It is interesting to remember that the NDP was split on the vote, as was indicated to us earlier by the Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). Two Members in their group voted for the legislation at that time. Evidently those two were able to put themselves, intellectually and politically, in the position of the Government of the day.

The conclusion at which I must arrive is that no Party in power at that time, considering the situation, would have been able to reject the requests of the Mayor of Montreal and the Premier of Quebec to invoke certain measures.

• (1620)

I do not object at all to the role and the responsibility of the Opposition to disagree and even to criticize the Government for certain actions, but it is important to put that historical situation into the right context to understand why certain steps were taken. Bill C-77, as I understand it, has been an important step. I congratulate the Members involved who evidently have worked very well together, but it is not a measure to be used to prove that executive powers in 1970 were abused by the Government of the day. As I said, I would challenge anyone in this House at any time to deny that to reject the request made of the federal Government by the then mayor of a city and the Premier of the province involved—one of its partners in Confederation—would be an act of indifference.

What is in the process of Confederation, I ask, if in circumstances of tragic need the Government in charge of Confederation is not available and does not come through in answer to a request of one of its partners in Confederation? It would be a very serious blow to the cohesion of Confederation in a moment of such dire need as expressed by two individuals who happened to be at the same time not appointed individuals but elected individuals.

The argument was made by the Hon. Member for Spadina that the Mayor of Montreal was either not very popular, a tyrant or whatever, but the fact remains that he was an elected official. Evidently his request had to be considered within that light. The request was reinforced not in a vacuum but by the request of another elected official who happened to be the Premier of the province involved.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the combination of these two factors is pretty powerful and such that no executive at the federal level could take the request lightly, disregard or not accede to it.

The principle, of course, is one in which I believe. In a civilized society one has to protect individual rights and at the same time ensure that collective rights have their place and are respected. The two are not exclusive of each other but complementary. There are times in emergencies when collective rights of a society may have to be given precedence over individual rights, which is abhorrent for anyone who believes strongly in individual rights. Nevertheless, in certain circumstances you may have a situation like that emerging in a civilized society where a Government acts for the sake of the common good and for the sake of the collective good. In a way it is the mandate given by the population when it elects a Government.

There may be times when, with the benefit of hindsight, criticism arises for actions that were perhaps exaggerated far too strongly and perhaps not warranted by the circumstances. But in Montreal in 1970, two individuals had disappeared and neither the local authorities nor the provincial authorities were able to cope with the situation and they sought the help of the senior level Government. What would you do in that position, I ask, Mr. Speaker?

It is important that we come to grips with the principles embodied in Bill C-77. They are extremely important. I suppose a lot of thought and consideration was given by Members to this principle in committee. It is extremely important to ensure that there is no abuse by the executive power and that such instances do not occur in a civilized society like Canada, but that the past, particularly the situation in Montreal in 1970, be analysed through the optic of the responsibility that falls upon those who are in power, with the full knowledge and understanding of the intervention, massive as it may have been as a result of a request made by elected officials at both junior levels.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) but I differ with him fundamentally. I will say why and then I will ask him for a comment.

I realize the Hon. Member is not a lawyer, but the Criminal Code contains plenty of search and seizure provisions which could have dealt with the situation in October, 1970. I think most lawyers and historians now agree that that is the case.

The Member takes refuge in the fact that two people were kidnapped. Unfortunately people are kidnapped all too often and we do use the Criminal Code, the police and normal civil liberties to deal with such situations. The Hon. Member is saying, in effect, that the Mayor of Montreal and the Premier of Quebec at the time could make such a request, and therefore that made the action right. Probably the best argument we will hear today as to why we need Bill C-77 is because of the abuse that took place then. As well, because of the abuse that took place in 1942, we are now bringing in a new Bill, no thanks to the Government which my friends supported over many, many years.

I remind the Hon. Member that the Mayor of Vancouver also used the War Measures Act to arrest hippies on the beach in Vancouver. I think that there there were more than 600 Quebecois who were arrested and held without charge and, in large measure, I put it to the Hon. Member from Davenport, that the election of a separatist Government in Quebec in 1976 was helped by this enormous abuse of power by the Liberal Cabinet of the day here in Ottawa. Of course it was a tragic and a difficult period, but to say that we should have suspended civil liberties in Canada for the kidnapping of two people is, in my respectful view, Sir, simply wrong.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, briefly, in response to the Hon. Member for Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), the key words in his question are that most lawyers now agree that sufficient remedies exist in criminal legislation. Yes, after the fact, with the benefit of hindsight, we can all look back and draw certain conclusions. But in the situation as it was being experienced at that time, even the legal community was divided on this issue. The decision was one that had to be made in the light of circumstances that had to be judged and assessed quickly, upon requests coming from junior levels of Government. Two persons had been kidnapped, had disappeared.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona may, in his value judgment, feel that the invocation of the War Measures Act in the circumstances which then existed was not warranted. Given that the local authorities seemed to be impotent in dealing with the matter, to me seemed sufficient reason to act.

Evidently, our value judgments differ—and it is probably something that has nothing to do with our politics. Nevertheless, it seems to me, in hindsight, that, in the lack of specific knowledge of the extent of the perceived insurrection, the invocation of the War Measures Act was warranted at the time of the October Crisis.

What other measure was available to the Mayor of Montreal and the Premier of Quebec? Their only recourse was to run to the senior level of Government, and evidently they had some reasons to do so. Their political judgment, in light of the circumstances at that time, prompted them to approach the senior level of Government to act, and the response from Ottawa was not slow in coming.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now expired. Debate. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology) has the floor.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to deal with Bill C-77, the Emergencies Act. I suggest that the proposed legislations will provide fundamental guarantees, both collectively and individually.

Members of this House who have travelled abroad or who simply watch the daily news realize just how lucky we are in Canada. Every day, we can see on television pictures of unfortunate people in a country somewhere in the world attempting to fight against flood, earthquakes, massive chemical leaks or hunger, or a suffering people whose civil and individual rights are being violated.

Over the past fifty years in Canada, we have witnessed very few incidents of political nature which could have had serious national consequences.

Yet, in Quebec, a particular event caused the Government of the day to take a step which was both revolting and shameful, and which struck a blow at the integrity of each and every Canadian.

In October 1970, following the kidnapping in Montreal of James Cross and Pierre Laporte, the Government proclaimed the War Measures Act. Over 450 men and women were arrested in their homes and then held without being charged. Deprived of their rights to seek the advice of a lawyer, they spent days and weeks in prison before being allowed to go free. Arresting these 450 people was particularly wrong, as none of them was ever found guilty of any offence against the War Measures Act.

It is the responsibility of this House to make sure that civil liberties are never again trampled on the way they were in 1970.

Bad laws give poor results and make our living conditions intolerable. The fact that so many groups were interested in and responded to the introduction of this Bill proves that we must pass a law which recognizes explicitly the state's responsibilities as well as individual rights and freedoms.

Many Canadians with a lot of experience in that area gave their advice, suggestions and warnings to the Legislative Committee and the Minister responsible for Bill C-77.

In that regard, I would like to point out the tremendous amount of work done by the Canadian Bar Association, various lawyers, the Civil Liberties Union, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

Obviously, the Committee and the Minister have generally followed their advice. We looked at the list of amendments which include:

—more explicit definitions of emergency situations;

—better provisions for lawsuits;

—better protection of civil rights such as the right to call meetings and freedom of speech as well as protection against arbitrary search and seizure;

—better compensation for requisition, theft or loss of goods and services.

I am sure that as Members of Parliament, we appreciate all the changes to the Emergencies Act provisions which provide Parliamentary control.

The time during which emergency powers can be exercised without being renewed by Parliament has been reduced. Orders in council and regulations passed by the Government must be laid before the House sooner, and Parliament will have more time to ascertain whether or not they should be revoked. The Parliamentary Review Committee will report on the situation to Parliament at least every 60 days. Furthermore, once the emergency is expired, it will be followed by an official inquiry. This will allow for effective representation by all members of the House of their voters.

I was municipal councillor in Sainte-Foy, Quebec, and also chairman of a Red Cross sector. As such, I am fully aware of the need to put in place a legal structure and to take the necessary measures thus enabling local authorities to deal with emergency situations brought upon by floods, tornadoes, major transportation accidents or chemical spills.

This legislation allows for effective action on the part of provincial and municipal officials in carrying out their duties. Mayors, municipal councillors and public services like the Red Cross must know where they stand legally in an emergency situation. Thanks to the emergency measures bill, they know they will have the legal means to take swiftly the necessary measures.

We can certainly imagine the difficulties a mayor and a municipal council are faced with in our own riding: in an emergency situation, they bear all the pressure and we expect them to act wisely and swiftly. They must be aware of what federal and provincial governments have the power to do.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who have lived in certain remote regions of our country appreciate the peace, the freedom and the wide-open spaces which characterize our small towns and our countryside. But we also appreciate knowing that in case of a disaster, a tragedy or a conflict, major national resources could be mobilized to come to our help as a community or as a nation. This bill established the legal foundation upon which Canada can fulfil its obligation to guarantee peace, order and good government.

For close to 18 years, Mr. Speaker, Canadians have been waiting for the repeal of the dangerous War Measures Act, a piece of legislation which has been hanging as a threat over our heads all that time. Never again should innocent people be treated like criminals as was the case of 450 of our fellow Canadians, including artists, writers, lawyers or members of groups which were not a threat to anyone.

Even criminals are entitled to be duly charged, to get legal advice, and to communicate with their families.

I think that Canadian from coast to coast share the view that time has come to do something about the War Measures Act. Mr. Speaker, I urge Hon. Members on both sides of the House to give full consideration and swift passage to this Bill. We can be sure that people in every riding are following the proceedings and are anxious to see the Emergencies Act on the statute books of this country, for it amounts to a tradition, a legacy, a pledge against tyranny in Canada. The kind of terrible abuses to which we are the sad witnesses practically every day in foreign lands ought never to happen again here.

The Emergencies Act explicitly and carefully defines the particular and exceptional conditions wherein the needs of the state may temporarily take precedence over the rights of citizens.

• (1640)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) for an excellent job. On behalf of the New Democratic Party, he participated very actively in the Committee proceedings on Bill C-77.

I suggest that the minimal interest shown by the Liberal Party for this Bill was demonstrated by the fact that none of its Members could be found to attend the Legislative Committee meetings on a regular basis. The Government has demonstrated some flexibility by accepting, nearly 50 out of the 60 amendments the New Democratic Party had proposed, through my friend the Hon. Member for Brant, which accounts for a much improved Bill.

I think that we should also emphasize the participation of a number of groups for the defence of rights and freedoms which, through their direct or indirect participation, have contributed to the improvement of this Bill.

Before reviewing the new legislation, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to replace the whole issue in its proper perspective specifically the October 1970 crisis, because without it, I doubt seriously that we would be dealing with it now.

It is a fact that the War Measures Act, the legislation which Bill C-77 is meant to replace, was excessively drastic. It is also a fact that this infamous legislation was a source of abuse, including the jailing without warrant in 1970 of innocent citizens, most of them nationalists or leftist militants active in so-called "subversive" organizations such as the Parti québécois. Denial of their right to consult a lawyer, in fact denial of the presumption of innocence through long emprisonment of people such as singer Pauline Julien and poet Gerald Godin who were kept in custody without any justification or explanation other than the power of the War Measures Act.

Mr. Speaker, I remember the presence of Armed Forces personnel everywhere in Quebec, and even here, in the National Capital area.

The City of Ottawa looked like an armed fort, ready for an invisible aggressor, which only the federal Government at the time seemed to see.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, there was no apprehended insurrection, and the Liberal Government at the time, especially its Prime Minister, never at any moment had information on the basis of which one could conclude the existence of apprehended insurrection. That is clear today. However, it was the existence of such a threat that was the main reason for implementing the War Measures Act.

Only the New Democrats spoke out against the declaration of this horrendous legislation. The Conservative Official Opposition voted with the Liberals in favour of suspending individual liberties, but they did so on the basis of assurances given by the Government—assurances that were ill-founded, Mr. Speaker.

I agree there was a crisis in Quebec in October 1970. The kidnappings of James Richard Cross and Pierre Laporte are unfortunate events in the political history of Quebec and Canada. In a liberal democracy, we cannot tolerate violence and terrorism as a means to a political end.

That being said, violence and terrorism should not be used as a pretext for unbridled and useless violence by the State. Both are unlawful and both are a threat to the democratic foundations of our political system.

Wrongfully resorting to the use of police and security forces is even less legitimate when there is no evidence, and that was the case in October 1970, that military occupation of and the resulting suspension of liberties will in some way contribute to a peaceful solution of the problem. We know that sending in the army did not in any way contribute toward a peaceful solution of the crisis and or prevent its tragic outcome.

Why, once the dust was settled and the crisis was over and done with, didn't the Liberal Government immediately abolish the War Measures Act and replace it with legislation more in keeping with our democratic traditions?

Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I am very disappointed in the fact that in today's debate, the Liberals here in the House tried to justify what was done in 1970, instead of saying they were sorry for what happened at the time and agreeing with the need for legislation that is far more moderate and more respectful of civil rights, like the legislation we have now in the form of Bill C-77, as amended in committee during the past few weeks.

Mr. Speaker, the silence of the then Minister of Justice in October 1970 and the Liberal Leader today is also very disturbing. One would expect more political courage on his part.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I am running out of time, because I had further comments to make. Perhaps I could let the debate proceed with questions and comments and have a chance to give my remaining comments on the amendments during this period.

[English]

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, would my colleague care to comment on what he considers to be some of the very significant amendments we were able to gain during committee hearings and clause by clause study, particularly with respect to civil liberties and the oversight power Parliament will now have with respect to these extraordinary measures the Government still needs in order to face an emergency, if one should arise?

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for his questions. I believe that we New Democrats in the Opposition have been very consistent. We spoke out against the War Measures Act in 1970 and we worked hard in 1988 to get rid of that law and to replace it with a more responsible one that would protect and preserve individual liberties as much as possible.

It is true that the first version of Bill C-77 was unacceptable. It was roundly condemned by the Human Rights League and organizations concerned with respect for individual liberties.

But I believe that it is due to the spirit of Parliamentary reform that prevailed in the legislative committee that many of the principles that we proposed in our amendments were accepted by the Government.

Indeed, these changes helped ensure, for example, that the Cabinet must have reasonable grounds for invoking emergency powers. That is an improvement. That the powers would not be used to break a strike. Very important. That citizens whose property was damaged in an emergency situation would be compensated. That censorship would not be used in peacetime. Finally, that provincial jurisdiction would be respected.

Mr. Speaker, even after the first series of amendments, groups concerned with rights and freedoms again insisted that the Bill be improved. As a result, new amendments were proposed. They include: A new definition of national emergency that is more specific and less likely to lead to excesses; guarantees that the powers provided by Bill C-77 will only be used if current laws are inadequate to deal with the situation; restrictions on prison sentences and fines; the right to appeal for compensation; the creation of an all-party committee to review situations involving confidentiality; a compulsory after-the-fact inquiry on the circumstances of the emergency.

That, Mr. Speaker, is very important. It means that if the Government decides to invoke the new law, within a year, a Parliamentary committee will have to review it and look again to see whether or not the use of these powers was justified. Mr. Speaker, the Parliament of Canada did not have the opportunity or the ability to check and see whether invoking the War Measures Act in October 1970 was justified or not.

We are assured that prison camps for civilians will not be established.

Those are some of the amendments that were accepted. There are others too, Mr. Speaker. I can comment on that if my hon. friend wants more information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no more questions or comments, and there being no Hon. Members rising to speak in debate, pursuant to order made earlier this day I therefore declare debate on the motion for third reading on Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, adjourned until six o'clock, Wednesday, April 27, 1988, at which time the Chair shall put every question necessary to dispose of the Bill.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, considering the hour, may I suggest that the House be suspended until five o'clock, the start of Private Members' Hour?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, we concur with that suggestion made by the Parlimentary Secretary.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the wish of the House to suspend until five o'clock, at which time we will proceed to Private Members' Business?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 4.53 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 5 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5 pm., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS–MOTIONS

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

ADVISABILITY OF INFORMING DEPOSITORS WHEN DEPOSITS ARE UNINSURED

The House resumed from Monday, February 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap):

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the motion was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) had the floor.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, when the motion was last before the House on February 29, I was dealing with the current problem in the Province of Alberta where the Code Commission has been looking very seriously at the problems created by the Principal Group of companies for citizens right across the country.

That group of companies was composed of one company, Principal Trust, which was supervised by the Department of Insurance here. Bob Hammond was our Superintendent of Insurance. He is now the Deputy Superintendent of Financial Institutions. He was on top of that trust company starting back in 1983. However, the group of companies had several other emanations. In other words, there was a mutual company, a real estate company and various classes of investment companies in the securities field, all of which were generally categorized as Principal companies.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has put this motion after looking at the problems that developed in the Principal matter. He suggests that we make sure that everyone signs a piece of paper, as if people signing a piece of paper will, all of a sudden, bring about the great nirvana. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, what happens when people sign pieces of paper that they have not read. We would not have had the inquiry we have just completed, or in the process of getting ready to report, with respect to bank service charges, if people who dealt with banks read their agreement with the bank on opening an account in which they agreed that the bank could charge them anything it wanted to. That became the agreement, and that is the express agreement, and any changes were perfectly all right because they agreed to it. To give some person a piece of paper where they agree they are not insured by Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is just so much drivel in terms of something to stop the abuse or problem.

The problem can be stopped, and would have been stopped and will be stopped, if we are able to get rid of competing regulations in this country. Right now the Government of Canada supervises trust companies generally in most parts of the country through the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, but the Government of Canada does not supervise mutual funds or investment funds or co-op funds, that kind of thing. Who supervises them? Provincial supervisors, and the provincial people in Alberta knew about the problems because our people told them about the problems, but they did not do anything about it. They allowed, by their lack of regulation and supervision, by their attitude toward supervision, those problems to develop in the Principal Group.

The fact that someone signs something is not going to help. It is getting a sense of supervision that is the same across the country, a standard requirement of management across the country. That is the answer. That was the answer presented to this House in the report of the Standing Committee on Finance that reported on the Green Paper in November of 1985. It called for a national supervisory agency. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap was part of that committee.

I am sure the Hon. Member remembers that particular discussion of the kinds of problems we were then faced with and with which we are faced today and with which we will continue to be faced as long as we have the supervision of financial institutions all over the place. There is a necessity for having unified supervision. That is the only way we can come to grips with the problem.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Chairman of the Finance Committee, and while I would agree with him that there is a need for co-ordinating regulations across Canada, that they probably need to be dealt with on the level of regulations, I cannot agree when he suggests that the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops Shuswap (Mr. Riis), would not be a very helpful addition to the regulations as they now stand. If this proposed amendment had been in place it would have prevented some of the heartache and financial tragedy we have seen in the last few years, particularly with the collapse of the Principal Group.

I want to commend my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, for bringing this motion forward. One of the most difficult things, as you know, Mr. Speaker, with which a Member of Parliament deals are constituents who lay out a case that clearly indicates they are innocent victims, that through no fault of their own, they are victims of some situation that has left them drained of their life savings. I met with one such couple and had them write a letter detailing their experience with the Principal Group. The husband was a recent immigrant. They were people who worked hard and saved because they saw their savings as the future for their children. I would like to read part of the letter this woman wrote: It says:

> All our money was invested in First Investors Corporation, a member of the Principal Group. Every last penny my husband and I have earned and saved all these years through hard work and budgeting, even my children's family allowances and birthday gifts are involved. We have been working and saving for the future, for a good education and better opportunities for our children, and now we have nothing to show for all those years and hard work. It hurts so much each time I think about it.

We had a total of approximately $200,000 in various accounts, including RRSPs. Now we have nothing but the weak assurances that some of the money (our own money) will be returned to us eventually.

We invested our moneys with the First Investors Corporation because we were repeatedly told by their agents, . . . that the moneys were 104 per cent guaranteed. We asked each time we invested and were told each time that if anything ever happened we were guaranteed 100 per cent refund plus 4 per cent interest. On the back of each contract we signed is written "Under the Investment Corporation Act (Alberta), assets equal to 100 per cent of certificate liabilities are maintained on deposit with a Canadian chartered bank".

Where were the government people who are supposed to check on these companies to see if they are abiding by the rules? Why were these people allowed to mislead their clients? Why wasn't closer watch kept on these institutions?

While I can agree with the previous speaker that we need to clean up the regulatory framework all across Canada to bring some kind of co-ordination and a systemizing to that framework, I also think that had the motion presented by my hon. colleague been in effect, people like my constituents, who received assurances time after time after time that their investments were firmly secured by insurance, having to read it and sign it, would not have been in the position in which they now find themselves.

In my constituency I had a great many teachers who had invested at different times in the B.C. Teachers' Investment and Housing Co-operative. This began back in 1951 as a small group of teachers who decided that a good way in which they could help one another to buy houses was to put some of their money into a housing co-operative that would allow other teachers to draw out of it and thus get a downpayment and their mortgage moneys. Over a period of time this housing co-operative expanded and went into other markets. It kind of grew like Topsy without people always being fully aware of what was involved. Like so many other institutions in western Canada it became involved in some real estate transactions. When the real estate market fell apart in western Canada the B.C. Teachers' Investment and Housing Co-operative suffered. In 1985 it had to go into receivership. These people were lucky to get a few cents on the dollar. They lost very substantially. Some of them, again, had put almost their total life savings into this one co-operative. Others had more of a mix.

Mrs. Lillian Holeton, who is the Chair of the special committee appointed by the B.C. Retired Teachers' Association, made a submission to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. She pointed out that the question of insurance or guarantee has been constantly apparent since the federal Government instituted legislation in 1967, that is, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, covering deposit insurance for banks and trust companies, while the provincial Government enacted similar legislation covering some trust companies and credit unions.

The B.C. Teachers' Investment and Housing Co-operative made overtures to the provincial Government in 1977, 1978 and 1979 up to and into its insolvency in January of 1986 asking that the question of its status and insurance guarantee position be clarified. There was no response to these requests on the basis that the Teachers' Investment and Housing Co-operative by its formation did not fall under any current legislation.

Here again we have a situation in which people were concerned to try to get information about the insurance status of their organization. They were not given any kind of clarification. When the market collapsed and it reverberated back to the Investment and Housing Co-operative, it was placed in receivership. These people lost a great deal of their investment.

Again, as I said, some teachers who had been working hard all their lives and trying to save for their retirement lost their total life savings. I know some of these people. Some were already retired and they lost substantially from their life savings.

The motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap is something very simple. It is that the federal Government, in co-operation with the provinces, institute a regime by which federal and provincial Governments would require that whenever anybody made a deposit that would not be covered by insurance, they would have to sign a waiver clearly indicating that this was so. Obviously, there are some people who, seeing the possibility of perhaps greater gains at greater interest rates would want to take a chance and invest even when there is no insurance. That is their choice. It should be a matter of choice. It should not be a matter of deception. If they choose to invest when there is no insurance, they know that they are taking a risk.

What bothers us in this Party and what bothers me when I sit down with constituents is that there are those who thought that they were making an investment that was guaranteed only to find out that there was no guarantee.

I urge Hon. Members to adopt this motion and then go on to adopt other measures as well. This recommendation would require a waiver. It would require the knowledge of the people involved. It is a good motion. I urge all Hon. Members to support it.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this motion. As has been indicated, this motion would require financial institutions or those involved in taking deposits to have a form available which an individual would have to sign if a deposit is not to be covered by CDIC or an equivalent institution. It is obviously an attempt to increase consumer protection and to prevent people from being misled, either intentionally or unintentionally. I certainly support those goals. I think they are laudable.

In light of the fact that on the Finance Committee we have been dealing recently with the issue of bank service charges and the disclosure provisions around them we have had some interesting evidence about just how much people are aware of when they give their money to banks or trust companies. I would like to see a lot more education of consumers about what is involved in the whole financial area so that they can make those types of decisions with a more informed approach.

However, the proposal of the Hon. Member requires some further consideration to ascertain whether or not it is practically feasible. One of my concerns is whether it would imply, for example, that, if one had not signed a waiver, one's deposit would be covered automatically by CDIC or an equivalent institution at the provincial level. As the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out in his speech, there are a number of types of deposits which are not covered. A great many people might be surprised to learn that, for example, foreign currency accounts are not covered by CDIC. The contents of one's safety deposit box and investment products with terms of more than five years, including certificates one may buy from a bank or a trust company, are not covered. Stocks, bonds, mutual funds and deposits in excess of $60,000 are not covered.

There are some practical problems that I am not sure of in each of these cases of a person signing a waiver stating that, for example, they are aware that, because they had $63,000, the additional $3,000 would not be covered by CDIC. We could get ourselves into a sort of bureaucratic morass.

We have to look at another fundamental matter. How far should we go as a Government to protect people? Again, I come back to the importance of education and increased awareness. I do not think we can legislate perfect protection for everyone. There is an important role for the Government in consumer protection. Through CDIC we are doing a great deal of work, as well as through present legislation and regulation. But we cannot take over the responsibility of an individual to make decisions and to live with the results.

The Government itself cannot ensure that there is no fraud, no attempt to mislead or to conceal. There is a limit, I am positive, to how far we should go in writing laws that so circumscribe us that our personal responsibility begins to be eroded.

As well, we must look at what is already in legislation, for example, through Bill C-42 which was debated in the House last year. Even prior to the reforms presented in Bill C-42 there was a prohibition against anyone other than a member of the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation representing itself as being insured by the CDIC. It would be against the law for anyone to imply that they were covered when they were not.

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-42 added three other provisions dealing specifically with this kind of issue. The first provision deals with the question about the extent of the existing ban on unauthorized representations of insured status of member institutions or deposits received by them. It is now clear that this ban applies both to the institution and to all persons acting as its agents.

The second element of the Bill dealt with the provision that had been in the regulations but it was brought back in to legislation to give it real clout. It is a requirement that institutions which accept deposits not insured by CDIC indicate it clearly and distinctly in writing in the deposit contract. I know that it has been brought to the attention of the House from time to time that perhaps the writing is too small or that there is just a stamp on the back of the contract indicating that it is not covered by CDIC. Perhaps we need to look at this to make sure that the writing, the information to the consumer, is made more clear on the face of the contract so that it is something that a person cannot miss.

The third element in Bill C-42 was a new requirement which makes it an obligation for financial institutions seeking investment funds on behalf of their own security subsidiaries or other institutions which are not members of the CDIC to notify expressly the depositors that these corporations or subsidiaries are not members of CDIC, therefore, the funds invested are not insured by the CDIC. This is quite clear and very consistent with what the Hon. Member is attempting to achieve in his motion.

Having sat through the Finance Committee hearings recently with respect to the provisions of "expressly notify" or "express notice" in the Bank Act, I have some reservations about the meaning of those words. It may be that we have to revisit Bill C-42 at some time to see how the words in that Bill are being interpreted. I hope they are not being interpreted as loosely as the words under the Bank Act have been interpreted with respect to the consumer and the prices that the consumer is having to pay for bank services charges.

We have those provisions. They are new provisions, and perhaps we should give them some time to work and see if they are working. We must not forget that we did not deal with Bill C-42 in isolation last summer. We considered it in tandem with Bill C-56, and provisions in that legislation will also protect consumers, this time in an area where people are not making conventional deposits, but are in effect using deposit-like instruments. Bill C-56 will make it easier to create protection plans in the insurance industry. That industry has become more and more involved in these deposit-like instruments.

The Government has been working with representatives of the industry to develop annuity and policy holder protection plans along the lines of the CDIC protection, in order that this type of thing can be extended in the future.

There may indeed still be room for confusion on the part of depositors. It is appropriate that the Government ensure that their interests are well served. Confusion will only arise, and depositors' interests will only be in danger in certain circumstances. The Government's proposals for reform of the trust and loans companies legislation which were released last December make clear that the supervisory authority will be vigilant to protect conflicts of interest or the unclear auditor's function, and the other factors which would allow a company to deliberately mislead or confuse.

There is a larger dimension to this question. If we are creating a new type of financial sector, as we are with the changes in deregulation with new instruments and a new combination of services, then we need a new type of supervisory authority. To a large degree, this need is also being met at the federal level under the various pieces of legislation that have been and are being presented.

There is a great deal of work going on in this whole field to ensure the interests of the consumers and to work with the provinces. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) pointed out, we have to work very closely with the provinces and try to see as much as possible that our provisions are in concert, so that people are not further confused because one group is under federal jurisdiction and living by one set of rules, and another group of financial institutions is under provincial jurisdiction with a different set of rules. We should also be working towards a more co-ordinated effort in this respect.

I believe that the intent of the motion of my colleague is very meritorious. It certainly deserves our full examination. But we should be cautious to ensure that any new provisions do not add unnecessarily to the bureaucratization and the potential confusion on the part of the consumer.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate this afternoon on the motion presented to us by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I differ in opinion with the Member who spoke to us moments ago. The Hon. Member indicated that she did not feel that this was an appropriate resolution, or one that we should be considering favourably. She also indicated, if I can paraphrase what the Hon. Member said, that perhaps this would be difficult to administer in terms of forms and so on.

I have received letters from constituents who invested in the Principal Group of companies. I have one such letter here, and I will not disclose who signed it because I have not consulted with my elector. It is important that the House and all Canadians know of some of the hardships created.

This letter states: "A television news clip on an exchange in the House of Commons yesterday regarding income taxes charged to the losers in Principal Group prompted my writing you today. I was an investor with the Principal Group of companies. On June 30, 1987 when the Treasury Department of Alberta revoked the licences of two of their subsidiaries, I held eight guaranteed term certificates and fixed term certificates with First Investors Corporation. The total Principal amount deposited with FIC was $95,000. My total evaluated claim on June 30 was $100,000 which included interest owing to that date and calculated by Coopers & Lybrand, court appointed managers of FIC. I have received $30,000 which represents 30 per cent payment on the total claim. To date I have lost $70,000".

The voter goes on to describe the income tax provisions which have since been corrected, or at least we are led to believe have been corrected for the time being.

The purpose of my raising this letter is to indicate that all of us in the House have been affected, or have constituents who have been affected by the failure of the Principal Group of companies. This leads us to conclude, I would hope, that we have to change the ways of doing business of the financial institutions in order that Canadians are made aware of just what it is that they are investing in.

Today, I had someone pick up leaflets from various financial institutions concerning investment vehicles. I have one here from the Bank of Nova Scotia. That bank advertises its investment certificates. This leaflet states:

> With a minimum investment of $5,000 GICs are available in $100 increments for terms of: 1-10 years with interest paid monthly, semi-annually or annually.

This is under the grand title of "Guaranteed Investment Certificates". The banks may call some of those investment certificates "guaranteed", but the word "guaranteed" does not really mean much. For instance, according to this suggestion if someone were to invest for 10 years, I would suggest that the guarantee has nothing to do with the Canada Deposit Insurance guarantee. In fact, it is a verbal or written guarantee or otherwise a guarantee of the financial institutions, which says, "We guarantee this to you". I do not know how valid that guarantee is. It depends on the financial viability of the financial institution in question. I suppose in some cases, it is a little like saying "cross my heart", and in other cases it probably has values which are a little more tangible.

I have another leaflet from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce which states, "Get us working for you! with the CIBC GIC". There is a little mark beside GIC and an explanation in fine print, because GIC stands for guaranteed investment certificate, and it states, "CIBC guaranteed investment certificates (CIBC GIC's) are issued by CIBC Mortgage Corporation and unconditionally guaranteed by Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce". If one reads the fine print, one finds that it is not guaranteed by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. It is only guaranteed by the bank itself. Canadians are not always given all the information.

I have another one here from VG National Trust. This is the only document which I have secured today, which actually says:

> A risk-free, secure investment backed by one of the largest trust companies in Canada and also covered by Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation (CDIC). Debentures, that are the same as GICs, provide an additional $60,000 CDIC protection.

This document talks about Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation protection because, of course, that is what they are offering. The other investment which I described a while ago in the Scotia Bank, and the one from the CBIC Mortgage Corporation, did not refer to that.

Yet, when you enter the doors of any of those financial institutions you see displayed very prominently, usually right on the door, "Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Member" and so on. Canadians think that investments they make there are automatically covered. When they buy a guaranteed investment certificate in a place insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation they naturally assume that that guaranteed investment certificate is guaranteed by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, which is advertised there. However, that is not so. I have just given examples of where that is not necessarily the case.

There is certainly a need for that which the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap is proposing to us. Any investment made in an institution covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation which is not thereby covered should indicate such by way of waiver. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) said that this would be difficult to administer. If you have ever rented a car you will have noticed that if you decide not to buy the insurance you must sign the form indicating that you waive the privilege of having insurance. That is pre-printed on the form.

Similarly, when you buy an investment vehicle in an institution covered by CDIC there should be a pre-printed area on the forms for the constituent to initial his recognition that the particular investment he is purchasing is not covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, be it a six-year term deposit, a so-called guaranteed investment certificate in a mortgage subsidiary of the banking institution, or any other investment vehicle.

All banks are covered by CDIC, but trust companies and other corporations which advertise that they are covered by CDIC, should be required to provide a waiver in the manner proposed by the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

I am not going to propose an amendment to this motion, Mr. Speaker, but it should be obvious that we are only talking about financial institutions with which the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation does business. In other words, within the CDIC institutions any investment vehicles which are not covered by the CDIC should include that waiver form.

I hope Hon. Members will give their support to this motion presented to us by the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, as some of my colleagues have already done and as others will before the end of this debate, I wish to thank the Leader of the New Democractic Party for providing us with an opportunity to address the issue of consumer protection in their dealings with financial institutions in Canada. This issue is of major concern to us, as Members of the Progressive Conservative Party.

I agree with the Hon. Member that it would be preferable for financial institutions to better inform their customers of deposit insurance schemes available to them. But, as it has already been stated, our Government is taking steps to reach exactly the same goals as those of the motion moved by the NDP Leader.

I suggest also that the measure contemplated in the motion or a similar motion deserves to be examined thoroughly and responsibly by financial institutions regulatory authorities on both levels of Government. It should be emphasized, however, that these authorities should also take into account several points which could make the implementation of such a measure more complicated. I will explain. Before we can insist on institutions informing customers that a deposit is not insurable, we should see how difficult it might be for an institution to identify such a deposit.

Let us consider now the case of an institution which is a member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, the so-called CDIC. Deposits over $60,000 made by private individuals, or deposits automatically excluded from the definition of insurable deposit under another provision of the act, such as foreign currency deposits or others whose term exceeds five years, are not really a problem at this time. But what happens in the case of a customer who has several accounts, particularly if such accounts have been opened in different branches of the same institution? Then it is much more difficult for the institution to determine whether the total of these deposits exceeds $60,000.

It is also necessary to provide a more specific definition of the words "insurable deposits" because there are many deposit insurance organizations including, for example: the system set up pursuant to the federal legislation governing the CDIC; Quebec's Régie de l'assurance-dépôts which, like the CDIC, covers deposits in trust and loans companies and caisses populaires; the Corporation de fonds de sécurité de la confédération Desjardins, for instance, which also insures deposits in caisses populaires throughout Quebec; there are various stabilization funds and various investment and deposit insurance companies offering similar coverage in credit unions or caisses populaires in other provinces; the new compensation systems for people covered under pension schemes or life and general insurance policies.

Deposit insurance plans therefore vary from one institution to the next, be it a bank, a caisse populaire, an insurance company or what have you, just as they do depending on the government level, either federal or provincial. This has to be taken into consideration.

In addition, with the development of sales network agreements for financial products throughout the entire financial sector as provided for in the Government's new policy, financial institutions will soon be able to offer their clients a wider range of deposit and investment instruments. It could be for example instruments delivered by institutions covered by a different insurer.

Therefore, the universal requirement that depositors be informed of their uninsured deposits should not be limited to individual deposits and investments not covered by CDIC. Several options should be examined, for example requiring the institution to indicate the insurer's name on all deposit instruments or to inform depositors or investors only if their deposit or investment is not covered by any of the previously mentioned institutions.

To avoid any confusion, I believe that it would be advisable that all plans have similar insurability standards, specially with regard to the definition of insurable deposits and limits of insurability. It would also be necessary to make sure that the various deposit insurance plans be sufficiently guaranteed in order that all depositors really be afforded comparable protection.

The legislation which is now before the House is indeed desirable, but its implementation raises the difficulties which I have indicated. However, I urge federal as well as provincial regulatory authorities to work together in resolving these difficulties and improving the information available to consumers on deposit insurance.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak to this motion this afternoon. I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for bringing this motion to the attention of the House. It is a subject which is of great concern to all of us.

As you know, the reform of the financial sector has been an important part of this Government's economic agenda for the last three years. We have more legislation still to come and we have passed a great deal already. We attach importance to consumer protection because of the events of the last two years when many financial institutions were in some difficulty. People are concerned now about the safety of their deposits and their investments in some of these institutions. One such incident about which we have heard spoken in this Chamber today, very much in the minds of Members, is what is called the Principal Group affair. Unlike other incidents in which the federal Government was clearly involved, the Principal Group is a provincial matter. We must be careful to avoid jurisdictional problems where there is a provincial responsibility, and the federal Government would do well to follow what the province wants in some of these matters.

As I have said earlier, we have done a great deal over the last three years to strengthen financial institution management. For example, for some time now there has been a prohibition against anyone or any institution, other than a member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, representing itself as being insured by the CDIC. Except in cases of outright fraud or deliberate misrepresentation, this rule goes a long way toward protecting consumers.

There has also been a long-standing CDIC requirement that uninsured deposit instruments offered by CDIC member institutions must be clearly stamped as such. In addition, the new provision added to the CDIC Act by Bill C-42 allows institutions and their agents to indicate that deposits are insured. Taken together with other matters, these provisions would seem, at least to me, to allow the CDIC to introduce measures very similar to the one being proposed to us today.

Bills C-42 and C-56 passed and proclaimed last July clarified and strengthened many of the consumer protections in the existing law. For example, the requirement to indicate in writing on the contract that a deposit is not insured under CDIC became part of the Act itself rather than simply part of the CDIC by law.

Because other people in this Chamber want to speak to this motion this afternoon, let me come to the part that disturbs me most of all. I say again that I concur with the spirit of the motion. I do not, however, think that we can accept the motion as it now stands. It has implications for legislation relating to financial institutions. Even the complexities of these were outlined by the Hon. Member who introduced the motion himself on February 29, 1988. If one reads his comments, as recorded at page 13240 of Hansard, they are enough to cause each of us to pause and think again. The Liberal Member who spoke a few moments ago said that he wished he could amend this motion. Why, Mr. Speaker? So that we would know what institutions we were really talking about.

If we have that kind of confusion, and again looking at the comments made by the Hon. Member from Kamloops—Shuswap, recorded as I said on page 13240 of Hansard, what we have here is a motion that purports to make something simple which, in fact, is a very complex matter. Entering into negotiations with the provinces is not the way we should be heading. We should first be asking what institutions we are trying to control in this way, what kind of investments, insurance and other matters. Then we should decide where to take it.

I cannot support this motion, despite approval in the sense of what I know the Hon. Member wants, because it leads us into a complexity which I think is masked by the simplicity of the motion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to say something for three or four minutes on this motion. I want to say to my hon. friend, who concurs in this motion but cannot support it, that if it is such a great motion—

Mr. Winegard: It is the spirit of the motion.

Mr. Benjamin: There are spirits and there are spirits.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Here is the ghost of bankers past.

Mr. Winegard: It is the NDP ghost.

Mr. Benjamin: If Members like the spirit of the thing, since this is only a motion, legislation to implement the motion will implement the spirit. I do not want to be paranoid because there are too many people on the government side, but the very fact that in non-election years the five major banks in Canada give $25,000 to the Conservative Party and $25,000 to the Liberal Party whereas in an election year, that amount is doubled makes me suspicious. I have a terrible suspicion that "them that pays the pipers calls the tuné".

Surely depositors have a right to know when they make a deposit by putting their money in a savings, a chequeing or a term deposit account—I would not worry about buying shares because very few ordinary people do. They don't have enough money for that—whether or not they are covered under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Banks avoided, and have avoided for years, telling people whether or not they are covered. All this motion does is to ask the Government to consider, just consider, requiring—

Mr. Winegard: You don't even know what the motion means.

Mr. Benjamin: It is very carefully legally worded. If it had been my motion, it would have been worded a lot tougher and meaner than this one. But my colleague from Kamloops—Shuswap is more of a gentleman and more statesman-like than I am.

The hon. gentleman who just spoke, supports the lovey-dovey finance and banking companies. But if you want to collect the insurance you have to be struck by lightning at high noon on a Tuesday in front of City Hall in the company of your dog and your lawyer in order to collect.

How anyone with any real interest in the welfare and the wellbeing of those who trust financial institutions with their savings, with their pay cheques, could not support this motion, I do not know. And it is only a motion; it is not a piece of legislation.

Depositors in financial institutions should not be led to believe that they are covered by some kind of deposit insurance when they are not. We have had at least six instances in the life of this Government where thousands and thousands of people have lost most if not everything that they had. Surely it is only natural justice to require every financial institution to declare to depositors what is and is not insured. If the provinces will not co-operate, we can at least require any financial institution operating under a federal charter to declare to the depositor what is covered and what is not, and the degree to which deposits are covered.

Frankly, the present level of coverage is, in my view, inadequate. The $200,000 or $300,000 that an individual gets on the sale of his business or farm represents that individual's pension fund. If he or she turns around and deposits the proceeds of the sale into term deposits and savings accounts in a financial institution that goes belly up, that individual loses everything.

Mrs. Collins: In that circumstance, the proceeds should be divided among various institutions, bearing in mind that the deposit insurance covers only the first $60,000.

Mr. Benjamin: If the financial institutions will not voluntarily make such a declaration to depositors, this Parliament should require them to do so. There are simply no "ifs, ands or buts" about it.

An Hon. Member: The Member opposite said to split it.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not know who the Hon. Member opposite wants to split it with. She wants the depositor to lose half. Who is going to lose the other half—the Government?

Mrs. Collins: Given that only $60,000 is insured, the proceeds should be deposited in various institutions.

Mr. Benjamin: We have five chartered banks in this country which, for many years, have not paid a nickel's-worth of income tax, corporate or otherwise—and that notwithstanding that they have taken millions and millions out in profits.

I can remember being told by a CPR auditor that, rather than depositing my money into a savings or chequing account in the bank, I should buy shares in the bank. In that way, my money would be safe. So, withdraw all of your money out of chequing accounts, savings accounts, term deposits, and buy shares in the bank. In that way, you become a part owner of the bank.

Under the theory of market forces and free enterprise, once you have shares, you are part of the action. You are right in there with the financial establishments of Bay Street and James Street. You are in there like a burglar. You are a big-wheel capitalist. You have shares.

So, my advice to all of the people of Canada is that they take their money out of savings accounts, term deposits, and what have you, and buy bank shares.

Mrs. Collins: And then you nationalize the banks. What happens then?

An Hon. Member: What shares do you recommend?

Mr. Benjamin: I have only ever bought shares in what is called a people's bank, a credit union. I do not go near the chartered banks. When I needed money, back in the days when I was a railroad employee, they were not interested in lending it to me. Because I did not own any property, they weren't interested. However, once I had gained some modest amount of prominence in the community, all of a sudden they were practically dragging me in off the street, wanting to lend me money.

Where the heck were they when I needed them? Where were they?

An Hon. Member: Tell me what bank it is. I want to get my money out.

Mr. Benjamin: I had both the Bank of Montreal and the Royal Bank of Canada refuse to make me a loan at that time. Would you believe, all I wanted was $700!

An Hon. Member: And what did you want it for?

Mr. Benjamin: I was buying a car. I had $2,000 in cash, and needed another $700.

An Hon. Member: Do you still have the car?

Mr. Benjamin: No, I do not. The point is, the depositors and subscribers to bank instruments, with the exception of those involved with credit unions, are being had, and certainly they were had in the case of the bankruptcy of the Principal Group.

It is my hope that in the remaining four minutes, we pass this motion. The ball will then be in the Government's court, and it will be up to the Government to decide whether or not it wishes to act on it. But surely this is an appropriate time for the Members of this House to make it clear that there has to be mandatory protection for depositors in financial institutions under federal jurisdiction in the form of a requirement on the part of those financial institutions to inform depositors as to the existence and level of deposit insurance.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it has been an entertaining afternoon. I listened with interest to the plea on the part of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to Canadians to take their money out of banks and buy shares—

An Hon. Member: Bank shares.

Mr. McKinnon: While I hope no one takes him seriously, if he feels keenly enough about that proposition, perhaps he would see me once the House adjourns. I have a few shares that I have been using as wallpaper in my bathroom that I might be persuaded to part with at cost.

Mr. Benjamin: They are probably of the Farmers' Bank of Canada. The "Dirty Thirties".

Mr. McKinnon: I might be persuaded to part with those shares at cost, just to help him end up with the security that he so dearly wants.

I assumed, at the outset, that the Hon. Member did not understand the motion—and I have some sympathy for him in that respect. The motion runs to 63 words in one sentence, including an absolutely novel way to spell "institutions".

Given the wording of the motion, I can well understand even people smarter than the Hon. Member for Regina West being somewhat confused.

I cannot understand how the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) saw a relationship between the situation of the couple that had invested $200,000 in Principal Trust and the situation in respect of deposit insurance. I do not believe that what is contemplated by this motion would have in any way prevented that couple from losing their money. They wanted to put that money into Principal Trust. Had they been told that Principal Trust was not covered by CDIC and had complained about it, I am sure the salesman would have simply pointed out that the assets of the Principal Group were sufficient to cover up to 104 per cent of the amount of moneys borrowed.

I see that you are signalling me, Mr. Speaker. Call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, April 22, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance that Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) on a point of order.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been discussion among the Parties, and I think you will find, in respect of Bill C-118, which was to be the subject of a deferred division at this time, that there is all-Party agreement to proceed to third reading without calling in the Members, with the consequent disruption of committees, and what have you.

If you will check with the House, I think you will find a disposition to adopt the Bill on third reading at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I agree that the division bells not be rung and that, with the unanimous consent of the House, Bill C-118 be given third reading at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we are in agreement with the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), and as agreed to by the Chief Whip of the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It is my understanding, on the basis of the agreement, that the Bill can be given third reading without the necessity of a division bell.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly, the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), for third reading of Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, is adopted.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 on behalf of a number of constituents. The petitioners are very concerned that the trade deal negotiated with the United States will have a fundamental impact on our ability as a country to pursue economic, cultural and political independence. The petitioners believe that the agreement will result in the loss of many, many jobs in various sectors of the economy as well as various regions of Canada. Therefore, they ask the Parliament of Canada to obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on this issue during a national general election.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition that has been certified correct as to form pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners are residents of the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan, particularly in the Westport area. They believe the trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve, and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition from hundreds of Londoners in the ridings of London East and London West, as well as London—Middlesex, who are calling upon Parliament to ensure that Canada has a strict abortion law that recognizes foetuses from conception as Canadian citizens, entitled to the same legal protection as all other Canadian citizens.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, as a result of a public rally the other evening in Regina, I was presented with the following petitions from citizens of that city and other communities in Saskatchewan. It states that whereas the Government of Canada's willingness to enter into a trade agreement with the United States, and whereas the proposed trade agreement will have significant negative impacts upon Canada, and whereas the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) will soon be meeting with the President of the United States, the undersigned petition the Parliament of Canada to express opposition to the proposed trade agreement, and that the Government of Canada inform the President of the United States that further action on this agreement will be discontinued immediately.

I have three further petitions on the same subject but which are worded differently in which, as usual, the undersigned petitioners from the City of Regina and from other such places as Shaunavan and Eastend, Saskatchewan, petition that whereas the proposed trade agreement denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was a key objective in these negotiations, and threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs, the undersigned, your petitioners, pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, question No. 276 will be answered today.

[Text]

FINANCIAL BENEFITS OF CALGARY OLYMPICS

Question No. 276—Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton):

1. What is the government's estimate of the (a) direct financial benefits of the Calgary Olympics to the Calgary area (b) indirect benefits to (i) the rest of Alberta (ii) each of the other provinces?

2. What are the corresponding figures for the Montreal Olympics?

3. What was the cost of the (a) Calgary (b) Montreal Olympics to each taxpayer?

Canada Labour Code

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) (b) (i) and (ii) The Economic Impact Study of the XV Olympic Winter Games dated July 31, 1986, prepared by the Bureau of Management Consulting of Supply and Services for the Federal Olympic Office states the following:

"The economic stimulus due to the direct expenditure of about $875 million on the Games generated an appreciable amount of economic activity in Canada; the most important aspects of which were:

(1) the contribution of about $1.3 billion to Canada's Gross Domestic Product (GDP); fully 68 per cent of which is comprised of direct spending on facilities, operations and tourism.

(2) the creation of approximately 27,400 person-years (PY) of employment in Canada during the 1980s.

In the neighbourhood of 70 per cent of the above employment and GDP estimates accrued to Alberta. The study did not differentiate as between Calgary and the rest of Alberta.

Economic benefits to the rest of Canada, representing approximately 30 per cent of the total impact, occurred principally through the "leakages" from Alberta that occur from the induced economic effects of the Games; the most important of which are the sourcing of materials and services for construction, operations and visitor catering services."

2. The Government of Canada did not undertake an economic impact study for the Montreal Games.

3. (a) The Government of Canada contributed $200 million (1982-83 non-taxable dollars) to the Calgary Games. This contribution was broken down as follows:

These moneys were attributed to payment from the provinces to the federal Government for getting out of the lottery field, sales of Olympic commemorative coins and incremental seignorage on the $1 circulating coin.

It is still too early to quote a dollar figure for essential services required at the Calgary Games. Security, customs, etc. costs have not yet been tabulated by the respective departments.

(b) It is quoted in the Malouf Report of the Montreal Games that the Government of Canada's total contribution to the Summer Games for services was $142 million. Revenues of $115 million were derived from the sale of Olympic coins and stamps and $235 million was attributed to the Olympic lottery.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-124, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address the House concerning the Bill which I recently introduced which would make necessary changes to legislation dealing with the all important subject of occupational safety and health. These changes, while minor in themselves, will help make the Canada Labour Code a more flexible and efficient instrument for the protection of Canadian workers.

The first of these changes is a series of amendments to Part IV of the Code which have general application. The second relates only to the federally regulated coal mines in Cape Breton.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Labour I have always considered the promotion of occupational safety and health to be one of the most important tasks in my department's mandate. Mr. Speaker, I would ask Hon. Members on both sides of this House to co-operate in giving expeditious approval to the proposed amendments, for the sake of the working men and women whose lives and well-being depend to a large extent on the quality of the legislation we provide.

[English]

The over-all objective of this Bill is to ensure consistency between the recently amended Part IV of the Canada Labour Code and the regulations made pursuant to the Code.

One major intent of the 1984 Code amendments had been to clarify the prime responsibility of the employer for employees' occupational safety and health. Mr. Speaker, the regulation-making authorities of the Code in this respect were therefore limited to precise standards which could be rigidly prescribed.

[English]

This new approach has generally worked well, but some serious concerns regarding situations and environments in which some flexibility is required were raised during the drafting of the regulations. These concerns are again arising in the regulation revision process. The proposed amendments to the Code will resolve those concerns by providing new or clearer authorities.

For the sake of clarity I shall present the changes in logical order rather than in a clause-by-clause succession. First, I will deal with the amendments of general application.

Clauses 4 and 5 of the Bill will provide authority pursuant to the proposed Subsections 105(7), 106(1.1) and (1.2), to make regulations for circumstances or situations in which it is not possible to prescribe rigid standards.

For example, Mr. Speaker, it is sometimes impossible to make regulations that cover every aspect of an engineering work or structure. Such situations may best be covered by a requirement that the work or structure be constructed "in accordance with good engineering practice". A professional engineer can certify that good engineering practice has been used, but this is not a prescribed standard and such a requirement would not be permitted by the current authorities in the Code. The proposed amendment will permit such a requirement, but only where the Governor in Council deems it appropriate.

[English]

Authority is also required to permit regulations to be made applicable generally to all workplaces, or all classes of employment, or particularly to one or more workplaces or one or more classes of employment as may be specified in the regulations.

For example, it would be appropriate to require a higher level of lighting in a warehouse where explosives or toxic substances are being handled, compared to a similar warehouse in which no hazards are presented by the materials being handled.

[English]

To ensure that employees enjoy the protection offered by the most recent updated standards, authority is required to reference standards as amended from time to time. Authority is also required to use the words: "to the extent that it is practicable or reasonably practicable." This would cover situations where it was found that it would be unreasonable to prescribe one precise standard for all situations.

It would be unreasonable, for example, to expect that buildings built before 1985 would meet all the requirements of the 1985 Building Code. It would be more appropriate to write a regulation requiring that all buildings will comply with the most recent building code to the extent that it is reasonably praticable.

Referring to Clause 2 of the Bill, the proposed amendement would authorize the provision in the regulations that requires an annual report on each safety and health committee's activities to be made in the prescribed form to a person designated by the regulation. This would permit Labour Canada to know whether the safety health committees are performing their prescribed functions effectively, or whether they might need assistance.

[English]

I will now address the proposed amendments that only refer to federally regulated coal mining in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia.

• (1120)

Because of the special risks involved in working in the Cape Breton Development Corporation's coal mines in Nova Scotia, it is proposed to establish a tripartite Coal Mining Safety Commission. The Commission would have the authority to review and approve plans, procedures, methods and equipment in order to ensure that they will be safe in the ever-changing mining environment.

The Commission would also have the authority to vary or exempt the application of regulations, or to substitute a different standard where such actions will provide equal or better safety protection for the coal miners.

[English]

Referring to Clause 3 of the Bill, the proposed Sections 94.1 and 94.2 of the Code would set out the manner of establishment, selection, and remuneration of Commission members and the powers and duties of the Commission.

Referring to Clause 1 of the Bill, the proposed Section 82.3 requires that the employer, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, shall comply with the conditions and provisions imposed by the Commission under the authority of proposed Section 94.1.

In addition, it is proposed that pursuant to Section 82.3 the Code provide authority for two long-standing practices. The first is the practice permitting persons selected by the coal mining employees to inspect all workplaces in a mine to ensure that they are safe in all respects; the second practice is that of searching persons going underground to ensure that none carry cigarettes, lighters, alcohol, or drugs into the hazardous and potentially explosive mine atmosphere.

Referring to Clause 6 of the Bill, finally, to ensure continuity of safe operation of the coal mines, it is proposed that preexisting exemptions and approvals issued in the interests of safety remain in force.

Referring to Clause 7 of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, it is proposed that the sections of this Act to amend the Canada Labour Code come into force at different times, particularly to permit time for the establishment of the Coal Mining Safety Commission and avoid having to make certain provisions of the regulations again under the amended Act.

[English]

I should mention, Mr. Speaker, that these amendments have the support of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and its employees.

I would urge Members of the House to grant speedy passage to this Bill at all stages, which will make a significant contribution to the occupational safety and health of working men and women in the federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on Bill C-124, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, on behalf of my colleague and friend, the Liberal critic, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), who is now away from the House on an emergency.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to make health and safety standards for work in coal mines more flexible and effective, if I understood correctly, while at the same time protecting workers in the coal mines.

We support this amendment and we can tell the Minister and the Government that they will receive the usual co-operation from the Opposition to give this Bill speedy passage.

I would still like to tell the House that there are two Members who are very interested in this Bill, namely the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), who will want to speak to it because it affects him very closely in his riding, and also the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), who asked me to say a few words on the Bill in order to explain and properly understand the initiative that the Government is proposing to us.

One of the main objectives of the amendments made to the Code in 1986 was to establish the employer's primary responsibility for employees' health and safety on the job. In this regard, the regulatory authorities have confined themselves to specifying the standards that must be rigorously prescribed.

In general, this has worked well. This new procedure has been well received. However, the relationship of the regulations has given rise to serious questions in situations and environments that require some flexibility.

The following amendments to this Bill deal adequately with these concerns.

I shall deal with this Bill C-124 in terms of principles, Mr. Speaker, and leave it to the legislative committee to study the amendments more closely and in detail.

Clauses 4 and 5 of the Bill give the power to make regulations under Subsections 105(7), 106(1.1) and 106(1.2) in circumstances or situations where it is not possible to prescribe rigid standards. Under Subsection 106(4), the regulations may be applicable: (a) generally, to all workplaces and all classes of employment; (b) specifically, to one or more workplaces or one or more classes of employment, as will be specified in the regulations.

Furthermore, under Subsection 106(5) of the Canada Labour Code, a standard may be incorporated by reference to other standards and may be amended as these are amended from time to time. Under this provision, employees will be able to enjoy the protection afforded by the latest updated health and safety standards, while it also obviates the need for amending the regulations.

Under new Subsection 106(6), the terms "practicable" and "reasonably practicable" may be incorporated.

Mr. Speaker, it is generally recognized, and I think everyone in the industry will agree, that it is unreasonable to prescribe a single specific standard in every case. There are exceptions where one must be flexible, and, as the Minister remarked, we must be flexible in applying these regulations. The Committee will have to examine these conditions and further clarify the purpose of this provision.

Clause 2 of this Bill concerns the authority under paragraph 92(11)(f) to require safety and health committees to submit an annual report. I think this provision is reasonable and acceptable, if we want Labour Canada to know exactly what is going on, whether the safety and health committees are effective in performing their prescribed duties and whether they need assistance.

The amendments in Bill C-124 concerning the coal mines of the Cape Breton Development Corporation are quite straightforward, and I think the Minister has explained quite clearly why, in these specific situations where the federal Government is practically the sole authority with respect to management and health and safety concerns, the Bill proposes to establish a tripartite Coal Mining Safety Commission that will have the authority to examine and approve plans, procedures, methods and equipment, to ensure they do not present any hazards in this fast developing mining industry.

The Commission will also have the authority to amend the regulations, to suspend their application and to substitute certain standards for other standards, provided they offer the same or better safeguards for coal miners.

Clause 3, which is new, will establish a new agency, Mr. Speaker, the Coal Mining Safety Commission, responsible mainly for approving, as appropriate, plans and procedures to be followed in coal mines and mining methods, machinery and equipment for use in coal mines, and they also exempt coal mines from certain regulations of general application.

We welcome this provision as well, but the "notwithstanding" provisions that follow are somewhat puzzling. Take, for instance, Subsection 94.2 (2). I will read it to you, Mr. Speaker.

> On the application of an employer, the Commission or a person designated by the Commission for the purposes of this subsection may, where, in the opinion of the Commission or that person, protection of the safety and health of employees would not thereby be diminished,
> (a) approve in writing the use by the employer in coal mines of mining methods, machinery or equipment in respect of which no prescribed safety standards are applicable;

We would like to ask the Minister for explanations, maybe in committee, on these provisions granting exemptions in order to clarify their scope and perhaps better understand the objective sought.

Mr. Speaker, as I was just saying, we intend to support this Bill and to make it conform as soon as possible to the desire to make the regulation somewhat more flexible while keeping in mind our responsibilities for health and safety.

The comments I have to make on that, I think, are fairly supportive, I would say, of this Bill, and as I was just saying, we will give it our approval as soon as possible on second reading so that in committee, my colleagues from the House, and especially those in my Caucus from the Cape Breton region, can certainly make amendments, if necessary.

[English]

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to speak on the motion for the second reading of Bill C-124, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code. The provisions of Bill C-124 represent an important step forward in terms of health and safety in the workplace generally, and in the coal mining industry in particular. I wish to commend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) for the extensive consultation he undertook in the preparation of this Bill. I understand that he put in place an elaborate ongoing consultative process with the coal mining industry, with the officials of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, with the United Mine Workers, and with the Canadian Labour Congress. His efforts in that regard represent a remarkable precedent in terms of government and labour and industry working together to bring about improvements to the Canada Labour Code in respect of health and safety in the workplace.

Unions throughout this country and internationally have been vociferous in bringing forth their proposals to increase the level of health and safety in industry generally, and in the mining sector in particular. We in Canada have experienced a number of great disasters associated with the mining industry. We all recall only too well the Springhill mine disaster, where an underground explosion led to a number of fatalities.

The mining industry, by its very nature, presents a number of dangers, not the least of which is the lack of access to immediate escape and immediate emergency equipment. Certainly, it is a sector which presents a unique set of circumstances.

It is appropriate that Bill C-124 is before the House this week for debate, given that April 28 has been designated a day of mourning for all those killed or injured in the workplace. This day of commemoration is sponsored by the Canadian Labour Congress, the idea being to bring to the attention of the public the need for increased health and safety in the workplace. A number of district labour councils throughout the country, along with a number of municipalities, have joined in proclaiming April 28 as a day of mourning, in recognition of those killed or injured in the course of their employment.

There are far too many accidents in the workplace, leading to serious injury and death. We are always, we hope, moving forward in the area of health and safety in the workplace, and those involved in promoting health and safety in the workplace deserve the commendation of this House for their efforts in keeping before the public and lawmakers the need for increased health and safety in the workplace.

As a labour lawyer and one who has been involved in a number of cases involving health and safety aspects in the workplace, I can tell you that it is an area that presents the employee with some very difficult decisions. Often, an employee is required, as part of his contract of employment, to undertake dangerous work, and if at any time the employee chooses not to undertake the work requested, that employee risks being the subject of disciplinary action on the part of the employer, including the potential loss of employment. As a result, the employee generally has little if any control over working conditions.

Bill C-124 goes some distance in correcting that situation in so far as the mining sector is concerned, in as much as employees would have an important role, through the Coal Mining Safety Commission, in ensuring control over the health and safety standards to be followed. To my mind, this is an important forward step, and one which gives the employee important input in terms of the health and safety standards to be followed.

Given the level of technology and equipment utilized in the mining sector, one could not expect the miners to be totally familiar with its dangers. Through the Coal Mining Safety Commission, the employees will now have access to the kind of expertise and knowledge necessary to ensure that the new equipment is not introduced into the mine without assurances that the equipment is in fact safe for use, with the necessary safety practices and regulations already in place.

In the event that a given piece of equipment is not deemed to be dangerous in and of itself, or involved in a dangerous aspect of mining, it may be that there will be no necessity for having standards and regulations in place in respect of its use. I commend the Minister for the extensive consultations that have taken place in bringing this Commission forward. We have had accidents in Cape Breton. We had a recent most serious fire in a Cape Breton coal mine which caused a close down. Safety in the mining industry is something that ought to be and is, I am sure, foremost in the minds of those working in the mines and in the minds of their families. It is a dangerous occupation, and concern for safety is always uppermost in the minds of the families.

I support the Bill in principle at second reading stage. It moves forward in bringing into line some of the technical regulations with the new changes to the Canada Labour Code, and it is important that this Bill be given speedy passage in the House.

I do, however, want to speak about a reservation I have concerning the provisions in Clause 1 of the Bill which will add a section following Section 82.2 of the Canada Labour Code. It will put into law a provision requiring a search of those entering a mining area who are not employed there. Every person will be searched, and a proportion of employees working in the underground portion of the mine will have to submit to personal searches conducted in a manner to be prescribed by the regulations.

I understand from discussions with the Minister and his staff that this provision in the Bill, even though it is written as a law of general application, refers only to coal miners. Under the Constitution, of course, the only coal mining activity undertaken under federal jurisdiction is that of the federal Crown corporation, DEVCO. I understand it is still a federal Crown corporation but I do not know what plans the Government may have for the future. The only coal mining activity affected by this particular provision will be the coal mines in Cape Breton.

I do understand, as the Minister indicated in his speech, that there was consultation with representatives of the employees. There is a proposal to search to make sure that matches, cigarette lighters and these types of things are not brought into the mine even accidentally by an employee who is perhaps forgetful or puts on different clothing which happens to have matches, cigarette lighters or whatever in the pockets. This employee may, without thinking while in the mine, "flick his Bic", I think it is said sometimes. I have seen people do that without thinking. It does not sound like a very diabolical provision if it is designed to prevent an accident from occurring. However, I do have a grave reservation about including in a law of general application the requirement to search. This may establish a precedent for all sorts of other types of search and seizure provisions which may well be opposed by many segments of the society for reasons of invasion of privacy, civil liberties and for a further moving of the state in the direction of denying individual liberties.

I would, of course, underline the importance of safety in coal mines. An explosion would be devastating. We all know of the famous Davey lamps and other lamps that have been devised to provide light underground in coal mines without causing explosions. I have grave reservations about including this particular phraseology in a law which appears to be of general application, although we heard today that it only has application to the Cape Breton coal mine because that is the only coal mine under federal jurisdiction. Having said that, I will be having further discussions with the Minister as to what the consequences of this search provision are.

I wanted to express those reservations at second reading stage but at the same time support in principle the legislation contained in Bill C-124 together with the various provisions which provide for a major improvement in access to employees, access to inspection procedures underground, access that employees will now have through the Coal Mining Safety Commission to information, technical knowledge and understanding of exactly what is going on concerning health and safety and the opportunity to examine and to put in place safe work practices with respect to new equipment which may be brought into mining activity. All of those things are very progressive actions and put the employees in a position of being able to have control over their workplace where they daily take great risks.

The other provision in Clause 2 of requiring health and safety committees to submit annual reports of their activities appears to be a minor clause in the Bill before us today, but it is a very important one. It allows the monitoring of the activities of these committees and allows health and safety committees to bring to the attention of officialdom, if you will, activities which they have undertaken during the year and to point out any serious problems encountered. These can be put on the record so they will not be forgotten and action can be taken. If not, someone can point to the very serious problems in the current annual report or the following one. A watch-dog can be provided, as it were, to make sure that the committee reports are part of the public record and will be acted upon.

I commend and thank the Minister for bringing this legislation forward. I reiterate the support of our Party in the House for Bill C-124 in principle with the reservations that I have expressed.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with my colleagues in opposition expressing my gratitude, if you will, to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) who has obviously, and I say so with respect, taken a great interest in the subject matter before us. We are aware of many of the activities of his predecessors who have also had as their goal the improvement of occupational safety and health as it affects employees and businesses across Canada.

Since the Bill does zero in on a particular Crown corporation which is of great interest to me and the people I represent, I would also like to pay due respect to the union representatives of the United Mine Workers of America, and in particular, their safety co-ordinator in the person of Mr. Paul MacNeil, and of course representatives of the Cape Breton Development Corporation who represented the employer in the consultation process. Regarding the substantive parts of the Bill, I say to the Minister that I understand, appreciate and concur with the intent of Bill C-124. However, I have a number of reservations and qualifications that I will want to pursue at another time with the Minister as well as with representatives of the union and with management.

I do wish to say now at second reading stage that safety in the coal mining industry in Cape Breton has been of primary concern not only to me but indeed to my own predecessors who have served in this Chamber on previous occasions. It was through our efforts that many good things have come about for safety and occupational health in the coal mines.

Some of these amendments may appear at first instance to be rather minor in their substantive effect on coal mining in Cape Breton. However, they are certainly substantial in the effect they will have on the industry. To be fair to the Minister, I think he is very much aware of that and has responded to the representations of union and management. I wish to compliment him for responding so quickly and so efficiently on their behalf.

The legislation contains provision for a tripartite commission. The Minister will know that in setting up this commission, much of the discretionary authority still remains with the Governor in Council. Although I can understand and appreciate the need for flexibility in the implementation of agreed upon standards, we must be cognizant of the need to make certain that the agreement on a standard and the implementation of a standard may be two different things.

Let me make the point that standards have to be very clear to management and to union representatives as well as to the working person. Everyone must understand beyond a shadow of a doubt what is being talked about. There can, however, be some grey areas, as I think the Minister has indicated in his remarks, for which their must be flexibility in the implementation of a particular standard. I can appreciate the Minister's comments on that as well as those of my colleague from the New Democratic Party.

With the intent of the Bill being the improvement of occupational health and safety in the coal mines, I would hope that the upgrading of a standard would be the over-all objective rather than the relaxation of a standard. I would hope that there would always be a desire, both directly and indirectly, to try to improve upon that standard so that we can ensure the employees, their supervisors, the management, family members and the community at large that safety is the number one objective in this process.

That leads me to the issue of regulations. I will be discussing with the Minister and I am discussing with members of the union regulations for coal dust levels. I believe the Minister is aware that union representatives would prefer to have a level of four as opposed to the regulated level of six. It is my understanding from the representatives that there is a clear desire and intention to move to the level of four. I just bring that to the attention of Hon. Members opposite to underline the significance and importance of the intent of this aspect of the Bill.

Under the Bill, much of the discretionary authority still lies with the Governor in Council. The Commission is to consist of five individuals. The Minister said that he would appoint the chairman, and four other individuals would be appointed, being equally representative of non-supervisory employees and employers at DEVCO. I would hope that the union will have a real say in the determination of who those appointees will be and not simply be used, and I am certain the union will not simply be used by this Minister.

I give the Minister notice now that I will be asking him at a subsequent time what the prescribed budget of the particular Commission will be and what sort of actual assistance will be made available to the Commission. I will ask specific questions about the rules of natural justice and how they will be applicable. I will also ask questions about further developments in the coal mining industry of Cape Breton and what role he envisages this Commission to play and how it will interact with other agencies of both federal and provincial Governments. Those are questions which are rather fundamental to these amendments which, at the outset, may appear to be minor. However, in many instances, they would have a substantive impact on the coal mining industry of Cape Breton.

In addition to the number of individuals on the Commission, and I hope the Minister will provide detail on that at a later time, the regulations the Commission will be making are extremely important. It is extremely important that the Commission have broad consultation among the representatives of the union and that it continuously try to improve upon the standards in order to try to optimize as best as humanly possible the occupational health and safety of the workers who are employed at the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

In the Minister's speech, he said that it is proposed that pursuant to Section 82(3) the Code will provide authority for two long-standing practices. It is the second practice that I wish to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker. He said that the second practice is that of searching persons going underground to ensure that none carry cigarettes, lighters, alcohol or drugs into the hazardous, potentially explosive mine atmosphere.

If one were to read those sentences in isolation, I think one could argue that that is search and seizure. I will want the Minister to qualify that on the record at a later date. I wish to know what the intent of that really is. I also wish to review very carefully the wording of that practice.

I am sure that the Minister is not suggesting that there be a pre-test for everyone and anyone who works at a particular mine site. I think he is suggesting something much less than that. However, the intent is very important when achieving the particular objective.

There are a number of concerns I have that I am sure can be dealt with in a semi-private atmosphere along with my NDP colleagues to the left. I am sure that we can resolve these and some of the other points that I have raised with the Minister. However, I would like to have some further explanation of some of the interpretation of the wording given by the Department and the Minister. My colleague from Cape Breton—The Sydneys also wants that information because he has coal mines in his constituency as well and has been following the subject of occupational health and safety as much as I have over the last number of years.

Finally, I wish to reiterate that I think the Minister has accepted the challenge made by representatives of the United Mine Workers of America, in particular Mr. Paul MacNeil. I am sure he would have been in Ottawa today to answer any questions any Member had but he has been ill for a number of weeks, like I have, and I thank you for the flowers you sent, Mr. Speaker.

I will conclude by saying that we want to have another look at some of the questions I have raised before giving swift passage to this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Monique Vézina (for the Minister of the Environment) moved that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to speak on the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, before you today for third reading. I am proud that we are meeting the commitment of the October, 1986, Throne Speech. And I am proud because this is the first piece of comprehensive, federal environmental protection legislation in the history of our country.

I wish, at this time, to echo the words of the chairman of the legislative committee that tabled its amendments on Bill C-74 in this House on March 23, 1988. The work of the committee was indeed a superb non-partisan exercise, where all worked together without regard to political affiliation to make this the best possible legislation for Canada.

I wish to spend the next few minutes describing the amendments brought by the committee that are among the highlights of Bill C-74.

The definition of "substance" in Clause 3 has been adjusted, so that it now clearly applies not only to matter that is capable of being dispersed in the environment, or of being transformed and then dispersed in the environment, but also to matter capable of causing such transformation. This will enable us to regulate substances strictly based on their ability to transform other matter and to cause its dispersal.

For the first time in a federal statute, "biotechnology" is defined, and the revamped definition of the term "release" in Clause 3 now specifically covers discharge, spray, injection, inoculation and abandonment of any substance governed by the Act.

We have not forgotten that the provinces are partners in the fight to protect Canada's environment. Clause 6 of the new statute forges new links to make that effort more effective and productive. Under that part, a federal-provincial committee will be created to advise on regulations on the release or disposal of substances, as well as their storage, display, handling and transport. The committee may also advise on any other matter related to the administration of the Act.

These links will be further enhanced by the concept of "equivalency" now contained in the statute. We recognize provincial strength and expertise in such areas as control of emissions, effluents, and waste disposal. The Canadian Environmental Protection Act will enable the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Environment to recognize provincial regulations as equivalent to those under the federal Act.

This will ensure that both jurisdictions co-operate in the management of toxic substances from cradle to grave, without duplication or overlap. The same concept of "equivalency" through an Order in Council is provided in Part V of the statute covering international air pollution. However, there will still be accountability. The Minister of the Environment must report annually to this House on the administration and enforcement of the Act, including an accounting of the enforcement of equivalent provincial measures.

The clauses of Bill C-74 dealing with disclosure of information have been totally overhauled, and are now in harmony with the federal Access to Information and Workplace Hazardous Materials Information Review Acts.

We have also dealt with two concerns expressed during the development of the legislation. First, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act now automatically bans the export of substances prohibited for use in Canada, except for disposal purposes. Second, there must now be notification, by the polluter, to members of the public who may be adversely affected by the unauthorized release, spill, leak, et cetera, of a substance. This requirement exists in Part IV of Bill C-74 as obligating federal departments, agencies, boards, and Crown corporations to provide the same notification.

I am pleased that the concern of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) that federal departments, agencies, board and Crown corporations must not be above the law when the environment is at stake, did not go unheeded by the legislative committee in its clause-by-clause review of Bill C-74. Amendments to the Canadian Environmental Protection Act now ensure that there will be no doubt on this matter.

The federal Government and its agencies intend to be exemplary in complying with the new legislation. Clause 4 of the Bill states that the statute is "binding on Her Majesty in Right of Canada". However, the amended clauses of the Bill dealing with federal works, undertakings, lands, departments, boards, and agencies now go still farther. They now empower the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Environment, to make regulations setting limits for the release of emissions and effluents by federal departments, boards and agencies, as well as by Crown corporations. Waste handling and disposal can also be regulated.

These clauses further require that if a harmful substance has been released into the environment, the responsible federal body must report the unauthorized release to an inspector or other designated person. The body or agency must then take all reasonable emergency measures to prevent danger to the environment, human life or health, and, as I mentioned previously, notify members of the public who may be adversely affected. It is specifically stated that inspectors have the right of access and entry to federal property, and may take emergency measures themselves if the relevant department, board, agency or Crown corporation does not do so.

One particularly significant aspect of the new statute is the extent of public participation assured by the legislation. The Act invites Canadians to participate in its administration. They can request the Minister to include a substance on the priority substances list for immediate assessment and investigation to determine its toxicity. They can register their objection to non-inclusion of a substance on the toxic substances list, and request a board of review. They can comment on regulations upon their publication in Part I of The Canada Gazette, or protest the Minister's decision not to regulate, again requesting a board of review. This opportunity for comment and objection extends equally to provisions of the statute that allow the granting, revocation, suspension or alteration of permits for disposal at sea.

One aspect of public involvement is already at work. The Priority Substances Advisory Panel, chaired by Dr. Ross Hume Hall of McMaster University and including provincial Government, industry, academic and environmental group representatives, is completing its rigorous analysis of candidate substances, leading to a short list of 50 substances for priority assessment and investigation of their environmental and health effects.

The authority of a board of review to award costs to interveners has been expanded. Now the board may grant interim travel, and other administrative costs to interveners during the course of hearings and deliberations rather than solely at the conclusion of the board's work.

Also, for the first time in a federal environmental protection statute, two adult residents of Canada as individuals can petition the Minister to investigate a suspected violation. The Minister is then obliged to report his findings. In addition, private citizens who suffer, or may potentially suffer, loss or damage due to an offence committed under the Act can seek an injunction to prevent or stop the unlawful activity. Upon conviction of an offender they can seek a court order compensating them for their loss. They may also seek restitution through a civil suit.

It is in these ways that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act allows ordinary Canadians to become partners with the Government in the administration and enforcement of this statute which is designed to achieve the level of environmental protection, on a nation-wide basis, that they demand and deserve.

The Bill now before you is not solely the creation of lawyers, officials, and politicians working in isolation. This legislation is perhaps the most democratically devised statute to be considered by a federal Government in Canada. The process leading to the new Act really began in 1982 with the Environment Canada-Industry Workshop on New Chemicals.

The next vital steps were the reports of the Environmental Contaminants Act Amendments Consultative Committee, the Multi-Stakeholder Task Force on Management of Chemicals, and the government-industry study group that examined the aftermath of the Bhopal disaster and recommended how to avoid such an occurrence in Canada. These formed the basis of the draft Environmental Protection Act that the Minister of the Environment tabled in this House for discussion and consultation 16 months ago.

That tabling launched further consultations which actually lasted until late spring, 1987. When, as required by a new provision of the Act, Parliament reviews this statute in five years time, consultation may well begin again. It may seem to some that the consultation process is endless, but we are the better for it. Every sector of Canadian society was able to have its say. We received numerous letters and briefs and heard oral presentations.

We are fortunate that all the members of the legislative committee appointed to carry out clause-by-clause review were conscientious and zealous in their task. We took to heart the invitation by the Minister of the Environment to improve the Canadian Environmental Protection Act where we saw deficiencies. We, as well as the Minister, want the best, most comprehensive federal environmental protection legislation possible. I wish to thank my colleagues for their excellent work over these past weeks. We heard 36 witnesses and considered over 260 amendments, of which 142 were approved.

In conclusion, the Government has responded to the concern of Canadians for the protection of their environment. We have received their letters and read and heeded their representations. The Environmental Monitor report of last September further confirms results of surveys done over the past four years and tells us that 65 per cent of Canadians believe that environmental pollution has increased over the last five years. Seven in 10 Canadians believe that governments usually side with the industries that pollute rather than the affected public.

Passage of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act by this House will lay to rest that statement. It will show Canadians that we are committed to legislation that will protect our environment today and will serve us into the 21st century.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it would be quite in order at this stage to thank the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) for reading his prepared speech so well. In less than 10 minutes he has dealt with the subject matter, the complexity of which is mind-boggling, which has been before this House and in committee for over a year and a half. As he said, it has been the subject of public consultations, albeit very partial and very limited.

He has spoken at third reading without any indication of where the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister himself are at this very important stage. We have not heard a speech by the Minister on Bill C-74 at second reading, at report stage, or today when it is customary for a Minister to launch the Bill in its final stage with an analysis of it which one would hope would bring out the positive features as well as the negative ones, the difficulties encountered, and the points which may still have to be resolved as experience is gathered.

The only political point made by the Member for Red Deer was at the end of his remarks when he proclaimed that this Bill will demonstrate that the Government does not side with industry. What a negative way of putting it, as if there would be a preoccupation with disclaiming that potential accusation. He was obviously motivated either by a guilt feeling or some other reason to say: "Don't you worry, the Government, contrary to impressions perhaps, does not side with industry".

The history of this Bill is rather peculiar. It had a tremendously flashy beginning and a weak finish, arriving at the finish line with barely any strength left in the system as demonstrated by the pathetic exchanges which took place last Tuesday and Wednesday at report stage.

I submit that the history of this Bill is one of retreats and reversals. It is very unfortunate that the Member for Red Deer could not find the time to dwell on that, let alone to put up a defence for the reversals, or possibly a defence for the retreats. However, that is the history of this Bill. It was proclaimed as the greatest invention since sliced bread. However, the ending of that particular initiative is pretty weak, to say the least. That applies not only to the substance of the Bill but also to the process, and I will elaborate on that in due course.

This Bill was proclaimed by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) as the greatest legislation in the western hemisphere. When we came to the end of the process the same Minister, descending to earth, admitted that it was one small step. Somehow I was sympathetic when he said that because it was a realistic and honest way to put it. It is one small step. In that sense, it is a step that can only be welcomed. However, I submit that despite the claim made at the conclusion of the speech of the Hon. Member for Red Deer this Bill could have been much stronger, as it was conceived in its original form when the consultations to which the Hon. Member referred were launched. The fact is that as time went on, the Bill was the object of erosion and attack, and in the end the Minister himself had to admit that it turned out to be a small step. But it could have been a stronger piece of legislation, and I will take the necessary time to elaborate on that.

The Minister claimed that this Bill would clean up the environment. The Hon. Member must have heard the Minister saying that in the House in Question Period. The Minister said the St. Clair River blob would be cleaned up. When visiting Halifax, the Minister claimed this Bill might be used to clean the Halifax Harbour and other trouble spots across the nation. Unfortunately, that is not to be the case. The measure now before us offers only a modest step with very little teeth, and those were gradually pulled out as the process advanced. I will touch on that later.

The Hon. Member for Red Deer made reference to consultations. Consultations did take place with the public, and that process of consultation on the draft Bill was completed. Then it came to the provinces and as a result of changes that were made which profoundly affected the thrust and impact of the Bill, the public was no longer the interlocutory of negotiations, nor were the non-governmental groups, the NGOs. As time progressed, we had a selective and restrictive consultation that became narrower and narrower in scope. I must say that in reply to the speech of the Hon. Member for Red Deer, for whom I have the highest esteem, because it has to be put on record.

As this Bill progressed there were some very interesting claims. There was the claim that the federal Government would not wait for the provinces to take action on the environment. "We are going to do it", said the Minister. In June 1987, the obligation was recognized to consult with the provinces before making regulations. In November of 1987, it was no longer an obligation. Then in March of this year the obligation was back. Each time the change was eloquently defended by the Government so that with respect to the obligation to consult we had a flip, a flop and a flip.

The progress of this Bill has been followed quite closely, as it should, by the media. It is interesting to note that on Sunday, August 16 of last year, The Toronto Star devoted a lead editorial to this Bill under the heading of "Meech Lake Blight Hits the Pollution Bill". It is worth reading. I will not read it into the record because it would take too long.

It begins by making the point that since the Progressive Conservative Party took office there have been worrisome signs that Ottawa may be ceding more turf to the provinces. Those were prophetic words. It was worrisome because the fight against pollution has to be nation-wide and, therefore, requires uniform leadership and standards that only Ottawa can establish. This delicate balance between Ottawa and the provinces was already put in danger, or at least upset, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in November of 1984 chopped $46 million from the budget of Environment Canada. People must be reminded of what happened and that it was done by the great defenders of the environment on the government side. Two months in office and the Government chopped $46 million from Environment Canada and then proceeded with consultations on this Bill.

In the end we have a consultative process that is mandatory, which means the Minister of the Environment must consult with all the provinces before regulations are drafted or emergency orders are issued to control toxic chemicals. It must be said in all fairness that Ottawa would retain the right to act on its own after consultations. The provisions in this Bill invite Ottawa to take the weakest possible action in order that everyone will agree, and that is usually the outcome of such consultations.

In order to understand this Bill we have to examine it, to begin with, from a constitutional point of view. How does the Constitution relate to the environment and vice versa? That aspect at third reading of this Bill is essential because it gives us an insight into the federal role in the environment. As a result of the consultation process with the provinces, the Bill has been weakened and it need not have been weakened. It is important, therefore, to put on record which constitutional experts came to speak on Bill C-74, and what they said.

I refer, first of all, to a lawyer in Calgary, Alastair Lucas. He wrote in the fall, 1987, issue of Resources, when commenting on the question of equivalency, to which the Hon. Member for Red Deer made reference in his speech, that an acceptable definition of equivalency may prove elusive in any event. Yet equivalency has become the main concept which finds its own way through this Bill as it relates to the federal role in applying this Bill.

He states also that the federal Government does not wish to see its environmental protection Act initiative end with an Act that has only patchwork effects nationally and then may be of little or no significance in some provinces. Unfortunately, that is exactly what this Bill has achieved.

What Alastair Lucas was urging should not happen from a constitutional point of view has happened. We have equivalency in the Bill, and we are heading for a patchwork Canada in the implementation of environmental protection.

It might be said, incidentally, that Alastair Lucas is the Acting Executive Director of the Canadian Institute of Resources Law. He cannot be accused of being a supporter of the Liberal Party or a committed rabid environmentalist.

Is he alone in that viewpoint? Maybe it is just some might say a western aberration, something that comes out of a lonely guy in Calgary, someone who perhaps is frustrated because he does not get the recognition that he would like to receive. He is not alone. He is in some interesting company, I must say.

For instance, I bring to the attention of the House what was said on behalf of the Environmental Law Centre which is located in Edmonton by Elizabeth Swanson in her appearance before our committee which examined this Bill on December 10 of last year. She said: "I think the federal Government can consult its heart out with the provinces if it would like to do so". She stated that she really objected to this being a mandatory requirement to ministerial action, which she considers to be well within the competency of the federal Minister. She stated: "It seems to me in a way to be a political agreement taking the form of legislation". She was dead on in that. It was not a technical constitutional decision, it was a political decision. It was the emanation of the Meech Lake virus that found its way into Bill C-74.

She concluded by stating, as her colleague mentioned: "We do not object to the concept of the notion of co-operative federalism". Nobody does, of course not. It is the essence of our country. However, she stated, she has a little bit of difficulty when it starts popping up in our legislation.

It may be worth while to quote a voice from Toronto, the voice of Toby Vigod of the Canadian Environmental Law Association. She stated: "It has been our contention that the Minister of the Environment has been getting extremely conservative advice from the Department of Justice on federal constitutional authority to protect the environment". This is what she said in committee on January 19, 1988. She went on to urge the committee to obtain a written opinion from the Department of Justice on this issue. We tried. She said that such an opinion would then be subject to scrutiny by the committee, constitutional experts and the national legal environmental community at large. She said that in their opinion there is clear authority for the federal Government to take a strong role in environmental protection. There is, something which we argued in committee.

"Key constitutional heads of power are criminal law, trade and commerce and peace, order and good government," Professor Paul Emond wrote 15 years ago on the case for a strong federal role in environmental protection. He said that the constitutionality of a strong federal role in the environmental protection field is indisputable. Similarly, the arguments in favour of immediate federal action in this area are compelling. He said that what is needed now is for the federal Government to recognize this fact and to take the initiative in designing and implementing a comprehensive pollution control plan that will make a real contribution to improving our national environment.

Toby Vigod of CELA went on to say that the Environmental Protection Act as currently worded does not take the initiative. She pointed out that the Minister has brought forward new amendments that will provide that federal regulations may not apply if equivalent provisions are enforced in a province. She states that they have reviewed the submissions filed by the Alberta Environmental Law Centre and share their concerns regarding these new amendments. Thus there is a viewpoint in the West and a viewpoint in the East.

"Besides being rather unwieldy in terms of determining what constitutes equivalency," she said, "we are concerned that, again, there appears to be a deliberate attempt by the Government not to regulate in the area of toxic chemicals." She went on to point out that federal law should not be applied in a patchwork fashion. As well, there is a real constitutional argument that federal facilities operating in provinces with only so-called provincial equivalent regulations will totally be exempt from regulations. That is a big sore point that will come up later in my intervention.

She concluded by giving an example to which I would like to refer. She said that a federal facility in Ontario emitting a toxic chemical in excess of Ontario's equivalent regulations could argue, if charged with a breach of such regulations, that it is immune from the application of provincial laws because it is a federal facility. A much better course is to have strong minimum national standards and to then let the provinces enact stricter regulations where they feel it is appropriate. She went on to make specific suggestions.

It is a matter of great concern in the environmental community, and I suppose that this community embraces everybody who is concerned about our health, our natural resources, and the long-term interest of our economy, that here the Government made the wrong turn, the wrong decision.

Miss Vigod concluded by saying: "I think that in the area of environment public opinion is behind a strong national role". These are prophetic words of four months ago, because a few days ago we saw a poll confirming that.

Miss Vigod went on to say: "I think we should see it tested in the courts. We have seen the other happen: the provinces have tested their law and seen federal entities have charges dismissed on the basis of Crown immunity". That is the danger. She urged: "Let us try having strong federal law and take that challenge in the courts. I think it is time to put our money where our mouth is and I think the public and the courts are slowly becoming more attuned to environmental issues", which is another very sound political observation.

Miss Vigod, on behalf of CELA, further said: "Certainly when we appear in court now we get a far better hearing than we did 10 or 15 years ago. I think those issues are of national concern. In the area of toxic chemical law we have these other features. Air pollutants and water pollutants do not respect provincial boundaries, and they are causing significant economic and environmental damage in this country".

She concluded by saying: "I say let us take that challenge. If it is struck down, then either we will be able to redefine how we will enact the role or the pressure really will come to bear on the provinces. There has always been a bit of jurisdictional buck passing. I think the time for federal standards is now. This is why we have also recommended that the power to enact standards be put specifically in this legislation". Several of us tried in the subsequent committee hearings, without succeeding.

Let me quote what was stated by another constitutional lawyer, Ian Blue from Toronto, and what he told us a few days later. On January 20 Mr. Blue started by asking: "How does this Canadian Environmental Protection Act impinge upon those powers? Provinces too can make environmental laws and they do it under their power to legislate with respect to property and civil rights, their licensing power, and their power with respect to provincial works and undertakings. You do not have a case where one jurisdiction has the authority and the other does not". That is a very important point that he made. "You have a situation where each has jurisdiction. Each can legislate over the subject of the environment, but from a different aspect. There the legal rules are fairly clear. The rules say that unless there is an operational conflict, both laws can prevail".

Mr. Blue said: "What is an operational conflict?" Mr. Blue further stated: "Recently, I was involved in a case in the Ontario Divisional Court where we were talking about the construction of a liquid natural gas storage facility in Cobourg, Ontario. The Ontario Energy Board was hearing it and there was a National Energy Board Act and regulations. Both sets of provisions covered it. The argument was that there was an operational conflict. However, the judges said nothing conflicted. Therefore, unless the provincial law says one thing and the federal law says another so that you create an antinomy or a place where a person is in an impossible position between two valid laws, then both can stand. I believe I am correct that this is the law".

He also said: "Now if there is a conflict then the law is pretty clear too". What does it say, Mr. Speaker? "The federal legislation prevails, the provincial legislation must give way". That is the conclusion of Ian Blue.

Mr. Blue also had something interesting to say on overlapping jurisdiction. He said:

> It is a well known principle that where Parliament can legislate over a topic under s.91 from one aspect, and the provinces can legislate over the same topic on another aspect that both pieces of legislation are valid. If, however, the two pieces of legislation have an operational conflict and create an antinomy then the provincial legislation is rendered inoperative and the federal legislation must prevail.

How does that now apply to Bill C-74? Mr. Blue further remarked:

> If, therefore, Bill C-74 conflicts with existing provincial legislation, it is my opinion that existing provincial legislation must be inoperative to the extent of the conflict and Bill C-74 must prevail. I hasten to add that this is a legal opinion and not a political opinion . . .

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the politicians in power, the so-called Progressive Conservative Government, did not heed this legal advice, and did not see the opportunity being offered to them by the Constitution, and by the experts. They simply put it aside and chose to go for this equivalency route, on which I will dwell for a little while later on.

Perhaps in a lighter vein it is interesting to note that the worries were not only on the side of the provinces, and that there were also worries on the side of the federal position. In the case of Conseil du Patronat du Québec, the view from industry there expressed by Mr. Magnant was a search for a federal protection from the apparently very effective policies of the provincial Minister of the Environment in Quebec. This is what Mr. Magnant said to us in committee on December 16:

> That protects us from the Government of Quebec.

[English]

"CELA" being the federal legislation.

> We think that the federal Government is a little less strict than the Government of Quebec.
> That is the opinion of Quebec businessmen.

I think it was a rather solitary viewpoint, but nevertheless it provided a touch of diversion from what most of us believe, and quite rightly so, because of the experience we have made with social and economic legislation and now emerging with environmental legislation, that really it is only the federal Government that can provide the national standards that are strong enough to protect this enormous natural resource that nature has given us, namely, the environment as a whole.

Inevitably, Mr. Speaker, I have to bring to your attention what this equivalency business is all about. It has now become a current word, at least in this legislation, and in present times in Ottawa, and it is not a concept that one can easily come to grips with. One has to wrestle with it before becoming comfortable with that concept. It is a notion we reject, but it is important to understand it. I will commence by quoting Miss Elizabeth Swanson of the Environmental Law Centre for Alberta. Last December Miss Swanson said to the committee the following:

> The first matter we would like to discuss is the failure of this bill to create a strong federal presence in the area of environmental protection. Throughout the legislative history of this bill, the federal government, through its Minister of Environment, promised Canadians a strong federal presence in the area of environmental protection. This came as good news to those of us who had long awaited a government response to many pressing environmental issues which appear to require a national if not a global resolution. Regrettably the provisions of this legislation as it now stands fail to achieve this objective.
> The tone of this bill is apologetic rather than assertive. A conciliatory rather than a leadership approach appears to have been adopted. Consider by way of example subclause 37(4) which says that, pursuant to this provision, the Minister can only recommend regulations if, firstly, he has offered to consult with the provinces, secondly, he has consulted or the time for doing so has elapsed and, finally, he is satisfied that the provinces themselves are not going to enact similar legislation.

She goes on to say that Bill C-74 "prohibits the making of an emergency order until, among other things, the provinces have been consulted and the Minister is satisfied that appropriate provincial action is not forthcoming." She went on to say:

> —the failure of the federal government to assume responsibility for the enactment and enforcement of comprehensive environmental legislation cannot be attributed to a lack of constitutional competency.

> With exclusive jurisdiction over criminal law, the federal government has always had the power to create offences and impose sanctions to enforce its own legislation. In our view, the amendments very recently put forward by the Environment Minister further erode the federal presence in this area.
> The consultation approach of subclauses 37(4) and 38(2) have now been replaced by the concept of equivalency. If these amendments go forward, Cabinet will have the authority to pass an order declaring that particular and valid federal regulations do not apply in a province which has enacted and agreed to enforce equivalent provisions.

And I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, "equivalent" provisions.

> This concept of equivalency surfaces again in the proposed amendments to clause 57, which concerns international air pollution. Beyond the obvious questions, such as the meaning of equivalency and the criteria by which this quality will be assessed, is a fundamental concern.
> By entrenching this notion of equivalent provincial legislation, is the federal government not implicitly recognizing the competency of the provinces to legislate in an area of federal jurisdiction—

What an indictment this statement is. What far-reaching consequences this proposal, if passed, will have. Ms. Swanson continued:

> —and given this recognition, what is to stop the provinces from challenging the constitutional competency of the federal government to enact legislation where the provinces' own is not recognized as being equivalent?

> It does not appear to us either that equivalency reduces or eliminates duplication of legislative effort. To determine whether one legislation is equivalent to another, both must be in existence in one form or another. Delegation of enforcement is one thing. Abrogation of legislative competency is quite another.

There then followed some suggestions, all of which were ignored by the Government.

We also had the viewpoint of Toby Vigod, of the Environmental Law Association, who asked:

For example, does "equivalent" mean that the province also has equivalent enforcement provisions, or that the sections are very close in wording, or how close is equivalent?

That is the question. She went on to say:

I think the other fundamental issue is the constitutional issue—that if we have a patchwork of laws where in some cases federal regulation applies and in other cases so-called provincial-equivalent regulations apply, then I have suggested federal industries charged under the provincial-equivalent regulations may bring forward an argument of Crown immunity, as they have brought forward under our existing situation.

Again, the same preoccupation we heard from the individuals from Alberta. She concluded as follows:

I think there is a danger in enacting these amendments, both for the word "equivalent" and what it may mean, and this potential constitutional problem.

On behalf of Toxic Watch Project, we heard from the Project Director, Mr. Brad Wylynko. Again, his major concern had to do with the question of "equivalency".

One might think that undue time was devoted to the question of equivalency, and that would be a justified impression were it not for the fact that the concept of "equivalency" is of paramount importance in terms of the implementation of Bill C-74, as I am sure that the Hon. Member for Red Deer will agree.

Mr. Wylynko had the following to say on the question of "equivalency":

We feel this is a very dangerous concept. I am not a constitutional lawyer, but one of the dangers we see here is that the federal government may in fact be giving up its role in environmental protection through this concept in future. If the provinces are allowed to start to legislate in replacing the federal rule, down the road will it be possible for the federal government to then come back and say they have responsibilities and obligations here they must fulfil?

I feel very strongly about this. We feel there needs to be a strong federal presence in the environment. When I look out the window of where I work, I see the North Saskatchewan River, and of course it flows from the Rocky Mountains right into Hudson Bay.

Any toxic chemical pollutant that might be in that river flows similarly, right across three prairie provinces.

I believe there needs to be a strong federal presence and, in fact, a strong international presence as well, which this bill will reduce.

Mr. Speaker, I see that we are approaching one o'clock. May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CHALLENGE'88

OPPOSITION TO BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, over the week-end, in my riding I had the opportunity to meet several young students who expressed their great disappointment with the decision of the Tory Government to cut by nearly 40 per cent the funds earmarked for the Challenge'88 program for all students living in the Greater Montreal area and the City of Laval ridings.

Two weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I urged Tory Members representing these ridings to pressure the Minister into changing his mind and treat fairly these young men and women who are attending school. Unfortunately there has been no response, and I am afraid the student population will remember the lack of interest shown by Tory Members representing such ridings as Hochelaga—Maisonneuve, Duvernay, and Laval.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

ANNIVERSARY OF CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR REACTOR DISASTER

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, two years ago today, on April 26, 1986, the nuclear reactor at Chernobyl in Ukraine exploded, sending out a cloud of radiation which spread throughout the world. To this day, we do not know the full impact of the disaster.

For 48 hours the Soviet Government lowered a veil of secrecy over the tragedy even though other lives were endangered by its silence. For those with family in eastern Europe and Ukraine it was a frightening experience, as weeks passed before they were able to confirm the safety of their loved ones.

The possibility of a design flaw which might have caused the disaster has never been addressed, yet the Soviets proceed with plans to build more reactors in Ukraine. In the meantime, families who were exposed to radiation wait in fear, worrying about the long-term effects of their exposure, uncertain of their future, with no guarantee that it might not happen again.

I urge all Members of this House to join with me in commemoration of this tragic occasion, remembering those who have died, and those who must live with the uncertainty of tomorrow.

INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION

CANADA-SOVIET SKI EXPEDITION REACHES NORTH POLE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Members of the House today would like to join me in acknowledging the great feat of the Canada-Soviet ski expedition on reaching the North Pole.

At 3.20 a.m. eastern daylight time, this group of four Canadians and nine Soviets achieved what until now was simply their dream. This is the story of ability to overcome numerous obstacles in the pursuit of a goal. The members of this expedition not only have had to deal with a cold, harsh climate, but also they have had to overcome the obstacles of different languages and different cultures.

As a Parliamentarian I am impressed with the co-operation and good will shown by these trekkers. This "Polar Bridge" expedition will help us to understand the importance of Canada-Soviet co-operation and is symbolic of the kind of international good will of which Canada can be a part.

About 40 Canadian and Soviet government representatives were planning to be at ceremonies at the North Pole. This group included superstar hockey player, Vladislav Tretiak, and our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse). While flying conditions did not allow the dignitaries to witness the expedition's arrival at the North Pole, the spirit of Canada-Soviet peaceful co-operation has already been enhanced.

I, with other Members, congratulate the members of the Canadian team: Laurie Dexter, Richard Weber, Max Buxton, and Chris Holloway for their part in this historic occasion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL ORGAN DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

BENEFITS OF TRANSPLANTATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Members of the House and the general public are reminded that this week is National Organ Donor Awareness Week.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is collaborating with others in special efforts to inform the public and health professionals of the benefits of transplantation and the need for donor organs and tissues.

All Canadians should take a moment to consider organ donation through which each of us can make the most generous gift, the gift of life.

SOCIAL SECURITY

OVERPAYMENTS TO INDIVIDUALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with a problem that arises fairly frequently, regrettably, where a Government makes an overpayment to an individual under a social program.

Where the individual has had no complicity in this payment being made, it is a very unfair thing for a Government to demand repayment and to deduct sums from future payments to reclaim the amount. Individuals do not have a computer when they get a payment. They tend to assume the amount correct, and live on it.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), raised an example of veterans' payments where overpayments occur, but the situation often occurs with other social payments.

The Government should have a policy that when an overpayment is made through no complicity by the individual who receives it, the Government should not reclaim repayment for excess amounts that are paid.

FINANCE

FLOW THROUGH SHARES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW HIS POSITION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, investors have been extremely cautious, especially since the October 19 Crash. Several years ago, flow through shares were created as an investment incentive in mining exploration in Canada.

Flow through shares have been a success story in Abitibi-Témiscamingue and elsewhere in Canada and so far in the 1980's, rich gold deposits have been found in greater number than during all the past gold rushes put together.

The Crash of last October and the tax reform have severely affected the value of natural resources shares especially those involving small businesses.

Twice a year, tax shelters are selling well: at the end of the year and in May. Without these flow through shares, we could certainly not have found so many gold mines so quickly.

Mr. Speaker, we certainly have an excellent Minister of Finance in Canada, but I would suggest to him to review his position by the end of April concerning flow through shares, failing which I would have to use a more vociferous tone in May on behalf of our prospectors and my Abitibi riding.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CHIEF SEATTLE'S SPEECH IN 1854

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) prepares to go to Washington, I thought it appropriate to pass on to him words spoken more than a century ago and repeated this week by Anthony Ketchum in a letter to The Globe and Mail.

Before selling his native lands to the U.S. Government in 1854, Chief Seattle made a speech which included the following:

> The air is precious to the red man for all things share the same breath—the beast, the tree, the man. The white man does not seem to notice the air he breathes. Like a man dying for many days he is numb to the stench . . .
> If we sell you our land you must keep it apart and sacred, as a place where even the white man can go to taste the wind that is sweetened by the meadow's flowers.
> So we will consider your offer to buy our land. If we decide to accept, I will make one condition. The white man must treat the beast (and fish, birds) of this land as his brothers.
> Teach your children what we have taught our children: that the earth is our mother. All things are connected like the blood which unites one family. If men spit upon the ground, they spit upon themselves. Continue to contaminate your bed and you will one night suffocate in your own waste.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

FRANCE'S UNDERGROUND TESTS IN SOUTH PACIFIC

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, recently France shifted its underground nuclear tests from the South Pacific atoll of Mururoa to the island of Fangataufa, just 32 kilometres away. This move was made after 90 underground tests were conducted, and the island's structural integrity began to be questioned.

I believe that conducting underground nuclear testing on South Pacific islands which are mostly extinct volcanoes, is like playing Russian roulette with the environment. This region of the world has been fortunate that the atoll of Mururoa did not break up and release its deadly radiation into the ocean, creating an environmental disaster of epic proportions.

Canada must make its concerns known to France that testing in this area of the world could have severe repercussions on life.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

NUCLEAR REACTORS SURROUNDING GREAT LAKES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, two years ago today the Chernobyl disaster occurred, although Soviet officials had said very smugly after Three Mile Island that a Three Mile Island could not happen at Chernobyl. Now Canadian officials are saying that there could not be a Chernobyl at Pickering.

If that is the case, then why is the nuclear industry so concerned about keeping nuclear liability down to $75 million, a paltry sum given the possibility of disaster? Even if there is no accident, do we not all realize that we have no safe means of disposal of either high-level of low-level radioactive wastes?

It is time that we began to look at safe renewable sources of energy. We cannot risk the future. We cannot risk the health of Canadians.

