.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could complete his answer.

Mr. Crosbie: With reference to the hon. gentleman's question, yesterday the hon. gentleman referred to The Wall Street Journal. That was somewhat more relevant than a magazine article of three years ago. He should bring his reading more up to date in order that he can get more fanciful questions for the House.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE BAND LAND CLAIM—LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my questions are directed to the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs and they relate to his decision to refer the Lubicon Lake Indian Band claim to the courts. The Minister has decided to launch legal proceedings against both the Government of Alberta and the Lubicon Indian Band.

Why is the Minister relinquishing the leadership role that he ought to play in pursuing a negotiated settlement of this outstanding claim? Has he forgotten altogether that he has a constitutional trust obligation to Indian people? Why has he abandoned the other avenues of action that are open to him?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member recognizes a constitutional responsibility. It is for that very reason that the decision was made to ask the court for assistance in settling this entitlement which, as the Hon. Member knows, has gone on since 1940.

When the Government came to office in 1984 it actively became involved in attempting to bring about a negotiated settlement.

The Government of Canada has asked Alberta to provide land quantum, to provide a reserve for the Lubicon people, and the quantum was assessed with the knowledge that we had at that time as to the numbers of people involved.

I met with the chief of the Lubicon Lake Band and his advisers, and asked to have negotiated settlements. Preconditions were put on negotiations with the Lubicon, and Alberta did not respond to the request of Canada to fulfil its constitutional obligations under the 1930 Act. Therefore, to fulfil our responsibility we had to seek the court's assistance in this matter.

PROPOSED MEDIATION PROCESS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, this certainly must be regarded as a slap in the face to Premier Getty of Alberta. I give Premier Getty full marks and a good deal of credit because he met with Chief Ominayak and they agreed to a mediation tribunal process. Less than two weeks ago the Premier said this in the Alberta Legislature:

> I hope we can convince the federal Government to allow a tribunal like this to proceed. We are trying to convince the federal Government that this tribunal system will work.

I want to ask the Minister again why he is ducking his political responsibility and letting this matter go to confrontation in the courts?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it would seem strange that Alberta would need a tribunal to assign land which is already the property of Alberta to the Lubicon Lake people.

Mr. Penner: Tell it to Premier Getty.

Mr. McKnight: It would seem strange that Chief Ominayak would not agree to a binding decision of the tribunal if he wished the tribunal to work. It also seems strange that I have not had any contact with the Government of Alberta in any pro forma way that would allow me to understand the tribunal put forward.

I find the actions we have taken are consistent with Canada's commitment and obligations to fulfil entitlement to the Lubicon Lake Band to the best of our ability. The only avenue left to Canada, after attempting to negotiate since 1984 on a claim which has been outstanding since 1940, was to ask the court for assistance in this matter.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

BILL C-72—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Everybody knows there is a lot of opposition in the Conservative Caucus to Bill C-72. In February, the Deputy Prime Minister indicated that the Government would accept some minor changes, but yesterday, Conservative Members produced twenty-five amendments. Obviously, they are out to destroy this Bill, not improve it. Does the Prime Minister of Canada agree, yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree that Bill C-72 should be adopted and the principles contained in this Bill approved by the House. That amendments are suggested to improve the Bill is not out of the ordinary. That is why we have parliamentary instruments, including committees, to improve bills as much as possible. In fact, I can say that we are the first government since 1969 that has made improvements to the Official Languages Act. I think this is to the credit of the Government and this Parliament.

PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said outside the House in March that his priority was to get this Bill passed. Everyone in the House of Commons, no matter where he or she sits, whether in the Conservative caucus, the Liberal caucus, or the NDP caucus, knows that if you have 25 amendments to a Bill, whatever their substantive content, the purpose is to destroy legislation, not simply to improve it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister knows that the Government plans legislation on Meech Lake, a comprehensive trade bill, conflict of interest legislation, and many other important matters. How can he possibly live up to his commitment to pass this important language legislation on a priority basis and deal with 25 amendments at the same time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is quite an interesting dichotomy. Every time the Conservatives present amendments to a Bill it is to destroy it; any time the NDP bring in amendments it is to improve the legislation!

• (1430)

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, we have important pieces of legislation. Bill C-72 is one of them. I have not seen the proposed amendments.

An Hon. Member: You should take a look at them.

Mr. Mulroney: We will take a look at them if they are in the nature of improving the Bill.

Bilingualism is a very noble concept. Its promotion is very important and it requires all the persuasive talents of which we are capable to persuade Canadians of its value.

We ought to avoid partisanship and we ought to avoid brutality with regard to this important and sensitive issue. What we are trying to do is bring forward a piece of legislation that I hope my hon. friend will be able to stand up, support, and applaud.

With regard to other pieces of legislation, indeed Bill C-72 is a priority, free trade legislation is a priority, and Meech Lake is a priority. We hope to be able to consider the matter of abortion. We have an important series of items to be dealt with, including tax reform. In light of that, I hope we can get complete co-operation from the Leader of the NDP and his colleagues.

NUMBER OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, on related matters, the Prime Minister well knows we gave our support for co-operative action of Meech Lake. That is why we had only three amendments. We have agreed to the Bill in question, Bill C-72, on this side of the House. It is the other side of the House that is holding up the Bill.

Could the Prime Minister cite one example in parliamentary history when a Party that was seriously committed to passing a Bill has brought in 25 amendments yet not setting out to destroy it? Can he give me one example?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor of the NDP brought in over 70 amendments to the Investment Canada Act.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: We opposed it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: You are making our argument.

BILL C-72—NATURE OF GOVERNMENT'S AMENDEMENTS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to Bill C-72, on Official Languages. It seems that the number of amendments that will be proposed by the Government is quite substantial. Apparently, there will be more than twenty.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister to inform the House about the nature of these amendments. We want to ensure that they will not take the Bill back to prehistoric times . . .

Mr. Speaker, perhaps you could call the House to order so that I can ask the Prime Minister to inform us about the nature of the amendments . . .

An Hon. Member: . . . out of order!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): . . . it is not! Since the Government is going to present these amendments, Canadians have a right to know what they involve.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't have the amendments here and I haven't seen them. The Bill is before the parliamentary committee. If I am not mistaken, amendments will be presented by a number of Members on this side of the House and also by the Official Opposition, by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Am I right? Well, We'll see!

An Hon. Member: We'll see!

Mr. Mulroney: He says we'll see. I suppose we can assume the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is exercising his rights as a Member here in the House, just like the other Members.

What I find surprising is that his colleague, right next to him, didn't know he had any amendments.

CONSEQUENCES OF AMENDMENTS TO BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister to stop playing stupid and tell us outright what the nature of these amendments are, not what Joe Blow wants but what his Government wants to change in the Official Languages Bill.

Could he at least give the House the assurance, and that is my question, that the multitude of amendments his Government intends to propose will in no way change the fundamentals of Bill C-72?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member doesn't like Joe Blow, but I kind of like the fellow. The Hon. Member is talking about amendments but I haven't seen them. They will be presented at the appropriate time, like the amendments of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

I have said on several occasions, and I say it again today, that the Bill is important, that the principles it contains will be protected, and that the integrity of the legislation is being strengthened. I hope that with the help of the Hon. Member from Montreal, we will be able to advance further the vital cause of bilingualism in Canada, and do so in a climate devoid of any partisanship and on a higher plane than the one suggested by the Hon. Member.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL LABOUR LAWS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. He received bouquets from Ken Harrigan, President of Ford Canada, who complimented the Government on the free trade proposal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: Bob White must be on the phone.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Wait for it.

Mr. Murphy: The reason is quite obvious because Mr. Harrigan went on to say that he had concerns about provincial laws, overtime, pensions, workers' compensation, and workplace safety. Will the Minister not agree the reason Mr. Harrigan supports the trade initiative is that he is now able to avoid those provincial laws which protect Canadian workers?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that the U.S.-

Canada Free Trade Agreement has no connection whatever with provincial laws that might or might not apply in the field of workers' compensation or any of these other programs. Nor does it affect in any way social security programs and regional development. The hon. gentleman and the other members of the Official Opposition who go around giving out these outrageous falsehoods are lucky that they were not made of wood like Pinocchio, or the same result would occur.

PROTECTION OF WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade may want to tell jokes, but the people in Oakville are concerned about the replacement of their plant in 1992. Mr. Harrigan said it may not be profitable as long as there are provincial laws protecting workers, and such things as overtime and workers' compensation.

Mr. McDermid: Tell Bob Rae to ask Peterson that question.

Mr. Murphy: People are concerned about the tariff protection being removed by free trade. Will the Minister rise in this House and explain how those people will be protected when that tariff protection is taken away?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I happen to have visited Oakville. I do not know when the hon. gentleman last visited there, but I visited the Ford Truck Plant in Oakville on Monday and I found a surprising receptivity among the members of the CAW who have not all been brainwashed by Bob White or the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Would you like to have a vote there?

Mr. Crosbie: I might say that all across Canada I find people wondering why the Leader of the New Democratic Party wants $8 billion in investment in Oshawa from General Motors but does not want to see that kind of investment anywhere else in Canada, and fights against it for the rest of Canada.

HEALTH

AIDS—RISKS TO HEALTH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and once again concerns AIDS.

As I said yesterday, two years ago a committee of this House recommended launching a major campaign against AIDS to promote research, education and health care. The resources subsequently allocated by the Government were clearly inadequate and did not reflect the advice our committee received from eminent experts and physicians.

I find it hard to understand why the Government bothers to call in these experts if it subsequently rejects their recommendations. My question to the Minister is this: Why is the Government taking such risks with the health of Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not ignoring the advice of experts with respect to AIDS. That is why the Government has the National Advisory Committee on AIDS.

I think it is my responsibility when public statements are made, either by members of that committee or for that matter by Members in this House, for example, that money was not available and that the committee could not meet so I could get further advice. My officials have checked that out both with the Chairman, Dr. Norbert Gilmore from Montreal, as well as with the secretariat. That is not the case. Despite that we have been analysing the recommendations made by the Royal Society on testing, for example. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that because he is a responsible Member. He knows that there are very serious implications with any recommendations, pro or con, with respect to testing. We are following the advice and are looking at it very closely.

I think what is at issue, and the Hon. Member did not ask about this, is the matter of funding for the recommendations that have been made. That goes back to the statements I made both in the House and outside it, and reconfirmed yesterday by the Prime Minister in the House, that is, that the Government is looking at funding for those recommendations. As I said yesterday, those announcements will be made in due course.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the new study that has been produced by the Royal Society, but I remind him again of a study by a committee of this House which was done over two years ago. The sum total of the Government's actions did not meet the thrust of the recommendations and the sense of urgency that the committee of this House tried to convey two years ago.

I have little confidence, and I wonder why Canadians should have confidence today, that the Government will deal with a problem which could be perhaps the most pressing national health problem of the 1980s.

When dealing with a problem which has been described—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will want to put his question.

Mr. Berger: When dealing with the problem which this committee describes as having the potential of becoming a national catastrophe, how can the Minister justify several years of little or no action? How can he justify committing such meagre resources when we are talking about the most pressing public health problem of the 1980s?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again this has to be put in context. The Royal Society's report is one that I commissioned. We spent $250,000 on the report, so to characterize the report as showing that in some way the Government did not care about AIDS nor did not want information about AIDS is not the case.

I am obviously aware of the committee report. It was at that time that the Government came forward with a five-year plan, and $39 million which has been mentioned as well.

Yes, we have to spend more money and I have said that publicly. There has been public education through the Canadian Public Health Association and the Emergency Drug Protocol. We have sent out over 2,500 copies of this, and anyone can look at what has been done here. Comparing what emergency drugs are available in the United States, for example, with those available in Canada, we rate well there.

I do not think that those are the issues. Yes, the Government must move further, but I think the issue we must deal with is that of education. Canadians must take personal responsibility about AIDS. They must accept the message of the Government and of health care workers, which is that they can protect themselves against AIDS if they take certain personal actions. I think that message as well should be put into this mix, and the Government has done that.

MINES AND MINING

DECOMMISSIONING OF MADAWASKA MINE MILL SITE NEAR BANCROFT, ONT.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State responsible for forestry and mines. The decommissioning of the Madawaska Mine mill site near Bancroft may end as early as November of 1988. Can the Minister tell the House which level or agency of government will be responsible for any subsequent remedial work and monitoring of this site?

The decommissioning of the Madawaska Mine mill site does not include all of the tailing ponds, nor does it seem to include the Greyhawk properties east of Highway 28. Local residents ask why these properties are excluded, what will happen to them in the future, and which levels of government will be responsible.

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington is absolutely correct. There has been a request of AECB to decommission that particular site by November 30. I might mention that our regulatory agency handling issues of this nature does set conditions. We have negotiated with the province concerned and in fact with all provinces on this matter, and there is a proposal before the Ontario Government with a proposed MOU regarding that particular site and others around it.

Discussions are taking place now. The Hon. Member can be assured that we have inspected those sites personally and that we will actively pursue this particular issue.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—PUBLIC EDUCATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Prime Minister, also concerns the question of AIDS. We agree with the Minister that the major issue is education.

The advice of the Royal Society was: "In the absence of an effective vaccine or treatment, educating the public about the nature of the disease must be the mainstay of efforts to retard the spread of the AIDS epidemic". Two weeks ago the Prime Minister said that this is a most important societal problem, one deserving urgent action and the urgent devotion of national resources.

Since the Canadian Government spends only $750,000 on public education as compared to Australia which spends $50 million, and since the Royal Society recommends a total of $80 million to be spent, will the Prime Minister approve a major and immediate increase in AIDS education funding?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the core of the Hon. Member's question is that more education is needed, especially in the absence of a vaccine or a cure for AIDS. That is absolutely correct and I think we all agree on that. In respect to increased financing, I think I have been quite clear on the record on that as well.

I do not want to quibble, but if the Hon. Member were to look at those figures she used, she would find that they are not accurate relative to the other countries. I have those figures. I will not take the time of the House now, but suffice it to say—

Mr. Riis: Go ahead.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Australia spends more. Of the total program, this year Australia is spending $20 million. Canada is spending eight, plus what the provinces are spending and the MRC and public health. There is no question that we have to spend more, but I think that the comparisons were not quite accurate.

FUNDING OF FEDERAL CENTRE FOR AIDS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the point is that this is an appalling epidemic, and the Minister talks about quibbling about statistics. What we want is a commitment of action.

The appalling fact is that the total federal expenditures, as I understand it, for 1989 amount to less than $2 million, and that is to cover research, treatment, education, and funding for community groups. Even the operating funds for the national Centre for AIDS have been held up.

Will the Minister make sure that the $139 million which I understand was requested by the federal Centre for AIDS is made available immediately? Will he also ask for a major increase in AIDS funds to deal with this terrible disease?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that statistics are not the central issue, but she used them in her preamble, and I think it was only right that I responded by giving the correct figures.

Again, the Government's commitment is quite clear, and I cannot add any more to it than I already have.

RADIO-CANADA

PROVISION OF SERVICES OF EQUAL QUALITY IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Coalition pour la défense des services français de la Société Radio-Canada has asked that annual public funding of the French network be significantly increased, to guarantee Canada's Francophones the same quality of programming and services received by Anglophones through the CBC. My question is this: Does the Minister agree that offering all Canadians the same quality of public services is a principle that should be rigourously applied?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, decisions concerning the programming budget of the French network are the sole responsability of the Corporation. I share the Hon. Member's concern about this important issue, and that is why I announced new funding for the production and distribution of Francophone films by Telefilm Canada and more than $15 million for dubbing. Mr. Speaker, I also informed the Standing Committee last September that the new broadcasting Bill will recognize the distinct identity of Francophones in broadcasting.

FRENCH NETWORK—PRODUCTION OF QUALITY PROGRAMS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister mentioned the moneys she has allotted to improve the dubbing. That will certainly not, however, account for the $49.7 million she has lost through not putting ephemeral rights into her copyright Bill.

Although funding for public radio and television programming in Canada is inadequate to meet all needs, will the Minister admit that the French network does not have sufficient funds to produce the same quality of programming produced by the CBC? If so—and I am not asking the board of directors but the Minister—what concrete measures does she intend to take to deal with this situation?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I just said I announced last year that the new broadcasting Bill would recognize the distinct identity of Francophone broadcasting. Mr. Speaker, every day, I await the report from the Standing Committee.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CULTURAL MATTERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is technically for the Minister for International Trade, but the Prime Minister may want to answer it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Is it about Meech Lake?

Mr. Waddell: Don't try to sidetrack me, please. It pertains to the free trade deal at the time of the negotiations.

Are we to understand that cultural matters like films, television, videos, and so on, were not on the table in terms of the free trade negotiations? I believe the Government has said that before. Are we to understand that it is true that cultural matters were not on the negotiating table?

Was there any other deal at the side of the table, or off the table, between the Canadian negotiators or the Canadian Government and the United States negotiators?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, is it the expression that the result of the cooking is in the pudding? It is something like that. If the hon. gentleman will examine the free trade agreement he will see that the cultural industries are excluded from its provisions.

While I am on my feet I would like the hon. gentleman to pass on to his Leader the results of a recent poll which show that 46 per cent of union members favoured the free trade agreement with the United States versus 38 per cent who did not. Of Conservative supporters, 66 per cent were in favour; of Liberals, 48 per cent were in favour; and of New Democrats, 41 per cent were in favour. However, union members are more intelligent than New Democrats and 46 per cent of them favoured the free trade agreement.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, union members, like other Canadians, are interested in honest and open government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FILM DISTRIBUTION INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have here another memo from Jack Valenti's group which says:

> —Canada pledged to the U.S. negotiators it would try to "accommodate" the U.S. film industry outside the Agreement.

It then mentions the licensing provisions for films, exactly what Canada has done.

Why is the Prime Minister not being honest and straightforward with Canadian people, including the workers, as to why in fact cultural industries were not excluded from the free trade deal and why the Government has made a secret agreement with the American film industry?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, every day I am amazed that members of the NDP have to rely on people in the American film industry for their quotes.

Mr. Broadbent: Because you don't give us the truth.

Miss MacDonald: Now they are busy quoting Jack Valenti. I would much sooner quote Canadians who are involved in this industry.

For instance, Connie Tadros, the editor of Cinema Canada, said that the impact of the legislation will be the creation of a separate domestic market. She says that the new policy puts Canadian distributors on an equal footing for the first time.

Barry Young, the President of the Spectra film distribution company in Toronto, said that "it strengthens our hand". Garth Drabinsky said that this means "improved days for Canadian distribution".

We are talking about Canadian spokespersons.

Oral Questions

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

RRAP—FUNDING FOR PROGRAM IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Cape Breton has one of the highest unemployment rates in the country and its homes are among the oldest in the country. Yet, the Government, in its 1988 budget for the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, has cut the RRAP for Cape Breton by over 50 per cent.

A lot of homes will not be able to pass inspection in a few years and people are going to be forced to leave their own homes. Why is the Government forcing people out of their homes? Why does it not reconsider this reduction and at least reinstate the amount of RRAP funding which existed in 1987?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that in its 1987 budget CMHC added $100 million of additional funding for social housing for people who are very much in need. All of the Government's housing budget is directed to those most in need.

In co-operation with the provinces we have been able to help 30 per cent more of those most in need than did the previous Government, and that includes the RRAP program.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, have the Hon. Minister tell that to the people who are sleeping in alley-ways and on park benches, and who are living in substandard conditions in this country.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, when is the Government going to wake up and realize that to give assistance to homeowners to maintain the standard of their homes is a lot cheaper than building new homes? It is not only good economic sense but good social sense and common decency. Will the Government reinstate this RRAP funding for 1988 or not?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the facts will answer my hon. friend. Last year, 1987, there were a record 245,000 housing starts in Canada. That was an increase over the previous year, in which there was also an increase over its previous year.

Last year 50,000 units of social housing were added to the complement of more than 100,000 the year before. The present Government has done more to help people in need of housing than has any previous Government.

HOUSING

SHORTAGE OF AFFORDABLE HOUSING IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO—SALE OF CROWN OWNED PROPERTY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. As the Minister knows, there is a crisis in Metropolitan Toronto with regard to the availability of affordable housing.

Can the Minister explain to this House and to Canadians why his Department is selling Crown owned property in Metropolitan Toronto on the auction block to the highest bidder when that land should be made available to groups which are prepared to build affordable housing on these lots?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is referring to the sale of the Malvern Land Assembly in Toronto. That program involves both the federal and provincial Governments. It commenced in 1972. Ten thousand units have been sold during that period of time. Fifty per cent of those have a subsidy assisted component. More people have been assisted in this land assembly than in any other part of Canada.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, that answer is totally unacceptable. The Minister knows full well that that land was set aside to build affordable housing on if the housing market reached the point at which it is today.

SALE OF LAND TO HIGHEST BIDDER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister come clean with Canadians and explain exactly why he is selling off land, that was put aside for construction of affordable housing, to the highest bidder? Can he explain that to Canadians because I cannot understand it?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond. There are now 100,000 units of social housing in Toronto. That compels an annual subsidy from the federal Government of approximately $200 million. We have a policy in co-operation with the Ontario Government, which has been in place since 1972, to sell land at market conditions. In co-operation with the other governments we are returning plans under various government programs to help those most in need. Perhaps a particular section of Toronto is not the only place in Canada that needs help.

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. People in Kent, Westmorland and Albert, in New Brunswick, now have to work sixteen weeks to be eligible for unemployment insurance, instead of the previous ten weeks. According to Statistics Canada, the unemployment rate in the Southeast was 12.1 per cent in April and 16.2 per cent in March, which contradicts the 11.5 per cent given by her own Department. Could the Minister explain to the House what her Department is doing and why?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like a chance to review that situation. I am not aware of the situation raised by the Hon. Member and would be very happy to look into it.

OPPORTUNITY TO RETAIN 10-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister looks into this problem, would she consider the fact that in our part of the country, it is very difficult to find a job for ten weeks? Some jobs only last ten weeks, and I am thinking of workers in lobster plants and assistant-fishermen, because the lobster season is only ten weeks long. So considering this situation, could the Minister maintain the eligible period at ten weeks because otherwise, a number of families will be facing a pretty bleak winter.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take that as a representation. Certainly I will look into it and take all the relevant information into account.

PRIVILEGE

ACCURACY OF RESPONSE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a question of privilege arising from the response given to me in Question Period on May 12. I believe we have established that notwithstanding the lapse of time since May 12, this is the first practical opportunity I have had to raise this question of privilege which arises from the answer given to me on a supplementary question concerning the exportation of gun powder by Expro.

After the rather delightful Alfonse and Gaston routine, the two Ministers went through, finally the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Jelinek) replied to my question.

I want to make it abundantly clear that I impute no motive. Whether from misunderstanding or misapprehension, inadvertence or inadequate briefing, the Minister gave a response which was totally at variance with the facts of the matter on which I raised the question. I believe that a breach of my privilege occurs when a reply or, more accurately, a response contains information which is palpably false. Surely as a Member of the House and an elected representative of my constituents, I have a right to hear the truth, whether it be partial, slanted or skewered, the truth nevertheless.

If you find that a prima facie case of privilege has arisen from the response given, then I am prepared to move the appropriate motion. Of course, the point is that the Minister said that negotiations are ongoing in terms of the lock-out, whereas I have information from the local representative and the representative of the Comité des Syndicats Nationaux that no negotiations had occurred for over a month.

If you are not prepared to recognize that there is is a prima facie case of privilege involved in this matter, I would ask you to consider a reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the matter of what measures could be taken or regulations instituted to ensure a modicum of veracity in replies given in this House.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I believe the misunderstanding is on the part of the Hon. Member. If he reads my answer very carefully as reported on page 15392 of Hansard on May 12, 1988, he will note that at no time did I refer to any negotiations taking place by the union. There are negotiations between Expro and my officials taking place on a regular basis. There are negotiations between Expro and the consultants we have hired, Peat Marwick, which are taking place on a regular basis.

The Hon. Member will know that the loan was made to try to protect some 600 jobs and was well before the lock-out took place. I am surprised at the audacity of members of the NDP, who speak out of one side of their mouth about protecting jobs and out of the other side of their mouth about opposing a loan that was made, in effect, to protect the 600 jobs. My answer as stated on May 12 stands.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has raised as a question of privilege an exchange that took place several days ago. I agree with the Hon. Member that this is the first time, for practical purposes, it could be brought before the Chair.

I appreciate the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) having made it very clear at the beginning that he is not imputing any dishonourable motives to the Minister in whatever answer he gave. The difficulty facing the Chair is that it is very difficult for the Chair to know whether an answer is absolutely accurate or to know whether the Hon. Member who is asking the question has interpreted the answer in exactly the way the Minister wished it to be interpreted.

In this case we seem to have an answer given which appears to be at variance with certain facts about which I have no doubt the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River is absolutely correct, that there had not been any negotiation with the union for a month.

However, of course we accept the word of the Minister who has advised the House, when he refers back to Hansard, that he did not intend to refer to negotiations with the union but to other negotiations that were peripheral to the matter.

I think the Minister's comment today may clarify the misunderstanding. Having been on both sides of the House for some years, I understand how difficult it can be sometimes when an answer, often quite unintentionally, does not seem to be in accord with facts that the Member asking the question has at his disposal. However, we have had comments from Speakers in the past that it is extremely difficult for the Speaker to settle matters which amount to a dispute over facts.

I believe the exchange today has indicated that perhaps the Hon. Member who asked the question was quite understandably confused, not intentionally misled but certainly could not understand why the Minister gave the answer he did.

The Minister has made it clear that he was not referring to the union, in any event. The Chair does not like to get into the position of having to settle a question of the accuracy or otherwise of a comment, either in a question or in a reply. Under the circumstances, I think the matter is resolved, at least a little better than it was, and I cannot find a question of privilege.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1988-89

A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (A) with regard to sums required for the public service of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1989 was presented by the Hon. Pat Carney (President of Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, in order that we can do this all at once, I would move, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 83, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

> That the Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1989, laid upon the Table earlier this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(1), I have the honour to lay upon the Table copies of a Ways and Means motion to implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(2), I ask that an Order of the Day be designated for the consideration of the said motion.

NECESSITY OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to the tabling of the Ways and Means motion by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). As I understand it, this Ways and Means motion is being proposed by the Minister as a necessary preliminary step in advance of the enabling legislation for the trade deal. I would like to argue quite the opposite.

This Ways and Means motion is not only unnecessary today, but it also imposes unnecessary restrictions on our ability as Members to amend the trade legislation that will follow the adoption of this resolution. I would like to cite Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 516, at page 174; which reads as follows:

> A Ways and Means motion is a necessary preliminary to the imposition of a new tax, the continuation of an expiring tax, an increase in the rate of an existing tax, or an extension of the incidence of a tax so as to include persons not already payers.

Let me refer to Erskine May, Parliamentary Practice, Twentieth Edition, at page 822. It reads:

> The following are examples of matters which require to be initiated in the form of a Ways and Means resolution by a Minister of the Crown.

The subheadings include new taxes, continuation of an expiring tax, reimposition of a repealed tax, an increase in the rate of an existing tax, the extension of incidence of a tax, the repeal or reduction of alleviations of taxation, the delegation of taxing powers, granting of borrowing authority, and payments into the Consolidated Fund from a source other than taxation.

Both Beauchesne and Erskine May are clear. Nowhere is it indicated that a reduction in charges on the taxpayer, either through, for example, a reduction in direct taxes or reductions in tariffs, need be preceded by a Ways and Means motion. It is only when a Government seeks to increase charges on the taxpayer that a Ways and Means motion is required to precede the legislation.

Erskine May, at page 825, gives some guidance on this important question. It is stated:

> Provisions for the alleviation of taxation are not subject to the rules of financial procedure.

I think this makes it quite clear. A Ways and Means motion such as the one introduced today by the Hon. Minister, according to the traditions of parliamentary practice, is not required to precede the free trade legislation because, as is outlined in this specific motion itself, the changes being sought are reductions in duties which impose no additional burden on the taxpayer.

This is not to suggest, however, that although it is not required, it is not be permitted. Clearly, in the last few years, it has often been the case that reductions in taxes have been preceded by Ways and Means motions. But it should be recognized that when a Ways and Means motion is passed by the House prior to the introduction of a Bill, there are certain restrictions and limitations on the scope of amendments to that Bill which are not present when a Bill is simply introduced for debate. That is my concern.

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 518, at page 175, outlines the relation of Bills to Ways and Means resolutions. Subsection (2) states:

> The most desirable practice is for the Bill to adhere strictly to the provisions of the resolution, and departures if any, ought to be subject to the strictest interpretation.

In other words, the Bill must strictly accord with the provisions of the Ways and Means motion. As I indicated, this has severe implications for the ability of Members on all sides of this House to alter or amend the Bill in question because the Bill must, in the end, conform to the Ways and Means motion. Erskine May, Twentieth Edition, at page 825, recognizes the undue restriction placed upon the ability to amend a Bill to alleviate charges on the taxpayer when it is preceded by a Ways and Means resolution. It reads:

> This resolution—

That is, the Ways and Means motion presently before the House.

> —is occasionally omitted when it is desired to restrict the scope of a financial Bill to a minimum, as, for example, before the general election in 1974.

Here we have an explicit recognition that Ways and Means motions or resolutions are not necessary to precede Bills that do not increase charges on the taxpayers and that if such Ways and Means resolutions are in fact introduced, they can unnecessarily limit the scope of the Bill and the ability of Members to amend it as it goes through the normal committee stage clause by clause.

If we take a hypothetical case where, for example, after the trade legislation is introduced, a member in the legislative committee wanted to amend the legislation to restore a duty on some specific goods—let us take the U.S. wine industry, for example—entering the country, it is not at all clear that, if the Ways and Means motion passed by the House had indicated that this levy was to be eliminated, the amendment to restore this levy would be possible. I refer to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 532, which reads:

> A motion for the imposition of an import duty has been ruled out of order because such a proposition should emanate from the Government.

Clearly, the ability of Members of this House to amend such legislation would be unnecessarily restricted.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would just simply restate the two main arguments I think should cause you to rule this Ways and Means motion completely and totally out of order. First, I think I have shown clearly that such a resolution is, according to past practice, clearly not necessary in this instance where the Government seeks to simply reduce and not increase charges on the taxpayer. In this instance, where the House will be faced shortly with a major piece of legislation that will have monumental consequences for the political and economic sovereignty of our country, Members of Parliament should have the maximum degree of freedom to amend and alter this legislation as they, as representatives of the Canadian people, see fit. This is not possible when the legislation is preceded by this totally unnecessary Ways and Means motion. It will handicap Members of Parliament. It will restrict the ability of Members of Parliament to improve the legislation as we see fit as it moves through the committee process.

I hope that Your Honour will reflect upon the arguments that I have offered today and rule this Ways and Means motion out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is raising a highly technical point. I am having some difficulty fully appreciating the point that is being made.

However, it is obvious to Hon. Members that a certain amount of work has gone into the intervention that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap has made. I would of course be very careful about being too hasty in dismissing the argument. I will consider it very carefully and return to the House as soon as it is appropriate.

However, my difficulty is, and I put this to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, who may want to address the matter for another moment or two, that the Chair has not seen the Bill, nor of course has the Hon. Member. No one in the House has seen it. It may well be that the argument, even if sustainable, is premature. I am concerned about that.

The second matter of course is that without seeing the Bill I am not completely sure that I would be able to accept some of the propositions which the Hon. Member has cited, which may of themselves be good authority. However, I cannot tell until I see the Bill whether in fact the Bill conforms with the five paragraphs that are now in front of the House and the notice of Ways and Means motion. I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap the fact that paragraph i) of the notice of Ways and Means motion states:

> i) to impose customs duties in accordance with the Tariff Schedules of Canada referred to in Annex 401.2 of the Agreement;

I cannot tell from that whether that will increase customs duties or decrease them. It seems to me it puts us in some difficulty.

However, I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member. It was a closely reasoned argument that obviously had been prepared with some care. I will consider it carefully and return to the House.

The Hon. Member indicates that he may have something to add. I will hear him.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comments. I think they are more than appropriate. What I was hoping at this point was simply that Your Honour would at least reflect on the arguments that I have made prior to accepting and approving the tabling of this Ways and Means motion.

The point I want to make is that I am not anticipating what is in the trade legislation at all. I am making one assumption, that is, that the Ways and Means motion would not be increasing taxes and tariffs on Canadians. I am making the assumption that one of the reasons we are going through this from the Government's perspective is that we would see a reduction in charges. I am making that assumption. I want to make that perfectly clear. I am not suggesting what the Bill may or may not be.

I would ask Your Honour to at least reflect on the ability of Members of Parliament to move appropriate amendments to the legislation when it is introduced. The point I am attempting to make today is that the Ways and Means motion, if accepted, would place limitations, would provide a certain number of parameters on the nature of amendments that Members of Parliament from all sides of the House could put forward.

I am simply asking Your Honour to reflect on whether or not it is necessary at this point for the Minister to table this Ways and Means motion. As you know, Mr. Speaker, he has the right to table it at any time up until the legislation goes to committee. That would give us ample time to consider whether a Ways and Means motion could not be tabled at that time as opposed to the beginning of the process, which would have the effect of perhaps limiting our ability as Members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. What I propose to do is to consider the matter, as I said I would. It may well be that, upon further reflection, it is premature for even the Chair to make any further comment.

In the meantime, the Ways and Means motion of course is not dependent on the Chair accepting it. Under the orders, clearly, the Minister has the right to table it. The question that the Hon. Member is raising goes to its substantive effect subject to the arguments that the Hon. Member has raised. Of course, if I accepted completely the Hon. Member's arguments, then I would have to return and we would have to deal with the matter.

In any event, I hope that the Hon. Member will accept my assurances that I will look very carefully at the argument made. I will report back to the House as soon as convenient.

I point out that I have some concern that it may be, even if I was fully in agreement with the Hon. Member, premature to make a ruling. However, I will do the best I can.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 12 petitions numbered as follows: 332-4336, 332-4379, 332-4449, 332-4476, 332-4516, 332-4524 and 332-4530 to 332-4535 inclusive.

ORDER-IN-COUNCIL P.C. 1988-424

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there has been discussion among the Parties and there is unanimous consent, at least among the House Leaders, with respect to the following motion, which states:

> That, Order-in-Council P.C. 1988-424 tabled in the House on April 27, 1988 and referred to the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs be withdrawn from the said committee and referred to the Standing Committee on Government Operations, and that the provisions of Standing Orders 103 and 104 shall apply upon the adoption of this order.

Is my understanding correct?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with that. There has not been a clear understanding yet with respect to it, however. I wonder if we can hold this matter for a few moments to allow some consultation to take place. I do not anticipate any difficulty but I would like to have a few more opportunities to discuss this matter with some of my colleagues.

Mr. Hawkes: It was handed to me by a member of my staff and it does have the signatures of the two House Leaders. I was not part of the discussion but it was my obligation to bring it forward.

Is it all right?

Mr. Riis: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: If we could just cast our minds back for a moment or two, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has made a proposition. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) wanted some further clarification. I think that the Hon. Member has that further clarification.

I take it, then, that the House is in accord with the Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present two petitions, both of which have been approved by the Clerk of Petitions as to form and content.

The two petitions come generally from the areas of Nanton, High River, Carmangay, Stavely, Lethbridge, Calgary and Edmonton. Both state that your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72 so that the unilingual speaking people have a chance for positions in Government.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions signed by residents of Burnaby, Vancouver, Surrey, Ottawa, and Toronto.

The petition states as follows: The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right as to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Hon. House will therefore provide a remedy humbly sheweth: Whereas the distinguished Justices of the Supreme Court of Canada in striking down Section 251 of the Criminal Code have left Canadians without any law restricting abortions; whereas nothing in the Supreme Court decision has established abortion as a right; whereas human life is a continuum from the moment of conception to the moment of death, and there is no point in time between conception and the birth of the infant at which point we could say that this is not a human life.

Wherefore, the undersigned petitioners ever pray and call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of an unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

As duty bound the petitioners will ever pray.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT REGARDING ISRAEL

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions to present today. The first petition is the last in a series of petitions I received from members of the Hamilton Jewish Federation who continue to take issue with remarks made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding charges that he has made with respect to the State of Israel's handling of matters on the riotous Gaza strip.

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, the other two petitions have been signed by residents of my constituency in the City of Hamilton and the surrounding area. They wish to point out to the House the seriousness of schizophrenia in Canada. The petitioners point out that a number of people have this illness, and its cost to Governments in terms of social costs. The petitioners would like to petition the Government to have it increase the research funds available to combat this dreaded disease.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the requirements of Standing Order 106, I have two petitions to present. The petitions are signed by residents of Kelliher, Leross, Lestock; Saskatchewan who call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers and fishermen, as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report on the White Paper on tax reform, stage one.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and pleasure to present two petitions from residents of the City of Toronto, which have been certified by the Clerk as to form and content.

The first petition points out that in 1987 the then Minister of Immigration promised that unmarried sons and daughters of all ages would be considered as members of the family class of immigrants, and that married children and brothers and sisters in the assisted relative class would get 15 points instead of 10 points when assessed for immigration to Canada.

In 1986, the then Minister of Justice promised that the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents of three years or more would be eliminated in order that both groups would have equal rights to sponsor parents of any age.

The petitioners point out that none of these promises has yet been fulfilled by those Ministers, their successors, or the Government.

Therefore, the petitioners ask that the House of Commons ensure that the Government now fulfil these promises.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the other petition concerns the trade deal negotiated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, for which the petitioners state that the Prime Minister had no mandate. The petitioners point out that it will reduce Canada's ability to plan economic, social, and cultural programs that Canadians need, and would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, the petitioners ask Parliament to ensure that there will be a national debate on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, and that this debate will result in a national general election before the agreement is finalized.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and responsibility to file with the Table two petitions, both of which have been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions.

The first petition is signed by some 1,300 residents of Prince George. The second petition is signed by 42 residents of Vanderhoof, both communities in the riding of Prince George—Bulkley Valley.

Both petitions humbly pray and call upon Parliament to grant protection to unborn human beings from the moment of conception, and I proudly support this concept.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the privilege to present a petition received in my office on May 17 and certified on the same date.

This petition is signed by some 45 residents of the community of Ignace, which is arguably the most isolated community on the TransCanada Highway. The petitioners call upon Parliament to declare that all communities in Tier 3 ridings should be eligible for the northern residents' tax allowance.

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Anthony Roman (York North): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present to the House a petition from residents from the region of York on a matter of concern. The petitioners have requested that I bring to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and all Members of Parliament the fact that schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will be given priority in the future.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—THE HOMELESS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic) moved:

That this House condemn the government for its total lack of leadership in the area of housing, as a result of which

a) the present number of 100,000 homeless people, including women and children, increases every day despite the economic recovery;

b) there is an ever-growing number of Canadians with unsuitable housing who risk becoming homeless and those people are not provided with preventive programs;

c) the number of new social or cooperative housing units cannot satisfy the increasing demand;

d) the majority of our aboriginal peoples are badly housed, in conditions that the majority of Canadians would not accept;

e) it is becoming more and more difficult for average Canadians to buy a house;

f) since the government has turned over powers to the provinces, it has given up its responsibilities and has lost control over national housing issues;

g) the housing policy of the government is restricted to reducing the deficit; and

h) the lack of a national policy deprives Canadians of the right to have a roof over their heads.

—She said: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party decided to dedicate today's Opposition Day to housing to prove there is a lack of leadership on the part of the Conservative Government in this respect. Since the Government delegated its powers to the provinces, there has been no national housing policy, no priorities have been set. There has been no direction and, especially, no co-ordination among the various policies and programs, and no co-ordination among the various levels of government. The ship is off course, Mr. Speaker. And even worse—although by now we should be used to this sort of thing on the part of the Government—I was appalled when I heard the Government will very shortly start construction of a prestige building for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation here in Ottawa.

The plans and specifications have been submitted and approved. Public tenders have been examined. The contract will be awarded to the private sector, and the new headquarters will cost Canadians about $40 million.

All of this is occurring under the very eyes of Canadians who are either homeless or living in substandard housing. It is scandalous! It is shameful! It is shocking! And it is appalling!

Morever, Bill C-111 is another example of this Government's lack of interest in housing. It includes many positive steps and incorporates the findings of a study sponsored by Mr. André Ouellet, the former Minister of Urban Affairs in the previous Liberal Government. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, the Government had announced this Bill in the summer of 1987. It waited until February before introducing it in the House of Commons. Bill C-111 remained for at least 15 days on the House's Order Paper and Notices and since the Government controls the agenda, why is it procrastinating with this Bill?

Having realized the positive potential of Bill C-111, the Liberal Party has informed the Government that it is prepared to get on immediately with Second Reading, with only one Member taking part in this debate, with a view of refering this Bill to a legislative committee as expeditiously as possible. This does not mean that we will let the Bill pass blindly, but that it deserves a quick study. We are already in the middle of May, and there is still nothing. If the Bill were so perfect and if housing were a Government priority, we would have had Second Reading a long time ago. This delay reflects the Government's lack of concern for housing. Meanwhile, several concerned Canadians, including the members of the Canadian Manufactured Housing Institute, are still waiting for the Government to make up its mind.

Bill C-111 would make it possible for purchasers of mobile homes and floating homes to obtain mortgages from Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Second, it would raise the ceilings for the expenditures and loans authorized by Parliament to the Corporation. Third, it would facilitate the administration of mortgage titles and mortgage insurance. Fourth, it would improve working relations between the provincial and federal Governments.

In a little while, the Government will brag about all the money it has spent on the homeless. What it will fail to say is that this money was used on studies and conferences. As far as we know, the Government has established no policy which might help the homeless get back into the mainstream of our Canadian society.

The Government has not yet recognized the permanent nature of the homeless problem and the fact that is much more difficult for the homeless to get back into the mainstream of the Canadian society once they have left it. The Government has really missed the boat during the International Year of the Homeless. In view of all the studies it has sponsored, the information it has obtained at the Canadian Confederation held to mark that year, the Government should have been in a position to come up with adequate policies. Mr. Speaker, those who attended this conference agreed that what was lacking to solve the homeless problem was the political will to act. The Government has shown that this question is of no interest and set a limit on all operating and other grants. This may be acceptable in the short run, but no effort has been made to find a lasting solution to the problem. The homeless and the army of volunteers who look after them are running out of breath and will soon be back asking for more money.

The Government deals with homeless people as if they were beggars. This attitude is totally unacceptable to the Liberal Party, just as it is unacceptable to all Canadians.

Who are the homeless? In Montreal, for instance, there are 10,000 transients. The average age for men is 34 and for women 33. I did say women, because what causes much concern these days is that the Government seems to forget about the ever increasing number of youths, women and even entire families without a roof over their heads.

Liberal Members have never missed an opportunity to rise in the House and urge the Conservative government to intervene. Unfortunately this Government worries more about the deficit than it does about human beings. You see, Mr. Speaker, homeless people do not vote, they have no address, they have no political clout. During the conference held for the international year people wanted to sit down and settle various problems. This is how people responsible for social housing, social agencies, industry and construction were prepared to set their own interests aside in an attempt to solve this problem. The federal Government did not get involved in the September 1987 homeless conference, and it still does not want to get involved. This is tragic because the federal Government is the only level which has the moral power and mandate to get people to work together to find short-, medium-, and long-term solutions.

I have newspaper headlines here which prove the Government does not take housing problems seriously. From The Toronto Star: "No one should have to live like this. Desperate mother of two lives in rundown house and says she doesn't know where to turn." Again, The Toronto Star: "Housing crisis taking toll on kids." From the St. John's Evening Telegram: "All women facing common housing difficulties. Housing too scarce and too expensive."

[Translation]

The Conservative Government also missed the boat when it comes to people living in substandard housing units. These people are Canadians sitting on the fence, as it were: they do have a roof over their heads, but they may become homeless or be forced to move into dilapidated housing, with all the social, family and psychological consequences that entails. There are many reasons why a tenant might be forced to vacate the premises, including chronic unemployment, marital violence, alcoholism, drug abuse, and family problems to name a few. The Government does not deal with such problems, not to mention the fact that social programs have been weakened ever since it took office. Homeless people find it hard to understand how a Government can hand out close to $1 billion to the Commercial Bank of Canada and the National Northland Bank to save them from bankruptcy, yet the same Government cannot seem to find any money for the homeless.

Now a few words about social and co-operative housing. The number of social and co-operative housing units has also gone down. The Minister and I can argue about the figures, but the number did go down because needs are greater.

The Conservative Government has preferred to reduce its involvement by choosing to set up a rent supplement plan, leaving the way free to private enterprise. In cities like Toronto, even private enterprise cannot supply affordable housing, for several reasons. In fact, under the new definition of essential needs, the poorest Canadians do not receive government assistance—only the very poorest of the poor do.

The limit set for essential needs is unrealistic and should be revised by the Government. This is another sign that the Government would rather reduce its deficit than help the poorly housed.

Another area where the Government is failing hopelessly is the area of Indian housing. Indians have by far the worst housing conditions in Canada. Overcrowding is a major problem, and 7.5 per cent of all family households on reserve are made up of more than one family living in it, while the average for non-Indian households is only 1.4 per cent. The proportion of dwellings on reserve requiring major repair is 23 per cent, 37 per cent of dwellings have inadequate bathrooms and 37 per cent have no bathrooms at all. Fifty per cent of all dwellings on reserve have no central heating, one of the causes for so many respiratory ailments among Indians.

Also related to poor housing standards is the death rate for Indians from infections and parasite diseases, which is higher than in the non-Indian population. Lack of adequate housing also means that the number of Indian children in care or in custody of institutions, group or foster homes is high because bands lack adequate housing space to accommodate them. Although the need for Indian housing is very important, officials from Indian Affairs testified in committee that housing funds have remained static since 1984. It is the same story for any Canadian who lacks proper housing. The consequences are reflected in poor mental, psychological, physical and moral health.

We can also see the federal Government's lack of perspective and orientation in the City of Toronto. The Toronto housing market is a difficult one, with housing prices skyrocketing. But what does the federal Government do about it, Mr. Speaker? It contributes to the problem by holding parcels of land that could be used for social or affordable housing. I made a statement in this House the other day about that under Standing Order 21.

In a press release by Public Works it was announced that a sale of federal property had yielded over $170 million. That sale was to reduce the number of surplus federal properties and to help bring down the federal deficit. Some of these properties or lands could have been used for homeless people or some of the money could have gone to help house the homeless, but the Government chose not to intervene. The question is, why did the Government not initiate such arrangements? The answer is very clear for all those who care about social housing. This Government is probably the least progressive Government in Canada when it comes to housing policies.

When the Government came to power in 1984 and following the Nielsen reform, it instituted joint programs where the federal Government would finance housing projects and a province would administer them. That could have made administrative sense if the federal Government had not tried to abandon its leadership role in housing. As I have been demonstrating for close to 15 minutes the federal Government has done just that.

This Conservative Government is bent on reducing the deficit. It has done so by holding down the number of people who could get assistance for housing. It has streamlined CMHC's operations, transferred administration of housing programs to the provinces, and the plan has worked. But it has worked to the detriment of those Canadians who are most in need of assistance to house themselves, such as those in the core need group and who do not earn enough to be able to afford proper housing in today's market. In other words, the Government has chosen the deficit over human needs. We now have homeless and people who are not in core need but are in dire need. Our Indians are still housed in substandard housing, but after all, according to the Government, the deficit has been reduced. The Conservatives, by taking the bull by the horns and tackling the deficit, have left us with a human deficit in times of economic prosperity.

The Liberal Party is a practical one which would like to see the deficit under control but not at the expense of human beings as in the present case. What is clear is that housing is not a priority for the Government and there is no political will to do anything about it. For example, Bill C-111 has been left dragging on the Order Paper for three weeks now. We are ready for it but the Government is not.

I have a few words about affordability of housing. This is a big problem, especially for young couples. A study done by Mr. David Hulchanski, Professor of housing policy at the University of British Columbia, proved that if you make $25,000 a year you will probably never own a house. The average income for Canadians is approximately $22,000. House prices have been going up, as we all know, but salaries have not kept pace with housing costs. Some of the reasons for higher house prices are escalating land costs, higher predevelopment on "soft" costs, material and labour increases, shortage of specialized labour, extended municipal approval times, higher lot levies and increased service standards for new lots.

We do not expect this Government to do anything about it. CMHC has even financed a study by Clayton Research Associates Ltd. in which a number of things were examined. For instance, no down payment, as in Great Britain; reduced early mortgage payments; the speeding up of home building; the building of starter homes, and the possibility to deduct mortgage and property tax. But do not expect the Government to do anything. That is just a study, Mr. Speaker.

Regarding seniors, I am most concerned by the Conservative Government's inaction on the housing needs of the elderly. The Government makes a big to-do about the seniors' housing conference to be held in Halifax this fall.

It is too bad, but if one looks at the Government's record, all the studies and all the good will shown by the participants in finding solutions will be of no use with a Government so lacking in political will.

The elderly face many challenges. The "Granny Flat" program runs up against zoning problems and municipal bylaws. That is why we need coordination among the three levels of government, so that people can have the permission of cities like Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal and Winnipeg to build "Granny Houses" in their back yards to be able to look after their parents.

Some pressure is needed to convince municipalities that they have to change their bylaws. Solutions must also be found to finance housing for our elderly. Several possibilities are still under consideration, such as allowing seniors to draw monthly payments based on the equity that they have accumulated in their house.

Home service is another solution that should be negotiated with the provincial governments.

I have two questions: What prevents the Government from setting an integrated housing policy for seniors? And what prevents it from acting right away?

Mr. Speaker, I conclude. In the past, as housing spokesperson for the Liberal Party, I asked the Government to act on housing to help the least well-off, the homeless, the poorly housed, and also, as I said at the beginning of this speech, to help private enterprise in its efforts to provide homes for middle-income Canadians. But I am sorry to say that this seems to have fallen on deaf ears.

I am not normally a negative person, but the Progressive Conservative Government's performance on housing has led me to move the motion of censure in today's debate. I must conclude that the Conservative Government has failed in its duty, that it is useless to hope for any improvement and that we must wait until a Liberal Government is elected to pick up the pieces.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I will start with a couple of comments after which I will ask my hon. colleague a question.

The problem with the Hon. Member's speech, which I listened to carefully—by the way, I must say that when I was elected in 1984, I started off by working on the Transport Committee, and I have great respect for the Hon. Member from Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic who sits on the other side of the House.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I should like to add that I would never stoop to playing politics . . . But as was mentioned by the Hon. Member, when we came into office in 1984, as a government we were faced with a two billion dollar deficit. Her party's record during 22 years, from 1962 to 1984, is something to be considered by the House.

[English]

As I mentioned, I do not want to attack my hon. colleague because she is a very nice person, but I am attacking her politics. To be $200 million in the hole is something. What do we do for old age pensioners? I can say that in my constituency, we have put a priority on low-rental housing, though there is not enough. However, the money does not drop from the ceiling. It has to come from the taxpayers. When we raise taxes, the taxpayers say that we are charging them too much for old people.

[Translation]

But, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party has always looked after the well-being of senior citizens. That is what I do in my riding. That is what we will go on doing. But it is no easy task, however, when there is a limited amount of money available; I shall give you an example. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, to have to make a personal remark but take the case of my wife who went out this afternoon with my credit card. However my card is "overcharged", which means she won't spend a penny. That is what we didn't want to see and that is what we said in 1984.

[English]

That is what we said in 1984, that we would put sound finances in Government. We have helped the old people. The old people at home have access to every Member of Parliament, regardless of political stripe, but especially to those of Conservative stripe.

I respect the Hon. Member and I hesitate to criticize her for her political, Liberal speech. We are going ahead with Indian housing, and more announcements will be made.

Finally, where did the $200-billion Liberal dollars go for the people the Hon. Member represents today?

[Translation]

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, my friend from Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) is right when he says we are old friends. I like to think I have quite a few friends in this House, and I think I do. However, people who know me well call me an iron hand in a velvet glove.

An Hon. Member: Yes, indeed!

Mrs. Killens: And that is because I am very firm when I believe in something. As far as my motives are concerned, I would have made the same speech if the Liberals had made these mistakes, and I will tell you why. To me, it is a matter of justice. If my speech seemed like a partisan speech, that is not what I was trying to do, because I'm not like that. I'm a very poor politician. I'm a better administrator than a politician. What I had to say today, I happened to say it in this form. I know about housing issues thanks to the help I get from my office staff, because I am sure all Members realize we have to be knowledgeable on a number of subjects and have a lot of work to do. So I have learned a lot in the process.

I would now like to make a few comments about our Native people. Since Bill C-31 was passed, there has been a waiting list of 60,000, mostly applications from women and children who want to go back to the reserve. Since the situation is already very serious, they cannot be reintegrated and are always second on the list. We have to start with the people who are already on the reserve, who are not getting the services they should, and who have a very high mortality rate. That is where we must start, and once again, I wonder why Bill C-31 was passed without providing the tools to implement the legislation. That is why I condemn the present Government, and I can assure you I would have done the same if it had been my own Government.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic on her excellent speech, her thorough research and appropriate comments. If the Hon. Member on the other side wants the floor, he should go back to his seat and ask his questions in the accepted manner. If he would care to listen, I will tell him why we in the Official Opposition, why we in the Liberal Party believe that this Government should be replaced, and I will use the point made by the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeline (Mr. Gray), which was:

[English]

Money does not drop from the ceiling. I agree with the Hon. Member. However, why does the Government have to tax Canadians as it has since it has been in power? Do tell why there has been an increase in personal income taxes and why the income tax tables have been deindexed. Why talk about deindexing old age pensions? Why increase the tax burden on Canadians?

I have here an official document which indicates that since the Conservatives came to power, the excise tax on gasoline increased by five cents a litre. Since the Conservatives came to power, taxes paid by individuals increased by 68 per cent or $29.3 billion. Taxes paid by corporations increased by 28 per cent or $2 billion, and I am talking about the last Budget, yet 60,000 profitable corporations still do not pay taxes.

These Tories over there are criticizing my colleague for her point which is that the Government has indeed forgotten about affordable housing. Indeed, you people don't give a damn about housing.

When the Hon. Member gets a chance, he can answer me. Now I am asking my colleague if she does not agree with me. I am looking for assistance from my eastern colleagues. Do they know what sweat equity means? It means that people earned a bit of money, did some repairs to their houses, and would indeed stay in their own homes. That was a program which the federal Liberal Government at the time put together in Cape Breton in 1976-77 called the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. We gave money to Canadians to restore their dwellings to a healthy state and to maintain them for at least 15 years.

Does the Member know that if the Government had continued that program people would still be in their houses? Does she know that Canadians today are leaving their homes and going to senior citizens' homes because they cannot afford to stay in their houses? Does she know that the RRAP program has not increased by one single cent since the Tory Government took over?

Not one penny has been added to the RRAP program. It took money from the RRAP program and put it in the social housing program. It did not put a new co-op program or a new RRAP program in place. It has done nothing for housing in Canada for the last three and a half years. Is the Member aware of that?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With due respect to the comments of the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I said in my opening remarks that I agree with the Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) who said that we have to do something. The Conservative Party has been sensitive in my constituency and it will continue to be sensitive to the people. We have to find money which the Liberals spent—

Mr. Gauthier: That is not a point of order, that's argument.

[Translation]

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting day. I would like to tell my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that he is completely right, it is the RRAP program. I agree with him. I know that I do not have much time to answer this question, but when he listed the $23.9 billion in extra taxes, I must tell you that were our colleague from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) here, he could give you the information. We gave you some. It will be in Hansard for you to review it and you will see that the Government should have brought down its deficit quite a bit more if it had been properly administered, because with all the $23.9 billion in extra taxes, we should have a considerably smaller deficit than we do now.

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I very much enjoyed listening to my hon. friend who is the housing critic for the Liberal Party. However, I do take issue with some of the facts upon which she based her motion and a good deal of her representation.

The first part of her motion indicates that there are 100,000 homeless people, including women and children, and that the number is growing. Does my friend have any statistics available to support such a figure? My information is that on January 28, 1987, the Canadian Council on Social Development did a survey across Canada and determined that the number of homeless on that particular night, one of the coldest nights of the year, was 8,000. The figure may be 10,000 or it may be 7,000. It is not precise. We must, however, put the debate in context, and I do take grave issue with the statistic cited by my friend in her motion that we are dealing with 100,000 people.

The motion before us contains a number of particulars, but the thrust of it is that the Government has failed to exercise leadership in espousing housing policies for Canadians which have been beneficial rather than detrimental.

The Canadian Home Builders Association has been in Ottawa for five days. Representatives have met with myself, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the last speaker, and members of the NDP to discuss the state of the union with respect to housing. Coincidentally, I have just received a letter from Mr. Gary Santini, the President of the Canadian Homebuilders Association, dated May 18, 1988. The letter addresses the issues involved in this debate. I will read the letter in part and am quite prepared to table it. After discussing the various meetings with all concerned, he said:

> We came away with a renewed sense of the Government's dedication to the needs of the housing sector, both private and non-profit.
> I do not exaggerate when I say that considerable progress has been made under your leadership in the development of a comprehensive approach to housing policy in Canada. As an industry, we are acutely aware of the commitments you have made to our industry's development, particularly in the areas of training and education, technical research, regulatory reform and market analysis. Your overall policies and directions are well balanced and frankly, we are delighted to see the way you have been able to target resources to housing the truly needy.
> Overall, it's a job well done; keep it going; and we look forward to working even more closely with you in the future.

That is the latest analysis of what the Government has been able to accomplish and is intending to put on the menu with respect to housing policies for Canada in the next few months.

The issue is about leadership. My proponent suggests, with a great deal of rhetoric, and in good faith, that there is a need for more and better housing to deal with a number of problems in Canada. We agree with this. That is why the Government has made it an axiom of its policies that housing is one of the most fundamental rights and needs in Canada. That is why I am proud to cite certain information and statistics which indicate that we have indeed been very successful in bringing about dramatic improvements in housing for all Canadians in all parts of Canada.

To put the debate in its proper context, I must call the attention of this House to the fact that when we got into office we decided that we would not unilaterally impose housing policies on Canadians and on the provinces. The hallmark of the Liberal Government was to impose, unilaterally and without consultation, housing policies. I suggest that the results were somewhat wanting. That is why we undertook the most extensive and intensive consultative process throughout Canada when we came to office. Some 8,000 people and groups were consulted representing financial institutions, mortgage companies, social housing groups, co-operative housing associations, contractors, and all people who are directly or indirectly interested and involved with housing.

We incorporated into legislation the fundamental message which we received, that is, that all the housing funds of the Government should be directed toward those most in need. One can say that we have abdicated leadership because we have consulted. I take another view, as I think Canadians do. Canadians want a government which wishes to secure their participation and receive their advice on what is appropriate for all parts of Canada. We have put in place national policies which responds to the advice we sought. This is reflected in a tremendous improvement in the number of housing starts in Canada since 1984.

For example, in 1987 there were 246,000 housing starts in this country, the largest number of housing starts in the last decade. There has been an increase in housing starts in every year since the Government took office in 1984. We have had an average of 204,000 housing starts per year since 1984 compared with 141,000 in the three years prior to 1984. Sixty-two per cent of Canadians own their own home. Indeed, it may be fair to say that Canada is a housing leader and that if it is not the best housed nation in the world it is certainly among the best. People come from all parts of the world to seek advice from Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation on our programs and our policies. They see that this Government is getting a better bang for its buck in housing policy.

I might note, with respect to the rental market, that the national vacancy rate rose from 1.6 per cent in 1986 to 2.5 per cent in October, 1987. That indicates that with the tremendous number of housing starts and with government programs we have relieved some of the pressure in some places in Canada where there has been that adverse experience.

Let me turn to the co-operative programs with our provinces. It was suggested that there has been an abdication of responsibility and leadership in this area. We have formed agreements with every province in Canada, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, with a view to delivering more funds to those most in need. I say to the housing critic for the Liberal Party that we are the first Government to direct all of its funds in this area to those most in need. How does that constitute an abdication of leadership and responsibility?

She spoke at great length about the homeless and our failure to respond. I can say that 550,000 social housing units have been constructed in Canada to respond to that particular constituency. I can say that during the past 20 years more than 400,000 houses have been assisted by way of rehabilitation and renovation.

I suggest to my hon. friend that in 1988 this Government increased its Budget by $100 million, to $1.7 billion. Again, all of those funds are directed to those most in need.

As a result of entering into agreements with the provinces, we have been able to lever some $300 million more of provincial money to complement the federal program. The amount contributed by the provinces in addition to our $1.7 billion means that more than $2 billion of funds are going to house and help those most in need in Canada. Substantially more people are being helped through these programs than ever before.

Contrary to the housing programs of the previous Government, 30 per cent more Canadians who are in need are getting help by reason of the federal-provincial agreements and because of our policies.

My friend commented on the International Year of the Homeless. This Government made available funding in the amount of $1.7 million for the establishment of programs which might serve as instructive for other programs for the homeless. We invited people from all over the world to Ottawa to explain how the global problem of homelessness might be dealt with, because the problem is not peculiar to Canada. Indeed, our problem in this regard may be less than that faced by any other nation in the world.

The message we received and the brunt of the report that will be made available is that homelessness is indeed a multidimensional problem which includes such causes as socio-economic, lack of proper economic and entrepreneurial skills with many of our young Canadians, violence, drugs and mental problems. All of these contribute toward homelessness and must be addressed by all levels of Government, not just one in isolation.

My friend spoke of the problem facing our native people. We agree with her that this has been a long-standing problem for many years. I suggest that Governments of all Parties have tried to accommodate this very difficult situation which is unacceptable to our Government, to all Parties and all Canadians.

There is much to do. Let me point out that 50 per cent of all the rural funds were directed to native people on a priority basis. There are 1,000 additional units each year to meet the needs of urban natives.

In co-operation with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, we have ongoing programs on reserves. Last year, 1,240 new units were put in place with an additional $9 million in RRAP funds.

My colleague commented enthusiastically on the changes we proposed to the National Housing Act for mortgage insurance.

I welcome her support. Indeed, we have been endeavouring to have a quick debate so that legislation could move through quickly. I might note that if she can persuade her colleagues to stop filibustering on so many pieces of legislation that are before the House, we could get on with the real business of the nation and deal with amendments concerning fundamental issues like this.

Mortgage insurance will give more Canadians an opportunity to own a home. The changes we propose will assist people with very low downpayments to buy a house for the first time. The amendment we propose will allow Canadian homeowners to secure second mortgages at interest rates comparable to the first.

We all recall with some terror when first mortgages may have been 12 per cent or 14 per cent and second mortgages were 18 per cent to 24 per cent. It was obviously impossible for any young Canadian couple to purchase a home at those exorbitant rates. We are undertaking to ensure that a second mortgage is comparable to the first and the rate of interest charged by the mortgage or financial institution will be very much the same. Inevitably, one can conclude that more people will be able to buy houses at an affordable rate.

We are concerned with affordability. We recognize that there are some one million people in Canada who cannot secure a home appropriate to their needs. However, in the last two years this Government has been able to assist 107,000 new units of social housing through its RRAP or non-profit program. Approximately 50 per cent of the 107,000 people in the last two years have been able to obtain new accommodation through the non-profit program and the rest have been helped through the RRAP program. We have made tremendous strides, although there is more to do. What we are talking about now is leadership. We are talking about whether we have used the dollars available to us in an expeditious and appropriate way, getting the best value for our money.

One other facet of the changes we propose to the National Housing Act is to provide insurance for chattel mortgages. We are talking about insuring mortgages for mobile or manufactured homes. This is an area of housing policy which has perhaps been allowed to lapse for too long a period of time. We know that in other countries mobile homes and manufactured homes have provided substantial, comfortable and affordable accommodation for a great number of people who would not otherwise be able to call one place their home. We are going to ensure the purchase of new trailers. Previously people who wanted to buy a mobile home could not get financing from the standard financial institutions. They had to pay consumer rates of interest because loans for mobile homes were treated as consumer loans and too often the rates of interest were exorbitant and unaffordable. Our amendments will deal appropriately with that.

There are many facets of our successful housing program. Perhaps to give evidence of the merit of the proposed mortgage housing amendments, I would indicate a number of headlines. The headline in the Toronto Star on March 25, 1987, reads: "Mortgage Rule Change Helps Renters to Buy Homes". A headline in the Ottawa Citizen on March 25, 1987 reads: "Changes to Mortgage Insurance Fund Will Aid Home Ownership". The headline in the Toronto Star of May 14, 1988 reads: "Mortgage Backed Securities a Popular Investment Choice". That has nothing to do with our new amendments to the National Housing Act. It is a new scheme which has made available some $600 million of new investment from the private sector. This will allow more funds in the mortgage market. It will provide more competition, leading to lower interest rates and longer term mortgages. Indeed, for the very first time last year we saw a return to 10 year mortgages. For too long a period of time we have only been able to have access to five year mortgages. It will provide stability, availability and more affordability for Canadians.

The headline in the Ottawa Citizen on March 25 reads: "Changes to Mortgage Insurance Fund Will Aid Home Ownership". The headline in the Montreal Gazette on April 15 read: "Housing Starts Rebound". The headline in the Toronto Sun on March 25, 1987, read: "Mortgage Rules Lauded". So, when my friend says this Government has abdicated leadership and is responsible for deterioration in the housing situation of Canadians, I can only say to her that I am prepared to rely on the objective evidence. I am prepared to rely on statistics and on the commentaries I have cited today. Unfortunately, I have consumed all of my time, but I would welcome any questions.

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, my first question is one that I already asked in the House some months ago about our not having a national law establishing responsibility for housing in Canada, such as exists in Australia and in England, for example.

I would like to know whether the Minister has already studied the two laws of both these countries, because I always come back to the apparent lack of coordination throughout the country for solving housing problems. I may have emphasized homelessness, but this problem has so many social consequences that I am very concerned about it. There are other problems as well that could be solved throughout the country if people talked to each other. For example, I have an article from Le Soleil of Quebec and another from La Presse of Montreal, in which Mayor Doré of Montreal deplores this lack of communication; the article says that the Doré administration is somewhat concerned. This refers to the $2.5 million from the federal and provincial governments.

According to the article, the mayor is worried because the senior governments decided without consulting the city or the community groups working with the homeless. That is, Mayor Doré of Montreal said he was not consulted. It is true that money is available from the federal and provincial governments, but in the other article, in La Presse, entitled "$11 million for housing restoration in Montreal", Mr. Gardiner, the city councillor responsible for housing in Montreal, said that if Montreal had not decided to put in the same amount of money, the Canada-Quebec restoration program would not have been as successful.

So you see, cooperation leads to municipalities putting in some money. In this way, we get the most leverage from federal and provincial funds.

So my question for the Minister is: Why is there not better coordination and cooperation among all levels of government? I include school commissions in that because they often have empty buildings and it seems that people do not talk to each other. Am I mistaken, Mr. Minister?

[English]

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question which is appropriate and relevant. May I respond by saying quickly, and I do not want to be repetitive, that we have come to our housing policies through massive cross Canada consultations. The agreements we have, which involve the provinces, provide for a long range planning and short range programs to respond to immediate needs. Only last week, the Deputy Ministers of all of the provinces met with officials of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to see if there were any particular priorities. I am advised that the provinces indicated they are very pleased with the housing programs and the amount of co-operation which has resulted from this massive consultation and ongoing discussion and dialogue.

One of the most fundamental problems in Canada which impedes housing starts and appropriate responses to the homeless is regulatory reform. Two years ago I commissioned a study by the Federation of Municipalities, the Canadian Homebuilders Association and CAHRO officials to undertake a response to this increasing problem. In Toronto, which has been cited as a centre of increasing difficulty by many people in the House over the last two weeks, the biggest singular problem for securing appropriate and affordable housing is lack of regulatory reform.

It takes more than three years to get approval on a piece of land for a particular social housing project from beginning to end. That is obviously within the jurisdiction of the municipality. It is within the jurisdiction of municipalities across Canada and it is something that must be co-ordinated and addressed. We know the requirements of a municipality in one part of Ontario is very much different from another town and city just five miles away and, of course, they differ from province to province.

We need uniformity and we are going to address that in a meeting with the Federation of Municipalities in Halifax this June. The motion the Hon. Member proposed is appropriate. I accept it. In response I say that we are following exactly that kind of format.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the motion that is being debated this afternoon addresses housing shortfalls in various areas. I would like to move from the larger cities of our country to northern communities, in particular northern Ontario communities where there are also very great difficulties. I think of one such community in particular. It is Aroland near Nakina in the area of Geraldton where a de facto band has been hoping for a couple of years to be able to begin reserve establishment.

The determination of the Government not to provide funding to these bands which were given de facto recognition by the previous Minister, the now resigned Hon. Member for Rosedale, has exacerbated the housing situation in that community. This is one of the communities, to bring it more particularly to the point for the Minister to consider, where Frontiers Foundation has been at work in assisting in the rehabilitation of properties. The former Secretary of State had approaches from this foundation to obtain support for its administrative activity so that it could carry on the work of ensuring that rehabilitation went ahead in a context of being able to establish a reserve and to build the new houses that were wanted.

My question for the Minister arises from a refusal of the Government in these two areas. The first area is with respect to the refusal to fund new reserves. Second, there is the refusal to provide assistance to this voluntary, non-governmental organization that was doing something to meet the housing needs of aboriginal people which the Government was neglecting to meet.

Has the Minister paid any attention at all to the problems such as the ones being experienced at Aroland and other areas? I do not expect the Minister necessarily to pay a visit to Aroland to see the difficulties of persons who perch in their crude houses on the top of a sand dune on the northern CNR line through northern Ontario. Surely in case after case these are situations which cry out for action by the Government. Words in the House of Commons will not do it.

What has the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) in dealing with housing challenges in these small communities done to make any kind of difference at all?

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member brings to our attention a geographical area of Canada which indeed has housing problems. There have been problems there for many years and there will be for a long period of time.

I was in the Northwest Territories about six weeks ago to visit smaller communities which are experiencing the difficulties that the Hon. Member has cited with a view to determining appropriate solutions in consultation and in co-operation with local Government. Indeed, we took some initiatives in that particular regard.

The Hon. Member cited one agency, Frontiers Foundation. The situation of that particular group was brought to my attention some months ago, perhaps more than a year ago. It had some difficulties, in particular administrative difficulties. We had been supportive for a very long period of time but it had accepted certain obligations to deliver the programs with which they were entrusted and, unfortunately, were not able to respond. We will give money to groups which are able to deliver rural and native programs. They are identified as those which are prepared to accept direction and responsibility. They will receive funding on that type of basis.

In response to the wind-up of the Hon. Member's question, we will be undertaking at the end of this year a review of our rural and native housing programs for the last five years to determine in consultation with territorial and northern Governments, and in consultation with native and housing groups, whether the type of programs that we have in place are working effectively, or whether there should be amendments or new proposals which might be put in place for those who are the subject of this discussion.

Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I am one who comes from rural Ontario, north of the great metropolitan area of Toronto. I often feel that we as rural Ontarian people living in the central part of Ontario are having difficulty getting a fair share of funding for low income and seniors' housing. I know that the federal Government gives the Province of Ontario 60 per cent plus, probably sometimes, of the money to fund these projects. However, at the same time I question that share of those funds that rural Ontario people are getting. I have had this concern for some time. I thought that possibly we could see some change down the road.

This matter has been raised through service clubs in that their needs were not met by the Ministers in the jurisdiction of the Province of Ontario which in my consideration carry about 100 per cent of the decision-making in respect to localities for housing.

We probably have to take a look, Mr. Minister, at the way the designation of housing is granted in consideration for people who have lived all their lives in rural Ontario where housing is less expensive than in the metropolitan and over-crowded areas. These rural people have no desire to move there. I am very concerned that their needs have not been given due consideration. I beg of the Minister to take this matter to his provincial colleagues to ask for more input in respect to the decisions made by different service clubs and non-profit organizations which want to share in rural Ontario and keep their people in the good life of Ontario.

I know that there is a long, drawn out process in respect to people in my area, central Ontario, in getting approvals. Too many of them have been overlooked in favour of the larger metropolitan areas. It is true that I know that there are a great many people in great need, but why can we not encourage the people in the smaller communities to have affordable housing for their senior citizens, and not put more pressure on Toronto. They are used to a slower pace of life. Yet they are forced to move out to large communities, not always Metropolitan Toronto. I certainly urge the Minister to take a hard look at this matter. I know that I am not the only one who has run into it. It is not an isolated case.

I think that we should grant some rights to these people who enjoy the slower pace of life in the rural communities, large and small. That has been their chosen home over the years.

I am giving the Minister notice right now that it would be a fair choice in the decisions made for these people who want to live in the quieter parts of Ontario to have the same opportunities as the ones in the larger areas.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, as is the Hon. Member's custom, he adds considerable merit to the proposal which he brings to this particular debate. I wish to try to give him some assurance that there is a federal-provincial committee of officials who try to determine the priorities in any particular province where funds are going to be expended in any particular year.

The needs and direction may change from year to year. When people say: "You are cutting out a particular program, a RRAP program, a non-profit program, and we are not going to get as many units this year as last year", that is not quite fair. What we are saying is: "Perhaps you will not get as many units as last year because the priorities have changed. There are a number of other people in your province who have a greater need".

There is some flexibility. I want to assure the Hon. Member that the situation is being monitored, that the rural parts of Canada are very important to CMHC. I take the Hon. Member's advice. I am prepared to take a new look at the matter.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) that whether he wants to recognize it or not, there is a crisis in Canada over the availability of affordable housing. While I believe it is true across the country, I think the problem is not only apparent but very transparent when one looks at a place like Metropolitan Toronto. The Minister told us that he was proud of the fact that there had been an increase in housing starts across Canada in recent months. I am not going to dispute that, because that is the case. But I would ask the question: Who are those houses being built for? The average price of a resale house in Metropolitan Toronto shot up approximately $11,000 in the last month to a record high of approximately $224,000 for the cost of an average home in Metro Toronto.

I want to ask the Minister whether he travels in circles of people who have the type of salaries to buy that type of housing. Prior to this debate I went into the library and dug out the home section of a Toronto daily issued last weekend. I wish to give you some idea of the type of prices that we are talking about in Metro Toronto, Mr. Speaker.

For a luxury town home at affordable prices, they only want the simple amount of $167,900. That is for a townhouse. If one has the income, one can have a house on a ravine lot in Scarborough for $277,990. If one does not like being too close to the City of Toronto, one can move out to Bramalea and buy a nice house there for a range of prices between $239,900 and $299,900. I am not talking about luxury homes, Mr. Speaker. If one does not like Bramalea, perhaps one can move to Brampton and buy a house for $189,900. If that is not suitable, one can move into Bayview and buy a house for $438,000. If these communities are not suitable, one can move around and go to a place called Leslie Valley. There one can buy a bargain house for $199,990.

One can also go to Dixon Road on Highway 2 or Dundas Street, and find a house there for $199,990. If one really wants a deal, one can move to Pickering and buy a house for $154,990. These are not luxury homes by any means. When the Minister states that because of the increase in housing starts across the country there is no housing crisis, he is deluding himself, but he is certainly not deluding Canadians who have to live with the situation.

I have talked about houses in Metropolitan Toronto costing around $200,000. In my own neck of the woods, and I am certainly not in an affluent neighbourhood of Toronto, houses cost anywhere around $300,000. These are resale homes. The average wage in Metropolitan Toronto is approximately $484 per week or $25,464 a year.

It defies logic and common sense to say that housing that is being constructed today is affordable to the average income earner in a place like the City of Toronto. In fact, for most couples who want to buy a house in Toronto, both people have to work. They better not have any kids because they will not be able to carry the house let alone put a down payment on the house. It is totally unrealistic for the Minister to use the type of argument which he used to dismiss the intent of this motion.

I do not want us to return to the days around August 29, 1947, when the City of Toronto ran advertisements in newspapers across Canada which stated:

WARNING

ACUTE HOUSING SHORTAGE IN TORONTO, ONTARIO

Notification is hereby given to non-residents of this City that there is no available housing accommodation here. This Corporation will assume no responsibility or provide any assistance in locating living quarters for any person contemplating moving to Toronto.

For your own comfort and convenience

DO NOT COME TO TORONTO, ONTARIO

FOR HOUSING ACCOMMODATION

That was signed by the Mayor at that time, Robert Saunders, and the City Clerk at that time, J. W. Somers. That advertisement was run in newspapers on August 29, 1947.

The situation in Toronto is very similar today. My constituency office handles more calls from people asking for assistance to find affordable accommodation, whether it is a rooming house, an apartment, co-op housing units, or social housing run by the City of Metropolitan Toronto or the Ontario Government. I cannot help those people. There are no vacancies in Toronto. The vacancy rate in the City of Toronto is zero.

Approximately one month ago I received a letter from a woman who was a resident of Beaches for many years. Two years ago she moved to Cape Breton to look after her elderly mother. In that letter she stated that she was now ready to return to Toronto and wondered whether I could make any suggestions where she could apply for reasonable cost housing. I had to write back to that woman and seriously advise her that before she contemplated moving back to Toronto she attempt to find some housing, because there is absolutely none here.

In the City of Toronto a one bedroom apartment starts off at approximately $1,200 a month. A basement apartment in a house, which is usually not even two rooms, costs approximately $800 per month. One cannot find anything less. To make the argument that the Minister does that there is no crisis in housing defies belief, because there certainly is.

When I first was married I had every reasonable expectation that at some point I would be able to buy a house, and indeed I eventually did. Like most people, it was a struggle to begin with, but we managed. I do not know of too many young couples in Toronto who are starting off who can buy a home. In fact, it is becoming quite common when a young couple in Metropolitan Toronto get married that they move in with their parents and live in the parents' house rather than trying to find an apartment on their own, if they can afford the apartment to begin with. They certainly cannot afford a house when one looks at housing prices in the City of Toronto.

The Minister argued several minutes ago that an organization in Canada had conducted a study one winter night a year or so ago on the number of homeless in Canada that they could locate and found in total about 8,000 people who could be considered homeless in this country. I believe the Minister stated that the study was conducted on January 28, 1987. I have study after study where if one added up the numbers of homeless people who have been identified, not only in Toronto, but in Montreal, Vancouver, Winnipeg, the numbers way surpass 8,000 individuals who could be considered homeless in Canada.

The Toronto Star recently ran an excellent article, and I suggest that the Minister get his hands on it. It may educate him. The article said, and it is absolutely right, that no one knows exactly how many homeless there are in Canada. That kind of study has never been conducted. What has been done is a number of studies in a number of major urban centres. Here is what The Toronto Star had to say about a study done in Toronto:

> Each day all of Metro's 2,500 hostel beds are occupied and social service officials estimate that up to 20,0000 people rely on them annually.
> About 20 hostels in Metro are run by charity groups with government funding and there are special shelters for men, families and battered women. The waiting list for government housing assistance has thousands of names.

I can attest to that. All you have to do is pick up the telephone and call City Homes, run by the City of Toronto, the Metro Housing Authority, or the Ontario Housing Authority and ask them how many people they have on waiting lists. It would knock your eye out. In fact, I call the number of people seeking affordable housing and unable to find it a national disgrace, especially when you consider that Canada is a signatory to the U.N. Declaration which recognizes that housing, like health care, education and the other things we take for granted, are in fact a necessity of life.

I could say a lot more about this. Unfortunately the Minister is not here but I could tell him, and he knows this full well, that there is absolutely no shortage of innovative ideas and concrete suggestions about what can be done to rectify the homeless problem we have. If implemented, these proposals could provide decent, affordable housing.

The Co-op Housing Federation, for example, have been complaining for a number of years that they entered into good faith negotiations with the Minister's officials, the Ministry committed itself to providing funding for 5,000 additional co-op housing units a year, but it has never come through with that funding. It is well short. The Federation put forward a concrete set of proposals to provide alternative housing for people to move into co-op housing. That is an excellent form of housing if you cannot afford to buy. Even if you do not want to buy, it is an excellent form of housing in the sense of community it brings to people who live there.

I will just read quickly through the proposals the Federation made to the Government. They said the budget for co-op housing should be increased to raise production to 10,000 units per year. If the Government were to do that this year it probably would not cost a cent in extra money for co-op housing because it has not come through with the allocation for co-op housing it promised for the last couple of years. All the Government would be doing is carrying out the promise it made over the last couple of years.

On the question of affordability, the number of subsidies for low and modest income people in co-op housing should be increased so that co-ops can achieve an income mix reflecting the communities in which they are developed. Subsidies for low income people should be available for 40 per cent of all new units, and subsidies for modest income people, slightly above core need, should be available for 20 per cent of all units.

They also argue that a one time contribution of $20 million should be made to a CHF administered national land trust to be used to secure land for co-op housing development. They also make the point, and I urge the Minister to give this a lot of consideration, that administration of co-operative housing units should be transferred from CMHC to the Co-operative Housing Foundation.

With respect to the rehabilitation of existing affordable housing, they suggest housing co-ops be allowed access to federal rehabilitation programs which would be added to the basic co-op housing program. These would allow new co-ops to renovate more existing units at lower cost and provide them at lower charges. Any rent increases due to renovations should be phased in gradually so that existing tenants are not forced to leave. In the conversations I have had with the Federation they advised me that it would not cost the Government a red cent if it just shuffled some of that responsibility around and let the Federation carry on its own administration.

I just cannot understand how the Minister can come up with the arguments he has to minimize the housing crisis when you consider his own Department, CMHC, the main agency responsible for administering housing policy at the federal level, identified the three categories of families or individuals who have a core social housing need. This is the CMHC criteria:

Individuals or families paying 30 per cent or more of their gross income for rent and for whom the basic cost of a decent housing unit of suitable size in the market area represents 30 per cent or more of their income; households paying less than 30 per cent of their income on rent but living in housing that is too small or of poor quality and for whom the basic cost of a decent housing unit of suitable size in their market area represents 30 per cent or more of their income; households with a need for special purpose accommodation, such as the disabled, the elderly, female victims of violence, juvenile delinquents or individuals with alcohol or drug problems and requiring special services.

You could take all that criteria and apply it to a place like Metropolitan Toronto and it fits. The Department's own criteria says there is a housing crisis in Metropolitan Toronto, for all the reasons I mentioned previously.

I see I have about two minutes left and I want to use them to say that while housing is a very serious matter for most Canadians and their families, it is a special problem for single parent families which are usually headed by a woman. They are the ones who suffer most in this housing crisis. It is that area which needs immediate attention. From what I can see of the Minister's policies, that problem is not being addressed.