There are 50 nuclear reactors around the Great Lakes, and 24 million people depend for their drinking water on the Great Lakes. This is too much of an experiment. Let us have faith in the future by turning to safe means for energy sources, and admit that nuclear was a mistake.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE ON COMMERCIAL CREDIT

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, on April 13, I had the honour and the privilege of speaking to members of the Canadian Credit Institute on a topic of current interest that is extremely important to Canadians, and I am referring to the impact of free trade on business credit. As a result of this talk, we were able to draw certain conclusions. First of all, the free trade agreement will strengthen our economy and make us more competitive on world markets and even more confident about our own identity and our unique social and cultural environment.

Furthermore, the agreement will provide for new jobs and economic growth in the regions, both today and beyond the year 2000, and above all it will guarantee better access to our main export market.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that only people with a positive mind-set are able to meet this challenge successfully.

It is a matter of attitude, not just aptitude, and if we understand that, the rest will take care of itself.

Canadians believe in an enterprising and innovative Canada.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY'S FINANCIAL SITUATION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, a few days from now, on May 6, an Ottawa business will lay off 25 per cent of its employees without notice and without any assistance or adjustment programs for those who are laid off.

Because it was unable to manage its own affairs, the Liberal Party of Canada is broke, and its staff is paying the price. This Party is no longer in power. It can no longer raise taxes or get deeper into debt as it did before.

We will soon see whether the banks will declare this Party bankrupt. How could the Liberals run the country and administer the public purse, when they would rather maintain a vacant luxury apartment in Toronto for their Leader than save these jobs in Ottawa.

Their policy is: Never mind the staff—save the furniture!

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

LIST OF APPOINTEES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, have you ever heard of Sylvia Gold, Hamilton Southam, Bud Drury, Roch Bolduc, Denis de Belleval, Pierre Fortin, Jean-Roch Boivin, Claude Castonguay, Bernard Lamarre, Antoine Turmel, Harrison McCain, Ken Danby, Catherine McKinnon, Bob White, Wally Majesky, Saul Cherniak, Gerry Caplan, Favian Sauvageau, Lloyd Francis, or Geoffrey Pearson?

They are just a few of the hundreds of persons who either belong to the Liberal Party or the NDP, or who have no known political affiliation, and who have been given a so-called patronage appointment by the present Government.

ROAD SAFETY

INVITATION TO MINISTER TO ACT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, to improve road safety, the Quebec Government has declared 1988 the Quebec Year for Road Safety.

According to a recent survey, 74 per cent of Canadians buckle up. The Province of Quebec ranks first in Canada, with 85.8 per cent in 1987, compared with 67.7 per cent the year before. This is an increase of 18.1 per cent in one year.

Many road accidents are now avoided, Mr. Speaker, thanks to the new safety awareness of Canadians and Quebecers.

However, much remains to be done in this area. Many laws and regulations should be reconsidered. We could, for instance, question driving at the age of 16. We could also consider reducing the maximum number of demerit points to four, in the case of 16 and 17-year old drivers. Furthermore, trucks and buses should be treated the same as cars.

I would ask the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to look into the highway safety issue and urge him to take the appropriate corrective action as soon as possible.

HOSPITALS

LASALLE GENERAL HOSPITAL FOUNDATION WEEK

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, this week in my riding has been designated to celebrate the founding of La Salle General Hospital.

There will be a host of community activities to generate much needed funds that will be used to purchase specialized hospital equipment adapted to local health needs.

Our La Salle Foundation takes pride in collecting about $125,000 annually, through its dedicated volunteers, from our local merchants, business people and professionals, as well as various donations from generous benefactors.

The organizers of these festivities, headed by Mr. André Langelier, deserve our admiration for their endless dedication and their compassion for their fellow citizens suffering from diseases that require special health care.

Bravo and many thanks to the La Salle General Hospital Fondation!

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

BURNABY, B.C.—COLLAPSE OF ROOF ON NEW FOOD STORE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday morning in South Burnaby a near disaster occurred in which some 20 people were injured, two of them seriously. The roof of the Save-on-Foods store collapsed during the opening day ceremonies to which senior citizens from the community were invited.

I am deeply concerned that a number of important questions be answered with respect to this tragedy. There must be a full public inquiry to determine, for example, whether in the rush to complete this project safety standards were not fully met. There must be a full inquiry to determine whether the fact that non-union labour was used in the latter stages of construction was an element in this tragedy.

Certainly those seniors who attended that opening ceremony on Saturday morning hoped to attend a festive event. Instead, there could have been hundreds of people killed had it not been for the courage of the Mayor of Burnaby, Bill Copeland, in warning of impending disaster.

We must get to the bottom of this matter. We hope that the slogan posted at the store, "I saved big at Station Square", was not the slogan of those who built this store, possibly at the expense of human life.

AIR CANADA

MAINTENANCE WORK ON PROPOSED NEW AIRCRAFT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Deputy Prime Minister on the subject of Air Canada. He keeps saying that he has answered a straightforward question but, unfortunately, no one in Manitoba yet understands his answer.

I have heard his 57 varieties of assurances to Winnipeg, but none of those assurances can be accepted if he will not give a simple answer to this question. Will the fleet of aircraft which replaces the current 727s have its maintenance done in Winnipeg?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question using the information which was provided to me by Air Canada. If the hon. gentleman does not want to take my word for it, surely he should take the word of Air Canada.

The press release went on to say:

> Air Canada is very pleased with the work being done here and we fully intend to keep using these facilities, whether to maintain the B-727 replacement fleet or one of the other aircraft types we already own.

The Hon. Member knows very well that under the provisions of the Air Canada Act, 1977, a mandate was given to the management to operate the airline in a manner consistent with commercial principles and in contemplation of profit. Surely he understands that that decision-making authority is within their hands.

I have indicated that, in the course of the public participation offering, the Winnipeg maintenance base and the Dorval and Toronto centres will be dealt with as part of the conditions of the privatization process. I thought I made myself very clear yesterday.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister remains pathetically opaque. That is what the people of Winnipeg think.

WORK GUARANTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, you will notice that the press release to which the hon. gentleman referred gave an Air Canada guarantee, which it will not be able to fulfil under privatization, in favour of its present fleet of 727s or aircraft it already owns. That is what the Deputy Prime Minister just said.

He knows that the 727 is being phased out. He also knows, therefore, that that particular maintenance work will no longer be done in Winnipeg. He says that he cannot say whether the replacement aircraft will be maintained in Winnipeg, and the guarantee which Air Canada has given refers only to current aircraft, 727s or other aircraft currently owned.

Exactly what is the nature of the work guarantee the Minister is giving to the maintenance workers in Winnipeg? Will he please tell the people of Manitoba which aircraft will have its maintenance done at the facility in Winnipeg?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question. I note that today Bernard Gillies, the airline's vice president for maintenance, said in an interview in Montreal that the airline is leaning toward a new airplane being serviced in Winnipeg.

Since a decision has not yet been made with regard to the type of aircraft that will be purchased, I am sure that, as has been said time and again, the Winnipeg maintenance base will remain as an integral and vital part of the airline operation.

I should point out that in addition to maintaining its own aircraft, the Air Canada Winnipeg maintenance base also performs a lot of maintenance work on other aircraft. It is a profit-making venture. Why would Air Canada want to downgrade a profit-making venture which provides good service and has become a source of pride to the airline and to the workers? Why would it want to degrade it? I know that the Hon. Member may want to, but we on this side certainly do not want to, and neither does Air Canada.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I read the statement of Bernard Gillies, Air Canada's vice-president for maintenance in Winnipeg, as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press. Mr. Gillies went on to say: "The recommendations I've got so far from my people lean toward Winnipeg", but he is still hedging on a commitment because Montreal has more advance technology and a larger facility. That is some guarantee from Air Canada.

Two weeks ago when the Deputy Prime Minister got up in this House, he did not give a legislative guarantee to the maintenance base. Yesterday, prodded by his errant travelling Minister of National Health and Welfare, his colleague, he said there will be a legislative guarantee. How can he give that guarantee if he does not know, or will not say, what the aircraft to replace the 727 fleet is going to be? How can he give that guarantee with any assurance? How can he give the guarantee if he privatizes the aircraft line and knows that the 45 per cent shares, privately owned, are going to govern his own shares held in his hands? How can he do that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman referred to me as being opaque. I can only say in return that he is pretty dense because, if he had anything between his two ears, he would read and understand what I said as reported at page 14363 of Hansard, and I repeat again for about the fifteenth time:

While full details of this initiative will be contained in the legislation—

And then I went on to list them, and included in that was the major operational and overhaul centres.

I am sorry the right hon. gentleman cannot understand simple English.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior.

An Hon. Member: You said the same thing about Moncton.

Ms. Copps: That's what you said about the CN shops, Maz.

An Hon. Member: We can't trust you, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will put my trust up against yours and his any day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I will put my reputation up against yours any day—and yours, too.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Order!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are you going to ask the same question tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior has the floor.

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES TAX INCENTIVE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I want to return again to the issue of the flow through tax incentive which, as he knows, is so valuable in the exploration and development of non-renewable resources. It is acknowledged that this is one of the most useful tools for regional economic development devised by Government. It is helping northern Quebec, northern Ontario, and northern Manitoba. It is acknowledged that it has given us 30 new mines in the last two years.

The Prospectors and Developers Association of Canada strongly supports it, as does the Mining Association of Canada. Why does the Minister of Finance continue to be so stubborn and insist that this useful tax measure be scaled down? It creates jobs and helps our resource regions. Why does the Minister not want to keep it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not a stubborn man.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think my colleagues and my Party understand that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With Mike, it is "ask and ye shall receive".

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am usually quite reasonable on matters that are raised by colleagues in this House. I am always willing to listen to points of view that are being expressed.

The Hon. Member made reference to the fact that these flow through shares are important in Quebec, Ontario, and Manitoba. I also point out to him that I was in New Brunswick this past weekend and there are people there who are very supportive of the flow through share mechanism. That is why we have maintained the flow through share mechanism.

I have indicated in this House that when a mechanism does produce rates of return of 90 per cent and thereabouts, it is time to have a look at it and see whether some reassessment should be made. That is what we are in the process of doing.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON DRILLING ACTIVITIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister mentioned New Brunswick since it is reported by Canadian Press that the Minister said in New Brunswick on Saturday that, because of flow-throughs, "there was a lot of exploratory drilling that was not geologically warranted". That is a serious allegation to be made by a Minister of the Crown.

What proof does the Minister have for making that charge? Will he table in the House a list of all those projects that he regards as being unwarranted?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have the same newspaper report to which the Hon. Member has referred. That particular point has been made on a number of occasions. When there is a tax incentive that is quite rich it does tend to generate excessive amounts of funding. Any of the people whom we have talked to who are involved in flow-through share financing have said that the levels of financing of $1.2 billion or $1.3 billion that were reached last year were too much, that it could not be handled properly, and that it was force-feeding the drilling exploration sector.

I will close with this remark. I said:

> We now want a balance. We want to see a continuation of drilling activity, but not the situation of 1987 that saw drilling programs that did not deserve to be undertaken.

I stand by that statement.

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Friday in the House the Minister asserted the Government's commitment to obtaining an accord with the United States on acid rain that would commit both Governments to specific levels of reductions in emissions. Regrettably, earlier in the week the Minister of the Environment publicly said, and I use his words, that the Government had no expectation of any progress at the summit.

Then, on the weekend, in interviews with a number of American journalists, the Prime Minister seemed to pin all his hopes on the potential successors to President Reagan. Once again he was implying that nothing could be expected from the summit.

My question to the Minister is simply this. If the Government is serious about obtaining some commitment in the meetings in Washington that are coming up, why in heaven's name is the Minister saying he does not expect anything? Why is the Prime Minister sending a message to the President in advance that he does not expect anything? Is that any way to negotiate?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that may occur because we are under an obligation, which we respect, to answer questions in the House of Commons and elsewhere. We try to do that as frankly and forthrightly as we can.

We very much hope that we can make progress on acid rain at the summit and in other meetings. However, we do not expect that we are going to have the kind of progress that we seek. Consequently, we are continuing to seek progress across the range of the American system on the acid rain question which is so crucial to us. I think that position, which is consistent and effective, has been understood by the Americans, and is understood by most Canadians.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it certainly does not say much for the special relationship that is supposed to have existed between the President and our Prime Minister for four years.

Since the Minister is evidently sincere about his commitment to obtaining such an accord, and since he is being frank with the House about his low expectations from the President, in non-inflammatory language why does the Government of Canada not say that as a bottom line what we will take as a minimum at this summit—after considering all the information on the seriousness of acid rain available to both countries—is that President Reagan should commit himself to specific levels of reductions in emissions? Why do we not say that in advance?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that position has been made clear by the Government of Canada in a draft treaty or agreement that we prepared. It was prepared by Canada as a consequence of the undertaking that was given here on the floor of the House of Commons by President Reagan.

As was the case when I answered a very similar question on Friday in the House, I do not have the precise text of his speech here, but my recollection is quite clear that he then said that he was prepared to consider the Prime Minister's proposal for an accord. We followed that up and made some recommendations that included reference to specific targets.

That is the Canadian position, as, by the way, and the Hon. Member will recall this, it was the position of a preceding Canadian Government with respect to the Great Lakes Water Agreement on which the Americans wanted, at that time, to avoid establishing specific targets, and the Government of the day in 1972, to its credit, insisted on that type of standard and target. We are following the same type of approach with respect to acid rain.

TALKS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the Minister correctly, he suggested that the U.S. Government refused to accept suggestions made by the Canadian Government not long ago. If the U.S. Government took this position, would the Minister confirm that our Prime Minister and the President intend to discuss this matter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear the Prime Minister will raise the acid rain issue again in conversations with the President of the United States. It is also quite clear that the Prime Minister will emphasize the importance of formulating certain specific standards in an agreement. The President himself, speaking here in the House, proposed to act on the Prime Minister's suggestion for an agreement. We have followed up on this suggestion with proposals in the form of a draft treaty, an agreement between two countries. This was not accepted by the U.S. administration, but in future we may be able to have something similar that is acceptable.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

VETERANS ALLOWANCE—EFFECT OF CANADA PENSION PLAN LEGISLATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, today there are thousands of veterans and senior citizens from British Columbia to Newfoundland who are getting quite a shock when they open their mail and discover that their veterans allowance is being reduced anywhere from $400 to $600 a month.

I want to ask whatever Minister is answering on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, was the Government aware, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare announced the new scheme for Canada Pension some two years ago whereby people could draw Canada Pension from 60 years of age and over, that if a person was a veteran, the spouse of a veteran, or a member of such a household, the veterans allowance would be reduced 16 months later by that same amount on April 26, 1988? If the Government knew about it at that time, why did it not inform the veterans?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, in representing the Minister of National Health and Welfare today, I can inform the Hon. Member that the manner in which the Canadian Pension Plan scheme works is that it does provide that they assess the benefits and other benefits that come in.

The reason why it is done at this point in time is because the Department of Veterans Affairs forgives whatever overpayment is made in one fiscal year, and only applies whatever measures have to be applied as of April of the next year. That is why it is at this point in time precisely that the adjustments are being made.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, there are thousands and thousands of veterans from coast to coast who have been receiving this $600 now for one year and four months, along with their veterans allowance. Today it is being cut off. Perhaps the Government thought that there would be an election in the meantime.

Is the Minister aware that in Newfoundland alone there are some 1,000 cases of those veterans today, and tomorrow there will be thousands and thousands of other veterans and seniors across Canada as they open their mail who actually thought that that was going to be a part of their income for the rest of their lives, and so did the banks that loaned them money for cars and mortgages for homes.

Since they cannot now pay those bills, and it was government mismanagement that caused the problem, what is the Government going to do about it?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I think that Members on all sides of the House can only regret that the Hon. Member would think that any partisan consideration would ever come into play when this Government has dealt with veterans.

If there is one thing that has been amply clear for this Government in terms of priorities, it has been the way that we have treated veterans from day one of our election.

That is why we have made some adjustments to permit veterans to benefit from certain pension plans. If there are any adjustments that have to be made, the Government, consistent with the attitude that we have had from the very beginning towards those very special citizens, the veterans of Canada, will make whatever adjustments we can to make things easier for them.

REQUEST FOR ADJUSTMENT MEASURE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Hon. Minister who, in a sense, has now explained the errors that the Government has committed and the fact that serious adjustments need to be made for those men and women who were prepared to give their lives for this country.

Now that the problem has been identified and an adjustment is necessary, what steps does the Government plan to take to ease the pain, knowing that the pensions that veterans receive enable them to live at a very modest and meagre level in any part of the country? What new adjustment does the Minister plan to announce, and when does he plan to announce it?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap that, from the very beginning, the Government has only had the very highest regard for the very special citizens of Canada who are veterans.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Lip-service.

Mr. Charest: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques would like to have us believe that it is only lip-service, but I think that any reasonable Member of this House would agree that the Minister of Veterans Affairs in this Government has done a great deal for veterans.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: Whatever adjustments have been put forward have always been put forward in the light of trying to help and do more for the veterans of Canada. The Government will pursue that course.

POLICY ON VETERANS DESIGNATED AWOL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has indicated that the Government has the highest regard for veterans and it is proud of the manner in which it has treated veterans.

Thousands of young men, boys, really, when they returned from the last war, and who left the services before receiving their demobilization papers, were considered to be AWOL and consequently not eligible for benefits as veterans. These men and women served in the Pacific and in Europe, yet these veterans and their spouses have been denied benefits for years and years.

If the Minister, as he said, is concerned about veterans and concerned about providing equity and fairness not only to veterans but to their spouses and families, is the Minister prepared to look into the cases of these thousands of men and women who, at the end of the war, decided to go to jobs and to find employment, and consequently missed that final paper work? Would he commit the Government now to reviewing the Government's policy regarding those individuals to ensure that they receive just and fair treatment, because it has denied them on every occasion up to this point?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap will know that he has written me two letters on the case of one person out of the 14,000 people who were dealt with by Order in Council in 1946. The matter was reviewed once in 1972, and it was decided not to change the Order in Council of 1946.

If the Hon. Member wishes to bring the matter up for discussion before the Standing Committee on National Defence, I think it would be most appropriate. But, in the meantime, the decision at this stage has been that we will stay with the Order in Council that has been in force for the last 42 years.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: I hope the answer will merit as much applause, Mr. Speaker.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Senate has now adopted a resolution authorizing the issuance of a proclamation to amend the Constitution as prescribed by Section 47 of the Constitution Act of 1982, as the Deputy Prime Minister knows. There is no requirement in that Section that the resolution be the same as the one adopted by this House.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, why has the Government today, as a matter of fact, given notice that it will introduce the same resolution as that passed in the House last October, instead of trying to work out a consensus resolution with the Senate?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount will understand that, in the House of Commons, the resolution respecting the Meech Lake Accord met with overwhelming support. There was a unanimity on the floor of the House of Commons in respect of the Meech Lake Accord that was probably unparalleled in the history of constitutional amendments.

I do not wish to speculate in terms of what the Liberal Members of the Senate of Canada are up to. My only point is that we in this House ought to have the opportunity, at the earliest possible date, once again to stand in support of this historic Accord, so that we in Canada can again be united, with Quebec as part of our Confederation, and go on to a better Canada.

REQUEST FOR SUPREME COURT REFERRAL

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I was not asking for a political speech; I was asking for an opinion on the legality of the procedure.

If the Minister of Justice were to take the time to study the provisions involved in this particular procedure, he would recognize that some day the procedure will be challenged before the courts, and until that time we will not know whether the resolution has been validly adopted. The Minister of Justice could forestall that possibility by immediately referring the issue of the procedure to the Supreme Court of Canada on a reference case.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the suggestion made by the Hon. Member, I point out to him that we, as Parliamentarians, listened to the very best legal advice that we could receive with respect to the constitutionality of what we were proposing, and there was unanimous support for it.

After studying this matter in some detail, the committee was of the considered opinion that this proposal was fully within our abilities, and that in fact it was forward looking and consistent with the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

All the concerns raised were considered on the floor of the House, and there was unanimous support for the resolution. It is now time for us to move forward on this matter so that we can get on to annual constitutional conferences, where we can deal with the issues which have to be addressed. For the first time we will have the opportunity, on an annual basis, to discuss the evolution of our Constitution, with the outcome being a better Canada.

AEROSPACE

SPACE AGENCY—REQUEST THAT MINISTER ANNOUNCE HIS DECISION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Science and Technology. After a great deal of hesitation, the Government has finally decided to take part in the American space station. We in the Liberal Party, who were first to announce our support for locating the agency in Montreal, now believe that the Minister can no longer postpone announcing his decision.

Now that everybody knows the Liberals were first to announce their support for the space agency, could the Minister inform the House why he cannot announce right now that the space agency will be located in Montreal? Who in the Government is preventing this announcement from being made?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps part of the reason is that we are getting so many conflicting reports from the Liberal Party as to where the agency should be located.

Mr. Broadbent: Is that where you get your advice?

Mr. Oberle: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, for instance, has declared Ottawa as the proper place. The Leader of the New Democratic Party, yesterday, declared Montreal as the proper place for the agency.

An Hon. Member: At least he didn't say it should be in Oshawa.

Mr. Oberle: I am still looking at Prince George as a possible site.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: I can assure the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie that the location will be announced in due course.

INSISTENCE ON ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Quebecers are fed up with the Minister's shelly-shallying. What we want to know is this: Is the Government going to stop lying to the people? Will the space agency be located in Montreal, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the Province of Quebec, the Montreal region in particular, is a very significant centre in terms of the Canadian aerospace industry.

An Hon. Member: So is Ottawa!

Mr. Oberle: The decision as to the location of the national space agency will be made with the national interest in mind, and it will be made in due course.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

NON-DELIVERY OF UNION LEAFLETS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. The Minister will know that Canada Post officials have prevented postal union locals from mailing leaflets attacking the sharp decline in postal service, and have gone so far as illegally removing the leaflets in question from post office boxes in the city of Vancouver. In view of this violation—

An Hon. Member: That is because they do not tell the truth.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite says that the reason for this action on the part of Canada Post is that the leaflets do not tell the truth. Is Canada Post now starting to censor the mail?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Shirley "Carrtel".

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Burnaby has the floor, and I would ask Hon. Members to show him the courtesy of allowing him to put his question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, in view of this clear breach of the agreement with the postal unions, and in view of the fact that I learned just this morning, from speaking with the postmaster in St. Anthony, Newfoundland, that a first-class parcel of these leaflets delivered to his post office was not delivered, on the order of the Canada Post Corporation in Ottawa, what action is this Minister going to take to put a stop to this blatant abuse of power by Canada Post Corporation, in its attempt to censor the mail—and that is what it is, notwithstanding the view of some of the Canada Post management and some Tory back-benchers to the contrary?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on April 14 last, Canada Post and the postal unions were before the courts, and an agreement was entered into pursuant to which CUPW, LCUC and the CLC undertook, from that day onward, not to attribute to Canada Post, the employees of Canada Post, or the unionized employees of Canada Post, any advertisement in respect of postal service.

In other words, from that day forward, the unions agreed that, in sending out advertisements, putting up billboards, or running advertisements on the radio, they would identify those advertisements as being sponsored by the CLC, CUPW, or the LCUC. To do otherwise would be misleading.

An Hon. Member: Is that a court order?

Mr. Andre: The union is now saying that Canada Post must contribute to the distribution of this misleading leaflet, something which the unions agreed, in writing, they would not involve themselves in after April 14.

On April 28 next, Canada Post and the unions will again be before the courts, and the matter will be finally decided.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby, on a supplementary.

ACTIONS OF CORPORATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is selective in his reading. The agreement goes on to state: "Notwithstanding paragraph 2, it is understood by the parties that there are in existence at the present time certain leaflets. The respondents undertake that no further leaflets will be printed."

How can this Minister, responsible for Canada Post, defend the actions of Canada Post in going into private mailboxes, in interfering with first-class mail? When will this Minister show some leadership by putting an end to this attempt by Canada Post Corporation to muzzle the workers within that Corporation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): There is no attempt to muzzle the workers. In fact the workers object to the union leadership, the CLC, putting out brochures claiming that the content thereof is supported by the workers. In fact, it is not. It is the union leadership that is putting these leaflets out.

What would the Hon. Member say about Canada Post if it were to participate willingly and co-operatively in putting out brochures which are misleading and misrepresent the facts in terms of who sponsors them? Why doesn't the Hon. Member approach his union colleagues, the executives of this association, and ask them why they are afraid to identify themselves as the sponsors? Why are they afraid?

DISPUTE WITH EASTERN STEVEDORES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour and I wish to draw his attention and the Government's to the disastrous situation of labour relations in Eastern Canadian ports.

With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Beauce, the stevedores of the Great Lakes ports in Ontario, of Montreal and Trois-Rivières, Quebec, of Saint John, New Brunswick, and of Halifax, Nova Scotia, are all without collective agreements, Mr. Speaker.

As for Montreal, after three months of effort, mediator Laurent Picard was able to bring forward only a few partial recommendations, for lack of resources, and the longshoremen claim today that these recommendations are inadequate as a basis for negotiating a collective agreement.

I would like to ask the Minister when he will personally get involved before this conflict degenerates into a general strike that will paralyse the economy of the country.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to point out to my colleague that it is quite normal for parties to negotiate a collective agreement that has expired. That is the situation that now exists in all the ports named by my hon. colleague.

Negotiations are indeed under way and I would hope that the people at the Port of Montreal will do as those at the Port of Quebec did and reach an agreement.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET STEVEDORES ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows very well that it is not so simple. Except for the stevedores in the Port of Quebec who are negotiating, negotiations have broken down in all the other ports throughout Eastern Canada, as the Minister knows very well.

Furthermore, the stevedores have asked several times over several months to meet the Minister personally in order to tell him the extent of the problem and he has always refused to meet them.

Mr. Speaker, today, while the stevedores are on Parliament Hill, I would like to ask the Minister to kindly get off his high horse and give them a few minutes of his precious time in order to avoid this conflict degenerating into a strike.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, to get off one's high horse, one first must be on one. That was the situation the Liberals were in when they formed the Government. But we, Mr. Speaker, are on the same level as the people of Canada.

As for the negotiations, it is indeed true that the union asked to meet. I will immediately correct my hon. colleague by reminding him and the union that I met them already in Montreal last year and as far as the present request is concerned, the president of the union told me, "We believe that we should meet you as soon as possible to give you a detailed report of the situation."

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the "detailed report of the situation" should be made by the president to the members of his union and not to the Minister of Labour.

QUERY WHAT MINISTER WILL DO TO IMPROVE LABOUR RELATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Labour, who is ignoring the labour relations problems in the ports of eastern Canada and the St. Lawrence region.

Does the Minister realize that in Toronto, longshoremen have been sixteen months without an agreement with the Maritime Employers Association? In Montreal it has been 16 months, in Trois-Rivières 28 months, in Halifax four months, in Saint John five months . . .

Considering there is only one employer, the Maritime Employers' Association, how come not a single collective agreement has been signed in these five major ports? Isn't it because of the poor state of labour relations in these ports? And what does the Minister intend to do to improve labour relations in these centres?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is of course too bad that opposition Members always forget to mention the instance where a settlement was reached with the Employers' Association, and I am referring to the Port of Quebec City.

Mr. Speaker, in the case of the Port of Montreal, there were direct negotiations between the parties, followed by the appointment of a conciliation commissioner who worked with both parties for four months. All recommendations were rejected, not just a few but all.

Subsequently, a special mediator acceptable to the Union was appointed, in the person of Mr. Laurent Picard, and once again, the recommendations were rejected.

REQUEST THAT INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY COMMISSION BE APPOINTED

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that in Montreal the longshoremen did not hold a single face-to-face meeting with the employer while the special mediator was working, because of the refusal of the Maritime Employers' Association to negotiate in good faith?

Will the Minister agree to set up a commission of industrial inquiry which will look into the poor state of labour relations in the ports of eastern Canada and make positive recommendations for improvements?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I have mentioned before, the same employer group has already settled one collective agreement in the Port of Quebec, a fact that is always ignored by the Opposition.

There was a special mediator appointed in the person of Dr. Laurent Picard, who is an expert on the subject matter. I believe that Dr. Picard did everything to bring the parties together. The union should go back to its members and have a vote on the proposals.

MEDICINE

ACCUTANE—DANGERS TO HEALTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In his absence, I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Today, Canadians are disturbed at the news that in a confidential memo drafted by the U.S. Food and Drugs Administration, it is estimated that 1,300 babies were born with congenital defects because their mothers used an acne drug called Accutane.

I wish the Deputy Prime Minister would inform the House whether the Government plans to ban this drug from being prescribed in Canada?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, according to my information, the drug to which the Hon. Member from Outremont referred is being used in many countries. It seems it is the only drug of its kind that is effective in cases of severe acne.

Since the drug was put on the market in Canada, a warning has been included on the wrapper, stating clearly that it should not be used by women who are pregnant or who intend to become pregnant.

Meanwhile, the Department of National Health and Welfare is keeping a close watch on the pattern of consumption of these drugs in this country.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the problem is not whether pregnant women do or do not use this medication. The problem is that physicians prescribe this medication regardless.

We know for a fact that in many countries only dermatologists may prescribe this medication.

And until there is an investigation—will the Canadian Government undertake to conduct an investigation to find out whether claims that this medication has very serious side effects are true? And pending the results of this investigation, will the Government reserve the right to allow only dermatologists to prescribe this medication? I don't think it is up to pregnant women to make the decision. It is up to their physician.

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat intrigued by the way the Hon. Member formulated her question when she referred to decisions that have to be made by individuals about taking medication or other substances—ultimately, a person—but this is somewhat beside the point.

The fact remains that a clear warning is included in the package, stating that women should be particularly careful because of the problem to which the Hon. Member referred.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is keeping a very close watch on this development. Furthermore, it is working on projects with other countries, including the United States.

AUDITOR GENERAL

INTERNATIONAL AUDITING ACTIVITIES—LEGISLATIVE AUTHORIZATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board.

Last Friday the Minister of State for the Treasury Board assured the House that if the Auditor General wanted to legalize his presently illegal international auditing activities, all the Public Accounts Committee would have to do was to ask. For a number of years the Auditor General, the Public Accounts Committee and individual Members of this House asked the present Government and the former Government on numerous occasions to make changes to the Auditor General's Act, but each time the Government has taken no action. I wonder if the President of the Treasury Board will assure the House and give us the Government's undertaking that the same thing will not happen this time.

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for York East for the care and attention he is giving to the activities of the Auditor General. As Hon. Members know, the Auditor General reports directly to Parliament and is independent. He himself has raised questions about who watches the watchdog. I think the scrutiny the Hon. Member for York East has given to his activities indicates that this particular Hon. Member can really get his teeth into the issue.

In terms of the point he has raised today, I have asked my officials for an update on this issue. It was last dealt with by the Public Accounts Committee in May of 1986, and, as the Hon. Member says, the committee did indicate that there should be more frequent reporting. I will respond when that update is completed.

POSTAL SERVICES—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

Mr. Andre: This is overtime, you know.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question directly.

Mr. Hovdebo: Yesterday the Minister misled the House, not deliberately, I am sure, when he said that no one in Canada had suffered a reduction in postal service under the Conservative Government. This will come as a big surprise to those thousands of rural Canadians whose postal service has been taken away since September of 1984.

Is the Minister prepared to admit that he was wrong yesterday and that Canadians have suffered from postal service reduction? Will he change the wrong-headed policy direction he is giving to Canada Post Corporation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, Canada Post is under an active program of improvement of service. Just today, a report by Clarkson Gordon, the independent auditor, showed that its on-time deliveries have improved. Over the course of the next five years it will be opening 6,000 new postal outlets.

There are changes occurring because there are changes occurring in demography, the way people live and the way people conduct their personal affairs. Every change is not a diminution in service, although some people are upset by change, particularly New Democrats who are locked in the last century.

Mr. Speaker: There will be one single question from the Hon. Member for Abitibi and that will close Question Period.

FINANCE

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS FROM MINISTER

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns flow through shares. Last Thursday, the Minister said in the House, in answer to a question by my colleague and neighbour from Témiscamingue, and I quote:

> We had meetings to discuss the situation in the industry now, the situation after the stock market crash, after October 19, 1987, and I wish to say today that it will be possible in a few weeks to have a decision to rectify the situation.

Could the Minister provide further clarification? Are we talking about a matter of weeks or days, because prospectors and the people in Abitibi—Témiscamingue, Quebec and the rest of Canada would like to see a decision very shortly on flow through shares?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member's interest in the subject of flow through shares. My officials had several meetings with representatives from the industry, and last week, I met four people who also have an interest in this matter. I think it is feasible to reach a decision on this issue in a matter of weeks and perhaps very shortly. As I said at the end of last week, I realize it is important to communities in Abitibi to be able to increase the funds available for mining exploration.

POINT OF ORDER

WINNIPEG NEWSPAPER REPORT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises out of the spectacle we witnessed in the House yesterday and today regarding allegations with respect to the Air Canada maintenance base in Winnipeg. I have just been handed a document dated April 26 which is headlined: "Grits admit guessing on Air Canada". It goes on to say:

> Unproven allegations were included in Liberal campaign literature distributed yesterday, admits party president Morris Kaufman.
> Kaufman conceded that he had no evidence to back up claims that an Air Canada maintenance contract has already been awarded to Montreal instead of Winnipeg.

That is a quote from The Winnipeg Sun as of today, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is totally out of order for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to attempt to smuggle on to the record of the House of Commons something that he was not able to bring forward during Question Period. If he had confidence in what he was talking about, he would have raised it during Question Period, and I want to say—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Government Orders.

Ms. Copps: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Government Orders.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, just before the one o'clock break, you were patiently listening to an elaboration of Bill C-74, and I was taking you through the question of equivalency. At that time, I was drawing to your attention a statement made by Brad Wylynko of the Toxic Watch project when he tackled the matter of equivalency last December in committee. On this important development, the introduction of the concept of equivalency in a piece of federal legislation, he said the following:

> —the term "equivalency" is very ambiguous and vague. It is very difficult to pin down just what that term means. It is obviously not identical, or it should say that. I ask myself whether it could be equal in effect or equal in purpose.
> If that is the case, then I might give you a scenario. Let us say the Province of Alberta decides that under its Provincial Transport of Dangerous Goods Legislation, its regulations of PCB transportation within the province are equivalent—as equal in effect or equal in purpose—to the federal regulations. If it is argued as such, and Cabinet sees it as such, then the provincial legislation will be the one that is used.
> To what extent is it necessarily equal? Is it necessarily equal in all the standards, the standards of construction of the vehicles that are transporting the PCBs, the emergency equipment? To what level does this equality extend? To what degree of specificity does it extend?

Mr. Wylynko raises very important, fundamental questions. The third problem he raises with the term "equivalency" is the question of who then does the monitoring, assessment and enforcement under these equivalent provisions. That is a very important question.

One would assume, he argues, that if it is provincial legislation being used instead of federal legislation, then it would be provincial monitoring, enforcement and prosecution that would be used if there were a contravention of that legislation or regulation. Through this equivalency provision, the federal Government may be giving up the whole whereas under the federal legislation, there might be $1 million fines available for a breach of the legislation or regulation. Under the provincial legislation, again using the example of Alberta, it would be $25,000. You may be going against the entire intent of the Act by allowing the provincial legislation to be the legislation used in that case.

This morning I brought to your attention Dr. Alistair Lucas' statement on equivalency. He must be again brought back into this debate because he made the following statement to us on January 26:

> If some provincial legislation is accepted as equivalent under these provisions but other provincial legislation is not so that Bill C-74 applies in those provinces, you then have a patchwork of federal and provincial environmental protection legislation.

That is what it will boil down to. If you want to hear an eminently responsible statement on this complex question then I urge you to listen to that made by Friends of the Earth who, in their brief to the committee, and it is just one paragraph but it says it all very well, said this:

> Granted the government may wish to arrange for a province to carry out federal requirements and will appropriately consult with the relevant provincial Governments. However, the ultimate authority should flow from and rest with the federal government. As it stands, the amendments force the Minister to take an "after you" approach to environmental protection and effectively strip the Government of authority.

They recommend that the original section which required mandatory consultation with the provinces and the amendments which provide for exemption of the provinces from application of federal legislation be deleted. Unfortunately, that advice went by unheeded.

It is interesting again to note, as I brought to your attention this morning, the observation by Conseil du patronat du Québec:

[Translation]

> . . . le Conseil du patronat du Québec, when it told the Committee: Finally, the federal-provincial agreements required for the implementation of this bill are not clearly defined. What standards will prevail? Federal or povincial? Will we have a homogeneous system all across Canada, or will there be important regional variants? A lot of questions have yet to be answered, in our opinion, in that respect.

[English]

These questions are still to be clarified.

Enough on equivalency. I have now to take you to the question of the Bill of Rights and a concept that is a good idea per se, that was in a way touched upon on a number of occasions by the Minister, but which has been left now without teeth, without muscle, unfortunately. It was very well put to us by Paul Muldoon of Energy Probe when in committee he made the following points:

> What is needed is a straightforward, unequivocal declaration. We can say . . . that all people of Canada have a statutory right to a healthy environment, a right that can be enforced in the courts. Consequently, it would establish the government as a trustee of all public lands, waters, and resources of the province, and impose obligations on it to conserve and maintain the resources. It really identifies and clarifies that each person in Canada has a right to a healthy environment.
> There are some clauses within this proposed bill which deal with what I would call an environmental bill of rights. As a lawyer, I am afraid they do not help me very much.

He then elaborated on a couple of cases and continued:

> There are also other clauses which, if you wish, I can deal with, but that is the main thrust. An environment bill of rights therefore is accountability. It is accountability for everyone, individuals, industry and government, and it allows those people who need protection or those who want to enforce the act the opportunity to do so.
> Right this minute, before the Ontario Legislature, second reading is being debated on a bill called An Environmental Bill of Rights for Ontario, a copy of which I have included in the package of material. I urge this committee to recommend certain reforms that parallel that . . . that bill does propose to give each person in Ontario an environmental bill of rights, which will be essentially the right to a healthy environment and the right to enforce that right.

On the same occasion he went on to say:

> The way to do it, though, is that clause 128 would simply say anyone, not just those who have suffered a loss or damage, can seek relief in a court of competent jurisdiction who suspects another person, industry or government is breaching a standard of a provision of the act, period.

The first thing would be to remove, and this is a very important passage in the Bill before us, the words "who has suffered loss or damage". The suggestion was made that it should instead read "any person may go to a court of competent jurisdiction to sue and recover". In other words, the provision "who has suffered loss or damage" is a barrier to action by the individual citizen to protect the environment. If you represent a non-government organization, an environmental group, you cannot go to court to enforce the Act. You have to find someone who suffered damage from a breach of that Act. That is what it boils down to with respect to who has the right to take action to protect the environment.

The problem, he went on to say, is virtually that it is impossible in environmental litigation to connect the damage to the source, the damage to the act. A classic case is the Toronto lead smelters. For years a number of industries have been polluting the city with lead to the detriment of children and environmental health at large. However, to prove lead emissions from a company caused those precise injuries to those children is virtually impossible because lead comes from all types of sources, including automobiles. The molecule of lead that damaged the lungs and metabolism of a child, did it come from a certain industry? It is a standard which is impossible to prove and which would render Clause 128 of this Bill totally inoperative.

Therefore, Mr. Muldoon concluded that under this clause he could not proceed because he has not suffered injury or damage. Only a pollution victim, probably for many of the toxic chemicals, can do so. The latency period is anywhere from five to 20 years in some types of contamination. Lead contamination in Toronto is a perfect example. Why does one want to wait until harm occurs, he asks? His recommendation was to remove the standing barrier. Let anyone enforce the law. What is everyone hiding? If someone is breaking the law, certainly they should be put in a position where they have to comply with the law.

This is not a revolutionary program. It is a simple, logical program where one says that here is an environmental group which is environmentally sensitive and active. It sees industry, an individual or a Government contravening the law. Why can they not go to court and enforce the law? It can be done in common law, Mr. Muldoon concluded.

It is interesting to note that the Minister himself, when he appeared before the committee on November 25 last year said:

> I am more concerned, frankly, about lack of accountability. I think it is terribly important that some of the enforcement clout of a bill involve the citizen, the individual who is affected, when a given chemical violates the environment and perhaps human health.

I applaud the Minister for having said that. The only problem is that it is not in the Bill. Having preached the substance and the theory, the will is not in the Bill. That is what led me to say earlier that this legislation has a history of retreats, contradictions, and flip-flops. That is one example of that.

It is also important to put on the record what the Canadian Environmental Law Association in Toronto said through Toby Vigod in January of this year.

> CELA since its inception in 1970, has been advocating the need for such a bill of rights at both the federal and provincial levels of government. It would seem essential that any comprehensive revision of federal environmental law be updated in its provision of public rights to protect the environment. "Key provisions would include the right to a healthy environment and the right of a member of the public to seek a declaration or injunction for actual or threatened environmental harm,—

Again reference is made to Clause 128 which, Ms. Vigod concluded, can in no way be called an environmental bill of rights and should be amended to provide for broader rights for citizens to protect their environment.

In an editorial in The Intervenor, the newsletter of the Canadian Environmental Law Association, in November, 1986, Toby Vigod wrote:

> The EPA does not contain, or even come close to being, an Environmental Bill of Rights, even though the Minister has claimed it to be. While there is a lengthy preamble stressing the importance of environmental protection, preambles are not legally enforceable, and would only be used as an aid for interpreting otherwise ambiguous sections of the Act.
> A real Environmental Bill of Rights would contain some of the following elements:
> —the right of the Canadian public to a healthful, aesthetically and culturally viable environment; recognition of a public trust in Canada's lands, water and resources; the right of any member of the public to bring a lawsuit for actual or threatened environmental harm or breach of a federal law, without the necessity of having to show personal injury or property interests of that individual; the right of the public to become involved in the federal environmental decision-making process, such rights to include input into the standard setting process and the right to financial assistance, where necessary, to ensure effective public participation.

In 1979 in a debate in this Chamber the present Minister of the Environment eloquently supported the need for an environmental bill of rights. The Bill at that time would have incorporated many of the proposals advanced by the Canadian Environmental Association in this editorial which concludes:

> Unfortunately, these sentiments have not been transferred to the proposed EPA.

Another important chapter in the discussion of this Bill at third reading has to do with federal polluters. I must pay tribute to the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for the fine role he played in committee, alas, without achieving the intent which he had in mind. However, he certainly put very forcefully a position which we in the Opposition shared and would have very much liked to have seen adopted as an amendment in the Bill itself. The issue was put quite lucidly by Pollution Probe through Kai Millyard on January 20 of this year when he appeared before the committee. He said:

> Probably the most important is in Part IV of the bill—federal lands, works, undertakings and all of that. This concern really only crystalized for us about a week ago when we learned that a number of federal government agencies—Transport Canada and the National Research Council—over the last few years had been releasing some of the hazardous wastes they generate in the process of doing what they do, to an unlicensed trucking company that discharged those wastes into a sewer grate here in Ottawa going out to the Ottawa River.

I would like to pay a special compliment to my colleague, the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who has, on a number of occasions by himself in this House, raised the question of pollution by federal government agencies.

Mr. Millyard went on to say:

> The provincial government, which does have standards and regulations about these matters, charged those agencies with violations of the Ontario Environmental Protection Act.
> In court the Department of Justice argued federal immunity to provincial laws. Unfortunately, the judge agreed with that argument and the charges were quashed, although I gather the province is now preparing an appeal. This kind of federal immunity might not be such a problem except for the fact that Environment Canada does not regulate the polluters for which the federal government is responsible.
> If it did, if there were regulations that applied to all of those companies—we mean corporations that are federally incorporated, such as banks, airlines, railways, shipping concerns and so on, as well as any activities that take place in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. Of course, provincial laws do not apply there and Environment Canada is the only possible environmental regulator . . . However, the simple message is that Crown immunity really is a concept that is not popular with the public. Pollution Probe certainly sees absolutely no reason why the federal government should not have to meet environmental laws.

Neither does the public, Mr. Speaker, and neither do, I am sure, the vast majority of Members in this House.

Mr. Millyard concluded as follows:

> Whether they are the provincial laws in which the federal agencies operate or whether it is a new licensing regime set up by the federal government is less important. In our view the federal government must control its own polluters if it expects to have any credibility at all.

These are pretty clear and convincing words and they were backed up by the Canadian Environmental Law Association by Toby Vigod. On the preceding day in committee she said:

> We are concerned about the federal Government's failure to exercise its clear authority to regulate federal works and undertakings under exclusive federal jurisdiction.

It is clear as a bell. She then elaborated on the 1981 prosecution by the Ontario Ministry of the Environment of Eldorado Nuclear for a spill into Lake Ontario. She said:

> In that case, charges brought under the Ontario Water Resources Act were thrown out of court on the basis that Eldorado, as a federal Crown corporation, was immune from the application of provincial law, as the legislation did not expressly, or by implication, bind the Crown. More recently the National Research Council and council employees were charged under the Ontario Environmental Protection Act with illegal transfers of waste to an unauthorized waste hauler without completion of any waste manifests as required by the regulations. Again, the Provincial Court held that the Ontario legislation did not bind the federal Crown and the charges were dismissed. The unfortunate result is that federal agencies can continue to hide behind Crown immunity and act in an environmentally unsound manner.

Here we had a golden opportunity, because we cannot amend the legislation every second year and we cannot go frequently into an important exercise such as Bill C-74. We had a terrific opportunity to rectify what is definitely a scandal in the operation on the part of some federal Departments and agencies. That opportunity was missed, and I will explain in a moment why.

The spokesperson for the Environmental Law Centre in Edmonton, Linda Duncan, spoke on December 10 with respect to federal works and undertakings, and this is the explanation as to why the golden opportunity was missed:

> . . . the Bill requires the concurrence of the federal Minister responsible for administering that particular work or undertaking or land before the Minister of the Environment may bring forward regulations for the protection of the environment.

Will the Minister of Transport of the day agree with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to correct the situation, or with the Minister in charge of Science and Technology as it affects the NRC? We know what the obvious answer is.

Miss Duncan went on to say:

> Again, it is our assertion that this provision runs contrary to the stated political intent that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act be viewed as the vehicle to centralize and consolidate protection of the environment. To require the assent of the Ministry proposed to be regulated is to diminish the effect of Part IV of the Bill.

I think she used very mild words when she said "diminish". She said a political decision must be made, and quite rightly so, whether to empower the Minister of the Environment to act to protect the environment. She went on to say:

> A wise Minister will consult with the affected Ministry regardless of legislative requirements. The affected Ministry is also accorded the opportunity of raising objections at the cabinet level.

Many of us in committee fought to have at least this approach taken, but we did not succeed. It is interesting to hear what John McCallum of Ecology North had to say on January 19. He said:

> In the North we paid a lot of attention to Part IV of the Bill, which deals with federal lands and waters. We have long felt that the northern environment is particularly poorly regulated and that we need a more comprehensive system with less discretionary power and greater public input to decisions. Environment Canada also has an environmental role in the North through its responsibility to administer Section 33 of the Fisheries Act. However, the overlap between this section and the Northern Inland Waters Act has never been cleared up.
> The GNWT also has some environmental legislation, Although its constitutional basis is cloudy. It does have a clear mandate for management of forestry and wildlife which the Department of Indian and Northern Development has transferred to it.
> The federal Government, with DIAND in the lead role, has continued to allow the situation to exist for years with no effort to clarify constitutional responsibility, fill legislative gaps or urge the to do so. For those of us who are environmentally conscious this has not only been frustrating, we feel it is negligence. So it was with great hope that we saw what was originally Part III of CEPA as the portent of someone who was prepared to take responsibility for setting up and enforcing comprehensive, systematic, strict environmental legislation in the NWT.
> But a more careful analysis showed that Environment Canada was still nervous about stepping on toes in other jurisdictions—just as, in the original section of CEPA,
> DOE worded the Bill so they could only act in consultation with the Minister responsible and only to enact regulations in areas where no other legislation existed or to set guidelines for departments.

So it seems that the Department of the Environment is continuing in the tradition of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development of avoiding the issue. He concluded by saying: "Mr. McMillan's words seem hollow".

Let me move on now to national standards, which is a very important subject as well. It is interesting to note that on November 25, 1987, when we were graced by the Minister's presence in committee, he said:

> We are setting in place a Canada-wide regime for the management of certain forms of pollution, in this context, chemicals; it is a cradle-to-grave approach to management of toxic chemicals. We want to set a national standard below which no province would plunge.

You should read, Mr. Speaker, in the record the acrobatic elaborations through which the Minister's own Parliamentary Secretary went last week in order to avoid using the words national standards and replacement with national control standards, which means quite a different thing. The Minister said: "This does not mean that an individual province like Ontario, which might well have regulations specific to circumstances that are above our national standards, would be prevented from enforcing them". He set the foundation, the framework, for what some of us thought was going to be a pretty good and solid elaboration of the discussion leading to the setting of national standards.

I welcome the arrival of the Parliamentary Secretary to join in this debate because it is very important to her, considering the discussion we had last week at the report stage of this Bill.

When discussing the subject, it would take hours and hours to relay everything that was said on the question of standards, but it is worthwhile for a moment to report what was said by Richard Martin, the spokesperson for the Canadian Labour Congress when he took a crack at the subject of standards. He said:

> On a philosophical basis I suppose we basically agree with a strong central Government establishing uniform controls across the country, because partially what they say is correct. The competition of allowing one polluter, if I can so speak, to have a larger area or more leeway to pollute than another jurisdiction may work against a province's interest to attract investment and development in the province, if it wants to have a clean environment, compared with another province that is lax on its particular laws.
> Through various bodies, we have recommended national standards in terms of occupational health and safety matters and limits in terms of exposure to chemicals.
> We have also recommended the same thing in terms of the environment. On the other hand, it is quite important to us that national recommended standards should be in place before provinces are allowed to give up or abrogate their responsibilities in terms of the environment, clean air, or any other matter. Otherwise, we are going to have a whole open period during which pretty well anybody can do anything to the environment.

• (1540)

That is the fear that Mr. Martin brought out in committee. He concluded by saying:

> I would recommend that we try to establish those recommended national standards for introduction into the provinces, keeping in mind that the provinces do have many rights and should exercise those rights in terms of cleaning up the environment.

This was a pretty reasonable approach I thought. In a way it was reinforced by Barbara McElgunn when she appeared before the committee on January 19 and stated:

> We know that Canadians deserve health and environmental protection via national standards for air and water quality. However, it appears that the federal government does not have this authority—

She is quite right. The Parliamentary Secretary confirmed it in the debate last week. We will go into that since I have studied the terminology that she used. I will prove to you, Mr. Speaker, that this notion has been abandoned, as well as why and how.

If the Parliamentary Secretary disagrees with me then she does not understand what she is saying in the House, which is even more serious.

Mrs. Browes: You are misinterpreting the witnesses.

Mr. Caccia: The Minister is expected to formulate guidelines and objectives with respect to the environment under this Bill. It is then doubtful, said Mrs. McElgunn, that there will be a federal authority to establish maximum intolerable concentrations for contaminants in air and drinking water in Canada for Canadians. She said that it is doubtful. She went on to say that it is noteworthy that the Decima report in December, 1987, placed drinking water quality at the top of Canadian environmental concerns. She concluded by saying that standards have the force of regulations whereas guidelines and objectives do not.

We have said enough about that subject, except that, when he appeared before the committee on the same day, Mr. Millyard of Pollution Probe made these two very important and clear points. I quote:

> In the 1970s, both under the Clean Air Act and under the Fisheries Act, there were programs the government had, which were systematically going through the industrial sectors that were thought or known to be major sources of pollution, and, along with those industries, were writing regulations and standards to gradually limit and clean up the emissions of those industries. Those programs are gone, both in the Fisheries Act and in the Clean Air Act.

This is another item about which we had lengthy discussions in committee to no avail. Mr. Millyard concluded by saying that there were standards written for four categories of industries under the Clean Air Act. He said that those are being rolled over into this law, and the ability actually to launch programs like that and write such standards is still in Bill C-74, but he is very concerned that there is no program to do these things. That is separate from the statute itself.

As I said, the question of national standards is one that one cannot stress forcefully enough and long enough. However, we have to move on. I could take Hon. Members through the whole question of enforcement of this legislation. It is important that we understand what the Government is offering Canadians here in the words of the Government and those who study the operations of Government. It is important to quote two paragraphs from a study prepared by the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council which reports to the Minister himself. I am quoting from its study of January, 1987 which states:

> Our review of the EPS delegation scheme suggests that federal delegation of environmental enforcement authority amounts to a virtual abdication of responsibility for enforcement and has promoted discrepancies in the nature of enforcement responses across Canada . . . Council is of the opinion that some current trends, such as the delegation of administrative powers to provincial authorities and excessive fears of federal-provincial conflicts, are having negative effects on the implementation of Environment Canada's legislative mandate, and undermine the confidence of Canadians in the Department.

This was not written by some fly-by-night operator, or by a critic of the environment. This was written by the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council under the title: "Enforcement Practices of Environment in Canada". This is a very serious observation that is made which has an important bearing on what will be the effect of this Bill, which in the way it is worded now negates the very spirit and substance of the observation made by the very Council which advises the Minister. So much for consultation and so much for listening to advice.

On the question of enforcement it is also important to have on record an observation made by Ross Hume Hall to which my distinguished colleague from Red Deer referred in his speech this morning. In an essay published in the spring of last year he wrote:

> The single-chemical approach breaks down under the sheer weight of the 60,000 existing industrial chemicals. To illustrate the absurdity of trying to regulate industrial chemicals in this manner, let us do a simple calculation. The 19 member bureaucratic team of the Contaminants Control Branch took 10 years to assess—

Guess how many, Mr. Speaker? Five chemicals. It took 10 years to assess five chemicals, that is, 190 bureaucrat-years to write five regulations, 38 bureaucrat years per chemical. Imagine that Environment Canada puts all its 10,000 employee-years from janitor to Deputy Minister, if you like, all of them, to this task. Actually, now, because of the transfer of the Canadian Forestry Service to Agriculture Canada and because of the cuts in November, 1984, and losses to inflation and the like, to an amount of well over $60 million in its purchasing power, its establishment of strength is now less than 7,000 individuals, I believe. Suppose that Environment Canada puts all its employees to work—the assumption here is 10,000, which is 50 per cent greater than today—to write the regulations. At that rate the Department could write 260 per year. The Department would not keep up with 1,000 new chemicals that enter commerce every year.

If this calculation is correct, and it comes from a person who has a very high standing, so much so that he was appointed to head this special group to which the Hon. Member referred this morning in his speech, to answer this type of emerging problem here as defined by Ross Hume Hall, what does the Government do to make funds available for enforcement? Over the next five years it makes available $37 million to be divided among three Departments. If my arithmetic is correct, $7.4 million a year, divided by three, is approximately $2.5 million per Department to enforce this type of monstrosity. Therefore, one has to conclude that the enforcement aspect, which there is no doubt is a very massive and difficult one, is not being given the administrative, bureaucratic muscle needed to carry out such a massive task, particularly in consideration of the point made by Ross Hume Hall that at the present time there are some 1,000 new chemicals that enter commerce every year.

What is omitted in this Bill is an important aspect that I will touch upon briefly. It deals with our native people and it deals with an international river. I am referring to the question of international riparian rights. I realize that this is a complex issue, but nevertheless it has to be put on the record. I am referring to the brief prepared by the Citizens' Coalition for Clean Water. It was sent to all Members of Parliament in Canada and to the media. It bears the date of April 14, 1988, so it is very recent. In four lines it sets out the problem very well by first quoting Mark Twain. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) with a penchant for poetry will enjoy this. Mark Twain said, "The Mississippi is a very muddy river, too thick to drink, and too thin to plough".

The Coalition for Clean Water went on to say, "Mr. Twain could clearly see the state of his river, but people in Wallaceburg, Ontario and Walpole Island Indian Reserve cannot".

In a very eloquent, touching, and short manner, the Citizens' Coalition for Clean Water describes to each one of us the situation along that river caused by upstream pollution. It places high hopes in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, and it urges us to take certain action. It states, "You can reinstate the original preamble of January, 1986", and this is why earlier in my remarks I made a reference to this Bill as being a history of retreat and flip-flops. The Coalition urges us collectively that, "You can reinstate the original preamble of January, 1986, whose language was closely akin to extending environmental rights to all Canadians". This is where the recognition was in the original draft. I cannot understand for the life of me why we gave it up, because it was good stuff. It deserved to remain untouched. This is a point made by Don Laprise, the Chairman, and John Wilkinson, the Secretary-Treasurer in this brief. They go on to state:

> You can reword Section 100 so that ordinary Canadians can gain, unhindered, full access to the law, and stand in court on an equal, legal and financial footing with corporate polluters.

I now ask you, Mr. Speaker, who would disagree with that stuff? I do not see anyone who would disagree with that type of approach. It makes eminent sense. I am sure that even members of the Progressive Conservative Party while campaigning in the next election might take a stand like this in their own ridings. They will sense the pressure of the public to take that type of stance and translate it into legislation.

The Coalition concluded by stating:

> The Parliament of Canada has a trust responsibility to provide all Canadians with a pollution free environment. We strongly urge you as a lawmaker to bring the Canadian Environmental Protection out of the sky and down to the level of the ordinary person where it can be environmentally useful, where it can preserve, protect and eventually be celebrated.

These are beautiful words, Mr. Speaker, of substance and poetry. For the life of me, I cannot understand why collectively we were not able to master sufficient will to do exactly that. That is enough said, Mr. Speaker, on the subject of riparian rights, because time is going by.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know that time is going by, but at this stage may I interrupt the Hon. Member.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine)—Finance—Reform of legislation—Consequences for Mouvement Desjardins; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Environmental Affairs—Applicability of provincial law to federal agencies; the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Employment—Innovation program—Request for approval of project/ Request that project proceed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): I welcome your interruption, Mr. Speaker, and I will now move on to the subject of the discussion that took place here last week when, by way of our procedure, we debated a number of motions at the so-called report stage. We began with a ruling from the Speaker who gave us an indication of how to proceed.

It so happened that the motion in my name that came up for debate early that day dealt with the desirability to introduce in Clause 2, which is the preamble, a paragraph to the effect that the intent of this measure is to endeavour to establish national standards of environmental quality. Why did we do that, Mr. Speaker? Because the Bill as it is presently worded is weak and it does not reflect and contain the political will with which the same Bill was announced by the Minister himself. It has lost steam, it has lost fire, and it has lost muscle. With that motion, by at least putting an intent in the preamble, I was endeavouring to bring back some of that.

The Government did announce that the Bill was a great measure to clean up the environment, which it does not, unfortunately; and that it would open up a new era for the protection of the environment from damage, for which it does not provide the necessary funds in the enforcement of it.

It was interesting to note that in the draft Bill entitled "Proposed Environmental Protection Act", which goes back to 1986, on page 1 there was a subparagraph which stated: "Provide leadership in the establishment of nationally consistent standards of environmental quality". Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, it was there. It is now gone. We proposed it and we lost. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, why that retreat? That particular measure in the draft Bill, which was the object of consultations, received widespread public support across the country through those public consultations. It became almost a challenge to attempt to bring it back by way of a motion at the report stage. What we have in its stead is the phrase "endeavour to establish nationally consistent levels of environmental quality".

We have moved from providing leadership in the establishment of nationally consistent "standards" of environmental quality to endeavouring to establish nationally consistent "levels" of environmental quality. One is quite a far cry from the other.

In the Bill as it is currently drafted, the emphasis is on consistency. The Government went through an extensive public consultation process in respect of this legislation, and I imagine it did so with the best of intentions. In doing so, however, it created the impression that there was a genuine attempt to consult with the public, and having done so it then retreated from the strong wording of the Bill as introduced to "nationally consistent levels of environmental quality".

There is a world of difference between "levels" and "standards". What a shame!

When a Government retreats from the political will of wanting to establish "national standards" into the mushy world of endeavouring to establish "nationally consistent levels", one has to ask oneself what has happened to the political will of that Government.

What has caused the Government to make a 180 degree turn, backtracking from the strong language of the Bill as first introduced? No longer do we have "national standards"; rather, we have consistency.

I look forward to hearing the response of the Parliamentary Secretary, or perhaps that of the Minister himself on this particular point. An explanation ought to be put on the record, and I invite the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary to put something of substance on the record in this respect.

The Parliamentary Secretary, in her reply, said that what I was proposing was a seemingly minor amendment to the "administrative duties" section of the Bill. She went on to say that the consequence of this seemingly innocent word change would be to impair the very goal that I was seeking, and she thereafter engaged in a number of points, all of which, to me, are simply sophistry of a kind that is the reflection of a muddled mind. Having reread the record of that debate, that is all I can say. To give you but one example, the Parliamentary Secretary went on to make the point that the word "levels" allows for a "range of regulatory possibilities, guidelines for industries to follow, objectives to be aimed at, codes of practice to be adhered to, standards to be achieved, and outright bans to be implemented, if required".

Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is dreaming in Technicolor, to say the least. The fact that the existence of standards is important is demonstrated and reinforced through our experience with acid rain, in respect of which standards were established, with the abatement programs then following. Given the Canadian geology and climatology, we set a standard in respect of the deposition of wet sulphides, the standard being that the deposition of wet sulphides should not exceed 50 kilograms per hectare per year. That was a scientifically arrived at standard, and from that standard we then developed our policies.

That standard proved to be good for Canada, and it is one that has served us well since its implementation. Given that experience, I felt that there was sufficient ground to ensure the entrenching of the word "standards" in the legislation.

I am tempted to read to you some of the evidence in respect of Clause 8, namely that of Pollution Probe and Friends of the Earth; but to do so would be to infringe upon the territory of the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), and so I shall refrain from doing so. It was very good evidence, and I trust that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood will find the time to highlight some of it during the course of this debate.

During the report stage, there was some discussion in respect of the representation of industry, labour and non-governmental groups. We wanted to entrench that concept in the law. We wanted to ensure that the sectorial reality of Canada will be entrenched in the legislation. Having involved labour in the deliberations on the draft Bill in committee, we felt it only natural that the description of the advisory committee be such that the various sectors will be specifically spelled out, namely, industry, labour and non-governmental groups, or public interest groups.

Unfortunately, we did not succeed in that endeavour. And why did we not succeed? Here again we heard an interesting reply from the Parliamentary Secretary, who said that there is already an advisory board, the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council, which advises the Minister, and that that should do.

In my view, this piece of legislation requires an advisory board of its own. It is unfortunate that that particular proposal was not accepted. In my view, it is one that had some merit.

We then moved on to a motion that endeavoured to delete the mandatory consultation between the federal Minister of the Environment and a committee which would be essentially federal-provincial in nature, and we did so for the reasons already outlined. In our view, such mandatory consultation would only slow down the process—an undesirable result, given that, in most instances, protection of the environment requires swift action. We also attempted to delete the equivalency policy. Finally, we attempted to remove the requirement that another federal Minister, other than the Minister of the Environment, would have to give concurrence or the green light when the Environment Minister of the day wants to proceed and lay charges against a specific Department or an agency of the Crown.

We did not go very far with these suggestions. We had to accept the will of the Minister through the Parliamentary Secretary and of the Government as a whole. That is where the blame rests, Mr. Speaker, in having back-peddled and retreated furiously under pressure from some quarters, which I am not in a position to name but which I can guess.

We then come to the question of the national standards again. I made reference to it when the Parliamentary Secretary was here a short while ago. Here we have an intervention on behalf of the Government, and I quote the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Browes) who said, as reported at page 14658 of Hansard for April 20:

> —this Bill does provide for national standards—

She has news for us. The Bill provides for national standards. Then she quickly added:

> —national environmental control standards, and I emphasize the adjective "control".

That is where the nice twist comes in. She went on to say:

> These control standards provided for in Sections 33 and 53 will apply—

The notion of control standards is one that must be examined for a moment in debate on third reading. We have to understand what the Parliamentary Secretary means. If environmental protection is equivalent to emission controls, emission controls must be equalized to so much per polluter. That, in turn, must probably mean that each new polluter is permitted to add to pollution. In that sense the total pollution in the end increases. In other words, the controls that have been envisaged and transmitted to us by the Parliamentary Secretary are controls that apply to the totality of the environment, no matter how many polluters there will be between now and 50 years from now.

It is, in other words, not as I said before, the establishment of standards that are permissible as a total load of pollution that indicates the tolerance of the particular environment to a specific load produced by a certain emission, by a certain industry. Having established the tolerance, you work your way back and say that there shall not be more pollution than that which the environment can tolerate. If today there are 10 polluters, so much will be the total tolerance that the environment can take from those 10 polluters. If tomorrow there will be 15 and 10 years from now 25 and so on, that tolerance remains the same. Therefore, the pollution allowed to each individual polluter will have to be decreased accordingly.

This is not what the Bill says. The Bill says that there will be a control that will be applied to each polluter and if the polluters increase in numbers, the amount of total pollution will also increase accordingly and the environment will go to hell in the process. That is what the words control standards in essence mean. That is why national standards per se in the Bill were not accepted by the Government. We are taking the wrong tack with this Bill in its very essence as to what it endeavours to do.

The Bill endeavours to establish controls on what the emitters will be allowed to pollute, but it does not establish what the environment can tolerate, and having done that, work its way back to establish how much each polluter, be it five industries today and 59 twenty-five years from now, can pollute. This is from where the serious flaw and damage will arise.

We had enough exchanges on that. It is not an easy part of the Bill to deal with, I must admit, even at third reading without time limitation. But I felt this had to be put on the record.

I will move on now to the question of the cost of investigation from a polluter. In committee, we had in the Bill, almost until the last moment a clause which said that in certain circumstances the Minister may collect the cost of investigation from a polluter. There may be circumstances when the Crown may want to recover the cost from investigating a situation caused by a polluter.

That situation could arise. The clause was right there in the Bill. One day toward the conclusion of the debate we had a motion by the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) which said that that clause should be removed. It read that "where an offender has been convicted of an offence under this Act, in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed under this Act, the court may, having regard to the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission, make an order having any or all of the following effects"—and this is the item in question—"(g) direct the offender to compensate the Minister in whole or in part for the cost of any remedial or preventive action taken by or caused to be taken on behalf of the Minister as a result of the Act or emission that constituted the offence".

That was in the Bill almost until the last minute. In his greater wisdom, the Member from Niagara Falls, supported by the majority of the government Members, managed to pull it out. What were the reasons given, Mr. Speaker? If I remember correctly, the reason was that it was unprecedented. It is that mind-set which cannot understand that progress has to set a precedent. You cannot be a member of the Progressive Conservative Party and impede progress at the same time. You cannot say that you have to delete a clause in a Bill because it is unprecedented. "It cannot be there because it has never been done before". That is a contradiction in turn to anyone who, bless his heart, joins the Progressive Conservative Party. It is inconsistent, yet here it happened.

I am trying to find the passage in committee when the Member for Niagara Falls made the point, because it is a jewel. He said, "I do not know who the opposition is that you are referring to, but I will explain why I put this in"—which is the motion—"This Bill provides for fines and imprisonment and it allows the court to charge someone who has been found guilty with the cost of remedial action." He went on to say: "I think that is fair and I am certainly not making excuses for polluters or anyone else, but I would take the same stand if this was a Criminal Code offence. Mr. Caccia says it is unprecedented within the Criminal Code which it is". Here we were drinking from each other's bath water in a way.

The Hon. Member for Niagara Falls went on to say: "I suggest that leaving this in adds an element of uncertainty in the sentencing of an individual. No matter how despicable a polluter is, and we all agree that people who pollute are in a terrible category, one that should be punished, that person has the right to appeal to a higher court to see if the penalty is commensurate with that which is given in other Canadian jurisdictions. It is a principle of our law that when someone receives a penalty or a sentence, he has the right to appellate review to make sure there is not too great a disparity between similar cases".

These were words of a Member from the Niagara Peninsula where there has been such a head of steam built up over the years over environmental pollution. First of all, he entirely missed the point and, second, he did not understand what was the real intent of leaving in that very same clause his own Minister put into the Bill in the first place. That is beyond my understanding and it is very unfortunate that, at this stage, there is very little that can be done about it unless the Bill is sent back to committee for review.

I am moving quickly along. This Bill requires a much greater in-depth analysis than that which I have done. I want to draw the attention of Hon. Members to another aspect of the Bill that has been troublesome, and that is that we discovered with dismay in committee that when it comes to international air pollution, the Minister would apply, through this piece of legislation we are debating today, the concept of equivalency that he applied to toxic chemicals. That, of course, is not a desirable route to take.

The equivalency provisions, when applied to international air pollution, are in my view a step backward. To put on record the statements made about that by a number of organizations would take too long. The fact is that although we tried to correct the situation, we did not succeed. In this new Environmental Protection Act, we have now lost a measure which existed under the Clean Air Act, a measure which should exist, and that is the ability of enforcing and setting regulations that are of an international nature.

An analysis of the Bill as a whole leads to some general conclusions. One is that Bill C-74 can be put under the general heading of the mouse that roared. The Bill was heralded as a great measure. Expectations were raised. The draft Bill contained parts that were good and promising, and some of those parts were deleted after the consultations, without consulting again with interested parties except for the provinces. That is something that smacks of a procedural tactic which I do not like and of which I do not approve. I think it is a bad practice. It leaves with people the notion that somehow the Government has not dealt with them in a fair and honest manner.

If the Government consults, and then after consultation makes changes weakening or changing the direction of the document on which the Government has consulted, the least it would want to do in all honesty and good conscience is to let those people know by consulting them about the changes made to the document as it first existed. On those two counts, the raising of expectations and the consultation process, unfortunately I must say that the Government did not do well.

Second, the notion of the clean-up of the existing mess was raised on a number of occasions, particularly by the Minister, and in retrospect, this Bill will not be able to deliver. It is a step in the right direction of regulating chemicals in the market-place, but as such, the Bill will not clean up the existing pollution in the air, the water and the soil. Other measures, legislative or by way of programs, accords and joint action, will be required to do that.

In essence, we have here for third reading a piece of legislation which was written in part by the provinces and which gives to the provinces a say in the environment. This from a constitutional point of view, is tantamount to an abdication by the federal Government in an area in which it has full and clear jurisdiction. I would like to see this challenged and have the courts have a say on that at the appropriate time.

In reviewing this Bill, I see that there has also been a federal retreat on the environment. The Bill requires the Minister, under the equivalency provisions, to consult with this federal-provincial advisory committee prior to the making of regulations. This consultation is mandatory for regulations in areas where federal and provincial powers do overlap and areas that deal with the quantity or concentration of a toxic chemical that can be released, the places or areas where toxic chemicals may be released, the industrial activities that release toxic chemicals, the manner and conditions of releasing of toxic chemicals, the manner and conditions of storage, display, handling and transportation of toxic chemicals, and the disposal of toxic chemicals. Thus, in the key areas of the regulation of toxic chemicals, the federal Government has given up the right to make regulations under federal statute. It simply boils down to that, a surrender.

If a province wishes, it may opt out of the federal regulation proposed for a toxic chemical as defined by the Bill by way of an existing provincial regulation or by creating a new one that is deemed to be equivalent to the federal regulation. The new one need not be the same as, equal to or stronger than the federal regulation but equivalent to it, and that I must say does not mean it would be identical. Whatever that means, the bottom line of the equivalency provision is that the federal Government is abrogating its constitutional right and responsibility to regulate in the area of pollution and the environment. The equivalency provisions have seriously weakened the constitutional rights and responsibilities of the federal Government.

I would like to invite Hon. Members to examine a situation which might occur in the Province of Saskatchewan, let us say, which may find that the province bordering it to the East has an equivalency provision in environmental protection regulations. Let us say that three years from now, there are no regulations in the Province of Saskatchewan. What guidelines or standards will the Government of Canada look at for use by the Province of Saskatchewan which may at that time have no regulations? Will it look to the East and borrow from Manitoba, or will it look to the West and borrow from Alberta? In fact, will it look to the North and borrow the standards of the Northwest Territories?

Most likely, when the federal Government sees it is forced to intervene and apply environmental protection regulations in a province where those regulations do not exist, it will apply the lowest standards available from a neighbouring province. It will have to do that politically because there will be an uproar by the provincial Government concerned, unless there is an unusually difficult and complex environmental situation where public opinion is aroused. That is what is going to happen and that is why the equivalency provisions are for the birds. This is an invasion of federal responsibility and a way of reducing the burden on the budget of the Department of the Environment and other Departments which may be involved in implementing this measure if the equivalency provisions had not been introduced last November.

Another serious flaw is that federal polluters can escape Bill C-74. You have heard me at length about that and I will not repeat myself, but the fact is that, having in a way created the appearance of wanting to prevent pollution by federal Departments and agencies, the Bill still contains a requirement for approval by a Minister other than the Minister of the Environment before you can stop the Bank of Canada, the National Research Council, CN's diesel engines, or any utility which may come under the jurisdiction of the federal Government, from polluting. This is a real cop-out. The individual is powerless. The individual or organization which could have been given the power to take action in the environment without being personally affected is not given that opportunity, despite the great declarations of the desirability of an environmental bill of rights by the Minister. The individual is powerless.

Then we have what I call the triumph of the coward, namely the deletion of the Subclause (g) that I referred to earlier. When the Bill was introduced last June it had a provision giving the Minister of the Environment the power to direct the polluter to pay for the cost of the investigation of a certain offence. It was a good provision because it can be very expensive to investigate crimes against the environment. None of the witnesses before the committee complained about that provision. Not even industry complained about it. However, when it came to clause-by-clause examination, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls chose to move deletion of that clause because it was too "progressive and unprecedented". The Government then caved in, I suppose, and did not support reintroduction of that clause when we had the debate at report stage.

Finally, we have the fact that there are no national standards. In the draft Act released for public discussion in December, 1986, there was a reference to the responsibility of the federal Government to set national standards of environmental protection. It was there, it was good, it was hailed and supported. Then when Bill C-74 was given first reading in June of last year the standard had turned into "nationally consistent levels". What mush. What a cop-out. What a retreat.

Mr. Shields: What a windbag.

Mr. Caccia: You see the difference in those weaklings on the front benches who call themselves the Government of Canada. What a sham. What a disgrace. It is the responsibility of the Government of Canada to set national standards. It has the responsibility to guarantee to all Canadians this same degree of environmental protection from coast to coast.

Because of the equivalency provisions these very Tories here in this Chamber cannot guarantee national standards in the environment. The result of this policy will be a patchwork of environmental protection dependent on the degree of commitment of a province. When a province will not come through with its own set of regulations, the lowest common denominator will prevail and win the day. That is the philosophy of the Conservative Party of Canada, the lowest common denominator, the triumph of mediocrity.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased finally to have a chance to rise to speak at third reading on the Bill before us today. The Bill is certainly not all that it is claimed to be by the Minister. I am sorry he has perhaps had some second thoughts about it himself and has been too embarrassed to debate it at second reading or so far on third reading. I hope he will be along to face the music for a little bit on this question.

It has been called cradle-to-grave protection against and regulation of toxic chemicals. In a sense that is true but it is cradle-to-grave regulation of a very limited nature. It still remains the case that the approach to environmental protection under this Act is thoroughly inadequate.

We are going to approve this Act because it has some aspects that we want and which the environmental community have been asking for for a long time. We cannot say no at this stage. However, I am going to argue that when we look to the future we are going to have to do better.

I am going to be a little bit critical of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the Liberal environment critic, because he has gone to town on the Conservative Government on this question. However, there are many places where he could have acted himself when he was Minister of the Environment. Some of the flaws in the Act we have before us now are similar to what is in the current legislation passed by a Liberal Government. Many of the things he could have been doing when he talks about the need for an environmental Bill of rights the Liberal Government could have done. The Liberals were in government for a long time.

Mr. Shields: With the help of the NDP.

Ms. McDonald: The then Liberal Minister of the Environment, now the Liberal critic, could have instituted the very things of which he is criticizing the Conservatives. I will be critical of the Conservatives but I do not want anyone to think I am looking back to some golden past under a Liberal Government which was better than what we have with the Conservatives. That is simply not true either.

We have gone through report stage and extensive debate at third reading stage. Literally hundreds of amendments were proposed, but I am not going to go through them all. Simply by way of summary I will point out that some of the amendments brought forward to improve and strengthen the Act, the vast majority, were defeated by the Government. A number of amendments from myself and my NDP colleagues as well as the Liberal critic and other Conservative Members were accepted, but they tended to be relatively minor amendments. These did not change the thrust of the Bill. They did not really make it the tough Bill which Canadians are working for. They gave perhaps a little more to citizens' rights and a little more accountability in terms of what the Minister would do, but did not fundamentally change the thrust. I am sorry that I have to say that those defects still remain in the Bill.

This is essentially weak legislation. It is called the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, but Bill C-74 is much more modest in scope. It is really an update of the Environmental Contaminants Act, with some aspects of the Ocean Dumping Control Act and the Clean Air Act, and in some cases there has actually been a regression in protection, a weakening of the regulatory power. Not all of the changes have been in the direction of strengthening, although there has been some strengthening in the area of toxic chemicals.

Bill C-74 gives the Government the scope to identify toxic substances and the scope to regulate those toxic substances it had identified. It gives the Government the ability to screen new substances before they are used in the environment. Here we see the one fundamental improvement in the approach, the change in the onus of proof. Heretofore, industry could bring in anything it wanted and, in effect, after the fact people had to go to a great deal of trouble in order to prove that the substance was toxic and then some regulation would be brought in. In one scandalous case it took 10 years to get five toxic substances regulated, most of which were not being manufactured any more by that time in any event.

Industry will now have to convince regulators that the substance is safe to use. It will have to show the criteria used. Substances presently used can be put on to a priority list and tested. We have some means of redressing mistakes of the past. However, let us be very clear that this is a cumbersome and flawed process. It relies overwhelmingly on laboratory tests of various sorts. They deal with substances one at a time and do not take into effect the cumulative results of the different kinds of toxic contaminants. They do not consider what is happening in the environment.

These are lab tests in an unnatural environment, a controlled situation which does not exist in actual practice. They have completely separate regulations for pesticides and radioactive substances. The environment is being harmed by a variety of different sources which are regulated quite separately. It may be the cumulative effects of different components from various industrial, radioactive, and pesticide uses that will be really harmful. I do not think that we have adequate ways of investigating those kinds of effects yet.

Under the Environmental Protection Act Canadians will have the right to complain to the Government when substances are not identified or regulated to their satisfaction. In fact, we even had amendments in this case which reduced the number of people necessary to complain. We have facilitated the role of the public, which role we ought to be facilitating. Indeed, some of us would like to have this role extended because the public includes environmental groups, many of which are active in criticizing this Bill and in providing very helpful and constructive criticism and proposals for a different approach to this. There are concerned citizens with expertise who are a resource for the Government. We would want people to be extremely active in regulation and in alerting us to dangers. The more that can be done in this respect, the safer Canadians will be. The Government made some gestures in this direction and we are going in the right direction, but we could have gone further.

The Bill will ban the export of toxic substances, the use of which is banned in Canada. I was pleased that that amendment was accepted by the Government. If the substance is too toxic for us to be using, certainly we should not be exporting it to some other country which may have fewer resources to assess toxicity and which may be taken in by claims made and not in a strong position to carry out the tests which are, of course, enormously expensive, especially given the vast number of substances on the market.

The Bill will give the Government the right to regulate fuels on the basis of environmental quality. We were pleased to see that because emissions from motor vehicles are a prime source of pollution. They contribute to acid rain, among other things, and that is a significant improvement in the legislation. The Bill gives the Government regulatory authority over nutrients in water conditioners, another relatively minor matter but a step in the right direction.

The Bill will legislate federal authority over environmental matters with respect to federal lands and undertakings. I am sorry to say that further amendments to strengthen this aspect of the Bill were rejected. Again, it is a question of moving in the right direction. It is an important and welcome move for the federal Government. One of the loopholes, curiously enough, was simply a lack of federal legislation on the environment, even in matters clearly under federal jurisdiction. This loophole is now being filled with the Environmental Protection Act.

Bill C-74 legislates governmental authority to make environmental regulations with respect to federal Departments and Crown agencies. This is, again, a very necessary step to take. One wonders why it has not been in place for a long time.

There is also a measure in this Bill to protect whistleblowers who report on breaches of government environmental regulations. I am very pleased to see this because we do have conscientious public servants who, from time to time, in a variety of Departments, find some practice which is weak and improper and may be flagrantly contrary to the laws and to regulations. We have had instances of public servants being fired for reporting on a practice which was quite wrong. The messenger of the bad news that the law was being broken was shot down instead of being welcomed and thanked for undertaking this public service and ensuring that the situation was remedied. There will now be protection for public servants who see breaches. I welcome this and hope that public servants will feel that they can be vigilant in carrying out their duties and not have to toe the line if someone is being slack in their Department.

The legislation gives the federal Government the authority to protect citizens of foreign countries from air pollution of Canadian origin. Most of our air pollution comes from the massive industry in the United States up to Canada. However, it can go the other way, and a small proportion does. It is quite right that Canadians provide adequate protection for the environment of our neighbours whom we may harm. I welcome these measures in the Bill.

The Bill establishes the possibility for boards of review to be created upon petition of individuals who are dissatisfied with regulations under the Act. This is another way in which people in voluntary organizations, academics, researchers, and other people involved in environmental work who see inadequacies in the regulations, can bring these inadequacies forward. There can be a form of petitioning and a board of review will be established in order to re-examine those regulations. We hope that the regulations would be strengthened accordingly if the case is made.

The Bill provides for very considerable fines, indeed up to $1 million, for environmental crimes under the Act. In addition to fines, it provides for prison sentences of up to six months. The fines of up to $1 million are substantial, as they are intended to be. The prison sentences are quite modest, but they do exist. This is a clear sign to the Canadian public, to industry, to anyone who wishes to pollute, to anyone who can see that it will save them money to pollute by way of toxic chemicals, to people who are willing to sacrifice environmental health, the health of our people, and the health of our plant and animal life, that they will have to pay for it.

I hope that these penalties will be an adequate dissuasion from pollution by way of toxic chemicals. This is a clear message that this kind of activity is extremely harmful. It can be more harmful than many crimes in the Criminal Code in terms of the impact. We do not know the full impact. We do not know the number of people who die from toxic contaminations of various sorts. We do not have this information. But we can be very sure that there are actual deaths and injuries, people are maimed, quality of life is disturbed, children are sickened. All of these kinds of things happen from industrial toxic chemicals that get into the environment and have a damaging effect either immediately or there are substances that are carcinogenic and which over time cause birth defects and impair people's enjoyment of life very substantially. These are crimes. They are profoundly wrong and harmful and need to be treated as such. Canadians have made the move. They want it to happen.

Bill C-74, however, does not do many things it ought to. It does not embrace many of the most destructive substances in use today. It excludes substances regulated by other Acts of Parliament despite the fact that the Minister has called this the most comprehensive piece of legislation. It is not a comprehensive piece of legislation. It excludes pesticides, no matter how toxic they are and, of course, it excludes nuclear contaminates no matter how toxic or dangerous they are. It is not comprehensive legislation. It is very narrowly focused.

It does not provide any standards of environmental quality. This is an issue which many of us made quite a bit of at committee stage and at report stage in the House. What we still have are guidelines. They are objectives. They are not as strong as standards that must be met. This is a serious deficiency in the Bill that remains.

The Government may, if it wishes, write guidelines or objectives or codes to suggest emission levels of substances in other aspect of environmental quality, but the Environmental Protection Act does not give Government the authority or the obligation to create the standards that would result in a cleaner environment. I would hope the Government would see the error of its ways and in the future would move to very clear standards.

The Bill does not incorporate a much demanded environmental bill of rights. We have instead merely a preamble at the front of the Bill which goes in that direction. We have a few provisions that allow for citizens to act at various stages, but it is not comprehensive. The Government has shied away from this. We are not entirely clear why. I want to make a few remarks about the jurisdictional question, which seems to be one reason the Government has failed to act. It wants to shove this matter off to the provinces and say that an environmental bill of rights could only be brought in by provincial Governments. That is extremely unfortunate. I am going to argue that we could be doing that at the federal level.

Canadians should have the right to healthy environment. There have been repeated demands to the Government to provide the clout, to give citizens the right to take polluters to court, for example, citizens on behalf of future generations and on behalf of their children and their neighbours. That is not there. It is only if the person has a direct financial stake that he can take the polluter to court. In short, we still have a very narrow focus that pollution may cause some immediate harm that can be dealt with, but there is not the real understanding that pollution is harmful to everyone. We are all in this together. Pollution in one area will move to another. Underground rivers unite everyone. Toxic chemicals in one place will show up in another place by water or by air.

It is said that pesticides which are sprayed in a field in Alabama will turn up in the Great Lakes five days later. The winds carry toxic substances of various sorts. So it is extremely important that we have this more comprehensive approach, that we give citizens the right to act on behalf of the environment, to act on behalf of people who cannot speak, children, animals, the children of the future. We must see that environmental pollution is radically reduced and ultimately eliminated.

The Environmental Protection Act has not done anything on some of our major environmental issues. It is not addressing the issue of acid rain at all. It is not addressing the issue of the overuse of pesticides. It is not doing anything to replace polluting forms of energy with environmentally safe forms of energy. Of course, it does not address the issue of the nuclear industry at all. It does not address the issue of packaging and all the treatment of consumer products and the pollution which occurs there. This is a Bill that is really quite limited in scope, and when we look at the massive problems we have with the environment, we can see that this Bill is not taking us as far as it should.

The Bill does not put a time limit on how long Government can take to decide if a substance is toxic after being put on the priority list, to require Government to list a substance as toxic when its toxicity is established. This ought to be a requirement. We tried to get this built in, but the Government would not accept the amendments. Even when we have gone through the very cumbersome process of establishing the toxicity, the Government may be very slow to act. We do not have time limits to make it act more promptly.

There is no definition of equivalency in the Act or any criteria to describe carefully and precisely what would be required for the federal Government to relinquish the authority to regulate to the provinces. This is a matter about which many of us are extremely concerned. It means a weakening of federal authority, and we can have pollution ghettos as a result. The Government can relinquish the authority, or was planning to relinquish the authority to the provinces, under supposed equivalency provisions, but we do not know if the procedures, the processes or the standards brought in by the provinces will be truly equivalent because there is no firm definition, no criteria that says that established equivalency means precisely this and if it is not good enough then we will not accept it as equivalent. So we have the possibility of a serious weakening there.

I think a very different approach to the environment is really needed. I want to point to some remarks made by a professor Ross Hume Hall in an article. Professor Hall has been extremely critical of this approach to the Act. I note the Liberal critic for the environment quoted Professor Hall as well. I want to point out that Professor Hall criticizes this Act, when he says that these are the same problems we have in the old Act, the Act of 1976. So here we have the irony of the Liberal critic quoting very favourably and seeming to agree with Professor Hall, yet the chief message of Professor Hall is that we are repeating the mistakes of the past. Whose mistakes? The mistakes made by the Liberal Government in its approach to environmental regulation.

What Professor Hall is saying is that things basically have not changed. We are not learning from our mistakes. The processes set up under the old Act were too cumbersome. They did not allow for adequate processing. We have the scandalous example of only five chemicals being banned in a period of ten years. This is a process under the old Act, under the Liberal Act. Now we have a new Act coming forward which even adds to the cumbersomeness of the process. It is not going to speed it up at all. It is still the same old Act.

Professor Hall says it is like having a bridge that is falling down and you hire the same architect and builder to rebuild the bridge. This is foolish. We would not do this if we were talking about bridges. But we are talking about the environment and somehow this Government has not got it through its head that the environment is at least as important as a bridge.

We have the Environment Contaminates Act of 1976. We have 60,000 industrial chemicals in Canada, 50,000 of which have never had any tests done as to their toxicity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired. She will still have 10 minutes for questions and comments when we commence debate on this Bill again.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ADVISABILITY OF INTENSIFYING RESEARCH FOR ALTERNATIVES TO REFRIGERANTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Caccia:

That in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives for refrigerants, such as freon, which contain chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) that erode the earth's ozone layer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When this motion was last before the House the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) had the floor. Since he is not here, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) on debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on this important motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I want to commend him for bringing this subject to the attention of the House. I urge all Hon. Members to familiarize themselves with the facts concerning chlorofluorocarbons, or CFCs as they are known, and the depletion of the ozone layer. This is a matter of life and death for our planet.

I said before in this House that the crisis in the environment has created a crisis in our system of parliamentary democracy. Unless we can find some way of dealing with the crisis in the environment, then our system of parliamentary democracy is under threat by some sort of totalitarian government that might perhaps offer the promise of being able to deal with environmental crises. Today being the second anniversary of the Chernobyl disaster, I think we should remind ourselves that totalitarian governments do not have any better track record in dealing with environmental questions than do parliamentary democracies.

Mr. Friesen: Not as well.

Mr. Manly: Not as well, perhaps. But the situation is that parliamentary democracies do not have a good track record. Unless we develop a better track record, we are under some threat because there will be the possibility, the appeal, that some other system might have that could manage the environment better. It is incumbent on Members on all sides of the House to deal with this situation, and with all environmental questions, in a much more serious and intelligent manner than we have done so far.

Like the crisis in the environment, the crisis in democracy is not something that can be seen immediately. However, it is insidious and the long-term effects are devastating. Simply put, the continuing degradation of the environment, the poisoning of our oceans, our lakes, our rivers, the destruction of the tropical forests and, indeed, forests in temperate regions of Canada, desertification, acid rain, the destruction of the ozone layer and the stratosphere constitute as much of a threat to human survival as nuclear war. Indeed, nuclear war itself threatens the form of environmental degradation that puts it into a different category from all previous kinds of war. It is the environmental threat of nuclear war that makes it qualitatively different from all other kinds of war because it threatens to destroy the basis on which human life is able to continue on this planet.

The crisis for democracy lies in the fact that we are so slow to recognize threats to our environment. When we do recognize these threats we seem even slower to act. While we wait to act, the silent destruction of our world continues.

If we are slow to move in this House, we are even more slow to move at the international level. Vested interests of large corporations and questions of national sovereignty seem to take precedence over our common future as members of a common family which wants to keep on living on this planet. On September 19, commenting on the Montreal Protocol, Gwynne Dyer pointed out that it took 10 years to reach this Protocol which calls for a 50 per cent cut in CFCs by 1999, when scientists have said that what we need is a 85 per cent cut in CFC production and use immediately. Dyer pointed out that the total annual value of CFC production in industry is only about $1 billion, a comparatively small sum when we look at some of the vested interests in some other industries that are also polluting our world. If we have that much trouble regulating an industry that is worth $1 billion, how much more difficult is it to regulate international industries that mount up into the billions upon billions of dollars?

It is important that we understand the importance of the ozone layer to human life on this planet. The ozone layer and the stratosphere filter ultraviolet radiation B. The depletion of this ozone layer increases the risk of skin cancer in human beings. Scientists have estimated that a 1 per cent loss of ozone translates directly into a 4 per cent increase in the risk of skin cancer. Already, Canadians face a 15 per cent increase in skin cancer because of the loss of ozone that has already taken place.

We can also look at the effect of ozone on the protection that it gives to world food crops. Wheat, corn, rice and soybeans are all sensitive to ultraviolet radiation B. Again, a 1 per cent loss of ozone can translate into a 1 per cent loss in soy production. Phytoplankton, the base of the aquatic food chain, is also affected negatively by ultraviolet radiation. Therefore, it depends on the protection that is given it by the ozone layer.

Given the importance of the ozone layer to human life, and to all life on this planet, we need to recognize that anything that threatens the ozone layer has to be regarded as an enemy of human life. This is precisely what chlorofluorocarbons do.

CFCs are stable synthetics that were developed in the 1930s originally as refrigerants. They are now used as blowing agents in the production of rigid foams, as propellants in aerosols and as cleaners for microchips. When released, these fairly static elements are carried slowly up into the atmosphere and beyond into the stratosphere, taking as long as five years before they get up to the area where the ozone layer is. Then, they are broken down by the intense energy of the sun. A single chlorine atom released from the breakdown of these CFCs can break down 10,000 ozone molecules.

The stability of these compounds means that they last anywhere from 60 to 300 years before they break down. An average life would be around 100 years. In other words, there is a very long lead time before they come fully into effect. They constitute a ticking time bomb. Since there is an annual increase of about 6 per cent or 7 per cent of the amount of CFCs that are released into the stratosphere, and since they only break down at most at a rate of 1 per cent per year, there is a gradual cumulative build-up of these ticking time bombs that are eating away at the ozone layer.

It has been estimated that CFC production and use would have to be reduced by 85 per cent to bring our system back into balance. Even this 85 per cent reduction would not restore the ozone layer to its original condition.

The Montreal Protocol agreed to last fall was an important first step. If ratified, it would lead by a series of phased reductions to a 50 per cent reduction by June 30, 1999 in production and use of CFCs. It is a small step. We need to go further.

The motion that has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Davenport refers specifically to refrigerants, which, as he points out, is the largest of all CFC use in Canada. It calls for intensified research for alternatives.

I believe that this motion is politically realistic. Even though CFCs need to be identified as life threatening, it is not possible to ban them completely even in Canada let alone in other parts of the world. They are too damn convenient for us all. Thus there is a need to step up the search for alternatives.

I urge all Members to accept this motion. I urge the Government to pay attention to it.

• (1710)

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to this motion. The House now knows all the facts, and our conclusion must be that all groups in our society share a responsibility to protect the ozone layer. Government, industry and consumers share a common point: we are all individuals who live on this planet and who each have a definite interest in protecting a vital element of their environment.

The Government, Mr. Speaker, sets a very high priority on dealing with the problem of the destruction of the ozone layer and its impact on our climate. I may remind the House of the key role played by Canada in drafting two international agreements on protecting the ozone layer. In 1986, Canada became the first country to ratify the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer. The Convention establishes a framework for international co-operation in research and information exchange. Today, 16 of the required number of ratifications, which is 20, have already been received by the United Nations Environment Program, and three more are expected shortly.

Last September, Canada, together with 23 other countries and the European Economic Community, signed the Montreal Protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer. Since then, six more countries have signed this agreement. I may remind the House that it was in recognition of Canada's efforts that the United Nations Environment Program accepted Canada's offer to host the diplomatic conference in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, the Montreal Protocol is the first national agreement that is actually a tool for managing environmental problems, since it provides an international framework for responding to such problems before they reach the crisis stage. The parties must meet specific objectives for the consumption of control substances. Consumption, defined as production plus imports minus exports, is thus substituted for the term emissions. Every party to the Protocol will have to reduce its consumption of CFCs to that of 1986, and do so by 1990. It will have to do the same with respect to halon levels by 1992. This initial step will be followed by two more, and by 1999, consumption of CFCs must be half what it was in 1986. The Department of the Environment is developing a series of options for freezing and reducing consumption, in accordance with the requirements of the Protocol. A report describing these options will be released within the next few weeks to gauge public response.

Mr. Speaker, recent scientific discoveries show that the international community must speed up its efforts to reduce the emissions of substances that erode the ozone layer, even beyond what is required by the Montreal Protocol, if we are really to stop the destruction of ozone. For this purpose, Environment Canada is considering additional regulations that will take Canada beyond the reduction targets set in the Protocol. Such regulations can include a requirement to put in place codes of technical recommendations for some use sectors that need modern technology to reduce emissions through recycling. Similarly, a ban or other restriction on frivolous uses or on products containing regulated substances, a product labeling program or any other innovative idea that may come up during the regulatory development phase.

Internationally, the Government intends to continue promoting the early implementation of the Montreal Protocol. I remind the House that implementation requires ratification by 11 states representing two-thirds of total 1986 production of controlled substances. To date, only the United States and Mexico have ratified this agreement. The European Economic Community and Japan are expected to ratify it shortly. Canada, for its part, intends to ratify it as soon as the Canadian Environmental Protection Act receives Royal Assent.

Mr. Speaker, if all these nations ratify as soon as expected, the requirements for the Protocol to take effect will be met and the Montreal Protocol will come into force on January 1, 1989. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made known his intention to put the subject of the ozone layer on the agenda at the next economic summit in Toronto in June. I am confident that all Hon. Members will agree that this is appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, all the initiatives that I have just described to you are but a reflection of this Government's intention to find a solution to this world-wide ecological problem. Industry is somewhat more in agreement that the long-term solution lies in environmentally safe substitutes.

Excited with the idea of a multi-billion dollar market, industry has already committed itself to an aggressive research program to develop alternatives as quickly as possible. In many cases, companies have not hesitated to pool their resources to carry out toxicological studies or to accelerate production technology for the most promising substitutes.

I am very encouraged by the recent response from the world's largest CFC producer to the concerns raised by the scientific discoveries that I described a few minutes ago. Not only is the international giant Du Pont encouraging all nations to speed up the ratification of the Montreal Protocol, but it has also set itself the goal of completely discontinuing CFC production. I must applaud such a move since it is the first time that industry recognizes a direct link between the destruction of ozone and CFCs.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, a government publication on substitutes would not be appropriate at this time. We must leave funding for such research to those who will reap substantial rewards from marketing environmentally safe substitutes. Nevertheless, this position does not prevent the Government from following the issue of research very closely and acting if necessary.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would tell the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) that although the Government cannot support his motion, it nevertheless thanks him for bringing the matter to the attention of the House. I express the wish that all parties will show the same co-operation in future efforts to resolve the problem of the destruction of the ozone layer and thus ensure a healthy atmosphere for future generations.

Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to see that already some companies like Provigo in Quebec have announced that they are trying to eliminate all chlorofluorocarbon-based products from their shelves as quickly as possible. That is encouraging. Some companies like Du Pont, corporations that are already distributing products, have followed the Government's lead and I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is very promising for the future of this country and especially of planet Earth.

[English]

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the continuing debate on this motion. I am thankful that the debate is coming to a close. I think that all Hon. Members have the facts before them to be able to vote authoritatively on this subject.

Let me begin my brief intervention by quoting from one voice of concern, my 16-year-old son, Liam. When I told him last night that I would be participating in a debate on this most important subject, and asked him for his thoughts, Liam said: "If the ozone layer is ever destroyed, we'd all get fried". Then he added: "I can't believe people would ever ignore something which is so necessary for our very existence. But it's true, no one cares or even thinks about using aerosol cans. They don't care diddly-squat about the ozone layer".

There you have it, Mr. Speaker, that is what the present generation of young adults think about how we, the present rulers of industry, Government, and the country tend to regard this critical matter raised by my hon. friend.

Yet, using my son's words as a text, this debate pinpoints the responsibility that we all share as consumers, together with Government and industry, to protect the ozone layer for the future well-being of our planet, and for Liam's generation and beyond.

My son points out the responsibility that we all share as consumers. This Government is at present engaged in a number of activities to generate initiatives aimed at bringing about a solution to this problem as quickly as possible, both on the domestic front and the international front. In that connection, let me pay tribute to Canada's Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and his very able Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes). In my view, both the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary, along with Members on both sides of the House, are extremely concerned about this very critical threat to the future of this planet. We are working on all fronts to establish a solution to this global problem. We have heard about the activities and initiatives of Environment Canada in respect of the development and implementation of a domestic control program aimed at reducing the emission of ozone-depleting chemicals.

In October of 1986, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, NASA, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, NOAA, the Federal Aviation Administration, FAA, the World Meteorological Organization, WMO, and the United Nations Environment Program, UNEP, formed an ozone trends panel that involved more than 100 scientists from around the world. This panel, which included scientists from the Atmospheric Environment Service of Environment Canada, was established to study the question of whether carefully re-evaluated ground-based data and satellite data would support the model predictions. The conclusions of that panel, reported in the spring of 1988, revealed that there is undisputed observational evidence of atmospheric concentrations of source gases important in controlling stratospheric ozone levels, including chlorofluorocarbons, halons, methane, nitrous oxide, and carbon dioxide, all of which continue to increase on a global scale as a result of the activities of humans. There has also been a large, sudden, unexpected decrease in the abundance of spring time Antarctic ozone over the last decade.

The total column of ozone in the austral spring of 1987 at all latitudes south of 60 degrees south was the lowest since measurements began 30 years ago!

Many of these same scientists have reached the conclusion that global emissions of chlorofluorocarbons, or CFCs, and halons, need to be reduced by in excess of 85 per cent in order to reduce the rate of depletion of the ozone layer.

Our scientists have warned us that increasing concentrations of CFCs and halons, both of which are very efficient infrared radiation absorbers, in the atmosphere will contribute significantly to increasing the earth's temperature over the coming years to a level which has not existed for millions of years! This is frightening stuff.

They tell us that we are already committed to a significant global warming, and they are calling the accelerated change in the climate of our planet "potentially catastrophic".

These effects are predicted to occur in a manner and at a rate that makes the future sound like some sort of long-running science fiction horror movie. We will face rising sea levels, with the consequent submergence of coastal communities such as Prince Edward Island; changes in the location of deserts; extremely high temperatures in cities during the summer months—as if they weren't high enough already; an increase in the number and severity of hurricanes; and the death of a significant quantity of the world's forests.

These recent scientific findings signal a warning to the world's political institutions: the continuing depletion of the ozone layer must be effectively arrested. We must hear about the response of this Government and industry to these findings.

This Government is committed to effective ozone layer protection, and it is prepared to back up that commitment with concrete action.

Let me turn for a moment to the role of the consumer in the resolution of this problem, because the power of the consumer is paramount. For some years I was the consumer affairs critic for our Party, and I know that if a consumer does not want to buy, the product will not survive in the market-place.

Regulations prohibiting the use of CFCs as propellants in certain aerosols, notably hairsprays, deodorants and antiperspirants, were put in place in 1980 pursuant to the Environmental Contaminants Act, and that came about as a direct result of pressure from consumers.

Reduced Canadian consumption of CFCs dropped to about one-half of the 1974 peak level. But the success was temporary. Since that time, consumption levels have again reached the peak levels of 1974, all due to the substantial growth in unregulated uses. Once again, alarmed Canadian consumers are voicing their strong concerns about the continued production and use of ozone-depleting CFCs and halons. Many are calling for a variety of measures to control the problem, including a complete ban on the use of CFCs and halons, the mandatory labelling of products, and a boycott of some forms of plastic foam packaging made with CFCs.

Last August, McDonald's announced its plans to phase out the use of plastic foam packaging made with CFCs. More recently, Provigo, a major chain food and convenience stores in the Province of Quebec, announced its intention to follow suit.

So, consumers' influence can be used to facilitate the switch to non-ozone-depleting consumer products. Driven by these express consumer preferences and the substantial market incentives emerging therefrom, industry has mounted a major research program to develop and market environmentally safe substitutes for all uses of CFCs. Environment Canada has developed, and will be implementing in the very near future, a control strategy to deal with the depletion of the ozone layer.

In conclusion, industry must begin now to plan for cutting back consumption of CFCs, regardless of whether they produce, use, import or export controlled chlorofluorocarbons. In order to provide an enhanced level of protection for the ozone layer, Canada will implement additional control measures. Toward that end, a report will be circulated for consultation and discussion later this summer.

As is apparent, this Government is clearly committed to the resolution of this problem. This Government is fully prepared to consider involvement in research, should areas be identified in the future where the Government can play a role.

Mr. Speaker, the facts bearing on this issue speak for themselves, and for generations to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is as follows: Mr. Caccia, seconded by Mr. Foster, moves that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives to refrigerants, such as freon, which contain chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) that erode the earth's ozone layer.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hear no "nays". I declare the motion carried.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On division.

Ms. Copps: You have to act on these votes, guys.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried, on division.

• (1730)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If there are no objections in the House, I think we might proceed to the normal Adjournment Debate at this time. I understand Members are present, for the most part, and others have been informed. We could save time by moving to the Adjournment Debate.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, if we check the "blues", we will see that the Speaker said "I declare the motion carried".

An Hon. Member: On division.

Mr. Rossi: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It was carried on division.