Very quickly I would make the argument again that you can argue all you want about housing starts increasing across Canada in the last couple of years but it does not mean anything if you happen to live in Metropolitan Toronto, earning the average wage I spoke of, about $25,000 a year. Those kinds of figures are meaningless to these people. What is really required is for the federal Government to step in and make Crown lands such as the Downsview Airport, available for affordable housing construction. There are all kinds of groups willing to lend assistance and technical know how to do that. An innovative, imaginative group of people are out there. All it will take is the political will on the part of the Government to provide leadership and allow them to go ahead and do the job required.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this debate which the Opposition motion is affording Members of the House even though it makes the characteristic error of attributing the housing crisis in Metropolitan Toronto to the federal Government. Common sense itself should show, as I regret the last speaker did not indicate, that there is a greater spread of government responsibility over all three levels of Government. Much of the fault lies in the private sector itself. It is absolutely essential that the Government and the House of Commons in general address the problem of housing in our major urban centres because it is necessary to the social well-being of our country.

I have just a moment or two in the time allowed for comments by Members, nevertheless I would like to suggest that we have the potential for a very positive housing policy if we address ourselves to such proposals as the ones I have time only to itemize. I hope to elaborate upon them when I have the chance for a fuller debate in Private Members' Hour some time within the next few weeks on this same subject. I would like my neighbour and friend to join in that debate.

For example, we need a greater incentive for apartment construction. The only way we can drive rents down in an urban centre like Metro Toronto is by getting a greater supply of apartments. Second, we need the province to review the number of approvals and the cost of approvals needed for a development which drive the price of development up and which is then added to the cost of housing. Third, we need to provide some opportunity for people living in social housing as tenants to obtain ownership of their accommodation. That opportunity has been given in other countries and has been successful. We need to look at it here.

We need some way of addressing the problem of house value speculation by private citizens and companies. Governments have tackled it in the past with some success. We need in this highly inflationary, this explosively inflationary, period of housing prices to make that a priority. We need also to look at the way in which Governments can use land under government control, but not when Canada Mortgage and Housing and the authorities of the Province of Ontario act as if they are private developers themselves, interested primarily in the bottom line. The process of distributing government land to persons who build houses for purchase and who will acquire it for themselves should be done in a way that does not drive up prices in a speculative manner.

I would like some attention to be given, perhaps speakers later in this debate will do so, to a method used successfully by the federal and provincial Governments a few years ago, namely, to lease land on which houses were constructed so that a low-income person who wanted to own his own house could buy the house and lease the land for a period of time. Later he or she would have an opportunity, when finances were better, to acquire the land. There are ways by which Governments at all three levels can act on behalf of a person who has limited resources now and who is being crowded out of the housing market and unfortunately out of the rental market as well.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I took it that the Hon. Member was commenting rather than asking a question. I welcome his comments. I tried to be extremely careful to be non-partisan in the course of my speech.

I really believe that the solutions to the housing crisis do not belong to one level of Government. I would make the argument that while Governments can play a major role and provide the means to resolve the housing crisis, I do not think that Governments can do it on their own. When they have tried in the past, very often things have been a mess. Housing construction has taken place at the local level for all the wrong reasons, very often for political reasons and not to serve a need.

A lot of individuals and groups have been involved in providing alternative housing sources over the years. We should be asking them for innovative ideas because they have them. Ideas are best supplied by people who understand the community and who want to provide solutions. I have no objection to one of the suggestions made that perhaps land could be leased by an individual for some period of time until that individual finds himself or herself hopefully in a circumstance whereby he or she could purchase that land. That proposal should be looked at seriously.

This is one of those issues that comes before the House of Commons periodically, not often enough unfortunately, that is non-partisan in nature. This problem affects people across Canada regardless of who represents them politically. It is in that vein that if I offered any criticism in this debate at all, it was against CMHC for not carrying through with its obligations which were made through consultation and negotiation with one of the major groups having expertise in providing alternative housing in Canada. CMHC has not followed through with that commitment and as a result, rather than becoming a part of the solution, CMHC has become a part of the problem and I think that is extremely sad indeed.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that a Conservative Member, and NDP Member and some Liberal Members all agree on the importance of a national housing policy, and I think I share the views of the Hon. Member who has just spoken. I really believe that the Government has really missed the boat during the International Year for the Homeless.

Home rehabilitation programs in Montreal in working class districts such as mine are inadequate, and I should like to know if the situation is the same in the Hon. Member's own riding. I know that in Montreal, with the new housing co-operative policy, the people in the tenement sections whose incomes are around $12,000, $15,000 and $20,000 are penalized.

It is because CMHC is telling these people that their incomes are too high, and they are not entitled to grants and that it has to operate according to the market income. Well, automatically, these people are excluded. Which means that the co-operative program, as delivered on the basis of the share provided by the Federal government is for people who are either very poor or somewhat better off and who can go ahead.

Well, I should like to know if in his own riding, in other areas—I know that in Toronto and Montreal, they have the same problem—but I should like to know if in his region, the people are in the same position as the working men and women of average means who are penalized because they cannot be eligible to grants under this program.

[English]

Mr. Young: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. One of the problems identified by administrators and committees in co-op housing units is the rather rigid rules under which CMHC requires units to operate. It is specified they can only have so many low-income people in a project. In order to provide adequate funding on an ongoing basis for a project, they have to bring in more higher-income people to subsidize it. It is untenable and too rigid. This was part of the program when funding for co-op housing was introduced a few years ago.

I think the whole administrative attitude toward co-op housing needs to be revised radically. That is why I support one of the proposals from the Co-op Housing Federation, namely, that it be allowed to administrate its projects. They are democratic organizations, supported very strongly by people who have lived in co-op housing. They like that kind of housing. It provides them with a real community unit within the larger community. I think it is time that officials at CMHC sat down with the leaders of the co-op housing movement and listened to the suggestions that have been made to them to improve an already good system, though it is good only in the sense that the people in the co-op housing movement have made it a good system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will resume debate. With the consent of the House, the Chair would propose that we proceed in the following way: As there are 25 minutes left in debate, if the House agrees, the time will be shared equally between the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague opposite for giving me an opportunity to provide an update on the Government's activities in social housing. For almost three years now, the Government has endeavoured to use more efficiently the programs and moneys available to address the serious problems affecting close to one million Canadian households.

Hon. Members may recall that in November of 1985, my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), announced a global strategy that the Government would adopt in order to systematically address the housing problems of the most impoverished members of society. This strategy consists of several phases.

First, we wanted the different levels of Government to honour their efforts toward a common objective. Second, we wanted to concentrate the expenses for social housing on those whose needs were the greatest, those who are not able to find decent housing without having to spend more than 30 per cent of their incomes. Third, we wanted to introduce improved programs to ensure that housing needs of the households served are fully satisfied.

I would like to insist on the importance of the word "strategy", since in fact we are taking the first steps toward a national policy. The results of this policy can already be measured, and that is what I would like to talk about in the time available to me this afternoon.

My opposition colleague accuses the Government of being inconsistent. If we were to believe what we hear, the policy adopted by the Government shows that there is no national policy.

Would you consider it inconsistent, Mr. Speaker, for the Government to target its efforts toward the poor? Is there any inconsistency in the fact that for the first time in the history of social housing in Canada, a Government has taken measures to control the eligibility for programs so that the neediest Canadians in the worst housing conditions can at last find decent housing? Would you consider the fact that all levels of Government were invited to join hands in fighting the problems afflicting those in need as not having a vision for a national policy?

It is the needy who should answer these questions. It is the homeless who benefit from the new initiatives of the Government. Very little was available to them before.

My colleague from the Opposition blames the Government for its lack of leadership. Is it possible that she does not know the difference between leadership and loud publicity? The federal Government works hard and often in a discreet way in housing. Maybe she would prefer it if my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes), responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing, were to announce with much publicity how the Government has managed to integrate thousands of needy families into new communities. She might also want the Minister to mention the success of the Renovation Assistance Program in the cities, towns and villages across Canada.

The results are there to attest to the Government's leadership. Since 1986 when the new federal-provincial agreements and the new social programs were implemented, the Government has practically doubled the rate at which traditional forms of social housing provide assistance to Canadians to meet their core housing needs. This means that almost twice as many needy households are now being provided with new units, twice as many households assisted for the same total expenditure. If this cannot be qualified as effectiveness, I really do not know how else to describe this unprecedented success.

We are talking here about single-parent families, elderly people living in very poor housing conditions, families who have to spend large sums of money on housing out of proportion to their incomes in order to provide their children with suitable housing conditions. These are the people our programs have addressed.

The Government, which some try to blame for not providing leadership, has succeeded to such an extent that the previous Government would be envious of it. It is not on this Government that the blame must be put but rather on previous Governments for having waited so long to offer assistance to those most in need.

The Government is accused of having delegated its powers, of having abandoned its responsibilities, of having lost control of the national housing file. This is simply not true. The Government has not abandoned its responsibilities. On the contrary, it has acted in a responsible fashion and has entered into a dialogue with the provinces, a dialogue which is producing positive results.

For over two years now, the federal and provincial Governments have worked together to solve housing problems jointly. Rather than limiting its influence to federal expenditures, the Government now also has the opportunity to impact provincial expenditures. Not only has the Government been successful in influencing how the provinces spend their funds, it has also succeeded in convincing the provinces to substantially increase the amounts of funding to assist the homeless.

We know that there is still work to be done. Many voices are crying out for assistance from all levels of Government. The challenge is not small and the energy invested by the Government attests to its concern to act to provide assistance as rapidly as possible to the greatest number possible, but dedicating those funds and those actions to those who are most in need.

I see that my time is running short. The Government is receiving feedback from the people of Canada in order to make sure that the policies meet the needs of the people. The Government's leadership may be shown in many ways, but the most eloquent way is certainly that this leadership is based on national consensus. This is precisely what the Government has been successful in doing for almost three years now.

Every year the Government spends a considerable amount of money to alleviate the housing problems of Canadians. Each year over 50,000 additional families benefit from various forms of assistance offered to people in need. These amounts do not take into account the more than $1.5 billion already earmarked each year to reduce rents to an affordable level for families. Facts speak for themselves. They show a commitment to social justice and development for all Canadians. The housing policy of the Government has been well designed and is now yielding benefits.

My hon. colleague opposite who introduced the motion today said in closing her remarks: "Wait until the day after the next election for the Liberal Government to pick up the pieces of the previous Government's housing policy". The day after the next election, this Government will be here on this side of the House, and it will continue its housing policy. On that day, we will find fewer people in need because of the actions of this Government today.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate because it concerns a very fundamental aspect of the Canadian economy, the need for housing. I wish to compliment my colleague for introducing this motion today. It gives us a clear opportunity to debate some of the substantive aspects of the housing policy or the lack of housing policy in Canada.

One aspect of the issue which has caught my interest and the interest of my constituents as well as the interest of many Canadians is the lack of support the Government has provided to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. The previous speaker said that there are a number of Canadians who have innovative ideas with regard to housing policy.

The Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, for the benefit of Members opposite, was a program introduced by the Government of Canada in 1973 under a Liberal Government. One would have to concede that it was followed up by the Clark Government for a short period of time. We would have hoped that it would not only have been followed up on beyond 1984, but indeed expanded upon between 1984 and 1988. The exact opposite has occurred.

The Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program was started by the federal Government to encourage the upgrading of substandard dwellings, especially those occupied by low to moderate income earners—I wish to emphasize low to moderate income earners—in order to improve and maintain the existing housing stock. Eligible home owners and landlords were entitled to receive partly forgivable loans for admissible renovation costs.

Look at the market for this particular program. Does it assist home owners in the urban centres of this country who make in excess of $100,000 or $150,000? Is it a program which assists Canadians who make in excess of $50,000 or $40,000? No, it was a program directed to low-income earners, individuals on pensions and various fixed incomes.

The example I will provide for the House today is a rather telling story of what the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has done in his own native Province of Nova Scotia. The officials of his Department will tell you that there has never been a program of the federal Government under Canada Mortgage and Housing which has been more successful for those in need than the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, for both urban and rural communities across Atlantic Canada. However, nowhere has that program been more successful than in Nova Scotia.

The Government ought to be ashamed of its record on the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. As a Nova Scotian and one of the political Ministers from Nova Scotia, the Minister responsible should be ashamed. He should be even more ashamed that he has substantially cut the budgets under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program.

For example, I do not know why a Member of Parliament representing Halifax would have it in for the people of New Glasgow, but the budget for that particular municipality has been cut back since 1987 from $207,000. The forecast budget for 1988 is $126,000. This program does not throw money away. It is needed by many Canadians. In fact, this program provides provisional financial assistance to those in need, extends the life of existing housing stocks, promotes the acceptable level of maintenance of such stocks, and improves substandard housing to an agreed upon level of health and safety standards.

Those are the over-all objectives of the program. Yet, the political Minister from Nova Scotia is telling municipalities which need this money to improve their housing stocks that he is sorry but the Government is not going to provide that financial assistance to low income earners or people on fixed incomes.

It does not stop at New Glasgow. I do not know why the Minister from Halifax would have it in for the people of Pictou but the reduction there is from $113,000 in 1987 to $67,000 in 1988. The Town of Truro is a great community with an enthusiastic population. Its budget in 1987 was only $207,000, but in 1988 the Minister from Halifax reduced that to $126,000.

There are many similarities between the Town of Springhill and the area which I represent. In 1987 it was allotted $198,000 and the initial budget forecast for 1988 indicates $123,000. Granted, the Town of Amherst does not have the numerous restaurants or the convention centre which Halifax has, but it does have its share of low income Canadians and Canadians on fixed incomes who are in need of upgrading their housing. Their budget has been reduced from $293,000 in 1987 to $185,000.

This is a wonderful political Minister from Nova Scotia. He is doing a phenomenal job for low income Canadians and people on fixed incomes in the Province of Nova Scotia. He should do the honourable thing and ask for a change of portfolio. This is a shameful performance.

What about the area which I represent and Cape Breton Island as a whole? I repeat, for the benefit of Members who are present as well as those who are watching on television, that this particular program is needed on Cape Breton Island. In 1984 the previous Liberal Government provided the municipal units on Cape Breton Island approximately $6,763,460, almost $7 million. Now, under a Conservative Government in Nova Scotia, a Conservative Government in Ottawa, the political Minister from Nova Scotia has told the people in Cape Breton that for 1988 they will be allocated only $1.7 million.

There is a tremendous need, Mr. Speaker. There is a backlog of applications from low income Canadians and Canadians on fixed incomes in that area of the country who need this assistance in order to improve their housing stock. The Conservative Government and the political Minister from Nova Scotia have cut, cut, cut to an all-time high.

What has the Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) said to low-income Canadians and people on fixed incomes who want assistance under this particular program? He has said nothing. He has demonstrated that both he and the political Minister do not have the will or foresight to secure the necessary funds from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in order to provide those Canadians with financial assistance to make the repairs which are absolutely necessary. My colleague, the Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) has said that his constituents will deal with him in the next election.

The City of Sydney was allocated $563,000 in 1987. That has been decreased by 16 per cent to $350,000 in 1988. That is utterly shameful.

Richmond County, which is represented partly by the Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso and partly by myself, has had its budget slashed by 17 per cent from 1987 to 1988. In Cape Breton County in excess of 1,000 applicants are seeking money under this program and they have been slashed by 17 per cent as well, down from $763,000 in 1987 to $447,000 in 1988.

The list goes on and on in terms of the cut-back on a program that has been exceptionally successful. It was successful because it focused on people on pension and low income Canadians. These are people unlike the Minister, who makes in excess of $100,000, but make from $10,000 to $13,000 a year. They are not your Texaco president or Royal Bank president.

These are average Canadians trying to get along in their daily life, and it would be so much easier with a little assistance from the Government of Canada. Yet they are being told that they cannot have this assistance because the Conservative Government of Canada and the Minister responsible say they are not a priority. The Government's priorities lie with the banks and the big multinational drug companies.

I know that you are a man of reason, Mr. Speaker, one who would want to place the taxpayer's money in the hands of those who need it most. Why does the Government refuse to acknowledge your wisdom? Why does it refuse to provide the necessary funds to Canadians with fixed pensions or low income and need some form of financial assistance, whether they be in the town of Dominion or Glace Bay?

I hope that municipal leaders will speak out. In 1987, RRAP funds amounted to $401,000. There was a reduction of $146,000 in 1988, down to $255,000. That is absolutely criminal. I am confident that the municipal authorities in that area will speak out loudly and clearly to impress upon the Government the many problems they are experiencing with their program.

My colleague raises a fundamental question. What about those other programs that were successful, such as the Canada Home Insulation Program and the Canada Oil Substitution Program? There are no programs. There is a program for those who have all sorts of money. The Municipality and County of Halifax has been cut adrift by the sleepy Conservative Members of Parliament who have said absolutely nothing with regard to this program.

I can understand why the Minister is not here. He does not want to hear the truth. He does not want to hear the realities that are taking place in Nova Scotia. That is why he is not here and participating in this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the Member skip the reference to the Minister.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very relevant and germane to our debate. But in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it ought to be remembered by one and all that the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program was a very effective program for low income earners in Canada and those on fixed pensions. It was a very successful program. The Conservative Government and the Minister responsible have purposely, intentionally and deliberately told those Canadians that they are not a priority and have slashed funds substantially, as we saw in Cape Breton.

I hope all Members will support my colleague who introduced this motion in condemning the Government for its very regressive and insensitive programs relating to the housing stock in this country. I can only say to those Members who support these drastic cut-backs to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program that they will be remembered in the next federal election by those Canadians who are being denied that opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82(9).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. Killens), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been some discussions between the Parties and tomorrow the debate on Meech Lake will begin. The official spokesperson for the Government and the Official Opposition will have unlimited time. I wonder if I could seek unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party to have at least 45 minutes for her speech.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: It being 6.15 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock.

The House adjourned at 6.15 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

LAW REFORM COMMISSION

TABLING OF THIRTY-FIRST REPORT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table in both official languages Report No. 31 of the Law Reform Commission of Canada entitled Recodifying Criminal Law, a revised and enlarged edition of Report No. 30 which I tabled in this House on December 3, 1986.

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-93. I would like to thank the Clerk, Mr. Don Landry, and the staff who worked so diligently on this Bill, as well as the Minister for appearing at the beginning and the end of the deliberations.

[Editor's Note: See Votes and Proceedings.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise on point of order. What are the Government's intentions today when we reach Orders of the Day? The House understood that, because of a special order, today would be devoted to Government Order No. 23, the Constitution amendment dealing with the Meech Lake Accord.

We also see on the Order Paper consideration of a Ways and Means motion concerning free trade. I do not know if the Government has decided to postpone the debate on Meech Lake and go to this other business, but we would like to know why this is on the document before us. We have people who are prepared to speak on the Meech Lake debate today. We would like to know if they can expect to be speaking today.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we expect Routine Proceedings to proceed smoothly. We would then call, as indicated on the Order Paper, the Ways and Means proceeding. It is not debatable and not amendable. It should go reasonably quickly and give the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) an opportunity to reopen the Meech Lake debate, followed by the spokespersons for the two opposition Parties.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise with respect to the same concern expressed by the Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault). It is crucial that the House have some sense of direction in which it is going. To put this suddenly on the Order Paper at this stage gives very little time for consideration of a motion which was brought forward by the Government just yesterday.

It is a motion that cannot be debated, which in itself is most objectionable, I think. It seems to me, therefore, that to take this step, which in effect reverses what the Government has put before us previously, is really most unusual and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will rule it out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). I can understand the point he is making. However, the rules are quite clear. The Chair is in no position to rule the matter out of order. I just would not have the authority to do so. In view of the fact that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor has spoken on this matter, I should ask if there is any further comment.

Mr. Lewis: No need for it.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO DEINDEXATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition from Transport Canada employees at Dorval Airport who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy.

The petitioners humbly state that: Whereas indexed pensions for all Canadians are essential for retired people to protect the value of their pensions from the harmful effects of inflation;

Whereas other employers and other governments recognize the need for indexation and therefore negotiate the protection of pension benefits from inflation or pass laws for this purpose;

Whereas Bill C-33 will abolish legislated protection for full inflation protection of future pension benefits of all federal Public Service employees, although these employees have paid and will continue to pay 7.5 per cent of their salary towards their pensions, including full inflation protection;

For these reasons, the petitioners humbly ask Parliament to maintain in law full indexation of pension benefits for the federal Public Service, the Canadian Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

ABORTION—SUPREME COURT OF CANADA DECISION

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the members of Reverend Roger K. Moore's congregation in my constituency regarding the Supreme Court's decision to allow abortion on demand. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament and provincial legislators to consider the tragic effects of this decision and to take immediate action to protect, defend and respect the rights of unborn children.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 314 and 332.

[Text]

CMHC—FUNDING ASSISTANCE TO TORONTO

Question No. 314—Mr. Young:

1. In (a) 1988 to date (b) 1987, have funds been made available under the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing in Toronto and, if so, in what amount?

2. Are any housing units being funded under the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Ontario and, if so (a) how many (b) what amount of funding is allocated to each unit?

Hon. Stewart McInnis (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. (a) and (b) Yes. The planned activity for 1988 in the Toronto CMA is to create 1,431 new assisted housing units to be cost-shared 60/40 between the federal Government and the Province of Ontario and to provide $7.372 million for renovation. The number of units may vary depending on costs. In addition, it is planned that 589 units will be made available under the federal Co-operative Housing Program.

The corresponding commitments for 1987 for the Toronto CMA were 1,984 new assisted housing units, $8.017 million for renovation and 167 units under te federal Co-operative Housing Program.

2. Yes. (a) The planned activity for 1988 in Ontario is to provide assistance to create 6,147 new assisted housing units, cost-shared 60/40 between the federal Government and the Province (75/25 in the case of the Rural and Native Housing Program), and $25.34 million for renovation. In addition, it is planned that 1,765 units will be provided under the federal Co-operative Housing Program.

The corresponding commitments for Ontario for 1987 were 6,398 new assisted housing units, $26.967 million for renovation and 1,367 units under the federal Co-operative Housing Program.

(b) The federal share of lifetime costs for all socail housing commitments in Ontario in each of 1987 and 1988 is approximately $1.2 billion. The federal Co-operative Housing Program budget for Ontario for 1987 and 1988 is approximately $2.3 million each year.

1986-87 SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNTS

Question No. 332—Mr. Crofton:

Mr. Hawkes: I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

NECESSITY OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at this point, I rose on a point of order after the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) gave notice of a Ways and Means motion relating to the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. It is my understanding that the Government wishes to seek the concurrence of the House now in that Ways and Means motion before we go on to the important Meech Lake debate later this morning.

I am of course, Mr. Speaker, making an assumption that you will be making a ruling on my point of order in advance of the question being put to the House, and I wish to take a moment to make some additional comments to clarify the point of order I raised yesterday.

As you will recall, the thrust of my objection to the Ways and Means motion rested on two fundamental points: first, that because the Ways and Means motion contained no provision to increase charges to the public, it was therefore totally unnecessary as a preliminary step to the introduction of the free trade legislation. I cited a number of authorities, including Beauchesne and Erskine May, to corroborate my point. Second, I argued that by its very nature, a Ways and Means motion limits the scope for amendments to the Bill that it precedes, and Beauchesne is absolutely clear on this point.

In your preliminary response that you made yesterday to my intervention, you indicated that, without seeing the Bill, it was difficult to determine whether it would impose an additional charge on the taxpayer. You stated, as reported in Hansard at page 15587:

> The second matter of course is that without seeing the Bill I am not completely sure that I would be able to accept some of the propositions which the Hon. Member has cited, which may of themselves be good authority. However, I cannot tell until I see the Bill whether in fact the Bill conforms with the five paragraphs that are now in front of the House and the notice of Ways and Means motion. I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap the fact that paragraph i) of the notice of Ways and Means motion states:
> > i) to impose customs duties in accordance with the Tariff Schedules of Canada referred to in Annex 401.2 of the Agreement;
> I cannot tell from that whether that will increase customs duties or decrease them. It seems to me it puts us in some difficulty.

I recognize your difficulty, Mr. Speaker. However, consider the implications on Members of the House from all sides who participate in the legislative process of giving the Government a carte blanche opportunity to introduce Ways and Means motions. Consider, for example, the following case that could arise out of the ability of a Government to introduce Ways and Means to any Bill where charges on the taxpayer are altered, either to increase charges or to decrease them.

Let us consider the possibility of a Ways and Means motion being sufficiently vague and obscure as to leave some doubt in the minds of Members of the House about whether they are voting on whether or not to concur in a motion that would result in increased taxes or in decreased taxes on the general public, their constituents. How can Members make a decision on a question which is not clear? Surely that is fundamental to this place. Members of Parliament must know what they are voting on before they can decide how they will vote. On a fundamental issue such as taxation, the importance of this question is heightened even further.

If the motion is unclear, how should I vote? How can I explain my vote to those who elected me? Am I to tell them that I may have inadvertently voted in favour of a motion to concur in a Bill that would increase their taxes because I did not understand the motion? How can we prevent this situation from occurring if we are not clear on whether or not the Ways and Means motion will result in increased or decreased charges to our constituents?

In an attempt to help resolve this question in my own mind with respect to the motion in question, I consulted with the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), and other staff members, about the wording of the motion. It has become clear that those five paragraphs, which you indicated earlier were unclear, become somewhat less confusing after referring to the free trade agreement. However, there still remains some doubt as to whether or not these paragraphs are relieving measures or will result in additional charges to the taxpayer. Therefore, I, as a Member of the House, am left with questions in my mind about the question I am being asked to decide upon. I think you would agree that this is a very confusing situation at the very least.

In recent years the Government has initiated Ways and Means motions, specifically those that arise out of budget legislation, which are detailed and specific. It is quite clear to the House just what we are being asked to vote upon. However, this five-paragraph motion tabled yesterday gives Members no such guidance whatsoever. It is totally incomplete.

I still maintain that if this motion is based upon the contents of the free trade agreement, it can contain no measures that increase the charge on taxpayers and thus is totally unnecessary as a preliminary step to the introduction of the free trade legislation. As such, and as I stated earlier, it limits the ability of Members of the House to amend the legislation that will eventually follow.

However, if you are of the opinion that these arguments are not convincing, then I submit, as I argued this morning, that the Ways and Means motion proposed by the Minister should be ruled out of order because it is, as you have stated yourself, unclear and therefore I as a Member of this House cannot be expected to decide on a question that is unclear.

I hope you will reflect on my arguments and perhaps return at a later time to make a ruling. I thank you for your patience in hearing my arguments at this moment.

Point of Order—Mr. Riis

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) both yesterday and today. I indicated yesterday that whatever may be the final outcome, it seems to me that it was premature for the Chair to make a ruling. I have had time to reflect on the matter brought to my attention yesterday, and I have listened very carefully to the Hon. Member's complete argument again today. However, I remain of the same view. It is inappropriate for the Chair to try to make a ruling until the Chair sees what is actually in the proposed Bill. This does not mean that at that time it might not be appropriate to make a ruling.

I would add as a caveat that even if a ruling were made in accordance with the suggestion of the Hon. Member, it might not change anything very much. It might indicate that the Government had gone through an unnecessary process but it might not have any real substantive effect upon proceedings in the House.

I would ask the Hon. Member, who has raised a matter of importance, and certainly one of ingenuity, to accept the Chair's decision at this point that it would be premature to make an order. That does not mean I may not have further observations to make on the matter.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my comments are not intended to reflect in any way on what you just said, but I wish to raise with Your Honour the question of whether the Ways and Means motion is sufficiently complete in itself and sufficiently understandable that Members can make a decision upon it through their vote. There are problems with the motion in so far as it is not clear exactly what it is intended to do and say.

It is not enough for the Government to say it will introduce a Bill as a result of this motion being passed, if it is, and then everything will become clear. Surely it must be necessary for the Government, if it wishes to have a Ways and Means motion properly before the House, to have the content of the motion drafted so that it is clear to anyone voting upon it exactly what it intends to accomplish with respect to changes in the fiscal measures in question.

I respectfully submit that this is not the case and therefore the motion is defective and cannot be put before the House in its present form because Members are not in a position, from looking at the motion alone and not at a whole range of extraneous matters, to know just what they are voting upon.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, on the point raised by the House Leader of the Official Opposition, I want to refer to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which says, in Citation 237, that a point of order against procedure must be raised promptly, which has been done, and before the question has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place. The point we are trying to make is that at some point in the future, if your ruling were that we ought to proceed, it might be out of place or beyond the point where such an intervention would be appropriate.

Erskine May has perhaps indicated a way around this dilemma. At page 447 it says that doubtful cases may arise upon which the rules of the House are indistinct or obsolete or do not apply directly to the point at issue. I submit that such is the case at this point. It goes on to say that the Speaker will then usually give a ruling to cover the new circumstances, although he has on occasion referred the matter to the judgment of the House. Perhaps that would be the appropriate way to proceed now and simply refer this decision to the House itself.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the further remarks of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). While the points made by the Hon. Member for Windsor West were delivered with force, it seems to me they amount to essentially the same point raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, and I remain of the view that it is premature for the Chair to rule.

The latter point that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap makes I think can be met by the Chair making it very clear that I certainly do not think I am precluded from commenting on this at a later time. I think I have made it clear that if it is appropriate, I certainly will do so. I will not take the position, nor will I be persuaded to take the position, that I do not have a clear right as Speaker to consider the matter when I see the Bill.

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House proceeded to the consideration of the motion of the Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada):

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

Constitution Amendment, 1987

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"AGREEMENTS ON IMMIGRATION AND ALIENS

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"GENERAL"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"COURTS ESTABLISHED BY THE PARLIAMENT OF CANADA"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—CONFERENCES ON THE ECONOMY AND OTHER MATTERS

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—REFERENCES

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

GENERAL

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

And the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That the motion be amended

(a) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(c) the recognition that aboriginal peoples constitute a distinctive and fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(d) the recognition of the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures as well as the differing regional identities that helped shape Canadian society; and

(e) the recognition of the advantages of developing the Canadian economic union."

(b) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"(2)(a) The role of the Parliament of Canada to preserve and promote, and the role of the provincial legislatures to preserve and, subject to subparagraph (2)(b) to promote, the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(b) The role of a province in relation to promotion applies from the time it is adopted by a resolution of the legislative assembly of that province."

(c) in paragraph 2 of the Schedule by deleting section 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"25. Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, and until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the government of Canada shall, within six months after the vacancy occurs, call an election in the province or territory to which the vacancy relates for the purpose of filling that vacancy, and, notwithstanding the provision of section 29 of the Constitution Act, 1867, for a term of nine years."

(d) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting subsections 101C.(1) and (2) and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.() Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province and the elected government of each territory may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of the province or territory and are qualified under section 101B. for appointment to that court.

(2) Subject to subsection (5), where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

(e) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 101C.(4) the following:

"(5) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) and, if within a period of three months, no name which has been submitted under subsection (1) is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, the Chief Justice may make an interim one-year appointment from among justices of the Federal Court of Canada or provincial Superior Courts."

(f) in paragraph 7 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 106A.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"106A.(1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Parliament of Canada after the coming into force of this section, in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a compatible program which meets minimum national standards."

(g) by deleting paragraph 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province of a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(c) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(d) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(e) the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(f) an amendment to this Part.

42.(1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators; and

(b) the number of members by which a province or territory is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators.

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

42A. Notwithstanding subsection 42(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, the establishment of new provinces and the extension of existing provinces into territories shall be a matter exclusively for the Governor General in Council and the elected government of the territory affected."

(h) in paragraph 13 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 50.(2) and substituting the following therefor;

"(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters;

(a) the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including self-government;

(b) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators, representation in the Senate.

(c) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries at the first meeting only;

(d) such other matters as are agreed upon."

(i) by deleting paragraph 16 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in the Constitution Amendment, 1987 derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms or affects Part II of the Constitution Act, 1982".

And the amendment of Mr. Broadbent:

That the motion be amended

(a) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(1) the words "and the elected government of each territory" immediately after the word "province";

(b) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(2) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(c) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(1) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(d) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(4) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(e) by deleting in paragraph 9, section 41 paragraph (i);

(f) by adding to paragraph 13 subsection 50(2) the following new paragraph:

"(c) aboriginal rights, in particular self-government;"

(g) by adding to paragraph 13 section 50 the following new subsection:

"(3) The Prime Minister shall invite to the Conferences designated in section 50 subsection (2)(c) representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada and the governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory and those groups and governments shall participate fully in all matters that affect aboriginal rights."

(h) by deleting paragraph 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25, 27 or 28 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution.—

And the amendment of Mr. Caccia:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule

(a) by deleting Section 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Canada consists of aboriginal and multicultural societies, with English and French as the official languages of Canada, French-speaking Canadians being centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec",

(b) by deleting Section 2.(3).

And the amendments of Mr. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount):

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 1 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding to the preamble thereto, the following "AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to maintain and reinforce across Canada the bilingual nature of the Canadian federation;

AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to the distinctive character of Quebec as the principal but not the exclusive source of the French language and culture in Canada;

AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular their respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures, as well as the differing regional identities that help shape Canadian society;

AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to the contribution of Canada's aboriginal peoples;

AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to the advantages of developing the Canadian economic union;""—

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 3 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 95C (2) and substituting the following therefor:

"95C.(2) An amendment to or the termination of an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons."—

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting section 101C and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.(1) Where a vacancy arises in the Supreme Court of Canada and the Attorney General of Canada is considering a person for appointment to fill the vacancy, he shall inform the attorney general of the appropriate province.

(2) When an appointment is one falling within section 101B or the Attorney General of Canada has determined that the appointment shall be made from among persons who have been admitted to the Bar of a specific province, he shall make all reasonable efforts to reach agreement with the attorney general of the appropriate province, before a person is appointed to the Court.

(3) No person shall be appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada unless the Attorney General of Canada and the attorney general of the appropriate province agree to the appointment, or such person has been recommended for appointment to the Court by a nominating council described in subsection (5), or has been selected by the Attorney General of Canada under subsection (5).

(4) Where after the lapse of ninety days from the day a vacancy arises in the Supreme Court of Canada, the Attorney General of Canada and the attorney general of a province have not reached agreement on a person to be appointed to fill the vacancy, the Attorney General of Canada may inform the attorney general of the appropriate province in writing that he proposes to convene a nominating council to recommend an appointment.

(5) Within thirty days of the day when the Attorney General of Canada has written the attorney general of the province that he proposes to convene a nominating council, the attorney general of the province may inform the Attorney General of Canada in writing that he selects either of the following types of nominating councils:

(a) a nominating concil consisting of the following members: the Attorney General of Canada or his nominee and the attorneys general of the provinces or their nominees;

(b) a nominating council consisting of the following members: the Attorney General of Canada or his nominee, the attorney general of the appropriate province or his nominee and a Chairman to be selected by the two attorneys general, and if within six months from the expiration of the thirty days they cannot agree on a Chairman, then the chief justice of the appropriate province or if he is unable to act, the next senior judge of this court, shall name a Chairman; and if the attorney general of the province fails to make a selection within the thirty days above referred to, the Attorney General of Canada may select the person to be appointed.

(6) When a nominating council has been created, the Attorney General of Canada shall submit the names of not less than three qualified persons to it about whom he has sought the agreement of the attorney general of the appropriate province to the appointment, and the nominating council shall recommend therefrom a person for appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada; a majority of the members of a council constitutes a quorum, and a recommendation of a majority of the members at a meeting constitutes a recommendation of the council.

(7) For the purpose of this section "appropriate province" means, in the case of a person being considered for appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada in compliance with section 101B, the Province of Quebec, and in the case of any other person being so considered, the province to the Bar of which such person was admitted, and if a person was admitted to the Bar of more than one province, the province with the Bar of which the person has, in the opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, the closest connection.

(8) This section does not apply to the appointment of the Chief Justice of Canada when such appointment is made from among the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada."—

And:

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 7 of the Schedule.—

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 8 of the Schedule by deleting section 148 and by renumbering the following sections accordingly.—

And:

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraphs 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"9. Sections 38 to 47 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"38. Amendments to the Constitution of Canada may from time to time be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada when so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assemblies of at least a majority of the provinces that includes

(a) every province that at any time before the issue of such proclamation had, according to any previous general census, a population of at least twenty-five percent of the population of Canada;

(b) at least two of the Atlantic Provinces;

(c) at least two of the Western Provinces that have, according to the then latest general census, combined populations of at least fifty per cent of the population of all the Western Provinces.

39. Amendments to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, of the provinces may from time to time be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada when so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province to which an amendment applies.

40. An amendment may be made by proclamation under section 38 without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if within ninety days of the passage of a resolution by the House of Commons authorizing its issue the Senate has not passed such a resolution and at any time after the expiration of the ninety days the House of Commons again passes the resolution, but any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the ninety days.

41. The following rules apply to the procedures for amendment described in sections 38 and 39:

(a) either of these procedures may be initiated by the Senate or the House of Commons or the legislative assembly of a province;

(b) a resolution made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

42. The Parliament of Canada may exclusively make laws from time to time amending the Constitution of Canada, in relation to the executive Government of Canada and the Senate and House of Commons.

43. Subject to section 44, a legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to the amendment from time to time of the Constitution of the province.

44. Notwithstanding sections 42 and 43, the following matters may be amended only in accordance with the procedure in section 38:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part.

45. The procedure prescribed in section 38 may not be used to make an amendment when there is another provision for making such amendment in the Constitution of Canada, but that procedure may nonetheless be used to amend any provision for amending the Constitution, including this section, or in making a general consolidation and revision of the Constitution.

46. In this Part, "Atlantic Provinces" means the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, and "Western Provinces" means the Provinces of Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta.""

And:

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 13 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"13. Part VI of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCES

50.(1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened not more than once each calendar year by the Prime Minister of Canada or by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces that have, in the aggregate according to the latest cencus, at least fifty percent of the population of all the provinces.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) an elected Senate with equal representation for the provinces and territories, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of electing Senators and their term of office;

(b) the method of appointing Supreme Court of Canada justices including the use of provincial advisory committees;

(c) the establishment of national shared-cost programs by the Government of Canada in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction;

(d) the repeal of section 23(3)(a) of the Constitution Act, 1982;

(e) the repeal of section 33 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

(f) the aboriginal and treaty rights of aboriginal peoples of Canada, including self-government;

(g) the application of sections 16 to 20 of the Constitution Act, 1982 to all of the provinces and territories;

(h) such other matters as the Prime Minister of Canada or any Premier may wish to add to the agenda for one meeting only."

And:

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 16 of the Schedule.

And the amendments of Mr. Roman:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting paragraph 2(1)(b) and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) the recognition that within Canada, Quebec constitutes one distinct society within a confederation of distinct societies."

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 101C.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.(1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province shall, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court."

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 101C.(4) the following:

"(5) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada and the governments of the provinces have not submitted names under subsection (1), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am very honoured to commence this very important debate with respect to the constitutional amendment.

There have been discussions between the Parties, and in view of the fact that there is very little time before the usual adjournment at one o'clock, I think there would be a disposition for me to call it one o'clock and to continue with my remarks at three o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1250)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions and I am ready to suggest that we call it one o'clock and begin the debate after the Question Period, with the understanding that all three Parties' spokespersons will be able to complete their speeches today, even if it means taking up some of the time ordinarily reserved for Private Members' Hour.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly willing to accommodate my friend from Saskatchewan, with the proviso that we could have some flexibility toward Private Members' Hour for my friend, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) to complete her speech. We may not need that, but if we do, we would like an understanding that she can speak into Private Members' Hour. Then we can accommodate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree with the requests made?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 12.53 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FORESTRY

DESTRUCTION OF TROPICAL FORESTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the World Resource Institute reports that many developing countries have lost billions of dollars through timber subsidies and giveaways that accelerate destruction of tropical forests. Developing countries are collecting royalties and taxes just a fraction of what the timber is worth. The result of such policies is the extensive, wasteful, rapid destruction of resources.

The United Nations estimates that about 27 million acres of forests are being lost in developing countries each year. In addition, the World Resources Institute points out that the under-valuing and over-harvesting of timber are our problem as well. The estimate is in the hundreds of millions of dollars a year lost in the United States.

In Canada we suffer from the same problems. We have low royalties and extensive, wasteful, rapid destruction of our forests. I ask the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) to examine this problem urgently. Our forests should be managed in a sustainable manner.

TOURISM

INDUSTRY'S IMPORTANCE TO ECONOMY

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, this is National Tourism Awareness Week. It is a time to praise the work of those people who work in the tourism industry. Tourism is our nation's fifth largest industry. It may well become Canada's second largest industrialized sector by the year 2000.

By the end of last year tourism was Canada's third largest earner of foreign exchange. It is labour intensive, offering work to 600,000 Canadians. More jobs are created indirectly by tourism expenditures. Tourism is important, too, for regional development, stimulating economic growth in the less industrialized regions of Canada.

The level of tourism today is double what it was 10 years ago. Statistics Canada reports that during the first 11 months of 1987, international travel to Canada surpassed all records. The reasons for this are quite obvious. Canada has become a world-class destination, second to none for international travellers.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS ADVISORY COMMITTEE—REVERSAL OF DECISION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), at the behest of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), is frustrating the clear intent of the Immigration Act and bringing the law into disrespect among the public and the legal community.

The Minister rejected the lawfully made recommendation of highly qualified members of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, and, in effect, fired them for doing their job according to law. She then accepted the opinion of bureaucrats who lack qualification, authority or experience in determining refugee status.

She has in fact attempted to apply part of Bill C-55 while it has not been passed by Parliament—that is, she is using a vague and unproven security accusation to deny Mr. Santokh Singh his lawful right to an unbiased hearing.

Accordingly, she has provoked a boycott of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee by the National Chairman and other leading members of the immigration section of the Canadian Bar Association.

I call on the Minister to reverse her unjust and scoff-law decision, or else resign.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONVICTED RAPIST'S ELIGIBILITY FOR PAROLE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, a story on the front page of yesterday's Montreal Gazette indicates why crime remains rampant in Canada and will be soothing to the bleeding hearts who think more of the criminals than they do of the victims. A sadistic 32-year-old habitual criminal who raped women at gunpoint was convicted on 22 offences which included forceful confinement, weapon use, theft, sexual assault, and crimes of physical violence. Some of the women may never be the same again.

"These crimes pollute the community," the judge said, and sentenced the criminal, who has already served 19 years behind bars, to a total of 123 years in prison. Do you know what, Mr. Speaker? Under our present system this criminal will be eligible for parole in seven years. Why should a person with a record like this ever again be released into society?

AEROSPACE

QUEBEC'S SHARE OF ECONOMIC BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, when the Conservative Government said it would participate in the space station that is part of the U.S. government's space program, the Minister of Industry and Trade announced that the economic spin-offs and jobs would be shared equally between Quebec and Ontario, in other words, 35 per cent each.

Furthermore, for months and even for the last two years, the Conservative Government has given the impression and led the people of Montreal to believe that the space agency would be located in Montreal. This morning we read that the National Research Centre has already awarded contracts, including the most important ones, for space research. Unfortunately, contrary to the promise that was made, Quebec has received only 26 per cent. Mr. Speaker, this is one more instance where the Conservative Government has failed to keep its promises to Quebecers.

THE OPTIMISTS

ETABLISHMENT OF NEW CLUB IN DUBERGER

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure and pride that I take this opportunity to draw the attention of the House today to an event that is very important to the people of Duberger, and I am referring to the creation of a new Optimist Club.

Mr. Speaker, this service club, which is mainly involved in youth programs and has a reputation for generous and effective community involvement, is a valuable addition to any community and enjoys the regard and respect of those they have helped through their activities.

The optimist philosophy transcends race, colour, creed and class. With an optimistic outlook, a person, group or even a nation can accomplish the impossible. Without optimism, the battle is lost before the first shot is fired. On April 30, the Optimists of Duberger officially took their first step towards a formidable goal.

I want to congratulate Mr. Claude Forest, the first president of the Optimist Club of Duberger, and all those who made this project possible. I wish them every success in their work with our youth!

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—PREMIERS' MEETING

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the resolve of the people of western Canada is being tested again. A devastating drought continues to turn fertile, productive farmland into parched, barren fields.

Scenes reminiscent of the early 1930s have filled our television screens, alerting all Canadians to the sorry plight of many farmers forced to abandon a way of life because of a cruel quirk of fate.

In stark contrast, the premiers of the four western provinces are now meeting in regal splendour to discuss this latest crisis. They are holding their talks on a private $3 million luxury liner. They will be ferried to and from their pleasure boat by a fleet of gleaming white stretch limousines, each one customized with personalized licence plates.

Their extravagance is galling. It reflects the shameful insensitivity of western Canadian Premiers to the difficulties facing western Canadian citizens.

FOLKLORE

INVITATION TO DRUMMONDVILLE WORLD FOLKLORE FESTIVAL

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to invite all Members and all Canadians to the riding of Drummond, where the Seventh World Folklore Festival will be held from July 8 to 18.

[English]

Each year, in early July, the Drummondville World Folklore Festival welcomes entertainers from more than 15 countries, with 40 exceptionally talented folklore groups and more than 1,500 musicians, singers, and dancers offering over 300 shows. Last year more than 700,000 spectators attended the festival's various events.

[Translation]

The World Folklore Festival welcomes you to its many activities, to a magic rendez-vous where masks will be the theme of the festivities.

Enjoy this world of folklore where day and night, dancing, music, shows, concerts, special programs and parades will be a feast for the eyes, ears and heart.

Don't miss the World Folklore Festival in Drummondville!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF CONSUMERS OF QUÉBEC

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, according to the National Association of Consumers of Quebec, the free trade agreement is a lemon. Marie Vezina, the spokesperson for this group, told La Presse that they had used statistics and trade numbers from the Department of Finance as a basis for their research. They came to the conclusion that the Mulroney trade deal is bad for Canada, especially with respect to electricity, hydro, tariffs and telephone services.

Marie Vezina is encouraging all members of that organization to oppose the agreement during the upcoming election.

I want to stress that this group represents consumers. It is fortunate that we have such groups in Canada because it is quite clear that the Government does not represent consumers. It has turned the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs into the Ministry of Corporate Affairs. Again and again we see consumers being financially sapped by the Government.

The Government's record with respect to consumers is shameful. It has sold out to multinational interests in the pharmaceutical industry at the expense of consumers. It has increased personal income taxes by $23 billion since 1984. Now we have it confirmed that the Mulroney trade deal is a lemon for Canadian consumers. I have come to the conclusion that not only is the trade agreement a lemon for consumers, but so is the Mulroney Government.

BANKS AND BANKING

A GRANDMOTHER'S GIFT—BANK'S LESSON FOR ONE-YEAR OLD

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, yesterday it came to my attention that one of Canada's largest banks set a world record for levying a deterrent charge on its youngest customer.

Jake Mastandrea had to be taught a lesson on his first birthday. His grandmother wrote him a cheque for $25 as his birthday present. Although the cheque indicated $25 she inadvertently left off the five in recording the amount. The cheque was returned and Jake was assessed a penalty of $5 for depositing his grandmother's birthday gift. Incidentally, his grandmother, who deals with National Trust, was not assessed a penalty because they do not charge for simple customer errors.

When I was a little boy my mother used to recite one of Little Orphan Annie's poems ending with the warning "The goblins will get you if you don't watch out". Perhaps today's mothers should be warning their children that "The banker-man will get you if you don't watch out".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CALL FOR ELIMINATION OF SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, there are about 232,000 households currently served by supermailboxes. About 175,000 are serviced by contractors at an annual cost of $35, and the balance serviced by post office letter carriers at a cost of $97. Full delivery by letter carriers costs $120 per household. Going door-to-door for all existing supermailboxes would therefore cost about $16 million a year.

Canada Post projects another 500,000 supermailboxes will be added over the next three years. About half will be the result of lower cost supermailboxes in new subdivisions. Extending door-to-door delivery to them all would cost an extra $86 per address, or about $22 million. Add that to the $16 million, and the total additional cost is $38 million.

A one cent increase in the price of mailing a letter generates $25 million, so it would cost less than two cents to axe the supermailbox program.

I say that two cents is a small price to pay for equality and fairness. Let us hope the Minister pays a bigger price in the next election for not understanding that.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in the last few days, Canadians have begun to see the true face of the federal Liberals. The federal Liberals are in a panic; they absolutely must collect money to replenish their coffers left $6.5 million in debt by lawyer Michel Robert. One wonders where this money has gone.

Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the official spokesman for Trudeau and Lalonde, was parachuted in by the Senate bigwigs to direct the Party's affairs. He is one of those taking part in the putsch to oust the leader. The lawyer Michel Robert, who lost $6 million from the Liberals' treasury, is still there.

The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) is feeling queasy. The 22 signers of the letter against their leader, Mr. Turner, are still active. They have the support of the Hon. Member for Papineau, according to this morning's Globe and Mail.

Also, on the matter of free trade, which is very important for Quebec, the federal Liberals are working against this province. Canadians will not let a tragically divided party that is several million dollars "in the hole" govern the country. The federal Liberals prove to us that they are masters of disloyalty, deceit and treachery, not to mention hypocrisy.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—STEEL INDUSTRY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we have finally seen the truth of the so-called Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. This week the Americans want the Canadian steel industry to sign another voluntary restraint agreement, limiting the amount of Canadian steel that can be imported into the United States.

I thought all our problems were supposed to disappear with the signing of this agreement. The Financial Post said the big industry winner was supposed to be the steel industry. Yet we are still being hammered by the Americans with protectionist measures, with tariff barriers, with non tariff barriers.

It just goes to prove that even in relation to the steel industry this trade deal is a sham. It was negotiated by a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who was operating on his knees, in a position of weakness, because he knew that the only way he was going to divert attention from his own maladministration was to focus on another issue. Let us tear this deal up.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—DEBATE IN CLASSROOMS

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, the youth of Canada are studying and debating free trade in the classrooms of Canada. They know the heritage and tradition that began with the coureurs de bois that has become, through successive generations, the cornerstone of our livelihood so that today it is 23 per cent of our gross domestic product, involving three million Canadians at work, one million in Ontario alone.

They know that this agreement will enable our Government to build, with present-day coureurs de bois armed with new technology and new outlook, a more extensive world trade mandate for Canada. They know that they can be an active partner in building a brave new Canada.

All Members of the House should come together to applaud the initiative of our youth. They have learned about this deal and are more than ready to move ahead with it. They want us to see that our future is free trade.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

DIOXIN—PRESENCE IN SHELLFISH

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, dioxins and furans are deadly toxic substances found in pulp and paper effluents and in shellfish and molluscs in then vicinity.

The reaction of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. MacMillan), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to studies about this problem shows a shocking complacency. They say that not all of the samples showed high levels of dioxin or furans. They say there are some excuses that can be found in the cases where there are high levels. "A small amount of dioxin is fine for one's health, but just do not have second helpings". "Dioxins in the organ parts of an animal are a problem, so avoid that part of the body". "Chicken livers are contaminated, well, eat the wings". This is bad policy in principle, apart from the fact that some people do eat the organ parts of shellfish and consider them a delicacy.

• (1415)

Another statement made in the report was that excess dioxins were found in areas close to mollusc fishing in any event, so let us not worry about it. These are deadly substances. It is a serious problem. It is a crisis. This kind of complacency is shockingly irresponsible. I call upon the Government to take the problem seriously and clean up this highly contaminated substance.

ABORTION

POSITION OF OPPOSITION PARTIES ON FREE VOTE PROPOSAL

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the opposition Parties are against a free vote on the abortion issue. Why are they afraid of a free vote? Are they afraid to stand up and tell their constituents where they stand? What we in the pro-life movement know is that a free vote is in our interests.

A free vote is consistent with the principles of parliamentary reform which recognizes the desirability of more independence for Members of Parliament.

It is shameful that the New Democratic Party and Liberal Party want to stifle free expression on this important issue.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

BILL C-72—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have some very serious questions for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister advised the House of Commons that he was unaware of any possible amendments that would gut Bill C-72, the Bill to amend the Official Languages Act. However, we have obtained the Government's own confidential document advising in depth proposed amendments by the Deputy Prime Minister to Bill C-72, amendments which would gut the Bill, which would be inconsistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and which would undermine the promotion of bilingualism in this country.

In light of the Prime Minister's statement that he was unaware of any proposed amendments, would the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that he proposed to his cabinet colleagues amendments to Sections 3, 7, 10, 15, 31, 37, 38, 75, 78, 82 and 83 of Bill C-72? And how could he have done that if the Prime Minister was unaware of those amendments?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an indication of the lack of credibility with respect to documents reportedly in the possession of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Inasmuch as the Bill is in the name of the Minister of Justice, if there are going to be any proposals made to Cabinet they would not be made by the Deputy Prime Minister, they would be made by myself.

All I can tell the right hon. gentleman is simply that this Bill has passed second reading and has received the approval in principle of this House. The Prime Minister has been as clear as anyone can be with respect to this very important legislative enactment to the effect that the principles of this Bill are going to proceed. There will be no variation from the principles of the Bill. If we in fact can clarify the legislation, strengthen it, and make more clear to Canadians the real intent and purposes of it, we obviously are quite happy to do so. So I hope the right hon. gentleman will not stoop to reading documents of questionable origin, but rather try to support the Prime Minister and this Government in the most progressive language legislation ever brought before this country.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We would be willing to distribute that document this afternoon.

ALLEGED AMENDMENTS—PROTECTION OF LINGUISTIC MINORITY RIGHTS—POSITION OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said he had seen no amendments. He even gave the House of Commons the assurance that if there were any amendments, they would improve the Bill and the legislation would not be substantially changed. That is what the Prime Minister said.

However, according to the Government's document, the amendments proposed by the Deputy Prime Minister would constitute a major change in policy requiring Cabinet approval, and would destroy the fundamentals of the Bill.

Did the Deputy Prime Minister inform his colleague, the Secretary of State, who is campaigning in Lac-Saint-Jean and telling voters to vote Conservative in order to protect the rights of French-language minorities... Did he inform his colleague that the Deputy Prime Minister was trying to destroy those rights, to destroy bilingualism in our country, according to this document?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought we were talking about serious matters, but now we see the Leader of the Opposition asking questions about a matter as important as bilingualism, to try and save Gimaïel in the by-election in Lac-Saint-Jean. It is a sad commentary that a matter as important as bilingualism should be used to save somebody like Pierre Gimaïel in a by-election.

I said before that Bill C-72 was an important Bill and that it would receive the approval of the Government and the House, and that if there were any amendments that, as the Minister said, would help to clarify or improve the Bill, the parliamentary process was available to do so, and in any event, Bill C-72 which promotes official languages in Canada, both English and French, will be approved by this Government and by the House of Commons. And I am very disappointed to see the Leader of the Opposition try to politicize a question that is so important to this country.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State himself is politicizing this issue in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean, while defending the Official Languages Act, and with him his colleague, the Minister of Transport, with the "Masse and Benny team". In any case, the issue is already politicized. The Deputy Prime Minister's document demonstrates the complete hypocrisy of this Government during this by-election.

LINGUISTIC MINORITY RIGHTS AND SPIRIT OF MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, according to this document, the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada is trying to gut the Official Languages Bill which, according to the Prime Minister, is one of his Government's priorities.

Canadians have a right to expect the Deputy Prime Minister to protect official language groups in this country, but he has tried to drop the reference, and this is in the document, to "official language communities" in Section 38 of the Bill, and according to the Government's document, the suggestions of the Deputy Prime Minister, and I quote, "undermine the link with linguistic duality as expressed in the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord".

What right does the Deputy Prime Minister have to destroy the rights of official language minorities and the spirit of Meech Lake, according to this document?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, rarely have we seen such a pathetic sight as the Leader of the Opposition of the country attempting to divide Canadians with respect to the linguistic rights that Canadians have.

Mr. Allmand: That is what your dinosaurs are doing.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I simply say that if the right hon. gentleman does not understand. If those documents had any credibility at all and the Deputy Prime Minister had responsibility for this Bill, then that would be one thing. I will be before the committee next Wednesday. I will be presenting the position of the Government with respect to this Bill.

I can tell the right hon. gentleman that any suggestion that he has with respect to the fact that this Bill is to be weakened or to be diminished in any way is totally without foundation. He should be ashamed of himself to even make that suggestion.

ALLEGED AMENDMENTS OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Yesterday, in answer to a question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, who wanted to know whether the Government had any amendments to propose, the Prime Minister replied, as reported on page 15579 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I don't have the amendments here and I haven't seen them.

How can the Prime Minister explain to the Canadian people that the Deputy Prime Minister, his trusted man, had asked for and has been circulating for two and a half months a series of amendments that totally contradict the spirit of Bill C-72? How can he explain that to the House of Commons? Can he at least apologize and say that he knew what was happening around him?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have to say to members of the Liberal Party that I am astonished that they would raise a linguistic matter and try to impugn the integrity of one of the finest people ever to serve here, the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Bilingualism is a vital and sensitive part of our national well-being. It should be devised and implemented in such a way as to bring harmony and not division to the country. I regret very much the manner in which it was raised today by the Leader of the Opposition who tried to tie it into a by-election in the Province of Quebec. The unfounded accusations made by the otherwise distinguished Member for Vanier against the Deputy Prime Minister are unworthy of him and of his considerable reputation in the House of Commons.

• (1425)

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, talking about credibility, talking about politicizing something, when you have had 30 or 40 dinosaurs in your Party that have been politicizing this document—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier knows very well the right way to ask a question. The Hon. Member has the floor.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I will rest my case on this document which I want to read to the Prime Minister. This is the document ordered by the Deputy Prime Minister.

In relation to Section 38 of the Bill it states: "This change would drop the reference to official language communities and as such, is inconsistent with a critical policy thrust of this Bill—to reach out and to reflect Canadian society as a whole. It undermines the link with linguistic duality as expressed in the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord, which recognizes the presence of English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians throughout the country . . . "

How can the Prime Minister blame us for asking legitimate questions about his intent, or his Party's intent, or his Government's intent in terms of official languages? Can he come across and tell us the truth?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not blame my hon. friend at all for asking any question that he wants. This is not only his right, but of course his obligation to do so in the House of Commons.

Where I find I have some disagreement with him is when a question is raised by a Conservative Member in respect of a Bill, that Conservative Member becomes a Neanderthal or a dinosaur. But when 25 per cent of the Liberal caucus right in front of me vote against the Meech Lake Accord, the Member says nothing.

I think that that is much more divisive and much more dangerous for national unity than a Member of Parliament raising a question, as he is supposed to, in terms of trying to improve a piece of legislation.

Mr. Berger: You have got it all wrong, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: One of the Members who was opposed to the Meech Lake Accord says I have it all wrong. I want to tell him that the Progressive Conservative Party and Government that brought forward the Meech Lake Accord have it right, your Leader has it right, and you have it wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—U.S. SENATE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. In front of me I have the Finance Committee recommendations from the U.S. Senate on the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, passed yesterday. I wish to quote from those recommendations which were accepted by the Finance Committee. Their obligations "provide that in the event of a conflict between a U.S. statute and a provision of the free trade agreement, U.S. law shall prevail".

I wish to ask the Minister where, within the agreement which was signed between our two countries, was there any suggestion of that type of commitment? Given the fact that there was no such suggestion, why have the Minister and the Government gone hell bent for leather to try to put this deal into effect so fast?

• (1430)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman complains that this deal has been put in place too fast. The deal has been negotiated for two years. The free trade agreement itself was made public in December. This, I believe, is six months later. What is wrong with the hon. gentleman? Why does he have such anticipatory sinking feelings in his stomach? He has been sinking for the last six months.

Instead of rejoicing that the U.S. Senate Finance Committee has approved the Bill without a dissenting voice, the hon. gentleman gets up today and looks even sicker than he usually looks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, in fact it is this Government which has been sinking for the last four years.

STATUS OF UNITED STATES LAW

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister specifically, since he refused to deal with the substance which I put before him, does he, therefore, support this provision which the Finance Committee in the U.S. Senate has passed which says that when there is a conflict between a U.S. statute and a provision of the free trade agreement, U.S. law shall prevail. Does he support that specific clause?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman should try to understand the procedure in the United States of America. It is a little too complicated apparently for him to grasp. The procedure is this. Congress has to complete what it calls its mark-up. The Senate has a mark-up and the House of Representatives has a mark-up, and then they will have a conference together to see what recommendations they propose to the President in connection with the Bill.

We do not have the final form of the Bill yet. If there is some legislative drafting rules in the United States that require the Americans to have X interpretation or Y, we are not going to get excited about that. We are not going to go into fear and trembling like the New Democratic Party does.

Once the FTA is implemented and both Parties pass legislation adopting it, then any American law that is inconsistent with the FTA will have to be amended by the Americans or they will have to suffer penalties, just as we will if we do not amend our law. Just relax the anticipatory alarm. The hon. gentleman is truly forbidding.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister has suggested is exactly contrary to what has been put into effect by the United States Senate Finance Committee itself.

Mr. McDermid: It is not in effect. Learn the system.

Mr. Langdon: It is exactly contradictory. In view of that contradiction, in view of this very specific point—and the Minister knows that the administration has been working closely with the Finance Committee on these provisions—let me ask the Minister whether he is prepared to continue pushing ahead this trade agreement when there is a specific commitment in the United States that, when U.S. law and the trade agreement disagree, United States law will prevail. Do you accept that or not?

Mr. Speaker: These are important matters and there is a certain amount of tension associated with them, but I would ask Hon. Members to address each other through the Chair.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, through the Chair is certainly the safest way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to the Hon. Member's question, I do not accept what he is saying. It is complete and utter malarkey. I am certainly not going to accept what he says at all, Mr. Speaker.

The United States, for example, is contemplating having in its legislation a provision that will say that all inconsistent provisions of state legislation are overridden by federal legislation. Does the hon. gentleman suggest to us that we should have exactly the same kind of provision in our Bill with reference to the provinces if the Americans have it in their Bill? They have their system of legislative drafting and interpretation; we have ours.

Anything in American law after January 1 next year inconsistent with the FTA, out of line with the FTA, the Americans will have to amend or pay dearly for it. That is why we want the agreement.

AEROSPACE

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN AMERICAN SPACE STATION—ECONOMIC SPINOFFS FOR QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

On several occasions, his Government has formally promised that Quebec would get 35 per cent of the economic spin-offs derived from our participation in the American Space Station. According to the figures obtained from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and Science and Technology, Quebec will get only 25 per cent of these spin-offs. My question to the Prime Minister is this:

Could he tell us why the Government does not live up to its commitment to provide Quebec with 35 per cent of the economic spin-offs?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Again, the Hon. Member would be well advised to get the facts straight. The avowed purpose of the Canadian Government, which has been expressed on many occasions, is to make sure that Quebec will get 35 per cent of all economic spin-offs resulting from the Canadian participation in the space program, including RADARSAT, MSAT and the Space Station. That is the position of the Canadian Government.

Today, probably on the basis of an inaccurate newspaper article the Hon. Member makes such a statement in the House thereby misinforming Quebecers on the real situation. I am sure that as soon as the Hon. Member gets his facts straight, he will want to apologize to Quebecers for misinforming them.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEES QUÉBEC RECEIVES FAIR SHARE OF ECONOMIC BENEFITS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Unless I am mistaken, Mr. Speaker, these figures were provided by his own Department. We want assurances that Quebec will receive its fair share of the economic spin-offs derived from our participation in the American Space Station which, for the time being, is the only program going ahead, not the other two which the Minister has just mentioned.

Could the Minister state unequivocally that Quebec will receive 35 per cent of the spin-offs from our participation in the American Space Station? Quebecers want nothing more nor less than that.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard a single Member of the Liberal Party criticize the Government for allocating 76 per cent of all the expenditures involved in the MSAT program, which is part of the space program to Quebec. Under the RADARSAT program, 46 per cent of the $49 million allocated were spent in Quebec.

As far as the third element of the space program is concerned, in view of the fact that the first contract already awarded indicates that 17 per cent of the spin-offs went to Quebec, compared to 77 per cent in the case of the other two contracts, Liberal Party Members start spreading all sorts of alarming rumours in the House and throughout Quebec. The Government had clearly indicated that its objective was 35 per cent, and it sill is.

PUBLIC SERVICE

UNION OFFICIAL'S OPPOSITION TO CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister for International Trade in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue. I am sure the Minister is aware of a story in London, Ontario, where a local union president, Customs and Excise, Mr. Mike Clough, has been threatened with job loss because he has been speaking out against the Government's free trade deal.

I want to know from the Minister for International Trade just what the Government's policy is in this regard. Why can't a local union official, who has a right to speak out on public issues facing this country, have the right to speak out on this particular major issue facing Canada? What is the Minister? Is he the new Ayatollah of this country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are used to seeing frenzied, over-theatrical performances by hon. gentlemen opposite and this is one of them.

Had I been given notice I could have looked into this matter. The hon. gentleman suggests that some union member who is opposed to the free trade agreement is somehow being punished.

We would have to look into all of the circumstances. I would not punish him myself. I would feel sorry for him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, no wonder there is a headline in the Ottawa Citizen today saying "Crosbie in over his head handling free trade deal".

INTERROGATION OF UNION OFFICIAL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, this local union official was interrogated this morning by Mr. Dennis Barnes, an official of Customs and Excise. Is the Minister aware of this interrogation? Did he, the Minister of National Revenue or the President of the Treasury Board order this interrogation of this local union official who was speaking out on behalf of union members in his own local union? What is the Minister's policy in terms of a gag order when ordinary Canadians speak up on this very important issue?

• (1440)

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that there is no gag order in a case like this. There are certain guidelines that have been developed by the courts on the rights of public servants to speak against government policy.

It is the duty of public servants to carry out and administer public policy. There are certain limitations that must be followed.

COPYRIGHT

STATUS OF BILL C-60

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, Canadians, particularly the creators of intellectual property, are anxious to know what the fate of the Copyright Bill will be. It is bizarre and perverse to imagine that the Chamber controlled by Canada's fourth political party will have another go at this piece of legislation.

Could the Minister please explain the fate of Bill C-60 which has been passed by this House twice, most recently on Tuesday, with all-Party support?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think it is sadly ironic that, on the eve of the opening of the new National Gallery of Canada, which will be a great show-place for visual artists, some Liberal Members in the other place are trying to hold up the passage of the Copyright Bill by deleting an exhibition right for visual artists.

It is a shame, because this Bill was passed twice by the House of Commons. I would ask Liberal Members opposite, who gave their support to the Bill, to do what they can with Liberal Senators in the other place to get them to quit stalling.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON CANADIAN LOBSTER FISHERY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. When the U.S. Senate gave the go ahead to the U.S.-Canada trade deal it made several recommendations, and one of these would have a very devastating effect on the lobster fishery in Atlantic Canada. The amendment would:

> —prohibit entry into U.S. customs territory of any whole lobster (or parts of such a lobster): *smaller than the minimum size under the American Lobster Fishery Management Plan (50 CFR 649)—

That regulation on carapace size brings it to 3 and 7/32 inches, and the Minister knows what kind of impact that would have, because the Minister also knows that in parts of Atlantic Canada the carapace measurement is 2.5 inches and in other parts it is 3 and a quarter inches. About $178 million worth of lobster is exported to the United States and 30 per cent of it would be affected by this amendment.

What action will the Minister take to protect the lobster fishermen in Atlantic Canada from this very unfair decision by the U.S. Senate Committee and indeed, the U.S.-Canada free trade deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the hon. gentleman is concerned about Atlantic fishermen. I would like to know where his concern was when he and his Party voted against the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and $1 billion worth of spending for Atlantic Canada in the next five years. He voted against that and now he is worried about the carapace.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister will deal with the question.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Senate Finance Committee's decision, as the hon. gentleman himself said, is a recommendation to the administration. The administration opposes the proposal. We expect it to continue to oppose the proposal.

I pose to the hon. gentleman this question. Supposing that his Leader was successful and tore up the free trade agreement, what kind of protection would we have next year when they raised the size of the carapace to four feet, or whatever they might attempt to do?

CANADIAN POTATO EXPORTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, this Minister is very long on words and very short on action, I am afraid. The Finance Committee also recommended that there be a limit on imports of Canadian potatoes. Of course, I do not have to say that this would be terribly damaging to the potato industry of Atlantic Canada and certainly of my Province of Prince Edward Island. I quote again from their reasons for proposing this amendment:

> Although negotiations for such an agreement may appear to be inconsistent with the broad purpose of a free trade agreement, this is an appropriate agriculture policy for a U.S. industry that does not benefit from price supports, pending the resolution of the subsidy issue with Canada.

They will certainly gouge us again on this one. Once again, this Minister can huff and he can puff but he is not doing any damage to the White House.

Once and for all, will the Minister now stand up for the farmers of Atlantic Canada and for the fishermen of Atlantic Canada? Will he stand up at all to the Americans?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is one of my favourite Liberals. However, his questions today do not have very much bite.

The hon. gentleman just said himself that the Hon. Senators in the United States have admitted that it is contrary to the FTA. Being contrary to the FTA, it will not happen, but if there is no FTA, then, by golly, they can do what they like to the spuds. Remember that next year if your Hon. Leader squeezes in by some miracle or some misfortune, or if the Leader of the New Democratic Party gets in. There will be no protection for Canadian spuds then, brother.

CANADIAN WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who stated in response to a question in February of 1985 as to whether he would be willing to sell our water, "Why not?" Given the statement in the federal water policy paper that the federal Government will take all possible measures within the limits of its constitutional authority to prohibit the export of Canadian water by inter-basin diversions, can the Prime Minister assure the House that the free trade agreement excludes such exports of water?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the most important thing for the hon. gentleman to remember is this. There is nothing in the free trade agreement which obliges Canada to sell water or any other natural resource or product to the United States. We are not obliged to sell one thimble-full of H2O to the United States of America.

Might I point out to the hon. gentleman that the people he should fear are those in the official opposition whose Leader said this in 1968 in his Politics of Purpose:

> And if someday we can agree to the sharing of this continent's water by offering some of our water for export, we might want at that time to insist that if water is to be considered as a continental resource, markets should also be considered on the same basis. We might wish to export water not for money (as we sold power under the Columbia River Treaty), but in return for access to your markets.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: There is the betrayer of water, the Leader of the Official Opposition. He said that he did not want to sound tough. He wasn't.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, that is why they are not the Official Opposition of the country as far as the people of Canada are concerned.

[Translation]

EXPORTATION OF WATER—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the free trade agreement with the United States will mark the beginning of a wholesale sell-out of one of Canada's precious natural resources: our water. Article 22.01 on tariffs unmistakably includes our water, which is thus part and parcel of the agreement.

Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister give the Members of this House the assurance that the Government will prohibit exports of our water?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie, Minister for International Trade: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that we have at last flushed out who is the real opposition in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I refer my hon. friend to the federal water policy released by the Minister of the Environment on November 5, 1987, just a few months ago. The Hon. Member should go back and refresh his memory. I will send him a copy if he likes.

The policy states that Canada will permit no large-scale export of water by diversion, and that the federal Government will develop a mutually acceptable referral system with the provinces in order to ensure that provincial licensing of small-scale exports takes into account federal responsibilities such as trade and environmental protection.

The FTA has nothing to do with water. Canada does not have to sell any water to the U.S. or any other country. The hon. gentleman can relax about water but keep his eye on the Leader of the Official Opposition who, in talking tough, wants to give away all the H2O in this country.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

ALLEGED SILENCE OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, who is a man of honour and sincerity.

We have here a seventeen-page document that contains amendments prepared by his office, reactionary amendments to the Official Languages Act, to do the Conservative dinosaurs a favour, and I would like to know why today, the Deputy Prime Minister remains silent when faced with questions about this document.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member did not finish his question on the same high level he started it. I think everyone in the House recognizes that indeed the Deputy Prime Minister does deserve the respect of this House, partly because he is in touch with Members of Parliament on both sides and consults with them.

Let me simply put the Hon. Member's fears to rest. Next Wednesday I am going to appear before the committee. I will at that time table on behalf of the Government proposals which I think will be seen by any dispassionate observer as a package of reasonable amendments which will clarify and strengthen the Bill, and draw on the representations made before that committee.

I think all Members of Parliament would agree that is the way Parliament should operate. We should be sensitive to representations made in committee and try to strengthen a Bill in every way we can.

[Translation]

INSISTENCE WITH RESPECT TO DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, to us Francophones, reasonable means . . . This is really the limit! We are sick and tired of the way this Government thumbs its nose at Francophones across Canada. And I would have said exactly the same thing if the Deputy Prime Minister had risen in his seat to answer the question. I am giving him a chance to maintain his integrity and his respect for the House.

We have here seventeen pages of amendments prepared by his office. These amendments are Government amendments, not the work of a couple of Tory backbenchers. These are amendments that go against the interests of Francophones outside Quebec.

I would like to know why the Deputy Prime Minister will not answer these questions today. Why is he remaining silent?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree, and I think the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie raised the issue, that Francophones outside Quebec are very disappointed, and the reason is that 25 per cent of the Hon. Member's Liberal colleagues voted against the historic Meech Lake Accord. It was a sad day for Quebec and for Canada's Francophones, and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie had the courage to state publicly his deep disappointment in the position taken by his Liberal colleagues who voted against this historic document that brings Quebec back into the Canadian constitutional fold, and that was my first point.

Second, as far as . . .

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the Right Hon. Prime Minister realizes the question is about amendments to Bill C-72. Perhaps the Right Hon. Prime Minister would like to continue his reply.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I believe—but the new assistant Leader of the Liberal Party, who has taken the Senator's place, won't listen. I 'll have to answer quickly because his job might not last that long. I'll answer right now before his Leader changes his mind again.

Regarding Bill C-72, Mr. Speaker, I am informed that amendments have been prepared by both Government and Opposition Members. I am even told that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier . . .

An Hon. Member: Yes indeed!

Mr. Mulroney: Yes indeed! So the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is presenting amendments in support of the Bill. We will see next Wednesday, but I think the Hon. Member can rest assured that in any case, Bill C-72 will pass. It will receive the approval of this House, as an instrument of national unity. Subsequently, we still have to consider the deep disappointment of Quebecers and Francophones in Canada in the position taken against the Meech Lake Accord by his Liberal colleagues.

INTEGRITY OF BILL C-72—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and deals with the role of the Deputy Prime Minister with respect to the amendments to Bill C-72, the Official Languages Act.

Can the Prime Minister say whether the provisions of the Bill have been maintained or is the Deputy Prime Minister allowed to become the leading dinosaur of the Conservative Party by introducing amendments to weaken Bill C-72?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question a number of times. Even the distinguished Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie referred to the sense of fairness of the Deputy Prime Minister. If the Member waits until Wednesday he will see, I believe, amendments presented by the Official Opposition—

Ms. Copps: I thought you did not know about any amendments.

Mr. Mulroney: The Member for Hamilton East says I didn't know about the amendments. No, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier just told me and so I am aware he is going to bring forward amendments. I am informed that others will be brought forward.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has exercised considerable care in the questions on this matter. I would ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to put his supplementary question directly and not stray too far into areas that may involve the committee.

This series of questions commenced on the basis of a memorandum and, as the Chair understood it, related to discussions which had taken place in the caucus of the government Party. I want Hon. Members to recognize that if it gets beyond that it puts the Chair in some difficulty.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your caution, but the problem we face is that the Deputy Prime Minister appears to have huddled behind the curtains with the Conservative dinosaurs in order to gut the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. The Chair asked the Hon. Member to consider his supplementary question carefully and put it as quickly and succinctly as possible. I ask him to do that.

POSITION OF CONSERVATIVE BACK-BENCHERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister guarantee to the House that these actions by the Conservative back-benchers and—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Cassidy: —the Deputy Prime Minister—you can hear the dinosaurs rumble—will not gut Bill C-72?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative back-benchers are free and honourable Members of Parliament. They will fulfil their responsibilities to this House and the people of Canada, and they will respond at an appropriate time. They are free to act, and I think my hon. friend would want freedom of action and freedom of thought for himself and others.

I can tell him what I will not tolerate. I will not tolerate a situation such as involved him when he went to Quebec and said he was going to take away part of the Saint John, New Brunswick, shipbuilding contract, and take jobs—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: That was hypocrisy and we will never stand for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RRAP—FUNDING FOR PROGRAM IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for CMHC. Concern has been expressed recently that the 1988 RRAP budget for Nova Scotia will be less than it was in 1987. Can the Minister clarify the situation?

• (1500)

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is true that yesterday some of the boys from the bay got a little agitated because they did not understand the budgetary process of CMHC even though they both have been in the House for a very long period of time.

The budget process involves two steps. The first instalment has been announced and the second will be announced in 30 days. That means there will be no budget cuts from the RRAP program for Cape Breton, for Ontario, for Canada. Indeed, the amount paid to delivery agents will be increased.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that that will close Question Period for today.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader if he will give me and the House a statement of the business he intends to call for the coming week?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House that tomorrow we will deal with Bill C-117, the Excise Tax Act, at report and third reading stages. After that we will commence Bill C-126, the Bretton Woods Agreement, at second reading.

Tuesday, we will commence debate on Bill C-129, the Air Canada privatization Bill.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn, and the amendments of Mr. Turner, Vancouver

Quadra, (p. 15617), Mr. Broadbent, (p. 15618), Mr. Caccia, (p. 15618), Mr. Johnston (p. 15618) and Mr. Roman (p. 15620).

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the last time I rose in the House of Commons to speak in favour of the Meech Lake Accord, we had just received the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the 1987 constitutional Accord. Members will recall the enormous efforts made by the joint committee last summer to hear and assess the views of interested Canadians.

During the course of their deliberations, the committee gave extremely close attention to divergent views regarding major elements of the Accord, and provided us with a thorough and compelling report. The committee recommended the adoption of the 1987 constitutional Accord, which this House adopted by resolution on October 26, 1987.

The other place has since considered the resolution, and the 180-day period during which a constitutional amendment is not possible without the authorization of the other place has expired.

Four provincial and legislative assemblies have now adopted the Accord and others are holding hearings. In short, the amending process set out in the Constitution Act, 1982, is being followed.

The last time that I spoke with respect to this motion I attempted to put the Accord into perspective. While it is certainly a tremendous achievement, restoring the Province of Quebec to its rightful place as an equal participant in the Canadian constitutional family, it is also the mark of an important beginning for our country from which we can move ahead, united, to address issues of mutual concern.

The Accord deals with the most urgent constitutional matters that face us today in the context of national reconciliation. Bearing this in mind, there are two points which I stated on that previous occasion and which merit emphasis again today. First, despite considerable rhetoric on various points, no egregious errors have been shown to exist in the Accord. Second, to re-open the Accord on any other basis would be contrary to the commitment of First Ministers and would inevitably destroy the chances for future constitutional reform.

Therefore, I would ask Members to consider the consequences of failure after having come this far. Consider the consequences of the rest of Canada saying no to Quebec a second time, after Quebec was left isolated and humiliated in 1981.

Since 1982, constitutional reform has been blocked. Four conferences on aboriginal rights ended in failure, partly because Québec declined to participate actively at First Ministers conferences.

As Professor Peter Meekison, former Deputy Minister of Federal and Intergovernmental affairs in Alberta and one of Canada's leading constitutional practitioners, testified before the joint committee:

> I think the consequences of Québec's not accepting this are incalculable . . . Given the importance that Alberta places on Senate reform, there will not be debate on Senate reform until Québec is in the Constitution.

He went on to say:

> Get this behind us, then everything else can be discussed.

I think it is important to review what was accomplished in the Meech Lake Accord. Meech Lake was never expected to be a cure for the myriad problems and challenges facing our nation. Rather, it was a vital first step in meeting our commitment to the people of Quebec and ensuring that they were an equal partner in the future growth of our nation.

There are clearly many other issues of concern which could have been addressed and which will need to be considered in future rounds. But the test of this resolution is whether it meets the basic objective which was set forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the 10 provincial Premiers, namely to obtain Quebec's willing adherence to the Canadian Constitution. I submit that it does.

Once adopted, future generations of Canadians and their leaders will never have to face the consequence of Quebec's continued estrangement from our constitutional development.

It has been alleged by some that the Charter is being weakened, the rights of linguistic minorities and the equality rights of women are somehow threatened. I can say unequivocally that this is false.

Professor Peter Hogg, one of Canada's foremost constitutional experts, writes that the Charter of Rights is clearly paramount over a distinct society clause. He writes:

> A law passed to preserve linguistic duality or to promote the distinct identity of Quebec would, like any other law, have to comply with the Charter.

The Charter will, in future, be interpreted in light of Quebec's distinctiveness as it now is in light of multicultural and aboriginal heritage considerations.

When we say that Quebec constitutes a distinct society within Canada, it is understood that all residents of Quebec are an integral part of that society. Thus, Quebec's aboriginal population is part of that distinct society within Canada. Those Quebecers from a multicultural community are part of it, Quebec's English speaking community is an integral part of Quebec's distinct society. All Quebecers belong to that distinct society, which enriches the diversity of Canada.

One has to wonder why this Accord, with its laudable goals, is before us again today. As Hon. Members are aware, the constitutional amendment process was initiated by the Quebec National Assembly on June 23, 1987. On October 26, 1987, by an overwhelming majority of 242 to 16 votes, and with the support of all three Party Leaders, this House approved the Meech Lake Accord as embodied in our resolution. Prior to the adoption of the resolution, on September 23, 1987, the Legislative Assembly of my own home Province of Saskatchewan adopted the Accord by a vote of 43 to 3. Subsequently, on December 7, 1987, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta adopted the Accord by a unanimous vote.

The Accord was tabled in Ontario on November 5, 1987, and referred to a select committee on November 30. On February 26, 1988, the Accord was tabled in the Legislative Assembly of Nova Scotia. It was tabled in the Legislative Assembly of Newfoundland on March 25, 1988. It was tabled in the Legislative Assembly of Prince Edward Island on March 29, 1988, and adopted on May 13 of this year. From these events, it is evident that Canadians across the land have joined in the process of welcoming the national reconciliation embodied in the Accord.

Some of the appointed Members in the other place, after consideration of the resolution, have not seen fit to adopt it in the form authorized by the House of Commons. The actions of some Members of the Senate remind me, and probably many other Members of Parliament and many other Canadians, of just how out of touch some Members of that body have become with respect to the views and aspirations of Canadians. I regret very much that this movement in the other place was undertaken by the Liberal majority whose own Leader has stood here and spoken unequivocally in favour of this resolution. Those Liberal Senators have seen fit to go against the wishes of their Leader. They have undertaken a very careful plan to undermine this particular constitutional amendment.

Most witnesses in the other place received the courtesy of attention, but I do not think I have seen a more curious sight than the former Prime Minister of our country, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, who was accorded between six and seven hours to stand before those whom he appointed to that place and lecture them with respect to this Accord. The irony of that is simply that each and every principle contained in this constitutional Accord was accepted at one time or other by the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau when he was Prime Minister.

Mr. Kaplan: That is false.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is a fact. It has been documented. I ask what the point is in coming back before Senators he appointed and attempting to undermine a very important constitutional movement? I say with a sense of sadness, and without any partisanship, that the Liberal Party of Canada has had a proud tradition of being sensitive with respect to the aspirations of the Province of Quebec. I give full credit to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for the leadership he has given in supporting this constitutional amendment because it is important to the Province of Quebec and it is fundamental to this country. I do not make any apologies for supporting that position and putting it forward to the Liberal Senators.

Mr. Kaplan: You don't have to attack the former Prime Minister.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am sorry. He has come forward and attempted to undermine this very important initiatives. I am not attacking him personally. He is entitled, as any other person in this country, to his opinion. But I simply reiterate the fact that I found it incredibly ironic that former Prime Minister Trudeau would attack principles which he himself had embraced in his attempt to bring about constitutional amendments in this country. I state that as the reality of what we face today. I do not understand the purpose of this attack on his part.

Those in the other place who form a majority have singlehandedly attempted to rewrite history and amend an agreement which has received the approval of 10 provinces and, as I indicated, of three Party Leaders, and an overwhelming vote in favour of that by the House of Commons. These are people who are elected and accountable. They have to go back to the people of Canada and defend the positions they have taken here. We have a responsibility and sensitivity to this issue which I think should not be overlooked by the other place.

A joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons looked at this matter in some detail. The report is there. Four provincial legislative assemblies have already passed this particular constitutional amendment. I can only refer, I think, with approval, to the words of my colleague in the other place, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Senator Murray) the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who stated during the course of debate:

> The amendments proposed by the Opposition would require the Governments to reopen practically all the sections of an agreement that has unanimous support.
> I suggest that those who propose such amendments are not seeking to improve the Accord, as they claim. The amendments being proposed are killer amendments. They have only one purpose in mind—they are designed to kill the Accord.

I urge Hon. Members opposite not to propose amendments. Such proposals could only encourage their provincial cousins to seek to reopen the Accord for renegotiation. Rather than proposing amendments that would risk the unanimity achieved by First Ministers, this House and provincial legislatures should rejoice in the achievement of the Accord and hasten to demonstrate our collective responsibility for national unity, and the generosity of spirit which has marked our history, by adopting the resolution without further delay.

Fortunately, the Members appointed to the other place do not have the power to override the collective will of the democratically elected representatives of the people in their provincial and federal legislative assemblies. Canadians have an obligation to ensure that the popular national will on a matter of the most fundamental importance to our country is not stifled by unelected opposition Members in the other place. In fact, the Constitution expressly provides that an amendment may be made without a resolution of the Senate if the House of Commons again adopts the resolution after the expiration of the 180 days from the time the House of Commons first adopted the resolution.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when this House again passes the resolution, we will not only overturn the temporary veto of the other place, but we will also send a message of encouragement and support to all those who believe in the spirit and the letter of the Meech Lake Accord. We will honour the commitment of the Government of Canada to underscore officially Quebec's return to the Canadian family.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec has said yes to Canada. A vote for the Meech Lake Accord will be important evidence of our commitment to Quebec and to building harmonious relations for our country's future.

[English]

In 1982, in the aftermath of the Quebec referendum of 1980, with the concurrence of nine provinces, with the concurrence of this House, with the concurrence of the other place, with the concurrence of the Parliament of the United Kingdom and with the approval of the Supreme Court of Canada, we in this country adopted the Constitution Act, 1982. Unfortunately, at that time, the Province of Québec was isolated by this process. Its feeling of alienation has been a cause of great concern and grave concern ever since.

The Province of Quebec subsequently opted out of the application of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to the greatest extent possible because it had not approved it. In addition, the absence of Quebec effectively prevented possible constitutional amendments of great importance pursuant to the new amending formula. Quebec refused to participate in any such amendments because it would be implemented pursuant to the Constitution Act, 1982, to which Quebec had not given its assent.

These have been some of the most visible past consequences of Quebec's isolation in 1982. The people of Canada, through their elected representatives, have dedicated themselves to solving the problem of Quebec's isolation as a matter of national priority. If we are to avoid the grave consequences of failure, we must not be side-tracked either by unmerited criticisms or by worthy issues whose time for consideration or reconsideration has yet to come.

Our first constitutional amendment today must be to complete the Quebec round of our constitutional reforms. Only then will we have secured the complete legitimacy of our full constitutional framework, and only then will we be able to build successfully on our past accomplishments. The present moment must belong to Quebec so that the future may belong to all Canadians.

[Translation]

We are all very aware that many important points must still be dealt with under constitutional reform. The Meech Lake Accord is a basis for moving forward on the protection of minority language rights, Senate reform, the rights of native people and all other issues. If it were only up to the Senate, we would be condemned to dwell in the past. Mr. Speaker, if we cannot consolidate our constitutional gains, we are in danger of spending decades on a costly, futile, divisive constitutional debate. Is this what the other House wants?

[English]

Worse still, as Premier Peterson said on April 28:

> If this opportunity is missed, my own political assessment is that you won't see that opportunity again.

He concluded that the judgment of history would be very harsh.

These sentiments were reflected in the comments of the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, who held a number of important public offices under four Prime Ministers, when he told the joint committee in no uncertain terms:

> If Quebec is rebuffed, if this Accord becomes discord, and the opportunity is lost to get acquiescence of the constitutional authorities in Quebec, my guess is that it probably will not arise again for another generation, and never again on such reasonable terms.

What I want is for the patriotic sentiment and generous spirit that characterized this round of constitutional reform to become the rule and not the exception so that future progress may also be realized.

We cannot afford to lose this precedent of goodwill, reasonableness and common sense leading to constitutional reform pursuant to the most rigid of our constitutional amending formulae. We have before us an Accord that has been endorsed with pride and enthusiasm, an Accord that unifies and strengthens Canada. To reopen this Accord would be to lose it.

What possible justification can there be to postpone national reconciliation to a time when the chances of success may be far less and the most severe consequences of failure more immediate?

Has an egregious error been found? No, Mr. Speaker. Have First Ministers failed to consider all the issues placed before them? No, Mr. Speaker. Does unanimous agreement exist to reopen the Accord for renegotiation? No, Mr. Speaker.

It comes down to one question. Should Canada say no to Quebec? For that would surely be the effect of reopening the Accord without a legitimate reason for doing so. There is no reason for this. It is time for us as Canadians, as Members of Parliament, to say yes to Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the 1987 constitutional amendment is not the end of the constitutional reform process. A thorough examination of constitutional questions will remain an important element of our search for the most appropriate solutions to the fundamental problems that we as a nation must face. I hope that when it comes to consider these matters, the other

Chamber will finally see the significance of our decision to pass this resolution again.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, 130 years ago a great man of another great nation quoted to his country the biblical warning that a house divided against itself cannot stand. The wisdom of such common sense should appeal to us.

Canada's history is somewhat unique in the way we have continually created harmony out of seemingly discordant national elements. This is the glory of our past and the strength of our future. The Constitution Amendment, 1987 continues this tradition. It envisions a nation moving ever closer to a more co-operative and tolerant way of life and of government. It is a vision in which we can take pride.

The Meech Lake Accord deserves our enthusiastic support. I invite Hon. Members to reaffirm our commitment to the resolution by adopting it once again.

There is a momentum, a desire on the part of Canadians to move forward to seek the ratification of this Accord which I commend to Hon. Members.

Mr. Berger: What about the Gallup poll?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not want to trivialize this debate or the considerations with respect to this matter by entering into any type of regime in which Gallup polls or, indeed, whatever polls are taken from time to time are brought forward. I can only say that it is unusual in the history of our country to have a situation in which we have unanimity among the First Ministers of the provinces and of the federal Government, as well as of all the Leaders in the House of Commons. It is not giving me any satisfaction that we cannot get unanimity across the whole country. But that is impossible.

I think that the people who have the greatest stake in this on behalf of the people of Canada are those who have to face the electorate, those people who have to be re-elected to justify the positions that they take. They have made a decision. This is quite apart from Party and partisan politics. Members from every political Party represented in this House have in fact approved this Accord.

This is an opportunity for those who feel that they want to block this to consider the consequences of what they do. If they want by their actions to return to the situation in which we will again isolate the Province of Quebec, then I think that they will have to stand accountable for the positions they take. I do not have the privilege of coming from the Province of Quebec. However, I come from another part of our country, the Province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Kaplan: That is a privilege.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a western province which has very happily accepted this amendment in overwhelming numbers and with overwhelming support.

Mr. Caccia: Distinct society?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is something that binds us together. I do not regard this as being an accord which, in fact, does anything but strengthen this nation. For the benefit of Members, I explained that to me a distinct society in Quebec is a very understandable and important consideration which does not in any way diminish the Charter of Rights and the rights of minorities. The Province of Quebec today consists of a great variety of minorities and a very important number of aboriginal peoples. All of them together, with the French majority and the English minority, do constitute a unique society.

I simply say to Hon. Members, who are determined to oppose this, that I hope they will give consideration to the consequences of their actions. As the years go by after this is passed and they see how it has strengthened our country and brought a unity and co-operation together, they will be able to say, contrary to their present position today, that this was one of the finest moments in the history of the House of Commons of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston).

Mr. Johnston: I would like to know whether the Minister will accept questions following these remarks.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Absolutely.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not permitted by the rules, unless the Hon. Member seeks the unanimous consent of the House to do so. It would not be up to the Minister, it would be up to the whole House.

Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) to ask questions for a period which we would limit, as we usually do?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kaplan: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about the normal ten-minute question and answer period. In order to decide on consent, I would like to know what type of time frame you visualize.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) on the same point of order.

Ms. Jewett: Ordinarily, Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted, as we all are, to have questions and comments. However, we did have an agreement today that the three of us, one from each Party, would be able to speak, even though it extends into Private Members' Hour. That was the agreement.

I know that the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has quite an extensive speech. Therefore, I would ask that I be allowed to speak today, as it was agreed that I would.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the same point of order, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount.

Mr. Johnston: I appreciated the fact that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) took less time than I thought had been allotted. I would be quite happy to limit myself to one question, because he has raised a point which I believe requires some clarification. It should not take more than three minutes, Mr. Speaker, to have that exchange.

Mr. Prud'homme: A colleague of mine is saying let us be liberal. I will be liberal. Yesterday we agreed that there would be three consecutive speakers, and I do not see what has happened since yesterday to change what we decided. I think my position is as liberal as any one of my colleagues who thinks it may not be liberal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the same point of order, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say that coming from a Member who is given to praising the virtues of democracy, the comments we have just heard from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) are something of a paradox.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We do have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Ms. Jewett: I would rather have had one question than all of this.

Mr. Prud'homme: I must admit, having always defended—

Ms. Jewett: You are just cutting down my time.

Mr. Prud'homme: I do not see why my dear friend from British Columbia is in such a hurry. You will have your time.

When we make rules, it becomes unruly to change the rule that we agreed to follow. I do not see why my colleagues suddenly believe that I am less liberal today than I was yesterday. We agreed yesterday that, in an orderly fashion, we would start by having three Members of Parliament speak in a row, one from each Party. I am sure that in due course some of my colleagues will have plenty of opportunity to put forward their views. Therefore, I think we should proceed as we agreed yesterday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) on the same point of order.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, that was not a point of privilege. The point here is whether or not the Chamber is afraid of allowing one question to be asked which has been defined as being a short one, within the time frame allocated to the Minister, without going over it, and to make this debate as engaging and interesting as the rules of the House usually provide. What is the House afraid of by allowing one question at this point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not believe that there is unanimous consent. Therefore we will proceed with the debate with the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, of all the work we do in this House, nothing is as important as what we are about to do today, because we are now dealing with the fundamental law of this country, the Constitution of Canada.

We must do so out of a sense of pride in our country and its accomplishments, accomplishments that are quite considerable.

I think we should remember that today's Canada is not the initial version of this nation. Canada as we know it, which goes back to 1867, is actually the second or third version of this country, according to our historians. Before Confederation, an attempt was made to unite the colonies of North America, mainly so as to be strong enough to resist the influence of the Americans and keep the Americans out, and until Confederation, several attempts at union had failed.

The present version succeeded, and it has succeeded to this day, Mr. Speaker. I think it would be interesting to compare the versions that existed before Confederation with what we have now. What are the differences?

One difference I find very important and very apt is the difference in perception of the future of a great country. Before Confederation, we saw mature colonies that exercised all the powers of a colony, that wanted concessions and were anxious to have a mutual contract in order to survive against the United States. However, Canada as we know it today, the present version of Canada, had a vision of a frontier, of a great country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a much broader perception than the original partners had.

The objective was not how to protect Canada, as a mature state, against the United States, but to build something great and important and different from the original colonies.

[English]

The Canada that we are living in now survived for a number of reasons. For me, for many Canadians, and for those whom I represent, it survived because of its grandeur, because of the larger vision that it has than any of the unsuccessful efforts before it to build a country which was nothing more than an agreement or an arrangement to share powers among existing colonies.

Many countries have the natural riches that Canada has and the human riches as well, but they are not as successful as Canada. Within our borders we find immigrants who have come to our country from places in the world that have resources and human riches but which lack Canada's great heritage in our form of Government, our parliamentary tradition and in the balance that we have achieved in our Confederation. When we come as a country to analyse why we are where we are, we must remember that it is in part due to the input of the tradition of Government and the balance of our Confederation. Waves of immigrants have come to Canada from even richer places in the world and have done better here in freedom and in prosperity because of our system. This has to make us very conscious of what is before us when we examine possible changes to the fundamental law of Canada in the form of the Meech Lake Accord before us.

I want to put one other image before the House. It was an image which Prime Minister Trudeau set out close to the end of his career as Prime Minister. He spoke about building a great nation. He compared it for purposes of contrast to other buildings. He talked about the Pharaoh in Egypt who built a pyramid, about the work and the effort that went into building a pyramid and who in the end would stand back proudly looking at his project that would defy the ages. Building a nation is a very different process. We did not stop with what the Fathers of Confederation completed and let it defy the ages.

Building a nation is an ongoing process. It is a process that takes the efforts of the people of the country and their legislatures in a federal system, all of the components of our great country, to make it work. It responds to the changing circumstances and changing opportunities in a positive and in a generous way, in a way that looks to the long term, that looks to what it is we are building and respects the tradition and the heritage that has made it possible for us to enjoy the very great fortune that we do as Canadians.

I was part of the Government between 1980 and 1984 that patriated the Constitution, initiated the package, designed it, developed it, invited public participation and provincial and political support from across the country.

Canadians feel great pride in the fact that we patriated our Constitution. That patriation package was a first-class manoeuvre in the sense that it did not just patriate what we had but augmented it with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, whose potential for enhancing social justice and fairness in our society is only now beginning to be realized. This was a very great achievement of 1981 and 1982 under the leadership of Prime Minister Trudeau. I do not think we can sit back. We have to look at what has been called the unfinished business of that package and we must continue to build.

We in the Official Opposition have viewed the Meech Lake Accord. We have been invited to support it and we have considered it. We are very critical of the process by which the Meech Lake Accord was devised. We feel, and we indicated in our reports, that much more public participation should have taken place and much more time should have been put into it. It is not a seamless web. In fact, Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

I would like to read into the record a paragraph from our report, published as Addendum A, the Liberal Party's position on the 1987 Constitutional Accord. I read at page 149, and I have only one paragraph to read: "The Liberal members of the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord, on behalf of the Opposition, once again confirm their support for the Langevin Accord . . . "—in other words, Meech Lake— " . . . as a positive step forward in Canada's constitutional evolution. At the same time, we believe that the Accord can and should be improved now by the inclusion of some amendments, which are set out below. These amendments are fully consistent with: (1) the Liberal Party policy resolution of November 1986; (2) the Quebec Government's constitutional agenda; and (3) the testimony of many expert witnesses at the hearings of the Special Joint Committee. We also believe that these amendments should be acceptable to the First Ministers. They take nothing away from the achievement of the Accord, rather they clarify its meaning and recognize other legitimate claims which are totally compatible with the Accord."

[English]

That was the position we took when the resolution was first presented, and that is the position that we take today. We support the Meech Lake Accord in spite of an extremely flawed process. We were prepared, in other words, to look at the fruit which the process bore as an Official Opposition should do and to look at it on its merits in spite of the process that we found deplorable and of which we were very critical. We have proposed amendments. I simply cannot understand the Government, especially in the light of the current reaction across the country to the Meech Lake resolution, characterizing them as killer amendments or as amendments that will do anything other than enhance the package, increase its acceptability, as well as bring new constituencies of support to the constitutional package which the Government has brought forward.

I intend now to proceed to examine our amendments, put them forward and explain them. I hope members of the Government will once again give consideration to amendments which, although we will support the Accord in any event, I think will make the Accord a much more popular document and perhaps save it if it is threatened in a number of provinces across the country because of objections to certain aspects of it. I will refer to my amendments as I go along through substantial points about the Accord.

To begin with, we should never forget that the purpose of the Meech Lake agreement was to bring Quebec into the constitutional framework of Canada. The lengthy history of attempts at constitutional revision have always included the reluctance of Quebec's leaders to permit a reduction in both the powers of the Quebec Government and its role as the point d'appui for the French language in Canada, as the B and B Commission expressed it.

I have heard the arguments. There is certainly validity to those arguments that Quebecers were involved in the process of patriation of the Constitution and bringing in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I have seen the chart of how many elected legislators from the federal and provincial levels together supported patriation and how many opposed it. I know about the resolutions in the Province of Quebec, but I do not think that the non-participation of the Quebec Government in patriation, its disapproval of it, should be demeaned or that it should be belittled. It is significant because, in an ironic way, that very fact of the Government of Quebec's non-approval gives Quebec a special status. It becomes the only province that has not accepted at the level of the provincial legislature and government the patriation of the Constitution.

That is an argument which gives comfort and support to grievances within the Province of Quebec against Confederation. It is legitimate and important, in this process of the ongoing building of our nation, to deal with that, to find a formula or an accommodation that will overcome that. We know from the referendum and from the recent election of a federalist government in the Province of Quebec that Quebecers want to participate in Confederation. This is perfectly legitimate and appropriate, and behind our approval of the Meech Lake Accord is our recognition of the importance of overcoming the fact that back at the time of the patriation of the Constitution and the establishment of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Government and legislature of the Province of Quebec said no.

I have heard some people glibly say that because of the referendum, because of the election of a federalist government in the Province of Quebec and because Quebec has said yes to us now, we in the provinces and in the Parliament must now say yes to Quebec, as if to imply by that that no matter what the priorities of the Province of Quebec are at this time, because it had gone through the two stages, we should say yes no matter what. The approval of the Official Opposition is not to be taken as an indication that we would accept any kind of conditions put forward for the approval of the Meech Lake Accord and for the support of the Government and Legislature of Quebec for the package. Certainly, we would not be able to say yes to Quebec if Quebec were putting forward an agenda which would undermine or destroy the kind of balanced federalism that we know.

I think it is important at this time to review for a moment what some of the past demands of Quebec were as a condition for its approval of the patriation of the Constitution. It is important to do this because I want to demonstrate that it was not the conflict and confrontation, as some Members of the Government Party have said, of the former Trudeau Government that was responsible for Quebec's non support of the patriation package, it was not that at all. It was what was on the agenda of the Government of Quebec at that time.

People have forgotten that what was being asked for could not be agreed to. Quebec was represented by the Lévesque Government, whose agenda was not to build a strong and united Canada. Its overt, openly stated agenda was to separate and establish a country independent from Canada. Its agenda demonstrated that.

For example, one of the things that was wanted in the Constitution of Canada was the right of self-determination for the Province of Quebec. I do not see how that could be put into a Constitution of a federal state. That could not have been accepted. It was not a matter of confrontation or conflict, it was an unacceptable agenda.

The province wanted to close down the CBC stations and Radio Canada stations across Quebec and turn them over to provincial management. It wanted to withdraw television, cable and radio licences and have them issued by the provincial government. It wanted to be the voice outside Canada of la francophonie, not just inside Quebec but outside Quebec and across the rest of the country. Looking back at what it was that the Government of 1980, 1981 and 1982 was being asked to approve, one can see why the Constitution was patriated without the approval of the Government of the day in the Province of Quebec or of the Legislature of Quebec.

I mention those sad events because I want to contrast them with what we are being asked to say yes to now. We are being asked by the federalist government of the Province of Quebec, and I now refer to the commencement of the process which lead to Meech Lake, to say yes to a five point agenda of items which, in the view of the Official Opposition, are totally compatible with a federal system of government, with a Confederation as we know it, with a balanced equilibrium in Canada. We think that this is a timely development. It is not something that we can count on being available now and for all times in the future. It is something that we have to recognize while it is available. Quebec's approval is available on the basis of a federalist agenda.

I must also say that I do not see how one could have expected the Premier of Quebec, Premier Bourassa, to win his election and then turn to the federal and provincial Governments and say: "I am prepared to accept the package the former Government refused. It was not good enough for the former Government, but it is good enough for me". Politically, that would have been unrealistic, and it is reasonable for us to expect and to receive from the Province of Quebec a list of items which will assist it in being comfortable within Confederation, in a balanced form of Confederation which we have inherited and which it is our duty to preserve and strengthen.

I have indicated our support for the Meech Lake Accord, but I have also indicated that we have argued that amendment is possible. We have a number of amendments which are desirable and important.

I want to note in relation to the package of Québec's priorities for entry into Confederation and for approval of the patriation of the Constitution and of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, there was no proposal to reduce the powers of the federal Government in its most important areas. I will talk about the changes in the system individually, but it is important to underline that what has not changed is that the federal Government retains all of its powers under Section 91, including its general power. It retains its powers of taxation and it retains the important responsibilities relating to peace, order and good government.

Let me turn now to one of the criticisms that has been made of the Meech Lake Accord. In spite of having sat on the Committee, listened to the witnesses and asked them questions, it is a criticism of the Meech Lake Accord that I am totally unable to understand.

[Translation]

And that, Mr. Speaker, is the suggestion or the objection that the Meech Lake Accord detracts from the official languages policy. For me, far from harming this policy, the Meech Lake Accord tends to strengthen it. Let me explain. First, we in Canada have a policy of official institutional bilingualism. That remains unchanged with the Meech Lake Accord. For example, this means that we try as much as possible—it is the Government's responsibility—to ensure to the greatest extent that those who want to live in French and those who want to live in English in our country can do so.

The Government must provide them with services in French and in English, as they choose, wherever practically possible. And the official languages policy is not to force them to learn another language to live in Canada. They have the right, as much as possible, to live in only one of the two official languages.

But another aspect of the official languages policy that is not legislated appears before us. It is phenomenal, wonderful, something that is really an aspect of this official languages policy; it is the growing practice throughout the country of learning both official languages. We see in every province the trend of Canadians who can live and work in only one of the two official languages to learn the other language, to teach it to their children and to have their children taught the other official language. Perhaps it is because in our country, we have two of the most important languages in the world; perhaps it is also the example of Canadians who are bilingual that impresses other Canadians. Perhaps too it is to have the opportunity to live fully as a Canadian. But it is very important and continues to be with the Meech Lake Accord. There is nothing in it to discourage these Canadians, be they adults or young people, who are trying to become bilingual in this country.

• (1600)

In my argument about the continuation and strengthening of the official languages policy I note that the Constitution after Meech Lake will still contain the option for provinces to become officially bilingual. I want to remind my colleagues that in our resolutions as a Party and in our report on the Meech Lake Accord we urged that provinces become officially bilingual. We refer specifically to the Province of Ontario. We would like to have seen at the Meech Lake Accord negotiations a Prime Minister who moved forward with that priority and tried to take the opportunity to encourage a province or more provinces to become officially bilingual. However, the option is still there and I commend our amendment to the House, encouraging the Province of Ontario and other provinces to become officially bilingual.

After the Meech Lake Accord is constitutionalized, there will still be an obligation on provincial Governments to provide education in an official language where numbers warrant. That is not taken away by Meech Lake. Official languages remains as strong. In fact, I want to refer to another of our amendments, an important one, in which we wanted to remove the "where numbers warrant" limitation contained in the Constitution at the time of patriation. We felt that the standard contained in paragraph 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms about reasonable limitations on all rights, including language rights, would have been sufficient protection against abuse, if one can conceive of abuse as being a desire to have your children educated in one of the official languages. We commend that amendment to this House and to others across the country who are considering the resolution on the Meech Lake Accord. We think it is important, and the amendment would reinforce official bilingualism in the country, but nothing in the Meech Lake Accord in that respect reduces it.

Dealing with the Official Languages Act, which is the final aspect of official bilingualism that I want to refer to under the Meech Lake Accord, I note that the Act remains the law of the land. I did not want to speak today about the current problems that the Government is having in implementing its amendments to the Act contained in Bill C-72, but the disgraceful developments in Question Period today are pretty hard not to refer to in this context.

Here we have a Constitution which encourages official bilingualism, the Meech Lake Accord which in my submission does the same thing, Official Languages Act amendments which ought to be brought forward, a Government which indicated it was prepared to do so, but a resistance movement among some dinosaurs, as they have been called, in the Conservative caucus who do not want this element of progress. It may be that Conservative Members who want the amendment package which my colleague revealed today feel threatened by a country which has an official bilingualism policy.

Mr. Belsher: We are not threatened at all.

Mr. Kaplan: On our side of the House we do not feel that. We feel enriched by official bilingualism and we encourage the Government to stick to the position it put forward to the Canadian people on this subject and let us have these important amendments to the Act.

Further on the subject of the official bilingualism policy, I want to turn finally to the actual provisions of the Meech Lake Accord which calls on the Parliament of Canada and the provinces to preserve the situation of the official language minority in their province. I feel that is a step forward. Yet when one looks at the development in the Province of Saskatchewan one has to wonder how that province, which signed the Meech Lake Accord and passed the resolution, could bring forward legislation which is a step backward in the acquired rights of the official language minority residing in that province.

[Translation]

I speak of the Fransaskois who had rights granted in the statute that established the Government of Saskatchewan. And now, after the Supreme Court strengthened and confirmed these rights and pointed out that they were in effect, the Government, the same one that passed the Meech Lake Accord, could also diminish their acquired rights in the Province of Saskatchewan.

[English]

I want to suggest on that subject that if the Meech Lake Accord had been constitutionalized at this point, I think—

[Translation]

... I believe that the Fransaskois would have one more argument in their favour, in favour of their official language in their province and an argument that did not exist in the Constitution before Meech Lake. It is a gain. Even so, the attitude of the Government and of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his response to events in Saskatchewan is simply deplorable.

[English]

We have proposed an amendment to this provision of the Meech Lake Accord. I think if the Accord was a short step in reinforcing the situation of the official language minorities in the provinces, the amendment we proposed is a much longer step. I would like to read our amendment. We would put forward for Clause 2(a) of the Meech Lake Accord the following:

> "2(a) The role of the Parliament of Canada to preserve and promote, and the role of the provincial legislatures to preserve and, subject to subparagraph 2(b) to promote, the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.
> (b) The role of a province in relation to promotion applies from the time it is adopted by a resolution of the legislative assembly of that province."

Why is that a killer amendment, I ask the Leader of the Government in the other place, the Minister responsible for interprovincial relations? We ask that this Parliament and the Government of Canada not only preserve the rights of official language minorities but promote them as well.

We ask in relation to the provinces that they promote as well as preserve, but only from the time they specifically agree to do so. We are thinking of the model of the official bilingualism of a province. According to the Constitution of 1982, a province has the right to opt into official language status. We offer the right to opt in as well to the responsibility to promote in addition to preserve the official language minority's acquired rights and other rights within a province. I do not consider that to be a killer amendment.

If one looks at the list of priorities of the Province of Quebec, that is not part of them. Quebec's priority list deals with matters affecting the Province of Québec. This amendment deals with the situation of official languages outside the Province of Quebec, as well as inside the province with respect to the English official language minority. Surely this amendment can be totally acceptable and one which would have brought the unhesitating support of—

—of the FFHQ throughout our country. It was an amendment that could have greatly increased support for the Meech Lake Accord.

[English]

One of the points made in criticizing the Meech Lake Accord in the manner in which it affects official bilingualism in Canada is the distinct society clause. We in the Official Opposition do not agree with the argument that the distinct society clause prejudices bilingualism. Certainly no one can point to any words or clauses in the Meech Lake Accord which diminish official bilingualism. The critics of the distinct society clause acknowledge that there is nothing specific about it that violates bilingualism, but they try to make the argument that indirectly, recognizing Quebec as a distinct society will have that effect.

Let me make a few points about the distinct society. First, there is no question that Quebec is a distinct society within Canada in a very special way. From the moment in 1774 that the Quebec Act recognized the authority of the civil law and the rights of the Catholics to hold public office, Catholics meaning French Canadians in those days, there has been a consistent acceptance of a distinct constitutional recognition of Quebec's special place in the Canadian Federation. That does not preclude a rejection of the distinct constitutional provisions which recognize the anglophone or non francophone minorities in Quebec, or the francophone minority outside its borders.

The drafting of the BNA Act provided for a specific division of powers in those domains which were considered important to the maintenance of Quebec's distinctiveness, education, courts and civil law. There are other distinctive aspects about Canada than the distinctiveness of Quebec, however. I want to refer the House to amendments which are included in our package, which recognize other fundamental characteristics of Canada, which recognize the aboriginal people as a fundamental characteristic of Canada and recognize the multicultural developments in Canada, with millions and millions whose heritage is in the culture which is neither English nor French.

The reaction of the public across Canada to the Meech Lake Accord certainly shows that recognition of other fundamental characteristics of Canada would certainly have enhanced public support for the Meech Lake Accord. In our submission, it is not too late for the addition of those two among the fundamental characteristics of Canada.

When considering another criticism of the distinct society clause, it is important to remember that the distinct society is not a francophone society alone. Many critics feel and fear that the power given to the Government of Quebec and the Legislature of Quebec to promote the distinct society means that a francophone society only will be promoted. That overlooks precisely what is contained in the Meech Lake Accord itself. It is important to read Clause 2 which states:

> (a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Québec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Québec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada;

Those who would argue that the distinct society clause could be used as a device to downgrade or humiliate the English-speaking minority within the Province of Quebec are not giving adequate account of the actual language of the Meech Lake Accord and to the fact that such action would not be justified under the very clear language which indicates that Quebec is a bilingual society which includes francophones and anglophones.

It is clear that the distinct society clause is an interpretive provision. In relationship to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, it is not a provision which cancels or diminishes other provisions of the Constitution or of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is meant to be read to interpret them.

There is another criticism of the distinct society clause that I believe is invalid when one considers it carefully. The distinct society clause cannot be used as an interpretive provision to reduce the powers of the federal Government, of Parliament or of the provinces. Clause 2(4) states:

> Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language.

While a proponent of a law before the court may argue that the distinct society clause justified trenching on powers of the federal Government or a provincial government, it is clear that this amendment provides that it is not to be interpreted to do so. However, when one comes to the relationship between the distinct society clause and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, I do not believe the matter is as clear as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) indicated in his remarks. He said he rejected totally the argument that the distinct society clause could reduce provisions of the rights and freedoms granted under the Charter.

Let me give a hypothetical situation that I believe indicates the concerns of the Official Opposition in the amendment to which I will refer. Suppose that five provinces, including Quebec, put forward the same law which is considered by some to reduce the rights of women. I can visualize a situation under the Meech Lake Accord in its present form where Quebec will have an extra argument going into the Supreme Court of Canada to defend that law. The law, in other words, might be found not to violate the Constitution or, putting it the other way, the law might be found to violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in four provinces, but not within the Province of Quebec, because a different interpretative provision is being used. As I indicated, I do not think, and I was convinced by the evidence adduced before our committee, that rights can be removed by the distinct society clause or that they can be reduced, but they can be given a different interpretation.

We are arguing that it is undesirable for the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to have different meanings for Canadians in different provinces of Canada. That is the reason for our amendment which I would like to refer to now and commend to Members of the House, even the Minister of Justice who has rejected all evidence to the contrary, that we should make it clear that the Charter has the same meaning in every one of the provinces of Canada, and for all Canadians, wherever they live.

We are concerned that this very important achievement of 1982, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, should not have different meanings in different places across the country, so we have put forward this amendment. However, if you ask if that possibility and concern is fatal with respect to the Meech Lake Accord, if you ask if that is an argument for us to reject the entire Accord with all of its other achievements, my answer is to reflect back on what we did in 1981 and 1982 when we brought back a Charter of Rights and Freedoms which contained Section 33. It contained a clause which permits a province to reject all parts, those that are listed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in Section 33, in other words, to deny very specific provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and to deny them 100 per cent to the residents of a particular province.

That is a very serious derogation from the Charter. Yet we were obliged to accept it because we would not have been able to patriate the Constitution and we would not have been able to establish the Charter of Rights and Freedoms without it. We tried to do it, but we could not get enough support to be able to proceed and patriate the Constitution and establish the Charter without it.

I look at the wisdom we had then to accept the derogation, the notwithstanding clause, and the situation now where there is ambiguity about the interpretation of the distinct society clause in relation to the Charter, and we have an amendment which is being rejected by the Government. If it is rejected, let us proceed, let us put the clarification of the priority of the Charter, along with the notwithstanding clause, as something we would like to see dealt with early, and which our Leader has undertaken will be part of our platform and agenda of the Liberal Government after the Meech Lake Accord is constitutionalized.

Another suggestion in relation to the distinct society clause with which I would like to deal is the suggestion of some that it should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada so that it can tell us exactly what the distinct society clause means. In rejecting this suggestion, I think I can do no better than refer to the arguments made by the Attorney General of Ontario before the legislative committee in that province which was examining the Meech Lake Accord.

It is true that the Supreme Court of Canada Act says that virtually any question can be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, but references cannot be successful when they ask the Supreme Court of Canada to write a book or treatise in effect, about the meaning of a clause. The Supreme Court of Canada can handle, and it is reasonable to put to it, justifiable questions such as, is this legal? Does this comply with the provisions of the Charter? Does this comply with the amending formula?

It is a long, interesting and powerful argument the Attorney General of Ontario made. It cites authorities and comes to the conclusion that when we ask the court what does the distinct society clause really mean—and I am reading here from page 45 of his brief—it is unlikely that the court would be willing to answer any such question.

Courts exist for the purpose of resolving particular disputes rather than writing discursive essays on the meaning of various constitutional provisions. He contrasts that question with the question that was asked of the Supreme Court of Canada back in 1981. The court was asked whether or not the proposed amendment was unconstitutional, a very specific thing. It was asked is it constitutional or is it not, yes or no. It was not asked the difficult question of what it means. Imagine what would have happened if peace, order and good government had been sent to the Supreme Court of Canada in its day, if it had existed then? It is not the type of question about which a court can be asked to give a useful definition. It is too hypothetical to expect a court to be able to deal with it in a way that is really useful.

The final criticism that is made of the distinct society clause is also made of another provision of the Meech Lake Accord, that is that it is too vague and ambiguous. I want to deal with the question of vague and ambiguous, bearing in mind that peace, order and good Government must also be considered pretty vague and ambiguous. Yet it has been pretty useful and has been the basis for founding a considerable number of important decisions, and I want to indicate in connection with the shared costs program provision as well, that I do not think its vagueness or ambiguity is necessarily a fault.

The provision that is also criticized as being too vague to proceed is the provision on shared costs programs which puts a limit on the power of the federal Government to establish shared costs programs with provinces which do not want to participate. Again, I think, many of the critics of the Meech Lake Accord have exaggerated very considerably what it is this provision does. Certainly, it does not take away the spending power of the federal Government. The federal Government still has the power to spend money. In fact, the power is specified in the statute, or what will be in the Constitution, in a way of clarity which it has never had before. But the provision itself on the spending power does not eliminate the federal Government's power to spend money in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction.

It is important to recognize also that the limitation contained in the Meech Lake Accord only applies when we talk about an exclusive area of provincial jurisdiction. I think in a balanced federal system, it is not unreasonable for the provinces, when the federal Government proposes to spend money in an exclusive jurisdiction which belongs under the Constitution to them, to ask them to contribute half or more, perhaps less, but a part of the cost. It is not unreasonable to give the provinces more powers than they have enjoyed until now. This, the Meech Lake Accord does.

People fear that with the power the provinces are given to demand compensation, and if they provide a compatible program or policy, this will create a chequer-board Canada. I want to insist that this provision does not necessarily create a chequer-board Canada. It depends on politics. It depends on the kind of negotiation process that takes place. There will have to be more negotiation if the Government wants to proceed by this route. There will have to be more consideration of provincial priorities. But at the end of it, if the federal Government does not want particular provinces to establish programs of their own and claim compensation, it does not have to proceed through the route of a shared-cost program in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction.

I think it is a false criticism to say that this clause will lead to a chequer-board Canada. The federal Government can insist before signing on the dotted line that other provinces participate rather than opting out and claiming compensation instead.

I refer to the ambiguity of the shared-cost program clause. I would like to read it. I would like to read Section 106(A) of the Meech Lake Accord which states:

> The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the Government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section, in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with national objectives.

"Compatible with national objectives" and "program or initiative" have been criticized as being pretty ambiguous language. We in the Official Opposition agree that this is ambiguous language. I want to note an amendment that we have proposed which would make that language somewhat clearer. What we have proposed in our amendment is that what needs to be provided by the province to qualify for compensation is to carry on a compatible program which meets minimum national standards. The language that we have proposed I think is more clear. However, I have to acknowledge that even it is somewhat ambiguous and that there will always be some uncertainty in marginal cases where some type of arbitration is going to be required by a court to determine what it means.

Let me give a practical example. We have before the House now Bill C-89 which, as one of its objectives, provides federal funds for victims of crime. Money is given to the provinces. The wish is expressed in the legislation that they will use it for victims of crime.

Let us say that a shared-cost program is developed in that area and the federal Government offers the provinces the opportunity to participate in this. It is obviously an area of provincial jurisdiction. I do not think there is any doubt about that. Thus we have a province saying: "We will take the money. We intend to build sidewalks with it". How do sidewalks help the victims of crime? I suppose a provincial Government can argue that if there are sidewalks, people who walk on them are less likely to be hit by drunk drivers. That is one argument. A province might say: "We will take the money and we will establish that type of program". Under either version the question that would be asked is: Is this a compatible program which meets minimum national standards? I could not predict with confidence what a court would determine if that example were put as a basis for a demand for compensation by a provincial government opting out of a shared-cost program initiated by the federal Government.

I would like to observe this. Among the provinces I have noted arguments being made that this clause in the Meech Lake Accord has a different meaning. In the Province of Quebec a Minister is arguing that it gives very great latitude to the province. In another province, the Province of Ontario, the premier is arguing that that is a pretty tight definition. How do we deal with an ambiguity like that?

I would like to make a couple of observations about it. I remember chatting with one of the drafters of the International Monetary Fund Agreement. He made the observation that one of the achievements and the glories of that agreement was that it contained no unintentional ambiguities. What he meant by that was that the parties went as far as they could in agreeing but that there were certain things that they just could not agree on.

This could be contrasted with a contract in which people hire lawyers to iron out all the ambiguities. One certainly would not want to be told about a contract by one's lawyer that it is being left ambiguous because "we want to be able to sign the deal with the other side". In the case of a contract one wants to know clearly what will happen in every eventuality. However, the founders of the IMF, when they were getting together, reached a point where they could see, I assume, that unless there was a little measure of ambiguity there would not be a deal. I have the same feeling, although I was not at the table at the Meech Lake Accord, about the ambiguity, marginal, of the distinct society clause, and about the ambiguity of the shared-cost program provision.

We had premiers and a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who were saying to each other: "We have been able to agree about a number of things. We cannot agree in very precise detail about this. We are prepared to sign the agreement knowing that if this falls to be interpreted it will be interpreted within the context in which one side can make its arguments, the other side can make its arguments, and like peace, order and good government a decision will be made about where the responsibility falls and whether the compensation payment has to be made".

It is not a hot criticism of a constitution to say that it contains some vague language or some ambiguities. In that context, in fact, what started me thinking about this was a fascinating article about the Magna Carta which appeared in the Law Society Gazette of Upper Canada written by James Allan in June of 1987. He analyses a remarkable document which is about 700 years old. In particular he refers to the trial by jury safeguard contained in the Magna Carta.

The amazing thing is that when the Magna Carta was drafted, when King John and the barons sat together and hammered it out, trial by jury for ordinary citizens of the realm was the farthest thing from their minds. That Magna Carta today stands for trial by jury. In the British system there are still portions of the Magna Carta that are the actual current law of the land with respect to trial by jury.

In his concluding observations about the Magna Carta Mr. Allan notes that perhaps the greatest criterion of the longevity of any set of rules or laws is its adaptability. He states that the Magna Carta has lasted so long because of its tendency toward vagueness. "The passing ages were able to put their own gloss on the text".

I look at the shared-cost provision. I note that the federal spending power is still available to the federal Government, that virtually any objective, if the provinces object, could be achieved through other uses and through other exercises of the spending power.

• (1640)

It is not so bad to accept one or two ambiguities, although our amendment would have the effect of making it somewhat clearer and, I submit, would still hold the support of all the partners who initially drafted and approved the Meech Lake Accord. Future interpretation will decide and will settle. The parties who signed the Meech Lake Accord in this form were willing to have the provision settled by the courts in due course.

Again, the critics of the Meech Lake Accord turn to the next provision that they condemn and state that they would be prepared to have the courts settle it, but under the Meech Lake Accord the Supreme Court of Canada will become a stacked deck. I wish to deal with that objection, because I do not think it is valid. We in the Official Opposition reject that particular criticism of the Meech Lake Accord. What is said is that, because the provinces have the right now to submit names to the federal Government from which judges can be appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada, that provincialists or separatists might be appointed whose perspective on the issues that come before it would be biased.

In noting that criticism, one has to ask how satisfactory is the present system. Certainly it has worked well. I have never heard criticism from any quarter of the Supreme Court of Canada being prejudiced or anything other than objective and excellent in its function and in its standards. The Members of the Supreme Court of Canada are appointed by the Prime Minister. He designates them. Under the present system the tradition is that they are confirmed and adopted. There is not even any reference to the parliamentary committees in the manner that certain other appointments are referred to committees, without the power to veto, but at least with the power to examine them.

If we ever had a Prime Minister like Ronald Reagan, who had an agenda of making the Supreme Court of his country politically coloured one way or another, in Canada that would be very easy to achieve in the manner the Supreme Court of Canada presently is. I remember thinking, and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) may also remember, that when the patriation package brought forward by the Trudeau Government was under attack, and when the Quebec Government was taking it to court, that if the Quebec Government was unsuccessful at the Supreme Court of Canada, it could make the argument that this is a court that is set up to adjudicate between the claims of the federal and the provincial Governments, but it is 100 per cent appointed by one side, therefore, what type of legitimacy is that?

When one looks at the way the Supreme Court is presently constituted, it is appropriate to consider a change which will produce a balance; a Supreme Court of Canada which is bullet-proof in the sense that neither level of government can take shots at it and say that this is a court whose method of appointment disqualifies it from adjudicating our claims.

When one looks at what the Meech Lake First Ministers have put before us, it seems that it produces a better balance than the present system. There are criticisms made that go too far. For example, if provincialists or mandatees who are going to take orders from provincial capitals are put forward on the lists of one particular province, the federal Government has the choice of going to another province, or if one province does not want to put any names forward, it has a choice of going to another province. Outside of Quebec there is a tradition that there are three from Ontario, two from the West, and one from Atlantic Canada. But that is not an invariable tradition. If one region or one province wanted to defeat the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada by not giving names, or giving unacceptable names, the federal Government would have a neat way of dealing with it which would permit the Supreme Court of Canada to continue to function.

In the case of Quebec it is somewhat more difficult because it has the right to three places on the Supreme Court of Canada. If the Government of Quebec wanted to embarrass the federal Government by not putting names forward, or by putting forward unacceptable names, there would be a problem in filling the Supreme Court of Canada with representation from Quebec, and politics could be played with that. But politics could be played both ways with that. There would be pressure from both sides to do the responsible thing, and put forward acceptable names, and to appoint them.

To make a point, I was checking the ages of the present Quebec Justices on the Supreme Court of Canada. Their ages are 54, 63, and 60. The age of retirement is 75. The youngest judge has 21 more years to serve. If there was a government in the Province of Quebec determined to subvert federalism, it could take 21 years to achieve that purpose. If there was a government of that character in the Province of Quebec, it would be a lot sooner than 21 years that the future of our country would be in difficulty. It would not be because of the Meech Lake Accord formula, but because of the fact that a government not supporting federalism was in office for that long period of time in the Province of Quebec.

We proposed an amendment on the Supreme Court of Canada which is helpful. It is the provision on breaking the deadlock. We propose a deadlock-breaking mechanism. It would be helpful to have such a mechanism. I urge members of the Government to consider it. We have provided that if a deadlock does arise, the Chief Justice of the Court can fill the vacancy but only for one year. Therefore, there would be continuing political pressure on the Governments concerned to take their responsibilities and provide for the vacancy to be filled.

With the Meech Lake Accord, one has a solution to the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada which makes it more legitimate as an arbiter of the interests of the two levels of government that so often appear before it to have their disputes resolved.

The next provision of the Meech Lake Accord that we support, but for which we propose an amendment, is the provision for the Senate. The critics of the Meech Lake Accord are fearful of a concern that deserves to be stated. That is, what could happen with the provinces proposing lists and the federal Government obliged to take candidates from that list of that province only? Over time the Senate could become a Trojan horse brought into the federal level of government. It could be filled with delegates of provincial legislators who, if they had to make decisions, would phone their head office in the province from which they came to take orders on how to vote, not on provincial matters, not on federal-provincial matters, but on matters that are exclusively within federal jurisdiction, that is, the business of the Parliament of Canada.

In examining that criticism, I have to admit that that could happen over a very long period of time. The thing to remember is that the Meech Lake Accord amendment on this subject is meant to be a temporary provision. It is meant to put pressure on the federal Government and on the provinces to reform the Senate to deal with the legitimate grievance of the regions of the country where the federal Government and the Parliament of Canada does not recognize their concerns. It is meant, in other words, to make the Senate fulfil more of the original aspirations for it, so that it truly reflects the various regions, minorities and other non-majoritarian interests of Canada.

Will this temporary measure be a temporary measure? I think the signs that it will be are good. First, the possibility of the Senate being reformed without some radical type of surgery like the one proposed in Meech Lake is very unlikely. We have had 110 years to reform it. The difficulty in examining reforms are that there are so many options that it is difficult to get a consensus to any one of them. That has been one of the main difficulties. Another has been that the Senate is a very attractive patronage place for the government of the day.

When it comes to changing the Senate, it has been very difficult. Governments have been under understandable political pressure to leave it the way it is and to use it in a way that it has traditionally been used. At least the Meech Lake Accords stops that incentive against Senate reform. It removes any ulterior motive that the federal Government might have not to reform the Senate. On the provincial side, some argue that it gives the provinces a particular incentive to keep things in a temporary situation so that they can continue to nominate their own candidates. That is not a guaranteed benefit to the provincial governments. After all the federal Government is not obliged to appoint anyone to the Senate. It is not like the Supreme Court of Canada where there is strong pressure that it be kept to its full strength at all times. That is not the situation with the Senate.

I want to note a very positive development on which I would like to see building take place on the Meech Lake Accord, namely the statement by Premier Peterson of Ontario. To help speed the process of consideration of reform, the Government of Ontario will not submit names to the federal Government. I would like to see other provinces say the same thing. Even more so, I would like to see the federal Government say for its part in order to assure that reform really does take place that no new Senators will be appointed for a certain lengthy period of time as a way to ensure that real effort be made to reform the Senate.

In our amendment, and I want to draw the attention of the House and of the country to it, instead of referring to a list from the provinces for this temporary situation, we are proposing that Senators be chosen by election in the provinces to fill the vacancies. This is meant as a temporary measure, but it moves toward an elected Senate. We hope that if done it will remove any argument that the provinces have some ulterior benefit in being able to name candidates that might encourage them to keep the Senate in its temporary state which Meech Lake will create rather than get down to business and really work to reforming the Senate.

I want to commend that amendment to the Government. I do not see how it can call it or any of our other amendments killer amendments. I hope it will be considered as a way of enhancing support for the Meech Lake Accord.

I want to turn next to the veto power which is of such concern to so many people, namely the unanimous amending formula referred to in connection with the Meech Lake Accord. Again, like so many other parts of the Meech Lake Accord, there are a lot of misconceptions. First, we already have certain provisions in the Constitution of Canada to which amendment requires unanimous consent. It is not a long list, but there are some.

Second, we are not in the Meech Lake Accord extending the requirement for unanimous consent to the entire range of changes to the Constitution. Most of the features of our Constitution that you would want to change or might want to change do not come under the unanimity list to which the Meech Lake Accord adds. For example, the distribution of powers is something that will still be done under the seven provinces containing 50 per cent of the Canadian population rule. Then we have the fundamental characteristics of Canada, those additions to the list that I indicated earlier that we in the Official Opposition would like to make fundamental characteristics, the aboriginal issue and the multicultural fact. In fact, the distinct society clause can be changed without unanimous consent. It is another one of the provisions that is there under the seven provinces containing 50 per cent of the population of Canada rule. Many concerns that exist are exaggerated because of the sense that the amending formula will require unanimity far more broadly than really is required.

Another strange belief that, of course, is not justified about the Meech Lake Accord is that the unanimity rule is now required for the federal Government to exercise its own powers. The unanimity rule does not apply to laws introduced by Canada or laws introduced by any province. It only applies to changes to the Constitution. Our view in the Official Opposition is that the amending formula, the requirement of unanimity, is extended too far, that Senate reform would be more likely under the seven provinces containing 50 per cent rule and that the provision relating to entry of new provinces into Confederation should not be put under the unanimity rule.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), has made the case for us that provinces in the future should be able to enter in the way they have in the past. That is one of our amendments as well. The most serious criticism made of the unanimity rule and one that I think is unjustified is that it ends the sense of national purpose in Canada. I think people argue that if you need unanimous consent then there is no national purpose that is larger than the constituents whose consent is required. The clear answer to that is that the unanimity rule does not extend very much further under the Meech Lake Accord than it did before. In our view it should be narrower, but there is still a tremendous amount of constitutionalizing that will be done on a tighter approval basis than total unanimity. I understand you are seeking the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) for giving me this opportunity.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp)—Sikh Organizations—a) Minister's letter to Premiers/Policy of Department; the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly)—Fisheries—Reported spill of sulfuric acid into Straits of Georgia/Preventive measures to contain effluent; the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine)—Financial Institutions—Bill C-81—Mouvement Desjardins.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn, and the amendments of Mr. Turner, Vancouver Quadra (p. 15617), Mr. Broadbent (p. 15618), Mr. Caccia, (p. 15618), Mr. Johnston, (p. 15618) and Mr. Roman (p. 15620).

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have concluded the specific points I wanted to refer to in the Meech Lake Accord. I have explained our amendments and indicated why we find the Meech Lake Accord a positive step forward and why we intend to support it. The Minister of Justice when he stood up to introduce this order of business was very critical of the Senate. I do not think his criticism was justified.

I think the Senate has done nothing more in the process than to demonstrate what ought to be done with the amendments that have been brought forward by the Official Opposition, how compatible they are with the Meech Lake Accord, and how they take nothing away from the constitutional priorities of the Province of Quebec. Surely, it also demonstrates how other matters could be added, matters including multiculturalism, the strengthening of the economic union of Canada, the establishment of a proper voice throughout the entire Meech Lake Accord for the northern people of Canada who were sidelined by the Meech Lake Accord, hopefully through an oversight, but one which could easily be corrected and which the Senate did correct. I regret that no effort has been made to amend the Meech Lake Accord and to see if that can be done within the context of an agreement so that this important constitutional step which is a positive step can be taken.

In conclusion, I think that the Government has made a terrible mistake in tactics in insisting that the Meech Lake Accord is a seamless web, that it is perfect and that only egregious error would justify reopening it. If surveys tell us anything, the Government ought to recognize that Canadians would like to see some of the important points the Official Opposition has made adopted in the Meech Lake Accord.

Finally, I want to assure the Government that our support is firm. We want this constitutional step forward to take place, but an examination of the state of support across Canada might indicate that its adoption or constitutionalization could be greatly enhanced by the consideration and acceptance of the amendments which have been put forward by the Official Opposition.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I would like to begin by saying how very appreciative we are that the Meech Lake Accord should return to the House. We are not particularly appreciative of what the Senate tried to do with the Accord, but the other place has given us the opportunity once again to discuss the Accord, and for that we are very grateful.

I say that because in the view of Members of this Party, Meech Lake and what has been said about Meech Lake over the past several months has reinforced rather than diminished our support for the Accord. It has reinforced in several important respects our belief that Meech Lake is actually stronger and more effective than we had even dreamed at the time that it would be.

Let me start by giving a few illustrations of the fact that in our view, Meech Lake is stronger, better and more effective than we ever dreamed it could be. The first illustration concerns what happened with the introduction of Bill 2 in the Saskatchewan Legislature, effectively limiting the long established legal rights of the Francophone linguistic minority in that province. If Meech Lake were already in effect, it is our firm belief that that limiting action of the Saskatchewan Government would have been declared contrary to the Constitution as amended by Meech Lake.

I know that it might sound incredibly machiavellian to suggest that a Premier would want to limit francophone rights so that when Meech Lake kicked in, he would have fewer rights to preserve. However, I honestly believe that despite the fact that the Premier signed the agreement and despite the fact that the legislature passed it by a 43 to 3 vote, he circumvented it. He said to himself: "If I wait until the provisions of the Constitutional Accord are formally adopted, I will find that it is the duty of this province to preserve the legal rights of the francophone minority, including the right for the translation of laws into French". This is because Meech Lake, as we have been reminded many times, requires provincial legislatures to preserve the official linguistic minorities of Canada.

I recall that on the committee, there was some discussion about whether the Accord should not both preserve and promote linguistic duality. Many of us thought that that would be desirable, but then we realized that to have all the provinces of Canada, and particularly, I may say, the western provinces, agree to preserve linguistic duality would indeed be a very major step ahead. We assumed that the provinces would be preserving everything from French on cornflakes boxes in British Columbia to the legal language rights of the Francophones of Saskatchewan.

With this rather transparent attempt to restrict the rights to be preserved, we have been shown vividly the importance of the clause in Meech Lake requiring the preservation of existing minority language rights.

As a second illustration, we have also realized over the last several months that many of the naysayers on Meech Lake, including the former Prime Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, are effectively saying that two linguistic Canadas are being created by Meech Lake, French in Quebec, English everywhere else. Time and time again in the past several months, we have heard this. It would seem to me that those who keep saying this have simply not read the new Section 2 of the Constitution embodied in this Accord. Above all, they have not read that the duties of the provincial legislatures to preserve linguistic duality are duties that are shared and must be shared just as much by the legislature of Québec as by any other legislature.

The two Canadas, one French and the rest English, seems to me to imply that there would be no provision in Meech Lake requiring the legislature of Quebec, as it does of all other legislatures, to preserve linguistic duality. I think that a very large disservice has been done to the very goal the former Prime Minister wanted to achieve; namely, an officially bilingual Canada, when even he suggests that Meech Lake is destroying that goal and that vision. It does a very, very serious disservice to the Accord.

I noticed just the other day that in the National Assembly of Québec, specifically April 29, the Minister responsible for languages, Guy Rivard, made it absolutely clear, if there had ever been any doubt in the mind of Mr. Trudeau or anyone else, that Québec's large 200-year old anglophone community is "an integral part of the character of our distinct society". So the succession of fears aroused in the last several months, that somehow the Accord is going to divide us into a French Québec and an English everything else are simply not justified and must be dissipated.

A third development over the last several months which has shown the strength of Meech Lake is in the area of federal spending power. We have had a succession of journalists, I am sorry to say, and politicians, I am even sorrier to say, suggesting over the past several months that under the new constitutional Accord it will no longer be possible to have national social programs. Just today I read a CP story in The Toronto Star which said that the Accord would "limit the right of the federal Government to introduce new national shared-cost programs like medicare". This is simply not true. This just instils fear in the minds of people, particularly the disadvantaged and disabled in our society, that we will never again be able to have national shared-cost programs like medicare. Of course, if that were true, we would be justified in being fearful. I would be fearful, too.

I have talked to large numbers of people in the Coalition for the Disabled, visible minorities, and many others, who say that they have now been convinced there is no longer going to be any kind of social program possible for them in the future. The naysayers and scaremongers who are saying these things apparently do not yet grasp the fact that for the first time it is now written in the Constitution of Canada that there can be national shared-cost programs in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. That has never ever been in the Constitution of Canada. Ever since Borden, federal Governments have engaged in spending in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction in developing shared-cost programs, but it has never been constitutionalized. So, far from retreating from the possibility of having national shared-cost programs, and I am thinking primarily of social programs but there would be economic programs as well, the Accord strengthens and constitutionalizes the possibility of future programs.

I am sorry to say that Mr. Trudeau has also added to the fears. He, who never launched a national social program in 16 years, who helped unravel several of the programs we did have, particularly that of post-secondary education, has the gall to suggest that we could not have national social programs under Meech Lake. It is just incredible gall.

Mr. Belsher: Now you're talking.

Ms. Jewett: That is what he has been suggesting while fanning the flames of fear.

I remind everyone in the Chamber that it was in the 1960s that we got our national social programs in key areas like medicare and the Canada Pension Plan during what we called an era of co-operative federalism. That is the kind of federalism that Meech Lake itself embraces. We did not get those national programs through dictation or usurpation of power. We got them through discussions between the federal and provincial authorities. In the case of medicare, it started when only two provinces were in agreement and then others came on board.

That was the era of the development of national social programs, and I am sorry to say that after the 1960s not only did we not have any more national social programs, but we found under the Established Programs Financing Act the federal Government relinquishing any authority over the spending of federal moneys, particularly in the area of post-secondary education.

That simply would not be possible under the Accord we are discussing once again today. A program in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, initiated by the federal Government of Canada, and several provinces will undoubtedly have been talked to about it and will have indicated they are interested in participating in it, will only develop as the provinces themselves agree to spend the money for a program compatible with the national objectives of the program. In other words, national objectives have never been in our Constitution before. People talk about Balkanizing Canada. It is the contrary that is becoming increasingly evident over recent months.

National objectives can be just what you want them to be. They can be as tight as you want to make them. If the federal Government has the political will to do so, if you had a federal Government that really wanted accessible and universal child care on a non-profit basis, and unfortunately the present Government does not have that particular will, and you established those national objectives under the shared-cost program arrangement, it would be pretty difficult for any province that joined in to then spend that money on roads and bridges. That is what they have frequently done in the field of post-secondary education because Mr. Trudeau did not have any national vision on that matter. It would be very difficult indeed.

Just as I spoke a moment ago about the Province of Saskatchewan possibly trying to limit the French language rights that it would need to preserve before Meech Lake kicked in, so I think the federal Government itself has limited what it will do on child care and refused to define national objectives because it knew once Meech Lake became effective it would have to define national objectives. Even the federal Government is somewhat guilty of trying to implement certain policies before the strength of Meech Lake is finally put into the Constitution.

Another area which has been much discussed by the naysayers is what Meech Lake does to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The criticism is not only extreme, it is wrong. I read in the press that the Charter is practically being destroyed as a result of Meech Lake, that the Constitutional Accord alters the basic rights and powers spelled out in the Charter, and that the distinct society rule of interpretation will remove from Charter review any action by the Quebec Government or any other government under the linguistic duality rule.

There is a misperception that actions taken under the Accord either to preserve linguistic duality or promote the distinct identity of Québec will be immune from Charter review. There is a misperception that they can freely infringe upon the Charter, which is simply not the case.

The final report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons last September pointed out that by virtue of Section 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982, any law, federal or provincial, or governmental Act that is inconsistent with the Constitution, including the Charter, is to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect. What could be clearer?

Unless a new set of constitutional principles evolve in the future which none of us can even imagine, legislation or governmental action taken in furtherance of linguistic duality or the distinct society would be subject to Charter review according to normal constitutional principles.

We know that the rights in the Charter are not absolute and are, themselves, subject to Section 1 of the Charter, the reasonable rights section. A legislature must prove that any reasonable limit it wishes to apply to any particular right or freedom, including equality and non discrimination rights, can be demonstrably justified. That same proof would have to be provided if a legislature pursued a policy attempting to preserve linguistic duality which might limit one of the freedoms in the Charter. The onus of proof is on the legislature.

The same Charter review that applies now to all legislative Acts will apply to additional rules of interpretation relating to the distinct society and linguistic duality clauses. I suggest it is mischievous for commentators to continue saying that the Charter can be abrogated by the Meech Lake Accord.

The First Ministers contributed to the problem somewhat by removing two sections from the Charter and inserting them in Clause 16 of the Accord. This suggested that other parts of the Charter were not as important, but the explanation given for the inclusion of Sections 25 and 27 was that they were interpretative clauses relating to cultural matters.

Since the Accord primarily relates to linguistic and cultural matters, it was argued that it was important to include them but their interpretation would not affect the multicultural heritage of Canada or the rights of aboriginal peoples of Canada. I can sympathize with the concern of women and minorities that the inclusion of those two sections somehow minimized their rights. That is why one of our amendments recommends that at least Section 28 of the Charter dealing with equality rights of men and women should be added to Clause 16 of the Accord.

The key section of the Charter, Section 15 dealing with non discrimination on the basis of race or sex, and Section 15(2) providing for affirmative action for disadvantaged groups, remain intact and will continue to exist without any effect from the Meech Lake Accord. Therefore, I hope we will not have to continue listening to what I must unfortunately call fear mongering. None of us want to receive letters from groups in our society about whom we are concerned, saying that they have been told that their rights will be abridged as a result of the Meech Lake Accord. That is simply not true.

In addition to our amendment to include Section 28 in Clause 16 of the Accord, we have also suggested other modest amendments about which my colleagues will expand. They relate to the unfair treatment of the Yukon and Northwest Territories by providing for unanimity in order to bring them into the nation, which is a far higher degree of consensus than has ever been required for other provinces.

We also want them to be able to make appointments for Supreme Court judges. We are very concerned about the absence of any provision in the Accord for the resumption of conferences on aboriginal rights, particularly native self government. The Native Council of Canada only recently published copies of its proposed draft companion amendments. All of them are included in our amendments that we proposed to the First Ministers. The first draft companion amendment is the reinstatement of the aboriginal reform process. The second concerns territorial representation in the Supreme Court, and a third is the establishment of provinces in the territories.

The Native Council of Canada also hoped to present a companion amendment relating to women, but I have not had seen that yet. In any event, they stated in their press release that the New Democratic Party has not taken seriously their proposal for companion amendments. On the contrary, the very content of its companion amendments is what we have already put in our amendments. The Council may say, and I think it does say in its press release, that the companion amendment approach is not anyone's first preference, that it would rather have the Accord amended. I can only agree with the Council. We want to have the Accord amended directly as well.

Our amendments, at least in the areas I have just been discussing, are similar to its companion amendments. There may be some later time down the road, but at the moment we in the New Democratic Party are still arguing that the small package of amendments we proposed before and are proposing again in no way gut the Accord. In no way do they deny the fundamental principles, but they do produce a degree of fairness for northern people, native people and for women, that is not now present in the Accord.

We are still working to get our amendments adopted. There are two new premiers since we last spoke in this House and we are hoping that perhaps, with their understanding, we will be able to get our amendments back to the First Ministers. We are not trying to amend the whole Accord. We are not in any sense reducing the importance of the fundamental achievements that have been accomplished by the Accord. Indeed, we think these modest amendments would in fact enhance the Accord.

We have also suggested subjects for constitutional conferences to come. We have looked at the revoking of Section 33 of the Charter. That has to be revoked. The section allows the provinces and the federal Government, for that matter, to ignore the Charter for a five-year period on any particular legislation. It is crucial that it go in the next round of constitutional conferences.

We have also said that the changing nature of Canadian society, the increasing ethnoculture reality of today's society, should be an item of top priority on the agenda of the next Constitution conference. We have made several other suggestions, above all about the process of constitutional making. We must have input from the public through legislative committees, federal and provincial, and through public hearings, before First Ministers meet as well as after, and we continue to press that as hard as we possibly can.

We think, however, particularly in the light of some of the events that have taken place in the last month since we discussed Meech Lake, that a really very significant achievement was brought about. True, it was 11 men sitting around into late hours, but they did represent all the political Parties. They did discuss and debate the issues, although in private, on the basis of about 60 years of discussion of these matters, and intense discussion on the Quebec agenda for the previous two years.

I spent a weekend recently pretending that I was all 11 First Ministers, wondering if I could, as a woman, come up with a better constitutional Accord. With the exception of the amendments we have proposed, I had to come to the conclusion that this was really an historic achievement. The last time we had men sitting around doing something for us was the famous kitchen cabinet back in November of 1981, when three men arranged things to almost completely forget women and native people. That was about the worst example in my memory of people sitting around in a closed environment, a kitchen, in that case. If ever there needed to be a woman in the kitchen, it was certainly then. They came up with some pretty shocking anomalies and forgetfulness.

I do not think that has been the case this time, with the exception of some proposals on which we have made our amendments and which I have gone over today.

We should also look at the fact that not only did the premiers represent all the provinces and all political Parties, but also that the agreement that they reached at Meech Lake and then subsequently in finer print at the Langevin Block, was only the fourth time in Canadian history that unanimity among the partners has been reached on a constitutional amendment. Getting agreement on important constitutional change in Canada is about as rare as Haley's Comet. It happened in 1940 on unemployment insurance and it happened in 1951 and 1964 when concurrent jurisdiction over old age pensions was being achieved. Those are the only times we have achieved agreement in the last 50 years until the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord.

We have now seen four of the provinces approve the Accord. Two more provinces, probably four more, will have approved it through their legislatures by fall. After the hearings are completed in the Ontario Legislature, it is expected to go through. It will go through the New Brunswick Legislature after hearings have been held there. I understand they will begin in early September. I regret very much that the Government of Nova Scotia decided not to hold hearings. We have protested that vigorously. The Government of Nova Scotia has appeared to decide to present the matter to the legislature for approval without hearings. Saskatchewan held hearings and Manitoba will hold hearings.

One naturally wonders about two provinces. There has been great speculation about them as they have new premiers since the Accord was achieved. That is Manitoba and New Brunswick. As I just mentioned, they will both be holding hearings and as a result of those hearings, I hope they will be able to support the Accord. I found it quite incredible to be told by the Liberal Leader in Manitoba that Meech Lake was dead. I do not know how she can speak for members of the other two Parties. She has just over a third of the seats in the legislature and cannot simply proclaim Meech Lake is dead. I think members of the New Democratic Party would certainly not accept the Leader of the Liberal Party speaking for them, nor do I expect would the Conservative Members of the Manitoba Legislature.

It looks very much like the New Brunswick hearings will begin in September. British Columbia will be presenting a resolution very soon, as will Newfoundland. So the possibility of reaching provincial consent to the Accord, I think, is really very great. It surprises me all the more when I pick up the newspapers and read almost daily that Meech Lake is on the rocks, that it will not be approved and that it will have to go back entirely to the drawing board. That is certainly not the way I read the developments of the past four or five months.

I want to close by not only emphasizing what a historical achievement this has been, how rare it is that we can get agreement and how good, by and large, the agreement is, but also to point out that when we really start looking at all the potential changes in the agreement, any one can find probably 50. You can sit down and do it as I have done myself. Then one comes to the conclusion that very few of those changes that one can dream up to be made to the Meech Lake agreement are ones which would receive unanimous agreement.

I mentioned some time ago whether or not the First Ministers should not have minority language rights promoted as well as preserved. Indeed, the special joint committee recommended that that should be the case. However, I think I am safe in saying that in British Columbia, for example, it was a fairly major achievement to agree to preserve minority language rights. I am speaking in respect of it being a major achievement for Mr. Vander Zalm, the Premier of the province. It was a real step forward. Whether he would agree to go additionally to promote at this stage is doubtful. Preserve, as I pointed out earlier, can mean a very great deal.

Even the New Democrats in British Columbia in their suggested amendments to Meech Lake did not make that one. So when we pick out whatever proposal it is we will find that some provinces would agree with it, some groups in society would agree with it, others would disagree with it and others would not even put it on the agenda.

It is in the context of looking at all the proposals we have heard over the last several months, and the realization of how difficult it would be to put all these together in one package that would be acceptable, and in the context, too, as I have stressed in my remarks today, of the strength within the Meech Lake Accord itself, once we get over all the naysaying, that I—and I hope and trust I speak on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party—recommend most warmly the adoption once again of the constitutional Accord by this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now deal with Private Members' Business in the order shown on today's Order Paper.

[English]

Since it is 5.43 p.m. the Chair has a suggestion to make to the House. It is that the matter which we were to discuss today during Private Members' Hour, which is a motion moved by the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault), keep its order on the list of precedence and we deal with it tomorrow. Would that be the wish of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the negotiations and I would in no way wish to take time from my hon. colleague. I think that the Speaker's proposal that tomorrow, if the Hon. Member is here—we all know that the Hon. Member who was scheduled for tomorrow cannot continue with consideration of his private member's business at that time. So we agree to postpone this evening's debate until tomorrow, if we have unanimous consent, and that we give it a full hour, but that there is no precedent established by our dealing with our colleague in this amicable, generous way.

Mr. Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). As you know, these matters are postponed from day to day, and I greatly appreciate his gesture and that of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand we have the unanimous consent of the House for adjourning debate on the motion by the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) until tomorrow. That shall be done.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the House always seems to make a mountain out of molehill. We have fifteen minutes left before the adjournment debate begins. I don't know whether Members who are to speak to the adjournment motion have been advised that they can come to the House fifteen minutes earlier. However, if they are watching us on television, I would ask them to report to the House for the adjournment debate. There are three Members on the list. So if they could pick up their papers and come to the House as soon as possible, we could proceed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: So if I understood correctly, they will get the message.

[English]

We will call it six o'clock now. If a Member is late, we will wait for that Member. However, there is a Member here who is ready to proceed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

SIKH ORGANIZATIONS—MINISTER'S LETTER TO PREMIERS/POLICY OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on April 18, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) questions regarding the advice he had gratuitously given provincial Premiers to boycott meetings organized in communities in their provinces by a number of Canadian Sikh organizations. I referred to the Babbar Khalsa, the International Sikh Youth Organization, and the World Sikh Organization.

The questions resulted from the fact that there was a gathering in Toronto organized by a variety of organizations. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that there were a number of temples involved. Others asserted that the three Sikh organizations had been among the sponsors of this event.

In responding to my question the Minister spoke of gatherings of moderate Sikhs which occur in various places. He mentioned a quite distinctive event in Edmonton organized to honour the Prairie Link newspaper where he said many moderate Sikhs had appeared. He then declared:

> If we want Sikh communities in Canada to be governed by the moderates who want to live within the rules of Canada, a large part of our challenge is to be seen to be associated with those moderates.

In the case of the World Sikh Organization, in particular, representatives of which have been appearing before the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, and whose members in fact have not been charged with terrorist activity—certainly they have not been found guilty of any such activity—I asked him what he had to say to the suggestion that his blanket charge in his letter to the Premiers reflected a deplorable attitude, that it expressed a matter of judging people long before they had been found guilty in any court of law. I suggested that he was opening possibilities of Sikhs being found guilty by association with organizations which themselves might, in the case of the World Sikh Organization, have a particular concern about the creation of a distinct state of Khalistan. But he said that it is doing so by peaceful means and not by any kind of violence or any kind of terrorism.

In response to this question the Minister declared:

> There is a small minority within the Sikh community in Canada that is running not only against the rules of order of Canada but that is running against the preferences of the great majority of Canadians of Sikh origin. We cannot leave that great majority of Sikhs without support. We need to support them and we need to do it evidently. The Hon. Member needs to do it, I need to do it and my colleague needs to do it. That is what both she and I were doing this past weekend.

Let me say that the Minister and his Department have not been doing that "evidently". He has been adamant in his refusal to appear before the standing committee, or at least he was through to the meeting this morning. He is preoccupied with security considerations and with charges of terrorism against organizations and their members. The Government of Canada has in fact not followed the advice which the Minister himself was giving to us today.

The concern that I am expressing goes far beyond concern about a letter, three organizations, and advice given so gratuitously. The Department of External Affairs has intervened in all manner of areas relating to the Canadian Government and the Canadian Sikh community.

In discussions with the former Secretary of State, the now resigned the Member for Rosedale, Mr. Crombie, when I congratulated him in the House for having created the Chair for Sikh Studies and having provided funding from the federal Government to match community contributions, he alluded to the pressure that had been put on by the Department of External Affairs and by the security agencies of this country in opposition to that.

The Federation of Sikh Societies of Canada, which ought to be that organization of moderate Sikhs if there is to be such a national organization, has been denied any funding for a couple of years. It has been forced into the basement of a Canadian Sikh because of lack of funds to carry on its endeavours.

As the Minister stated, if it were true that the Government of Canada was supporting those organizations against which no charges have ever been made, and if it were doing the correct thing for the Sikh community as a whole instead of expressing in one way and another the suspicion of Sikhs generally about what the Government of India wants these days, then I would have less reason to be here this afternoon protesting.

There are the most serious actions being taken by the Government of Canada in which the Secretary of State for External Affairs is a leader. Those actions destabilize the community, cause difficulties, and create a lack of harmony among the ethnocultural communities in Canada.

This is a most serious matter. I hope that whoever responds to this on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs might be equipped to take my message back to the Department, because I am very much afraid whatever I am going to be given in the next few moments will be some more claptrap and preoccupation with one small point, quite missing large national realities and multicultural issues of the most far-reaching significance to the Canadian people.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member, and I assure him that the Department will be advised of the new points he raised tonight.

It is important to stress at the outset that the letters sent by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to the Premiers were not directed at the entire Sikh community in Canada. The overwhelming majority of Sikhs in this country are responsible, law-abiding citizens. Indeed, the Sikh community has made an enormous and undeniable contribution to Canadian society since the beginning of the century.

It should also be noted that the Minister told the Premiers that it was his view that participation in Sikh community activity by members of Government was valuable for them, both in keeping abreast of the interests of the Sikh community and in encouraging that community to participate fully in Canadian life.

The letters of the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred only to three groups which exist largely or exclusively to promote the creation of an independent Sikh state in India known as Khalistan. Some members of some of these groups have advocated violent means to achieve their ends. It is the advocacy of violence which is of greatest concern. The Canadian Government cannot remain silent when individuals or organizations threaten violence to achieve the dismemberment of a country with which Canada has friendly relations. Hence, the Minister's letters asked provincial Premiers to do no more than avoid appearing at events and activities organized by those groups.

It was not suggested that politicians avoid receiving or meeting with any individuals, no matter what views they may espouse. It is the attendance or participation in events or functions sponsored by those three organizations which is of concern. When political leaders openly associate with such groups, whether they intend to or not, they lend credence and support to the objectives for which those organizations stand. Moreover, those organizations have taken advantage of politicians attending their functions, for example, by having them photographed under the "Khalistan" flag.

If the situation were reversed, most Canadians would strongly object, as would the Canadian Government, to leaders of other countries giving support to anyone who promoted the dismemberment of Canada, particularly through violent means. In such circumstances Canada would certainly seek to have the Government of that country not give or be seen to give, any type of support to such activities.

Finally, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is responsible for developing foreign policies which benefit all Canadians, as well as for providing advice and guidance on those policies. It would be an abdication of those responsibilities if the Minister were simply to ignore a matter which has serious foreign policy implications for Canada's relations with a friendly Government such as India on an issue which it regards as being vital to its national survival.

FISHERIES—REPORTED SPILL OF SULPHURIC ACID INTO STRAITS OF GEORGIA/PREVENTIVE MEASURES TO CONTAIN EFFLUENT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to elaborate on a matter that was raised in the House some time ago. It concerned an environmental spill in the Strait of Georgia from the Crown Forest Products operation outside Campbell River. The matter involved the spill of approximately 30 tonnes of 97 per cent sulphuric acid into the Strait of Georgia. The matter was not reported.

There are several things which can be learned from this experience. The first thing is that the matter was reported some time later by employees of the operation to the provincial Ministry of the Environment, to the federal Ministry of the Environment, and to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

In the subsequent examination of this matter the people at Fisheries and Oceans who examined the question did not report back to the employees. There is a very energetic environmental committee in that operation, and to date they have had some less than exciting results in attempting to relate to management on important matters of environmental concern in that pulp and paper operation. It is incumbent upon the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Department of the Environment, and all federal government Departments concerned with enforcing environmental matters, that they recognize and respect employee environmental committees. After all, this is an important source of information.

It is my hope that there will be a recognition and a statement by the Minister that, any time a matter is reported by an individual or an organized group concerned about the environment, not only the company will be consulted about the matter but indeed the employee environmental committees will be contacted, briefed on the findings, and encouraged at any point to report any further concerns they may have.

There are environmental committees working in a large number of pulp mills on the coast of British Columbia. They provide a very important service to the employees who work in the pulp and paper industry and in the specific operations. In fact, they provide a service to the management and owners of those operations, as well as to the people who live in the area and who are concerned about the environment.

It is my hope that the Minister will not overlook this, that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) will write to the chairperson of the environmental committee of the Crown Forest Operation in Campbell River, and that indeed regional officials will brief that committee on the outcome of the examination of the spill and will work closely with it in their future endeavours to make the environment in that area safer and cleaner.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the matter of an acid spill in British Columbia at the Crown Forest pulp mill near Campbell River was raised in the House some three weeks ago. I would like to take this opportunity to outline our understanding of the spill and the steps taken by officials of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in response to the incident. I might also add that officials of Environment Canada co-operated with DFO in a joint review of the spill.

As the matter is currently being investigated under the authority of the federal Fisheries Act, I am sure Members will appreciate that, in order not to jeopardize the investigation, only a overview of the incident can be presented at this time.

Information that a spill of acid had occurred at the Crown Forest Ltd. pulp mill near Campbell River, B.C. was first brought to the attention of DFO on April 20, 1988. This information was passed on to the Department by a concerned mill employee. Details of this spill were provided to officials of the Province of B.C. by the company on April 22, 1988. The brief summary I will give you now is based principally on those details provided by the company.

On March 25, 1988 sulphuric acid spilled or, as the company prefers to indicate, "leaked" into a sewer over about a three-hour period. This loss of acid apparently occurred following repairs to a pump in the mill when a pump drain was left open allowing the acid to escape into the mill's effluent sewer system. The acid flowed from the mill's sewer system into the marine environment through an underwater mill effluent diffuser in Discovery Passage, part of the Straits of Georgia.

The company has estimated the loss of acid to be approximately 31 tons or 3,700 gallons. The company concluded that this acid, which was discharged over a three-hour period, along with regular mill effluent through its effluent diffuser, would not have any environmental impact. For this reason the company did not consider it necessary to report this spill immediately either to provincial or federal authorities. However, to prevent the recurrence of similar incidents, the company has reviewed operating procedures in the mill and is considering the installation of a pH alarm system in its control room and another alarm system within the mill where the leak occurred to detect leaks anywhere in the acid storage area.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, federal officials were not notified of the incident until almost one month after the event. Because of this significant delay, an environmental impact assessment of the spill could not be carried out. Nonetheless, an investigation of the incident was conducted by both DFO and Environment Canada. DFO has asked Environment Canada to review the spill reporting procedures at this mill to determine if procedures or works, additional to those proposed by the company, are required to prevent future spills and to ensure proper spill reporting. I am pleased to report that the company has now agreed to report all spills of this nature in the future.

I would like to assure this House that the Department takes seriously all spills of hazardous chemicals that might occur not only at pulp mills but also at other industrial facilities. For this reason DFO, in concert with Environment Canada and provincial authorities, will continue to respond to and investigate spill events that could affect fishery resources and take appropriate action in response to such spills.

I would also at this time like to thank my colleague for the further information and points that he has raised this evening. I can assure my hon. colleague that the Minister will be advised of his points, and a response will be given on what action the Minister deems necessary.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Adjournment Debate will be suspended to the call of the Chair.

At 6.05 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-126, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order.

Mr. Friesen: Come on, Jean!

Mr. Gauthier: I am sorry my friend objects to my getting up on a point of order, which is quite a reasonable one.

Mr. Speaker: I can assure the Hon. Member that the Chair will decide whether an Hon. Member is given the floor. The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: I appreciate your kindness, Mr. Speaker. I cannot say as much for the government side. I notice today that we have not received copies of our Hansard. I wonder if you could inform the House if Hansard will be available to us before Question Period? Or is there a delay here which should be explained to Members as to why we do not have our Hansard in our books this morning?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I am very grateful for the point raised by my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier concerning Hansard. I am informed that it should be available soon.

Mr. Gauthier: Soon?

Mr. Speaker: Soon.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Debate.

• (1010)

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of moving second reading of Bill C-126. The purpose of this Bill is to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act. The proposed Act will provide the parliamentary authority for Canada's contribution to the International Monetary Fund's Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility. It will authorize the Minister of Finance to lend and grant funds to the enhanced structural facility trust on behalf of the Government of Canada. I am very pleased that this morning I will be able to explain this Bill to Members of the House.

[Translation]

The creation of this facility is an important measure taken by the IMF to deal with the debt problems of the world's least developed countries. This mechanism will add significantly to the structural adjustment facility set up in 1986 to help low-income countries balance their payments on very favorable terms.

After the enhanced structural adjustment facility was implemented, the size of the balance of payments problems of the least developed countries led to requests for additional help. It became obvious that international organizations would have to take further special measures to deal with the problems of the poorest debtor countries, especially those of the Sahel. Their extremely slow economic development and the weak growth of their export markets seriously undermined their recovery efforts. Their debt burden had become a major obstacle to their economic development.

Faced with this bleak economic outlook, some developing countries hesitated to pursue or begin sustained adjustment initiatives under the International Monetary Fund. It became obvious that these countries would need increased financial aid on favorable terms to effectively implement through reforms. Although the resources of the structural adjustment facility were limited, they were an appropriate form of assistance because the more favorable terms and extended repayment schedules offered by the structural adjustment facility, as compared to a simple loan, are necessary to help these fragile economies adjust. Increasing the resources of the structural adjustment facility was therefore suggested.

[English]

The initiative for an Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility received the endorsement of the group of seven industrialized countries at the Venice Summit in June, 1987. At that time, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) expressed Canada's support for such a facility. The result of the international consensus to provide more aid to the poorest debtor countries has been a tripling of the IMF structural adjustment facility. This facility is being enhanced and increased to an important degree.

The Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility is expected to add over $10 billion in equivalent Canadian funds to the resources available through the IMF structural adjustment facility. The loans will carry a subsidized interest rate of one-half per cent per annum and will be repaid over 10 years. The loans are conditional upon countries having an IMF-supported structural reform program in place. The programs will be formulated within a policy framework worked out jointly by the borrowing country, the IMF, and the World Bank. Potentially some 60 very poor countries could benefit from the use of the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility resources.

The Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility contributions are made to two accounts. The contributions to the loan account will earn interest. Contributions to the subsidy account will be in the form of grants and allow the IMF to lend loan account funds at one-half per cent interest per year. The Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility has received the enthusiastic support of the international community. Some 25 countries have made pledges to this facility.

In Canada's case, the Bill before us will give the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the authority to lend up to $550 million Canadian to the loan account. These moneys will be lent in three equal instalments over three years beginning in 1988. This contribution will pay Canada a rate of interest based on long-term rates for domestic financial instruments of five major world currencies.

The legislation will further allow for the Minister of Finance to grant up to $250 million Canadian over the 12-year life of the trust, in order that our loan contribution can be loaned out to low-income countries at one-half per cent interest per year. Canada's contribution will be financed through the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The subsidy portion will be counted as part of Canada's official development assistance. The legislation allows changes to both the subsidy and loan contributions, through Order-in-Council, to reflect future international discussions.

As a Government we support the structural adjustment facility because we believe that countries that are undertaking necessary adjustments in their economic policies deserve the encouragement of the international community. This is particularly true when required policy reforms may be politically unpopular in the short term. Furthermore, the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility will be complementary to our bilateral aid efforts. The economic stabilization of the least developed economies, quite frankly, is a necessary prerequisite to their more effective use of bilateral aid.

For all those reasons, this Bill deserves our strong support.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-126, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

As has been said, this legislation gives authority to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to contribute to the International Monetary Fund in support of the new IMF balance of payments assistance program, the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility or ESAF.

ESAF is a trust fund established by the International Monetary Fund to make resources available to some of the poorest highly indebted countries. When I talk of some of the poorest countries, Mr. Speaker, I am talking about countries where the average per capita income is $300 a year.

The resources that are being planned for now will support policy programs that help their balance of payments, because these poorest countries are among the most heavily indebted, and enable them to start planning for economic growth.

ESAF was initiated at the June, 1987, Venice Summit of industrialized countries. At the summit it was agreed that the magnitude of the debt problem, and the protracted nature of the balance of payments problem of the poorest countries called for additional resources.

ESAF will operate on the basis of two accounts. The loan account will pay contributors, that is, the industrialized countries, a market rate of interest. The grant account, or the subsidy account, will be composed of grants which allow loans to be made to the borrowing countries at .5 per cent interest per annum for 10 years with 5 years' grace. As has been said, ESAF will support the adjustment efforts of about 60 low-income countries, many of which are in sub-Saharan Africa.

Canada will support this initiative by providing loans at concessional interest rates to these poor or debt-ridden countries, conditional on the countries putting in place the structural adjustment and growth programs which will help them achieve economic self-sufficiency. Perhaps I could say here that some of the commercial lending in the 1970s was not sufficiently buttressed by performance requirements or by assistance to these countries, to improve their lot.

The ESAF, in contrast, is planned as an initiative to encourage policy reform in developing countries. It will allow the very poor, debt-ridden countries, to maintain needed imports while servicing their foreign debt obligations and undertaking policy reforms. Of course, it offers an opportunity for further co-operation between the IMF, the World Bank and the developing countries.

The following are the amounts that are being contributed by some other countries in special drawing rights converted into Canadian dollars: Japan, approximately $3.7 billion to the loan account and approximately $510 million to the subsidy account; West Germany, approximately $1,190 million to the loan account and approximately $221 million to the subsidy account; France, $1,360 million to the loan account and $1,190 million to the subsidy account.

As I said earlier, a poor country to be assisted under this program is defined as a country where the average annual per capita income is $300. Many of these countries are indeed in dire straits because simply meeting the interest rate on their foreign debts takes up almost all of their GDP, leaving them unable to undertake planning to get out of their basic predicament and to improve the economy of their country.

Prior to 1982, low-income countries experienced external pressures similar to those experienced by middle-income countries. Two of these were the commodity booms of the 1970s and the two oil shocks that led to huge increases in the price of oil. The cruel world-wide recession of 1981 and 1982, of course, exacerbated the problems.

Low-income countries which import their energy were faced with high energy import costs after 1973. New sources of funds were acquired to sustain the growth that had been stimulated by the expanded commodity exports of 1971. The traditional source of funds, official development assistance, was not meeting the needs of low-income countries. These countries began to look to commercial banks seeking to recycle OPEC surpluses. The result was, in the years between 1972 and 1982, a striking shift toward capital market and non-concessional debt occurring in low-income countries. The commercial banks have to bear some responsibility for this. They looked at short-term credit worthiness. They did not look at the fact that these countries had serious problems that needed to be addressed which went far beyond their need for immediate loans.

According to a World Bank study, borrowings from the private financial markets increased ten-fold from 1972 to 1979. As interest rates began to rise rapidly, debt servicing became an enormous problem for the poorest countries, compounded by the fact that new commercial financing abruptly declined. Making matters worse, of course, were the underlying inefficient domestic policies in place in low-income countries. For some of these countries weapons imports add a costly drain, absorbing capital that could have been spent on programs to develop economic growth.

The scenario for some of these countries is bleak. On a per capita basis the debt for the low-income countries is higher than that of middle-income Latin American countries. Their debt has grown faster and is a heavier burden. Most of these countries lack the most basic infrastructure and personnel to put in place needed reforms.

Many of these countries over-borrowed but did not make the necessary domestic structural domestic adjustments. In terms of the international financial system, the smaller debtor countries do not pose a threat. But in human terms the poverty, the starvation, are a constant source of distress. Hence this particular measure is welcome, provided that it is carefully monitored.

Canada must ensure that the financial assistance is given in a context that involves the recipient country in defining its needs, in planning, and some appropriate expectations for change must be set.

When I spoke in the House on March 12, 1985, also on an amendment to the Bretton Woods Act, I pointed out that while financial assistance is desperately needed by the poor countries of the world, financial assistance without performance requirements and monitoring will lead to inefficient investment.

The commercial lenders simply evaluated the credit worthiness of the borrowers for short-term loans but failed to monitor how the funds were used, or the long-term policies and prospects of the borrowing countries. Bilateral country-to-country assistance is very often given without insisting on the restructuring that would lead that country out of the need for assistance to the same extent. This is understandable because sovereign nations do not easily accept attempts by other countries to influence or dictate their policies. However, an international organization such as the IMF is in a position to discuss with recipient countries their plans, to help them set appropriate targets. This is a most important part of the aid and a very necessary condition of what we are agreeing to this morning.

The multilateral financial institutions have a better opportunity to design and evaluate adjustment programs in co-operation with the recipient country and in ways that are acceptable to all concerned.

In April, 1984, I heard the Vice-President of the World Bank speaking in Lisbon on the issue of conditional aid to developing countries. He talked about conditionality implying hard choices and disagreements. He also pointed out that major reforms can only take place if they are implemented gradually over a number of years and financed in parallel with closely monitored implementation. One can hardly emphasize too much the need for co-operation and full partnership with the recipient country. This is the key.

Imposing harsh conditions without consultation, understanding and agreement of the assisted country is fruitless. It only makes for resentment and lack of co-operation. The role that the IMF must play is that of the consultant who studies and evaluates the needs of the country, makes recommendations on policy and helps the recipient country meet those recommendations.

Canada must ensure that this happens. Canada is particularly well suited to do so. Our officials have a reputation for being able to be helpful without taking over. It is important that this continue.

Efficient and thoughtful long-term planning and implementation will benefit both the assisted and assisting countries. As developing countries are able to improve their economies, they will depend less on assistance from countries like Canada.

My Party is basically in agreement with the principle of this Bill. Indeed, no one who has travelled in some of the very poor countries can fail to be moved by the dreadful conditions—the starvation, the lack of opportunity for people to achieve their potential, to achieve basic education. We clearly have a duty to help and the average Canadian is glad to do so and have tax dollars invested in this. However, Canadians want to know that the Government is fully committed to ensuring that the $800 million being committed today to assist the poorest countries is wisely and constructively used.

In fact, no new money has actually been committed. The $250 million grant will come from the current development aid envelope. The remainder is loans at market rates.

I should also point out that discussion of Third World loans is on the agenda of the summit meeting in June in Toronto and this could be an opportunity for Canada to propose new initiatives and also to work toward better international understanding and more effective use of the moneys being committed at this time.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill C-126 dealing with an amendment to the Bretton Woods Act and other agreements. While this very short Bill appears to be very straightforward, since it deals with the debt load of the poorest countries in the world we believe it needs more than simply a cursory debate. We do not want to hold the Bill up unduly, but we do want to focus attention on the debt problem. We hope to be able to hear witnesses and make amendments in committee.

The Bill provides both for the loan and the granting of funds to the International Monetary Fund in order to fund: "Any trust or body established by the Fund". A sum of $550 million is the total mentioned for the loan, and $250 million for the grant. However, in both cases the amount can be increased by the Governor in Council. In other words, the Government is asking for a blank cheque.

The immediate purpose for these funds is to meet Canada's commitment to the IMF's Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility.

When the Bill states: "Any trust or body established by the IMF", it is more open-ended than necessary for the purposes of Canada's commitment. I think it is more open-ended than this House of Commons should allow and I hope it can be strengthened in committee.

The Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility originated last June at the Venice Summit as an attempt by the industrialized world to come to grips with the debt problem, particularly the debt problem of the poorest countries in the world and the balance of payment problems of the poorest countries, most of which are in Africa.

The IMF has now taken this under its wing and hopes to provide some $6 billion special drawing rights, which would be the equivalent of just over $10 billion Canadian.

The Government hand-out on the Bill states that these resources will support policy reforms designed to restore balance of payments sustainability and enable these countries to maintain satisfactory economic growth. Taken in isolation, the terms of the proposed loans to the poor countries are extremely generous, almost unbelievable. Certainly 0.5 per cent interest per annum for 10 years, with five years' grace, is extremely generous.

However, the great portion of the contribution from Canada and other countries will be used to subsidize this negligible rate of interest so that the original lenders will get a normal rate of interest on the loan portion. That is, the grant portion will be used to subsidize the interest portion so that there will be a market rate of interest paid.

We support this concessional flow of funds, but we do question the so-called policy reforms which the IMF will impose on the recipient countries. That is the burden of a good deal of our debate this morning. It should be noted that a good part of the funds will be used to service debts owed to the same countries that are lending the money, or to multinational agencies like the IMF itself. In other words, ESAF will be used not to meet the developmental needs of the poorest countries but to help keep them from defaulting to First World creditors.

The World Bank has estimated that the total debt of developing countries is something like $1.19 trillion U.S. This could be a considerable under-estimate since the World Bank tends to take very conservative estimates of such things as debt. This has climbed from a $1 trillion debt just two or three years ago.

Much of the attention about this debt and most of the anxiety has focused on big debtors such as Brazil or Mexico, both of which owe over $100 billion in U.S. funds.

Indeed, the six largest problem debtors account for 32 per cent of the $1.19 trillion. Their inability to service these debts creates major problems not only for themselves but for the entire world economy.

This problem is outside the range of ESAF, but it should not be outside the range of our concerns in the House. I know it will not be outside the concerns of the economic summit in Toronto next month.

It is outside the range of concern of ESAF because these are far from the poorest countries. ESAF is designed to help countries like the sub-Saharan countries of Africa, which account for 5.2 per cent of this total debt. In contrast to countries owing large debts to private banks, most of the sub-Saharan and African countries' debt is official. Only 13.5 per cent is owed to banks or to private creditors. Sixty-two per cent of that debt is owed to OECD bilateral countries or to multilateral creditors, and smaller amounts are owed to OPEC and Soviet bloc countries. While these countries may have lower debts in terms of the absolute numbers, these debts are horrendous in terms of their relation to the Gross National Product per capita or expressed in terms of the ratio of debt exports.

• (1040)

I would like to quote from Roy Culpeper's study for the North-South Institute called The Debt Matrix in which he looks at some selected low income sub-Saharan debtors. Benin had in 1985 a GNP per capita of $260 U.S. and a total external debt of $890 million U.S. The ratio of debt to export of goods and services in 1986 was 321.6 per cent. Gambia had a GNP per capita of $230 U.S. It owes $270 million U.S. and has a debt export ratio of 290.5 per cent. Liberia had a GNP per capita of $470 U.S. It owes $1.303 billion and has a ratio of debt to export of goods and services of 280.8 per cent. Madagascar has a GNP per capita of $240 U.S. It owes $2.899 billion U.S. and has a debt export ratio of 708.4 per cent. Mauritania had a GNP per capita of $420 U.S. and owes $1.761 billion. It has a debt capita ratio of 387.1 per cent. Senegal has a per capita of $370 U.S. GNP. It owes $2.989 billion and has a debt export ratio of 302.2 per cent. Sudan has a GNP per capita of $300 U.S. and owes $8.272 billion. It has an astounding debt export ratio of $1,145.7. Tanzania, with a per capita GNP of $290, owes $3.955 billion. It has a debt export ratio of $864.4.

Zaire, with a very low GNP per capita of only $170 U.S., owes $5.430 billion. It has a debt export ratio of 266.8 per cent. Zambia has a GNP per capita of $390 U.S. and owes $5.300 billion. It has a debt export ratio of 326.1 per cent.

When we look at these figures and do not just think of them as dry statistics but look at the reality that here we have countries with Gross National Products per capita of $200, $300 and $400 each, with these astounding debts we can well ask how can they ever service them, let alone pay them off. Culpeper points out that for developing countries in total the debt export ratio deteriorated from 169 per cent in 1982 to 227 per cent in 1986. Zambia provides a tragic example of what this means for an individual developing country.

Let me refer to Roger Young's study called Zambia Adjusting to Poverty. He points out that the outstanding short and long-term debt now stands at four times the estimated dollar value of the Gross Domestic Product as at the end of 1986. The schedule debt servicing ratio in 1987 stands at nearly 100 per cent of estimated exports, and if arrears are included at 150 per cent of exports, interest payments alone in 1986 were estimated at $336 million U.S. or 35 per cent of exports.

At present Zambia is in arrears both to the IMF and the World Bank and is ineligible to resource the general funds of the IMF. As a result of this horrendous situation, the real Gross Domestic Product per person has fallen 19 per cent since 1981 or 3 per cent per year in each of the past six years. This has meant a very drastic deterioration in the country's social infrastructure in health, education and housing as these have become more expensive and more inaccessible. In order to get help from the IMF, countries have to adjust their economies to meet IMF conditions. These conditions are imposed upon Third World countries from a western monetarist point of view and they usually have the following components.

They usually involve devaluation of local currency so that the local currency will not buy as much as it previously did, and cut-backs in government services. This means cut-backs in health services and education, lay-offs of government employees, which increases the unemployment in countries that are already suffering from up to 40 per cent unemployment, and it means raising the price of food, hitting particularly hard at the poor. The elimination of subsidies for state-run enterprises means opening the local economy to outside investment and control. Nevertheless, in the last few years, faced with these very difficult situations, at least 28 African countries have introduced measures along these lines.

As I pointed out, these measures hit particularly hard at the poor and cause a great deal of social unrest. Zambia is a case in point. In order to receive international help, it raised the price of maize meal by 125 per cent. When the price of the staple food is raised it causes great hardship for the poor. Riots resulted and 17 people were killed. President Kenneth Kaunda was forced to rescind the price increase and broke off the IMF program. As I pointed out earlier, Zambia is not now eligible for regular IMF funding.

It is interesting to note that when the Senate of Canada was studying the international financial institutions and the debt problem of developing countries, Mr. Cedric Ritchie, Chairman of the Bank of Nova Scotia, told the committee that continual application of austerity measures "have exacted a social and political cost that in some countries at least appear to be unsustainable. Mr. William Mulholland, Chairman of the Bank of Montreal, put it even more directly, "If we think we can convince debtor countries that it is in their interest to eat less in order to make low repayments, we better think again". These are chairmen of large Canadian banks, banks which themselves are heavily involved in the whole debt problem, but they recognize that simply tightening the screws on poor people will not work.

An international labour organization report points out that these measures do not work in many poor countries which lack a strong industrial base where unemployment and malnutrition are already very high. The programs may have reduced the balance of payments deficit, but they have not led to economic recovery. That is why Africa is in such a difficult situation today.

Western liberal democracies have often been very critical of the poor human rights record of many African countries. We have good reason to be concerned about the human rights records of those countries, but we need also recognize that we share a good deal of the blame. If the IMF, controlled by the West, imposes such onerous conditions on African countries that they lead to higher food costs, more hungry children, less schooling, poor health facilities and higher unemployment, do we wonder if this will cause social unrest that will lead to riots and do we wonder if in response, Governments take stern measures to put these riots down?

The point is that IMF programs, far from leading to recovery for African and other poor nations, often seem to pave the road to increased poverty, social chaos and the breakdown of democracy. It is important not to exaggerate at this point. African nations themselves admit that many of their problems are the result of mistakes they made in the past. Some of their reforms are necessary, and these reforms form the basis for their program of recovery that was adopted by African nations at the special session of the United Nations in 1987.

Having admitted this, we need to realize the truth of what Julius Nyerere, the President of Tanzania, said in 1984 about the IMF and the World Bank. He said:

> These institutions, originally meant as institutions of co-operation among the developed countries, are now being used as instruments of control over the developing countries. They have become instruments for a new kind of empire. They are being used as instruments of power to dominate the Third World.

The rigid IMF policy has meant that in 1987, debtor countries paid $5.9 billion more back to the IMF than they received from it. We are talking about poor countries here. We are talking about the plight of poverty in these countries. We are talking about the IMF providing some help to them, yet in 1987, according to a Globe and Mail article of February 2 of this year, they paid back to the IMF $5.9 billion more than they received. This $5.9 billion U.S. is coming from poverty-stricken African countries.

Admittedly, in recent months, the International Monetary Fund has begun to show some sensitivity to the impact of its policies on poor people. Michael Camdessus, the new head of the IMF, wants to ease the monitoring provisions for loans and he supports contingency financing for countries with reform packages that face unexpected shocks such as a collapse in commodity prices or a rapid rise in interest rates.

As one Third World person put it, these measures are welcome, but he asked if they are enough and if they are coming in time to prevent a complete collapse in many of these countries.

Combined with the debt problem, we need to recognize that African countries face a decline in the level of official development assistance from many countries. Canada plays a very ambiguous role here. When the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) appeared before the United Nations in 1984, he promised that Canada would reach its goal of 0.7 per cent of GNP by 1990. With the cut-backs the Government has introduced, that was reduced to 0.7 per cent by 1995. In another Budget, it was said that we would reach that figure sometime in the 21st century, and in the meantime, we would try to reach the goal of 0.6 per cent by the year 1995-96.

The Special Joint Committee on Canada's External Relations that was chaired by the Hon. Minister responsible for this Bill two years ago recommended that we go back to the original commitment of reaching 0.7 per cent of GNP by 1990. The Government rejected that. Then, when the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade studied the whole question of the amount of our development assistance last year, the committee, with a Conservative majority, recommended that we should move at least more quickly to the 0.6 per cent goal. The committee report read:

> With such a floor securely in place, we believe Canada should make steady progress towards higher aid targets. We doubt that the current plan to hold the ratio steady at 0.5 per cent until 1990 and then increase it sharply to 0.6 per cent in the following five years is realistic, particularly considering that we are now at a level slightly below 0.5 per cent. We are concerned that Canada may find itself once more in the position of abandoning its commitments.
> In the Committee's view, a plan is needed that would take us to the 0.6 per cent level in 1995-96 by steady, achievable annual increments. Accordingly, the Committee recommends that progress towards achieving the 0.6 per cent target in 1995-96 should begin in the 1988-1989 fiscal year, rather than the current plan of fiscal year 1990-91, and proceed by steady annual increases. We estimate that would bring the ODA/GNP ratio to 0.53 per cent in fiscal year 1990-91.

Unfortunately, the Government chose to ignore that advice as well.

Canada's record is not bad when compared with that of countries like the United Kingdom or the United States, but it is not good when compared with some of the Nordic countries or when compared with the record of the need for development assistance.

The real villain is the fall in commodity prices. Unfortunately, the International Monetary Fund is much more ready to move to prop up the monetary system than it is to put in place some system of price stabilization that would result in commodity prices not being subject to the wild fluctuations that they are so that development countries would not be constantly the victim of international markets.

Roy Culpeper, in his book Forced Adjustment, again a North-South study, pointed out that sub-Saharan Africa went from being the export growth leader of the world from 1965 to 1980 to being the world lagger, with exports shrinking at an annual rate of 5 per cent during 1980-85. He points out that in 1986, the terms of trade of developing countries fell by some 16.8 per cent, equivalent to a loss in exports of about $100 billion. However, because of the growth in the volume of exports, developing countries' export purchasing power fell only by about 10 per cent.

According to World Bank estimates, real prices of a basket of 33 non-fuel commodities plummeted from their 1980 levels some 32 per cent by 1986. Oil prices also fell sharply, particularly during the 1986—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but we must proceed at this time to Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21. The Hon. Member will of course complete his speech after Question Period.

EMPLOYMENT

CANADIAN EMPLOYMENT CENTRE FOR DRUMMOND STUDENTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I want to urge students who are looking for a summer job to register as soon as possible with the Canada Employment Centre for Students in Drummond.

And I invite the people of Drummond, whether they are manufacturers, merchants, farmers or private citizens, to help make the Employment Centre for Students a success by hiring quality manpower. High school, CEGEP and university students are counting on the community to help them find jobs.

So far, 211 applications have been approved in my riding under the Challenge 88 Program. These projects will create 322 jobs, thanks to federal wage subsidies totalling $414,507. The program demonstrates how keen this Government is to help young people make the transition from school to the labour market.

I am very proud that I can help create jobs for the students in Drummond through this program set up by the Conservative Government.

I wish all young people in my riding the best of luck with their job search, and I urge them once again to register without delay with the Drummond Canada Employment Centre.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RUMOURED TRANSFER OF TRAIN REGULATION CONTROL CENTRE FROM MONTREAL TO TORONTO

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received a request from about 100 CN employees to intervene in a situation which they reject as unacceptable, and it was in connection with rumours that the Switching and Control Centre will move from Montreal to Toronto. In fact, these people are employed as telegraph operators and in addition to the threat of cutbacks at CN, they will also have to cope with this possibility, which may deprive them of a chance to switch to other jobs such as train dispatcher or director of train operations in Montreal.

The move to Toronto will leave these employees no alternative except unemployment, since their jobs will then be filled by other employees located in Toronto.

I don't think we are giving them a fair break. Some of their positions are being cut, and at the same time they may be deprived of a chance to get another job with CN. If Montreal is not going to get the space agency, Mr. Speaker, couldn't we at least keep the railways?

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

RELOCATION TO WEST MEMORIAL BUILDING

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with the Government's decision to make the West Memorial Building at 344 Wellington Street in Ottawa the new home of the National Archives and to consolidate the housing of its collections in a special facility to be built in the future.

The National Archives contain 250,000 Yousuf Karsh's negatives, Marshall McLuhan's complete works and papers, and a set of Frances Ann Hopkins' paintings of the fur trade. It also houses over 60 million manuscripts, the personal papers of past Prime Ministers of Canada, and over one million maps and architectural drawings. There are also 70,000 hours of sound recordings in the Archives' collections.

The proposed environmentally controlled storage facility will better enable archivists to preserve existing collections and make room for the Archives to collect more of Canada's precious national heritage.

The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) based her decision on the report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. This is a good example of how this Government responds to committee recommendations.

This Government cares about our national heritage.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

OF MOOSE AND MEMBERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this has been a tough week in Parliament for Members on all sides. We have had abortion, free trade, and the Meech Lake constitutional resolution, all of which are big, tough issues. However, let us not lose sight of the sweeter side of life. Remember, this is the week when a moose fell into the swimming pool of a suburban Ottawa home. What could be more Canadian? Could that happen in any other capital city of the world?

Tonight is the opening of the magnificent new National Gallery here in Ottawa. That gives us a chance to reflect on the vital role our museums and art galleries play in lifting our spirits, educating our young people, and reflecting our past and present in all their diversity. Therefore, I propose a toast with my glass of water to Ottawa, to Canada, to the new National Gallery, and to us at the end of a tough week!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL FITNESS WEEK

PROGRAM OF EVENTS

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I bring to the attention of all Members of this House a very important event on the nation's annual calendar, Canada's Fitweek. This year's event starts today, Sneaker Day, and will run until May 29.

[Translation]

During the next ten days, Mr. Speaker, one out of three Canadians will take part in Canada's Fitweek, the biggest celebration of physical activity in the world.

Thousands of organizers and volunteers have planned nearly 14,000 events that will take place in schools and communities across this country.

[English]

This phenomenal program is co-ordinated jointly by the Government of Canada through the efforts of Fitness Canada, along with the 12 provincial and territorial Governments and 20 national fitness and recreation agencies.

Finally, under the slogan " Celebrate Good Times", the whole country will be moving, from May 20 to 29, and I invite all of you to join in.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—EFFECT ON HOUSES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, did you know that acid rain is eating away at our houses? Acid rain is not only corroding our monuments and destroying our lakes and forests, it is also gradually destroying the houses people live in.

In Canada acid rain damage is heaviest in Ontario and Quebec. Martin Weaver, an Ottawa conservation consultant, said recently that masonry in Montreal is crumbling, metalwork is corroding, and paint is fading and peeling at up to twice the expected rate. He added that construction materials once thought to last almost forever, like granite, concrete, and marble, are being reduced to spongy masses that can be cut like cheese with a blunt knife. This is really bad news. The situation is alarming now and getting worse every day.

Some questions beg to be asked. What can be done to stop the effect of acid rain on houses? What is the Government doing about it? Why is it so weak vis-à-vis our neighbour to the south? Our growing aging population have only limited funds for the upkeep of their homes. Who will help them with their repair bills? The problem is urgent and will not go away. The solution rests squarely on the shoulders of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

ABBOTSFORD INTERNATIONAL AIRSHOW

PLANNED EXPANSION TO INCLUDE TRADE SHOW

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my riding of Fraser Valley East, in beautiful British Columbia, has been proud to be the home of the Abbotsford Airshow for the last 27 years. The Airshow will expand in 1989 to include an aerospace trade show, thanks to a $3.4 million contribution cost-shared equally by our federal Government and the Province of British Columbia. This will make the Abbotsford Airshow and the new trade show comparable with the famous Paris and Farnborough Airshows in Europe.

The funding, welcomed by all involved in the Airshow, comes from the Western Diversification Fund and the B.C. Ministry of Economic Development.

Airshow Canada, as the trade show will be called, will be devoted to aircraft, space aviation components, and the latest powered flight technology. It will also be a forum for international decision-makers and aviation business leaders and in no way will diminish the thrills and chills of the Airshow.

Congratulations, Abbotsford International Airshow, for a job well done! Fraser Valley East and the rest of Canada look forward to an even more successful and interesting airshow and trade show in the future. Come see us the second week in August. It's well worth the trip.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TREATMENT OF IMMIGRANT WOMEN DOMESTIC WORKERS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government legislates semi-slave labour for some women. Because women's work in Canada gets less than two-thirds of men's pay and housework less still, immigrant domestics are imported to work at about $10,000 per year.

There are no real limits on their hours so we cannot say how much they get per hour. They must usually live in and are subject to traditional abuse by either man or woman in the house. They are compelled by our federal law to stay in that occupation for two or three years in what one immigration official called a "halfway house".

Why do they come here? They are hoping to be landed. What are their chances? In order to stay more than two or three years they must leave domestic work and upgrade themselves by study for work that would be accepted as another category of immigration. Often they cannot get the time to study. Many are forced to return home to be replaced by others on the same treadmill.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), who is also the Minister responsible for women, ought to revise the regulations so as to free these semi-slave labouring women.

TRADE

FOOD EXPORTS FROM ALBERTA

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, Alberta food processors look increasingly to export markets for their products. The drive to export fine processed food products is southward and westward. The markets in the United States are opening to Alberta food. The Pacific Rim nations such as Japan, Taiwan, Korea and Singapore are developing a taste for Alberta beef, for Alberta smoked trout, for Alberta foodstuffs of quality and nourishment.

The free trade agreement, and Canada's commitment to GATT, combined with Alberta hustle, all work together to provide food exports to make millions of mouths water.

• (1110)

Food processing is the second largest Alberta industry. In our drive to diversity, let's make it number one.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPLICATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at the examination of the current estimates of Environment Canada, I learned with shock and dismay that Environment Canada has not conducted any study on the environmental implications of the Canada-U.S. trade deal. This is astonishing considering the fact that in January, 1986, the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council, at the request of the Minister, strongly recommended that it will be necessary to examine the environmental implications just as systematically as the economic ones. This has not been done.

By contrast, most other federal Departments have studied the deal's impact on their areas of responsibility and have even publicly reported on potential impacts. The deal contains provisions such as Schedule 7 on pesticides and their regulation which will undoubtedly have an impact on the environment.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has been remiss in his duty and responsibility. He should have studied the trade deal from the environmental point of view so as to determine its long-term consequences for our natural resources.

BANKS AND BANKING

BANK ERRORS—LEVYING OF SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, the bank service charge hearings are over but the letters continue to arrive. Customers are now being levied service charges even when the banks make an error. In one case a cheque was written for $6 and was returned as NSF. The writer of the cheque was charged $12.50 for writing the NSF cheque. The recipient of the cheque was charged $4 for depositing the NSF cheque.

Upon investigation, it turned out that there were sufficient funds to cover the cheque in the first place, so the first bank cheerfully refunded the $12.50 service charge. However, the depositor's bank refused to reverse its $4 service charge since, according to it, a charge is levied on all returned cheques.

Banks should be prohibited from levying service charges on people who are victims of NSF cheques, but even more fundamentally, banks should be prohibited from levying service charges which result from bank errors in the first place.

FORESTRY

LEGENDARY STAND OF SITKA SPRUCE—CALL FOR PRESERVATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, Queen Beatrix of The Netherlands concluded her Canadian tour by watching loggers fall a 900-year old Douglas Fir near Duncan on Vancouver Island. Over six feet through and nearly 200 feet high, this giant took only seven minutes to fall. Nine hundred years to grow, seven minutes to fall!

Pretty soon we will not have any of these giants left to show visiting Royalty or anyone else. For this reason I commend McMillan-Bloedel for placing a one-month moratorium on the building of a road into the Carmanah Creek area where we have a legendary stand of spruce only now becoming known. Thought to be the largest Sitka Spruce in Canada, perhaps in the world, these trees should be protected from the power saw.

During the one-month moratorium, I urge federal and provincial Governments to work together with McMillan-Bloedel and the people of British Columbia and Canada to ensure this priceless treasure is preserved. Perhaps the grandchildren of Queen Beatrix, as well as our own grandchildren, might want to come and see them still standing.

IMPORTANCE TO ECONOMY

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, Canada is a trading nation, and has been since the fur traders sold their wares to the Hudson Bay Company. Today, however, we no longer depend totally on our natural resources for trade. In fact, for the first time in our history, our economy has boomed during a period of low resource prices.

Canadian companies earn more export dollars from the sales of insurance policies than they do from softwood lumber or crude oil. We export more office equipment than meat. Canadian exports of wheat are now worth only half as much as our exports of trucks. More than two-thirds of our exports are manufactured goods.

Trade is Canada's future. It is the Canadian way, yesterday, today, and tomorrow, and into the 21st century. Those who oppose free trade oppose the future prosperity of Canada. Are you listening, Mr. Peterson?

THE NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA

OFFICIAL OPENING CELEBRATIONS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, Wednesday was International Museums Day and this year Canada marks that celebration with the opening of the doors of our world-class new National Gallery. One hundred and eight years after its establishment, the National Gallery finally has a home worthy of its collection. Congratulations to Canadian architect Moshe Safdie for his creative design and use of daylight, making it not only a refreshing place to view art but an architectural masterpiece in its own right.

Never before was so much of the gallery's collection of 40,000 works of art on display. In the Canadian historical section, more space means that the number of pieces on display has been doubled from 375 to almost 800.

Amidst these celebrations we salute the Liberal Party, whose foresight started the ball rolling for this Canadian cultural landmark.

Canadian museums play a unique role in furthering public education as well as in the preservation and display of the collection of our heritage. We are all looking forward to full discussion with all museums on the new federal museum policy.

PUBLIC WORKS

CALL FOR TIMELY RENT PAYMENTS IN NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, a standard clause in lease agreements entered into by the Government of Canada as lessee, states that the rent will be paid on the last day of each and every month during the term thereof. However, it is not uncommon for rent cheques to be a week or more late in coming to my constituency. An explanation often given is that: "We are not just set up to make timely payments in the North".

The lessor is obliged to keep to the terms of the agreement and so should the lessee. Perhaps Public Works Canada could work a little harder to ensure timely payment of rent cheques in northern areas.

MISSING CHILDREN

DIFFICULTY IN LOCATING ABDUCTORS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this Sunday is National Missing Childrens' Day. Last year, with much fanfare, the Government brought in the Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance Act which was supposed to help families locate missing children. However, in my own community I have now received a very solid example of how it is not working.

I refer specifically to the abduction of Ryan Kevin Johnston, aged three and a half years. He was abducted by his father on January 28, 1988. Mr. Johnston abducted the child and has essentially disappeared from the face of the earth. The access that has been sought to federal and provincial records has been very slow in coming.

It took four months to find out from the federal data bank that no new address has been posted. In fact the legislation prohibits access to information under the Income Tax Act. It is funny that the Income Tax Act will allow us to get an address of a tax evader but it will not allow us to get an address of a person who abducts a child. Nothing could be more heinous than the abduction of a child and I think we should change the Income Tax Act to ensure that people who steal children are dealt with under the Criminal Code.

AEROSPACE

QUEBEC'S SHARE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on April 21, the federal Government in the person of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), announced the Conservative Government's decision to participate in the U.S. space station. At the time, the Minister guaranteed that 35 per cent of the contracts would be for Quebec and 35 per cent for Ontario. Unfortunately, this morning we heard that so far, Ontario has obtained 77.8 per cent and Quebec a meagre 17.9 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, at this rate, pretty soon all the contracts will have been awarded, and by the time the Government announces the space agency will be located in Montreal, it will be an empty shell. There will be nothing left to give, since Ontario will have the lion's share!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—P.E.I. POTATO AND LOBSTER EXPORTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister for International Trade mocked the Hon. Member for Egmont when that Hon. Member attempted to find out from the Minister why Prince Edward Island lobster fishermen and potato farmers were the last minute victims of the Prime Minister's trade deal with the United States. I want to say to him that this Government seems to revel in picking on the little guy.

Why, in this instance, is the Government allowing Canada's smallest province to become a victim of the continuing changes of attitude of the Americans on this trade deal? The Prime Minister is so concerned about the deal that he really doesn't care what happens to anything else.

What is the Minister for International Trade actually prepared to do in response to American action on lobsters and potatoes which, as he knows, undermines the economy of Prince Edward Island and, indeed, of the Atlantic provinces? Aside from the bombast, what is he actually prepared to do?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it ill behooves the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to talk about bombast when he has threatened to tear up an agreement entered into by the U.S. and Canada. He is the world's leading expert on bombast.

• (1120)

With respect to the question about P.E.I., first, on the issue of potatoes, we continually hear the Opposition crying wolf. What happened with respect to potatoes? The U.S. Senate Finance Committee has proposed that their legislation provide the President with authority to negotiate bilateral quantitative limitations on potato trade with Canada. All it is is that they want to give the President authority to negotiate.

The President can negotiate, but it takes two sides to enter into an agreement. There is nothing objectionable in that, surely. It is a recommendation to the administration that they negotiate. So much for the potato threat. We are not going to agree to anything that will limit the export of potatoes from Canada to the United States.

With respect to lobsters, the United States, I might tell the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, and pass the message on to Premier Ghiz, introduced new federal legislation on lobster carapace size in 1987. Under the regulations the minimum size would increase to three and seven thirty-second inches this year, and so on.

An industry-government meeting was held in Charlottetown on this subject on May 15 with respect to the impact of these regulations on the Canadian lobster fishery. Governments were represented, as were industry and the fishermen. All provincial government representatives, with the exception of the Quebec representative, supported a carapace size increase. The situation is a little bit different than the public impression given. In addition, this is a regulation already made by the U.S. federal authorities.

With respect to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and the language suggested to be added by the committee members several days ago, we are protesting that. We do not think that it has any place in this legislation. We are delivering a note of protest. We will act vigorously in the interest of Canada.

Let us note that a meeting was held on May 15. The government representatives there supported an increase in the minimum size.

I might further point out that the P.E.I. industry is largely a canner fishery which is not affected by the U.S. regulations.

Some Hon. Members: Time!

Mr. Crosbie: These are the facts. If the hon. gentleman wants to talk about bombast, he better examine his own bombastic statements.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DIPLOMATIC PROTEST NOTES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage the Minister to go on as he has. He has become the best salesman that we have on this side of the House to sink this deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What the Minister is really saying is: "No problem with potatoes. No problem with lobsters. But we sent a note of diplomatic protest because it goes against the spirit of the deal". Of course it goes against the spirit of the deal.

There are really two issues at stake here. One is the Prime Minister's willingness to sell out everything and anything to keep this deal intact. The other is a question of the Government's honesty in treating this deal in the House of Commons.

Why did the Minister for International Trade yesterday in answer to the Hon. Member for Egmont say that there was no problem with respect to lobsters or potatoes when he had already sent a diplomatic note to the United States, as he revealed outside the House? Why did he not come clean with the House of Commons at that time and say: "Yes, there is a problem. Yes, it is contrary to the trade deal. Yes, I have sent a note of diplomatic protest to the United States"? Why did he not treat this issue fair and square yesterday in the House of Commons?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have just explained the position with reference to the situation. I have outlined the facts. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition never deals in facts.

He says: "What's the problem?" The problem is U.S. protectionism. We recognize the problem. Under the direction of the Prime Minister we have taken action to do something about that. We have negotiated an agreement that will be of considerable help to Canada next year if it is implemented.

What is the solution of the Leader of the Opposition? He gets up and crabs and complains in this House, with all his Members, every day about what the Americans are doing, but he is doing nothing about it. He is going to tear up the protection that we have negotiated that will go into effect next year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the great protection he has negotiated does not protect our lobster fishermen, and it does not protect the potato farmers of Atlantic Canada. That is where he is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED CONCESSIONS MADE TO AMERICANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, why are lobster fishermen in the Gaspé, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland the victims of the trade agreement signed by the Prime Minister? Hasn't this Government made enough concessions to the United States? And why are potato producers being victimized by the trade agreement with the United States?

The Prime Minister has stated on many occasions that he would not tolerate any amendments or concessions regarding his agreement with the United States. What about these concessions on potatoes and lobster?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there are no concessions made to the United States at all. I just explained that the situation on potatoes is that they want to give to the President authority to negotiate, as though he needed the authority to negotiate. That is all that they are doing. There is no danger to potatoes at all.

The danger to potatoes is if the hon. gentleman were successful and got elected, which of course is not going to happen, and tears up up the agreement. Then the spuds would really be in danger. We would then have an hon. gentleman in power who said that he wished to export water, not for money but in return for access to their markets. He would exchange water and potatoes and fish for access to the Americans.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Read the whole quote.

Mr. Crosbie: That is the statement of the Leader of the Opposition. We are protecting Canadians. He would sell them out just as he said he would in 1968.

DROUGHT IN SOUTHERN PRAIRIES—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture. The drought situation in the southern prairies grows worse every day. Last weekend I had an opportunity to visit the Milk River Ridge area of southern Alberta where we saw topsoil blowing away, sloughs were dry, and dug-outs with no water in them. Still, the federal Government is not prepared to make any commitment to the farmers in that area.

I wonder if the Minister is willing to give a commitment today to provide at least the same amount of money, $28.5 million, that the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan have already committed so that they can provide emergency water systems, dug-outs, wells, and transportation systems for livestock herds.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course the Government shares the Hon. Member's concern in this very serious matter. I think that he would acknowledge at the same time that there has never been a Government in the history of the country that has done as much for agriculture, and has responded to the needs of agriculture in the way in which this Government has under the leadership of the Prime Minister of Canada. The programs have been effective. We have responded generously.

I can tell the Hon. Member that the Prime Minister has instructed the Minister of Agriculture to meet with his provincial counterparts at the earliest possible date. As he knows, there has been an ongoing working group of federal and provincial officials working on this particular issue.

He should also know that there are indeed ongoing government programs to deal with this very serious problem.

He should also recognize that there is a long-term commitment, as was enunciated in the announcement in December, to the effect that we want to work very closely with the provinces in establishing a long-term soil and water conservation program that will meet all the needs of agriculture throughout Canada.

HAY AND FEED SUPPLIES—REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows that hay and feed supplies are desperately low in many of the drought areas, and that farmers are actually starting to disperse their herds, which not only cuts off their livelihoods for the next three or four years but also drives down cattle prices.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister willing to give a commitment to the farmers of western Canada today that the Government will provide emergency assistance for moving feed into those drought areas? After all, this is a national emergency that requires specific action for these livestock producers now, not vague generalities about what the Government has done in the past or may do at some time in the future.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange for the Hon. Member to suggest that we deal in vague generalities when well in excess of $3 billion has been committed to western Canada this year, an increase of well over 400 per cent since the Hon. Member's Party was in office.

The fact of the matter is that there have been ongoing meetings at the officials' level. The Prime Minister has instructed the Minister of Agriculture to meet with his provincial counterparts. This is a co-ordinated effort. The provinces recognize that they have a responsibility. The federal Government has always recognized its responsibility in this regard.

• (1130)

I can tell the Hon. Member that this Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, has responded to the needs of agriculture before, and will do so again.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PLYWOOD EXPORTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Earlier today in Question Period we heard questions raised about how the Government has not stood up for the interests of our lobster producers and potato producers.

My question relates to another aspect of the deal. In the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives the U.S. has proposed changes in the accord, and apparently the Government of Canada has objected.

Is the Minister aware that the wording used on the proposed change in the plywood section at the House committee level, a copy of which I have obtained today, is virtually the same as the wording used in the U.S. Senate Finance Committee, which shows that they are deadly serious about this change in the United States? By the way, it is being described in the United States as a major victory for U.S. plywood producers, allowing them greater access to the Canadian market.

Is the Minister aware that the wording is now identical at both the House and Senate levels, and that they intend to proceed with it? If the Minister is aware, has he made it clear that this further change in the deal is unacceptable to the Government of Canada, and it will not be proceeding with this deal if these changes in the wording are proceeded with in the United States?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Speaker, when we encounter a problem we do not throw up our hands and withdraw altogether and leave chaos in its place, as apparently the Leader of the New Democratic Party suggests. What a course of conduct that is. When one encounters a difficulty, Mr. Speaker, one continues on to overcome the difficulty.

What is happening in the United States is that the Senate Finance Committee has dealt with the markup of the proposed administration Bill as has the House Ways and Means Committee. They have to get together, have a conference, and decide what it is Congress will recommend.

Mr. Broadbent: It is the same wording.

Mr. Crosbie: We do not know what the final version of this Bill will be.

With respect to the plywood situation we have pointed out to the United States that, unless it institutes the tariff cuts to which we have agreed, on January 1, it will be in violation of the Canada-U.S. FTA. If the Canada-U.S. FTA is adopted by this country, as we intend to do, and as we feel reasonably certain the United States will do, it would be in violation.

Therefore, we would have several options. One is to go to dispute settlement, because the Americans would be violating the FTA. Another option is to take our own action with respect to repositing or replying to that action by the United States, if it goes forward with it.

It has not acted yet, and we are not going to panic. We have to ask the hon. gentleman opposite what is his answer to U.S. protectionism? What are the NDP going to do? What would the hon. gentleman do if the United States gives notice that it wants to cancel the Auto Pact? What would the hon. gentleman do then? Superman Broadbent, what would his solution be?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Minister that one thing we would not do is when the Americans say "jump", unlike the Conservatives we would not say "how high?" That is the difference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WORDING OF CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES' RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister obviously does not know, I would like to tell him that the wording of the change in this proposal as it affects Canadian exports of plywood, is identical in the House committee to the wording in the Senate.

Mr. Crosbie: So what?

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister says, "So, what?" We want action before the deal is completed, not protesting after; that is so what.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the NDP wants action. He has been wanting action now for how many years? Is it 10, 12, or 20 years? For how many years have members of the New Democratic Party been wanting action? They have been wanting it all their lives, and they are getting action. We have already delivered a diplomatic note to the United States objecting to what it is proposing, and what might be in the legislation. It is not there yet. We will continue objecting. If the United States does not rectify it, we will take a counter action, because we have the backbone to do it, and we are going to do it.

The hon. gentleman asks how high they jump. I ask the hon. gentleman is it a bird, is it a plane? No, it is Ed Broadbent hurtling over Oshawa on his way down to the United States to force the Senate and the House of Representatives to do his will.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the Government has certainly taken action and that is why it remains distinctly lodged in third place in popularity among Canadians today. That is the type of action it has taken.

Mr. McDermid: You are beginning to believe those polls now, are you?

An Hon. Member: Getting a little arrogant, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: Who is arrogant? Listen to your answers.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party can put his question.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, instead of waiting until after the act is done, would the Minister, in his straightforward, non-bellicose language, inform the United States that we will not be introducing this Bill in the Parliament of Canada next week if it contains a change that the Minister himself has said goes against the agreement? Just for once will the Government stand up for Canadian interests before something is done against us, instead of after? That is the question.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, what we have done, of course, is make it plain to the Americans that any change such as has been suggested would be strongly resisted by us. I have mentioned two ways in which we can respond to that.

Let me read what the offending provisions suggest: "The implementing Bill encourages the President to develop with Canada common performance standards for the use of softwood plywood and other structural panels in construction applications in the United States and Canada. The President shall report to the Congress on the incorporation of common performance standards—and may implement the tariff reductions pursuant to Article—when he determines that the necessary standards have been met."

It is not such a bellicose pronouncement as the Leader of the New Democratic Party makes out, but nevertheless we are opposing this. We do not control the Congress. The American administration does not control the Congress. The Leader of the New Democratic Party has the least influence of any man in Canada on the U.S. Congress, believe me, and second to him the Leader of the Opposition, because they have lost any respect for them down there. They are going to tear up agreements before they are even ratified.

Mr. Broadbent: No, we respect them. It is you we do not respect. They stand up for their interests.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SURVIVAL OF LINGUISTIC MINORITIES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday I mentioned the amendments prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister for the dinosaurs on his back-bench committee that will gut the Official Languages Bill, especially where it concerns anglophone and francophone language minorities.

The amendment to Section 38 drops completely the concept of official language communities, which goes against the intent of Meech Lake.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would give his word, or make a solemn commitment to this House, that his Government will not tolerate any amendments that in any way diminish the role or importance of official language communities, in this country and in the Official Languages Bill.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to amendments that were prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister. That is false! I think the Hon. Member will want to withdraw what he said, because we are not talking about amendments prepared by the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Minister of Justice mentioned yesterday that amendments would be tabled next Wednesday, if I am not mistaken, including a number of amendments from the Liberal Party and perhaps from the New Democratic Party, I am not sure. I assume that all these amendments, considering the support of all three political Parties for the Official Languages Bill, will tend to improve, and make more direct and more accessible, the provisions for implementing the legislation and in no way affect its basic principles, since the basic principles of the Official Languages Act enjoy the full support of all political Parties in Parliament.

It should come as no surprise to have amendments by the Liberals, the NDP and the Conservatives on a Bill as important as this one. I assume the amendments will tend to improve the Bill and make it more acceptable to a larger number of Canadians, because basically, its purpose is to make bilingualism acceptable from Vancouver to St. John's, despite certain problems and some resistance.

This requires understanding and generosity on the part of all involved, and a total absence of partisanship on a question of such vital importance.

• (1140)

CONCEPT OF MINORITY LANGUAGE COMMUNITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have in hand a set of amendments which I take it come from the meetings of Tory back-benchers—

Mr. McDermid: What do you mean you take it? If you have an accusation, make it.

Mr. Crosbie: Is anyone's name on it?

Mr. Gauthier: —in which we find the same proposal for Clause 38, the same proposal which would gut the concept that is essential to this Bill, dealing with minority language communities.

Will the Prime Minister give his word that he will not allow any back-bench committee, or other amendments to be put to this Bill that would, in effect, scuttle the spirit of the Bill and destroy the Bill by eliminating the concept of language communities in this country? Will he give me an undertaking that he will not allow language communities to be excluded from this Bill?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I point out to my hon. friend that in his choice of language he said that he has in his possession a set of amendments that "I take it comes from back-benchers". I do not know where he gets the amendments. I suppose any Member is entitled to present amendments.

Quite frankly, one of the moments of great dismay to me personally, and I assume to other Members of the House, was when an important instrument like the Meech Lake Accord was subjected to eight or nine amendments by the Liberal Senate which would have the effect of vitiating much of the impact of the Meech Lake Accord. I did not hear any objection from the Liberals in regard to the—

Mr. Gauthier: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: Let me tell my hon. friend that the amendments to the Meech Lake Accord brought forward by the Liberal Senate would gut the Meech Lake Accord. I did not hear any objection from the Member for Ottawa—Vanier who should have been on his feet protesting that, and should have been denouncing those Senators.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PLYWOOD EXPORTS—PROTEST NOTE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the Minister for International Trade who is spinning a cobweb of contradictions which will get him in real trouble.

He suggested to my Leader that with regard to these actions on plywood in the United States there is nothing we need to worry about seriously. He said this despite the fact that U.S. commentators have called it a major victory for the U.S. plywood industry and despite the fact that his own Government has sent a protest note with respect to the issue.

If there is no problem, why has this note been sent? Second, will the Minister table the note in the House of Commons so that we can judge just exactly how tough the Minister is in standing up for this country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it would certainly be a job to be as tough as the Hon. Member opposite—

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Crosbie: Nevertheless, we must aspire to have a high peak of toughness.

No one has suggested that we have nothing to worry about. I suggest that this country has much to worry about in its trade with the outside world and its trade with the United States. Since we have much to worry about, the Prime Minister and the Government entered into this U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. It is because we are worried about U.S. protectionism, which is evidenced by their action on plywood, their action on lobsters, and evidenced by their attempts on potatoes. We can use a hundred different examples.

We are worried and doing something about it. However, the two Parties opposite try to stop us and tear us down at every step of the way.

I read what they are suggesting in the United States. We have sent a note of protest. I, myself, spoke to Clayton Yeutter today—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —and expressed the same position verbally.

We only get derision, of course. If I call the U.S. trade representative, I get derision from Members opposite. What do you want? Do you want me to go down with a machine gun? Is it the Rambo policy that the NDP suggest?

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE PROTEST NOTE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister has had a conversation with Mr. Yeutter. He still has not answered the question about whether he will give the House of Commons a chance to see the note of protest which he sent on this and the other issues.

[Translation]

Could the Minister not table here in Parliament a note of protest on this serious problem?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that is incredible!

[English]

I said that this is incredible, Mr. Speaker. Every time the hon. gentleman opposite asks a question, he proves how right we are to be on the course of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement in order to get more secure access to the U.S. market. The plywood example more than proves the point.

If the Americans do not heed our protest, we have several options. We will exercise those options under the FTA.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—CHANGE IN FRENCH REGULATIONS AFFECTING CANADIAN FISHERMEN

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Captain Willougby Bolt, the Canadian fisherman arrested by the French Navy, is to appear in court at the beginning of next week charged with violating French fishing regulations that he knew nothing about. Apparently the Government of Canada knew nothing about them either because the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated in the House last week, as reported at page 15339 of Hansard:

> There was an agreement providing for at least three months' notice of any change in practice. We did not receive such notice from the French . . .

Was the Government not aware that the Canadian Ambassador in Paris received letters dating back to November 8, 1986, about these changes in regulations? They were gazetted on March 19, 1987, together with the letters from and to the Canadian Ambassador in Paris. What happened? Why did he not inform the Cabinet of which he is now a part, or at least the fishermen?

[Translation]

Was Mr. Bouchard so busy with his own policies that he forgot about Canadian fishermen?

An Hon. Member: Right on!

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe a calm recital of the facts is the best approach in this case. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was exactly right when he said that we did not receive such notice. The facts are that on November 8, 1986, the French Government delivered a note to Ambassador Bouchard, soon to be Member Bouchard, in Paris. That note was transmitted to Ottawa.

Under Article 6 of the Treaty of 1972, drafted and implemented by our Liberal predecessors, three months' prior notice must be given of any action to be taken by the French with respect to licensing or whatever. On March 20, 1987, there was a gazetting. On March 24 and 25 our representatives met with the French representatives. It was agreed by the French that they would give a period of grace during which Canadian boats would not be required to be licensed. These are the facts, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: All of this is important. Perhaps the Hon. Member could put a direct question which will enable the Minister to reply more directly.

RIGHTS OF CANADIAN FISHERMEN

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the reasoning in his response is just as fractured as his French when he dares to use it.

Doesn't the Minister realize that while these diplomatic games are being played the fishermen are being forgotten, that Captain Willie Bolt has to go out 60 miles before he is allowed to fish after having this line across Fortune Bay and, if he goes beyond that, he is arrested by the French. Doesn't the Minister realize that those fishermen if they fish in waters they have traditionally fished in, so-called Canadian waters, they are arrested by the Government? If they fish in waters where they traditionally fished, so-called French waters, they are arrested by the Government of France? Where does he expect them to fish? Meech Lake?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, my French is not perfect.

[English]

That is why I don't attempt it more often.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: In other words, the French Government said that before there was any change the French would give us notice. They gave us no notice of any change in their regulations or that they would be applied to Newfoundland inshore fishermen.

With respect to the rest of the hon. gentleman's question on Meech Lake, the Hon. Member fishes in troubled waters there because the Leader of the Opposition cannot get the Senate to concur with him on Meech Lake. The Liberal Leader of the Opposition in Newfoundland is sabotaging Meech Lake. I would not want to fish in Meech Lake if I was the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre.

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—PREMIERS' CALL FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Agriculture's position on western drought aid has been very clear to date both before the Agriculture Committee and in this House during our May 9 opposition day on drought. The Minister said in effect "crop insurance is in place. Use it. The Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Agency exists. Use it".

In light of the urgent call for assistance from the four western Premiers has the Government changed its mind on drought aid? Will there be another federal-provincial program this year?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Not at all, Mr. Speaker. The Government has been very responsive to the problems of agriculture generally in Canada, and western agriculture in particular this last while. As the Deputy Prime Minister pointed out, there has been a substantial increase in aid to western agriculture. We view this very seriously.

I have instructed the Minister of Agriculture to meet on an urgent basis with his provincial colleagues. When there is damage being done like this to the farming industry in western Canada, it is a national problem. We have to be involved in the solution and I know that my hon. friend would want the Parliament of Canada to be involved in that.

PROPOSED EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): I thank the Prime Minister for his answer, Mr. Speaker. During the 1985 drought, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia, chaired the drought committee and was apparently responsible for developing a permanent emergency assistance program to respond to future droughts. Where is that program today? Why don't the four western Premiers seem to know about it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I thank my hon. friend for pointing out the exceptional work and very successful initiatives of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia who provided great leadership on the question of the drought the last time around and was saluted for such by, I think, Members on all sides of the House.

The western Premiers signalled yesterday that we have a new dimension to the problem. All I can do is tell my hon. friend that we will be assisting the western Premiers in dealing with this very debilitating situation that is causing such damage to the western farmers. I see the Hon. Leader of the NDP smiling. That is all the New Democrats do—smile. We help farmers in trouble.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

SERVICE CHARGES IMPOSED BY FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—ROLE OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns the unusual intrusion of his officials into the work of the Finance Committee.

Would the Minister tell the House why the Government is trying to frustrate the achievement of a solution to the problem of charges by financial institutions?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): We are not, Mr. Speaker. When Mr. McIntosh of the Banker's Association appeared before the committee he indicated that the Competition Act prevented the banks from getting together to provide certain advantages to consumers. I wrote to him on April 29 saying that that is not true. The Competition Act is there designed to help consumers, and it was not acceptable to me for him to claim that it was the Competition Act that prevented banks taking action to help consumers.

I went on to tell him how he could get advice from the Department if he had any doubts about it. I was trying to make sure that the bankers did not try to hide behind the Competition Act when it came to giving consumers some relief from these service charges.

VOLUNTARY COMPLIANCE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this is interesting because it is a different perspective from the one given to members of the committee as a result of telephone calls from his officials.

Will the Minister confirm that he is prepared to see voluntary compliance in preference to a legislated solution, or is he moving toward legislation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to see compliance. I think there is the ability for the banks to comply. They can get legal opinion for that from my Department.

If, in fact, there is some unseen quirk that would prevent this, I would certainly be more than willing to come forward with quick amendments to the Competition Act, or to recommend to my colleague in terms of the Bank Act to have any legislative obstacles removed to allow the banks to comply. If they do not comply voluntarily, I am certainly not averse to a legislative solution, but I would prefer compliance on their part. I wish they would stop trying to hide behind the law, and get on with compliance.

HEALTH

FUNDING OF HEALTH CARE SYSTEM IN ONTARIO

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who has undoubtedly noted media reports about Ontario hospitals which are unable to balance their budgets, and about patients dying because they were not able to have the surgery needed in time to save their lives.

Does the Minister still think, as he said in New York not very long ago, that there is enough money in the Canadian health care system to maintain the good health of Ontario residents?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the issue which the Hon. Member raises is one that is a concern I think to all Canadians who want to preserve the health care system, and it is a good health care system.

I point out to him that the delivery of health care is a provincial responsibility. I further point out to him that from 1982 to 1987 through the transfer payments for health and post-secondary education, the entire established programs financing portfolio, that the federal Government transferred to the provinces in the order of $65 billion. For 1987 to 1992 with a formula for protection against inflation we project that figure of $65 billion to increase to $90 billion.

I think additionally what the Hon. Member should keep in mind is that in a number of cases provinces have not transferred the same percentage of increase they receive from the federal Government in the transfers to their institutions. If that had been done, then possibly we would not be in the dilemma we are in today.

ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows perfectly well that in his own province the limits on federal support for the system are forcing closure of beds and the same kinds of consequences are occurring in Ontario. Does the Minister have any plans at all to reconsider the policy, which the Liberal Government began more than 10 years ago, of restraining transfers under the Established Programs Financing? This Government has made the situation worse. We will be seeing more people dying across Canada because the Government is not financing health care adequately.

Mr. McDermid: What nonsense.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): They are dying.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is simply not the case. Back in the 1970s, 7.4 per cent of the GNP was expended on health care. Today that figure is 8.6 per cent at a period of time when we have seen the GNP and economic growth increase in this country over the last four years. The first point is wrong.

Second, we have the $65 billion over the last five years, and the projected $90 billion projected for the next five years together with the increases which that involves.

• (1200)

The third point I would make is that this would not happen if there had not been the kind of mismanagement in Manitoba that existed with the NDP Government. It was that Government that closed the hospital beds and that is why it was rejected in the last election.

WESTERN DROUGHT—CATTLE SALES—DEFERRAL OF TAXES

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, having grown up on the Prairies and in southern Saskatchewan, I know the real dangers of a drought. This year it will become necessary for many cow-calf operators to sell down their herds. Normally, when sales are made, taxes must be paid in the year the sales are made and then replacements are paid for with tax dollars.

My question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Can there be a program initiated that would cause the deferral of the taxes over a two to three-year period to compensate for this very real dilemma the cow-calf operators will find themselves in this year?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East for his very important question, and I join with him in the great concern he raises for his constituents, the farmers and the ranchers in his constituency. He is very alert to their needs.

I must tell the Hon. Member that the Government has not dealt with these particular problems through a diddle of the tax system. This Government has approached the matter through direct assistance. Since 1984 there has been $140 million in drought assistance for livestock and $150 million in drought assistance for crops. The direct assistance approach has been this Government's approach.

As the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister mentioned today, the Government is watching this and monitoring it carefully, and it will act firmly and decisively.

MISSING CHILDREN

DIFFICULTY IN LOCATING ABDUCTORS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice and of the Minister of National Revenue, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that on Sunday of this weekend we will be commemorating National Missing Children's Day. He will also be aware of the fact, I think, that the current federal record data bases which are made available for parents seeking children who have been abducted do not include access to information under the Income Tax Act.

I have in my hand a copy of a Canada-wide warrant which was issued under Section 250.1 of the Criminal Code, for one Kevin Lee Johnston, who abducted his son Ryan last January. Mrs. Johnston came to me because she wanted access to all and any information to find out where her son is, yet she has been denied access to information under the Income Tax Act.

Can the Prime Minister move immediately to amend the Income Tax Act to make available information about the whereabouts of child abductors who are facing charges under the Criminal Code?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of the specifics of this case, but I thank my hon. friend from Hamilton East for raising what is clearly a very important question. The problem of missing children is a great tragedy and one that I think all Members of the House and all agencies of government should respond to as quickly and as effectively as we can.

We have made some important advances in the last couple of years in this area, but we can do a lot more. I will inquire immediately as to the possibility of acting promptly in regard to the suggestion of my hon. friend and any other suggestions she may have in this regard.

Point of Order—Mr. Langdon

INCOME TAX ACT PROVISIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister. I hope he will give personal attention to this matter.

He should be aware that this morning a representative of the Minister of National Revenue told me personally that if any person tried to get information under the Income Tax Act about the whereabouts of missing children, he or she would be fought all the way to the Supreme Court because the Minister of National Revenue does not intend to release this information.

Again, is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that under the Income Tax Act, those who happen to be evading income taxes can be required to provide information? The whereabouts of a person who evades income tax is public information which can be received by the courts, whereas the whereabouts of a child abductor is private information. Does the Prime Minister not agree with me that the whereabouts of children are more important than the whereabouts of missing income tax money?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question following up further to what the Prime Minister said. The Hon. Member will be aware that when changes were made for computer access, the Income Tax Act and Revenue Canada operations were examined. I appreciate the comments made today indicating that that will be revisited.

I should say to the Hon. Member and all Canadians, because we all share the concern in this area, that we are now using the computerization of the Employment and Immigration Department and we are also using the computerization of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I have been told, and I believe it to be correct, that there are possibly more names of Canadians on National Health and Welfare computers than even on Revenue Canada computers. That notwithstanding, we will examine if there is another way to access Revenue Canada information.

Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. I am taking a little bit of time. For example, changes in contributions to the Canada Pension Plan also come through National Health and Welfare. I will check again to see how fast that program is working.

May I say as well, if I might, Mr. Speaker, that corporations are also demonstrating some civic responsibility. One example is Child Find. As well, a rental car company, Budget Rent a Car, has a program of showing missing children brochures on vans, and some children have been found through that program.

Last, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta, back in the mid-1970s, came forward with a Private Member's Bill on parental abduction. I think that—thank you for the time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise that this brings Question Period to a close. I wish to share with Hon. Members a few words.

I know that all of the matters raised today were important, both in the questions and in the responses, but I want to indicate to Hon. Members that, at least in the view of the Chair, we should be seeing more Members rise and more questions and more answers than we were able to see today. I would ask all Hon. Members to co-operate when we return after the long weekend because I will need that co-operation in order to do what we are supposed to do in Question Period, and that is get a maximum number of questions and answers. I thank all Hon. Members.

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS CITED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period today, a reference was made by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) to certain notes which have been sent to the United States with reference to sections of the Finance Committee's suggested changes to the legislation dealing with the trade agreement, and I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne's 1978 edition, Citation 327, which deals with documents cited and the requirements of Ministers of the Crown with respect to this. Paragraph (2) reads:

> It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the Table of the House, if it can be done without injury to the public interest.

In view of this rule which binds us in the House of Commons, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, if it would be possible for you to ascertain from the Minister for International Trade if there is in fact any potential or actual injury to the public interest which might exist if these protest notes to the United States were laid upon the Table. If there is no such injury to our national interest, I would ask that these documents be in fact laid upon the Table further to that rule.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can help other Hon. Members who might wish to contribute to this question by pointing out that we had this matter before us only a little while ago, and a question of whether or not a Minister is quoting from a document becomes of some considerable concern to the Chair.

• (1210)

If the Member is quoting from a document, the rule is clearly as the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) states it to be. If it is something less than a quote, it puts the Chair in some difficulty, and I ask Hon. Members to address that point.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the precedents on this matter speak not only of quotations but also of citing documents. I respectfully submit there must be some distinction between the meaning of the word "quote" and the meaning of the word "cite". Otherwise, the precedents in question would not have covered both those words in setting out a basis for requiring Ministers to table documents they refer to in debate or in answering questions. Therefore, I know you will want to review the "blues" to see exactly in what way and in what context the Minister referred to the notes in question.

I submit that the precedents are clear. It is not necessary for the Minister to quote at length or in any substantial fashion from the documents in question. It is sufficient that he cite them, and I repeat that there must be some difference in meaning between the words "quote" and "cite", otherwise the precedents would not have made reference to both those words in setting out conditions for the requirement that documents referred to by Ministers in this House have to be tabled once they are referred to.

I also want to point out that the Minister, at no time in the answers he gave, made any suggestion or gave any hint that there be anything contrary to national security or the public interest in making their contents public. On the contrary, he took great delight in referring to those notes and their existence as supporting the position of the Government that it was in fact doing what it should in defence of the best interests of this country.

I ask you to take into account the context in which the Minister made reference to the notes. I would think that he would be delighted, if not to table the notes forthwith in the House, to release them publicly as soon as possible today. I certainly think it would be consistent with the Minister's responsibility to this House to disclose those notes first by tabling them here, and he has time to do that up until three o'clock. However, if there is some problem in getting the text of the notes in both official languages before three o'clock in such a way that they can be made public, then he need not, and in fact should not, wait until next Tuesday. He should make them public as a press release as soon as possible later today.

To conclude, I say the precedents are clear. The context in which the Minister made reference to the notes is also clear. He has a definite obligation to table the notes in question in their complete form forthwith. Anything else would be not only contrary to the precedents in question, it would be a failure to show the respect which any Member, especially a Minister, owes to this House.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. He points out an important addition to the argument and also a distinction. I have taken the point that he raises and I will keep it in mind.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of things if I may. First, I think it is quite clear that Beauchesne's deals with this in more than one section than that which my hon. friend from Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) quoted. He started with Citation 327(2). I would like to quote Citation 327(1) which states:

> A Minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a dispatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the Table.

I think when you review the "blues" you will find that the Minister referred to his notes, not the note sent to the U.S. Government or the trade ambassador.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): So he has to table his notes.

Mr. Lewis: They were his handwritten notes. Second, and this is the neat part, my hon. friend was kind enough to read to the House Citation 327(2), which says:

> It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the Table of the House, if it can be done without injury to the public interest.

My friend did not give you the last sentence and I would like to read it for you:

> The same rule, however, cannot be held to apply to private letters or memoranda.

Even if the Hon. Minister were quoting from it, I submit that it would be in the context of a private letter.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to get some clarification of what the Minister has been saying. Is he attempting to tell the House and you, Sir, that a diplomatic note exchanged between Canada and the U.S. is the same thing as a private letter? With all due respect to the Hon. Minister, I say that argument is, if I may use the words, patently absurd. A note is not a private letter, it is a formal document exchanged between two countries, and the only grounds for not tabling it in this House is if the public interest would somehow be harmed by it.

There is no suggestion by the Minister for International Trade that what he told the press outside the House yesterday and what he referred to in his questions today was just some private little billet-doux, some personal love note exchanged between the Minister and his U.S. counterpart. Rather, it was a formal diplomatic note, a state paper, which clearly, under the circumstances in which it was referred to, should be tabled in this House.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to set out what seems to be indicated in this section in full—

Mr. Lewis: Bring back Nelson Riis.

Mr. Langdon: No such luck.

Mr. Lewis: Stick to the issues.

Mr. Langdon: The key distinctions are between state papers or dispatches from which a Minister reads or quotes on the one hand, or public documents which are referred to on the other—

Mr. Lewis: That is not the word.

Mr. Langdon: Or, third, documents which have been cited.

Mr. Lewis: Cited.

Mr. Langdon: As I took the answer of the Minister today, he certainly cited this document and provided a description of it in doing so. He indicated that it had a certain sense of emphasis or toughness, a certain power which was conveyed, et cetera. I think that is a citation and I think that unless there is, as the section suggests, some injury to the public interest which could be created by requiring that this be laid upon the Table, I frankly see little option for the Minister but to follow the rules. I very much hope that those distinctions and the argument would lead you to rule in that direction.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, just a short intervention. I am very concerned about the Minister's last reference to private letters. If that argument were to be accepted by the Chair, then virtually everything sent out by a cabinet Minister could be deemed to be a private letter. Obviously we would then be in a situation where no documents, whether quoted or cited by a Minister in this House, would ever be tabled. I think that argument indicates a disregard for the precedents.

We are not asking for the Minister's private letters to his wife or his sons. We are talking about a document sent by the Government to another Government, on behalf of Canada, presumably. Obviously, there was a citation or reference to that letter and I believe it should be tabled.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out to the Minister that it is obvious that his letter to his own profession in which he said he does not practice law in Ontario is very honest.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened carefully to the interventions of all Hon. Members. I would remind Hon. Members that the Chair dealt with a similar situation raised by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) several weeks ago. I will, of course, review that ruling and I will take very great care to reread Hansard and will report to the House accordingly. I thank Hon. Members for their interventions.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions I have made available to your office for clarification. I would like to present them at this time. The first petition is from a number of members of the Calgary Pentecostal Church in the constituency of Peterborough. These petitioners call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

POST OFFICE AT PETERBOROUGH

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): The other petition I would like to introduce to the House this afternoon is from employees of Canada Post at the main post office in Peterborough. It was received in my constituency office on March 17. The petition calls upon Parliament to ensure that Canada Post provides a clean and healthful workplace for its employees in the Peterborough post office in the Province of Ontario.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from my constituents in the community of Shoe Cove in Newfoundland. In fact, this petition was originally sent to the Speaker himself.

The petition requests that the Parliament of Canada legislate to ensure that the fundamental right to life of everyone is protected from conception through to natural death. The petitioners call upon Parliament to enjoin the Government so to legislate.

CALCULATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from residents in the community of Conche in Newfoundland who call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government acts upon their very reasonable request for a change in the unemployment insurance regulations. The petitioners ask the Government to allow fish plant workers to use their best rather than their most recent 10 to 20 weeks when applying for unemployment insurance benefits, as most fish plant workers are struggling to survive and raise their families on very low incomes.

[Translation]

THE POOR—REQUEST FOR INCREASED ASSISTANCE

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a petition concerning the destitute on behalf of students at École Lemire and École Moreau in Pierreville and Saint-François-du-Lac, so that 1987, the year of the homeless, will result in increased assistance for them in 1988.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the privilege to present a petition today signed by residents principally of the community of Dryden, Ontario, some 80 in number. These Canadian citizens call upon Parliament to provide a remedy to the inequities created by the application of the northern residents' tax allowance by the designation of all Tier III communities as eligible for that allowance.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of the City of Toronto who are concerned about our immigration policy. The petitioners point out that the Minister promised more than half a year ago to admit unmarried daughters and sons of all ages as members of the family class of immigrants and to provide 15 points instead of 10 points in the case of married children and brothers and sisters coming in as assisted relatives.

Furthermore, in 1986, the then Minister of Justice promised to remove the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents who have been here for three years or more with respect to the right to sponsor parents of any age. The petitioners point out that none of these promises have yet been fulfilled. Therefore, the undersigned ask that Parliament ensure that the Government fulfil its promises now.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from residents of the City of Toronto who point out that the trade deal negotiated between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada and the President of the United States, for which the Prime Minister of Canada, they say, had no mandate, would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs Canada needs. It would also integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base. Therefore, the petitioners request Parliament to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate result in a national general election before such an agreement is finalized.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-126, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted by Question Period, I had been pointing out that in addition to the debt problem faced by the poorest countries in the world, there is a decline in official development assistance, and then I went on to talk about the most serious problem, and that is, the decline in commodity prices. I was reading from Roy Culpeper's study "Forced Adjustment: The Export Collapse in Sub-Saharan Africa" in which he states:

> No commodity category was exempt: food, non-food, agricultural and mineral commodities alike plunged to their lowest level, in real terms, since the Great Depression half a century ago.
> Other World Bank estimates provide forecasts of commodity prices over the next 15 years, under various assumptions about global supply and demand conditions and the economic environment. These projections indicate that the price deterioration which has occurred during 1980-86 is expected to continue in 1987 before commodity prices rise again.
> However, prices are not expected to rise much in coming years, with the result that by the year 2000, they will still be lower in real terms than the depressed levels of 1985. By the turn of the century, real commodity prices, according to this scenario, will only be one-half their 1950 levels!

This is the problem facing African nations and other poor nations around the world which depend for their export earnings on commodity prices. They have declined drastically. They will continue to decline in real prices.

In fact, it has been estimated that in 1986 there was a net outflow of funds from Africa amounting to some $16 billion American. That is made up by the fact that funds coming into Africa were some $16 billion of development assistance from all countries. There was private lending amounting to only some $2 billion. This amounts to a total of $18 billion going into Africa. Going out of Africa there was a drop in commodity prices of $19 billion. Debt servicing amounted to some $15 billion. This amounts to a total of $34 billion.

This is why our Ambassador to the United Nations, Stephen Lewis, a person who has spent a great deal of time in the last three or four years visiting Africa studying the situation there and working with the United Nations trying to get a program of action that will actually meet the problems of Africa has said time and time again that the West is betraying the African continent.

Perhaps we could look at the words of a distinguished African President, President Kaunda, who is the head of the Organization of African Unity. On October 6 he spoke before the United Nations General Assembly. He said that:

> —almost one and a half years after the adoption of the Program, and despite some limited initiatives here and there, the international community's over-all response has fallen far short of the requirements of the Program. The international community has not lived up to its side of the recovery pact . . .
> Africa has been losing on all counts . . . No measures are in sight to stabilize export earnings from commodities, which are of major interest to Africa; nor have effective mechanisms been put in place to deal with the unmanageable debt and debt-servicing burdens in any meaningful way. Worse still, the anticipated increase in the resource flows to Africa has not materialized. Not only have they not matched the resource outflows from Africa, they have actually stagnated.

He concluded by stating that:

> —unless effective solutions are found for the debt and commodity problems and unless resource flows at levels adequate to compensate for the outward transfer of resources away from Africa are ensured, prospects for bringing about recovery and development in Africa will become forever elusive and the continent will forever be a victim of the vagaries and misery of perpetual crisis.

This is the problem about which we are concerned. The fund that we are talking about contributing to will establish approximately $6 billion in special drawing rights, a little over $10 billion Canadian, or a little over $8 billion American. Yet that is going to be spent over a number of years to help with the debt problem. We are talking about a situation in Africa alone where there is a net shortfall of $16 billion per year. Thus the enhanced structural adjustment facility, ESAF, is not going to meet the total needs of the African continent. We should not be under any illusion that it will do that. It is a small step. It is a step that is primarily designed to ensure that the poorest countries do not default to their creditors in the West or to the IMF itself.

In our Party we are concerned that Canada should be doing more for Africa. We are concerned that when Canada meets with the other leaders of the industrialized West at the G-7 meeting in Toronto next month we should be pushing for more human adjustment policies on the part of the IMF. We should be pushing for a greater role by the World Bank and its concessionary flows to the poorest countries. We should be putting some pressure on the United States because, inadequate as ESAF is, the United States has said it will not be contributing anything to it.

Here we are talking about a trade arrangement with the United States. We want to get in under its protectionist umbrella, so-called. We are not going to quite make it. We will be standing with quite a bit of our shoulders and our head outside the umbrella with it dripping down on us. However, we want to get in under the American umbrella. Yet the United States is pleading poor. It says it cannot make any contributions to this enhanced structural adjustment facility that is supposed to be helping the poorest nations in the world. It says that it is too poor itself.

This raises questions as to why we are getting involved in a trade arrangement with another nation that is not able to carry its weight in international terms. It is able to throw its weight around on the International Monetary Fund but it is not able to carry its weight in terms of helping the poor nations.

We would like to see Canada take a more straightforward position on this matter and work with other nations to ensure that multilateral agencies such as the IMF and the World Bank have better structural policies that take account of the impact of those policies upon the poorest of the poor. We want to see Canada take a better position in terms of itself increasing the amount of official development assistance that goes to the poorest of the poor.

I remind the House and I remind the Canadian people of the commitment that was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he appeared before the United Nations shortly after the Conservative Government was elected. He said that Canada would reach its commitment to guarantee 0.7 per cent of its Gross National Product to official development assistance by 1990. That is a commitment that Canada made. The Secretary of State for External Affairs made that commitment in our name to the poor peoples of the world. It is a commitment that the Government has welched on. I regret that as a Canadian who would like to see us living up to our commitments. We should be taking action.

We must place back on the agenda the need for a new international economic order. We have to be working for some system that will stabilize world commodity prices. It is in our interests as well as in the interests of the poorest nations in the world that their economies should not be allowed to collapse because of the way in which commodity prices have collapsed.

Thus we have this agenda. It is a big agenda. We support the small step that the establishment of the enhanced structural adjustment facility makes. But we want to emphasize that there are other items that need to be addressed also if we are going to take at all a comprehensive approach to Africa and not be simply a drop in the bucket.

Finally, I want to reiterate that we want to see this Bill tightened up in terms of not giving a blank cheque to the Government so that it can simply increase the money, at any time it wants and so that it can give money to any fund that it wants without coming back to Parliament. We believe it is extremely important that Parliament should continue to have control over the purse, that when we are talking about such matters as contributions to the International Monetary Fund the Government should be accountable to the House of Commons for the way in which the IMF operates. If we are giving money to it, if we are providing Canadian taxpayers' money then we should insist that the Government be accountable for the way in which the IMF spends that money.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have a chance to speak on Bill C-126 because it raises a very serious problem. That is to say, on the one hand it undertakes to give aid to the needy. It asks those countries that have money to provide money to lend to those that lack it. On the other hand, our experience over several years now with this kind of lending process is not encouraging because it seems that the results that we were going to get are just not there.

• (1240)

Furthermore, I believe that this Bill takes a direction which is unwise and unfortunate in that it removes from the House almost all effective responsibility and oversight for future contributions to the International Monetary Fund. Bill C-126, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, has two short clauses. The first states, in part:

> "5.1(1) The Minister of Finance may lend to the International Monetary Fund, at such rate of interest and on such other terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may approve, such sum or sums of money as may be required for funding any trust or body established by the Fund . . .

In other words, it will not only go to specified purposes now existing in the fund, but if new purposes and new programs are created, they need not be discussed, and probably will not be discussed in the House of Commons, because the Minister now has the power to direct it anywhere he or the IMF please.

The Minister can direct it "as may be required for funding any trust or body established by the Fund to assist in fulfilling the purposes of the fund . . . " Those are very broadly stated purposes, which the fund does not necessarily carry out, such as maintaining the income level of the people in the country to which it lends.

That clause further states, "not exceeding in the whole five hundred and fifty million dollars, or such greater amount as may be fixed by the Governor in Council". If the Governor in Council decides to put in a further $1 billion or $10 billion, he or she does not need to return to Parliament to ask for the money. We have now said it may be any amount that the Governor in Council thinks would be reasonable.

The second clause states that, "the Minister of Finance may grant . . . " The first clause states "lend" and the second clause states:

> . . . grant to the International Monetary Fund, on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may approve, such sum or sums of money as may be required for funding any trust or body established by the Fund to assist in fulfilling the purposes of the Fund, not exceeding in the whole two hundred and fifty million dollars, or such greater amount as may be fixed by the Governor in Council.

In other words, this Bill gives the Cabinet a blank cheque in its lending or granting to the International Monetary Fund. It is a blank cheque not only in the limits to which it can grant or lend, but also in the purposes and the bodies to which it can grant or lend. If the International Monetary Fund had a really good record of helping the people it is supposed to help, that would be more acceptable. But it does not.

I wish to move from the dry figures and dry legal words to what I saw a couple of years ago when I was on parliamentary business in Guatemala. I wish to speak about the man with the hoe. There is a famous portrait that was produced in Europe of a man with a hoe. This is a different man with a different hoe. In the famous European picture the man with the hoe has a hoe similar to that which we would use in our gardens. The hoe being used by the man in Guatemala was at least twice or perhaps four times as large, a really heavy tool. As we drove past this person in the countryside, I was told by the officials that that was the only technological improvement brought to the indigenous peoples of Central America by five centuries of European conquest and occupation.

This man with the hoe was brother or cousin to the others whom I saw there. They were lifting their hoes to dig at a hillside which was at least 45 degrees steep, and sometimes 60 degrees steep. That was the only land that they could work, the only land that they were allowed to have. On the road I saw one of his brothers or cousins carrying a load of firewood, logs that had been split and sawed. It was a huge load about the size that he was himself. He was carrying this load of firewood from where it could be cut to where he would need it for his family. Behind him was a woman carrying on her head a large bundle of sticks, also for firewood.

It was explained to me by our CIDA officials that the gathering of firewood for cooking and the gathering of water for cooking on those mountainous hills occupy several hours a day of a peasant's time. No wonder these people are poor. For a few days or weeks in a year they may go down to the coastlands for a day labour at low rates for the cotton harvest, the sugar harvest, or similar work. But all in all, 80 per cent of their children are suffering malnutrition. I believe it is obvious that that is not a condition that has gone on for many centuries. The fact that 80 per cent of the children of a country are suffering malnutrition is a modern invention.

The man with the hoe is contributing a small amount, but he is contributing to the wealth of Canada, the United States, and the other banker countries. It was pointed out by my colleague that the people of the Third World, of which this country is a part, last year contributed almost $6 billion in outflow, that is, $6 billion more went out than came in. That is $6 billion from the poorest to the richest. That is why I think of the man with the hoe when I look at this Bill.

There is another reason why I think of the man with the hoe. When I grew up in Winnipeg during the Depression I heard that there were two kinds of farmers: there were those farmers who farm the land, and there were those who farm the farmers. That farming of the farmers has not stopped in Canada, but it has been powerfully extended to Guatemala and dozens of other countries of the former colonies of Europe that we now call the Third World. They are exporting food from Guatemala because there is plenty of rich land. Guatemala is not the Sahara Desert, or even the Sahel. Guatemala has some of the richest farm land one could find, with an excellent climate and fertile soil on the flat bottom land.

Generations ago the landowners and the military drove the indigenous people, who are the great majority in the country, off the good land into the hills. They did not kill all of them because they were needed for cheap labour. As I said, come harvest time for a few days or weeks they are needed to work for a pittance down near the coast. There they are on the hills, unable to feed their children properly, but supposed to survive as a pool of surplus labour, the reserve army of the unemployed.