Motion (Mr. Caccia) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed that we proceed to the Adjournment Debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—APPLICABILITY OF PROVINCIAL LAW TO FEDERAL AGENCIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, have you ever received a parking ticket? Don't feel badly, because virtually everyone in this country has had a parking ticket from time to time. I have had parking tickets myself and friends of mine have had parking tickets.

One of my friends whom I recall very vividly was an old law school classmate of mine, a fellow by the name of Jack Pinkofsky. Jack and I went to law school in Toronto. We attended Osgoode Hall Law School when Osgoode Hall was in downtown Toronto. Just to the north of it was a piece of property on which was located the old University Avenue Armouries. Jack used to park on the boulevard of that armoury property. You are right, Mr. Speaker, the University Avenue Armouries was torn down some years ago and the new Toronto court-house was built on that property. When the old University Avenue armouries was there, Jack Pinkofsky used to park his car every day on the boulevard of the University Avenue Armouries. As you can expect, Mr. Speaker, anyone who parks on such a boulevard gets a parking ticket, especially when parking all day and where there is a sign which quite clearly says that you cannot park there at any time. Jack got several parking tickets. The police got after him and he was taken to court on one ticket.

Jack was an ingenious sort of guy, and he still is. He decided to fight the ticket, and he fought it on some very interesting grounds. He argued that the ticket was based on a municipal by-law; that the municipal by-law was passed under the authority of a provincial law; and that, in fact, the armouries property stood on federal property, not an provincial property. Therefore, municipal by-laws authorized by provincial laws did not apply to federal property.

The courts found that Jack was right and that federal property was immune from any law passed by the Province of Ontario, or authorized and passed by a municipality. Jack did not have to pay his parking ticket. He got off not because he was not parking there illegally but because of a technicality.

The Jack Pinkofsky situation is the same sort of situation which the federal Government ran into recently when a federal polluter was charged under the Province of Ontario's environmental laws with breaking those laws, being in breach of them, and thus subject to all the harsh penalties for which the Ontario environmental laws provide.

What happened in that case? We find that in the federal Department of Justice there are some ingenious people like Jack Pinkofsky and that in fact they fought and defended that case, not on the grounds that this particular federal polluter had not broken provincial law, not on the grounds that this federal polluter was not a polluter, but on the technical grounds that in fact provincial laws did not apply to federal polluters. That is the sort of defence used not only by Jack Pinkofsky with parking tickets but now by the federal Justice Department with federal polluters.

I do not know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think that a federal polluter should be able to get off on technical grounds like that. It is one thing for a parking ticket, but it is an entirely different thing for something severe like that.

Fortunately the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) agreed with us. In answer to a question I put to him in the House he said that he felt that the new Canadian Environmental Protection Act would apply to all federal polluters and that there would be no problem with that sort of situation. Unfortunately that is not really the case.

In fact the Minister realized that and said that he would be prepared to see the legislative committee dealing with this matter actually put forward some amendments to change the Bill and to ensure that any federal polluter who actually breached the law would be convicted and penalized as a result of that breach.

Of course the Parliamentary Secretary knows that the legislative committee dealing with the Environmental Protection Act went through a great process. Over 300 amendments were put and many were accepted. The Parliamentary Secretary who is here tonight played an outstanding role on that committee, as did the Minister, and I have nothing but praise for the process. Unfortunately it left something to be desired in the area of whether or not a federal polluter would be quite clearly subject to and penalized by this Act and by federal pollution laws.

Clauses 52 and 53 of the Bill leave something to be desired—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret, the Hon. Member's time—

Mr. Redway: —and for that reason I hope that tonight, if you will give me a chance to put this sentence on the record, Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary will agree to amend the Bill so that we will ensure that federal polluters are subject to federal law and penalties.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, thank you for providing me an opportunity to respond to my colleague from the great riding of York East, my neighbour in Metro Toronto. I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's question on the matter of enforcement of environmental legislation concerning federal polluters. Indeed, just today, we have been debating Bill C-74, the Bill in question.

There has been concern expressed that Bill C-74 did not bind the Crown. That fear, in the Government's view, is groundless. Clause 4 of the Bill states that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act is "binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada or of a province". This means that the statute is binding on the Government of Canada and on both provincial and territorial Governments.

The only circumstance in which it could be argued that the aforementioned might not be true is an offence by a federal Department, agency, board, or Crown corporation where a province or territory is enforcing its own regulation recognized through an Order in Council under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act as equivalent to requirements of the federal Act.

The Government is indebted to a lawyer for an environmental law group, the Canadian Environmental Law Association, for pointing out this deficiency. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) urged the legislative committee charged with the clause-by-clause review of Bill C-74 to make the necessary amendments to close the loophole, and the committee did so.

On repeated occasions the Minister has declared his concern that federal Departments, agencies, boards, and Crown corporations must not be above the law when the environment is at stake. The committee of which the Hon. Member himself was an outstanding member and contributed a great deal was of the same mind. It made further amendments to Bill C-74 to ensure that no longer will there be any doubt on the matter.

The revamped Bill now empowers the Government, on recommendation of the Minister of the Environment, to make regulations setting limits for emissions and effluents released by federal Departments, agencies, boards, and Crown corporations. Waste handling and disposal can also be regulated. It further requires that if a harmful substance has been released into the environment, the federal body which had management, charge or control of the substance immediately prior to its unauthorized release must report to an inspector or other designated person. That body must then take all reasonable emergency measures to prevent danger to the environment, human life or health, and to notify members of the public who may be adversely affected.

Bill C-74 now specifically indicates that inspectors have the right of access and entry to federal property and may take emergency measures if the relevant federal Department, board, agency, or Crown corporation fails to do so.

With the amended provisions in place—and there were a number of them—the Minister can now set about developing regulations to ensure that activities of federal Departments, agencies, boards, and Crown corporations do not pollute what we recognize as Canada's most precious resource, its environment. The concerns of the Hon. Member have been met in the amended Bill C-74 now before the House.

EMPLOYMENT—INNOVATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECT/REQUEST THAT PROJECT PROCEED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address tonight the whole issue of household garbage collecting and recycling process. My question in the House to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) had to do with an application from a Quebec group from Lotbinière, more specifically from Victoriaville, for support in a development of its household garbage collecting and recycling program. The Minister of Employment and Immigration wants to know whether it was a job creation or conservation project. Well, it is both. It is a household garbage collecting and recycling project for environmental purposes, which also aims at preserving jobs, because jobs have been created in Victoriaville, in Bois-Francs, for this recuperation demonstration program. There are about 25 people working there full-time, including a number of unskilled workers who, without these jobs, would be on welfare. So these are good, wholesome, permanent community jobs. Our purpose is not to send people to look for jobs in other regions, but to create jobs in our own area by using recoverable household garbage.

I have also visited "Cascades" in the Lotbinière region, a private corporation which is using recycled paper. Now, in Canada, we are using only 20 per cent recycled paper. In Europe, they use as much as 60 per cent. They are much more advanced in Europe. It is much better for the environment to use recycled paper. Why? Because the pulp and paper making process results in the pollution of our rivers and lakes, because of the detrimental effects of chlorine on water and the production of dioxins. Recycled paper avoid these negative effects on the environment by re-using paper.

There was a whole lot of correspondance on this subject. An application was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who referred it to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) but the Department of Environment could not provide funds for this Bois-Francs Récupération et Recyclage project. So an application was sent to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who replied that it was not the responsibility of her Department. What we need is a collecting and recycling policy, because it would be better for the environment and for job creation. We need a policy which would take the environment, investment, the prices of recycled products into account, as well as the need to create full-time jobs within the community.

We now have those projects, but the problem exists. For example, Bois-Francs has experienced an increased demand for recycling from municipalities. Well, this means that more products and waste are carried to dumps. The price of recycled products has gone down because there is not enough demand from manufacturers for them. A fine national project is in financial trouble as a result of decreased demand. What should be done? We have to promote demand and tax non-recycled products. There is the possibility among others that a satisfactory policy to encourage recovery and recycling would be to make more costly the refusal to use those recycled products.

[English]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this is a very good enterprise. It is extremely encouraging and is employing people. It could expand its educational work, its work in the municipalities, to ensure that even more jobs are created. They would be good jobs in the community.

What response have we received?

As stated by the Minister of the Environment, in reply to Bois-Francs: "The recovery and recycling of waste contribute to the economic development of regions by creating jobs and reducing the use of natural resources". The activities of the industrial sector also contribute to reduce environmental problems affecting urban centres and to improve the management of domestic waste.

It is quite clear that those two objectives are aimed at and can be attained with a satisfactory financing of recovery and recycling. The Government should review that basic issue and promote a real policy for recovery, protection of the environment and creation of jobs.

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall). I would first like to point out that there are at least six streams in the Canadian Jobs Strategy and that it involves probably thousands of projects across Canada.

If the Hon. Member had really been interested in a fulsome explanation from the Minister on that day, it would have been helpful for her to have given notice to the Minister so that he could have been briefed on the details of this application. Even the Member, who has an encyclopaedic knowledge of Canada and of everything going on in Canada, would agree that the Minister cannot, on a day-to-day basis, be totally briefed on every project in Canada.

Ms. McDonald: You've had weeks now to respond.

Mr. Friesen: And I will respond. I suggest that the Hon. Member may not have been searching for a fulsome answer, that there may have been some politics involved.

The Member has raised an environmental question and has praised the quality of this application. Neither I nor the Minister would quarrel with the quality of the project or the application. However, the Member is a well educated person; she has had extensive university training. If, during the course of her pursuit for her economics degree, she had applied for a scholarship toward economics in the fine arts department, she would have probably been told that it was a great application but that she was in the wrong department. Therefore I suggest to the Member that talking about quality of the project really is not the question before us.

Ms. McDonald: But it is creating jobs.

Mr. Friesen: The question is: Does it follow the criteria? While we all agree that the project the Member has promoted is a good one, it does not fall within the criteria. It does not help for her to say that the Minister should stop sending it around. Actually, the project came to the attention of the Department in April, 1987. It responded to the proposal on April 16, 1987 and again in June, 1987. It is pretty hard for the Member to say that it has been simply sent around the Department. Actually the Member brought it to the attention of the House on March 8, 1988, whereas the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) has been working on this project for a year and a half—

Ms. McDonald: Without success. Where is the funding?

Mr. Friesen: —in the sense that he has tried in every employment department to see whether there was a program where the project would fit.

Ms. McDonald: But you have turned him down. Every department has turned him down.

Mr. Friesen: This lady insists on talking from her seat. She did not say all this when she was speaking. The Hon. Member for Lotbinière has gone to every office in the innovations department and the employment department and has looked for a way to help this particular project. It simply does not meet the criteria. To meet the criteria it must first be a new project. I think the Hon. Member knows that. In addition, proposals should clearly demonstrate that their effects would be widespread in improving the Canadian labour market.

Ms. McDonald: It does that.

Mr. Friesen: The proposal by this group has already been tested in Laval, Quebec and in Alberta. It would not be a pilot or demonstration project.

Although the proposed activities would increase productivity in recycling businesses, they would not solve specific labour market problems through a systematic global approach. The Association de gestion wrote to CEIC officials in May, 1987 asking that the proposal be reconsidered. CEIC was very pleased to look again at this matter and responded in June, 1987 confirming that the decision did not meet the criteria.

As I said before it is not fair for the Member to say that we just sat on the proposal for a year. That is just not the way it is. It would be helpful if she would state the facts as they are.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's time has expired.

FINANCE—REFORM OF LEGISLATION—CONSEQUENCE FOR MOUVEMENT DESJARDINS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on April 15, 1988, I briefly expressed to the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Hockin) my concern about this Government's legislation dealing with trust and loan companies.

As you certainly can imagine, Mr. Speaker, I put that question because of the possible implications for the Mouvement Desjardins.

As you know, Mouvement Desjardins alltogether is one of the most important, if not the single most important financial co-operative group in Canada.

Its assets are nearly $31 billion. This means it is very important to hear Desjardins's considerations in this process.

When I myself analyse the trust company legislation, I hardly see how Desjardins and its group of companies would be exempted from the new requirements that would be imposed upon trust and loan companies by the legislation.

Indeed, I believe that when administering the legislation, bureaucrats could view the Desjardins group as a corporation, although the Desjardins group is a huge financial co-op.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the legislation's intent is to prevent conflicts of interests within small groups of companies with business links, which conflicts could in some cases lead to some stockholders catering to their own needs at the expense of investors, consumers.

That legislation is aimed at preventing inequities that could harm consumers and investors, which is both just and reasonable.

However, Desjardins is not a corporation. Under its structure, that institution is for all pratical purposes completely protected from conflicts of interests. Here is why, Mr. Speaker.

There are no small groups at Desjardins. Desjardins belongs to 4,200,000 shareholders. In Quebec, one out of five of every man, woman and child is a Desjardins shareholder.

The development strategy of Desjardins is determined by 18,330 volunteer directors, working together with a team of 28,500 Desjardins employees.

Mr. Speaker, if a conflict of interest were found in the growth of the Desjardins group, it would affect all Quebecers.

For all these reasons, speaking as the Member for the riding where Desjardins himself was born and where the headquarters are located, and considering the significance of this immense financial co-operative movement, of a tool whose continued growth is essential to Quebecers, I would ask you to further clarify this proposed legislation. I agree with the objective which is to protect Canadians who depend on trust and loan companies, but it should not, for want of definition and clarity—and that is what is important—be detrimental to the continued growth of the collective property of 20 per cent of the population of Quebec.

Sir, I thank you, and I trust your decision.

• (1755)

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to apologize to the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine). From time to time in the House we finish our business a little earlier than anticipated. The Hon. Member has good reason to expect a response from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent). However, he is not with us today because of the change in time. If we had gone on to the "Late Show" at the normal time, I am sure he would have been here. However, I will do my best to provide a response on behalf of the Government to the Hon. Member.

In the House, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lévis has a reputation for being a good MP and he always represents his electors' interests passionately and also intelligently.

But regarding the Mouvement Desjardins, he has a reputation that perhaps goes beyond this House and into the community as well. He always defends the interests of the Mouvement Desjardins in this House, in committee and in his community too, I think.

[English]

It is that kind of intelligent and compassionate approach which ensures that any piece of legislation brought forward to the House is examined with thoroughness and skill to ensure that the legislation will do good things on behalf of the people in the movement and on behalf of the communities which are involved, as well as with the co-operative. I am sure interventions he has already made in this Chamber, as well as the interventions he has made directly to the Minister and the interventions which will come as the legislation is introduced and moved forward to committee, will be reason for the people connected to this movement to feel confident that nothing in the legislation will do them harm. Indeed, the legislation will facilitate the movement and will facilitate the strength and capacity of Canadians to dream and to care about their children, their communities, and their standard of living.

That is the best I can do on short notice, Mr. Speaker, but I feel it sincerely. This Member is one Member of the House who approaches things, does not forget, and keeps working on them in order that they come out right and are helpful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

ACID RAIN—CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, according to Jeff Simpson of The Globe and Mail the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) declared that acid rain represented the litmus test of Canada-U.S. relations. If so, the Americans have flunked the test, and so by implication has the Prime Minister. His Government's strategy of less rhetoric, reduced lobbying, fewer public complaints, and the special envoys' process produced meagre results—more U.S. research and a statement by the President that acid rain was indeed a transboundary problem.

• (1405)

Unfortunately, the Prime Minister's policy also disheartened Canada's congressional allies. Every time they sought to get something going, the Reaganites could respond that even the Canadians accepted the administration's approach.

The Prime Minister now says Congress is at fault for not passing acid rain control legislation. Yet his Government's policy hurt congressional efforts.

This toughening reflects the political reality that nothing further can be gained from the administration. President Reagan is already history. The rhetoric also reflects the need to deflect criticism back home that the close relations with President Reagan led Canada up a deadend street.

What a sham, Mr. Speaker.

ABORTION

CHARTER OF RIGHTS—PROTECTION OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, "The testimony of modern science and technology asserts most emphatically a truth that was not so certain even 20 years ago, namely, that from the moment of conception everything is present for the gradual development of a unique human person; nothing is added by the mother or any other source".

This sentence is taken from an open letter to Members of Parliament from His Excellency the Bishop of Alexandria-Cornwall. He goes on to say: "With this present scientific knowledge and the assurance of our Christian faith my request to you", that is, Members of Parliament, "is to enshrine the right to life from the moment of conception in law and in our Charter of Human Rights . . . "

I urge the Government and all Members to heed this message from the Bishop.

IMMIGRATION

OPPOSITION TO DEPORTATION OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS TO EL SALVADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, telegrams from Canadians are demanding that the Government stop its new program of trying to railroad Salvadoran refugee claimants back to El Salvador.

Recently a Salvadoran trade unionist who had been imprisoned and tortured for his union work there, lost his plea for refugee status in Canada and was to be deported to El Salvador until Amnesty International intervened to ensure that his appeal is heard before he leaves Canada. On the record documented by the American Civil Liberties Union and the General Accounting Office of the U.S. Congress, he has good reason to fear persecution if forced back to El Salvador.

Another Salvadoran whose bus driver brother was murdered by the Salvadoran Army, fled rather than be conscripted by that same army to kill his neighbours. Here he was imprisoned so that he was unable to get a lawyer to help his case, and in discouragement withdrew his refugee claim. Fortunately, his case will be reviewed by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, since in El Salvador he is under death squad threat.

Is this the purpose for which the Government recently dumped some of the best qualified members of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, to intimidate the rest into sending Salvadorans back to death squads?

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—PRIME MINISTER'S ACHIEVEMENTS

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, most Canadians are in favour of free trade. I would like to point out the visit my Prime Minister is paying to Washington today. Three cheers to Brian Mulroney for his tenacity and his efforts to strengthen bilateral trade with our southern neighbour!

Liberals and New Democrats, the end is near. You have only one thing left to do: pay tribute to our Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, who is leading our country so brilliantly. He is a very talented statesman whom we are pleased to follow and support. I thank the residents of the riding of La Prairie for giving me the chance to live such moments in this House.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a postscript to this comment. Canadians are living through a time of glory, rejoicing and pride, all because of the Conservatives in the country.

Victory in Manitoba! Congratulations! And even at the risk of repeating myself, I say that Canada has the greatest Prime Minister ever elected.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ISRAEL—ANNIVERSARY OF STATE'S FOUNDATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday with pride and joy I joined approximately 6,000 Montrealers in song and dance to celebrate Israel's fortieth birthday.

Growing from the ashes of the Holocaust, that blot on the collective memory of mankind, this state has settled Jewish refugees from over 75 nations of the world, renewed the land, planted trees, built roads, housing, industry, set up hospitals and health services, and put in place a modern democracy founded on the basic values of traditional Jewish culture, respect for learning, justice and charity.

Yet even with these successes no nation is whole without peace. This fledgling state has withstood assaults from its Arab neighbours, and survived continuous hostility and a condition of quasi-war ever since it was born.

Since its founding days Israel has fought five wars for survival, and its citizens still face an ongoing difficult security situation.

While the present unrest concerns us all, we must not give up hope. We must persevere in our support for peace in the region, a peace which history has yet to record for Israel and its Arab-Palestinian neighbours, a peace negotiated directly by Israel and the Palestinians, a peace that includes full recognition of Israel by her neighbours and acceptance of her right to secure borders.

Surely Israel and the Palestinians deserve such fundamental democratic rights as we hold so dear here in Canada.

WELFARE

REDUCTION IN POVERTY LEVELS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, if there is one accomplishment in which this Government can take pride, it is the significant reduction in poverty levels since it took office.

The National Council of Welfare, in its recent publication "Poverty Profile 1988", says that, in our first two years in office, the poverty rate decreased from 17.3 per cent to 14.9 per cent. Some 525,000 individuals were removed from the ranks of the poor between 1984 and 1986 alone.

The real success story has been the reduction in poverty among Canada's elderly. Our prime area of concern is now to repeat this success for families headed by single women.

The economic and social policies of the Conservative Government have been unparalleled when it comes to alleviating hardship amongst the less well off.

DISARMAMENT

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF ARMS REGISTER

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, last year, prompted by growing public concern about the export of arms and military related goods from Canada, I called upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to establish a public commission of inquiry to undertake a thorough and careful study of Canada's military export policies and practices. Unfortunately, the Minister failed to establish such a commission of inquiry. However, he has now agreed to set up a technical working group, as recommended recently by the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, to examine the feasibility of an arms register. This is an encouraging and timely development.

While I welcome the Minister's decision, I must protest his Department's failure to invite representatives of disarmament groups, particularly Ernie Regehr, of Project Ploughshares, who has skilfully and eloquently promoted a need for an arms register for many years, to attend the inaugural meeting of the working group.

Unless the Minister broadens the representation of this group to include disarmament organizations, the group's credibility is put seriously in question.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

NATIVE CANADIANS—LACK OF SERVICES

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who live with mental or physical disability face many challenges that are, in and of themselves, hard enough to overcome. If, on top of that, you happen to be a native Canadian, the barriers can be truly awesome.

In 1981 a special parliamentary committee recommended a series of steps to help disabled natives lead independent and dignified lives. In 1985 those recommendations in respect of native Canadians were endorsed a second time, in the parliamentary committee report "Equality for All".

To date, however, there is little indication from either native or non-native sources that any significant progress has been made.

In the initial report of the Committee on the Disabled, brought down exactly one year ago, I advised the House that the Department of Indian Affairs had no services for disabled natives, had no future plans for such programs, and did not consider disability prevention to be an issue of concern.

It will come as no surprise, therefore, that the Parliamentary Committee on the Status of Disabled Persons intends to investigate this situation.

MORE FUNDS REQUESTED FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, after looking at their newspaper today, Quebecers must feel very neglected by the Conservative Government. After being cheated on the frigates and all the other contracts for the shipyards, because the Conservative Government has closed down two shipyards in Quebec, after being had in the rail transport area when CN was allowed to buy locomotives in the United States rather than from Bombardier in Quebec, we learn that under the federal Government's science and technology policy, Quebec receives only $25 million out of $251 million. Only 10 per cent! That is scandalous, considering that the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) is a Quebecer. It is unacceptable and I would hope that he will take corrective action as soon as possible so that Quebec receives its fair share.

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS—RESULTS OF MANITOBA PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, opinion polls, they say, 19 times out of 20 are far less accurate in Manitoba than in other parts of Canada.

Yesterday Manitobans went to the polls, and the survey said the Conservatives are the most popular Party and the New Democrats have fallen into a bottomless pit. No doubt, some credit should be given to Sharon Carstairs who was able to convince more Winnipeg people to vote Liberal in two years while the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has failed to convince anyone to vote for the Liberals in the past 15 years, other than a few friends in his riding.

Is it possible that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) is more popular than the pollsters would say, that is, 19 times out of 20? Is it possible that the NDP is far less popular than the polls indicate, that is, 19 times out of 20?

Doesn't the suspense of this information just drive you crazy, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question either for the Deputy Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the Prime Minister's visit to Washington, particularly concerning acid rain.

The Government's record in solving the acid rain problem with the United States is one of retreat and failure. The Prime Minister has adopted a non-strategy of little or no lobbying of the United States Congress, fewer appeals to American public opinion, and has been utilizing the special envoys' process. For what conclusion and for what achievement? The answer is nothing.

Now the Prime Minister belatedly discovers that the Congress of the United States, the Senate and the House of Representatives, does exist and is a key player in the acid rain game.

Will the Prime Minister in his address to the Congress this afternoon finally lay his so-called special relationship with the President on the line, and state Canada's position on acid rain clearly and unequivocally on behalf of people north of the 49th parallel who now consider this to be the most important issue of our neighbourship with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this Government has not only known that acid rain is a major priority in the relationship between Canada and the United States but we have acted on that knowledge. We have acted on that knowledge in the United States in seeking agreements, including specific agreements, in the context of an accord, and we have acted here at home by giving leadership with the provinces to a number of actions that allow us to go to the Americans and indicate that we are doing our part in dealing with that continent-wide problem.

I am very interested to note that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would make reference to acid rain in the context of a speech by a Canadian Prime Minister to the United States Congress, because the last time there was such a speech by a Liberal Prime Minister acid rain was not mentioned once.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows that our Prime Minister at three consecutive summits has been inveigled into a presidential commitment from the United States for yet more research, when everybody knows the solution is not more research but more action.

UNITED STATES POLICY ON NITROGEN OXIDE EMISSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs hopefully is aware, and Canadians today learned with dismay, that the U.S. negotiators in Geneva have rejected Canada's demand that a planned increase in the United States emissions of nitrogen oxide, which is the key ingredient of acid rain, would only be permitted and should only be permitted if this increase did not result in more pollution for Canada. That was Canada's demand which American negotiators have rejected.

Will the Secretary of State tell us whether the Prime Minister today in Washington will insist that the President reverse this short-sighted and disastrous policy announced in Geneva today, because it really means that the United States still plans to increase, and not decrease, the acid rain pollution of our lakes, forests, rivers, and our environment. Did the Prime Minister know the President was going to allow this to happen by way of his negotiators in Geneva on the very day he was addressing the United States Congress?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, one-third of the acid rain that wreaks havoc on the Canadian environment comes from nitrogen oxide. About two-thirds of that NOx comes from the United States. Clearly, the Prime Minister will be raising that dimension of the problem with the President during his private and public meetings.

The position of Canada has always been clear in Geneva at successive meetings of our top officials there. We oppose any American position that has been on the table at successive meetings that would have the effect of increasing NOx emissions from such a source. We have opposed it in the past, we oppose it now, and we will oppose it at future meetings. The Prime Minister of Canada will be expressing his opposition in the most unqualified terms in Washington today and tomorrow.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL SHOW FIRMNESS IN SPEECH TO UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it may be an unfortunate coincidence for the Canadian Government and the Prime Minister of Canada that, on the very day he addresses the U.S. Congress, American negotiators in Geneva announce a decision that is very negative for Canada.

Now that the Prime Minister has discovered the existence of the U.S. Congress, will he show some firmness in his speech today before Congress or is he going to soften his position so as not to compromise the passage of his free trade agreement with the United States? Are we heading towards free trade in acid rain?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I really am puzzled. The Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition attaches a great deal of symbolic importance to the fact that there is a meeting in Geneva today when the Prime Minister of Canada is in Washington. The negotiators from 34 countries have been meeting almost non-stop for the last year and a half, or two years.

The meeting in Geneva is important, but it is no more important than the meetings held in February or in November, or those that will be held in future months. We are not completing a protocol in Geneva this week. Indeed, I would doubt whether enough progress will be made by the international community to make it possible to sign such an Accord by next October, which was the original deadline.

In any event, the Prime Minister of Canada, unlike the Prime Minister of the day in 1977, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, will be expressing, on the floor of Congress, Canadian concerns in very unqualified terms. This is in sharp contrast to the situation that prevailed when the Liberal Party of Canada was in power. It would not raise the subject on the floor of the House of Commons, let alone on the floor of Congress in Washington.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: How sweet it is, Mr. Speaker.

I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment. He has just said how the Prime Minister will be taking tough stands and strengthening his rhetoric with the President. It was not so long ago that in this House the Prime Minister was castigating a Member of the U.S. Congress who had the nerve to suggest that the Canadian Prime Minister and the Canadian administration were selling out on acid rain.

Why has the Prime Minister now changed his tune? Will he retract or repudiate those statements he made in this House when he was saying that it was wrong for U.S. Congressmen to be asking for a Clean Air Act and that they should go along with the Reagan plan?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said no such thing. The Government of Canada should be judged by its actions and those actions are a heck of a lot tougher against acid rain than those taken by any previous Government. We have slashed acid rain-causing emissions from Canadian sources by 50 per cent and that will take effect by 1994, based on levels that prevailed in 1980, as far as sulphur dioxide is concerned.

We have instituted the toughest anti-NOx program in the world. When we took office in September of 1984, emission controls in Canada for nitrogen oxide were only one-third as strict as those that prevailed in the United States, greatly undermining our capacity as a country to point the finger at Washington for stronger measures. Now we have slashed allowable emissions by 60 per cent for light cars and trucks, and by 50 per cent for heavy-duty vehicles. That control program is the toughest in the world. We should be judged by our actions, and our actions have been very strong.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said we should judge the Government by its actions. We know that the actions of the Government were to cut back on efforts in Washington to work with Congress to develop the Clean Air Act. It tried to sort of soft sell and soft soap the President to get action. It completely disbanded efforts by the Canadian embassy to work with the administration. Those are its actions.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Axworthy: Is the Government going to change its actions now? What it has done has resulted in absolutely no success, no achievement, no accomplishment in dealing with this major problem of acid rain coming from the U.S. Is the Government going to change its actions now?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we certainly do not need to take a back seat to the Liberal Party on acid rain. When the Liberal Party was in office, Sir, the Prime Minister of the day would return to Ottawa from Washington and other foreign capitals, after meeting with then President Carter, and we would ask him in Question Period whether he used the occasion to raise Canada's very deep-seated concern about this lethal pollutant. Prime Minister Trudeau would shrug his shoulders and say: "Well, the Hon. Member cannot expect the Prime Minister of Canada to raise just any bilateral problem." For Prime Minister Trudeau acid rain was merely another bilateral problem.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, all the Minister did was to confirm that after four years of talk our Prime Minister has got absolutely nothing from the President. I do not know what he is boasting about.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

QUERY WHETHER MONTREAL REGION ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE STILL EXISTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Last week, the Prime Minister's office published the list of ministerial task forces, which no longer includes the Montreal Region Development Committee. A spokesman for the Prime Minister confirmed this unfortunate state of affairs.

Today, however, according to the media, the Minister's spokesman said the Committee still exists. Who is telling the truth?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to set the record straight. The sub-committee of the Economic Development Committee for the Montreal region was created at the same time as the Montreal Region Advisory Committee, so that appropriate recommendations could be made, based on information provided by the Advisory Committee.

Subsequently, the Advisory Committee's recommendations were considered and largely agreed to by the ministerial task force, and these recommendations were referred to the respective departments, while the Economic Development Committee, which is in charge of these matters, took over the responsability.

So we are talking about an ad hoc committee, a sub-committee like many other committees that still exist today and are not on the list. This Committee did a lot of work during the time it was working with the Advisory Committee, which has submitted its report. The report has been approved and its implementation is in progress.

QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT IGNORED PICARD REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, according to officials at the office of the Mayor of Montreal, the Committee still exists. However, if I understand correctly, the Minister confirmed today that the Committee is no longer active.

My second question is very straightforward: According to the office of the Mayor of Montreal, the Picard Report made some very concrete and practical suggestions but the federal Government completely ignored them. Why?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Sub-Committee on Economic Development of the Montreal region, which reported to the Cabinet Committee on Economic Development, may be asked to meet at any time, if this is judged to be appropriate. The sectoral Departments are acting on the recommendations of the Picard Report. There were about 86 recommendations. Some of them are exclusively concerned with the city and others with the province. Of the remaining recommendations we approved about 95 per cent. We are acting on these recommendations, and the benefits are being felt in a very concrete way in the Greater Montreal area.

• (1430)

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows perfectly well that the people of Montreal did not like the Government's response in this respect and more specifically, the Picard Report recommended that the federal Government support the Vieux-Port, the Space Agency and a number of projects concerning the region's infrastructure. Why hasn't the federal Government given a concrete response to projects that are so important to the people of Montreal?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): If the Leader of the Socialist Party was as well informed about events in Quebec as he is about events in the other provinces, he would know that in many instances the Government has already taken action. He referred to the Vieux-Port. We have approved the entire plan. We are now taking concrete action on capital investment in the Vieux-Port. For instance, we have just agreed with Quebec to sign a three-way agreement by May 15.

I can mention many more programs that have been started in the Montreal region. There is the program for Montreal East, where $35 milion in new money has been invested by the federal Government. The Montreal Museum of Fine Arts has received $20 million from Communications Canada and $5 million from Tourism Canada. The International Reception and Information Centre in Montreal has received $3.3 million. Pétromont received $15 million in 1984 and $55.8 million in 1985.

DISSOLUTION OF MONTREAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Leader of the New Democratic Party doesn't know what is going on in Montreal. However, there is one point where they are both wrong: the Minister is equally ignorant of the reason why the Committee was established.

The Minister will recall that following complaints by Montreal businesses, by Montreal's elected representatives and by the Survival Committee for Montreal East about the fact that Montreal Island does not have a single Member or Minister who is effective enough to make the Government listen to these people, the Prime Minister had, in response, formed the so-called Montreal Economic Development Committee with the Picard Committee, headed by the Minister.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Now that the Minister is no longer responsible, could he perhaps inform the House why the Government disbanded the Montreal Development Committee, although no concrete announcements were made following the Picard Report?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie says I am no longer responsible for the Montreal region, because an ad hoc committee finished its work and the Committee over which I preside is taking care of the follow-up. Whether I happen to head a sub-committee or the committee, it boils down to the same thing. And I can inform the Hon. Member that we are acting on all the recommendations we approved in the Picard Report. We are acting on recommendations for the development of Montreal. That is, in fact, one of the reasons why 114,000 jobs have been created during the past few years in Montreal, while there was a sharp drop in employment under the previous Government.

OPPORTUNITY TO LISTEN TO MONTREALERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this is a big joke! Whether he was chairman or not doesn't make any difference, since we are still waiting for the space agency. We are still waiting for $130 million in new money for the development of the Vieux-Port of Montreal. Nothing has been done about the Port of Montreal or pre-retirement benefits for the people of Montreal East. What I want to know is . . . today we heard that as far as science and technology contracts are concerned, Quebec will get only $25 million out of $251 million. Now there is no one left, how are the people of Montreal going to make themselves heard here in Ottawa? Quebec has to pay a lobbyist to speak on its behalf. Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House how the people of Montreal can expect to monitor these projects and get concrete answers on the development of the new Port of Montreal and the space agency?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, that Montreal's economy is in better shape today than it has been for a number of years, with 114,000 new jobs, a sharp drop in unemployment, significant economic renewal and a substantial contribution by the federal Government. Mr. Speaker, all this happened despite comments by the Leader of the Opposition in August 1987, that the City of Montreal had suffered considerable hardship and was not out of the woods yet, and that it might take 20 years before subsequent governments would be able to reverse the trend, provided Quebec remained in Confederation.

Mr. Speaker, in four years we managed to reverse the trend. Despite the gloomy forecast of the Leader of the Opposition, it didn't take us 20 years to make Montreal a little more visible, a little more dynamic and enhance its economic potential for Quebec and Canada.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CLOTHING INDUSTRY—POSITION OF U.S. SENATORS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. Thirty United States Senators released a letter yesterday saying that Canada should drop support plans for the clothing industry since Canada's moves "could seriously jeopardize ratification of the free trade agreement". Even before this deal is passed the United States is trying to tell us what to do.

Is the Prime Minister going to speak bluntly today to the United States Congress? Is he going to say that we are an independent country and that we do not need this kind of direction from the United States?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am far more interested in what 250 Canadian economists had to say about the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. They said that it is Canada's best option in the face of increased protectionism because it increases access to the American market. They said it would provide better investment opportunities and lead to a higher standard of living for Canadians.

Those are the people we listen to, Canadian economists and other Canadians, not the U.S. Senators to whom the hon. gentleman is always referring and of whom he is so afraid. We are not afraid of them.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly more interested in the 76 per cent of Canadians who say that there should be an election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Call an election.

Mr. Broadbent: Go ahead, have the election on free trade. See if Reagan will approve it today. Maybe Brian can ask Ronald today.

ECONOMIC LIBERTY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do these efforts to control and reduce Canada's independence in this matter related to the textile industry not show that the trade agreement itself would impede our economic freedom in future?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, 76 per cent of Canadians say that they want an election. They certainly did not say that in Manitoba. They had to be dragged, kicking and screaming, to the election. There is hardly an NDP Member left there—

Mr. Broadbent: Count your vote. It went down, John.

Mr. Crosbie: —and Premier Filmon will take care of the rest of them before he is through.

With respect to the body of the question, if there is anything left of the body of the question, Mr. Speaker, this U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement increases economic opportunities for Canadian people, increases their chance to better their standard of living, gives them more options, and is no threat to our sovereignty whatsoever, only to that of frightened, timid New Democratic personages.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL—CONSTRUCTION OF TERMINAL III—DEVELOPMENT FEES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, my question is directed to the Acting Minister. It concerns Terminal III at Pearson International Airport.

The Minister knows that there is a dispute between the City of Mississauga and the developer over $5.2 million of development fees, and perhaps $2 million more of hydro fees. The Minister said in Toronto on Monday that this was a dispute to be settled between the parties, yet this is contradicted by a term of the lease which was made public in Mississauga this morning. The lease states: "Unless otherwise permitted by Ottawa, the developer must comply with provincial, regional and municipal bylaws whether or not there is a legal requirement to do so".

Does Ottawa intend to exempt the developer from paying these substantial development fees?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the discussions are going on between the developer and the City of Mississauga. I believe it would be inappropriate at this time to comment further on this particular issue while negotiations are taking place.

POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, let the negotiations go on, but I am asking about this contractual power that is reserved by the federal Government, to waive requirements that the developer comply with municipal bylaws. Does Ottawa intend or not intend to waive those requirements for this developer?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a legal dispute possibly arising as a result of information presented by the Hon. Member. I think it would be best left in the hands of the City of Mississauga and the contractor to resolve. If the Minister of Transport can assist, he will be there.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF EXPLOSIVES TO FOREIGNERS BY EXPRO COMPANY—REQUEST FOR RESULTS OF MINISTER'S INQUIRY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs assured the House that he would look into the question of the alleged use by Expro of previous licences to export gunpowder after he had ordered that no further export permit be given to the company. Is the Minister prepared to tell the House of Commons, first, what the results of the investigations are, and second, why the previous permits were not withdrawn last November?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am in a position to answer the questions raised by another Hon. Member on Friday and raised again by the Hon. Member. We are informed that no explosive material was sent to Portugal since last October. Three shipments of explosive material were sent to Holland last year, but I believe ... my officials are analysing the information, I am informed that there are no more ... that the amounts involved were not sent by the Dutch authorities to another destination.

EXPRO COMPANY—FEDERAL ADVANCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Since it must have been evident to the Government last November that the major part of Expro's production was destined for a market that was not only murderous but illegal, according to Canadian law, why did he authorize an $8 million advance to the company? Was it to pursue its illegal traffic, or was it to finance the lock-out of its employees?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice, except there is an implication in it that the Government of Canada would be deliberately assisting in illegal operations. That is not the case.

Indeed, since this matter of export permits came to light in October last year, our position has been very clear. We have been looking into the possible abuse of export permits or other matters. We have had co-operation by and large from Expro. I have given the Hon. Member assurances as a result of the investigations I undertook to make last Friday. I have just given those assurances.

PARC SAGUENAY—MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment.

This is a great day to talk about the environment, at a time when our Prime Minister is trying to make up for 25 years of neglect by the Liberal Party. In Quebec, an obvious example of Liberal arrogance and neglect is Saguenay Park.

I therefore want to ask the Minister of the Environment if he could tell the House what he intends to do in this respect.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Saguenay region is important to all Canadians because of its environmental characteristics, and especially the presence of the beluga whale. Relocating the National Park to the Saguenay region is one of my priorities. First of all, because of the need for protecting this very special site, my Department has ordered a feasibility study that will be completed very shortly. I intend to take an active part in speeding up this particular process, in co-operation with the Government of Quebec.

I will keep the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi informed of further developments.

WELFARE

CHILDREN LIVING IN POVERTY—EFFECT OF TAX REFORM

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Current figures from the National Council of Welfare show that over one million Canadian children, or one in six, live in poverty. Yet the Minister's proposed tax reform will return to a couple with two children and a total income of $20,000, only $175 a year. This is after he has taken much more than that from them in the past three years. Why is the Government not recognizing the dire situation of child poverty in this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question by the Hon. Member. This is a matter which has been of concern for the Government.

Let me point out that since we came into office the number of children under age 16 who live in poverty is down by 193,000. That is contrary to the impression she left with her question. I am sure she regrets that.

The other point I want to make is that, as my colleague has said on another topic, we should be judged by our actions. We have introduced a refundable sales tax credit. We have increased the child tax credit and have brought in a prepayment provision on the child tax credit. Under tax reform some 850,000 people will not be paying tax next year for this current tax year.

We have shown by our actions that we are concerned about that problem and are getting those numbers down.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): The figure that I quoted came from the National Council on Welfare. It is 1,016,000 children under age 16.

TAX STRUCTURE—EFFECT ON FAMILIES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister talks about some current proposals, he leaves out the fact that his Government increased taxes over a three-year period. With the current proposals, a single person with a $20,000 income will save $340 in income tax as against $175 for a couple with two children. Does the Minister not recognize that his tax structure is discriminating against families with young children?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that she is quoting from a certain set of figures. I do not quarrel with those figures.

I am stating quite clearly that in the three years prior to our taking office, the number of children under age 16 who were in poverty increased by 94,000. Since we came into office that figure is down by 193,000. That is the difference in the actions. It reflects what we have done as a Government.

• (1450)

Mr. Gauthier: Are you happy?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member asks me whether I am happy. I am happy that it is down by 193,000. However, I am not happy with the level. The level is still too high.

That is why we have introduced a number of changes that are directed at changing the situation. Let me give the Hon. Member some additional programs that we brought in.

The spousal allowance for those people who are age 60 to 64 living on low incomes has increased. The training for those people who are on welfare—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN TREATY LAND ENTITLEMENT BANDS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In 1976, Canada, Saskatchewan, and the Saskatchewan Federation of Indians reached a compromise formula to calculate treaty land entitlements based on the December 31, 1976, band populations. On March 3 of this year the treaty land entitlement bands of Saskatchewan rejected the Minister's proposal to base settlement on the date of first survey, which would reduce the settlements by 90 per cent.

Since the Minister's communication strategy is based on honouring commitments and being fair, why has the Minister chosen to tear up the 1976 tripartite agreement?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question on entitlement in Saskatchewan, and other prairie provinces, is an important one. The reason at this time that I have informed the entitlement bands that the Government is prepared to go to date of first survey is because the bands themselves have asked for changes in entitlement.

Originally, when the 1979 formula was signed, bands were requesting land only. Now some of the entitlement bands are requesting money in lieu of acres. They are asking for urban acreage as compared to rural acreage. There is not a consistent way of measuring the value and the acres that can be offset.

That discussion will take place in Cabinet. When we have reached a decision we will inform the entitlement bands.

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister is trying to suggest that the bands are now asking for less, and they are not. In the Minister's Estimates we find a reduction in funding for specific claims from $30 million in 1987 to $1 million in 1988, a reduction of over 90 per cent. In the Minister's secret summary on treaty land entitlement we find the statement: "not prepared to go further unless forced to by the courts".

Where does the Minister expect that policy to lead when his own policy now prohibits test case funding at the trial level? Where is it all leading?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has put forward a question that is based on inaccurate information.

Mr. Fulton: It is in the Estimates. You tabled them.

Mr. McKnight: What the Hon. Member does not understand, although I am sure he does and just does not want to express it publicly, is that specific claims are based on findings. If there are no judgments for specific claims, naturally the amount of money provided would be less this fiscal year.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—THIRD PARTY MEDIATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on April 21 as reported at page 3205 of the Debates of the other place, the Government House Leader, a member of the Cabinet, said: "—setting fishing quotas in Canadian waters, is the responsibility of the Canadian government, not of a third party." Yet the Hon. Member for St. John's West on behalf of the Government announced Friday night third party mediation between France and Canada for the fishing dispute.

Does this now mean that Canada is actually contemplating giving France more than the already generous 7,000 metric tonnes in area 3PS? It wants 50,000 metric tons. That is 9,000 tonnes more than the total TAC, total allowable catch, for all of Canada. Will the Government tell France to stop overfishing in 3PS a.s.a.p. before they "KO" the "TAC"?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member usually has "OD" on "b.s."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The position is that the negotiators for Canada and France have reached an agreement on a process of mediation. Of course, mediation is exactly that. It is not binding on either of the parties. It is to get an outside third party who can help the two parties involved to see if they can reach an agreement between them. There is nothing compulsory about it. Canada is not offering any more quotas to France.

As the hon. gentleman knows, we have taken a firm position that is having results. If this position had been adopted in 1972 we would not have this problem today.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister is saying today that what they have is non-binding mediation, whatever that is. He should call it the Minister's "Milk of Magnesia mediation".

Why then when I said in the House last week that the Government was going to announce non-binding arbitration—in fact I said we are going to be Ex-laxed at that time—did the Minister deny it, and then on Friday night he turned around and announced this third party non-binding mediation with the Government of France? Whether it is "Ex-laxed" or Milk of Magnesia, you get the same results, don't you?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member is an expert on those results. He is certainly very loose on what he says in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I can only refer to my statesmanlike first answer. Hopefully, if we can find a mediator acceptable to both sides he will help us reach a settlement of this issue. The hon. gentleman can be sure that we are going to continue in the firm and reasonable posture that we have adopted. We would like to settle this matter in a fair and reasonable way. We think we have made fair and reasonable offers.

I ask him to hold on a little longer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDUSTRY

GOODYEAR CANADA—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Seven weeks ago in the House I asked the Minister, for reasons that I outlined at that time, if he would rescind the remission order worth up to $50 million that had just been granted by the federal Government to Goodyear Canada. Since then the Ontario Government has come up with a $32 million interest-free loan to Goodyear Canada. Last week it was revealed that the U.S. parent company is now imposing a new service charge on Goodyear Canada that will take some $25 million to $30 million from this Canadian company.

My question is a very simple one. Can the Minister still justify this continuing financial support to Goodyear in face of this truly outrageous arrangement whereby Goodyear Canada is merely a conduit for Canadian tax dollars going to Akron, Ohio?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his concern about this issue. First, as he correctly noted in his question, the funds that have been forthcoming so far have been from the provincial Government and not from the federal Government. I want him to know that I share his concern about this particular matter.

Right after the annual meeting of this company in Canada I contacted my officials to make sure that these issues were properly understood. I have instructed them to meet immediately with the company to clarify the matter.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—BOUNDARY ISSUE—FISHING QUOTAS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with the fact that last January the Canadian Government agreed to trade northern cod just to get the Government of France to the bargaining table on the boundary dispute over St. Pierre and Miquelon.

• (1500)

Now after some theatrics by the fishermen and some politicians of St. Pierre, the Government is offering to go to non-binding mediation to give some more fish to the St. Pierre fishermen, and also, we hear, to metropolitan France, just to get them talking about fish again.

Why has the Government refused, or is no longer continuing to keep together the two issues of the boundary dispute and the issue of fishing in Canadian waters? Can the Minister assure the House that there will be no concessions to the French Government unless it agrees to submit the boundary dispute to third party arbitration?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman does not seem to understand the process that has been under way now for several years. That is a process in which the Government of Canada is most anxious to settle the question of the territorial boundaries of St. Pierre and Miquelon. It can only be settled by an international arbitration, or by the International Court because the two parties cannot otherwise agree. We believe it is the duty of both to go to an international adjudication on this.

In the same manner as France and Great Britain went to international arbitration on the question of the Channel Islands, so should France now agree to go with us.

Unfortunately, France is trying to tie to that and make a condition of it agreeing to go to arbitration on that question, the settlement of the issue of what quotas it should receive under the 1972 treaty in Canadian waters for the next three years or so while the matter goes to arbitration. France has been making that a condition, and that is what the process has been about for the last several years.

The Government has taken a firm position. We have closed our ports to French vessels because of their overfishing in 3PS. We will continue on that course. We will take a firm and reasonable stand meeting our international obligations, but trying to get these issues settled in a way that will protect the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise the House that there will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou, followed by a single question from the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount, and that will close Question Period.

Mr. Harris: My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The question was long, and it was answered. In view of the time, I wish to move on. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou.

CANADA POST CORPORATIONS

OPPOSITION TO SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. Last Sunday, RAM Ontario, Residents Against Mailboxes, organized a national conference for Canadians from Newfoundland to British Columbia to protest the Government's policy of supermailboxes being installed throughout the country this spring. At that conference were politicians from all levels and all Parties. All the citizens present were unanimous in demanding that the Government abandon its supermailbox policy.

Will the Minister listen to the demands of RAM, Residents Against Mailboxes, and abandon that policy, or will the Minister wait for the Residents Against Mailboxes to ram the Mulroney mailbox?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what happened on Sunday was that the unions paid for a lot of people to fly in to hold a media event, which I acknowledged was a successful media event.

I find it a little pathetic, frankly, that people who are supposedly concerned about this country and public policy would gather together and say, "The most important issue facing Canada is that, along with door-to-door delivery of milk and door-to-door delivery of bread, door-to-door delivery of mail may be changing in some areas". That is a pretty pathetic thing on which to base a political policy.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount.

INDUSTRY

CDC LIFE SERVICES—POTENTIAL ACQUISITION BY FRENCH STATE CONTROLLED CORPORATION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Regarding the potential acquisition of control of CDC Life Services by a French state controlled corporation, Institut Mérieux, could the Minister tell us what steps are being taken to preserve for Canada and Canadians the critical, and I might say, unique manufacturing and biotechnology research capacities of the two subsidiaries, Connaught Laboratories of Toronto, and Bio Research Laboratories of Montreal?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that there are a number of unresolved issues in this particular case. I have taken some steps to date. First, I have asked Investment Canada to review thoroughly whatever information we had on the transaction; second, to obtain additional information before the end of the day today; third, to obtain outside legal advice on the position of Investment Canada in this case.

Given my deep interest in this question, I can only assure the Hon. Member that we will be following it very closely, and I might be in a position to give him a definite answer as early as tomorrow in Question Period.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, the duty, and certainly the privilege of presenting a petition signed by 1,194 residents of Calgary, 884 of whom reside in the constituency of Calgary North.

The petitioners state that whereas biology and genetic science proves conclusively that human life, including all inherent characteristics of sex, intelligence, and physical features commence at conception; and whereas abortions deprive the unborn of the right to life; and whereas no one should be entitled to an unrestricted right to take away another human life, the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to expediently enact legislation to prohibit procurement of an abortion, except for life threatening reasons. In duty bound the petitioners will ever pray.

I think that this is a very straightforward petition, and I would like the Government to take rapid action in this area.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege today to present to the House 16 petitions regarding Bill C-72. These petitions represent the views of some 400 Canadians from Calgary South, southeast, north, northeast, west and centre, and indeed all of southern Alberta. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72, so that unilingual speaking people have a chance for a position in government.

REQUEST TO MAINTAIN FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. One is signed by well over 100 residents of the community of Pickle Lake, Ontario, and also by the reeves or mayors of 12 communities in my riding. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to keep the flow-through share mechanism which is attractive to investors because of the very beneficial effect it has had on economic development in remote communities in northwestern Ontario.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): The second petition that I have the honour to present, Mr. Speaker, calls upon Parliament to declare all communities in Tier III ridings as eligible for the northern residents tax deduction.

• (1510)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of the City of Toronto, who point out that the trade agreement recently signed between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States has no mandate from the Canadian people since it opposes the position he took before the last election.

An Hon. Member: Not true.

Mr. Heap: The petitioners go on to point out that the trade agreement would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs that Canadians need, and would integrate Canada further into the North American "defence" industrial base.

For these reasons, the petitioners ask Parliament to ensure that a national debate take place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, and that that debate take place in the form of a national general election before the trade deal is finalized.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions signed by residents of Canada in such diverse locales as Ottawa, Nepean, Yellowknife, and Toronto. The petitioners are concerned about the proposal to transport plutonium by air over the Canadian North, including our northern waters.

Given the devastating consequences that could result from an accident or an act of terrorism involving aircraft transporting plutonium, the petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to recognize the dangers of such flight and to say "no" to the transport of plutonium over northern Canada.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the Tillsonburg Right to Life group, a petition that has been signed by over 100 residents of Tillsonburg. The petitioners indicate their displeasure at the recent ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada. They go on to indicate that it is their belief that the unborn is a human being from conception, and they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to draft laws to protect the unborn.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of hundreds of residents of my riding, and other residents of the National Capital Region. The petitioners in this instance are schizophrenics and their relatives and friends, all of whom are desperately hoping that a cure and method of prevention can be found for schizophrenia as soon as possible through larger research efforts being dedicated to this major illness in Canada, an illness that affects approximately 1 per cent of our population. It is a disease which causes severe mental anguish and suffering on the part of those afflicted, as well as on their relatives and friends. As well, it is an affliction that is costing Canadian society more than $3 billion annually.

The petitioners, therefore, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the research effort in respect of schizophrenia in the future will be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 106, on a matter of concern to many of my constituents, namely, the Mulroney trade deal with Washington. The petitioners call upon the Government to call an election as soon as possible so that the people of Canada can decide the issue, and not a Government without a mandate in respect of that issue.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present, pursuant to Standing Order 106, a petition signed by citizens of Edmonton, Toronto, and Hay Lakes, Alberta.

Whereas the Progressive Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade agreement with the United States, and whereas the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between the regions, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon the Government to dissolve Parliament and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement through a national general election.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition, on behalf of a number of my constituents, pursuant to Standing Order 106. To summarize, their concern, in line with the poll released today indicating that 76 per cent of the people want an election called before the trade deal actually goes ahead, is that there be a general election before the trade deal is finalized.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of the Crossfield and High River areas of my riding. The petition states, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72 so that unilingual-speaking people have a chance for a position in Government, as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present, on behalf of a number of citizens of Shellbrook, Prince Albert, Birch Hills, Spruce Home, a petition calling for a national general election before the Canada-U.S. trade deal is finalized, on the ground that the Government had no mandate to conclude a trade agreement. They hold the view that the trade agreement compromises Canadian sovereignty, and for that reason they feel that Parliament should be dissolved, with the people themselves being given the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement through the holding of a national general election.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, question No. 277 will be answered today.

[Text]

IRRADIATION OF POTATOES

Question No. 277—Mr. Althouse:

In December, 1987, did Atomic Energy of Canada Limited make arrangements to have 20,000 pounds of potatoes irradiated as part of a promotional campaign at an A & P store in Hamilton, Ontario and, if so (a) were any of them distributed to (i) charitable organizations, such as food banks (ii) employees of any department or agency of government and, if so, to which ones (b) were the bags labelled to indicate that the potatoes had been irradiated?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows:

No potatoes were irradiated for the market test of irradiated potatoes, announced by A & P Canada in November, 1987. However, approximately 12 tons of potatoes were irradiated for the market test planned for May, 1987.

(a) (i) & (ii) When the May market test was cancelled, the irradiated potatoes were distributed to AECL employees, to government employees involved in this technology in the Departments of Agriculture, Energy, Mines and Resources, Health and Welfare and Consumer and Corporate Affairs and to the Canadian Nuclear Association's New Brunswick Chapter.

Some unirradiated, non-chemically treated control potatoes were offered to the Ottawa Food Bank and were accepted.

(b) All irradiated potatoes were fully labelled with a label that conformed to both current and proposed regulations by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

EMERGENCIES ACT

The House resumed from Monday, April 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, leading to all-Party agreement on the disposition of Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

As will be seen from the projected order of business for today, Bill C-77 was to be called at 6 p.m. this evening, with the question on the motion for third reading to be put immediately.

As all three Parties are in favour of the Bill, there is unanimous agreement that Bill C-77 be called as the first item of business this afternoon, with the question being put immediately, in order that the Bill may be referred to the Senate, with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there have indeed been discussions among the Parties, and we certainly are prepared to co-operate with the Government at this point in respect of Bill C-77.

The way in which the progress of Bill C-77 has been handled, both in the House and in committee, presents us with a fine example of just how well this House and its related committees can work.

The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), and the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) put forth 43 amendments, all of which were accepted by the Government. Those amendments improved the Bill.

Bill C-77 will replace the War Measures Act, a piece of legislation which we have been wanting to replace for some time.

All concerned, through their co-operation, made the process a success. For our part, we appreciate the co-operation shown by the Government, and in particular the willingness on the part of the Government to accept the amendments put forward during consideration of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House agreed that I put the question on the motion for the third reading of Bill C-77?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The question is as follows: It is moved by Miss Carney, for Mr. Beatty, seconded by Mr. Clark (Yellowhead), that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be now read a third time and passed.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: There are 50 motions on the Order Paper and notices offered in amendment to Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts.

Motions Nos. 1 to 4 inclusive, Nos. 7, 9, 11, 12, 15 and 33 stand in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Motions Nos. 5, 6, 8, 10, 13, 16 to 32 inclusive and 34 to 50 inclusive stand in the name of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). Motion No. 14 stands in the name of the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard).

An amendment similar to Motion No. 1 was moved, debated and negatived in committee. There is a slight variation in the wording, but the intent and object remain the same. Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 114 (10), it will not be selected for debate.

Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 are acceptable and each will be debated and voted on separately.

The Chair has some reservations about Motion No. 12, because it provides that the Agency will have to hire all employees who are affected, while Clause 24 of the Bill provides as follows:

> 24. Every indeterminate employee in the public service of Canada who is transferred to a position in the Agency . . .

The House will appreciate the dilemma these two wordings created for the Chair.

However, after due reflection, I decided to give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt and declare the motion in order. It will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motion No. 14 in the name of the Hon. Minister and Motion No. 15 in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East are out of order for three reasons. They both go beyond the Royal Recommendation. They are substantive amendments to an interpretation clause and are also beyond the scope of the Bill.

Having said that, the Minister has a Royal Recommendation for his motion, and I understand that discussions have led to unanimous consent for the Minister to move his Motion No. 14. At the proper time I will ask the House if it wishes to give that consent. I could not seek such consent with respect to Motion No. 15 as it is not covered by a Royal Recommendation and only a Minister of the Crown can request such from Her Excellency, the Governor General.

Motion No. 33 is in order. It will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 13, 16 to 32 inclusive and Nos. 34 to 50 inclusive are in order but will be grouped for debate.

The vote on Motion No. 13 will be applied to Motions Nos. 16 to 32 inclusive and also to Motions Nos. 34 to 50 inclusive.

The House will now proceed with the first grouping, Motion No. 2, and I will now propose the question to the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In your comments you said that later this day or at another time you would put Motion No. 14 in the name of the Minister.

[Translation]

. . . and that the Minister has a Royal Recommendation for this amendment. I wonder whether you could inform the House when the Chair will propose the question to the House. When can we expect this motion to be debated? After all motions before the House have been disposed of or in between?

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Just a notation here that this particular motion in the name of the Minister is to amend Clause 26. There are amendments to Clauses 24 and 25 prior to Clause 26 if I am not mistaken. If those amendments were adopted, they would make this particular motion by the Minister out of order. However, that I suppose does not prevent you from putting the question before the other questions are put.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Can you confirm that the unanimous consent which may be sought will be for the purpose of debating that motion here in the House, not for unanimous consent to pass such a motion? In order for the motion to be debated, unanimous consent is required. Will that be done at the time of debate, or now?

Mr. Speaker: First, to respond to the Hon. Member for St. John's East he puts the matter correctly. It would be consent to debate.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) asks when this motion would come up. It would normally come up according to the chronology of the motions as set out in my reasons. I have just had a moment to discuss this with the Table. I think that that is the situation.

With respect to the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate, I think we will just have to wait and see.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 7

(a) by striking out line 14 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"the order, any area in Atlantic Canada, which may be a sub-region in a province,"

He said: Mr. Speaker, as was just indicated, there are a series of amendments to the Bill that I have proposed as a member of the legislative committee. A number of other amendments were proposed in committee which were defeated, including Motion No. 1 which referred to the requirement by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency to have, as one of its advisory boards, an advisory board to advise the agency on programs with specific relation to women in business. As Mr. Speaker has just ruled, it can no longer be debated in this House.

The motion presently before the House provides for an amendment to Clause No. 7. Clause No. 7 provides for special areas to be designated by the Minister within the Atlantic provinces, special areas for which special rules may be able to govern. If we look at the provisions in the legislation with respect to special areas, we will see that the Minister has the power to designate special areas in the Atlantic region. The Bill says:

—a designated area, for the period set out in the order, any area in Atlantic Canada where, in the opinion of the Minister, exceptional circumstances provide opportunity for locally based improvements in productive employment.

The motion provides to amend that particular clause as follows to clarify so that it will be beyond any doubt that those areas may be "a sub-region in a province". It need not be an entire province. It need not be a particular community but it may be as well a sub-region of a province. It would add as well to the end of the clause the following, and would now read:

That where, in the opinion of the Minister, exceptional circumstances provide opportunities for locally based improvements in productive employment by means of pilot projects and multi-year comprehensive area development strategies and action plans and other means as necessary.

This motion would amplify and make it clear that these special areas in Atlantic Canada would have opportunities under the agency to have not merely special programs and special rules related to the accessibility to funds under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, but also support by the agency directly for plans made by community based development groups, such as those presently organized under the Department of Manpower and Immigration. An example of this is the Community Futures Program.

The legislative committee heard representations from organizations such as the Cumberland Community Futures Committee which was quite concerned about the fact that its work, in a sense, mirrors on a community or county basis the community-based or local decision-making that the Minister suggests would be undertaken in Atlantic Canada for development projects. Together, there is a co-operative plan between businesses, communities, municipalities and the federal Government. The comprehensive plans for development will meet local concerns. These organizations are aware of the plans of local communities and of how special programs could be set up to meet the needs of those communities.

In the Province of Newfoundland and certainly in my own riding, there are areas where there are not only special opportunities but also special needs for particular development programs and strategies that are comprehensive in nature. I am thinking in particular of the community of Bell Island in my riding, a once prosperous mining community with a population similar to that of the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon of which we have heard so much lately. This island is less than a mile from the mainland of Newfoundland. Its population has gone down from about 16,000 in the 1960s to somewhat less than 5,000. Job opportunities are very few and special programs are necessary in areas like this.

This legislation would allow a strategy or action plan to be developed for such a region, permitting broadly based initiatives of community development organizations which could offer a broad range of activities in support of small scale economic development as well as long-term planning for promotion, marketing, assistance, training and providing development and planning assistance to businesses and municipalities. I suppose it is an opportunity to recreate on a more local level the kind of activity the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency proposes to undertake on a regional level in Atlantic Canada.

Therefore, I would commend this particular amendment to the House. It improves upon Clause 7 and amplifies the ability of the Minister to create special areas under the Bill and have them defined in such a way as to provide these kinds of opportunities. It would make it clear that those opportunities are available to integrate some of the activities of community development to bring about greater success and more opportunities in economic development initiatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on the motion submitted by my colleague. As someone who spent a number of years doing community development work in Thunder Bay, I can appreciate the need for this amendment to the Bill. As well, coming from an area that is similar in many ways to Atlantic Canada in terms of smaller populations, fewer centres and widely diverse communities, I recognize that we must be able to look at the smaller components. We must be able to allow locally based entrepreneurship of a co-operative nature to flourish. I think my colleague's amendment would help to facilitate that.

When we are talking about community based development projects, we are not talking about megaprojects. We are not talking about bringing in steel mills or automobile manufacturing facilities, we are talking about two, three, six, eight or 10 jobs being developed to provide a particular service or to meet a particular need in a community. Obviously, part of the goal is the creation of employment, but the other part of the goal is the furthering of the local economies to ensure that the people in these areas have the opportunities we have elsewhere in Canada.

I know that Atlantic Canada has a great history of community based development. In fact, there is a university in Atlantic Canada that is known throughout the world for its co-op programs and its attitude toward teaching about the developing of co-operatives. I think it is ideal to enshrine this particular amendment in a Bill that deals with Atlantic Canada. It is appropriate to recognize that Atlantic Canada has as one of its key roots people working together against the elements and against an economy based outside their region to ensure that they too have opportunities.

Let me tell Hon. Members of an existing example of this in Atlantic Canada, the Kent-LEDA initiative. This is a federally funded local economic development agency with a total funding of $350,000. The Kent-LEDA organization has made debt and equity investments in numerous small projects and has provided counselling and technical assistance to local entrepreneurs.

The organization is directed by a group of local Kent area business people and invests, on average, in 10 new or expanding businesses a year. Thus far, its success rate compares favourably with DREE's former RDIA program. Ninety per cent of the firms in which it invested are still operating. It has created over 50 new jobs in a year in one of the most economically-depressed regions of the country.

There are also reasons to believe that this example gives a more accurate assessment of jobs created than those claimed under DREE's old RDIA program. In many instances, LEDA represents the lender of last resort, so that the new businesses would not have gone ahead without its financing.

A community based organization that reviews proposals is composed of people who know the applicants. They know the track records of the applicants and they know how hard they are prepared to work. They also know their community. Rather than having a bureaucrat or a politician who is far removed either in a provincial capital or in the nation's capital have this opportunity, the local people will have the opportunity to help shape their own economy.

In my riding, the community of Atikokan has opted into the Community Futures Program. It has developed an excellent approach that will see not only community-based decisions made but it will see the tax dollars it has been given by the federal Government rolled over and over. As the business ventures it has invested in grow and it repays the loans, that money in turn will be invested back into the community once again. This is not an open-ended tap that will see tax dollars pour continuously into smaller areas, it is an investment.

We must recognize, as the motion states, that two communities in close proximity might have totally different economies. Yet they are lumped into the same catch-all category for Statistics Canada, for unemployment insurance and for the like. We should allow them to carve themselves out and to say that they are unique and should not be lumped in with community x or community y. This, I think, will be of great assistance to them. I would encourage Hon. Members to support my colleague's motion. I think it makes eminent sense.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to this amendment because I think it is really important that it be adopted. One area where we have failed badly in this country concerns regional disparity. We have not taken into account the need to look at what local community development groups are all about. It seems to me some of the studies done on local economic development have recognized the fact that if we encourage co-ops and local groups to develop what they see as priorities in the local economy, not only are we making a sound investment but we are making it possible for long-term development to take place.

We have seen what mega projects from outside have done and it certainly has not been successful. What we are looking at here is the ability of an organization like the Community Futures Committee to be able to identify what its priorities are.

There have been some good examples right across the country where investments have been made in this type of community development, and they are still ongoing. Perhaps they are not as fancy as a huge factory which employs huge numbers of people, but they do not result in heavy lay-offs because of plant closures. Instead you find ongoing local community development.

It seems to me that it would have been a great advantage to a large part of the Canadian economy if we had done more work from the grass roots up rather than from the top down. Certainly this amendment will make that possible, and I commend my colleague for putting it forward. Certainly it will help the Atlantic region.

It is worth noting that more than 73,000 people in Newfoundland are involved in co-operatives. When we realize that, we recognize that this is an instrument we want to use in local community economic development.

As I said, I rose to speak on the amendment because I feel strongly that if we really do care about local economic development and people having some choice in where and how they are going to work, this amendment will make it possible.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this amendment. Many years ago I was an officer in the region of Inuvik in the Northwest Territories. In the process of trying to develop the kind of economic base necessary to keep certain communities going, it became very obvious that there was a need to designate areas in such a way that they could develop their own programs as part of the texture of the particular community rather than having something directed from the outside. To do this you must define your areas in very specific terms. You must also allow the kind of experimentation appropriate to that particular community.

Places like Newfoundland have seen a lot of attempts to impose development on them. In most cases large corporations come in and skim off the money allowed to them by provincial or federal Governments for development. They have no real vested interest in long-term job creation in those communities. Consequently, they have a tendency to take what they can as quickly as they can and leave. Instead of that, it is much more to the point to allow people who have a vested interest in the community to be part of the development. To do that, you have to direct the money very much more directly to those communities.

My colleague from St. John's mentioned Bell Island in northern Newfoundland. If someone goes in there once a week or once a month to try and direct development, it will not work particularly well. However, if you have assistance based in that community, it will work well. That is what is necessary to develop these kinds of programs so I call upon the House to support the amendment.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the clauses in question are already extremely broad and give the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency the power to assist any enterprise in Atlantic Canada, including co-operative enterprises and the like. Therefore, I certainly do not see why we should support this amendment.

One has to wonder whether it is a deliberate tactic on the part of the NDP to have five, six or 10 speakers on each of these clauses in an attempt to hold up, for some reason, a Bill which is so important to Atlantic Canada. We even had a contribution from the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) and former mayor of Ottawa. I would not be surprised if we get a contribution from her on every single blessed amendment.

One has to hope that the members of the NDP will be reasonable, short and pithy so we can vote on these amendments and send the Bill to the Senate where we will see what happens to it. The unelected Liberal majority there are coiled, ready to spring. I forecast that the Liberal majority in the Senate will not allow this legislation through. I believe the Celtic Sphinx is waiting there to pounce and that he has given orders to the Liberal caucus that they are not to let this Bill through the House. He vows that if it does go through the House, he will not let it through the Senate.

I trust NDP Members will assist us in getting it up to the Senate so we can test their mettle and see whether they are really going to prevent this kind of development in Atlantic Canada or not. Therefore, I ask Members to be reasonably pithy in their comments.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by reiterating what the Minister said regarding the length of time we spend on this. Bill C-103 was at second reading stage for 11 hours and four minutes, at which time 26 Members of the House took the opportunity to address it. The legislative committee spent 34 hours and 20 minutes on hearings and gave an opportunity for 73 witnesses to appear. Certainly there has been a fair amount of debate on this issue, and I share the concern that what we may be seeing today is an effort to drag this out and in some way deny the people of Atlantic Canada the benefits this legislation has to offer.

Speaking specifically to the amendment, the way the clause is worded now places only two restrictions on designated areas. One, they must be in Atlantic Canada. Two, they cannot extend to all of Atlantic Canada. In other words, designated areas, the way Clause 7 is currently written, could be within a province, could comprise the whole of a province, or even straddle two provinces. Therefore, this amendment is not necessary because the power already exists in Clause 7 to deal with a designated area.

The second amendment deals with a number of references to pilot projects in multi-year comprehensive area development strategies and so on. Clause 23 authorizes regulations to be made with respect to designated areas which vary from the generally applicable regulations. This will permit ACOA to give special treatment to areas which provide exceptional opportunities. With respect to pilot projects, strategies, action plans and so on, the agency, under its powers flowing from Clause 12, has been given the authority to undertake these types of initiatives.

Therefore, there is in this legislation adequate provision to cover both of the items outlined in the proposed amendments and it is certainly not necessary for the House to accept the amendments proposed today.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a couple of words on the first amendment being proposed to this Bill which establishes ACOA, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. It should be renamed the "Atlantic Canada Overblown Agency" because there is nothing new in this legislation. The amendment introduced by the Hon. Member would, I suppose, ensure that the Minister has the power to carry out pilot projects and multi-year comprehensive area development strategies—whatever that means—and action plans and other means as necessary. All of this, of course, depends on the Minister. The clause says:

> The Minister may, by order, establish as a designated area—where, in the opinion of the Minister, exceptional circumstances—

What exceptional circumstances, Mr. Speaker? Could it be an election? Is that an exceptional circumstance? Could it be whether or not that particular area is represented by a government Member? Is that an exceptional circumstance?

As well, who is the Minister? According to the Bill the Minister is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said: "Look at all the witnesses we had before the committee and all the Members who spoke before the committee". However, the person who introduced the Bill into the House of Commons did not appear before the committee, and that was the Prime Minister, the person who is moving the adoption of this particular Bill.

We all know that the Prime Minister is moving the adoption of the Bill because the Minister who has the authority under this Act is not here in this place at all. Where is he? I am not allowed to say where he is, am I? I am not even allowed to say where the Minister is. Someone listening to that would think it is a bit crazy that I am not allowed to say where he is. However, we are not allowed to say that. He is in what they call "the other place". In other words, he is not in this place here at all, not in the House of Commons. He is in the other place down the hall about a half a gunshot away. He is in the other place. He is not allowed to introduce something into this place, so the person who introduced it into this place is the Prime Minister who was not in his place to address the Bill in the first place. That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 12 by striking out line 28 at pages and substituting the following therefor:

"velopment of Atlantic Canada, and to reduce the economic disparity between Atlantic Canada and other regions of Canada, with particu-".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is probably one of the most important motions before the House at report stage. The motion expounds upon the object, powers and duties of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency specified in Clause 12. The legislation written by the Government proposed that:

The object of the Agency is to support and promote opportunity for economic development of Atlantic Canada, with particular emphasis on small and medium-sized enterprises, through policy, program and project development and implementation and through advocacy of the the interests of Atlantic Canada in national economic policy, program and project development and implementation.

My motion indicates that one of the objects should also be "to reduce the economic disparity between Atlantic Canada and other regions of Canada". That is the core and the essence of what we in this Party think the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency ought to do. That is the pinnacle, the whole purpose of having this agency in the first place because of the astounding disparities that exist in the various regions of this country.

My Party and I make no apologies for the fact that in addition to myself, the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), to whom the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) referred as the former Mayor of Ottawa—and a fine mayor indeed she was—is speaking on this Bill. As the Mayor of Ottawa I would expect the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain to have great concern about regional disparity in this country. Members of this Party from other regions of Canada have already spoken on this Bill. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) from northern Ontario has spoken. He is interested in regional development, not only in northern Ontario where he and his constituents reside, but also in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. It is not only before those Members of the House of Commons that we place this amendment. We place it before all Members of the House of Commons and in particular those Members who are not from the regions which suffer from the disparity that we have experienced in Newfoundland for many years.

I say shame to the Member for St. John's West for being upset that an Hon. Member from what we sometimes call Central Canada is concerned about issues of regional disparity. We need more Members like the Member for Hamilton Mountain to speak out in this House on issues of regional disparity and regional development. It is shameful for the Minister for International Trade to say that when someone does that there is something inherently wrong. It is a sign of the concern that this Party has for regional development that our Members from other parts of the country are willing to speak out on behalf of the needs of Newfoundlanders, Nova Scotians, New Brunswickers and Prince Edward Islanders who need the assistance of an agency such as the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in order to reduce the disparities which exist.

Why is the Government afraid to put into the legislation a commitment to the reduction of regional disparity? It may or may not want to answer that question, but I have my own interpretation of the Government's action. It has developed an agency which does not have that goal. This is an agency that is basically designed to assist business and economic development. It has no goal to reduce the regional disparity between the Atlantic region and other regions of the country that are more prosperous. Without that objective, we simply see another agency to assist business and enhance the economy.

The amount of money the Government is allocating to this Agency is a measure of its commitment. If there was a real commitment toward the reduction of regional disparity, the Government would have committed substantially more funds to this Agency.

There is an increase of $200 million per year over a five-year period. This is the famous $1.05 billion we hear about. However, that money represents a five-year commitment for four provinces, amounting to $200 million a year.

The Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is close to $130 billion, $200 million of which, in addition to the other regular expenditures, is destined for the four provinces through this agency. That $200 million represents 15 per cent of 1 per cent of the entire Budget. It shows that the Government's priorities do not include the regional development that is required to reduce disparity.

The reduction of regional disparity is not a goal of this legislation because the Government has no real commitment toward reducing that disparity. Otherwise, it would be willing to be tested on its success in reducing regional disparity.

While there has been much discussion about government policy on regional disparity and regional development in the last 30 years, we have not seen any progress. Although the statistics I gave at second reading are quite startling, I will not repeat them again, except to say that some of those statistics show there has been very little progress and, in some cases no progress at all in the reduction of regional disparity between the Atlantic provinces and other regions of Canada.

This amendment is essential in order to focus the attention of the Agency, the Government, and the people of Canada on the elimination of regional disparity in this country. Regional disparity results in an inequality of opportunity not only for businesses, with which this legislation is concerned, but in areas like education, where there is a lack of opportunity and equality. That is what our Party aims to reduce.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, the concept behind this amendment is not really new. It is certainly not the first time the Member has brought forward the topic of regional disparity and the impact the agency might have on that.

In the legislative committee an amendment was proposed by the Member that would provide in the five-year annual report from the Agency an evaluation of its activities and the impact of those activities upon regional disparity. However, to include it as it has been proposed by this amendment is really a negative concept of a Bill that I believe provides a very positive opportunity for Atlantic Canada.

This Bill promotes opportunities in Atlantic Canada. Certainly, as an Atlantic Canadian Member, I am much more anxious to promote opportunities than to go about measuring disparity. It has already been said that this Agency has a slender staff operation throughout Atlantic Canada and its efforts should focus on finding a way by which the Government of Canada, through Bill C-103, can help develop economic opportunities in that region of the country.

We are anxious to build upon what exists, and upon the opportunities that are presented in Atlantic Canada. This is more productive than making an effort to write a report and provide statistics that will really have no meaning. It would be extremely difficult to evaluate a reduction in disparity because one must be able to make the comparison. I presume the comparison would be between the Atlantic economy and the economy of another region, but is it northern Ontario, British Columbia, western Canada or central Canada? What does one measure it against? Certainly, the areas chosen for the comparison make a significant difference. I suggest, for instance, that there are parts of Atlantic Canada that are doing much better than other areas of Canada. If we measure that, we see great success in reducing disparity in Atlantic Canada.

On the other hand, there are other places which do not enjoy some of the benefits of the economic activity in central Canada and would not measure the same way. In that regard, it makes very little sense to put verbiage in the legislation which does not have any real bearing in practical application.

It would also require us to make an evaluation when we do not have all the areas under our control. For example, the Atlantic economy could get very strong and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency could be expanding greatly those opportunities. As well, there could be an increase in the world price of oil and gas resulting in a resurgence of that industry in western Canada. Therefore, when we measure the western Canadian economy against eastern Canada, the results would really have nothing to do with the agency but with factors far beyond the control of the Minister and the legislation being put forward here today. If the economic activities on the Prairies declined as a result of a drought there, Heaven forbid, the disparity between those provinces and the Atlantic provinces would decrease. However, one cannot suggest that the Agency is very successful because another part of the country had the misfortune of a drought.

We want to put the staff time, energy and effort toward expanding our opportunities rather than measuring negative factors that really have no value in assessing how the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency works.

Obviously, we believe this amendment should be defeated because it is only verbiage that will not give us anything.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a substantive and very important amendment. I suggest that if legislation is to lay out objectives, those objectives should be made very clear. The objectives listed in this Bill simply state that the Agency is designed to support and promote opportunities for the economic development of Atlantic Canada with particular emphasis on small and medium sized enterprises through policy program and project development and implementation, and through advocacy of the interests of Atlantic Canada in national economic policy program and project development and implementation.

It does not lay out its over-all objective, beyond a vague description of what it will be doing. It simply says that it will help. It does not lay out any reason for the help. It does not lay out any goal or any real objective which one would normally see stated in a statement of objectives in a new Bill for a new agency. My colleague from Newfoundland has proposed that that problem be corrected, that that shortcoming be rectified by giving it an objective, namely, to reduce the economic disparity between Atlantic Canada and other regions of Canada.

I do not think that we have to go out with very discreet measuring devices to know that Atlantic Canada has for quite a long time had a higher rate of unemployment than the rest of Canada. We do not have to do a lot of research or measuring to know that the incomes in Atlantic Canada are generally lower than in the rest of Canada. This sort of general knowledge has gone into some of the previous initiatives in the country over the past 40 or 50 years. We have had forms of revenue sharing at the federal level with regard to tax revenues so that the lower income provinces have the benefit of increased revenues from the federal coffers. There has been quite a well established system for defining which are the have and which are the have-not provinces in this country.

It only makes sense if we are going to be proposing, as this Bill proposes to do, an economic development proposal for a particular region in the country that one of the clear mandates of that new agency should be to try to reduce the economic disparity that now exists and is recognized with or without any further measuring techniques. It is there and measured each year when the amount of funding to go to revenue sharing is decided upon. This work is already being done. It is simply a test that one would give oneself as a manager or a Minister in charge of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, to see whether or not some ground is being gained or not.

I think that if the Minister, whoever it is, goes into his or her job without having any objective other than to interfere in Atlantic Canada, no further vision as to what the role of government should be in Atlantic Canada, that Atlantic Canadians will not gain anything from this particular initiative.

We do not think that this handcuffs the Minister in any way. It provides him and future Ministers with a very laudable goal, one of decreasing the economic disparity that now exists and is measured and is known for Atlantic Canadians. We think it is a very useful item to be put into the Bill as one of the main objectives of this legislation.

It is something that this and future Ministers can use as their target to say: "If I am Minister of this Agency my job is to reduce the economic disparity between the Atlantic region and the rest of Canada. I will therefore attempt to reduce unemployment and to increase incomes on investment in this particular area". This is something that the Bill does not now give as a mandate for the Minister. I think this amendment would correct that shortfall.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this particular amendment, we cannot see anything wrong with it. Certainly, if Atlantic Canada were to become an area that was richer than other areas of Canada, then we would expect the federal Government to pay more attention to the other areas of Canada. Under the present circumstances Atlantic Canada is at considerable disparity with the rest of Canada, employment-wise and in every other way. We cannot see anything wrong with this amendment. If Atlantic Canada were better off than the other regions of Canada, then what is wrong with still having that in the Act? There is nothing wrong with that.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that the representative of the Official Opposition will agree with just about every silly suggestion that might be made by the Hon. Members of the unofficial Opposition. We can hardly expect that he will take an impartial view to this.

It has just been explained by the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) why this would be an inappropriate amendment.

It might also be pointed out that we did accept one of the amendments of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) which deals with Clause 21 and with respect to the Agency producing after every five years a comprehensive report providing an evaluation of all activities in which the Agency was involved and the impact those activities have had upon the region of disparity. It was accepted to see if we could make a measurement to see what progress is being made. As the Hon. Member for Moncton has advised the House, this would be inconsistent with the present objective which is much clearer and much more satisfactory.

We are not just wanting to overcome regional disparity in Atlantic Canada. We do not think it is satisfactory just to make comparisons between Atlantic Canada and the rest of the country. Atlantic Canada could progress tremendously and other areas might progress even more. It all depends upon the economic resources or on the price of oil and gas and the connection with western Canada and the like.

The present object is to support and promote opportunity for the economic development of Atlantic Canada, with the particular emphasis on small and medium-sized enterprises, and so on. What could be more clear? We do not need, and it would be detrimental to introduce, this negative concept. Naturally, we are wanting to overcome regional disparity. That is the whole objective. We are trying to promote economic development and growth in Atlantic Canada.

I hope that our colleagues will agree not to pursue this matter and drop this amendment so that we can vote on it and proceed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East) moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 12 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 4 the following:

"(2) In carrying out its object the Agency shall ensure that there be equity between the Atlantic Provinces in the allocation of resources, effort and programs in a manner to be determined by the Agency, and the Agency shall report annually to Parliament on the fulfillment of this objective.

He said: Motion No. 4 provides a direction to the Agency that in carrying out its object—this is right after the objects clause that we just discussed—it shall ensure that there be equity between the Atlantic provinces in the allocation of resources, effort and programs in a manner to be determined by the Agency, and the Agency shall report annually to Parliament on the fulfilment of this objective.

I suppose it speaks for itself in terms of what we are aiming at with respect to this amendment. The reason that this is necessary is that because this particular Agency as devised by the Government is one that is designed to be responsive to applications generated in particular by business enterprises.

We know that as a part of the disparity between the Atlantic region and other parts of Canada that there are disparities in the level of development of business enterprise, the level of development of entrepreneurial enterprises, from one region to the other.

Within the Atlantic region there is a similar type of disparity. In some areas of the Atlantic region there are large numbers of corporations that are active in enterprise and ready to put in their applications and take advantage of any program that might be devised. We have seen that not only in the Atlantic region, but in the operations of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which was a predecessor of DRIE. The consequences are that these programs that were originally set up to support regional development ended up helping regional development in north Toronto, and regional development programs ended up responding to requests, demands, and lobbying from larger business enterprises.

In the first period since the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency was announced on June 6, 1987 in St. John's, Newfoundland, we have seen the expenditure of this Agency operate in accordance with that type of history. We have seen the programs administered by that Agency respond again to the same types of economic forces where there was a certain level of development; in some cases development already promoted by government as in the case of Cape Breton, and in other cases driven by other aspects of the economy, as in the case of other parts of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. I am told that there are some dozens of times more in absolute quantity of business enterprises in New Brunswick than there are in the Province of Newfoundland.

From June 6 to February 29 under programs such as the Atlantic Enterprise Program and the IRDP program, which when one includes loan insurance as well as the IRDP, the Atlantic Enterprise, and the IBD contributions, the expenditures total $126 million. Of that money, $63 million was spent in Cape Breton alone, which is part of one province. In Newfoundland $9.4 million was spent in the whole province with a population in the range of five times more than that of Cape Breton. In Nova Scotia, exclusive of Cape Breton Island, there was an expenditure of $19 million. In Prince Edward Island $5.3 million was spent out of a total $126 million. In New Brunswick $20 million was spent.

Therefore, we have a concern that in carrying out its programs the Agency itself, which is supposed to promote the economic development of the Atlantic region, will be favouring one region or one province, or one part of a province over another. That is not necessarily by design, but merely by something akin to the law of the jungle.

If a business enterprise, or a large number of business enterprises in the Province of Nova Scotia are ready because they have sufficient equity or have in place their business plan or market plan and have the backing and the financing for a percentage of a project and know that they can get the rest of it from ACOA, then they will be off and running. Whereas, in some parts of Atlantic Canada, and I am particularly concerned about Newfoundland, the enterprises and the entrepreneurs with the ideas and the projects, the activities and the plans, while being very good plans that would promote and lead to economic development in their region, will be left behind. Perhaps they will be smaller and not be able to take the same advantage of programs that may be offered to the whole Atlantic region.

This amendment would force the Agency to ensure that if the programs that it already had, or had been handed over from other Departments, or those it devised on its own, were acting in a way that was not fair to all of the provinces, that others would be devised which perhaps would have a particular application to the Province of Newfoundland, or the Province of Prince Edward Island, or in some other way would balance the equity between the provinces with respect to this program.

I think that there are ways of doing that. There are ways of allocating resources that are equitable. They are not included in the proposed amendment. They are available for the Agency to design and to decide those measures and formulas, if formulas are needed, but the requirement, in addition to ensuring equity between the provinces, is that they must report annually on how they achieve equity. The Agency must say that it has a certain set of standards, "Here is how we applied them and here is how we achieved equity". If we do not like that, we can argue about it in the House and propose other amendments. But we will know what the Agency is doing and what the justification is. If we leave it to the Agency's own devices, we do not know what will happen, and after the fact we will be wondering what went on and be attempting to get some justification from the Government on it.

It is a big concern because we do not want to see Newfoundland fighting with Cape Breton or Prince Edward Island fighting with New Brunswick over the allocation of money for a program that is supposed to benefit the entire region. I have a fear that that might happen, if the Agency is not told from the very beginning to pay attention to this principle and ensure equity between all four provinces. The Agency is to report annually on what progress has been made, or if the programs were lopsided one year, then what it plans to do the next year to make up the balance. I do not think it is a very long way to go to insist that an agency of the Government be fair as between the provinces in the operation of this particular program.

The Atlantic provinces are not a homogeneous unit. There are problems of development that are different in Newfoundland than those in Nova Scotia. This fear is not merely my own. It was expressed by the Newfoundland Government in its discussion paper presented to the Government in December, 1986. It proposed a formula of allocation based on some type of regional disparity index that it devised. It looked at such issues as low earned income and the unemployment rate. The gross provincial product, the low earned income per capita, and the unemployment rate are three factors that could influence a disparity indicator which would show that a particular province deserves more attention than perhaps another province in terms of handing out the funds.

I am not suggesting any rigid formula to the Agency. I am suggesting that the Agency adopt, and be forced to adopt by legislation, the principle of equity between the provinces, and report to Parliament annually on how it has achieved that in order that we could determine in committee, or wherever, whether the Agency has applied the funds fairly.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for a moment on this particular clause. It is a very straightforward and direct requirement to recognize that there are diverse provinces and regions that in some cases, have different requirements and different amounts of regional disparity. This particular clause does not establish a basis on which the Government or the Agency must deal with these differentials and disparities, but it recognizes that it is the Agency's responsibility to look at each of the provinces and ensure equity between those provinces and regions as they are defined in the Act.

Mr. Walpole, in giving a definition of what he considered to be economic disparity, suggested that regional disparity existed where the earned income of a particular area was no more than two-thirds of the Canadian average. In establishing equity as between the various regions of Atlantic Canada, one might look at that standard of disparity, with the attempt being to bring the Atlantic provinces as close as possible to the Canadian average.

That is the kind of equity which Clause 12 would require of the Agency.

To my mind, it is fairly straightforward, and it is a point on which the Agency should be given direction.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have read, with interest, the proposed amendment. As well, I have listened to the various comments made thus far in the debate. Those promoting the amendment constantly refer to how flexible it would be, and the fact that it would not be necessary to do certain things.

Let me read the proposed amendment:

> In carrying out its object the agency shall ensure that there be equity between the Atlantic Provinces—

The use of the word "shall" implies that there be some kind of a formula by which the Agency "shall" ensure that there be equity between the Atlantic provinces.

The amendment goes on to talk about equity "in the allocation of resources".

Like the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) I, too, have some statistics in respect of the ACOA program from June 6, 1987 to March 31, 1988. I could read you some of these numbers and ask you to tell me what is equitable. For example, it talks about the authorized contributions in the Province of New Brunswick under IRDP and the AEP being $15 million. In Nova Scotia it was $31 million.

Does that constitute equity? In the Province of Newfoundland, it was $9 million. But when one looks at that in conjunction with the loan insurance, the numbers change considerably, with Newfoundland moving up to $44 million; Nova Scotia to $81 million; and New Brunswick, to $63 million. Is that equity?

When one looks at the special category of Cape Breton, no reference is made to it. I presume from the lack of a reference that it is included in the figures for the Province of Nova Scotia. When one looks at the programs in the context of the federal moneys they have been able to deliver to Cape Breton, one sees that the contribution is $50 million, and that the authorized loan insurance is $17 million.

There is nothing in the proposed amendment that would separate Cape Breton from Nova Scotia. In that circumstance, how does one measure that? If there are special programs for Cape Breton—something which will be discussed later in this debate—should we then ensure that that much more goes into New Brunswick, into Prince Edward Island, and into Newfoundland?

We are all aware of the difficulties that have been experienced in attracting industry to Cape Breton. Is that equity?

We can talk about equity in terms of the number of jobs created. In Newfoundland, for a total projected cost of $44 million, 692 jobs were created. But in Nova Scotia, for a projected cost of $81 million, only 520 jobs were created; and for New Brunswick, at $63 million, 583 jobs. How does one measure equity in the allocation of resources?

The amendment then goes on to speak of "equity of effort". That is a dandy! I would like to be able to measure "equity of effort". I do not know precisely what one would measure. There are offices in Newfoundland, in New Brunswick, in Prince Edward Island, in Cape Breton, and in Nova Scotia. Who is going to run around measuring the "effort" of the employees of those various offices in terms of the delivery of this program?

Motion No. 12, to be debated later, talks about the assignment of existing employees.

I can envisage a real scramble around the managerial table to ensure that they do not get anyone who will not be able to add to the "effort" of that particular office, because someone, somehow, is going to run around and measure that effort.

The last item in the trilogy relates to the measuring of the "equity of programs".

One of the aims of this legislation is that the Minister, in conjunction with his advisory board, have the opportunity to create programs, to designate areas. But all of a sudden, he must ensure that there is equity as between the provinces. That, in my view, would seriously limit the flexibility that the Minister must have.

The amendment also talks about the Agency reporting annually to Parliament in respect of the fulfilment of the objective of equity. One can immediately envisage the scurry in New Brunswick to rush an application through on December 31 in order to have that reflected in the annual report on the equity of resources.

I would much prefer that the Agency take its time and make its decisions on applications on their merit. The criterion should not be merely to justify a bureaucrat's annual report in respect of equity in the allocation of resources.

To my mind, this amendment, among others, would bring about a situation in Atlantic Canada which was not contemplated by the legislation itself. Certainly, it would decrease the flexibility of the Agency. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Program is not meant to be an entitlement program. We just got rid of an entitlement program in the context of the various tiers in past programs. As a representative of a municipality on the edge of another tier, I can tell you that I have seen industry move just across the border in order to get additional benefits.

We do not want to entitle a certain region or a certain province to a given amount of money under this program; rather, we want all Atlantic Canadians to have the opportunity to chase after every economic opportunity that presents itself.

In reading the proposed amendment, the implication is that moneys will have to be withheld from certain areas in order to achieve equity as between the provinces. What about putting more money into given areas? If there is a bona fide economic opportunity in Newfoundland, I want to ensure that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be able to provide funding and assistance to that area in order that the economic benefit can be achieved.

The Agency has to be able to take advantage of every opportunity presented. I do not want the Agency placed in the position of having to deny an application on the basis that to approve it would be to throw out of whack the "equity" formula.

If this amendment is adopted, a formula will have to be devised in order to ensure that there is equity in the allocation of resources, effort and programs as between the Atlantic provinces.

To my mind, the best way to ensure fair and equitable allocation of the resources of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency within Atlantic Canada is to rely upon the parliamentary process, with the parliamentary representatives of these areas making the appropriate representations to the Minister, to the employees of the Agency. In that way, there will be every opportunity for good projects to get positive consideration. It should not be done in accordance with some formula, or in accordance with some numbers set by Ottawa in respect of achieving equity between the Atlantic provinces in the allocation of resources.

As a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, I would not want to run up against any such formula. I want to be in a position to fight as hard as I can for any project that is going to be good for my region of the Province of New Brunswick; and as an Atlantic Canadian Member of Parliament, I will fight hard to ensure that every economic opportunity that presents itself in Atlantic Canada gets every consideration possible from the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

For all of the reasons I have set out, I do not think we should consider accepting this amendment. Any amendment that would result in someone going around measuring equity of resources, equity of effort, or equity of programs should be rejected.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it is precisely for the reasons listed by the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) that this amendment is necessary; it is for those very reasons that this amendment has been introduced.

In so far as "equity" is concerned, if there is $12 million available, that amount could be divided equally among the four provinces, giving each province $3 million. Then if you had $8 million, you would divide four into eight and get $2 million. That is one measure of equity. You could do it on a per capita basis. Certainly the intent of the motion is very clear.

There is only one thing in the motion he presented on which I have to differ with the hon. gentleman. It is a minor point. It is certainly better to have the amendment approved than disapproved. Where I differ with him is where he says, "in a manner to be determined by the agency". I do not think the Agency should be allowed to determine the manner in which the distribution of equity would be made. That is more precisely why the following motion is being proposed in my name, but it removes the authority of the Agency to determine what is equity and what is not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 4. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11) the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Speaker remind the House of the rules for voting. Is it not to be done from a Member's seat?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, it is done from Members' seats.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate) moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 12 by striking out lines 36 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"mentation with equal emphasis in each of the four Atlantic Provinces".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion is approximately the same as the motion just dealt with, but it omits the method by which equity would be determined and it omits the ability of the Agency to determine what the equity is. In other words, this says quite clearly that there will be equal emphasis in each of the four Atlantic provinces. There are no ifs, ands or buts about it. The reason for the motion is very clear. We have under this Agency 300 or 400 people I suppose, some of them highly paid. Some of them will make $100,000 a year. Imagine making $100,000 a year to determine what projects will be approved or disapproved for funding under this particular agency. That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. It is not good enough to have somebody making $100,000 a year in a poor province in which the average income is perhaps $8,000 a year and some prime executive, what we would call some fat cat, sitting down making decisions simply based on what is thrown at him.

If the process were left alone, the majority of the applications for funding under this Agency would, as they say, with emphasis on small and medium-size enterprise, come from the fairly industrialized areas of Atlantic Canada. In other words, where business and money exists, that is from where the applications will come if the process is left alone. I object strongly to having people who are making $100,000 a year in Atlantic Canada or anywhere else just sitting down judging applications as they come over their desks. They should be forced in Atlantic Canada to go out and make sure that the applications come from the poorest areas of Atlantic Canada, not from the richest areas, not from where the moneyed people are located or where the industries are presently located. They should make sure the applications do not come from the growth centres of Atlantic Canada, the cities of Atlantic Canada, where there is presently lots of employment and where people from the poorer areas of Atlantic Canada have to flock to get jobs. These are the places where the businesses are and where the people with the money can get money from the banks and the agencies to create more jobs. No, Mr. Speaker. This Agency will have highly paid civil servants, earning $100,000 a year, and assistants making anywhere from $60,000 to $75,000 a year. I looked at the salary list and said, isn't this wonderful to have those types of salaries being paid to so many people?

Then I looked at their functions. There is only one place in the Bill to make sure these people get out and work for their dollar which will force them out of the city offices into places where jobs should be created, where the opportunities are but where private enterprise is not willing in some cases to invest money in the creation of jobs for the resources.

A good example would be in the Province of Newfoundland where we still export the vast majority of our natural resources in a raw state—even our fish. We have the frozen cod block syndrome in Newfoundland—

Mr. Crosbie: Free trade will change that.

Mr. Baker: It is sent to other foreign countries to be sent back to us as a finished product.

Mr. Crosbie: Support free trade.

Mr. Baker: I am not in agreement with allowing the Government of Canada to create these highly paid jobs, giving people the fattest of salaries and the greatest of guarantees to sit in offices in Atlantic Canada without saying to them, "You get out of those offices, dig up the applications, help the poor people, the poor regions and create the jobs where they should be, not where you, the fat cats, think they should be or where the financial institutions think they should be". That is a sure bet, but where it is not such a sure bet is where the taxpayers' money is being spent. These people should be forced to spend the taxpayers' money in areas where there is high unemployment, not in our so-called growth centres, such as certain cities in Atlantic Canada which over the years have benefited more than the other regions of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few comments to the remarks made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

This motion of the Hon. Member is similar to my previous motion. It is slightly different. It requires equal emphasis in all four provinces. I would like to think that that would be interpreted in the same way as providing equitable treatment to the four provinces. I do not think that the Hon. Member intends the money to be divided in quarters and passed out or that the same kind of money be spent in Prince Edward Island perhaps with its population as will be spent in Nova Scotia with its population.

I think the thrust of the Hon. Member's motion and his remarks are very important. There has to be in this legislation something to ensure that the people working in this Agency are required to promote economic development in those areas where that development will not grow naturally. I support the Hon. Member's remarks about the fact that private enterprise on its own will not provide equity between provinces or even within a province. Private enterprise will go where the money already is. Those who already have the money, the equity and the economic development will go to the Agency to look for more money and it will grow where it already exists.

We need to force the Agency to be fair not only by ensuring that everyone has copies of applications. That is not enough. The results of this will be as predictable as day following night.

Suppose that there are applications in every town, village and post office in Atlantic Canada, or at least in those post offices that will remain after the Government has finished closing them down. Suppose there were applications in every post office, every town hall and every municipality in Atlantic Canada, and suppose there was equal access to the applications for the programs in that way. The results will be that the money, the programs and the economic development will be attracted to the places where those things already exist.

The Agency must be required to place its emphasis equally on the provinces by insisting that each province have equitable programs. If a program is picked up in one place and not in another, new programs must be devised and implemented in those other parts of the Atlantic provinces.

Although the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) did not use the word "equitable" when he spoke, "equity" meaning fairness, he used the phrase "equal emphasis". Should the previous motion fail, should the Government use its overwhelming majority to denounce it when it comes to a vote, then I think the motion of the Hon. Member should be supported.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will not speak at any length on this because we dealt with the same concept a few minutes ago. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has certainly just done his own home City of Gander a great disservice. It was a paean of criticism of growth centres, even in Atlantic Canada. It was anti-city, anti-town. I do not know where he wants development to go. Why should he be prejudiced against a town like Gander, for example?

The Hon. Member's dissertation was to suggest that development should not go to the towns and the growth centres that already exist. That is just astonishing. I hope that Mayor Sheppard and his council will pay particular note to the fulminations of the hon. gentleman against his own home town.

The Hon. Member would add the words: "with equal emphasis in each of the four provinces". What in the name of heavens does that mean? How can we emphasize equally activities in each of the four Atlantic provinces? What does that mean? If anyone would know what the heck that meant, it would certainly be quite a rigid standard. Of course, it would be contrary to the whole spirit and the approach of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which is to encourage initiatives being taken by the people who live in the regions, by the entrepreneurs, the co-operatives or whatever group it might be. That is how this has been designed, not to place artificial barriers.

If the people are more alert, more on the ball, more active and have more initiative in Nova Scotia, P.E.I., New Brunswick or Newfoundland than in the other places, then they deserve to have a response to their initiatives. The success of this program will depend to a great extent on the areas involved. The program is designed to give entrepreneurs, risk-takers and those who have initiative a chance to move ahead.

How can we have a rule such as the one the hon. gentleman suggests?

The few remarks of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) were simply a poem against success. He sounds as though he did not like success, as though he were against the people who are successful. The implication of his remarks was that the people who are successful should not be assisted by this Agency. Has one ever heard such absolute tommyrot? Should this Agency only give assistance to those who have never had a success in their lives, those who have been completely unsuccessful up until now? Is that what the Hon. Member for St. John's East suggests? He suggests that there is a need to force the agency to do this and that. He is completely confused.

I would certainly suggest to the House that we defeat this even more feeble attempt on the part of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate who cannot be creative like the Hon. Member for St. John's East. At least the Hon. Member for St. John's East is creative and is making some suggestions. In fact, several of his amendments were adopted. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate is trying to climb on the Jack Harris bandwagon by making this more silly and frivolous suggestion than the one made by the Hon. Member for St. John's East.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-125, an Act to enable the Northern Canada Power Commission to issue shares, to authorize the sale of those shares to the Government of the Northwest Territories, to repeal the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, and to provide for related matters, without amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House,
Ottawa

April 27, 1988

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Claire L'Heureux-Dubé, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in her capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 27th day of April, 1988, at 5.15 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Léopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of report stage of Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate) moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 13 by striking out line 37 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the clause in which the Government spells out exactly what the Agency is responsible for. Clause 13 starts out by saying, "In carrying out its object," and we already dealt with the object of the Agency. In carrying out this object for economic development, which is very all-encompassing and broad, "the Agency," and then it spells out for two or three pages what the Agency's intentions are.

The Bill provides, for example, that the Agency will support business associations, it will study the development of business opportunities, it will improve business communications, it will promote scholarship related to business, it will assist investors, it will make loans to people, it will guarantee repayments and it will do practically everything. However, it will do nothing because the key word in Clause 13 is "may". The Bill says that in carrying out its object which is contained in the previous clause, the Agency may do this and the Government may do that.

The purpose of this amendment is to say that the Agency shall do these things. There is quite a difference between the words "may" and "shall". "May", according to the Oxford English Dictionary, means expressing possibility. That is not what we are dealing with here today. These hundreds of people will be paid such great salaries to belong to an agency in Atlantic Canada. We want to make sure they do something, not just express the possibility of doing something. Therefore, I suggest we substitute the word "shall" for the word "may". The word "shall" according to the dictionary means that it is a command, or an obligation to do what the Act says it will do. What is the sense in having an Act if the agency you are creating need not do anything in the Act? That is precisely what this particular clause is all about.

We spoke a few moments ago about equality. There is no equality under this Agency when you have, for example, 17 employees in Newfoundland, 14 in Prince Edward Island, and far more in Ottawa, as is presently the case.

This amendment is very clear. It simply changes the word "may" to "shall" and forces the Agency, as the Bill suggests, in concert with concerned departments and agencies of all Governments in Atlantic Canada, to carry out its responsibilities. It will have no choice, it has to carry out its responsibilities or it should not be in existence. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, when we apply what the Hon. Member is saying to a few parts of this particular clause it may not look too bad. However, I am going to show you some parts of the Bill where it will certainly make a difference when you apply the program to Atlantic Canada.

One of the things that is so important in this legislation is that the Agency have as much flexibility as possible so that it can choose the appropriate program instrument according to the circumstances. The Agency can look at an application from Prince Edward Island and decide which program will give the most beneficial kind of support to the application. Obviously we are concerned about flexibility, and normally in legislative drafting program authority is discretionary. The Minister can determine the allocation of resources in the most appropriate manner possible in order to take advantage of the biggest number of economic opportunities in Atlantic Canada.