Whether it is through the IMF, the IAB, or any of the other multiple lending sources, those organizations lend money to countries such as Guatemala, El Salvador, or to many other countries in the same condition. These loans are mainly contributed by the countries of Europe and America, and mainly used to police countries of the Third World to ensure that they will structure their economy in such a way as to enable them to repay not only the IMF, but also their loans from the private banks.

It happens that in Central America three-quarters of the $17 billion debt, which has been created mainly in the last eight years, because it was $7 billion in 1980, is owed to Governments, that is, bilateral debts, or to multilateral institutions such as the IMF. This does not include the $600 million that is provided annually by the United States for the military. It is clear why the military are needed. They are needed in order to stop the rebellion of people who do not like supporting the IMF and the other creditors in the style to which we have become accustomed. In fact, of the 25 million people in Central America, every man, woman, and child is charged by us with owing us $700. People who do not see $100 in a year are supposed to owe us $700. People in lands where we have taken out gold, silver, timber, cotton, sugar, bananas, coffee and all kinds of mineral and agricultural wealth, are now considered by our laws to be debtors to us. Every man, woman and child, including those suffering malnutrition, on average in Central America, is charged with owing us $700. It is bizarre. It is obscene.

The only way that they can pay it, of course, by our standards, is by producing their cheap labour to keep the price of our coffee, our sugar, our cotton, our bananas, carnations and other beautiful flowers and so on, low enough so that we will be able to afford them easily and never come within sight of the kind of malnutrition that their children suffer.

The role of the IMF is illustrated in this Bill but not in full detail. The information from the departmental staff indicates that loans will be made at 0.5 per cent to certain countries under conditions that they tighten the screws still further on their population in order to repay. But the grant will be used to make up the difference between that one-half per cent and whatever is the rate, perhaps 8 per cent, 10 per cent or 12 per cent, at which the IMF will receive the money from the creditor countries. In other words, the borrowers—the people in countries like Africa and Central America, Latin America—are not really benefiting by this so-called easy or cheap interest rate. It is the Fund itself which benefits and, along with that, about 13.5 per cent of the repayments go to the private banks. The private banks in our country benefit by the kind of money that is being put in as proposed in this Bill today.

The responsibility for repaying the loan is attributed to countries like Guatemala, El Salvador, Brazil, Peru and so on, but the benefit of it does not come to them. On paper there is a benefit. Instead of being in debt for 50 years, they will be allowed to pay it more slowly and be in debt for 100 years to come. In other words, they will be locked into what is called debt peonage.

The basis of this debt peonage is the declining prices of agricultural and other raw products, but primarily agricultural products.

At a conference yesterday dealing with Central America, we were told by an official of CIDA that there is no use trying to stop the decline of agricultural prices. That is a very convenient statement of fact. Is it not nice for us coffee drinkers that it is impossible to stop the lowering of the price of coffee to the men and women who actually produce it? I suppose, according to our officials, it is supposed to be some inevitable law of God that agricultural prices must decline and there is nothing we can do about it, so we say. Certainly there is nothing we can do about it by the rules we have created.

I think the principal thought for the IMF under these circumstances was actually enunciated a century ago by Lewis Carroll in Alice in Wonderland and the verses about the walrus and the carpenter.

After they invited the oysters for a walk and were eating them, the oysters complained. The verse is:

> "I weep for you", the walrus said; I deeply sympathize, with sobs and tears he sorted out those of the largest size, holding his pocket handkerchief before his streaming eyes.

The carpenter was complaining that the walrus only held the handkerchief in front of his eyes so that the carpenter could not see how many oysters he was eating.

Lewis Carroll thought he was joking, but apparently the IMF has taken him seriously. What we heard yesterday at the round table conference on Central America, for example, concerns this same point, the prices of agricultural products.

Mr. Gabriel Siris, Director of the country program of the Economic Committee for the Latin American countries of the United Nations, told us in part that;

> Another determinant of today's economic crisis is the downturn in exports of traditional goods, which in the past had been the principal engine of growth for these economies.

He is referring to Central America.

He went on to say:

> Basic agriculture commodities, such as coffee, cotton, and bananas constitute a major source of savings for investment in other sectors, principally industry.

He went on to detail the sharp drop in world prices of their chief export commodities. For the seven years from 1980 to 1987, coffee dropped 41 per cent; cotton dropped 31 per cent; bananas dropped 7 per cent; sugar dropped 83 per cent; and beef dropped 12 per cent. With such a sharp drop, he said that it is no accident that every country in the region has slid into economic depression during this decade, regardless of its degree of civil strife or the prevailing political structure. He went on to say:

> Preliminary estimates indicate that the losses resulting from decreases in the volume of traditional export goods average more than half a billion dollars a year; the losses attributable to drops in prices are even greater.

Therefore, more than half a billion dollars is taken out of those countries by the devices that our countries use to force agricultural prices down.

I do not see any sign that the IMF will change its policy. We read in the newspapers that it will not. An article yesterday in the Ottawa Citizen quotes Mr. Camdessus as saying: "I see no readiness by Governments of the major creditor countries to entertain such an approach."

He was referring to debt relief. He refers also to the desperate condition not just of Central America but to the whole of Latin America.

The same principle applies in Latin America as in Central America, as in Africa. The IMF is not helping those countries to recover. It is driving them deeper into the hole. Unless Canada can persuade the IMF, along with other countries, to alter its policy then the money we put in there does not help them but hurts them. It only benefits the banks in our countries.

Mr. Manly: My colleague said that it almost comes down to the man with the hoe. I agree with him, except that to a large extent in the world today it comes down to the woman with the hoe or even the child with the hoe.

The reality is that entire families are forced into wage slavery, producing these commodities where the bottom has dropped out of prices.

I am reminded of the old story of the company store. The harder you work, the more you owe. You owe your soul to the company store. We have had ample illustration of that in some of the single industry towns in Canada, Mr. Speaker, where people were literally locked into a kind of wage slavery. The company store would extend credit to them. When it looked as though people might be going under, the company store would extend a little more credit to them, always keeping them on the hook. In a sense that is what the IMF has done.

The Member spoke about this vicious spiral that we have. It is a downward spiral. It is not just a vicious cycle. It is a vicious downward spiral with a drop in commodity prices. That in turn leads the poor people of the poor countries to produce more to try to make up the short-fall for the drop in prices. When they produce more there is a glut in the market, causing a further decline in commodity prices. This vicious downward spiral has a direct impact upon the poor.

How can this vicious cycle be broken? What steps should Canada be taking? What steps should the IMF be taking? What steps would the Members, like the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to take next month when he meets with the other so-called world leaders in Toronto?

Mr. Heap: I thank my hon. colleague for his question, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that he has a strong background on this subject through his work in connection with official development aid through CIDA.

The question that he poses is one which I think should be addressed by a committee when this Bill, after second reading, is referred to committee. I would hope this very question would receive very close attention in the committee. Although I may not be a member of it, I would be interested if possible in attending and assisting in the work of that committee.

As to what could be done, I believe the answer has to be that the kind of conditionality traditionally imposed by the International Monetary Fund must be changed. Instead of conditions forcing countries to export more and therefore often to import more machinery, fuel, herbicides, fertilizer and so on, the conditions to be required by the IMF should rather concern the well-being of the people of a particular country, not the well-being of the IMF. Is the IMF following policies which enable people to eat better, to have schools for their children and to have decent houses? That is not expected all in one year, but is the IMF moving in that direction? If not, the IMF should seek ways in which it can move in that direction and not look at the balance of exports and the ability to repay debts.

A proposal was put forward by a number of people at a conference held in Oxford last month at which a Member from each Party in Canada attended. The debt repayments from Central America mostly owed to governments and multilateral groups should be retained in Central America in the Central American Bank and recycled for the development of Central America, particularly for projects that would encourage two or more countries to co-operate together.

A suggestion was made that a railroad could be built running the length of Central America, a revolutionary proposal, Mr. Speaker. There are railroads but there is no Central American railroad, only feeder lines running down to the sea. A railroad might help to bring those people together and avoid future wars. Projects like that could be considered by our committee for suggestion to the International Monetary Fund, and I hope they would be, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is suggesting that the countries in Central America should export less. It would seem to me that the logical result, since there would be fewer exports, would be that more and more of their products would remain within a given country. Is the Member suggesting that each of the economies in Central America should then become internalized and that there be as little as possible trade with the outside world? In conjunction with that, how long can an economy last in any part of the world if it cuts down on trade and tries to improve its future only by trading within?

Mr. Heap: I thank the Member for his question, Mr. Speaker, because it is very pertinent. Mr. Siri pointed out yesterday that one of the most painful casualties of the economic recession has been the Central American Common Market. It is not only a question of whether countries will sell carnations to Canada, but they used to trade among themselves and there were complimentary activities in different countries.

Trade between the countries, which in the past constituted the driving force behind the industrial sector, has plummeted to the levels of the early 1960s, less than one-third of the values recorded during the peak period of 1979-80. It is not a question of whether they will trade, but what kind of trade. When good land is used to grow carnations for our entertainment and pleasure while children lack beans and rice so they can grow to adulthood, that is wrong. There is no justification for any kind of talk about trade which suggests that carnations for us are more important than beans or rice for children. People were producing beans and rice before we came to help them with the IMF. I think they feel that with friends like the IMF they do not need enemies.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have been appreciating the debate by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). He has explored particularly the Latin American dimensions of the debt peonage in which people and many countries find themselves these days. It is a problem, and we are using the word frequently. It seems so far from us and it rarely receives much attention in the House of Commons. Today the Government has a Minister presenting the Bill and is expecting that it will go to a vote quite rapidly. I know the Member has had profound concern about these matters himself and has been involved with others in trying to arouse the concern of Canadians for much stronger action than this Bill proposes.

Could he tell us in the minute or two that he has something of his conclusions from that experience about the concern of Canadians for their brothers and sisters in other parts of the world and how that can be aroused. The Government in arousing Canadian support and support in the other industrial countries is going for much stronger action than the International Monetary Fund, a much better directed action with much larger resources than the International Monetary Fund appears ready to bring to bear.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I want to answer on two points very briefly. There is a great deal of volunteer work being done by Canadians in Central America. Some of it is funded or assisted by CIDA. Some of it depends entirely on the churches or on other non-publicly funded non-governmental organizations. This shows that Canadians are very interested in what can be done in a practical way.

Second, some of our CIDA projects I believe are very good. I had an opportunity last year to visit a bee farm while in Nicaragua with the International Parliamentary Union. I saw a relatively modern type of bee farm, that is to say there were boxes such as we have here instead of hollow logs which were there before. African bees have to be watched more carefully, but they produce more, and together with that, a new kind of fruit, which probably grew there wild, is on the market and which is doubling in output since the beehives were brought in there.

The person who took me there is an apiarist from Alberta, one of the many people who had gone from Alberta to help the people in that region. He is an apiarist who was sent by CIDA to help farmers like that develop their land. He does not have a huge plantation of thousands of acres, he has about 40 acres, perhaps, and he feels he is doing very well with the technology that was shown to him by the Canadian apiarist. I think there are projects like that which could be multiplied many times over.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, when this Bill came before us, I looked at it and it looked entirely innocuous. Had it been brought forward quickly, there might have been no debate on it at all. That is really too bad, and it says something about deficiencies in our process.

This Bill, which is an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, is in fact of major importance. It provides the House an opportunity to discuss the debt crisis in the Third World, and of course, that is one of those issues which is important and in fact absolutely crucial to the future of our world but which this particular Parliament seldom if ever discusses.

When members of the public complain that we are a bit trivial and are worried only about what Minister is taking loans from whom or how many pairs of shoes so and so happens to keep in his closet or something like that, and why do we not talk about the important things, I would reply that today we have such an opportunity and I would hope that Members of the Progressive Conservative and Liberal Parties in the House of Commons would take the opportunity to discuss this very serious question.

Let us make no mistake. We are talking about some 120 less developed countries. Their debt now amounts to about one and one-quarter trillion dollars. A lot of that debt was run up during the 1970s during the oil crisis when there was a great deal of recycling of oil revenues which went through the banks of the developed, industrialized world and were then put into the less developed countries.

Unfortunately, for political or other reasons many of those loans have not proven to be particularly good. In particular, the ability of those countries to support that debt, to use it for development and to pay it off has been tragically undermined because of the change in relative commodity prices over the course of the last eight or ten years and because of the recession in the industrial world at the beginning of the 1980s. As well, it is because, dare I say it, of the fact that the major markets for goods, services and commodities that could be sold by the developing world, the markets in the industrial countries, have not been particularly receptive to the kind of growth those countries would have needed in order to maintain the debt that was almost forced upon them back in the late 1970s at the time of the oil crisis.

As my colleague from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands has already indicated, the New Democratic Party is glad that this issue is being debated in the House of Commons through Bill C-126, and we are taking this debate very seriously. At the same time, we are uneasy about this Bill. It indicates the kind of priority the Government has given to the Bill. When the Government of Canada proposes to play its part in a $10 billion facility to help the poorest of the less developed countries, it does so in the form of a two page Bill which gives almost no clue in the explanatory notes as to what it is all about. I do not think that this subject deserves such paltry treatment as that.

This Bill provides for Canada to advance about $550 million Canadian, equivalent to about 300 million special drawing right units or SDR units of the IMF, to the International Monetary Fund for its Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility, plus an additional $250 million in grants to the same facility.

This Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility was agreed to at the Venice Summit meeting of the seven economic powers in June of 1987 and calls for a total enhancement of about $10 billion Canadian or 6 billion SDRs to provide funding to deal with the structural development programs of the poorest developing countries. There was already a facility in place that was begun in 1986. This is also known as a structural adjustment facility, and it had a value of 2.7 billion SDRs.

The idea is that the money in the fund will be lent at very low interest rates of one-half of 1 per cent by the IMF to the poorest countries in order to allow them to service debts and to maintain necessary imports. The difference between that and market interest rates will be made up by grants from the participating countries such as Canada.

As far as Canada is concerned, to some extent, we are committing foreign aid funds into the 1990s. The $250 million in grants for this facility will be used up in a few years, and we will be looking at a continuing commitment for this interest rate subsidy of perhaps $50 million a year as long as this Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility stays in place.

As my colleague has already pointed out, this particular provision is a double-edged sword for the very poor countries. Advances from the International Monetary Fund will be accompanied by policy advice from the IMF relative to economic growth, deficits, export-oriented policies and privatization policies pursued by the developing countries in question. This means that this facility is a means for the western industrial nations to impose their agendas on developing countries. I will return to that in a few moments, because it seems to me that that is very important and could be and is very dangerous.

Let us look at the price the developed countries are paying in order to impose their agendas on large numbers of developing countries. It is not that great when one considers that the current total of Third World debt is about a trillion and a quarter dollars or $1,250 billion or thereabouts, and $10 billion in this enhanced structural adjustment facility is therefore less than 1 per cent of the outstanding amount of the debt. However, many of the less developed countries are so poor, so desperate, that they have no choice but to accept the money from the International Monetary Fund and the advice that goes with it. It seems to me that that is a matter about which we should express some very real concern.

My friend and colleague, a former NDP Member from Saskatoon, Father Bob Ogle, went with a Parliamentary Committee to Brazil a few years ago, and I met him when he came back. I asked him what he found, and he told me that he had been able, through his networks, because he served as a missionary in northern Brazil, to see people and to go places to which the committee would not have been taken by the Brazilian Government or even by our own diplomats because they do not know the areas that well.

He remarked that when he went to towns where he had worked 10 or 15 years earlier as a missionary, he went to the markets and saw what the people there were carrying home from the markets. I recall the conversation I had with him very vividly. He said: "If you are living at that level of development, then everything you can spend on food, you spend, so that when you go to the market and take your week's food home, you are taking everything you can afford. You have paid whatever else you have to pay in terms of rent or any taxes or other things you have to pay", and he said what people were taking home to their families in the early 1980s was only just over half of what they had been taking home 10 or 15 years earlier.

To me and to Father Ogle, that was a vivid example of just what is happening in that part of Brazil, a country which has substantial industrial development in the southern industrial area between Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro.

At a recent convention my Party took on this question of the agenda the IMF has been imposing upon the Third World. My Party does not always refer to its convention resolutions in the House of Commons, but this time I think it is particularly apt and deserves quoting. Policy (b)3(2) says in part that the IMF, in pursuit of monetarist objectives, has imposed conditions upon Third World countries which have led to drastic devaluations of currencies, reduction of already low wage levels, elimination of food subsidies, and cut-backs in social services. Enforcement of these unpopular policies has required repressive internal security measures which are directly counter to development. At that point we, assembled in our convention, called upon the Government of Canada to respond positively to Third World proposals for immediate debt relief such as the repayment at a rate equal to a ceiling of 10 per cent of export earnings proposed by the President of Peru, Alan Garcia Pérez.

That was the proposal, but the situation we have now is such that it is estimated in the last five or six years there has been some $125 billion more sucked out of poor, less-developed countries in debt servicing and debt repayment than went into those countries. Those countries have perforce followed the script written by the IMF and the industrial countries in a way which I do not believe would be tolerable in this country.

Recently the Canada-Mexico parliamentary group met here. We talked at length about Third World debt. The people we talked to were representatives of the Popular Revolution Party, the governing Party for the last 50 or 60 years in Mexico, a country with an unusual form of democracy. The message they brought to us was that there have to be answers. The problems of debt servicing are killing Mexico, a country which is rather more advanced with a higher per capita income and higher standard of industrial development than many of the other less-developed countries.

During the period of office of the current President of Mexico, real wages for Mexican workers have tumbled by 30 per cent, 40 per cent or 50 per cent. The level of underemployment and unemployment is tragic. Even in the industrialized areas immediately adjacent to the U.S. border, workers are paid the equivalent of about 40 cents or 50 cents an hour Canadian. That is a good wage compared to the standard in the rest of Mexico.

When I got home last night I noticed an article in The Ottawa Citizen from The New York Times Service which talked about concern throughout Latin America, which was reflected when I met with the Mexican parliamentarians just a few weeks ago. A number of people, including economists from different Latin American countries, point out that over the past five years alone Latin America has financed $145 billion in debt repayment. What they are saying is that the IMF prescriptions have now been tested in 28 of the 32 Latin American and Caribbean nations, the policy of what is called investment through growth. That policy has produced adjustments but it has not produced growth. It has not produced an ability to solve the problems of those particular people. In fact, it has produced exactly the contrary.

I will give another example which would perhaps indicate the depth of the problem. The other day I was speaking to someone from Jamaica. There, because of import duties and conditions of life and that kind of thing, an ordinary man's shirt can cost $50 or $60. A Datsun automobile which might sell second-hand for $3,000 or $4,000 in this country costs $30,000 or $40,000. Of course, incomes are far lower there than here. That gives you an idea of the disparities that exist there.

The IMF, according to the Latin Americans, has four commandments: Get your prices right; balance your budget; open up the economy; and privatize. All at the same time. I would like to ask my colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon, or my colleague from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands, or my colleague from Spadina, all NDP Members, where they have heard that particular prescription before. I know where we have heard it. We have heard it from Washington and Ronald Reagan. We have heard it from the United Kingdom and Margaret Thatcher. We have heard it from the Fraser Institute. We have heard it from all the gurus of the right in the U.S. and the U.K.

Mr. Friesen: You forgot Helmut Kohl.

Mr. Cassidy: It has created massive unemployment in the northern part of the U.K. It has made the U.S. the biggest debtor nation in the world. These nostrums of the right have not even worked in the developed world but they have been applied with a vengeance against countries too economically weak to fight back.

One of the reasons I raise this issue is the fact that our record on assistance to the Third World was relatively good. It is a heck of a lot better than that of the U.S. where development assistance is only one-half the portion of GNP that it is here. It is a hell of a lot better than in the U.K. when you note that Canadian development aid in sheer dollars is now greater than what Margaret Thatcher and her Conservative Government is prepared to devote around the world. That is shameful for a country which has had a great international mission as the U.K. has had for many years.

Canada provided leadership last year at both the Commonwealth Conference and the conference la francophonie in Québec when we effectively wrote down or wrote off hundreds of millions of dollars of government-to-government loans extended by Canada to countries in la francophonie and the poorest countries of the Commonwealth. We have shown some leadership, but we are not doing it here because there is no indication from the Department of Finance that the Government has said boo about the agenda to be imposed in this enhanced structurally adjustment facility. In other words, even if the Government, for political and other reasons, has now backed off its determination to eliminate the deficit at all costs, even if it is having second thoughts about its agenda for privatization when it finds Canadians do not want Petro-Canada privatized, even if it has been backing off some of the extreme right wing policies it hoped to bring in when it took office three and a half years ago for its first and last four years, it is supporting the Ronald Reagans and Margaret Thatchers when they say to the IMF: Let us make those poor countries shape up regardless of the impact on people in the developing world.

I would have liked to see Canada really taking the lead. I note that the presidents of Canada's banks, who are not noted for being particularly socially enlightened, are now beginning to speak in a very strong way about Third World debt. Just the other day the chairman of the Royal Bank of Canada, in a speech in Los Angeles, urged that the Group of Seven meeting, the economic summit taking place in Toronto about a month from now, should give priority to the trillion dollar debt crisis of the Third World. We know the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has certain privileges in terms of setting the agenda for that particular conference.

• (1330)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express the strong desire that our Prime Minister put the debt crisis of under-developed countries on the agenda of the meeting of the G-7 to be held in Toronto in a few weeks.

I note that Mr. Ritchie, the President of the Bank of Nova Scotia, also made the same request, that the Third World debt crisis be on the agenda of the Economic Summit.

[English]

I do not know how to say it strongly enough, but the figures and facts all point in the same way. We need a more human and humane policy by the International Monetary Fund. We need a recognition that one cannot get blood from a stone. The IMF's policies now are effectively implicating this country in ways which we could never tolerate here. We are saying to these countries that regardless of the starvation, the child prostitution, the family breakup and regardless of the other impact of policies the IMF is imposing, they are going to have to do it in order to get funds without which their country cannot survive. Literally, some of these countries are going to go bankrupt.

We need to have a more human and humane policy by the IMF and in the committee when this matter goes to the Standing Committee on Finance. My Party and I will be looking for commitments from the Government, far stronger commitments than we heard before. We will be looking to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his colleagues to press in the IMF, the World Bank, the United Nations, the G-7, the OECD, every form available, so that Canada will become a leader in the industrial word for humane policies that will stop this savage, repressive, industrial country, right wing agenda which the Thatchers and Reagans are imposing on the IMF, and which Canada is joining in having the IMF impose on 120 countries where the bulk of the world population lives, and where there is suffering to the level of starvation because of the economic policies of the developed world.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, Harry Golden, the American journalist, once said: "We are on a single ball of twine and if you follow it, everything kind of crosses and recrosses". I want to ask my hon. colleague about an issue about which he is very concerned, that is, the Canada-U.S. Trade Deal as it relates to this issue, and I will explain how it relates.

Part of the conditionality, the very strict severe conditions that are laid upon Third World countries, comes from the fact that the IMF has a limited pool of funds in its resources. The World Bank has very limited resources it makes available. When these institutions were set up under the Bretton Woods Agreement at the end of the Second World War, the United States was the major contributor and, therefore, the United States, of course, had the largest vote, because the votes are weighted in accordance with the contribution.

I was very disturbed to read in the Senate report on world debt published just last April that the United States is opposing any increase in the capitalization of these international financial institutions. It wants to keep the capitalization the same because it does not want to put in any more money itself. However, at the same time, it does not want to lose its veto over the way in which these funds are being used. In other words, the United States is not prepared to carry its weight with these international financial institutions, but it wants to throw its weight around.

How does my hon. colleague react to this in light of the fact that Canada will be going into a trade arrangement with the United States? What does that say about any kind of equality with the United States in being able to secure some kind of just arrangements when Canada faces difficulties?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think that good fences make good neighbours. I think if a country becomes too dependent on another country, it leads to very unfortunate things in terms of its foreign policy. Anyone who has been to the United Nations has seen the way certain Central American countries and Israel, I regret to say, vote faithfully with the United States, no matter what it wants them to do. They vote like lap dogs. I do not want to see Canada come to that point in the IMF or anywhere else.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, a couple of years ago that U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker proposed there be some additional resources channelled toward debtor nations. However, the managing director of the International Monetary Fund himself confesses, saying: "Look. This is the only way we can go. We have no other solution because the industrial countries are defining the policies that control the institution". As my friend, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), points out, the United States is playing a beggar my neighbour policy within the IMF. It will not allow the quotas to be increased because it does not want to put more money in itself. It is 20th in terms of the proportion of the GNP given to development aid of the major countries which are aid donors around the world. The U.S. donates only half as much a proportion of their GNP as does Canada, and a lot of that American aid is, I am afraid, motivated by ideology rather than perhaps directly by need.

If the IMF is now getting the message that there is no point in even trying to implement the Baker plan, that the Baker plan is dead, then where the devil are we? Do we have a sense of crisis here or not? Do we have a sense of the importance or, in this spaceship earth, are we of the view that we in North America can fly on our own in one direction while the rest of the world is allowed to starve? I hope my friend from Ottawa Carleton will talk about this as a man who has in fact worked in the Third World, to say whether he agrees with imposing Margaret Thatcher's policies on countries like Kenya.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), as well as the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) spent considerable time dealing with the poverty in Central America which is undoubtedly a crisis issue about which all of us are concerned. However, a year or two ago, General Umberto Ortega, who is Daniel Ortego's brother and the Minister of Defence, deposited in his bank account in Switzerland, account No. 58946 in Banque Nationale de Paris, $1.5 million in one fell swoop. How much was already in there we do not know and how much the other commandantes have in these Swiss bank accounts we do not know. Let us say they have none. Let us say it is just the $1.5 million. Does the Member not agree that given the impoverishment in Nicaragua itself, and all of us have seen it, it would have gone a considerable distance to alleviating the poverty and helping the reconstruction in Nicaragua if he had forgotten about the Swiss bank account and put that money into the economy of Nicaragua?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the allegations made by my hon. friend. He is a parliamentarian of long standing in this House. During the period prior to the Sandanistas taking over and the revolution in Nicaragua, some eight or nine years ago, I would wager that my hon. friend, despite his activity in parliamentary reform and that kind of thing, never once in this House of Commons raised a complaint about the way in which the Somoza regime had drained Nicaragua dry, how it had sucked the wealth out of Nicaragua, how it had taken the livelihood from men, women and children in that country over a period not just of years but of decades.

Mr. Dick: Two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. Cassidy: The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) seems to think that General Somoza was okay, according to what he is saying.

Mr. Dick: That is not what I said. I said two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. Cassidy: The American Government and the Canadian Government were complicit in that kind of thing going on. I have yet to hear, in my four years in the House of Commons, my friend, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) say once what I am about to say right now, that I think it is criminal that the United States should have cut off trade with Nicaragua, which had a thriving and effective trade in cattle and other agriculture products with the United States. It was helping to keep Nicaraguans alive and give them a standard of living.

The United States complained about the fact that Nicaragua was trading too much with the Soviet Union, but, of course, it was similar to the Cuban boycott 25 years ago. The United States left Nicaragua with absolutely no choice because it cut off its trade with United States. Even today with the peace process which is working in Nicaragua that has not changed. I call on my hon. friend to do what he can, as I can do what I can, in order to try to loosen up that situation and allow Nicaraguans access to their natural markets in all of North America, including the United States, so that all Nicaraguans can have a reasonable standard of living in peace and justice.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has mentioned the trillion dollar debt of these 120 Third World countries. I would like to ask him to comment on what was said by an economist at the conference on Central America yesterday. He said the only way they can pay that debt back is with a trade surplus. If those 120 countries among them have a trade surplus with other countries it means other countries have, according to this economist, a trade deficit. What he asks is which of the lending countries is willing to accept a trade deficit in order to enable those countries to have the trade surplus to repay the trillion dollars. I would ask my hon. friend if he can illuminate that problem.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I can illuminate the problem. I am not sure that the developed world has really faced that particular problem.

I note that the United States sent 40 per cent of its exports to developing countries in 1981 but that it has lost more than half of these markets. One of the reasons is because the developing countries cannot afford to buy any more. That of course in turn helps to explain a great deal of the American trade deficit which is causing such problems. We are all in this boat together.

I wish to make one other point, too, which is addressed to the Hon. Member for Lanark—Renfrew—Carleton, the Associate Minister of National Defence the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta and other Members of the Conservative Party. I do not know now why certain among them seem to line up uncritically with every tinpot right wing dicatator who is sapping his less developed country. One does not have to support that kind of thing in order to be a Conservative. A Conservative is quite able it seems to me to advocate Conservative policies without advocating the kind of repression of human rights which exist in those countries which are often supported by the United States and, unfortunately, which are also often supported by policies which are being advocated by the International Monetary Fund.

I would like to see members of the Conservative Party join with us in expressing concern about the debt crisis rather than lining up on the other side.

Mr. Dick: You're an asshole, Mike. You don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the Associate Minister of National Defence should withdraw that word which I am sure is unparliamentary.

Mr. Dick: Whatever is the truth I would like to withdraw the word, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in this very important debate on Bill C-126. As my colleagues have already pointed out, this debate gives us a very important opportunity to consider the profound problems which have arisen in the developing countries in these last years, problems which began to develop in the 1970s and have during this decade reached tragic dimensions for country after country.

We here in Canada, whether Members of Parliament or so many of our citizens are often insulated from the situation that exists. However, I recognize in my own constituency of Thunder Bay—Nipigon some of the smaller communities, particularly those which are Indian reserves, about which the Canadian Government has done so little, that the Canadian people have failed so badly to recognize the challenges of development. There certainly are areas in Canada of misery. However, what has happened in one country after another of the so-called Third World during these last years is a tragic situation which the proposal of the Government has put before us will do little to resolve. In fact, one might say it will do nothing to resolve it. It may go some little way toward helping. But there is not here in these proposals any kind of a resolution.

After all, the Bill proposes to authorize contributions by Canada to an enhanced structural adjustment facility which will be operated within the International Monetary Fund-World Bank arrangements which date back to the Bretton Woods Conference of 1944. This facility, this pooling of a certain amount of western, industrial financial resources, to make available in the way of concessionary financing at very low interest rates to countries is on the right track. When it is such a limited facility, when it adds to the 2.7 billion in the way of special drawing right units that was put into an earlier facility in 1986, another 6 billion of these SDR units, an addition of some $10 billion, we have only very limited action when we recognize that the debt of the developing countries in fact exceeds $1 trillion U.S. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), has pointed out that it is $1.25 trillion of debt.

We in the Democratic caucus are profoundly concerned about the inadequacy of the arrangement. We are perhaps even more profoundly concerned about the failure of the G-7, the leaders of the industrial countries, including of course the Canadian Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who in June of 1987 at the summit in Venice agreed to deal with the situation that faces us.

I am particularly concerned about the situation because of what has happened in sub-Saharan Africa and perhaps across the whole continent of Africa. We have among us of course people with various interests. My friend, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), has a profound concern about the Central American and Latin American situation. I had the enormous privilege as an undergraduate student 25 years ago last summer of spending the summer of 1962 in West Africa as an Operations Crossroads Africa participant in a student group of largely American students, with one Mexican student. I was the Canadian in the group as it happened.

The dozen of us spent a month in a work camp in northern Ghana. We spent additional time visiting other parts of Ghana. We also spent a few days in Nigeria as well. I will never forget those experiences, which were among the most formative of my life, in sharpening my perception of the lives and the history of various peoples. It was an enormously exciting time to be in West Africa. Those were the days of independence. The Black Star stood proudly on the tower in Accra and President Kwame Nkrumah anticipated independence in country after country in black Africa. There was such enormous hope about what independence would enable the African peoples to achieve. There was even then some recognition of the economic ties that these countries were still living within. Economic neo-colonialism was certainly one of the concerns expressed in those days. However, there was all the excitement about development in Africa 25 years ago.

We would gather at public events, hold hands in a circle and sing John Donne's No Man is an Island. There in the reminder of the unity that a Canadian later on put in the language of the global village was something of the personal experience sharing with Africans in their hopes. John Donne reminds us: "—and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee". I ask this afternoon in debating this particular proposal whether among us there is much recognition of the fact that the poverty, the distress, the disease, the degradation, the death of thousands, of hundreds of thousands—millions in the cumulative sense—of people around the globe in these various countries, recognition among us that the bell is tolling and that it has its terrible overtones and consequences for us if we fail to recognize that reality.

These countries which looked forward to a great future of development have ended up falling into what can simply be described as debt slavery. The Hon. Member for Spadina spoke of debt peonage which puts it into the language of Central America. Here are whole countries ground down into slavery under the demands of the western nations, the commercial banks, and that financial structure created at the end of the Second World War in order to bring prosperity to the world. That debt poverty and slavery that grips and grinds down so many of the people of this earth is the final commentary on the failure of the arrangements made in the mid-1940s.

The leaders of the industrial countries are maintaining the demands of the International Monetary Fund that the obligations incurred in the 1970s and the 1980s are met. There has been some forgiveness. The current Government deserves some credit for the forgiveness to the seven poorest African countries. In a large measure there is still the requirement that the payments be made. The payments can only be made if the countries have a balance in their trade in order that they can earn the foreign exchange required to make the payments. Consequently, exports have to be pushed and imports have to be cut back, and there should be a balance available in such circumstances. To some extent a government could decide to follow that course. In the Nkrumah days that Government did limit imports in order to ensure that foreign exchange was available for development purposes. That is not happening these days. That money leaves Africa, or the countries of Latin America, or the Asian countries, in order to meet obligations incurred in the 1970s.

Without spending any amount of time on how that happened, in facing up to the responsibility we have here, we ought to recognize that when the price of petroleum was driven up by OPEC in the early 1970s and the whole western financial system got busy with what it could do with all this money, which could not be digested or absorbed by the OPEC countries, it ended up as deposits in the western banks. Deposits are liabilities. What is wanted are assets, and assets are loans. Banks internationally, as they did in Canada in those years, were pushing loans to build up their assets in a wild rush to destruction. Now the leaders of the industrialized countries, the International Monetary Fund directors, and the World Bank are involved in trying to head off that destruction that follows from that type of activity.

Given our complicity, that of the leaders of the industrialized countries, and the leaders of financial institutions, and what happened in the 1970s and 1980s, surely in the circumstances of loans that were made that could not be repaid in any sensible manner, and loans that were not oriented to development which would not achieve the type of profits required to pay off the debt incurred, it is necessary to take up the need for action.

I will not take the time to indicate in detail how tragic the situation has become in Africa. When we recognize that the debt service has now reached the level of 50 per cent of Gross National Product, one recognizes the type of shackles on African countries. When one contemplates the fact that the level of per capita income fell between 1980 and 1986 by 10.8 per cent, this is the very opposite of development.

For many years, one of the most impressive countries in western Africa was the Ivory Coast. It has been quite impressive in using western financial resource connections with France, particularly to develop itself. From statistics of per capita income, in the 1980s the per capita income in that country has fallen by no less than 23 per cent. That is the personal experience of individuals in those countries in the debt slavery imposed upon them.

Does Canada have a responsibility? Surely the answer can only be yes. Does Canada have the possibility of doing something about it? I would suggest if we return to the origins of Bretton Woods, some Members may wish to look at A.F.W. Plumptre's account of the organization of the Bretton Woods system. At the time Canada played its part between the Americans and the British. John Maynard Keynes was the British negotiator who was pressing for international arrangements that would make it possible for Britain to continue after the war and to continue after the U.S. lend-lease credits were cut off so abruptly when the war ended in Europe. He hoped for the type of assistance for reconstruction that was required, and he did not get it. Canada did all that it could to assist in that. In fact, in terms of lending to Britain in 1946 and 1947, Canada did more than the U.S. by a large measure, in fact to such an extent that Canada ended up in financial difficulties in 1947, which were only resolved by a combination of Canada's getting a share in the Marshall Plan expenditures by the U.S. and developments in the petroleum industry.

The fact is that in 1947 the United States recognized responsibilities for Europe that it had not seen when it was negotiating the International Monetary Fund arrangements in 1944 and 1945. The U.S. recognized the necessity of the Marshall Plan arrangements for European reconstruction. That recognition seems to point the way to what is required now. Canadian recognition of what is needed, and Canadian pressure on the United States to change its policies to recognize, as my colleagues have been pointing out, that orientation to the market, privatization, the imposition of these economic policies that I have been denouncing on one country after another lead not to development, but a grinding down into abject poverty for those countries.

There are proposals on the table that have been put forward as against the proposals of Mr. Baker from the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury which are very limited and piecemeal. What is required is to start with the most fundamental truth for the industrialized countries. If these countries of the Third World around the globe are forced to put all their resources and all their foreign exchange earnings into keeping the western banking structure going, we will end up in depression. As the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) pointed out, the U.S. decline as an exporter through this decade has been based on the fact that if a country cannot export what will happen to its industry?

The first principle and understanding is to recognize that somehow or another we need to take the weight of the western financial system off those countries for our own survival and in order to ensure that we are able to export, and do not see all the earnings of those countries ending up simply propping up the world banking structure.

I will end my comments at this point for lack of time. It is that type of wisdom that we have not seen from the Government which is so desperately needed for our sake and for the sake of the people of the entire earth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

SOCIAL ADVANTAGES

SALARY INSURANCE PROTECTION FUND

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing a special salary insurance protection fund or corporation, responsible for ensuring that workers will get salaries owed to them at the time when the Canadian enterprise where they are employed has declared bankruptcy.

—He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for this opportunity to present a motion that has been postponed several times, for various reasons, especially since Friday is not a day generally used to discuss Private Members' Business.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that after my motion was put on the Order Paper, there was a great deal of consultation, and the Government reacted favourably, since the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) said in the House this week that he expected to be able to introduce a bill, before the end of the next session, of course.

I would now like to explain my reasons for presenting this motion. First of all, corporate bankruptcies in Canada come under the Bankruptcy Act. This legislation, which came into effect in 1949, is now completely obsolete. Since 1970, various governments have, on six occasions, failed in their attempts to revise this Act. I think you will agree that protection of salaries in the case of corporate bankruptcy or receivership is an area where reform is badly needed, because workers are always hardest hit when factories close down. Any money they do receive is often paid many months later and generally represents only a small percentage of the amount owing.

Often, in cases of bankruptcy, the assets are not sufficient to pay secured creditors, so that there is no money left to pay the salaries of workers.

Mr. Speaker, improvements to this legislation have been in the works for twenty years, and during that time, just imagine how many workers, suddenly were out of a job that gave them a good living, lost their last week's wages!

As it stands today, the Bankruptcy Act ranks wage claims just before unsecured creditors. This means that wage claims rank only fourth and cover only wages due for services rendered during the three months immediately preceding the bankruptcy. The maximum amount of such claims is only $500.

Furthermore, bankruptcy procedures may take a very long time. It often takes months and even years to wind up a bankruptcy. However, the worker who has just been laid off and is unemployed needs those wages more than ever before. Unfortunately, the existing legislation does not provide for any compensation during that period.

Mr. Speaker, the inadequacy of these provisions has been an acknowledged fact for some time. Unfortunately, nothing has been done to remedy the problem. On May 5, 1975, Bill C-60 was tabled in the House of Commons. It proposed to give wages priority over any other secured or non-secured creditors, up to a total of $2,000 per employee. This kind of privileged treatment, known as top priority, would have given wage claims absolute priority, in other words, priority over any and all secured debts.

In its report on Bill C-60, the standing Senate committee responsible for bankruptcy indicated that giving wages top priority would substantially disrupt the business credit system. There are several reasons why the top priority clause is not the best way to protect wage-earners' rights. First of all, the clause would not guarantee absolutely payment of wages owing by a bankrupt business. In fact, the remaining assets of a company might not be sufficient to cover total wage claims. Furthermore, top priority for wage-earners would not necessarely guarantee speedy payment. In fact, it might take quite sometime before wage claims could be paid, since the sale and disposal of the assets of a bankrupt company can be a very lengthy procedure.

Furthermore, the courts would have to settle disputes and solve problems, which would likely prolong the process. A clause giving this top priority would not ensure that the employee could immediately obtain the funds needed to hold out until he finds work. The top priority clause is also very inconvenient, administratively. All money paid to the employee would have to be taken from the amounts owed to secured creditors. They too have deadlines to meet and they want to be paid. Distributing the salary claims payable would require a very complicated formula. For these reasons and many others, the top priority clause, although very attractive at first glance, is not the best way to protect employees of a company that goes bankrupt.

This was admitted by the Senate Committee, which recommended as an alternative the creation of a government-managed fund under the Bankruptcy Act to guarantee payment of wages owed when an employer declares bankruptcy. This proposal of a managed fund seems to have had the support of the Government of the time. The then-Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is here today, the Hon.

Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), said, "If it can be shown to be justified, a funded insurance formula would obviously be the most desirable solution." However, nothing was done at the time. Bill C-12, presented in 1980, was another attempt to reform the Bankruptcy Act. In 1981, a committee chaired by Mr. Raymond Landry, now Dean of the Faculty of Law at the University of Ottawa and former Bankruptcy Superintendent, was charged with finding ways to protect employees.

In its report presented in October 1981, the Landry Committee recommended creating an employee protection fund. Despite the recommendations of the Landry Committee, Bill C-17, presented in 1984, contained essentially the same provisions concerning employees as Bill C-12. However, it was later amended to give priority to salary claims. Since Bill C-17 died on the Order Paper, we are still left with this old 1949 law, which, as I already said, protects employees very badly. It is precisely because I feel that this situation cannot continue that I have moved my motion.

In 1984, employees of bankrupt companies lost about $10 million in wages. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, how frustrating it must be for a worker to lose not only his job but even the wages earned over the previous weeks?

What impact does this have on the lives of the spouse, the children and the friends? If it's a company which provided a high percentage of the area's jobs, have you thought of the impact on local businesses? If there is no solution in view in that kind of a situation, then anxiety, terror, anger set into people's minds. This is generally what happens, and it becomes a tragedy. Sometimes, workers learn through the media that their business has been forced into bankrusptcy by a creditor. And the same evening the door is locked—no more pay, no more jobs! Sometimes, the misery last longer. A first pay cheque bounces, and as things go at the bank, the second goes through—the company makes promises, they ask for some time, one cheque goes through—two, three or six weeks go by, with every one on eages, and it happens again. What kind of an atmosphere does that create in a home? It must be kept in mind, Mr. Speaker, that we are living in 1988. At any rate, whether employees learn of their plight suddenly or they started wondering a few weeks or a few months earlier, the result is always the same. With the loss of job, the loss of earned income, it is the last straw.

Often the average worker will make small purchases on credit, especially in small towns where everyone knows everybody else, indicating to the store owner he will pay up on his next pay day. And all of a sudden his pay cheque bounces at the bank because the company is no longer solvent. You can imagine what kind of mess that worker finds himself in.

Hon. Members no doubt will recall Maislin Transport's demise in March 1984. That was a very good example of the lack of protection afforded by the Bankruptcy Act in the area of wage claims. More than 1,000 workers at that time went through hard times and sustained substantial financial losses. All the 1160 Quebec and Ontario workers of that company could finally obtain in settlement of their wage claims was a meagre 35 cents on the dollar. To allow the same situation to happen again is simply unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), on March 21, 1984, said in this House, and I quote: "Recent events surrounding the Maislin bankruptcy settlement of unpaid employee's back salaries poignantly illustrate the immediate urgency for a new Bankruptcy Act providing wage protection for workers".

During the last election, Mr. Speaker, I met people who had suffered as a result of these corporate bankruptcies. In my riding as in all the other ridings in Canada, unfortunately, bankruptcies happen much too often. In the Drummond riding, some workers have incurred great losses. In August 1984, I was advised that a group of workers who had lost their jobs nearly one year before because of a bankruptcy, had received none of the wages they were entitled to. Yet, it was a supposedly prosperous business which had gone bankrupt and lost $5 million.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize that in the Drummond riding, between 1981 and 1984, over 1,500 industrial jobs were lost because of corporate bankruptcies. I remember that during the last election quite a number of Saint-Cyrille-de-Wendover owners with very large farms had gone bankrupt. As you know, today, our farmers investments are enormous. Each of these farms is worth over $1 million. Between 1981 and 1984, 40 per cent of the farm bankruptcies were in Central Quebec. You will understand that if we add these jobs lost to the 1,500 which I have just mentioned, it is a fairly enormous proportion. How much money do all these salaries lost combined represent? And how much distress was caused because the legislation was entirely inadequate?

You appreciate now the reason why I moved this motion and its importance, Mr. Speaker. A salary insurance protection fund would be a good social policy.

If I may, I should like to refer to only two cases of corporate bankrupcies. There is the case of Sincère Manufacturing Inc., a jeans manufacturer whose 300 employees agreed in 1982 to plow back into their company their vacation pay worth more than $80,000. They thought their gesture would help their company with its debt problems. Despite this, the company went into bankruptcy for some $700,000 and, a few weeks later, the employees lost everything: their money, their job, even their jeans.

The same thing happened in the case of Destel Inc., makers of kitchen-cabinets. After a period of substained growth, the company decided to reinvest more than a million dollars in a major project. The 1982 recession hit hard this industrial sector, and within 15 months, the company went into bankruptcy for 2.5 million dollars. Despite a recovery plan and the involvement of 125 workers, the employees lost their jobs and their money.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada, of Québec and of Drummondville should not have to face such situations. The British North America Act of 1867 gives Parliament the right to legislate in matters concerning and I quote, "bankruptcy and insolvency". As I mentioned, however, in this area, the federal Government has only enacted the Bankruptcy Act which, to say the least, is outdated. That is why some provinces, given this legislative void, have tried to protect the rights of wage-earners by enacting legislation concerning receivership and bankruptcy.

In 1975, the Office de la construction du Québec set up a fund to guarantee the payment of wages in the event of bankruptcies, insolvencies, disposal of personal assets and proposals of arrangements. This fund is financed by Canadian employers throughout Canada. Considering that there are approximately 12 million workers in this country, a contribution of about $2 per year by both employees and employers would be enough, whatever the industry, to create an insurance fund of some $50 million.

I suggest that there seems to be a consensus throughout Canada concerning this. Already, a number of provincial Governments have taken action, Manitoba and Ontario for instance. This trend can also be found at the international level. More and more industrialized nations have combined their priority status of salary claim scheme with another scheme providing for salary insurance protection for the payment of wages and other claims. Now over 20 industrialized nations have funds of this type.

Are we less civilized or compassionate than France or England? Most other industrialized nations have already taken steps to deal with salary protection in the event of a bankruptcy. Although it has been faced with this problem for a long time, Canada is still far behind, so far in fact that a number of provinces had to somewhat make up for that delay.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is time for us to remedy the situation. The time has come to implement a scheme to protect workers when their employers go bankrupt.

In view of the opinion expressed by several Parliamentary commissions and committees, both federal and provincial, in view of the leadership shown by member countries of the European Economic Community and the trend which already exists at the provincial level, it seems obvious that the best way to provide this protection is through the establishment of a salary insurance protection fund.

That is what I suggested in my motion, Mr. Speaker. This fund could be financed equally through contributions from both employers and employees and to achieve this aim, the amount of theses contributions does not need to be high. Red tape could be avoided by having the Unemployment Insurance Commission administer the fund. The UIC has the administrative mechanisms required to do the job and, as it happens, it already administers the Farm Credit Corporation AGR-3235 program under which a farmer is eligible for a sizeable amount the very day he declares bankruptcy. He also gets assistance, training and counselling provided by a manpower centre consultant. The man goes right back to work and cannot be said to be flat broke, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, I believe the establishment of such a fund would make it possible to achieve most of the objectives. Payments would be guaranteed and made quickly, and fund administration would be simple and not costly. In addition, any priority given to wage claims would not really prejudice the availability of credit for Canadian companies.

Mr. Speaker, this problem is harmful to millions of Canadian workers, and it can be solved without upsetting everything. We must dust off our antiquated bankruptcy legislation and give Canadian workers the protection they deserve.

This Government is on the verge of doing whatever is necessary to overhaul the bankruptcy legislation, and I would suggest that my motion is one of the major elements of the reform. I am confident it will rally the support of all Hon. Members.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the Hon. Member For Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) on his resolution. I want to thank him for bringing it forward because it is very important. We are dealing with a very antiquated bankruptcy law one which goes back to 1949. There have been many attempts in the past to try to bring amendments to the law or to revamp the bankruptcy legislation. This has not been done because it always seems to fall between the cracks at the end of a parliamentary session or what have you. Especially in the 1980s many employees have through no fault of their own lost everything. As the Hon. Member has said, social pressures happen to a family when a bankruptcy occurs, which are very serious.

In the last six months, 10 firms in my community have gone bankrupt. There has been absolutely no evidence of any kind of help for the employees involved, and certainly they are lowest on the priority list. There is no guarantee that they will get anything. It seems to me that it would make an awful lot of sense to look at some kind of legislation that would protect salaries.

New bankruptcy legislation should establish some kind of special salary protection fund and compensate workers for wages lost due to bankruptcies. When a company starts going into bankruptcy, the situation in the workplace is not always pleasant and there is a tremendous amount of tension. It becomes impossible for employees to put a little more effort into their jobs because their own worries and anxieties about what can happen to them take away from trying to save the companies involved. If the employees could put all their energies into trying to save the companies knowing that there was protection, it would be a great help.

France and Sweden have salary protection insurance schemes and it does not cost very much. It does not cost very much but it does work. If something like that could be implemented in Canada, I think this Parliament could be very proud of itself.

Canadian legislation does not see working people as a high priority. The bankruptcy law was brought in in 1949 and ignored the needs of the employees when companies went bankrupt.

In my community, major plants have closed, and we are still waiting for the Government to bring forward some kind of legislation that will help older workers. For those who are between 45 and 55 years of age, it is often very hard to get back into the workforce after jobs disappear. We as legislators have to deal with the majority of the people, and the majority of the people in Canada are working people. Certainly our laws should protect those people. We would do this if this resolution were implemented into legislation.

This is something New Democrats have been looking for over the years. In 1980, a Senate committee recommended that kind of legislation. Again, it fell between the cracks. I suppose that the Parliament of the day prorogued and by the time the new Parliament came in, it was no longer a priority.

Again, I would like to commend my hon. colleague for bringing forward what I think is a really important issue and something that should become a priority of this Parliament. It would not be very difficult to implement quite quickly legislation that would protect workers. It would not take very long to get the agreement of all Parties in the House on this. There are some things we do not agree on, but I think we could get agreement on something like this and quickly pass it. We would be leaving a legacy in that for the first time in 40 years, we would bring forward this kind of an amendment. It would not be very difficult to do, but it would change the lives of many working people.

In February of 1987, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) introduced a Bill to change the priority of payments of claims so that wages and salaries of employees would be protected to a limit of $9,000. This resolution calls for something like a national insurance fund paid for by all employers in Canada. It would not cost very much, and they could get a very good return on this investment. When things get tense in the workplace, employees are more productive if they are secure.

I have read editorials in Canadian newspapers dealing with how antiquated our bankruptcy laws are and how important it is to protect employees. Such legislation, however, still has not come forward. I certainly think that such legislation is long overdue.

I do not think that we would see any major opposition to such a proposal from employers. There have been enough hills and valleys in Canadian business life in this last decade that the employers realize the kinds of risks they take. It is important that they are able to protect their employees. As well, employers can be fairly open with their employees about the risks they are taking if they know that security exists, and it would be easier to build a team spirit which is so often important, particularly for small business.

With such legislation, not only would we help employees but we would reinforce the attitude that people are important, we do not simply treat them as commodities and then toss them aside when companies go bankrupt. We would be saying that our public policy cares about people who work and respects the dignity of work. We think it is important that that kind of attitude should exist.

I see in this resolution something that would have protected many people in my riding. I hope that we do not stop at bankruptcy but look at programs that provide assistance when plants are closed as well. Many plants in my riding have been closed, including Firestone, and now another one. I do not think the workers there will get benefits. Canada Packers in Winnipeg closed as well and the workers' severance pay has been cut off. Again, we have the attitude that the workers are not important, and I do not think that that is a Canadian value. The Canadian value is to treat people with dignity, and we want to make sure that when that work ceases through no fault of their own, the workers can continue on in some way.

Very often, homes are lost, families are dislocated and there is a tremendous amount of social pressure. That is what happens when employment is lost. We need some way to bridge that, and I think the resolution the Hon. Member has put forward is the first attempt to bridge that gap.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I want to say that we would support any kind of legislation that would flow from this resolution. It would be a step forward. However, I would ask the Hon. Member to support us when we deal with severance pay legislation and older worker readjustment programs. I see those as part and parcel of sudden unemployment.

Many people in my riding have applied for work, but because they are older, people would not hire them. They have given up and have become social dependents. That is not what we want to see when people have put 30 or 35 years of work into society.

I would conclude by saying that this is a first step in very important amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. The entire Act must be revamped because it is archaic. It was antiquated when it was brought in, and I do not think this Government has to feel responsible for that, but I would certainly like to see it do something about it. This resolution is an important amendment that could be brought in very quickly.

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, let me take a few minutes to congratulate the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) who tabled today what I consider to be a very important motion.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that for several years several members from all political parties have addressed the issue and it is well known that the Liberal Party has always turned a deaf ear to the recommendations made in this Chamber.

So, I will not be long, Mr. Speaker, for I know that after a certain time this motion cannot be passed. I will sit down with great pleasure and as the seconder of the motion, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault), and I wish him luck with it.

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to congratulate my colleague from Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) for his motion to the effect that the Government should consider the advisibility of establishing a salary insurance protection fund, responsible for ensuring that workers of a bankrupt business will get the salaries owed to them.

Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say that I agree completely with my colleague, that the present bankruptcy legislation is obsolete giving no adequate protection to the worker whose employer is bankrupt. I agree with my colleague on another point: the absolute priority is not a practical solution for reasons he mentionned.

As to the solution he puts forward today, namely the establishment of a salary protection fund for workers, it is along the same lines as the solution recommended by the Senate committee which examined previous legislation and it is also similar to the solution put forward by the Advisory committee on Bankruptcy and Insolvency in its report published in January 1988, and to what the Government will propose.

Although we can say now that the details concerning the operation of the workers protection fund still needs some refinement, the protection of workers is paramount in the reform of the Bankruptcy Act which the Government is about to table.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I can say that the Government is not prepared to let the bill end up where the six others did. We are now consulting all interested parties, among others the provincial and territorial governments, the Canadian Federation of Small Business, the Canadian Bar Association, and the ACEF of Quebec. These consultations will enable us to put the finishing touches and, hopefully, the bill will be tabled in the not too distant future.

Mr. Speaker, I might add that the bill the Government has in mind will not be a major overhaul of the legislation, but for openers it will deal with five or six issues which we think are much more urgent, so perhaps I might just mention them: first, protection for wage earners; second, secured creditors and receiverships; trade reorganizations; consumer arrangements and bankruptcies; preferred claims, including those of the Crown and, finally, amendments of a technical nature.

Mr. Speaker, such are the priorities of this Government, and I can say how very pleased I am that the Hon. Member chose to present this motion to the House. I hope the Bill will be up for consideration as soon as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

(Motion agreed to.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it three o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Accordingly, it being 3 p.m., this House stands adjourned until Tuesday, May 24, at, 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 2.36 p.m.

POINT OF ORDER

ABORTION—PROPOSED MOTION (MR. LEWIS)

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House, further to the call on a question of privilege by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), that I have received two letters. One is from the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the other is from the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). They are with respect to the same matter, that is, the proposed Government House order with respect to the abortion issue.

I want to advise both Hon. Members and the House that I view these as points of order, although there may be a tangential argument on privilege. At the moment, I view them as points of order.

I also want to indicate to both the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for Oshawa that I have given this matter a good deal of consideration over the weekend with respect to the question of whether procedurally this is the time for the Chair to make a ruling. I want to advise both Hon. Members and other Members of the House that it is the opinion of the Chair that this is not the time to make a definitive ruling on the important matter that is raised here. However, it is to say that this morning I would appreciate it if both the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for Oshawa would address the Chair giving the parameters of their point, but to do so briefly.

None of what takes place this morning will in any way take away from the full right of all Hon. Members to a full argument on this issue at a later time. I have to point out at the moment that the matter which is complained of may of course never come in front of the House in the form in which it is, or for that matter in any other form. That is why it is premature at the moment.

Rather than take up the time of the House this morning in a full argument, and I do not think as yet I am procedurally in a position in which I should make a decision, I would ask, first, the Hon. Member for Windsor West to address the Chair. As I say, I hope with the co-operation of the Hon. Member he will do so not too extensively. The same applies to the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks I will pay great heed to what you have just said. I hope that in considering what I say in the context of a point of order Your Honour also will allow me to deal with the matter somewhat more broadly. I respectfully submit we are dealing here not only with a point of order as such but something that deals with the very privileges of this House and of its Members.

Late Friday afternoon of last week the Government tabled a motion with the Clerk. The motion, as I read it, is intended to allow the Government to suspend the ordinary rules of the House, the Standing Orders, and the usual practices of the House so that it can force the House and its Members to deal with a motion on the issue of abortion in the manner the Government desires. This motion was tabled without any prior consultation on it with the opposition Parties. It certainly does not have their consent.

In part the motion states:

> That, notwithstanding the Standing Orders and the usual practices of the House, the motion and the two amendments listed here under in relation to abortion (designated as Amendment A and Amendment B), shall be transferred and listed under Government Business under Government Orders on the Order Paper and Notices and shall be deemed to have been moved and seconded and shall be ordered for debate at the next sitting of the House as a single Government Order; and
> That, in the debate on the said Government Order, each Member may speak only once, but may speak to the motion and both amendments, for a maximum of twenty minutes, followed by ten minutes of questions and comments, with such time limits to apply to the Minister of the Crown speaking first in the debate; and that no amendment to the motion or Amendment A or Amendment B be receivable following the adoption of this Order . . .

In short, the motion takes the unprecedented step of limiting the number of times a Member can speak on the question of abortion, even before the debate begins on that question, and before there is any indication of how long the debate is likely to go on. It also takes the unprecedented step of taking away the rights of Members to propose amendments to the Government's own motion.

This motion that the Government wants to put forward has nothing whatsoever to do with the matter of a so-called free vote. There is no reference anywhere in the Government's motion to the idea of a free vote. The words appear nowhere in that motion. I also wish to point out that the Standing Orders do not refer to the concept of a free vote. Instead, in the traditions and practices of the House, a free vote is something decided upon by each Party and its Leader with respect to how they as a group will deal with the question. It is not something to be decided upon by the order of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), or by a vote in the House. It is a matter of the individual decision of each Party and its Leader.

I submit that, by tabling the motion that I have quoted in part, the Government is not only breaching the rules and the practices of this House, but it is also breaching the fundamental privileges of the House as an institution, and the privileges of all its Members.

It is a result of the far-reaching implications of this matter that I gave notice that I intended to raise it at the first opportunity today rather than at some later point. We are dealing here with the type of matter that is so important that it is dealt with first at the very beginning of our rules in Standing Order 1, which states:

> In all cases not provided for hereinafter, or by other Order of the House, procedural questions shall be decided by the Speaker or Chairman, whose decisions shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisdictions, so far as they may be applicable to the House.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I do wish to say a word about the definition of privilege. As we know, Erskine May's classic definition is:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

Let me also quote Redlich who asserts:

> The particular privileges of the Commons having been defined as: "The sum of the fundamental rights of the House and of its individual Members as against the prerogatives of the Crown, the authority of the ordinary courts of law and the special rights of the House of Lords".

In presenting its Notice of Motion, the Government is not merely attempting to put before the House a motion that is not procedurally acceptable, it is also insinuating a process that is completely foreign to and obnoxious to the practices, usages, and privileges of the House as built up and defined over centuries in both Canada and other parliamentary democracies. In light of Standing Order 1, I say that what the Government is doing is both contrary to the privileges of the House and to the Standing Orders themselves. In its Notice of Motion and in its partisan zeal and arrogance, the Government is attempting to use its overwhelming majority to limit the debating rights of Members of the House, while at the same time proposing to lessen the role of the House by asking it to pass upon unclear propositions which the Government itself defines and insists be the only ones to be voted on by this House.

Another Parliamentary authority cites an old parliamentary maxim which I submit is appropriate to this case, and I quote:

> That nothing tended more to throw power into the hands of Administration, and those who acted with the majority of the House of Commons, than a neglect of, or departure from, these rules—That the forms of proceedings, as instituted by our ancestors, operated as a check and control on the actions of Ministers; and that they were, in many instances, a shelter and protection to the minority, against the attempts of power.

It is bad enough that in its motion the Government attempts to limit the opportunities of Members to take part in this debate before the debate even begins, and before there is any indication that the debate would go on in a manner that Members may decide is undue or excessively lengthy. What is most repugnant about what the Government is attempting to do is that it is attempting, in an uncalled for and unprecedented manner, to limit the right of Members to offer amendments. Erskine May clearly defines the purpose of amendments as follows:

> The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability, or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original question.

In contrast to every known parliamentary practice, the Government seeks to limit Members from placing before the House any other alternatives for consideration than the ones put forward in the Government's own motion or, even more contrary to parliamentary practice, to prevent Members from offering amendments that would seek to clarify what, in the minds of some Members and perhaps even many people in the general public, are the rather vague motion and amendments that the Government is claiming defines all the options on this issue of abortion.

It is true that, in recent years, the House of Commons has found it necessary from time to time to temporarily modify its procedures to accommodate certain debates and to provide for the orderly consideration of alternatives. The debate that has just begun on the amendments to the Constitution are a good example. The special order governing that debate was first adopted by unanimous consent of all the Members. Second, and most important, it specifically safeguarded the rights of all Members to offer what they considered to be appropriate amendments.

In this case, that is not what the Government proposed to do. It now proposes to use its majority to force upon the House a procedure that completely prohibits other Members from offering any amendments that they consider appropriate, and thereby inhibits the House from exercising its right and responsibility to attempt to pronounce itself clearly on an important public issue.

As we can see from the government's motion, on this issue the Government is seeking to force upon the House three options which many may consider to be limited and ill-defined, and to claim that somehow this will result in a free and constructive decision by Members. In the process it attempts to stifle free debate and to eliminate the kinds of choices that Members had in the past in this House been called upon to make and have been willing to make. It seeks, unilaterally, to limit free speech while claiming to do the opposite.

The notice of motion which the Government has put forward is clearly contrary to the usages and practices of the House and, therefore, contrary to the Standing Orders as well as to the privileges of the House. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the words of Standing Order 1. You, Sir, have the power and, indeed, the duty to refuse to put the Government's motion to the House. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 120 reads:

> Foremost among his many responsibilities, the Speaker has the duty to maintain an orderly conduct of debate by repressing disorder when it arises, by refusing to propose the question upon motions and amendments which are irregular, and by calling the attention of the House to Bills which are out of order. He rules on points order submitted to him by Members on questions as they arise. Many powers have been vested in the Speaker by virtue of the Standing Orders.

Citation 424(3) reads:

> It is the Speaker's duty to call the attention of the mover and of the House to the irregularity of the motion; whereupon the motion is usually withdrawn or so modified as to be no longer objectionable. If the motion is of such a nature that objection cannot be removed, the Speaker may refuse to put the motion to the House. He treats it as a nullity.

These citations clearly impose upon the Speaker the responsibility for refusing to permit the Government to proceed with its motion. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the mere submission of the notice of this motion would appear to be both a breach of the rules, a breach of the privileges of the House, and contempt for its rights and immunities.

We are dealing here with a situation where the Government is attempting to override a basic concept of our parliamentary democracy, that is, the House belongs to all its Members. It does not belong simply to those Members who happen to be, for the time being, Ministers. It does not belong only to those Members who, for the time being, are supporting the Government. It belongs to all of its Members. The Members who are in the minority in this House who are in the Opposition have rights which, under the concept of parliamentary democracy, fall upon you, Sir, particularly, to defend and to protect. The Government's concept of democracy is foreign, as it is expressed in this motion, to the rules, to the traditions of this House and of parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Mayer: How can you be against a free vote?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): If the Government succeeds with this motion, it will rip out the heart and the guts of our parliamentary traditions and democracy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair fully appreciates the importance with which Hon. Members deal with this matter. As I say, I have asked spokespersons for both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party to give me briefly the parameters of the issue as they see it. I think the Hon. Member for Windsor West has done that most explicitly, and I would ask him to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I will conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that you have a special role to protect the traditions and privileges of this House. You have a special role to protect minorities in this House. You have a special role to make sure that our parliamentary democracy, its spirit and its traditions remain. The Government may be claiming to be operating on a basis of democracy, but what it is doing is following a course of action which, I submit, will leave an outward shell and nothing else. The Government takes great credit for supporting parliamentary reform.

What it is saying and showing through this motion is that the Government really does not believe in parliamentary reform. I do not think the Government really believes in the concept of parliamentary democracy because if it did, it would not attempt, in advance, to limit the Members' rights to speak and the Members' rights to offer amendments.

By way of conclusion—

Mr. Speaker: By way of conclusion.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): By way of conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that what the Government wants to do is clearly contrary to the Standing Orders of this House, particularly Standing Order 1. The traditions and precedents which Standing Order 1 covers are valid, binding and relevant in the operations of this House.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the motion which the Government would like this House to be dealing with, if it should be proceeded with in this House, and I stress that, and debated in a serious way as the Government wants, would be a denial of the most fundamental rights of parliamentary democracy rather than a triumph of parliamentary democracy.

The reality is that this Government is now trying, by using a procedure that has not been used in 105 years, to get away with what it clearly understands is unacceptable in terms of the current rules of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Last week, the Government made a suggestion to the Opposition Parties regarding the resolution on abortion. The resolution was contradictory, and that is why the Opposition Parties did not agree with this approach. Even Government Members are aware that a resolution must be consistent and coherent to be debated in the House of Commons.

[English]

Instead of doing what it ought to have done, Mr. Speaker, going back to the drawing-board of the Cabinet room and presenting an internally consistent and coherent resolution that would be acceptable within the rules of Parliament, and instead of using its majority to demonstrate leadership in dealing with a tough issue and presenting it to the House of Commons, the Government is trying to use its majority to trample over the rights of the Opposition in the House of Commons, and that is totally unacceptable.

In my brief comments I would like to say first what is not at issue here. As has already been mentioned, nowhere in this smorgasbord of the resolution which the Government is trying to force Parliament to deal with is there any reference to the words "a free vote". That is not the issue. If the Government had wanted to act courageously in a parliamentary democracy, it could have presented a coherent, logical resolution which would be procedurally acceptable and then make a request, if it so desired, for a free vote. It did this in the case of capital punishment, a motion that we opposed but at least the Government proceeded in a responsible fashion to address a concern that was of some real importance to the people of Canada and to its elected Members here in the House of Commons. The Government could have followed that procedure but it chose not to.

This issue is not about whether there is or there is not a free vote on the question of abortion. Nor is it a question of being able to change the Standing Orders. There has been ample precedent for changing the Standing Orders. We did it in my lifetime as a Member of Parliament back in 1969 when there was heated debate, discussion and a vote. But the point is there were all of those elements. A change in Standing Orders, yes; after a debate, discussion and vote, yes. Again we did it last year, which I think is coming to be the acceptable process in our Parliament in the evolution of parliamentary democracy where all the Members on both sides agreed unanimously to change the Standing Orders. Whether the route of 1969 was chosen or the route of last year when attempting to change the Standing Orders, there are procedures for doing it. However, that is not the issue. What is at issue here is fundamental to the evolution of parliamentary democracy from the 18th century to the present.

I am astounded that this is a Government that calls itself Conservative. It ought to be hypersensitive to the protection of minority rights and the evolution of Parliamentary democracy, both in Great Britain and in other Commonwealth countries like Canada.

We are seeing an attempt to do something by the Government, not simply by individual Members who constitute a majority on the other side of the House, but by the Cabinet. It is attempting not to persuade its Members to have a vote using its majority to change rules after long debate, but we are seeing the executive branch of Government unilaterally suspending the rules of Parliament. Anyone who believes in democracy and who understands our traditions has to understand that that is totally unacceptable in a Parliamentary democracy.

It is not, in my judgment, accidental that the last time this was done was 105 years ago. Surely we have learned a lot from the evolution of democracy in Canada as well as elsewhere about keeping a constant check on the rights of the majority, symbolized by the Cabinet of the day which has its responsibility to that majority of its own caucus but also a responsibility to preserve the rights of minority in opposition. However, this Government has done something, for whatever reason I know not.

Very often, one gets arrogant in the use of power, simply by not thinking about what is going on. One's will is frustrated by using the rules and one simply wants to achieve an end, so one works to get around the rules. We on this side of the House say that the democratic rules as they have evolved in our system have to be respected, not trampled on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It has already been indicated to you that the first rule in our book, Your Honour, deals with calling upon the Speaker to reach a decision about the acceptability of a proposed resolution, any other rule or any other procedure. This rule indicates that the Speaker's decision shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisdictions so far as they may be applicable to the House.

With the exception of the one precedent 105 years ago, all the other traditions, rights and privileges that have evolved in this Parliament, including the democratic tradition of electing the Speaker of Parliament and the rules that were developed unanimously a year ago, have entailed as a basic presupposition not simply the right of the majority ultimately to make decisions but that the majority has to work within pre-established rules and that those rules have to inherently respect the rights of the Opposition. That is the point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to conclude by making two points. I want to cite for the benefit of Government Members words spoken by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, a man who did understand Parliament and its traditions, if any Canadian ever did understand Parliament and its traditions. Mr. Diefenbaker had this to say:

> In order to maintain Parliament as an instrument of freedom, a fearless and determined opposition whose rights are respected is of the essence. To that end rules have to be interpreted fairly, for when the interpretation of the laws of parliament is altered or changed in order to meet the demand of the majority or has the appearance of being so altered, then the rights of Parliament are violated and tyranny is substituted for justice.

I think Mr. Diefenbaker was right when he spoke those words, and I ask you, Your Honour, as I know you will, to give a lot of serious thought, in reaching your final decision, to whether or not this motion has to be taken off the Order Paper. I think that that ought to be the final decision. The Government ought to withdraw it from the Order Paper. We cannot proceed with this kind of motion.

What the Government is attempting to do procedurally today on the question of abortion, if it is permitted today, will allow it tomorrow to do the same thing on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade legislation. Another day it may do so with pension legislation or with any other matter. I urge Members on the opposite side, Members who are part of that large majority, to think of the implications of the executive branch of Government being able to get away with this. If it is able to get away with this on the question of abortion, we may see the same Government applying the same principle on any other important matter of concern in the future.

Therefore, I urge you, Your Honour, as the officer of this House, one of the highest officers of the land whose obligation is to preserve parliamentary democracy and everything it stands for, to think about the consequences of the Government being able to get away with this. I am convinced that you will say that the majority must have its rights, yes, but in a parliamentary democracy, fundamental to our notion of democracy is minority rights. If the Government proceeds with this, those rights will be trampled, and that, Sir, is not acceptable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I will, of course, reserve my right to reply in detail to the very capable arguments of my opponents at the appropriate time. I am glad that you pointed out that there is an appropriate time for this to be dealt with.

We are very comfortable with our position, both procedurally and according to democratic principles. During my preparation for that, I will take counsel from the words of my hon. friend from Windsor West, not in this particular debate, but perhaps when he spoke in 1969 when the rules were changed by closure by the previous Liberal administration. I am sure there will be great comfort in the speeches of that time.

I want to point out two things and two things only.

Mr. Mazankowski: Where was parliamentary democracy at that time?

Mr. Broadbent: And what did you say in 1969?

Mr. Mazankowski: What did you say?

Mr. Nystrom: We were here for weeks at that time.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We listened to you guys, let democracy rule.

Mr. Gauthier: We will bring the experts in, Nielsen and—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to exercise the appropriate courtesies. For the most part, the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party were given a careful and quiet hearing. I would ask that that be remembered.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have two points. I want to point out to the House that there were ample consultations, and I thought reasonable consultations at the time, with the House Leaders of both Opposition Parties. Second, I want to point out that on the one hand, my hon. friend from Windsor West says that there is no reference to a free vote in the motion and on the other hand, he says that the Government cannot dictate that there be a free vote on the motion. We are not. We are simply saying that in the vote on this motion, as a matter of Government policy, every Member on the Government benches will be free to vote according to his or her own conscience or according to the dictates of his or her own constituents.

I want to point out to the House that we have no difficulty, on a sensitive, moral issue such as abortion, with having a free vote. We have no difficulty with that whatsoever. We do not intend to politicize this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Don't be absurd.

Mr. Lewis: If the Opposition Parties feel that they must have a Party Whip on the vote, let them do so, but I say once again that there will be no Government Whip on this very sensitive issue. If the Opposition Parties wish one, that is their alternative. If the opposition Parties want to do that, that is their prerogative.

• (1140)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I welcome a procedural and political debate on this issue at the appropriate time and reserve my rights.

Mr. Speaker: I hope Hon. Members will co-operate with the Chair in that at the very beginning I said this is not the appropriate time for the Chair to rule. I took that position this morning after a very great deal of concentration on that particular point over the weekend. I ask Hon. Members to co-operate.

I thank first the Hon. Member for Windsor West for his helpful intervention, as well as the Hon. Member for Oshawa I also thank both opposition Members for co-operating with the Chair and keeping their remarks reasonably brief. I thank the Hon. Minister for doing the same. As I said, there may well be another time when this will be debated more extensively.

In the interests of all Hon. Members and the watching public, I want to recite just exactly what has been going on this morning. First, the motion complained of deals with the various options with respect to the abortion issue. It is not for the Chair to get into the substance of the motion in any way and I most clearly am not going to do so. However, speaking procedurally, notice was given of the motion last Friday. Under the rules of this House, after 48 hours have passed the motion is automatically transferred to what is called Government Orders. If one looks at today's proceedings, one will note that that motion is now Government Order No. 25 dated May 20, 1988. It will also be found on page 37 as well as one other place in today's Order Paper under the rubric "Government Business".

The important thing that both Hon. Members and the public understand is because it happens to be under Government Business means only that at some later date, if the Government wishes, it can call it as Orders of the day. When that is done the matter is then before the House. It is not automatically assumed procedurally that something that happens to be under Government Business will automatically be called. Many times these matters are not called. Sometimes they are called many weeks or indeed months later.

So that there is no misunderstanding, because I heard at least one Hon. Member saying "What is the appropriate time for the Chair to rule?", the appropriate time for that is of course if the Government takes the next step and moves to bring the motion in front of the House. I hope that is clearly understood by all Hon. Members. I say it is not appropriate to be dealt with now because it has not been called as Orders of the day. Just because it is on the Order Paper does not necessarily mean it will ever be called. That is a procedural matter, but I am bound to proceed according to the procedural rules as they are laid out.

I might well be asked why the Chair listened to some opening remarks at this time. The answer is because it is obviously a very important matter to both the opposition Parties and it is helpful to the Chair to at least have heard some opening remarks with respect to the parameters of debate. That is why I have taken what may seem to be an unusual but I hope useful step in hearing both the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for Oshawa, as well as the Minister, of course.

I thank all Hon. Members for their courtesy and the interventions, which have been helpful to me.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in some press reports over the weekend it was suggested that the Government House Leader had consulted with the Table and that this procedure had been tested and proven to be correct. I just want to make sure that is not the truth, the report is wrong, and the Government is not using the Chair as an argument in support of its motion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: I strongly object to the Government using the Table or the Chair to back up a lousy argument.

Mr. Mayer: Get serious.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is an excellent parliamentarian and when he raises a point the Chair is very much inclined to listen. Let me just dissuade all Hon. Members from one thing to begin with. So far as the Chair is concerned, it is not the place of the Speaker of the House to be saying to the Government, yes, this or that procedure is necessarily right or wrong. With respect to the Table Officers, at least since I have been Speaker, it has been made very clear to them that I want them advising all Hon. Members in this House as to the procedural appropriateness of anything they wish to propose. That includes both research offices of the opposition Parties, and no doubt from time to time the Government as well. The whole purpose of the Table, and I am sure the Hon. Member and others will understand, is to give as much possible procedural information on these matters as we possibly can.

While it may very well be that as your Speaker I have perhaps pushed harder to make sure the Table is available for consultation, I think, and I hope others will support me, that this has been helpful to the House rather than detrimental. Certainly whatever efforts have been made by the Table from time to time for all Members in explaining the procedural rules, so far as I know there has been nothing untoward said or done that would not fit with past practice or indeed be in the general interests of the place. I just want to make that abundantly clear.

I would hope that on that there would be no necessity for debate. If any Hon. Member on either side of the House has any complaint with the Table, then I would ask that the Chair be given some notice of it in advance and perhaps it can be dealt with in that way.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you could make clear to the House and those watching us that where advice is sought by a Member from the Table on procedure, that advice is not in the nature of an advance ruling, making the step intended to be taken by the Hon. Member, including a government Minister, any more acceptable than if the advice had not been sought.

The reason the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) raised the point is that the press reported that the Deputy Government House Leader had attempted to justify to the public the validity of the step he was taking with respect to the motion we have been discussing on the basis that he had checked it with the Table. It should be made clear that while, as you say, Sir, the Table is there to provide advice and be helpful to all Members, having sought and received that advice the Hon. Member acting on it does not have anything in the nature of an advance ruling. If a point of order or question of privilege is raised about that step, you, Sir, are the sole and final arbiter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may well have helped to clarify the position of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). The Hon. Member is of course absolutely correct. It would be quite improper for the Chair to indicate to one of the three Party Leaders in advance what kind of ruling it might make on anything. It is certainly sometimes helpful for the Chair to give an indication to all three Party Leaders or to all three Whips at any given time what the Chair's sense of something is. I, of course, have done that occasionally when I thought it was helpful to all three Parties.

However, the Hon. Member for Windsor West makes an excellent point. I am grateful to him for clarifying it and am grateful because I now see more clearly the point that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier was making.

Mr. Gauthier: That's what I was trying to say, you interrupted me.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, if I might I would like to go back to the explanation of the Chair concerning the point of privilege raised by my colleague from Windsor West. I believe it did contain some elements of ambiguity which, in the context of this issue, could very much affect public debate.

As I understand the Speaker's ruling, he is suggesting that he is not prepared to entertain full argument on this point until such time as, through government business, the House brings the order forward.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is saying that certainly at the moment I do not see it as a point of privilege. However, when this matter comes back before the House, if indeed it does, I will, of course, hear full and complete argument on the matter. If I can then be persuaded that there is, in addition to what I think is very clearly a point order, some additional matter to be argued on a point of privilege, I will hear that argument at that time. At the present time I take this matter more as a point of order than as a point of privilege.

However, in arguing a point of order it may very well be that part of the argument is to refer, in general terms, to the privileges of Hon. Members. As I understand the argument that has been put to the Chair this morning by both the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for Oshawa it is that the House has agreed to a set of orders. The Government is proposing that those orders be changed with respect to a specific matter.

There is the argument, as I understood it, that not only ought this not be procedurally acceptable to the Chair but that it is not acceptable to Hon. Members and it may well get into a question of privilege. At the moment I am not prepared to say that it is but, as I have made clear, I will hear full argument if it is appropriate, under the circumstances, to come back and listen to this again. However, that, as I said, is premature at the moment.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise to comment very briefly on your use of language one minute ago. You indicated that there was objection from our side of the House relating to privileges of Members on the grounds that the Government was proposing to change the rules. I rise to be quite precise about what I said. My objection was that the Government is proposing to suspend the rules. Whatever one might say about the legitimacy of using the majority after debate to change the rules in the House, the point at hand is, in my judgment, fundamentally different. They are invoking a procedure which was last used 105 years ago to suspend the rules of Parliament. That, Your Honour, is the point that I see is involved in the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for Windsor West, but perhaps I could respond to that. I will, of course, consider very carefully the words which the Hon. Member used. In trying to summarize a longer and very explicit argument, I do not want to take away in any way the import of those words. I would like to close off this part of this morning's business. I will hear the Hon. Member for Windsor West for a moment.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm that the argument I presented to you earlier this morning was with respect to the Government's effort to suspend the rules arbitrarily with respect to one matter before the House rather than an effort by the Government to make an over-all change in the rules after proper debate and, if necessary, a vote.

I am dealing specifically and particularly with the Government's motion which is very clearly for the purpose of suspending the rules and the usual practices of the House when it comes to the one matter that it wants the House to deal with in a way which is not within the ordinary Standing Orders, that is, the question of abortion. My remarks were not aimed in any way at what is appropriate or what is not appropriate with respect to an over-all, permanent change in the rules.

Mr. Speaker: I think I have understood both the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for Oshawa clearly. While there is a complaint about the Government's Notice of Motion, it is not a complaint that says, in effect, that the Government is trying to change all the rules of this place. As I understand it, whether we say "suspend" or "change" or "suspend and change", depending on the context in which it is used, it is referring specifically to this single motion. That is my understanding and that is the basis upon which I will proceed.

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS CITED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the section of our Standing Orders which refers to Tabling of Documents. I want to raise again the point of order which I raised on Friday. It has now been possible to look at the actual detailed comments within Hansard with respect to the document with which the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) dealt. If I recall that discussion correctly, the question was whether we were dealing with referring to a document, citing a document, or quoting a document.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is, of course, relating the issue correctly. I have to say to him with apologies that I have been occupied with some other matters and I am not ready, as of the moment, to respond to the matter that he has raised, but I will try to do so as quickly as possible.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, just to put the point, we now have the language in front of us and the language indicates clearly that the Minister for International Trade actually described—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will, I know, want to co-operate with the Chair. The Chair will carefully read the language. If the Chair feels that there is any necessity to come back and hear further argument from the Hon. Member, I most certainly will do so, but perhaps at a more appropriate time. I know the Hon. Member would want to assist the Chair in that.

AN ACT TO IMPLEMENT THE FREE TRADE AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade) moved that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America be now read the first time and be printed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Crosbie), which was agreed to on the following division:

• (1230)

Before the taking of the vote:

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a very important point of order. The Official Opposition knows and everybody in the House knows that when a Bill is introduced leave to introduce a Bill is usually put to the House and then that being given, first reading follows. In this case, the television cameras were telling us that we were called in to vote on the first reading of this Bill. I inquired of my people why we were not voting on leave to introduce the Bill and I was told by experts in the field that the procedure of leave had not been put to the House because this Bill was based on a Ways and Means motion to which the House gave concurrence last Friday. I am sure everybody recalls that.

My argument is that the Government needs leave to introduce a Bill to spend money. We are not talking about a Ways and Means motion. I could read it to you, Mr. Speaker, but for the sake of brevity, I will not read the Ways and Means motion. It goes to the heart of the Government's authority to impose customs duties, to authorize the imposition of temporary duties and to authorize the imposition of duties for emergency action.

This Bill before us today has a Royal recommendation attached to it. It is entitled "An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America". The recommendation reads:

> Her Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons the appropriation of public revenue under the circumstances, in the manner and for the purposes set out in a measure entitled "An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America".

Standing Order 84(11) is very clear on that matter. It talks about the effect of a motion being adopted, namely, a Ways and Means motion. It reads:

> The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

I submit that the Bill before us is not a Bill which meets the requirements of the Ways and Means motion. It is a new Bill, completely different from a Bill that would be based on the Ways and Means motion and, therefore, the House should not pronounce itself at this time on this question without seeking leave to introduce a Bill, a Bill for which the Government has a right to ask and to seek leave but that leave must be put before we proceed with a Bill. I have no argument against the Ways and Means motion procedure, but I argue strongly that for the Government to spend money it must ask authority from the people of Canada represented here in this House.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I concur with the previous speaker that leave to introduce this Bill is now the motion which should be put before the House, critical aspect being that this requires Royal recommendation and must receive Royal recommendation. Consequently, having looked at the precedents, I am hard pressed to find a precedent to permit us to proceed with the step that we are now about to initiate. Before we begin, would it not be appropriate to ask you to identify the precedent we are using today allowing us to proceed along this particular avenue.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the points being made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I have some serious doubt as to whether the position advanced by either Hon. Member is procedurally correct. In the interests of this place and in the interests of moving with some good grace upon these matters I am, for the moment, going to accept the position that both Hon. Members have taken. We will proceed to a vote on exactly that, the introduction of the Bill. We shall proceed with it immediately.

I wish to say that I will consider the matter with care, which I do not have full time to do at the moment, and will give some reasoned comment on this. I just ask everyone not to take this as necessarily a precedent. However, in the interests of moving ahead with the business of the House and in the interests of satisfying at least for the moment the objection raised by the Opposition, we will proceed with the first motion and we shall proceed with the vote on it at this time. That means that if called for, there will be a second vote.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade) moved for leave to introduce a Bill entitled An Act to Implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: We shall proceed with the vote.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

When shall this Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House! The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on an important point of order in relation to the consideration of this particular stage of this trade Bill. You will be aware, Mr. Speaker, that it has become customary over the years for the Speaker, at this point, to put the following question to the House: "When shall the Bill be read a second time?" The Speaker then answers this question with: "The next sitting of the House".

Almost invariably the House agrees, and that is the end of the matter. However, in rising on this point of order, I wish to indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that, in my opinion, there is another course of action that this House may decide to take.

It ought to be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that what you are really doing here in procedural terms is substituting this pro forma question: "When shall the Bill be read a second time", for a motion by the Minister himself. The motion which, over the years, has fallen into disuse is: "That the Bill be read a second time at the next sitting of the House". It is not uncommon, Mr. Speaker, for this motion—

Mr. Speaker: I am only interrupting the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap to indicate first, that I have his point of order; second, I will hear him fully on this after the close of Question Period this afternoon. I will hear the Hon. Member further at three o'clock.

It being after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.32 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEED FOR OLDER WORKERS' ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise again today to urge the Government of Canada to proceed with a plan for older workers' adjustment. Members will recall that some time ago the Government terminated a plan of the previous administration which provided financial assistance to older workers.

The Government promised, in financial statements by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and in others, that the Government would reintroduce a new plan in order to assist older workers. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that has not materialized. What we have had were discussions between the Government of Canada and the provinces with no clear resolution of this particular problem.

In my own province the Cape Breton Building and Trades Council has submitted a proposal to the Government of Canada as well as to the Government of Nova Scotia but to date it has not received a favourable response from either level of government.

I would urge on behalf of its members and, indeed, all older workers in this country, that the Government of Canada announce clearly and forthrightly the terms and conditions of its older workers' adjustment program so that various provinces can take advantage of those schemes in order to put in place suitable incomes for older workers who are in need of financial assistance at this time.

ABORTION

USE OF FETAL TISSUE IN SURGICAL OPERATIONS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, fetal tissue is fast becoming a prominent material in surgery for there is evidence that fetal tissue implants in the brain and in other organs will allow cell regeneration in the recipients. This process poses very seriously implications to human life. Fetuses will be harvested like common commodities. A black market will undoubtedly develop where women will become pregnant with the sole purpose of aborting.

It has been shown that fetuses in the 16 to 24-week stage are the best in providing usable tissue. The 16 to 24-week stage is a fully developed baby.

Life must be respected and held sacred above all other rights. If our society is to continue to be civilized, Parliament must ensure that life is protected from conception and that the exploitation of innocent life for any situation is severely punished.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—RED CROSS ORDERED TO REMOVE FOOD AND MEDICAL SUPPLIES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, since 1984 Canadians have responded with compassion and generosity to famine victims in Ethiopia. Until now Canada has had good co-operation with the Ethiopian Government. Now, under pressure from the military struggle in Eritrea and Trigre, the Ethiopian Government appears to have abandoned this co-operative approach.

Early this spring it barred foreign relief workers except for United Nations staff, from working in these northern provinces. But Canada continued to provide assistance and only last week provided for two Hercules transports to fly food into the area under dispute.

Now the Ethiopian Government has given the International Red Cross only 50 days to remove its food and medical supplies. Diplomats see this as a preliminary to seizure of these stocks by Ethiopian authorities. Canadians still want to help, but more and more they ask how effective their help can be when the Ethiopian Government seems intent on placing short-term military objectives ahead of international co-operation designed to keep Ethiopian people from starving.

THE LATE LAZARUS SITTICHINLI

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, during early 1932 the attention of North America was riveted on the manhunt for one Albert Johnson, the notorious Mad Trapper of Rat River, who had murdered several persons, including an RCMP officer. This was one of the first occasions that aircraft and wireless had been extensively used for police work.

Albert Johnson was killed at the shoot-out at Eagle River on February 17, 1932, and is buried in a graveyard at Aklavik, Northwest Territories.

Last Friday former Special Constable Lazarus Sittichinli, who had played an important part in the manhunt and who, after a lifetime of service to the RCMP, the Anglican Church, and his community, died in his ninety-eighth year, was buried in Aklavik just a few feet from the man whom he had brought to justice over half a century ago.

SOVEREIGNTY

HIGH ARCTIC—RETENTION OF CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, 25 million Canadians live north of Point Pelee, Ontario. Only 75,000 Canadians live north of the 60° parallel in Yukon and the Northwest Territories, and just 250 Canadians live permanently in two small communities, Resolute Bay and Grise Fiord in our High Arctic. Yet the French are doing television commercials in our High Arctic.

• (1405)

There are more Japanese, American, Chinese, British, Russian, Australian and French tourists than there are Canadian, and the U.S., the U.S.S.R., Britain, France, and China all have nuclear submarines capable of using our frozen High Arctic waters 12 months of the year.

There is a lesson here. Let's start to use it before we lose it.

YOUTH

NEW CANADIAN IDENTITY

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to make a statement today, but considering what was said by the previous speaker, I feel I should. He said that just about everybody is running around Canada's North except Canadians, and he is right, but I hardly think the young people visiting us today would be thrilled to know how many billions of dollars this will cost, and as for Hon. Members who have trouble with the Official Languages Bill, I think they should take a leaf from the book of the young people visiting us today, who at the age of 12 are perfectly fluent in French, English and the language of their grandparents, which happens to be Greek. They speak all three languages very well, and I am referring to pupils of the Socrates Schools in Montreal. I therefore want to take the opportunity I was given by the previous speaker to draw the attention of the House to their presence and to their feeling for the new "Canadianism" that is developing in Canada.

RADIO-CANADA

DEMANDS OF COALITION FOR DEFENCE OF RADIO-CANADA FRENCH SERVICES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Coalition pour la défense des services français de Radio-Canada demands the following from the Government and Canadian parliamentarians:

1. That the Broadcasting Act recognize the distinct identity and special needs of the CBC's French network, Radio-Canada.

2. That the votes in the Main Estimates allocated for French-language radio and television broadcasting be debated and voted on separately from those allocated for English-language radio and television public broadcasting.

3. That the budget for the CBC's French network be administered, managed and controlled separately from the CBC's English network.

4. That annual public financing of Radio-Canada be significantly increased so as to guarantee Canada's Francophones the same quality of programming, broadcasts and services available to Anglophones through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, Radio-Canada must not forget its French-speaking audience in remote and outlying areas.

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—EFFECT ON LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, late May and early June rains can save the grain crops of western Canada. However, livestock producers are suffering from the double impact of no grass and, even more important, dry water holes.

Some provincial and federal Government pastures will be unable to take cattle as they normally do at this time of year because they have absolutely no water. There is ample time to formulate and develop a contingency plan for grain producers, but for livestock producers we are now at the eleventh hour.

This Government has, in the past, created programs to deal with specific problems, and will once again provide assistance to livestock producers who are facing water and feed shortages, in order to maintain this essential part of western agriculture. Farmers can count on a federal government program with financial assistance as they have in the past.

CHALLENGE '88

SUMMER STUDENT EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Government's cut-backs to the Challenge '88 Summer Student Employment Program are hurting many small organizations, particularly in the non-profit and social service sectors.

The 20 per cent cut-back in the allocation to Ontario combined with an increase in numbers of applications, and the Government's continued emphasis on increasing allocations to the private sector, have led in many cases to non-profit organizations having their summer programs halved or even eliminated. This has happened despite increasing need in some areas, and despite the fact that many non-profit and voluntary organizations need paid summer employees to meet seasonal increased demands for service.

Challenge '88 must be redirected to ensure that its primary clients, Canadian students, are better served in terms of both quantity and quality of work opportunity. It must not become a mere disbursement fund for private sector employers.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—THREATENED CLOSURE OF $400 ACCOUNT

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I continue to receive examples of incredible actions by banks. Allow me to quote from a bank's letter dated December 2, 1987:

> We hope you have not forgotten your blue chip account—with a balance of $438.81 which has not been used for some time. As your banker we value your business—unfortunately, in the event that we do not hear from you within 4 weeks from the date of this letter and as a last resort, your account will be closed and the funds retained by the bank in payment of service charges. Of course we would prefer to have you bank with us.

While the letter was dated December 2, one of the four weeks was used before it was even posted by the bank. In any case, surely any suggestion of retaining $438.81 in payment of service charges is absurd.

These types of high-handed, insensitive actions by banks need to be curtailed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CLOSURE OF RECLAMATION PLANT IN TRANSCONA SHOPS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago I rose in this House to register my objections to the fact that CN was considering shutting down its reclamation plant in Transcona and consolidating those activities in London, Ontario. That has now happened because CN announced it last Friday.

I would like to register again my strong objection to this move by the railway and the effect it will have not only on the people who work at the reclamation centre but on many other economic activities in Manitoba related to the reclamation of scrap metal by CN.

In the same vein, Manitobans continue to be irritated, frustrated, and angered at the way in which Manitoba is being under-funded by the Western Diversification Program. There was new evidence last week to the effect that most of the money is going to the other western provinces and Manitoba continues to be penalized by the Progressive Conservative Government for some reason which is more and more mysterious every day.

It seems even Gary Filmon, the new Premier of Manitoba, has finally caught on to what his federal cousins have been doing to our province for the last few years. We will continue to raise it in this House until Manitoba finally gets a fair deal.

NATIONAL PARKS

ESTABLISHMENT OF GRASSY ISLAND NATIONAL HISTORIC PARK AT CANSO, N.S.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I have worked with the people of Guysborough County since my election. For more than 20 years the people have pushed for park development. I was honoured to have been the one to respond.

Friday, May 20, was a happy day for the people of Guysborough County. As one who was raised there, it was also a happy day for me. On that day the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) joined with me to announce approval of construction of the Grassy Island National Historic Park at Canso. This development has historical as well as economic significance. I want to thank the Minister for his help, and congratulate my constituents upon this important achievement.

In addition, $3.5 million is being spent on upgrading Highway 16 to Canso. It all helps. We look forward to achieving even more in Guysborough County. Friday, May 20, was an important beginning.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the last few days we heard announcement of the closure of a rural post office in the Maritimes, the Dominion Post Office. This makes public what we have been bringing to the attention of this House for some time now, that the Conservative Government has a deliberate policy of closing rural post offices all across Canada.

Mr. Lewis: Nonsense.

Mr. Keeper: The Government has been saying things like I heard just now, "nonsense", but the facts are clear. The closure of the post offices has started.

It is time for the Government to stop attacking the messenger, start hearing the message, revise its policy, and pay some attention to rural Canada instead of attacking it and pulling out one of the services which is essential to good rural life in our country.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—VANCOUVER STUDENTS' STUDY

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, today is an historic day. Introduction of the legislation to implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement also introduces a new era of opportunity for Canada's young people.

Young people like the Grade 11 students at Handsworth Secondary School in North Vancouver, British Columbia, recognizing the importance of the agreement to their future, have just completed a six-month study of its impact and implications. Their research included meetings with spokespersons on all sides, attending parliamentary hearings and meetings and forums, and surveying 1,300 households. Finally, they produced a report of their findings which they proudly presented to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during his recent visit to Vancouver.

These students are a fine example of the seriousness with which all Canadians, young and old, should consider the merits of this agreement and prepare to take advantage of the opportunities it provides to ensure a more prosperous future for all Canadians.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—OPPORTUNITY FOR CANADIANS TO GIVE THEIR OPINION ON AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade I would like to put a question or two to the Deputy Prime Minister.

[Translation]

In that case, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister stated he was against free trade when he was running for the leadership of the Conservative Party. He never mentioned this issue during the last election campaign. He kept Canadians in the dark for two years while negotiations were under way, and now he is trying to avoid a general election before the agreement is ratified.

The Minister for International Trade stated yesterday that public hearings were held on the trade agreement across this country, and that consequently, it was unnecessary to hold further hearings. This is absolutely false, Mr. Speaker.

My question for the Deputy Prime Minister is this: When were Canadians given a chance to express their views on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement on the basis of the text of the agreement to which the Minister referred yesterday? The Minister alluded to last fall's hearings, but the committee did not have the text. How do we explain this failure to give Canadians across the country a chance to express their views on the basis of the actual text of the agreement?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will agree that the extent of consultation with regard to this initiative has been unprecedented. There have been more than 10 First Ministers' meetings respecting this very important initiative. There have been a number of bilateral meetings between the Ministers of Trade of the provinces and the Government of Canada. Private sector groups have been set up to deal with this issue. There have been a number of debates in Parliament. There have been committee hearings.

This proposal is put before the House in response to the protectionist tendencies in the United States and will serve to enhance trade, secure trade, and enshrine it in law in such a manner that Canadians and Canadian industry can plan with some degree of certainty and can build for the future.

In short, Mr. Speaker, this initiative is good for all the provinces, all the regions, and all Canadians, and it is good for Canada.

TEXT OF AGREEMENT—COST OF PROMOTIONAL CAMPAIGN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has still not explained to the country why a deal of this importance has not been available to Canadians, professional groups, business groups, and labour unions right across the country to deal with the text.

Despite a few cosy meetings with the premiers, some of whom have told me that those meetings have not been fulsome at all, there has been no opportunity for the people of Canada to comment on the actual text of this agreement.

So far, $30 million of taxpayers' money has been spent on the trade negotiator's office. More than an additional $12 million of taxpayers' money has been spent on a propaganda campaign to sell this deal. We now learn that the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade have set up yet another propaganda team under John Laschinger, the former organizer for the Minister of Trade during his quest for the leadership of the Conservative Party.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm the existence of this new propaganda team? Will he describe what its role is to be? Will he give us an estimate of what its cost is going to be? Will he tell us whether the taxpayers of the country or the Conservative Party will be paying for this propaganda?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, was elected to lead and it has led. We campaigned during the last election on the importance of enhancing international trade, securing trade with our best trading partner to the south, and expanding trade opportunities in all parts of the world. We have kept that promise, we have responded.

If the Hon. Member continues to fight the issue, that is probably the best campaign in favour of the free trade issue in Canada. For a gentleman who wants to promote growth, jobs, and opportunity, to suggest that he has no alternative but to tear the deal up is, I think, really copping out.

EFFECT ON INVESTMENT IN ENERGY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House do not believe that it is a trade deal at all. We believe that it is the "Sale of Canada Act". That is why we are fighting the deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): One of the aspects of the deal on which we never received a satisfactory answer in the House is the extent of the sell-out of energy. The deal has now been introduced by way of first reading. According to page 246 of the so-called free trade agreement, the Prime Minister and the President have agreed to exchange letters between them explaining what the limits will be on the extent of investment in energy across the border. According to the wording of the deal itself, those very important letters were to be exchanged before either country began to implement the deal, the process of which began this morning by the introduction of the omnibus Bill at first reading.

Since the Minister has now introduced legislation, will the Deputy Prime Minister be good enough to produce the letters between the President of the United States and our Prime Minister relating to how the purchase of energy and the transfer of energy investment are to be regulated under this deal?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the chapter "Energy" in the free trade agreement is a chapter that is favourable to Canadians and Canadian producers, because it assures them of a market in the United States.

I also think the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party ought to remember that nothing in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement obliges a Canadian to sell Canada's energy if he is not satisfied with the competitive pricing under free trade.

The agreement provides for an organized market. What it does not do is what the previous Liberal Government did when its National Energy Policy brought the West to its knees and undermined the credibility of Canadians on the energy market.

WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister and all those who were in the House last Wednesday heard the Minister for International Trade inform the House, as reported at page 15577 of Hansard:

> Water is not even the subject of a provision of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Yet item 22.01 on page 86 of the Tariff Schedule of Canada refers explicitly and clearly to water under the trade deal. Therefore, will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why, in the view of the Minister for International Trade, water is not part of the trade deal?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is because it is not part of the trade deal. That was explained by the Minister in the House very clearly last week, and by the Minister of the Environment very clearly in his statement last November, I believe.

The only exception to that, which the Hon. Minister mentioned last week, I believe, was non tariffs on bottled water such as Perrier and the like being sold across the border, which is a product that is produced here in Canada and sold. However, the large scale diversion of water in this country is a no-no.

REFERENCE TO WATER IN TARIFF SCHEDULE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, water is referred to in the Tariff Schedule attached to the trade deal. If the Parliamentary Secretary can read it, he will see waters are referred to very clearly and very specifically.

If the Government found it necessary and desirable to exclude beer, unprocessed fish, and logs, why did the Government not exclude water in order to avoid any misinterpretation? Does the Parliamentary Secretary not realize that a clear reference to water makes a mockery of the federal water policy which promises a legislative ban on water resources and water exports?

• (1425)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, again, I repeat, that statement has been made very clear by the Minister of the Environment and by the Minister for International Trade. The mention of tariffs within the bottled water section is explained very clearly.

I want to say that if the Liberal Party's policy is not to allow the industries that have developed in Quebec, especially in terms of bottling water, to export bottled water, to the United States, then members of the Party should stand up and say so right now.

REQUEST THAT ELECTION BE HELD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister on this proposed legislation.

In 1983 the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is presently a member of Cabinet, opposed this type of deal. The Minister of Finance, who was here just a moment ago, opposed this deal, and the former Secretary of State, who is not with us, opposed this deal. The Prime Minister himself said in 1983 that he would have nothing to do with such a proposal because the sovereignty of Canada would be affected.

My question is very straightforward. Instead of proceeding before the election with an Act that goes against everything these Ministers said in 1983, will the Government not do the right thing and resign now and have an election on this important issue?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if there were better alternatives than the one that has been proposed—and we certainly do not hear them from either of the opposition Parties—then we would certainly consider those alternatives. The fact of the matter is that we know what they are against, but we do not know what they are for.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Government does not know what other people are for because it gave up listening to Canadians a long time ago, whether in the House or anywhere else.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

FREE TRADE—REQUEST FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if we look at the Province of Quebec, the Association des consommateurs québécois is against the agreement, the Union des producteurs agricoles is against the agreement, Quebec's workers are all against the agreement. Why not call an election right away on this very important issue?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that the Government has stopped listening to Canadians. The Hon. Leader of the NDP is not even prepared to listen to the free vote of his own Members of Parliament. He is standing up here in the House today condemning the Government for bringing in a proposition that would allow all Members to express themselves freely. Why the hypocrisy?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as is usual, when the Government gets a question it does not like on one subject it changes the subject instead of answering the question. That is typical.

The day that this Government will deal in a straightforward way with the question of abortion as it did with capital punishment, then it will get the response of my Party. But instead of abiding by the rules of Parliament this Government wants to break the rules. That is what the Government is doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The focus of the question seems to have shifted. Perhaps the Hon. Minister would respond.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the principles remain the same even though the subject matter may differ. All I am asking the Leader of the New Democratic Party is to apply the same principle to one issue as he does to another.

As a matter of fact he said we should do the same thing we did with capital punishment. We had a free vote on capital punishment, and we will have a free vote on abortion.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

COST OF DRUGS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On January 25 in the House the Minister said:

> —in Canada all senior citizens are covered by drug plans. In Canada, no one goes without drugs for lack of money. Everyone on welfare receives drugs.

I have a letter here from a lady in Cochrane, Ontario, who states:

> I am a fifty-five year old woman with angina . . . I'm not supposed to work; but had to take a part-time job to pay for my pills. When I started to take "Cardizem", the price was a little over $44.00; now the price is $93.89—soon . . . I won't be able to pay for them with what I make.

• (1430)

Who, Mr. Minister, will pay for this lady's life-saving drugs?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I may be wrong, but I was of the opinion that the Government of Ontario did have medical health support programs for its citizens. I would presume that the Liberal Government of Ontario would try and ensure that none of its citizens went without life-saving drugs.

Since the Hon. Member mentions Cardizem, it should be pointed out that the medicinal value of that drug is saving the lives of approximately 5,000 Canadians a year, is a result of research conducted in Montreal by Canadian researchers.

Bill C-22 is designed to ensure that we have more of that research, in order that there are more of those life-saving drugs available to citizens of Canada.

PRICE OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. A typical response from the Minister is to abdicate his responsibility and to point the finger at other individuals.

This Minister will know that he has given an undertaking to the House on no less than eight occasions that the prices for prescription drugs would not rise beyond the inflation rate. He has also stated in the House that they would not rise by one cent.

Would the Minister explain that rationale to those Canadians and senior citizens TO whom I referred earlier who are having to pay two and a half times the price for prescription drugs?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have said before, and the Hon. Member will know when he has an opportunity to face up to it honestly, that there is nothing in Bill C-22 that caused the price of a drug to rise. The Hon. Member knows that is true.

The Hon. Member also knows that the price of drugs is determined in the Province of Ontario. It is established by formulary, usually every six months. That formulary is established by the Government of Ontario.

If the Hon. Member has a complaint about the price of drugs in Ontario he should talk to his friends at Queen's Park.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—IMPLEMENTING LEGISLATION AMENDING 27 STATUTES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we all remember the spectacle in the House back in 1982 when the present Deputy Prime Minister became apoplectic in the Chamber in opposition to the national energy policy that was being introduced because, he said, it contained amendments to 15 different statutes. As a result of that opposition the House of Commons was hijacked for two weeks.

At that time the Deputy Prime Minister said that that incredible abuse of Parliament had to be conducted because the legislation was amending 15 different statutes.

The legislation that was tabled a few hours ago contains amendments to 27 different statutes.

I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister could explain why he was so concerned about the abuse of Parliament and the introduction of an omnibus Bill that changed 15 statutes, and why the Government has changed its mind now when it amends 27 different statutes.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a different situation altogether.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: The federal Government has the responsibility to negotiate treaties with other countries, and in order to make them effective they have to be legislated. All that is happening here is the legislation simply legislates a free trade agreement with the United States.

There have been other agreements in previous times such as the Auto Pact, and Canada's entry into the GATT, which were done in the same manner, I presume. I find it strange that the Hon. Member is attempting to compare apples and oranges.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the point I am attempting to make is that the Deputy Prime Minister in opposition said that it was totally unacceptable for Parliament to consider amending 17 different statutes in a single omnibus Bill, and consequently hijacked Parliament for two weeks. I am saying if the Government had that attitude—

Mr. Andre: Order!

Mr. Riis: Quiet, Harvie!

If the Government had that attitude then, why has it now taken on this rather hypocritical position saying that it is all right to amend 27 statutes?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, quite frankly a free trade initiative is quite different from an energy security Bill.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON GRAPE GROWERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Over the weekend, press reports stated that the free trade disease is devastating grape growers. There are approximately 850 in the Niagara region, approximately 16,000 jobs, and a comparable large number in British Columbia. Property values are reported to have dropped by 50 per cent. Many farmers cannot obtain the line of credit that they normally receive for operating their vineyards.

Alvin Danyluck, a grapegrower in Niagara who has been in the business for 19 years, has always been able to obtain an operating loan. This year he cannot because of the free trade deal. Can the Minister of Agriculture advise what Mr. Danyluck and other grape growers who are being refused operating loans should do in the face of this challenge to their livelihood, their farming operations, and the continued viability of their farming operations?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will realize that this is not the first time that similar questions have been raised by members of the Opposition. The Hon. Member should also realize that we recognize that there will be some difficulties in the grape and wine industries, not only as a result of the bilateral trade arrangement but more particularly as a result of the GATT ruling.

The Hon. Member knows that the grape industry is having difficulties today as a direct result of provincial pricing markups and provincial trade barriers. He should also know that, in the interest of assisting from a federal Government's point of view, we convened a first meeting of a cross-section of the industry and the provinces as early as December 4. Those task forces have worked very diligently since that period of time. They have presented a proposal to us. We are going through the process of consultation with the industry and other Departments.

Very shortly we will be in a position to make an announcement with respect to that particular problem which comes about as a direct result of GATT.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the former Minister for International Trade indicated that the GATT ruling would be phased-in over 10 or 12 years. In fact, last year she promised the grape growers she would do that. Now they lose half their price differential in the first year.

We are talking about a real situation now where property values have dropped in Niagara and in British Columbia, where loans cannot be obtained, and where farmers are being forced into bankruptcy. What assistance will the Minister give, and when will it be made available? The Ontario Government has quoted as high as $30 million a year for many years.

When will the Minister make this financial assistance available to those farmers who are being forced off their lands, or who are being threatened with pulling out their entire vineyards this fall? When will the assistance be provided?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should realize that we have worked diligently on this particular project. He knows that it takes time when one is breaking new ground with an adjustment package of this nature. We will take the time to ensure that we get the package correct. As I indicated before, we should be in position very shortly.

There are some provincial responsibilities here as well. We would expect that the provincial governments would be prepared to provide a fair degree of assistance. The Hon. Member mentions the provinces' interest here. The message that I have been receiving from the provinces is the fact that they are not even prepared to enter into a surplus purchase program. We indicated our willingness to enter into that project this year as early as December 4.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last Friday, Statistics Canada released figures which showed that the price of prescription drugs went up three times the rate of inflation; 12.4 per cent was the increase in prescription prices as compared to 4 per cent for inflation.

Can the Minister stand up in this House and tell Canadians what he intends to do in exercising his responsibility as Minister of Consumer Affairs specifically with respect to protecting Canadian consumers from the rip-offs by the multinational drug companies?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-22 contains in it provisions for a patented medicine prices review board and the powers for that board to ensure that prices of drugs do not rise above the rate of inflation except in extraordinary circumstances which must be justified to the board.

That organization would have been in operation last January and would have been able to prevent the price increases indicated had not the Opposition delayed the Bill's passage for so many months.

Appointments have been made to the board. Regulations are being drafted and very soon the board will be in operation. I expect the Board will perform as Parliament has instructed it. Why the board has not done so retroactively—the fault rests with the Opposition for having delayed passage of the Bill.

POWER OF DRUG PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

On November 18, 1986, the Minister said:

> The price of drugs will not increase by one cent, not those on the market, not those coming on the market, no drugs are going to go up.

In light of the fact the Minister has also in Bill C-22 given the multinational drug companies retroactive protection on their patents, is he prepared to make sure that he writes into the Act that the Drug Prices Review Board will have retroactive power to reduce prices, prices for which Canadians have been ripped off over the last year?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member quotes me I wish he would quote me completely and accurately. I stated then, and I state again, and the Hon. Member would have to admit if he were being honest, there is nothing in Bill C-22 which would cause the price of an existing drug to go up by a penny. His Leader admitted that in the House on one occasion.

An Hon. Member: That wasn't the question.

Mr. Andre: That was the accusation. Bill C-22 did not cause the price of a drug to increase by a penny. The question is can we now go back and reopen Bill C-22 and bring forward amendments—

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Andre: —to put in place some retroactive—

Mr. Rodriguez: Retroactive power.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member is shouting from his seat that I should take unto myself powers not granted by Parliament. Would he extend that to other areas of responsibility as well?

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS ADVISORY COMMITTEE—REVERSAL OF DECISION—MINISTER'S LETTERS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the extraordinary interference by the Minister in the independence of the refugee determination system in the case of Mr. Santokh Singh. Following a unanimous ruling in favour of refugee status by the three distinguished members of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, the Minister wrote two secret letters to the then Minister of Immigration and asked for and received an immediate reversal of this decision.

Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform this House why he intervened with the then Minister of Immigration and asked that the decision, which was independent and unanimous based on refugee advice from refugee experts, be overturned? What were the reasons that motivated the Minister's actions?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as is unfortunately too often the case with the Hon. Member, the facts that he has put upon the record of the House of Commons are not correct. They are not the facts.

What I was doing in that case was conveying to my colleague, as it is my duty, information that might have been relevant to the decision of that colleague. It may be that in the Liberal Government a Minister, who had information relevant to a decision another Minister was taking, would not pass on that information. That is not the way we act in this Government.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the trouble with the Minister is that he is offering no facts at all. That is simply not good enough for this House nor for Canadians, nor for the integrity and the independence of the system.

POSITION OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in one of the Minister's two letters to the then Minister of Immigration he said and wrote:

> Indian authorities have made strong and repeated representations for his return to India.

Given that both the Foreign Affairs Minister for India and the Indian High Commissioner to Canada have said that they have never put pressure on Canada, that they never sought extradition and never suggested refusing him status, and said, "As of now, there is no case", can the Minister explain again to this House this glaring and very serious contradiction? If the Government received a clearance from both CSIS and the RCMP in terms of security, what were the motivating reasons underlying such an unprecedented interference by the Minister in the running of refugee matters by the Minister of Immigration?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, I may have done an injustice to the Liberal Party and I certainly would not want to do that.

The practice that I followed in this case of communicating information to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, when that information came to my attention as Secretary of State for External Affairs, is the same practice that was followed by the Hon. Jean Chrétien when he held this portfolio, in correspondence with the then Minister of Employment and Immigration, and followed by the Opposition House Leader in the other place when he held this portfolio in terms of cases that were then before our colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, in his capacity as Minister of Employment and Immigration. That has just been confirmed from his place by the Hon. Member for York Centre.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What was the reason for the intervention?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The practice has been in place for some time, Mr. Speaker. I followed that practice. When information becomes available that is relevant to a decision being taken by a Minister, information that comes to me in my official capacity, information by its nature that should be conveyed secretly, then I convey that information.

Oral Questions

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—MEETING OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last week in the House the Prime Minister indicated to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre, that the Minister of Agriculture would be meeting on an urgent basis with his western counterparts regarding the drought.

Has the Minister personally been in contact with any or all of the western agricultural Ministers to discuss special federal drought assistance? If so, can he tell the House when he will be meeting with them and when we can expect the details of a relief program?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that we are in constant contact with our provincial counterparts as well as at the Deputy Minister level. If the meeting date is suitable to all provincial counterparts we have arranged a meeting a week from today hopefully in Calgary.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, not knowing if or when support will be available causes the greatest stress to farmers and cattlemen. Can the Minister give us some assurance that funds will be available, and that the conservation funds which are totally inadequate will not be the basis of any help or relief program?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think that if one wants to be fair one should examine the record of this Government with respect to initiatives taken on behalf of the agricultural industry. This should be done not only on a day-to-day basis. For example, our budget increased by 400 per cent. That speaks for itself. There were some 585 initiatives delivering over $9 billion, which I think speaks for itself. That is on an ongoing basis. Unfortunately we have had some experience with adverse weather conditions. We responded in 1984. We responded in 1985. There is no question about—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—HIRING OF JOHN LASCHINGER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It also concerns the John Laschinger sweetheart deal.

• (1450)

The Deputy Prime Minister will know that no less than $12.7 million was spent on free trade brochures, pamphlets and so on, much of which ended up as toilet paper.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister justify hiring Mr. John Laschinger, a Conservative Party organizer, cheered in this House by Tory Members of Parliament? Can he tell us how many other Tory hacks, flacks and bagmen will benefit from the Government's sweetheart deal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question hardly deserves the dignity of an answer, but I will take it as notice and ask the Hon. Minister for International Trade to respond when he is in the House.

FORTHCOMING ELECTION CAMPAIGN—REQUEST THAT JOHN LASCHINGER NOT SERVE PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister and his Government which has launched a free trade campaign directed by John Laschinger, former campaign manager for the Minister responsible for International Trade. Will the Deputy Prime Minister give the House the assurance that Mr. Laschinger will not be working for the Conservative Party during the next election campaign, because Canadians want to have the assurance that taxpayers' money will not be used for the Conservative Party? Could he give us that assurance right away?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BUILDING OF SCHOOL FOR CREE CHILDREN OF WASANIPI—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Further to my question of November 30 in this House and to several meetings held by Canada's negotiators with the Waswanipi Cree of Abitibi under the James Bay Agreement, about the urgent need to build a school, could the Minister confirm today whether the Government of Canada will share, with the Government of Quebec, the cost of building a school for Cree children in Waswanipi?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the Hon. Member that, because of his representations, his repeated representations, and again on the recommendations of the mediator on the James Bay Agreement, the Government of Canada will be pleased to contribute $3.8 million to the Waswanipi school. I want to say that that will bring to $20 million the contributions to school facilities for the James Bay Cree in the last five years.

CN WORKSHOPS AT POINTE-SAINT-CHARLES—CAR RENOVATION CONTRACT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the CN workshops at Point St. Charles in Montreal and VIA Rail's $85 million contract for refitting its railway cars. Will the Minister admit that the jobs of 485 employees, one-third of the work force at the shops, will be threatened if the VIA Rail contract is not awarded to the shops, and that the economy of southwest Montreal will be dealt another severe blow?

Does the Government intend to maintain the shops at Point St. Charles which has the infrastructure and the human resources? If so, what does the government intend to do to ensure VIA Rail awards this very important contract to the CN shops?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question is much longer than its content warrants. VIA Rail has called for bids on a contract for refitting some of the company's equipment. Bids have been called. As is usual for Crown corporations, Via Rail will evaluate the bids it receives and will award the contract to the company that meets its requirements. I don't think it is necessary to start some kind of big debate on the situation of CN in Point-St. Charles. We will simply wait and see what VIA Rail decides to do, and I imagine it will follow the standard procedure.

IMPORTANCE OF KEEPING WORKSHOPS OPEN IN MONTREAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Is the Minister aware of the fact that one-third of the work force at the shops in Point St. Charles will be affected, depending on whether or not the contract is awarded to the CN shops? And does he also realize that employees are very upset about the Government's decision to let CN close its shops in Moncton? Could the Government give the House the assurance that it intends to maintain the shops at Point St. Charles or does the Government intend to let the shops in Montreal be closed down as they were in Moncton?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand that bids have been made by companies with workers in Quebec and in Ontario. I also understand it is typical of the New Democrats to say just about anything off the top off their heads. In fact, the matter is very straightforward. The company will award the contract to a business that has employees in Canada, in Quebec or Ontario. I suppose that if they decide to award the contract to CN workers in Point St. Charles, two days from now the Hon. Member will rise in the House to ask why the contract wasn't awarded to the workers at Bombardier, in Saint-Anne-de-la-Pocatière. I don't think this makes an impression anymore.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS' SERVICE CHARGES—EFFECT OF COMPETITION ACT

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would like to thank the Minister for agreeing that his officials would not prohibit banks from agreeing to minimum consumer service and disclosure standards. However, David Makin, head of the financial markets at the Competition Bureau, alleged last week that by agreeing to offer certain basic banking services for free, banks could be charged with price fixing.

Is the Minister seriously suggesting that if all banks agree to charge nothing for a basic banking service, the bankers could be fined or jailed for price fixing?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, absolutely not. The Competition Act is there to help consumers, and I was objecting last week to what appeared to me to be the bankers' association hiding behind the Competition Act or using it as an excuse not to act in the consumer's benefit.

There are provisions under the Act whereby the banks could get an advance ruling from the head of the Competition Bureau if they have a plan in mind and if they have questions about whether it is allowable under the Act. Further, if in fact through some technicality, they might be precluded from acting, I would certainly be more than willing to recommend that my colleague change the Bank Act or to bring forward changes to the Competition Act to make sure that could happen. I would like to see those service charges reduced, and I do not think there are obstacles in the law to the banks acting to reduce them now.

Oral Questions

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—LOBSTER EXPORTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Last Friday in his response to the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition regarding the amendment proposed by the U.S. Senate Finance Committee that would ban the import of any Atlantic lobsters that did not meet the American minimum size, the Minister said, as reported at page 15667 of Hansard:

> An industry-government meeting was held in Charlottetown on this subject on May 15 with respect to the impact of these regulations on the Canadian lobster fishery. Governments were represented, as were industry and the fishermen. All provincial government representatives, with the exception of the Quebec representative, supported a carapace size increase.

I have checked very carefully with industry representatives from the Province of Prince Edward Island, and they categorically deny ever supporting such an increase or ever being asked to support such an increase.

I ask the Minister today if he still stands by the statement he made in this House on Friday last.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think I just heard the Hon. Member say that he had consulted industry representatives and they stated that they never supported such an increase. I never said that industry representatives had.

My information is, and a report about the meeting states, that all provincial government representatives, I am advised, with the exception of the Quebec representative who could not attend, supported a carapace size increase. If that is incorrect, then any Government that did not support it, of course, only has to say so. However, that is the information that I was given.

EXPORT OF LOBSTER PARTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I checked with the Government officials in Prince Edward Island who attended the meeting, and that was also confirmed, incidentally, to me, by the Department of Fisheries personnel who were at that meeting. I am not talking just about industry, I am talking about the Government of P.E.I. I am glad that the Minister cleared that up.

My second question is with regard to his answer to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition on Friday when he said:

> I might further point out that the P.E.I. industry is largely a canner fishery which is not affected by the U.S. regulations.

• (1500)

The proposed amendment would prohibit entry into U.S. Customs territory of any whole lobster or parts of such a lobster. Therefore, can the Minister confirm that canned lobsters, as he stated in the House on Friday, would not be affected, or lobsters in brine, or lobsters under the 3 and 7/32 carapace measurement, packed in brine, or indeed lobster tails, frozen, or lobster claws, frozen, because the amendment refers to any parts thereof? Can he confirm that his response on Friday was correct and these parts of lobsters will not come under this new amendment?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, what I will confirm is that in our firm opinion the U.S., if it amends the legislation as proposed by the Senate Finance Committee, would be in violation of the free trade agreement. We have brought this to their attention and I am hoping and expecting that the final legislation will not contain such a clause. We have protested against it, and no matter what part of the lobster is affected, we are still protesting against it and believe any such action would be a violation of the FTA. In any event, it would be a non-tariff barrier which, in my view, would be contrary to GATT as well.

Mr. Speaker: Single question, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

AIR SAFETY

CHECKING OF BAGGAGE OF AIRLINE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will he confirm that an airline employee travelling from Ottawa to New York City was allowed to send her luggage through to New York even though she did not possess a valid ticket to that destination? If he does, will he indicate what action he is taking with all Canadian airlines to make sure that his Government's regulations are enforced?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the company, CAIL, was advised that under the new regulations effective May 1, 1988, it should not stamp any luggage which was carried by one company and transferred to another airline if the employee concerned was not a member of that company. In other words, it could not be done as of May 1 and the company he is referring to was so advised. It was not only advised, a fine was imposed because it did not respect the rule of the new legislation.

Once again, that just started May 1 and we believe perhaps that is the reason why the company was not aware of it.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question of Question Period. The Hon. Member for York East.

HOUSING

SITUATION IN TORONTO—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP SAVINGS PLAN

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As a Member of Parliament from Toronto he is aware of the serious housing crisis in Metropolitan Toronto. He is also aware of the fact that even a family earning an income of $60,000 a year can no longer afford to buy a home in Metropolitan Toronto.

Will the Minister not agree that the rationale used when the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan was dropped from the Income Tax Act, that it caused people to postpone their decisions to buy homes, no longer applies since no one can afford to buy a home? Therefore, will he now undertake to the House that he will give serious consideration to reinstating the provisions of that plan in the Income Tax Act?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has put a very precise focus on a problem in Metropolitan Toronto and suggests that we put in place a proposal which would apply on a nation-wide basis. I think that type of solution is not appropriate. There are problems with housing in Toronto that must be dealt with in a focused way.

My colleague is fully aware of the approach we have followed in tax reform, which is to allow us to get tax rates down on a broad basis by removing some of the tax preferences which have been in place, so that everybody benefits by the lower tax rates rather than a limited number of people on specific tax preferences. That is the philosophy we have followed and I believe that is the direction we should continue to go.

TIMING OF SECOND READING MOTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, just before we adjourned for lunch you had put the question which normally occurs at that time in the consideration of a Bill. In this case it was the trade Bill. You said: "When shall the Bill be read a second time?" The Speaker normally answers this question with: "The next sitting of the House." Almost invariably the House agrees and that is the end of the matter. However, in rising on this point of order I want to indicate that in my opinion there is another course of action that the House may decide to take at that point.

It must be remembered that what you are really doing in procedural terms is substituting this pro forma question, "When shall the Bill be read a second time?" for a motion by a Minister, in this case the Minister for International Trade

(Mr. Crosbie). The motion, which over the years has fallen into disuse, is "That the Bill be read a second time at the next sitting of the House." It was not uncommon for this motion to have been put to the House in the past and for the House to have divided on it.

I can find no ruling, no precedent or any other evidence to suggest that the ability of Members to force a division at this stage of the Bill has, over time, been extinguished. In fact, after consulting a number of procedural authorities, it is my contention that not only is it proper form for Members to demand a division at this point, it is also possible to amend the motion so that a precise day can be affixed for consideration of the Bill at second reading.

Let me begin by drawing to your attention Citation 722 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which states:

> When the House has agreed to the first reading of a bill, the Speaker at once proceeds to ask: "When shall the bill be read a second time?" The answer is generally: "At the next sitting of the House." The bill is placed on the Order Paper, in its proper place, for a second reading at a future time.

Beauchesne's does not say that the answer is always "At the next sitting of the House", but merely generally, therefore implying that this need not always be the case. There is little question that to request a division on this question is rarely used. In fact, in my reading I can find no instance of such a division in modern times, not even during the infamous Pipeline Debate of 1956. However, if we refer to Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, Fourth Edition, we are provided with clear guidance on this point. At page 508 Bourinot states:

> When the house has agreed to the first reading of a bill the speaker at once proceeds to propose the next motion. He asks "When shall the bill be read a second time?" The answer is generally "At the next sitting of the house"; and the bill is thereupon placed upon the order paper in its proper place for a second reading at a future time.

That is almost word for word what is contained in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition and is undoubtedly the source for Citation 722. However, Bourinot goes on to state at page 508:

> This motion passes almost invariably—as it is a purely formal motion, proposed with the object of placing the bill on the orders for a second reading, when all discussion can most regularly and conveniently take place; but though it is unusual to raise a debate on the merits of the bill on such a motion, yet it is perfectly in order to divide the house on the question as at any other stage of the measure.

I think that is the relevant comment, that it is in fact in order to divide on this question as we do at other stages.

Here, then, we have an explicit assertion from Bourinot, a long-standing and well-respected procedural reference, that although perhaps uncommon, it is perfectly in order to force a division at this point. In fact, there are several precedents to corroborate this position.

On March 21, 1877, we find the following entry in Journals, page 160:

> Mr. Ross (Middlesex) moved, seconded by Mr. Smith (Peel), and the question being put, that the Bill from the Senate, intitled, "An Act for the Relief of Mary Jane Bates" be read a second time tomorrow; the House divided; and it was resolved in the affirmative.

Similarly, if you check Hansard for April 21, 1879, at page 1375 one can see that there was a division on this similar point with regard to the Supreme and Exchequer Court Acts Amendment Bill. I suspect that you will have almost memorized that Bill by now, Mr. Speaker.

On April 3, 1876, Journals, page 245, records another such division on a Bill to amend the Insolvent Act of 1875.

There might be those who argue that, because the precedents cited are from a period when the question that was put to the House reflected a specific date for second reading, these precedents are not valid today. This question was changed, as you know Mr. Speaker, to alleviate the problem of having to go through the Orders each day standing under Government Business and passing motion, to have each put over for another day so that they would not be dropped.

The motion that is moved today, as was noted in Brunette's is "When shall the Bill be read a second time?" which is then answered "At the next sitting of the House". This simply allows Bills to stand over under Government Orders from one day to the next without the risk of being dropped.

However, the questions are exactly the same in that their intent or purpose is to place the Bill on the Order Paper for future consideration. This is why Bourinot asserts that even after the original motion moved by the Minister, that the Bill be read a second time at some future date, fell into disuse, it was still possible to force a division on this question because the question was whether or not the House should, at that particular moment, assign the Bill a place on the Order Paper for future consideration.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, it is my contention that the precedents I have cited, in conjuction with the clear and unequivocal quotation from Bourinot's, indicate that it is proper form to force a division at this stage in the Bill.

My second point, Mr. Speaker, relates to my contention that the motion to affix a date for second reading is also debatable and amendable. During the course of my argument I will cite several precedents to support this position.

I would first like to return to the passage from Bourinot's, Fourth Edition, page 508, which I cited earlier. It states:

> This motion passes almost invariably—as it is a purely formal motion—but though it is unusual to raise a debate on the merits of the bill—yet it is perfectly in order to divide the house on the question . . .

Note, Mr. Speaker, that Bourinot does not rule out a debate at this stage but simply says that it would be unusual. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that we do many things in this House which are procedurally unusual. Forcing a division at this stage is surely unusual but it is not, I hope I have shown, out of order.

The last phrase in this excerpt, which reads, " . . . it is perfectly in order to divide the house on the question as at any other stage of the measure" is also important in that Bourinot implicitly recognizes that the putting of the motion to assign the Bill an order for consideration is a distinct stage or separate step through which the Bill must traverse on its passage through the House.

This, of course, is clearly at variance with Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, citation 713 which reads:

> The first reading of a bill, the order for printing and the appointment of a day for second reading are taken together as one formal stage.

Yet, there is no precedent or ruling cited upon which to base this assertion. It is simply an editorial comment with no procedural foundation, or at least none is given in Beauchesne's.

I also draw your attention to Erskine May, Twentieth Edition, page 527, in which it states:

> The various stages through which a bill progresses—are intended by the practice of Parliament to provide so many opportunities not only for consideration, but also for reconsideration . . . Though the stages are thus treated as inter-connected portions of a single process of consideration, each stage is regarded as having its own peculiar function and to a certain extent its own more or less limited range of debate.

Erskine May also states, on the same page:

> Upon this principle, it is laid down by Hatsell, and is constantly exemplified, "that in every stage of a bill, every part of the bill is open to amendment, either for insertion or omission . . . "

Let us consider again the purpose of the motion in question. It is unquestionably to assign an order for consideration of a Bill at some future date. Cannot we understand this process as arranging the proceedings of the House?

I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 56 which lists all those motions which are debatable. Standing Order 56(1)(p) specifically includes:

> —such other motion, made upon Routine Proceedings, as may be required for the observance of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, the management of its business, the arrangement of its proceedings, the correctness of its records, the fixing of its sitting days or the times of its meeting or adjournment.

There are those who might argue that, with the revision of the Standing Orders in 1913 and the reclassification and limitation in scope of debatable motions, the opportunity to debate and amend the motion affixing a day for second reading was actually lost. However, it is my contention that this was not lost. It is my interpretation of Standing Order 56(1)(p) that such a debate is indeed in order and that in fact the motion is debatable and amendable.

Historically this has been done on many occasions. I mentioned the division on the motion to set the date for second reading of the Supreme and Exchequer Court Acts Amendment Bill on April 21, 1879. Actually there were two divisions. The first division, as shown at page 1375 of Hansard for that day, was on an amendment to postpone the commencement of the second reading debate for three months.

Again, on April 3, 1876, the motion to affix a date for the second reading of the Insolvent Act of 1875 was amended and Journals, at page 245, indicates that a debate on the motion and the amendment ensued. The amendment was later withdrawn but clearly the opportunity to make the amendment and engage in debate existed. I guess that becomes self-evident.

This House of Commons is a forum for debate and a forum for decision. There may be those who would wish to restrict our freedom as Members to debate and decide on questions that come before this House, but surely the burden of proof is on them to show that in circumstances such as the one with which we are faced now this freedom simply does not exist.

I believe that I have shown, both in the procedural references that I have quoted and the precedents which I have cited, that the House may divide on the motion to affix a day for second reading and that in fact this motion is also debatable and amendable.

I believe that I have raised this point of order at the appropriate time. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, citation 237 states:

> A point of order against procedure must be raised promptly and before the question has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that before we can proceed any further on the Bill presently before the House it is incumbent upon you to rule on my point of order as to whether or not you are convinced that the House can force a division at this time and, second, whether I have convinced you that the motion is debatable.

Perhaps you may wish to reserve a decision, Mr. Speaker, until you have reflected upon this question and had consultations with the Table. In the interim, I would suggest that we should perhaps proceed with the next item of business until the question before us is resolved.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the Members of the House for your patience in hearing this rather lengthy point of order.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to offer some comments on this point of order, although I will do my best to keep my remarks down to a reasonable compass. In saying that I am not suggesting that my hon. friend did not keep his remarks down to a reasonable compass, but I just want to assure you that on my own part I will attempt to do so.

Mr. Speaker: I can say to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that I will expect assistance from him, naturally. I would also point out that that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has made a very succinct argument and came very well prepared for it. I did not feel that he was speaking off the top of his head. I have been listening very carefully. If the Hon. Member for Windsor West has anything of assistance, I will certainly hear it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I do want to confirm that Bourinot's Fourth Edition does make it clear that a division is entirely in order when it comes to a motion as to when a matter is to be next looked at after first reading has been approved by the House. There are a number of examples which my hon. friend from Kamloops—Shuswap has put on the record. I do not intend to repeat them.

It is interesting that Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which was produced some 40 years after Bourinot's Fourth Edition, asserts that the matter is purely formal and done without any vote, but offers no annotation. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition merely lists the citation from the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne's. There is, therefore, no indication whether the House ever made a conscious decision to prevent a vote at this stage, certainly in modern times.

I do want to confirm that my own inquiry into this matter confirms that there are precedents for divisions being held on a motion of the kind we are discussing, but certainly without any support for the position taken in the two most recent editions of Beauchesne's which assert that the matter is merely formal. I repeat that this is not supported by Bourinot, who gives specific citations showing how such votes have been taken.

Having said that, I know you will want to reflect on this important point. If you do want to rule that a vote can be taken on such a motion, I hope I can reserve my right to make further comments as to whether such a motion is debatable and, if debatable, whether it is or is not amendable.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to address the comments made by my hon. friend, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I am somewhat amused that earlier this day his Leader argued that the only precedent for a motion which we intend to put forward on the issue of abortion was 105 years old when they are now trotting out precedents that are 120 years old. I suggest that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

I think it is self evident that there are precedents which help us to ease the business of the House, which, after all, is the purpose of the rules. In my experience, there has been no time when the House has divided on this question as to when the business shall be called again. I submit that the comment made by the Speaker is more of a rhetorical question. It is not a motion.

Normally, the Speaker puts questions to the House which are moved and seconded by individuals. This particular question has not been moved and seconded. I suggest that this whole issue must be dealt with in the context of the Standing Orders of the House today. It is possible to quote precedents from earlier days, but those precedents must be examined in terms of what were the Standing Orders of the House in those earlier days. Therefore, if it was standard procedure in those earlier days to fix a day for the second reading of a Bill, that is fine. However, if there is provision, as in Standing Order 111 to which I will refer in a minute, for when something shall be read another time, I think we must follow what the Standing Orders and the precedents say today.

Point of Order—Mr. Riis

Last week, in the interest of democracy there was a vote on concurrence on the Ways and Means Motion. While I appreciate that the Chair has reserved on this matter, there were two earlier votes on the question of whether or not leave was required or whether concurrence made it a direction to the House to consider it. We also had a vote on the key question as to whether or not the Bill should be read a first time and printed. The essence of the question to us on that day was whether or not it was printed. I suggest to you that that has been done. However, Citation 378 of Beauchesne, Fourth Edition, states that the words are:

> ... purely formal and proposed with the object of placing the Bill on the agenda ...

According to the precedents, it is seen as a mere formality.

In conclusion, it is the business of the Government to call the business of the House. Standing Order 111(1) states:

> Every bill shall receive three several readings, on different days, previously to being passed. On urgent or extraordinary occasions, a bill may be read twice or thrice, or advanced two or more stages in one day.

I suggest that the comment: "When shall the Bill be read a second time?" is a question to the House as to whether or not there has been consent to proceed to second reading today. If that consent exists then the Speaker is, in effect, asking if there is that consent or willingness to proceed today. If not, it seems to me that according to Standing Order 111 it must automatically be the next day or the day thereafter.

I suggest that in the context of today's Standing Orders and the way this House runs, when you ask the question: "When shall the Bill be read a second time?", it is really a question as to whether or not there is consent to proceed to second reading that day. Failing that consent, according to Standing Order 111, it shall not be today but a second date.

It is a very interesting argument and I appreciate that my hon. friend is trying to find every way he can to delay debate on this very important issue. I appreciate that it is part of his role as Opposition House Leader, but I suggest the Standing Orders are clear. You have asked whether there is consent in the House to proceed today. Failing that consent being given, we then fall back to Standing Order 111 and it shall be tomorrow or a succeeding day in the Business of the House.

Mr. Speaker: First, I want to make it clear to Hon. Members exactly what has occurred here. The Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) has pointed out that there was a vote on concurrence on the matter of the trade Bill and today there were two further votes, one for the introduction of the Bill and a second for first reading.

It is also quite accurate that in the first vote the Chair gave what I could refer to as the benefit of the doubt to the Opposition in the interest of order in this place and in the interest of effective procedures. However, I think I pointed out that that was not necessarily a precedent.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has raised a matter that I must say had not gone unnoticed by the Chair some days ago. Therefore, I have had a chance to consider it with care. Let me say, however, and with some degree of admiration, that the argument put forward by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap was thorough and rooted deep in history. It was succinct and a credit to the Hon. Member, and of assistance to other Hon. Members who wish to respond to it.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has added somewhat to that argument and I am indebted to him for his remarks. Of course, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Minister of State.

I was able to scribble a few notes during the noon break, I believe in anticipation of most of the argument of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. I shall refer partly to these notes in the interest of clarity.

First, I might say that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap has raised a matter which one could say has rarely been raised in many, many years. I should point out to the Hon. Member that while I have looked carefully at the passage in Bourinot, the cases upon which that passage is based go back well over 100 years. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap has made that very clear.

When I say that it has rarely been raised in many, many years, it is because I have not been able to find any instance of it being raised, save one single instance a few years ago. I bring that to Hon. Members' attention.

This occurred on January 19, 1984, when Speaker Francis was in the chair. He was responding to a matter raised by the then Hon. Member for Yukon. He commented on some argument that had been put forward. He then went on to say, with respect to Citation 722 of Beauchesne's, which, as Hon. Members will remember, takes a different position from the Bourinot citation of many years before:

• (1530)

> The Chair has, however, relied on Citation 722 of Beauchesne's, which reads—

I am now quoting what was read by Speaker Francis:

> Appointment for Second Reading
> When the House has agreed to the first reading of a bill, the Speaker at once proceeds to ask: "When shall the bill be read a second time?" The answer is generally: "At the next sitting of the House." The bill is placed on the Order Paper, in its proper place, for a second reading at a future time. It is purely formal and is proposed with the object of placing the bill on the agenda for a second reading at which time all discussion can more regularly and conveniently take place.

I quote that not to say that it is an observation with extensive reasoning to it. It is not. However, it is the only citation that I have been able to find which indicates in contemporary times what any Speaker of this place has thought with respect to the distinction between Bourinot and Beauchesne. There at least is some guidance. Clearly, Speaker Francis at that point is making the point that the procedure is purely a formal one.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) made several observations in the course, as I said, of his excellent argument in which he said that just because this practice as enunciated by Bourinot has not been followed for many decades is no particular reason that it ought not to be followed today.

I am reminded of Dean Swift when he said that lawyers are a race of men among us who believe that anything that has been done before may legally be done again. I think it is always important not to get caught up in that adage too closely.

However, certainly the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap starts off on sound ground because he cites precedents. I have not been able to go back to look at those precedents in the context. What I think is common ground here is that whatever the practice may have been then, and I think that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap acknowledged this, as he said, it has fallen into disuse. He also said that there is no precedent that extinguishes the right of a Member to force a division or, indeed, to go on to proceed during a debate and then to amendment.

It would seem, at least at the moment, that what the Hon. Member says is so. However, the difficulty of the Chair in a case such as this is that if a practice has so fallen into disuse that it is not in the minds and in the contemplation of Members on either side of the House when the particular form—and that is of course what Beauchesne says it is—is followed, then the question is whether it is a better course of wisdom for the Speaker to reach back too far to pick something out of the mists of time to say that suddenly, without any particular expectation, it applies. I must say that that is a practice that I would not want to take part in unless I had some very clear direction from all sides of the House that, indeed, some ancient practice ought to be reinstituted and ought to be part of the consideration of the House at all times.

I have to say to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap that to proceed to take the Bourinot quote and apply it, to leap-frog it, if I can put it that way, chronologically, ahead of and in a position of greater importance than the Beauchesne quote, especially when we have at least a nod toward Beauchesne on the part of a recent Speaker of this House, would not be in the interests of procedural wisdom in this place.

However, it is one of those arguments which is of great interest. It may well be that Hon. Members may wish to discuss it further. It may well be that Hon. Members might want to agree together that some change may be made. In the absence of a very clear direction from this House I do not think it would be appropriate today under these circumstances to apply what may well be a ruling that was appropriate over 100 years ago to the matter that is in front of us today.

I thank very much the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap and those who may have assisted him in his argument. I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and I thank the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I enter this debate, and I remind Hon. Members that on April 12, I advised the House of the Government's intention to introduce legislation to permit all Canadians, and particularly Air Canada employees, to participate directly in the ownership of Air Canada.

Bill C-129 was introduced last Thursday. I am pleased that we have the opportunity to commence second reading debate here this afternoon.

The overwhelming support and reaction to this April 12 announcement by Canadians in general and by Air Canada employees in particular was not unexpected. Air Canada wants and has earned the chance to fly independently after 51 years in the public sector. The 22,000 people on the Air Canada team and the millions of Canadians who were served by the airline are all well aware of the benefits which public participation will bring, and all want to participate in that broad-based ownership.

Without being repetitive, let me briefly review the rationale behind the Government's initiative. I referred to this briefly in the House when I made my April 12 statement. The Canadian airline industry has come a long way since Trans-Canada Air Lines started operations in 1937. The industry has matured. It has come of age. What we are doing here today is a natural evolution of that process.

In 1984 Hon. Members will recall the Government began a process of economic regulatory reform, Freedom to Move, which culminated in a new National Transportation Act which was proclaimed on January 1, 1988. I am pleased to say and to acknowledge that this was a lengthy process, a consultative process, wherein the industry, the users of the transportation system but, more particularly, all Members of Parliament had an opportunity to participate, both in the hearing process before the legislation was brought in and during the legislative process itself. I think it was an excellent example of the consultative process working, of democracy in action. It clearly reflects parliamentary reform which has been the hallmark of this Parliament.

The airline industry responded to this new open environment. In so doing it shifted its focus from that of satisfying a regulatory agency to responding to the needs of the public, in this case the travelling public.

Competition and innovation have produced in a relatively short time two major national air carriers: Air Canada and the Canadian Airlines International, with national, regional and local services provided by themselves and/or their partners. In addition, Wardair is rapidly emerging as a third national carrier to offer additional choice to the travelling public both at home and abroad.

All airlines, including Air Canada, continue to serve important public services. But state ownership is not necessary to carry this out. Indeed, the airline industry's record in Canada since economic regulatory reform was initiated clearly shows that competition and the freedom to move has provided better, safer and more competitive services through market forces than it did under government edict.

For example, since 1984, weekly scheduled domestic departures across Canada increased by almost 50 per cent by the end of 1987. The figure rose from roughly 6,200 departures per week to 9,300 departures per week. This means that more communities in Canada are getting a greater frequency of service. Therefore, the public is obviously being served better than was the case before.

For its part, Air Canada has grown with the industry and has expanded services. Here, too, the figures are very interesting. For example, departures have increased by 90 per cent since 1984 with the integration of the alliance carriers from 2,369 departures per week in 1984 to 4,489 in 1987. Therefore, there is a situation where Air Canada, with its integrated alliance partners, is providing more services to more communities integrated, and it is certainly all being carried out under the flagship of Air Canada.

As it prepares to enter the 1990s, Air Canada has an aging fleet, and the airlines management must be able to maintain its leadership position and make its own decisions on equipment, financing, and operations with the same options and opportunities as its Canadian and international competitors. The legislation before the House, Bill C-129, will provide Air Canada the freedom it needs to respond quickly and effectively to the demands of its customers, unfettered by the administrative controls and procedures which must apply to Crown corporations.

I would now like to turn to some of the provisions of the legislation itself, and hopefully in the course of doing so demonstrate to the House how closely it follows the commitments that I made in the April 12 statement.

First, within the legislation there are strong provisions to ensure that no more than 25 per cent of issued shares are owned by non-residents of Canada. In this respect, the same restrictions are placed on all transportation agencies under the provisions of the National Transportation Act. Furthermore, no more than 10 per cent of issued shares can ever be owned or controlled by one individual or associated interests.

In other words, the fears raised by some that Canadian carriers such as Air Canada will soon be owned by a United States or foreign airline are simply unfounded. It cannot happen. To remind some Members of the House who seem to have forgotten, the free trade agreement does not affect the Government's right to impose these restrictions in any way.

In addition, the legislation puts the force of law into the Government's commitment to maintain the airline's operational and overhaul centres in Montreal, Winnipeg, and Mississauga. While the legislation guarantees that these operations will be maintained, the same sound business reasons that they were established there in the first place will be the best guarantee that they will not only remain, but grow and expand with the airline and the country.

[Translation]

Third, the Bill provides that Air Canada's headquarters will remain in Montreal. Air Canada has played a major role in providing services to Canadians in this country's two official languages. This provision guarantees that the Official Languages Act will continue to apply to Air Canada.

[English]

As for the other provisions that I announced on April 12 which serve as conditions for this initiative, Government will continue to work with Air Canada's board and management. I want to assure the House that no shares will be sold to the public by the airline, or by the Government, until we are satisfied that the following conditions are met.

We want to be assured that as many Canadians as possible will have the opportunity to participate in the ownership of the airline through an innovative and broadly based distribution plan. We also want to be assured that an attractive employee share purchase plan, financed by Air Canada, is in place to give Air Canada's 22,000 men and women the chance to become part of their great company. We also want assurances that Air Canada's employment policies will be continued.

Once these and other financial regulatory conditions are met, the Government will permit Air Canada to issue to the public up to 45 per cent of the shares in the corporation. The Government will retain the additional 55 per cent of the shares for a period which will depend upon market conditions and the orderly transition of Air Canada from a state-owned entity to a publicly-held Canadian business.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sure the hon. gentleman wishes to speak in this debate, Madam Speaker, and I will certainly give him the courtesy of listening to him. I would expect that he would extend the same courtesy to me.

I suspect that the demand for shares from Canadians and Air Canada's employees will be so positive that the Government will be under pressure to allow more people to participate sooner rather than later.

I have been rewarded time and again since April 12 with kind words and support from ticket agents, flight attendants, baggage handlers, receptionists, and ramp workers as I have travelled across the country on Air Canada. One such comment stands out in my mind. It came from an employee who, only days after the announcement, came up to me as I was boarding an Air Canada flight in Toronto. He happened to be a ramp attendant and when I asked him, "How are you doing?" He replied, "Great. But we will be even better when we will be working for ourselves. Thanks!"

To a large extent that comment reflects how the rank and file feel about the privatization initiative. That comment, and many like it that I have received since April 12, are the reasons for Bill C-129. Those people have pride in their jobs, pride in their company, and hope and confidence in their future. They want to be able to challenge that future on their own as direct participants in the success of their own efforts.

This is an important day for Air Canada, and I am pleased to lead off the debate on Bill C-129. I do so on behalf of Air Canada's management and its employees. I am talking about the ramp attendants, the pilots, the flight attendants, the ticket agents, the supervisors, and all those loyal employees who have served the airline so well. Just as important, I do so on behalf of all Canadians who would like the opportunity to participate directly in the ownership of a great company that they know and respect.

Accordingly, I urge all Members of the House to consider the importance of this initiative, and the importance in moving this legislation ahead in order that Air Canada can build for the future, a future based upon a solid 50 year history, eager to meet the challenges of the next 50 years.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I have a great deal of difficulty with this Bill, not only because I and my Party oppose the privatization of Air Canada, but because the Bill that has been presented to this House is severely deficient. It is not complete. There are a great many things that the Government said it was going to do that are not in the Bill. I would be remiss if I did not mention to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), that we expected a great deal more, even if we had been in favour of the Bill, than is actually in the Bill. I would like to talk about that and mention some of the shortcomings of the Bill and some of the reasons for my Party's position with respect to Bill C-129.

It is clear to me and my colleagues in the Official Opposition that the Government has not thought this Bill through. There is so much that the Government has left unsaid. There are so many bases that the Government has not covered. It is this hell-bent-for-leather approach and this determination to sell this corporation at any cost that is forcing the Government to move so quickly, really too quickly. Air Canada deserves much better. The Canadian public deserves much better. I think the airline industry deserves much better. I think the employees deserve much better. I trust the Government will take into consideration some of the points that I hope to make here this afternoon.

As I mentioned, we are opposed to the privatization of Air Canada and believe there are better ways than privatization to resolve the financial issues facing the corporation. We believe that Air Canada should remain wholly owned by the Government of Canada.

In 1977, the then Liberal Government proposed and Parliament approved the Air Canada Act under which the corporation now operates. That Act was in response to the observations and recommendations of the Estey Commission of Inquiry. The commission, in essence, proposed that Air Canada be given the legal and corporate structure, the flexibility and financing to operate on a commercial basis and on the same footing as its competitors in Canada and abroad. Air Canada was refinanced in 1977 with a debt equity ratio equivalent to other major North American airlines.

Following that, it was split off from Canadian National, as stipulated in the Act, and given its own Act that used the Canada Business Corporations Act as a model and a reference. This new Act admonished directors and officers to conduct the business affairs of Air Canada with prudence, diligence and "in the contemplation of profit". In other words, Madam Speaker, in 1977 Air Canada was placed on a commercial footing with a clear arm's length relationship with the Government. As you see, we do not need privatization. What the Government says it wants has already been achieved in 1977 with the Air Canada Act if the Government will only allow it to happen.

The Liberal Party does not dispute the fact that Air Canada requires financing to modernize its fleet. Air Canada finds itself in an extremely difficult position needing billions of dollars to finance new aircraft, probably needing in the immediate short term approximately $300 million to get this purchasing of aircraft started. The reason for the haste is the Government, which has been in power for almost four years, has done absolutely nothing. It has postponed the decision to assist Air Canada in purchasing new aircraft. That is the reason the Government is up against the wall right now saying the decision must be made immediately and that we do not have any time to waste on this important question.

Why has the Government panicked and allowed itself to be held hostage by Air Canada's financing requirements? Is the Government being stampeded into privatization? Is this privatization treating the symptoms of the problem rather than the disease itself?

In 1977, presented with a similar situation, the then Liberal Government made the necessary management changes, or saw to it that changes were made, and recapitalized the corporation. We contend that the same should be done in this instance. We believe Air Canada has played and continues to play an important public policy role in ensuring air service to all regions of Canada. That public policy role could be jeopardized by privatization when, according to the Minister's own words, Air Canada will be "market driven". This Government's deregulation initiative in air transportation has led to significant corporate concentration through the mergers of acquisitions by national and regional carriers. With Air Canada we now have three principal carriers in Canada and many regional airlines which are affiliated primarily with two of the three major carriers.

In the United Kingdom there were two major carriers, British Airways and Royal Caledonian Airlines. Now there is but one. This leads to the first concern that we have with privatization, namely, that there is no stipulation that Air Canada is either not going to be purchased by one of the major carriers or will not subsequently purchase one or the other major carriers, thereby further concentrating the airline industry in Canada. At a result, competition deteriorates very quickly, as was the case in the U.K. This is something we do not need, Madam Speaker. If we are going to have a healthy airline industry in Canada, we have to maintain competition, not follow the lead of the U.K. and reduce our air services to one major carrier.

A government-owned Air Canada would act as a bulwark against such increased corporate concentration in air transportation and ensure at least a level of competition. Let us be very clear about the Government's motives behind this privatization. The Government is not motivated by ideology nor is it motivated by some grand scheme or strategy to enhance efficiency in the air transportation sector. The Government's motivation is money, purely and simply. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government have decided that the Government cannot or will not provide the financing necessary for Air Canada to modernize its fleet. The Government will shift that burden to the Canadian public. This amounts to Canadians being asked to pay for the shares of a company they already own.

In January, 1985, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated:

> There may be some persuasive arguments in the case of Air Canada that some people can make in regard to the disposition of equity. I'll take a look at it. But Canada needs a national airline.

Well said, Mr. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: Now we have three.

Mr. MacLellan: Let us not forget that the "persuasive argument" that swung the Prime Minister's support behind this privatization was money. There was the Government's resistance to providing Air Canada with the money it needed. Knowing this, the Government, by its own inaction, and the management of Air Canada, with some deliberate but adroit manoeuvring, forced the issue with the Government and, as a result, we have Bill C-129 for the privatization of Air Canada.

Let me turn to the Bill before us today. In 1984 the Liberal Government brought forward Bill C-24. It was passed by Parliament and now forms Part XII of the Financial Administration Act. One of the changes made through Bill C-24 was a requirement that any acquisition or divestiture of a Crown corporation had to be approved explicitly by Parliament. In reviewing committee testimony and debates on this matter there is no question in my mind that this requirement was imposed, not only to ensure that Parliament's approval was sought for privatization, but also that Parliament's approval was sought for the method, structure and details of the privatization.

The record also shows that the Conservative Opposition at that time strongly supported this section. I contend that Bill C-129 violates at least the spirit of this requirement in the Financial Administration Act. Bill C-129, if passed in its current form, gives the Minister a virtual carte blanche for how and when the Government will privatize Air Canada. In effect, Bill C-129 is asking Parliament to buy a pig in a poke. We all know how the Conservatives would react if the shoe were on the other foot and we were asking them to accept this at face value.

I find it remarkable that the Government has said more in its press releases and in public statements about Air Canada's privatization than it has said in this Bill. I contend that if the Government says it intends to sell only 45 per cent of the shares at this time, it should say so in the legislation. It should tell us about the timing for the future share issues.

It is also significant that we do not see protection for the employees in the legislation. I understand there is a surplus of millions of dollars in the employees' pension funds. What happens to this surplus after privatization? The Government has said that employees will participate in this share offering and that policies governing salaries, pensions, benefits, relationships with unionized workers and employment equity will be continued.

The Government has made a great deal of employment guarantees in its public statements. If these guarantees are so important, and we on this side agree that they are tremendously important to Air Canada's 22,000 employees, why not put the guarantees in the legislation?

To establish an arm's length relationship which we contend already exists and has existed since 1977, the Minister has said that he will instruct the Air Canada board to act "in accordance with the majority of the public shareholders". Surely that is important enough to put in the legislation. If, as the Minister says, he is interested in getting good participation from the private sector in the 45 per cent share offering that his Government intends to place on the market, it would be important to state in the Bill just exactly how this will take place and who will vote these shares. However, it is not there.

I could go on to mention other points, but I think I have made my point in that regard. With a Crown corporation of this size, with the importance of Air Canada and the sensitivity and national prestige of Air Canada, for it is truly a corporation of tremendous national importance, I think that parliamentarians, the employees of Air Canada and the people of Canada have a right to review in detail all the commitments the Government has made and to ensure that the Government is in fact committed to putting them into legislation.

We should not be asked by this Minister and by the Government for a blank cheque to deal with Air Canada as, when, and however the Government sees fit. It is important that these criteria and stipulations be placed in the legislation itself. Only then can we have assurances that the statements of the Government will be followed through at a particular time as set forward in the legislation.

Let me turn to major mistakes the Government is making in this privatization, mistakes with which subsequent Governments, Air Canada employees, management and shareholders and the Canadian public will have to live. In the late 1960s and the early 1970s, Canadian Governments began to experiment with what we called mixed enterprises. They were supposed to herald a new day of government-business partnership and co-operation. At least that was the theory, and we know what happened. Those mixed partnerships really did not last too long. They were a combination of the private sector and the public sector, and of course they are now either all private sector or all public sector.

This form of mixed corporation, a combination of public and private involvement, has never really been successful in attracting private investment. Why is this? What is wrong with it? The answer is very simple.

The private sector investor looks, quite legitimately, to the maximization of profit and will buy or sell shares if he can get a better return somewhere else. The Government as shareholder has a number of public policy objectives in mind, including promoting employment, generating research and development, serving outlying areas in the case of transportation, promoting bilingualism and, in many cases, the promotion of regional economic expansion. In short, a lot of the Government's objectives are non-commercial.

In such a situation, management is caught in the middle, trying to mediate between the private sector's aim to maximize investment and the Government's attempt to develop its public policy objectives. I think Government should have public policy objectives, and that is why, of course, 51 years ago, Trans- Canada Air Lines, the forerunner of Air Canada, came into being.

Air Canada will not work as a mixed corporation. It should not even be attempted. Air Canada should remain a purely publicly owned corporation.

Under the Government's stated plans, Air Canada will be at least for a time, and I think quite a time, a mixed enterprise. Bill C-129 manifests the inherent conflict to which I have referred. It says that government shares will be voted in accordance with the wishes of the majority shareholders, though that is not stated very clearly in the Bill. Then again, very little is stated clearly in the Bill, because the Bill was rushed in. The Bill was not properly thought out. It does not contain all the information we would like to see.

The Bill provides, for instance, for a restriction on foreign ownership, yet it does not go to the extent to which Bill C-121 regarding Eldorado Nuclear and Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation went. It does not ensure that in any vote of the company, there will be only a certain percentage of foreign interest voted at a particular annual or other major meeting of shareholders of the company.

As I have said before, this Bill was rushed in, and it was not properly developed. We in the House have to deal at this time with a Bill that was not only built around the wrong premise of privatizing a Crown corporation that should not be privatized but one that does not deal fully with what the Government intends to do.

In its single-minded haste to privatize this national asset, the Government is willing to abrogate its responsibility to the people of Canada as a major shareholder in Air Canada. The Government has said how it will vote its 55 per cent, if that is actually what will happen. The Bill certainly is not clear on that but the Government has stated in its press releases that that is what will happen, so let us assume that the Government will retain 55 per cent of the shares of Air Canada, and it will vote that 55 per cent in accordance with the majority of the 45 per cent that will be sold to the private sector.

Let us just picture future question periods. The Government will be asked why Air Canada has laid off, say, 250 employees, and of course, we will get the answer from the Minister that the Government could not do anything about it because 23 per cent of the private shareholders thought that it was the right thing to do for commercial reasons. Or, what if Air Canada were to invest in a shoe factory in Argentina? You would get the same answer: "We couldn't do anything about it because 23 per cent of the private shareholders thought it was the right thing to do for commercial reasons". What if Air Canada were to invest in South Africa, contrary to explicit government policy? The same answer. "We cannot do anything about it because 23 per cent of the private shareholders thought it was the right thing to do for commercial reasons."

This is not the fate Canadians want for a corporation which has served this country well and been a part of our heritage for 51 years. If the Government feels so callously about the future of Air Canada and the interests of this country, if it feels so callously about its transportation policy, why is it holding on to any shares at all? Does it realize what it is doing or going to be doing? Does it have any conception at all of how it wishes to proceed? It is certainly not the private sector that is asking the Government to hold on to 55 per cent of the shares.

Given the current state of equity markets, the level at which airline company stock is trading, taking into consideration the coming election and the likelihood of a change in Government, Air Canada could be stuck in the position of being a mixed enterprise for some time to come. That would be a tragedy because it would be left out there in limbo. It would be a continuation of the uncertainty which has beset Air Canada since the Government took office in 1984 with its on-again off-again privatization policy. All this when Air Canada is trying to recoup market share in response to the stronger competition and the forces of deregulation. Given that, the Government has placed Air Canada in the weakest possible position.

I am also concerned that the anticipated major offering of Air Canada shares will act as an overhang in the equity markets and this will not help other airline companies. It may actually hurt them because of competitive share issues with which they may not be able to deal, at least in the short run. They will of course need financing for their own capital acquisitions and to meet the competition under deregulation.

There have been strikes at Air Canada, but I would agree most whole-heartedly with the Deputy Prime Minister in that Air Canada has an excellent workforce. Some are in favour of privatization, others are opposed. However, I think it is unfair for the Minister to use the figures he has used in this respect because, frankly, the 22,000 Air Canada workers should not be used as pawns in this privatization action. If the Government is planning to privatize Air Canada, then it should be able to stand up in the House and do so without using the employees of this very important and renowned company as a crutch. The Government will, after all, have to take full responsibility for this privatization if it goes through. If Air Canada suffers, it is going to be the Government that will bear the brunt of the public denunciation and humiliation.

As I said earlier, it is a question of money. The Government wants money to buy planes for Air Canada. It will need as much as $2.5 billion and that is a lot of money. The Government feels it needs approximately $300 million in the short term for the first payment on these planes. It is worth noting that the Government expects to obtain somewhere between $300 million and $500 million for the sale of the first 45 per cent, enough for the down payment on those planes. What is the Government going to do for the rest of the money? Certainly the receipts from the sale of all the shares of Air Canada are not going to be enough to pay for the planes. It could very well be that we will have a position where the market is not going to be responsive to this share issue, either the first 45 per cent or the second 55 per cent. The shares will then not be sold for what the Government hopes. Of course, there is, as I mentioned earlier, the cost of the balance of the airplanes. The Canadian public is still not going to be able to pay for the planes and the Government is going to leave everyone in a short-fall situation.

Of course, if the equity infusion is insufficient even after selling off all the shares, Air Canada will be no better off than it is today. The privatization will have achieved nothing but will have cost Canadians a great deal.

The privatization of Air Canada is hasty, ill-conceived, and is being mounted for no good reason. The Government has no mandate, no right and no need to privatize Air Canada. The company has been in business for 51 years, it is operated well and profitably, and has been a credit to this country. The Government is not treating it as though it were the proud and important corporation it is. It is treating it more like a booth at a county fair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Tax Reform—Ways and Means Motion—Prime Minister's Statement/Prime Minister's Statement; the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—Presence of Convicted Terrorist in Canada/Request for Explanation of Procedure Chosen by Government; the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson)—Canada Pension Plan—Eligibility for Disability Benefits.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this Bill has not been brought forward because there is a pressing desire for privatization of Air Canada, or a need either by the people of Canada or the company itself. Air Canada is just one example of the many publicly owned corporations established by Governments in Canada since we became a country. These publicly owned Crown corporations have been established not by Governments opposed to free enterprise. Very few of the Crown corporations we know at the federal or provincial level were established either by CCF or NDP Governments. Rather, they were established by Governments and Parties which believed in the free enterprise system. They believed in competition. Those Governments were headed by Liberal, Conservative, Social Credit or the Parti Québecois in Québec.

Let me just give you a few illustrations of Crown corporations established over the years. Let me begin with the first important corporation established with the help of a Canadian Government, a Conservative Government which was headed by Sir John A. Macdonald. I am talking of course about the CPR. It is not quite correct to call it a Crown corporation because what the then Conservative Government did was to give to the leaders of private business of that day grants and loans and the right to ownership of millions of acres of land worth at that time hundreds of millions of dollars. At today's rates that would be the equivalent of billions of dollars.

Why did the then Conservative Government follow that procedure? It did so because it realized that without a railway stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific there would be no Canada. It was obvious to them, and should be obvious to us today, that the economic lines on this continent run north and south rather than east and west. If the Government of that day had not pushed for the quick establishment of a railway, this country would not have survived and would now exist. It is largely because of the building of the CPR that we have a Canada today.

Let us look at another example. Ontario Hydro was established by a Conservative Government led by Sir Adam Beck. Ontario Hydro, as a publicly owned corporation, has provided industry and consumers in cities and on farms with electric power at as cheap a rate as possible. It has permitted the growth and expansion of Ontario and has enabled Ontario to compete with industries south of the border which were and are, to a large extent, almost exclusively served by private power.

In my own Province of Manitoba we have a publicly owned telephone system established by a Conservative Government which has consistently given the consumer, the homeowner, the farmer, and the businesses of Manitoba cheaper rates for telephone services than have the privately owned systems such as Bell Telephone.

The Canadian Wheat Board was established by a Conservative Government headed by the then Prime Minister, Mr. Bennett. We have the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation established as a publicly owned system by the Conservatives under Mr. Bennett. They did this because they realized that if Canada was to exist, to prosper, and to have its own identity, a publicly owned radio system was a necessity.

Air Canada, the change of which we are debating today, was established by a Liberal Government under the direction of the then Minister of Industry, Mr. C. D. Howe. He realized that with an airline we could move the mail and passengers from one end of Canada to the other in a way in which the railways, the trucking system, and the bus system could not.

We have publicly owned hydro systems. In Quebec it was established by the Parti Québecois Government. In British Columbia it was established by a Social Credit Government. These Governments did not proceed to establish these publicly owned corporations because they were opposed to the free enterprise system or because they did not have confidence in the initiative and determination of private investors, but because they realized there was a need for each of these corporations to provide a service as there was for the hundreds of other Crown corporations, federal and provincial, which had been established over the years.

They did this because they knew that at the time these were established as publicly owned corporations the private sector was not interested, it could not see at the time that profits could be made. That is not a criticism of the private sector. The main reason private investors establish businesses is to make a profit. If they cannot see that a profit can be made at the time, they are not going to establish a business, they are not going to meet the needs of the public. That is why Air Canada, like other Crown corporations, was established.