Having said that, if you change the word "may" on page 4 to "shall" it would probably not be a big concern with regard to Clause 13(a), (b) or (c), but when you get down to Clause 13(d) it will say:

> (d) assist investors—

What if they do not want assistance? What if they do not want, unfortunately, to establish an enterprise in Atlantic Canada? We shall assist them whether they want assistance or not. Going on a little further to Clause 13(e):

> (e) make loans to any person with respect to the establishment and development of enterprises—

What if they decide that this is not the proper procedure and the guy does not want a loan? Perhaps he wants something under IRDP or ERDA. No, we shall make a loan. You do not know what is good for you and we are going to give you a loan. He might prefer a direct contribution with nothing to be repaid. The circumstances in the particular area where the application is generated may dictate that that instrument be applied, but according to this amendment we are going to give him a loan. Then it goes on to say:

> (f) guarantee the repayment—

What if we do not want it back? What if it is a direct contribution from one of the programs? No, we shall guarantee repayment. Or, we shall guarantee loan insurance or credit insurance. What if they do not need it? According to this amendment we shall go out and make sure they get loan insurance or credit insurance.

The amendment may look all right when you talk about planning or directing and managing and so on, but one of the key elements of this legislation, and I do not know how they missed this in the 11 hours of debate on second reading and 34 hours in committee, is to provide flexibility so that we can provide the optimum federal government assistance in a particular area of the Atlantic provinces so that we can all expand our economic opportunities. We want that flexibility, and adoption of this amendment will not allow us that flexibility. It will not allow the applicants the flexibility we now have with the current wording.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I guess it would not be surprising, after hearing the last speaker, to think that the Government does not like the word "shall". It wants to use "may" every time. Yet in the very next clause the Bill says that the Agency shall assist the Minister. It lists four, five or six things that the Agency shall do to assist the Minister. If the Agency shall assist the Minister, why can it not be required to do the things that the Agency is set up to do? I do not see what is so wrong with that and I support the good intention of the mover of this motion in requiring the Agency to do the very things it has been set up to do.

However, I must confess to a certain difficulty further on down in the clause when such an amendment would require the Agency to make the loans to any person with respect to the establishment and development of enterprises, and more particularly small and medium-sized enterprises in Atlantic Canada. That would allow us all, everyone in this House and I presume everyone who asks for a loan, to be given a loan by ACOA to set up any kind of agency or enterprise that he or she wants. I do not think even the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) would like to see so much largesse distributed by this Agency even if it is in Gander—Twillingate, his own riding.

The amendment, which is very well intentioned, when one applies it directly to everything contained in Clause 13, can be applied and still maintain the integrity of the program. I thank the Hon. Member for bringing once again to the attention of the House the fact that the Government does not want to assist the Agency in carrying out its obligations.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East) moved:

(a) by striking out line 7 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"port and promotion of enterprises and community economic development organizations, and"

"enterprises and community economic development organizations, and more particularly small"

(c) by striking out line 44 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"prises and community economic development organizations, and more particularly small and".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment may be considered somewhat technical in nature. It relates to the powers of the Agency in terms of establishment of programs in Clause 13. Even though Clause 13 is written in a permissive way, we would like to have it amended to add "community economic development organizations" to the kinds of organizations and enterprises which the Agency may assist. That is repeated in the motion three times, in Subclause (a), (b), and (c). We would like to add this to emphasize the important role which these kinds of organizations play in economic development within the Atlantic region.

An example of such an organization is the Cumberland Community Futures. Co-operative organizations have put forth similar arguments and proposals to the legislative committee. In Atlantic Canada there are various kinds of community-based initiatives for people, many of whom are not engaged in economic development for personal profit but rather for economic development in their community. One such example is the Community Economic Development Co-operative on Bell Island in my riding. There are community co-operatives in many other ridings in Atlantic Canada as well.

The Great Northern Peninsula Development Corporation is not a co-operative but is in essence owned by several regional development associations. It is a community-based economic development organization which supports particular programs and activities. It may not be an enterprise, but it is certainly a community economic development organization which is promoting economic development in its own region. We would like ACOA to be empowered to assist those organizations as well.

In some of the programs which have been announced by ACOA there has been a form of assistance to certain kinds of enterprises or non-profit agencies. That is commendable, but we would like that emphasis to be in the legislation so that it is clear that we can expect this type of program and other types of programs among the activities of the agency in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 7 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate) moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 13 by striking out line 9 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"sized enterprises, with emphasis on the utilization of primary resources, particularly the fishery and agriculture in Atlantic Canada,".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion was suggested by many Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada and people who appeared before the standing committee who are concerned that nowhere in the Bill is it mentioned that the fishery, agriculture, and mining would qualify for programs under the Agency being established by the Government of Canada.

There is nothing at all wrong with this amendment. You will note that various parts of the clause to be amended emphasize "particularly" this or that. What is wrong with inserting "with emphasis on the utilization of primary resources, particularly the fishery and agriculture in Atlantic Canada"? There is nothing wrong with putting particular emphasis on the primary resources of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island which remain underutilized and underdeveloped. We know that the fishery is underdeveloped and underutilized. The Government of Canada and the provincial Governments in Atlantic Canada, particularly the Government of Newfoundland, will have to pay special attention to the utilization of primary resources, particularly in the fishery, to create finished products. There should be particular emphasis as well on agriculture in Atlantic Canada.

It was brought up in this House one day that the potatoes which are used on government jets and by Air Canada and VIA Rail are actually imported from Belgium. If you board a VIA Rail train in Moncton, New Brunswick, where the Parliamentary Secretary is from, you are served potatoes which were grown in Belgium. That is not very nice. If you board an Air Canada jet at an international airport in Atlantic Canada the potatoes you are served are from Belgium and the cake is from Holland.

Through this motion we want particular emphasis put on our primary resources; our fishing industry, our agricultural industry, and our mining industry in Atlantic Canada under this Agency. Why not spell it out? They spell out data banks and networks and investment requirements in various industries. Why not spell out the industries which are important to Atlantic Canada?

There is no reason in the world why the Government cannot accept this amendment. In fact, by not accepting the amendment the Government is saying that it does not agree that the primary resources; the fishery, agriculture, and mining, are the most important aspects of economic development in Atlantic Canada. In other words, the Government does not know anything about economic opportunities in Atlantic Canada.

The problem in Atlantic Canada is that the money has not been directed to the area to which it should be directed, that is, to making finished products with our primary resources rather than exporting them to foreign countries and then buying them back. We are exporting the jobs in our fishing industry to the eastern United States. Frozen cod blocks are thawed out in Massachusetts where thousands of people are employed. Companies like National Sea Products and Fishery Products International, which are being supported all the time by the Government of Canada, are making loads of money.

It should be spelled out in the Bill that it pays particular attention to the mining resources of Cape Breton Island, the fishery in Cape Breton Island and agriculture in Cape Breton Island, just as it does throughout the Atlantic provinces.

The Government will not accept this amendment because it is afraid to do so. It does not want to get involved in the primary industries of Atlantic Canada, or to create jobs in Atlantic Canada. It would rather create this Agency that will employ some people at $100,000 a year to process applications. The Government will not agree to include the fishery, agriculture and mining resources in this Bill. Shame.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate what my colleague, the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), said with respect to Motion No. 8, which would include in the Act the utilization of primary resources, particularly fisheries and agriculture in Atlantic Canada.

Atlantic Canada is definitely facing economic problems at this time. The Government seems to be restructuring the assistance in order to accomplish what it wants to happen. However, quite often, such objectives are not possible.

I think the Government must give more consideration to the needs of Atlantic Canada and determine where the jobs and economic base can best be fostered. I suggest it is a mistake not to include the primary resources of the fishery and agriculture.

We have many towns that have only one industry. If that industry is fishing, agriculture or mining, it is not eligible for assistance. As a result, many of these smaller towns will disappear and create a great deal of hardship.

It is significant to note that the Government is ignoring this vital area. Some agricultural areas are experiencing great difficulty, while others have been increasing their yields in recent years. This Bill should permit the Government to aid these primary resource industries. It will be a very definite mistake not to do so.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I move, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a):

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of report stage of Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to others Acts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Minister for International Trade. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): According to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), if 15 Members rise in their places to object, the motion is defeated. Shall the motion carry?

And fewer than 15 members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being fewer than 15 Members rising in objection to the motion, according to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to be carried.

Motion agreed to.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the Chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the Acting Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend Her Honour the Deputy to Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, her Honour was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-76, an Act to provide for emergency preparedness and to make a related amendment to the National Defence Act—Chapter No. 11.

Bill C-125, an Act to enable the Northern Canada Power Commission to issue shares, to authorize the sale of those shares to the Government of the Northwest Territories, to repeal the Northern Canada Power Commission Act and to provide for related matters—Chapter No. 12.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of report stage of Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 8 (Mr. Baker, p. 14889).

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on the amendment. While the amendment looks very nice, I am sure it is playing to a certain audience, nonetheless its contents are covered in the legislation and in the wording currently proposed.

The philosophy behind Bill C-103 is to provide support where opportunities exist in Atlantic Canada for economic development. The agency has the flexibility to respond to all opportunities to get involved in good business proposals. Emphasizing one or two sectors in Atlantic Canada would only serve to unbalance the approach that is being adopted in Bill C-103.

Where in the agriculture and the fisheries industry there are opportunities, ACOA will have a role to play. If there is an opportunity and a business is involved in agriculture, in fishing, in forestry or in mining, then ACOA is anxious to assist them in the development of that opportunity.

In addition to that, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) currently have programs to assist people in those sectors. Provinces have programs, as does the federal Government through those two Departments. Obviously, ACOA does not necessarily want to parallel those programs and to provide an overlap. It wants to fill its role in order to co-ordinate the effort of Governments toward those various sectors.

When we look at the legislation we see that it is clear in this clause that it will help in the promotion of enterprises, particularly small and medium-sized enterprises, and when they are available in those sectors ACOA will have a role to play and will be glad to provide assistance. However, when we look at other clauses in the legislation, for example, Clause 5, we see that it deals with the fact that the Minister may exercise powers and perform duties and functions that affect economic opportunity and development in Atlantic Canada over which Parliament has jurisdiction and that are not by or pursuant to law assigned to any other Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, or to any Department, board or agency of the Government. So if there is an opportunity in a sector that is not assigned to someone else, then there is an opportunity for ACOA to get involved.

Clause 9 deals with a rather unique aspect of the legislation. It states:

> Where the Minister is satisfied that the implementation of a program or project authorized by any other Act would further the purpose of this Part, the Minister may, conditionally or unconditionally, undertake to transfer funds appropriated for the purposes of this Part to supplement funds that the Minister responsible for the program or project has undertaken to expend in connection therewith.

In other words, if there is an opportunity in the agriculture industry, the forestry sector or the mining sector and there is not enough money in an existing program, then the Minister can say: "We are going to put Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency money into that program to supplement funds of the national program or programs that are available in the other Department".

There is a great deal of flexibility here. The Hon. Member mentioned the fisheries industry. Just yesterday there was an announcement with respect to a company called Pioneer Fisheries which is involved in a lobster holding and marketing plant on Prince Edward Island. It has received a $1.3 million grant to begin operation. This is an example of a business opportunity in the fisheries sector in which the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has responded.

It can happen. It is happening. These amendments are not necessary for it to happen. Obviously, we feel that the measures are provided for in the legislation as it exists. The operation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency interprets it that way. This is a good example of assistance being provided to one of those primary sectors to which this amendment makes reference.

We feel the matter is adequately covered in Bill C-103 as it exists. There is absolutely no need for the adoption of this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 8 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division stands deferred.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East) moved:

Motion No. 9

> That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 18 by striking out line 29 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:
> "each province in Atlantic Canada and shall be broadly representative of the business, social cultural, governmental and educational participants in the economic development of Atlantic Canada."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this particular motion proposes to amend Clause 18 which provides for the establishment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Board consisting of the President and not more than 18 other members appointed by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister.

This motion will amend Clause 18(3) which presently states, "The Board shall include persons from each province in Atlantic Canada", to state, "The Board shall include persons from each province in Atlantic Canada and shall be broadly representative of the business, social, cultural, governmental and educational participants in the economic development of Atlantic Canada".

The reason for that amendment is to attempt to ensure that the Board giving advice which is required to assist the Agency in carrying out its functions shall not only have representatives such as those it presently has. The Minister has appointed 18 people in addition to the President, most of whom are business people. There are representatives from three Governments and one agency, and there is one person who is involved with the labour movement. But in its composition the Board does not have anyone from the academic community assigned, or people who are involved in the type of economic development organizations that I have mentioned.

There is no one from the co-operative sector. When this was raised at second reading, the Agency went out of its way to announce that co-operatives were included. But it was not very clear from the attitude of the Government, particularly in terms of the make-up of the Board, that this was the case. In fact, people are phoning me from New Brunswick and Newfoundland and saying that ACOA does not know how to deal with co-operatives, and that they are not even sure that ACOA understands what a co-operative is. I was informed that someone in New Brunswick was told not to set up a co-operative because that will take a long time to get organized; do it through a business corporation. This was a co-operative that wanted to set up a co-operative enterprise. The Agency was either ignorant or insensitive to that type of development or economic enterprise.

The Agency might state in its brochure or in its policy that it provides assistance to co-operatives, but if it does not know what co-operatives are or how they act, or has no experience with the history of co-operatives in the Maritime provinces and in Newfoundland and the important role that they play in economic development, how can programs be devised and economic development assisted with those types of agencies?

Today the Speaker ruled out of order a motion to set up an advisory committee. To remind the House, the motion states:

> (4) The Minister shall establish an advisory board comprised of women to advise on the policies and programs necessary to ensure that women participate in the activities and initiatives of the Agency, and provide for the membership and further duties and functions of such a board.

That motion was ruled out of order. But in this particular motion there could be provision to include representatives of women's organizations to insist that the Agency, in operating its programs and in devising its staffing and other activities, pay special attention to the needs of women in business. Because they have different approaches, they have different needs in order to move forward and develop economic programs and business enterprises.

This particular amendment will provide diversity and broad representation needed to make the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency aware of what is going on in Atlantic Canada, aware of the role played by co-operatives, by women in business, by the community economic development corporations, by the regional development associations, by the academic community that has concerns and ideas, and by the scientific community.

With this amendment we are asking that the Board be required to be broadly representative of those parts of society that are furthering economic development, and not only business people. Business people have a very important role to play in economic development. That is important, and perhaps even primarily important in terms of the make-up of a particular board. We do want people with business experience, and people with successful business experience who are aware of what it takes to make a successful project work.

We also want the Agency to understand the broad range of economic development activity that takes place in the Atlantic region, in the fishery, in the mining industry, and in the regional development sector that has been very active in Newfoundland and also in other provinces over the last number of years. They have a very important role to play. They have an understanding of communities in Atlantic Canada that perhaps some of the more successful businessmen might not have, if they are operating in larger centres. We want to see more of a balance than we have received. Without having the Minister told that the Board has to be broadly representative, we would like to see more of a variety in the appointments. We think that this amendment would achieve that end, and I would ask the House to support it fully.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, a word of support for this amendment. For the life of me, I cannot see why the Government would not agree to the amendment. As it is presently worded, Clause 18(3) states, "The Board shall include persons from each province in Atlantic Canada". It says "persons", Mr. Speaker. I suppose there could be one from one province, three from another province, and five from yet another province. They could all be defeated Progressive Conservative candidates. They could be defeated politicians. The amendment asks for the Board to be representative of the business community, social and cultural agencies. In other words, representative of the people in Atlantic Canada.

I would like to see a couple of people on the Board who are unemployed, or a couple of people on the Board who are used to drawing unemployment insurance, or a couple of people on the Board who tried setting up businesses in Atlantic Canada but went broke. Perhaps the Board could include a couple of community leaders from town councils who were elected by the people in those smaller communities in Atlantic Canada. In fact, probably it should be spelled out even more than it presently is. The Minister is the person who will appoint the Board, and you know, Mr. Speaker, who those people would be if the present Minister appointed them. I do not mean the Minister who introduced the Bill, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), but the Minister who is in the other place who is responsible for this particular legislation.

I cannot see why the Government would not accept the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member.

• (1750)

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment presented by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Coming from the Yukon, as I do, the opposite end of the country to Atlantic Canada, I can very much relate to the need to have such an advisory board. I would draw an analogy between the capacity of this Board and the care with which members of the Board should be selected so as to represent a broad range of interests, including that of the business community.

I note that the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses, the small business association, has expressed the concern that this Board will not represent the interests of small business; that, rather, it will only represent the interests of the large business sector.

That is an extremely important point. As has also been mentioned, women's interests should also be represented on this Board. Women constitute an ever-increasing proportion of the entrepreneurs in our society. Between 1972 and 1983, the number of women entrepreneurs increased by some 140 per cent, while the number of male entrepreneurs increased by only 10 per cent.

In light of those figures, the interests of women present a significant emerging factor in terms of representation on such a Board.

Knowing the Atlantic region as I do, the question of rural and urban representation is an extremely important one. The opportunities available to non-urban areas are often more difficult to create, given the smaller population available to a business, with the result that non-urban areas are often overlooked. I think it extremely important that any such advisory board reflect the rural/urban split as well.

I realize that no advisory board can represent all interests, and indeed it should not be merely a collection of separate interests. However, we have seen all too often that such advisory boards are somewhat uni-dimensional, lacking in representation from the less vocal segments of our society, thereby making it more difficult for those segments to develop activities which will enhance their economic development.

The Department of Employment and Immigration has established local advisory committees whose purpose it is to advise on how projects and programs under that Department are to be allocated. One can easily draw a parallel between that and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Under both, there is an attempt to reflect, in the projects undertaken, the different sectors of society, the large/small business community, and the rural/urban split.

In summary, I strongly support the proposed amendment. Through this amendment, the various sectors of the community can have adequate representation on the advisory board, thus enabling them to take maximum advantage of the programs offered.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House is on Motion No. 9. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate) moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 20 by striking out line 25 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"13(c) to improve the business environment, particularly as it relates to the development of the fishery and agriculture".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to make the Minister do what we tried to make the Agency do through an earlier amendment, an amendment which is opposed by the Government.

The Minister of whom I speak is not the Minister in whose name this Bill appears, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), but the individual who sits in the other place. This is a Minister who is not elected, a Minister who does not have to answer to the public, a Minister who can do whatever he wishes without the necessity of having to answer to the electorate.

For the first time in our history, we have a Minister in charge of a major economic development program for Atlantic Canada who does not have to face re-election, by virtue of being in what we in this place call "the other place".

Under this legislation, the Minister is given tremendous powers. In fact, in the light of the powers bestowed upon the Minister under this legislation, one wonders why the Prime Minister, in selecting a Minister to administer this Act, selected someone who does not sit in this Chamber, someone who does not have to answer to the electorate, someone who does not have to stand on a podium anywhere and defend his actions.

Under this legislation, the Minister has incredible powers. Under Clause 20, the Minister can make regulations "specifying programs and projects in addition to those referred to in paragraph 13(c)".

Well, Mr. Speaker, the entire scope of this Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and its responsibilities and actions, is set out in paragraph 13(c). Yet, under Clause 20 of the Bill, the Minister can make regulations specifying programs and projects "in addition to" those already set out in paragraph 13(c). In other words, the Minister could create an entirely new Act.

I doubt that Clause 20 would be in order, if one were to follow the rules of the procedure in an exact fashion.

Through this amendment, we are asking the Minister—the Minister "in the other place", the Minister who does not have to stand for re-election—to try to improve the business environment, as stated in the Bill, but particularly as it relates to the development of the fishery and agriculture.

This is something that was requested by the organizations representing the fishery and agriculture, the primary resources right through Atlantic Canada. That is the reason for the proposed amendment. I cannot, for the life of me, understand why the Government would not accept it, especially given that the Minister charged with administering this legislation is not even a sitting Member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) realizes, we have already been through this in dealing with Motion No. 8, and the same reasons for rejecting that amendment apply in this particular circumstance.

There is adequate flexibility in Bill C-103 to handle programs that may apply to any sector where business opportunities present themselves. Certainly, the arguments in respect of rejecting the amendment proposed under Motion No. 8 apply in this case. As in the case of the amendment proposed under Motion No. 8, this amendment is unnecessary, and as such should not be supported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 10. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

• (1800)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I note that the clock is at six o'clock and I know the Government has decided to extend the hours of the sitting. The Liberal caucus is holding a caucus meeting, about which we are all aware. The Board of Internal Economy normally meets on Wednesday night at this time, about which we are all aware. We have had a standing tradition in this House that Wednesday evenings be set aside for Parties to hold their individual caucus meetings. We had an understanding that we would be dealing with report stage of Bill C-33 in the House today and that if we did not complete it we would continue tomorrow.

I want to say that I am very aggravated and disappointed that the Government has seen fit to break an understanding and has seen fit to go against the traditions of the House. To think the Government would extend hours on a night when the Liberal Party was having a very important caucus meeting—

An Hon. Member: Why are you so worried?

Mr. Riis: Because I believe in the parliamentary system. I regret this decision. In an effort to co-operate—

Mr. Shields: You phoney.

Mr. Riis: Go wash your face.

I find it an odd way to do business in the House of Commons when the Deputy House Leader for the Government and I had an understanding about what business we would deal with today and would if necessary continue it tomorrow because he has obviously decided to break that understanding. As I say, I find it very difficult to do business in a co-operative way.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that there was absolutely no understanding.

Mr. Riis: You liar.

Mr. Lewis: I also wish to advise the House that we were fully cognizant of the fact that the Liberal caucus has a meeting. We would have accommodated the Liberal caucus, but I want to make it perfectly clear that we recognize a filibuster for a filibuster. There is absolutely no filibuster coming from the Liberals. When we see people from Ottawa representing Hamilton pretending to have an interest in Atlantic Canada, that is a filibuster. That is why we extended the hours, and we intend to do the business of the country.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, in fairness to the New Democrats, they have only one Member from Atlantic Canada. They need another Member to second their motions.

I would like to support the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on this occasion. He is receiving heckling from the government benches on his point of common decency. He mentioned that the Liberal Party has a caucus tonight at six o'clock and that it has not been the procedure in this House to hold extended hours on Wednesday evening. As well there is a meeting of the Board of Internal Economy this evening. The Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) spoke about filibustering, but we just started Bill C-103 this afternoon. This is incredible. It is obviously a move of bad faith on the part of the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not feel the floor of the House is a place to be negotiating. I have recognized the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) on debate on Motion No. 11.

Ms. Copps: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Dewar: I have a personal point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton East on a very short point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, my point of order responds probably to the point of personal privilege stated by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar). Whatever Members may think about where somebody originally came from, this Member—while I fought hard on the other side in the election—was duly elected to represent the people of Hamilton Mountain. I verily resent anyone on the government side of the House claiming that somebody does not have the right to speak for all Canadians. I think the statement made by the Government House Leader was a lot of bunk.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) has something to say?

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is that I was speaking to an amendment. I tried not to take my full time. I wanted to talk on local community economic development, and I was accused of filibustering.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is neither a point of order nor a question of privilege. It is debate.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Riis: You are a liar, sit down.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the House Leader for the New Democratic Party, called someone on this side of the House, I believe it was our House Leader, a liar.

Mr. Riis: That is right.

Mr. Shields: And he just now referred to me as a liar and to sit down. I demand that he withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will check the "blues" tomorrow. If the Hon. Member feels that he would like to withdraw his comment, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to explain why I called the Deputy House Leader a liar. First, I do admit that I called him that.

Mr. Shields: Withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like the Hon. Member to withdraw the statement that he made, otherwise I will not recognize him.

Mr. Riis: With a great deal of hesitation, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw calling the Hon. Deputy House Leader a liar.

Mr. Shields: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has a question of privilege?

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I want that Member to stand up and withdraw the remarks that he made to me. He called me a liar also. I would like his withdrawal on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I said I would check the "blues". If he has used these words, then he will withdraw them.

The Hon. Member for St. John's East is recognized on debate on Motion No. 11.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East) moved:

(a) by adding immediately after line 13 at page 9, the following:

"(2) The annual report referred to in subsection (1) shall contain:

a statement on the annual impact of the operations of the Agency upon the regional disparities between Atlantic Canada and other regions of Canada. The rate of economic disparity shall be calculated on the basis of a formula reflecting the economic disparity of those regions as measured by low employment, low earned income per capita and low gross domestic product.

"of this Part for that fiscal year, and such reports shall stand permanently referred to such committee of the House of Commons as is established to review matters relating to regional industrial expansion."

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 11 asks and requires the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in its annual report to make a statement on the annual impact of its operations on regional disparity between Atlantic Canada and other regions of Canada. I am speaking as a Newfoundlander and as an Atlantic Canadian.

I resent the implication from the government side of the House, the Deputy House Leader, that nobody else in this House has the right to speak on regional disparity and to speak up for people in other parts of the country. If that is the standard by which the Government will judge the actions of people on this side of the House when they are speaking for the rights of Canadians, I think it is time the Government was thrown out and tossed to the wolves where it belongs.

To hear the very Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) come to this House and speak up in support of legislation that is good for Atlantic Canada, that is what we expect in Atlantic Canada. If she did not, I would condemn her for it. If she refused to support Atlantic Canada, I would condemn her as I would condemn the Government House Leader saying that by doing that she is somehow pretending to be interested in the people of Canada. It is this side of the House, particularly our Party, which is fighting hard for legislation and fighting to improve this legislation so that Atlantic Canadians are protected. I welcome any addition to the debate which the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain can make.

I would encourage other Members from the central Canadian cities and towns, from the areas of Canada which are doing very well by this economy, to stand up and support legislation and support improvements to legislation that will protect Atlantic Canada. That is what is wrong with this whole issue. There are not enough people who are not from Atlantic Canada who have stood up for Atlantic Canada. If we had more people in this House who represent the richer parts of the country, the parts that are doing better than Atlantic Canada, speaking and being concerned about all of Canada, then we would not be dealing here today with a Bill designed to try to make up for what has been lost by neglect and the fact that Atlantic Canada has been denied its rightful place in Confederation. I think the comments of the Hon. Deputy House Leader, the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis), underline and underscore the real problem in Atlantic Canada.

In Newfoundland we have seven Members. Some of us are louder than others. We hear from the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) quite often. I try to speak out as often as I can and as loud as I can, sometimes louder than others, but there are only seven of us in this large House.

In Atlantic Canada, there are not enough people to form a majority to vote in anything that the rest of the country does not want. We are divided up into Parties as well. We expect and rely upon the support of Members from other parts of Canada within our own Party and, hopefully, even within other Parties, to support Atlantic Canada when measures are being brought forth that are for the benefit of Atlantic Canada.

This particular measure emphasizes the need for this Agency to report annually and to focus on regional disparities and the indicators that are present. I will give one example of what is going on in Atlantic Canada. One economic indicator which is a most valuable one to test regional development and the economic support in the economy is that of earned income per capita. Earned income per capita is income that does not come from social assistance or unemployment insurance but from earnings. Earned income per capita is a very good measure of the economic health of a region.

At the time of confederation in 1949, the ratio of earned income per capita in Newfoundland compared to that of all of Canada, the Canadian average, was 48.8 per cent. The average earned income per capita in Newfoundland was 48.8 per cent of the national average. Do you know what it is now, Mr. Speaker? I bet you do not. After 38 years of confederation, it is now 55.5 per cent of the Canadian average. That is the progress we have made in 38 years. We are now 6 per cent closer to the national average in earned income per capita.

At that rate, do you know how long it will take us to reach the national average, Mr. Speaker? It will take 288 years. That is how long we will have to wait, yet when the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain rises to speak out in favour of Atlantic Canada, she is accused of pretending to be interested.

After the next election, I hope we will have many, many more Members here like the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, Members who no matter what part of the country they are elected from, whether from the Prairies, northern Ontario, central Ontario, southern Ontario or British Columbia, will support regional development measures in Atlantic Canada, a commitment to not having to wait 288 years for the kind of progress that is needed but to demanding and insisting that there be equality now. We must work quickly to reduce the regional disparities in Canada and to ensure that there is equality of opportunity across the country.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if there is a quorum in the House at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It requires that 20 Members be in the House. I believe there is a quorum. Debate.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) proposed an amendment at committee. It was debated, discussed and accepted by members of the committee and is being reported here today. This motion certainly does very little to expand upon that one. It talks about a report exclusive of the annual report. It talks about evaluation. There has been no real significant change, and we feel quite comfortable with the amendment that was accepted by the committee at the request of the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East) moved:

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-103 be amended by striking out Clause 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"24. Every indeterminate employee in the Public Service of Canada who is declared affected as a result of the creation of the Agency shall be transferred to the Agency within ninety days after the day on which this section comes into force, and is deemed to have been appointed to the Agency in accordance with subsection

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment deals with the staffing of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and with the public servants, particularly in the Department of DRIE. During the course of the establishment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, many of them were given notice or were told that they were to be made redundant as a result of the creation of this agency.

While the legislative committee was in Charlottetown, the Professional Institute of Public Servants wrote a letter advising the Minister from the other place and made a presentation to the committee in Charlottetown advising us that long-term professional public servants who were quite capable of operating in various parts of the Public Service were being denied an opportunity to work at the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. This was a very different approach from that which was taken in the establishment of the Western Diversification Office.

The Minister responsible for that Agency assured all those working in DRIE or at the other Agencies or programs that were being transferred to the Western Diversification Program that they would have an opportunity to work in that Agency and that there would be no redundancies as a result of that move. There were sufficient person-years in the complement of the new Agency to accommodate all of those who would be affected by changes in the transferring of the program.

The Senator from the other place who was responsible for this legislation made no such commitment to the public servants of Atlantic Canada. A large number of them are being made redundant and there is no reason for that. There are plenty of person-years available and perhaps 100 person-years more than necessary in the new Agency to cover these people. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will probably have the exact figures at hand. It is quite clear that there is sufficient person-years in the new Agency to take care of all those who were working on programs that had been transferred to the Agency.

If these public servants were quite capable and professional and were working in other Departments properly implementing programs that have now been transferred, why are they no longer acceptable to the Public Service? Why is it that they are not being treated in the same manner as their western counterparts were? If these public servants were incapable of carrying out their duties, they should have been fired when they were working at their previous jobs. They should have been disciplined or there should have been some procedure to deal with them. They should not simply be made redundant so that the Government can hire 300 or 400 more people rather than ensuring that these public servants are transferred and given first choice at jobs available in the new Agency. This amendment would ensure that those public servants are treated fairly.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, Clause 24 exists as a transitional provision. The clause may not even be necessary because the current situation is that it is expected that before the Act comes into force, offers will be sent to approximately 100 of the 136 affected DRIE employees. Of the remainder, many are not interested in transferring over. They are interested in retirement or some other provisions that may be made for them. It is expected that very, very few of them will not be accommodated by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

We must remember that we are anxious to have the flexibility to use the employees that are felt to make the best contribution. I find it interesting because two or three of the other amendments put today by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) dealt with doing something in the legislation to guarantee equality or equity of effort. If these are such good public servants, why is he so concerned about measuring equity of effort? Why was the other Hon. Member concerned about equal emphasis on each of the provinces?

I assume that most of the people working in DRIE and who will subsequently work for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency are anxious to and are interested in doing a good job. They are good employees. They have been good employees. I do not find this necessary, particularly because of all the other negative comments today which suggest they may not have been good employees. They are good people and will probably have in most cases an opportunity to go over to ACOA.

We need the flexibility. It was said by Dr. Savoie in his report, and by people in Atlantic Canada who responded to him, that there was a need for people with experience in business, entrepreneurs who would work for the Agency as account managers. It was important that we have some room to add new people. Clause 24 is really a transitional provision which we may not even need. In fact, right now it looks like very few people who want to go to the Agency will not have that opportunity.

Obviously this amendment is not necessary in light of reality. Mind you, I understand the Hon. Member has a hard time recognizing reality when he sees it, but we see most people affected being given an opportunity to go with ACOA.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 12 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport) moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 26 by adding immediately after line 27 at page 10 the following:

"Cape Breton Island" means Cape Breton Island and that portion of the Province of Nova Scotia within the following described boundary:

beginning at a point on the southwesterly shore of Chedabucto Bay near Red Head, said point being S70 degrees E (Nova Scotia grid meridian) from Geodetic Station Sand, thence in a southwesterly direction to a point on the northwesterly boundary of highway 344, said point being southwesterly 240 feet from the intersection of King Brook with said highway boundary, thence northwesterly to Crown post 6678, thence continuing northwesterly to Crown post 6679, thence continuing northwesterly to Crown post 6680, thence continuing northwesterly to Crown post 6681, thence continuing Northwesterly to Crown post 6632, thence continuing northwesterly to Crown post 6602, thence continuing northerly to Crown post 8575, thence continuing northerly to Crown post 6599, thence continuing northerly to Crown post 6600, thence northwesterly to the southwest angle of the Town of Mulgrave, then along the westerly boundary of the Town of Mulgrave and a prolongation thereof northerly to the Antigonish-Guysborough county line, thence along said county line northeasterly to the southwesterly shore of the Strait of Canso, thence following the southwesterly shore of the Strait of Canso and the northwesterly shore of Chedabucto Bay southeasterly to the place of beginning;"

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, just by way of explanation, when the legislation was drafted it made reference only to Cape Breton. Some of the provisions of the legislation applied to an area just on the edge of the Strait of Canso in addition to Cape Breton Island. The Government looks upon the whole area around the Canso Causeway on both sides of the strait as an economic unit for purposes of the Cape Breton tax credit. The committee had an opportunity to visit that area and we saw that Port Hawkesbury on one side and Mulgrave on the other were co-operating with regard to industrial development around the causeway and on both sides of the Strait of Canso.

When it came to the attention of the Government that the definition in this Bill did not include the part across the Canso Strait it was agreed that we would add it. We had considerable debate in committee and a little posturing and, I am sure, game playing and it was unfortunately not unanimously agreed to. The Royal Recommendation is to add that part of the Cape Breton tax credit area to the legislation as it relates to ACOA and the enterprise Cape Breton Corporation.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to Motion No. 15 which was ruled out of order, as was Motion No. 14, the one we are now discussing. The motion would add the Town of Mulgrave to the definition of Cape Breton Island. That town is not on Cape Breton Island, as I am sure you are well aware. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) is well aware of that. Indeed, I am sure all the people on Cape Breton are well aware that Mulgrave is not on Cape Breton Island. It is on the other side of the strait. There are a number of other little towns along the Canso Strait going down to the Town of Canso which are also not on Cape Breton Island.

The Town of Mulgrave and the surrounding area is included because I suspect the Government recognized it had to do this, having not included it in the Bill in the first place. The Government alleged we had extensive consultations with every single person in Atlantic Canada, if you can believe it, before it put the legislation before the House. Yet all of a sudden it has to redefine Cape Breton Island in order to include the Town of Mulgrave. I think that town should be included in the programs offered to Cape Breton by this legislation. These are special programs recognizing the special needs of the island population and, in this case, the Town of Mulgrave. Of course, in my riding in Newfoundland as well as that of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) there are also towns and villages which are not included in these special provisions.

However, I want to be on the record as saying that when we as a legislative committee went to Cape Breton and held hearings in Port Hawkesbury, which is just on the Cape Breton side of the Canso Causeway, we had representations from the Town of Canso along with Guysborough and a number of other communities which are similarly industrially deprived, which have similar economic problems and difficulties in attracting industrial development to their region. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) was there and welcomed the Mayor of Canso to the committee. He suggested to the Mayor that he hoped that when he, at an appropriate time, urged the committee to move in the direction of including Canso, he would gain the necessary support from the committee when the committee reported to the House to have that effected.

We came back to Ottawa and had a committee meeting here. In that meeting it was proposed, not by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso but by the Minister of Transport, to include only the Town of Mulgrave, which coincidentally happens to be the home town of the Hon. Member of Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso. It did not include the Town of Canso or Guysborough or any other little town or community along the way which had made representations to the committee. Then in committee it was suggested that the denial of unanimous consent at that stage was an attempt to deny to the people of Mulgrave the opportunity to participate in these industrial development benefits. That certainly was not the case.

You will see Motion No. 15, which was also ruled out of order for the same reason as Motion No. 14, because it tried, under the definition section, to expand the boundaries of the program. That motion repeats the motion now before the House. It also includes:

> —and also within the geographical boundaries of those towns and villages along the Nova Scotia coastline from the Town of Mulgrave to and including the Town of Canso.

That says that not only should the Town of Mulgrave be included but also the Town of Guysborough and the other towns and villages between Canso and Mulgrave. Although I am sure it would be out of order, we should define Newfoundland as being in Cape Breton Island in order that it can take advantage of the special benefits there. The people of the Towns of Canso, Guysborough, and the other towns and villages would like to take advantage of them as well as the people of the Town of Mulgrave. I support this amendment but I am sorry that it does not include the rest of the towns along the Strait of Canso to and including the Town of Canso.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion presented to the House by my colleague from the constituency of Moncton in the great Province of New Brunswick which borders the Province of Nova Scotia, my home territory. More important, I want to appeal to all Members of the House, particularly Members from outside the Maritime provinces, to act to expedite the passage of this Bill.

I ask that of Members of the House of Commons because Bill C-103, which establishes the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, has been before this Chamber and committees of this Chamber for a sufficient time to allow all Members a full opportunity to consider the provisions of the Bill. It is now time to consider the interests of the people of Atlantic Canada. The purpose of this Bill, as explicitly stated under "Purpose" is:

> —to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada and, more particularly, to enhance the growth of earned incomes and employment opportunities in that region.

All Members of this House have been through the evolution of economic initiatives by the Government of Canada. We saw the Department of Regional Economic Expansion change to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. I am sure that my colleague from Newfoundland will agree that everyone in Atlantic Canada was concerned that those Departments did not specifically deal with the special needs of the Atlantic area. Therefore, Members from Atlantic Canada requested the special consideration which has given rise to Bill C-103 for the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

It grieves me that we are debating in the House of Commons changes to this Bill which will not be approved by the House of Commons and can only have the effect of delaying passage of the Bill, an adverse effect on all residents of Atlantic Canada. The time for review has passed and the time for action has come. It is impossible for me to believe that Members of the House of Commons from Atlantic Canada or any other part of Canada perceive that they are assisting the people of Atlantic Canada in their economic needs by delaying passage of this Bill. No Member can seriously suggest that he or she is acting in the interests of Atlantic Canadians by moving amendments to this Bill, which is a simple mandate for a new organization to assist in the economic development of Atlantic Canada and, in the case of the deprived island of Cape Breton and environs, the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

This Bill was only ever intended to establish a new vehicle for assisting Atlantic Canada in its economic expansion which has been delayed and deferred for many years by a national government which dealt with the Atlantic area through Departments of the Government which had other interests in other parts of Canada. We in Atlantic Canada have a chance to have our own agency with our own interests at its heart. Anyone who stands in this House and delays the process by which that Agency is finalized, made operative, and placed in a position to answer the needs of Atlantic Canada, does a disservice to everyone in Atlantic Canada.

I cannot understand why my colleagues from Atlantic Canada are standing in the House at this hour of this day and further delaying passage of this Bill. I appeal to their better natures to put aside their silly political consideration, to put aside their delaying tactics, which they know will result in no better end than to deprive Atlantic Canadians of the opportunity to work under this new Agency, and to seek the ends which we all desire, that is, economic development for Canada.

In conclusion, I appeal to reason, I ask Members of the House from Atlantic Canada and those from outside Atlantic Canada to pass Bill C-103 to enact the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. When Hamilton's turn comes, I will be the first to stand in the House and assist Hamilton.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, we only started this Bill this afternoon. There are over 50 amendments proposed to the Bill. It looks as though we will be finished in 10 or 15 minutes. There was no reason whatsoever, for the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to move to extend hours tonight. There was absolutely no reason whatsoever but he did it knowing that we had other arrangements made. To date there have been two Tories—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would like to ask all Members to be relevant to the specific motion before the House at report stage.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, everybody supports the clause before the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should get up more often. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now deal with Motion No. 33 which will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East) moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 43 by adding immediately after line 24 at page 17 the following:

"(2) The decision to separate the functions of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation from the Cape Breton Development Corporation shall be reviewed by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion and, within two years following the coming into force of this Act, the Committee shall report on whether the functions of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation ought to be reintegrated with those of the Cape Breton Development Corporation."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was not aware that this motion was going to be debated before the previous 15 or 20 motions proposed by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), starting with Motion No. 13 and continuing with Motions Nos. 16 to 32, which delete a series of clauses. If Motions No. 16 through to Motion No. 50 are passed, there will be no need to debate Clause 33 at all because it proposes to review something which, if the other amendments are passed, would not take place at all. Perhaps there is a logical explanation for this. I would like to hear it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point of order of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris), if I understand correctly, is that we should deal first with Motions Nos. 13 and 16 to 32 moved by the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). However, the motions moved by the Member for Gander—Twillingate are motions to delete. Therefore, depending on the vote on those motions, we may possibly never get to the motions moved by the Member for St. John's East. Therefore, the Chair proposes that we deal with the motion of the Member for St. John's East now.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, it sounds like inverted logic to me, but I will proceed nonetheless.

• (1840)

The purpose of the last half of the Bill is to separate two aspects of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the coal mining division and the industrial development division, such that the industrial development division of Cape Breton Corporation would now be under the aegis of Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, ACOA, while the coal division would carry on its activities without the integration of the over-all industrial development activities that had occurred in the last number of years.

We heard a great deal of thorough evidence on this Agency from Dr. Theresa MacNeil, Chairman of the Board of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, during our hearings in Port Hawkesbury.

The concern expressed by her and others privately to me was that to separate the two parts of Cape Breton Development Corporation from each other would amount to the destruction of a corporate culture that was working quite well for nearly 20 years. The integration of these activities were and still are a model for economic development as a result of using the assets turned over to the Cape Breton Development Corporation to create economic activity in Cape Breton, and using the ideas of the industrial development division to support economic activity in Cape Breton Island, and by using the expertise and the assets which remained as a result of the inevitable downsizing of some of the coal-mining activities. For example, when the fire at 26 Mine occurred, it was able to respond to the economic effects of the lay-offs that would become inevitable. The Cape Breton Development Corporation stepped in through its industrial development division and used some of the assets that were left to create other economic activities and respond to those occurrences.

The entire organization, from the Board to the advisers and the community of Cape Breton, developed a great degree of faith in that organization and its ability to respond to the needs over the years.

While they were not always totally satisfied with it, like any other agency or arm of Government, it has performed very well on the whole.

The amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) would completely stop that destruction of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. In fact, I proposed similar amendments in committee in order to delay this type of occurrence until it was certain that there would be no ill effects from such an action. I still believe that not enough consultation has taken place with the people of Cape Breton. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), as well as the Senator from the other place who is the Minister responsible, have said there was extensive consultation about this issue all over Atlantic Canada. That is not the case with the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Government had not even decided upon the definition of Cape Breton. It needed Royal Assent to redefine Cape Breton in order to include an area that is not even in Cape Breton.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) went to Port Hawkesbury and said he would urge the rest of the committee to include Canso, then returned to Ottawa and did nothing. This shows that it is quite obvious even he was not consulted when this legislation was put together. If he had been, presumably that representation would not have been made in Port Hawkesbury and he would have told the Mayor of Canso that the Government decided it would not include Canso.

While the rules of the House do not allow me to propose these amendments again, these amendments by the Member for Gander—Twillingate would allow the Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion to do an evaluation after two years to see whether it needs to reverse this decision which the Government is presumably about to take.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it is the opinion of the Government that this amendment is unnecessary. Every Minister has a responsibility to a standing committee to speak out with regard to the activities of their particular portfolio.

The reason to separate the IDD from Devco was to bring it under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency umbrella and eventually rationalize program delivery in Cape Breton.

The Minister responsible for ACOA will be expected at any time in the future to justify before a parliamentary committee the activities of the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. This will, of necessity, include the degree to which Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and DEVCO have co-ordinated their activities respecting the economic development of Cape Breton.

Obviously, the fact that the Minister can be called to a standing committee indicates that he will respond to that, depending upon the questions from the members. Certainly, this amendment is not necessary and certainly not supportable by the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 33 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

We will now proceed to the last grouping, which deals with Motions Nos. 13, 16 to 32 inclusive, and 34 to 50 inclusive, which will be grouped for debate.

The vote on Motion No. 13 will be applied to Motions Nos. 16 to 32, and also to Motions Nos. 34 to 50.

All the motions are moved by Mr. Baker. I remind the House that these are all motions to delete. Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Motion No. 50.

That Bill C-103 be amended by deleting Clause 59.

He said: I hope government Members do not want to hold up this Bill and this Chamber. There are important meetings taking place. There were commitments made prior to this motion of the Minister who represents St. John's West.

• (1850)

I have proposed some 40 amendments. They are all excellent amendments. They were suggested to me by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), and the hon. gentleman in the other place who still, I think, represents Cape Breton to the best of his abilities. They know what is going on in Cape Breton Island more than I, and perhaps more than most Members of this House, if not all Members of this House.

The reason for the amendments is simple. It is to stop the demise of the established Development Corporation and the Development Committee that have been established on Cape Breton Island to further the economic good of that island. That is what this Bill will do.

I am pleading with government Members not to hold up debate on this Bill and to allow us to get through it immediately and then, depending on how the Minister and the government Members behave themselves, we will determine how long we may wish to speak on third reading.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no time limit under the rules that will restrict me on third reading. There is no time limit whatsoever. On the subject of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency—the "Atlantic Canada overblown agency"—I am allowed to speak indefinitely at third reading. I hope that the government Members will not hold up this Bill this evening. I have another important speech to make in another location only a short distance away.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, in keeping with my colleague's request, I will be brief. The amendments moved by the Hon. Member suggest the deletion of all the aspects that relate to taking Devco's Industrial Development Division into Enterprise Cape Breton and are unacceptable to the Government of Canada. The impression was given that there was no consultation and that this was just something that came from somewhere in the annals of Government here in Ottawa. It was suggested by the Cape Breton Advisory Committee, chaired by Dr. Theresa MacNeil, who is now Chairman of Devco, in a report dated September of 1985 in which the Board identified certain matters as barriers to development caused by the confusion of a multiplicity of development agencies.

The Advisory Committee recommended two things. It recommended that a new development agency, Enterprise Cape Breton, independent in matters of policy, management and operations from the coal side of the corporation, Devco, be established. It also recommended that Enterprise Cape Breton should become a one-stop shop to the degree possible by encompassing the industrial development division of Devco and DRIE.

This committee recommended the very thing that is being put into effect in Bill C-103. The rationale behind the efforts contained in Bill C-103 is for better co-ordination of federal economic and industrial development activities in Cape Breton. It is designed to reduce duplication and overlaps. It is also designed to provide one-stop shopping in Cape Breton with regard to economic and industrial development.

As I mentioned before, it is consistent with the recommendations of the Cape Breton Advisory Committee. Adopting the amendments today would counteract all that is being worked on in order to provide that one-stop shopping atmosphere in Cape Breton.

With those comments we certainly recommend that these amendments be defeated.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I must rise to support these amendments. My late grandfather who was latterly from Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia, would have known that these amendments would have made a bad Bill better. That is why I must rise to support them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now vote on Motion No. 13 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). The vote on Motion No. 13 will apply to Motions Nos. 13 to 32, inclusive, and also Motions Nos. 34 to 50, inclusive.

The question is on Motion No. 13 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the report stage of the Bill now before the House.

Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), I have been requested by the Chief Government Whip to defer the division until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

It being 6.57 p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 6.57 p.m.

LABOUR

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join with the working men and women of Canada, and indeed with all Canadians, in observing April 28 as the labour movement's national day of mourning to honour workers who are injured or killed on the job, or who suffer work-related diseases, and to draw greater attention to the serious and ever present problem of workplace safety and health.

The number of Canadian workers injured, killed, or made ill in the workplace every year constitutes a national tragedy.

The figures speak for themselves. In Canada every year, at least one out of every nine workers suffers a work-related injury. In 1986, the latest year for which full statistics are available, 869 Canadian workers were killed on the job, and 17.5 million person-days were lost due to accidents and injuries.

In addition to untold human suffering, these fatalities and injuries represent a loss of some 16 billion dollars in terms of direct and indirect costs—truly, a terrible burden for Canada.

Mr. Speaker, on this day I call on Hon. Members, on workers and employers and on all Canadians to stand together, resolved that we can and that we shall reduce this terrible toll, and that the price of our progress and our economic growth shall not be the lives and well-being of workers.

As Minister of Labour, this national day of mourning has special significance for me, since 1988 marks the 20th anniversary of the first federal occupational safety and health legislation in Canada.

Much progress has been made in this area over the past 20 years and today we see a growing trend to greater worker and employer involvement in occupational safety and health.

This ongoing trend recognizes that while laws and governmental organizations play an important role, in the final analysis it is the workers and employers who have the greatest role to play in preventing, eliminating or controlling hazards in the workplace.

Mr. Speaker, amendments made to the Canada Labour Code over the years have recognized and strengthened the right of workers to refuse dangerous work, the right of workers to be informed of hazards, and the right of workers and employers to participate in joint safety and health committees. All of these rights depend upon information. Information is the raw material from which are built co-operation and consensus.

[English]

The Government supports co-operation and consensus-building, and is always seeking new ways of giving workers and employers greater access to the information they need to prevent occupational injuries and illnesses.

An excellent example of this is the Workplace Hazardous Materials Information System, known as WHMIS. This system, which will come into force nationally by October 31, 1988, is a joint effort of the federal, provincial, and territorial Governments and is the result of several years of consultation between Governments, industry, and organized labour.

The purpose of WHMIS is to establish a uniform identification system for dangerous ingredients in the workplace. It will ensure that the hazardous materials produced, imported, or used within workplaces in Canada are adequately identified by suppliers using standard criteria. It will also ensure that data sheets on hazardous materials are transmitted by suppliers to employers and, subsequently, to employees.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that the Government has recently allocated an additional $1.8 million for the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety in Hamilton. The Centre is a successful example of tripartite co-operation. It is responsible for providing Canadians with information about occupational health and safety which is trustworthy, comprehensive, and intelligible. Its electronic information management system will support WHMIS.

It has demonstrated that the information it supplies results in improvements in the workplace. Workers, managers, and professionals trust the information and use it. That trust is increased by the centre's workshops which bring them together to establish common ground.

We are taking other steps on the legislative front to improve occupational safety and health. On Tuesday last, Bill C-124, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, received second reading in the House. One of the purposes of this Bill is to provide better protection for certain Nova Scotia miners regulated by the Code. Because of the special risks involved in working in the Cape Breton coal mines, this Bill proposes, among other measures, to establish a tripartite coal mining safety commission.

• (1110)

Last year Hon. Members granted expeditious approval to a Bill which allows workers in the Flin Flon mineral area of northern Manitoba to be governed by a single, uniform, and modern set of regulations suited to the mining industry.

As another example of co-operation and consensus-building I would also mention the recent creation of the tripartite committee to look at one of the most dangerous occupations in Canada—the fishing industry. This committee, appointed by the federal and provincial Governments, is expected to make its recommendations this May.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, the figures on occupational fatalities and injuries show that we indeed have cause to mourn. But there is also cause for optimism. For instance, in recent years—1985 and 1986—the rate of workers who suffer a work-related injury has been reduced from one in every eight workers to one in every nine workers.

Largely due to better informed employees and employers, this improvement is small, but encouraging. With the help of all concerned Canadians, Mr. Speaker, much has already been done and much more can and will be done to reduce the tragic toll of workplace accidents and illnesses.

[English]

After the statements of my colleagues, and with the permission of the House, I suggest that we observe one minute of silence out of respect for today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to join Canadian workers who today, on April 28, the labour movement's National Day of Mourning, honour the memory of those who were injured and also, unfortunately, those who were killed in the workplace.

Mr. Speaker, despite the legislation that, over the years, has been passed by this Parliament and by most provinces in Canada, the number of accidents and injuries in the workplace is still too high. I may remind the House that it was in 1968, under the Liberal Government, that the first federal legislation on occupational health and safety was passed.

Today, one worker out of nine is injured by accidents—fewer than in the past—but I say this is still too much. What the statistics do not mention is the story behind the figures we read in the reports released by Statistics Canada.

[English]

The real story that statistics do not tell is that despite the fact that only one out of nine workers suffers injury today, a reduction from past figures, the one who suffers this injury must live not with the one out of nine statistics but with 100 per cent in his case. It is very hard on these people and their families.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to highlight the important role played by two well-known Quebecers in improving working conditions and occupational health and safety in the workplace.

First, I would like to mention the Hon. Jean Marchand, who represented the riding of Langelier in the House for many years and was appointed Minister. I think that if it had not been for his influence, the first occupational health and safety legislation passed by Parliament under a Liberal Government in 1968 might not have seen the light of day and been passed at all stages in the House.

Jean Marchand, who was very active in the Confederation of National Trade Unions, both as secretary and president, could not leave Parliament without leaving his mark in this way.

I would also like to mention the work done for many years by another very colourful member of the CNTU, Mr. Michel Chartrand, who was among the first in Quebec to warn about the hazards of the workplace which, at the time, were even more serious than they are today.

Those who have known the verve and eloquence of Michel Chartrand know what I mean, when I say that he defended very vigourously—and that is an understatement—and passionately the cause for better working conditions.

Mr. Speaker, the Party I represent, the Liberal Party of Canada, has always led the way in seeking improved health and safety conditions in the workplace. As I said earlier, it introduced the first piece of legislation in the House in this respect, and also worked with other governments over the years to improve working conditions. More recently, for instance, we helped to expedite legislation to provide for a Workplace Hazardous Materials Information System, the WHMIS. Just two days ago, we were rushing to adopt Bill C-124, whose purpose is to improve safety in coal mines and to create the Coal Mining Safety Commission, which will be responsible for approving equipment and methods used in coal mines.

Mr. Speaker, over the years, conditions in the workplace have changed for the better. There was a time when the workplace, especially construction sites and other industrial environments, was a place where danger lurked on all sides. Today, things have improved a great deal.

Nevertheless, we cannot afford to relax our efforts and so much remains to be done. In fact, the Minister said so earlier in his speech. One Canadian worker injured out of nine is better, but it is still unacceptable. This figure must be brought down, especially since it does not reflect the situation in industries where accidents are far more numerous, and to name just one, I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that among longshoremen in Canadian ports, which are under federal jurisdiction, the accident rate is much higher than the national average.

Finally, I invite Hon. Members from all Parties to join their efforts to improve conditions for Canadian workers.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party and myself to join with the Minister and with the spokesman for the Liberal Party in observing April 28 as the labour movement's national day of mourning to honour workers who are injured or killed on the job. May I say that, at some point, we in this Party hope that this will be more than just the labour movement's national day of mourning and that it will be a Canadian day of mourning for workers injured or killed on the job.

Our labour critic, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) who is not able to be here today, introduced a Private Member's Bill to that effect on March 15, just one month ago. He introduced Bill C-286, an Act respecting a day of mourning for persons killed or injured in the workplace, which, if passed, would see April 28 designated as a day of mourning in remembrance of persons killed or injured in the workplace. We hope that this Bill may become the instrument by which April 28 will be set aside by all Canadians as a day of remembrance for those killed or injured in the workplace.

I might also say, because I do not think it has been raised to this point, that the origin of choosing April 28 as the labour movement's national day of mourning was done because April 28, 1914 when the first worker safety legislation was introduced in Ontario.

After the rather self-congratulatory comments of the Liberal spokesperson I cannot resist saying that it was some 53 years later, during which time we were governed mostly by Liberal Governments, before we saw the first occupational health and safety legislation at the federal level. It seems to be a sign of the struggle that working people have had over the years to get protective legislation, and it was not until 1968 that we had this kind of legislation at the federal level. Side by side with working people all those years has been the New Democratic Party; before that, the CCF; before that, the Independent Labour Party; and before that, all the predecessors of the movement we represent today. We are very proud to be able to speak today and to lend our voice to this observation.

I come from a community whose oral history is scattered with names of people who have been killed on the job. I come from a railway community. I grew up in a community where so-and-so's grandfather or father was killed on the road or in the shop in such-and-such a year. We often think, when we think of injured workers or workers killed on the job, of the high rates of injury and death for miners, fishermen, and others. I do not in any way mean to diminish that by highlighting what is my own experience, but certainly that is the case with respect to railways and it continues to be.

Just in Winnipeg alone in the last few years a number of people have been killed. Engineer Don McMillan was killed when his unit left the track and went into the overpass at Symington. Last year a road crane fell over and knocked down a pole, which in turn fell on a young railroader killing him instantly. Just a couple of months ago a young woman, a switch person who was studying to be a surgeon, got her arm caught in a knuckle and lost her arm from the elbow down. Obviously she will no longer be able to be a surgeon, but hopefully she will still be able to pursue a successful medical career. These kinds of things are happening all the time, and I think it is only appropriate that we have a day on which we can call attention to them.

The Minister says that the number of Canadian workers injured or killed constitutes a national tragedy. Of course, no one would disagree with him. It is a national tragedy that much more could be done to prevent. We signal to the Minister that we intend to keep putting pressure on this Government, as we have on previous Governments, to keep making improvements.

We are glad to see some of the things that have been done recently—for instance, the institution of the Workplace Hazardous Information System, WMHIS as it is sometimes known for obvious reasons. We are glad to see that, but much more progress must be made. When we debated the Canada Health Act in the House in 1984, I recall that one amendment I moved which was accepted into the preamble of the Act was that health was related to occupational health and safety. That principle is now built into the most fundamental health legislation of our country, and that Government has a mandated right out of the Act itself to pursue that kind of an approach at every opportunity it gets.

The Minister says, "let us all stand together". No one can argue with that, but is standing together the kind of thing that we see in the Railway Safety Act where companies, for violations of safety, are fined $50,000, a drop in the bucket to them, whereas workers are hit with a $10,000 fine? A $10,000 fine is obviously much more significant to workers than a $50,000 fine for the CNR or the CPR, which is hardly more than a licence to break the rules.

As a result of the increasingly competitive economic atmosphere, which the Government is always so proud of trying to worsen through deregulation, free trade, et cetera, a lot of pressure is being put on workers to be what companies call "more efficient". Often what that efficiency means is taking safety short-cuts. They are often under pressure to take those short-cuts, but if something happens or is found out, then it is the employee who must take the consequences. This is a bind in which rail workers and others are constantly being put. It is a bind which the Minister and others did not try to address in the Railway Safety Act and which they have not addressed adequately. Until they address it, we will not be able to be part of this great "back-patting" exercise that happens on these kinds of days. We will have to say with all sincerity that much more remains to be done and that we do not intend to be silent until it is done.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux). I think, given the eloquent statements by both members for the Opposition, that it would be appropriate to ask all Hon. Members to stand with me for one minute's silence.

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

That the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on Wednesday, March 2, 1988, be concurred in.

• (1130)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that this motion is before the House today. It is a matter of long-standing business that needs to be dealt with by Parliament, by the Minister and, I suppose, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

A brief history of what has happened to the Lubicon people is in order. Mr. Justice E. Davie Fulton, the former Minister of Justice of Canada, appeared before the Committee and the Committee took a majority vote to have Mr. Fulton attached as a mediator to the Lubicon matter, something which Mr. Fulton himself felt would be most appropriate. I think Hon. Members would agree that someone who is so widely respected by Canadians, having had a long and brilliant career in politics and as a Justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, would be a most appropriate person for this. I suppose it is fair to say that the former Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), took that view in that he appointed Mr. Fulton to prepare a report in relation to the Lubicon matter.

After having heard Mr. Fulton and after having heard representatives of the Lubicon including Chief Bernard Ominayak and his council and others, it was the Committee's firm view that Mr. Fulton could most appropriately act as a mediator in the matter between the Government of Canada, the Lubicon band, and obviously the Government of Alberta. We felt that the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs ought to be used as a conduit to try to achieve a satisfactory resolution to a long outstanding matter.

I think many Members of the House are unaware of the history and evolution of the sacred international treaties between the First Nations of Canada and various agencies of the Crown. In the case of some of the initial treaties in my Province of British Columbia, the Governor at the time, Governor Douglas, obtained and created treaties with 14 of the nations on Vancouver Island, and those are international treaties as has been recognized by the courts of British Columbia. Certainly the treaties from the Prairies, Treaty 6, Treaty 8 and others, particularly from Alberta, are also recognized internationally as sacred treaties which are legally binding on the Crown.

Just to give Hon. Members a brief synopsis of the history, back in 1899, because the band was not located on a main waterway, it was missed by the Treaty 8 party and scrip commissioners. They were travelling in that area of Alberta and northwestern British Columbia, preparing lists of aboriginal populations for the preparation of Treaty 8. For reasons of speed, I suppose, the Lubicon people were not included in the evaluations that were done in 1899 just prior to the signing of Treaty 8.

In 1939, the band was visited by officials of Indian Affairs who recognized them as as separate band and promised them a reserve. The band membership list was drawn up and was left open so that the names of members who were in the bush, at work, or elsewhere could be added at a later date.

In 1939 and 1940 land on the western end of Lubicon Lake was chosen as a reserve and was approved by both levels of Government—Alberta and Canada. In 1942 a member of the Department of Indian Affairs named McCrimmon decided to close the band membership list and to remove names of persons not registered by 1912, thereby taking retroactive action in removing names from the list after a third of a century. The incomplete Lubicon band list was then cut from 154 to 64 persons.

In 1943 and 1944 the report of Judge McKeen and a judicial inquiry under Judge McDonald came out in favour of the band regarding membership lists, but this was again shelved by the Department. In 1952, due to numerous oil company inquiries about the area, Alberta brought the question of the reserve to federal attention once more.

In 1952 and 1953 the local Indian agent determined that the Lubicon site was "too isolated and inconvenient", and met with the band to try to get them to agree to another site. Later in 1953 the Province gave the federal Government a 30-day ultimatum about the reserve, assuming that the reserve would be struck from the record if no reply was received. The federal Government did not reply.

Between 1952 and 1973, attempts were made to eliminate the band through transfer—illegitimate transfer, as I might point out—of band members to other bands and through enfranchisement.

In 1954 a mission school was built at Little Buffalo Lake and families gradually moved there to allow their children to attend school.

In 1970 an all-weather road was constructed by the provincial Government from Peace River to the Lubicon lands.

In 1973 the band's existence as as separate band was confirmed by Order in Council, and in 1975 the band tried to file a caveat to serve notice of their unextinguished aboriginal claim. The Province refused to accept the caveat and the hearing was postponed until a similar case in the Northwest Territories was concluded.

Of course, when that case was concluded in 1976, it came out against the native people but stated that had the law there been the same as in Alberta the result would have been the opposite, sending a very clear signal to both levels of Government to move and to move expeditiously to settle the outstanding claim, rights, and title of the Lubicon people.

A serious hitch came along in 1977. The provincial Government changed the law retroactively by passing Bill 29, and the Lubicon's case was then dismissed.

In 1980 many oil companies began operations in the area. These operations included the bulldozing of roads, the drilling of wells, and the building of pipelines. The band's self-sufficient traditional lifestyle was suddenly no longer possible. Moose had been the main source of meat, and the number of moose killed declined drastically from 120 in 1982 to 27 in 1983 and down to three in 1984.

We can see that the game were moving rapidly out of the area. As Mr. Justice E. Davie Fulton concluded in his report, the impact of the 400 gas and oil wells, the construction of the pipelines, and fires at the drill sites had razed over 600 square miles of territory traditionally used for hunting and trapping by the Lubicon people. That territory had been laid to waste.

I think Hon. Members should recall what Mr. Justice Peter Seaton had to say on the Meares Island case, a case that I think Members of the House should take the time to read. Mr. Justice Peter Seaton said that there are few if any imaginable aboriginal rights left after an area has been clear cut. I think the same understanding of the situation was related by Mr. Justice E. Davie Fulton in relation to this area that was burned and developed, an area historically used for not just thousands of years but for 10,000 or more years by the Lubicon-Cree.

In 1981 the community was declared a provincial hamlet and people were told to apply for leases to their land or to accept it as a gift. The Province then stated that the community could not be part of the land claim since it was now a provincial hamlet.

In 1982 the band applied for an injunction preventing further development, and the injunction was denied. The judge decided that the Indian way of life does not exist and that something that does not exist cannot be damaged.

In 1984 a fact-finding mission of the World Council of Churches substantiated the Lubicon's allegations of injustice. In that same year band members were told by the Province to remove unauthorized fences, corrals, and houses. They were told to apply for provincial leases or to purchase the land in order to keep their property there. The band responded by saying that they had never ceded their traditional lands and recognized no authority of the provincial Government over those lands. To apply for leases from the Province would recognize its authority and weaken their land claim.

In 1985 Mr. Justice E. Davie Fulton was appointed by the federal Government to study the situation, and his report is now well known, at least to those who have interest in this matter. In 1986 negotiations began but quickly broke down when it became apparent that promises to negotiate on the basis of the Fulton report were not being honoured and, in the same year, a boycott of the 1988 Calgary Winter Olympics was announced by the band to draw attention to their desperate situation and to denounce the actions of a provincial Government that would be receiving much attention and prestige from the event.

By 1987 the band was once again asked by the federal Government to negotiate on the basis of the Fulton report, as well as for the public release of the report and to have Fulton on as a mediator.

This issue has been given not just broad provincial coverage in Alberta by the media there and by newspapers, television, and radio nationally but also internationally. The plight of the Lubicon people and the mistreatment and maltreatment of them by both the Alberta Government and the federal Government have received notorious attention around the world. There are reasons for that.

• (1140)

The Minister responsible for Alberta Native Affairs, Milton Pahl, went so far as to tell the Alberta Legislature in 1984 that the Lubicon-Cree do not exist. He said: "They may have as few as nine members". Resistance by the Alberta and federal Governments to the band has been strong enough to attract attention from the international human rights community. The director of the program to combat racism of the World Council of Churches in Geneva studied the case in 1983 and concluded that in the last couple of years the Alberta provincial Government and dozens of multinational oil companies have taken actions that could have genocidal consequences.

The United Nations Human Rights Committee studied the case for three years and concluded last summer that the rights of the Lubicon-Cree were being seriously abused. A full hearing of the case is to be held later this year in Geneva.

While E. Davie Fulton was studying the matter for the Government of Canada and the Lubicon people, he had a number of things to say. He was interviewed by John Goddard in an excellent article published in Saturday Night magazine in February of this year. In relation to the exploratory and development work done on the lands of the Lubicon, the article indicates:

> Fulton expressed surprise at the extent of the work. Nearly 400 oil wells had been drilled within a ten-mile radius of Little Buffalo. Fulton also expressed surprise at the fire damage: 641 square miles of bush destroyed in the first three years of the oil boom... "I have seen the terrible effects of development"...
> "I want to try to do something about it."... I now realize that there are an appreciable number of Indians in Canada proper whose situations have never been settled"... "This particular band, God help them, was promised a settlement in 1940, and they're still waiting for it forty-seven years later. Their situation cries out for just and equitable treatment".

That is what the former Minister of Justice under John Diefenbaker and a former Justice of the Supreme Court had to say. The article continues:

> The Member for Peace River, Jack Sissons (later the famous flying judge of the far north), declared himself "incensed," and summarized numerous complaints for the Minister: "that striking these persons off the lists was arbitrary, discreditable and indefensible; that these were Hitler tactics; that the Government has broken faith with the Indians; that the action indicates that there is in the Department lack of proper knowledge of the Indians and the territory; that the Indians are being treated like dogs; that this is oppression of the weak by the strong; that these people have no one to fight for them; that the Department is indifferent and unsympathetic to the welfare of the Indians; and generally that the action is contrary to both the spirit and the letter of the Indian Act."

That is pretty strong language, but I think it hits the nail on the head. Mr. Fulton, who the Committee has proposed to act as a mediator, has accepted in principle the need for someone of his experience and understanding of the matter. He is now 71 years of age. He was the federal Justice Minister and Attorney General of Canada from 1957 to 1962 and a B.C. Supreme Court Judge from 1973 to 1981. As Don Braid pointed out in an article written earlier this year:

> There's only one move that will work. Bill McKnight should call and ask him to mediate the claim.
> The number's in the book, under LAWYERS. Fulton answers his phone very quickly these days.

A matter which occurred earlier this year also deserves the attention of all Members of this House. The Committee is disturbed and concerned about it. I know that my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), will have much to say about the problems which have been created by the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) by his lack of attention to how this situation has caused such great concern in Canada and internationally.

As was pointed out by the national Chief of the Assembly of First Nations in an article in the Calgary Herald under the headline "McKnight in conflict of interest: native leader":

> Indian Affairs Minister Bill McKnight has bungled the Lubicon land claim and his entire portfolio and must be replaced, says the national chief of the Assembly of First Nations.
> Erasmus said McKnight is in conflict of interest, responsible for Indians as well as Minister in charge of the western diversification fund, which has given $9.5 million to a Japanese pulp company given timber rights on the Lubicon's traditional territory.
> Erasmus blasted the federal Government's offer last week of $500,000 compensation to the Lubicons for lost treaty benefits.
> "He offers half a million dollars for lost treaty benefits to the Crees of Lubicon, who never signed a treaty, then he hands a foreign company 19 times that much, $9.5 million, plus the timber resources of the Lubicons ... it's an outrage."

We know that the Government of Alberta has agreed, without ever tendering so that Canadian companies could bid on the lands or others could be involved in a democratically appropriate process, to transfer 11,000 square miles to Daishowa pulp company earlier this year. The conflict of interest was very clear and I confirmed it with departmental officials. A cabinet order required the Minister of Indian Affairs, in his responsibilities for both that and the Western Diversification office, to conduct an initial environmental impact evaluation of the proposal to build a pulp mill on the Peace River, both in terms of its impact on the Lubicon people and also in terms of its impact on federal matters, aboriginal matters, and aboriginal lands, particularly those that lie in the Lubicon traditional territory and in Wood Buffalo National Park. That was never done.

Therefore, the Minister is clearly in a conflict of interest for providing money to the Daishowa pulp project without having complied with a cabinet order. He also has not stood up for the sacred trust responsibility he has to the Lubicon people by allowing the very lands which were under negotiation to be transferred untendered, lock, stock, and barrel, to a foreign-owned corporation.

In February the all-Party House of Commons Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, of which I am a member, urged the appointment of Conservative Justice Minister Davie Fulton to reach a settlement in the band dispute. An article in The Globe and Mail of February 10, 1988, by Graham Fraser reads:

> The former British Columbia Supreme Court justice said yesterday that he is prepared at any time to take part in the negotiations.
> "I'm anxious to do anything I can to bring about a just and equitable solution," he told The Aboriginal and Northern Affairs Committee.
> Mr. Fulton said he feels that within three to six months, it should be possible to see if there is a basis for agreement.

Today we could well have been on the verge of a satisfactory settlement for the Lubicon people, if the Minister had seen fit to put a very knowledgeable and respected Canadian at the helm of a process which he and the Governments of Canada and Alberta have bungled so badly for so many years.

The article goes on to say:

> However, he also told the committee that Indian and Northern Affairs Minister William McKnight is opposed to his involvement in the issue.
> "He has stated that he feels that I have stated an opinion that is unacceptable to the Government of Canada, and that on that basis, I would be a prejudiced party," Mr. Fulton said. "His opinion is based on a misreading of my report."

In relation to the impact of recent years of development he said:

> As a result ... it became impossible for the Lubicon to continue hunting and trapping on the land.
> In 1940, the federal Government agreed to grant the band about 50 hectares per individual, based on a population of 127, which would have amounted to about 65 square kilometers.
> The Alberta Government has agreed to this amount, but no more, and has said it will challenge any figure above that.

The proposed pulp mill is an irritant which must be overcome. The Government of Canada must take its responsibility much more seriously. There are no signs of that from the present Minister and I think it is now up to the Prime Minister to take the bull by the horns and either replace the Minister or accept the recommendation which was put forward in good faith by all members of the Standing Committee.

This is not only an NDP idea or a Liberal idea or a Conservative idea. Members from all three Parties made a very serious recommendation, after having heard evidence which the Minister never heard, after after having heard E. Davie Fulton, after having studied the issue and heard the views of Albertans, and having heard recommendations of sources from around the country including the First Nations of Canada and others.

We should listen, from time to time, to pressure from people such as Archbishop Ted Scott, the President of the Canadian Council of Churches, who telexed the Prime Minister following the decision made by the Standing Committee on this matter. On behalf of the Canadian Council of Churches, Archbishop Scott urged the Prime Minister "to immediately implement the resolution passed today by the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development calling on the Government of Canada to initiate bilateral negotiations with the Lubicon Lake Indian band over the next six months and to appoint the Hon. E. Davie Fulton as mediator in a determined effort to seek a just settlement on this long, outstanding land claims dispute". That is from the February 9 telex message from Ted Scott to the Prime Minister.

There are groups in Canada and groups around the world that take this issue very seriously. The Standing Committee has an opportunity, two months after we made this recommendation, to reflect on the fact that there has been very little progress in these many months since we tried to stimulate at least the process that had some hope of success. Rather than that, we have seen the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada continue, both here in Canada and at the international level, to try to block the legitimate aspirations of the Lubicon people for a fair settlement.

As First Nations and as original inhabitants and occupants of Canada, I think it is high time this Parliament listened carefully and involved someone such as E. Davie Fulton as a mediator to find a just settlement.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about the reduction of the population of the Lubicon band in 1944 from 164 to 127 persons. What was the basis for this reduction? What was the effect of that as far as the band and its claims were concerned?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, that question is key to the kind of jiggery-pokery that has gone on for a long time, both at the bureaucratic and political level.

In 1942 a man named McCrimmon, a paid bureaucratic with the Department of Indian Affairs, decided to close the band membership list and remove the names of persons not registered by 1912. A bureaucrat unilaterally decided that 30 years of history would be suddenly undone and that all of those individuals who had been added during that 30-year period would simply be wiped off the list. That cut the Lubicon Lake band list from 154 to 64 persons.

We can see that that kind of thought process has continued throughout this century. I quoted Milton Pahl speaking in the Alberta Legislature, who claimed just three years ago that there were only nine Lubicons and that the Lubicon band did not exist.

The fact is that the Lubicons, who had an extensive genealogical survey done, have continued to point out that at least as of November last year there were 457 Lubicon people. That is the basis of the dispute being put forward by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the House. He claims that that may not be the right number. The Government of Alberta would like to claim that there are no Lubicons, but national and international opinion has turned against that kind of blindness to reality.

Over 500 bands in this country face a continuing problem in having Canadians, particularly elected Governments, understand the basis of their claim that they were original occupants of North America when the French and English arrived. Even at the time when Columbus was lost at sea this hemisphere was very heavily occupied.

Historians now believe that at the time of contact there were as many as 400,000 aboriginal occupants on the coast of the Pacific northwest. Let us recognize the treaties as being the sacred international documents they are. This is something against which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has been fighting in Geneva.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) and others have been fighting against this at the ILO. We have to understand that these are sovereign people who were the original occupants of this continent.

The Supreme Court of Canada, the highest court in this land, recognized unanimously in 1972 that aboriginal title exists and is outstanding in Canada. How Parliaments and Legislatures go about settling that is something the court has backed away from for many years. In fact, there was a three-three tie on the famed Calder case. Rather than making a decision, it wanted legislatures to negotiate and arrive at fair settlements. That is something that neither Premier Getty nor the Prime Minister are prepared to do at this point for the Lubicons and other outstanding specific and comprehensive claims.

The numbers game that was illegitimately played in 1942 by Mr. McCrimmon has been attempted again by Milton Pahl in the Alberta Legislature and by the Prime Minister. I think it is high time that we recognize the rights of the Lubicon people to determine their membership and get on with the important job of finding a mediator, such as Mr. Fulton, who can bring about a fair and just settlement.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I am a Member of Parliament from Calgary, Alberta. I have been in this Chamber and lived through public policies that have hurt western Canada, put people out of work, created unemployment, created wife beating and child abuse.

I have been particularly proud to stand up in this Chamber and participate in introducing legislation to redress those wrongs.

It is almost twelve o'clock and we are on Routine Proceedings. We are having a debate on concurrence in a committee report—

Mr. Riis: It is called native people.

Mr. Hawkes: —deliberately designed by the New Democratic Party, with the participation of that Member in a filibuster, to stop this House from passing the western diversification Bill. Western Canada needs this diversification Bill. It has been filibustered at various stages in this Chamber.

Yesterday they were trying to filibuster regional help for Atlantic Canada, but we had extended hours so that we could have a full and complete debate and still move toward passage of the legislation.

There is important public business to be done. Ordinary Canadians need and want legislation designed to help them. I say to Members opposite that they should not allow the results of the Manitoba election to scare them unduly about a federal election. We should be getting co-operation from the other side so that we can complete the agenda and go to the people. It is time for them to stop talking out of both sides of their mouths. They say out of one side that they want an election, but when one looks at their behaviour one sees that they are stopping good, positive legislation. They are filibustering because they do not really want an election. If so, they would stop this filibustering.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, we certainly just heard from both sides of the mouth. It was a Conservative Member from Calgary who joined with my friend, the Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), and I to bring this matter before the House of Commons.

The aboriginal people of Alberta should recognize what that Member is talking about. This is the first opportunity the House has had to hear a very important recommendation from an all-Party Committee on a vote that was supported by another Conservative Member from Calgary. I wonder where that Member is today, to speak in support of getting some kind of action to get the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to move to involve E. Davie Fulton.

Mr. Lewis: Did you give him notice?

Mr. Fulton: What do the Conservatives have against E. Davie Fulton? He was the Minister of Justice with John Diefenbaker. He was on the Supreme Court of British Columbia. He is a notoriously brilliant lawyer and politician, respected on all sides of the House.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) says that there is a filibuster taking place. The fact is that the Conservative Government is not doing anything for aboriginal people. It is not doing anything for the first citizens of the country. It is high bloody time Members like the Member from Calgary stop talking out of both sides of their mouths. Perhaps he should talk to his colleague from Calgary and find out what the people of Alberta really think about that kind of nonsense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate, the Hon. Minister of State.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to make the point that the Government is curtailing debate on a matter of importance to the native people across this country. It is muzzling debate. This is the one chance we have had to raise native issues in the last number of months, and the Government is curtailing that debate.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is not a debatable motion. I do not want a debate on the motion.

Mr. Lewis moved, seconded by Mr. Hawkes, that the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that further to the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended by 22 minutes as of 1 p.m. today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Prime Minister) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mazankowski (for the Prime Minister) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have seen another performance by the western New Democratic Party members. They have contradicted themselves again. They say that they want western diversification and that they want an improvement in the western economy.

Today we have before us a Bill that will do just what the New Democrats say they would like to see happen. However, what do we get? We get a filibuster from them by introducing a report from a committee—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am seeking some clarification in light of the Hon. Member's remarks. We are now beginning third reading debate on western diversification. The Hon. Member is the first speaker, and we are looking forward to a lengthy debate to make sure that all aspects of western economic development are covered. I am curious about the Hon. Member saying that for some reason this matter is not proceeding expeditiously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

• (1240)

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, we want to debate and pass legislation that would diversify the western economy and create the kind of jobs that all of us in western Canada would like to see created. However, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who says that he would like to see the economy diversify and would like to see jobs created in western Canada and in his own riding, introduced a motion to debate a committee report for which an agreement is already in process, just so that he can slow down debate. I find that reprehensible.

It is my pleasure to speak on third reading of Bill C-113—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like some clarification from the Hon. Member. The debate that started this morning in relation to the Lubicon resulted from a report and a vote taken by the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, and it was properly put before the House—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. We have just taken a vote on whatever happened this morning. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Friesen: There you see it again, Mr. Speaker. When we are trying to debate this Bill, we get interruptions. I wish the members of the NDP would become serious about this and would let us pass this legislation.

As I was saying, this is an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada. This Government came to power committed to a new approach to regional development. Bill C-113, similar legislation for the Atlantic region and regional initiatives in Ontario and Québec demonstrate that this Government is making the effort to change long established institutional practices in a way that more accurately reflects the regional realities of Canada.

I was pleased to see that the legislative committee and Members of the House have been able to deal with this Bill so quickly. We hope that we have speedy approval here today.

I find that there is widespread support for the western diversification initiative, but there is a certain impatience because we do not already have in place this important legislative tool to do the job that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) set out for us last August when he announced the initiative.

In designing the western diversification initiative and the present legislation, westerners in the business community, labour, and Government expressed their concerns and gave their ideas on what they would like to see the federal Government do to encourage development in the West. This initiative has benefitted from their contributions.

In Government, I would particularly like to draw attention to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and to my other western colleagues for the work they have done in bringing forward this initiative.

Now that Hon. Members have had time to review the legislation, they will see that the work was well worth the effort. A piece of enabling legislation has been put forward that provides a solid foundation for building an effective Department specifically designed to meet the needs and conditions of the West.

Natural resources are the West's major economic strength and its major economic weakness. Our reliance on producing a few commodities leaves us exposed to downturns in the economy that result in depressed sales and prices. If there is one thing on which westerners are agreed, it is on the need to even out the economic roller-coaster through diversification of the economy.

Diversification is not something that can be commanded or directed from Ottawa. It must come from the people in the West with ideas, talent, and commitment. Only they can seize the opportunities available.

We know from discussions with westerners and from the nearly 3,000 proposals, the 4,000 office visits, and the 50,000 telephone inquiries received by western diversification that the ideas are there as are the people who can put them into action.

This Government has done much to create the right climate for economic growth and investment and to reinvigorate the West. In coming to the aid of western farmers, removing unjust energy policies and taxes, and helping the transportation sector, we have released new vitality and economic renewal. The western diversification initiative is now encouraging, directly and indirectly, the people and the enterprises with the good ideas to diversify the economy and thus make it less vulnerable.

The purpose of Bill C-113 is to promote development and diversification in the West and to advance the interests of the West in federal decision-making. In other words, westerners will now have a Department to which they can turn for assistance and which speaks for their interests in government.

In the West we know that the distance from Ottawa to Saskatoon is much greater than the distance from Saskatoon to Ottawa. The new Department and the Deputy Minister are to be based in Edmonton. Regional offices with Assistant Deputy Ministers in charge are to be located in Vancouver, Saskatoon, and Winnipeg. Westerners will have easy access to the Department and senior officials will be more in tune with the concerns and problems of the West. The office will promote a regionally based, not Ottawa imposed, approach to economic development.

Pathfinding is an important function of these offices. Small businesses often cannot afford the time or expense to look for government assistance. To date, more than 70 firms have been assisted in finding appropriate government support outside that offered by western diversification.

The Ottawa liaison office will perform the advocacy role. The Bill gives the Minister authority to guide and lead in the creation of government policies and programs for the West. As well, the Minister and the Department have the power to formulate plans and integrated strategies and, where appropriate, to oversee them.

We heard in the Commons debate during second reading that the Ottawa office lacked the capability to perform its important advocacy role. The Opposition seemed to be suggesting that the Department should be Ottawa based. I want to assure Hon. Members that we do not share that view. The Ottawa office will, however, be staffed in numbers and in rank sufficient to do the job. Already the office is having an impact, and its influence will grow in shaping national policies and national expenditures from a western point of view.

The use of these advocacy powers at the centre of government will ensure that government actions are sensitive to western concerns and issues. Furthermore, the Department will work to overcome piecemeal approaches to development and diversification.

The Government recognizes that small and medium-sized enterprises offer great potential for achieving economic diversification. Statistics Canada tells us that firms with fewer than 20 employees were responsible for 80 per cent of all net job creation in the West in the years 1978 to 1984. Seventy-five per cent of these new jobs came from firms that did not exist before 1978. We know from western diversification's own records that small business is interested in the type of support western diversification offers.

Western diversification is responsive to small business. Many of the projects approved for support have been awarded to small businesses. Roughly 70 per cent of approvals have been for funds less than $100,000. This assistance has been given under existing authorities. With passage of the legislation, the Department will give special attention to how to further encourage these types of enterprises.

The legislation is not restrictive. If WD can achieve its objectives by working with larger enterprises, the Department has the authority to act. WD is particularly interested in supporting endeavours that will have widespread systemic effects that ripple through an economic sector to benefit both small and large enterprises.

One of the main thrusts of the western diversification initiative is the Western Diversification Fund. The legislation authorizes ways in which the Department can offer financial assistance for proposals that further diversification.

The legislative committee heard that small business in the West is not looking for government hand-outs. They expressed a particular desire for federal government support to make up for the inadequacies of existing financial institutions that fail to meet the financing needs.

The legislation before us today gives the Department of Western Economic Diversification the power to offer loans, loan guarantees, and credit insurance. The Department will be in a better position to complement existing financial institutions and services by being able to offer a wide range of financial assistance once this Bill is passed.

Again we heard of the desire for federal support for small business development corporations and other innovative arrangements to respond to local initiatives. The present legislation gives WD the authority and the flexibility to participate in any such arrangements that will improve the business environment in the West and lead to economic diversification.

Flexibility and innovation will be the keys to success. We know that the problems of the West cannot be solved by simply throwing money at them. However, financial assistance can be effective if used strategically to help implement initiatives that create new opportunities for an economic sector or open up new areas of economic activity.

To date western diversification has been restricted in the financial assistance it can offer. With passage of the legislation the Department will have more options to tailor financial assistance better to the needs of people and business with good ideas.

In broad terms western diversification wants to encourage investments in areas that promote new technologies, develop new markets, replace products that the West imports, make use of under-utilized resources, and increase productivity.

The legislation before us is innovative and long overdue. The problems of the West are real, and we have an obligation to see that the institutions and policies are put in place to deal with them. This legislation enables us to get on with the job.

The new Department created by this legislation will give the West a strong voice in contributing to national decision-making, in influencing the machinery of government to respond more effectively and equitably to western needs, and in gaining greater access to national economic programs.

The Department will administer its programs and the Western Diversification Fund in a manner designed to broaden the economic base of the West. The Department, in summary, has the co-ordinating role of a central agency and the operating role of a line Department.

The legislation provides a firm foundation for an innovative new approach to regional development and for tackling the problems holding back diversification of the western economy. The quicker we can get on with the job the better. I urge speedy approval of Bill C-113. Therefore I move:

> That the House continue to sit through the lunch hour for the purpose of continuing consideration of Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being fewer than 15 Members rising in objection to the motion, the motion is deemed to be carried.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on questions and comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no provision for questions and comments at this time.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you would review Standing Order 55(1) which seems to indicate that there is a 10-minute question period provided for after such a speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that we are at third reading. The first two Members speaking have unlimited time. After that Members are allotted 20 minutes for their speeches, plus a 10-minute period for questions and comments.

Therefore, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has the floor on debate.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, every Member of the House, particularly those from western Canada, supports western diversification. The issue in this debate is whether this is the most effective, most useful, and most productive way of achieving it. Unfortunately the Government has tried to pretend that western diversification only starts with the passage of this Bill. Unfortunately it ignores the other initiatives and programs which have been applied to western Canada. It has made no attempt to learn from those programs what the basic federal responsibility and requirements should be.

Part of the reason for that has been the haste. An almost frantic anxiety over this Bill was most clearly demonstrated when the Bill was given second reading, after very moderate debate, and Conservative members of the committee undertook to embargo any kind of committee work whatsoever. There were no representations, no witnesses, and no examination. They tried to railroad the Bill right through Parliament. It was only after we appealed to the Chair that we be given our minimal parliamentary rights that we were able to rescind the incredible Draconian suppression of parliamentary prerogatives and rights. Even then we were allowed the sum total of three and four witnesses, even though there was a much more extensive list of people who wanted to attend.

Putting into place legislation as important as this one would have assumed that there should have been broad and extensive consultation. There was much greater anxiety to have an election goodie on the Government's list of achievements than to have good legislation. There was no effort to think carefully through what was being done. There are some very serious flaws in the legislation which will handicap the efforts of future Governments to apply the resources and initiatives required in western Canada.

One reason for that is that there is once again a major difference in philosophy. The Government in power believes that the only way to develop a country or region is through individual activities and individual enterprises. It sees no constructive, positive, creative roles for the public sector working in partnership with private business. There is a blindfold on what has been the genius of Canadian history, that is, the development of this country through a mixed economy, a combined effort of various public and private sector initiatives.

It has often been the public sector which has had to make the major, strategic choice and has tried to put out a blueprint. It has not simply left it up to the market-place to determine what will be developed and how and where it will be developed. That is of particular importance in a region like western Canada where there is not a large private sector. We do not have big corporations and vast networks of businesses such as exist in southern Ontario. That is why public sector involvement has been very crucial, yet all we have seen since the Government came to power in 1984 is the dismemberment of many important development initiatives by the public sector in western Canada.

Let us use the example of Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation. The previous Government had established a research centre called Canertech, which was to provide special funding and initiatives in the area of renewable resources. It was to find an alternative, such as ethynol or hydrogen power, so that we could get away from the idea that our energy is based solely upon non-renewable resources. That institute was cancelled even though it had established a very good working relationship with a number of businesses and research institutions. Petro-Canada wiped out the jobs of 280 research workers in its own organization.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says that what we really require in Canada is more research and development. He says that we need more scientists, engineers, and others working in practical areas of research. Yet, his own Crown corporation closes down its research facilities in the City of Calgary, throwing 280 people out on the streets.

How can the Government talk about research and development when it is retreating from that important field? Must we rely on a small business with a cash flow of perhaps $4 million or $5 million to duplicate what Petro-Canada did? Of course it cannot be done. Research is not taking place because the Government does not recognize the effectiveness of having public sector initiated research and development. It has a blind ideological obsession that the private sector is good and the public sector is bad. It is a kind of Manichaean dichotomy about what is good and what is bad in the world.

There must be a proper balance between the two in western Canada. The western diversification fund does not provide the kind of blueprint by which western Canada will be able to enter an economy that is increasingly dominated by high technology and information sciences. Most small and medium sized businesses do not have the capacity to mount the kind of research and development that goes into these areas.

I want to refer to an interesting document entitled "Innovation Policy in the Western Provinces". It was put out by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, perhaps one of the best known and most highly regarded economic research institutions in the world. It deals with the economic requirements of the major industrial states.

What are the primary recommendations in this document? One is that there must be a number of public sector infrastructure investments at both the provincial and federal level in order to ensure that the western Canadian economy in the four western provinces acquires the capacity to mobilize resources to compete in a high-tech age. Yet the western diversification legislation excludes investment infrastructure, the very thing the organization says that we need. It cannot be done with this Bill.

Since 1970 the federal Government of the day invested in over 30 research centres in western Canada. These were situated at universities or independent organizations in a deliberate attempt to counterbalance the concentration of scientific activity in central Canada and to make sure western Canada had adequate opportunities in such areas as microelectronics, biotechnology, and industrial research. Many of those were closed down by the Government, or the funding was restricted.

At one time the National Research Council had over 5,000 personnel in western Canada. That number has decreased as a result of cut-backs.

The advocates of this legislation say that they are trying to encourage the diversification of the western economy, but the fact is they have been the culprits in cutting back and removing the kind of investment that would be required to bring about that development. This legislation does not address that issue.

Let me also point out what I believe is a fraudulent statement on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary who introduced third reading, as well as other Members. They suggested that this will represent the opening round of opportunities for western businesses to get loans and grants in order to expand their businesses or work in new areas. That is a falsehood.

Is the Parliamentary Secretary totally unaware of the Economic Regional Development Agreements that have been working in the western provinces since 1980? They will contribute more money in those four years than is contained in the western diversification fund. The total investment from ERDA was $2.1 billion as opposed to the $1.2 billion in this western diversification fund.

We asked the Minister in committee whether the ERDA will continue. He said that they have not yet made up their minds. In other words, he is saying that this is replacing the ERDA programs.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening to the very informative speech by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), but I do not see a quorum in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will ask the Deputy Clerk to count the Members present.

And the count having been taken:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being 20 Members present, not including the occupant of the chair, the debate shall accordingly continue. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, it shows the dedication and commitment of Conservative Members from western Canada that they—

Mr. Holtmann: I do not see any NDP.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry has the floor.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, we just saw a graphic example of the level of interest in this debate shown by western members of the Conservative Party. They were so concerned about the parliamentary process that they had to hide behind the curtains in order to engage in a proper dialogue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has been here for a very long time. He knows that equipment in the House has changed and there are televisions outside the Chamber on which Members can watch the debate.

I appreciate that there must be a quorum in the House, but I would not want the Hon. Member to reflect on whether Members are inside or outside the House. He knows that, and I do not have to bring it to his attention.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I was only concerned that most Tory Members have not learned how to turn on a TV yet. Now that you have assured me that they have reached that level, I will continue with my remarks.

We were talking about the Economic Regional Development Agreements which have provided twice the amount of funding in the first four years than is available under this Bill. It is significant to note that the Minister was not prepared to make a commitment that that program will continue.

If one draws the logical conclusion, the western diversification fund will provide half the funding that ERDA programs did. In other words, we have a 50 per cent cut-back on our hands. There is no assurance or guarantee that there will be any form of replacement for those funds, to say nothing of the fact the Government is cancelling the Industrial Research and Development Program, IRDP, plus many other programs under DRIE. What we really have here is a placebo. It is once again an attempt to gussy up, to put on the cosmetics, but to take away the substance and retract the kinds of investments that are required.

There are some very serious questions about the ability or willingness under this particular Bill of the Government to establish priorities. When questions were asked about whether there would be commitments on major funding of irrigation and water projects, for instance, which are absolutely essential to rescue the incredible erosion happening on prairie lands and very crucial to the continuation of our food industry, there was absolutely no commitment or willingness to say it was possible as part of western diversification. There is no sense that the federal Government has anything more than a kind of hand-out role to play.

At this crucial stage I think we must pioneer various ways of co-ordinating and co-operating, not just having more federal-provincial meetings, which is the only industry this Government seems to be able to generate, but actually pooling capital and putting our combined resources together to make major investments in highways, research centres, and irrigation projects.

I think it is fair to say that one of the most important kinds of investments the Government can make in terms of diversifying an economy is to ensure there is an attractive environment in which private sector investment will be made. The OECD study confirms that. We must have a village, town or city with good water, good roads, and good schools. That is where the public sector comes into play. The municipalities of western Canada, together with their confrères in other parts of Canada, have said that the most serious drawback to development is the deterioration of the infrastructure of our villages, towns, and cities.

When we specifically asked about this program, we were told that that kind of investment was also excluded, was not possible. The point I am making is that when it comes to good economic development strategy, this Bill does not provide us with the tools. All it does is continue a basic grant program which was available under other programs. That is it.

We are told that somehow there would be regional offices and more access. We can argue that there were regional offices before and Federal Economic Development Co-ordinators. DRIE had an office in every province. The applications were there. There is absolutely no difference whatsoever in concept or in execution. The Government is just giving it a new name. It is just changing the sign board, that is all.

The fact is that the Government is cutting back the money, excluding various forms of investment, refusing to provide leadership, but is changing the name. That is the sum total of the Western Diversification Program in front of us. More than that, there is something I think is a tell-tale sign of the future. For the first time a Government of Canada is now taking applications for support from the federal Government in regional development and submitting it to a test. What is that test? Does it meet the requirements of the U.S. trade law? If the Government considers in its judgment that somehow a business applying for help under western diversification may run counter to U.S. trade law, it will not receive any money. Everything must be censored through the Department of External Affairs.

In spite of all the assertions made by the Prime Minister, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), and the rest of that crowd over there that regional development will not be affected by the free trade deal, we have clear evidence that that in fact is not true. They admit they are now taking regional development programs and submitting them to a criteria based upon U.S. trade law. If they think it will be countervailable or a consequence of anti-dumping, they will not approve it. That is a forecast for the future.

In fact, all our regional development programs will now be subject to an advanced censorship by the federal Government in terms of its impact upon U.S. trade law. When we consider that U.S. trade law is getting tougher day by day, such as redefining the notion of a subsidy, we see that our regional development programs will be substantially affected and restricted as a consequence of the proposed trade agreement.

In this Bill we have proof positive that the guarantees and the assurances of the Prime Minister are absolutely worth nothing. They are as good as his commitment on acid rain and indexing senior citizens' pensions, and all those sacred trusts he used to like to talk about. We have just seen another sacred trust broken with this Bill.

While we approve the principle and the necessity to develop a western economy, I suggest that this is a faulty way of doing it. It will result in less resources being allocated. It appears that it will not provide the kinds of significant federal investments in the West which are desperately needed. More important, it bootlegs a severe restriction on regional development practices because of its adherence to U.S. trade laws being the basis for judgment as to whether or not one receive a grant. I suggest that that is a pretty severe and negative condemnation of this piece of legislation.

All I can say is that if the House passes the Bill and it goes to the second Chamber and is passed there, it will be up to another Government to change the policy substantially and substantially reorganize western diversification to take away the restrictions, the exemptions, and once again put the federal Government in a place where it can provide real leadership, partnership, and real investment to western Canada so that that region can meet the challenges of a new age based on high technology. That is where we have to go. This Bill will not take us there.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the western diversification Bill. This morning the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) tried to bring before this House the problems of the Lubicon Indian band land claims. The Hon. Member was frustrated in that endeavour by an action taken by the Government to bring before the House this particular Bill to establish the department of western economic diversification. That kind of action, taken on behalf of the Government by the Minister who moved the motion, is typical of the attitude of the Government toward the Indian people and toward the promises it made to the Indian people and to all citizens of Canada. It is contrary to the trust the Government accepted when it became the Government on September 4, 1984.

Since 1940 and earlier the Lubicon Indians have been attempting to establish their rights with succeeding Governments and to put before the Government and the people of Canada the unfair treatment they received over a long period of time. They called upon succeeding Governments to do something about fulfilling those rights. They did not sign a treaty in the original treaty signatures, and they did not cede their land. Therefore, in the eyes of most people, they still own that land and as a sovereign nation they should be dealt with in that fashion.

I dwell on that issue in the debate on this particular Bill because that trust will be an important part of success or failure in this particular Bill; trust, not only with the Indian people, but because of the economy of the Indian nations across the West that is of major importance in western development and western diversification. If we allow the condition of native people in western Canada to deteriorate any further, or if we do not take action on objectionable situations already in place such as that of the Lubicon people, then we will be faced with the condemnation of the world and will be unable to take meaningful action to improve the economies of native communities in the West.

What happened this morning is that the Government cut off its nose to spite its face by not allowing the House to move forward on the Lubicon affair and to solve it and, in the process of solving it, establish a structure by which land claims can be made to have a major impact upon diversification and development of Indian nations in the West. Unless we put our house in order in the West, the impact of legislation such as this will be minimal.

The principles of the Department we are talking about today and the principles of this Bill are supported by all Members of the House and the people of western Canada. It is not the matter of the principle of the Bill we are discussing today. It is the matter of whether or not the Bill will be successful after it is put in place. The offices have been in place for a considerable length of time. To judge from action or what has happened until now we cannot be too sure that there will be a great deal of success. There has been a lot of interest on the part of the people, developed by the propaganda put forward by the Government in establishing this Bill when it was announced in Edmonton. It has been announced on several occasions successively, as well as the discussion we have had in the House on it.

This Bill states that there will be an office that will attempt to diversify the economy of western Canada. That is something that has been needed for many years in western Canada and in other parts of Canada. It is also something that we have had for many years in some form or another. Therefore, attempts to diversify have been attempted many times for many years in many parts of Canada. Why have they not worked? If we looked at the reasons that they have not worked, we might find a good structure and a good basis under which to be sure that the western diversification offices will have some long-term impact. That is a key requirement, as far as economic development is concerned.

The Government seems to be putting a considerable amount of hope and a great deal of store in having a head office in Edmonton and a branch in Saskatoon. That in itself is bound to create a little economic diversification and jobs, but it is not the aim of the Bill or of the Department as it develops.

Under the present circumstances, or from the history that we have of past actions by government diversification projects, it is not a guarantee of success or even of action. An application filed, looked at, returned, discussed, and filed again is not action. To a great extent that seems to be what has been going on.

What has happened in the past is that companies that develop in marginal situations where either the population does not establish the type of markets which they must fulfil, or the transportation costs are so high that they become a factor in success of a particular industry, those operations of initial actions may at first appear to be successful. We have the history of meat packing in Prince Edward Island and the history of industries which have developed and have seemingly been a success. While the Government puts in place the assistance that will keep that operation going for a little while, it stays operating. When the cream of government assistance has been skimmed off and it comes down to the nitty-gritty of dealing with the market, the support is not there and then the industry packs up and leaves. That is the historical situation that we have faced in many parts of the country, many times, in attempting to establish some type of diversification in areas.

I commenced by stating that there was a need to establish some type of trust as far as the Government was concerned. The Government can do that by dealing with the land claims of native communities.

The Government could also deal with that with the provinces by fulfilling promises that it made. Before and after the Government was elected, on many occasions it promised that it would help to diversify the economies or to improve the economies of both the East and the West by increasing the amount of government procurement that actually took place in the Atlantic provinces or in the West. How has the Government fulfilled that promise? In 1984-85, the first year of being in office, the percentage of procurement for the western provinces, that is purchases within those provinces by the Government of Canada, was 13.4 per cent. After many promises and much pushing by the Government to increase it and make it more even across the country, it went from 13.9 per cent in 1984-85 to 12.8 per cent in 1985-86.

We must remember that a premise of the national Government is to increase the amount of purchases in the West. In 1986-87 we went down further still. In 1986-87 the purchases of government through the Department of Supply and Services in western Canada went down to 11.5 per cent of the total. In other words, we do not have any good indication that the Government will do the things that it promises to do, if we look at purchases by Supply and Services as an indication of how it will fulfil those promises.

There are a number of other points that should be brought up in discussing the possibility of the success of the Western Diversification Department. There has been a tendency on the part of the Government to say: "Once you get it out there, because it is out there, it will work". The Liberals said that on many occasions before, as far as western Canada was concerned.

What does this Bill do and what does it not do? First, it does not do a very good job of defining what diversification is. If there is to be real diversification in western Canada, then it would seem that we must know where we will find the type of diversification and what it should be. The Government seems to be taking initiatives through this action, through this office, and through this Bill is to emphasize the building on existing resource structures that are already in place. That probably sounds like a good and easy way to move. It even sounds very logical. It also has been the basis of many western attempts at diversification in the past. It has not worked.

When one bought a bag of flour in the West, as you know, Mr. Speaker, some 30 years ago, that flour came from a mill in Saskatoon, Regina, Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, Humboldt, or a number of places which had mills and which supplied flour to the surrounding areas. These mills were built on the resources that were there, the resources of farm products, and the production of wheat. If you go to buy a bag of wheat in a store in Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, the chances are that that bag of wheat will not have been ground in western Canada but in Sarnia or even in London, Ontario. The basis for using the present resources of western Canada for diversification needs more than just the idea that they will do it. There needs to be more support than that.

I do not want to contradict this particular kind of diversification. I am trying to put forward the fact that if resource development is the method to be used, then it will take a different kind of structure from what has been used in the past. This Bill does not do that.

There is another factor about this idea of building on the resources that are there which needs to be mentioned. It implies that those resources are evenly spread across the West, that there are resources in every area that can be developed so that that particular region or subregion of the West can develop without any problem. That is not at all true as you know, Mr. Speaker, since you come from the West.

There are some regions which are obviously more poor, or very poor, with respect to any type of resource that can be developed. If one is depending upon the strength of the resources in one particular area for diversification, then that will not be possible if the area is very poor in resources anyway. The obvious strength or lack of strength as far as resources are concerned means that subregions which are obviously poor in resources are not going to develop in the same way as those that are already strong in resources.

A third point which should be put on the record as far as this new Department is concerned is that we also have a new Department of Industry, Science and Technology, which has been given much of DRIE's earlier responsibility for national regional development. This new Department was supposed to include the responsibility to reconcile the regional development policy with other industrial policies. That type of approach was intended to reduce regional disparities. It has not effectively done that in the past when it was called DRIE, or as the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. There has really been no indication that this will happen in a new Department which would be established.