Why are we proceeding with this change in Air Canada? Is there a need for it? Has Air Canada not done a job? Has it not met the needs of the people? Has it not been efficient? No, there is no evidence of anything like that. In fact, not very long ago the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) opposed the sale of Air Canada. In The Globe and Mail of January 15, 1985, he is quoted as saying: "Some people want to buy the CBC. The CBC is not for sale. Air Canada is not for sale".

What has changed since January of 1985? Do the people of Canada want Air Canada privatized? There is no evidence of that. In fact, the evidence is the exact opposite. In March of this year two polls were conducted. People were asked whether they wanted Air Canada privatized. According to the Environics poll, as reported in The Globe and Mail, 51 per cent of people opposed the sale and only 31 per cent supported it. Similarly, in March, 1988, The Toronto Star reported on an Angus-Reid poll which asked the same question. He reported that 53 per cent of Canadians opposed the sale of Air Canada and only 35 per cent of the people supported it.

Why do we have this Bill, why this flip-flop on the part of the Government? We have this Bill, not because it is needed, not because the people of Canada want it, but because the Government is committed to a philosophy of private ownership. The Government believes that the private sector can do anything better than the public sector. The Government is, therefore, committed to the sale of Crown corporations whether or not they serve a need and whether or not they have been operated efficiently. We oppose the basic and fundamental principle which the Government seems to have adopted.

We do not believe that everything should be publicly operated and publicly owned. We know that for the foreseeable future we are going to live, as we have for many years until now, in a mixed economy, an economy which will be partly operated by private ownership, partly by public ownership, and partly by co-operative ownership. We believe that the needs and requirements of the people should be met in the best and most efficient way.

The Government wants to privatize Air Canada because it wants the company to make money rather, we say, than to meet the needs of the country. Privatization obviously necessitates competition. When we talk about transportation, particularly air transportation, competition inevitably means hiving off marginal routes. That means concentrating on traffic between the major centres in Canada which will inevitably lead to poorer service for the smaller cities and towns of this country and for the relatively isolated areas of Canada, such as the North.

• (1630)

This Bill not only satisfies Conservative doctrine, it satisfies the incorrect claim of competing airlines that Air Canada has been subsidized until now.

Why do we in the NDP and so many people in Canada support public enterprise? It is because public enterprise can provide a range of service to the community. The private sector either cannot provide to a fair and universal standard of service or will not provide it because it is not profitable to do so.

Public enterprise can promote and protect our national interest in a way that companies seeking profit cannot do.

One just needs to look at what this determination to show a profit is doing in the field of postal service to rural areas of this country. Rural post offices are being closed one after another as quickly as the Government can do so without antagonizing everyone. Look at the cut-backs in service to the new suburban areas in our cities, where, instead of door-to-door service which has been provided in our cities for generations, they are having foisted upon them these supposed community supermailboxes which they reject completely. The publicly owned corporation can help promote regional equality and provide models for good labour relations and equal employment practices.

The private sector, by its very nature, pursues profit, not the needs of the people. Pursuit of profit is not bad and has a rightful place in our economy, as I have already said, but if Canadians want a compassionate society that provides full employment, a high and rising standard of living, equitable distribution of income and wealth, equal access to vital services, then public enterprise is an essential method to achieve it. Air Canada has helped do all these things.

The Economic Council of Canada did a study of Air Canada. We disagree very strongly with that study which suggested that Crown corporations are not efficient. We say that Crown corporations have often provided services to the public at cost or less because the service, such as health care, highway maintenance, air and sea rescue services are provided on a universal basis. They are important. Private industry's preoccupation with competition and profits means that socially useful objectives like these are not priorities.

One need only look at what competition in the airlines will do in the drive to get customers. Rates for travel between major cities will be cut in an attempt to get an increased percentage of the business. The loss of revenue by providing that cheap service will be made up by poorer service to less fortunate areas with smaller population or by increased rates for them.

It is argued that private enterprise is intrinsically more efficient. Every day we hear of bankruptcies in the private sector and companies in financial difficulties. In many cases Governments, federal and provincial, have ended up bailing out these companies because the service or jobs they provided were believed to be essential to the communities in which they operated.

Efficiency in the private sector is often achieved at the expense of social or economic factors. The ability to provide goods or service at a lower cost may have less to do with efficiency than the fact that the private sector can avoid a unionized workforce or may be willing to sacrifice some quality in the pursuit of profit.

One only has to look at the reports which are coming out weekly, if not daily, on the kind of difficulties we see in the airlines in the United States. This was brought on to a large extent by their need to compete with one another. They were brought on to a large extent by deregulation.

Privatization has social as well as economic implications. It means decisions on investment and jobs are made on the basis of profitability. It removes the decision-making from a public-accessible forum to company boardrooms where decisions are private and hidden. Decisions about Canadian jobs and Canadian national resources may well be made outside of Canada.

We believe privatization means that economic decisions are made behind closed doors, inaccessible to public scrutiny. In the long run, the public will have less input in economic decision-making which directly affects their lives.

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), in introducing this Bill, quoted some employees of Air Canada whom he met and told him how happy they were about this proposal of the Government to privatize Air Canada. The fact is that unions representing 85 per cent or more of the employees of Air Canada have made it very clear publicly on numerous occasions that they oppose the privatization of Air Canada. They do it for very good reasons. They have worked for Air Canada and know its history. They know its experience.

Let me spend a few moments putting on the record that experience. Air Canada commenced operations in 1937 as Trans-Canada Air Lines. It was set up by a Liberal government at the suggestion of the then Minister, Mr. Howe. Its purpose was to develop an east-west air transportation infrastructure. Its first function was to move the mail. Then, as time went by, it evolved as a passenger air travel service, moving people from Atlantic to Pacific.

It is now suggested that this is no longer a valid role for Air Canada. We disagree and the employees represented by the unions disagree. In fact, they argue that the case for a public carrier is stronger in a deregulated environment into which we have been pushed, first as a proposal of the formal Liberal Government and now by the Conservative Government. We say that public ownership is more necessary than ever in a deregulated environment where certain services are vulnerable.

We believe Air Canada should have the responsibility of providing equality of service, not just between Montreal and Toronto, or Toronto and Winnipeg, or Vancouver and Halifax. We believe cities such as Sault Set. Marie and London, Ontario, are entitled to high quality service. We believe that Whitehorse and Yellowknife are entitled to high quality service. With competition will come diminution of the quality of service for these smaller cities and towns.

It is suggested that we need to privatize Air Canada because Air Canada needs larger amounts of money to buy new aircraft, and that if we do not privatize Air Canada then the purchase of new aircraft by Air Canada, publicly owned, will add to the national debt. The fact is that that would not happen.

In 1986 Air Canada reported a profit of over $40 million. Its rate of return on equity was a respectable 9.1 per cent. That figure ranked it among the best of Canada's top corporations.

Over the long term Canada has performed very well. In the past 10 years it has reported profits in all but two years. Over this period pre-tax profit exceeded losses by $379 million. Its cumulative net income was $243 million.

Air Canada has not received a direct infusion of government subsidies in 25 years. In fact, it has not received any new equity since 1978 when Air Canada was finally separated from Canadian National. Air Canada has been more profitable than competitors such as CP Air, Eastern Provincial and Nordair. It has done so while continuing to meet its public policy responsibility.

It has been suggested that Air Canada needs to be privatized in order to compete. Proponents of this theory point to the imminent passage of transportation deregulation legislation to support their view. There is no evidence that any Government interfered in the day-to-day operations of Air Canada. We know that the existing DC-9 aircraft need to be replaced, but there are many ways to raise investment capital. Issuing shares is only one. There are many options which have been used in the past and which could be used to a greater extent.

The traditional way for closely-held airlines to finance their fleets is by issuing long-term bonds. CP Air, as a unit of Canadian Pacific Limited, took this approach in 1985. CP Air had a debt to equity ratio higher than Air Canada's current ratio of debt to equity. Or, there are leasing arrangements. An innovative way to arrange fleet expansion to avoid high capital costs is third party leasing arrangements. Here, a consortium of banks and other financial intermediaries own the aircraft and lease them to the carrier for a fixed term.

PWA pioneered this approach with its 1986 resale and leasing of its 737 fleet. Air Canada has experimented with lease-back arrangements on some of its DC-9 fleet recently.

Or, there is financing by manufacturers. As the world market for commercial aircraft becomes more competitive the manufacturers have turned to financial packages as a way to make sales. For example, several years ago Mcdonnell Douglas offered favourable financing to sell its new MD-80 aircraft to both American Airlines and Trans World Airlines. Given the competition between Mcdonnell Douglas, Boeing and now Airbus, the European consortium, there is no question that leasing arrangements and financing by the companies that build aircraft could be arranged.

Or, if further equity is required, the Government should issue it. Air Canada, we say, has proven to be a good public investment. A case could be made for the first equity issue in 10 years.

It has been argued by some that Air Canada should be privatized because it would be more efficient. We say that there is no proof that Air Canada has not been operated efficiently as a Crown corporation.

Let us look at some of the examples of Air Canada efficiency. In terms of broad measures of efficiency that is,passenger load factor, revenue passenger miles per employee, and revenue tonne miles per employee, Air Canada was in the late seventies just above the median of a profile of the North American airline industry. Fuel expenditures for Air Canada at the end of the 1970s was 20 per cent of operating expenditures compared to CP Air's 25 per cent. With respect to revenue yield per revenue passenger and safety record, Air Canada's yields over the past two decades have been consistently better than the record of CP Air. These facts were brought forward in a study done by Mr. Langford and apply to the 1960s and the 1970s.

With respect to air safety, in a study covering the years 1960 to 1975 it was shown that Air Canada tied for first place with seven other airlines as the "safest among 40 international carriers".

As I have indicated, the unions representing the vast majority of Air Canada employees have expressed their opposition to this privatization. They have explained their reasons. They believe that the national airline, publicly owned, continues to serve an important public policy role. This policy basically needs to be strengthened and not diminished. Air Canada continues, they say, to meet this objective within the constraints since 1978 of operating a commercially profitable business. It faces a challenge to rejuvenate its fleet. However, as I have indicated, there are ways of doing that without privatization.

What the employees are worried about is that with privatization we will see the cut-back of existing jet air links which we have had. Deregulation may increase the number of short haul turboprop flights, but there is no substitute for direct or non-stop jet service. The latter offers numerous advantages including speed, reliability and performance in less than ideal weather conditions.

Jets also offer superior cargo capabilities, better access for persons with disabilities, and other important services like air ambulance. We have had an example of what doing away with jet service means in my own province. The people of Brandon are to say the least, angered by the fact that they no longer have jet service. They do not have jet service because of the decision of the Government, first considered by the former Liberal Government, that what we need in the air industry is competition.

Today there are several non-stop jet services which are marginal and which the private carriers have either ignored or served inadequately. Among these, the unions point out, are Victoria, Saskatoon, Sudbury, Sept-Iles, and Sydney, Nova Scotia.

What we will see with the privatization of Air Canada is that following the merger of CP Air with PWA we now have only two integrated national airlines: Air Canada and the new Canadian Airlines International. Wardair does offer limited scheduled services between major cities but has nowhere near the fleet service or destinations of the two major carriers. We can see from what has happened in the United States what deregulation has done—that in a country which has 10 times the population that Canada has.

A publicly owned Air Canada would guarantee that service would be continued, particularly service to remote areas. Marginally economic flights would be given a second chance. Pricing practices can be monitored. Above all, a Crown corporation such as Air Canada is at the present time accountable to Parliament, and ultimately to the Canadian public. This public policy window on the industry, we believe, is as important to Canadians as Petro-Canada is in the energy sector.

• (1650)

The public policy window on the industry will serve more than competitive objectives. It provides a way to monitor adherence to safety standards. It can assist in tracking airline standards in less tangible areas such as inflight service, and bilingual and multilingual capabilities. It can ensure access to airline services for persons with disabilities, those in need of emergency medical treatment, and cargo services.

Finally, a publicly owned airline can be an integral part of a national aerospace industry policy. Through procurement and off-set policies we could shape the future direction of this key industry in ways that would benefit all of Canada.

We are told by the Minister that what this privatization will do is to permit partial employee ownership as a preferred alternative to the full or partial sale of Air Canada. There is a small group of Air Canada employees who really want to see improvements in the management of Air Canada. They think that privatization is a way to do it. No one should be deluded into believing that this will give the employees control or even a say in how the company is run. Typically, companies use share purchase plans to put a block of shares in friendly hands in case of a hostile take-over attempt or a stock market run. Listening to the concerns of these employees does not rate high on the list of priorities which we should be considering.

In this Bill is a proposal for a partial privatization. Partial privatization is a prelude to full privatization, which we believe is the real objective of the Government, and which this legislation will provide for. Even if the Government continues to own its shares, the Government has made it clear that it will be the private shareholders who will call the tune on the basis of what they consider to be their own commercial interest. The statement that Air Canada facilities will be maintained in Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, or anywhere else is a sham. The private shareholders can and will likely decide to cut back on Air Canada facilities in Winnipeg or any other place, if it suits their needs.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is in the Bill, David. How do you change it?

Mr. Orlikow: My friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), states that it is in the Bill. Yes, it is in the Bill. But the fact is that the industry and the private investors have made it very clear that partial privatization will not work, is not in their interests, and is not acceptable. Therefore, partial privatization will only lead, in the not too distant future, to complete private ownership.

In The Globe and Mail business section on Saturday, May 21, there is a fairly lengthy article by Cecil Foster which deals with this question. The heading of the article is "Industry Cool on Air Canada sale". The article states:

> The behind-the-scenes presence of the federal Government will likely scare investors away from a partly privatized Air Canada, leaving the airline no better off than it when it was totally Government owned, industry observers say.
> Also, the imposition of conditions of service on the airline could eventually saddle it with extra costs and remove its flexibility for long-term planning, the industry watchers said.

What are they talking about? They are talking about those provisions in the Bill which will require Air Canada, when it is partially privatized, to maintain its facilities in Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, or in other cities.

The article further states:

> This means the Government will probably have to sell Air Canada's shares at low prices to avoid the political embarrassment if they do not sell quickly.

Air Canada, in that case, would not raise enough money to alleviate its debts. And because of its mixed public and private ownership, it could also have difficulty raising additional money from lenders confused about who is really in charge.

Air Canada says it needs new planes to remain competitive. It has been estimated that that will cost somewhere between $3 and $6 billion. The Government proposes that the sale of shares would bring in somewhere between $300 or $400 million. That is certainly not enough to meet the needs of Air Canada.

The article goes on to state:

Critics think that because of its heavy demands for capital, it is unlikely Air Canada will pay shareholders any dividends for a long time.

If shareholders do not see dividends from their investments, why will they invest? As this article states, that is why the shares will have to be offered at a relatively low price.

There is a requirement in this Bill that Air Canada maintain its facilities. The article points out that none of the private sector competitors face these conditions which the Government is imposing on the company, because the Government knows if it does not do that it will incur the wrath of the employees and the people in the cities in which Air Canada has those facilities. What are these conditions? In the article it states:

The conditions include: Keeping free maintenance bases in Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal; keeping the company's head office in Montreal; and maintaining its bilingual status. In addition, Ottawa wants the shares to be broadly held, with no one owning more than 10 per cent.

The article further states:

Steve Garmaise, analyst with First Marathon Inc. of Toronto, said Air Canada's problems will be compounded by the fact that, in the current market, "you can't convince anyone to buy airline stock".

While meeting the conditions would provide no immediate difficulty to Air Canada's management, they would remind investors they were risking money in a company that was neither fully Government owned nor fully in the private sector.

The article quotes William Stanbury, a Professor of Regulation and Competitive Policy at the University of British Columbia who stated: "This would be a factor in the investors' minds no matter what the Government says about not exercising any control over the airline." He went on to say: "Politicians can do strange things when they get into heat for votes".

The article further states:

The critics would have preferred that Ottawa sold the airline in one go, a move similar to those by the British and Singapore Governments when privatizing their national airlines.

Why did the Government not do that, Madam Speaker? It did not do it because it was not prepared to take the political flak and the political opposition which it knows it would face if it had proposed a total privatization of Air Canada.

The article goes on to state:

"You have to start from the position of whether there is a public policy role for the airline," said an adviser to the Government on the privatization.

"If there is no public policy role, then you get out, not go half way", said the adviser, who asked not to be identified.

He faulted Ottawa for not privatizing all of the airline and for not having the political courage to sell the shares last summer when stockmarkets were booming.

I have indicated why we oppose this Bill, and why we oppose the partial privatization of Air Canada. This Bill has been criticized by the employees. It has been criticized by many public-interest groups. It has been criticized as a poor business deal by precisely those people the Government hopes to get involved in purchasing part of Air Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with deep regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member. The time allotted to him has now expired.

It being five o'clock p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved that Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I have great pleasure in moving second reading of Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations. I hope eventually this Bill will be referred to a standing committee in order to proceed to completion.

This Bill was actually presented first on November 26, 1984. The Bill had originally been written by the then Hon. Member for High Park in Toronto. He was not re-elected in 1984. I was preparing a Bill at the same time and consequently when the Member was not re-elected I stopped my preparation and adopted his Bill. Second reading of the Bill took place on April 29, 1985 and it was referred to a committee. Unfortunately, the Bill never came out of committee. The committee was probably swamped with work or otherwise. The Bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans, a very strange committee for this particular Bill to be sent to. I hope the next committee the Bill is sent to will not be the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans because that committee has no connection with the Bill whatever.

Bill C-205 is primarily to protect heritage railway stations. A great number of stations were built in the early days of the railroad right across Canada. Many were representative of that particular era. A great number of these have already been destroyed. Consequently it is necessary, I believe, to have legislation protecting those that still remain. I cannot give the particular number but it is not large. Undoubtedly there are heritage railway stations in every province of Canada that should be preserved for all time. This Bill simply sets up the mechanism for doing that. I want to go through it now so Hon. Members will know exactly what the Bill does.

The Bill if passed means that no railway company or any other company shall remove, destroy, sell, assign, transfer or otherwise dispose of a heritage railway station. You will notice, Madam Speaker, that the Bill says "heritage railway station", not any old unused station. Clause 3 reads:

> No company shall remove, destroy, sell, assign, transfer or otherwise dispose of a heritage railway station owned by it or otherwise under its control unless otherwise authorized by an order of the Governor in Council.

In other words the Cabinet. It continues:

> Any company that acts in contravention of subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not less than $50,000 and not more than $1 million.

Another clause of the Bill provides that if a company plans to remove, destroy, sell, assign, transfer or otherwise dispose of a heritage railway station owned or controlled by it it must file an application for authorization. Again this is required if it is a heritage railway station. It must file this application with the Minister in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council.

The Minister of course is named by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as any other Minister is. After having given public notice of its intention, the company files notice with the Minister. Concurrently with the said filing, the company shall submit to the Minister a profit and loss statement of its estimated annual losses for preserving the said station and of any other expenses the company would likely incur in future years as a result of the application being refused. We put that particular protection in the Bill so there will not be a frivolous attempt on the part of an intervener to force the company to go through this procedure when the station is not really a heritage station at all.

Any person who objects to an application for authorization shall, within the stipulated time in the Bill, serve notice on the Minister setting out the reason for the objection and any relevant facts. This way the general public has an opportunity to say why a station should not be destroyed, sold, et cetera. Upon the expiration of the stipulated time in the Bill, the Minister refers the matter to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board for a hearing and report which is set up for this very purpose. Consequently, it is simply making use of a Board already there. The Board then holds a hearing as soon as possible after publishing notice in at least one newspaper in each official language in general circulation in the municipality in which the station is located. This occurs if there is an objection registered by any individual or group across the country. The board must grant all interested persons a reasonable chance to appear before it to make representations. After the representations have been heard, the board must, within 30 days, submit a report, not only to the Minister in charge of the particular Bill but also to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) setting out its findings and recommendations together with the reasons for them.

You will notice, Madam Speaker, that there is a second Minister brought in to make sure that the railway will not be mistreated or put to extra expense and to make sure the station is really a heritage station. This occurs only if the Historic Sites and Monuments Board is of the opinion that the station is a heritage one. That is an excellent point because it brings a second Minister in to review the whole thing. The report will not rest with the one Minister but the Minister of Transport will be brought in as the picture unfolds.

Within 30 days after receipt of the report, the two Ministers shall transmit to Cabinet or the Governor in Council their recommendations along with a copy of the said report, the application for authorization, the estimated annual costs and notice of objection. The two Ministers must reach a decision and take that decision to Cabinet. Again, there is protection to make sure nothing will be frivolous. The two Ministers must make a recommendation to Cabinet. If they say the station is not historic, they can simply give the decision to the railway to dispose of it, burn it down, move it or whatever. The Cabinet may authorize the company to alter the station owned by it. After Cabinet receives the report, if it is unfavourable, Cabinet can authorize the company to do whatever it wants with the station, or the company may be authorized to remove it, destroy it, sell, assign, or otherwise dispose of it. In other words if Cabinet does not accept the recommendation of the Ministers, the railway station can do what it wanted to do in the first place. The authorization required by the company is in addition to and not in substitution for any other authorization or legislation. There will be nothing slipshod about it. It will be thoroughly reviewed.

This is the gist of the Bill which I thought I should outline to Hon. Members of the House. The Bill will actually provide efficient mechanisms which allow concerned citizens to make timely objections to the destruction, removal or sale of stations of historic or cultural value to ensure their conservation in the public interest.

The reason I am interested in this Bill, and why I decided to write such a Bill in the first place, is that of something happened in my home town. There was a station built in the early days of the railway by the CNR in what is now the City of Drumheller, then a coal mining town. When the railway going through that area was abandoned, almost overnight the station was destroyed. The town council was not advised, no one was advised. That historic building that could have been used for many, many years, an excellent building which was well constructed and represented another era, was simply destroyed overnight. Thousands of people felt very badly about this.

On the other hand, some stations have not been destroyed. For instance, in the Town of High River, the CPR in this particular case contacted the town council and the council and the town wanted to make use of that station, not to tear it down. Today that station sits there as a relic of the history of the railway and is used as a museum. Hundreds of people go through it and enjoy that station and will enjoy it for many, many years.

In the Village of Beiseker, again the railway contacted the council and gave it an opportunity to see what it wanted to do with the station. The council wanted that building. It did not want it destroyed, so the council agreed to take over the building. It was completely turned around because it was facing the railway and the council wanted it facing the main street. It was made into the town office, and not only the town office but the town library as well as a little place where they sell heritage items made by the people of that area. Again, this station will sit there for many, many years as a relic of an era that has passed by.

I could mention one other instance of this, and that is in the Town of Okotoks. The railway gave the town the opportunity to use the station. The railway is not using it, but the people of Okotoks, along with their town council, have made it into an arts centre. Now the artists and those who want to study drama have a place to go. Even public meetings are held there. I have held public meetings there personally. It is always a pleasure to go into that building and see the art that is being presented and made by the people of that area. Again, the station is being used to good advantage.

I have mentioned a few examples, but a great many stations have simply been torn down, destroyed or burned because the railway had no further use for them. It is a crying shame that we should lose those buildings.

I am not asking for a lot of expenditure on the part of the railways. That is why this Bill is not all inclusive. It does not say that the railways have to do any of the renovating, moving or decorating. That will be looked after by the people who want to preserve the stations and conserve them for future use. That is why the Bill is not all-encompassing.

A station may have to be moved, as the station in Beiseker was, completely put up on jacks and turned around, or it may have to be moved to another location. That will not be an expense borne by the railways or the Government. That will be an expense borne by the people who want to preserve the station, if there is such an expense involved. Consequently, the cost of this will not be on the shoulders of the taxpayers of Canada or the shoulders of the railways themselves.

There is another railway station sitting there waiting for something to happen to this Bill, and that is the one in the Town of Claresholm. The people want to use that station. The railway is through with it and it has been good enough to leave it there at the request of the town council which wants to use it as a heritage station and a museum. The townspeople are fixing up the grounds around it, and again, it will be used by the people for many, many years, as a representative of that era.

The Bill also provides that the Governor in Council will make regulations. This Bill sets out the skeleton and the regulations will be the meat on that skeleton, the meat that will enable any community with a heritage station to make sure that consideration is given to its preservation before anything happens to it. The railway companies will be obliged, when it comes to stations built in the early years, to notify the historic site boards that they plan to destroy or remove any stations.

The railways will also estimate the costs involved, so that the Minister and the Minister of Transport will be able to ascertain if it is fair to the railways to have these stations made into historic sites. That is almost the same as what is done with almost any building in any city that people want to preserve for future generations. They have to go through a certain mechanism, and the historic sites Board is well aware of those conditions and look after them.

I think this Bill is one for which many people are waiting. One other point I would like to mention is that when this Bill was before the House previously, I contacted various provincial Governments and I found that there is tremendous interest in this particular Bill provincially. As a matter of fact, one or two Ministers wrote to say that they had been waiting for a Bill like this for a long time because they want to preserve the railway stations in their particular provinces.

I cannot say how many railway stations will be affected, whether it would be many or few, but they are virtually limited to the railway stations that still exist and were built in another era, a time that has long since gone by, a time that will never come again. If we destroy these heritage stations now, they will be destroyed forever. If we preserve them now, they will be there as a monument to the past and as a useful instrument for many purposes in the future. I urge Hon. Members to support this Bill.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-205 regarding heritage railway stations. I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) brought this Bill forward, and I want to indicate my support for it in principle and my hope that today we can refer it to committee where it can be looked at in some detail.

As a member of the Fisheries and Oceans Committee, I noted the comment that the previous Bill had been referred to that committee. I agree with the Hon. Member that perhaps the Fisheries and Oceans Committee is not the appropriate forum in which to debate this issue.

The Bill provides a mechanism by which private citizens or indeed community interest groups could object to railway company plans to sell, move, destroy or alter railway stations. It gives citizens or community groups the opportunity to have those plans referred to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board to determine whether or not the station should be declared a heritage railway station or if any feature of it should be declared a heritage feature, in which case the company would only be able to proceed with its plans after an Order in Council made by the Government.

We all recognize, I think, the importance of railway stations in Canadian history and in the history of Canadian communities. Often the railway stations were the first buildings seen and experienced by new arrivals to communities, sometimes the places where they would be met by friends or relatives. It was a time when they were welcomed to a new community. Sometimes the railway station was the place where they realized for the first time that they were literally on their own, strangers in a strange land.

• (1720)

I was impressed by a picture in a book on the experience of prairie women. Probably other Members have seen this as well. It was called A Harvest Yet to Reap. It has a series of pictures of some of the women who came to our Prairies, and there is one picture that speaks more eloquently than any of us will speak today about the immigrant experience. It is a picture of an immigrant woman surrounded by a group of children sitting on a railway platform with their few worldly goods in trunks and suitcases beside them. All around them stretches the bald prairie which has not yet been inhabited by colonists. It speaks of the desolation these people experienced. Its focus, of course, was the railway station.

Railway stations are the place from which young people go off to college or a job in another part of the country. They are the places from which our young men and women went off to serve in the Army, and the places to which they returned to be received by their families. When we talk about these heritage stations, and I am sure the Hon. Member would agree with me, we are not simply talking about architectural heritage. Some stations do have a certain quality like that which needs to be protected, but others are simply good buildings, soundly constructed, with a real central place in the community's heart and soul.

In that regard they are something like community post offices. I simply want to emphasize again the sorrow of many Canadians and many small communities that Canada Post, following the orders of the Conservative Government, seems intent upon a policy of closing down many of those small community post offices across Canada. For some people in the Government, as well as in Canada Post, all that matters is the bottom line, and Canada Post has been ordered to follow policies that will lead to that bottom line, never mind the impact upon local communities.

I know the Hon. Member for Bow River has a concern for small communities. That was obvious in what he was saying this afternoon and what he has said before. He is speaking up on behalf of heritage railway stations for local communities, and I hope he does the same with respect to community post offices. They are an important part of our community heritage, too. We are not just talking about relics of the past, we are talking about enabling the community to exist as a place where people can meet and act and work together.

When we talk about preserving historical and heritage railway stations we need to remember that some of them need to be preserved in decent working condition as railway stations. Some will be converted to other use, but some have to be maintained as working stations. On Vancouver Island a few years ago we had a disgraceful situation where VIA and the E & N Railway had kind of decided that neither one of them had any real responsibility for maintaining the quality of our railway stations. The stations had become completely disgusting, dirty, uncared for, cold, and often inaccessible because they were locked up. That situation has improved somewhat, but let us remember that railway stations are supposed to be places where people can meet and wait for the train where there are still trains running. That should go without saying but, unfortunately, as I pointed out, that is not the case.

When all or part of these buildings are no longer needed as railway stations, then I think there are many innovative and imaginative things that community organizations can do to preserve them as an integral part of the community. In my constituency a number of small towns have taken action like this. There are two communities, Duncan and Lake Cowichan, where the railway station has become a museum. They have other uses as well, but the central parts are to be museums. The Ladysmith Railway Historical Society is interested in the railway station there because it hopes to operate a historical railway so people can come and see the way railroading used to be. Of course, the station is an integral part of that. Or, we can just go a few blocks from here in Ottawa where the former railway station is now the Conference Centre. It has maintained many of the architectural features that made it interesting. The other railway station in Ottawa, I understand, is part of the market downtown.

Finally, I simply want to make the point that we need to remember that railway stations did not exist by themselves. They existed as part of a transportation network, as part of the link between different communities. The Hon. Member referred to the fact that when branch lines are closed down the companies often wish to tear these railway stations down as well. We have to emphasize that many of these communities not only look to the railway station as part of their heritage, they look to the railway itself as a living part of their heritage. It was left to them from the past and is something for which their forefathers paid a great price. The abandonment of rail lines is something we have to be very concerned about. Again, in my constituency we see actual rail line abandonment approved by the Railway Transport Committee between Youbou and Cowichan Bay. A lifeline to a community is being eliminated.

In conclusion, I support the intent of the Hon. Member's motion. I hope it will be accepted by the House this afternoon and that it will be referred to committee where the details can be examined and any wrinkles can be ironed out.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am honoured and delighted to be able to say a few words with respect to my good friend's and colleague's Bill C-205. I would like to thank him for presenting this Bill, an Act to protect heritage railway stations.

The object of the Bill, preservation of these heritage railway stations, is praiseworthy. I know the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is anxious to have the views of all Members of the House on this Bill because it contains many good points. In general, though, it will take co-operation and goodwill to save our heritage railway stations. At present the mandate for doing so is divided and uncertain. The Bill does us a great service in bringing this to our attention. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of the Environment have an interest in this issue, as well as CP Rail, CNR and VIA Rail. There are many heritage organizations with an interest as well.

My friend from Bow River referred to the number of heritage railway stations. I think it is something like 23 or 24 which have actually been designated as such. I note his Bill restricts itself to those stations which have already been declared heritage railway stations. There are many thousands of other railway stations across the country which have not been so designated, and a good many of them have been preserved by virtue of public interest, usually a local group, individual, or organizations such as Kiwanis, Lions Club or Rotary Club. This has often resulted in agreement between the local municipality and the provincial Government or federal granting agencies. Some 23 stations have been declared to be of national significance by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board.

To arrive at the goal of preserving these heritage railway stations the Bill would forbid a railway company from destroying or in any other way disposing of a heritage railway station owned by it or under its control unless authorized by an order of the Governor in Council to Cabinet.

A company would have to apply for a permit for such a demolition, and the decision for granting such a permit would be made by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, which reports to the Minister of the Environment through the Canadian Parks service. I note that the fines would be not less than $50,000 and not more than $1 million. Therefore, the Bill has some real bite, as I am sure the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) intended.

The Bill under consideration would add to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada's already substantial responsibilities the further task of actually preserving Canada's heritage railway stations. While I fervently agree that the stations are worthy of preservation and that action needs to be taken to protect them, there is a legitimate question raised by the Historic Sites and Monuments board as to whether the best way to attain this goal is to give responsibility to an already heavily burdened Historic Sites and Monuments Board.

There is no doubt that the Board has a strong interest in preserving heritage railway stations and, indeed, in the preservation of all redundant railway properties having heritage value. The board is well aware of the heritage value of some of the early railway stations and has considered many submissions concerning railway stations. Some 23 or 24 have already been declared to be of national historic or architectural significance.

Historically the board's role has been a purely advisory one ever since it was set up in 1919. The board's mission, which it has fulfilled in an excellent and exemplary fashion for almost 70 years, has always been to identify persons, places, and events of national historical significance and to advise the federal Government on appropriate ways to commemorate them.

The Bill would require that the board hold hearings and prepare reports on the future of all heritage railway stations—be they of local, regional, or provincial interest—that are in any way threatened or scheduled for renovation, restoration, or repair.

The main concern which has been raised with the Minister by the officials and the members of the board is whether or not it should be turned into a form of an administrative body rather than a purely advisory body. As a result of this Bill, some real thought is being given to that now within the Department of the Environment.

It is true that heritage railways stations are close to the hearts of many of us. Certainly Members of Parliament can all recount several stories from our ridings. I know that the railway station in the City of Lethbridge is of historic significance. Many of our pioneers got their first introduction to the Lethbridge area at the railway station.

I hear many poignant stories of war brides coming over after World War II. Their first introduction to Lethbridge was the railway station where they met their husbands. They sent them off from Britain wearing very nice and fancy uniforms, and they were met by the same gentlemen at the Lethbridge railway station in bib overalls and straw hats. They wondered whether they were at all the same men who had kissed them goodbye in Britain. Nonetheless, they picked up their lives and marriages and made enormous contributions to Lethbridge and southern Alberta. I could give many other examples of how the local people believe that the railway stations are important to the historic continuity of our community.

My friend from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands drew an analogy to the Post Office. He was trying to make the political point that the Government is somehow damnable because it is permitting post offices to close. The truth, at least in my riding, is that the Post Office is almost the last building to disappear from the smaller towns. This was a government service provided at enormous cost to taxpayers. Rather than operating it as a Post Office paid for by the taxpayers in general, the Government is now trying to move it into the local grocery store or the little hardware store, which is sometimes the very last building in these little towns.

The reason these little towns are closing down is that the people themselves are speaking with their cars and their feet, so to speak. They are driving off to larger centres which are usually 30 or 40 miles apart now, rather than eight or nine miles, which was the configuration when we had railways and very poor highways. Now we have super paved highways and people want to use them. They simply drive to the larger centres to buy their groceries and clothes. Because of that the businesses are closing down, including the post offices.

In many ways that is the same with the railway. The early steam engines required stations every eight or nine miles primarily to get water. That is no longer the case. Diesel engines could go much greater distances. With the great superhighways farmers could haul their grain into larger centres and a lot of these railway stations were no longer needed.

Over the weekend my wife and I had the privilege of travelling to Stratford. We went up through Goderich and down through Great Bend and a number of small towns in Ontario. Since the history of Ontario dates back 150 years there is no doubt that there are some magnificent railway stations which deserve to be kept. In the West there is a fewer number of railway stations which are of tremendous historic significance in the sense that they can be structurally preserved for all time. Some of them will disappear, and quite properly so. However, there are a certain number which are architecturally and historically significant enough to be preserved. I think my friend's Bill will go a long way toward leading us in that direction.

I am anxious to hear what other Members have to say. I can assure the Member from Bow River that the Minister is monitoring this debate carefully. I am sure the House will make the proper decision at the proper time.

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to say that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), is to be commended for his abiding interest in protecting heritage railway stations. I would also like to comment briefly on the subject matter of this Bill.

Stations have been disappearing at a steady pace for many years. They are first closed down, and then, if no one buys them, they are often destroyed.

Madam Speaker, I think all Members will agree this is most unfortunate. In addition to being a reflection of our past, our old railway stations are often representative of an architectural style that is typical of North America. They bear testimony to the expansion of our country and are a heritage that cannot be replaced.

Why are heritage railway stations disappearing?

As far as the railways are concerned, many stations have fallen into disuse because of major changes in the infrastructure of transportation services during the last 20 or 30 years. The increasing popularity of highway and air transportation caused a decline in the number of passengers. At this point, CN and CP started to concentrate on freight transport which, over time, became their main source of revenue. Later on VIA Rail was added to the network, many lines were abandoned, and intermodal transport systems appeared.

Because of these developments, the stations lost their raison d'être and were gradually forgotten by the railway companies which were not interested in keeping them operational.

Madam Speaker, we realize that the railway companies had other priorities, including keeping pace with the development of this country, and we can hardly blame them for the fact that these stations have been all but forgotten.

However, when we hear that despite the joint efforts of municipalities and members of the community, some stations were destroyed, that is a sure sign something must be done to protect them.

In 1976, the Historic Sites and Monuments Board recommended declaring some 20 stations as being of national historic significance. The minister at the time accepted the Board's recommendation, and in some cases commemorative plaques were put in place. In Quebec, for instance, commemorative plaques were installed at the stations in Lévis, Isletville, Saint-Jean-d'Iberville, Acton Vale, Berthier and at Windsor Station in Montreal. However, this measure was far from adequate, considering the desired goal.

In fact, when the Historic Sites and Monuments Board submits recommendations for having certain buildings declared of historical value, this does not put any obligations or constraints on private or public owners.

The growing public awareness of our heritage in recent years is a sign of the good will of all concerned.

There are a number of examples, including the situation in Acton Vale, Quebec. The station in Acton Vale, no longer in use, could thus be preserved and become a source of pride for the entire community.

There are hundreds of railway stations in Canada that could still be preserved. Their historical role should not be forgotten, and in fact, they are very much a part of the memories of many Canadians. At a time when railway tracks are disappearing, they are the last vestige of the conquest and settlement of this country. They represent important milestones in the building of our railways. They are part of our national dream.

They were the focal point for the departure and arrival of thousands of families on their travels across this vast country they had come to settle. These stations have always brought back memories for those who go back to the places they came from. I imagine many of us in this House have felt the same way.

The Hon. Member for Bow River had a chance to introduce this Bill, and he was right to do so. The purpose of this Bill is to prevent any changes that would diminish the value of these stations. It provides that a station may not be altered without obtaining the authorization of the Governor in Council, an assessment by the Historical Sites and Monuments Board and a joint recommendation by the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport.

This Bill seems to fill a vacuum. It would oblige railway companies to apply for specific authorization before destroying or altering a station. The Governor in Council would in each case be responsible for issuing an appropriate order, on the joint recommendation of the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport, after public hearings by the Historical Sites and Monuments Board of Canada.

Implementation of the legislation would be largely incumbent on the Board, which, however, does not have the basic skills required to carry out such a specialized task. Furthermore, because of its main mandate, the Board might have a conflict of interest, since it would be asked to chose between the operational imperatives of a railway company and those of preserving our cultural and historical heritage.

The same argument is used in reverse by the National Transportation Agency, which would prefer not to see evaluating our railway heritage added to its main mandate. The crux of the problem is the conflict of interest that exists between policies and regulations governing the transport function and those governing the heritage and historical dimension. The federal Government must find a way to reconcile the divergent requirements of these two spheres of activity.

I earnestly hope that this discussion will be instrumental in finding a lasting solution to this problem. I know the Minister of the Environment (Mr. MacMillan) is now looking at other options for protecting our heritage railway stations.

Once again, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for his interest in this subject. I am sure that all Members share my view and will do everything they can to find a way to preserve our stations.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak to Bill C-205. This Bill is designed to provide efficient mechanisms to allow concerned citizens to make timely objections to the alteration, removal or demolition of railway stations that are of historical or cultural value, and to ensure that their conservation is in the public interest.

First, let me congratulate the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) who introduced this Bill to the House. As his constituents and Members of the House will know, the Hon. Member has a long history of support for this and other heritage issues.

This is a worth-while goal because the railway has played an important part in Canada's history. It has linked the regions of this country and has carried new citizens of Canada to their ultimate destination.

The railway system opened the West and formed a critical part of our economy. While its importance has declined somewhat, it still remains an integeral part of the Canadian way of life and the Canadian economy.

In my riding there are two railway stations that are strongly supported by community groups. In the most recent case, the Orangedale station has begun a process of rehabilitation. The Government of Canada is participating through the Canada Jobs Strategy job development component by providing the community group with funds to assist in the rehabilitation of this facility. As well, VIA Rail has contributed $20,000 to assist in the process.

It is an example of a tremendous corporate and community effort by the people from Orangedale who have come together to bring to fruition a process which has gone on for a couple of years. While there is a lot more to be done on the Orangedale station, we expect to accomplish the work in the next year or two.

I take personal pleasure from this project because my mother worked at the Orangedale station as a despatcher during the war. Although it was not traditional for women to work for the railroad as despatchers, as a result of the war there were not a lot of men to do this kind of work and women were asked to participate. It is of personal significance to me, therefore, and of great significance to the community that this project is going on. It is a fine example of how the community and corporate sector can work together to preserve part of our history not only for us but for future generations.

Also in my riding we have a station in Antigonish. Just last week I met with the historical society which is interested in working with VIA Rail to ensure that the station remains intact in order to utilize part of the station as a museum. I have sent letters to VIA Rail supporting the request of the historical society. I am hopeful that we will have the same success with the Antigonish railway station as we had with the railway station at Orangedale.

We sometimes drive by these stations and do not fully appreciate their significance. With the passage of time they fall into the ground and are removed. That is not the case with these two stations. I know that there are other facilities which communities are keenly interested in preserving for future generations.

I wish to be brief because I know there are other of my colleagues who would like to speak in support of this measure, particularly the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James). He has some views about just how important this Bill is.

In closing I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Bow River for this very worth-while initiative. I can tell him that this week I will be communicating to my constituents that his Bill is moving through the House. I will be providing copies of it to them. I know that they will be simply delighted to read this Bill and to see that this important initiative is being considered by the House. I hope that all Members will see fit to support it.

Mr. Ken James (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for introducing Bill C-205, an Act which is designed to protect heritage railway stations. These stations are very important to the lives and memories of Canadians and represent an important part of Canada's history. The Hon. Member for Bow River is doing us all a great service by reminding us of how important these heritage railway stations really are, and by reminding us that measures are needed to protect such stations, many of which are in serious jeopardy.

Indeed, as most of us are aware, far too many heritage railway stations have already collapsed under the wrecker's ball, or have crumbled before bulldozers. Often, too, heritage stations have been demolished with no warning at all, or, just as bad, after so little warning that organizing to save a station has been next to impossible. It seems to compound the tragedy when we lose a heritage building that might have been saved simply because of a lack of time to organize a community preservation effort.

Canadians have already lost too many of their heritage railway stations. These may have been built with public funds or with railway funds. However, it is indisputable that they have become part of our common heritage, and in a very real sense they belong to all Canadians. Thus, when a heritage station is lost in west Toronto, or in Ottawa Valley towns such as Pembroke and Arnprior, all of which have lost their cherished stations, often with little or no notice, the loss is felt by all Canadians with a sense of history.

However, despite the sad litany of irreplaceable stations that are gone forever, there is cause for optimism with respect to built heritage preservation, generally. We are already beginning to see concrete results as stronger measures to preserve the totality of Canada's built heritage are put in place. Now, under the present Government, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has set up a national cost-sharing program to assist in the restoration of nationally significant examples of our built heritage. Under this program the Minister of the Environment may contribute up to 50 per cent of the approved preservation project costs for each eligible site or structure, to a maximum of $1 million.

This cost-sharing program was only recently announced. However, five cost-sharing agreements have already been signed, among them a project to restore the historic George Brown House in Toronto, and another to preserve the cherished and celebrated Saint John City Market in Saint John, New Brunswick. All together some 15 additional national historic sites from British Columbia to Nova Scotia are now under consideration for preservation or restoration cost-sharing.

I wish to talk for a moment about how maintaining these older railway stations is important to communities. For example, the railway station in Sarnia, Ontario, is a historical building. After submissions were made to VIA it undertook a major restoration job on this historic railway station. Rather than tearing it down and building a new one it was restored. Substantial amounts of money have been invested in it. It probably cost more to restore it than it would have cost to build a new station.

The original building was brought back to life, just as the original brick was brought back to life by removing from it all the ugly paint and so on that had been put on it through the years. The superstructure of the building was restored in order to make it safe. VIA spent the total estimated cost of restoring the whole railway station just to restore the structure of the building. It is of pride to our community. The area about it is now being landscaped and proper parking is being made and so on. It is an attraction to our American neighbours who drive across the border to take the train to other places in Ontario and the rest of Canada.

I was remiss not to mention the railway station in Sarnia earlier. I know that my colleague from Bow River will be very interested in it. I hope that he will be able to come to Sarnia some time in order to visit it. Perhaps he could take the train from Ottawa in order to have a good look at it. He could even take an overnight train and have a sleep on the way down. He could visit me when he comes to Sarnia and we could tour the facility together.

The cost-sharing program to which I referred under the auspices of the Minister of the Environment is being administered by the National Historic Parks and Sites Directorate of Environment Canada. It is the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada that recommends candidate sites for possible cost-sharing.

There are further encouraging signs in the specified field of preserving heritage railway stations. Some 24 of these have already been officially designated as national historic sites on the recommendation of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. Doubtless, more will be so recognized in the future. Such a designation, while not placing owners under any but a moral obligation to preserve their buildings, do bring home to us how important such structures are to all Canadians.

Beyond that the railways, and CN specifically, have become very conscious of the high public profile that protecting heritage railway stations has received. CN has signed preservation agreements with the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario.

It would seem that this is the direction that offers the best opportunity for the effective preservation of our heritage railway stations. Given the heavy weight of public opinion it seems quite possible that such agreements as these might become more and more feasible, in the same way that total community efforts to save heritage buildings are becoming more and more common.

All Canadians are stakeholders in the effort to preserve our common heritage but this effort would be worthless if it were not a shared responsibility. To quote the slogan of last year's Environment Week, "It's up to all of us". Co-operation and consultation are hallmarks of the present Government.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

TAX REFORM—WAYS AND MEANS MOTION—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT/PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Madam Speaker, on June 19, 1987 I put a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) with regard to a statement which we deemed to be a budget because of the various matters contained therein. In fact, it had to do with a much touted program of the Government of Canada concerning tax reform. The substance of that Bill, and indeed the substance of many things which have come from this particular Government in the last number of years as it relates to tax related matters, have become a very serious issue for Canadians.

I was in my riding on the weekend, and a constituent came up to me and said: "Mr. Dingwall, Revenue Canada was good to me this year—they let me keep my mother".

Conservatives have talked about tax reform since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ran for the leadership of the Party, but they have done nothing but put taxes up. I say that with a great deal of regret, but the facts speak for themselves.

Today 99 per cent of Canadians are paying more in taxes than when the Conservatives came to power in 1984. That is a rather substantial increase, particularly in view of the fact that Ministers, when they occupied positions somewhat different from what they presently occupy, indicated that there would be no tax increases under a Conservative Government. The remaining 1 per cent paying less in taxes earned approximately $117,000 annually. Canadians who earn $20,000 a year are paying $390 more in taxes than in 1984, while those who earn $40,000 are paying an additional $840 and those who earn $120,000 a year are paying $3,570 less.

These figures deal with personal income taxes alone and do not include sales and excise charges, and the partial deindexing of family allowances. When the total impact of the tax changes under the four Budgets of the Minister of Finance is calculated, the average Canadian family with two children earning $40,000 per year is paying $1,439 more in total tax burden than in 1984.

I bring those figures to your attention, Madam Speaker, not only for your reflection but to bring them to the attention of the viewing audience, as well as Members in the Chamber. What has been talked about as tax reform, what has been referred to as a White Paper by the Minister of Finance and by the Prime Minister, has been substantially more than a White Paper. What we have had is new taxes added on to other taxes in previous years to give a cumulative effect of a major significant tax grab by the Government of Canada. Time and time again we see that it is the average Canadian who is paying through the nose for the various programs of the Government of Canada.

One has to ask oneself: Where is the fairness or where is the equity in such a system making demand after demand upon the average Canadian relating to taxes? This is the same Government that while in opposition, and indeed in the midst of the 1984 election campaign, talked about a new tax reform scheme for Canadians, but it conveniently did not want to talk about the increases it had intended to put into effect. As a result the average Canadian today, in 1988, who makes $40,000 a year is paying in excess of $1,439 more than he or she would have paid in 1984.

That is rather shameful for a variety of reasons. It provides no equity or fairness to those individuals. It discriminates against those who are less fortunate than others and, at the same time, it gives preferential treatment and shows favouritism to those individuals who are in a position to pay.

I would have hoped the Government of Canada would have seen through its ways and revised many of its calculations relating to taxes, particularly tax increases, in order to provide average and lower income Canadians with fairness and equity. It is now what can best be described as a system which is discriminatory and unfair. It hurts average Canadians to an unbelievable extent.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am sorry to hear what my colleague from the other side is saying because it is completely wrong. When he says that taxes have gone up for 99 per cent of Canadians, he is wrong. When he says that only 1 per cent of Canadians are paying less tax, he is wrong again. And when he talks about tax increases, Madam Speaker, I would like him to tell me who established the minimum income tax in Canada so that all Canadians would pay their fair share of tax. Who put an end to tax shelters, including the one for scientific research, that cost Canadians $4 billion tax shelters that his government put in that cost Canadians $4 billion, with no benefits at all in terms of scientific research for Canadians and Canadian researchers. Madam Speaker, we put an end to that. We have removed everything called tax shelters; we have had a real tax reform. Madam Speaker, we have changed what were called exemptions into tax credits, so as to make the Canadian tax system fairer and more equitable.

The Hon. Member of the Opposition, Madam Speaker, does not mention those things. He does not mention that with a $1,000 tax credit, whether a Canadian taxpayer earns $10,000 or $100,000, he has the same tax advantage, whereas under his government, with a $3,000 exemption, the high-income earner making $100,000 was at an advantage compared to the person earning $10,000. He does not mention that. He does not say that the changes brought in in our tax reform are so good that the Liberal Government of Quebec adopted them in its budget two weeks ago. That is fair and equitable tax reform, and it was done in Canada for Canadians.

CANADA PENSION PLAN—ELIGIBILITY FOR DISABILITY BENEFITS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to enlarge upon the subject matter of the question I put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on May 6, 1988. The question at that time related to the plight of a number of Canadians, perhaps not a large number but nonetheless an important grouping of Canadians, who have applied for a Canada Pension Plan disability pension but have been denied it as a result of applying late. In other words, their applications were received some time after their eligibility had run out.

• (1810)

A number of Members of the House will be aware of cases of deserving and needy Canadians who have been denied disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, denial having been based on a lack of application within the prescribed time. Eligibility, in fact, is subject to a test of recency.

The individual must have contributed in two of the last three years or five of the last ten years before the application. Although one may have at one time met the contributory requirements, the failure to apply can mean that the entitlement in effect expires.

The failure to apply is fatal, even in those cases where the omission was due solely to the contributor being unaware of the need to apply or unaware of the availability of disability benefits under the plan. It seems to me that as a result of this innocent lack of knowledge an injustice results. All of this is regardless of the fact that the applicant has paid into the plan for many years on a mandatory basis while employed and that employment was terminated and wages lost for serious health reasons and because of an individual's disability.

I understand that as a result of such cases departmental policy has been changed to one of notifying potential recipients of their rights and opportunities. This new policy and direction are not of much help to cases such as that of a constituent of mine, Mrs. Donna Sinclair, who has given me permission to refer specifically to her situation.

Mrs. Sinclair is a resident of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, who is presently 59 years of age. She worked as a shoe store clerk and paid into the Canada Pension Plan from its inception in 1966 until 1978. Records indicate that she contributed for 11 of those 13 years. She was obliged to retire from her employment in 1978 as a result of diabetes.

Subsequently, Mrs. Sinclair has had to endure the amputation of both legs. She and her family have faced this situation in a very admirable way. She has displayed a lot of courage.

There is no question that a disability benefit at this time would be of considerable assistance to Mrs. Sinclair, and I might add that it seems to me it is a benefit to which she is fully entitled, having contributed to the Canada Pension Plan throughout her employment. I might also add that there is absolutely no question, from a medical point of view, that Mrs. Sinclair is disabled and has been at all material times. That fact is simply not in dispute. The problem lies at this time with the legislation.

As I stated earlier, an application for disability benefits is subject to a test of recency. This test is set out and contributions are required from the employee for a minimum qualifying period, which requirement Mrs. Sinclair met. The contributions must have been for at least two of the last three years or five of the last ten calendar years.

Had Mrs. Sinclair made the application when her employment terminated, she would of course have qualified. Unfortunately, through no fault of her own, she was simply unaware that a disability benefit might exist, let alone the fact that she could apply to receive one.

By the time she learned of the availability and the need for application it was 1987, and of course her application was denied on the basis that it was too late. It seems to me that the rights of the pension should vest in law at the point in time when the contributor is entitled to the benefit without regard to whether the application was made on time.

I find it difficult to understand the logic of the Department in this regard. I wrote to the Hon. Minister. Indeed, I have high regard for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who has brought forward a number of outstanding initiatives, including, I might add, some very worth-while changes to the very Canada Pension Plan we are talking about.

Nonetheless, the Minister corresponded with me in regard to Mrs. Sinclair's case and indicated that it was unfortunate that she did not apply for disability benefits at the time when she met the contributory requirements. He indicates he is afraid that he can but confirm the decision of his officials that she does not now meet them. He says that the legislation is specific in this regard and he is permitted no discretionary powers whereby these minimum requirements may be waived, regardless of any personal sympathy he might feel for a particular individual's situation.

It seems to me, again with all due respect, that this answer just does not suit the requirements of the situation. I say with respect that it is simply insufficient and inadequate. I urge the Department to bring forward some amendments to the legislation to enable deserving and needy individuals such as Mrs. Sinclair to apply retroactively.

In conclusion, it is certainly my intention to bring forward a Private Member's Bill in this regard, and I will be seeking agreement to its speedy passage by all concerned.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the issue raised by the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) is certainly serious, but let me begin by explaining that in order to qualify for disability benefits payable under the Canada Pension Plan a contributor must have made contributions to the plan in two of the last three years or in five of the last ten years. Those rules came into place in January, 1987, replacing rules which require contributions in five of the last ten years and one-third of all contributory years.

It should be remembered as well that the years spent raising young children up to age seven can be dropped to help meet the requirements. With retroactivity provisions, it is possible to qualify for benefits in some cases on an application made more than six years after leaving the paid labour force. Nevertheless, a number of contributors failed to qualify for CPP disability benefits because their application was just too late.

The existence of a test of recent contributions reflects an intent to provide benefits only where there is, in some sense, a loss of earnings due to disability. The test was also considered reasonable, given the generous disability benefits provided by the plan relative to the contributions paid.

As I mentioned earlier, the 1987 amendments to the plan make it easier to meet the contributory requirements. This important change did not of course receive as much attention as the increase in the flat rate portion of CPP disability benefits. These were raised by about $150 per month in recognition of the income situation of one of society's most vulnerable groups.

The Minister has asked his officials to examine the possibility of some further extension of the contributory rules. However, what is being suggested by the Hon. Member would require a further Act of Parliament and provincial approval. It would therefore be misleading to promise that any action would take place at an early date.

Another way of attacking the problem of late applications is raising public awareness of this issue. In addition to the communications activities surrounding the introduction of new CPP legislation in 1987, continuing efforts are being concentrated on the disabled. The Department is also investigating ways to reach potential beneficiaries and to improve the knowledge and understanding of Canadians in general regarding CPP disability benefits.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, everybody here and all Members of this House will recall that the Conservative Government, and more specifically the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Labour at the time, cut unemployment insurance benefits for older workers who had lost their jobs and were receiving payments from their private pension plans.

Tomorrow, I will be visiting the area of Trois-Rivières, where thousands of older workers are to hand us a petition to force the Government to change its discriminatory attitude to older workers. I hope all Conservative Members from the Trois-Rivières region will be at this meeting tomorrow and that they will dig in their heels and force the Minister of Finance to treat older workers fairly and let them receive the unemployment insurance benefits they paid for throughout their working lives. And the same applies to members of our armed forces.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

FRONTIER DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, one of the recommendations made by the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Committee in its recent report, "Canada's Single Industry Communities: In Search of a New Partnership", is that a study should be undertaken to determine if "frontier development" presents a viable economic option for Canada.

This, Sir, is unrealistic. If this attitude had prevailed a couple of hundred years ago, Canada would still be no more than a scattering of villages around the Upper St. Lawrence.

The frontier regions are an integral part of Canada. The people who live there must be permitted the same rights to develop their resources as those who live in the more settled areas.

It makes sense to debate the best way in which to develop the North, but no sense whatsoever to debate whether or not this should be done. That is contrary to the Canadian spirit and to our concept of liberty.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE PROTECTION FUND

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, last week the mayors of the cities situated around the Great Lakes and along the St. Lawrence River gathered in Duluth, Minnesota, for their second annual conference. I attended that meeting on behalf of my constituents, and also on behalf of the New Democratic caucus because we place a high priority on matters affecting the Seaway system.

The mayors dealt with many issues facing the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway system. I would like to mention just a few of the initiatives they took.

They called for the establishment of a Great Lakes-St. Lawrence protection fund, and for the restoration of full federal funding from both countries for research and monitoring programs to help clean up this vital drinking water supply of more than 25 million people.

They called on both federal Governments to review formally all policies and legislation affecting the movement of grain through the St. Lawrence Seaway, to ensure that this system is allowed to compete on an equal basis with other grain export routes.

They called for new approaches to developing plans for waterfront use by Great Lakes-Seaway communities on a year round basis.

This kind of planning and co-operation by the mayors of our communities will go a long way to helping us resolve our common problems regardless of the difficulties our two federal Governments are getting us into.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ECONOMIC BENEFITS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, by 1992 the European Community will remove all the remaining physical, fiscal, and technical barriers to trade in goods and services between its members. This action will create one of the world's formidable trading blocs, which will make Canadian trade with Europe more difficult.

Fortunately, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) anticipated this initiative, and protected Canada by concluding a free trade agreement with the United States. Free trade with the United States will allow Canadian companies access to a market roughly the size of the EEC.

With the removal of frontier controls Canadian industries will have bigger economies of scale, be more competitive, and have more access to capital, which in turn will make our products as competitive as those in Europe.

It is really unfortunate that the Opposition does not realize the importance of the agreement to Canada's future in light of the major economic developments taking place in the world today.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON CHICKEN INDUSTRY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House and of all Canadians the serious concerns the Canadian poultry producers and chicken farmers have with respect to the Mulroney trade deal.

Free trade will hurt the Canadian chicken industry. Canada had a healthy chicken industry in the past due to a strong chicken marketing board and a healthy attitude among government officials toward the benefits of this industry to Canada.

Due to the economics of scale it is just not reasonable to think that the Canadian chicken industry, which serves 25 million people in a 4,000-mile corridor, can fairly compete, as it will be forced to do, with an American industry which has several 4,000-mile corridors serving, on average, 60 million people.

Most of the chicken which will flood the Canadian market, should this trade deal be implemented, will be processed chicken. The future of chicken lies in processed products. By the year 2000, 50 per cent of all chicken will be in processed products. A flooding of the Canadian market by American processed chicken producers will surely destroy our chicken industry.

Therefore, I urge the Government to give the Canadian marketing board the right to put any processed food containing 10 per cent or more chicken content on the import control list.

PACIFIC ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION CONFERENCE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, last week I had the honour to participate in the Sixth Pacific Economic Co-operation Conference in Osaka, Japan, as part of Canada's delegation led by Dr. Bill Saywell of Vancouver.

Much was accomplished at this meeting to further understanding and co-operation among the 17 Pacific members represented, and between the private, government, and academic sectors which make up this tripartite organization.

The economic forecasts for the region were generally optimistic, but can only be realized if substantial progress can be made to strengthen an open world trading system. Certainly an essential priority in co-operation among developed and developing countries is to build consensus in macro-economic policies and to reject protectionist trade policies as remedies for economic problems.

PECC believes the Pacific region has a critical contribution to make to bring the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations to a successful conclusion, and particularly urges negotiators to achieve substantial progress on reducing agricultural subsidies.

I was pleased as well that the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement was cited by the conference as an example of a successful achievement of sub-regional co-operation, the negotiation and implementation experience of which could provide a basis for the general application of new techniques of trade liberalization in the Pacific region and beyond.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

FIRE SERVICES EXEMPLARY SERVICE MEDAL—INELIGIBILITY OF RETIRED FIRE-FIGHTERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Toronto Fire-fighters War Veterans Association has been making a reasonable request that Canadian fire-fighters who retired from fire-fighting on or before August 28, 1985, be given the right to be considered for the award of the Fire Services Exemplary Service Medal.

They do not feel their request has been given sympathetic consideration and this is why they have written to every Member of Parliament to solicit support. They have also widely circulated a petition to be presented to Members of Parliament to show support for their cause by their friends and neighbours.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, those veteran fire-fighters should not be forced into petitioning their Members of Parliament to have their service to Canada recognized. That service was appreciated and it should be recognized now by granting the award they should be entitled to receive without any further delay.

THE CONSTITUTION

SEPARATION OF POWERS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, the Meech Lake Accord and the free trade agreement respect and reflect the existing division of constitutional powers. Both initiatives reflect this Government's commitment to and its respect for a strong federal Government and strong provincial governments. Since 1984, federal-provincial relations have been marked by consultation and consensus, instead of the kind of confrontation we saw under the previous Government. The Meech Lake Accord continues this policy by establishing mechanisms to promote harmony between both levels of government.

On both the free trade agreement and the Meech Lake Accord, the provinces were frequently consulted and fully informed. The Bill does not impinge on areas of provincial jurisdiction, it amends relevant federal legislation and authorizes the Governor in Council to adopt any regulations it deems necessary to implement the agreement, to the extent that such regulations are essential to the application of the chapter on wines and spirits and are not provided under provincial legislation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

QUALIFYING CRITERIA

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Department of Employment and Immigration announced to the people of Southeast New Brunswick that from now on, they must have sixteen weeks of insurable employment instead of ten, to be eligible for unemployment insurance. Mr. Speaker, this will have a devastating effect on the economy of the districts of Westmorland, Kent and Albert, which largely depend on seasonal jobs that cover periods of not more than ten weeks.

Statistics Canada reports that the unemployment rate for Southeast New Brunswick, which includes the districts of Westmorland, Kent and Albert, averaged 13.4 per cent for February, March and April. These are the figures the Department uses to calculate the number of weeks of insurable employment. However, if we look at those districts without including the city of Moncton, the unemployment rate for the same months works out at about 26.4 per cent. Mr. Speaker, that is how people are being treated in rural areas!

Last week, I asked the responsible Minister to put the period of insurable employment back at ten weeks, but she refuses to do anything about it. Mr. Speaker, I repeat my request on behalf of the people of Southeast New Brunswick. The period of insurable employment must be put back at ten weeks.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

NUCLEAR WEAPONS ON WARSHIPS VISITING CANADIAN PORTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last year warships carrying nuclear weapons, mostly from the United States, visited Canadian ports 63 times. A retired United States admiral has said that any vessel capable of carrying nuclear arms is, in fact, carrying them.

But Canada, while claiming to be a country that does not permit nuclear weapons on its territory, does not even ask visiting ships whether or not they carry them. We are like the legendary Sunday school teacher who had a Saturday night job playing the piano but said he did not understand what was going on in all those little rooms upstairs.

Canadians do not appreciate this kind of hypocrisy on a question so important to world peace and security. We want our Government to defend our policy of not allowing nuclear weapons.

• (1415)

We look at the example of New Zealand. If such a small country can show integrity and courage on this issue, why can't we? If the Conservatives are not willing to insist that visiting warships honour our no nuclear weapons policy, let us have an election and get a Government that will.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CALL FOR BAN ON EXPORT OF WATER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, repeatedly Canadians have been told that water exports to the United States are not in the trade deal. Last November the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said that water had never been negotiated in the free trade talks. Yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary told the House that water is not part of the trade deal.

Despite such denials, Article 22.01 of the Canadian tariff schedule specifically refers to: "waters, including natural or artificial mineral waters and aerated waters, not containing added sugar or other sweetening matter nor flavoured; ice and snow".

There is nothing in the trade deal preventing the export of water as was done with logs, unprocessed fish, and beer. The absence of a specific exclusion of water from the trade deal is dangerous. Further, it makes a mockery of the Minister of the Environment's water policy, with the promised legislation to ban water exports. We urge the Government to ban the export of water in the proposed trade legislation.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL COMPLIANCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. In the last several months we have heard repeatedly from the United States Government and from the U.S. Congress that they would only ratify the Canada-U.S. trade agreement on the grounds that the federal Government would intrude into provincial affairs and require full compliance by the provinces.

Yesterday we saw once again how the federal Government capitulates to those demands. The trade Bill tabled yesterday provides the federal Government with a loaded gun that will completely and totally intrude into a wide range of provincial jurisdictions to force compliance with the Canada-U.S. agreement.

Is it not true that the American Government is now becoming in effect a third party to federal-provincial relations in Canada, and that the federal Government has decided to take the power of intrusion into key areas like energy, resource pricing and service management simply in order to meet those American demands?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that that, of course, is entirely incorrect. He should also know that under the BNA Act the regulation of interprovincial trade and commerce and international trade and commerce is a jurisdiction given to the Government of Canada. Without that jurisdiction, Canada could not enter into an international agreement with any other nation in the world and enforce such an agreement. If that were the case, then Canada would be ignored by the world community because it would not have a federal Government that could agree to and enforce trade and commerce arrangements entered into.

Finally, I might remind the hon. gentleman when he talks about resource pricing that it was his Party that introduced the national energy policy, that attempted to crush the provinces and crush provincial rights to price their resources, and crush the provinces entirely.

Mr. Broadbent: So why are you doing it?

Mr. Crosbie: They were assisted by the hypocrite who leads the New Democratic Party who gave them full assistance in that object.

PROVISIONS OF BILL—FEDERAL POWERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the great strategy of reconciliation has become the great crusher of all times. We have seen in this Bill a major takeover of provincial jurisdictions, contrary to the interpretation that has been provided by the courts over the past half century.

Clause 8 of the Bill the Minister tabled yesterday also provides for a total override of the laws of this federal Parliament. The trade agreement supersedes and overtakes laws provided by this Parliament on affirmative action, on human rights, and on freedom of information. Is the Minister for International Trade aware that he has created this major imbalance, that the trade deal will now supersede federal law, and that the sovereignty of this Parliament has been undermined? At the same time the U.S. Congress has taken a totally opposite stand. Why has the Minister countenanced this total capitulation and undermining of the rights of this Parliament?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is referring to a clause which says that the provisions of the Bill implementing the free trade agreement will override any inconsistent provision of other federal legislation. That is all it says.

Some Hon. Members: That's all!

Mr. Crosbie: It is a rule of legislative draftsmanship. Any provisions of Canadian federal law inconsistent with the free trade agreement are amended by the agreement. That is all it says. There is no takeover of provincial powers. There is a most careful attempt to fail to intrude upon provincial powers except in one area with reference to wine and spirits. The Government takes to itself the authority to ensure that the FTA is observed and that provisions which discriminate against American wine and liquor sales in Canada cannot be put in place by the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Time!

Mr. Crosbie: It is not time. I am asked a question and I have to be allowed the time to answer it.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, it is extraordinarily disappointing that a Minister of the Crown would treat in such a trifling manner the usurpation of the powers of this Parliament by the Act he tabled.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT ELECTION BE HELD

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Bill the Minister has tabled undermines provincial jurisdiction and the sovereignty of this Parliament. In fact, it undermines the sovereignty of this country. Therefore, will he take the offer he made this morning to call an election by the end of the summer and advance it by two or three months? Considering the enormous and dramatic impact this Bill will have on the very structure of Canadian society, why not call the election now and let the Canadian people decide what should be done?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, an election will be called sometime between now and the end of 1989 when the Prime Minister decides to recommend to the Governor General that Parliament be dissolved. The free trade agreement will be a central part of that election, whether it has been implemented before or after the election call.

The hon. gentlemen opposite, if they continue with their pledge to oppose the free trade agreement, do not have to waste their energy trying to rip the agreement in half. If they are elected in our stead all they have to do is give six months' notice under the agreement and they can terminate it, if they dare. But they will never dare do that, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Axworthy: Watch us.

PROVINCES' RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. I would like to point out to him that Clauses 6 and 9 of Bill C-130 on the trade agreement are the most blatant intrusion of the federal Government in fields of provincial jurisdiction in human memory. In electricity, gas, petroleum, wine, liquor, professional codes, wood-cutting fees, construction worker mobility, the federal Government is taking upon itself the power to intervene and go over the heads of the provinces to amend unilaterally laws that the federal Government or the government in Washington want changed.

Mr. Speaker, why has the federal Government decided to violate provincial rights to implement a trade agreement for which it has received no mandate from the Canadian people?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman talks about mandates. It was his Party that was elected on a platform that they were totally against wage and price controls, got elected, and implemented them immediately thereafter. What a gigantic example of hypocrisy; the hon. gentleman promised one thing and delivered exactly the opposite.

• (1425)

Anyone who cares to examine our legislation will see that we only exercise our jurisdiction in areas given to the Government of Canada under the BNA Act, and which have been given to the Government of Canada since 1867. These are areas, of course, that predecessors of the hon. gentleman opposite observed in every particular.

By golly, what can Mr. Trudeau be thinking when he looks at this pusillanimous display opposite today?

[Translation]

NATIONAL RECONCILIATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Minister for International Trade takes such a tone to answer extremely serious questions. Tomorrow, we can begin a debate on . . .

[English]

I will return to my question. I do not want to engage in that type of thing.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, not only Ontario objects to the federal Government's intrusion into provincial jurisdiction. The Government of Quebec, through its Minister for International Trade, said yesterday that it was unacceptable for the federal Government to proceed in this way.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that. It is in this morning's newspapers, he mentioned it on television yesterday when I was debating this question with him.

Is the Minister aware that if the provinces refuse, Clause 6 could give the federal Government the power to change the pricing policies of Crown corporations like Hydro-Quebec and if these policies are displeasing to the federal Government or the United States, the federal Government can act to change them? It will tell the provinces, "Change your laws, otherwise we will change them for you!"

Mr. Speaker, is that the policy of national reconciliation preached by the Prime Minister during the 1984 election campaign?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, thank heavens we know about some sane Liberals in this country, for example, Mr. Donald Macdonald who chaired the Royal Commission and recommended the action which we are now carrying out, and the Hon. Gerry Regan who was Minister of International Trade for several years who supports this authority.

The legislation introduced here yesterday does not intrude one jot or tittle upon provincial jurisdiction. We do not have the power to intrude upon provincial jurisdiction. We can only exercise federal jurisdiction.

Any Government or person who believes that we are going beyond our jurisdiction can go to the Canadian courts, free and independent, and ask them for a verdict or an opinion on whose jurisdiction is whose. We are confident that this Bill concerns only our jurisdiction in the area of international trade and commerce. Without that Canada is not a nation and Canada does not have a Government.

PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION—POSITION OF QUÉBEC GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. We certainly heard the Minister's answer. If there had been as much light as there was sound we might have even been persuaded.

With reference to Clause 6 in the proposed Bill an important Minister in the Province of Quebec has said: "It's obvious this article is an interference in provincial jurisdiction".

Any number of lawyers who have since looked at the package, including some on the opposite side of the House, have said that Clause 6 is nothing other than an override of provincial jurisdictional authority.

Has the Minister been in touch with the Government of Quebec in the past 24 hours on this matter? The Québec Minister said that this was unacceptable to the Government of Quebec and that it violated the constitutional division of powers. Has the Government of Canada done the correct and co-operative thing, consulted with the Government of Québec and conveyed to it the federal Government's views on this matter?

• (1430)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I believe most Hon. Members of the House know, I had a consultation with all 10 Premiers of Canada before this Bill was introduced. I explained to them the various options that were available to the Government of Canada in order to carry out the free trade agreement and to meet our commitment to carry out the obligations of the free trade arrangement. The Bill that we introduced yesterday contains the least obtrusive methods of carrying out the free trade agreement. There is no interference with provincial jurisdiction in the Bill.

All that the Bill states in Clause 6 is that this Parliament reserves to itself the right to introduce legislation in the future to carry out the obligations of the Free Trade Agreement undertaken by the Canadian Government if we feel any other legislation is necessary, a reserve power.

We cannot arrogate to ourselves any other jurisdiction than we have. The courts will see that we are kept to our own federal jurisdiction. Anyone who fears that we are going outside it can go to the courts. I plead with them to go to the courts and let the courts decide this issue.

Mr. Rodriguez: How arrogant!

Mr. Broadbent: I am sure the Minister, who is well known for his thorough briefing sessions, has read the Bill with a great deal of care and will recall that Article 103 commits the federal Government to implementing the agreement with the United States, not only within traditional areas of federal jurisdictional authority but also in areas covered by provincial and local Governments.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT AND SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, whatever the Minister may think, most Canadians understand that the Canadian Constitution states the provincial governments have authority within local or provincial domain, not the federal Conservative Government of Canada. That happens to be the reality.

The accord also commits the Government to negotiate over the next five to seven years what is to be deemed to be a subsidy, and the Americans have already made it clear that all kinds of our regional development and social programs, most of which are in the provincial domain—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Will the Minister at least do service to the House by telling us frankly—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Why do you not do service to the House and speak the truth?

Mr. Broadbent: If this Government allows Clause 6 to proceed, it will enable the Government to interfere directly in social and regional development programs in the provincial domain. Will he admit that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I say that that is entirely false, completely false, truly false, absolutely false. It is so false that it is the falsest statement I have ever heard falsely put.

Mr. Broadbent: You just convinced me that it is true.

Mr. Crosbie: Clause 6 gives the Government of Canada no jurisdiction that the Government of Canada does not now have.

Mr. Cassidy: Take it out.

Mr. Crosbie: We can only exercise—

Mr. Cassidy: Take it out.

Mr. Crosbie: This is so simple. We can only exercise the jurisdiction that the BNA Act gives us under Section 92 and the other powers of the BNA Act.

This House cannot exercise any other powers than those given it by the Constitution. Those are the only powers that we are exercising in this legislation. Anyone who has a different opinion can go to the courts, as has been done hundreds upon hundreds of times in our Confederation—

Mr. Rodriguez: Arrogance of the Tories.

Mr. Crosbie: —since 1867, and ask the courts to rule whether Clause 6 does anything other than that. Put your money where your mouth is and take a challenge to the courts once we enact this legislation.

Mr. Rodriguez: Arrogance of the Tories.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I just say that all those wonderful denials coming from the Minister have absolutely convinced me that what I said was true. Three other Ministers of the Crown, including the Prime Minister, also said in 1983 that they would never negotiate such a deal. We know now how they deal with the truth on the other side of the House.

POSITION OF PREMIERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, considering what the Minister just said, could he explain to the House why the Premier of Prince Edward Island has said that it violates provincial jurisdictional authority? A key Minister in the Province of Quebec has now said it. The Premier of Nova Scotia recently raised a question, and the Premier of Ontario says that it violates provincial rights.

Mr. McDermid: He is a great authority.

Mr. Broadbent: Why is it that everyone else is wrong and the Minister is right? That is what we want to know.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman and his Party have said that they are going to prevent this legislation going through this House of Commons. They are going to obstruct at every point. They are going to disregard the rules—

Mr. Broadbent: No, no. Another lie. Another one.

Mr. Crosbie: They are going to twist the rules.

An Hon. Member: Your nose is growing, John.

Mr. Nystrom: Pinocchio.

Mr. Crosbie: On March 27, 1981—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister will answer the question.

Mr. Crosbie: On March 27, 1981, who said this?

> I am one who believes that the majority must have the right to decide at some point, which is the essence of my question of privilege. At this point the will of the majority is being frustrated by the irresponsibility of the minority.

It is the same Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party who, seven years later, says that he is going to use the rules to stop the majority, to stop Parliament from reaching a decision—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: What a hypocrite, Mr. Speaker.

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—EFFECT ON LIVESTOCK HERDS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He knows that the western drought situation is getting worse every day, that feed supplies and water supplies in the drought area are becoming desperate for many farmers and their herds. He knows that some herds are being dispersed and sold off because of lack of feed supplies.

Is the Minister willing to make a commitment today for funds to provide an emergency herd maintenance program so that feed supplies can be maintained for these herds and for the farmers concerned?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure whether the Hon. Member, by his question, is trying to indicate whether or not we knew we had a drought situation in western Canada.

The fact is that we have been working with the provinces and with the farm organizations on a day-to-day basis since February. As I indicated before, we are meeting with my provincial counterparts in Calgary next Tuesday where we will be receiving a series of recommendations that will include all of the suggested options that the Hon. Member has put forward today, plus many others I would expect.

If this develops into a full blown drought, then we see action being taken in about five different areas.

Mr. Foster: The farmers want to know when the Government is actually going to do something. We know he has been meeting, been considering, been studying, and has been thinking about it. He may actually do something, but they want to know when he is going to do something.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMERGENCY WATER SUPPLIES—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about the provincial Governments. The provincial Governments have already made a commitment of $28.5 million for emergency water supplies. Is the Minister prepared to stand in his place this afternoon and give a similar commitment of $28.5 million for emergency water supplies for the herds in these two provinces? Is he willing to do that?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all of the requests that have been put to us by the provincial Governments to date have been met within the PFRA budget. I do not know why the Hon. Member gets so excited because when I talk to people in western Canada they simply look at our record, and look at yours which provides no satisfaction or comfort at all. When they look at our record they know very well that we were there in 1984, in 1985, and we will be there tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: You are not doing anything and you know it.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. I am holding a set of questions and answers on the subject of free trade which has been circulated to all Conservative Members of Parliament.

• (1440)

The first question which is set out asks why has the federal Government taken the decision to impinge on the domains of competence of the provincial governments with its legislation with respect to the free trade accord.

Some Hon. Members: Read the answer!

Mr. Langdon: The answer, since they want to hear it, is that Article 103 of the agreement obliges the American and Canadian Governments to take these measures and impose them on both states, provincial and local.

In view of the fact that these questions clearly indicate that the Conservative Party, and this Conservative Government, have made a decision to take these steps against the provincial powers in our country, why will the Minister not in fact stand up in the House and frankly admit it?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, apparently, from what the Member says, he has some suggested questions the Opposition might ask, and suggested answers. When these kinds of exercises are being done, the person drafting the questions puts himself into the mind-set of the Opposition.

Mr. Broadbent: What about the answer?

Mr. Crosbie: Then he knows he has to think of something that is twisting, that is false, that is malicious, that is devious—

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. Crosbie: Then he puts the question and he asks how this is impinging, because that is the kind of question the hon. gentleman opposite asks day after day after day. So I congratulate the drafter. He has himself exactly in the mind-set of the hon. gentleman opposite and his paranoia that has existed here every day of the week.

Mr. Broadbent: What about the answer?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the intemperate and irrelevant response of the Minister shows how out of touch he is.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I think it might be observed that if we are going to get very many Members up, some of the rhetoric will have to be dropped on both sides. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor will put his question.

Mr. Langdon: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, the Minister start—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

POWERS OF PROVINCES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): I would like to put this question to the Minister, considering the answer provided in his Conservative notes. The answer indicates that the agreement obliges the U.S. and Canadian governments to take all measures that are necessary for the provisions of the agreement to come into effect.

Considering his answer, why won't the Minister admit to the House that we are telling the truth and that the Government has decided to impinge on provincial powers across this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I notice the question is almost identical to the question that was asked in English.

The Chair's concern is very straightforward. This is certainly not customary practice in the House, and I would like all Members to be careful and refrain from repeating a question, in English or in French. It is not customary practice in this House.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly agree with you that it is odd.

The situation is that there is nothing in the legislation before this House that intrudes upon or impinges upon the powers of the province. But it is a well known tenet of constitutional law that one jurisdiction exercising its authority can affect matters in another jurisdiction's authority in an incidental manner. And, of course, that occurs on all occasions. There is no hiatus between federal law and provincial law. There is no clearly demarked line that one is on one side and the other is on the other side.

In this particular legislation we exercise only the authority given to us by the Constitution of Canada necessary so that Canada can hold its head up in the community of nations and agree to treaties that affect trade and commerce and carry them out as any sovereign nation can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AEROSPACE

QUEBEC'S SHARE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the contracts for space research. Last Friday, the Leader of the Parti Quebecois, Mr. Jacques Parizeau, stated that never before had Quebec been treated in such a miserly fashion by the federal Government.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain why, despite the promise and commitment made on April 21 by the Conservative Government that as part of the Canadian Government's contribution to the U.S. Space Station, Quebec would receive a fair share of the research, that is, 35 per cent, just like Ontario, could he now explain why today, Quebec will get only 18 per cent, while Ontario is getting 78 per cent? Could he explain why Quebecers are once again being deceived?

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The fact is that if he looks at the total expenditures when the program is said and done, he will find that 35 per cent will accrue to Quebec, 35 per cent to Ontario, 10 per cent to, generally, the West, 10 per cent to British Columbia, and 10 per cent to Atlantic Canada. That message was clearly conveyed, together with the supporting statistics, to that hon. gentleman by the Minister a few days ago.

SPACE AGENCY—IMMEDIATE ANNOUNCEMENT DEMANDED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, a similar message was sent to Quebecers about the shipyards. We were going to get everything. We got nothing. We were conned. Two shipyards were shut down in Quebec.

My supplementary to the Parliamentary Secretary is this: Wouldn't it be better for the Government to announce the space agency immediately, since at this rate, all the contracts will be gone, and the space agency will be nothing but an empty shell? Why not announce the location of the space agency right away and let this new group be responsible for contracts, since Quebec is being conned on this whole issue?

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, of course, is speaking from a parameter and point of view that satisfy his political needs immediately. The fact remains, and I will repeat it to him, the balance is there. In the beginning the balance was not there and it was corrected by this Minister. The Minister and this Government will ensure that distribution does in fact take place.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—IMPLEMENTING LEGISLATION AMENDING 27 STATUTES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. I am sure the Minister is aware that the Bill introduced by himself yesterday, and I underline the word "himself", amends some 27 statutes. I am sure the Minister also recalls that back in 1982 when the former Liberal Government introduced the energy Bill amending some 15 statutes, at that time the federal Tories said it was terrible, it was wrong, that it was an awful thing to do, and they rang the bells for almost two weeks in protest to have the Bill split.

Mr. McDermid: You are comparing apples to oranges.

Mr. Nystrom: If the logic of splitting a Bill was right when it amended 15 statutes, why will the Government not do the same thing now when one amends some 27 statutes? Can we have a straight answer? Can the Minister stop playing court jester to the Prime Minister, stop being a buffoon and tell us why he will not split the Bill?

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Shirley Carr is certainly well served by the hon. gentleman—and he is just as curly as Shirley.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Bill introduced yesterday has only one object, and that is to implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It has only one item, and that is the legislation that is necessary to implement the agreement.