Small business people in the West have taken a good and hard look at diversification. Mr. Bulloch, for instance, has indicated that diversification needs to be overhauled, and that the whole process needs to be looked at very thoroughly. They have indicated that they do not believe that this small fledgling Department without any money will be able to do the kind of co-ordinating which is one of its responsibilities.

If we look at one initiative that this Department will take, we see that it is to co-ordinate those large Departments such as the Department of Transport, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of National Health and Welfare, and any of the other large Departments. The Government is being naive in believing that this fledgling Department can be an effective co-ordinator of these large Departments. DRIE had exactly that same co-ordinating responsibility. DRIE's capacity to co-ordinate the activities of federal Departments and agencies was extremely limited. It had that responsibility and it was unable to fulfil it. I take this from the report delivered by small business groups.

It was unable to do it mostly because the bureaucracy is such that it does not have enough clout to say to the Department of Transport, for example, that this is the type of action that it must take in a particular area. The Ministers of Transport, Health, and Agriculture did not welcome DRIE's attempts to promote some kind of co-ordination among them. In fact, it worked exactly the opposite in many cases. Because of these feelings of need for diversification by DREE, they felt they had to resist it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired. We now have questions or comments.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I think the Government has the attitude that you are not allowed to talk about the West if you are a Newfoundlander and that you cannot talk about Atlantic Canada if you come from Ontario. We in this Party have a pan-Canadian view of regional development. Newfoundlanders would, of course, support western diversification as well as we would expect Albertans to support regional development in Newfoundland. Having studied law in Alberta in the mid-1970s, I know how much Albertans care about issues related to Newfoundland. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you are aware of that.

I recall in the mid-1970s that the Alberta Government established what it called a heritage trust fund when Alberta was flush with revenues from the oil price increases caused by the world oil crisis. Part of the idea of the this fund, I think the raison d'être for this fund, was to create a fund to provide for the diversification of the Alberta economy. That fund has developed and grown. I am not sure exactly what the figures are, but my recollection is that somewhat in excess of $12 billion to $14 billion is there for the diversification of only Alberta's economy, not all of the West, not Saskatchewan, Manitoba nor British Columbia.

Would the Hon. Member comment on the size of the allocation to the western diversification fund? The figure of $1 billion is used for four provinces, to be spread out over a number of years as it is with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. There has not been the kind of diversification of the Alberta economy which was looked forward to by the creation of Alberta's heritage trust fund. I wonder whether a billion dollars for the four provinces spread out over a number of years will do very much.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, this $1.2 billion amounts to $16 million a year for each of the provinces if it is divided in that way. We know, of course, a considerable amount of that money has been allocated for the South Moresby Park, and consequently not a great deal has been left for division into other projects.

Mr. Fennell: Don't you like the South Moresby Park?

Mr. Hovdebo: The ability to use funds for diversification or for economic development depends to a great deal on the attitude of the Government in the process of using those funds.

Here a comparison between the heritage funds in Alberta and the heritage funds in Saskatchewan becomes quite germane. The heritage fund in Alberta became an investment fund for the province. It did not impact particularly upon the economy of Alberta, and it still does not seem to be doing so. The heritage fund in Saskatchewan did considerably more, and maybe this is the kind of development that we would like to see. We know that when the Liberal Government used funds to diversify just before the last election, it made them into a political slush fund. There were few enough Members in the West, so Senators were the dispensers of funds and used them for political purposes to support only those constituencies which they felt were worthwhile in the case of an election being called.

To go back to the heritage fund, it was used in Saskatchewan to develop the potash industry and to develop the sulphate industry to a great extent. If there is a mixture of private and public funds, people who are involved have a vested interest in any development and in the success of it. I know the Hon. Member from Newfoundland recognizes the need for that vested interest by the people who will be part of the development. If you have an outside company come in, skim off the cream and leave, you then have only two, three or perhaps ten years of employment for people. If you have local people responsible, they feel they have a vested interest and are ready to proceed to keep an industry there for as long as possible. In places like Newfoundland, northern Saskatchewan, northern Alberta, and the Yukon, industries must be based on a vested interest by the people who already live there. If you do not do it that way from outside somebody will come in, skim off the cream, and leave.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not see a quorum in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I see a quorum now. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) on debate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the time available before Question Period to discuss the initiative to establish the western diversification office for western Canada. This initiative by the Government is not fully understood. Some discussions have gone on in committee and in previous debate in the House. I recall that the debate on second reading was a relatively short one.

This office is part of an initiative by the federal Government to establish regional offices to do very much what the old DRIE and other economic and regional development initiatives had been doing previously. To some extent it is a question of changing the names on the signs and some of the activities. Actions that were in place under the previous Government and the existing Government will continue to be worked into the mandate of the western development initiative office.

In terms of function, our understanding is that there will be a Deputy Minister located in Edmonton, with regional offices in Winnipeg, Saskatoon, and Vancouver and a liaison office in Ottawa which will be headed up by an Assistant Deputy Minister. This liaison in Ottawa is probably quite crucial to the activities. You will see why, Mr. Speaker, when we review some of the criticisms that have been levelled at the initiative by some people speaking for small business across the country. For instance, on March 18 of this year John Bulloch was quoted in the press as indicating that the $1.2 billion western diversification program is "dangerously close to becoming nothing more than a political slush fund". John Bulloch, as Hon. Members know, is the President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. He and his association took a close look at this $1.2 billion initiative which involves $1.2 billion spread over five years. The amounts of money involved are not as grand as they would first sound.

This federation represents 20,000 small business members across Canada who are concerned that the initial actions of the Government under the heading of regional and western diversification appear to be "feathering the nests of the provincial Governments and propping up the federal Government's vulnerable constituencies". The small business people were not terribly impressed by the proposal which first came out.

The federation's director for Alberta, Doug Wright, pointed to the awarding of $9.5 million for the Daishowa pulp mill which is near Peace River as being one example of what he describes as misspending by the Edmonton Western Diversification Office. Mr. Wright said that it is difficult to believe that the Daishowa decision on this profitable investment hinged on the relatively small western diversification strategy contribution.

Indeed, I would observe that it seems rather strange that there should be western development funding for this very large initiative when the Government's indication was that it would be focusing its attention on the small and medium-sized businesses. Under almost anyone's description of what is a big and a medium-sized business, this particular one would fall into the big category.

In its initial steps at least, the Government's approach appears to be more political than economic. Structurally, the intention of the Government is to leave the impression that it is moving sources of power away from Ottawa and into Edmonton, the centre of western Canada. We are left with the impression that this will somehow improve the decision-making that will be made in the interests of western Canadians. That is a song we have been hearing the Government sing throughout the four years of its current mandate. Yet the results from the singing of this song make us wonder why it bothers.

In the areas in which the Government has some ability to influence and interfere within its own Departments, we see that it has done a very poor job of representing western Canada. In the fiscal year 1984-85, the year the Government took power, the four western provinces received as a percentage of national government purchases 13.9 per cent of the business. That was not up to the standards one would expect, given the population and the economic activity generated in western Canada.

We now have the statistics for the two years following. In the first year this Government, which was supposed to be helping western Canada and encouraging business in western Canada, was in power, it dropped its purchasing from western Canada from 13.9 per cent down to 12 per cent, and the following year purchases from western Canada dropped even lower, to 11.5 per cent. Western Canadian business lost the opportunity to do business with the Government of Canada under the aegis of this Conservative Government, a Government which spoke loudly about how it would help western Canada and divert more business to that region. In fact, it ran the other way.

Mr. Thacker: How can you build frigates on the Prairies? You're using percentage terms and that's ridiculous.

Mr. Althouse: I do not believe, Sir, that there were any frigates built in 1986-87. If the Hon. Member would recall his own activities, he would realize that there were not a lot of frigates built in 1986-87, the years to which I was referring.

From my knowledge of my own riding, I do know that there are many workshops there that could build parts for frigates if anyone were to give them the opportunity to bid on them.

There are some 20 small factories in my riding which are having a terribly hard time finding out where to go even to get on the list that would allow them to find out what business is being searched out by the federal Government. We are now gradually getting contacts made for them, but the lists usually tend to ignore their capabilities when those contracts are put out, so these businesses are not even aware that the Government is looking for the kind of goods and services they are able to offer.

I believe the liaison function is one that certainly needs improvement. Perhaps the Edmonton office, with its satellites in Winnipeg, Vancouver, and Saskatoon, could improve this. I would point out to the Government that there is plenty of room for improvement.

I am not convinced by the arguments put forward by the Government that locating the head office and the Deputy Minister in Edmonton will necessarily be particularly good for the region's ability to negotiate with the rest of Canada through the federal Government. I say that because I note that this is a new and, in the scheme of things, a relatively small Department, and I have grave questions about the ability of a new, small Department located outside the power circle in Ottawa to be able to maintain any form of influence with the Government.

I ask myself what influence can this small western diversification office headquartered in Edmonton have over the Department of Supply and Services, the main Department that determines from what part of the country federal government purchases will be made. Can the western diversification office have much influence in Ottawa, knowing the way Ottawa conducts business, with only an Assistant Deputy Minister on the end of a telephone or a fax machine located here in Ottawa to represent us? What sort of power will that one Deputy Minister, located way out in Edmonton, have over the Department of Finance? We know how little influence some of the Ministers have when they do get close access to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or the Deputy Minister of Finance. What ability will the western diversification office have for being able to determine—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Point of order, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

RETRACTION OF REMARK

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I made a reference regarding the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), and I just wanted to indicate my wish to retract that remark.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 2 p.m., the House will now proceed to Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

WOMEN

REQUEST FOR MORE PROGRAMS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, according to a report on poverty published last week by the National Council of Welfare, women make up a higher than average proportion of the poor in Canada and are more likely to be poor than men, in most categories. More than half (56.1%) of all low-income Canadians are women. As we know, women from 16 to 64 represent 56.4 per cent of low-income Canadians. Seven out of ten elderly persons (71%) are women. Families headed by women are four times as likely (4.3%) to live in poverty as families headed by men.

Mr. Speaker, there are ways to alleviate the problems facing Canadian women. Poverty seems to be a female problem, and nothing has changed for many years. I hope the Government will explore the connection between women's poverty and the lack of employment equity and wage equity programs, the lack of programs to promote university training and training in general, and the lack of adequate day-care programs. Mr. Speaker, the status of women in Canada is deplorable, and immediate action is necessary.

EMPEROR OF JAPAN

BIRTHDAY CONGRATULATIONS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of Members to the upcoming birthday of Emperor Hirohito of Japan. Hirohito, or Tenno to his countrymen, turns 87 tomorrow, and will be celebrating his sixty-second year as a ceremonial head of state later this year.

The Emperor is a living symbol of his people and has been a modernizing influence in Japan. During his lifetime Japan has undergone unprecedented change. It has progressed from a country limited by feudal social systems and devastated by war to a modern industrial society which has a large say in the future of the world.

S. O. 21

Economic ties between Canada and Japan have also progressed. The Japanese have invested over $37 billion in Canada while representing our second largest export market, with $6 billion of Canadian goods and services being exported to Japan annually.

I am sure that my colleagues will join with me in congratulating the Emperor on his eighty-seventh birthday. Gokensho wo oy-nori itashimasu.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

COUNTERVAIL DUTY ON EUROPEAN BEEF RULED ILLEGAL

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canada must decide whether to accept GATT's ruling that the countervail imposed by the Canadian Import Tribunal on European beef is illegal. Our choice is to continue with the countervail or to drop the tariff in favour of a quota system.

Canada tried quotas before, way after the damage had already been done, and they did not work too well. Besides, why should cattlemen have to put up with any imports of highly subsidized hamburger meat? It is not fair to our livestock industry.

I think the international tribunal should be reminded that cattle producers should have a say in what affects their industry, even if the commodity they produce does get transformed through processing.

This was the point at issue. It needs to be reinforced. I urge the Minister to say "no" to the GATT ruling on May 30.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEW CALEDONIA—FRENCH IMPERIALISM

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, one would have thought that France might have learned its lesson at Dien Bien Phu. French arms were equally ineffective in Indo-China and North Africa as the people of those regions struggled against the French colonialists.

Today we learn that France has dispatched more troops to fight the Kanaks in New Caledonia. Bloodshed will result, but in the end independence will be won.

The last vestiges of French imperialism in North America, France's hold on St. Pierre and Miquelon, and their fraudulent claim to Canadian fish stocks, are without warrant.

Imperialism in today's world is a spent force. The sooner France realizes this the better.

HOUSING

SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, since the Conservative Government came to power, subsidized housing has been shamefully neglected. First of all, the Government has done nothing for single-parent families who need subsidized housing. Second, this Government has changed the criteria, so that if you want to build co-operatives for average and low-income Canadians, the cost of participating is now $500 or $600. This will not do at all for people in Laurier and Sainte-Marie, who would need rents in the area of $300.

Mrs. Pépin: And Outremont!

Mr. Malépart: My colleague from Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) says the same applies to the poor in the Outremont section of Montreal. What this Conservative Government has done about housing is totally unacceptable. There is no home ownership program, which means that Montreal is still a city of tenants.

Mr. Speaker, I hope an election will be called very soon so that a Liberal Government can restore fairness to this particular situation.

MANITOBA

BETTER DAYS FORESEEN

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, most countries where people have lived under a socialist government soon realize that socialism is not the answer. For instance, after experiencing socialism for several years, France acknowledged that socialism was an obstacle to the economic and social development of a country that seeks prosperity. Russia has also admitted that free enterprise would help its economy to expand, and China has reached the same conclusion.

That is why today, I wish to pay tribute to our friends in Manitoba who have realized this and, in so doing, rejected the obsolete socialist regime of the NDP, and I want to congratulate them. I am sure they will see better days in the not too distant future.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—LACK OF PERMANENT EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the community of Bell Island in St. John's East was at one time the most prosperous town in Newfoundland with a population of over 12,000, and over 2,000 people working in one of the most important iron ore mines in the world. They worked hard and contributed to government revenue. All that ended in 1966 when the mine closed and all the workers lost their jobs.

After 22 years Bell Islanders are still waiting for fair treatment from government. There are about 4,800 people still on Bell Island. They suffer from primitive ferry service and lack of permanent employment. Over 60 per cent unemployment exists among those of working age. Make-work jobs and short-term employment are not enough.

Bell Island is here to stay. It is time government recognized its responsibility to Bell Island and Bell Islanders. It is not too late to put special economic development programs in place. Bell Islanders want to work in dignity. Bell Island deserves more than it has received from this Government and from the last.

ACID RAIN—REDUCTION IN AUTOMOBILE NITROGEN OXIDE EMISSIONS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) noted in the House on Monday and in the United States Congress yesterday, acid rain does not discriminate. Indeed, it falls on the just and unjust alike on both sides of the border. Clearly it is in our mutual best interest that Canada and the United States tackle the acid rain problem with a concerted and effective plan of action.

It is equally clear that Canada has been doing its part. For example, allowable nitrogen oxide emissions from light cars and trucks and heavy duty vehicles have been cut by 60 per cent and 50 per cent respectively. This control program is the toughest in the world.

We need take no lessons from the Liberal Party which, while in government, sat on its hands on the acid rain issue. Indeed, without question, no other Canadian Government—and certainly no other Canadian Prime Minister—has been as persistent, forthright, and substantive as our present Prime Minister in pressing the case on acid rain.

The message is getting through. The United States is being convicted by its own inaction. To quote the Chairman of its Environment Committee, Congressman Scheuer: "We ought to be embarrassed to look (Canada) in the face." The United States is well aware that the present situation is simply unacceptable.

Let me commend the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) for their actions to date, and encourage them to continue in their efforts to reclaim and protect Canada's irreplaceable natural heritage.

TAX TREATMENT OF ARTISTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, last week the Committee on Communications and Culture tabled a report recommending changes to our tax system that would make it better reflect the importance of artists in strengthening our unique Canadian culture. However, the Government alone has the power to make these changes and it cannot hide behind the deficit battle on this one. We were very careful that our recommendations would not make unreasonable demands on the Treasury.

While our report was unanimous, I must speak up for the many artists who have not been helped by the Government's Budgets, who have been hurt by tax reform, and who face an uncertain future with free trade. The Government has not done enough to address the unique economic circumstances in which artists often have to live.

Our artists are an important national treasure. They do not only contribute to our culture, they are part of our culture. A nation as rich as ours can surely afford an investment in our artists. Better yet, can we afford not to?

We can be proud that we have established the importance of enhancing our unique Canadian culture. Now we must change our income tax system to help the artists who helped us build our culture. To make this happen I hope that the committee's report goes onto the Government's agenda and not onto the shelf.

FREE TRADE

APPROVAL OF MEMBER OF UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, today I simply want to quote what was said by Mr. David Patrick Moynihan, a U.S. Congress man and Democrat from the State of New York, who commented on the extraordinary performance of our Prime Minister yesterday in Washington.

Here is the beginnig of the quote: "I have never seen a head of government give such an extraordinary, significant and polished speech. The Prime Minister of Canada offers our two nations an historic opportunity for a better life, today for ourselves and tomorrow for our children.

Free trade enhances the quality of life of Canadian and American consumers and producers. The signing of this agreement will benefit to both countries. We Americans now have a better understanding of the problem and dangers of acid rain common to our two countries. The speech given by the Prime Minister of Canada in Washington on April 27, 1988 will go down in history". End of quote from a statement by a member of the Democratic U.S. Congress, Mr. Speaker.

UNVEILING OF PLAQUE COMMEMORATING WORKERS KILLED OR INJURED ON THE JOB

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, every year over 1,000 Canadians are killed on the job. Over six times that number lose their lives to cancer, lung disease, and other ailments caused by exposure to toxic substances in the workplace.

In Thunder Bay this evening, representatives from labour and the Church will join with local representatives to unveil a plaque commemorating workers who have been killed, injured, or disabled on the job.

I join these and countless other Canadians across the country on this day of mourning in calling upon all levels of government to examine and improve legislation governing occupational health and safety.

Workplace death, disability, and injury represent a national tragedy, a tragedy which hits hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers and their families every single year.

I join with the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) and our grieving and concerned labour constituents in demanding action that will save lives and prevent injuries.

TRADE

IMPORTANCE OF MANITOBA EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) visit to Washington has been a great success. President Reagan has reconfirmed his support for the free trade agreement between the U.S. and Canada. That is a success.

The importance of free trade to Manitoba and all western Canada cannot be overstated. Our largest industries, including agriculture, energy, aerospace, mining, forestry, and manufacturing, are directly dependent upon export sales to the United States.

Of the $1.4 billion in exports by Manitoba to the United States in 1986, 7.8 per cent was in electricity, 6.3 per cent in aircraft parts, 6.1 per cent in softwood lumber, and 4.8 per cent in motor vehicle parts.

However, the lion's share of exports to the United States from Manitoba comes from our agricultural area, with some $973 million in export sales to the United States.

Rural Manitoba's economy is dependent on and growing with the benefits of free trade. When the rural communities benefit, so does Winnipeg.

It is obvious that Manitoba and western Canada need secure access to the United States market to prosper.

ACID RAIN—POLLUTION CONTROLS URGED FOR UNITED STATES POWER PLANTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, according to Energy Probe in Toronto, the United States could cut its acid rain pollution of Canada in half by spending about $5 billion on pollution controls for midwestern power plants.

Energy Probe concludes that the United States could cut acidic pollution at specific U.S. power plants for far less money than a nation-wide program would cost. Energy Probe urges the Government of Canada to change its failed strategy of quiet diplomacy on acid rain against the U.S. administration.

Philip Jessup, Director of Air Quality Research for the Toronto based organization, said: "Our Government has been barking up the wrong tree by insisting that the U.S. draft a new acid rain law".

He concluded by saying: "For a total of $5 to $6 billion, the United States could cut acidic emissions in the Midwest by 50 per cent".

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

APPROVAL OF PROJECTS IN EDMONTON WEST

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, today before the House we are discussing the subject of western diversification. Already some 300 projects have been approved under this program, including some in my own constituency.

Air Services Consultants will receive $35,500 to complete the development of a unique disposable packaging container for transporting dangerous and infectious diagnostic specimens. Omara Systems will receive $126,500 in funds for the development of a state of the art monitoring thermostat and heat tracing controller. Ambucraft Services Ltd. will receive $48,090 to design and develop a new wheelchair lift for vans and buses.

I call upon all Members of the House to move this Bill through the House quickly and to give the western diversification initiative the additional mandate and resources that the Bill will provide.

EXTERNAL AID

AUDITOR TRAINING ASSISTANCE TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, as one of a number of Members of the House who has lived and worked in a developing country for several years, I want to make some comments about Canada's role in development. While the Government could do more in this field, there are a number of development assistance areas that are particularly important. One of these involves development of government infrastructure, specifically government auditing.

For decades, successive federal Governments and Auditors General have been active in this field. The Auditor General and his office work very closely with CIDA, the United Nations, and other international agencies in providing invaluable auditor training assistance and audit systems development aid to the Third World. Because Canada has been a pioneer in comprehensive and legislative auditing, it is only natural that we share our expertise in this field.

I want to commend the Auditor General's office for their efforts in this area and encourage them to continue this fine tradition.

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the reason and intelligence of Mrs. Labelle and Messrs Manion, Veilleux and Saint-Aubin, to preserve the bilingual status of the Public Service of Canada and guarantee the quality and excellence of bilingualism in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, our language teachers must have time to prepare for their classes just as teachers in other educational institutions in Canada who teach less than twenty hours a week for only eight months out of twelve, while our employees who teach in the Public Service work for twelve months.

I want to encourage these men and women, most of whom are Francophones, to continue their search for excellence in the spirit of Bill C-72, and I want to thank them for their dedication to a cause that we uphold.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FORMER PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It deals with the Prime Minister's complete failure yesterday in Washington to get anywhere on acid rain. But as so often happens, I must begin by putting the truth on the record.

On February 22, 1977, Prime Minister Trudeau said in his speech to the United States Congress that Canadians are:

> . . . a people devoted throughout their history to accommodating themselves with the harshness, as well as the beauty, of their natural surroundings. We will respond with vigour to any threat of pollution or despoliation, be it from an indigenous or from an external source.

Those were Mr. Trudeau's words.

For a week the Prime Minister and his senior Ministers said publicly and privately that Pierre Trudeau never raised these issues before the United States Congress. Why?

Why does the Prime Minister not stop blaming previous administrations? Why does he not tell the truth about what Mr. Trudeau really said, and why does the Deputy Prime Minister not admit that it is the Leader of his Government who failed to reach an agreement on acid rain with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to engage the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in a debate about defoliation.

He can check the record to see that what we have been saying is that the words "acid rain" were not raised by the former Prime Minister in his speech in 1977.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The quotation just read into the record by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition confirms that statement.

The situation respecting acid rain has changed dramatically from when this Government was elected in September, 1984, until now. We have not made the progress we would have wished, but the Government of Canada has been consistent and vigorous in pursuing our objectives against acid rain.

That has been recognized by as dispassionate a source as the Toronto Star, which referred to the Prime Minister's speech to Americans yesterday as: "A hard-hitting address in which the Prime Minister urged tough action from U.S. legislators on combatting acid rain pollution". Surely the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will not quarrel with the Toronto Star.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the speech of Mr. Trudeau was made on February 22, 1977. The Minister knows that the first time acid rain was used as a buzz word was in the early 1980s, just as "star wars" was not in our vocabulary in 1977. The Prime Minister of the day mentioned pollution quite specifically in his speech to the United States Congress.

ACID RAIN—U.S. RESEARCH PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will put a supplementary question to either the Deputy Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Amid the endless photo opportunities in Washington and the 21 gun salute—

Mr. Crosbie: You got a 22 gun salute.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and the speech the Prime Minister made to some Congressional aides—talk about papering the house—his final summit was a complete bust. He got some applause for promising to sell out our country in a trade agreement. He reached an agreement on nuclear technology for the submarines Canadians don't want—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Those submarines won't do much for our environment either. The Prime Minister did not get to first base on an agreement on acid rain. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if he is the point man today, why did the Prime Minister once again praise the American research program which is stalling action on acid rain? Why did he not demand in his speech before the American Congress that Congress take immediate action, now, on the problem of pollution over our border?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that the Liberal Party of Canada was in office during half the period of the Reagan presidency. During that entire period there was no progress made by the then Liberal Government with the Reagan administration on this problem. What is more, no advance was made on the problem domestically, greatly encumbering our administration when we took office in September, 1984.

They do not have any moral authority to point the finger at Washington and demand action south of the border. Indeed, there was no federal-provincial program, not a single one, to reduce acid rain causing emissions from Canadian sources. There was no national program. There was no effort made to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions or NOx emissions. There was a very feeble program to reduce the amount of lead in gasoline.

Since that time we have reduced, effective by 1994, sulphur dioxide emissions by 50 per cent. We have introduced the toughest NOx control program in the world. We have legislated lead out of gasoline effective the end of December, 1992. That is action, not just words.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): But what did the Prime Minister do yesterday for acid rain? Zilch. Nothing. Nothing for the Canadian people.

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S MISSION TO WASHINGTON

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday President Reagan stated in the presence of our Prime Minister, and I quote: "Our two countries have made substantial progress towards improving air quality". That is not true, because the United States has done nothing to fight acid rain, although the Prime Minister keeps applauding the President's statements. Why won't the Deputy Prime Minister—and my question is directed to him—admit that the Prime Minister accomplished nothing in Washington, either yesterday or the day before, in his attempts to persuade the U.S. Congress to move more quickly on a decision to take a bilateral approach to the problem of acid rain?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition leaves the impression with the House that no progress has been made by the Government of Canada with the United States on environmental issues. I remind him that this Government signed the first protocol with jurisdictions, three other jurisdictions, the State of New York, the Government of Ontario, and the U.S. Government, to slash by 50 per cent toxic chemicals going into the Niagara River.

We have greatly strengthened the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement which, even by the very tough standards of the toughest environmental group on the subject in the world, Great Lakes United, is a vast improvement over what the Liberals did when they were in office for 25 years. We signed the framework—

Mr. Gauthier: What happened in Washington yesterday? Zilch.

Mr. McMillan: We signed the agreement, the framework, for the North American Waterfowl Management Plan which environmentalists have described as the most important initiative in the wildlife area since the Migratory Birds Convention.

TRADE

UNITED STATES—SENATE PASSAGE OF OMNIBUS TRADE BILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. He will know that yesterday the United States Senate passed its version of the omnibus Trade Bill which will now go to the President who will have 10 days to decide whether to veto that Bill.

Two weeks ago in answer to a question I put, the Minister said in this House that he can live with the Bill. Well, after examining the document we received, it is clear that a number of the measures in the Bill are contrary to Canadian interests, as outlined by Ambassador Gotlieb in a letter he sent. There are substantially expanded trade subsidies. There are more damaging trade remedy laws with a new definition of subsidy.

Is the Minister still standing by his statement that he can live with the Bill? Why is it that he is not substantially expressing the opposition of Canada to this Bill and encouraging the President to veto a Bill that will be very damaging to Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's hysteria in connection with this Bill, of course, illustrates why we need the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. I refer him to Free Trade - The Real Story edited by John Crispo—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —and some 17 other authors. If the gentleman gets as far as the fourth page—I don't know if he can read that far—he will find:

> The problem is that the real choice confronting Canada in terms of its trading relations with the United States is not between free trade and the status quo. It is between free trade and growing U.S. protectionism.

That is why we need the free trade agreement. That is why we have worked for it. That is why we are going to ask the House to endorse it. That is why the hon. gentleman should support it as well.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is taking up some bedtime reading, I suggest he look at the reality of the U.S. Trade Bill and not the fiction written by John Crispo.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the question again. The Minister said two weeks ago that he can live with this Trade Bill. Those were his words in this House. He has now had a chance to examine the actual Bill itself. He knows that there are still a number of very serious measures that will impact negatively upon Canada, and that the ambassador of this country in Washington has explicitly said that these will be damaging. Why is it we are backing away from that kind of opposition?

Why are we not expressing our very strong and very vehement opposition to the Trade Bill and specifically requesting the President to veto the Bill? I understand the Minister's problem in not being invited to the meetings, but surely to goodness, even from Ottawa he can express his opposition to something that is going to damage Canadian interests?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was very busy at meetings yesterday which didn't result in anything very diplomatic.

Mr. Gauthier: How do you know?

Mr. Crosbie: By the way, this book is only $6.95, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Axworthy: It's worth 35 cents.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You waited for the paperback too, didn't you?

Mr. Axworthy: Does it come with crayons?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to the omnibus Trade Bill, we made very strong representations to the U.S. administration and to Congress. We have been successful in getting many improvements in the Bill. We will now examine it carefully. The President may or may not veto the Bill. That is a decision for him to make. If there are any provisions in the Bill which violate the free trade agreement, then, of course, we will expect the American authorities to deal with those in the legislation approving the free trade agreement.

• (1430)

The omnibus Trade Bill that is now before the President is considerably improved compared to what it was when it started out. Any variances that there might be with the free trade agreement we do not believe to be of a serious character, but if there are any we would expect them to be rectified when the later legislation comes down.

FILM DISTRIBUTION INDUSTRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. It is certainly a pleasure to hear him quoting a Toronto academic. He could pick a better informed one.

My question concerns the same trade deal. The House will recall that last spring the Minister of Communications promised us long overdue legislation that would improve the situation for the Canadian film industry. After this was done, Mr. Jack Valenti, the film mogul from Hollywood, objected.

On the trade deal that was signed last fall, briefing notes prepared for Mr. Yeutter at the time stated that Canada had agreed to solve Jack Valenti's problem on film distribution.

Then the Minister's Bill disappeared, and we have not heard from her since.

Today we learn, or it is alleged, that the Prime Minister's Office is now involved in meeting Mr. Valenti's problem before this Bill is submitted to the U.S. Congress.

Will the Minister confirm that? Is it right, or is it not?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, by the way, it is a pleasure to answer a question from an Oshawa academic. I believe before the hon. gentleman got into his present occupation, he was an academic. Now I do not know how to describe him—it might be unparliamentary.

There are 17 distinguished authors in this book, not just Mr. Crispo. I can strongly recommend it.

Mr. Axworthy: Are you a book seller now? Is it going to be your next occupation?

Mr. Crosbie: It's hard to get a word out of your mouth here, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could move on from a book sale to a question and answer. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to the question of film distribution, my hon. colleague will be proceeding with that in due course.

As to what conversations Mr. Valenti is having with the U.S. administration, I do not know what conversations he is having with them.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it won't be the first Minister that we have heard from who does not know what is going on in Washington in terms of the trade deal.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since fewer than 3 per cent of all films distributed in Canadian cinemas are actually produced by the film industry, and since Jack Valenti is perhaps the most powerful lobbyist in Washington and has, according to one briefing note, got our Government to cave in before on this deal, and we do not have the Bill before us that has been promised, will the Minister now assure us that there is not someone in the Prime Minister's Office who is working on this proposal that will be submitted for U.S. satisfaction before they vote in the U.S. Congress? Will he give us that assurance, yes or no?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to reassure the hon. gentleman that we will be doing what we said we would do, and that is bringing in legislation which treats Canada as a separate market for film distribution rights. That will be done.

Mr. Broadbent: Where is it?

Miss MacDonald: I will ask the hon. gentleman to wait a few days. I can tell him that we will be providing support for our film distributors, so that Canada does indeed become a separate market.

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE INTRODUCED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I guess that the Minister has just conceded that the official in the Prime Minister's Office is going to make up the Bill for her in the next few days, and we are going to get it.

Miss MacDonald: That shows how little you know about it.

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Minister has just stated, and these are her words and not mine, in the next "few days", is she giving us assurances that the long promised legislation that will begin to provide some justice for the Canadian film industry will be introduced in the House in the next few days?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that there will be announcements and details of this whole package within a few days. We will be addressing, in due course, the legislative and financial aspects, which together will form a good support program for our Canadian film industry.

HEALTH

CANCER RESEARCH—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister will no doubt have read the rather staggering statistics that came out from Statistics Canada which showed that cancer will strike one in three Canadians, that more that 50,000 people will die of cancer this year, and that it is the second largest killer of children under the age of 14.

Given these staggering statistics, can the Minister explain why in this year's Budget the National Health Research and Development Program has had its funding for cancer research cut by more than $1 million?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check the exact statistics raised by the Hon. Member. Obviously, I am committed to more research for cancer, both within medical research and also NHRDP. I will have to check the exact figures raised by the Hon. Member.

FUNDING AT 1986-87 LEVELS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am quoting figures that came from the Minister's Department today which show a cut from the 1986-87 budget of $2.26 million to $1.2 million this year, which is over 40 per cent.

If the Minister truly does have a commitment to cancer research, will he today give the commitment in the House that he will at least restore cancer research funding levels by his Department to the 1986-87 levels?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this Government has increased cancer research commitments through MRC, both on the base budget and on the matching funds, and also on other proposals that are coming forward regarding science and technology. Those things are in place. If there is a reduction, obviously I want to know that. I think the House will understand that I want to look at the allegations first before going any further.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—ROLE OF UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that on March 24 the House unanimously passed a resolution concerning the situation in Central America, particularly the peace process, in which the House agreed to urge that parties from outside the region refrain from any activity that would disrupt this process.

Given that it is the United States Congress which is so very often put in the position of having to approve or disapprove of various actions that President Reagan contemplates from time to time in Central America, why did the Prime Minister not take the opportunity when he was before the Congress to tell it what the Parliament of Canada had unanimously determined, and pass on that message to Congress? It sounds to me like an opportunity missed. Doesn't it, to you?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it that last question was to me and not to you, so I will answer it and say no. I think that the Americans, Congressmen and others, who are interested in these issues know the position of Canada.

The point surely is that what we have to be occupied with here is what it is that Canada can do. I understand the Hon. Member's preoccupation with the United States and with what it can do. But our interest, surely, is what we can do.

The Hon. Member is himself a member of the committee that was established here that will be leaving within the next few weeks to go to Central America. He will know that there is a process under way, proceeding slowly, that requires encouragement by Canada, including by the parliamentary delegation, and that Canada has made known our willingness to help, in ways that are in our traditions and open to us and may not be open to other countries, to move that process forward.

I had thought we had passed the stage where we were going to turn back to focusing on what the Americans can do, and would be instead, in a sovereign, constructive way, focusing on what Canada can do to bring peace to Central America.

PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, sometimes the Minister says we can only concentrate on what Canada can do, and the next time it is what we have to do in concert with others.

The fact of the matter is that, whether it is acid rain or whatever it is, we in Canada have to be concerned with what the United States is doing, and that applies to Central America.

The Prime Minister of Canada had an opportunity to convey the unanimous opinion of the House of Commons with respect to Central America. He could even have done it in the sycophantic way that he referred to other issues, but he didn't even bother to raise it.

I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he asked the Prime Minister to raise it, or whether he did not?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no, I did not ask the Prime Minister to put into a speech a matter that we believe is already known, a matter on which the different approaches of the Governments of the United States and Canada are very well known.

Mr. Blaikie: Our views on acid rain are very well known as well.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam, who used to be the Party spokesperson for foreign affairs, suggested that we forgot to raise it. Of course, there was no question of forgetting to raise it.

Ms. Jewett: Why did you not raise it, then?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is at issue here is a difference in concentration as to what Canada should be doing with Canadian policy. The NDP is in such awe of the United States that it appears to feel there are no independent, effective actions that Canada can take. We believe it is our duty in foreign policy, as in other fields, to find areas where Canada can make independent, constructive, sovereign contributions to peace. We are doing that in Central America.

AQUACULTURE

REQUEST FOR BANK ACT AMENDMENT TO ASSIST FISH FARMERS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. As the Minister knows, one of the exciting industries in British Columbia is aquaculture or fish farming. However, the fish farmers are frustrated—in fact they are discriminated against—when they go to the banks to borrow money, because under the Bank Act fish is not considered as an approved crop for security.

Will the Minister be prepared to do something about this? In fact, will he be prepared to bring forward an amendment to Section 178 of the Bank Act so that fish from fish farms will be considered a crop, and an approved form of security, and so that aquafarmers can get loans and advances from Canadian banks?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, that is yet one more indication of how contemporary the Hon. Member is. She raises a very important question.

We will be very happy to amend the Bank Act to do what she asks. It will appear in the amendments that we bring forward to the Bank Act, in order to bring the security up to date that banks can have in the modern age.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PRIORITIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is supposed to defend the elderly here in Canada. While his Government is about to waste at least $11 billion on nuclear submarines, a report published by the National Council of Welfare indicates that, although assistance to elderly persons living alone has improved, there are still 276,000 elderly Canadians living below the poverty line, the majority of whom are women (82.3%). Could the Minister inform the House why his Government has failed to do what the Liberal Government did in 1984, which is to increase by $50 the guaranteed income supplement for persons living alone, to ensure no more elderly persons living alone in Canada are below the poverty line, instead of putting money into submarines?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that there was a change in the spouse's allowance relating to widows and widowers whereby approximately 53,000 Canadians came into a program which the former Government had an opportunity to bring forward but chose not to. Of that 53,000, 85 per cent are women.

If the Hon. Member wants to be fair about the issue he should also look at, for example, statistics relating to the recent report from the National Advisory Council on Welfare in terms of changes in the number of people living in poverty when his Government was in power and now when our Government is in power. Obviously, we would like to do more. As the economy improves we would like to bring about additional changes.

I point out to him that there have been improvements, and I have given him some of them. Upon reflection he might even want to applaud the Government and the people in the economy who have brought about these improvements over the last three years.

SITUATION OF UNMARRIED, SEPARATED, AND DIVORCED WOMEN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it's true! on page 40 in the French version, it says there was an improvement for persons who were 65, but that was thanks to the Liberal Government, which in 1984 decided to proceed with a two-stage increase of $25 each. The present Government should have continued this practice to ensure no Canadians are living below the poverty line. Since the Minister mentioned widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64, the report says 76,000 women are living in poverty because the Government refuses to give them the spouse's allowance, just because they are single, separated or divorced. When is the Government going to stop this discrimination and bring 76,000 people out of poverty, instead of wasting money on a bunch of useless submarines?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is rather odd for that Member of Parliament to talk about discrimination when widows and widowers were not included in the legislation. This Government brought that group of Canadians into the legislation. For him to talk about discrimination is patently wrong. He should reflect on that.

With respect to the report, in 1982-84, 317,000 Canadians were added to the poverty rolls. Some 525,000 have been taken off the poverty rolls since this Government came into office.

In terms of children and poverty, 94,000 more came into poverty when he was sitting on the government benches. Some 193,000 have been taken off the poverty rolls since this Government came into office.

In terms of real income for families—and this will be the last one, Mr. Speaker—there was a 5.6 per cent decrease when the Hon. Member's Party was in office. Since this Government came into office that figure has changed to plus 3.7 per cent.

CANCER CAUSING SUBSTANCES IN JONQUIÈRE REGION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and concerns the situation in Jonquière at Alcan, where record amounts of polyaromatic hydrocarbons, which can cause cancer, have been found in the air in this region. The Minister is aware there are no Canadian standards for the maximum allowable concentration of these carcinogenic substances. What is his responsibility for regulating these substances and for reducing emissions into the air and waters of this region, emissions that can cause cancer?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, Bill C-74 is now at third reading stage. It will seek to manage such substances from cradle to grave through their full life cycle.

We have established a special committee under a distinguished environmentalist, Dr. Hume, to make recommendations on this very matter so that when Royal Assent is received we will be in a position to act quickly.

On the particular matter that the Hon. Member brings to the attention of the House, I will draw it to the attention of my seniormost officials and get back to her on it.

ACT REGULATING TOXIC SUBSTANCES—MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about human illness, of cases of cancer among workers and other people in the region, and about pollutants in waters where belugas are dying every day. We cannot afford to wait. I don't understand the Minister's response. We have legislation to regulate toxic substances. Where does his responsibility lie with respect to the immediate application of the legislation to this very serious problem?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I agree, it is a very serious problem. It is a long-standing one. The offending substances have been wreaking their havoc for generations. We are dealing in the Government with the matter as a question of utmost priority.

In the longer term we have brought to the House for, I hope, early disposition, the toughest, most comprehensive toxic chemicals legislation ever in the history of Canada—probably the toughest in the western hemisphere.

We have been working hand in glove, actively, with the Government of Quebec on a major action plan to clean up the St. Lawrence River. That is the subject of continuing negotiations between the two jurisdictions.

I can assure the Hon. Member and Members of the House that the plight of the beluga will loom large in that over-all scheme.

AGRICULTURE

NOVA SCOTIA-CANADA SUBSIDIARY AGREEMENT—FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture has been waiting since February, 1987, for some word on the Nova Scotia-Canada subsidiary agreement on agriculture.

The Province of Nova Scotia has committed its $30 million. The federal Government all winter long has been saying that it was going to make its commitment of $30 million before April 1 yet it has done nothing. Why is the Government back-tracking on this important issue?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am happy—

An Hon. Member: How does that guy get into it?

Mr. Crosbie: How do I get into it? I represent the Minister in charge of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. It is time for the Member to wake up and pay attention.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: If you stop the fratricide in the caucus—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

An Hon. Member: How many is that now?

Mr. Crosbie: Twenty-two out of 39 is not bad. It is just as well he did not put them in the mail.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to the question, entering into that particular agreement is imminent, and I am pleased to be able to tell the Hon. Member that we have entered into agreements with Nova Scotia that involve total spending of some $960 million, of which $686 million is federal. Seven of those agreements were signed in the last several years. For instance, the Highway Improvements Agreement, the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Development Fund and the Sydney Tar Ponds. The Hon. Member should be down on his knees thanking us for the actions that we have taken.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): The Minister of Agriculture said that that money was going to be coming from the Cabinet committee for economic development and that the farmers needed to know before April 1 so they could plan for the present growing season.

Why is the Government delaying this Bill? Why is the Government delaying this agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not delaying this Bill or this agreement. As a matter of fact, in addition to Nova Scotia, we are expecting imminently an agreement to be entered into with Newfoundland, the only province in Canada with which there has been no agreement covering agriculture, a matter that I want to see rectified very quickly, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

REPORTED SPILL OF SULPHURIC ACID INTO STRAITS OF GEORGIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries, is for the Minister of the Environment. The matter refers to Crown Forest Products outside of Campbell River, and a 40 tonne spill of 93 per cent sulphuric acid into the Straits of Georgia. The matter was reported by the environmental committee of the Canadian Paper Workers' Union. As yet there is no indication of what has been done by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans or Department of the Environment on this very critical matter.

Could the Minister tell this House why he has not contacted the environmental committee of the Paper Workers' Union to discuss the matter with them and why the Government has taken no action to investigate the matter?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The matter has not been brought to my attention. I am trying to find out at the moment the reason that such a serious matter has not been brought to my attention.

We will get the Hon. Member a report on the issue as quickly as we can.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River, a short supplemental.

PREVENTIVE MEASURES TO CONTAIN EFFLUENT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries.

Would he undertake to launch an investigation into this company's operation to determine why it has not built holding tanks and settling ponds to contain and treat the effluent so as not to allow it to escape into the Straits of Georgia again.

Will the Minister undertake to do that as soon as possible?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be premature to undertake an investigation until we know more details of the specific matters which the Hon. Member has raised.

If there has been a sudden spill, as it has been characterized, then indeed I and the Minister of the Environment will want to know what the details of this circumstance amount to. On the other hand, if there is allegation of persistent malpractice on the part of Crown Forests, we will, of course, look into that in accordance with the habitat and effluent provisions of the Fisheries Act.

As I undertook earlier, I will look into this immediately.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

BILL C-81—MOUVEMENT DESJARDINS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance) and concerns our proposed legislation on finance and loan companies and its possible application to the Mouvement Desjardins.

The way the Bill is drafted now, I don't see kow it could not apply to the Mouvement Desjardins. We must not forget that Desjardins is not a corporation but a financial co-operative, and I wish it could be clearly established that Desjardins will not be affected by our proposed legislation on trust and loans companies.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I said last week that our federal policy will in no way oblige savings and credit unions to get rid of their so-called non-financial interests. And furthermore, our policy will not in any way infringe on the rights and obligations of provincial institutions.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Attorney General of Canada.

As he well knows, public confidence in the system of justice in Nova Scotia has been badly shaken by a number of incidents that have occurred recently. There are now serious allegations that the decision not to prosecute former Nova Scotia Deputy Premier, Roland Thornhill, on charges of receiving a $100,000 illegal benefit was made due to political interference by the Government of Premier Buchanan. As you know, the Deputy Premier has now resigned, Mr. Speaker.

Would the Attorney General of Canada be prepared to launch a public inquiry into this matter now that the Government of Nova Scotia has refused to do so, in order that the air can be cleared?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will understand that the prosecution of these matters is under provincial jurisdiction. I have every confidence in the law enforcement agencies of this country and in the independence of the Attorneys General in each of their jurisdictions to handle their responsibilities concerning prosecution.

As the Hon. Member points out, I do not comment with respect to individual cases because I think it is improper for an Attorney General to speculate with respect to an individual case. All I can say is that I will continue to make sure that in all areas of my own responsibility justice will, in fact, be observed.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know well that the Public Inquiries Act gives him the full authority to call a public inquiry into this or any other matter.

In light of the serious deterioration of public confidence over a number of matters, not just the one referred to, would it not be justifiable and appropriate for the Minister to step in and reassure the people of Nova Scotia about the quality of the system of justice?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have to tell the Hon. Member that I do not share the premise and the pessimism of his question with respect to the Province of Nova Scotia, or indeed with respect to any part of this country.

Is the Hon. Member asking me to supersede provincial responsibility in terms of my responsibility as the Attorney General of Canada? If this is the policy of the Liberal Party of Canada, I wish the Member would stand up and say so. I think what he is suggesting that I do is to second guess every prosecution and every investigation that takes place in any jurisdiction. The Member knows that when he was in the previous Government it was very respectful of provincial jurisdictions, which was probably the only thing the Liberal administration did right in its whole term.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Prince Albert for a question and a supplemental and that will conclude Question Period.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

POST OFFICES AND RURAL ROUTES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have only one question for the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

Last Monday, again on Tuesday, and several times before, the Minister has told us that no one in Canada has suffered from a reduction in postal services.

Let me give the Minister an opportunity to make an honest man of himself and tell us that he will re-open and reinstate the post offices and rural routes in Domremy, Debden, Canwood, Weldon, Ayelsbury, Blaine Lake, Mont-Nebo, Crutwell, Alingly, Tweedsmuir, and dozens and dozens of others that have been closed in Saskatchewan and the rest of Canada.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has listed some of the places in which changes have been made in the postal system. I would refer the Hon. Member to an article in today's Ottawa Citizen dealing with the post office at Delcray, Ontario, nearby, being closed because the postmaster retired. The service was replaced with group mailboxes, and Anastasia Collins, 68, who lives across the street from the post office, looks forward to the group mailboxes which will be open longer hours than the post office was.

The point is that the union and the NDP would say that there has been a degradation of service. The person who uses the service and lives across the street is welcoming the change because it means that mail will be accessible for longer hours than when the services were operated by the post office on union hours. Changes do not mean deterioration, they mean improvement to most reasonable people.

Mr. Hovdebo: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: This is somewhat unusual. First, I apologize to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert for removing one question the other day, but I suppose with the disposition in the House such as it is, he can change his mind this afternoon and ask his last question.

CLOSURE OF RURAL ROUTE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister if he is suggesting that the difference between driving 22 kilometres for his mail and driving 80 kilometres for his mail does not mean a reduction in service to a rural route? My rural route was closed. I now have to drive 20 miles instead of getting my mail across the road.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the policy Canada Post has had in place since I have been the Minister responsible is that there is to be no closure of rural routes. There are changes in rural post offices. There are changes in post offices in urban centres as well. They are being removed from corporate run operations which operate for a few hours a day, to the private sector where they are open for eight, 10 or 12 hours a day in locations more convenient to the customers.

I recognize why the New Democrats, spokesmen for the unions, have to complain about this. However, the customers find it useful to be able to access postal services for longer hours than those available under the old system.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that I will hear the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap on the usual question of business, but before I do so I want to indicate that I will then be hearing from the President of the Treasury Board on a point of order arising out of Question Period, and I will then hear another Member on a question of privilege, in that order.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, you anticipated quite promptly that I intend to rise on a point of order to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to give us a statement of the business he wants to put before the House for the Government over the coming days, and, I hope, until the end of June, but if he cannot do that, at least for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon after the vote, we will continue consideration of Bill C-113, the Western Diversification Act. Friday, we will go to Bill C-74, the Environmental Protection Act, Bill C-92, amendments to the Wheat Board Act, Bill C-89, victims of crime, and then after Routine Proceedings in the afternoon, we will go to amendments to the National Housing Act, third reading of Bill C-103, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and Bill C-126, the Bretton Woods.

In the event that any of those Bills are not finished in the afternoon, we will deal with those on Monday and Tuesday of next week.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, while the Deputy House Leader is on his feet, I wonder if he could explain something. The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) indicated earlier that the Government would be taking steps to introduce legislation soon. Has he any indication when that legislation would be introduced? Would it be introduced within the next week?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have to deal with legislation once it is introduced. I understand that my colleague hopes to be in a position to introduce that legislation very, very soon. As soon as it is introduced, we will give it consideration in the entire timetable of the Government's business.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not plan to take up any more time other than simply to seek a clarification. Did the Deputy House Leader indicate that the Minister of Communications does plan to introduce legislation regarding the Canadian film industry?

Mr. Lewis: As the Hon. Minister indicated in Question Period, once she has the opportunity to bring that legislation to the House, I am sure she will bring it forward and then we will put it into the timetable of the Government.

ALLEGED ASPERSIONS CAST ON MINISTER

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of Question Period which relates to the answer given by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) in response—

Mr. Broadbent: Answer?

Mr. Riis: He asked questions.

Miss Carney: I want to direct my point of order to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). I think you will find, in checking the "blues", that this is a pretty accurate reflection of what he said. He said that he would not be the first Minister who did not know what was going on in Washington.

Some Hon. Members: Guess who he's talking about.

Miss Carney: I think it might be wise to draw to the attention of Members of the House that—it is interesting that the NDP will not even allow me the courtesy of raising a point of order in the House.

It may be wise to remind Hon. Members that they should direct their questions to the Minister responsible for the issue involved and not cast aspersions on other Ministers who, under the rules of the House, cannot answer in this forum. I think you might consider directing the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to cast such aspersions in a forum where we can show the rest of the country his vast ignorance of this matter.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the sensibilities of the Minister have been somewhat deranged by my comment. I took it that I was not casting aspersions but simply making a straightforward contention of fact.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer of the Hon. Member for Oshawa is unhelpful. I am speaking to the rules of this House, and the rules of this House do not permit such aspersions to be made against other Ministers, any Minister who, under the rules of this House, is not in a position to make a response. I think the cheap, shoddy shot of the Hon. Member for Oshawa contributes to the degrading of the atmosphere of the House, and I wish to bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do want to be consistent with the rules, but my understanding is that, as long as I was talking about Ministers in plural, I certainly would not want the Minister to feel that I was exempting any of her colleagues from what I had to say. It was a whole batch of Ministers, and my understanding of the rules is that it is perfectly acceptable, but I can well understand why she should be so upset by her past record. It is all right.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I am amused by the fact that the Hon. Member is continuing the kind of argument which I raised in the first place. It proves my point about the unhelpful manner in which the Hon. Member is dealing with this.

I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the rule and the issue I raised. The Hon. Member does not even know what he said. He said that the Minister for International Trade would not be the first Minister who did not know, so I am asking you to address the issue raised.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) has raised a matter and has specifically drawn attention to the interpretation of the rules. I will take the matter under advisement and return to the Chamber if it is necessary.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED REFUSAL TO ALLOW MULTICULTURALISM COMMITTEE TO HEAR WITNESSES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I had occasion just over a month ago, on March 22, to raise a question of privilege relating to a denial of the Government, through the House leadership refusing to present a motion authorizing the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to visit the regions of Canada to hear from persons in the ethnocultural groups and multicultural organizations in response to the report of the committee.

This morning in the legislative committee which is dealing with the multiculturalism Bill a very similar matter arose. I will not read Citation 16 of Beauchesne's again but only emphasize that Members of Parliament who have responsibilities to deal with matters of public policy need to be aware of what the Canadian people think about these matters. They should have the opportunity to hear from multicultural organizations on their views of the matter.

Three government Members proposed a motion this morning to bring an end to consideration by the committee of testimony by witnesses on Bill C-93. The Canadian Ethnocultural Council is the only non-governmental organization which has been heard to this point. The Canadian Ethnocultural Council has proposed a number of witnesses from organizations.

A motion proposed and carried by the government majority on the committee imposed a guillotine, a six or eight-hour marathon session in which selected witnesses will be heard. Submissions from five of these six organizations will be denied.

I submit that this is a prima facie case of denial of my privileges as a Member and the critic for multiculturalism in the legislative committee. If you agree with me, Mr. Speaker, and find that, I will, of course, be very happy to move the necessary motion.

Mr. Speaker: I think I can assist Hon. Members in this matter. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) referred to an event of several weeks ago in which there was a complaint. As it turned out, I did not have to rule on whether there was a question of privilege, but there was a complaint with respect to the number of witnesses that were being heard in another committee. I suggested at the time that Hon. Members on both sides of the House discuss the matter. As I understand it, the matter was satisfactorily resolved, or at least resolved without having to come back to the Chamber.

The Chair is not happy to interfere with affairs inside a committee, as I mentioned several weeks ago. It would seem to me, having listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon, that this is a matter which lies completely within the jurisdiction of the committee in question. It is very difficult for the Chair to see that, under the circumstances, there is a prima facie case of privilege.

The Hon. Member has as complaint and that complaint may, in another context and another place, be pursued. However, despite the force of the Hon. Member's argument and the obvious concern which the Hon. Member has for certain witnesses that were not considered, I do not believe that under the circumstances it is appropriate for the Chair to interfere.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 27, consideration of Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being three o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at report stage of Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts.

Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In view of the fact that the fire bell has stopped and we have 10 minutes left in calling in the Members, we will now call in the Members again. The bell will ring for another 10 minutes.

• (1550)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have discussed this point of order with the leaders of the other two Parties. I wish to make two points with respect to the fire alarm that just rang.

I wish to suggest that I am very concerned about the congestion which occurred at the west door of the House of Commons. It was very difficult for people to get out of the House. I suggest that when the fire alarm rings constables should be instructed to take whatever action they have to take to clear that exit in order to make it possible for firemen to get in if they have to.

The other thing I would say is that I am concerned that people were allowed into the building while the alarm was still ringing. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and this has been agreed to by my colleagues, that that breeds disrespect for the fire alarm. One day it might cause serious problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have asked the Sergeant-at-Arms to make a report and to advise the Press Gallery of what happened here this afternoon, as well as to ensure that the halls are cleared and that people respect both the Sergeant-at-Arms and the constables in that area. We will have a further report on that particular incident.

The first question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Mr. Harris moved:

Motion No. 2.

(a) by striking out line 14 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"the order, any area in Atlantic Canada, which may be a sub-region in a province,"

(b) by striking out line 18 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"employment by means of pilot projects and multi-year comprehensive area development strategies and action plans and other means as necessary."

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The confusion caused by the fire alarm has subsided. We seem to have our numbers and there appears to be a trend emerging in the votes.

Would the Opposition consider saving taxpayers some dollars and Members some time and allow us to proceed with the business of the House, namely, the western initiative? Would there be a predisposition to have the count on the last vote apply to the substantive motions which are still before us?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, Members will have noticed that we have been debating the very thoughtful amendments put forward by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) to improve the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Bill. We thought it would be appropriate to have the Members stand to oppose these very positive initiatives so as to identify who they are and also to point out that 133 Conservatives are not even in the House today—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). Mr. Harris moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 12 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 4 the following:

"(2) In carrying out its object the agency shall ensure that there be equity between the Atlantic Provinces in the allocation of resources, effort and programs in a manner to be determined by the Agency, and the Agency shall report annually to Parliament on the fulfillment of this objective."

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is always possible in this Chamber that people do get a little silly. However, I would like to point out to the House that the Government is willing to reach some accommodation in order that we can complete this voting in an efficient fashion. We have been doing some figuring. The direct cost is about $7,500 per vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 7 in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East. Mr. Harris moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 13

(a) by striking out line 7 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"port and promotion of enterprises and community economic development organizations, and"

(c) by striking out line 44 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has asked to rise on a point of order. I will recognize him, and then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I think it is the right of any Member of Parliament to express his opposition or his agreement with a vote as he sees fit. We have nothing to learn, I say regretfully, from the Hon. Member for ... what is the name of his constituency?

An Hon. Member: He is a Parliamentary Secretary.

An Hon. Member: The Hon. Member for Calgary something.

An Hon. Member: The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Prud'homme: You will understand that when they are disagreeable, Mr. Speaker, I try not to learn the names of their ridings. So the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has no lesson to teach us. Personally, I had to leave earlier because I have my Liberal nominating convention on Sunday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Prud'homme: Just the same, I think it is very important to vote this afternoon, even if I should be in my riding to attend to some unfinished business.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) on the same point of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I understand the intention of the Government and certainly the intention of the Government House Leader to try to come to an agreement to take the vote more expeditiously. However, what I do not understand is the choice of the messenger. When the Government House Leader asks the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) to stand up and ask us to co-operate, he is asking a Member who has been using the extension of the hours—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I regret that that is not a point of order. The next question is on Motion No. 8—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): A point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Baker moves—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): A point of order. They want to have co-operation?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Was the Hon. Member still on his feet?

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader to keep his Members in line, if he wants our co-operation.

[English]

Mr. Holtmann: Why do you not have another caucus meeting?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I think we will vote, Mr. Speaker. They do not feel like co-operating.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Baker moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 13 by striking out line 9 at page 5 and substituting the following therefore:

'sized enterprises, with emphasis on the utilization of primary resources, particularly the fishery and agriculture in Atlantic Canada,'.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Mercier (Ms. Jacques) is perhaps not very familiar with our Standing Orders due to her lack of experience.

I would like to mention that she entered the House after we started to vote, and that she voted, Mr. Speaker. I believe her vote should therefore be cancelled.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think there are some very rigid rules that should be applied when the vote is being taken. I know the Speaker has been very generous. There are Members on both sides who have been moving around rather freely—

Mr. Benjamin: Not in and out of the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: A person is not even allowed to move from one seat to the next, but that has been going on. If we are going to apply the rules, they should be applied strictly across the board.

We have become more tolerant with each other in this exercise. While I appreciate what the Hon. Member has raised, I think he would do well to check that procedure with some of his own colleagues on his side.

Mr. Rossi: On the same point of order. When we leave our seat on this side we do not come back to vote. We stay out and come back when you read the motion. But in that case, she did come in after the vote started.

• (1640)

An Hon. Member: Forget it.

Mr. Rossi: I will not forget it.

[Translation]

Ms. Jacques: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that he may need glasses, because I was here in the House when the vote started. I was in my seat. And I know the Standing Orders as well as he does. I may not have been in the House very long, but I know the Standing Orders.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We have to accept the Hon. Member's word in this House.

The next vote is on Motion No. 9. Mr. Harris moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 18 by striking out line 29 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"each province in Atlantic Canada and shall be broadly representative of the business, social cultural, governmental and educational participants in the economic development of Atlantic Canada."

• (1650)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are getting closer to five o'clock, which is the normal hour for Private Members' Hour. I wonder if the Opposition would be willing to facilitate the vote and the vote count if upon completion we were to call it five o'clock, so that we do not lose any time on Private Members' Hour, even though the Opposition has managed to wipe out Government Orders.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, now that the arrogance of the back-benchers on the other side seems to have simmered down, we may be able to come to some arrangement to try to expedite the remaining divisions, especially out of respect for the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) in whose name the Private Members' Motion stands.

May I suggest that the last vote be applied to the remaining motions, provided that once we have applied this vote, we call it five o'clock?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, earlier it would have been helpful to have that suggestion of applying the vote. However, just to make it clear, we have had undertakings from the Deputy House Leader on a number of occasions. While they were not made on the floor of the House of Commons, a number of those commitments have been breached.

I want to make it perfectly clear, and I want to hear it from the Hon. Member that, if we apply the last vote to the remaining motions, the Speaker will see that it is five o'clock. Again, the Government has indicated its intention and willingness to abuse the rules on a number of occasions in the last few days, and I would not want to give it that opportunity between now and five o'clock.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Deputy House Leader who is away on government business, I want to indicate categorically that we do not accept the notion that he has breached any agreement at any time. In his presence, Hon. Members might choose to raise that where it might be debated.

On the undertaking that I heard from my hon. colleague from the Liberal Party, what I heard was that on all of these substantive motions the vote on the last motion would apply to the main motion, of course, to complete the report stage. Then I guess it would apply in reverse, because the Government intends to support that. Then the understanding would be that we would call it five o'clock, Government Orders would be completed for the day, and we would move to Private Members' Business.

If that is what I am hearing from across the floor, I see no problem for government Members on that.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary understood correctly. That is what I suggest. I simply want to make sure that the names of two of my colleagues who were not in the House during the previous vote are added for subsequent votes. I am referring to the Hon. Members for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Speaking as Whip of this Party, and I hope speaking for the Whip of the Government, I would hope that there would be agreement that we would dispense with the bells on the concurrence vote, and that we could proceed in the same way that we have already agreed. In other words, we would apply that vote without the bells to the concurrence motion.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Chair could advise the House, within the process of parliamentary reform, the status of the proposed electronic voting process?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member could raise that with the Elections, Privileges and Procedure Committee. It would be a good item for him to bring up in that committee.

Is it agreed that Motion Nos. 11, 12 and 33 be counted as negatived, with the addition to the divisions of the names of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)?

Motions Nos. 13, 16 to 32 inclusive are negatived on division, agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Motions Nos. 34 to 50 inclusive, and Motion No. 33 are lost on division.

The next question is on Motion No. 11. Mr. Baker moved:

(a) by adding immediately after line 13 at page 9, the following:

"(2) The annual report referred to in subsection (1) shall contain:

a statement on the annual impact of the operations of the Agency upon the regional disparities between Atlantic Canada and other regions of Canada. The rate of economic disparity shall be calculated on the basis of a formula reflecting the economic disparity of those regions as measured by low employment, low earned income per capita and low gross domestic product."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The vote on Motion No. 13 will apply to Motions Nos. 16 to 32 and 34 to 50 inclusive.

The next question is on Motion No. 33. Mr. Baker moved:

That Bill C-103 be amended in Clause 43 by adding immediately after line 24 at page 17 the following:

"(2) The decision to separate the functions of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation from the Cape Breton Development Corporation shall be reviewed by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion and, within two years following the coming into force of this Act, the Committee shall report on whether the functions of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation ought to be reintegrated with those of the Cape Breton Development Corporation."

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Prime Minister) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It has already been agreed to and adopted in reverse.

Mr. Riis: It was the intention of the New Democratic Party to vote in favour of the motion. I am seeking clarification on whether or not that has been done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If that is the case, I would suggest that we take a vote on this motion. All those in favour of the motion will please rise.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis)—Veterans Affairs—Request for adjustment measure/Policy on veterans designated AWOL; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Horticulture—Bees—Need for replacement stocks/Request that honey producers be given government compensation; The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (M. Nickerson)—Northern Development—Negotiation of energy accord with Northwest Territories.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

The House resumed from Friday, March 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Horner that Bill C-264, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (instruments and literature for illicit drug use) be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When this motion was last before the House the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) had the floor. Since no Hon. Member is rising on debate, is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly, the Bill stands referred to a legislative committee.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for Private Members' Business has now expired. Shall we call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think there was some anticipation that there might be an opportunity to move to the "Late Show" a little early tonight. However, I am not sure if the Hon. Members who have questions on the adjournment debate are present in the House. I am not sure which Members might indeed be disadvantaged. Perhaps we could suspend for a couple of minutes to see where those Members are.

When we do things rather quickly we hate to offend the rights and privileges of individual Members. Perhaps members of the three Parties could look for their members to see where they are and to see if we can get them into the Chamber so we can proceed with the "Late Show".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), and the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) are the Members with questions on the adjournment debate.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, since I am one of the Members who has some comments to make at this time, I am prepared to make those comments now. That would allow for at least 10 minutes or 15 minutes for the other Members to be identified, located and brought into the House to make their presentations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there a Parliamentary Secretary in the House to respond?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Therefore, we can proceed to the adjournment debate.

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR ADJUSTMENT MEASURE POLICY ON VETERANS DESIGNATED AWOL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have an opportunity to expand on one of the questions I raised in the House earlier this week regarding the situation of the late Mr. Gordon Broad. In 1943 at age 18 this individual joined the Canadian Army. He served in Europe until peace was declared. Since I happened to know this individual personally and knew him for many years, I am fully aware of his war record. Mr. Broad served gallantly. He, along with his comrades, were prepared to lay down their lives so that those of us today are able to live and cherish the peace and freedom that we have come to know in our country and in our part of the world.

After peace was declared in Europe, Mr. Broad volunteered for the Pacific theatre and got 30 days leave before he was about to debark. At that time in 1945, war with Japan ended. He was then age 20. He asked for industrial leave in Nanaimo, B.C. His sergeant denied the request, although Mr. Broad had a job to go to in the interior of the province. The sergeant said that men were needed to police the grounds, but for the individual troops this meant that they would be hanging around to do KP duty while awaiting their appropriate papers. Since Mr. Broad had a job to go to—he was anxious to seek employment—he left on October 17, 1945. Some of his friends and colleagues at the time were applying for and receiving leave.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that amnesty was declared for 14,000 absentees or deserters, as they were called, although in no way would these individuals be considered deserters. They had served their country well, gallantly and had been prepared to give their lives. When the war ended and peace was declared, the young men saw no reason to remain. They were anxious to get on with their lives and with building their careers. This included Mr. Broad.

At the time amnesty was declared, Gordon Broad was prospecting in the interior of British Columbia and was unaware of it. You know from your constituency of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, that when you are in the bush prospecting you are neither listening to the news regularly nor reading daily newspapers and are, therefore, unaware of government initiatives. Such was the case here.

The 1946 Order-in-Council PC 3264 was made under the 1945 National Emergencies Transitional Powers Act. It was applicable to all service personnel who went absent on or before January 1, 1946, in Canada, and who had not been apprehended or surrendered themselves before August 15, 1946.

I received that in the letter of the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) of April 24, 1987. This Order in Council provided that such persons would be deemed never to have served in the Canadian Forces and consequently would not be entitled to any of the rights, privileges or benefits normally accorded to former members of the Armed Forces.

Mr. Broad approached the Canadian Legion a number of years ago, and through countless attempts was unsuccessful in obtaining the appropriate pardon. On August 25, 1980, a letter from the National Personnel Records Centre confirmed the Order in Council application to his record.

In early 1985, through the then Minister of National Defence, I asked that a review of Mr. Broad's case be undertaken, and the Minister of National Defence of the time wrote in a letter of June 18, 1985, that no discretionary power existed under the Order in Council for individual cases and those of the 14,000 other people affected by this, although dispensation had not been undertaken in any single case as was made clear in that letter.

On December 5, 1986, I wrote to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) asking that he review the case as Mr. Broad was not eligible for any benefits. At this time, Mr. Broad was in extremely ill health. Under doctor's orders, he had been prohibited from working. He had no income apart from his unemployment insurance benefits. I am sad to say that his wife was also ordered not to work by her physician. The Minister of Veterans Affairs sent a letter on to the Associate Minister of National Defence as he had no jurisdiction, he said, back on December 17, 1986.

The Order in Council still stands. Despite representations made on behalf of Mr. Broad and others, the Government has failed to take any action.

I wrote again to the Associate Minister of National Defence on March 10, 1987, asking if Cabinet would consider amending the Order in Council to enable Gordon Broad, after having served so well in the overseas theatre during the Second World War, to be eligible for appropriate benefits that ought to be available to veterans and particularly those who actually served overseas. On April 24, 1987, the Associate Minister of National Defence wrote that the whole question of dealing with absentees received the most careful and exhaustive examination, and in the end, it was concluded that the course of action which was followed was the best and most practical way of dealing with a difficult problem. This brings little comfort to people like Mr. Broad.

The Canadian Legion made representations as early as 1946 and again over the years, but there was no alteration to the Government's position regarding that Order in Council. Today, I simply want to make an appeal on behalf of an individual who served his country throughout his entire life. He has a long record of serving his community and his country in so many different ways. It would take literally pages to list the different ways Mr. Broad and his wife have served our country.

While in this case I am referring to a specific individual, the same thing applies to many, many others. I simply want to say that I think it is appropriate now that the Government take whatever steps necessary and whatever extraordinary steps necessary to ensure that these men and women receive a pardon and that their families be eligible for the appropriate benefits that any veteran who served his or her country in the last war is eligible to receive. I am really asking the Government to give special consideration to this and to related cases.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Kamloops—Shuswap has a particular case in mind and is really asking the current Ministry to revisit history and perhaps to change it.

The Hon. Member does know that under the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act of 1945, an Order in Council was passed which indicated that any Armed Forces personnel who had gone absent from Canadian Forces on or before January 1, 1946, in Canada, and who had not been apprehended or had not surrendered themselves before August 15, 1946, close to some eight months later, would be deemed never to have served in the Canadian Forces.

That was the decision made at the time to accomplish two things, to be fair to those who had served with distinction and had obeyed the rules in the situation in force at that time, and to recognize that some people leaving the Forces without the proper papers of discharge were doing so for some perceived actual or real advantage to themselves by not doing what was required of them at that time.

That would have created quite a large problem because there were about 14,000 absentees or deserters who fell into that category. Somehow their lives needed to be regulated. They needed to be able to return to civilian life and not have their futures destroyed. That was the decision taken by the politicians of the time. That is why the Order in Council was passed and it did indeed accomplish that.

Very strong representations were made on this issue in 1972. The issue was reconsidered and the decision was made that the original Order in Council should stand and should be upheld for the reasons which I have outlined.

The matter can be reviewed in an individual case if there is something on the file which indicates that a mistake was made. In the 40 years during which this order has been in existence, individual petitions have been made and files have been examined but no such mistake has been uncovered.

In response to the Hon. Member's question on April 26 the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) told him, and repeats today, that it is the Government's decision to abide by the Order in Council of 1946. It was fair and just and remains so.

HORTICULTURE—BEES—NEED FOR REPLACEMENT STOCKS/ REQUEST THAT HONEY PRODUCERS BE GIVEN GOVERNMENT COMPENSATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on April 19 I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) which was responded to by his Parliamentary Secretary. I asked the Government what it was going to do with regard to the tremendous crisis facing honey producers in western Canada.

On January 1 the Government closed the border to bees being brought into Canada because of a parasitic varroa mite which is affecting a number of states in the United States. This is having a devastating impact on some 2,000 honey producers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, including the Peace River country.

The Government assured these producers last July that they would be able to bring in replacement bees as they do every year for their hives in western Canada. However, on January 1 the border was closed. The cost of replacement bees from other countries such as Australia and New Zealand is almost double.

I asked the Parliamentary Secretary if the Government would be prepared to provide the extra transportation costs which amount to approximately $25 per hive. I got a zero answer, a comment about the Government providing assistance under the Special Grains Program for honey producers which, of course, has nothing to do with the varroa mite problem.

That compensation is being provided because the U.S. Farm Bill has effectively dropped the price of honey in this country from at least 60 cents a pound to some 30 to 40 cents a pound. The compensation being provided under the Special Grains Program covers that, but that is another problem.

The Parliamentary Secretary tried to smother this parasite infestation problem with another problem of the United States Farm Bill driving down the price of honey and effectively gave me no answer. Time has passed and the Government has not provided the compensation. Alberta has provided some but Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia have provided none.

The time has almost passed for transporting in replacement supplies of packaged bees from Australia or New Zealand. The Government has procrastinated for so long that we are now getting to the stage of compensation because the producers are effectively put out of business for an entire year. This will cost them tens of thousands of dollars.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will not prolong the agony these producers are facing and will announce a compensation program of at least $30 per hive, which is judged by many producers in the West as being more adequate compensation. It will allow them to get back into business in the coming year even though their income will be effectively destroyed for this year.

The Government has a responsibility to take some action in this regard. I hope it will make an announcement this afternoon for the benefit of these producers in western Canada. While it seems like a relatively small industry to those of us who are not directly involved, it does involve 2,500 jobs in western Canada and $10 million worth of honey. It impacts on millions of dollars in production of clover, seed, Canola and alfalfa because the seeds need to be properly pollinated. The industry has a broad impact across western Canada and compensation by the Government is definitely in order. It should be paid immediately.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the honey industry is divided on the issue of the ban on importation of honey bees from the United States and has been for some time. Its national body, the Canadian Honey Council, has not taken a consensus position to provide advice to the Government. Instead, this issue has rested on provincial beekeepers' associations of which all but one have indicated that they are not willing to live with the risk of importing bees from the United States.

The polarization of the industry on this issue has been emphasized by the strong lobby of the beekeepers who want to import bees from the United States, and, recently, some beekeepers formed an organization called Alberta Beekeepers for Mite-Free Bees to represent the producers who favour the border closure.

Recognizing that some citizens were not well informed about the prevailing situation and to clarify facts and distribute uniform information across the country, an industry-Government meeting was held on March 23, 1988. At that time, U.S. officials in attendance outlined the progress the scientists and regulatory officers had achieved in attempting to control the varroa disease and its spread. Agriculture Canada officials are still concerned about the completeness of the scientific data and the effectiveness of regulatory measures used to assist in disease reduction in the United States. To date, there is no indication that these will ensure 100 per cent control over the disease.

There are presently 19,000 beekeepers in Canada, of which approximately 2,000 are commercial. Together, they operate 700,000 beehives or colonies. There is a maximum of 120 commercial beekeepers who will be affected by the border closing measures, representing approximately 100,000 colonies. Of these 120 beekeepers, most are bulk honey producers and will hire about 500 people as seasonal help. At an average of 150 pounds of honey per hive, 15 million pounds of honey will be lost to production in 1988. The five-year Canadian average production is 85 million pounds. Therefore, the decrease in production is estimated at 18 per cent for an approximate value of $7 million at the current price of honey.

It is not clear how the decreased honeybee population will affect the pollination of clover and canola. While honeybees are the recommended pollinators of clovers, wild bees and leaf cutting bees also contribute to their pollination. The biology of the Canola plant also allows the plant to be productive without the presence of honeybees. This data has not been clearly researched and it would be presumptuous to attribute a dollar value to the impact of the losses of honeybees to these crops.

Alternative sources of bees have been available to supply the increased Canadian demand. Agriculture Canada officials, as well as provincial Government officials and some beekeepers, have been in close contact with New Zealand and Australia who awaited bee orders to gear up production all winter. We are familiar with the Australian animal health system and have confidence in its regulatory measures. There is no evidence that varroa and tracheal mites exist in that country and we have concluded that bees could be safely imported from both Australia and New Zealand.

Canadian beekeepers were also willing to provide bees to their fellow package bee operators. The problem, therefore, was not one of supply, but of price. The Special Canadian Grains Program should help to ease part of the financial crisis faced by beekeepers. The Province of Alberta has offered financial assistance to all beekeepers to compensate the increased cost of honey production. Unfortunately, other prairie provinces have not accepted this responsibility, thus creating disparities between provinces.

We have concluded that a fair and equitable compensation payment cannot be made at this time. Eastern beekeepers did not receive compensation when the border east of Manitoba was closed in 1986. It must be pointed out that the Government has never compensated for actions to prevent the introduction of undesirable diseases into the country. As I have already mentioned, some relief will be forthcoming from the Special Canadian Grains Program and should help to alleviate the financial burden facing many honey producers. A meeting on tripartite stabilization was held at the beginning of the month. If provinces and beekeepers agree on the program, there is a strong possibility it could be in place for the 1988 marketing season.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, positive actions have been triggered by the setbacks the industry faces and I assure you that the Government will continue to work with the industry to build a strong sector.

LAC-SAINT-JEAN—CLÉMENT M. CÔTÉ, BY RESIGNATION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, Clément Côté, Member for the electoral district of Lac-Saint-Jean, by resignation. Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime), as reported (with amendment) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West) moved:

That Bill C-89 be amended in Clause 7, in the French version, by striking out lines 20 to 25 at page 15 and substituting therefor:

"(1.4) pour l'application du présent article, la victime est:

a) la personne qui subit des pertes ou des dommages matériels ou moraux par suite la perpétration d'une infraction".

Mr. Speaker: The motion has been put. Does the Minister wish to continue with debate?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, this comes as a surprise to me. I was not expecting to speak at this stage. I had understood that there had been discussions between my acting Parliamentary Secretary and the Opposition critics—

An Hon. Member: He is doing a bad job for you.

Mr. Riis: There have been no discussions.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —with respect to this amendment, an amendment which is technical in nature. It simply corrects the French version. It is not a substantive amendment.

Mr. Riis: We were told yesterday what the business of the House was to be for today, and—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If it is the intention of the Opposition to stall this Bill for reasons unrelated to its merits, I would very much regret that decision. Bill C-89 has to do with victims of crime, and it is one which is universally supported.

Mr. Riis: It was not discussed as part of the business of the House for today.

• (1010)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If the House Leader of the New Democratic Party wants to carry on his negotiations, perhaps he could go behind the curtains and allow me the courtesy of finishing my remarks. He knows and I know that Rule 904 does exist. If I were inclined to invoke that, we could spend the rest of the day talking about this Bill. I do not operate that way. I think the New Democratic Party should try to be straightforward. If New Democrats are trying to delay and disrupt the proceedings of the House then let them stand up and say so. I understood that this matter had been cleared. We are quite prepared to go ahead with this other technical matter. If that is not the case and there is some problem that I have not communicated fully, then I apologize.

Mr. Blaikie: Don't be a cry-baby.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If anyone had a reason to be a cry-baby after what happened in Manitoba, the Hon. Members over there should be out there with Kleenex.

If there is not an inclination to proceed, we can have a vote on this technical amendment and show how childish the New Democrats are, and I will come back another day.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I came to the House with an understanding from the Government that there had been an all-Party agreement to deal with this matter. I was not expecting it to be first on the list until very late in the day yesterday. I am here and prepared to proceed. I hope we can deal with this Bill now, as the Government says. It is a step about which I would like to comment. It deals with the problems of victims and their legitimate claims for better treatment under the criminal law. I did come on the understanding that there was an agreement about which I had not myself consulted with the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, just to set the record straight on this matter, in the middle of this week I spoke with the Acting Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice. For many months the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has not had a Parliamentary Secretary to work for him. We are still waiting for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to appoint one. Apparently there is some difficulty getting someone to work with the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: I spoke in the middle of this week, to set the record very straight, with the Acting Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice. At that time I informed the Acting Parliamentary Secretary with respect to a technical amendment to Bill C-89 that we were certainly prepared to agree to it. We have supported this Bill in principle. We have worked to improve the legislation in the House and we will support the Bill at third reading.

Let us set the record straight in terms of the all-Party agreement. Yesterday I spoke again with the Acting Parliamentary Secretary. I spoke with the Government House Leader, and I indicated that we in the New Democratic Party were prepared to deal with this Bill early next week with very few speakers and to pass the legislation. In fact, I even suggested that perhaps in the middle of the week we might want to deal with the legislation at all stages, report stage and third reading, in one afternoon session. That was the agreement we made because we recognize the importance of the legislation.

Yesterday, immediately after the Question Period when the Government House Leader was asked what legislation would be before the House on Friday morning, he indicated that it would be the Western Diversification Act. Then he said that Bill C-74, the Environmental Protection Act would be called, followed by Bill C-92, amendments to the Wheat Board Act and Bill C-89, victims of crime. That was the order we were given yesterday afternoon at 3.15 p.m.

At approximately six o'clock yesterday afternoon we were phoned and told that all that was changed. The New Democratic Party House Leader, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), was informed about six o'clock yesterday afternoon to forget what was said, that Bill C-89 was to come forward at 10 o'clock today. In other words, forget what he was told at 3.15. This House cannot function in that way. Some of us have responsibilities in our constituencies and we must have some notice.

The Acting Parliamentary Secretary is a man of honour, and he will know that the agreement very clearly was that this legislation would be dealt with next week and dealt with expeditiously. There was never any suggestion to the contrary. The Acting Parliamentary Secretary knows that.

When the Government attempts to change at the last minute the order of important legislation, despite indications of full co-operation from the Opposition, it still remains our responsibility to ensure that the legislation is given the kind of debate that is appropriate. A number of my caucus colleagues who want to speak on this legislation are unable to be here today. They assumed that the Government would act in good faith and would proceed as it indicated yesterday afternoon and as was indicated to me. Because of that, Mr. Speaker, we are given no alternative but to insist on a vote on this otherwise technical amendment and hope that the Government next time will co-operate with opposition critics in scheduling the debate for a time that is mutually agreeable.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words regarding this important interchange. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) indicated that he was quite prepared to debate this matter today. I feel sorry in a sense that he was given information that there had been some understanding because, as my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) indicated, the Deputy House Leader said yesterday that today's business would be the Environmental Protection Act and we assumed that that was what the business would be. If we completed that legislation, we would then go on to the Wheat Board Act. Again, we assumed that that was what we would be doing later today. Consequently people made arrangements, assuming that what the Government said would be the business for Friday would be the business on Friday. But we found out late last night that there had been some changes.

In the meantime, I am afraid to say this but I say it with all sincerity to the Minister of Justice, the people who wanted to participate in the debate on this most important piece of legislation regarding victims of crime have left town for other business. I know the Minister knows that if people feel strongly about the issue they ought to have the opportunity to speak. I understand there was an agreement that we would be debating this matter presumably mid-week. As the Justice critic for the New Democratic Party has said, there was an indication that there would be a short list of speakers and that we would attempt to wrap up the matter in one day's debate. That is the way we do business, and I would like to think that is the way we will continue to do business.

We are trying, as Members of the New Democratic Party, to make the House of Commons work as effectively and as efficiently as possible. We are trying to conduct the business of the House of Commons in a business-like way, which means giving notice so that we can make plans and the debates can be informed and Members can participate in a positive way. We should deal with this legislation now. There is an amendment before the House. Let us deal with it and move on in an expeditious and positive way.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr.

Speaker, I would also like to provide some clarification about the agreement on the technical amendment. This week, in the course of negotiations with the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), there was agreement on having the amendment approved immediately. The amendment is of a technical nature and applies only to the wording of the French text. There are no amendments to the English version of the Bill.

As for the responsibility of the spokesmen for the respective parties, I think the House should adopt Bill C-89 which is extremely important to all Canadians.

As far as today's debate is concerned, the Government House Leader's office advised Opposition Members last Wednesday that Bill C-89 would be considered within the next few days. So the news did not come yesterday evening at six o'clock but Wednesday, when negotiations took place with the offices of the respective House Leaders.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that this is a very important Bill and that there was agreement among all three Parties on accepting this technical amendment.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment of Mr. Hnatyshyn. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the House that pursuant to Standing Orders, this vote will be deferred until six o'clock on Monday.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, April 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure—

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the record will show that I was in mid-speech when we last handled this Bill, and I would like to complete my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is very much in favour of an orderly proceeding this morning, and I am observing the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) who seems to be in agreement with the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), so I will recognize the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre on debate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I was last interrupted, I was drawing to the attention of the House some of the difficulties I thought would arise as a result of the mandate for the western diversification office. I was commenting on the mandate, which is that the Western Diversification Office will represent the interests of western Canada in the development of national policies and the design of national programs and will ensure that western Canada is effectively linked to decision-making in Ottawa.

I had noted that the amount of federal moneys going to western Canada by way of federal expenditures for goods and services had actually dropped during the mandate of this Government. It had dropped from approximately 15 per cent to approximately 13 per cent. I was saying that it was indeed very necessary for someone in the Government to start looking after the interests of western Canada.

I find that this necessity is very hard to understand in light of the fact that throughout this Government's mandate, three of the four western provinces have been very supportive of the Government. Members of Parliament from government benches predominate in western Canada. In Alberta, for instance, there are no MPs except government MPs. Yet the amount of money going to the purchase of goods and services by the federal Government in western Canada declined. I can see why the Government felt it necessary to do something to increase the influence of westerners in the Government.

We all agree that the Senate is very ineffectual at representing regional interests and has never really performed that job, if in fact it was intended to perform that job in 1867 when the Constitution was put together. In spite of biannual and sometimes even more frequent meetings of the premiers, their influence on the Government does not seem to be taking, even though most of them are supporters of the Government. The preponderance of MPs on the government side does not seem to be helping either.

Perhaps the problem then rests in the Cabinet. Does this Bill change that? I submit that it does not. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) will simply take on an extra responsibility. There will be no more votes in Cabinet and he will have no more power in Cabinet than he has now. How will western Canada be further represented and have its interests guarded, given that western Canada has already sent an overwhelming majority of government Members to Ottawa?

The Government's response has been to put another Deputy Minister outside Ottawa in Edmonton where he or she can speak on behalf of western Canada. Edmonton is a long way from Ottawa. The Premier of Alberta, when dealing with this Government, is finding that out. I do not understand how a Deputy Minister's voice will be any stronger with the Government than those of elected officials. I am concerned about whether or not the mandate of the Western Diversification Office will change the way western Canada is treated in confederation.

I would suspect that a Deputy Minister who is located in Ottawa might have more influence because of the way Ottawa Deputy Ministers function. There are meetings and official and unofficial gatherings. My understanding is that much of the interdepartmental work gets done at those kinds of functions. It will be difficult for a Deputy Minister located in Edmonton to exert the kind of influence that Deputy Ministers of other Departments influence over each other.

As I was pointing out the other day, there are some fairly strong Ministries with which the Western Diversification Office will have to deal. These Ministries also have an interest in western Canada as well as in other parts of the country and their final words tend to become law. The Ministry of Finance, for example, is now busily fighting inflation and the threat of inflation, even though in western Canada, the problem is deflation, not inflation. In my riding, property values have dropped by about 50 per cent since 1984. Yet the federal Government and the Department of Finance is fighting a war against inflation.

It is pretty hard to understand that we have inflation for those whose property values have dropped by 50 per cent, whether they own homes in small towns or farms in the agricultural area of my riding. For westerners, the focus on inflation does not seem to be a proper one. We are wondering who in Cabinet will be able to convince the Department of Finance of that fact.

In order to fight inflation, the Department of Finance has been raising interest rates. How does this help western Canada? Western Canadians are already carrying a very high debt load because of the depression. As incomes drop and property values drop, their ability to borrow money has declined and interest rates are going back up. How will they be able to stay in business with interest rates rising?

Another factor that goes along with the business of raising interest rates is a policy of the Department of Finance which the Western Diversification Office and western MPs and cabinet Ministers will have to resist. It has raised the value of the Canadian dollar quite precipitously, more than 10 cents in the last year. What does that mean for my constituents and western Canadians? It means that the value of their wood products, their grain, and the oil that they export is down approximately 12 per cent in real value in terms of Canadian dollars from what it was one year ago. Not only are they having to fight a wrong-headed policy for their region, but they do not seem to be getting very much assistance from the premiers, from the Senators, or indeed from the government Members from that part of the country. The Western Diversification Office, and the creation of that office, will have great difficulty changing that, because so far all of the elements have appeared to be quite ineffectual in dealing with the interests of western Canada.

Mr. Langdon: My colleague from the West referred especially to the problems of the agricultural economy, which have been devastating to western Canada. Since we have just had a national day of protest with respect to these agricultural problems, I would like to ask what his sense is of whether this Western Diversification Office is likely to provide any solutions or responses to those crises in agriculture, and what suggestions he might make as a counter to what the Conservatives have so far failed to do in western Canada?

Mr. Althouse: One of the chief things that could be done to address the problem raised during the day of protest is to act on some of the proposals that have been put forward by the farm organizations, and the Senate agriculture committee, which published a report yesterday with regard to farm finance. In that report it pointed out that there were some 54,000 farmers across Canada who were in jeopardy of going out of business in the next year or two. This is close to 31 per cent of the active commercial farmers in the country. That committee report proposed a form of debt set aside, or a period of time when the farmers would not be required to pay interest on the debt that has accumulated over the past years. This would permit them to have a chance to get their feet under them, so to speak.

This proposal has the backing of most of the national farm organizations. It would have a great impact on maintaining the economy, especially the small economies in rural Canada, which rotate around small towns and villages. It would keep people on the farms and provide the population that is necessary to maintain the service sector in those small towns and villages.

The Government ought to be pursuing this approach more vigorously. It has had nearly four years to deal with this. It is something that is known across the country as a $22 dilemma. The Canadian farming community owes $22 billion. This debt is far too high for the amount of income that can be generated from farm goods and services at the moment.

Mr. Towers: I wish to ask the Hon. Member a question, Mr. Speaker. The NDP was crying the blues when the Canadian dollar was devalued. Now the NDP is crying the blues when it is increasing in value. On which side of the issue did the NDP cry the loudest?

Mr. Althouse: Any time that values change by 10 cents, which is the equivalent of 12 per cent or 13 per cent, in the course of one year, there is a very difficult readjustment to overcome. The rapidity of this adjustment will be felt in the export oriented community, which is basically the farmers of western Canada, and it will impact on them just as negatively as the rapid increase in the interest rates that we suffered under the Liberals. As the Hon. Member will recall, interest rates went from 12 per cent to 24 per cent in the course of approximately a year and a half. That virtually wiped out a lot of younger and growing farmers, farmers who had added to their debt load. This particular initiative that the Department of Finance is now engaged in will have exactly the same effect over the course of the next year or two, mark my words.

Mr. Cassidy: I would like my friend, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre, to comment on whether the diversification fund will be put in a place where the funding will be equitably distributed among different regions and provinces in western Canada. When allocation of funding began, which I believe was prior to the legislation being adopted here, and there has already been some allocation take place, there was only what can appear like a politically motivated decision to make allocations and to talk about supporting different diversification projects in Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, but not in Manitoba. In fact, the tap was very distinctly kept shut in Manitoba. I believe that that reflected political intervention by the present Government. It was attempting to make the New Democratic Party that was in power there look as though it could not deliver, because the diversification funds were not coming through. With the election in process, suddenly the tap opened up, because the Government was trying to show that somehow if the people voted Conservative, that would do good things.

It has not created a strong new government there. The new government is weak. In fact, it lost votes from the last election, where the Conservatives had more seats and more votes than they have now.

Does my hon. friend believe that this politically motivated interference will be acceptable to westerners, and will make the best use of taxpayers dollars, thus achieving the needed economic diversification in western Canada?

Mr. Althouse: I think that the people of Manitoba showed that it was not acceptable. They gave Gary Filmon's Conservatives less seats than they had in the previous Government when they were in opposition, and basically told the federal Government that they did not like the activities that the Conservative Party had engaged in in that province.

The reaction of westerners in general has been pretty much a wait-and-see attitude toward this initiative. Most westerners see it as a reshuffling of money and programs that did exist, and the hanging of a new sign on a lot of old programs. There has not been a lot of excitement one way or another. I note that the small business community has indicated that it is very fearful on the basis of some of the initial actions under the aegis of the Western Diversification Office, which appears to be more politically oriented than economically oriented. They have questioned some of the grants that have been made.

I remind the House that the initiatives are supposed to be targeted toward small and medium-sized businesses, yet one of the first diversification programs has been the announcement to assist a very large pulp and paper operation in northern Alberta. Another initiative was the creation of a national park, which is a very laudable use of federal money, but does not normally fall within the assistance of small and medium-sized businesses. It is small wonder that many westerners think that this will be used as much for a political slush fund as anything else.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts. As other speakers have said, this Bill is a red herring to let the Government convince western Canadians that there is something new coming for that region of the country. Western Canadians are on to this scam and realize that this will not be the situation.

Government, of course, knows full well how regional development works and how it has worked for some time. We have had different programs. We have had regional bodies and regional programs. We had the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and then the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. As we go along it seems that the commitment of the early 1970s to regional development is not getting stronger but weaker. The Government does not have the conviction to proceed with regional development.

The four western provinces and the four Atlantic provinces seem to be forgotten more and more with each passing year as far as this very important principle is concerned. That is evident. If we look at the facts and look deeply into the structure of how the Government has disbursed funds, we will see that this is very evident. This evidence is apparent in the closing of rail lines, the reduction of postal services, and the general reduction of government services which are important if people are going to locate business enterprises in western Canada. This cannot continue to be the case. If we continue the present trend of centralization, Canada as we know it will disappear.

In Canada we have approximately 800 one-industry towns. That is why we have been trying to convince the Minister of Finance to continue with flow-through shares as a means of continuing real, meaningful regional development. If we do away with flow-through shares we will hurt the mining industry, which is a large support for those 800 one-industry towns. It is the one industry in many of the towns as is the fishing industry in many other towns. Flow-through shares are a very important part of regional development, yet they are not mentioned in this Bill.

On March 4, 1987, the federal Government announced the amalgamation of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Ministry of Science and Technology to form the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. The responsibility for regional development functions was given to ACOA in Atlantic Canada, to the Northern Ontario Advisory Board for northern Ontario, and to the Department of Western Economic Diversification for western Canada, the head office to be located in Edmonton, Alberta.

This is another reorganization, it is a shuffling of the cards and no more. Each time the cards are shuffled something falls from the table, something very important for regional development, something from the fibre of this very important process. When we went from DREE to DRIE we lost a lot of commitment from the Government on regional development. We are again losing a great deal.

The new Department of Industry, Science and Technology will deal with a number of things which will be mainly in central Canada. The Government has parcelled out a sum of money to northern Ontario, to Atlantic Canada, and to western Canada. It said "Here is your fund, don't bother us any more. This is what you are going to get, now be quiet".

In addition to co-ordinating federal programs in western Canada, this Western Diversification Fund, which will be $1.2 billion over five years, is going to be insufficient to meet the economic needs in western Canada. As my colleagues from Winnipeg—Fort Garry and Algoma have noted, this $1.2 billion over five years amounts to $220 million a year, which will not be sufficient to meet the purposes which the Government would like us to believe it intends for western Canada.

By 1983-84 a commitment for $1.2 billion was made to western Canada under the ERDA agreement. This was matched by the provincial governments for a total of $2.1 billion. It is obvious that the Western Diversification Fund is not generous and that it is not a new initiative by the Government. The question is what moneys which are presently in the system are going to be taken from other programs and put into the Western Diversification Fund. How much of this is new money?

The Government also wants us to believe that this system of regional development through a department or agency in a particular region is going to be easier for people in Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, and western Canada. The Government has told us that this money will be looked after by people from the region and will be more sympathetically allotted throughout the respective areas. That would be fine if that were what the Government really intended.

The recommendations and studies done by the Government on how to approach regional development specified that if you are going to have a regional agency, it must be non-political. You cannot put people in control who have political backgrounds or are in any way identified with political operations.

The Government has not followed this recommendation. It succumbed to the temptation of putting in people who have been connected with the Progressive Conservative Party. That is bad because, even if the Government did not intend it, as happens in many cases where there are political appointments, the first thing to be looked after is the political connections. That does not always mean that the best projects are funded. It means that the best political contacts are funded.

This is a travesty. We are telling the people of western Canada, Atlantic Canada, and northern Ontario that this is going to be something new, that the frustrations with regional development over the years are going to be met, that things are different now. However, things are not going to be different. Things cannot be different until the Government develops a purposeful will to get out of the political business in dealing with the welfare of the regions of the country.

I see that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) is in the House today. On March 29 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a question on the Canadian Exploration Development Incentive Program of which the Minister is well aware. The Minister of Energy and the rest of the Government are planning to reduce CEDIP considerably by October 1 of this year. At present CEDIP refunds one-third of investments of up to $10 million by particular companies in the oil and gas industry.

This was wonderful for small companies. While it may not have been the best program that could have been developed, it was an initiative taken by the Government. It was a step in the right direction that was much appreciated by small oil and gas companies in western Canada. This fund was introduced when oil prices were low in an attempt to help small companies that are so very important to the oil and gas industry in western Canada. They have come to depend on this funding, much of which is spent on exploration and development.

When oil prices rose. the Government felt that it could reduce these funds. Rather than a one-third refund it is considering a one-sixth refund, to take effect October 1. There is a significant difference between one-third of $10 million and one-sixth of $10 million, and our Party and small producers have suggested to the Government that rather than making a change by reducing the 33.3 per cent refund to 16 2/3 per cent, it should reduce the $10 million to $5 million. It would still protect the smaller companies and give the full percentage they have at the present time.

The Government has not responded to this suggestion, and refuses to make a commitment. I believe the Government is letting down the small oil and gas producers in this country. There is no need for a royal commission or an investigation in this particular area. The Government only needs to make a decision, but that is not forthcoming.

Let us consider the free trade agreement. It may seem to the energy sector that it will be able to sell more oil and gas into the United States, but it is not taking into consideration the ramifications of the omnibus trade Bill. If that passes, it will be a severe deterrent to our trading rights with the United States.

Last spring the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke to the people in Alberta and said that the regulations imposed by the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on the sale of natural gas through the pipeline system into the United States was wrong. He said that it was extraterritorial and that the United States had no right to do this. However, when the free trade agreement was negotiated, the National Energy Board was almost completely decimated. Its powers have been severely reduced so that even if it is able to function, we do not know if it will have any meaningful effect.

In return, the United States was required to do very little. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission was left almost completely intact. The agreement contains only a nebulous comment which states that the federal Government of Canada and the United States Government will enter into negotiations to try to work at reducing the regulatory network that exists in the two countries. That is not good enough. The Prime Minister told the people in western Canada that this arrangement would not be good enough, but the changes he was seeking did not occur. One must ask if the Government has any real intention to strengthen regional development in western Canada.

We have to consider the CF-18 contract and other contracts for which western Canada had every right to be considered but was ignored. We have not seen any real change in the Government's lack of commitment to western Canada.

The Government must do more than simply offer $120 million and ask to be left alone. It must have a comprehensive plan to meet the aspirations of western Canada. It must introduce such a plan soon in order to address the difficulties facing the West, with lower prices and fewer problems in the agricultural industry. The Government is only paying lip service to farmers at a time when families in western Canada who have been in farming for generations are losing their farms. Yet the Government continues on in the belief that western Canada will accept a pittance in the form of a slush fund and forget that western Canada will be ignored as a vital centre of this country, which it should really be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Is it the wish of the House to call it 11 o'clock?

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION OF FETAL RIGHTS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the recent Supreme Court ruling on abortion, all seven Justices said that they were not deciding on the rights of the fetus but that there is a valid state objective to do so. They also made it clear that the state interest in protecting the fetus increases as it develops.

The bedrock of fundamental justice cannot be based on arbitrary gestation periods. If life gains value as it matures, does it lose value as it gets much older? I think not.

Dr. Albert Schweitzer said: "If a man loses reverence for any part of life, he will lose reverence for all life".

The Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops wrote recently: "For us to accept abortion would be to deny our belief in the value of human life".

I urge our Government to act quickly on fetal rights, to develop comprehensive national programs that show abortion is no answer to unwanted pregnancies, to strengthen services to help pregnant women and unwanted children, and to do what is morally right and not allow abortion on demand.

ACID RAIN—CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the acid rain saga with the United States continued yesterday when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that a treaty on acid rain between Canada and the United States is inevitable, just as surely as summer follows spring.

Apparently the President will ask George Shultz to discuss Canada's eight-point proposal for an acid rain accord as a matter of priority with our External Affairs Minister. But in his remarks the Prime Minister did not mention that in January this year such a plan was examined by the United States and rejected by the same George Shultz. In addition, Michael Perley of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain scoffed at the Prime Minister's assertion that shifting the issue to Shultz is a sign of progress. He said:

This is just a repetition of what has already been done. It is a sign that the Prime Minister failed to get the President to act. Reagan never had any intention of doing anything on acid rain.

Unfortunately, we seem to be back to square one.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

MANITOBA'S BOND RATING

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in the April 28 edition of The Globe and Mail, Brian Milner writes as follows:

Manitoba's new Government is stepping into a financial quagmire with little room to manoeuvre . . .

That is the harsh assessment of Dominion Bond Rating Service . . . which paints a picture of persistent economic mismanagement by former Premier Howard Pawley's New Democrats.

The lessen is clear. An NDP Government means economic stagnation and social regression. Barret destroyed the British Columbia economy. Pawley did likewise in Manitoba. We must never, ever, let Broadbent and his gang similarly ruin Canada.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—FARM DEBT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, farmers and small businessmen in Canada know the economic devastation that was created when the Bank of Canada, under a Liberal Government, permitted interest rates to rise from 12 per cent to 24 per cent in a very short period of time. They could not adjust their price. They could only suffer and incur debt. This Government is also adding an equally devastating debt burden to farmers and small business people who export their products. By raising the Canadian dollar, it is reducing the export value of these products, again forcing these people into debt.

Farmers do not need more debt. It is inappropriate at a time when the Senate Agriculture Committee report of yesterday estimates that 31 per cent of Canada's farmers are practically insolvent due to debt. It calls for a relief scheme where the Government would pay all or part of a farmer's interest charges for a fixed period, for a restructuring of debt on more favourable terms, and extensions of repayment periods. It also calls for the establishment of a secondary loan market similar to CMHC.

The Government has used up nearly four years of its mandate. When will it address the problem, the $22 billion problem?

ORGAN DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to remind Hon. Members and the general public that this week is National Organ Donor Awareness Week. Our Government, through our Minister of National Health and Welfare, works with various agencies to help inform the public and health professionals of the benefits of transplants and the need for organ and tissue donors.

I invite all Canadians to take a moment to think about becoming donors and discuss their decisions with members of their families. Through organ donations, each one of us can give the most generous gift there is, the gift of life.

However, Mr. Speaker, my invitation specifically excludes all Members of the PD Caucus. That tribe should not be allowed to reproduce in any way whatsoever!

MINORITIES

THE FRANSASKOIS—ABOLITION OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are equal before the law. The Devine government in Saskatchewan is now violating this fundamental principle of a democracy by abolishing the Fransaskois' basic rights and replacing them with a misleading law that gives the government absolute discretionary power.

This kind of action by Saskatchewan threatens the future of all linguistic minorities in the country, be they English- or French-speaking. We do not want any politician to be able to play with the basic rights of minorities, which are already too fragile and vulnerable.

Respect for minorities is an essential feature of Canada, one which makes our country a distinct society. Minorities do not need fine speeches. They need results in order to live fully.

Bill 2 violates the spirit of Canadian society. It is mean-spirited because it rejects existing rights instead of guaranteeing them and then finding ways to implement them appropriately.

It is regrettable that the Government did not see fit to consult the Fransaskois because their demands are reasonable and their future is at stake. I believe that the Conservative Government has not played a constructive, helpful role in this affair.

EMPLOYMENT

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY SECTOR GROWTH

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, 40 years ago 70 per cent of the Canadian workforce was engaged in the resource and manufacturing industries. Today in 1988 industries using new-wrought information technology employ an ever increasing number of persons. Within the Canadian economy, total revenue for knowledge intensive industries in 1987 was $18 billion and those industries employed more than 230,000 persons.

The information technology sector is growing quickly. The knowledge intensive sector is expected to grow at an annual rate of 15.5 per cent, much faster than the Gross Domestic Product. The software and services segment of this industry is growing at an annual rate of 20 per cent. Information technology spending has accounted for 35 per cent of all R and D initiatives in Canada in recent years.

Canada's standard of living ultimately depends on its success in exporting internationally competitive goods and services, but our advantages in the natural resource industries are being severely challenged by other nations. Our future lies in exporting information technology. As the natural resource industries lose ground, knowledge intensive industries will provide opportunities for Canada to seize world export markets and bolster our standard of living.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Conservative majority of this House voted against a series of amendments made by the New Democratic Party to improve the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. These amendments would focus the agency on attacking regional disparity, guarantee fairness between the Atlantic provinces, and ensure that the ACOA board would be representative of all interests in economic development, not just a narrow view.