There is no comparison to the energy Bill that the Official Opposition introduced. There were a whole host of disparate issues in that omnibus energy Bill; there were several unrelated new Acts, unrelated amendments. One could not vote on one principle in that Bill; it had to be divided. It was divided into eight separate pieces of legislation.

The principle of our Bill introduced yesterday is: do you favour the free trade agreement or not? Put up or shut up.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the energy Bill six years ago all those issues were either directly or indirectly related to energy. Inasmuch as all the issues in this Bill are directly or indirectly related toward economic union with the United States; why is the Conservative Party not using the same logic it used in 1982? Why is it afraid of democracy? Why is it afraid to face the Parliament of Canada and have a real debate?

What would John Diefenbaker say now if he were in the House?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, how the views of the New Democratic Members change with the circumstances. In 1982 they were there chin to chin, jowl to jowl with the Liberal Party, trying to cram the energy Bill down the throats of Canadians, eight separate pieces of legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA

PUBLICATION DATE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have a slightly quieter question on a different subject. It is directed to the Minister of Justice. Some months ago the House passed legislation to authorize the publication of a new set of Revised Statutes of Canada, the last set being of 1970 vintage and hopelessly out of date.

When will the new Revised Statutes of Canada be published?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly aware of the fact that the Revised Statutes of Canada are being eagerly anticipated.

The bound volumes of the new Revised Statutes are printed and ready for distribution. The loose-leaf version is also printed, but it is not yet ready for distribution due to technical delays.

Notwithstanding this fact I anticipate that both versions will be ready this summer, so that members of the Opposition will have something to do here in Ottawa during the evenings.

CRIMINAL CODE

ACTIVITIES OF PRIVATE PARA-MILITARY SCHOOLS—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF CODE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Last August Remi Lahaie of Ile Parrot, Quebec, was shot, strangled, stabbed 14 times, and had his throat slit by the operator of a survival-combat school in Quebec, as a result of an $1,800 contract with Lahaie's neighbours who disliked the noise of his automobile.

In rendering judgment in this case last week, Judge Martin of the Quebec Superior Court urged an investigation into and control over these academies of violence.

Would the Minister tell us what steps he has taken, or will take, to limit the activities of these private para-military schools? Has the Minister considered amendments to Article 71 of the Criminal Code?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us in the House very much regret the circumstances outlined by the Hon. Member.

I certainly have been in receipt of a number of representations with respect to this issue. It is one which is receiving attention. The Hon. Member will understand that there are very complex questions that have to be addressed with respect to amendments to the Criminal Code which might have the effect of putting limitations on the right of association, and the right of carrying out a variety of training academies.

The Hon. Member can rest assured that we are giving it the most serious attention. It is a matter that is very much on my mind and that of my Department.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that this matter has been raised with the Minister.

On November 4 and 5, 1985, more than two years ago, I raised the case of the Eagle Combat School in British Columbia, which was allegedly linked to terrorist activities. At that time I asked the Minister to raise the subject with the provincial Attorneys General, and he said he would consider that.

I want to know what has been done in those two years about this. The Minister should know that there is a growing number of these schools in Canada and in the United States, and they are very dangerous.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member would want to wish me a long and extended career as Attorney General. I was appointed Attorney General in June, 1986. I know that the Hon. Minister for International Trade and myself are two look-alikes. Perhaps the Hon. Member confused us because of our good looks.

The reality is that we are considering these matters. I cannot accept, without question, the premise of the question, except to say that we are looking at the whole matter of federal jurisdiction with respect to these matters. There is also provincial jurisdiction, which the Hon. Member will understand is involved in the regulation of camps and other facilities across the country.

The Hon. Member can rest assured that the matter will receive attention, and it will be discussed between myself and my provincial colleagues tomorrow and Friday when we meet in Quebec City.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELAY IN DELIVERY OF RURAL DIGNITY'S MAIL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Is the Minister aware that Canada Post delayed Rural Dignity's mail for three days? And does he agree that such action is unacceptable and constitutes harassment due to this campaign to protect rural post offices?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no, I am not aware of the situation the Hon. Member talks about. I will convey his concerns to Canada Post Corporation which is responsible.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister confirms the facts as I have stated that Canada Post has held up the mail of Rural Dignity for three days, will he take action in order to tell Canada Post that it is unacceptable and it is wrong to interfere with the delivery of mail, just because that group is fighting against the government's policy of tearing apart rural post offices?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know about the facts. I have known from experience, and I hope that the Hon. Member will not take this unkindly, not to accept at face value the facts that he has laid out here.

As for Rural Dignity the Hon. Member knows, as I know, as the Post Office knows, that this is merely the Postmasters' Union going around the country making false accusations, false statements about the Government's intentions.

The number of postal outlets in rural Canada, which is currently 5,000, will rise to approximately 7,000 over the course of this corporate plan. There will be an increase in outlets in rural Canada, and an improvement in service as a result of what the Post Office is doing.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Clause 6 of Bill C-130, the trade Bill, is there to enable the federal Government to carry out its obligations to the United States under Section 103 of the trade deal.

Is it not true that Section 103 of the trade deal does not require the federal Government to ensure compliance of provincial and local governments only in areas of federal jurisdiction? If that is the case, is it not true that Clause 6 of the trade Bill is intended to give the federal Government the authority to interfere in matters of provincial jurisdiction as well as federal jurisdiction?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat this and be as short as I can because I like to comply with your wishes. This Parliament cannot give any authority to the Government of Canada that this Parliament does not have under the Constitution of Canada. The only authority we can be given is the authority of the federal Government.

• (1500)

With respect to the regulation of trade and commerce, interprovincial trade and commerce and international trade and commerce, the founders of this country gave the Government of Canada, and there is only one Government of Canada—there are 10 provinces but one national Government—authority over trade and commerce. That is the authority that we purport to exercise in this legislation because we believe that Canada has to be represented in the international community and be in a position to enter into agreements, and carry them out, as our forefathers intended.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West. Keeping in mind the time I would appreciate a short question.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister for International Trade. Is the Minister then not saying that at the present time provincial and local governments are acting in areas currently under federal jurisdiction, and that the federal Government is therefore going to use the authority of this trade deal to take away that jurisdiction from them? Is that not what he is saying?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McDermid: Be gentle with Herb.

Mr. Crosbie: —I am going to be gentle, and I am going to be calm.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Why don't you be smart for a change?

Mr. Crosbie: I will be reserved, polite, cool.

The Bill introduced yesterday takes no authority away from the provinces or municipalities of Canada. It does not add to the authority of the Government of Canada. It exercises the jurisdiction that we were given in 1867, in our opinion. Anyone with a different opinion can go to the Canadian judiciary and they will ultimately decide. I am satisfied that they will decide in our favour.

Mr. Speaker: A single question by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert.

INTERNATIONAL GRAIN SUBSIDIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. Chancellor Kohl puts Canada and the United States in the same basket in relation to subsidies in the grain trade. Will the Minister explain the difference between our position and that of the United States? Are we serious about reducing the subsidies, or is Chancellor Kohl correct?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what the Hon. Member is getting at. Chancellor Kohl is a fine one to talk about subsidies.

What the Hon. Member should know is that Canadian farmers are receiving about $65 or $70 per tonne for barley presently while European farmers are receiving approximately four times that amount. If one looks at subsidies then, obviously the Europeans in our opinion are way more guilty as far as subsidies are concerned.

Having said that, in order to protect our farmers the Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, has provided some financial support to get them through a difficult time. At the same time the Prime Minister is doing everything he can to pursue a solution internationally so that we can see Mr. Kohl back away from some of the ridiculous subsidies that are being provided to European farmers, which are one of the main reasons causing problems in international trade.

Mr. Speaker: A single question by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—RELEASE OF EXPERIMENTAL DRUGS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the number one health concern of Canadians—AIDS.

On October 6, 1986, the Minister pledged that he would do everything possible to release experimental drugs that might help fight the AIDS virus. Since that time his Department has released tens of thousands of drugs on an emergency basis. Yet during that time there has been only one drug related to the treatment of AIDS that has been released.

Can he explain to the House why on October 6, 1986, he said he was going to work quickly? Why, in reality, is his Department blocking the release of drugs to prolong potentially the lives of AIDS victims?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Department and I are doing everything we can to release drugs, both on an emergency basis and to get notices of compliance done.

If one takes a look at the various drugs involved, whether we look at Pentamidine, AZT, or others, the Hon. Member should know very fully and completely that, for instance, with Pentamidine there was an explanation given as recently as this morning by the Director of the federal Centre for AIDS in respect to the clinical trials in Vancouver and Montreal, and also the ethical question that has been raised in Toronto.

I repeat to the Hon. Member, as well as to the House generally, that we are moving as quickly as we can on experimental drugs, as well as having released, as I said earlier in the House, information to doctors concerning how experimental drugs and emergency drugs in fact can be released.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a petition to present from some residents of my riding who point out that the present Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canada's trading sovereignty would not be compromised. They believe it has been.

They believe that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and undermines our ability to build a society distinct from the United States.

They go on further to state that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians the secure access to the U.S. market that was the key objective in these negotiations, but also threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs. Therefore, they call upon the Parliament of Canada to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of constituents in the federal constituency of Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington who are calling upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to submit a duly certified petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. The undersigned do, by this petition, give notice to the Government of Canada that they are of the opinion that unborn children should be included within and protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call on the Parliament of Canada to enact such legislation.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and pleasure pursuant to Standing Order 106 to present a petition from a number of residents of the City of Toronto. They point out that last year the then Minister of State for Immigration promised that unmarried sons and daughters of all ages would be considered as members of the family class of immigrants and that married children and brothers and sisters in the assisted relative class would get 15 points instead of 10 when assessed for immigration to Canada. They also point out that the former Minister of Justice in 1986 promised to remove the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents of three years or so in order that both groups would have equal rights to sponsor parents of any age. They point out that none of these important promises have yet been fulfilled by the Government and they call upon this House to ensure that the Government will fulfil its promises now.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents in the City of Toronto who point out that the recent signing of a trade deal between the Conservative Government of Canada and the President of the United States has no mandate from the Canadian people based on the last election campaign. The petitioners point out that it will severely reduce Canada's political and economic sovereignty by interfering with our ability to control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions of Canada. Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO THE ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions here duly certified pursuant to Standing Order 106. The first is from residents of Ladysmith, British Columbia, concerning nuclear submarines. The petitioners point out that there is a great danger of accidents while nuclear armed or nuclear-powered ships are in Canadian ports. This is a threat to the environment and to Canadian citizens. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to ensure that the Government not purchase nuclear-powered submarines for Canada.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, the second petition relates to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, pointing out that in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pointed out that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, that the Government had no mandate to conclude a trade agreement with the United States, that the trade agreement negotiated by the Conservative Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the powers of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities among the regions. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty on behalf of a group of citizens from the communities of Shellbrook and Holbein near Prince Albert to present to this House a petition which concerns itself with the free trade agreement.

These petitioners suggest that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of these negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. They feel that since it does affect the fabric of Canadian sovereignty that Parliament should dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by various residents of the City of Thunder Bay. They note that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, but that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunity between the regions. Given this impact on Canada's policy freedom to determine our own economic future, these petitioners call on the Parliament of Canada to dissolve to give them the opportunity of rejecting the trade agreement in a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55—REFUGEE DETERMINATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the responsibility on behalf of constituents from York West and constituents in various parts of Metro Toronto, Hamilton and Oshawa to present to the House and to the Government petitions relating to the Government's Bill C-55 which will reform the country's refugee determination system and is pending a ministerial decision. These petitioners are asking the Government to re-evaluate the safe third country concept and the prescreening stage that has been adopted to go along with the new reforms. The petitioners are asking for the Government to reconsider those tenets as parts of a major overhaul to ensure that our system is expedient, fair and effective.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my pleasure to present a petition which has been properly certified by the Clerk of Petitions.

This petition is from a number of residents of Canada in the Ottawa area. They point out that the free trade agreement which is the subject of legislation in the House was negotiated with no mandate from the Canadian people, that it calls into question the future sovereignty of Canada, that it compromises the ability of Canadians to ensure our economic future and it undermines our ability to produce a society distinct from the American society. Therefore, these petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement through a national general election.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if Questions Nos. 281 and 288 could be made Orders for Return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House that Questions Nos. 281 and 288 be deemed to have been made Orders for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-129 in the House today because Air Canada is a major employer in my riding of Winnipeg—St. James. The international airport and terminal buildings are located within the riding. As well the overhaul maintenance base in Winnipeg is located in my riding, so many of my constituents are very interested in what happens and develops with Air Canada.

I have spoken with captains, first officers, flight attendants, ground crews, baggage handlers and so on from Air Canada. A total of some 2,100 people are employed by Air Canada in Winnipeg, the majority of whom are constituents of mine. As you realize, Madam Speaker, there is very keen interest on the part of residents in my riding in how this Bill develops and proceeds through the House of Commons.

I think it would be proper for me to give the House some background into the history of Air Canada in Winnipeg—St. James. Since the airline's inception in 1937, it has been located at the airport in St. James, and at that time, the airline was known as Trans-Canada Air Lines. Then, in 1966 to 1969, the then Liberal Government decided to move the Winnipeg overhaul base from Winnipeg. In December of 1968, Prime Minister Trudeau's office would not interfere with the decision of Air Canada to move the base, so the move proceeded to take place.

At that time, the lives of many of my friends and their families and relatives were disrupted for several years because of that decision. The people of Winnipeg have never forgotten that decision. There were families with the husband living in Montreal and the rest of the family living in Winnipeg, not seeing each other for weeks at a time or even for months on end. It disrupted many families.

Then, in 1975 or 1976, the Government decided, I believe under pressure from representatives of the Opposition of the time, the Progressive Conservatives from the Winnipeg area, to reinstate the overhaul base in the Winnipeg region. There is now an overhaul base in the area, and it is doing very well, I might add.

The legislation that is before us states very clearly that the Government wants the maintenance base to remain in Winnipeg. It also wants the bases to remain in Toronto and in Montreal. That is in the legislation that we are dealing with today. Those maintenance bases will remain where they are and, I say, rightfully so. Not only that, but the locations of the maintenance bases in Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal will be in the Articles of Incorporation of the new company.

If in the future the company that operates Air Canada as a private corporation decides that it wants to move a maintenance base, it will have to come here, to the House of Commons, to get the legislation changed. I suggest that there could not be a better safeguard than that.

The PC Government wants to protect the jobs in Winnipeg, not like the Liberals of 1966 to 1969. The Liberals disrupted families and caused unknown hardships through separations, lay-offs and forced retirements because people did not want to relocate their families for whatever reasons. That is what happened under a Liberal Government, but our Government does not want that to happen and will not let that happen. It has made sure that it is in the legislation that that will not happen.

The Liberal Party was not satisfied with that. It even went so far as to use scare tactics during the provincial election campaign that just passed. Again, it had to scare the people who work for Air Canada by telling them that they would be out of work, laid off or moved. That is exactly what happened.

I would like to read into the record something that was left in prominent locations the night before the Manitoba election, just to give Hon. Members an idea of how the Liberal Party orchestrates things to scare people. I would imagine that this was orchestrated by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

This letter comes from the Campaign '88 election in Manitoba, the Sturgeon Creek Liberal campaign headquarters, No. 5, 2631 Portage Avenue, and the heading of this letter which, I might say, was signed by the Liberal candidate, reads: "Manitoba loses another multi-billion dollar aerospace contract!". That is an outright lie. An outright lie was used in an campaign to scare people about Air Canada.

The letter reads:

> Dear Resident:
> Brian Mulroney and his Conservative government made a decision on March 31st that will see another multi-billion dollar aerospace maintenance contract go to Montreal instead of Winnipeg.
> According to the media, Provincial Conservative Leader Gary Filmon knew of this decision when it was made. Apparently, Mr. Filmon has chosen not to fight the decision but rather to keep it from Manitobans until after the election.

What decision has been made? What multi-billion dollar contract has been lost to Manitoba? None, but that is the approach the Liberal Party uses, scare tactics, when it comes to Air Canada. Air Canada employees are tired of that.

The Progressive Conservative Government does not want to see people lose jobs in Manitoba or any other place through the privatization of Air Canada. This letter, which I will not read in its entirety, was signed: "Yours truly, Iva J. Yeo, Liberal Candidate, Sturgeon Creek, Competence with Heart". Scare tactics, but competence with heart.

This Government of Canada is not prepared to do the same thing. We are protecting that maintenance base, and rightfully so. The people who are opposed to the privatization have asked what assurance there is that the base will stay in Winnipeg. Private industry is different from government operations. First off, the overhaul base makes a profit for Air Canada. Second, it does outside contractual work for other airlines. It does work for airlines from the United States, for airlines from the Caribbean and for the Department of National Defence. In fact, I was advised that almost 20 per cent of the air base's revenue comes from outside contracts.

There is the technology, the expertise, the capital assets, the reputation which is very important and the legislation to back this all up. If I were in private industry and I had something that was profitable, everything was there and I had the manpower, I would expand it, and I suggest that that is exactly what will happen to the overhaul base in the Winnipeg area.

I am sure you have travelled with Air Canada, Madam Speaker. I do not know about you, but I have found that the employees are very proud people. They are very proud of their airline, and rightfully so, because it is one of the top airlines in the world. They want to see it remain so.

The employees recognize, and I am sure members of the Opposition recognize, that Air Canada needs equity. The employees want to have the most modern, efficient and safe aircraft in their fleet. I am sure they will have them. They want that so that they can compete in this very competitive field and remain as one of the top airlines in Canada and in the world. They recognize that to have a healthy future for their airline, they need that infusion of equity right now.

The employees want to have an opportunity to invest in the airline and to have a say in its operations as well. These desires are safeguarded in the legislation. The employees will have the first opportunity to buy shares in the new company. They want to invest in their company. I have talked to people who work for Air Canada. As recently as about a half an hour ago, an individual said: "Please sell our airline because we know it is good for the airline". Those were the exact words.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), in his comments on this Bill yesterday, spoke about Crown corporations. I think he asked why we need to sell a Crown corporation, seeing as how we want to ensure that there are services to different parts of Canada. I think that the Conservative philosophy does not really vary that much from the NDP philosophy when it comes to why Crown corporations are established.

A Crown corporation is established when there is a need in the community or in the country for a service, but private industry cannot supply that service for whatever reason. Perhaps the capital is not available or perhaps it would not be profitable, so private companies or individuals are not asked to subsidize communities. Then the Government sets up a Crown corporation. That is no different from our philosophy. Where it stops is over the question of how long you continue to have Crown corporations. Do you do it forever, particularly in the airline industry?

• (1530)

At present there are two other airlines operating in Canada, Wardair and Canadian Airlines. The situation is not what it was in 1937. This is 1988. These are quick changing times, and a highly competitive time for the airline industry. We no longer need a Crown corporation to provide this service to Canadians. That is the difference in philosophy between myself as a Conservative and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

Why the need to privatize? As was indicated earlier in the debate by a Liberal Member, Air Canada received some equity funding in 1978 when it was separated from the CNR. Now it needs somewhere in the order of $3 billion over the next 10 years for aircraft purchases, $300 million of it right away. It would be nice to say that the Canadian taxpayers can give it to them. However, I know you have sat around the cabinet table and know what happens, Madam Speaker. I sat around a cabinet table in Manitoba when I was Minister of Community Services and Corrections. I had to compete for taxpayers' money with the Minister responsible for Crown corporations. Why take $3 billion of taxpayers' money and divert it to Air Canada when the airlines' own employees want to buy it and get the money from the private sector? We can then use that $3 billion over the next 10 years to deal with the elderly who need assistance, increasing health costs, and required social services. Instead of going to Air Canada the money will stay in the Treasury and decisions will be made by the Government in the role it should play, not that of an entrepreneur. We know what happens when Government tries to run a business.

I had the opportunity to speak in the debate on the privatization of de Havilland. Boeing bought it and Boeing has an operation in my riding. At that time the NDP and the Liberals stood up and said we were selling out de Havilland to the U.S. Jobs are going to go to the U.S. They will ignore us now that they have de Havilland. What happened? I know that in my riding there has been an increase in jobs since that privatization. Boeing expanded and brought technology to Winnipeg which we did not have before. You never hear about that anymore.

Air Canada

Yesterday an NDP Member said we should not sell Air Canada because we want service to every part of Canada. There will be service to every part of Canada whether Air Canada is a private or Crown corporation.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North talked about Crown corporations in Manitoba. He referred to the Manitoba Telephone System, a fine Crown corporation. No question about it. Many of the people that graduated with me in engineering worked for that company. It is a proud corporation. Yet the NDP Government of the day decided to play politics with it and tried to expand it. What happened? It lost something like $47 million invested in Saudi Arabian technology. Another $20 million was lost in foreign exchange transactions. The best example is Flyer Industries. That company was maintained for years by the Manitoba Government, ourselves and the NDP. It lost millions of dollars. There are a lot of buses operating in cities all over North America that were subsidized by Manitoba taxpayers. It was finally sold for $1 million. Then there was the famous aircraft industry for $40 million. They finally got three or four planes flying and then had to bring one back because it was sold to a banana republic which decided not to pay for it after it landed with its wheels up. That is the experience we have had in Manitoba with Crown corporations. Why should a Government continue a Crown corporation if the employees want to buy into it? Why would we stop them?

The next thing I am concerned about is how we protect the employees of Air Canada when it is privatized. It is in the legislation. The benefits they have now will be protected. The employee is protected whether the company is private or a Crown corporation. Those employees will have the first opportunity to buy the shares of Air Canada. We also want to make sure they have a strong voice, and they will have that because the way the legislation is written, no one can own more than 10 per cent of the shares. If 80 per cent or 90 per cent of the 20,000 employees are interested in seeing Air Canada sold and want to buy shares, all they have to do is get their proxies together, which they will do, and they will have members on the board. They will have a say in the operation of the airline.

What did the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North say when he debated this yesterday? He said the unions are opposed to the sale of Air Canada. They do not want to buy shares in Air Canada. In yesterday's Toronto Star at page 88 there is an article headed "Dog Fight Shaping Up Over Sale of Air Canada". The article states:

> MPs opposed to the Government selling most of Air Canada to private interests are going to find most employees support the sale, says a senior Air Canada pilot.
> Ed Godin, spokesman for pilots who have been trying for several years to buy shares of the airline, said in a recent interview that up to 90 per cent of Air Canada's 22,000 employees will buy shares.
> "There's nothing in the Bill that we didn't expect," Godin said. "Now the issue is what the price of shares is going to be."

It then goes on to state:

The unions representing company machinists, ticket agents and flight attendants have also vowed to fight the Bill, but Godin says they're not supported by their members.

"We find their members don't share the opinions of their union leaders," he says. "There's an effort within the unions to counter some of the statements of the union leaders.

"One flight attendant in Toronto has complained that her union is wasting its money to fight the deal while the pilots are using their money to get a good deal."

He said a meeting in Winnipeg to rally Air Canada employees against this sale attracted only 70 people.

That is 70 people out of 2,200 employees. The article continues:

From our poll of the employees, 80 per cent favour privatization, while 10 per cent say they don't know enough about it.

• (1540)

The Bill protects the employees. We need to protect Air Canada and we have. The Bill says that not more than 25 per cent of the shares can be owned by foreign investors. The employees are encouraged to buy shares and they have the pride in the company to do so. Let us go ahead and pass this Bill because all those concerns have been covered. It will be good for Canada and good for Winnipeg.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I have a couple of questions. The first relates to a comment made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) about some Liberal campaign material. He referred to it as an outright lie. I would not want to get into that dispute. I certainly would not want to defend the Liberal campaign material. I have not seen it and so would not necessarily agree with the Member.

However, when he talked about outright lies it struck a chord with me. I thought of the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in 1985 when he said very clearly that Air Canada was not for sale. Yet, here we are debating the sale of Air Canada. I do not know what the Hon. Member wants to call that statement by his leader. How can people believe in a government that says one thing in 1985 and does completely the opposite in 1988?

Another example is the trade agreement with the United States. In 1983 the Prime Minister, along with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the former Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), when running for the leadership of the Conservative Party, said that the trade agreement with the United States was a non-starter. There was no way they were going to get involved in something like that because it would be a disaster for Canada and would be rejected by the people of Canada. Yet today we have to deal with the Government trying to push through a trade agreement with the United States.

When the Prime Minister talked to the Canadian people in the 1984 election campaign, he talked about social security programs being a sacred trust. One of the first things he tried to do after he got elected was to cut the indexation of old age security. He succeeded in cutting family allowances for young people.

Getting back to the question of outright lies, how can the Hon. Member campaign in the coming election—and it is coming sooner or later, thank goodness—on the question of credibility and trust when his leader says one thing and leads a Government which does the diametrically opposite thing?

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke gives half-truths. He left out what was actually said by the Prime Minister at that time. He made the statement that the Prime Minister said he was not going to sell Air Canada. I will quote exactly what the Prime Minister said and I hope the Hon. Member listens carefully this time. The Prime Minister's full statement was: "There may be some persuasive arguments in the case of Air Canada that some people can make in regard to the disposition of equity. I'll take a look at it, but Canada needs a national airline".

Three years later Canada has three national airlines. That is the result of deregulation and the passage of the National Transportation Act. They have created stable and viable airline services to the public of Canada. We can sell a portion of Air Canada at this time because we have three national airlines as a result of deregulation by the Government.

I suggest that the Hon. Member get the full facts before he gives half-true statements about credibility because his credibility suffers when he does that.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I enjoyed the address of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker). He made some reference to Crown corporations serving frontier regions. Some Crown corporations do serve frontier regions and that is a very worthy thing to do. However, I wonder how true that is in connection with Air Canada.

I noticed that the frontier regions of the Province of Alberta, the far northern areas including Fort McMurray, were not served by Air Canada. They were served by a private firm, PWA, which did the pioneering into the far north. Although there may have been a lot of jokes made about PWA in Fort McMurray, it was the only air service they had. It was not provided by a Crown corporation but by private people who had invested in an airline, who were willing to take a risk to bring that service to those people. I know that it was sometimes called "Please Wait Awhile" or "Pray While Aloft", but I do not know of an accident that PWA had while servicing that area.

Private industry has done much frontier work. As an example, the CBC has done some splendid work in the frontiers. Lake Louise, which is hardly a frontier region, but which is in the mountains, gets very little radio service. When they tried to get the CBC into the Lake Louise area, they were told that CBC does not have the money, yet it has thousands of dollars to spend on radio in places like Toronto. Perhaps the idea that Crown corporations serve frontier regions better than private industry is a myth, maybe it is only partly true.

Just because an apple tree is owned by the Government, or is a Crown corporation, will it produce more apples than a tree owned by John Jones operating as a free enterpriser?

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, in answer to that question, if the verbal "b.s." of some politicians had solidity, maybe it could grow trees a little better. However, it would make no difference if it was Crown owned or privately owned.

I thank the Hon. Member for reminding me about the services to northern Alberta. To a large degree the same company served northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan. We had Lambair and other airways, but TransAir is the one I remember. TransAir flew to Thompson and up to Gillam. It was privately owned and served the North because at that time I do not think Air Canada was interested in going to the North.

Under the regulations at the time it had all the good spots, and I guess rightfully so, because we did not have two or three national airlines at that time. We had to ensure that we had one national airline. TransAir became Pacific Western Air and now Canadian Airlines.

The Western Aviation Museum is in my riding. It is one of the finest aviation museums on the North American continent, second not even to the one here in Ottawa. There is many a plane there from private airlines which opened the North for us.

The Hon. Member is completely correct, which really defeats the argument made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North yesterday that we need Air Canada as a Crown corporation in order to get service to all these remote areas.

In addition to the changes in regulations, the smaller airlines have teamed up with the three major airlines. I know that Canadian Airlines has different aircraft waiting in Toronto to take passengers to different spots in northern Ontario. The same is the case with Air Canada. I think it is affiliated with Air Ontario. We now have a unique situation of a Crown corporation working with private corporations and we also have private corporations working with other private corporations.

In the long run this has been very good for Canada and Canadians. There is now more competition, better service and, I might add, safe service because there are regulations which cover safety which will not allow any short-circuiting of safety when it comes to flying Canadians around Canada.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Air Canada

Government House
Ottawa

May 25, 1988

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gerard V. J. La Forest, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 25th day of May, 1988, at 4:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to this Bill this afternoon, and I would like to be as optimistic as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) about the possibility of maintaining the same quality of service and number of jobs, even in his riding of Winnipeg—St. James, once the privatization of Air Canada takes effect.

Madam Speaker, a decision to privatize a company like Air Canada has some very serious implications for all regions served by this airline.

My colleague from Winnipeg—St. James said it would be possible to maintain the same quality of service and the same number of jobs, and that practically nothing would change, but I really wonder what will happen when the board of directors of the newly privatized corporation does its homework and looks at the viability of certain routes. I will bet you anything the corporation will decide to abandon certain services, certain routes, and this will have a direct impact, both on Winnipeg—St. James and on all other regions served by Air Canada, in terms of services, routes and the number of jobs there will be.

Madam Speaker, the Conservative Government is selling off Canada's identity, bit by bit.

It started its operation with a trade agreement that undermines our sovereignty, and it wants to continue by privatizing Air Canada.

Madam Speaker, Air Canada must remain fully owned by Canadians. The corporation is respected by everyone. It is a symbol, a tradition that goes back fifty-one years to when a Liberal Government, at the instigation of C.D. Howe, Minister of Industry at the time, decided to create Trans-Canada Air Lines.

The reason for creating Trans-Canada Air Lines was a lack of initiative on the part of the private sector to take the risks involved in setting up a national airline. Canadians shouldered full responsibility for this undertaking.

In 1977, the Government adopted the legislation under which Air Canada is governed today. Although, there were financing problems at the time, the Government did not rush in to privatize the corporation but made the necessary changes in its corporate structure to provide for adequate financing. The present Government should do likewise.

Madam Speaker, the role of Air Canada is to operate in the interests of Canadians. The people of this country already own Air Canada. They don't have to buy it all over again. To Canadians, Air Canada is more than just another airline. It is a Canadian institution. This Bill leaves the door open to full privatization, and according to a number of polls, the majority of Canadians are opposed to the idea.

Air Canada provides a way to overcome the distances that separate Canada's various regions. Air Canada represents our Canadian community. Being subject to the Official Languages Act, Air Canada is an instrument for national unity. It is an integral part of our economy, in the same way as the railways and the CBC. It is part of that which helps Canada maintain its own identity. In the final instance, Canadians will have to pay the cost of privatization, because services and the safety of the travelling public would deteriorate, once profit becomes the sole incentive.

On January 15, 1985, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told the Canadian public that Air Canada was not for sale. This is just another of the hundreds of promises the Prime Minister has chosen to ignore since 1984, at the expense of the Canadian public.

The Conservatives, Madam Speaker, are dismantling the infrastructure that contributes to maintaining and holding together Canada a mari usque ad mare.

Let us look briefly at the effects of the privatization of British Airways, in Great Britain, by the Government of the "Iron Lady." More than 20,000 employees were laid off; that is 30 per cent of the workers of that corporation. It is quite likely that a private board of directors would decide to do the same with Air Canada's employees, which could result in 7,000 or 8,000, out of a total of 22,000, being laid off.

The safety aspect was just mentioned. Madam Speaker, I think that is extremely important. Should the company decide to cut some positions, unfortunately, it could cut heavily into the number of employees assigned to safety, so one would think. Considering the problems inherent to all transportation companies and the articles on air safety that appear regularly in newspapers, I think that it would be most unadvisable to reduce significantly the number of workers assigned to safety or to the various other departments of the airline, for that matter.

Madam Speaker, I would not like to see Air Canada become another Eastern Airlines, which has had only problems since it was taken over by Texas Air. Closer to us, in Quebec, 372 jobs, of a total of less than 2,000, have disappeared at Quebecair.

Paragraph 6(1)(c) provides for the continuance of the maintenance centres located in Winnipeg, Montreal and Toronto. However, it does not provide for the volume of operations or the number of jobs at these centres. This means that the private board of directors could reduce operations and increase lay-offs as it saw fit. The same applies for the corporate head office in Montreal. The private board of directors would in no way be restrained if it decided to transfer a large number of employees from Montreal to Toronto or even to other centres in Canada.

According to the Pilots' Association, Montreal has already lost some 50 pilots, or 10 per cent, who were shifted to Toronto or Vancouver. Their number went from 488 in 1985 to 454 in 1988. With this bill, the drain will continue.

The Montreal head office, Madam Speaker, is in danger of becoming an "empty shell" under privatization. And it is a matter of concern that, as is often pointed out, airport activity is now highly concentrated in Toronto, which is steadily taking a larger share of air traffic in Canada, to the detriment of Montreal. This statement by the President of Air Canada speaks for itself, "That is normal; Toronto is the economic centre of Canada. We have to follow the market."

My fear, Madam Speaker, and it is a big one, is not so much for the future of the head office in Montreal, but rather on what it represents in the longer term. Montreal must remain the decision-making centre for Air Canada. Unfortunately, this Bill will centralize activities in Toronto.

Also, the dense fug of the Bill is hiding the Airbus A-320 project. A deal with Airbus requires capital, and to get it, the Government is dismantling and jeopardizing a corporation which has served as the perfect tool for regional and economic development. As usual, this Tory Government has made a complete about-turn.

Before the Government can privatize part of Air Canada, the 25 million Canadian men and women who are the present shareholders should speak out.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can sell a bill of goods to the Canadian public better than anybody else. During the last election, he never mentioned the privatization of Air Canada. Before selling the airline, he needs a mandate.

Madam Speaker, I am also concerned about the fact that together combination of deregulation and privatization will undoubtedly result in a mediocre service. Will Air Canada continue to serve the regions, when we know for instance that some regions are no longer served by Air Canada, because the routes apparently are no longer profitable? Studies will certainly be made by the Government and the new board of directors in an effort to convince the corporation to check on the profitability of these routes. I feel that service by Air Canada will definitely stop in some regions. We did face a similar problem with a number of railway lines which had to be abandoned because they were no longer profitable. I should not like the same thing to happen following the privatization of Air Canada.

Madam Speaker, thousands of jobs are at stake. A private board of directors will not feel responsible for serving frontier regions or for regional development. Privatization will inevitably result in a major drop with level of service to our regional communities.

Has Air Canada really lost its public purpose to justify its privatization, or is it just an other one of this government's mischievous projects? The Government's only motive is profit. The Canadian people must be consulted on all these issues. The Tory Government is not concerned with providing the Canadian public with a fair and equitable air service from coast to coast.

• (1600)

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to my colleague from (Saint-Maurice) and although a newcomer in this House, or relatively so, since he has been here for nearly two years, unfortunately it hasn't taken him long—even if he does not run again—to acquire the same bad habit as his Liberal colleagues, of alarming Canadians with false information and unjustified fears. Where does the Hon. Member from Saint-Maurice get the notion that, by being partially privatized, Air Canada will abandon its lines? Where does he get the notion that 7,000 or 8,000 jobs will be lost?

Where does he get the notion that, if Air Canada is privatized, it will lose its identity and will no longer be identified as a Canadian airline? How can he say that the existing legislation guarantees that the operational and overhaul centres will be maintained in Dorval, Toronto and Winnipeg? Where is it written? Why does the Hon. Member resort to these fear-monger tactics when he states that the head office, even if it stays in Montréal, will lose its decision-making power? Has he no confidence in the ability of Air Canada's management? Is that what he is telling us? When he speaks of privatization and of its awful consequences, does he remember what happened with de Havilland? I want him to tell me how many jobs have been lost at de Havilland? How many jobs have been lost at Canadair since its takeover by Bombardier? Is he questioning the management of that company by Bombardier since it stopped to be a Crown Corporation? Is that what the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice is telling us?

Madam Speaker, does it mean that Teleglobe Canada no longer belongs to the Canadian public and no longer serves it? That is, Madam Speaker, the type of falsehood that have to be exposed. The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice is making those false statements without reason. On what basis can he maintain that the actual legislation protects the employees? On the contrary, it is the new Bill that confirms, that garantees that there will be headquarters in Montreal, and maintenance centres in Winnipeg, Toronto and Dorval. That is respected. It is clearly indicated in the Bill.

For once I would like to hear . . . I am disappointed, Madam Speaker, with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice who is not used to speak so many untruths. I am sure he did not write that speech.

• (1610)

Mr. Grondin: For your information, my dear colleague, I should like to say that I feel that we are sitting in this House to protect Canadians, rather like you are trying to do, but not in the way you intend to do it. Then, it is not a matter of saying that a text is relevant or not . . . I think that I respect you as much for your comments which were perhaps whispered to you by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) than for those which you could eventually made on the basis of my remarks which . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I would appreciate it greatly if the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) directed his comments to the Chair rather than to his colleague.

Mr. Grondin: Madam Speaker, it is probably due, as my colleague said earlier, to my lack of . . . I have been sitting in this House for only two years. It may be the reason, the lack of experience.

However, Madam Speaker, I should like merely to repeat what I said earlier. I will repeat the fact that to maximize profits a private company must definitely make some changes and I think that all privatized companies have always tried in the past to reap maximum profits. Unfortunately, such is the concern of Air Canada. I think that it is important for all Canadians to be aware of the problems due to privatization which even if it is not complete at present opens the door to complete privatization. I think that we are not being partisan when we mention in this House how important it is for Canadians to follow closely the debate on the privatization of Air Canada to avoid a brutal awakening following the privatization of that company.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. He suggested deregulation and privatization would lead to reduced service. That was his conclusion. I would like to know if he is aware the Liberal Government started deregulation. That was the first step along the road to privatization, the first step along the road to service reduction. Is the Hon. Member now ready to recommend to his own party that they admit they made the first step along the road to service reduction?

Mr. Grondin: Madam Speaker, I would simply like to assure the Hon. Member that we wanted to retain a degree of control, and at that time there was a will in Government to proceed, not with the kind of privatization that is now proposed, but with a kind of privatization where the government would still exercise control as long as the company provided Canadians with adequate service.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) for a very brief supplementary.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member suggested it is Liberal policy to have that kind of privatization where Governement retains control. This Conservative Government said the same thing, namely that such is its policy. What is the difference between Conservative and Liberal policies? The conclusion is that they mean the same service reduction.

Mr. Grondin: Madam Speaker, I will simply suggest to the Hon. Member that as far as we are concerned, normally, Liberal Party policy is the same in Quebec as anywhere else in Canada, as opposed to what we hear at times from the New Democratic Party. On the other hand—

Mr. Keeper: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) on a point of order.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member charged that our party has a policy for Canada and another for the Province of Quebec. That is false, and I ask that he withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member is certainly aware that is a matter for debate, rather than a point of order.

The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak for a few minutes on the partial privatization of Air Canada.

More than 100 years ago Sir John A. Macdonald recognized that Canada needed a uniting force, otherwise it would not be able to stand the pressures of proximity to the United States. Sir John A. Macdonald, unlike the present Conservatives, believed that Canada had the potential to become a great nation, and that Canada could do it on its own, but it needed some protection from the United States in developing that nation. Sir John A. Macdonald believed that we in Canada did not need to use the United States as a crutch.

In fact, quite often in Parliament he expressed the fear that we could easily become an extension of the economy of the United States. To counter that tendency and to ensure that Canada had continuing national status from sea to sea, the then Prime Minister Sir John A. Macdonald began to build the unifying Canadian National Railway. The circumstances which led to building the national railway were circumstances of geography, distance and remoteness. In the basic sense, those circumstances have not changed. They have changed only in degree. They are still factors that must be dealt with in keeping Canada a viable economic unit and nation. The Government of Sir John A. Macdonald and succeeding Governments established a transportation policy based on that need, a policy which had as its aim a unified Canada.

Looking back in history with 20-20 vision, we recognize that there were many less lofty reasons for the railway policy. However, things like the supply of cheap raw materials from the West to manufacturers in central Canada was one of the policies of that day which still lives on today and is a thorn in the side of the West. Basically, the Government of the day and succeeding Governments decided that, to be part of a nation, one must have the best possible communication between each of the parts, and part of that communication had to be the railway. Further parts of that communication had to do with the telephone system and other systems which grew as Canada grew. As Canada and the transportation of communications technology grew so did the unification policy of the Government grow.

When the time came, Canada needed a national airline for exactly the same reason as Canada had developed a national railway 100 years before. If it had not been developed as a national airline, an airline which was directed by the Government of Canada within the policy of keeping a unified Canada, what would have naturally happened would have been the development of airlines which went the shorter and cheaper routes from north to south rather than from east to west.

One can easily imagine if we did not have an airline such as Air Canada. It would have been much easier for the coastal cities of Victoria and Vancouver to have attached themselves by air routes to the United States, down the coast. It would have been much easier for the central Prairies to have attached themselves naturally to the northern Prairies of the United States, and for Winnipeg to have joined Minneapolis, and for the joining of places such as Halifax to Boston. This happened to a certain extent. However, by establishing a Canadian national airline which had the type of policy direction which the Government put in place, we developed an airline which had an east-west flow rather than a north-south flow.

The question that we are being asked today is can that unifying movement, that east-west movement, survive without an airline whose policy is directed by the Parliament of Canada and which has as its basic policy unification? This particular Government has made several attacks on the ability of the country to survive under the present circumstances. The big attack with which we have a great deal of concern is of course the Reagan-Mulroney trade deal—

Mr. McMillan: Order!

Mr. Hovdebo: —which encourages a north-south flow rather than an east-west flow for the movement of goods. It will be much easier for goods to be moved into the United States in certain circumstances. That is probably the largest attack on Canadian unification and sovereignty.

What the Government is doing here today is changing Canada's transportation policy by eliminating this airline by privatization. It is another attack on the unification policy. We know, as Members of the Government know, that Crown corporations were put in place for public policy purposes. When the Minister responsible for privatization said that the Government was talking about selling Crown corporations, she gave several basic reasons under which circumstances Crown corporations could be sold. As it happens, the sale of Air Canada does not fulfil any of the requirements that were articulated by the Minister responsible for privatization. I would like to cover those arguments a little later in my remarks.

However, I know that members of the Government are going to tell us, or have told us already, that this will still be a national airline, whether it is privately owned or publicly owned. They will tell us that it does not make any difference. But for how long will it be a national airline? I know that members of the Government will tell us that the articles under which it will be incorporated will indicate that it must keep bases in places such as Winnipeg and Montreal. However, does anyone think that when the power of the shareholders of the airline move from Canada, or move to a different part of Canada, that there will be any reason to keep a maintenance station open in Winnipeg to service but one plane a year? That will not necessarily keep that place open or keep the people working in that particular community.

The philosophy and ideology of the Party in power at the present time, the Party which forms the Government, is aimed at integration with the United States. The trade deal acclaims that. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has been acclaiming that since he fought the joining of Newfoundland to Canada. He ran his campaign in Newfoundland at the time saying: "We should not join Canada, we should join the United States". He is still at it.

Deregulation gives American multinationals a definite edge in the Canadian economy. That has been part of the policy of this Government and the previous Government. These movements toward integration of the Canadian economy with that of the American economy seem to be part of a very deliberate move on the part of the Government. It includes deregulation, privatization and free trade. It includes a group of policies which will make Canada much more dependent upon the United States and much less effectively a solid unit that we are proud of today.

It is quite possible that the control of Air Canada will eventually go to organizations such as Eastern, Pan Am and so on. Most of us are not ideologically attached to Crown corporations that do not serve a public interest, a public purpose. However, in the case of Air Canada and in the case of other transportation organizations that purpose is obvious. That purpose has not gone away. We would probably feel no different today than we would have back in John A. Macdonald's time when he established a Canadian national railway as a public service.

When the Minister responsible for privatization stated the Government would look at privatization she also stated that there were certain reasons for privatization. As I said before, those reasons are not applicable to Air Canada. First, the Minister said one reason would be if a corporation did not serve a public purpose, but Air Canada still serves a public policy purpose. She said that the Government would privatize a corporation if it were adding to the national debt. Air Canada has not added to the national debt. As well, she said, if a Crown corporation did not compete well in the private sector it would be privatized. Air Canada competes very well as a Crown corporation. Because of Canada's vast geography and sparse population it is vital that our east-west links be kept as a matter of public policy purpose. It is also important that marginal and uneconomic routes be kept in place by commercial carriers. We have examples of this in other transportation areas. If you have sparsely populated areas, eventually these areas lose service or the Government is required to subsidize a carrier that serves them. In the past it has been just as easy and almost as profitable in certain areas of transportation development to allow Crown corporations to pioneer the opening of certain lines and then to allow commercial companies to fulfil public policy requirements.

I have several other points I could make but I know my time is rapidly coming to an end. Let me summarize. The Government has said that the money it will get for Air Canada would be spent on social programs. We all know that this is a bit of a farce. One submarine less would cover the refurbishing of Air Canada entirely. I think the Government needs to take a good look at this program of privatization.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be not now read a second time but that the Order for second reading be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments?

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). Once again, I must ask what else is new.

Mr. Keeper: You are persuaded.

Mr. Grisé: The Member was very persuasive, Madam Speaker, especially when he related the privatization of Air Canada to free trade and that it would have an impact on free trade. I doubt that. The Hon. Member said that the privatization of Air Canada would make our country more dependent on the United States of America. I do not know how he can relate the two.

[Translation]

Similarly, when he talks about deregulation in other sectors and affirms this has an exceedingly negative impact on Canadian unity and Canadian sovereignty, how is it, Madam Speaker, that we have not lost anything?

[English]

When we privatized Canadair we sold it to Bombardier, but I do not believe we lost our sovereignty then. The Hon. Member could ask the workforce of Bombardier in Montreal if they lost their sovereignty on the issue. I do not believe so. I am anxious to have the comments of the Hon. Member on that matter.

The Member said the national airline might phase out or give up service. He said it would not be a nationwide airline because of privatization. Let me ask the Hon. Member about Canadian Airlines International. As far as I am concerned that company is private. What about Wardair? The Hon. Member should know better than I about these things. He is from western Canada, and I understand that Wardair's head office is in western Canada. Are the people working for Wardair not Canadian any more? Are they losing their sovereignty? He said it is not good for the economy and people will lose their jobs. He said deregulation is very bad.

Mr. Belsher: That is the rationale of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Grisé: Of course, it is the New Democratic Party's rationale. The New Democrats are so rational and are so democratic that, Madam Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, at a press conference at three o'clock this afternoon, imposed a candidate in the riding of Chambly which I represent and which I am very proud to represent, but the candidate does not even live in the riding. There was no consultation with the population of Chambly. The New Democrats decided this afternoon in the name of great democracy in Canada to impose on the great Canadians in my riding of Chambly a candidate from outside of the riding. The Hon. Member can tell his candidate and his Leader that we will have good news for them in the next election.

• (1640)

I will return, if I may, to the comments on the privatization of Air Canada. We hear the NDP saying that those people will lose their jobs. Where is the confidence of members of the NDP in those they call ordinary Canadians, those we call great Canadians, the people who work for Air Canada? They are proud employees. They are proud to work for Air Canada and they welcome the privatization of Air Canada because it gives them more opportunity to have a better fleet and to have more access to more markets, and eventually, of course, more business and more jobs. I would like the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) to comment on what I have just said.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member was a little confused and unable to counter the arguments I had put before him. He had to talk about his home riding to talk about democracy. I know that the New Democratic Party does not allow the placement of any candidate anywhere without the consent of the members of the Party in that community. There was an open convention.

The Hon. Member attempted to make a point about privatization, deregulation and sovereignty. The point I was making follows very closely on his remarks. In fact, his remarks point out the point I was trying to make.

We have a package here consisting of deregulation which allows privatization and Americanization, which is the alternative of free trade. Americanization, deregulation and privatization are one package which this Government is foisting on the people of Canada by the process it is going through. I recognize that it is doing it in little bits, and I recognize that the privatization of this particular corporation is just one item on the list.

Deregulation of transportation was another one. If the U.S. transportation industry had allowed it, there would have been deregulation of the movement of those corporations into Canada, but the American industry did not want to follow the regulations that presently exist in Canada. Therefore, the Government started a deregulation process which will eventually allow the intrusion of the American transportation industry into Canada.

Until the U.S. transportation industry backed off because it did not want to give up the Jones Act, it was ready to take over most of the Canadian transportation industry. I think that we were fortunate in that case. Though we cannot give the same advice to the Canadian negotiators, we were fortunate that the transportation industry of the United States was concerned about losing the Jones Act.

The Hon. Member spoke about the confidence of ordinary Canadians. We think that ordinary Canadians do have confidence. They do not need the United States as the crutch on which they will build the best economy in the world. They can do it themselves. We do not need the United States to help us build the best economy. We do not need a free trade agreement which will allow them to take over our industries and our production.

Mr. Grisé: What about the Auto Pact?

Mr. Hovdebo: The Auto Pact works very well because 60 per cent—

Mr. Grisé: And what is it? Is it not free trade?

Mr. Hovdebo: The free trade agreement is doing away with the Auto Pact. Sixty per cent of the cars made in Canada have to be made of Canadian components. That will be lost. After the free trade deal, cars can be made entirely in the United States and there will be no need for them to have any components made in Canada. That is part of the free trade deal.

All of these together make a package through which the Government is selling off the power we have to make a good living in Canada. We will be dependent upon the power of the United States to develop the kind of life we want in Canada, the kind of life we have been used to.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part in today's debate on Bill C-129 designed to pave the way for public ownership of Air Canada, a crowning achievement in the history of Canada's commercial aviation.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, the period between the first Trans-Canada Airlines Vancouver-Seattle international flight and the thousands of Air Canada worldwide flights every year has been highlighted by the efforts and tenacity of thousands of people intent on making Canada one of the world's leading nations in the aviation industry.

Trans-Canada Airlines made its first flight in 1937. Yes, Madam Speaker, allow me to recall that TCA first took off in 1937 from the Saint-Hubert airport in the riding of Chambly which I have the honour to represent in the House. That same aircraft, a TCA DC-3, made the same flight in 1987 when it took off once again from Saint-Hubert in the riding of Chambly to commemorate the 50th anniversary of Air Canada, or Trans Canada Airlines as it was called at the time. Nobody could have predicted the huge success it would have. At the time Canada badly needed a national airline to serve a population scattered throughout our vast country.

The Government of the day had no other choice than to create a Crown corporation to undertake the development of the national air system on which we now rely. Since then, air transport has greatly changed. TCA has become, as I said a few moments ago, Air Canada and that corporation has developed at the same rate as the air industry to become a leading figure in the commercial and international air transport area.

Air Canada has now more than 22,000 employees. It carries 11 million passengers per year and its sales exceed $3 billion. Since its first flight in 1937, we have seen, Madam Speaker, a commercial revolution in the air industry. Today, we do not have one but two national airlines.

The deregulation implemented by the Deputy Prime Minister when he was a first-rate Minister of Transport now allows both airlines to compete with international air carriers. Such a competition has reduced fares, improved services provided to consumers and encouraged the growth of small airlines to meet regional needs.

The regulatory reform undertaken by our government has increased competition and improved services available to all Canadians. While trying to meet the needs of travellers rather than those of a regulatory body, the Canadian airlines are competing through innovation and efficiency. They are vying for more customers by improving their service and their fares everywhere in Canada. To face that competition, it is absolutely essential that Air Canada find new investments to develop new routes and improve its services. Above all, it needs new investments to buy new planes which will allow it to continue to represent proudly . . .

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Madam Speaker, the Hon. the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable Senate.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-67, an Act respecting Animal Pedigree Associations—Chapter 13.

Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff—Chapter 14.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sales of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment thereto by Mr. Hovdebo (p. 15767).

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, would you indicate how much time I have left in debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member has 17 minutes left.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, to continue the debate on Bill C-129, the Air Canada Privatization Bill, because we went up to the Higher Chamber for the Royal Assent to certain bills... If I may refer in the first place to the regulatory reform introduced by this Government, which enhanced competition and resulted in better service to all Canadians. By striving to meet the needs of the travelling public rather than the regulatory body, Canadian airlines are competing through their innovative spirit and efficiency, they are striving to attract more customers by providing better service at a better price across Canada.

The Government feels that the time has come for Air Canada to fend for itself and make its own financing and capitalization decisions. It will remain a world class airline and continue to develop provided it has the same access as its competitors to investment necessary to its expansion.

The Bill wants to make it possible for Canadians generally and Air Canada employees in particular to participate directly in the ownership of that corporation. Air Canada is a flourishing company which has built quite an international image. From now on, it will enjoy the necessary freedom and financial options it needs to develop and continue to serve the Canadian poeple while remaining under their control. Madam Speaker, this decision to allow Canadians to participate in the ownership of Air Canada is consistent with the Government's philosophy concerning Crown corporations. This Government believes that, whenever possible, people should have access to the benefits of the free market.

After reviewing the case of several Crown corporations, the Government found that some of them were no longer justified and would benefit from a greater flexibility. Air Canada may achieve its growth and success potential if it is given the possibility to secure the necessary investments to continue to play its leadership role in the air transport industry. The best way to secure these investments is to allow direct participation of the Canadian public in Canadian ownership.

A while ago, Madam Speaker, I heard my colleagues of the Liberal and Socialist Parties mention that the privatization of a Crown corporation would jeopardize our sovereignty. If I may, Madam Speaker, I should like to quote a statement made by the Leader of the Socialist Party as reported in a Journal de Montréal article, and I quote: Are such Crown corporations as de Havilland, Canadair and Teleglobe which have been privatized well administered, efficient and competitive? Yes, I think so. The NDP Leader of the Socialist Party had to admit it. In a reply to the Journal de Montréal, it is stated: Although he still opposes the partial privatization of Air Canada and continues to promote the need to maintain Petro-Canada as a federal Crown corporation, Mr. Broadbent wants to be more flexible as to the regulatory function of the state. Madam Speaker, he continued by saying that he would hesitate to nationalize again everything that has been privatized so far—because privatized corporations are well administered.

As you can see again, Madam Speaker, the Socialists and their Leader are making contradictory statements, claiming on the one hand, when faced with reality, that privatization is acceptable, and on the other hand that privatizing Air Canada does not make sense, for it would jeopardize Canada's sovereignty.

Madam Speaker, throughout its fifty-one years, Air Canada has never had the benefit of the equity financing enjoyed by its competitors in the private sector. The sale of shares to the public, as proposed in this Bill, will obviate the need for taxpayers to provide the necessary funds for expanding and improving the corporation.

From now on, Air Canada will be able to compete with private sector airlines that never had access to public funds. More importantly, it will have the financial and corporate flexibility it needs to respond quickly and independently to the demands of regulatory reform.

This Bill will give the Government the authority to transform a Crown corporation into a private corporation. I will now explain the procedure. The Bill authorizes the transfer of Air Canada shares held by the Minister of Transport to the Deputy Prime Minister, who will hold them in trust for Her Majesty in right of Canada.

The Bill provides for bringing Air Canada under the jurisdiction of the Canada Business Corporations Act. It also authorizes the Deputy Prime Minister to sell his shares in Air Canada and authorizes the corporation to issue and sell shares.

Over the years, Canadians have learned to identify with Air Canada, which has become our national airline. The Bill provides that Air Canada will continue, I repeat: continue, to remain Canadian-controlled. No major shareholder will be able to take control of the corporation.

Individual ownership of shares will be limited to 10 per cent of publicly issued shares, while foreign ownership will be limited to 25 per cent of said shares.

Madam Speaker, by permitting the public to participate directly in the ownership of Air Canada, the Government is taking special care to ensure that certain fundamental elements of the corporation are maintained. Thus, the Bill provides for maintaining the various locations of Air Canada's facilities which have contributed to its visibility and earned it the appreciation of Canadians. These locations were determined on the strength of decisions that reflected Air Canada's business acumen, and there is therefore no reason to make any changes in this respect. The Bill provides that Air Canada's national headquarters will remain in Montreal, its present location, where it provides several hundred jobs for people in the Montreal region and the riding of Chambly.

Obviously, Air Canada will keep on serving the public in both official languages, thus continuing to recognize the essential duality of the country which colours it flies.

The major operating and maintenance centers that were established throughout the years in Montreal, Mississauga and Winnipeg resulted from a decision based on sound business principles. They are cause for pride and form an integral part of the company's success, so they shall be maintained in operation.

As far as security is concerned, the 1985 Aeronautics Act gives the government full powers regarding passengers' security. This forms the basis of all our transportation policies.

Madam Speaker, for all those concerned with Air Canada being present regionally, nothing will be changed with public participation to state ownership, and along with regional carriers, Air Canada will maintain these passengers services.

Air Canada has always been keen on offering a good service to consumers at a good price. If the company keeps offering good services at a good price, it will attract consumers, making the operation profitable to investors.

Madam Speaker, the government's decision to give the public an opportunity to participate in the ownership of Air Canada is a pragmatic one, based on the realistic evaluation of the changes necessary to the company's prosperity in the future.

This decision is in keeping with the Government's vision of an economic renewal. Between 1984 and 1987, Canada's economic growth was the best of all OECD countries. More than 1.2 million jobs were created and unemployment is at its lowest level in seven years. This prosperity that Canada is enjoying is due to the vision, the initiative and the hard work of individuals and companies who know how to grasp the opportunities provided by our vast country.

The role of the Government is limited to encouraging entrepreneurship, to supporting it as required and to helping businesses compete in the difficult world economy.

Madam Speaker, despite the criticism and the loud cries from the Opposition, public participation in the ownership of Air Canada was favorably received throughout the country by Canadians, be they from the Consumers Association of Canada, Air Canada itself or the aviation industry in general. For the first time, Canadians will have the chance to own a share of Air Canada directly. The most eager and enthusiastic are the employees of Air Canada themselves. It is this kind of enthusiasm shown by the employees and the general public that will ensure Air Canada's strength and growth in future.

The spontaneous support for our initiative is based on two main reasons. First, the Bill meets the changing needs of the air transport industry. It provides the freedom and flexibility that will help Air Canada face the challenge of the future.

Second, the Bill ensures that the transition of Air Canada from a Crown corporation to a private company will occur without sacrificing continuity. It will let Air Canada capitalize on the high standards it has set over its 51-year history.

Madam Speaker, I trust that my colleagues will join me to ensure passage of this Bill, so that Canadians can share in our future as soon as possible.

• (1710)

[English]

This very important piece of legislation must have the support of all Members of the House. It is supported strongly by all sectors of the air industry, especially the employees of Air Canada.

Therefore, to help Members of the House speak on the issue, I move:

> That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of second reading of Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): According to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), if 15 Members rise in their places to object, the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn. Shall the motion carry?

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There not being 15 Members rising in objection to the motion, according to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b) the motion is deemed to be carried.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, it seems to me that Bill C-129 provides for a system that is neither fish, nor fowl, nor good red herring. It is neither one nor the other. On the one hand it deals with privatization, but only 45 per cent privatization. The Government is supposedly retaining a majority of shares, but it does not really have control because it indicated that it will vote in accordance with the minority. That puts the Canadian people in the position of effectively owning non-voting shares.

There are also guarantees that no individual can have more than 10 per cent of the shares, yet 10 per cent of the total is 22 per cent of 45 per cent so that a couple of people, each with 10 per cent of the shares, could have effective control. The Government has committed itself to voting in accordance with the majority of that 45 per cent minority.

Similarly, there is supposed to be provision that no more than 25 per cent of the total shares can be owned outside the country. However, 25 per cent is 55 per cent of the shares that will be privatized. Therefore, again, effective control can be outside Canada.

How does the Member square that with any kind of public interest in Air Canada? How does he square that with Canadian sovereignty?

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, once again Members of the New Democratic Party are distorting information. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) is saying that we will allow outsiders to get a hold of 25 per cent of all shares. That is false! Totally false. They are allowed 25 per cent of the 45 per cent of shares which will be put on sale, period. No one will be able to hold more than 10 per cent of shares issued. The information and the bill must be interpreted in that context and should not be distorted.

Madam Speaker, once again, fear and uncertainty are being spread among Canadians. Air Canada employees themselves, yes, that is the case, Air Canada employees themselves accept this proposal and are interested in the privatization initiative. Being on the inside, one would presume that they have the right information. There is a board of directors, but as soon as the shares are sold, the shareholders will elect a new board. Decisions on the operations of Air Canada will no longer be taken by the Government. This is precisely the intent of the privatization bill: to make Air Canada a privately managed business, while retaining a certain percentage of share ownership by Government. But nobody can own more that 10 per cent of the shares issued, that is 10 per cent of the 45 per cent. The shares held by foreign interests cannot exceed 25 per cent of the shares issued, that is 25 per cent of the 45 per cent.

[English]

Is that clear enough? It is 25 per cent of what is issued. That means 25 per cent of 45 per cent that can be owned by people from out of the country. No individual can own more than 10 per cent of the shares issued, not the total. It is from the shares issued.

There will be 45 per cent of the total shares. It is 45 out of 100. Do you get that?

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Are the shares issued or not?

Mr. Grisé: There are 100 per cent of shares in a company.

Mr. Cassidy: But 10 per cent are to be sold to the public, am I right? These shares may well be owned by Americans!

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is the genius of the socialist party.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I think to keep sanity in the House I should call quorum at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

And the bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We now have quorum.

Mr. Lewis: Question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I was on my feet to—

Mr. Mazankowski: No, you were not. You were not in your seat. No way. Question.

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is as follows: Mr. Mazankowski, seconded by Mr. Lewis, moved:

> That Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

In amendment thereto: Mr. Hovdebo, seconded by Mr. Keeper, moved:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be not now read a second time but that the Order for second reading be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport."

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

• (1730)

During the ringing of the bells.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In accordance with Standing Order 13(4), at the request of the Chief Government Whip, the vote is deferred until 6 p.m. this evening, at which time the bells will be rung for at most 15 minutes.

The House will now continue with Orders of the Day.

[Translation]

Therefore, the recorded vote now before the House is deferred to 6 p.m. tonight when the bells will ring no longer than 15 minutes. We will now proceed to government orders.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When we left the House, we were told the vote would be held in half an hour. Now that the bells have stopped ringing, have the three parties agreed on that point?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) rose on a point of order. I can assure him that I don't have a hearing problem. He does not have to shout. The Government whip asked that the vote be deferred to 6 p.m. tonight when the bells will ring no longer than 15 minutes.

It being 17.35 p.m., we will now proceed to government orders.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Friday, May 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-126, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

[English]

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is highly irregular procedure which is taking place in the House right now. It is highly irregular to call a Bill which was not called for today's business and then to expect the opposition Parties—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Cassidy: This Bill happens to deal with a question of international financial institutions—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Cassidy: —my Party has a number of people who wish to speak on that particular measure. They are not here right now—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Cassidy: The Government is deliberately abusing the rights of Parliament by the way it is proceeding at this time. It is deliberately abusing the rights of Parliament. If it wants to have a fuss in this House, we will have a fuss in the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, this is quite outrageous. I want to point out that this particular procedure—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Cassidy: —by means of a vote called by the Chair without adequate notice when there were people who wished to question the Hon. Member who just finished speaking. Madam Speaker, that was a partisan act on your part and we intend to take it to the Speaker and to raise that question, and if this is part of a pattern that you have begun—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Get out.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member was never given the floor.

Mr. Cassidy: Why should I take my seat when your Party is abusing Parliament? You are abusing Parliament with measures—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Cassidy: You come up with the most ridiculous kind of measures, and now, Madam Speaker, is this the way we are going to spend the summer?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Hon. Member will please sit down.

Mr. Skelly: Withdraw the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will please sit down.

Mr. Orlikow: I rise on another point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will please sit down.

Mr. Forrestall: And be respectful.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will please sit down.

Mr. Crosbie: We need a parliamentary psychiatrist.

Mr. Cassidy: Your Party needs a parliamentary psychiatrist.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: If you want to fight this way, we will fight this way.

You want the Speaker on your side, the way she was on your side. Is that what you want to do? Black Friday all over again, is that what you want to do?

Mr. Mazankowski: Shame on you.

Mr. Cassidy: Shame on yourself. Repeat the words the Minister of Defence (Mr. Beatty) used the other day.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. Standing Order 13(4) reads as follows:

> When the Speaker has put the question on any debatable motion, except as provided pursuant to section (2) of this Standing Order, the bells to call in the Members shall be sounded for not more than thirty minutes; provided that, while the Members are being called in, either the Chief Government Whip or the Chief Opposition Whip may approach the Speaker to request that the division be deferred, in which case the Speaker shall defer the said division until a specified time, but, in any case, not later than 6.00 o'clock p.m. on the next sitting day thereafter, when the bells to call in the Members shall be sounded for not more than fifteen minutes . . .

This is exactly what took place. As it was 5.35 p.m., we could simply go on with Government business. This is exactly what I did, as occupant of the Chair. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre may well disagree with this ruling, but it was made pursuant to our Standing Orders and I am sure the Hon. Member will want to reflect on the words he used which were heard by everyone in this Chamber, casting doubts about the impartiality of the Chair. As occupant of the Chair, I can only apply the procedural rules that were established in all fairness and without any prejudice.

• (1740)

[English]

Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, you have explained the way the Government is allowed to defer a vote according to our rules. But may I remind you that we, in the Opposition, believe that the Chair must maintain, broadly speaking, some sense of order, of fair play and of justice in our proceedings.

Now, Madam Speaker, you have called earlier a vote on the Bill before the House in a way that prevented the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and myself to ask any question. Honestly, we were truly disappointed!

I might not have been very warmly in my comments but I was very concerned because we thought that the Chair was prejudiced against one side.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Secondly, Madam Speaker, you know that the situation will be critical should the Government decide, without notice, to call this Bill, in an orderless manner. This is what I objected to in the point of order I have just made.

Now, I could perhaps ask you, Madam Speaker, to take note of my comments, since I think that it is very clear that the House will not operate properly if there are constant changes to the order of business, the Standing Orders, from one bill to another . . .

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Cassidy: You know that this will not work out and that the House must proceed in an orderly fashion.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) referred as well to the time or the way in which the question was put regarding Bill C-129. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that his colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), rose on a point of order asking me to ensure that there was a quorum in the House, which as the Speaker I did promptly. Once a quorum was re-established in the House, once we proceeded again, I gave the floor to the Hon. Member who had been answering questions. Hon. Members at that point asked for the question to be put.

I must tell the Hon. Member that at that point neither he nor the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville were in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Speaker was asked to put the question. No one rose to ask for the floor. I was asked to put the question. It was the question which I put to the House.

During his recent intervention the Hon. Member accused the Chair—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): —of a lack of fairness and of fair play.

An Hon. Member: Withdraw!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think that the Hon. Member will want to read the "blues", think it over, re-read the procedure book and he will realize that whatever has been done was done in all fairness and in accordance with all the rules of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I see that the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) is now seeking the floor. I will now listen to him.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I imagine that we have now moved on to discussion of the present proposition before us. I would assume that the term "all fairness" from the Chair certainly referred only to the rules and not to the kind of activity of the Conservative Government across the floor. The Bill—

Mr. Crosbie: Sit down, turkey!

Mr. Skelly: —that is before us here is certainly a matter that is very characteristic of this organization. The organization that it is proposing to support in this legislation is one that has attempted to propose Conservative philosophy on developing nations. There are a great many people in the Opposition who would like to—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If I may, there is also a second point which I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre was saying that I should not have allowed Bill C-126 to be brought forward at this time. When I look at the Projected Order of Business I see that Bill C-126 is listed as a possible Bill to be studied today.

Further, Standing Order 22(2) states:

> Government Orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the government determines.

Therefore, this time—

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Malone: She is ruling on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): —resuming debate on Bill C-126.

Mr. Fulton: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Skeena on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I would like to seek some clarification. We were hearing witnesses at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development when the first bell went. The Clerk of the committee phoned here to the Chamber and learned that it was simply a quorum bell. When the bell resumed ringing, a second call was made from the committee. We were told that there would be a recorded vote taken at 5.45 p.m.

I seek clarification as to what went on with the second bell.

Mr. Mantha: It's not true.

Mr. Fulton: If people from committees are going to phone and seek information from the Chamber on votes, then there has to be some clarification available to those committees that are hearing witnesses.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: I know Government Members do not particularly care about aboriginal people, or anything else, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Andre: It is you we do not care about.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will try very succinctly to tell the Hon. Member what happened, as the Hon. Member said that he was in committee.

There was a first bell for a quorum count. Once a quorum was re-established the Hon. Member who had the floor asked that the question be put. The question was put. The bell then rang to call in Hon. Members for a vote.

Subsequently, the Government Whip asked for the vote to be delayed until 6 p.m. We then called Government Orders, which is now the point that we are at.

Resuming debate on Bill C-126. The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River on debate.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, when I thought I had been recognized to speak on the Bill I found that we had continued on into further justifications of the ruling on the point of order. What I would ask of the Chair is, since there was a bit of confusion on the part of my colleagues and other Members of the House, that my time in this particular debate would commence—

• (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am now recognizing the Hon. Member for debate on Bill C-126. He will have all the time that is normally allotted to him.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, as the din begins to subside in here, the matter before the House is certainly an extremely important one. A number of members of the Opposition have spoken on this Bill from a very informed point of view about the damage that has been put in place in various developing nations by the operation of the International Monetary Fund. Some speakers on this side of the House have prepared long and hard for this particular piece of legislation, and the Government's attempt to ram the Bill through without allowing a fair hearing is grossly unfair and characteristic of the Government in this particular phase of the operation of Parliament. At any rate, it was brought out in debate that enforcing on many developing nations some extremely harsh programs to ensure they attempted to pay off massive debts left them in a condition of great hardship. Social programs were cut.

Members talked in this House about education being diminished or demolished and the absolute lack of Third World country Governments to provide education for children because of what the IMF and the Bretton Woods Agreement imposed.

We have heard that health care in many countries has been demolished by the policies of the IMF, controlled by western nations and the United States which are far more interested in the debt being repaid than in protecting citizens. The illiteracy rate in many countries is running 70-odd per cent and infant mortality is 50 to 60 per cent. These points were carefully made by previous speakers. It was pointed out that many of the aid programs are being skimmed off by government officials, by relatives and friends of ruling oligarchies. As a result, aid never reached the poorer sections of society. Corruption has led to divisions in countries. People have risen up in revolt against systems and regimes that attempt to extract every last penny there is available, money that people require for health care, education, pure water, and sanitation systems. Lives are jeopardized and revolutions and insurrections arise. The policies of the IMF have led to a great deal of discontent in the Third World resulting in insurrections yet we see the United States and other world powers contributing arms and military aid to put down insurrections in an attempt to provide stability in a country so it can get on with the business of addressing debt. In the same process the citizens of countries, again the poorer segments of society, are even further oppressed by military actions. This is what we see from the International Monetary Fund.

Our contributions under the renewal of Bretton Woods Agreement lead to that type of activity in Third World nations. We see insufferable crushing debt, which destabilizes countries that originally obtained loans. Other nations wind up contributing military aid to put down insurrections in places where people are attempting to re-establish democratic regimes and fair play. Why should Canada be contributing to that kind of an international policy which attempts to extract every last penny to get rid of health and social programs so that payments can be made on international debt? The poorer people suffer. It is not something we would tolerate in Canada, and there is no reason for us to contribute to a fund whose policy is to inflict hardship on others.

I am amazed that this Government has not heard the informed discussion that has taken place in this House. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), and the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) have spoken in this regard. It is absolutely critical that the Government respond.

Before we contribute another penny to the International Monetary Fund we should insist that something be done to resolve the matter of Third World debt. Third World countries should be able to manage finances and provide some care and stability for their populations. They would then be able to begin looking at health care and building infrastructure to strengthen and develop economies.

On that basis I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-126, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and related Agreements Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions and comments?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, would the Hon. Member explain the purposes for the motion he has just moved?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: There are several important matters, Madam Speaker. It is not a laughing matter. The Conservatives are sitting over there giggling. This reminds me of the San Diego zoo. It is incredible the chatter and absolute nonsense that is going on. This is not a humorous motion.

Mr. Mayer: It is a joke.

Mr. Skelly: I think the Hon. Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board, if he is looking at his repertoire of jokes, should not look at what is happening in Third World countries as a joke.

Mr. Mayer: You are a joke.

Mr. Skelly: He should look at the Canadian contribution to suffering, to infant mortality and to the absolute destruction of economies. I know his heart is bigger than that. Maybe his head cannot understand the implications of this Bill. I moved the motion so the very succinct, salient, cogent points made by my colleagues about the nefarious aspects of this particular legislation of Canada going on year after year amending these agreements and allowing this kind of policy to continue can be made one more time more fully and simply so as to be comprehended by my colleagues across the floor. They have not grasped the situation from the broad brush strokes created by the Hon. Members from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands and Spadina.

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and of the amendement of Mr. Hovdebo (p. 15767).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 6 p.m., under the provisions of Standing Order 13(4)a), the House will now proceed with the differed division vote on the amendement concerning Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hovdebo), which was negativated on the following division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Resuming debate on the main motion, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it certainly gives me great pleasure to speak on this motion. Before speaking, I would like to point out to the House that this is a special day in that it is the birthday of our honourable House Leader, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: We want Herb.

Some Hon. Members: Herb for Leader.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I'm already a leader, I'm a House Leader.

Mr. Speaker: The enthusiasm for the birthday is getting in the way of the Hon. Member's remarks.

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I realize that this has very little to do with the main motion, but given that recently so many days around this place have been characterized by acrimony, I thought it would be a nice opportunity to recognize one of those who is never involved in acrimony. Plus, it will probably give me a few brownie points to enable me to get up in Question Period next time.

However, that is not the point of my intervention. My intervention deals with another chapter in the sequence of the "Sale of Canada Act". I am speaking specifically now to the heinous motion of the Government to privatize Air Canada.

Last night I was at the nomination meeting of an extremely able and long-standing Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: It was a great meeting, Mr. Speaker. In its usual entrepreneurial fashion, the Liberal Party was selling things. We will do anything to dig our way out of debt. Last night at the Liberal Party nomination meeting in Ottawa—Vanier the hottest button for sale was going for $2. It was available from Carleton and University of Ottawa students and read: "Privatize Mulroney". I think that speaks to the notion of what the Government has been doing to the country over the last number of years.

My Leader said that the recent free trade agreement, which was finally tabled in the House, could best be called the "Sale of Canada Act". The Act that we are currently discussing in the House tonight for the privatization of Air Canada is another example of how the Government does not understand that our country was built on an east-west axis. Our country was built on the notion that there is a role for the private sector to play but that there is also a role for the public sector to play.

• (1830)

What would have happened in 1867 if the first Prime Minister of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald, said that we would not build a Canadian railway but would let the private sector do it? What if they believed that there was no role for the public sector in a national rail system?

What if successive Governments said that about building the Trans-Canada Highway, probably the longest unified highway in the world that is maintained by public funds? We believe in links both from the public sector and the private sector.

Unfortunately, the government is so driven by a need to privatize that it does not recognize that there are certain integral links that keep this country hooked together from East to West. They include the CBC, a national broadcasting system whose integrity the Government, with its backroom committee, has been trying to cut back.

The same is happening with this sale of Air Canada Act. That may not be so serious if it were not for the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave is own solemn oath. Do Members recall his sacred trust about senior citizens' pensions? The Prime Minister said about Air Canada: "Air Canada is not for sale. Canada needs a national airline".

Mr. Nunziata: Who said that?

Ms. Copps: That was stated by the Prime Minister of Canada.

How can we believe a person who says one thing on the campaign trail but, immediately upon being elected, sets an agenda to do exactly the opposite? The Prime Minister said over and over again that universality was a sacred trust. He promised senior citizens that the Conservatives would not touch their pensions because seniors worked hard for those pensions. Now we see the same about face.

[Translation]

. . . the same about-turn, the same hypocrisy with regard to Air Canada. I did not say, Mr. Speaker, and neither did the Liberal Party say that Air Canada was not for sale. We need a national airline. Those are the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

[English]

What we are talking about tonight is a trend initiated by the Prime Minister, exacerbated by the free trade agreement, and increased by the Air Canada Bill which attempts to sell off the very nature and spirit of what we have developed as a sovereign nation. Our country has combined the best of the public and private sector. Unlike our friends to the south, we do not always believe that the private sector can do things better. We do not sell blood for profit in this country.

Frankly, I am glad that if I have to go to the hospital for an operation I do not have to check my credit card in to get blood for a transfusion. Yet, are you aware of the fact that blood banks are included as a potential service arrangement in the free trade agreement?

The Americans have always believed that one can make money from blood. If the poorest of the poor and those who need a dollar can be persuaded to stand in line in certain states to give their blood for money, they will sell it to the highest bidder.

However, we have created in Canada a society that has always believed in a primordial role for the public sector to play for the purposes of culture, broadcasting, and transportation.

That is why the first Conservative Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, pledged to the country that a railway to link East and West would be built at public expense. Similarly, when airlines became part of the technology, the Government and the nation decided to establish a national airline because we believed the public sector should be involved.

It may not be financially profitable to travel to Inuvik or Tuktoyaktuk. That may not be in the best interests of the bottom line on the balance sheet of a private corporation, but Canadians believe that there is a responsibility to service the far-flung corners of Canada by air, by rail, or by road. That is why successive Liberal governments endorsed the concept that a Crown corporation could play a role.

In one fell swoop, the Government is saying with this legislation that Air Canada is no longer a Crown corporation. However, in the typical Conservative Neanderthal way, the Government is trying to have it both ways. It is suggesting that it is only partly selling off Air Canada. That is like being partly pregnant. It is similar to the abortion resolution introduced by the Government in which one is for it, against it, or in the middle.

If the Government is intent upon privatizing a Crown corporation, it should come forward with specific legislation.

Instead, it is attempting to say that it is only partially privatizing Air Canada. The majority of shares, 55 per cent, will still be held by the Government, and 45 per cent by private shareholders.

However, when we listen to our very able critic on the Air Canada privatization, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), we learn that while the Government claims there will only be 45 per cent privatization, it has clearly indicated that it will proceed to instruct government shareholders to vote with the majority of the private shareholders. Therefore, the voting preference of the new Air Canada board will be specifically based on the bottom line.

I repeat that there may be instances when the bottom line will mitigate against travel to certain far-flung parts of this country.

What will happen to the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and his constituents if Air Canada suddenly decides, in its so-called private sector wisdom, no longer to fly into his riding because it is no longer economically feasible? The Conservative Government may believe that in order to do business and live in this country one must live in Toronto, Montreal, or Vancouver, but history has dictated a different development for this country. History has said that the Government, in the form of Crown corporations, has an extremely specific role to play in ensuring that constituents like those of the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), or the Hon. Member for Hamilton East should all have the same right to transportation services.

In its attempt to cease and desist public ownership of Air Canada, the Government is moving to destroy a nation-wide transportation network that was established on the notion that the public sector and private sector could play a role in moving Canadians from coast to coast.

There was a dream of a national railway because all Canadians should have an equal access to services. But that dream is being chipped away on a daily basis by a Prime Minister and a Government that do not understand that to be Canadian may mean paying a little more, but to be Canadian is a price worth paying.

This legislation is the thin edge of the wedge.

[Translation]

With the Bill tabled yesterday, we know for sure now that in the trade deal signed by Mr. Mulroney and the President of the United States, the Government reserved the power to amend any piece of legislation. It is unbelievable, Mr. Speaker. It is hard to believe that the Americans specified in their own bill that American law prevails over any trade treaty between two countries, when we are doing it the other way around here in Canada and saying that the trade deal takes precedence over any piece of legislation, be it federal or provincial, in matters concerning language, culture, way of life, or even municipal administration. So, Mr. Speaker, in a country that used to be called Canada and which is now disappearing with all those bills that are detrimental to our public policy, all future governments will have to ask Washington's approval before enacting any new legislation. Now, before introducing any legislation on transport, health or social services, before implementing a child care program in any province or before giving grants to mothers, as was proposed recently in Quebec, we will have to ask the United States for their permission, because if they claim that any federal or provincial law or municipal by-law goes against the Free Trade Agreement, it can be a problem. Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that here, in Canada, the Government introduces a bill that gives the free trade agreement precedence over all other legislation and processes, while the United States do exactly the opposite?

Mr. Speaker, it is because the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government unfortunately never understood the message that was given to them first and foremost by the first Canadian Prime Minister, Mr. MacDonald, when he tried to build a country from the East Coast to the West Coast. I live in Hamilton, which is only 60 kilometers from Niagara Falls, in the United States. Had Canada been developed differently, it would have been easier for us to join New York. Why do we belong to a country that links British Columbia to the Maritimes? Why do we not associate ourselves with New York, Vermont or other places that are closer to us geographically? Why do I associate myself geographically and historically with people who live 2000, 3000 or 4000 kilometers from me? It is because the Prime Ministers of the first successive Governments, both Conservatives and Liberals, had decided that, in order to establish and strengthen Canada as we know it, the Government had to get directly involved in the transportation network, in the communication network, in the culture network—that was CBC—and also in the social services network, through the Canada Health Act.

That is not exactly the course followed by the United States. Their wisdom made them follow different paths and they always believed that money and the private sector could always do things better. Good for them. If they prefer to have private blood banks and to sell blood as they would any other commodity, it is their business but, personnally, I don't want to see Canada follow the same route. And I wonder why in the free trade agreement, which has been tabled in this House, they even agreed to include blood banks as a potential service arrangement in Canada, similar to those in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, it is a shame that for the first time in the history of Canada the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) approved two years ago the establishment of a profit-making blood bank located in Montreal. And we have now learned from the documents tabled with respect to the free trade agreement, that profit-making blood banks already existing in the United States will be allowed to come and do business in Canada.

We wondered, as the Deputy Prime Minister introduced in the House a Bill to abolish Air Canada as a Crown corporation, whether it was not the beginning of the end for Canada. We must recognize that in the case of Air Canada, we will have to make up deficits from time to time and pay more in order to provide service to all Canadian men and women because, whether they live in Hamilton, Paulatuk, Red Deer, Cold Lake or anywhere else, they should be entitled to the same services provided by a Crown corporation. Once Air Canada has been privatized under this legislation, why should it fly to Tuktoyaktuk or Inuvik? Why should it fly to the Northwest Territories or the Yukon if it is not profitable?

Mr. Speaker, I feel I have no choice but to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, who is a reasonable man, to accept the rationale I have put forward tonight. I have no alternative but to move the following amendment. Therefore, I move:

That the motion be amended by striking out all the words following the word "that" and substituting the following therefore:

Bill C-129, An Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be not now read a second time, but be read a second time six months hence".

Mr. Speaker, it is reasonable amendment and I know that the Government will accept this motion, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the amendment.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Continuing debate.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Shall I dispense with reading the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

During the ringing of the bells.

Mr. Speaker: Under the appropriate rule, the Whip of the Official Opposition has requested that the vote take place at 7.30 p.m.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think my request to you under Section 13(4)(a) was that you defer the vote until six o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: The vote is so deferred.

It being past six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.50 p.m.