The Government refused to support these amendments and went further in this week's debate by having members of Cabinet, including the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), attack members of this Party for speaking out for Atlantic Canada on the grounds that they represent Ontario ridings.

With this attitude of the Government it is no wonder that Atlantic Canada is not treated fairly. New Democratic Members of Parliament from all over Canada will continue to fight for regional development in Atlantic Canada in spite of government opposition. This fight will continue until regional disparity is eliminated and Atlantic Canadians are treated fairly and have equal opportunities with the rest of Canadians.

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—IMPORTANCE TO RESOURCE EXPLORATION

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize the seriousness of the phase out of flow-through shares. The White Paper of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) issued in June, 1987, does change the value and use of flow-through shares. This vehicle has been used by small and medium-sized resource companies, oil, gas, and mining, to raise capital for exploration and development, especially in our remote areas. It has created hundreds of thousands of jobs all across Canada.

To explore is a high-risk business. Flow-through is probably the only way for juniors to raise cash in a high-risk industry. I urge the Government to review this severe situation immediately.

CORNER BROOK, NFLD.—DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to plead with the Government to get on with its commitments with respect to the people of Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe. In the Estimates brought down nearly two months ago was a clause or a provision for $17 million for harbour development for the city of Corner Brook, Newfoundland. This harbour development project goes back five years to a time under the previous administration. Nearly $400,000 was spent doing the engineering and design work.

It is critical at this time. Two container services run into the city of Corner Brook which is a major hub for western Newfoundland. We have a booming fishery, an export trade to the Soviet Union of some $900 million worth of fish. Quite literally, the economic activity of that Newfoundland west coast city is being choked because of inadequate harbour facilities.

The project was contained in the Transport Canada estimates two months ago. The engineering work is completed and ready to go. We are not talking about cutting a ribbon or cracking a bottle of champagne. We are talking about breaking the bottleneck that prevents economic growth and activity, and jobs in a region with unemployment of 30 per cent, from going ahead.

For God's sake, let's get the ball rolling. Let's make the harbour development happen. Let's let economic activity move ahead in Humber—Port au Port Ste. Barbe and, in particular, in the city of Corner Brook and let's do it now.

CHILDREN

ADULTS' RESPONSIBILITIES

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, a dark and terrible aspect of our society was revealed in Thurso this week.

We all mourn the fate of the young victims of this so-called sexual abuse ring that supposedly included the parents of the young victims. We all know that children who are victims of such criminal acts will be marked for life and that our whole society will lose as a result.

That is why I appeal to the sense of responsibility of all leaders in our society, including the media, police and our judicial system. I remind them that sensational revelations, sensationalism and irresponsible comments on the background of the accused contribute nothing to the situation.

We have before us Bill C-89 to help crime victims. This morning, unfortunately, the New Democratic Party took offence for procedural reasons and did not admit the urgency of proceeding with this Bill. It is regrettable, given the circumstances.

We must all pray for these young children who did not receive the protection that the adults in whose care they were owed them, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPRO AFFAIR—MANDATE OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the scandalous Expro affair has revealed several failings of the Government and the munitions export system. At the beginning of its mandate, the Secretary of State (for External Affairs) stated that the Government would never allow the exporting of weapons to a country at war. But, Mr. Speaker, it seems that this has happened four times and a fifth shipment for the Iran-Iraq war, to be sent via the coast of Iran, may now be in preparation.

It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that the present export licensing system must be thoroughly reformed to prevent a recurrence in future. Also, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) must look at the answers that his own Parliamentary Secretary gave in this House to see whether they are as honest as the Government is entitled to demand its Parliamentary Secretaries' answers to be.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ASSISTANCE FOR UPPER SAINT-MAURICE REGION

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I join the people of the Upper Saint-Maurice in thanking the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) for the grant of $2.3 million under the Community Development Program. I must also point out the excellent cooperation of the industrial commissioner and his team in bringing about this project.

The people of the Upper Saint-Maurice are proud and believe in its development potential. By carrying through this project, they now have the financial leverage to diversify the economy and a local decision-making structure working for the community. This is further proof, Mr. Speaker, that our Government believes in regional development, in its diversification and above all in its success through the participation of responsible people representing the community.

CHILD CARE

EDMONTON—PROPOSED FACILITY IN GOVERNMENT BUILDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we heard this morning the stark reality that in Canada the lowest paid workers are child care workers. We heard earlier this week, and it is a shameful fact, that somebody who is a guardian of animals, a zoo keeper, is far more valued in our society in terms of the amount of money that person receives than are child care workers.

We also hear the Government claiming it will come up with a national child care strategy. Well, actions speak louder than words.

Right now in the city of Edmonton there is a federal government building that is scheduled to open at the beginning of June. Under the previous Liberal administration we planned a child care facility in that building. Right now that facility has been put on hold.

There are parents who want to know what is going to happen at the end of May, the beginning of June. They are waiting to put their children into this child care facility.

The child care facility has been put on hold. We demand that the Government put its money where its mouth is and open that child care facility when the building opens in Edmonton.

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) speech to the U.S. Congress was a great success. It drew the attention of the American public to the very serious problem of acid rain. It was educational in that many people who live outside the northeastern states in America had no knowledge of the seriousness of the problem of acid rain.

It is clear from the response of callers to an open line call-in show on an American network that people in all parts of the U.S. are now taking notice. Americans have been calling their Congressmen to let them know that they want something done.

It has taken a number of years to educate Canadians about the devastating effects of acid rain. The awareness and education process of Americans was certainly enhanced by the Prime Minister's address to Congress. The general public in the U.S. is beginning to take notice of this serious problem. For that we must thank our Prime Minister and our Government for giving this issue the importance it deserves by raising it not only in the minds of elected representatives in the United States but also with the American public.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

ENTRENCHMENT OF FRENCH LANGUAGE RIGHTS IN THE YUKON

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this week marked a historic step in the constitutional development of the Yukon when an agreement was signed between the Yukon Territorial Government and the federal Government to entrench French language rights in the territorial Legislature and courts.

In recognition as well of the cultural and historical importance of aboriginal languages in the territory, an agreement was also made regarding a start on developing essential services in the seven aboriginal languages as well.

This is an important step forward in the Yukon. It recognizes the contribution of Francophone people within the Yukon and their rights, and also the important language and cultural development of aboriginal people, the Yukon's first citizens.

EXPECTATIONS OF POPULATION OF MONTREAL REGION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, a year and a half after Mr. Picard's committee submitted its report on the development of the Montreal region, the people of Montreal are still waiting for the space agency and the development of the Port of Montreal. The people are still waiting for really effective help for eastern and southwestern Montreal, are still waiting for housing assistance in the Montreal area and a real banking centre for east-end Montreal. The only answer the Government has given, Mr. Speaker, is to abolish the departmental committee. Montrealers will remember in the next election campaign. They will remember that it is the Liberals who defend them.

NATIONAL FORESTRY WEEK

CONTRIBUTION BY FORESTERS TO NATIONAL ECONOMY

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, Canada is about to celebrate National Forestry Week. Canadians have much to celebrate.

Ten per cent of our national workforce is employed in forest or related industries. Over half of Canada's forest product is produced in my home province of British Columbia.

As long as we continue to farm our forests responsibly, Canadians can rely on more and more economic growth in primary and secondary forest production. From Vancouver Island to the island of Newfoundland, Canadians will celebrate National Forestry Week next week.

The contribution of our foresters to our national economy is truly something to celebrate.

TRADE

UNITED STATES—SENATE'S PASSAGE OF OMNIBUS BILL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When he addressed the U.S. Congress, the Prime Minister did not utter a single word to condemn the omnibus trade Bill. He did not ask President Reagan publicly to veto this Bill. He said nothing to urge Congress not to override the veto. He sang the praises of his own trade agreement with the United States but not a word about the biggest threat to world trade and to his own trade agreement with the United States. Why didn't the Prime Minister have the courage to tell Congress that the omnibus trade Bill is not acceptable to Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for the simple reason that President Reagan told me he was going to veto the Bill.

M. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are waiting for the outcome, but Congress still has the right to reverse the veto. The Prime Minister didn't mention that to Congress, any more than he mentioned the omnibus Bill.

[English]

UNITED STATES TRADE REMEDY LAW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister told Canadians that U.S. trade remedy law cannot apply to Canada, period. That is what he said a year or so ago.

He also told Canadians that he would raise the omnibus Bill with the United States Congress. But he did not. He also told Canadians that we would get an exemption from the omnibus Bill currently before the Congress. He did not.

I ask the Prime Minister this. Where is the exemption from U.S. trade remedy law he promised us, and where is the exemption for Canada in that omnibus trade Bill?

• (1120)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition contends that I indicated that I would raise the omnibus trade Bill with the U.S. Congress and that I did not. He is, of course, quite wrong. I raised the omnibus trade Bill with the leaders of the U.S. Congress, with the majority and with the minority leaderships, both in the House and in the Senate. We had very extensive and important discussions with regard to it.

Inasmuch as the President of the United States had already indicated privately to me, and publicly to the people of the United States, that he was going to veto the measure, it is entirely appropriate for us to allow the mechanisms that exist in the United States, in the U.S. Congress, to unfold as they should.

There has already been indication on the part of those concerned with the omnibus trade Bill that any congressional override would not succeed. But that is for them to decide.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister knows that any motive of the President of the United States to veto the omnibus trade Bill relates, not to his preoccupation with Canada, but the domestic politics of the plant-closing clause of that Bill.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO WASHINGTON

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on the subject of acid rain, we had the Prime Minister's admission of failure on television last evening, when he said: "Well, what do you do? What do you do with the United States? Do you declare war?"

We would not ask for that, but we do want the Prime Minister to declare war on acid rain, and to tell the President of the United States that this is the single most important bilateral issue between our two countries at the moment.

My question of the Prime Minister is this. Why did he not tell the President and the U.S. Congress that the situation in respect of acid rain is of crucial and vital importance to Canada; that our priority is not a technological deal on nuclear submarines, but to clean up the environment of our two countries?

The Prime Minister knows as well as I do that the U.S. generates six million tonnes of acid rain-causing emissions every year, and that those emissions are killing our rivers and lakes.

Why does the Prime Minister not admit to the country that he has failed to persuade the President and the Congress on this very vital issue to Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is because the opposite is the case. There are two things that I want to say about this. First of all, there were suggestions in the House of Commons, before the most recent meeting between the President and the Prime Minister, that Canada should declare failure on the question of acid rain before going to the summit.

An Hon. Member: Another inaccuracy.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That was the proposal of the New Democratic Party and others in this House.

That was not the course that we intended to follow. Indeed, the Prime Minister placed before the President a summary of the position that Canada has put forward on acid rain. As a result of that initiative taken by the Prime Minister with the President, President Reagan has specifically instructed Secretary Shultz to meet with me in the very near future to go over the eight central points of that Canadian proposal, to see if we can make progress.

An Hon. Member: Oh boy!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): People scoff. Members of the Liberal Party, who did nothing for years on acid rain, sit and scoff when we stand in the House to report progress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The second point which is well worth making on the record has to do with the Prime Minister's success in dealing with the other half of the American equation, with Members of Congress. Let me quote for the record the response of some of the Members who heard the Prime Minister on this question—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Senator Moynihan of New York stated, and I quote: "I have never seen a head of government received as well as he was received today."

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He continued: "It was a brilliant speech."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Senator Moynihan, who enjoys more support in the Liberal caucus than the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does, went on to say, and I quote—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

PRIME MINISTER'S APPROACH TO ISSUE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my questions to the Prime Minister. I have listened to the comments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given that he was not invited to the meetings in Washington, he must be quite confused as to what went on.

I want to ask the Prime Minister about a statement he made to Mr. Michael Herman, a Québec maple sugar farmer. During a press conference in Washington, Mr. Herman posed the following question to the Prime Minister: "Did you achieve anything that would stop acid rain from destroying my trees?" And the Prime Minister said "no".

Obviously, the Secretary of State is totally confused as to what the Prime Minister said.

Now that the Prime Minister has admitted that the efforts of the last four years of his style and approach have been a total and complete failure, is he prepared to say what he is going to do now? What is going to be the approach in policy and strategy vis-à-vis the Americans on acid rain?

We now have the clear admission of the Prime Minister that his approach to this point in time has been a total and abysmal failure.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to a question being posed by a maple sugar producer and my answer having been "no". That, of course, is false. The Prime Minister said: "No, not tomorrow". Of course I did not expect any miracles overnight—

An Hon. Member: You have had four years.

Mr. Mulroney: Only the Liberals and the NDP would expect that one would go to a meeting on acid rain and that acid rain would cease the next day.

An Hon. Member: You have had four years to resolve the issue.

Mr. Mulroney: As the Secretary of State has already indicated, we did engage with—

An Hon. Member: You have had four years.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, while the Opposition ask the question, they clearly do not want to hear the answer. They know that the answer will be much more compelling than their rhetoric of "failure over four years in not having dealt with this fundamental problem".

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party is not saying that we must have miracles; what we are saying is that we want the representatives of the Government of Canada, when in the United States, to stand up for Canadian interests. That is what we want.

The Prime Minister seems to have changed his mind one more time. His admission of failure at the press conference has now become an assertion of great success.

Is it the position of the Prime Minister, now, that his approach, his strategy, his style, has succeeded and, if so, can he show us the results? Can he point to any progress that has been made over the past four years?

What we have had over the past four years is the total failure of the Government to bring about any further movement on the part of the U.S. administration on the issue of acid rain.

Can the Prime Minister point to any evidence whatsoever that his Government has done anything that is going to solve the problem of Mr. Herman and the plight of his maple sugar farm?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, three or four days ago the opposition Parties were making the case that no further progress could be made on this issue. The Prime Minister secured from the President of the United States an agreement as to a next step, a step that may hold a better prospect for change than we had thought possible before the summit.

That speaks to the progress that is available to be made with the U.S. administration. It is not settled, but there has been a significant new chapter opened, one which will allow for meetings between—

Mr. Axworthy: What is that? Having more talks! Tell us about that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am asked, Mr. Speaker, what that is; I am asked whether we are to have "more talks", and I am asked that in a pejorative sense, as though there were something wrong with holding talks.

Yes, we are having talks, and those talks will focus on the eight points put forward by Canada in response to the President's suggestion that he would accept the proposal for an accord put forward by the Prime Minister of Canada.

An Hon. Member: We have been talking for four years.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The members of the Opposition can pretend progress is not progress; but there has clearly been a step forward insofar as the position of the U.S. administration is concerned. That speaks to the progress that has been made with the U.S. administration. That is one-half of the equation in the U.S.

As to the situation with respect to the U.S. Congress, let me continue to quote the remarks of Senator Moynihan, as follows: "On acid rain, the Prime Minister was much more open with us than I think we have heard in the past, and he put it in terms so compelling, a case so clear, and a mutual one. He did not say: 'You Americans must do this like Canadians'. He said: 'We have to do this for one another'; and he is right."

That is the position of a leading Senator in the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): A Member of Congress, Mr. Oxley, said: "The Canadians are doing a good job. They are spending 10 times more per capita on acid rain control than—"

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

NITROGEN OXIDE EMISSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. We have just heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs say that a "significant new chapter has been opened on acid rain"; that progress is being made. In today's The Gazette, we have—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order. As Hon. Members are aware, at one time we had a rule against even quoting from newspapers. Certainly, I do not think, when quoting from a newspaper, that the newspaper should be waved around in the Chamber.

Perhaps the Hon. Member can make reference to the article without waving the article itself around, because it does seem to create disorder.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

• (1130)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I cited The Montreal Gazette. I have the Washington Post which I will not hold up. Its headline, from the very day the Prime Minister arrived in Washington, points out that the Reagan administration, while it was saying sweet words to Canadians on the one hand, was at the same time in Geneva calling for a right of the United States to increase its emissions of acid rain, the key ingredient, by some 20 per cent.

How can the Prime Minister say there has been progress when the United States administration, where it really counts in an international agreement, is asking for the right to increase emissions? Who is the hypocrite—President Reagan when he talks to the Prime Minister, or the Prime Minister when he talks to the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the word hypocrite is parliamentary, but Canadians themselves can judge on the basis of the facts.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party is speaking in this House about what he claims is a current U.S. proposal regarding the NOx emissions. The United States proposal for an emission credit clause has been deleted. The Leader of the New Democratic Party should keep up to date. He is talking about a set of events that has disappeared. He is talking about news that is two days old. The current news is that, as a result of the work and the effort by Canada and other countries, a proposal put forward by the United States at Geneva, an unacceptable proposal, has been withdrawn.

UNITED STATES POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, not for the first time the Secretary of State for External Affairs has missed the point.

While the Reagan administration was saying one thing to our Prime Minister, in Geneva the Americans were trying to move in the opposite direction to get increases in the right of emissions. That explains why the Canadian Prime Minister in four years of buttering up to Reagan, telling him everything he wanted to hear, does not have one bit of progress on the issue of acid rain.

Maybe the Prime Minister will answer, instead of allowing his Foreign Minister to answer for him. Will he give us a single example of progress in changing the policy direction of the Reagan administration, which has the only head of government in the modern world who believes that trees cause pollution?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Sit down. Brian can answer.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Member for Hamilton East has the courage to stand up in the House of Commons or can only speak from her seat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Broadbent: Issue the writ. Go ahead. It will be zap for you guys.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs has the floor.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I think that the attitudes taken by Parties in this House very much reflect our capacity to comport ourselves effectively internationally.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What does that mean?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Leader of the Opposition—

An Hon. Member: It is a hard job. Someone has to do it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The New Democratic Party is so deeply imbued with anti-Americanism that that is all it can express on any issue in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Let me deal with the substance of the issue which has been raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If we can quiet the zoo across the way, let me deal with that issue.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party misrepresented the facts as to what was happening regarding NOx emissions in Geneva. There have been discussions going on for four years regarding those levels of emissions. It may be that they were discovered by the NDP on the day that the President and the Prime Minister met, but they have been going on for years.

Simultaneously with the meeting of the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States on acid rain in Washington, Canada and other countries were successful in moving the Americans back from their proposals for more emissions of NOx in Geneva. Not only did we win in Washington but we won in Geneva and there should be some credit given for that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Joe Clark, Bush's running mate.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplemental.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Prime Minister goes to the meetings but the Secretary of State for External Affairs does the answering. That is called leadership in the Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker: In the interests of moving this matter along, I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question quite directly.

QUERY CONCERNING PROGRESS MADE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He mentioned that the Canadian Government made some progress on acid rain. Could the Prime Minister give Canadians an example, for the benefit of Quebecers and all other Canadians who are faced with many problems as a result of acid rain emissions from the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already done so. The President's instructions to Secretary of State Shultz to immediately engage in a dialogue on an eight-point treaty is, I believe, a gesture that deserves reflection, not criticism on the part of the New Democrats. Second, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has read some important comments made by U.S. Senators and representatives, indicating that the trend has been reversed and that we now have a far better chance of signing a worthwhile treaty with the Anmericans. In the United States two elements are important: the administration and Congress. And reactions from U.S. legislators have been most favourable.

I believe I mentioned that a treaty is inevitable between our two countries, and this important initiative involving the Senators and representatives will, I hope, have a positive effect, together with the initiative of the Secretary of State for External Affairs with Secrertary Shultz, and we hope this will result in major dividends for Canada and ultimately in resolving the problem. I think this should be reason for rejoicing, not criticizing, by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

ABOLITION OF MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns not the U.S. but Canadian issues and, more specifically, the Montreal region.

Last week, we heard the Government had abolished the ministerial committee on economic development of the Montreal region. Yesterday, the Mayor of Montreal said he was very upset because the federal Government had abolished this committee and that he was not satisfied with the Government's response to the Picard report. Could the Prime Minister inform the House why he abolished this committee that was so important for the Montreal region, without either consulting with or notifying the authorities in Montreal?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion previously tried to explain to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie what happened to the ministerial committee but as usual, he either can't or won't understand. And we can't do anything about that.

As for the Picard report, the Hon. Member has been claiming for months and would have the people of Montreal believe that the report recommended putting Montreal under trusteeship. That is his opinion of Montreal. But if he cared to take off his blinkers—I hope he can, because they must be pretty tight—and look at what is happening in Montreal, he would see that since September 1984, we have earmarked more than $500 million for development projects in Montreal. Unemployment has dropped, and development centres have been identified. Substantial progress is being made, although not necessarily in the area that concerns the Hon. Member, but a lot of work is being done in Montreal and that will continue.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, if I ever need a role model for stupidity, I'll know where to look.

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister.

Further to his Minister's reply, there was nothing in the Picard report about the space agency, the development project for the Port of Montreal, the pre-retirement benefits issue in Montreal East, the shipyards or the railway industry.

I wonder why, and I would ask the Prime Minister to at least respond to the issues that concern Montreal, because I know he is letting Quebec go altogether. Will the Prime Minister, at the official request of municipal authorities, the unions who also want the ministerial committee and the Chamber of Commerce . . .

If an official request is made by these three groups for setting up a ministerial committee, with more competent members, would the Prime Minister agree to act on this request?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that a Member who claims to have any credibility at all should rise in the House and lie to Quebecers and lie to the people of Montreal as he is doing.

It is clear the federal Government has undertaken . . .

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister would like to correct himself.

Mr. Valcourt: You are right, Mr. Speaker. I will follow their example. My choice of words was unfortunate, and I withdraw what I said.

I assume he has a poor grasp of the issues, so he doesn't realize what is happening in Montreal, but the fact remains he keeps saying nothing has been done in Montreal. What about Pétromont, the CF-18 contract and the announcement the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion made in the House this week that finally an agreement had been reached with Quebec? By May 15 there will be a tripartite agreement on the development of the Port of Montreal, and I suppose this clown will get up and say we aren't doing anything for Montreal!

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would like to return to his visit to the United States.

My sources tell me that the Government's new film distribution policy is a sellout that will give the Americans national treatment while attempting to buy the acquiescence of our Canadian industry with some sort of a grant program. Why does the Prime Minister not make the structural changes to the film distribution industry here in Canada that, first, were recommended by the film industry task force, second, were promised by his Government in the House in February of 1987 and, third, were found in the original draft legislation? Why does he not do that, or is it not really a fact that the Canadian film industry will be another sacrifice on the altar of free trade?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that assertion is categorically false. I do not know if the Hon. Member, who is a very busy Member, was in the House yesterday when my colleague, the Minister of Communications, had an opportunity to respond to questions respecting that policy and that legislation. The Minister made it very clear that Canada has been seeking the means to ensure that Canada operates as a distinct and separate national distribution market for films. That is the goal we have been pursuing, that is the goal that will be at the centre of legislation that will be introduced into the House by my colleague, the Minister of Communications.

That is a step forward taken by this Government for Canadian reasons. It improves upon a situation that was not in the interests of Canadian film makers, not in the interests of Canadians who want to see Canadian films, and not in the interest of Canadian culture, a situation that existed before. As in so many other fields, we are changing that bad former situation.

The Bill will be before the House soon, and I certainly hope that we will have the support of the Hon. Member if he is indeed interested in improving the quality of Canadian culture and Canadian film, and is not simply seeking to create false controversies here on the floor of the House of Commons.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Secretary of State would look at the gentleman on his left. Is the Secretary of State aware that the former Minister of Communications released a letter in which he noted the abandonment of the Government's film policy, cultural policy, and book-publishing policy, and tied it to free trade? I am not the one who is saying that, it is his colleague who is saying that.

I want to ask the Prime Minister, because Canadians want to know, just what sort of deal he made with President Reagan and Jack Valenti for a film distribution policy in Canada, and why has he sold out the Canadian film distributors, again at the altar of free trade? Tell Canadians what sort of deal the Prime Minister made.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be as direct as I can. What sort of deal, none. What sort of deal did the Prime Minister—

Mr. Waddell: That's not true. You were changing your policy completely.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is very difficult to answer. I do not know what it is about Friday mornings, but whenever an answer that tries to convey some facts begins, there is shouting from the other side.

The Hon. Member asked what sort of deal did the Prime Minister make with Mr. Valenti. None, no deal was made by the Prime Minister and Mr. Valenti.

The point is that we are dealing here with the need to address a problem that has afflicted the Canadian film industry for a long time—

Mr. Waddell: Like Ronald Reagan didn't want your policy. Be honest.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Ronald Reagan goes back a long time.

Mr. Broadbent: Yeah, the 18th century. Back to silent movies.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Minister will continue his answer.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the problems with the Canadian film—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): One last one for the Gipper.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I understand why the Leader of the Opposition is diverted these days, but—

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps we will move on. I recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE TEACHERS' LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Will the real Mr. Turner stand up?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am the Tory Turner.

My question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. I wish to congratulate her on her new-found responsibilities and to wish her well. I am sure by now the Minister is very much aware of the ongoing serious problems with respect to the hours of teaching of federal language training teachers across Canada. I wonder if the Minister can tell the House the status of the negotiations on this very important issue and when she expects to have a resolution to this problem.

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton for his question. I know he has taken a great interest in this matter and has met with the language teachers. I would like to reinforce the Government's support for dealing with this matter and for reaching a settlement.

The Hon. Member should be aware that on April 22 a mediator was appointed by the Public Service Staff Relations Board. The parties will start work with the mediator on May 9, and we hope that this will lead to a quick solution.

FINANCE

EARNED DEPLETION ALLOWANCE ON FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions to ask the Minister of Finance concerning the welfare of Canadians living in northern regions.

We know that Members of all three Parties in this House are urging him not to eliminate the earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares, which is an important tax incentive for the development of northern Ontario, the Abitibi, the Lac-Saint-Jean area, northern Manitoba, etc.

The Minister told us several times in the House that he was reviewing the matter and that he would be able to make a statement soon.

Could the Minister tell us today whether he has made his decision to maintain the depletion allowance and to restore the 33 1/3 per cent on flow-through shares so as to maintain the development of our northern regions and particularly our mining regions in future years?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that we have maintained the flow-through share mechanism. We are now looking at ways to enhance flow-through shares. To answer his question directly, I have not yet made a decision, but I will soon, possibly!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister to make his decision very soon, because based on the consultations I have had, flow-through shares are disappearing completely and the mining regions will no longer be able to find funds.

DEDUCTIONS FOR NORTHERN RESIDENTS—ESTABLISHMENT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I would now like to ask my question on——fiscal reductions for residents living of northern regions.

The Minister has promised on a number of occasions to set up a task force to study the question of deductions for northern residents to make them more fair and less arbitrary. Can the Minister tell us when this task force will be set up and when it will have to report to him or to the House? Can he assure the citizens of northern regions that the measures will be applicable retroactively so that residents will not lose benefits for the 1987 tax year?

• (1150)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear that I think in the way that the Hon. Member has expressed that question he has indicated that we are taking something away from northern residents. We are not taking anything away from northern residents. In fact, we have augmented the program quite substantially from a revenue cost of some $50 million in the previous years to $200 million under the changes that have been proposed.

The Hon. Member is correct, we are going to establish a commission to look at the very difficult problem of where those boundaries should be and how those boundaries should be established. I would hope to make that announcement at a very early date.

TRADE

REVISED UNITED STATES TRADE BILL—REQUEST FOR CANADIAN EXEMPTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct this question to the Prime Minister. Mr. Yeutter, the United States Trade Representative, said on television this morning that he expected a revised omnibus trade Bill, with Mr. Reagan's support, to be passed within three weeks.

Given that this revised Bill is still going to have within it many of the factors and many of the concerns that Canada has identified in the past, I wish to ask the Prime Minister directly, did he raise with Mr. Reagan the Canadian request that we be exempted from this omnibus trade Bill?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, who am I to doubt the prescience of a New Democratic Member of Parliament.

Mr. Broadbent: What went on at the meeting?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member is talking about the contents of a Bill whose ultimate details he cannot predict, and the consequences of which he cannot predict.

His point, if I can cut through what he said and come to it, is whether or not the agreements signed between Canada and the United States respecting trade between our two countries will prevail. The answer to that, as he well knows, is that they will. This is a historic undertaking that Canada has entered into. The fearful in Canada, or those who are captives of organized labour, are opposed to the arrangement. Most confident Canadians want us to go forward and to establish a free trade agreement that will help to guarantee the future of this country. That is what we are doing.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State well knows, there is no exemption for us whatsoever in the trade deal from the omnibus trade Bill—no exemption whatsoever.

Given that one of Canada's trade ambassadors, Gordon Ritchie, has stated that the trade deal legislation here is now being delayed "because we obviously must formulate our legislation with a very close eye to what the Americans are doing . . . " does this mean that our legislation is going to take into account changes which the Congress of the United States is pressing for in its implementation legislation?

In short, what has happened to Canadian independence?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, two quick things. One, as is the custom with New Democratic Members when they put the question, they tell part of the truth, not the whole truth. The Hon. Member quoted Mr. Ritchie on part of what Mr. Ritchie said, not all of what Mr. Ritchie said. I cannot use the term "dishonesty" in the House, Mr. Speaker, but certainly that practice would invite that term were it allowed.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the Hon. Minister that it is not allowed. The Hon. Minister will complete his answer.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If in that formulation I inadvertently bruised the rules of the House, Mr. Speaker, let me withdraw any infraction of the rules.

The second point is that the agreement that was worked out between negotiators for Canada and the United States in the free trade area sets forth the regime that will govern the commercial relations between Canada and the United States. It is consistent with the GATT. We expect that other legislation that proceeds from the United States will be consistent with the free trade agreement. That is the nature of the representations that we have been making on all levels to members of the United States administration and to the Congress.

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns a report produced by the Conference Board of Canada, in which the President, Mr. Nininger, also mentioned the Government's excellent performance. The report established a link between the drop in interest rates from 12.1 per cent to 9.5 per cent and our controls, and said the same about the drop in unemployment from 13.3 per cent to 8.9 per cent. It said the economic growth rate will be 3.8 per cent in 1988 and 2.7 per cent the year after. I would ask the Minister to comment on the forecast for economic growth in 1988, 1989 and 1990.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the question from the Hon. Member. I think that the Conference Board report is indicative of the type of reports that we have seen from a number of economists recently. As Mr. Frank himself stated, it reinforces the feeling that the Canadian scene is very positive. He also stated that there is no recession this year because of strong employment gains.

[Translation]

I am very proud of our Government's record on the economy, and I think it is possible that the kind of progress we have already seen will continue in the future. I think it is also very important to mention that the conclusions of the report of the Conference Board of Canada are similar to those in many other reports by economists in this country.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

SHORT-RANGE NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was reported that at the meeting of NATO Defence Ministers held yesterday in Brussels a decision was taken to upgrade the short-range nuclear weapons force in Europe.

Does the Minister support this decision? If so, is it not in fact a circumvention of the recent INF Treaty which would remove 1,400 nuclear warheads from Europe? Does it not make more difficult the present negotiations to reduce strategic nuclear weapons? Is this not a step backward for nuclear disarmament?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the preoccupations of the countries that are involved in NATO is to take actions which support the INF agreement that has been reached, and that create conditions which will make it possible for us to have other agreements made between the Soviet Union and the United States regarding further kinds of arms control, whether those have to do with strategic weapons, chemical weapons, or with others.

In taking account of the necessity to maintain a climate that will allow for further progress in negotiations, we also naturally have to take account of the actual forces now not covered by treaty that exist on both sides between the Warsaw Pact and the NATO countries.

It is in that spirit that my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, and his colleague Defence Ministers from other countries in NATO are holding discussions now.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that more and better nuclear weapons are the way to peace and disarmament?

On December 10, following the INF Treaty, the Prime Minister said, "Canada hopes that the INF Treaty will now provide the momentum for reducing the huge number of nuclear weapons that remain and lead to an agreement in Moscow next spring. This would meet the fundamental Canadian priority, stable security at much lower levels of armaments".

How can the Government support this agreement to increase and improve nuclear arms when in fact it states that its policy is in the other direction? It does not make sense.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hate to say this because it is a phrase that was used by the Hon. Member's former Leader in the House very often, but it is unhappily in this case true, the premise of the Hon. Member's question is inaccurate.

The Hon. Member is a serious student of these matters and he knows that there is a wide range of threatening weapons on both sides that must be dealt with, if we are going to achieve stability in Europe, and indeed stability between the superpowers. Not all of them are nuclear weapons. There are hideous weapons in the chemical weapons field on which we are trying to make some progress.

It is important to continue the formula that brought us the INF. That formula was that the nations of NATO worked together in support of common goals, making it clear to the Soviets that the only way the Soviets could get agreement was by negotiated agreement, that they could not force NATO to back down in any particular area.

There is a range of questions on the table. We are trying to address several of them, strategic and chemical very high among them. It is in that context that my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, and his colleagues from other NATO countries have been meeting and discussing.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TRANSCONA SHOPS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE WORK WILL REMAIN IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for either the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister of Transport and is with regard to the longstanding anxiety in Winnipeg about jobs moving out of Winnipeg, either to Montreal through the CF-18, or to Toronto, and sometimes to Edmonton.

Word has it now that the CNR is planning to shut down its reclamation yard in Transcona and move the work from Transcona to London, Ontario. Can the Minister answering on behalf of the Government give this House, and through the House the people of Winnipeg, an assurance that this will not be allowed to happen, that that work will stay in Winnipeg and will not be going to Ontario?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not been informed by CN of such a decision. However, I think my friend knows very well that this kind of decision for CN is internal. In making the decision management would look at all employment, not only in Winnipeg, but elsewhere in the operations throughout the country.

For that reason I cannot confirm today that this will happen. However, I know that CN is studying this possibility. If the time comes to make an announcement, I will have more comments at that time.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have approached CN about this and they have certainly not denied that this is happening. The Minister may know that this is all related to a policy developed over the last few years of permitting CN, and CP for that matter, to lease American rolling stock which is made in the United States, repaired in the United States, and is now to be scrapped in the United States. This means that all the jobs associated with that are going to the United States or being concentrated in Ontario instead of Manitoba.

I want an end to this. I want the Minister's assurance that this is not an internal matter, that it is a matter of government policy, and that something is finally going to be done about it.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill can be very passionate. I will only tell him that there are 100 more people working in Transcona at the present time than there were last year.

CORNER BROOK, NFLD.—DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister will know that a harbour development project for Corner Brook, Newfoundland, which was approved in 1983, was deferred by the Government in November, 1984.

The Minister will further know that the same project was contained once again, after three and one-half years, in the Estimates of his Department brought down in March of this year, only a few months ago.

The $17 million fund has been provided for in the Estimates since March. The previous Minister of Transport promised an official announcement on that project in order that it could start this year and we would not lose the construction season due to begin in a few weeks.

Can the Minister inform the House, and through the House the people of Corner Brook, Newfoundland, when that project is going to proceed? If he cannot give us an exact date, can he at least give us an assurance that the announcement will be forthcoming soon so that we will not lose this construction season?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am fully supportive of the project. Everything will be done to enable it to be announced within two or three weeks.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

FUNDING OF AGENCY TO ASSIST EX-PRISONERS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice as the Acting Solicitor General. A very important service to Nova Scotian ex-prisoners for getting re-established in the community and helping them find jobs, the Real Opportunities for Prisoner Employment, or ROPE program, headed by Rocky Jones, has had all federal government funding cut by the Tory Government.

Will the Minister look into the cut in funding for this important agency and restore funding to this agency which helps hundreds of ex-convicts every year? Will the federal Government bring back support for the ROPE?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we have evidence here of another flip-flop on the part of the New Democratic Party through the mouth of its justice critic.

I am obviously not aware of the exact circumstances of this program. Without accepting the premise, veracity, or accuracy of the Hon. Member's question, I will take the matter up with my colleague, the Solicitor General, and ensure that he gets back to the Hon. Member within an appropriate time with the information required.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, thank you for ending Question Period.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties on two motions. I move:

ORDER TO WITHDRAW ITEMS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by two Members who are unable to be in Ottawa today to seek the consent of the House, on their behalf, to have their respective Private Members' Business items withdrawn.

There have been discussions and I think you would find that there is unanimous consent for the following motion dealing with the withdrawal of these items. I move:

That Notice of Motion M-35 standing in the name of Mr. Schellenberger be withdrawn and that the order for second reading of Bill C-240, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act, standing in the name of Mr. Ravis, be discharged and the Bill withdrawn.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, while I have the floor, I move:

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to accept the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

The House resumed debate on the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, several times in the past we in the West have heard about western diversification. As far back as 1911, 1912, 1913 the hue and cry was to diversify. We moved into massive irrigation projects. The Bassano dam was built, and irrigation projects were undertaken east of Calgary and between Calgary and Medicine Hat. A few years later irrigation projects were undertaken in the Lethbridge area. All of that was in aid of diversification.

During the war, western agriculture diversified into a variety of vegetable crops, including sugar beets. In the late 1950s, early 1960s, we were again advised to diversify. The hue and cry went out from the four provincial Governments and the federal Government that we had to attract more industry, and we did. From the late 1940s on, we had tremendous development in oil wells, gas wells, potash mines, and so forth.

In 1968-69, we again heard the cry that we had to diversify. Grain prices had gone all to heck. We were up to our ears in grain, literally speaking. Farmers diversified into livestock, establishing hog operations, cow-calf operations, and beef cattle operations. We had feedlots by the dozens, all over the West, to the point where we were shipping too many to the United States, resulting in the U.S. imposing a countervail and imposing quotas on product going from western Canada into U.S. markets. As well, at that time the Canadian dollar was trading at par with its U.S. counterpart. As a result, feedlots all over the West were going bankrupt. To give some indication of how depressed grain prices were in 1968-69, one could buy three bushels of barley for $1. So much for that diversification effort. That was the third or fourth diversification effort to go down the drain.

I heard the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) say earlier today that the NDP had been crying about the dollar going down, and now we were crying about it going up.

I have never heard any Member of my Party cry about the dollar going down. I wish it would go down much lower. I wish it would get down to 65 or 70 cents vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar. It is when the Canadian dollar is at that level vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar that we do well with exports. As well, Canadian manufactured and processed products can better compete in the domestic market in competition with imports from the U.S. and other parts of the world.

If the Government of Canada manipulates the Canadian dollar to higher levels vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar, the producers, processors and manufacturers in the Atlantic provinces and the western provinces are going to have that much more difficulty, not only in competing in the markets in central Canada, but in U.S. markets, or markets anywhere else in the world.

Unless some fundamental change is made in policy direction, no diversification plan in the world will work. While there may be some salutary effects for a few hundred small businesses—and that is something about which I would not complain—the basic problem would remain.

The objective of this measure is to bring about increased diversification in western Canada and in Atlantic Canada, with a move to larger and more efficient modes of production, processing and manufacturing. No one can be against that. Who would not be in favour of that? However, since Atlantic Canada and western Canada have small markets, the problem then is how we get the products to the large market, in competition with those who produce, process or manufacture the same or similar products in central Canada or central and eastern United States. We have to compete.

We are quite happy to compete on quality, quantity, warranties and reliability. We can do those things in western Canada and Atlantic Canada as well as those in any place else in the whole continent. However, we also must compete against geography, against interest rates and against a Canadian dollar that is rising in comparison to the American dollar. Those are three major handicaps, and we have found out in the past that those handicaps have caused diversification ideas, as good as they were, to fail.

It seems to me that there must be a fundamental national policy of discrimination, not discrimination against the large industrial and manufacturing complexes from Québec City to Windsor, but discrimination in favour of the western provinces, Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario and northern Québec. One of the ways to do that is to do something about transportation costs.

In my province, there is a first-class poultry operation. It is located at Wynyard, Saskatchewan, 200 miles from Regina. The grocery stores in my city sell those chickens. However, over the last several months, we have found that there are chickens from elsewhere for sale in that store as well. Those chickens are from Georgia, 2,000 miles away, while Wynyard is 200 miles away.

Those chickens from Georgia are good chickens. There is no problem with their quality. The Wynyard operator also has an excellent operation. He has received grants and loans from the provincial and federal Governments. He employs a few dozen people. It is a family-owned and operated business and he pays a good wage. In Georgia, they pay $1.65 per hour. I do not think there is one single self-respecting businessman in all of Canada who would lower himself to paying that kind of a wage. That is why the poultry producer in Georgia can place chickens in the Regina market for just as cheap as our own operator in Wynyard, 200 miles away. That is one of the handicaps we face in western Canada and in Atlantic Canada. Therefore, we need transportation assistance.

The programs that presently exist must be improved, and as well, we need additional programs. If the national Government really wants to do something about western diversification, let me suggest that we return to what we were doing up until 1960 when anywhere from five to 20 trainloads of coal moved out of Saskatchewan, Alberta and eastern British Columbia per day, destined for Ontario. That was low-sulphur coal that did not cause acid rain. Since that time, there have been no trainloads of coal moving from western Canada to the Ontario hydro plants. Those plants are burning high-sulphur coal from Virginia and Kentucky.

When we were debating the abolishment of the Crow rate in the House in 1982 and 1983, one of the things we said then, and we say again now, is that we need not only a Crow rate for grain but a Crow rate for coal and a Crow rate for a whole host of other products so that the transportation costs of a manufacturing plant in Alberta can be equalized with those of a manufacturing plant in southern Ontario. Then these plants would have to compete only on the quality of their products, their reliability, their serviceability and their warranties. They would have to compete in areas where the real competition should exist. Unless those who start industries in western Canada and Atlantic Canada can get their products to market at a cost no greater than their competitors in Boston, New York, Toronto or Montreal, they do not have a prayer.

There is another little item that could be helpful. This Government has made much of the whole issue of western diversification. One would have thought that in four years this Government would have made a calculated and deliberate move to increase the purchases made by the national Government in western Canada and Atlantic Canada and decrease the purchases made in Ontario and Québec. That would be an example of discriminating in favour of the West and the Atlantic provinces.

What has happened instead? In 1984-85, this Government purchased 13.9 per cent of its requirements through Supply and Services in western Canada. In 1985-86, that figure went down to 12.8 per cent. In 1986-87, it went down further to 11.5 per cent.

We are not talking about peanuts here. The total figure for purchases in the four western provinces plus the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in 1986-87 was over $900 million, and that is only 11.8 per cent of the federal Government's purchases. Québec got 32 per cent and there is a smaller population in Québec than there is in the four western provinces. Ontario, with a slightly higher population than the four western provinces, got 44 per cent.

In the Atlantic provinces, the picture is even worse. Federal government purchases from the four Atlantic provinces amounted to 7 per cent of the total. I suppose the Atlantic provinces would have something in the order of 3.5 million to 4 million people. They received 7 per cent, which was down from what they spot in the Atlantic provinces in 1985-86.

I have mentioned two areas where if we want to do something about diversification and greater opportunity for farmers, businessmen, and fishermen, we would redirect a lot of the government purchases that are required. Some of it could be diverted from offshore purposes without jeopardizing some of the purchases made in central Canada. We purchased billions from other parts of the world and from the United States.

I mentioned the whole matter of coal. There is at least a 500-year supply of low sulphur coal in western Canada. There is not a single mine left operating in the whole Drumheller Valley. There may be one left operating in the Crow's Nest Pass. The only reason there are strip mines in southern Saskatchewan is because the coal is being used by Saskatchewan Power Corporation, otherwise we would not be moving any of it. Here is an area of massive development—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to call a quorum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): I see a quorum. The debate will continue.

Mr. Benjamin: I thank my colleague for doing that. I want my good friends opposite to be able to enjoy my remarks.

I want to mention the main items that would ensure the success of diversification and opportunity for Atlantic Canada and for western Canada; have the Canadian dollar go down, reduce interest rates and, if necessary, bring in limited foreign exchange. If an investor in Canada wants to invest in some processing or manufacturing, and he wants to do it in the United States, he could be given a tax incentive to do it in Canada and it will cost him if he tries to do it somewhere else.

We must also look at Canadian history and remember and realize that transportation subsidies of various types, direct and indirect, are an absolute necessity for western Canada and for Atlantic Canada to be able to diversify their economies and compete where the markets are in central Canada and the heavily populated areas of the United States. Without that, no matter what political Party is in power, efforts to diversify the economies of northern Ontario, and northern Quebec, Atlantic and western Canada are doomed to failure. It has been tried before without ensuring that the things I have mentioned were in place. I hope that the Government's program for western development succeeds, but I am warning that it cannot succeed unless interest rates are reduced, unless the value of the Canadian dollar in relation to the United States dollar goes down, and unless something more is done about subsidizing transportation costs for our processors and manufacturers in those other regions of Canada.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate regarding western Canada. As a western Canadian I must say that I remember when there were thousands of small and medium sized businesses in western Canada requesting assistance of one type or another from the federal Government to allow them to expand into new product lines and new markets, and we kept hearing that there was not any money available. Then the announcement was made that the Ghermezian brothers received $5 million from the federal Government for Fantasyland. They are one of the richest families in Canada, they have one of the largest and most powerful industrial business conglomerates in Canada; and they received $5 million from the federal Government.

We remember that because it seemed to send a certain signal that, if you were a small western business person or a struggling westerner trying to establish a business or to expand a business, there were no funds available. However, if you had political connections with the Conservative Party, and presumably had lots of campaign funds, you could ask for $5 million and would receive it. Many westerners remember that day.

They also remember the day regarding the CF-18 maintenance contract where virtually every adviser to the federal Government said that the maintenance contract for the CF-18 fighter planes should be given to Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg; in other words, a western Canadian maintenance operator. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) overruled every adviser and said that that maintenance contract would go to Québec.

That was a political decision, and the Prime Minister has the right to make political decisions. However, he should have had the gumption and the intestinal fortitude to stand up and say: "I am going to make a political decision which goes against all the advice that I have received, which goes against sound business reasoning, which goes against running a decent, up-front Government, and I am making this political decision". He did not, Mr. Speaker. He fumbled and fiddled around for days attempting to justify how he knew better than all of the advisers regarding the maintenance contract for the CF-18s. Of course, western Canada lost that contract.

We also remember that not long ago Preston Manning decided that he needed to found a new political Party in the West because the Conservatives had let westerners down. They had sent a lot of Conservatives to Parliament to reverse the dastardly deeds that Liberals had been doing to western Canadians for so many years. What is the record, Mr. Speaker? When he formed the Reform Party, a western Canadian Party, Preston Manning stated that the situation has actually worsened under the Mulroney Government.

Then a few weeks ago the Premier from British Columbia indicated that he had had enough; British Columbians were fed up with always getting the short end of the stick, always getting short shrift, being left out of federal government programs, and never getting their fair share. The Premier went on to explain that British Columbia represents a major portion of the Canadian population. It pays in excess of $11 billion annually to the federal coffers in terms of corporate and personal income tax. The number of federal government contracts and supply and service contracts were almost infinitesimal.

Earlier this week people representing the printing industry in British Columbia came to lobby. They stated that although British Columbia has almost 11 per cent of the population, it received less than 1 per cent of all of the federal government printing contracts. In other words, the lion's share of printing federal government brochures and of all printing that the federal Government does goes to central Canadian printers. The representatives of the printers stated that they wanted to get their fair share, and 1 per cent is not a fair share to British Columbia.

I could go on and on about others from western Canada who have registered their disappointment and disillusionment of the West not receiving its fair share.

The federal Government then decided to set up the western development office with a western development fund of $1.2 billion over five years, which comes to about $60 million per province per year. This was going to be the major government initiative to diversify the western economy.

The first announcement made was that the money required to develop South Moresby Park, $79 million, would be coming from the Western Diversification Fund rather than the Policy Revenue Fund from where money normally comes to develop a national park. A few days later another announcement was made. The funding for the Salmonid Enhancement Program for British Columbia, $53.7 million, would not come from the fisheries budget, from where one would normally expect it to come, but from the Western Diversification Fund as well. That is British Columbia taken care of for two or three years. It is like a shell game—now you see it, now you don't.

I decided that it was time to do a little research to find out what the situation was. I listened to one of the cabinet Ministers, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) from Manitoba, who said with regard to the Western Development Fund:

> It sounds like a lot of money, but in the over-all scheme of things it is not that great.

That was a Minister of the Crown saying that the amount of funds is not that great.

I noticed that the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) spoke to the Rotary Club just after the announcement was made and was quoted in the Edmonton Journal as saying:

> The recently announced western diversification strategy, . . . is certainly a modest step in the right direction—but certainly inadequate in its funding.

One of the most outspoken western Members of Parliament has said that it is inadequate.

Two days after the announcement The Financial Post said that there is no doubt whatever the potential contribution of Ottawa's western diversification initiative is truly piddling. The Financial Post called the amount of money piddling in terms of western diversification.

One of the senior officers of the Western Diversification Office, whose name I will not mention because it would not be fair to him, said on the public record that the fund is not all that big when you look at the amount of capital.

I could go on with a whole list of people who are members of the Cabinet, members of the Government, or senior officials in economic development portfolios for the federal Government, saying that this is an inadequate amount of funds to do anything. However, that is a little too close to the Government.

Let us go to one of the spokespersons for small and medium-sized business in Canada. Mr. John Bulloch heads up the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. He put out a report from which I will read only two or three things, because that is all I have time for. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business said that the Western Development Fund "is a political slush fund to support vulnerable constituencies".

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business calls it a political slush fund. Good for John Bulloch for having the courage to speak out and call it what it is. He went on to say that it is also a "bureaucratic slush fund available for other line Departments of the Ministers to raid in lieu of other national programs that should have their fair share spent in the West". It is a slush fund for the politicians and for the bureaucrats.

He went on to say that it is a "narrow and highly concentrated centralized approach to diversification".

There is no grass roots involvement; it does not involve the people. A few bureaucrats headquartered in Edmonton will be making the decisions on western diversification based on political slush.

Mr. Bulloch went on to say that the Western Diversification Office was "a confusing black box lacking clear criteria or policy direction, and on a collision course with a myriad of client groups who are inevitably going to see thousands of applications rejected and thousands of hopes dashed".

I hate to say it, Mr. Speaker, but that is what has happened. In my own constituency there is a group called the Thompson

Nicola Manufacturers Association representing 500 manufacturing enterprises in the Kamloops region. They are struggling to co-ordinate organizations and represent manufacturers wanting to expand their operations. They went to the Western Diversification Fund and requested a paltry $40,000 per year for the next two years. They said that within two years their income from marketing royalties and software sales would be sufficient to ensure their ongoing financial independence.

Did the Western Diversification Fund support the Thompson Nicola Manufacturers Association to diversify the economy of central British Columbia to the tune of $40,000 a year for two years? No. It was rejected. I guess we should be asking the Ghermezian brothers to apply for us because they obviously have the right connections. They can get $5 million to build Fantasyland in Edmonton, but we cannot get $40,000 to expand a manufacturing base in western Canada.

Let us go on. Let us look at the facts. We have heard a lot of rhetoric and a lot of flim-flam and shell games. Let us look at the facts with regard to industrial assistance between September, 1984, and March, 1986, the last period for which we have good data. Over that period of time British Columbia received $47 million, Saskatchewan received $18 million, Alberta received $16 million, and Manitoba received $13 million, for a total of $111 million. In the same time frame Ontario received $260 million and Québec received $430 million.

Once again the West did not get its fair share. We are not saying that Québec should not get that amount of money or that Ontario should not get that kind of industrial assistance support. However, we are saying that the West should get its fair share; nothing more, just its fair share. However, it is not getting its fair share.

Let us refer back to the report which the Canadian Federation of Independent Business put together for parliamentarians. They talked about procurement, the fancy word for the federal Government buying things from western Canada. They said that with 11.4 per cent of the population, British Columbia received only 3.6 per cent of federal government procurement. Alberta won only 3.6 per cent of the contract even though it has 9.3 per cent of the Canadian population. Saskatchewan has 4 per cent of the population and gets only 1 per cent of government contracts, and Manitoba has 4.2 per cent of the population of Canada and gets only 2.8 per cent of the contracts. However, Ontario and Québec together receive 76 per cent of all government contracts.

The source of this is not a partisan research division. It is the Canadian Federation of Independent Business in a report dated April 12, 1988, which points out that government supply and service comes overwhelmingly from central Canada.

Let us go on and look at Employment and Immigration. The Estimates indicate that last year the Department of Employment and Immigration spent $479 million in the West. Next year Employment and Immigration will spend $339 million in the West. That is a net reduction of nearly $140 million. At a time when the West is struggling to play its rightful role in the Canadian economy, rather than providing support or even maintaining support the federal Government is cutting back on employment funds for western Canada.

Let us look, for example, at all supply and service purchases from western Canada. In the early 1960s, before the present Government took office, the federal Government purchased about 16 per cent of all its supplies from western Canada. When the Government of the present Prime Minister was elected in 1984 that had fallen to 13.9 per cent. In 1985 that had fallen to 12.8 per cent, and in the past year it fell to 11.5 per cent. There are the facts in black and white. Under this Conservative Government procurement in western Canada has actually decreased every year.

The West has 28 per cent of the population, and when we are told that the Government only purchases 11.5 per cent of its supplies from western Canada we get angry and upset. That is why western Canadians are telling the Government that we have had enough.

Let us go on. I have piles of material here which indicate that in virtually every Department the West is getting shafted, the West is getting the short shrift, the West is getting the short end of the stick.

With regard to service contracts I will compare, for example, Ontario and British Columbia. British Columbia is representative of any of the four western provinces. The information indicates that in 1986-87, the most recent year for which we have data, Ontario received $206 million in service contracts and British Columbia received $21 million in service contracts. When you consider the population of Ontario and British Columbia, you realize that there is no way British Columbia should get such an infinitesimal amount of contracts in terms of money.

Ontario received $138 million worth of goods and services contracts while B.C. received $15 million in contracts. When one adds up all the different contracts, including industrial cooperation, equipment contracts, goods contracts and service contracts, Ontario received $360 million worth in the last year while B.C. received $41 million. This is more evidence to indicate that British Columbia, like all western provinces, has to receive what it ought to receive in terms of federal Government investment in developing economic infrastructure.

I have already talked about the CF-18 contract. I have not mentioned the gas taxes that keep rising by one, two, or three cents a litre. It is westerners who are hurt the most by an increase in transportation cost. Westerners must travel over vast distances not only in terms of moving goods but for personal transportation.

Mr. Valcourt: What about farmers?

Mr. Riis: What about interest rate policy? The Governor of the Bank of Canada says that high interest rates are required to dampen the fires of inflation in Ontario. What about the West? There are no fires of inflation in the West. Inflation is extremely low in the West, because many areas still face severe economic depression. The interest rate policy of the Government discriminates against western Canadian enterprises and western Canadian consumers.

Let us consider flow-through shares. I give credit to an Hon. Member from Calgary who earlier today stood in her place, as others have, to say that the Government must change its attitude about flow-through shares.

The flow-through share mechanism allowed small and medium sized resource companies in Canada, particularly in western Canada, to obtain the necessary capital to expand and explore for more deposits. It created tens of thousands of jobs in the most remote areas of Canada.

However, it did not create many jobs in downtown Toronto or in the heart of the cities. The Government proceeded to gut this program that was assisting western Canada. The prospectors, placer miners, the smaller junior mining companies and oil companies are on bended knee asking for a chance in western Canada. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) simply tells them that the Government has decided to do away with this program that provides so many benefits to junior oil and mining companies in western Canada.

It came to my attention recently that while there will be the Western Diversification Fund in western Canada, and a new agency in Atlantic Canada, the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology retains the regional development responsibilities for Ontario and Québec. This new, dynamic division of the Government will be responsible for regional economic development in Ontario and Québec. Will that not give an advantage to central Canada? Will it not have the automatic advantage of putting all these government programs and Departments at their disposal for industrial and economic development?

Will the Western Diversification Office play a co-ordinating role in light of the absolute failure of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in terms of co-ordination? The Departments of Agriculture, Fisheries, and Mining simply continued programs while ignoring the programs of DREE.

We in the West need an office that will play an advocacy role and will ensure that an issue like the airbus contract will be carefully considered in order to ensure that anything that is done with Air Canada will benefit western Canada. That is what is required.

I realize that my time has expired. My colleagues will have much more to say about this subject. We recognize that there is potential for the Western Diversification Office. It could play a significant role, but it lacks capital and it lacks a mandate.

As Mr. Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business calls it, it is a black box. We do not know what it does or what are its terms of reference. That must be changed.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question with my distinguished House Leader because I do not want him to be unaware of the fact that many parts of central Canada also suffer from serious economic problems.

My own constituency has a 9 per cent unemployment rate, and parts of northern Ontario have an unemployment rate well above 10 per cent. One must also recognize that there is a tremendous poverty problem within Toronto, as there is in other cities like Edmonton, Vancouver, and Halifax.

Will he indicate the alternatives we are considering for the country after the next election and outline an approach that does not discriminate against the West nor attempt to follow the traditional political rhetoric of blaming central Canada for problems which exist? After all, it is the Conservative Government, not central Canada, that is responsible for the problems the country faces.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), is absolutely correct. In examining the economic hardship facing people in the country today, we have been looking at what is happening in western Canada. In the last few days we have been examining the appalling situation that continues to exist in Atlantic Canada.

As the Member so aptly points out, central Canada is also experiencing severe problems, even in the largest cities. When one considers that the largest city in Canada has the distinction of having one of the largest food banks, I think it tells the tale.

There is an obvious solution. It is to have a new Government. A New Democratic Party Government would set itself apart from the others by a simple distinction. At the top of the list of its priorities, the goal it would set out to achieve as one of the wealthiest countries in the world would be full employment and strategies to accomplish that goal.

One of the first steps should be not only to have a goal of full employment; we should set targets for the lowering of inflation and interest rates. We set targets in a whole range of areas. Why not set a target to lower unemployment not only across Canada but in the regions of the country which the Tories have essentially abandoned? They have abandoned the North, the West, the East, and whole regions of central Canada. Once we start setting a goal of full employment and putting in place strategies to accomplish that goal, once we start setting targets to reduce unemployment, we will be able to make real inroads into reducing the number of jobless and getting economic development back on track where it belongs.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the politically motivated diatribe of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), and I must confess that over the course of his 20-minute speech I had to smile. As a western Canadian I remember full well that his Party was the Party which supported a federal Government that for years, if not decades, excluded western Canada from its fair share of federal government programs.

In 1984 the Canadian voters in western Canada got the groom by reducing the western representation in the Liberal Party, but we did not get the bride. We reduced her effect, but we will get her in 1988 or 1989.

What we are hearing today is this born again interest in western Canada of the New Democratic Party, the Party that supported the Liberal Party of Canada. The Hon. Member talked about percentages in his speech. He said that British Columbia, having 10 per cent of Canada's population, was receiving 10 per cent or less of some federal government programs, not quite a proportionate share, in some cases.

I understand his argument, but is he suggesting that the sword cut both ways? The Government initiated $1 billion in reforestation funding, of which 30 per cent goes to British Columbia. Should that 30 per cent be reduced to 10 per cent? B.C. sends 30 per cent of unsolicited proposals to the Department of Supply and Services. Should that be reduced to 10 per cent, as well? How about the world's largest ice-breaker commissioned by the Government, $500 million worth? Should we build 10 per cent of that in British Columbia?

What about Phase II of the Salmonid Enhancement Program of $200 million? Should British Columbia only get 10 per cent of that? Is that what the Hon. Member wants, or is he just being selective with his figures? Is he suggesting that British Columbia be restricted to 10 per cent of all federal government programs, that all federal government funding be proportioned according to population, or is he simply having fun with figures this afternoon?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear the Hon. Member refer to the forest industry. I would think he would be embarrassed to refer to the forest industry, because his Government promised the people of British Columbia, indeed the people of Canada, that if elected it would put in place a full ministry of forests. The Tories failed to do that. Once again, another lie to the people of Canada. They broke another promise because they quite clearly said this was a priority. They are four years into office and we still have not seen this promise delivered. Again I say, another broken promise or even a lie.

Where is the Polar 8? We have heard some announcements, but the action is not there. The Hon. Member asks if British Columbia or the West should have its fair share? Not only should the west have its fair share but, for the next number of years—perhaps even for a two-year or three-year period—could we not have a program called economic affirmative action? Every Canadian understands that the West has been short-changed right from the very beginning. For the next few years, let us have not only a fair share but perhaps even a little more to allow, for instance, the manufacturing sector to be buoyed up. The printers in British Columbia came to Ottawa the other day asking for a fair share.

We are talking about regional industrial support and encouragement. Under the trade deal with the United States that will be impossible. That is what the Hon. Member is suggesting. He advocates, on the one hand, a free trade deal with the United States knowing full well that the minute it is signed regional development programs to support the West will be pulled right away. In other words, he wants to impoverish westerners and discriminate against western Canadians in terms of economic development.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party in this debate. As a Member of Parliament from the far eastern part of Canada, I want to put on the record that Atlantic Canadian New Democrats also support regional development in western Canada. I know the Deputy House Leader spoke out Wednesday against people from Ontario who supported regional development in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Lewis: That's nonsense.

Mr. Harris: I know the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) attacked the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) for supporting regional development in Atlantic Canada, but I want to put on record that I support regional development in western Canada as well.

Would the Hon. Member care to comment on the attitude the Government seems to have about the fact that only people from eastern Canada can talk about eastern regional development and only people from western Canada can talk about western regional development?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we have heard comments in this House that only can be called regional racism. It was a very sad day when a leader for the government benches felt it was appropriate that debate on an issue of particular interest to Atlantic Canada, be restricted to only Members from Atlantic Canada. I think it should be made clear that those who represent the New Democratic Party represent all Canadians. We represent northerners, easterners, westerners, and people from central Canada. I do not apologize for that. I do not apologize for being part of a Party which cares about Canadians no matter where they live.

I realize the Conservatives have regional interests, that they come from a particular region and do not care about another particular region, but I am proud to be part of a Party that puts Canadians first no matter where they happen to live.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to know where to begin. Perhaps I will pick up on the last exchange which so clearly identifies the two sides to the New Democratic personality. Those Members talk about people from all across Canada and not being afraid to stand up and talk on behalf of all Canadians. No one in this Chamber in the last nine years has fought more often than I have to ensure that all Canadians are first-class Canadians no matter where they live.

Members of the New Democratic Party go on about the need to talk, and all of us have to have a 24-hour memory. Yesterday afternoon at between three o'clock and five o'clock when we could have been talking about western diversification, we spent one quarter of a million dollars of taxpayers' money bobbing up and down in the Chamber, getting exercise every six minutes when we stood to vote, instead of talking about western diversification.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The point the Hon Member just put on the record is categorically false. There were 133 Tories missing from Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I please ask all Members to be relevant to the Bill. Thank you very much.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, there is a parliamentary tradition that goes back over centuries. We have evolved our right to freedom of speech. We have evolved principles to stop the tyranny of the majority, but we have also evolved principles to stop the tyranny of the minority. The New Democratic Party, aided and abetted by the Liberal Party of Canada, this week stalled support for victims of crime. They have stopped perhaps the most significant environmental Bill in 25 years, a Bill that was given over 100 amendments in committee and more in the House of Commons at report stage. This Bill needs to be in place to protect the health, environment and heritage of Canadians. That is what they have done this week. Then, when we brought on the Bill today to help western Canada we get a filibuster, and political gamesmanship—

• (1340)

Ms. Jewett: Who is filibustering now?

Mr. Hawkes: There is a place for tactics of filibuster, that is, with respect to matters of fundamental principle.

I remember sitting in this place in 1980 when a constitutional proposal was brought forward and the Government of the day with its majority tried to ram it through. It was legitimate to use every rule of this Chamber because the principle was so fundamental to the future of our nation—

Ms. Mitchell: Is western Canada not legitimate?

Mr. Hawkes: It is an abomination of common sense. It is an abomination, an absolute abomination of why Members opposite receive an indemnity, money, from the taxpayers of the country to do the work of this Chamber, that is, to help—

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member, theoretically, is debating the Western Diversification Bill. I would ask Your Honour to point out to the Hon. Member that ascribing motives to Members of this House with respect to their votes is completely against the rules of the House.

Further, I would ask that when the Hon. Member reminds Canadians of the actions of the Conservative Party when it was in Opposition, he not forget that it was not just a question of working within the rules. I was here that night in the House when he and some of his colleagues stormed up to the chair. They stormed to the chair and shook their fists at the Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Robinson: That Member was one of them. Now he has the audacity to stand up here to criticize us for speaking out for Canadians. Let us have an end to hypocrisy.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, this Chamber has set aside in its wisdom approximately four hours a day—perhaps a little less; it probably comes out to three and a half hours—for the conduct of public business, for the public discussion on television of that public business. That is not much time. To stand up to say: "We want to talk", and to think back over this week the number of times the Opposition has caused bells to be rung, bells to be rung when no speaking can occur—

Mr. Fulton: Who rang the bells this morning? The Tories!

Mr. Hawkes: What has to be done with members of the New Democratic Party in particular is to listen carefully to what they say and then contrast that with what they do. Contrast that with what they do.

There was a very important evening in the history of this country in December of 1979. They moved a motion stating that they had no confidence in the budgetary plans of the Government.

Mr. Axworthy: Neither did anyone else!

Mr. Hawkes: They moved that same motion repeatedly on an annual basis every time we brought in a Budget. History tells us, as does the welfare council, that the Budget brought in by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) in 1979 was the fairest Budget to the poor people of Canada in the decade—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to relate the 1979 Budget of the Hon. Member for St. John's West to this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Filibuster!

Mr. Axworthy: He cannot. He is stuck in 1979. He is a typical Tory. He cannot get to the present.

Mr. Hawkes: If we continue to be able to pass our Budgets, our legislation, and our western diversification plans, we will continue to take people off the poverty rolls.

Ms. Jewett: You will? What a laugh!

Mr. Hawkes: They will have no one to talk to because everyone will be healthy, wealthy, and wise. Members of that Party do not want that.

Mr. Riis: Call an election, Jim.

Mr. Hawkes: They say they do but they act as if they do not. That is the NDP for you. They did it in 1979 very graphically for the whole nation. It was the the most fair Budget to the poor people of the country, and they defeated it.

Mr. Riis: The people of Canada defeated it.

Mr. Hawkes: And the Budget never came into being. Those poor people got poorer because of the social democratic alliance between two Parties. They joined together to keep people in poverty, to continue to receive government cheques, and to vote for them.

Why do we need a western diversification program in 1988? We need it today because the two social democratic Parties, in alliance, with public policies over time, 17 to 18 years in a row, created a situation, an advantage for certain regions of the country, and a disadvantage for other regions so that they could send out more cheques. This Party believes in sending out more jobs—more jobs for Atlantic Canada, more jobs for western Canada. In three and a half years we have created one and a quarter million new jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Go to Calgary and say that.

Mr. Hawkes: One half a million Canadians are now off the poverty rolls.

Ms. Dewar: Not in British Columbia.

Mr. Hawkes: There is a significantly increased standard of living for seniors in the country, and retired people. That is what this legislation is all about. It is about jobs for friends of Members opposite, their neighbours who live in their neighbourhood in western Canada and who are unemployed today as we do not have policies—

Some Hon. Members: That's right!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: We do not pass legislation that provides the help we need. We listen to bells instead of passing legislation. We get filibuster, filibuster. We do not pass the laws that will help Canadians.

I will make Members an offer right this minute. Do we have unanimous consent to go beyond the normal hours of adjournment after Private Members' Hour to continue this debate and to pass this Bill? Can we have that from the Opposition?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Hawkes: "No", they say. They say: "We want to help the West". Will they give us unanimous consent to talk? They say that they believe in democracy. They say that they will not go on, that we will not have freedom of speech, and that we will not pass the Bill. They say that they will filibuster and ring the bells.

Mr. Riis: Go to the people. Let them decide.

Mr. Hawkes: The tyranny of this minority cannot continue. There is a will on the government side to pass the Bills that will help the victims of crime, that will help the environment, that will help Atlantic Canada, and that will help western Canada.

For that and many other reasons, but to stop at least a tiny portion of this filibuster and to move this Bill forward one small step, I move:

That this question be now put.

Mr. Benjamin: Thanks, Jim, I can make another speech now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: Debate!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) on debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in the next 10 minutes I will have a chance to speak on this matter. I find it interesting that the Parliamentary Secretary who got up in the House is the same person who charged the Deputy Speaker many years ago. I find it interesting that he did not respect the procedures of the House of Commons on that late night many years ago when he physically charged the Deputy Speaker. Today in the House 10 minutes prior to the end of debate, he has moved a motion to cut off debate.

One of the problems we have had in the House is that when the Liberals were in government they ignored the minority. The Conservatives in those days used to rise in the House and say that the minority, the opposition Parties were being ignored. They made the claim that there was no chance for debate in the House of Commons; that the Liberals were ignoring the voices of the West, ignoring those who said that Parliament has a right, an obligation, a duty to examine carefully government legislation. Time after time we heard that view expressed by Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament. The very mover of the motion to bring in closure on this measure was so incensed when that happened when he was in Opposition that he, along with other Tory backbenchers at the time, physically charged the Chair.

It is interesting that this same Progressive Conservative Member, now sitting on the government benches, puts forward the closure motion in respect of this particular measure. And, immediately upon doing so, he left the Chamber.

There has not been a filibuster in respect of this measure. For that matter, there has hardly been adequate debate on it.

The legislative committee charged with studying Bill C-113 was not allowed to travel to the West in order to hear from those who wished to appear before it. We find that unacceptable. Whether one is talking about the West, the North, or Atlantic Canada, the residents themselves should be heard.

In the case of this particular measure, the committee should have had the opportunity to hear the views and opinions of those living in the West. Those living in the West should have been afforded the opportunity to put before Parliament their ideas, their concepts, their suggestions. Not many are in a position to travel to Ottawa in order to be heard. They have views to offer on community-based development, on co-operative development, on development based upon the resources of a given region.

I know that there are Progressive Conservative Members sitting opposite who recognize this. But they, too, must accept responsibility for the fact that this Progressive Conservative Government would not permit the committee to travel to western Canada in order to discuss with the people of western Canada this particular measure.

I remind Members of the House that the western diversification legislation that we are now discussing is about how to diversify the economy of western Canada. It does not make sense that a decision in respect of the economy of western Canada be made in the cabinet room in Ottawa, based only upon the advice of bureaucrats, most of whom are easterners. That makes no sense. Yet, that is the approach that this Government has taken with regard to Bill C-113.

When the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) was in power, there was talk of a "community of communities". It was the view of that Government that it was important that we understand that each province is different from its neighbours.

That is not what is happening now. I do not believe that we should pass legislation affecting a given region of this country without going to that region for input. The West is a very large region of this country, and certainly we should not pass Bill C-113 without going to the West and listening to the views of the people. We should have the opportunity to listen to their ideas and suggestions.

One of the problems that we have with Bill C-113 is that we have not had that opportunity. As is apparent from what is happening in the House at the present time, this Government, for political reasons, is afraid to go to the West.

At the time that diversification of the economy of Atlantic Canada was the subject, a parliamentary committee did travel throughout that region gathering input from the residents. But this Government, for political reasons, was afraid to have the legislative committee travel from place to place in western Canada for the purpose of receiving input in relation to Bill C-113. This Government was afraid that the remarks of the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) would be remembered; it was afraid that past remarks of Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament would be thrown back at them; it was afraid that the people of the West would not accept the political propaganda of this Government and its legislation.

Bill C-113 would provide money for the West, but it does so in such a manner that the main purpose is not the development of the West, or the diversification of the West, but the realization of the maximum political benefit for the Progressive Conservative Party. That is the aim in respect of each and every project announced by this Government for western Canada.

To give an example, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the "political" Minister for the Province of Manitoba, made the claim, in Manitoba, that the ideas for western diversification of the then Government of Manitoba, the New Democratic Government, were unworthy; but, in the same breath, he said that some would be approved before the election campaign in Manitoba had concluded. On the one hand, he criticized the projects; on the other hand, he recognized that the western diversification pool of money could be used as a political tool, with money being allocated to Manitoba prior to the Manitoba election campaign being concluded.

That type of thinking is what westerners used to complain about when the Liberals were in power in this country. The criterion was not whether a project was good or bad but whether it had political benefit. We have seen that time after time in this country. Last weekend, we had the Minister of National Health and Welfare travelling to my riding to announce a $88.5 million water and sewage program for native communities. Certainly it is a worthy project. The irony, however, is that the previous Liberal Government, in the opening days of the 1984 election campaign, announced the very same project. That was a project that involved the same communities, though a little less money. The $88.5 million figure no doubt reflects the effect of inflation from 1984 to the present.

What we have here is a worth while project which has been ignored between elections. It was promised during the 1984 election campaign by the Liberals, and now, four years later, during a provincial election, the same project is announced by the federal Progressive Conservative Government.

That is but just one example of what is wrong with the approach taken by this Government. There are good projects being suggested in all of the western provinces. We have community-based groups in the West who know best what can be done within their own communities. We have people with ideas. But, the central political decision-making process, a process which ignores the communities, which ignores the development corporations in the West, creates a problem. We do not want a repeat of the bad old days of the Liberals and the way they did things. We want new ideas.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that it is two o'clock. I will be here on Monday to continue the debate, assuming the Government call for a continuation of the debate at that time.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reimer:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Act, 1982, should be amended in order to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that it reads as follows:
> > "7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."
> and this House urges that the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces and the Senate pass similar resolutions.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to enter into this debate on property rights and their future entrenchment in our Constitution. I do not think any one issue has bothered me more, nor have I received more letters on any issue than I have on this one. Almost all of my constituents would like to see property rights entrenched in our Constitution. It amazes them that they are not.

It is a well acknowledged, intrinsic human desire to own property, and one would think that to have ownership protected legally could almost be taken for granted in a democracy such as ours. However, we must not forget that it was not a simple oversight that left property rights out of our Constitution.

The Conservative Party proposed that this fundamental right be included in Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms back in 1981 during the original drafting of the Charter. For a time, this worthy proposal was accepted by the then Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). However, due to political pressures from the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Government quickly reversed itself and withdrew the property rights amendment.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party is quoted in Hansard of April 29, 1983 at page 25001, as having said in 1981 the following:

> There's no way we can accept the constitutional resolution with that amendment in it.
> The NDP fears the amendment could not only prevent provincial legislation restricting foreign owners—but could hinder Governments wishing to nationalize industries . . .
> The Conservative amendment flies in the face of what we're attempting to do in the resource sector—tightening up management control—

Prime Minister Trudeau and the then Liberal Government, by making a deal with the NDP, sacrificed Canadians' constitutional guarantee of this basic human right. Therefore, when the Constitution of Canada was patriated in 1982, only three of the four basic human rights were entrenched.

The terrible consequences of not adequately protecting our right to property in the Constitution have already been clearly demonstrated. Past Governments have repeatedly and needlessly seized land while offering little or no compensation. In recent years, the Liberals did that twice, with the shameless confiscation of the frontier lands for the National Energy Program and with the expropriation of land for Mirabel airport.

While the Liberals should be embarrassed by these violations of property rights, members of the NDP openly plot to violate these very same rights in order to realize their socialist ambitions. They oppose the inclusion of property rights in the Constitution because it would be a serious impediment to their policy of nationalization and economic intervention.

The American people recently celebrated the two-hundredth anniversary of their Constitution. What struck me about that event was the pride exhibited by the American people and their realization that a Constitution is a living document. It enunciates basic principles which are then, over time, further defined, added to and, most important, put into practice.

We do not want a Canadian Constitution that remains flawed, incomplete and so inextricably mired in the status quo that it loses its effectiveness and relevance. The majority of Canadians want property rights entrenched in our Constitution.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), on April 15, 1987, indicated that with the Meech Lake Accord now under way we could begin to look at other constitutional issues such as property rights. He stated then that the successful resolution of the Québec issue would unlock the constitutional process and allow us to turn our attention to other issues such as property rights in a second round of constitutional discussions.

I would remind Hon. Members that this Government was elected with a mandate for national reconciliation. The Prime Minister stated that a key element of such reconciliation was Québec's signature on the Constitution. The provincial premiers agreed, and at their Edmonton conference in 1986, stated that Quebec should be the paramount constitutional issue and that other issues, as important as they are, should be dealt with following the resolution of Quebec's concerns.

Given the important and pressing nature of those other constitutional issues such as Senate reform, fisheries, and of course property rights, this decision by the premiers reflected a truly national vision. It was in that spirit that First Ministers succeeded in reaching an agreement with Quebec through the Meech Lake Accord. In recognition of the other constitutional issues, the Accord includes the requirement for an annual conference of First Ministers to examine these matters.

I believe that for the House to proceed with the motion before us at this time would be inconsistent with the Premiers' declaration and the agreed upon process. We must recognize that for this amendment to be adopted consent of a number of provinces will be required, and we should not act in a manner that would make obtaining that support more difficult.

Accordingly I am proposing an amendment to the motion that will send a strong signal of support by the House of Commons for the principle of entrenched property rights but will leave formal adoption until the First Ministers have dealt with the issue. I believe that a demonstration of support for the principle by the House of Commons would provide a strong impetus to those discussions while respecting the process agreed upon by First Ministers.

I would also remind Hon. Members that there are ongoing federal-provincial discussions with respect to this issue. That work will continue and, I hope, will build a consensus for First Ministers to act. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Hardey):

> That Motion M-8 be amended by deleting all of the words after "amended", and substituting the following:
> "In order to recognize the right to enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof, except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, after an assessment of the continuing federal-provincial work on entrenchment of property rights and a future discussion by First Ministers at the Constitutional Conference."

I would like to inform Hon. Members that this amendment is available in both official languages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will take the amendment under advisement for a few moments. In the meantime, the Chair has received notice of a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House, because yesterday, my colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) raised a question of privilege. I would like to put the record straight, since I am directly involved in this Committee, the Legislative Committee on Bill C-93. My colleague said that:

> . . . I had occasion just over a month ago, on March 22, to raise a question of privilege relating to a denial of the Government, through the House leadership refusing to present a motion authorizing the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to visit the regions of Canada to hear from persons in the ethnocultural groups and multicultural organizations in response to the report of the committee.

Thursday morning, that is yesterday, Mr. Speaker, a very similar matter arose in the Legislative Committee which is dealing with the Multiculturalism Bill. I will not read Citation 16 of Beauchesne's again, but only emphasize that Members of Parliament who have responsibilities to deal with matters of public policy need to be aware of what the Canadian people think about these matters. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly why I personally suggested inviting five groups to appear before the Committee.

Naturally, since it did not come from him, my colleague was startled, he even left the meeting. Perhaps that is why he did not hear all the facts, those recorded on page 14937 of the House of Commons Debates for April 28, 1988, Mr. Speaker. It is totally false. What he says is not true!

He says, "Submissions from five of these six organizations will be denied." Mr. Speaker, I say that is totally false. I said that five of the six would be heard. That is not quite the same thing. I do not know why the NDP Members feel so persecuted now, but five of the six will be heard, because the sixth told us that they probably could not attend since they are from Vancouver. I had even suggested that the committee pay the expenses for these organizations coming from Toronto, Winnipeg, Ottawa, Regina and even Fredericton and Vancouver. I believe that this properly represents Canada's duality, but these groups wanted to be heard and I have no problem with doing so.

My colleague who left the meeting before the end . . . I even amended my motion, Mr. Speaker, because five groups in two hours is really a bit rushed. But my amendment was very clear. In my amendment, I agreed that each group be given an hour, which is much more than the committees give, that is an hour for someone to read a brief and there is no more time for questions.

I say that the Speaker was still very fair and I agree with him when he says that it is a decision for the Committee, and not the House, to make. But the Committee was clear and it is too bad that I have to restate the facts because we will not hear five group in two hours, but five groups in five hours.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) who rose yesterday afternoon on this question of privilege could not be in the House today. I am somewhat curious about your decision to allow this question of privilege to be entertained during Private Members' Business hour.

I should like to deal briefly with the issues raised by the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce). He argues for the fact that a small number of ethno cultural groups will be allowed to appear before the Legislative Committee dealing with Bill C-93. My friend the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon claimed yesterday in the House that his privileges as a Member had been denied by the Government majority which refused to allow an adequate number of sittings for community groups to express their views on this important legislation.

As my hon. friend emphasized, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council was the only non-governmental organization which has been heard so far. There are groups by the dozens which wanted to make representations, review the bill and suggest improvements, which will all be excluded. And to start with the Government refused the Legislative Committee permission to travel in order to hear the views Canadians would like to express on the Bill. Now, the Government has imposed a time limit whereby only five groups will have a chance to testify for a one hour period each.

Here is something totally inadequate, Mr. Speaker, and this is why the Hon. Member rose on a question of privilege, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will sustain every Member's right to a full and adequate consideration of a Bill as important as Bill C-93, instead of an inadequate consideration such as that put forward by Members of the Conservative Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think it is neither necessary nor useful to hear other Members on this question.

The question was raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and it appears on page 14937 of the Official Record of the Debates.

I thank the Hon. Members for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) and Ottawa—Centre (Mr. Cassidy) for their representations today, but I do think that all Hon. Members will understand that the Speaker's decision stands.

So we continue the debate with the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Hardey).

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Reimer:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Act, 1982, should be amended in order to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that it reads as follows:
> "7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."
> and this House urges that the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces and the Senate pass similar resolutions.

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in my place and support the motion placed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), calling for the inclusion of property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, many groups and individual Canadians have lobbied for the entrenchment of property rights in the Canadian Charter, and many provincial bodies and Governments have also expressed to the federal Government their commitment to this goal.

Because the inclusion of property rights involves a constitutional amendment, we should not become discouraged over the complexities involved, but rather keep in mind that the overwhelming majority of Canadians favoured the inclusion of property rights in the Charter at the time of the initial debate. There are many precedents for property rights to be entrenched in the Charter, even going back as far back as 1215 when the Magna Carta referred to it. Many of us in the House have ancestors who came to this country because it was a land of opportunity, and with their own sweat and labour they conquered the wilderness and made Canada what it is today.

A few weeks ago in my riding I discussed this issue with my friend, Mr. Herb Parker, a member of the Political Action Committee of the Chatham-Kent Real Estate Board. He pointed out several local concerns. We generally concluded that it seems to boil down to an over-abundance of laws which restrict or remove property rights placed upon citizens in Ontario by the provincial Government, and many people are unaware of the restrictions.

Most of these laws are necessary and acceptable individually, and they are in place for many good reasons. But when one puts them all together and counts them up, it becomes a little scary. There are 223 public statutes, 61 private statutes, and 86 regulatory passages which allow entry on to your land and mine, Mr. Speaker, without warning.

As individuals we live in a co-operative society. In order to enhance that society and to protect our health, livelihood, well-being, and lifestyles, certain individual rights may be removed or restricted. My friend, Herb Parker, has no argument with that, nor do I. However he argues that the sheer number of such laws, particularly the vast grey area of laws, which on the surface sound good and have excellent intentions, in all practical ways create excessive confusion and the possibility of jeopardizing basic rights.

Entrenchment is not a threat to provincial rights. It will not prevent necessary expropriations for government projects. It will not upset good and orderly government. However, it will stand as a visible and powerful symbol that Canada still represents freedom and will provide individuals with a fair and just hearing before the courts in the case of property right disputes.

I was not a Member of the House when the original Charter was drawn up. I have spent some time reading the speeches made by those who were here at that time. I must say that when I was finished researching this issue I was fairly confused. Reading the lines, and the between the lines, I saw that members of all Parties appeared to support the idea of property rights. However, after endless debate on the subject, we have reached the point at which we are today—going through the exercise again.

A few weeks ago, while sitting in this House, I heard the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) reflecting on the trade-off of issues to get the Charter in place. Yes, the original resolution was debated in this House almost endlessly. In fact, by the time it was all over, debate in the House and in committee had taken well over 150 days. The give and take process between the Government and the Opposition resulted in this very important subject being left out. According to the Hon. Member for York Centre, it was actually traded out in order to get NDP support in 1982. That is a very unfortunate situation.

The right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property is fundamental in a democracy such as Canada. I would like to quote the President of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce on the subject. He said, in a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), "Property rights are the most fundamental of individual rights. It is unfortunate that they were not included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as a protected right. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce urges the Parliament of Canada and the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces to amend Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that it reads: 'Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice'". The President went on to say that the chamber was encouraged by the Prime Minister's undertaking on April 15, 1987 to include this subject in round two of the constitutional discussions with the provinces.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce is not the only organization to support a property rights amendment. This was further indicated by the Canadian Real Estate Association in October of that same year when its President referred to the Gallup poll commissioned by the Association which indicated that 84 per cent of home owners and 74 per cent of renters support a property rights amendment.

The President of the Canadian Real Estate Association said, "The results are a powerful message to Members of Parliament and provincial politicians that Canadians take their property rights seriously and want them in the Constitution". The poll was released on the first day of National Private Property Week sponsored annually by the Association to remind Canadians of the rights and obligations of property ownership.

The right to enjoy property is the only one of the fundamental freedoms that was left out of Section 7 of the Charter of Rights when it was proclaimed in 1982. In the spring of 1983 my Party, which was then the Official Opposition, introduced in Parliament a resolution to entrench property rights that was defeated because of the amendment procedures of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

During the last election campaign my Party again took the position that it supported the entrenchment of property rights in the Charter with due protection for the rights of women under family law regimes. I distinctly recall that subject coming up over and over again in my own campaign.

Canadians, most of whom are property owners, are in favour of property rights. This has been borne out countless times through surveys and polls. People are unable at the present time to challenge alleged infringements against their property rights in the courts on the basis of the Charter. The obvious solution now is an amendment to the Charter as my hon. friend has proposed. The required provincial consent should not pose an insurmountable problem, and some of the provinces have already acted in that regard.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, this motion and its amendment, if I am allowed to address the amendment before you have approved it, is an absolutely essential requirement for society. Perhaps prior to the creation of a Constitution some years ago it was not as important as it is today, but in that Constitution we deprived this House and virtually all legislative bodies of the right to create laws within the guidelines of the power of government which was, of course, delineated by the Act of 1867 that created Canada in the first place. At that particular time it was hoped that in future law would be interpreted by the courts of the land as it had been interpreted, that there would be precedent which would prevail in the judgment, and that specific laws and interpretations, once made, would be respected.

We now find that when a case goes to the Supreme Court, if a defendant or a prosecutor presents to that court a precedent or a particular law which is relevant to the case but may not be identical to the case, the court is inclined to question the legal representation by saying: "What has precedent to do with it; what has this or that to do with it?" As far as Canada is concerned, we have seen the legislative capability of the Supreme Court, particularly as it was expressed with respect to its decision on abortion.

We have resided in this land since the earliest settlers arrived here with the concept that we did in fact own land; that if we had bought and paid for it, it was our possession as much as the clothes on our backs were presumed to be our possession. However, under this Constitution, as I see it, we are now in the position where nothing is finite which is not in the Constitution itself and everything is subject to interpretation.

That was obvious to some of us when the Constitution was presented in the first place. However, it was impossible to get amendments, either to add the right to own land or to give a finite capability to the legislative bodies which exist in our dominion.

While there may have been some reservations about the ownership of land, we have reached a time when the philosophical types of decision we have seen in the Supreme Court of Canada and other courts demand that there be no opportunity for philosophical, sociological, or any other type of decision with respect to the ownership of land. That must be finite in the Constitution. We should not overlook that.

There are literally hundreds of municipal, provincial, and federal rights of passage, rights of access, et cetera, which are applied to land ownership and which do in fact override some of our rights. They are intended to override some of our rights of ownership because our ownership may not be in the best interest of the public domain. Nevertheless, there is the demand that, if the public requires the land or the building which we own, the owner be compensated for infringement, lack of possession, or demolition of the property.

I know that one of the reasons people came to this land initially was that where they had resided at an earlier date, whether in Europe or another place, they did not have clear ownership of land, they did not have private possession. They may have been serfs, share-croppers, or in some other capacity, but they did not own land. That was one of the very objectives of people leaving their homes, relatives, and friends to come to a foreign land, even a wilderness, to settle.

• (1430)

One must ask why we have not established the sacred right to property prior to this time. This question should not be left to the philosophical decision of a judge, but it should be absolutely established in law.

I do not believe this would interfere with the administration of government, whether at the municipal, provincial, or federal level. However, the exclusion of such rights can interfere with the security of the individual.

This question may not have been as significant when the Constitution was being introduced to the House in its broad terms. At that time the property rights proposal was subject to interpretation because it did not spell out its purposes. Now that we have seen the philosophical capability of a judge to make an interpretation which the judge believes is in the best interest of society, the time has come to provide for property rights.

I have always believed that property rights should be a fundamental aspect of our Constitution. To my knowledge, those provincial jurisdictions that oppose land ownership have never explained how this would interfere with the operation of government. When one considers the background of many Canadians, it is beyond my comprehension why anyone would argue against the insertion of land ownership in our Constitution.

I believe this motion directs the Government to take the necessary steps to bring that about, and I compliment the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) for introducing it.

One of the fundamental reasons why our forefathers came to this country was that they could either get a grant of land or purchase land. They were provided with an opportunity which they or their descendants would ever have in their new homeland.

I recall a conversation I had with an immigrant to this country. After an extended trip to his homeland, he talked of the difficulties he had in returning there and spoke of the difficulties facing his relatives. I asked him how he felt upon returning to Canada. He said that he felt just like the astronaut who, upon returning to earth, said he could kiss the ground. This immigrant came from a land where he could not own property. When he returned to Canada he wanted to kiss the ground because of the privileges we enjoy in this country. These principles of property rights should be enshrined in our Constitution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), the Chair will rule on the amendment which was proposed a few minutes ago.

After careful consideration the Chair must rule the amendment out of order on the grounds that the amendment sets forth a proposition dealing with a matter that is foreign to the proposition involving the main motion. Therefore it is not relevant and cannot be moved.

Debate continues with the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is there any room for discussion or opinion of Members of the House?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I doubt very much whether the Chair would change its mind. However, the Chair would entertain a comment from the Member.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there is a small problem with the motion. I believe it is being redrafted and may be re-introduced by another Member. However, I think we should let the debate continue while it is being worked on.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to echo the sentiments expressed by many other colleagues respecting the motion by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer). He brings forward a motion that is fundamentally important not only for Canadians but for people throughout the world.

I want to highlight the importance of land ownership and property rights by citing two graphic examples. The House will recall the classic film Gone with the Wind, a story about the civil war in the United States. I will never forget the closing scene when Scarlet returned to see that her house had been destroyed in the war. She told one of the men who worked on the farm that she was devastated because everything had been taken from her. He bent down, picked up some soil, and said to her: "This will endure forever". The message was that she still had the land.

It is the right of people to keep their land that we want to entrench in the Constitution. The right to ownership of land should belong to everyone, whether an individual or an organization, so that one cannot simply be bulldozed off the property when a transfer of land happens to occur. Someone should not be loosely expropriated from property that has belonged to a family for decades.

Another movie which appeared recently on television depicts the importance of ownership of land. This movie was entitled Stranger on my Land. It was about a man who returned from Vietnam where he remembered expropriating people from their lands and villages because they had been destroyed. The moment which depicted the importance of the right to property occurred in the scene in which an old South Vietnamese man was crying. He said: "I have nowhere else to go". When this soldier returned to the United States, the same thing happened to him with his land and his farm. The military wanted to take over his land in the western United States for use as a testing ground. He opposed it and was taken to court where he had to fight for his land. We do not want that to happen in our country.

I can think of things that have happened even in the National Capital Region. My family roots go back to Kingsmere. We all remember Mackenzie King who fantasized about running this country. The NCC expropriated land which had been in my family for generations and it expropriated land from farmers, although it gave a fair price. However land is something we cannot possible allow ourselves to lose.

In Third World countries people are shifted from points A to B without their permission. We cannot let that happen here. Why the importance of entrenching property rights in our Constitution was not realized at the time of the changes to our Constitution I do not know. I was not in the House at the time and I have not read the Debates.

The basic fundamental philosophy of human beings is their land. Without guaranteed access to the land, farmers feel insecure, cottage dwellers feel insecure. This is something which has now become essential, and I hope we all agree on this. Because of my sincere belief in the fact that we must have guaranteed access to property, I am pleased to move:

> That Motion M-8 be amended by deleting all of the words after "amended", and substituting the following:
> "In order to recognize the right to enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof, except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, and in keeping with the tradition of the usual federal-provincial consultative process".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment is as follows. It is moved by Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton), seconded by Mr. Towers, that Motion M-8 be amended by deleting all of the words after "amended", and substituting the following: "In order to recognize the right to enjoyment of property, and the right of not to be deprived thereof, except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, and in keeping with the tradition of the usual federal-provincial consultative process".

The Chair finds the motion to be in order. Debate is on the amendment.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I really find it passing strange that at the fifth hour of debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) we should find the Conservative Party changing its mind, the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) proposing an amendment which was declared out of order and another amendment being proposed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) which is almost meaningless.

Mrs. Sparrow: No, it is not.

Ms. Jewett: It amends the Constitution Act in order to do certain things without saying how it should be amended. It only says that it is to be amended in order to give some protection to the right to enjoy property and that the federal Government and the provinces will work it out in some fashion. That is all it says.

The original motion by the Hon. Member for Kitchener was very explicit on how this House should amend the Constitution Act, 1982, namely, by adding within Section 7 of the Charter the words "enjoyment of property". I find it very strange that the Conservative Party should now be welshing on that very specific proposal.

I can only conclude that the Conservative Party has been listening to the arguments put forward by the New Democratic Party during the course of the previous four hours of debate on this matter and has concluded that the motion originally proposed by the Hon. Member for Kitchener—and the amendment that was proposed in earlier Parliaments, is very inadvisable; that it could indeed lead to very perverse results and might circumscribe the rights of all citizens, including other property owners. It might also make difficult the enjoyment of all freedoms guaranteed in the Charter. The matter needs a good deal more discussion and debate and, ideally, the matter needs to be dropped.

Those who advocate amending the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to guarantee the right to enjoy property are, in my view, being either mischievious or naive. When they make this proposal they make it sound as though it was the most simple of adjustments, a statement of the obvious that would be opposed only by someone who wants to deprive people of what is rightfully theirs. That is the subtle implication. Yet, as many associations have pointed out including the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, entrenching property rights or the rights to the enjoyment of property can have very perverse results.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton is under the impression that property means land and land only. That is ridiculous. Property in this modern day and age means a great deal more than land, the most important of which is intellectual property. That in itself indicates that property rights are a far less clear-cut concept than other rights already entrenched in the Constitution.

For example, when we speak of the right not to be imprisoned without due process of law or the right to freedom of expression, we know at least in a general sense what is intended. But, what actually is the right to enjoy property? That right needs to be so hedged with restrictions in order to protect the rights of others, and of society as a whole that it is far, far from absolute.

• (1450)

What then would it mean to enshrine in our Constitution as a fundamental and more or less absolute right the enjoyment of property? If it meant only that the right to enjoy property existed to the extent that society through its laws chooses not to limit it—and that in effect is the situation today—then the constitutional guarantee would be virtually meaningless. If it meant more than that, then the still insufficiently explored consequence could be a dismantling of some or even all of the laws that exist to protect us all.

That is why we have suspected for some time that what the promoters of the property amendment really want is a legal opportunity to challenge a vast body of legislation which exists today and which subjects property ownership to a wider community interest, including that of other property owners.

Urban property speculators, for instance, are thirsting to use a property rights clause to short circuit zoning by-laws and community organizations, those organizations having the gall to prevent landowners from doing whatever they please with their property. They do not want to see the freedom—putting freedom in quotes—to build a fast food stand in a quiet neighbourhood abridged. They do not want to have any limitations on their intention, perhaps, to turn the back 40 into a highly profitable dump for PCBs. If property rights are constitutionally entrenched, how long would it take for a lawyer to draft a brief denouncing rent controls as unconscionable and illegal government meddling?

In its current form the enjoyment of property—and what was a proposed amendment and which now has been somehow taken off the table by the Conservatives—could easily be used to throw into question zoning by-laws, restrictions on land use, rent controls, environmental laws, restrictions on foreign ownership, the right of Governments to expropriate property in the public interest, and who knows what else. It is understandable why most provincial Governments, many of them Conservative—and it is the provinces which have a large voice in property and civil rights under Section 92 of the Constitution—have hitherto said, including the former Premier of Alberta, that the placing of the enjoyment of property in the Constitution should be avoided and must be opposed. That is of course what this Party intends to do.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, in wrapping up the debate, I point out that this is the fifth hour that has been provided under the rules in Private Members' Hour on a votable motion. I want to say that we have had a good debate. Some 31 people have spoken on the motion. Some 21 have spoken in favour of it, while 10 have spoken against it.

I want to say that the spirit of the amendment and the amendment to the amendment that was put today is simply that the spirit of the motion continue. We want to entrench property rights but this will change the procedure. It will now go through the First Ministers as opposed to going directly to the Senate and the provinces.

That is being done because of a commitment made during the Meech Lake process at which all the Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) agreed together that what they would do is try to complete the Meech Lake process first and then deal with such matters as Senate reform, property rights, and changes to the Constitution. That is what we have done.

Ms. Jewett: Why did you not do it long ago?

Mr. Reimer: That is what we have attempted to do today. We have concluded this debate. I call upon my colleagues in the House to vote in favour of the amended motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Property Rights

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the recorded division stands deferred until 6 p.m. on Monday, May 2, 1988.

It being 3 p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 2.58 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBERSHIP OF BOARD OF INTERNAL ECONOMY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Hon. Member for the electoral district of Ontario (Mr. Fennell) has been appointed as a member of the Board of Internal Economy to replace the Hon. Member for the electoral district of Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) for the purposes and under the provisions of Chapter 39 of the Statutes of Canada, 1985, entitled "an Act to amend the House of Commons Act."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—EIGHTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the eighteenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs reporting Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, without amendment.

The matter was handled in the judicious manner which the Finance Committee handles these Bills, both expeditiously and without any problem.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—THIRTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the thirteenth report of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, in both official languages.

The thirteenth report deals with the selection of votable items pertaining to the eleventh draw which took place on April 12, 1988.

May I note that pursuant to Standing Order 36(1)(b) this thirteenth report is deemed adopted when laid upon the table.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-290, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (exposure to Human Immunodeficiency Virus).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise today to introduce a Private Members' Bill in the House entitled "an Act to amend the Criminal Code (exposure to Human Immunodeficiency Virus)". The Bill is intended to protect individuals from the irresponsible actions of carriers of the AIDS virus.

In light of this highly infectious disease reaching epidemic proportions in several centres around the world, I think we should do everything possible in our power within the Criminal Code and by using whatever means are at our disposal to stop the spread of this disease.

The Bill would make it a criminal offence for all those who have been diagnosed as carrying the HIV antibody to do anything that would expose a person to the AIDS virus. I hope when this matter is brought forward that it will receive the support of all Members of the House.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents, pursuant to Standing Order 106.

These constituents are of the strong feeling that the trade deal between Canada and the United States would have a fundamental impact on our country's economic, cultural, and political independence, and they are of the opinion that the trade deal will result in a loss of jobs in many sectors of the economy as well as in various regions of the country.

The petitioners are requesting that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada other than the trade deal, and that this debate result in a national general election prior to the signing of any agreement.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, the petition I have from the good residents of Nelson, British Columbia, says the same thing.

I have a suggestion for the Government on behalf of these people. The Government will table its trade legislation in early May. I suggest that the Government tables the legislation and then calls a general election right away, before July 13, so that these people of Nelson can succeed in their petition to the House that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) call an election on the trade deal before the deal is in fact signed.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 267, 300, 305, and 306.

FUNDING BY TELEFILM CANADA

Question No. 267—Mr. Caldwell:

1. Within the last four years has the (a) CBC (b) CTV (c) Global Television Network received funding from Telefilm and, if so (i) on what dates (ii) in what amounts?

2. Over the last four years, has there been an increase in the funding of Telefilm?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): I have been informed by Telefilm Canada as follows:

Broadcasters, such as the CBC, CTV and Global Television Network, do not receive direct funding from Telefilm Canada. Instead, Telefilm invests in projects proposed by independent producers from the private sector. For a project to be eligible for support, assurance must be given that the production will be broadcast. This is usually demonstrated through the producer's sale to broadcasters of the broadcast rights for a production. Consequently, broadcasters benefit only indirectly from Telefilm's investments by choosing to air productions that may have received support from Telefilm.

Broadcasters may be part of the financial structure for productions in which Telefilm invests and may be identified as investors in the contracts which Telefilm signs with independent producers. As well, they can be third parties to contracts which Telefilm has signed with independent producers. Broadcasters do not, however, sign contracts directly with Telefilm.

2. Yes, there has been an increase in the funding of Telefilm over the last four years. Telefilm's total appropriations in each year were:

1983-84	$ 38,764,000
1984-85	$ 60,848,000
1985-86	$ 85,340,000
1986-87	$ 106,860,000
1987-88	$ 121,960,000

PROPOSED AIRPORT AT MASSET, B.C.

Question No. 300—Mr. Caccia:

1. Is it required that the government approve, licence or in any other way regulate the proposed airport near the Village of Masset, on the Queen Charlotte Islands in British Columbia and, if so, to what extent?

2. Have any government funds been contributed, or promised, to this airport proposal and, if so (a) in what amounts (b) at what times (c) for what purposes?

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): 1. Government approval is not required for the development of the proposed airport.

If the development does take place, airport certification would be required prior to its use for regular commercial air service. In that case, the airport is regulated to the extent that it requires regular inspections to ensure compliance with appropriate safety standards.

2. No. Transport Canada's involvement with the Masset proposal has been with respect to providing technical advice related to aerodrome certification standards, zoning and navigational requirements, to the community, the Province of British Columbia and other interested parties.

On July 27, 1987, the province of British Columbia through the Air Transport Assistance Program administered by the British Columbia Ministry of Transportation and Highways, awarded $300,000 to the Village of Masset towards the development of a new 1200m airstrip.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING CHILD SAFETY

Question No. 305—Mrs. Collins:

1. Does the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have regulations governing child safety and, if so (a) what are they (b) have they been updated or otherwise changed since 1984?

2. Is the Department considering further action with respect to child safety and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes.

1 (a) Cribs and Cradles Regulations Hazardous Products (Hazardous Substances) Regulations Hazardous Products (Liquid Coating Materials) Regulations Hazardous Products (Pacifiers) Regulations Hazardous Products (Toys) Regulations Playpens Regulations Science Education Sets Regulations Carriages and Strollers Regulations Hazardous Products (Infant Feeding Bottle Nipples) Regulations Hazardous Products (Children's Sleepwear) Regulations Hazardous Products (Child Restraint Systems) Regulations

1 (b) Cribs and Cradles Regulations: amended September 11, 1986 Hazardous Products (Infant Feeding Bottle Nipples) Regulations: amended May 23, 1985.

2. The Department's intentions with regard to future child safety proposals are listed in the Federal Regulatory Plan. These include new regulations on baby gates and baby walkers as well as amendments to the child resistant packaging requirements and the cribs and cradles regulations.

UNRWA—FOOD DELIVERIES TO PALESTINIAN REFUGEE CAMPS

Question No. 306—Mr. Peterson:

Has the Government any evidence that the State of Israel is using food as a weapon to control the riots in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and, if so, what is it?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): UNWRA officials confirmed to the Canadian Embassy, Tel Aviv, in January that the IDF has selectively blocked UNRWA food deliveries to Gazan refugee camps under curfew, causing serious food shortages but no starvation. Cited as example were events of January 19 whereby UNRWA was able to distribute food supplies to only four of eight camps. At a press briefing January 20 in New York, an official UN spokesperson said that food access to camps "continued to be intermittent", resulting in a "serious but not critical" situation. The Embassy also reported on the IDF's policy of extensive curfews on refugee camps which also restricted supply of food to the refugee population. Such curfews, amounting to a virtual economic and military blockade, allowed only an hour per day for delivery of food and medicines. During the period December 9 to March 16, Jalabia and Bureij refugee camps experienced 24-hour curfews for a total of 16 and 15 days respectively.

Since January, UNRWA has stood firm behind reports provided to the Embassy in January. The Embassy has learned that UNRWA continues to face difficulty in maintaining feeding programs, although there has been no general food shortage.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: When Bill C-74 was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) had completed her speech. The question and comment period following the Hon. Member's speech is now available to Hon. Members.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the other day I listened to my hon. colleague's speech on this legislation. I want to ask the Hon. Member how she feels about the approach taken in this Bill and whether the approach the Government is suggesting is the appropriate one. She is knowledgeable in this area, and I think it is important that we are aware of just how the Government approaches an issue or challenge in a particular piece of legislation. Perhaps she would want to comment on that.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out a number of ways in which the approach to the Bill is seriously flawed. We went into great detail with some amendments and in some respects a better Bill came back, but the Government has been doing the wrong thing.

I would like to quote some remarks made by Professor Ross Hume Hall who in fact will be involved in the administration of this Bill. He says very strongly that the whole approach taken by the Liberals in the past under the old Environmental Contaminants Act and this Bill does not do the job that needs to be done. He said:

> The 1987 act should be scrapped in favour of a radically different approach to the control of chemical pollution, an approach which can be stated in two words: don't pollute. Ask the question, "how do chemicals get into the environment?," and then set up legal procedures to block the sources of pollution. No one action prevents pollution. It requires actions on sewage, waste dumps, disposal of household garbage, improved incineration, recycling, and prohibition of products that can't be disposed of without contamination.
> Such a comprehensive approach takes time and effort to work out. But in the end, we will have an industrial society in which chemicals continue to play an important role, but which will be used and disposed of without polluting the environment.

To do that, we would have to go back to square one. I do not want to be too critical of the Conservative Government because the faults in this Bill were in the old Liberal legislation. This legislation deals with environmental contaminants and chemical pollutants one at a time, without looking at them in interaction and without looking at their cumulative effects. It goes on the basis of lab tests and hopes for the best. That is a very cumbersome procedure. We know that it took five chemicals 10 years to get on the list under the old process and that the new process will not speed things up. The desire to do something about this is not there.

Professor Hall tells us not simply to blame the weak Department of the Environment, although he blames the weak Department of the Environment in many respects. He said:

> A parade of 11 ministers of environment, either disinterested or politically feeble, has passed through the department since 1972. Successive federal governments (Liberal and Conservative) have encouraged weak management, preferring the Department of the Environment to be like a declawed and neutered tomcat, showy, but unaggressive and docile.

We still see the same thing in this Bill. Let me give an example of the approach used by the Bill and what is wrong with that approach.

The toxicology that Health and Welfare uses to test food additives and drugs is laboratory toxicology. It consists of relatively short-term tests on animals and it fails to predict toxic effects, particularly effects in humans. Professor Hall refers to a National Research Council of Canada report on the toxicity of dioxins, a serious environmental contaminant. This provides an illustration of the impossibility of predicting human effects.

A scientist working with dioxins accumulated traces of the substance over a period of time. He began to experience nightmares at night and an inability to concentrate during the day. He suffered from headaches, memory loss, and impotence. The constellation of toxic effects devastated this man. This happened to a human being. The tests, however, are done on rats and guinea-pigs. Have you ever asked a rat if he has a headache, Mr. Speaker? Obviously we do not know what happens to these lab animals.

No laboratory experiments on animals can predict the toxic effects on humans of long-term exposure, to small amounts of chemicals. We only happen to know of these effects of dioxin in humans because of accidental exposure which is neither systematic nor a desirable method of gaining toxicological information.

I welcome the opportunity to expand a bit on what is wrong with the approach, which is that the Bill goes after things one at a time and will not make a significant impact in reducing contaminants in the environment.

The process is cumbersome and we really ought to be doing what Professor Hall suggests we should be doing, which is reducing substantially contaminants entering the environment and having a whole strategy to do that, including a strategy for how we dispose of our garbage and consumer products. We must begin to do that if we really want to be serious about cleaning up the environment.

• (1120)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Member made some reference to criticism of the previous Liberal legislation with regard to the environment. The Liberals criticized this legislation, saying that it was inadequate and that they would have done better. Since they quoted the same expert in their presentation, could the Member explain to us what this expert said with regard to previous Liberal efforts in the matter of environmental legislation?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer that. This world renowned expert said that the past performance of the Liberal Government was not very good either, that we have the same flaws in this very cumbersome approach as we had in the old Bill. His blame was directed to the present Government.

He used the analogy of a bridge that falls down. Would anyone hire the same architect and the same engineers and tell them to come up with the same design to rebuild the bridge? Clearly we would not do that. Anyone would be irresponsible to do that. The model in the previous legislation is simply not adequate but the model was followed again in this legislation.

Therefore, there has been a failure to learn on the part of the present Government. Let us not go back to a rosy past when the enforcement procedures were very much better, because that is simply not true. We have a very weak and cumbersome approach which accepts that we will have an enormous amount of pollution. However, we are going to name only some criminals and there will be some contaminants that we will not allow. A special process will be set up to identify them and they will be put on a list. This process will take a very long time as it did when it was set up by the previous Government.

Professor Hall gives an interesting example of PCBs. The toxicity of the substance was well established in 1976 and manufacturing of the substance actually stopped. One would have thought it would be simple to write a regulation under the old legislation given that that was the case. However, it was not simple. The process was cumbersome. The President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada was one Brian Mulroney, and the Iron Ore Company of Canada and other industries raised objections to a regulation of PCBs. It is scandalous to think that objections were raised by none other than the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to getting rid of one of the most dangerous contaminants known, the toxicity of which had been well established.

As a New Democratic critic of the environment I want to be very clear that the deficiencies belong to both Governments; they belong to the process. If we really want a safe environment and really want to change our ways, we will have to develop a strategy which will include many elements right from packaging to consumer practices, municipal incineration, and recycling. It is time that we got down to developing real strategies which will actually improve the environment rather than only picking away, item by item, substance by substance, review committee by review committee, to provide this very modest amount of protection against only the most serious contaminants.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I would like to speak on debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will certainly keep that in mind, but I think the debate now turns to the government side. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I will come back to the Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we had an interesting day on Friday and it looks like we are starting a new week on the same tone. Today we have called Bill C-74, the environmental protection Bill, which may live in the historical annals of this Chamber. Certainly in my nine years of experience I have never seen a Bill which was so thoroughly scrutinized in committee with helpful contributions from all sides of the House. There were indeed amendments made—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the procedure correctly, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) was rising on debate. You recognized him and then you went to the government side under, I thought, questions and comments. If we are not on questions and comments and we are on debate, then I take it the Hon. Member for Windsor West should have had the floor.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I may have unintentionally created a difficulty here, and I ask Hon. Members to bear with me for a moment. As I understood it, the Hon. Member for Windsor West rose and the Chair recognized the Hon. Member, of course. I then asked whether he was rising on questions or comments and he said that he was rising on debate. I was not in the chair when the Bill was last debated, but I understood according to the method being followed that it was the turn of the government side to debate and, as a consequence, I recognized the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

If I have made an error I want to be completely fair. However, I understood that the Hon. Member for Windsor West was rising on debate. I may have missed somebody, but I did not see anyone rising for further questions and comments. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier could respond. If I am in error I want to be instructed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I do not think you are in error. Indeed, we just finished the first round in this debate. However, the Parliamentary Secretary is notorious for putting dilatory motions before the House. I would not suspect that he would be unable to move that the question be now put, which would stifle this debate and prevent people from speaking on it. I just wanted to ensure that he is not going to use one of his well-known methods of cutting off debate.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, of course, has well-known methods of pre-empting these dreadful procedural strikes of one side or the other. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier knows something that the Chair, of course, is not supposed to know. However, I cannot anticipate what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary may or may not do, but the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has the floor in debate.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has more than my nine years of experience in the House and a kind of intuition does come to the fore with wise Members over a considerable period of time.

As a representative of the Government I want to make it absolutely clear to the House that we appreciate the help and advice which have come from members of all three Parties who care about our environment. That help was well delivered in committee. Witnesses were also helpful. As I said before, I doubt very much that in the history of the Canadian Parliament there has ever been a Bill which adopted so many amendments. The quantity of amendments adopted on this Bill is really quite outstanding. In addition, I think that, there was a larger than normal number of amendments at report stage.

I thought that members of all three Parties would take pride in that accomplishment and be able to stand in the House at third reading and express their pride and satisfaction. If they believe that a few changes are still required in future, at another time and in another way, certainly the House would like to hear about that. However, it is particularly disturbing to look back on last week when time was, I believe, wasted in this House in what has become a very consistent attempt to filibuster the House in terms of its capacity—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) on a point of order.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Hon. Member is commenting on the debate of last week when he says that time was wasted. I do not know that it is appropriate to cast a measure of judgment on debate as being useful or not useful or desirable or not.

• (1130)

We had a thorough debate last week, with one round of speakers. We are now beginning a second round on this particular Bill and I question whether the Parliamentary Secretary is using the appropriate approach to this debate by casting doubt on the quality of the debate last week.

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) I may be able to assist in pointing out that procedurally I do not think the Chair is really in a position to admonish any Member for casting some doubt on the quality of debate, whether it came from one side or the other of the House.

I understand perfectly well that the Hon. Member for Davenport is concerned about any suggestion that debate on a Bill of this serious import is "a waste of time", because that is exactly what the Hon. Member is complaining that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary implied. I certainly understand the point the Hon. Member for Davenport is making, but I think the appropriate place to make that point would be later in the debate and in reply to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. That may assist the Hon. Member for Churchill, who may not need to rise now.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill is indeed rising. Of course I recognize him.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short intervention. I believe the Liberal Member who just spoke had a valid point. Either the Parliamentary Secretary was referring to the quality of the debate at third reading, when there was only one speaker per party, or he was not speaking about the Bill itself, was using some parliamentary excuse to talk about other issues that were before the House in the past and was pointing out the Government's problem, that it claims to have major legislation to be debated, including the trade issue that it has not even introduced yet. That is his problem.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member for Churchill has assisted the House in his intervention, but of course that does not change the position of the Speaker's comments a few minutes ago.

I am sure there will be other opportunities, if other Hon. Members disagree or dispute the substance or otherwise of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's address. However the floor is with the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, certainly there is the temptation to comment on the quality of debate from time to time, but I do not believe I mentioned the quality of the debate. It is interesting to note the sensitivity about quality that seems to arise from the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is as aware as the rest of us at the moment about the sensitivity, so perhaps he could choose words that would bring some other reaction, in the interest of order in the Chamber.

Mr. Hawkes: The Government is concerned that Bill C-74 becomes the law of the land as quickly as possible. It is the health of Canadians which is best served by these changes in the statute law. The sooner these changes become law, the sooner our environment is in better shape and the sooner our children can look forward to a better environmental future.

That is what the debate is about. Does Bill C-74, which changes the law to provide a greater protection to the environment, represent a step forward for this country? Government Members are unanimously convinced that it does. Government Members are disturbed because we believe we have made solid legislative proposals to help Atlantic Canada, to help western diversification, to help victims of crime. We believe Bill C-74 will provide help for the environment.

What has been happening in this Chamber is that there have been amendments at second reading stage and great blocks of amendments at report stage, all of which represent a kind of hidden tactic of which many Canadians are not aware, designed to consume time in the Chamber.

After last week, the Government was optimistic that perhaps this week Members would return to the Chamber in a mood that would signal we were prepared to move forward with this very important type of legislation. However, when we get to questions and comments we see that the only questions come from NDP caucus members of the critic for the New Democratic Party.

We are unable to determine whether they will attempt another delay with a motion that will create a second round of speakers. One must wonder whether we will be here tonight after spending another entire day on one of the best pieces of vetted legislation this Chamber has ever seen.

We on this side of the House have to believe that subtly and quietly time will be consumed so that by the end of the day again we will not have passed this very important piece of legislation. We will not be able to move on to legislation to help Atlantic Canada or the diversification for Western Canada.

In an attempt to be consistent and to signal as clearly as we can that we think it is time for changes in statute law to protect the health of Canadians through greater environmental protection, I move:

That the question be now put.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose it would be inappropriate to remark that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier certainly evidenced his usual prescience a few minutes ago.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Debate, or a point of order?

Mr. Gauthier: Just clarification, Mr. Speaker. Can we ask questions and comments about the Member's great speech? Does the motion take away our right to question the Member?

Mr. Speaker: Again, the Hon. Member is absolutely correct. Questions and comments.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. We all appreciate that supposedly the most efficient way to do business is as it is found in totalitarian regimes, where Governments do not have to worry about Parliaments and do not have to be concerned about open and thoughtful debates.

It is a little odd that within the first few hours of this week the Government has sent the signal to the Opposition that it plans to use whatever measures are at its disposal to curtail debate and muzzle the House of Commons. It will limit the ability of the Opposition or government Members to participate in debate.

I take this as the Government serving notice that it plans to use its majority in the House of Commons to curtail discussion of the environment.

The days when we have talked about the environment, whether about global environment conditions or local crises, have been very few and far between. As a matter of fact, I cannot recall any days, with the exception of the Opposition Parties using their opposition days to carry on that kind of debate. I find it inappropriate that the Government would now limit debate, that it would muzzle parliamentarians by moving, in a sense, a form of closure. If the Government is hoping to get co-operation to make the House of Commons work effectively and efficiently, this is not the way to do it.

I regret that the Government once again fails to appreciate the traditions of a parliamentary democracy. But what can one expect from a political Party that saw fit to storm the Speaker's chair not many months ago and bring the House of Commons to its knees day after day after day? I remember the spectacle. I can say as a parliamentarian that it was certainly the darkest day of my life when I realized that Members of Parliament of the Progressive Conservative Party believed that Parliament ought not to continue, that it should be brought to a close. We saw the spectacle day after day of bell ringing, and we saw a political Party participate in the ultimate abuse of the parliamentary system and traditions—and some of them now are laughing. They must think that this muzzling of debate is very humorous. But it is only Monday morning, and it is only the first indication of that sad tradition being adopted by the Government's parliamentary leadership.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, as usual, I listened with great care to my friend across the way. He raised rather repeatedly a matter of great principle affecting the fundamental nature of this country, namely, a constitutional proposal back in 1980, which did indeed cause this Party, then in opposition, to use all the procedural aspects available to us to filibuster and cause change. It was a matter of fundamental principle.

I think a careful reading of our precedents and the patterns of this House would indicate that the rules exist with some looseness so that, on matters of great principle, a minority of the House can use the rules to bring these matters to the attention of Canadians and to cause perhaps change to take place. That is our tradition, and that is why it was done.

I suggest that the Member may be speaking from the heart, but he should perhaps reconsider in his head what constitutes abuse. Working within the rules and using the rules to advantage on matters of great principle, I suggest is not abuse. However, to use those same rules and those same opportunities to filibuster legislation, related, for example, to relief for victims of crime to set up an opportunities agency in Atlantic Canada, to help Atlantic Canadians to get jobs, to do the same in western Canada to help western Canadians get jobs, and to clean up the environment, that is where the true abuse lies. That is abuse of the rules of this Chamber.

The Hon. Member raises the issue of closure. The calendar provides for closure on Monday at one o'clock with a recommencement at two o'clock. The calendar on Monday provides for closure at five o'clock. There is an automatic closure. By eating up the time of this House in questions and comments and repetitive speeches which stop us from getting to important matters the Opposition, and in particular the New Democratic Party on most occasions is using two closures a day. How long can they continue introducing motions for six-month hoists and recycling their speakers on the same issue? Because of the nature of the parliamentary calendar there is closure twice a day, and I suggest the Opposition since Easter—starting before, but clearly since Easter—has been using those two closure opportunities every day to grind this place to a halt so that the things Canadians need cannot come about.

On this Bill there is absolutely no abuse by the Government. No thoughtful person in this country would believe that this Bill has not had all the vetting, scrutiny, and free speech it so rightfully deserves because the environment is so important. But there comes a time, when months have passed, when witnesses have been heard, when amendments have been made, where we should bring this item to a close. We should put the law in place so that we and our children will have a better environment. It is not the time for further talk. It is the time for action.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a question. Is he now saying on behalf of the Government that it wants to strike out from our rules the provision available to any Member of this House, the right to ask anyone speaking on debate questions or to make comments? Is that what he is saying? Is he now saying that the Government wants to eliminate the third reading stage debate in this House? Surely, that is what he is talking about. There have only been three speeches made at third reading so far. How can he say they are repetitive? How can he say they are excessive? How can he say they are unnecessary?

The cat is out of the bag. The Member is saying on behalf of the Government, because he is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, that as far as the Government is concerned parliamentary reform is a sham. The Government wants to get rid of questions and comments. It wants to get rid of third reading entirely. It wants people to speak in this House only if the Government says so. That is the Government's version of democracy. The Government tells us the rules are all right when, somehow or other, Members can get away with going up to the Speaker's chair, shaking their fist and threatening physical violence because they do not like the ruling of the Speaker. That is all right for the Tories. What they do not like is honest and reasonable debate. There they are in their true colours. History has proven that any time a tyrant wants to close off the democratic process, that tyrant always says: "I am doing it for the best of motives", but that does not change anything. There is something very wrong with what the Member is saying. He is saying in effect: "Do it our way or do it not at all". That is Tory democracy.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Parliamentary Secretary and then recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will make an offer right now. It is interesting that the House Leader on the other side rose in defence of democracy. Friday the House Leader of the New Democratic Party rose in defence of democracy. This House is willing to sit to the end of today, until midnight, until two o'clock in the morning, so that every member of the Opposition Parties who wants to speak on this environmental Bill can do so.

We can continue to meet this evening on the western diversification Bill, the aid to victims of crime Bill, and the Atlantic opportunities legislation until three in the morning. If those Members really believe in democracy, let them stand and agree to continue to meet this day, by unanimous consent, as long as necessary to move those four important pieces of legislation along. If democracy is what those Members want, the Government is willing. If free speech is what they want, the Government is willing. But, Mr. Speaker, if you look at their behaviour to the balance of this day, you will find they will use the two closure opportunities available to them, at one o'clock and five o'clock, so that no action takes place. That is not democracy. They are trying to stop the Government from getting important pieces of legislation through this Chamber by using the Standing Orders and the closure opportunities. It is not democracy.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): You abuse the Standing Orders.

Mr. Hawkes: Stand up and make an offer. We can meet the rest of the day until midnight.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short comment and then ask a question of the Hon. Member.

• (1150)

Mr. Speaker: I remind the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier that there is but one or two minutes left in the time allotted for questions and comments.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, so much for rules and so much for reform. I want to ask the Hon. Member a question on this Bill.

Does he remember that I raised in this House a question in May, 1987 concerning the federal Government's habit of polluting the Ottawa River. There was a media report which stated that the Bank of Canada, the National Research Council, the Department of Transport, and Supply and Services Canada had been accused of breaking the law by dumping toxic refuse and toxic products into the Ottawa River. I asked the Department and the Government at that time what they were going to do about preventing our own federal polluters from doing what they were doing to our waters and to our air. The answer was: "Oh, we will look into it".

The committee dealt with that matter. The Government came up with a solution. It was to leave it to the Minister to obtain concurrence from any other federal Minister before he acts on any of those pollutants.

What does the Parliamentary Secretary have to say to that type of leaving the fox in charge of the chicken-coop attitude? How does he reconcile this very serious problem of federal polluters polluting our waters and our air and not doing anything about it? Can the Hon. Member answer that question?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I do not know that the question relates to my comments.

Mr. Gauthier: It relates to the Bill.

Mr. Hawkes: My comments were that the passage of this Bill will indeed provide a safer and healthier environment for our children.

Mr. Rossi: Answer the question!

Mr. Gauthier: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Hawkes: What the Member opposite is doing at third reading stage when substantive amendments are no longer possible is bringing up another red herring for the purpose of eating up time and delaying the Chamber. We have been through report stage. We have been through the committee stage. The Hon. Member is one of the most skilled practitioners of the rules of the House. He knows the stage that we are at. The debate should be concentrated on whether or not we approve this amended Bill. This Party says: "Yes, let us approve it. Let us get it passed on to the Senate"—

Mr. Gauthier: We say: "Stop pollution".

Mr. Hawkes: Let us start with a fresh piece of paper and go after further problems and further amendments. However, the amending process on this Bill is over. On other Bills before the Chamber, we want to get them through the House and into committee where they can be examined and amended. The continuing eating up of the time of this Chamber, inappropriately, when it is important to act, is the problem.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, on a question or comment, I might say as a preliminary comment that the election battle has begun. I can see the strategy now. The Opposition is allegedly tying up the House so that the Government cannot get its legislation through, and it will dissolve the House and call an election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I have tried to be as benevolent as I know Hon. Members would wish the Speaker to be, but the time for questions and comments has more than expired. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-74 respecting the Canadian Environmental Protection Act is a measure that does take some limited, tentative but potentially useful steps in the direction of further improvement of the protection of our environment. I say this in spite of the obvious shortcomings and imperfections in the Bill. Let us recognize that in the time since the Conservative Government was elected it has taken all too many backward steps which provide reason, good reason, for very legitimate skepticism concerning its resolve in following through on whatever positive aspects Bill C-74 may have.

Since September, 1984 the Conservative Government, by way of just one example of what I am talking about, has drastically cut back funding for the Canadian Wildlife Service, which has limited the Service's capacity to conduct research into toxic chemical effects on wildlife. This is a research activity that provides important preliminary scientific clues to indicate what effect chemicals discharged into our air, water, and land have on the health of Canadians.

In November, 1984 the Conservative Government eliminated the funding previously pledged by the previous Liberal Government for the toxicology research centres proposed by the Universities of Guelph and Toronto. If these centres had gone ahead, if they were now in place, they would not only be carrying out important research but they would be providing answers to concerns we have about toxic chemicals. This cut was only one part of the $48 million in cuts in spending that the Conservative Government has made in past years from the total government budget for the environment.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) silenced his Environment Canada research officers when they tried to tell the truth to Canadians about the dangerous levels of toxic chemical contamination in general and in particular about the levels of contamination in the St. Clair River. In November, 1985 the Minister of the Environment turned down a request by the Great Lakes Institute of the University of Windsor for a grant of $100,000, which would have enabled the Institute to have continued its urgently needed and outstanding work on the issue of the toxic blob in the St. Clair River. By removing this mandate the Government lessened—in fact it undermined—the Institute's capacity to provide research leadership in solving the problems of toxic chemical pollution like that of the toxic blob in the St. Clair River.

I was able to find out and tell the House and the public that it appeared that the federal Department of the Environment sat for a year on a chemical sample obtained by the Great Lakes Institute from the St. Clair River which would have brought out the problem of the St. Clair River blob about a year earlier than in fact was the case. So much for commitment and concern when it comes to real action to deal with problems of the environment.

Let us remember also that the Government withheld the Storm Warnings Report on the build-up and circulation of toxic chemicals through our air, soil, and water, the very same toxins that emerge in our food supply.

Under the best of circumstances it would be hard to prevent our environmental law and the associated enforcement rules and regulations that control and reduce harmful toxic substances in our air, water, and soil, from lagging behind the increasingly rapid development in technology and the ongoing introduction of new chemical substances. But it is still to be proven whether Bill C-74 can be at all effective in regulating toxic substances and whether, as the Government originally stated, it can serve as a foundation for more comprehensive protection of our environment.

We already know that Bill C-74 itself will not contribute to enforcing the repair of previous environmental damage in the St. Clair, Detroit, St. Lawrence, and Niagara rivers, to name but a few examples.

Back in October, 1986 I called for the creation of a super fund as part of a joint federal-provincial effort to deal with the problems of the high cost of the clean-up of toxic chemicals. Even though the Government indicated some openness to this idea, nothing at all has happened. The legislation before us today does nothing to enable the creation of such a fund. Among other things, a super fund would help pay for the clean-up of chemical wastes which have been dumped in burial sites across the country.

Bill C-74 will not provide a straightforward set of rules to assist in the regulation of chemical breakdown products such as dioxins. It will not regulate pesticides, herbicides, and the food and drug additives which are currently covered under other statutes. This Bill does not even specify the chemicals to be controlled after it becomes law.

Also, Bill C-74 was supposed to be a consolidation of the many existing federal environmental laws but it only includes the Clean Air Act, the Ocean Dumping Control Act, and Part III of the Clean Water Act. In addition, there is a well recognized and widely agreed upon need for these laws to be updated and strengthened, but Bill C-74 does not deal with this need in any way, shape, or form.

Bill C-74 will have no impact on the reduction of acid rain from Canadian sources or otherwise. We saw last week how the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) continues to boast about his special relationship with President Reagan of the United States, and the value of this relationship. He signed a trade deal with the United States that will surrender vitally important elements of control by Canadians over their own social, economic, and cultural affairs. However, the most recent of his four annual summit meetings has again failed totally to move the United States Government toward even a plan for reducing its sulphur dioxide emissions, a key cause of the very serious problem of acid rain. In fact, last week we learned that the United States is pressing agencies of the United Nations for relaxation of previously negotiated international limits on emissions that cause acid rain.

In its original form, Bill C-74 did not stop the export of toxic substances that are banned in Canada. These exports are now prohibited by the Bill, because the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the Liberal critic for the environment, worked long and hard on behalf of the Liberal caucus to bring about amendments. However, this legislation does not follow through upon the Minister's promise of April, 1986 to establish an environmental bill of rights.

Upon his introduction of Bill C-74 on June 26 of last year, the Minister of the Environment took great pains to point out and emphasize the severity of penalties to be applied against those convicted of crimes against the environment. Executives of companies that pollute the environment will face jail sentences and fines of up to $1 million per day.

We in the Official Opposition agree strongly with the imposition of the appropriate penalties, but we are concerned that the Conservative Government will neither provide the resources required to detect violations that cause environmental damage, nor exert the leadership required to prosecute and secure imposition of the new, higher penalties.

The Government has committed the paltry sum of $37 million to be allocated among three government agencies over five years to finance the work of assessing substances already in existence, and new chemicals before they are marketed. That is not all. This same $37 million will have to finance enforcement of the legislation in the field over that same five years. Surely this is absurd.

There are approximately 60,000 chemicals already circulating in our environment, and we can expect the future introduction of 1,000 or so per year. According to the information provided by highly regarded experts in the pollution control field, the single chemical approach to compliance research carried on by the designated government agencies will take 38,000 person-years to develop regulations on just 1,000 of the 60,000 chemicals currently in existence. How can the agencies involved even begin to examine the 1,000 new chemicals brought into use each year?

These projections have been published by Dr. Ross Hume Hall of McMaster University, a former member of the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council. He bases his findings on the most recent record of the Government's own Contaminants Control Branch. This branch is staffed by only 19 people; it has produced control regulations at the rate of one chemical for every two years. In my view, Canadians have absolutely no reason to believe that the compliance and enforcement provisions contained in Bill C-74 will either reduce the rate of introduction of new pollutants or redress, in any significant way, the damage already done. Canadians are concerned that the Government will continue its record of failure to devote the expertise and financial resources required to begin solving the real problems of pollution.

What does this mean to ordinary Canadians? For some two years I have been trying without success to get the Conservative Government to contribute funds to help the provincial and municipal Governments to upgrade outdated sewage treatment systems located in the Windsor area, and similar cases in other parts of the country. Fortunately, the Peterson Government of the Province of Ontario has stepped in to begin the work. However, the inaction of the federal Government means that this will take a lot longer, and it will likely cost the municipal taxpayers much more than if the federal Conservative Government was in fact doing its fair share.

In the City of Windsor problems have to be solved that have been caused by the inadequate facilities at the Little River sewage treatment plant. Problems have to be solved that are caused by the existence of more than 4,000 septic tanks on the west side of Windsor and Sandwich West Township which overflow and discharge into the Detroit River through Turkey Creek. There must be new joint programs created by the federal and provincial Governments to respond to these and similar infrastructure needs across the country.

I have made repeated representations to the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who has responsibility for Canada's involvement in international waterways.

In spite of these representations, the Government has failed to commit itself to doing what should be its full part to solve these types of problems. It refuses to accept its role in putting up the money to maintain, renew, or upgrade facilities that, in turn, provide our clean water. Its refusal contributes to a deteriorating situation that jeopardizes the health and well-being of Canadians. Yet, even though the Government argues that it should not do this because it is not a federal matter, there are well established precedents for the federal Government assuming its share of financial responsibility. Examples include the former federal Government's municipal loan fund as well as its urban transportation assistance program, another area which some have argued is not under federal jurisdiction when it comes to municipal roadways and provincial highways. There is a federal role in infrastructure for our cities, towns, and municipalities. It is something which involves the health and safety of Canadians and it involves the well-being of the entire economy.

In Windsor and Essex County the people are very concerned about the huge garbage incinerator being built by the City of Detroit, without the necessary pollution control equipment to prevent the discharge of dangerous toxic chemicals into our air. They ask the questions: "Is the federal Government really doing enough to help bring about the installation of this pollution control equipment? Is it making full use of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement and the Boundary Waters Treaty, which also covers the airborne pollution of our boundary waters to help deal with this situation?"

I have urged both the Ontario provincial and the federal Government to take every action possible both under existing international agreements, like the ones I have mentioned, as well as the laws of the State of Michigan and of the United States to help bring about a meaningful solution to this problem. In my view the Conservative Government, in spite of the honeyed words of the Minister of the Environment, is not being sufficiently active to press the Canadian case in preventing the Detroit incinerator from being built and operated without the necessary air pollution control equipment. In effect, the Ontario Government has been left on its own to defend the Canadian environmental interests by taking the issue to the courts of the State of Michigan.

Through my own direct inquiries of the Office of the Governor of Michigan, I discovered that there were no less than six possible incinerator projects that might go ahead in the Michigan area near the international boundary, projects that the State of Michigan was aware of but Environment Canada and External Affairs did not seem to know anything about them. As a result I called for an early warning system to be set up to allow Canadian authorities, both federal and provincial, to be aware of such projects that could affect Canadians at a very early stage. This step would permit sufficient time for studies to be carried out and representations to be made in order to prevent these projects from going ahead, unless they had all the necessary pollution control equipment to ensure the protection of the health and safety of Canadians.

The federal Department of the Environment first stated that existing forms of consultation were sufficient. However, after I pressed the matter and pointed out the significance of this list of projects that I discovered, not too long ago the Minister of the Environment finally agreed with me to set up such a system in co-operation with the United States federal and state authorities and the Province of Ontario.

• (1210)

These are not the only important environmental issues concerning the people of Windsor and Essex County which require immediate and urgent action at the international level. The Fermi II nuclear generating plant owned by Detroit Edison and located in Munroe, Michigan is just a short distance from the international border and the 300,000 people living in the Windsor—Essex County area. They are not satisfied that there is absolutely no risk to their health and safety if that plant continues to be allowed to operate at full power.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has rejected my request that the Canadian Government seek the agreement of the United States Government for a reference to the International Joint Commission to permit permanent and ongoing monitoring of the safety of the Fermi II nuclear power plant and similar power plants on both sides of the border. This reference would be carried out by the International Joint Commission, but agreement by both the Canadian and American Governments is required for it to be done. I have asked the Minister to review his decision, to re-open it, and to take a fresh look because the International Joint Commission has a track record of looking into these kinds of questions. However, it cannot carry out the job that it could do without agreement of the Canadian and American Governments.

In the meantime I have contacted the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to request that it constitute an Operational Safety Review Team to examine the Fermi II reactor in order to assure, if possible, the people of Windsor and Essex County that all the necessary safety requirements applying to Fermi II are being fully met.

What I have been talking about shows that the current Conservative Government is not doing nearly enough to preserve and protect our environment. This piece of legislation we are currently discussing, Bill C-74, is only one small and limited step—I admit a step in the right direction—which will be of value only if the Conservative Government can be relied upon to summon the will power to devote the necessary resources toward the effective enforcement of its provisions.

The Government's record on environmental matters since it took office does not give us good reason to be optimistic. The people of Canada have demonstrated that they consider protection of the environment both in Canada and around the world to be a number one priority for their Governments, federal and provincial. They want in particular this federal Government to do more than it has done already.

While Bill C-74 deserves some support, we have to recognize it for the limited step it is and to reiterate that to be meaningful there must be a greater commitment than has been shown in the past by the Conservative Government to enforce this Bill, to carry out its responsibility within Canada and in the world, and to help Canadians as members of the great family of the world to a clean and healthy environment. Without it, our world and its future are at risk. Canadians are calling for action and we in turn call upon this Government for action, action it has unfortunately not shown up to now.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has demonstrated in his intervention today how concerned he is about the quality of the environment for citizens in Windsor and that region. He has also outlined a number of initiatives that he has taken which are very impressive, both in the field of water quality and air quality, as well as in ensuring that plans for the construction of incinerators on the other side of the border will not impair or affect the health of the population in his area.

The Member has also made a reference to an operational safety review team that he has requested from the Atomic Energy Agency, which is a very creative and imaginative idea that would help considerably in laying the foundation for a better approach in the construction of future plans in that area.

I would encourage the Hon. Member for Windsor West, because of the limited time he had in making his presentation, to expand on any of these initiatives so that the citizens in his area will have the full flavour and understanding of what he has attempted to do. Evidently his efforts are not being listened to carefully by federal authorities and the federal Government here in Ottawa. As he already pointed out there are gaps between the rhetoric being expounded by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and in moving to meet the real needs in certain areas.

Would the Hon. Member for Windsor West give us a deeper insight into the situation as he assesses it in his area?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport has raised some important points. I will attempt to deal with them briefly. Over all what we need to see on the part of this Conservative Government is a greater willingness as the voice of Canada in dealing with other countries, particularly the United States to speak up and be more vigorous in defence of Canadian interests.

If there is a special relationship between the Prime Minister and Ronald Reagan, then why is it not made use of in some constructive way? We have already had it demonstrated that this special relationship is worse than useless when it comes to acid rain. Why has the Prime Minister not used the special relationship to get the American Government to press the City of Detroit not to go ahead with the Detroit garbage incinerator without the necessary pollution control equipment? Why has the Prime Minister not used the special relationship to ask the American Government to take more seriously than has been the case until now the concerns of the people in the Windsor area about the Fermi II nuclear generating plant?

One thing I did not mention in my speech is that I and other Members of Parliament for the area, involving all three political Parties, made a formal appeal to the full nuclear regulatory commission of the United States when the regional office of that commission, based in Chicago, granted a few months ago authority to Detroit Edison to operate the Fermi II plant at full power in spite of the record of technical and personnel problems and the concerns expressed in the assessment reports of the nuclear regulatory commission's own staff. We made this appeal to the full commission. The commission has accepted our appeal and is studying it.

I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to join with us in formally supporting our appeal, but we have had no agreement so far. I have asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to support my formal request to the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the setting up of a special operational safety team to review Fermi II, but I have had no response to this request so far. I would think the Secretary of State for External Affairs should support this request, because it is to an agency of the United Nations and Canada is a member of the agency and supports its work. I look forward, hopefully in this case, to a favourable response.

What is missing here is a sense of purpose, commitment, and action to go along with the very nice language that we hear all the time from the federal Minister of the Environment. Certainly it would be hard to surpass him for rhetoric when it comes to the matter of protection of the environment. When one peels off the various covering layers on that rhetoric or if one waits awhile to see what happens after the rhetoric, one finds very little there. That is all too bad, because even though we do not support this Government, even though we think it is a bad Government that should be replaced, it is in power and it does have an opportunity to act. It is not doing its job in this matter of the environment, as it is not doing its job in so many other areas of importance to Canadians.

• (1220)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the House Leader for the Liberal Party has spoken at third reading and not before. If it is not the intention of the Liberal Party of Canada to contribute to the filibuster on the protection of the environment, I wonder if I could at least have a commitment from the House Leader of the Liberal Party. If speaking out on behalf of constituents is what the Liberal Party would like, would he indicate to the House that he is prepared to sit through the luncheon adjournment so that freedom of speech can prevail and so that Hon. Members do have a chance to speak on behalf of their Parties?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, there is a new definition of filibuster here. For the Government, filibuster begins after three speeches, one of which is the Government's own speech. The Hon. Member is reflecting on the quality, value, and necessity of the Government's own spokesman on this Bill. If that is a filibuster, why did he not prevent a Conservative from speaking on third reading? I hope the record will show what the Hon. Member who is speaking on behalf of the Government thinks about the value, quality, and content of the speech made by the spokesman for the Conservative Party when third reading stage began.

The rules of this House, supported with great fanfare by the Hon. Member's Government, provide for breaks at the noon hour and in the evening. If the Hon. Member did not like that, why did he and his Party support those rules? Why have they been going around the country boasting about how these rules which include these breaks are models of parliamentary reform? The Government had the majority to prevent the stipulation of times for adjournment, but it included that stipulation because it recognized that breaks to enable people to get in touch with their offices, and, yes, to have lunch or supper from time to time, contribute to a better quality of consideration of issues in the House of Commons.

The Government controls what measures are brought before the House when it pertains to government business. If the Government has something more important than this Bill that it wants to deal with, it can substitute without any notice whatsoever any other measure it wants and which it considers more important.

I hope the Hon. Member does not think that he is fooling anyone with the suggestion that some reasonable debate on third reading, which is provided for in the rules and has been part of British and Canadian parliamentary procedure for hundreds of years and which has remained in the rules after parliamentary reform, is in any way an abuse or a filibuster.

Instead, if the Hon. Member thinks there is something more important than this Bill—and that is what he seems to be saying because the point of what he said was that the speech given by the Conservative Member in support of the Bill was useless—and if he says that further debate on this Bill should not go on, I challenge him to call another measure that he considers to be more important. If he does not do that, he will be exposed as the sham that he, his Party, and his Government really are.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to speak about some of the same concerns about which the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has spoken. I hope that as part of this debate our colleague, the Conservative Member for Essex—Kent (Mr. Caldwell), who has assisted on a number of important environmental initiatives which have crossed Parties because of the serious problems which exist in the Windsor area, will also feel that it is important to speak on these issues and will make clear his commitment on these concerns.

In discussing this Bill as it has come back from committee, I think we must bear in mind the expectations of Canadians. It is quite clear that their expectations for the environment and the future of our planet are very high. These expectations have been expressed, for example, by the Brundtland Commission report on the environment and development which concluded in April, 1987 that national Governments should establish clear environmental goals and enforce environmental laws, regulations, incentives, and standards on industrial enterprises, and that this should normally be done at the national level with local Governments being empowered to exceed but not to lower national norms.

The Bill before us certainly contains some steps in the right direction, but in studying it one must conclude that it is essentially weak legislation which does not establish that strong national environmental leadership for which Canadians are crying out. For instance, the legislation has not included consideration of some of the most destructive substances that are in use today. Pesticides, for instance, are not regulated, nor are emissions from motor vehicles. I say that as someone from an automotive city. That is something we should be taking leadership on at the national level.

The Bill does not provide standards of environmental quality. It does not redress the principle that has contributed to our current high levels of pollution, the principle that a substance must be proved harmful before it can be regulated. We need a regulatory tool that requires that substances be proven harmless before they can be used.

The Bill certainly does not incorporate an environmental bill of rights, a bill of rights which would give Canadians a sense of commitment to a healthy environment on the part of the national Government. Canadians have asked the Government for the right to take any polluter to court, for the right to environmental qualilty, and for the right to participate in decision-making with respect to the environment. However, that has not been provided by this Bill.

In fact, this Bill does not advance us beyond the 1970s in terms of environmental legislation. The approach is still a substance by substance one, one that aims to manage toxic chemicals instead of seeking to reduce them. In short, environmental goals are not set out and environmental leadership is not being taken.

Many of us have fought on a series of environmental issues for the last four years of this Government. We have fought a hard-fought battle to try to force the Government to recognize the concerns of Canadians about the environment. The weakness of the legislation and the fact that it takes such small steps forward is not a surprise.

I think, for instance, of the fights which we have had to undertake within our communities of Essex County and Windsor which have continually come up against the brick wall of the Government's unwillingness to respond and act when citizens have demanded action by petition, have requested action of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), and have solicited the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to show some backbone in dealing with the United States. Again and again a brick wall has been met.

We can talk about the blob which was discovered in the St. Clair River which contained a concentration of dioxin such as had never been experienced in our Great Lakes system before. That information would not have come out from the provincial Conservative Government, had it not been for a brave individual who came into my office and talked about the realities which had been discovered and covered up by that provincial Government.

The Government at that stage, with a new Minister of the Environment leading the charge, said: "Let's act, let's get something to happen". In fact, action took place. However, three years later I have learned in discussions with people from Dow Chemicals that there is still coming up from the bottom of the St. Clair River the same toxic material which was there when this originally came to our attention in 1984 and 1985.

The problem has not been solved. There was a great public relations burst by the Minister and $12 million was spent by Dow Chemical, but we did not get a solution to the problem. That is the environmental record of the Government—high public relations and low public performance.

We can talk about mundane things. Members of Parliament from the Windsor area have brought before the Minister of the Environment again and again serious problems which leave thousands of houses in the southern part of Windsor and in parts of Sandwich West with septic tanks and, consequently, leakage into rivers and drainage ditches throughout the community.

What has happened? Has the Government moved? Has it said that it will respond to an urgent problem brought before it? Not a chance. Instead there has been a complete lack of action despite the pressure from myself, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), and the Member for Windsor West. After looking at the performance of the Government, it has still been necessary to conclude that the Government does not care about that problem.

We can talk about the incinerator, the great Detroit incinerator, which like St. George against the dragon the Minister of the Environment was going to slay. He was going to enforce serious environmental controls on it for the future. It is almost a year and a half ago that the Minister of the Environment went to Windsor and said "We have solved the problem of the Detroit incinerator and do not have to worry about it for the future".

Well, the reality is that the Detroit incinerator continues to go up. There has been no commitment by either the Michigan Government or the City of Detroit to put the latest technology into that incinerator to prevent air coming across the river into Canada which will massively increase the pollution problems in my community.

The Premier of Ontario, that other great white hope, met with the Governor of Michigan, Mr. Blanchard. The Premier said that we were supposed to have an agreement with Michigan with respect to pollution problems. Absolutely not. There was no commitment whatsoever with respect to this very serious problem.

When this problem was first brought before the Minister, he said that it was no problem, that the Government would set up an action group of Members of Parliament from the Windsor area plus representatives from the Ministry itself, and that we would get action. Well, that so-called action group has not met once since the Minister set it up. So much for the real performance of the Government as opposed to its rhetoric. Its public performance in the face of serious problems has been disastrous.

We can say the same thing with respect to the Detroit city airport and its expansion, another environmental problem which will hit much of the City of Windsor and could bring dangerous consequences to people throughout the community.

Once again there was no commitment to move, no commitment even to communicate with the United States and convey the concerns of those who live in the community which is to be affected.

Perhaps the most telling, the most damaging, the most obvious dereliction of duty on the part of the Government with respect to the environment in our part of Essex County and Windsor has been with respect to Fermi II. It is over a year since I started raising this question. I put questions to the Government and wrote to both the Minister of the Environment and the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicating the serious problems existing with this reactor which is less than 10 kilometres from Canada. It is very close to population centres in Canada. That nuclear reactor has serious maintenance problems because of its age, even though it has just begun to generate power at 100 per cent capacity. It has serious monitoring problems, as well as serious basic design problems.

When one looks at the record of how it got its license to operate, it is absolutely clear that the wool was pulled over the eyes of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in the United States. It effectively held back information from that agency which members of the agency subsequently said would have prevented Fermi II from getting its licence. Despite that, the Government is not prepared to take action and tell the American Government that the people of Essex County and those affected by this nuclear reactor have asked for a joint review into what they believe are serious safety problems. The Government has not been prepared to refer the problem to the International Joint Commission.

We met with the International Joint Commission which told us that if it received a reference, it would have tremendous power to probe the problems that exist with this reactor. Yet, it is evident from letters from the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of the Environment that they have consistently told us that they believe the Nuclear Regulatory Commission is the one that should do the job and that Canada has no responsibility for this serious health concern to Canadians.

I must express my disappointment not only at the performance of the federal Government with respect to Fermi II, but also at the performance of the Ontario Government which has been approached but is unwilling to add its voice to the need for a joint review of the safety problems with respect to this nuclear reactor.

That is just a small list of what we have had to face as Members of Parliament from the Windsor and Essex County area in trying to kick the Government into action on the environmental problems affecting our people. While this Bill continues the tradition of great rhetoric, it does not give us any promise of serious, consistent action in the future. We cannot trust a Government which has been so grossly incompetent in the past, as I believe this list of problems clearly shows.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I was particularly interested in my colleague's concerns about the environmental questions affecting his City of Windsor. Has he noted any difference between the actions of the present Government and the former Government?

I recall in 1983 being part of a group with New Democrats from the provincial Legislature of Ontario touring the Windsor and Niagara area. We looked at the Love Canal situation and found a continuing ignorance of the environment, particularly of the effects that toxic substances could have on present and future generations.

Local citizens and environmental groups told us of their frustration because the laws helped polluters and hindered those who were interested in fighting pollution.

I agree with my colleague. This legislation is a lot of sound and fury signifying nothing. Is there any difference between the actions of this Government and the previous Government?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I was not a Member of Parliament during the period of the previous Government. There is a strong desire among those who control the industrial power within our society to deal with the pollution problems in the easiest and least costly way. That desire leads to emissions of serious pollutants into the air. It has lead to emissions of pollutants into the Great Lakes that have resulted in the conclusion that the Great Lakes between Canada and the United States are the most polluted, environmentally toxic area in the world.

On the other side, there are very well intentioned Ministers of the Environment who are not strong enough to have the political leverage over the power centres within their Parties that are so influenced by those large-scale industrial groups. I believe there has always been such a battle. The consequence is that very often Ministers of the Environment, both Conservative and Liberal in the past, had to work very hard to influence their cabinet colleagues.

I recall interviewing Canada's first Minister of the Environment, a Liberal Minister, when he was appointed in 1969-70. He made the point that he had to push very hard to get his cabinet colleagues to move. I suspect that the same is true with the present Minister of the Environment.

I am certain that he truly believed it when he went to Windsor and said the problem with the Detroit incinerator was solved. However, it has not turned out to be the case because people in his Party have been far more concerned with getting a trade deal with the United States than fighting for environmental concerns within this cross border situation.

I think we have a structural problem which can only be confronted if we have first mobilized very strongly public opinion to get a serious and comprehensive change of commitment, so that the environment becomes the number one concern, not an afterthought, not something that brings us a Bill four years after the Government comes to power. What we see in front of us is something which afflicts both Liberal and Conservative Governments. It is something which, frankly, New Democrats would face as well in government. We would need a very strong commitment, not just from our own Party but from people and groups right across this country, in order to bring about a very strong and effective environmental policy. I believe it can be done, but it is going to be a hard fight.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend a short question. We have an important Bill here. I was wondering if the New Democratic Party was going to support it.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I made it clear in my speech that we are always in favour of small steps forward. Unfortunately, small steps forward are not satisfactory to the people of this country. It is not enough to take dainty little steps into the future as this Government is doing. We must—and I am convinced after the next election that it will be done—put in place a pattern of commitment, of boldness, and of serious intent which will give us significant change, a significant move forward under a New Democratic Government, and which will give us a much better commitment to the environment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The Hon. Member for Davenport on a very short question or comment.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would briefly like to ask the Hon. Member for Essex Windsor (Mr. Langdon) a question. I know it is difficult for the Member to recognize good initiatives when they take place, when they are taken by a Government whose stripe is not his own, but would he not agree, however, that Ontario has today the toughest environmental laws it has ever had in its history?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The Hon. Member for Essex Windsor on a brief answer, please.

Mr. Langdon: Yes, I very much agree that the previous Conservative Government which was in power for so long did so little that the important steps which were undertaken during the minority Government, with New Democratic Party support, were very crucial to our province and to our future. Unfortunately, since there has been a majority Government elected in Ontario we have seen a slowing down of these initiatives. I think of the Fermi II situation. It is absolutely unforgivable that the Ontario Government has not added its voice as powerfully as it possibly could to those of us from Essex County who are calling for a joint review of safety with respect to this dangerous nuclear reactor being so close to our boundaries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): That concludes the questions and comments. Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity, although there are only four minutes left until the House takes recess, to speak to Bill C-74, allegedly an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health.

I would have liked to take a more positive stand, if the Bill before the House today had been as strong a piece of legislation as was claimed earlier by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday).

When the Bill was tabled in the House on first reading, the impression was that this Bill had some strong points and that it was an important step towards improving the quality of our environment.

However, after everything that has happened so far and all the so-called consultation, we now have before us a Bill that has very little to show for all this frenzied activity. There are so many fundamental problems connected with the quality of the environment, the environment in which we live, that I think some comments are very much in order on what this Bill contains and, especially, on what it does not contain, in its present form.

When the Minister of the Environment agrees to ask his colleagues for advice on legislation or regulations concerning the environment, I think he is making a big mistake, because there are emergencies when the Minister of the Environment must act without necessarily consulting each of his colleagues to find out what position he should take.

If we consider certain toxic products that are being trucked or shipped across Quebec and across Canada and if we look at the accidents that have happened in recent years, I have serious doubts about the quality of the regulations we had at the time and still have here in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I will have a few minutes more this afternoon to talk about the position taken, for instance, by the Government of Quebec on environmental problems and the kind of action that should be taken very shortly so that the Government of Canada and the governments of the various provinces can introduce environmental legislation that is strong enough to protect the quality of life and the quality of the environment in this country.

Mr. Speaker, you are signaling that I should stop . . .

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): It being one o'clock p.m., I do leave the chair until two o'clock p.m. later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—ONTARIO MINISTER'S COMMENTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Ontario Environment Minister Jim Bradley quite rightly commented on Saturday that the much heralded Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) special relationship with President Reagan has proven worthless in resolving the acid rain issue. As Mr. Bradley stated, they have come to the end of the line and have nothing to show in the way of acid rain reductions—not one drop.

If Chairman Gorbachev can convince President Reagan to scrap missiles aimed at America's chief enemy, why can the Prime Minister not get the President to stop bombarding America's closest friend with acid rain? Acid rain costs Canada hundreds of millions of dollars a year. Canadian efforts to clean up acid rain are hampered by U.S. inaction.

Mr. Bradley told high school students that half the acid rain deposited in Ontario originates in the United States. No matter what we do, we cannot solve the acid rain problem by ourselves.

Mr. Bradley made his point effectively. When the U.S. administration will understand is another matter.

HISTORIC EVENTS

MONTREAL CEREMONY COMMEMORATING BATTLE OF THE ATLANTIC

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon at the Victoria Wharf Clock Tower in the Port of Montreal an important event took place under the auspices of the Canadian Legion Branch 212 of LaSalle.

This highly emotional ceremony was held to commemorate our marine heroes of the Battle of the Atlantic during the last World War. Numerous wreaths were laid at the foot of the monument facing the St. Lawrence River which leads to the sea, by Presidents of different Montreal legion branches, among which was President George Stundon of my own LaSalle branch.

The ceremonial parade was led by our legion members and army cadets. But the highly poignant instant of the commemorative event was when an 88-year old mother of a son lost at sea was invited by the officer in charge to lay flowers in memory of all sons, cousins, uncles, and fathers who gave their lives to safeguard the democratic liberties of our free world.

Lest we forget. Je me souviens.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT THREAT IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is important that the Government, and especially the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), recognize the serious drought threat presently existing in much of western Canada. For example, in the Kamloops area this year's spring run off is 50 per cent below normal. The Thompson River is flowing at 64 per cent of its normal rate. Streams and water-holes are dry or near dry. The Environment and Parks Ministry's hydrology section is predicting drought conditions throughout central British Columbia.

Last year was Kamloops' second driest year on record with only 160 millimetres of precipitation, and the hottest year ever recorded in history.

While cattlemen face the most dire difficulties, other problems are created by drought as well. Fires and drought, unfortunately, go hand in hand. The commercial, native, and sports fisheries are placed at risk. Water fowl habitat is destroyed. Many community reservoirs are near dry. Irrigation districts are forced to cut back on water supply.

• (1405)

On the Prairies many grain farmers are wondering if they should spring seed, since in some regions the soil lacks sufficient moisture for seeds to germinate.

In light of these conditions and the possible drought crisis, the Government should be developing contingency plans which would be implemented quickly if the tragic necessity does arise.

PORNOGRAPHY

BILL C-54—CALL FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, there has been much public debate about Bill C-54 which amends the Criminal Code relating to pornographic or erotic material. This Bill would serve to prohibit pornography, particularly where children are being depicted in sexual acts, or in cases showing violent pornography and degrading sexual acts against any person.

It is unfortunate that both opposition Parties and some people in the arts community are saying that the Bill is directed at art forms; some librarians have stated that they will have to segregate some books. I believe that these groups have exaggerated a few of the points the Bill, making it seem puritanical. This is just not so. If amendments are needed to clarify the wording it is up to us to let the legislative committee do its work.

I call upon the Government and the opposition Parties to let this Bill go through second reading and go to committee in order that this vital piece of legislation can be passed before we break for the summer.

CHILD CARE

EDMONTON—PROPOSED FACILITY IN GOVERNMENT BUILDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it seems strange that if you are a government employee living in Ottawa or a government employee living in Edmonton, you have different rights. There are more rights for those in Ottawa, and less rights for those in Edmonton. I refer specifically to the issue of child care.

As you are no doubt aware, Mr. Speaker, today we expect the opening of a work site day care in Tunney's Pasture for employees serving the Ottawa area, and at the same time a similar child care operation which was proposed for the opening of Canada Place in Edmonton, scheduled to open in Edmonton next month, has been put on hold.

The child care situation in Edmonton is in limbo because the federal Treasury Board and the Department of Public Works have not got together to put forward the necessary funding. I guess that parents at federal government workplaces in Edmonton must be asking, "What is it that makes federal employees in Ottawa more important than federal employees in Edmonton?"

I would like to say that if the federal Government is serious about encouraging workplace child care, it should put its money where its mouth is and set an example not only in Ottawa but in every area across the country.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

AFGHANISTAN—PERSONNEL'S PARTICIPATION IN OBSERVER FORCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is a tribute to the professionalism and experience of our Armed Forces that once again Canada has been asked by the United Nations to serve in a peace-keeping operation.

This time five Canadian officers are being sent to Afghanistan to monitor, in co-operation with military personnel from other neutral countries, the withdrawal of Soviet troops pursuant to the UN negotiated Geneva agreement.

We wish Lieutenant-Colonel Leslie and his team all possible success with the difficult and possibly dangerous monitoring task to which they have been assigned.

VIA RAIL

OUTDATED ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this weekend the President of VIA Rail, Denis De Belleval, said that our rolling stock is the "worst in the world".

It is not exactly a new thing to find out that VIA's transportation system is in shock. People are used to travelling from Thompson to Churchill wearing parkas inside the coaches. That is not only the case in northern Manitoba, but also on the main line. People, including myself, who have taken trains from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay, to Sudbury and on to Ottawa, have woken up each morning frozen because of the antiquated system.

We also have a train system on which tourists who are travelling in this country find that they cannot get accommodation. People who live in small communities in my riding without road access cannot get on a train because there is not adequate equipment.

Prior to the 1984 election the Conservatives promised that there would be new rolling stock in place. That is another broken promise, a promise which results, as the president of VIA Rail says, in us having the worst in the world. What a record. What a broken promise.

NATIONAL FOREST WEEK

DESIGNATION OF GRAND FALLS NFLD., AS FORESTRY CAPITAL OF CANADA

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, this week in Canada communities all across the country will be celebrating National Forest Week.

Grand Falls, Newfoundland, is especially honoured this year because it has been named forestry capital of Canada. This designation acknowledges the importance that Grand Falls places on forestry, and helps to focus the attention of all Newfoundlanders on the vital role forestry plays in our economy and our lives. National Forestry Week extends that awareness to include all Canadians.

The forest sector is a cornerstone of the Newfoundland economy, generating direct and indirect employment for 12,300 people. The federal Government is aware of the importance of forestry to this province and is investing $33.6 million in the $48 million Canada-Newfoundland Forest Resource Development Agreement. This week we should all take the opportunity to learn about our most important natural resource, our forests.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

UNITED STATES—FERMI II NUCLEAR REACTOR

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, just 10 kilometres from my constituency the threat of the Fermi II nuclear reactor to Canadians is real. Over 7,500 people have signed petitions against it and all four Members of Parliament from the area have appealed against its operation. Now the Ontario Government has joined us.

I have here a letter from Joan Smith, Ontario Attorney General, to the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) calling for an investigation of these safety concerns. It is unfortunate that the Ontario Government would not go one step further and call for a joint Canadian-U.S. review of Fermi by an independent expert team, but this letter does push the federal Government to move on this issue. So far, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) have been afraid to do so.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): False.

Mr. Langdon: Again and again, they have refused. They must move now for the sake of the hundreds of thousands of Canadians at risk due to the poor maintenance, monitoring and design record of this reactor.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ETHIOPIA—POLITICAL COMPONENT OF FOOD CRISIS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, Canada's ambassador to Ethiopia has finally recognized that country's food crisis has a political component. Drought is not its only cause. It never has been, Mr. Speaker. It has always been partly due to the Marxist militaristic oppressive regime of that country. The dictatorial Derg has been determined to turn Ethiopia into a massive collective farm even if that reduces food production. It has spent 46 per cent of its resources on weapons while its people have gone hungry. It is now preventing food supplies from reaching two million people in the rebel held North.

Canada has condemned the use of food supplies as an instrument of political policy. It is time and more than time that we condemned this action in Ethiopia.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ELIGIBILITY DISABILITY BENEFITS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge that changes to the Canada Pension Plan disability criteria be made.

The requirement that an applicant be disabled to the point that he or she can do no other type of work now or in the future is too onerous. The fact is that many applicants who, for the purposes of private insurance and provincial programs, are disabled are being told that they are ineligible for benefits under the Canada Pension Plan because they are not disabled. This is very perplexing to these Canadians. To be told by government doctors that they are ineligible is to leave these Canadians with a feeling of injustice.

It is time that the test be changed and the long delays eliminated.

CANADA MORTAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

APPROVAL OF CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING IN METRO TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you realize, there is a severe affordable housing crisis in the greater Metropolitan Toronto area. One of the best ways to create affordable housing is to build co-op housing.

Because of that it is particularly distressing to learn that while the affordable housing crisis in Metro has grown progressively more severe the amount of co-op housing approved for Metro by CMHC has steadily declined from 1,182 units in 1981 to 682 units in 1984, to only 126 units in 1987.

What is going on at CMHC? Are they all asleep to reality at CMHC?

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF MINISTRY OF FORESTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, as Canadians well know, this is National Forest Week. During National Forest Week we are reminded that the forest sector of the Canadian economy employs 750,000 Canadians. It is the mainstay for over 348 single-industry towns. Indeed, it is a backdrop for tourism and the outdoor recreation industry in Canada.

This might be a good time to remind the Government that it has promised on a number of occasions to bring in a full Forestry Ministry. A full Ministry of Forestry ought to be announced this week, National Forest Week. I would encourage the Government to take that initiative and to give forestry the due it deserves.

INCOME TAX

TAXATION OF RENTAL BENEFITS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, some RCMP personnel and some civil servants live in government owned houses in Banff and Lake Louise. Because of the age of the houses, a "kind" Government ordered a 10 per cent to 15 per cent reduction in the rent. A few months later, actually in early 1988, the renters were advised that income tax would be levied on the amount that the rent had been reduced and, furthermore, that it would be retroactive to January, 1987.

I always thought that income tax was levied on income received, not on money saved through a reduction in rent. But not any more. A bureaucrat in Revenue Canada has informed me that the rent reduction is a tax benefit and the Mounties and the park officials will have to pay income tax on it.

Judging from this, we will soon be paying income tax on the savings we make by buying at a sale, and even on the nickel that is deducted by a kind candy maker. Heaven help us!

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO—BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, Premier Peterson initiated the largest, most cynical tax grab in Ontario's enduring memory. In order to offset some bad publicity, Peterson said that the tax increase was to pay for the rise in cost of health care. However, the opposite is true.

The financial outlook for public hospitals, of which 50 per cent are operating in the red, is bleak, and they will receive nothing. Hospital funding remains at last year's figure of 6.9 per cent, of which 4.4 per cent represents across-the-board increases for inflation. Hospitals have been forced to impose a virtual freeze on programs and services and on appointments of badly needed medical specialists to staff.

With our aging population, and serious medical problems such as AIDS looming on the horizon, our public hospitals must have the capability to meet the needs of the community. It is obvious that the Peterson Budget was only an excuse to gouge the taxpayer while jeopardizing the future health of the population.

ORAL QUESTIONS

FINANCE

INCOME TAX INCREASES—ELECTION PROMISES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As everybody knows, today is the deadline for filing personal income tax returns.

Could the Minister of Finance explain to the House why personal income tax, not corporate taxes but the taxes of average Canadians, totals $26.7 billion more this year than in 1984 when his Government came to power?

During the last election campaign the Conservatives, and with them the Minister, promised they would not increase taxes.

Will the Minister of Finance explain to the House and to Canadians why he violated this election promise by taking $26.7 billion out of the pockets of average Canadian families?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important to understand that 24 per cent of the increase in revenue of the Government of Canada is due to the increase in our economic growth rate.

It is true that we have increased taxes as a result of budgetary decisions, but 24 per cent of the increase is a result of economic growth and the Government's policies, which have led to higher employment. We have 1,200,000 more jobs in Canada and an economy whose growth rate is the best among the G-7 countries.

TAX REFORM—EFFECT ON FAMILIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister finally recognized that he has increased taxes between the 1984 return and the 1987 return which Canadians are forced to file, and by $26.7 billion.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You're wrong. You correct that. That's absolutely wrong.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Wait a minute.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is wrong.

Mr. Speaker: While there may be some disagreement, I would ask the Hon. Minister to—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Quit distorting things like that.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister to wait until he responds, and if there is a disagreement the Hon. Minister can certainly comment upon it. I would ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, let me be precise so that the Minister can relax. I can understand why he is a little raw today when people are paying their taxes right across the country.

He has admitted to raising taxes. He has not admitted the figure that I cited. However, I will recite again that the increase between the 1984 tax return and the 1987 tax return for individual income tax is $26.7 billion.

Let us not even talk about the 77 per cent increase in sales taxes under this Government. Let us talk about what happens to the income tax of the ordinary Canadian family after four Budgets of this Minister, after all the surtaxes, after the deindexation, and after the so-called tax reform.

Will the Minister explain why, even after tax reform, a Canadian family with an income of $25,000 a year will be paying $390 more in income tax than it paid in 1984, and why a family with an income of $40,000 a year will be paying $840 a year more in income tax than in 1984, while a family with an income of $120,000 a year will be paying $3,570 less than in 1984? Is that the Minister's idea of tax fairness?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have a bit more respect for the Leader of the Opposition if he did not completely distort what I said in an answer just a minute before he made the comment which he did. He knows perfectly well that his statement that $26 billion is a result of tax increases is a total distortion. He would have more respect from the people of Canada, and possibly the people in his caucus, if he would recognize that that sort of distortion should not be used in the House of Commons in the way in which he just has used it.

If his memory is that short, allow me to repeat for him that more than 80 per cent of the increase in the revenues of the Government of Canada over that period of time is because of growth in the economy and the increase in the number of jobs that have been created. One million two hundred thousand jobs have been created. More people are paying tax. The revenues have gone up because people are working.

Another reason the revenues of the Government of Canada have gone up is that we have the best growth record of the G-7 nations.

Yes, we have increased taxes. I have never made any secret of that.

Mr. Gauthier: You promised you wouldn't

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Allow me to make just one more comment, Mr. Speaker. I know you are getting anxious to get up.

Yes, we have raised taxes, but that is simply because of the huge—and I repeat, huge—fiscal problem that we inherited in 1984.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the figures I am reciting are derived from the statistics of the Minister's own Department reinforced by independent agencies such as the Institute of Public Policy. I would be glad to furnish him with support for every number I have raised here in the House.

TAXES PAID BY INCOME GROUPS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is no wonder that Canadians are upset about paying their taxes today and over the weekend. They have every right to be mad. Ninety-nine per cent of Canadians are paying more in total taxes—I am talking about income tax, sales and excise taxes, and so on—than they were paying in 1984 when the Government came into power after it had said that it would not raise taxes.

• (1425)

Only one per cent of Canadians are paying less in tax. That one per cent of Canadians consists of those whose income is more than $117,000 a year. Those happen to be the facts.

Will the Minister explain why someone making $17,000 a year is paying more in taxes, while the person making $117,000 a year is paying less in taxes since he came to power?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with the way the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, a former Finance Minister, is playing with figures today, I will not comment on any numbers that he gave. He said that $26 billion is totally because of tax increases. Is that what the Hon. Member is saying?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They are paying more in taxes by $26.8 billion.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Is the Hon. Member saying that is totally because of tax increases?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am saying that was the result of his four Budgets—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There you have it, Mr. Speaker. That is the distortion. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is playing to the television cameras, distorting the numbers out of all reason. He wonders why I do not answer his questions. It is because he is asking questions in a way that has been quite distorted. He knows perfectly well that the reason why people are paying more taxes—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Because you increased them.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —is because their income is up. Their income is up because we have a healthy economy. Do not give me all these distortions.

AGRICULTURE

THREAT OF DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Western Canadian farmers are facing the worst drought in a century, with the lowest rainfalls and precipitation since 1889. Topsoil is blowing in many areas of the Prairies and dug-outs are dry, even with the spring run-off which was practically nil.

What action will the Government take to assist these farmers who are facing the worst drought in one hundred years?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that question was posed to me by one of the members of caucus last week. I indicated in response to his question that indeed the potential for a drought in Western Canada is very high. In fact we are advised by PFRA officials who are in the field that moisture levels are perhaps at a forty-year low. It is potentially very serious.

As one producer indicated just a few days ago, we have not lost a crop in April yet. We must be hopeful that mother nature will look favourably upon us, but the Hon. Member should take some satisfaction in the fact that since the latter part of February and first part of March there has been a federal-provincial and producer task force looking at a number of options. It will continue to do its work. Hopefully we will get moisture. In fact I am advised by my Parliamentary Secretary that most parts of Manitoba received considerable rainfall last night.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, when will the Government give some kind of commitment to western farmers that it will provide assistance in this national emergency? The Government of Alberta has already committed some $20 million. When will the Government, which has already cut the PFRA budget drastically in the last number of years, give a total and complete commitment to the prairie provinces? He knows that the disaster is beyond Alberta and affects much of Saskatchewan as well.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if anyone wants to take the time to examine the record of how this Government has responded positively in previous situations, that person should take some comfort with respect to our willingness to accept our responsibility in the future.

Let me inform the Hon. Member that when the Prime Minister appeared before the Outlook Conference in the first part of December, he gave a commitment of some $75 million in the area of soil and water conservation, to be matched by the provinces. So if the situation does occur that we do have an emergency situation—and I hope it does not—I am quite certain that it would be possible for us to utilize some of that $75 million which we committed in the area of soil and water conservation as early as last December.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

CHILDREN IN POVERTY—AGENDA FOR FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the tragedy of child poverty. More than one million children under the age of 16, nearly 18 per cent of all of Canada's children, are growing up in poverty. This is a national disgrace. Recalling the Prime Minister's promise of social justice and equality when he took over government, will the Government now, through the Cabinet, launch a major attack on child poverty? Will the Deputy Prime Minister ask the Prime Minister to ensure this topic is on top of the agenda of the next First Ministers' meeting?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that this has been a problem in Canada. It is one we are all sympathetic to and we want to find some further solutions. This Government has done a lot towards reducing child poverty. First, the child tax credit and the refundable sales tax credit have been very helpful to families in Canada who are poor. It has helped put more money into the pockets particularly of single parents in lower-income brackets.

FAMILY BENEFITS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INCREASE TAX CREDITS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The fact remains that there are one million children living in poverty in Canada. Since the Minister of Finance has really added to poverty by deindexing family benefits—cuts in this area will mean that children are deprived of some $1.5 million by 1991—will he give poor kids a break by reindexing family benefits? And will he increase tax credits to cover the real cost of raising children, not give with one hand and take away with the other?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first let me observe that the number of Canadians who are now living in poverty is down by about 525,000 in the time we have been in office. The number of children within that figure is down 193,000. So, as my colleague said, there has been very good progress made. The numbers are still too high of those living in poverty, but in response to that we have made a number of changes.

We have introduced the refundable sales tax credit, increased the size of the child tax credit, provided for the acceleration of payment of the child tax credit and increased the spousal allowance to those who are aged 60 to 64 years living in poverty.

We have made a number of changes in tax reform to help those in low-income brackets. There will be 850,000 taken right off the tax rolls. We have made a number of changes in the child tax credit which will help those living on low incomes.

Ms. Mitchell: Well, Mr. Speaker, it appears the Government is now boasting that there are still one million children living in poverty in Canada. That is a shameful disgrace.

REQUEST FOR DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL ACTION STRATEGY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the Minister responsible for the status of women. She knows that 61 per cent of the kids of single moms are poor. These are probably the poorest families in Canada. We need action now. We cannot wait.

Would the Minister assume the role of catalyst, along with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to launch a major attack on child poverty? One thing they could do is call a national conference of provincial Ministers and groups concerned with poverty to develop a national action strategy to deal with this problem. Will she do this?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time this afternoon we have dealt with some distortions in what has been said in this House. I started my previous answer by expressing some sympathy and concern about the poverty of children. To say we are boasting about what we have done is totally incorrect and I absolutely refuse to accept that preamble.

One of the ways to help women and single family parents is to ensure they have good jobs. I should say that in the job creation statistics, 659,000 women are working today who were not working before, and 77 per cent of those jobs are full time. Through the Canadian Jobs Strategy we have a component for non-traditional job training that is helping women, particularly single parents.

We are the first Government that has come out with a child care strategy. Of course we are sympathetic, and concerned, and interested. We are dealing with these things every day through our general policies and through specific policies.

PORNOGRAPHY

BILL C-54—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It concerns the status of Bill C-54, the amendments to the Criminal Code, which would control pornography, a goal with which we agree. But the Bill goes far beyond that to limit free speech, to constrain culture, and to prevent virtually any expression of sexuality. The Bill is condemned by everyone except the right wing of the government caucus.

Recently the Minister said the Bill had a low priority. I want to ask him about that because concerns are still being expressed. Would he confirm that the Bill is a disaster, that it has been withdrawn and that it will not be re-presented in its present form?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal caucus over the weekend is in worse shape than we had all suspected when that is the type of question the Hon. Member puts forward. That is a third distortion now with respect to the premise of a question. I am disappointed in him.

I hope the Liberal Party is now in support of what I think is a legitimate legislative approach to control depictions of sexual abuse of children and the degradation of women. I hope the Liberal Party has not changed its position on this issue.

At no time did I say the legislation has a low priority. This is very balanced and very much needed legislation which I think addresses a serious problem in terms of an obscenity law. The present provisions of the Criminal Code are unacceptable.

The Fraser Commission has looked at this matter in great detail. That was a commission the Hon. Member's Government, of which he was a part, put together. That commission has made some very sensible recommendations which we have accepted.

The Hon. Member talks about the Bill doing certain things, comments which I utterly and absolutely reject. I wish the Hon. Member would get his facts straight before he stands up in this House.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION ON LIBRARIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, everyone can agree with the goals the Minister just described as being the purpose of the legislation, but it is not just the Official Opposition which is criticizing the Bill. Would he confirm that the librarians of his own City of Saskatoon came forward to indicate that, if this Bill goes forward in its present form, not only will the goals he talked about in his answer be covered, but the Bill will go much further? I ask him to confirm that libraries like those in his own city will have to divide into sections and prevent young people from examining what is undoubtedly great literature by anyone's definition? Why does the Minister not wake up and fix up this Bill?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, one of the prerequisites of being a librarian is the capacity to read. I think if the Hon. Member takes the time to read the legislation he will understand that we have in fact very substantially removed the provisions with respect to the written word. We are now talking about visual depictions. I am telling the librarians that right now, and I tell the Hon. Member that he should not bring forward misrepresentations of the legislation.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When is the last time you walked into that library?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The librarians in Saskatoon are my dearest friends. We come together on all occasions.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NITROGEN OXIDE EMISSIONS—DISCUSSIONS IN GENEVA

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns his statement in the House last Friday in answer to a question, wanting credit for a so-called win with regard to NOx emissions. If he got the American Government to agree to a reduction in NOx emissions we would call it a win, and we would give him credit for it.

I hope that today he will be specific about what is in this win. Are there real reductions to which the American Government has agreed? Or does he consider a win to be merely the fact that the Americans have agreed to keep on talking?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the change in Geneva is very substantive. There were two proposals seriously considered by 34 countries during negotiations.

The first would have seen any previous year, not just 1987, as the baseline on which the Americans, among other countries, could calculate the extent to which they met their obligations under the treaty. The Americans, could have chosen 1978, which was their highest year of production of nitrogen oxides, which in turn would have meant that it would have been that much easier for them to meet their obligations. We have eliminated the clause "any previous year".

The second proposal concerned a provision that would have enabled the Americans and other countries, too, to credit reductions in previous years against any future reductions they would be required to make under the protocol. We have removed that provision as well.

It is a double win for Canada.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, if indeed the Americans are agreeing to that, then that would be a very significant step.

Will the Minister confirm that this protocol will go ahead without American agreement and that these really crucial matters are still left to bilateral talks? Will he confirm specifically whether or not have the Americans have agreed to get rid of the "any year" provision? Have the Americans agreed to at least a freeze? Are the Americans prepared to go ahead with stated objectives for reductions in NOx emissions?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that all the prospective signatory countries have returned to their respective jurisdictions to consult their Governments with a view to coming back to the table on July 1, 1988, a few months hence, to tell the other partners the extent to which they can go along with the protocol as drafted.

We will not know, presumably until then, or some time before the first of July, what the final position of the United States might be. I am hopeful.

However, as the Prime Minister indicated in connection with Canada-U.S. negotiations in Washington, short of pointing a cannon at Washington, what more can we do? We have put our case forcefully to the Americans, and to the world community. I think we have performed a service to the country in doing so.

YOUTH

METRO TORONTO YOUTH JOB CORE PROGRAM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Youth. As the Minister is well aware the Metro Toronto Youth Job Core Program is a program which trains hard-core unemployed young people, who cannot get or cannot find jobs because of their own personal or work habits, to become productive citizens. He is also aware that the funding for the program is in jeopardy because of the fact that there is such a low rate of unemployment in Metropolitan Toronto.

Will the Minister undertake to review the funding criteria for that program to ensure that these young people do not turn out to be permanent welfare recipients?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the program and the project to which my hon. colleague refers are funded under the severely unemployed disadvantaged option of the job development program of the Canadian Jobs Strategy which does not provide or guarantee ongoing funding. I will be happy to look into the matter on my hon. colleague's encouragement and report back to him.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

LACK OF TELEVISION SERVICE IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. It concerns the lack of a full English language service in New Brunswick, the only province in Canada without a CBC owned and operated television service.

Last month officials told the Premier of New Brunswick that the corporation could not find the $10 million to $20 million needed to give New Brunswick this full service. Yet, two weeks later, $220 million was found for equipment for a new broadcast centre.

How can the Minister explain to the Premier and the people of New Brunswick that, on the one hand, they can find up to $380 million for a new broadcast centre and, on the other hand, they cannot find $10 million to $20 million to give a full CBC service to New Brunswickers? Is that not another example of how the Government treats New Brunswickers? Are we going to be second-class citizens all the time under the present Government? What is happening to the Government?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, not for one moment do I accept that New Brunswickers should be considered second-class citizens. Not for one minute would I consider that anyone from the Maritimes should be considered a second-class citizen or, indeed, anyone from anywhere else in Canada.

As the Hon. Member has said, New Brunswick is the only province in Canada in which there is not an owned and operated CBC outlet for English language television. I very sincerely regret that.

I would also like to say to the Hon. Member that in the last few weeks hearings have taken place before the CRTC on the question of the future of the CBC in New Brunswick. Of course, I await the outcome of those hearings.

I would like to see a full CBC station operating in New Brunswick, but that decision has to be taken by the CBC.

PRODUCTION OF PROGRAMS IN NEW BRUNSWICK—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister were really serious about this, if she really wanted the people of New Brunswick to get the same treatment as other Canadians, wouldn't she be prepared to instruct CBC authorities immediately to invest money in improving services and set up production facilities so that programs can be produced in New Brunswick?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, one week members of the Liberal Party are telling me I should not be interfering with the CBC. The next week they are telling me that I should be going in and telling it what to do.

We believe that there should be an arm's length relationship between the Government, and the agencies that operate in the cultural sphere. I intend to honour that commitment.

VANCOUVER—PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF PARTICLE ACCELERATOR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that yesterday the Minister of State for Science and Technology announced that the Government was not prepared to make a commitment to participate in the construction of the kaon project at the University of British Columbia. The Deputy Prime Minister will also know that this project is absolutely critical in terms of upgrading the existing TRIUMF project to make it a world-class science facility.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister now indicate that if this project is considered to be feasible as a result of the design study under way, and in the Canadian interest, the Government will make a commitment to fund this first-class scientific project?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, again we have another distortion. That is not what the Minister of State for Science and Technology said at all.

What I think he did say is that there were discussions going on with provincial government officials as to the probability of funding, engineering and feasibility studies. I think that the Minister demonstrated a very positive approach on behalf of the federal Government in that regard.

REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we have seen that the Government has made a commitment to participate in the space agency, and to fund Canada's participation in the U.S. space station to the tune of $1.2 billion. The point is that virtually all this scientific research will take place in eastern Canada. We are simply saying that we want some in western Canada.

• (1450)

Will the Deputy Prime Minister make a commitment, because the Minister of State did not make a financial commitment, that if this project is in the best interests of the people of Canada, and the design study proves to be true, western Canadians will be treated fairly when it comes to scientific research money?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the Hon. Member that I participated in a meeting with other Ministers from the provincial Government where this particular matter was discussed, and discussions are continuing. I think that the comments made by the Minister of Science and Technology yesterday clearly reflect the positive attitude that we are taking in this regard.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

IMPORTANCE OF AWARDING CONTRACTS TO CN SHOPS IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the same Minister who was conspicuously absent in Montreal last Friday when it was announced that another committee to examine Montreal's economic renewal had been set up. The Minister delegated another Minister, who delegated another Member, who arrived without knowing what to say. I would like to ask the Minister: Why not, instead of just setting up a committee, why not take concrete action now, considering the urgency of the situation, by, for instance, giving CN shops the assurance they will get the contract for renovating VIA Rail rolling stock? Why look for somebody else to do the work instead of the people who have the equipment and skills to do a good job?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am going to have to ask the Hon. Member to repeat the question.

VIA RAIL ROLLING STOCK—REQUEST THAT REPAIR WORK BE DONE IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister was right to shun the Montreal meeting.

I do not know if the Government believes that it will be able to buy time by creating yet another committee to look at the economic development of Montreal, instead of making specific moves right now to create jobs and to help save jobs in the southwest part of Montreal.

May I ask the Minister again, if she is listening, why would the Government not order VIA Rail to send the refurbishing of its rolling stock to be done in the Point St. Charles CN Shops, instead of looking around to try to find someone else to do the job?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answers we are looking for in southwest Montreal, as in eastern Montreal, are far more significant than the kind of project the Hon. Member is talking about. We want to have possible solutions identified on a long-term structural basis, after we are able to analyse the economic potential of the region. It is this type of action that will be most sensitive, as it was in Montreal east.

I should also say that employment in Montreal rose by 114,000 between 1984 and 1987, and this compares with a loss of jobs under the former Government.

HUNTING AND TRAPPING

THREAT POSED BY PROPOSED BRITISH LEGISLATION

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The livelihood of thousands of Canadian families could be devastated by proposed British legislation which would force retailers to label furs indicating that they may have been trapped.

The trapping industry cannot fight the anti-fur lobby alone, and now the situation is urgent. This legislation could be brought up in the British Parliament within weeks.

Will the Minister take the case of Canadian trappers and the Canadian fur industry directly to British parliamentarians, and provide them with information about the real facts on this issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have already begun to do that. I certainly share the concern of the Hon. Member for the Yukon, and indeed of Canadians generally with regard to the effect upon the livelihood particularly of northerners, but also of people who are engaged in trapping as their only means of making a livelihood across the country.

The High Commissioner was in again last week to speak to authorities in Great Britain. We are in touch with members of the British Cabinet. We are not yet making the progress that we want to make. It is very important that all of us in the House who understand the importance of this industry to the livelihood of some of the poorest Canadians, should join together to try to impress that fact upon British parliamentarians.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. This issue is important. There are approximately 105,000 jobs in Canada at stake. About 60 per cent of those who trap are aboriginal people who have been good husbands of the land for many years and who understand the environmental issues and humane trapping methods.

I appreciate that the Minister has said that the Government is doing something directly with British parliamentarians. Will the Minister undertake to advocate with the Prime Minister that he raise this issue when he meets with the British Prime Minister later this month?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will do that, Mr. Speaker. I also will, naturally, raise the matter both directly and personally with the British Foreign Secretary when I meet him within the next month. I have been in touch with him already but have not had the chance to discuss the matter with him directly. I intend to do that.

CHILD CARE

EDMONTON—PROPOSED FACILITY IN CANADA PLACE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. I would rather have had an Alberta Member asking this question, but unfortunately none of them seem to be interested in this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Since there are Members of the Legislature here today from Alberta, I have a specific question for the President of the Treasury Board. Given that at Tunney's Pasture this week there will be a child care centre opening for federal government employees in Ottawa, can the President of the Treasury Board give us the assurance that the same service will be available to federal government employees in Edmonton at Canada Place?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is a proposal for a day care centre in the new government building in Edmonton. The particulars have not been finalized to date. The proposal was made long after the original design was completed. Hopefully, we will come to a conclusion about whether or not the space will be available, on what basis, and to whom, within a reasonable period of time.

TREATMENT OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that the facility is supposed to be opening within the next few weeks. There are parents in Edmonton who would like to know if there is some kind of second-class treatment for civil servants in Alberta as compared to Ottawa.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I would like to ask the Minister, why is it that Treasury Board had no problem coming up with the money for the Tunney's Pasture facility in the nation's capital, and when it comes to Edmonton that 20-odd Tories are silent on the issue? Why are they not fighting for federal government employees in Edmonton to have the same rights as government employees here in the nation's capital?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I might note that this is the first Government ever that has considered potential day care places for children of public servants.

Ms. Copps: That's totally false.

Mr. McInnes: Perhaps the Hon. Member would allow us time to determine the feasibility, the availability, and to whom the spaces might be made available.

TREATMENT OF DIABETICS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Defence my question is directed to the Associate Minister of Defence.

In 1981 Mr. Stephen Green, now of Victoria, British Columbia entered the Armed Forces. He set an excellent record, and has been accepted for officer training. Unfortunately, he has recently been diagnosed as having diabetes. The officer training program has been rescinded. He has received a notice of dismissal from his present job.

When diabetics are now policemen, firemen, and hard-rock miners, why are the Armed Forces so out of touch with medical realities? Why are they discriminating against these soldiers?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to answer the question and its specifics if the Member would like to give the details in a letter.

I can inform him that we do not discriminate against diabetics. As a matter of fact, some diabetics are kept in the Armed Forces. Those whose condition is of an extremely serious nature, and who would not be able to use insulin or have doctors nearby on certain postings, unfortunately we do not keep them there because it would be a danger to their own lives.

• (1500)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister, and I will give him names of other people, names which I cannot make public.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Is the Minister aware, as the Armed Forces does not seem to be, that there are modern methods of blood glucose monitoring, Mr. Speaker? Insulin is portable now. People can monitor themselves. Would the Minister not agree with me that modern medicine says there is no reason to take people away from their jobs or to kick them out of the Armed Forces because they suffer from diabetes?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): I entirely concur with the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that in most normal situations a diabetic should be able to carry on his or her functions in all workplaces. However, the Armed Forces workplace is not always in a normal situation. Only the most extreme of cases are released from the Armed Forces. The other ones we accommodate.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Acting Minister of Defence.

Anthony Cordesman, the author of a new book on NATO, joined a growing number of defence experts when he wrote recently that Canada's purchase of nuclear submarines was wrong, that it would jeopardize Canada's NATO commitments. He even questioned the strategic rationale of the submarines.

How many international experts criticizing this plan does the Government need before it cancels the whole cock-eyed proposal?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the unique thing is that our Party has a plan—the Liberal Party does not—on how to defend Canada's north. We happen to believe in the sovereignty of Canada's north. We will make the decisions on how to protect it in Canada. We will not depend on American or other international experts.

COST OF SUBMARINES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this plan of purchasing submarines will do nothing to protect Canada's sovereignty in the north. Mr. Cordesman, who is a national security adviser in the U.S. Senate, said that this huge financial commitment of $12 billion would mortgage Canadian defence investment funds for a generation.

Can the Minister explain how he hopes to purchase these submarines, stay within budget, and maintain his other commitments to NATO?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is citing another American trying to advise Canadians. Perhaps he would prefer to get some actual facts in Canada. We have done our calculations based on our economic models, based on prices in Canada, not on prices in the United States. We do not expect to spend $600 for toilet seats and $2,000 for aerials. We hope to do this in a practical and in a rational way. We do not take our advice necessarily from Americans on our sovereignty and security; we take it from Canadians.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties. I was advised earlier today by the New Democratic Party that it has several more speakers for Bill C-74, an important piece of environmental legislation. We had hoped to send that Bill to the Senate along with the western diversification, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and victims of crime Bills. Unfortunately the Opposition has several more speakers, which will prevent that from happening.

In an effort to complete legislation and to speed passage of legislation to the Senate, I have advised the other Parties that we will now call Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada. We hope that, unless there is further unusual delay, we will be able to complete this Bill by five o'clock this evening.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to indicate to the Deputy House Leader that we appreciate the advance notice earlier today, that the Government intended to change the order of business and get on dealing with the western diversification Bill.

I agree with the Minister of State that the environmental protection legislation presently before the House is very important. While it is our intention to support that legislation as enthusiastically as we can, there are a number of points we feel ought to be made before the Bill leaves the House. Those will be done quickly, expeditiously, and in a very business-like way as soon as possible.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, April 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed, and the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That this question be now put.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to finish my remarks on the western diversification legislation. I should point out to those watching today that again we have a situation where the Government has changed the legislation before the House in a very haphazard manner.

One hour prior to this debate we were still debating Bill C-74, the environmental legislation. Now we are back to debating the western diversification Bill. It is obvious that the Government is running out of time in this legislative session. It knows its legislative program is in trouble. The Government has yet to start debate on free trade and to introduce legislation on Air Canada. The Government knows that legislatively its back is to the wall. As a result, we have the unusual situation where we deal with one piece of legislation in the morning and a different piece is dragged into the House for the afternoon. Every time there is a piece of legislation on the Order Paper, the Government attempts to extend the hours of the House. It moves to prevent legitimate amendments in the House.

This is a very difficult situation for those Members who are scheduled to speak and so engage in legitimate debate. There is absolutely no way we can believe the Government when it says what the Orders of the Day are or what the Business of the House will be for the next day.

The House has found it almost impossible to have a legislative timetable, because the Government has been unable to get its act together. It recognizes now, with two months left and the number of Opposition Days guaranteed by the rules of the House, that it will have a problem. The Government's way of dealing with that is not to sit down and negotiate with the opposition Parties in trying to come up with a timetable to see which pieces of legislation can be dealt with. The Government's approach is a bluster approach. The Government announces on Thursday what the Business of the House will be for the following week, yet a few hours later changes its mind. Even before Thursday is over there is a change with regard to Friday.

On Friday the Government announced that we would be dealing with the western diversification legislation and on Monday morning, an hour before the House sat, we found out that we were dealing with the environmental protection legislation. We went through the morning with that piece of legislation and made our plans for the afternoon. Just before Question Period started today we were told by the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) that we would be back to debating the western diversification Bill.

These procedures tell us that the Government is out of control and that the Government is unable to plan a legislative timetable. It is hoping to catch the Opposition napping. The Government wants to ram through some pieces of legislation quickly in order to see if it can recapture some time. If it is following those tactics, the Government should realize that the probability of co-operation from the Opposition will diminish.

If our critics do not have notice and if members in Standing Committees are pulled out of those committees without notice, one cannot expect opposition Members to co-operate with the Government. The Government should realize that. It should stop playing this kind of poker game by dealing cards and, if it does not like the way the cards fall, taking them back and dealing them again. That is what is happening.

There are enough Members on the government side who sat in opposition when the Liberals tried the same tricks in the past to know that members of the Opposition do not like it. It makes it impossible to work and do the types of things that are necessary as a Member of Parliament and as a member on a committee, if the Government continues to change legislation the way it has.

I was particularly upset when the Parliamentary Secretary rose on Friday and moved the previous question on the issue of western diversification. This is an issue which affects all parts of the West and on which many Members of the House from western Canada have not had an opportunity to speak. It was forced through the House quickly at second reading stage.

When it went to committee, the Government refused to allow the committee to travel to western Canada, even though the committee studying a similar piece of legislation affecting Atlantic Canada was allowed to travel.

• (1510)

As I said on Friday in the few moments that I had to speak then, there are people in western Canada who would like to speak on this legislation. There are people who have various opinions on this legislation. They have ideas of their own on how the West should develop and what role the federal Government should be taking in supporting that development and diversification. Those people cannot all afford to come to Ottawa. By its very nature, the House of Commons will not pay for the transportation of all those groups to Ottawa.

This Bill is a regional Bill and it should have been taken to the region so that people from Edmonton, Calgary, Red Deer, Kamloops, Prince George, Vancouver, Victoria, and the smaller communities could make presentations. The same is true for the people of the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The people from those provinces would have liked to have spoken on western diversification, but they were denied the opportunity to do so.

When the Parliamentary Secretary, a Member from Calgary, rose to move the previous question and, by doing so, limited debate on this matter, I was appalled. First we were denied the opportunity to travel to the West, and now we have been denied the opportunity to express fully our concerns with regard to this legislation.

I am not the only one with these concerns. I could quote the remarks of all sorts of groups that have concerns with this legislation. I am not just talking about those groups that have traditionally supported the New Democratic Party or the CCF. I am not talking strictly of the co-operative movement, the labour movement, or some of the other groups that are famous for having left-wing, co-operative approaches to issues. I can also quote the remarks of other groups from western Canada that are concerned with the format, the concept, and the fact that decision making will not really take place in the West. These groups are concerned that there may not be a co-ordination of over-all government policy within the structure developed by the Government.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has suggested that this measure might be a political slush fund, and if it is not a political slush fund, that it might be a bureaucratic slush fund. The Federation has said that it is a narrow, highly centralized approach to diversification with a continued emphasis on megaprojects. The Federation calls it a confusing black box lacking clear criteria or policy direction and has said that it is on a collision course with a myriad of client groups who will inevitably see thousands of applications rejected and thousands of hopes dashed. That is what a group supported by small business is saying about the Western Diversification Fund.

The Federation goes on to make some remarks comparing this measure to the Western Development Fund, what I called the phantom fund of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). The previous Liberal Government promised $4 billion to the West and that was reduced to $2 billion and then disappeared altogether.

I realize that my time is up. I realize that that is a direct consequence of the Government's measure to restrict debate on this very important matter and that it points out the problem with the approach this Government has taken to western diversification. It is not only refusing to listen to the people of the West, but it is restricting the ability of western MPs to speak on this very important matter.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, in previous attempts at the diversification of the West or of other regions, the legislation has given Departments including DREE and DRIE responsibility for the co-ordination of the efforts of other major Departments such as Finance, Transport, and Health and Welfare. These Departments have co-ordinated efforts to develop programs which would substantially affect the region being diversified. I wonder if the Hon. Member could give us some indication of whether or not he sees something like that as being possible.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) for his question. I believe that it is a very important question. It is something that concerns all of us.

The Macdonald Royal Commission on the economy discussed the co-ordination role of DREE, which was supposed to have acted as a co-ordinator with the other federal Departments. Its report indicated that a major federal concern was that DREE was not proving to be very effective in co-ordinating and integrating the activities of other line Departments, and that the line Departments felt relatively little need to pay much attention to regional concerns. As someone who was the DREE critic in those days and who has had an opportunity to see some multidepartmental approaches in northern Manitoba and other places, I recognize that the co-ordinating role will not happen if we simply set up a little agency in Atlantic Canada with a limited political clout and a different agency responsible to a different Minister in western Canada, again with limited political clout. There is no over-all thrust.

I must agree with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which is very critical of the approach that is being taken. With the new Atlantic agency and the Western Diversification Fund, political motivation and back room deals will be the way decisions will be made. That is a problem. When we see thousands of applications coming from western Canada and only a few being accepted, and some being accepted during provincial election campaigns, we must be skeptical and wonder what the decision-making process is all about. I am very skeptical.

Specifically in answer to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert, I believe that the only way there can be an effective co-ordinating role is if there is direct accountability to a Department like the one DREE used to be before the Liberals dismantled it. There must be a responsibility written into the legislation so that various programs will be funnelled through DREE, not just when someone thinks it is necessary or a good idea but as a requirement so that when development is taking place in western Canada, decisions are made in Ottawa, and that is just as important.

Decisions made in Ottawa affect the regions, and I am referring to decisions like the Air Canada-Airbus decision, the CF-18 decision, and a number of other decisions which seem to be made for certain political reasons with no regard for what is happening or for what negative effect it will have. We must see that some second thought is given, and that is what we are not seeing at this time.

I believe that the lack of any clear authority in this legislation means that the diversification agency will have no role over the line Departments and that they will continue, as happened under the Liberal Government, to ignore any role for regional development.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, as my hon. colleague from Churchill has indicated, one of the very important roles which the Western Diversification Office ought to take on is to be an advocate for western Canada—western Canadian business, western Canadian industry, and western Canadians.

We all remember the CF-18 decision. All the experts said that Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg should carry on the maintenance of those fighter jets, but the decision was made that the maintenance would go to Montreal. The Member also mentioned Air Canada's pending decision on the Airbus, which would again result in a significant decrease in the maintenance program in Manitoba.

I want to ask the Member about the kaon project. The Member is well aware that the kaon project is a supportive development for the TRIUMF project in British Columbia. British Columbians, particularly the scientists at the University of British Columbia, are very proud of the contribution which that has made to particle science, particularly particle physics. We now have a chance to make this into a world-class scientific project, a leading scientific project in the world. However, it requires a commitment from the federal Government.

Does the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) consider this to be a legitimate role for the Western Diversification Office to play? Does he think it should be an advocate to ensure that westerners, western Canada, and specifically a western university, be the home of a world-class scientific project, the kaon project or the TRIUMF project? This would be in line with the decision of the federal Government to support the space agency and set aside $1.2 billion in scientific research for that agency which will be done, by and large, in eastern Canadian universities. Does the Hon. Member for Churchill consider this a legitimate role for the Western Diversification Office to play?

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, that is a very interesting question. It points out the problem we have with the legislation and with the way the Government acts. This appears to be a very good project in western Canada which is not being favoured by the Minister responsible. We thought that the Western Diversification Office was co-ordinating development in western Canada. Rather, the Minister, acting by himself, is saying that the Government will probably not sponsor the project.

Were the people at the Western Diversification Office even consulted? We do not know whether they were or not. Was the Minister responsible for western diversification consulted on this decision? Again, we do not know whether or not he was consulted. Was a report made on the merits for western Canada of this project going forward? If so, what were the benefits to the West, and what were some of the negative aspects involved in this decision? Again, we do not know.

When we see important decisions relating to research and scientific and technological study and improvements being turned down in western Canada, we have to wonder whether the Western Diversification Office had any role whatsoever in the decision.

How do you develop co-ordination of various government programs in the West if major decisions are being made by one Minister acting alone, even though they have a fundamental effect on the development of western Canada? Although the money and the programs are needed, the Western Diversification Fund will not help the West unless there is an over-all co-ordinating role and if they continue to ignore what is happening in the communities and the suggestions of people in the regions.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am happy to have a chance to speak on Bill C-113 because it is a very important Bill in western Canada. We feel western Canada is facing the most difficult time in its history, not only because of the dramatic downturn in oil prices in 1986 which plunged the prices to a level at it is simply not feasible to operate many of the new projects which we would like to see developed in the tar sands and heavy oils, but because the cash flow generated puts a lot of small operators into a serious position.

Government Members are, of course, always very critical of previous government programs with regard to energy. However, it is clear that the Western Accord did not provide for the downturn which we saw in energy prices in 1986. The prices are still hovering at $16 to $17 per barrel. It is my understanding that the economic incentive provided under CEDIP for the past year is going to be phased out as well for oil and gas exploration. Of course, any program under the Western Economic Diversification Program is all government assistance. Therefore, when programs like CEDIP are phased out we must ask whether this new program takes its place. Of course it does not. It is an entirely different kind of program for an entirely different number of activities.

In addition to CEDIP being phased out, we are seeing the earned depletion allowance being phased out which has provided $600 million or $700 million for mineral exploration and development in the past three or four years. Of course the new program under the Western Economic Diversification Office does not take its place. As a matter of fact it is much smaller. It involves some $60 million a year for each of the four western provinces.

A program which has been instrumental in developing new mines in northern Manitoba and other areas of the West is being phased out at the same time, and the net result is less incentive for exploration and development in the mineral and oil and gas industries, and this at a time when the economy of the West is generally down.

We must look at the program which has been put in place because, even though the legislation has not been passed, there is enabling legislation for departmental reorganization and establishment and grants are being given under the Western Economic Diversification Office. We must look at the programs and grants which have been established.

I had an opportunity to hear some of the witnesses before the committee. One of the most penetrating and decisive descriptions put to the committee was put forward by Dennis Young, the President of the Single-Industry Towns Association He put the argument forward that we should be working more toward developing small industries in individual communities. From the experience I have had in my district, I have been very impressed with programs like the business development centres under the Department of Employment and Immigration. While that program exists in some communities in the West, it does not apply to many areas. Programs under this legislation will not provide that kind of assistance.

Under the Business Development Centres Program, a small amount of money is provided as an incentive for the operation of the Economic Development Corporation. Funds amounting to $275,000 per year are provided at that level.

The funds that are provided for incentives in my area take the form of a loan at regular commercial rates of interest of 11 per cent or 12 per cent. It is amazing that in my constituency, businesses have been able to create some 30 or 40 jobs with capital funds of $275,000 per year. This is not done by large manufacturing concerns or through megaprojects, but with small community-based projects that are expanding businesses. This program provides funds strictly on a loan basis.

A number of witnesses made the argument that this type of program will deliver more effective economic development on a more sound basis than the present program. I hope that the Government will consider it because it is a valid criticism.

The Single Industry Towns Association points out that most of the grants go to the large cities. I assume that these grants will continue to go to large cities in the West, which perhaps are already more diversified and successful in attracting new business than the rural towns and villages throughout the Prairies which have difficulty in attracting new business.

The Government should consider this concern because it is a very valid criticism. This problem has been overcome in many communities with the use of the Business Development Centres Program under the Department of Employment and Immigration.

Unfortunately, only a limited number of these projects have been approved across the country, and the Western Diversification Program does not provide funding.

Prairie communities have been facing a downturn in the price of oil and natural gas since 1986. They are also suffering from extremely low grain prices. Bill C-113 is not adequate to cope with the dramatic events that are taking place at the international level. The U.S.-European Economic Community trade war is resulting in dramatically reduced property values on farms throughout the West.

I do not believe the economic fall out of this has been fully appreciated. While the report will not be out for another two months, we hear that the Farm Credit Corporation is facing the loss of $500 million to $1 billion. The full impact of this situation has not been investigated, nor has a program been established to deal with the problem.

The Agriculture Committee has been studying agriculture throughout Canada, but clearly the Prairies are facing the greatest challenge in the face of a reduction in the value of commodities, especially grains and oil seeds, and the consequent reduction of farm property values. As farmers lose their equity, their position of stability is being challenged.

Furthermore, many parts of the southern half of Alberta and Saskatchewan are facing a drought situation. Slews are dried up, for the first time in memory, and the dug-outs used to water cattle are dry. Dust storms are blowing away the top soil.

Today I asked the Minister when a program would be announced and what would be the Government's commitment. Alberta has already made a commitment of some $20 million for expanding dug-outs for water supply, for developing new wells and pumping systems. If the situation continues, the Government will have to make a commitment.

It is unfortunate that the Government cut back the budget of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration which has provided assistance for the development of water supplies and so on in the past. The budget has been cut to $64 million from some $150 million a few years ago.

Western Canada is facing a difficult time. We are concerned about whether this western diversification office is the proper mechanism to cope with the kind of economic diversification we really need, not only in western Canada, which depends on one or two major resource commodities, but in other parts of the country which face the same kind of difficulties.

The decline of the rural community as a result of lack of funding for useful programs has been exacerbated by the policy not to replace the postmasters who leave rural post offices. Some 5,000 rural post offices are under the gun, along with some 90,000 jobs as a result of that policy. Rural Canadians can only hope that their postmaster will not have to retire in the near future.

Rural communities also require infrastructure, including the replacement of streets, sewers and water works systems. This western diversification program will not provide that important infrastructure for these rural communities.

The Canadian Municipal Association put forward a program a couple of years ago. It stated that over five years it would need a $15 billion program to upgrade rural community infrastructure across the country. That program would have provided $1 billion from the federal Government, $1 billion from the provincial Government and a similar amount from the municipalities across Canada. Unfortunately, under the rural Economic Diversification Program, no funding will be provided for municipal infrastructure. That is unfortunate because various groups that came before the committee complained that not only are the grants going mostly to urban centres across the Prairies but there is very little help for the small towns and communities and no municipal infrastructure is provided under this program. So there are a number of problems that just do not seem to be resolved under this Western Economic Diversification Program.

We are also concerned about the program for railway rehabilitation for western Canada which is essential for the transportation of grain, especially in branch lines. It appears at the present time that this billion dollar program is going to be wound up next year with about $125 million left in the program which will not be made available to do that essential upgrading. Clearly this is a breach of the trust of western communities and the western grain industry. That commitment should be honoured by the Government.

When we talk about $1.2 billion over five years, it sounds like a lot of money, but when we break it down to four provinces per year, we are looking at some $60 million per year. We see the Government phasing out the CIDA program for exploration and development in oil and gas. We see the earned depletion allowance phased out for exploration and development in mining. We see $125 million in the Railway Rehabilitation Program which is not being spent. We see the cut-back in funding for postal services and we see the cut-backs in the community colleges which are essential for the training and upgrading of our young people. That cut-back involves 40 per cent during the last three or four years. We see a massive number of cut-backs which are not compensated for under this program of western diversification. So I think those are very important concerns which should be addressed.

It is not clear, for instance, with the phasing out of the IDRP program, if the funding provided there is balanced and is the same amount of money as in the Western Economic Diversification Program. Although the delivery mechanism is a little different, there are regional offices, which is an advantage. Is there any net increase in the money for regional development? It is not very clear just what the increase is under any of these programs. Those are some of the concerns I see.

I could go on to talk about the softwood lumber export tax which in British Columbia has been transferred from an export tax to a stumpage charge. For one company alone in Prince George, British Columbia, the stumpage charge went from $6.2 million to $19 million a year when that tax was transferred. That is the kind of problem many rural communities will face in the British Columbia area under the transfer to a new stumpage charge from the export tax charge. So I think there are a number of issues that need to be addressed and considered before this legislation is passed and put into effect.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to both the previous speaker and the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I think some things have to be clarified. I would like to ask this question; how can the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), for example, say with candour that the Government refused to allow the committee to travel when there was no request for the committee to travel? It is unfortunate we are hearing these kinds of things during debate on a very important Bill.

The Hon. Member also said the Government refused to hear witnesses, but the committee heard three witnesses put forward by the New Democratic Party. There was a question on delay in committee, and that is why it was brought back. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Algoma, who indicated that it was a slush fund and that there were questions to be asked, how he can indicate this when there are basically 58 Progressive Conservative ridings in western Canada and it is going to be very difficult for programs to be approved under the Western Economic Diversification Program if they are not approved in some of the Conservative ridings? How does the Hon. Member square that?

Mr. Foster: With respect to the Government providing witnesses, there was a terrible battle to get any witnesses before the committee, even the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. It had prepared quite an important paper on the subject and we had a great battle to get it accepted as a witness. A number of witnesses were proposed by the New Democratic Party. Although the Member says three of them were allowed by the Government to attend the committee hearings, practically none of the witnesses proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), were permitted to appear before the committee. For instance, Dr. Michael Percy, past Director of the Western Centre for Economic Research, University of Alberta, was not permitted to appear. Mr. Ed Guest, Executive Director of the Port of Churchill Development Board was not permitted to appear. Chief Rodney Spence, Nelson House Band, Nelson House, Manitoba, was not permitted to appear. There is a report coming out fairly soon which, I understand, has been prepared by Mr. Michael Decter, a consultant to the Economic Council of Canada, who was not permitted to appear.

I think it is totally understandable that the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party said that committees never travelled because government Members would not permit it. There is no question about that. There was no agreement even to have any witnesses appear.

When the Hon. Member talks about concern for the funds being used as a slush fund, that is exactly what the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, in its submission to the Minister responsible for economic diversification, said on February 12. On the first page of the executive summary it states with respect to the program, that its enthusiasm has been tempered by growing concern that the western diversification initiative is degenerating into at least one of the following. It then lists the following items.

It states that it is degenerating into a political slush fund to support vulnerable constituencies, lure in big business, or bail out obsolete industries in the hope of gaining short-term political profile. It is not members of the Opposition who are expressing concern about this initiative, it is the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which is expressing the concern that the fund would be used as a slush fund.

Its second concern also refers to a slush fund. It states that it would be a bureaucratic slush fund available for other line Departments and Ministers to raid in lieu of other national programs that should have their fair share spent in the West.

There are two aspects to the slush fund about which the Federation is concerned. The first is that it is a political slush fund for PC candidates who are in trouble in their own ridings, or their big business friends who are in trouble with obsolete industries or industries which are failing. The second concern with regard to the slush fund approach is that it may become a bureaucratic slush fund. The concern that this will be a slush fund is well documented by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Liberals have had a lot of experience with slush funds, Maurice.

Mr. Foster: I think that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is probably very nervous about this aspect, since I think some grants have gone to some Saskatoon areas. He is probably very concerned because in the Department of Justice there is no access to line department funds. He would see it as an opportunity for a political slush fund for his own constituency, not so much a bureaucratic slush fund as a political one. I suppose he could also see it as something of a bureaucratic slush fund because the Department of Justice does not build many court houses or have that type of thing. I understand how the Minister of Justice is very concerned about this matter.

The third approach taken by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business is that it be a narrow and highly centralized approach—

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) would not want to mislead the House or the Canadian people in his remarks today. Therefore he should point out that the paper from which he is reading from the independent businessmen was prepared long before the legislation was in place. Since the legislation has been in place they actually indicated to the Chairman of the committee that they did not want to appear.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure that the Hon. Member has brought up an interesting point in debate, but it is not a point of order. There is a minute and a half left in the Hon. Member's time.

Mr. Foster: Clearly, Madam Speaker, the government Members did their best to make sure that they would not appear. I can understand that. I believe I did read that into the committee record. They said: "Will representatives from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business appear?" They said: "Gee, we cannot get there tomorrow". Later on, after some debate, both in committee and in the House, they did appear, at our insistence. I thought that they made a worthwhile contribution to the committee study.

It took about one week to get them before the committee, but I thought that they made worth-while presentations. If there is anything wrong with the whole process, it is that this study was put out on February 12. If the legislation had been before the committee last fall, there could have been time for hearings. In that way we could have gone to the West and heard people make their presentations right in their own backyard as to how they want to see the legislation put before the House. We did not have that opportunity. What we are trying to do is to explore and explode all the problems of the legislation here at third reading.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have probably not been more upset than I am today as we are talking about this legislation when Members talk about the process that was used. I want to point out that I was a member of the legislative committee which studied this matter. When we studied the Bill clause by clause a request was made for a list of witnesses to come forward. There was a large list submitted by the Liberal Member on the committee, and a somewhat watered-down list was received from the New Democratic Member.

Members indicated during the committee that these people had actually requested to appear before the committee. On checking that out we found that they did not request to appear before the committee, but that the request was being orchestrated by the Liberal member on the committee and by the New Democratic member on the committee strictly as a delaying tactic to keep the legislation in committee. In this way it would not be brought into the House and passed, and western diversification could not start to work in western Canada.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business, for example, was telephoned by the Chairman of the committee who said: "Are you requesting to come before us?" They said that they were not. He then asked: "Do you want to appear before us?" They said: "We really do not want to appear before the committee. If you request us to do so, we will". The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) by his own words today in debate said that they appeared "at our insistence". That is exactly it. We can bring anyone to a legislative committee as a witness if we want to do it at our insistence. I do not think that that is fair. It is really another way that Members on the other side are trying to delay this Bill, as they have been trying to delay legislation in this House for the past month. They know that people in western Canada are waiting for the legislation. They say one thing out in western Canada and then when the legislation is to be put through which will help individuals, firms and employment in western Canada what do they do? They delay, delay, delay. It is very unfair that they do that. It is very unfair that they present these meaningless arguments that they have put forward to try to justify their position of delay. I will not accept that.

There is another question that came up in debate today. It is one that I resent most sincerely. Members opposite said that the committee was not allowed to travel. The committee did not make a request to travel.

Mr. Cassidy: Because your majority would not allow it to.

Mr. Shields: There was no request from the committee to travel across Canada. It was not even brought up before the committee, to my knowledge. I do not remember one person standing up to request that during that period.

Mr. Cassidy: You refused to hear witnesses. It was the Tories who refused to have the committee travel.

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member now knows where it stands—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure that if the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has something to say he may want to seek the floor later on this afternoon. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has the floor. It is very difficult for the Chair to listen to two people at one time.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, it upsets me when there was not a request made by either the Liberal Member or the New Democratic Party Member. There was not a request to travel. There was never a request to travel before the committee. The subject was never even discussed in committee. It was not a matter of who controlled the committee. It was never brought up in committee. The request was never made.

I am tired of these delaying tactics. Therefore, I would like to put before the House the following motion:

• (1600)

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of third reading of Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Athabasca. Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their place.

And more than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Since 15 Members have risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to be withdrawn.

On a point of order, the Hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As you know, Madam Speaker, my purpose here is to see that justice not only is done, but appears to be done.

I wish to ask whether the Hon. Member had an opportunity to continue his remarks or comments.

Mr. Rossi: No.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Your voice is either getting much deeper, Madam Speaker, or someone is yelling in your place.

Mr. Rossi: You are talking to the Minister of injustice.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Member speaks from a seated position, but he is muffling his voice.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, obviously the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is asking for unanimous consent for the Member to continue his remarks. We would not give unanimous consent. The very purpose of the motion moved by the Hon. Member would prevent any western Canadian Member of Parliament who is not present today from ever having a chance to debate this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, may I ask the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) a question? I think that that is allowed under the Standing Orders.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Athabasca could not continue with his speech, but the period of question and comments following the speech can be proceeded with. The Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has asked for the floor. The Hon. Minister of Fisheries.

On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, please tell me how one can ask questions of someone who did not make a speech of any substance of any kind? How can a Minister ask questions of a back-bench Member?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Minister of Fisheries has the floor on a question or comment.

Mr. Siddon: I wanted to receive an indication from the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), who has been very close to the delivery of the western diversification initiative these past several months, whether he has some examples to illustrate the manner in which this very important program is bringing benefit to the four western provinces.

It has been some time now since the office was opened in Edmonton, and there are now sub-offices in all four of the provinces. I think the House would be interested to learn the extent to which these initiatives are bringing benefit to the various sectors of the economy of western Canada, and in particular to achieve the objective, which is to diversify the economy of western Canada.

Mr. Shields: I am very happy to have an opportunity to answer the very intelligent question put forward.

One of the things that people in Canada should be made aware of, and particularly the people in western Canada, is that for the first time in the history of this country a full federal Department with a Deputy Minister will be headquartered, not in Ottawa, but in western Canada. The place chosen for the headquarters of this very important Western Economic Diversification Department is Edmonton, and there are sub-offices in every province in western Canada.

We talked about the delay in getting the program operational in western Canada. The delay is owing to the fact that we are waiting for the legislation. I hope that it has been noticed that when we attempted to limit debate to today, the NDP and the Liberals stood up en masse, rushing in from the back rooms, and rushing in breathlessly from their offices to defeat that motion in order that they can delay, in exactly the same way that they had been delaying it in committee by asking questions on trivial matters.

Mr. Cassidy: Who rang the bells for two weeks in the House? Which Party was that? What a short memory.

Mr. Shields: The Member opposite asked who rang the bells in this House for over two weeks. I am happy to say it was the Conservative Members of the Opposition because of the National Energy Program that was being rammed down our throats. It was an ominous energy Bill with the National Energy Program. The NDP and Liberal Members wanted to perpetrate it on western Canada and kill the economy of western Canada. They eventually succeeded in doing that. That is why the bells were rung, because we were trying to protect the interests of western Canada.

Today the NDP and Liberal Members are trying to destroy the interests of western Canada, because they are delaying and delaying. The people in western Canada will not stand for the type of shenanigans that the Liberals and the NDP Members are using today in delaying this western diversification Bill that means so much to western Canadians from all walks of life.

I hope that the people in western Canada will recognize the tomfoolery that is going on across the floor. I would ask the NDP and the Liberals why they are so against western Canada and constantly fighting against western Canada in this House, and then returning to their ridings in western Canada and saying that they are standing up for western Canada, because they truly are not.

Mr. Riis: I wish to make a comment and ask my friend, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), a question. He was supposed to explain the initiatives approved by the Government's Western Diversification Office that would diversify the economy of western Canada. I notice that he failed to do that in his response to my hon. friend, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon).

The Hon. Member will be aware of a recent proposal put forward by the Thompson Nicola Manufacturers Association. This association was formed two years ago to co-ordinate the efforts of the manufacturing sector in British Columbia. This association in British Columbia represents 500 different manufacturers. It wanted $40,000 from the Western Diversification Office to set up a whole new initiative that would result not only in new manufacturers starting, but in new product lines being expanded from existing manufacturers. The request for $40,000 was made to the office, but the request was denied. The Western Diversification Office stated that it was not going to approve the $40,000 request over a two year period. Would the Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) explain why that request was rejected? It is perplexing to the 500 manufacturers which the association represents.

While he is on his feet, will he explain also why he is so afraid of members of the New Democratic Party speaking on this legislation? It is legislation that represents a very important initiative in attempts to diversify the western economy. Members of the New Democratic Party have been attempting to participate in the debate, but time after time the Government makes an effort to curtail and restrict Members' ability to participate in a thoughtful, positive discussion on the issue.

Will the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) explain why it is that he wants to use a form of closure on this legislation to muzzle the Opposition's voice in Parliament, which would then in a sense go against the very spirit of a parliamentary democracy?

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I am happy to answer my friend's question.

One of the main thrusts of the western diversification initiative is the Western Diversification Fund. The legislation presently before this House authorizes ways in which the Department can offer financial assistance for proposals and further diversification. It is that very fund which the Minister responsible for western diversification cannot approach at this time until this legislation is through the House. My hon. friend knows that. The Member gets up and pretends he does not know. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) knows full well the thrust that has been made so far and, because the Minister responsible for the western diversification does not have access to the western diversification fund, a number of proposals have been turned down. The flexibility was not there to allow the Minister to stream them off into other existing programs. My hon. friend knows that, Madam Speaker. Western diversification has been attempting to respond to small business. Seventy per cent of the projects that have been approved to date have been awarded to small businesses and are going through existing programs. These had to be moved off to DRIE and to sub-agreements made with the provinces and so on.

The other question raised was why we on this side of this House are trying to curtail debate. We are not trying to curtail debate at all, Madam Speaker. I am the first speaker on western diversification. We will allow the Opposition all the time it requires to debate the Bill. We know that with the Opposition's actions in committee every item, every word, every clause on the western diversification Bill was filibustered by the Liberal and the NDP Members. We outlasted them in committee. When the Liberal Member left, we were able to push the Bill through to bring it back to the House. We are seeing exactly the same actions today.

The Bill is straightforward. The opposition Members cannot tell us all the amendments they want to put through. This is strictly a delay tactic and the delay is hurting western Canadians. The same New Democrats go out to western Canada and say, "Boy, are we here to help you". Here they are being run from Oshawa. They are also tools of Bob White and Shirley Carr. They will do anything and say anything if they think it will gain them one seat anywhere in Canada, and I resent that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, I want to say a few words in this debate, if my voice holds out. First, I want to respond to my friend from Athabasca. His last comments were not very worthy of a distinguished Member like him—

Mr. Shields: They are honest.

Mr. Nystrom: —when he talks about the NDP being run from Oshawa. He is using regionalism to try to divide the country. He has this fetish about Shirley Carr. I can say as a Canadian that I would rather be a friend of Shirley Carr than of Conrad Black, who is a good friend of my friend from Athabasca.

You can tell when a Member of Parliament is in trouble. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) is in serious trouble because he is going to be defeated by the NDP in the next campaign. I am sure you read The Globe and Mail special about this about 10 days ago, Madam Speaker. The paper wrote about the first Member of Parliament in Alberta of the Tory Party to be defeated. You can tell why the Member from Athabasca is very desperate when he speaks in the House. He is receiving a message from back home that the voters do not like the federal Conservative Party.

The Bill before the House today is a Bill ostensibly to diversify the economy in western Canada. We have been debating Bill C-113 for quite some time at second reading and at committee stage, and now we are back at third reading in the House. The whole debate about diversification in the West is a debate that has been going on for a very long time. As a western Canadian Member of Parliament since 1968 I can tell you that this has always been an issue. Those of us in western Canada feel that we have not received our fair deal from Confederation in the division of the resources of Canada and the ability of our country to have fair economic planning for all regions.

On Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week I went to 12 to 14 different communities in my riding. I attended public meetings in villages and towns and meetings in farm houses in various parts of the constituency of Yorkton—Melville. There is still the feeling that the western part of Canada has not received a fair deal from Confederation. In many ways there is even more of a backlash now against the federal Government than there was a few years ago. A lot of western Canadians thought that the Conservative Party was a Party that had significant western roots and because of that many long time grievances of western Canadians would be solved, but that has not happened.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about Virginia?

Mr. Nystrom: I am sure the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) from Saskatoon, when he goes there every two or three months, gets feedback that the people are not happy with the Conservative Party of Canada. People are not happy with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). The Minister is nodding his head, I can hear him! He has also seen the poll results in his riding as I see them. The Minister of Justice is running scared not because of his qualities as a Member of Parliament. The Minister is a pretty nice, decent, likeable chap, but he is running scared because people are no longer confident in the Conservative Party of Canada and no longer confident in the leadership of the Prime Minister of this country. One reason has been the insensitivity in responding to the legitimate wishes and concerns of the people of western Canada.

Mr. St. Germain: What about the national energy policy that the Liberals and the NDP brought in?

Mr. Nystrom: When you get this kind of response from across the way you know that the problem is similar in British Columbia as well, otherwise we would not have the trumpeting of the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain).

Bill C-113 will not solve a lot of the problems of western Canada. The Bill will nowhere near respond to the problems that exist.

The establishment of the Western Diversification Office was first revealed to the public in August, 1987. This, you might recall, was done after the scandal at the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion where there was a cost overrun last year of $7 to $9 million. Do you remember that, Madam Speaker? There were two independent studies that confirmed a major cost overrun in DRIE because of incompetence and the misallocation of funds.

One thing the Government tried to do to respond to this cost overrun was to decentralize the whole process of regional development in Canada. It created the Atlantic Provinces Economic Opportunities Agency, an agency in northern Ontario and the Western Diversification Office in the hope of responding to the problem of regional development in Canada in order to detract from some of the negative press the Government has been receiving. I do not think there will be any real difference in the job that will be done by this agency and the job that was being done previously by various regional development or expansion offices in Canada. We have essentially the same funding, essentially the same people and essentially the same programs. Sure, the Department now has a different title, a title that is more politically attractive. Who can be against western diversification? Probably the only Hon. Member who is against it is the Hon. Member from Selkirk. It is really the same old programs, just in different clothing, for mainly electoral purposes for the Conservative Party across the way.

Over the last quarter of a century, despite all the talk, rhetoric and various programs and new initiatives in different parts of Canada, less than 3 per cent of the country's economic development dollars have been spent on regional development. That is a very, very small portion of the money that has been allocated for economic development in Canada since 1960 or 1965. I do not think that the federal Governments over the years have been very serious about the question of regional development.

We have been told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the Minister in charge of the Western Diversification Office that some $1.2 billion will be spent on regional development in western Canada, and $1.2 billion over five years works out to some $60 million per year per province. Sixty million dollars is still a fair amount of money, but $60 million per year per province is really not that much in light of what must be done. In particular, it is not that much money when we consider that some federal government programs and agreements under the previous regime will be in the process of expiring during the life of western diversification's funding over five years.

In reality, there will not be very much additional money being spent in western Canada. Sure, new money will be spent, but some of the old programs are expiring. The sunset has come for some of them. Sure, there will be new money, but looking at the balance sheet, there will not be much additional money coming to western Canada.

When the Prime Minister made the announcement back in August of last year, he said that this new money would be over and above all the existing programs. He said that this money is over and above the amounts presently flowing to western Canada under existing programs and arrangements and that these funds shall be disbursed over a five-year period in a manner that will equitably reflect the needs and the growth opportunities in our western provinces. In fact he said that on August 4, 1987.

There has been much debate over the question of the Prime Minister's claim that there will be new money with the allocation of $1.2 billion to the Western Diversification Office. Since the establishment of the Western Diversification Office involves the disbanding of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, which was responsible for certain regional development programs, it is difficult to trace the money to ascertain what is new money and what is old money. That is a very difficult question to answer.

Sure, there will be new money coming in because there will be new programs and new budget allocations, but the original Department of DRIE is now being sacked and a lot of the programs of DRIE are being dropped or rolled into the new western diversification programs. In this new versus old money controversy, the key phrase in the Prime Minister's statement is "the amounts presently flowing under existing programs and arrangements". Again, he said that the money would be over and above the amounts presently flowing to western Canada under existing programs and arrangements.

Some of the existing programs and arrangements will be expiring, and while this money will be in addition to those arrangements and programs, if the old regime had remained in place, some of those existing programs and arrangements would have continued. Those programs and arrangements would have spent millions and millions of dollars in all four provinces of western Canada.

How much new money is there and how much old money is there? What are the existing programs? I will give an example of what I mean, because I can see that the Minister from British Columbia is raising his eyebrows and asking questions about the new money versus old money argument. He will probably ask me about this in about 10 or 15 minutes anyway.

What are the existing programs? Three of DRIE's major program delivery tools had or are about to face major changes because of the phasing out of DRIE and the evolution of these new agencies in the different regions. The IRDP program, for example, is to expire in June of this year. That program has about 60 days to go and then the funding for that program will expire. I assume that if we did not have a Western Diversification Office or the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, a program like IRDP would be expanded beyond June of this year to finish off 1988 and to go into 1989 or 1990.

In addition to that program, many of the sub-agreements with the provinces under the ERDA programs, economic and regional development agreements, are expiring in 1989 or 1990. The costs of these programs are shared on a fifty-fifty basis between the federal Government and the provincial Government. Like IRDP, the existing ERDA arrangements will soon expire, and that old money will soon disappear. Once again, if we did not have the Western Diversification Office, I assume that new ERDA agreements would be signed between the provinces and the federal Government. I assume that millions of dollars would be spent under those programs. I simply assume that this Government would continue those programs.

Third, the Western Transportation Industrial Development Program was rejigged to become the funding program of the Western Diversification Office. Some of the ERDA programs and sub-agreements are the responsibilities of the Departments of Agriculture, Science and Technology and Transport Canada. Other sub-agreements were formerly the responsibility of DRIE and are being transferred to the Western Diversification Office. It is noted that most of these subsidiary agreements are up for renegotiation during the first five-year term of western diversification. I noted that in my remarks a few moments ago.

If we look at the moneys that are being spent and the moneys that, in all likelihood, would have been spent, we will find that there is not much if any additional money coming into western Canada. Sure, there is new money because we have program x with $100 million being scrapped to spend $100 million on program y. Program y is a brand new program with new money, but it is not additional money for my constituents and the other 6.5 million or seven million people who live in various parts of western Canada.

There are a number of other things that could be said about new money versus old money, but I do not think I have too much time left to make my remarks. I would like to say some other things about the Bill that is before us.

As I said, I just came from a very extensive tour of my riding last week. I was in places like Dauphin, Kilaly, Sturgis, Stenan, Whitebeech, Yorkton, Melville, Preeceville, Norquay and a number of other communities. I went to about 12 or 15 communities in four days last week. My constituents kept asking time and time again why we in western Canada cannot get a fair deal from the federal Government.

I have already mentioned the problems with new money and the lack thereof coming into western Canada. We also have a problem with procurement of goods and services purchased by the federal Government. One or two cabinet Ministers are across the way, as are two Members from British Columbia, the junior Minister from Mission—Port Moody and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon). Perhaps during the question and comment period they can explain why the federal Government is spending less and less of its money proportionately in procuring items from western Canada. I have figures, which I will table, from the regional distribution of Supply and Service contracts in dollar values for western provinces as a percentage of the national government purchases in Canada for the fiscal years 1984-85, 1985-86, and 1986-87.

During the first fiscal year for which the Government had responsibility for Government of Canada spending, 1984-85, some 13.9 per cent of purchases by the Department of Supply and Services were made from western Canadian firms, businesses, and industries. In 1985-86 it went down from 13.9 per cent to 12.8 per cent. In 1986-87 it went down again to 11.5 per cent. Therefore, in the first two years of Conservative Government we had a drop in the proportion of goods and services bought in western Canada from 13.9 per cent to 11.5 per cent. That is a substantial drop of 2.4 per cent.

Why is the Government buying proportionately less and less from western Canada? In this age of high technology and computers we supply more things than we did in the past. Why is the Government, with a large western representation and many prominent westerners in the Cabinet, purchasing fewer and fewer goods and services from western Canada on a proportionate basis? Twenty-eight to 30 per cent of the population of the country is in western Canada. Why is the Government not purchasing about 25 or 30 per cent of its good and services from western Canadian enterprises and firms instead of only 11.5 per cent? That is way less than half of what our proportionate share should be.

If the federal Government had been purchasing more and more rather than less and less from the West, there would be fewer people in Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Manitoba unemployed. I would like to know what is behind the idea of purchasing fewer and fewer items and goods in western Canada. There are two Ministers from the West in the House and perhaps in the next five or ten minutes we can get an answer to that.

It is very important that this new Western Diversification Office be efficient and effective when dealing with the public of Canada. I have here a letter from a constituent of one my Saskatchewan P.C. colleagues. I do not think I should read the person's name into the record but I will read part of the letter addressed to myself. He says:

> To begin with I do not think much of the Western Diversification Program.
> I will explain the enclosed material which are copies. When I first heard of this program I felt that finally a government program is available to help a small western business. I was not looking for a handout, only backing to help get a loan. At the end of Aug. 1987, I wrote western diversification explaining my situation. Towards the end of Sept. 1987, I received a letter from western diversification and an assigned project number 4000.8-G5.
> Feb. 15, 1988 having not heard from these people I wrote a letter asking for a status report. I again wrote the same letter on Mar. 1, 1988. On Mar. 7, 1988 I received a call from a lady in this office telling me my application had been rejected.
> I told her I expected as much as I had noted in the paper only large enterprises seemed to qualify. She said that was not true as there were a number of small businesses that would be named shortly. To date I have seen nothing. I asked to have a letter of rejection sent.
> After two weeks and still no letter I phoned again.

You are cutting me off, Madam Speaker. I realize that my time is up. This is someone from Saskatchewan who applied for backing for a loan for a small business. He received no response whatsoever month after month. When he did get a response it was a telephone call, after prodding, saying that his project had been rejected.

I do hope that when this program is established in western Canada it will be efficiently and well run so that the positive aspects of the program are available to all western Canadians equally regardless of where they may live.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a comment or two and then ask the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) a question. As chairman of the committee I thought it was very unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville was unable to attend all the meetings. He was busy elsewhere. He certainly made a very valuable contribution to the meeting which he did attend. I want to thank him for his good sense and logic. In my view the debate in the committee was very sound.

I think the language of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) was rather badly chosen when he said that certain witnesses "were not permitted to come". None of the witnesses which he mentioned asked to come. It was not a case of not being permitted, they never asked either myself or the clerk to appear.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville dealt with DRIE and the Western Economic Diversification Program. He wondered whether there would be any difference. I suggest that there will be a vast difference. For instance, only one area in the entire Province of Alberta qualified under the DRIE program. Consequently, the program was of little use to the Province of Alberta. The Whitecourt area was the only area in the entire Province of Alberta which qualified under DRIE.

I think that western diversification will be a different program. There are two major differences between DRIE and western diversification. Under western diversification the board may make loans and it may guarantee loans. That will make a world of difference as far as the Province of Alberta is concerned.

We are talking about diversification with regard to agriculture and oil and gas. One of the best examples is the shortfall of the Crow. If the shortfall of the Crow were paid to the producers in the Province of Alberta there would be diversification galore without any extra funds, yet we are giving very little consideration to the shortfall of the Crow.

The other example I have is also based on agriculture, that is, making fuel from ethane and methynol. We could use millions of bushels of wheat which would create a tremendous new industry and provide diversification. However, there must be money provided for that.

In the view of the Hon. Member would these two items not help a great deal to make the Western Economic Diversification Program more successful than the DRIE program has been so far?

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for his question and his comments. He pointed out my absence at the committee. I was there for one meeting. I was not there for the others because, as he probably knows, I was travelling with the Energy Committee with the Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). We were studying the question of nuclear waste. The Member has been around politics for a long time and knows that you cannot split yourself into two or three. I am very sorry that I was not able to attend all the committee meetings but I certainly followed them very closely.

I agree with the Member for Bow River that there are some positive things in this program. I said that in the main it is basically the old program, as far as I am concerned. However, he did mention a couple of things which make it a bit more attractive to people across western Canada.

One of my concerns, which is perhaps a concern of the Hon. Member too, is that we do not want the program to be aimed in a major sense at big business. I am primarily interested in small business. I have here an editorial from the Saskatoon Star Phoenix, which is one of the big dailies in the Province of Saskatchewan. They are concerned about the fact that so far the money has been going out to big business.

The other concern which I have, which I did not have a chance to mention before, is that some of the money spent so far has not been spent on diversification. It has been spent for economic expansion. Of course, I am not opposed to economic expansion. I want to expand agriculture, the potash industry and so on for western Canada. However, as I asked the Minister in the committee, if this is the Western Diversification Office, why is not more money being targeted for genuine diversification in western Canada?

• (1640)

I refer again to the editorial in the Star-Phoenix which states that: "However, with the first two high-profile announcements about specific funding under our diversification initiative involving $75 million in soil erosion and $5 million in potash marketing, taxpayers may well be wondering what diversification really does mean to the Government of Canada. The spending on these two programs is welcome". The editorial goes on to say: "Anything that enhances the farming sector and potash mining is good news for Saskatchewan people. But this is not moving the province or the West in general away from dependence on the familiar staple industries. So far, from what has been made public about projects approved under the initiative, it is just another economic aid package: welcome, certainly, but not the stuff of new directions in an unusually moribund western economy".

I suggest to my hon. friend from Alberta, as does this article, that we welcome economic expansion and economic development. However, this program is supposed to be one to diversify.

I wonder, as I am sure he wonders as a western Member of Parliament, how much of this money will be spent on items to diversify the economy of western Canada.

We are all interested in diversifying. We love agriculture, mining, potash, oil and gas and forestry in British Columbia, and want to do what we can in those areas, but we do not want to be held solely dependent on those resources.

It appears, not only to us but to independent observers, that so far the major part of this program is directed toward economic expansion rather than economic diversification. If so, it should be called the western diversification and expansion office. However, if it is meant for diversification, let it proceed in that way.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I want to make a few comments in response to some of the points made by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and to answer a particular question he put to us.

First, I am pleased to learn that the Hon. Member supports the establishment of this western diversification program. I only urge that he and his Party get on with allowing us to provide the program with the full legal weight and effect that is required in order to deliver these important initiatives in western Canada.

The Hon. Member made an issue of the percentages with respect to procurement by the various Departments of Government through the Department of Supply and Services. I will grant that in regard to specific percentages there is a trend with which we are not particularly pleased. However, to be fair, I think the Hon. Member should give the numbers in terms of dollars expended by each government Department through the Department of Supply and Services for the procurement of government supply. He may well see quite a different trend.

In fact, I think it is unfair only to deal with the statistics on a percentage basis with respect to procurement of the normal supply to Government of such things as pencils, paper clips and the routine supply that all Governments procure from time to time. He should not do so without considering the larger picture and comparing it with those percentage figures, not just the dollar amounts which have increased substantially in western Canada since this Government took office, but the unprecedented level of Federal Government support for industrial diversification in British Columbia and western Canada.

My own riding is a typical example of that expansion. There has been some $100 million worth of assistance to enterprise in the nature of industrial diversification in such sophisticated areas as the advanced aerospace industry. We opened a new automated precision machining plant in Delta, British Columbia a few days ago. That is a multimillion dollar investment. There are many examples, through various companies that are on the leading edge of technology and applied technology, of unprecedented things occurring in western Canada. I have calculated a total of more than $2 billion worth of initiatives by this Government in the Province of British Columbia alone. That is far in excess of anything previously committed by way of government initiatives in British Columbia.

For example, there is the $268 million North warning contract to Microtel. The western diversification initiative itself will bring tens of millions of dollars to British Columbia, and is already beginning to do so.

There is the $350 million ice-breaker decision, assistance with the modernization of the Cominco Plant for $68 million, the multimillion dollar assistance to the forest industry, with $300 million in a sub-agreement to assist with reforestation, and the $260 million that went by way of the softwood lumber agreement. There is something in the order of $2 billion worth of initiatives in British Columbia alone.

Similarly in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, these initiatives are unprecedented in western Canada and are a result of strong representation from western Canada in Cabinet, in the caucus and in the Government.

It is scurrilous and absolutely reprehensible that the Hon. Member should play games with a few figures and totally defy the truth that this Government has been doing a great job in western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this particular Bill. As a member from British Columbia I am most conscious of the importance of this western diversification initiative.

For a number of years British Columbia, like most western provinces, has suffered what can only be described as benign neglect. It has not been a case of Ottawa and central Canada deliberately initiating programs to the detriment of the West, but a case of "out of sight, out of mind". Without adequate representation in the Government of Canada, various initiatives that should have been supported were not.

This initiative is long overdue. It is no longer acceptable simply to suggest that we should spend more money to purchase more goods in western Canada.

When my constituents elected me in 1984, they expected two things of me. First, they expected fiscal responsibility by a Government that would spend smart. Their second expectation of me was to address regional disparity.

Clearly, they sometimes forget that these two expectations are in direct conflict. If the sole objective of the federal Government is to spend smart, then about 90 per cent of all the goods and services would be purchased in central Canada where most of these goods and services are produced. However, it is quite correct that such a policy would indeed deal extremely harshly with the far-reaching provinces of this country.

Therefore, this Government and other Governments have had to embark on the difficult task of attempting to spend wisely to get the best value for the dollar but nevertheless, to be conscious of the needs of all the provinces of this country. The difficulty is that a number of the items the federal Government purchases in the way of goods and services are not produced in western Canada. Steel is a case in point. The federal Government, through its various purchases, spends quite a lot of money purchasing steel. We have embarked on a naval ship construction program. To suggest that it is a purchase that could be made in western Canada is nonsense.

• (1650)

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), in citing the fact that some of the purchases have been reduced in western Canada in the last several years, is being very selective. In certain Departments it is a fact. CIDA is a case in point where the purchases by the federal Government and its expenditures rise and fall depending on the particular contract and where the contract is actually being carried out. The statistics are not in for this year, but I am confident that next year the statistics will show that particular expenditures in that Department will have gone up dramatically over the last several years. It is part of the normal cycle of expenditures which occur in some of the smaller Departments. But to say that this Government has neglected the needs of western Canada is misrepresenting the truth.

This particular initiative, the Western Economic Diversification Program, is an important step to establish control in western Canada. Hitherto, the assorted schemes to deal with problems in some of the smaller provinces from population or economic strength have been directed from Ottawa, and I am not suggesting there has been any malice aforethought, that the people here have not done their best within the terms of reference and perhaps their limited knowledge. This western diversification proposal establishes control for those programs in the western provinces. They will be staffed there. The research will be done there and the decisions will be taken there by westerners for westerners. A sum of money is being allocated to the Western Diversification Fund to achieve that purpose.

I know for a fact that in my constituency of Esquimalt—Saanich a number of businessmen have had some extremely exciting ideas with considerable economic prospects, but in the past, because of their lack of sophistication, perhaps, and the time and distance problem, they have not been able to go to Ottawa to sell their case. They have gone to Vancouver and made representation. The paperwork has been forwarded to Ottawa and decisions have been taken here, many miles away from the location where the original proposal originated.

It has been far too easy for Governments over a number of years to say: "Well, we are not entirely sure about that. We do not know that fellow", and consequently, delay has occurred. That particular individual who has come up with a better idea, perhaps ran out of financial resources or could not muster the support he needed to carry the day here in Ottawa. The western diversification proposal will reverse that trend. There will be staff, offices and competence in each of the four western provinces so that individuals can make their cases. Once they make the case that they can offer some genuine diversification, value added, perhaps, in some instances, but it does not necessarily fit some program hatched here in Ottawa, then those individuals at long last will have the opportunity to get the support they have so richly deserved for these many years.

My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), in his remarks a few moments ago, drew attention to the many initiatives that have occurred in the last several years in western Canada, particularly in British Columbia. I am conscious of a number of the small businesses in my constituency which are on the list. They are waiting for this initiative to be passed, for it to become law, so that the money can be put in place and we can get on with it. The time for promises is over. There has been a tremendous amount of work already done to prepare the necessary paperwork to fund some of these initiatives. It is just not good enough to say: "We want to talk some more".

The present opposition Parties are still, amazingly enough, proud of the national energy policy they supported in the early 1980s, which brought ruin to many Canadian western businesses. That was a classic case of "Ottawa knows best". The people who purported to represent western Canada in Government at that time, or in the New Democratic Party, certainly were not listening to their constituents. We are only just now recovering from the devastation of that program.

Some Hon. Members: What program?

Mr. Crofton: The national energy policy, supported by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Waddell: On a point of order,—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on a point of order, and I can assure him I am not deaf.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member is misleading the House when he says the New Democratic Party supported the National Energy Program. If he checks the record, he will find we did not. He should check the vote. I was here at the time. I was the energy critic and I can tell him that. I am not sure he was here, but he should read the vote.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I heard a very unparliamentary expression. Being a third party to this little fight between the Tories and the NDP, I still would like to see the rules of this House followed as closely as possible. Any language used in this House should be parliamentary, and I think the Hon. Member should withdraw the term he used.

Mr. Waddell: I think the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has a point. I know we Tories fight—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: We New Democrats fight Tories. Tories fight New Democrats and Liberals fight Liberals. I did not mean to say the Hon. Member intentionally mislead the House. Perhaps unintentionally he mislead the House. I will let him finish his speech, but he should know that we did not support the national energy policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway for doing the honourable thing, and I will give the floor back to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton) for the minute and a half that is left.

Mr. Crofton: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) did not seem to be entirely sure about his political stripe so I do not know whether he can be relied upon to remember how he voted some years back. I think the important thing is that members of the New Democratic Party, or the Liberal Party, have to say the same thing in two consecutive places. They cannot do all they can to delay the passage of important legislation in this House and then on weekends go to western constituencies and cast aspersions on the Government of the day because it is not doing enough for western Canada.

That is precisely what this piece of legislation is intended to do. The opposition Parties have to cut or fish bait. They cannot say different things in different places. Either they are in support of the initiatives to assist in the economic recovery of western Canada or they are not. If they are in favour, they should vote for this Bill. If they are not, they should carry on the way they are and delay and drag their feet. They have to make up their minds exactly what it is they want to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell) moved that Bill C-278, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (peeping Toms), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure and honour to introduce Bill C-278 for second reading debate in the House of Commons today.

First, I want to bring to your attention, Madam Speaker, that in spite of the fact that some people may find that this is a light-hearted issue clearly it is not. I want to bring to the attention of the House a serious crime that happens and which too often lies unreported. Even when it is reported, citizens are unable to have access to judicial authorities, to the police principally, for getting redress.

Section 173 of the Criminal Code states:

> Every one who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies upon him, loiters or prowls at night upon the property of another person near a dwelling house situated on that property is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

It states "at night", which is precisely the problem. If right now someone commits acts of voyeurism in the daytime it is practically impossible for the police to intervene. This is a serious issue. I wish to tell the House how it came to my attention.

On November 12, 1986, I received a letter from the Mayor of the Township of Cumberland in my riding. It states:

> I received a telephone call from (a constituent) with respect to problems she's having with workmen at her new house. Apparently, she came to her patio door last summer and opened the curtains and found a workman at the back door. She was very concerned that there was no warning that a workman would be there, and specifically requested the foreman from (the construction company) and the workmen not to do such a thing without prior arrangement or prior notification.

More recently, the same workmen appeared again to do some painting on the outside of the kitchen window and she alleged that he was there for fifteen minutes not doing anything but looking in the window. In her view, this is the classic "peeping Tom" charge and when she called the Police, the only charge that they were willing to lay was trespassing because the Criminal Code does not have a "peeping Tom" law for daytime situations.

It is her opinion that the Criminal Code should be amended so that this type of intrusion to people's privacy can be dealt with at any time of day.

I informed her that I have no direct responsibility for the Federal Criminal Code and gave her your phone number so that you may deal with it.

Kindest personal regards—

The letter is signed by Peter D. Clark, Mayor of the Township of Cumberland.

If anyone thinks that this is not a serious crime I want to remind the House that the Statistics Canada report said there are 12,000 such offences per year.

We know of course that charges can only be laid for offences that occur at night. That leads me to believe that the actual number is far greater. I would not be surprised if it were twice that because, of course, many opportunities to act that way would probably be greater in the daytime than they would be at night to start with.

There have been a number of studies done on the issue of criminal behaviour of people who are voyeurs. As a matter of fact, there is an article that was produced by the Nassau Community College in Garden City, New York, entitled: "A Pattern of Voyeurism Among Construction Workers". A further document which I bring to the attention of the House was published in Scandinavia entitled: "Deviants and Criminality: The case of voyeur in peepers' paradise". It was published by the University of Copenhagen, the Institute of Criminal Science.

What is alleged in a number of studies is that people who commit such acts eventually commit other more serious acts of voyeurism and, of course, other more serious sexual crimes as well. This Bill is not one which should be seen by any Member as being controversial. It is merely rectifying a section of the Criminal Code which is far outdated.

As to why the Criminal Code reads as it does now, I can only speculate that at some point, probably 100 years ago or whatever, someone became aware that individuals would prowl upon the property of another at night for the purpose of peeping through the windows. Of course, that offence would then have only been possible at night simply because that was the only time in which it was lighter inside than outside, it being pitch black outside. There was usually a lamp or a lantern or even electricity inside for those people who had it. Today, things are vastly different. Most people use light bulbs and other electrical devices to have light inside a dwelling house, whether it is the daytime or not. We all know that we turn on lights in the daytime, which is something that would not have happened then. We now have a situation in which of course it is just as light in the daytime inside a dwelling house as it would be at night. It is now possible for individuals to behave in that way.

The Bill I am proposing, as I said previously, is not one which should take up five hours of debate. I do not think that it should even take up one hour of debate. It is a Bill which corrects part of a law which is really outdated.

In my respectful opinion there is no reason why Parliament should not deal expeditiously with correcting what is a mistake in the law.

• (1710)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that when I announced I was going to present a Bill of this kind in the House of Commons, I received many telephone calls from Canadians, and especially Canadian women, who called me because they themselves had been victimized in this way and, when they went to the police, the authorities were unable to take any action to protect them.

I was also contacted by a number of police officers who even came to see me personally and told me they were delighted to hear that at last, the Parliament of Canada had become aware of this gap in our legislation, a historic gap, which could be remedied today.

Therefore, without further delay and without taking up all the time I am allowed today, I simply want to say to Hon. Members on both sides of the House, on behalf of all Canadians and especially Canadian women, that we must recognize the fact that the victims are almost always women, and I therefore ask the House of Commons to support this Bill so that Bill C-278 will become law.

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuff): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

I must admit I did not realize that the problem with peeping Toms was so acute in Canada, especially in the Hon. Member's riding, that the House would have to consider a Bill to amend the Criminal Code and reinforce existing legislation.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments on the subject that may be of interest to Members who are here today.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure it must be a traumatic experience to realize there is a peeping Tom near one's home who is invading one's privacy and that of one's family. I agree that voyeurism is an invasion of the victim's privacy, but since the offence is committed at some distance, usually from a neighbour's property or from the street, I don't think, on the face of it, that the proposed amendment will provide any effective way to fight voyeurism.

Mr. Speaker, I have also done some research on what we refer to as "Peeping Toms", and I discovered that Peeping Tom is part of the legend of Lady Godiva. Hon. Members will probably recall the story of this famous lady's ride through Coventry. The earliest reports go back to the Chronicles of 1057. When Lady Godiva beseeched her husband Leofric to relieve the tax burden on the people of Coventry, she was so insistent that her husband cried out that he would do it if she rode stark naked through the crowd in the market place. The Chronicles tell us that she did, and that her hair covered her entire body except for her legs, and that upon her return, Leofric issued the Charter that freed Coventry from its taxes. There are of course many other versions of this story, but it seems we have to wait until the 17th century for Peeping Tom to make his appearance. The dictionary tells us that Peeping Tom was a tailor whose curiosity got the better of him and who was struck blind when he looked out of the window when Lady Godiva rode by. It seems a festival still commemorates this fact.

Of course, our Criminal Code takes care of our Lady Godivas and our Peeping Toms. As for the former, she might be accused of indecent exposure under Section 169 of the Criminal Code, while the unfortunate tailor might be convicted under Section 173, provided he committed his act of curiosity on Leofric's property, between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m.

I don't want to belabour the point, but if we are to adopt measures to discourage latter-day peeping Toms, I think it is essential to consider the existing legislation very carefully. Tinkering with our legislation by extending the time of the offence to all hours of the day and night, without changing the circumstances of intruding on someone else's property, as is the case with the Bill before the House today, fails to attach to this particularly odious behaviour the social censure it deserves.

On the other hand, I must admit quite frankly that I have no practical experience in this area.

For instance, I don't know anything about the number of complaints received by the police. As far as the police is concerned, there seems to be no indication that the present provision is deficient and that this Bill would make up the deficiency, so I suggest we wait until the Government looks at this area of the Criminal Code when considering the proposals of the Law Reform Commission of Canada and its review of the Criminal Code. So far, no associations like the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police have drawn my attention to any serious problems connected with voyeurism. To my knowledge, provincial attorneys general have made no statements to the effect that peeping Toms do what they do before nightfall to avoid violating the provision on acts of voyeurism committed during the night. It is clearly up to the Members of this House to define the nature of the problem before adopting legislation that is supposed to deal with it.

We must not forget that the Bill is aimed only at peeping Toms and not at other persons who might be on the property of another person for other unlawful purposes.

Madam Speaker, I wonder whether Hon. Members who suggest amending the Criminal Code in this way actually realize that this measure will only have the effect of making trespassing on another's property at any hour of the day an offence, without actually dealing with the legitimate concerns of the victims of voyeurism. This amendment will hardly discourage those few peeping Toms who might be tempted to stand at the window of a house in broad daylight to observe its occupants.

Obviously, the great majority of peeping Toms can be expected to use the cover of darkness to peep into brightly lit houses, instead of running the risk of being caught in the act of voyeurism during the day.

What I have just said shows how unrealistic this Bill is. The offender would have to be completely crazy to commit such acts in broad daylight, knowing full well that the risk of being discovered, arrested and convicted is then much greater. Madam Speaker, that is as plain as can be.

Therefore, it would be unreasonable to expect this Bill to result in an increased number of prosecutions of real peeping Toms.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I would like to tell you and Hon. Members present that I am prepared to take measures to solve this problem once I am convinced that the solutions proposed will result in fewer offences or make it easier to charge and punish offenders.

In my opinion, the Hon. Member's Bill is both premature and deficient. It does not assure the legislators that the measures taken will be effective, which is essential. Therefore, I must oppose this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on this Bill. It is a very interesting Bill. It is different and unique.

I wish to tell the House that I am a New Democrat and not a Tory. Members may have become confused during the last exchange.

An Hon. Member: Why are you sitting with the Liberals?

Mr. Waddell: Just because I am wearing a blue suit and look like a corporation lawyer, let me assure Members that I am still a New Democrat.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) referred to the origins of the trespassing at night section of the Criminal Code. I do not think it went back 100 years ago. It may have in English common law. I am informed that in Canadian law Section 173 was added to our Criminal Code in its present form in approximately 1957. This followed a Supreme Court of Canada decision which ruled that peeping at night was not an offence under the Code, because there was nothing in the Code or in the British common law which applied to Canada.

The case of Frey v. Fedoruk (1956), 10 C.R. 26 (SCC) is a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. It involved an act of looking through a window at a woman who was in her nightgown. It occurred at night, the classic peeping tom situation. The peeper was apprehended, and subsequently the peeper sued for damages for false imprisonment on the grounds that he was stalked and imprisoned by the police, but that he did not commit any criminal offence, therefore he could not be held. The court had to reluctantly agree and allowed him to recover damages. That is why the section was put in our present Criminal Code.

I gather that the incident that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell spoke about took place in Orleans. It involved some construction workers looking into a woman's window during the daytime. There is some concern that even if there were this amendment and this section were in place it may not capture or render the day conduct of the construction workers illegal.

The substantive wrong complained of was that of invading the woman's privacy by looking through her windows, which is known as "voyeurism". The section does not, however, make it an offence to commit an act of voyeurism. The offence deals with "loitering" or "prowling" on private property "without lawful excuse".

The act of prowling involves very specific conduct. You have to move around in a stealthy manner seeking an opportunity to commit a criminal offence. The workers' acts may not fall within the meaning of prowling. Loitering, on the other hand, involves no more than lingering in one area. This simple act was made a criminal offence in these circumstances because when it occurs on private property at night, it is presumed that the person is trespassing for the purpose of invading the owner's privacy. Indeed, it has been called trespassing at night. It is a presumption of what a person is doing around someone's property at night. Normally people are not around property and maybe a person has a bad purpose, to wit, voyeurism.

The workers who were alleged to have invaded the Orleans woman's privacy may not have been trespassing at all. The newspaper reports of the incidents are not clear, but it would appear that they may have been working on the building in which the woman lived. If that is the case, they would have had a lawful excuse for being on the property. They were there to carry out certain work, presumably at the owner's request. So long as the work required them to be within the vicinity of the woman's dwelling house, their conduct would not be punishable under Section 173, even if it were amended.

I heard the Hon. Member say that those are not exactly the facts. I think it is debatable that the facts may have been different. One has to be careful, I was going to say, construction workers being construction workers. Construction workers often have certain elements of conduct whereby they make sly remarks or do things. It is sort of accepted as part of the culture, if you like, of a construction worker. I do agree it does go too far when workers or anyone else peers purposely into someone's private house for a voyeuristic purpose. It is not fair to the woman involved. People are quite rightly frightened, and I do not blame them.

I think the Bill is an interesting Bill and I commend the Hon. Member for bringing it forward. He is a Member who always tackles many interesting subjects, some of which are controversial. I am not going to take any longer in speaking to the Bill. I have flagged some of the problems with it. To quote that great Tory criminal lawyer, who is a bit a hero of mine, Sir John A. Macdonald, he said, "Maybe the Bill is worth looking at further". I will sit down and let the Bill go to committee—I believe it will go to committee—the Member is nodding, then we can look at some of these concerns raised and at the whole topic. A Member asked how many cases and complaints there are and is there really a big difference between night and day cases. Are there incidents in other parts of the country. Those things need to be looked into, and this can be done in committee.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond to the proposal put forward in Bill C-278 to amend Section 173 of the Criminal Code of Canada which prohibits trespassing at night.

The purpose of the Bill, which would strike down the words "at night" is set out in the explanatory note as follows:

> The proposed change would extend the offence to acts of voyeurism committed during the day.

Bill C-278 would extend the prohibition contained in Section 173 of the Code to apply at any time of the day or night. Section 173 now reads as follows:

> Every one who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies upon him, loiters or prowls at night upon the property of another person near a dwelling-house situated on that property is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Before commenting on the merits of the proposed amendment, and to appreciate fully the potential consequences of such an amendment, it is important to explain for history the rationale underlying Section 173, which is commonly referred to as the "peeping-Tom" provision of the Code.

The enactment of Section 173 in 1954 resulted from the 1950 decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Frey v. Fedoruk (1950) S.C.R. 517. I will therefore rely to a great extent on that judgment to trace the history of Section 173. The facts of the case are outlined in the judgment of Mr. Justice Cartwright as follows:

> About 11.15 p.m. the 4th March 1947, the mother of the defendant, Fedoruk, while standing in her nightgown in her lighted bedroom in her son's house saw the plaintiff peeping into her window, the curtains of which were only partially drawn. She was frightened and called to her son who seized a butcher knife and ran outside. He shouted at the plaintiff who was then just leaving Fedoruk's property. The plaintiff (Frey) started to run; Fedoruk chased him about 100 yards to a point where the plaintiff was trying to unlock and get into his truck. The lights of the truck were out. Fedoruk took the plaintiff back to his House, threatening him with the knife. Fedoruk's mother identified the plaintiff as the man whom she had seen at her window and the police were called.
> The defendant Stone, a police constable, arrived accompanied by another police officer, and after some investigation, as a result of which he formed the opinion that the plaintiff had been "peeping", he told the plaintiff he was under arrest and took him to the police station where he was confined.

At trial, the claim by the plaintiff, Frey, for civil damages for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution was dismissed against all three defendants, that is, the civilian Fedoruk and the two police officers, Watt and Stone. On appeal to the British Columbia Court of Appeal, the claim against Watt was allowed and $100 damages against him were awarded. However, the claim against Fedoruk and Stone were dismissed. It was these latter dismissals that were appealed to the plaintiff to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The issue dealt with by the Supreme Court was whether or not the plaintiff had committed a criminal offence when he "peeped" through the window of Fedoruk's mother's bedroom. If he was, then all parties defendant would have been justified in arresting the plaintiff. Mr. Justice O'Halloran held for the majority of the British Columbia Court of appeal that the plaintiff's actions constituted a breach of the peace in that he disturbed the "tranquility and privacy in a manner that he would naturally expect to invite immediate violence against him". He continued:

> It is my judgment that the circumstances here surround the intruder's act of looking in the window with such sinister implications, that in the lack of a credible explanation, his conduct as a whole must be regarded as criminal at common law. It was late at night, the intruder was on private property some 40 to 50 feet back from the street line; he was looking in a side window which did not face the street, the window was lighted and he could see a woman preparing for bed. Quite apart from the "peeping-Tom" aspect, the presence of a prowler in such circumstances, the dread of the hostile unknown at night, would naturally frighten the inmates of the house, and incite them to immediate violent defensive or offensive action against him.

This judge had specifically found that the plaintiff's conduct constituted neither an offence against the provisions of the existing Criminal Code nor the common law. In effect, Mr. Justice O'Halloran was criminalizing the conduct of the plaintiff not for what he did, but for the probable consequences that could ensure from that conduct the potential for violent retaliation for his conduct.

Mr. Justice Robertson, dissenting, observed that a "mere trespass" onto private property could not constitute a breach of the peace, even in these rather disturbing circumstances. The fact that this conduct had the distinct potential for disturbing those in peaceable possession of the residence did not alter his opinion. In particular, he found that any response by the residents would have been "offensive and retributive" rather than defensive in the absence of any evidence that the intruder displayed an intent to become violent. This latter element had been clearly established by the plaintiff's immediate flight from the premises when pursued by the defendant Fedoruk. In that regard, Mr. Justice Robertson made the following comment:

> I do not think that it is safe to hold as a matter of law, that conduct, not otherwise criminal and not falling within any category of offences defined by the criminal law, becomes criminal because a natural and probable result thereof will be to provoke others to violent retributive action.
> If such a principle were admitted, it seems to me that many courses of conduct which it is well settled are not criminal could be made the subject of indictment by setting out the facts and concluding with the words that such conduct was likely to cause a breach of the peace. Two examples may be mentioned. The speaking of insulting words unaccompanied by any threat of violence undoubtedly may and sometimes does produce violent retributive action, but is not criminal. The commission of adultery has, in many recorded cases, when unexpectedly discovered, resulted in homicide; but, except where expressly made so by statute, adultery is not a crime.

• (1730)

He went on to note that the only remedy provided for such conduct in addition to civil damages would be the procedure to have the person bound over to keep the peace and be of good behaviour. In reference to a claim that there was an inherent judicial power to declare any conduct to be an offence if it is in fact injurious to the public, even though it had never been declared to be criminal conduct, he noted:

> In my opinion, this power has not been held and should not be held to exist in Canada. I think it safer to hold that no one shall be convicted of a crime unless the offence with which he is charged is recognized as such in the provisions of the Criminal Code, or can be established by the authority of some reported cases as an offence known to the law.
> I think that if any course of conduct is now to be declared criminal, which has not up to the present time been so regarded such declaration should be made by Parliament and not by the Courts.

In relation to any claim of justification relied upon by the defendants, these failed of necessity, in the opinion of this judge, on the principle that ignorance of the law provided no such defence.

Mr. Justice Cartwright of the Supreme Court of Canada, speaking for himself and five other judges, agreed with the opinion of Mr. Justice Robertson in dissent in the British Columbia Court of Appeal. Mr. Justice Kerwin of the Supreme Court agreed with the reasoning of Mr. Justice Robertson in a separate concurring judgment despite the fact that he referred to the conduct of the plaintiff as contemptible.

The state of the law as a result of this judgment was considered to be unsatisfactory. Accordingly, in the amendments to the Criminal Code that came into effect in 1954, this new offence of trespassing at night came into existence. The harmful nature of the prohibited conduct flows from the very fact that it is happening at night. This essential aspect, mentioned by Mr. Justice O'Halloran in the Frey v. Fedoruk case, is essential and is worth repeating. It reads:

> It was late at night, the intruder was on private property—the window was lighted and he could see a woman preparing for bed. Quite apart from the "peeping-Tom" aspect, the presence of a prowler in such circumstances, the dread of the hostile unknown at night, would naturally frighten the inmates of the house . . .

This was many years before the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms came into effect. What concerns me about the amendment to Section 173 proposed by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) is that the addition of the liability to daytime hours may very well cause the provision to become Charter vulnerable. I do not purport to be a constitutional law expert, but even I am aware of the prohibition in the Charter against any provision that offends the presumption of innocence of an accused person.

The present provision has withstood constitutional attack until the present time because of all of the conditions that must be proved by the prosecution before the reverse onus applies. One of these conditions is that the suspicious conduct must take place at night. If the provision is expanded to apply during the day, then I am concerned that the courts would no longer feel that the reverse onus is a reasonable limit under Section 1 of the Charter. This would potentially place the entire section in jeopardy and, for this reason, I cannot support the proposed legislation.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Boudria: Another spontaneous speech.

Mr. Johnson: Do you want to make it?

The Hon. Member proposes that there be an amendment to Section 173 of the Criminal Code. The effect of this amendment would be to make it an offence to loiter or prowl upon the property of another person adjacent to a dwelling house at any time of day. In my view, the amendment he advances, the deletion of the words "at night", does not achieve this purpose. In making—

Mr. Boudria: Do you mean there are times other than day or night?

Mr. Johnson: Madam Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member is rude, but I wish he would let me get on with my speech.

Mr. Boudria: I'll try.

Mr. Johnson: I would like to share some of my concerns on this proposed amendment, which I hope will prove not to be as effective as suggested by my hon. colleague.

It behooves us, whenever we consider a legislative initiative such as the present one, to ask ourselves how the present legislation came into being and what it was initially intended to achieve. I have found it most instructive to review the exchange of views which took place at the time Section 173 of the Criminal Code was first introduced in our law.

I found it very interesting to read some of the debates that took place back in 1953 and 1954. An exchange took place between the then Minister of Justice, the Hon. Stuart Garson, and the then Hon. Member for Kamloops, Mr. E. D. Fulton. I see that they found it difficult to define just exactly what a peeping-Tom was.

In one part of Mr. Fulton's remarks, he said:

> It seems to me that if it is intended to cover the offence of peeping we must be far more specific than we are in this section, particularly since the peeper may not stand on the lot on which the dwelling house into which he is peeping is situated.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnson: Madam Speaker, I find this amusing as well. Mr. Fulton went on to say that he could stand far away from a building and use a pair of binoculars to observe what was going on, and people still do that today. It is funny that things have not changed very much since 1953.

I am sure that during the debate at the time, people were laughing at some of the remarks that were made. I suppose the hon. gentlemen of that day tried to bring out their feelings toward certain things that were taking place in debate, and people found it amusing. Sometimes, in order to get their point across, they had to be amusing.

I, like Mr. Fulton, am not an expert either in the technique of committing the offence or in the law regarding it. I would like to reiterate that.

The Hon. Minister of Justice at the time, in his response, said:

> —in most cases it would not be possible for the peeping Tom to look into a window or that sort of thing unless he had come onto the ground of another and was loitering or prowling there near a dwelling house. In the special committee of the House of Commons, the majority, which were concerned that they should not create a new offence that would make a criminal out of every petty trespasser, said that the man had to be loitering or prowling near the dwelling house.

He would have to be doing that in order to be considered to be committing an offence. If he simply crossed the edge of a man's farm or the corner of his building lot it would not be an offence under this section.

I could go on and quote a lot more of what those gentlemen said in 1953. However, as we consider the Hon. Member's proposed amendment to the Criminal Code, let us, in addition to considering the views expressed over 30 years ago, consider the more recent report of the Law Reform Commission of Canada.

In Volume I of its report entitled Recodifying the Criminal Law published in 1986, the Law Reform Commission looked at Section 173 of the Criminal Code in conjunction with two other provisions in the law which addressed the protection of one's property rights. In Chapter 12 entitled "Criminal Intrusion", the authors did not address their minds to the time of day aspect of Section 173 and appear prepared to leave it as is. I suppose, Madam Speaker, that they were trying to say that you could commit the offence regardless of whether it was day or night.

Basically our present law, found in Sections 173, 306, and 308 of the Code, says that the statutes extended the latter, that is burglary and house breaking, to cover shops, warehouses, and other types of buildings in addition to only dwelling houses.

As a couple of my colleagues have said, Madam Speaker, I am unable to support the Hon. Member's Bill which, in my view, will have little beneficial impact on the mischief caused by peeping Toms. I would suggest that in the absence of any demonstrated urgent need for this legislation to be immediately adopted, this House may want to await the Government's response to the Law Reform Commission's report. Surely the development of an offence specifically tailored to address peeping Toms, one which would not be limited to persons physically present on the property of another, might be one of the options which might merit consideration. It would not appear to me that creating a daytime offence of trespass is necessarily the most appropriate response to the perceived problem which this legislative measure is intended to address.

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise in this House today and comment on Bill C-278 presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), which reads as follows:

> "173. Every one who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies upon him, prowls upon the property of another person near a dwelling-house situated on that property is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction."

This is an amendment of Section 173, which now reads:

> "173. Every one who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies upon him, loiters or prowls at night upon the property of another person . . .

This means that emphasis is put on the difference between day and night. Obviously many offences are committed at night, Madam Speaker, and it is easy to find out who is on private property at night and who is not supposed to be there. Compared with the daytime, it is much harder because normally everyone in large urban centres is working during the day and completely harmless or innocent people may then be arrested or accused of loitering or "scrounging around."

I agree with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell that such offences are committed during the day as well, but I still have a problem. I would be willing to support his Bill, if distinctions could be made to define daytime and nighttime offences. For instance, Madam Speaker, in larger urban areas, many children go to play next door, on private property. How do we explain that those children are not loiterers or peeping Toms? There are public employees, such as electricians who have to climb hydro poles in our cities to do repairs. If they happen to be right opposite a window on the second floor and the shades are up, they could be accused of voyeurism. Now how can we accuse these people of something they never even thought of doing? They are just doing their job! And when the baker, for instance, rings the doorbell and the babysitter happens to open the door, and she doesn't know the baker, how is she supposed to know the man is a baker and not a loiterer? The same applies to the milkman and to the garbage pick-up crew. If people go down the street and happen to look into a window, they could be accused right then and there. I am of course referring to people who work during the day. At night it is a lot easier, as the Hon. Member said earlier. The light is on inside, while it is dark outside. So these people are on someone else's property for a very specific purpose, and no one is going to deny that. During the day, however, it is not as clear cut.

I wonder how we are going to be able to make those distinctions, and how this provision can be enforced fairly. A lot of offences are committed in broad daylight, and I am not just referring to peeping Toms. For instance, in the city and in broad daylight, while people are on the patio or near the pool, burglars break into the house. This does happen, and we must find a way to prevent it. But I don't think we should have to amend a section of the Criminal Code to give it more "teeth" in order to stop these things from happening. In fact, I think we need some kind of public awareness program. In several cities like Laval, for instance, there is an anti-burglary program called Prévol. It is a kind of information network. There are a number of lookouts, there are area leaders, and the neighbours around each area leader.

Early each week, area leaders send each of their individual lookouts the following message: Last week, some thieves broke into a number of homes by using such means as smashing doors or basement windows. They circulate this information, so that people can better protect themselves and prevent this type of break-ins. Something similar could be used to stop peeping Toms, without having to amend the Canadian legislation.

It is a fact that it is not easy to implement such programs or have people accept them, because they already find awareness programs disturbing, and that is the whole tragedy. They would like to have everything, without having to make an effort to get it, and they would like the community to foot the bill. Madam Speaker, instead of using the time of the House to debate a bill which, in principle, seems to me to be logical, except that it would be difficult if not outright impossible to implement, I feel rather that each and everyone of us should act in our respective ridings—since the phenomena described by my friend the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell does not exist only in his riding, although we could say so if we wanted to make political gains, but it exists from coast to coast, and not only in our own backyards.

Perhaps we should use all the means at our disposal to discourage this type of day or night activities. Of course, Madam Speaker, the three levels of Government, federal, provincial and municipal, would have to co-operate; we need to rely on their contribution. At the municipal level, and I mention again the City of Laval where such a program already exists, the police force is already working in close co-operation with all the other organizations involved in fighting these activities. For instance, the police force co-operates with Prévol. It co-operates also with the Block Parents organization. In the province of Quebec, everybody knows about Block Parents and I suggest there is an enormous need for this kind of protection for our children and our homes. The police forces and all civil protection organizations, in both large and small communities, have the duty to co-operate and they do it gladly.

Concerning the bill we are dealing with today, Madam Speaker, I say there should be consultations, beginning with the larger communities, to set up such an organization which could contribute very quickly, much more quickly than federal legislation, in curbing this rash of break-ins without using so much public funds.

I conclude, Madam Speaker, for I know that other Members want to contribute to this debate. I suggest that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell had very good intentions when he introduced this bill, but he will agree with me, I am sure, that without any legislation, we could come to an agreement and stop this rash of break-ins and vandalism.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Private Member's Bill C-278. The Hon. Member has introduced an interesting and easily understandable amendment to the trespassing section of the Criminal Code.

Section 173 as it now stands states:

> Everyone who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies upon him, loiters or prowls at night upon the property of another person near a dwelling house situated on that property is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

In 1985 across Canada there were over 12,000 charges laid and an even more substantial number in 1986. In the case of someone loitering around one's dwelling house during the daytime, my friend advises me that the police can be summoned to see what is happening but cannot lay any charges because the section of the Criminal Code states very clearly that charges can only be laid if that person has been prowling at night.

The House will know that there are many types of prowling infractions that take place at times other than during the night. The proposal being made by my hon. friend is very logical. I was a probation and parole officer before being elected to this House and I believe laws must provide the kind of definition that allow for charges to be laid when someone is being bothered. For example, what would happen at this time of the day in Ottawa to someone waiting outside a dwelling house with no lawful excuse? That person may be peeking in windows or simply bothering the property owner and making one nervous.

It seems to me that we should clarify the laws. My friend is proposing to cut some red tape. It is a logical proposal that could even be included in an omnibus Bill, sent to committee, or even voted on now.

The Hon. Member's proposal is logical, and would only require the deletion of the two words "at night", so the section would apply 24-hours a day, all year long. It would provide a greater sense of security for Canadians across the country so that they would know that if someone was prowling or loitering around their property they could call the local police, who could not only ask whether or not the person had a lawful excuse for being there, but could lay charges if that person was loitering.

Perhaps we can allow for a vote on this Bill so that it could pass through all stages or go to committee. I believe this is a good opportunity to vote on a very logical and understandable proposal.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a most interesting Private Member's Bill. Unlike the Member who just spoke, I do not agree that it is a simple, straightforward amendment. It has quite a dramatic effect on the present reading of the Criminal Code.

Trespassing is not, in itself, a criminal offence. Under provincial law, however, it may give rise to a cause of action that would provide compensation for damages.

Some provinces have also enacted provincial statutory offences for trespass if certain conditions are fulfilled. In Ontario, for example, the Trespass to Property Act provides that a person is guilty of trespass and liable to a fine if he or she, without the express permission of the occupier and without a lawful right or authority, enters onto or engages in an activity on the property of another person when such is prohibited by the Act, or does not immediately leave the premises when requested to do so. Other provinces have similar offences. It should be noted, however, that these provincial offences do not create crimes, but are merely regulatory offences. Mere trespass to property is not a crime.

Furthermore, neither is mere trespass a crime under the Criminal Code. Section 173 of the Criminal Code, although entitled "Trespassing at Night" in the heading, does not create a general offence of trespass. It prohibits, without lawful excuse, loitering or prowling at night upon the property of another person near a dwelling house. The term "prowls" has been held by the courts to mean conduct that consists of hunting around in a stealthy manner for an opportunity to commit an offence. Clearly, this term connotes a serious type of conduct, one deserving of the criminal sanction.

However, the term "loitering" has been held by the courts to mean "hanging around" or "lingering". Hanging around or lingering is not the type of conduct that justifies the imposition of the criminal sanction.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order. before you call it six o'clock, Madam Speaker, and proceed to the vote, may I ask if the Government will tell us if it wants to work tomorrow? What is the agenda for tomorrow so that we can prepare, if anyone over there knows the answer?

Mr. Gottselig: Come tomorrow morning at 11.00 o'clock and you will find out.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, April 29, consideration of Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime), as reported (with amendment) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the House will now proceed to the deferred division from the report stage on Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime).

Call in the Members.

The vote is on Mr. Hnatyshyn's amendment. Mr. Hnatyshyn moves:

That Bill C-89 be amended in Clause 7, in the French version, by striking out lines 20 to 25 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"(1.4) Pour l'application du présent article, la victime est:

a) la personne qui subit des pertes ou des dommages matériels ou moraux par suite de la perpétration d'une infraction.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Hnatyshyn), which was agreed to on the following division:

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

The House resumed from Friday, April 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reimer:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Act, 1982, should be amended in order to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that it reads as follows:

"7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

and this House urges that the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces and the Senate pass similar resolutions.

And the amendment of Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton):

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "amended" and substituting the following therefor:

Property Rights

"in order to recognize the right to enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof, except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, and in keeping with the tradition of the usual federal-provincial consultative process."

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, customarily, Private Members' Business is voted on differently.

Since the item before us is a Private Member's one, I would suggest that we proceed row by row rather than by political party and that we start, as usual, at the Speaker's right.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House in agreement that the division be taken by rows?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is at this point that I should like to remind Hon. Members that the voting will begin with those Members who are in favour of the amendment in the rows to my right. I would ask them to rise by row and then those Members in the rows to my left. Later, I will ask those Members who are opposed to the amendment in the rows to my right to rise and end with those Members opposed to the amendment in the rows to my left.

The question is on the amendment.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

PETITIONS

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to present a petition today on behalf of a number of constituents, pursuant to Standing Order 106. The constituents are concerned in this case about the comprehensive eligibility list for the northern residents' tax deduction. They indicate that many communities have been left off the list which share identical environments in that they are northern, isolated communities paying increased costs for food, fuel and housing. Whereas this tax deduction was designed to assist in alleviating the added costs of living in northern, isolated communities, they are calling upon Parliament to declare all communities in tier 3 ridings across Canada to be eligible for the northern residents' tax deduction.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present petitions to this House, pursuant to Standing Order 106. These petitions come from residents of Shediac, Cormier Village, St. Paul, St. Charles, Cocagne and Scoudouc in my riding. Mr. Speaker, they come from throughout my constituency. The petitioners humbly state that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada leaves unborn human beings with no legal protection and for these reasons, the petitioners humbly ask Parliament to draft a bill as soon as possible to protect human life.

REQUEST FOR INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY SAFETY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table petitions signed by residents of Chibougamau, Dolbeau, Sainte-Monique, Roberval, Chapais, Mistassini, Saint-Paul du Nord, Saint-Thomas and Longueuil. These 168 signatures are in addition to the 32,639 signatures that I have already tabled.

The highway safety campaign continues, Mr. Speaker, because the petitioners are aware that since 1974, the federal motor vehicle safety regulations allow drivers of passenger cars to install self-inflating air bags and that this device would reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries.

For these reasons, the petitioners humbly ask Parliament to require, first, the installation of self-inflating air bags in the front of cars and, second, the installation of adjustable seat belts with shoulder straps for back-seat passengers.

INFORMATION PROGRAM ON NUCLEAR ENERGY

Question No. 280—Mr. Nystrom:

Order Paper Questions

1. Has Atomic Energy Canada Limited (AECL), Eldorado Nuclear Limited or the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources (EMR) made any financial commitment to a campaign undertaken by the Canadian Nuclear Association to promote the nuclear industry in Canada and, if so, in each case, in what amounts?

2. Have any employees of AECL, Eldorado or EMR (a) participated in the development (b) undertaken the supervision of any aspect of the campaign and, if so, in each case (i) what positions do they occupy in their department or agency (ii) what responsibilities have they assumed in the supervision of the campaign?

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Office of Privatization and Regulatory Affairs as follows:

In so far as the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned: 1. No. 2. (a) & (b) No.

In so far as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is concerned:

1. As a co-sponsor of the Canadian Nuclear Association's public information program, AECL has committed $2.5 million (an amount equal to less than one per cent of AECL's operating expenses) for 1987-88 to the program.

2. (a) & (b) Yes. (i) Vice President, Corporate Relations, AECL. (ii) Chairman, Canadian Nuclear Association's Public Affairs Steering Committee.

In so far as Eldorado Nuclear Limited is concerned:

1. Eldorado Nuclear Limited is a co-sponsor of the Canadian Nuclear Association's information program, which is designed to provide Canadians with information about nuclear energy.

For the 1987-88 fiscal year of the program, Eldorado will contribute $50,000 toward this program. The contribution is from revenue earned in the market-place and does not involve public funds.

2. Eldorado's Director of Corporate Affairs has participated in the development and supervision of the information program, although the company has not and does not intend to second any of its employees to the program.

DPW—CONTRACTS, GRANTS OR LOANS IN CONSTITUENCY OF EDMONTON WEST

Question No. 284—Mr. Dorin:

Since September 4, 1984, has the Department of Public Works awarded contracts, grants or loans to individuals, corporations or non-governmental organizations located in the constituency of Edmonton West and, if so, to which ones and, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): In so far as Public Works Canada is concerned:

Below is a list of contracts awarded in the constituency of Edmonton West from September 4, 1984 to March 21, 1988. No grants or loans to individuals, corporations or non-governmental organizations were awarded during this period.

SALE OF ASBESTOS TO THAILAND

Question No. 313—Ms. McDonald:

To the knowledge of the Government, is Canadian asbestos sold in Thailand and, if so, is information provided to users about the known or potential health effects of asbestos and, if so, what is it?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In 1987, Canada shipped asbestos cloth and fibres to Thailand valued at $18.8 million. In Thailand, the major end uses of asbestos fibres are asbestos cement sheet/pipe and roofing (80 per cent), brakes and clutches (15 per cent), and vinyl floor tiles (5 per cent). Bags of asbestos fibres entering Thailand are stamped with warning labels in six languages. In accordance with Thai regulations, pallets loaded with bags of asbestos fibres entering Thailand are labelled in Thai with cautionary statements, a practice which started in 1985. Thai regulatory authorities at the Ministry of Industry are well aware of the potential health effects of asbestos. Under their regulations, only blue asbestos or crocidolite is not permitted entry into Thailand. Import permits are required in Thailand to import other types of asbestos fibres which are issued by the Hazardous Substances Division of the Thai Ministry of Industry. The Canadian Asbestos Institute has conducted seminars in Thailand in August, 1985, and in February, 1988, on the health, safety and handling of asbestos for the Thai regulating agencies and users.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, May 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed, and the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That this question be now put.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to contribute to the debate on third reading of Bill C-113. As you know, we rather reluctantly have decided to support the Bill because, of course, the NDP is concerned about the goal of diversification of the economy of western Canada. We sympathize with and support the aim of westerners to ensure that their economy can and will be broadened from its traditional reliance on farming, energy and other resources. However, we are nonetheless unhappy with and have substantial misgivings about the structure being put in place by the Government.

May I say as well that I have some pretty grave misgivings about the fact that a Government which came to power some three and a half years ago is only now getting around to establishing this new vehicle for regional development in western Canada. While I recognize that the Western Diversification Office has been in operation over the course of the last year or so, nonetheless the failure to give legislative support to the initiative indicates a lack of urgency. Or, perhaps it is just an inability on the part of the Progressive Conservatives, despite their numbers, to effectively set priorities and manage the business of this House so that this legislative program gets through.

I have some real problems with that because I have been thinking a bit and my Party has hopes of forming a Government—

Mr. Holtmann: Where?

Mr. Cassidy: —after the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: That is a very real possibility now. One of the things I believe we have to do is set out a program and put it before Parliament and then set to working with Parliament on an urgent basis to get that program adopted. What we are seeing now is a failure by the Government in determining urgency, setting priorities, determining objectives, and then carrying through. That is one of the reasons why so many Canadians, including those in western Canada, are disillusioned with the Government and are increasingly questioning whether it should be allowed another term in office.

Mr. Mantha: Get to the subject matter.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this Bill sets up a kind of hybrid structure of responsibility in the Government for regional development. It sets up a new Department of Industry, Science and Technology which will be responsible for regional development in Ontario and Quebec. Then there will be a Minister responsible for the Atlantic provinces economic development initiative and another responsible for the Western Diversification Office. Therefore, we will have three separate Ministers, each of whom is responsible for promoting regional development in different parts of the country and acting as advocates within cabinet and in relations with other departments. There will not be one department or one branch of Government with over-all responsibility for seeking to ensure fairness between the regions of Canada and fairness for different Canadians in different parts of the country.

I know the situation of my friend from Kamloops—Shuswap where, even after four or five years of economic growth in Canada, the unemployment rate in that part of the interior of British Columbia stays somewhere close to 20 per cent. It just has not come down under the Progressive Conservatives and there is no indication that the Western Diversification Office will have much impact on bringing it down.

What I believe is a real concern or ought to be is the fact that the Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology will clearly be the senior ministry of these regional development outfits. In fact, there will not be a ministry in Ottawa directly concerning itself with western diversification. There will be an Assistant Deputy Minister and a liaison office here in Ottawa, but the base of the Western Diversification Office will be in Edmonton with branch offices in Vancouver, Saskatoon and Winnipeg.

In those circumstances I fear that the legitimate concerns of westerners and their desire to try to influence the policies of other Departments are going to prove to be somewhat less effective in implementation. In other words, they will not have the clout they hope to have and which the Government promised when it established legislation for the office. I fear the same thing may happen with respect to the Atlantic region as well.

Let me just read from a government hand-out on the responsibilities of the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology. It says that the creation of the new Department should be seen in the light of a series of initiatives the Government has taken, including creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, responsible for regional economic development programs in Atlantic Canada, and the Western Diversification Office serving four western provinces. This new approach to industrial revitalization can in no way be interpreted, says the Government, as a diminished emphasis on regional development. Quite the contrary, it will support the Government's efforts to promote growth and development in the disadvantaged regions of the country.

Regional development in Ontario and Quebec will be the responsibility of the new Department, managed through a separate organizational component with its own field offices. The Department's responsibility for these regions will involve broad regional economic development policy and program co-ordination. It will also include advocating the economic development interests of Ontario and Quebec within the federal Government.

• (1120)

What is happening, therefore, is that this big, powerful new Department of Industry, Mines and Technology, with a budget approaching $2 billion per annum, will be responsible for advocating regional development priorities for Ontario and Quebec. In the meantime, a Minister with other responsibilities, who will be speaking on behalf of the Western Diversification Office, will be responsible for speaking up for western Canada and a Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be responsible for speaking up for Atlantic Canada.

Those two Ministers and the offices for which they are responsible will not be integrated into the structure of the Government here in any way. They will be out in left field in western Canada, if you want to put it that way, and in right field in Atlantic Canada. In the meantime the regional development interests of Ontario and Quebec will be spoken for by a Minister who is one of the two or three most powerful economic Ministers. I fear that we will see a perpetuation of the problem which has bedevilled our economic management of this country for so long, that is, that successive Liberal and Conservative Governments have essentially governed for the economy of central Canada, of Ontario and Quebec, at the expense of the economies of the rest of the country.

We are told that the new Western Diversification Office is going to have responsibility to promote the economic interests of western Canada within the context of the Government of Canada developing national policies. However, when we have tried to raise specific examples of that to find out how it will work, we have found that it is not going to work at all.

My colleague, the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), asked the responsible Minister if he would be making representations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Bank of Canada in favour of lower interest rates. It is clearly in the interests of western Canada to have the dollar cease its dizzy rise, to bring interest rates down, in order to ensure a development of the oil and gas industry, et cetera.

This morning I sat at a breakfast with some business people and my colleague from Yorkton—Melville who reminded me that the meat packing industry in western Canada has been increasing its exports to the United States but that those exports are now beginning to stall because of the rise in the Canadian dollar and, as a consequence, because of a decrease in the competitiveness of Canadian-packed meat products being shipped into the United States.

The answer we got from the responsible Minister was a dusty one. He was not prepared to indicate that the Western Diversification Minister was in fact speaking up for lower interest rates in the councils of Cabinet and trying, therefore, to protect the interests of the West. A decrease in interest rates of 1 per cent will have a lot more impact in terms of job creation in western Canada than the $200 million per annum which will be spent through the Western Diversification Office.

I wonder whether the Western Diversification Office would have stood up for western Canada to have kept the CF-18 contract when that was moved to Montreal. I wonder whether the Western Diversification Office is making representations within Cabinet right now with respect to the impending Air Canada contract with Airbus Industries of the Common Market in order to ensure that a fair share of the offset production under that contract will be in Canada in order that not all the value of that contract will go to the aerospace industry in Montreal, as appears to be the case now. Is the Western Diversification Office standing up for western Canada in this matter? We do not know, Mr. Speaker, but I suspect that the answer is no.

As another example, the Department of the Environment is meant to be a co-ordinating ministry. It has been around for a long time and has substantial political clout because of the express concern of Canadians with respect to environmental protection. However, its success in ensuring that Departments such as Fisheries and Forestry follow policies which are environmentally sound has been negligible. It has had a terrible uphill battle in trying to co-ordinate the activities of other line Departments.

I wonder what success the Western Diversification Office, located in Edmonton, will have in trying to co-ordinate the activities of line Departments with economic-based activities in western Canada. If the Department of Energy has initiatives in Alberta, will the Western Diversification Office have a say? If the Western Diversification Office thinks that there are other projects which would have a greater economic impact than major energy projects which are being considered for financing by the Department of Energy, will it be able to prevail, or will its input go ignored and will it find itself out in left field while the big decisions are made by other people in cabinet and cabinet committees from which the representatives of the Western Diversification Office are excluded? Is that what will occur? I fear that that, in fact, will be the case.

Another example of where the Western Diversification Office could be fulfilling its advocate role is in the promotion of the use of western coal at the plants of Ontario Hydro in Ontario. Those coal burning plants currently draw their coal from the eastern United States and in the process, of course, create a great deal of acid rain pollution which is affecting both Canada and the United States. Just what role would the Western Diversification Office play in ensuring that diversification includes the use of Canadian coal in Ontario Hydro's production of electricity, a project which would benefit both western and eastern Canada as well as helping to protect the environment because of the high quality of western Canadian coal?

A final example is the question of the flow-through shares. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) proposed to reduce or eliminate the tax advantages of flow-through shares. He has provoked almost unanimous opposition in all parts of northern Canada, including from people from northern Manitoba, northern Saskatchewan, northern Alberta, and northern British Columbia. The flow-through share scheme has led to an enormous increase in mining exploration and the opening and development of new mines in every part of northern Canada. It has brought unemployment rates down dramatically in certain parts of northern Canada. Will the Western Diversification Office get involved in that? We do not know.

I am reminded of what happens these days when people go to their Conservative Member of Parliament and ask what he or she is doing about jobs in their particular community. The unemployment rate is up to 12 per cent and is not coming down. The jobs, jobs, jobs about which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked all seem to be in the area of Toronto and Brampton, they are not going out to western Canada. The Member of Parliament says: "Boy, am I ever a tiger in the caucus. I'm speaking up for you all the time." He says, "I have talked to the Minister again and again about your problems. The Minister is doing the job in Cabinet, just trust us". The people of Canada have heard that song for the last three and a half years.

The Hon. Member speaks about what happened in Manitoba. I noticed that the power of the Prime Minister in Manitoba, the magnetism of his appeal, and the force of the Conservative Government's policies, had such a buoyant effect on Mr. Filmon and the provincial Conservatives in Manitoba that the number of their seats came down from the last election. My hon. friend from Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) will remind me. Did the vote for the Conservatives go up or did it go down in Manitoba?

Mr. Riis: I believe it went down.

Mr. Cassidy: I believe it went down. And did the number of seats for the Conservatives go up or go down?

Mr. Riis: They went down as well.

Mr. Cassidy: The seats for the Conservatives went down as well. There is a real vote of confidence on the power of the Progressive Conservative alternatives in Manitoba. It is very interesting. People there punished a government which was in power for 16 of the last 20 years. They decided that it was time to have a change. That happens and as New Democrats we respect that. As Premier Pawley and Mr. Doer, the new Leader of the New Democrats in Manitoba indicated, some mistakes were made and I think we have learned a few lessons from that. However, I believe that the Conservatives have to learn some lessons as well.

You cannot create a diversification initiative which is just going to send memos from Edmonton to Ottawa and say that that is all that is being done for western diversification. I want Hon. Members opposite to know just how skeptical people are about this kind of initiative. I had a conversation with some business people this morning and was reminded that three years ago the Government brought together a number of leaders in different areas of the economy for a national economic conference at the highest level. That group included people from the voluntary sector, from universities, from research and development. It included spokespeople from different areas of business, both small and big. It included people from the trade union movement. It included some representatives of women and minority groups. Of course, it included members of Cabinet and the present Government.

There was some very useful dialogue over the course of two and one-half days, but the Government failed to carry through with that particular initiative. I believe, as a Canadian as well as a New Democrat, that such an initiative would have been useful had it been carried through. Canadians must learn to talk together more effectively about how we can build this country. That means people in western Canada as well as people in Ontario, Quebec or Atlantic Canada.

In Quebec there have been some useful initiatives in bringing together all of the interests involved in different regions or different industries so they may talk and confront common problems. That is an approach that we New Democrats find extremely positive and productive. However, one does not find that approach in the Western Diversification Office.

As I said, while we support this legislation, it is because it is the only game in town. We believe this initiative is flawed and therefore warn people in western Canada not to put all of their trust in this particular measure. We support it because it is the only game in town.

I want to refer to some comments made by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business on the Western Diversification Office. They submitted a very sincere brief to the Minister responsible for the diversification office and indicated the kind of concern the Government's initiative has provoked among people who ought to be friendly to the Government.

They state that the CFIB is among those excited by the prospects of a fund to aid western diversification, provided that it is spent judiciously, using flexible criteria within a clear and consistent policy framework.

Yet, the CFIB says that their enthusiasm has been tempered by growing concern that the western diversification initiative is degenerating into at least one or all of the following: "a political slush fund to support vulnerable constituencies to lure in big business or bail out obsolete industries in hopes of gaining short-term political profile". I do not believe that is what the Government announced as the office's intention. However, when people from the small business sector studied this initiative, they feared that this is what it would become.

They went on to state that it may become: "a bureaucratic slush fund available for other line Departments and Ministers to raid in lieu of other national programs that should have their fair share spent in the West". In other words, they are warning people in western Canada that the $97 million going into this particular initiative for the close of the fiscal year is not so much found money, given the fact that other programs that could and should be used in western Canada will be short-changed as a consequence.

Their third concern is that it could become: "a narrow and highly centralized approach to diversification with continued emphasis on megaprojects or traditional resource extraction and development" or, finally: "it could turn into a confusing black box lacking clear criteria or policy direction and on a collision course with a myriad of client groups who are inevitably going to see thousands of applications rejected and thousands of hopes dashed".

The Federation of Independent Business proposed that given the resources available and the area where jobs are actually being created in the economy today, the Western Diversification Fund should be focused on the areas of community development, risk financing and equity investment in small business, on the promotion and support of a western entrepreneurial culture and on advocacy through all federal agencies on behalf of the West. They expressed grave concern about the need to salvage the credibility of the Western Diversification Office before it had begun to be established.

The fears as they have been expressed by my colleagues are that there will not be genuine diversification beyond the traditional resource industries. I have those same concerns. I was in western Canada on a very interesting tour of the energy sector that was organized by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) in conjunction with the Alberta Government. I thank the Hon. Member for his assistance because as an Ontario resident, albeit a native of British Columbia, I found it extremely useful and helpful.

I learned from that trip that there was this sense of confusion about what the diversification office would actually do. I heard about a number of applications being made and encouraged by the diversification office which did not appear to meet the criteria of diversification. I am not sure whether it was designed to ensure that western Canada would embark upon new areas of industrial development, whether in high tech, international oil servicing or the like, or whether it would simply help the traditional development of the tourist sector. I understand that $75 million in funding has been given for the cure of soil erosion and that $5 million has been given for potash marketing. This does not appear to be diversification in the traditional sense.

If there is a sense of confusion or lack of focus in the Western Diversification Office before it has even been legislated into being, what will happen in two years, particularly if the Government eventually directs the 1988-89 funding for the first full year of the diversification office into areas that are far more important for political pay-off than for economic development in western Canada?

I hope that we in the New Democratic Party are learning from those concerns. We believe the process should be much more open, with an ongoing dialogue in which the provincial governments, western business, working people in the trade unions, and the voluntary sector are all involved in planning the diversification of the economy of western Canada and implementing those plans in ways in which all governments will serve as a catalyst in helping all sectors work toward the common goal of the diversification and strengthening of the economy of western Canada.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my hon. friend, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), why the NDP keep referring to the Federation of Independent Business presentation that was made to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) prior to the legislation being introduced to the House. They know full well that it is misleading. I cannot say that it is intentionally misleading because that would be unparliamentary, but one cannot help but question the motives of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

He knows that when this legislation was sent to committee and studied clause by clause, the NDP and Liberal Members each asked that the Federation of Independent Business be allowed to appear as a witness in front of the committee. The Federation indicated by phone that it did not want to appear before the committee because it was basically satisfied with the legislation. However, it stated that it had received calls asking it to appear and would do so if requested.

In order to accommodate New Democratic and Liberal members of the committee, we called the Federation of Independent Business to appear before the committee. That organization agreed to come, but only at our insistence. Why then does the Hon. Member present his case based on the Federation of Independent Business proposal that was submitted to the cabinet Minister in charge of western diversification prior to the legislation? Why would he do that?

• (1140)

The Member indicates that there is a sense of confusion out there because people are making applications under the Western Diversification Program and the applications are being turned down. Why is the Member talking about this confusion when the legislation which allows the Minister for western diversification to access the program is not through? His hands are virtually tied because we are being filibustered in this House by Liberals and New Democrats who are holding up this very vital legislation for western Canada.

The Minister can only access those programs already in place. How in God's name can the Member stand up and talk about the sense of confusion which exists because the legislation is not in place and at the same time attempt to filibuster this legislation to the detriment of western Canada? I would ask my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to answer that question.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have been scratching my head to figure out the Conservative definition of a filibuster. I think I have established that a filibuster, in the eyes of the Hon. Member for Athabasca, is any debate which persists longer than four hours. I believe when I got up to speak this morning there had been approximately five hours of debate on third reading of Bill C-113. I am sure everyone in western Canada would agree that is not an unreasonable amount of time to give to debate on a flawed, but important regional initiative. If the Hon. Member thinks there should be no debate in the House of Commons, if his view is that the House of Commons should be stifled, let him take that view back to his constituents, but I think most Canadians believe this is a democracy and that the House of Commons plays an extremely important role in it.

Second, I would point out that the New Democratic Party is not responsible for the calling of legislation in this House, nor are we responsible for the calendar with which the legislation is put forward. That is the responsibility of the Government. My hon. friend informs me that in fact we were only up to four hours and 54 minutes of debate before I began my speech. If the Government felt that the operations of the Western Diversification Office would be impaired because of the lack of legislative authority, it could have brought this legislation to the floor a lot sooner than now.

As I recall, the Western Diversification Office was actually announced about a year and a half ago, in August of 1987. At that point the Government brought forward its legislation. The office has been making deals. It has been offering money. There was money voted for it in the 1987-88 Budget. If the Government had wanted this legislation through by Christmas, it had the power to do so. It is not the responsibility of the New Democratic Party that the Government chose to go forward with other pieces of legislation at that time.

The Hon. Member speaks of the Federation of Independent Business. I would remind him that the brief submitted to the Minister responsible for the Western Diversification Office, which came from the CFIB, was submitted after the Western Diversification Office had actually been in operation, even if it did not have legislative authority. The Member overlooks one important factor, and I checked this with my colleagues. The Federation stood by the concerns it had aired in its brief to the Minister. Those concerns are not entirely answered in the legislation as it stands and, unfortunately, it has not been corrected since.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, not long ago we in the House debated the legislation regarding the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, a similar initiative to the Western Diversification Fund. The decision at that time was that the legislative committee should travel throughout Atlantic Canada and hold hearings. A number of people from Atlantic Canada made submissions at those hearings. I am interested in one of the submissions by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. The chairman of the Council indicated to the parliamentary committee that his organization had concerns about the creation of a new Department of Industry, Science and Technology because that new Department was going to be responsible for economic development in Ontario and Québec. The question the individual asked was if this would give some undue advantage in terms of a new major powerful Department of Government with all the bureaucracy in place, would central Canada be using that as its regional development? What does that mean in terms of the Atlantic Agency today, and we are talking about the Western Diversification Fund.

It seems we have different rules for different parts of Canada, at least that is what this individual was indicating. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) would indicate how he sees this. With this new Department of Industry, Science and Technology being responsible for regional development in Ontario and Quebec, are we not setting up different systems for different parts of Canada? I am not suggesting any particular problem with that, but it does seem, as the person from Atlantic Canada indicated, that it perhaps provides the possibility of Ontario and Quebec having an additional advantage in terms of regional development, being aligned and receiving these development initiatives through this very powerful new Department of the Government.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I did express some concern because I think that is a real problem. The Minister responsible for western Canada is going to be down at the bottom of the pecking order. When you have a cabinet of 40 people and you are the thirty-eighth person to speak, I am not sure you would carry the necessary clout, particularly if you are speaking for regional development interests and are up against the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) who will be number six or number seven in the pecking order after the great Department of Finance, Department of External Affairs and Department of Transport, and so on.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops Shuswap raises a very real problem and I do not think it is adequately answered. The answer, of course, which will come from the Government is that the Prime Minister himself is going to take responsibility for ensuring regional fairness across the country. The Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology will report to the Prime Minister, as does the Minister responsible for the Western Diversification Office and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. But the Prime Minister has a lot of other responsibilities and he will get to the point where he cannot keep all of them going on the boil at the same time. Most people cannot keep more than four or five things going at one time and with the present Prime Minister, it is a lot more than that.

Under those circumstances, to fail to have a ministry which has over-all oversight over the question of regional fairness between eastern Canada, western Canada and the less favoured regions of central Canada is, I suspect, a profound mistake and something for which western Canadians will find themselves paying when this legislation is put into place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, has the time ran out for questions and answers for the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy)? I have a question I would like to ask him if it is at all possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has expired. We are resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

• (1150)

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in the debate on the western diversification legislation which is presently at third reading stage in the House. Those of us who come from western Canada are all concerned with the economic and social developments of our regions. In the last number of years there have been major economic crises which have faced the people of western Canada.

The first and foremost is with respect to the dramatic decline in the prices paid for farm produce, in particular grains, which has led to the bankruptcy of a large number of family farms. It has resulted in a decline of farm value, land value, which threatens in turn many banking institutions such as credit unions. They have loans out on lands which are now not worth the value that they were when they were bought.

As well, in the last number of years we have seen a decline in the price and demand for many of the natural resources that come out of western Canada, in particular the prairie provinces, a decline in both the price and the volume of potash, oil and gas. In turn, that has had an effect throughout the economy of western Canada.

What we find in my home province of Saskatchewan is a declining population, unacceptably high unemployment in many regions of the province and a general sense of despair. There is not a tremendous sense of future and hope, which is odd, coming out of Saskatchewan since one thing that we have always had is a sense of hope. We call ourselves "next year country" because there was always a sense that next year was going to be better.

As I travel throughout my riding, which is in part urban and in part rural, I find a tremendous sense of pessimism and not much hope that next year will be better. It is necessary to develop some strong economic and social strategy to help diversify the economies of the West, in particular the prairie provinces, so that when we see the ups and downs in the prices of our natural products, our grains and our natural resources that they do not carry the whole economy of the West with them. I think it has always been a dream of various federal and provincial Governments, whether they have been Liberal, New Democratic or Conservative, to attempt to develop some alternate strategy so that the economic base in the West can be diversified and as such strengthened in order to withstand the ups and downs of the markets.

I must say that there was a certain amount of hope in the West when in 1984 a Conservative federal Government was elected. For a long time many people in the West felt that the Liberal Government of Mr. Trudeau had ignored the West. His Government did not receive too many seats from western Canada. Its political base was essentially in Québec and Ontario. It was felt that the economic policies of the Liberal Government reflected its economic base.

There was certainly a tremendous sense of being ignored by western Canadians. Thus, in 1984, many people who voted for the Conservative Party in the West, even though many of them might not have been Conservative, felt that a change in government was needed in order to rebalance the sharing of economic wealth and development between East and West. They saw central Canada being economically healthy whereas western Canada was on an economic decline and being ignored.

I must say that a great many of the folks who voted for the Conservative Party in western Canada are bitterly disappointed. There are the obvious examples of the fighter contract being let to Montreal rather than to Winnipeg, which is a major irritant to western Canadians. We also find that the election of the Conservative Party in 1984 really did not change things very much in western Canada. We recognize that in its Budget of 1985 the Government slashed some $3 billion out of regional economic development, a decrease in the budget of regional and economic development that continued from one Budget to the next. It is estimated that some $9 billion in money could and should have gone to regional economic development. But that was slashed from the Budget—slashed by some $3 billion in three years.

You will recognize as well, Mr. Speaker, despite the record of the Conservative Party to get more procurement in the West, that when you look at the figures from 1984-85 to the present you will see that during those Conservative years there was a steady decline of purchases by the national Government in the West. In 1984-85 the figure was 13.9 per cent of federal expenditures going to purchases from western Canada. In 1985-86 that figure declined to 12.8 per cent. In 1986-87 it further declined to 11.5 per cent. Thus even in the area of procurement, western Canadians have seen their share of federal expenditures decline in the Conservative years. So much for the hopes of western Canadians.

Western Canadians also recognize that this Government has ignored western Canada agriculture and the crisis that faces the farmers back home.

Mr. Malone: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: The Hon. Member laughs. Indeed, the Government did come up with $1 billion just before the Saskatchewan election. What it took was the Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan, a friend of mine, phoning up during the midnight hours from a little motel in rural Saskatchewan, in Calvinton, his buddy Brian and saying: "Brian, for gosh sakes, we need something or we are going down to defeat".

Mr. Nystrom: He was pleading.

Mr. de Jong: Pleading, indeed. In fact, the Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan had to fly to Ottawa to make the Conservative Government aware of what was happening in western Canada. He explained the desperation that farm people were finding themselves in and the growing anti-Conservative mood in the West.

Thus the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of the country said: "Well, Grant, you have done me a lot of favours. We are going to have to do one for you, I suppose. Sure, we will allocate $1 billion". Certainly that money was appreciated in western Canada. It came in the nick of time to save some farm families. But what a way to run public policy. Is it going to be just political pressure that creates the farm support programs that are so desperately needed? Is this the type of leadership and intelligence that Canadian farmers can expect from the Conservative Government that claims to be the friend of the West and the friend of prairie farmers?

I suggest that it is a disgrace. Western Canadians know this, and they do not trust the Government. While the intention of the legislation in front of us to develop the Western Diversification Office sounds good, there are some very critical observations that must be made. First, despite the Government's claim that there will be more than $1 billion in new money over five years, over and above the existing money that flows to western Canada, it seems as though everybody has some difficulty pinning this down and demonstrating that indeed this is new money.

The Western Diversification Program takes over from four existing programs, the Industrial and Regional Development Program, the Economic and Regional Development Agreements, ERDAs, the Western Transportation and Industrial Development, and the Small Businesses Loans Act. We cannot find out, and the Government certainly has not been able to tell us, how much of those moneys that presently flow to western Canada will be folded into the Western Diversification Office. The Government has not been able to prove its case that the Western Diversification Office will mean an extra $1.2 billion flowing into western Canada over and above what presently flows into our region of the country.

There are some other criticisms as to the design of the program. We are concerned that the program is completely private. There are few public and private initiatives. For example, the municipal infrastructure cannot be funded through this program. The needs in the West also include building our municipal infrastructure. The fact that this program ignores this area is a major flaw.

The second item of concern to us in terms of its design is that it is very trade oriented. We understand that some projects that have been approved for funding under the Western Diversification Office had to be examined by External Affairs because of the potential countervail that might be imposed because of government assistance on those programs. We also wonder what effect the free trade agreement will have on the Western Diversification Office, and the ability for western Canada to diversify its economy and to develop a viable economic structure.

The history of the West has been that the only way that we have been able to economically survive is through a strategy that involved public, private, and co-operative endeavours. Western Canadian farmers could not have survived if it was not for the Wheat Board, the wheat pools, the credit unions, and the marketing boards. It is through collective and co-operative action that the farm economy has been able to survive during these years, and made western Canadian farmers one of the most efficient producers and marketers in the world. The American farmers are envious of what we have in western Canada and what we have been able to develop and evolve. We have been able to evolve it not through the reliance on pure market forces, but we have been able to develop our agricultural sector through a combination of public involvement, co-operative and private efforts, a mixed economic approach.

Under the free trade deal negotiated between our Prime Minister and the President of the United States, I suggest that that option will no longer be there for us in western Canada. The option of using a mixed economic approach of the public, co-operative, and the private sectors is no longer available to us as Canadians. This agreement forces us to depend entirely upon a private sector market driven economy. As such, it is dangerous to western Canada. Indeed, it cuts off an option that has been successfully used in the past.

The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) was critical of the NDP House Leader using the example of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and its critique of the Western Diversification Fund. Yet, despite the objections of the Hon. Member for Athabasca, the objections are sound that were contained in the brief presented to the Minister by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and reiterated when a representative of that association appeared before the committee.

An article published in the Leader Post on March 18, 1988 stated:

> "The small business community isn't going to quietly stand by while Western Canada becomes a pawn for short-term political advantage," Bulloch said in a prepared statement, released simultaneously in several Western Canadian cities.
> He said too much money from the federal fund has been used to cater to big business or pick winners or losers.
> The fund, estimated at $1.2 billion, was established by the federal Government in August 1987 to promote economic development in Western Canada during the next five years.

I understand Mr. Bulloch's concern. For example, we have seen the Conservative Government pump $4.5 million into the West Edmonton Mall, an outfit that has been doing quite well. Perhaps that $4.5 million could have gone to some other effort to develop some new industry in western Canada. We have seen the type of assistance that the Government has given to its friend, Peter Pocklington. We know when the Government talks about economic development in the West, it is talking about a political slush fund for its political friends.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business knows full well the intention of the Government when it comes to economic development in western Canada. In the brief the Federation was concerned that this money was going to go to the large public and private bureaucracies, and small business would be the losers. If this is to be the case, I warn the Government that it will waste its money unless it includes in an active way the small business community.

It will be the small entrepreneurs in western Canada who are developing new and appropriate technologies, creating small efficient businesses in the West to meet local and community needs, and drawing upon community resources, that will enable economic diversification to occur in the West. It is through a co-operative approach that includes universities, centres of learning, scientific research, the resources of federal, provincial, and municipal Governments, and the resources and the entrepreneurial spirit of small business people in western Canada working together in a co-operative fashion that will enable us in the West to achieve our long sought goal to diversify the economy. In that manner, there can be jobs at home and the sons and daughters of the West need not go to Toronto or to Vancouver in order to find employment. There will be opportunities for off-farm income in order that farm families can continue to survive in this day and age of so much uncertainty in the farm sector.

The hope of western Canadians to develop a strong and diversified economy is a valid one. It is a hope that many in the West thought would start to be fulfilled with the election of the Progressive Conservative Government in 1984. They had to wait for almost four years before this legislation was even introduced, and looking at it, they find that it is merely a cynical attempt at getting some votes in the West.

Bill C-113 has no substance, and offers no real opportunity for those of us living in the West to fulfill our dream of a strong and diversified economy. For those of us living in the West, Bill C-113 is nothing but a farce.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), on questions or comments.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), at the outset of his remarks, made mention of how pessimistic those living in his riding and his province are, calling it "next year country". All I can say is that if I were living in his riding, I, too, would be pessimistic.

The Hon. Member commenced his remarks by saying that the election of the Progressive Conservative Government in 1984 has not changed a thing in so far as the treatment of the West is concerned; that it did not bring about any more help for the West. I wonder how he squares that remark with the fact of the very massive assistance that this Government has provided for the farming community in western Canada. In dollar terms, close to $5 billion has been allocated to assist farmers, including, I am sure, those living in his riding.

Had there been a Liberal Government in Ottawa during this time, that help would not have been forthcoming. Liberal governments in the past provided no such assistance. Also, if the NDP were ever to form the government in Ottawa, it would very quickly go broke, resulting in an inability on the part of such a government to provide assistance to the farming community.

Let me point out one concrete example of where the Western Economic Diversification Program can be of assistance to those living and working in the West.

A small manufacturer has received the rights to a machine that will revolutionalize grain handling. It is a machine that will integrate the grain auger and the grain vacuum into one unit. The individual in question, who operates out of his farmyard at the moment, has prepared a submission to the Western Economic Diversification Office in Edmonton in relation to that invention, and that office is anxious to support that individual in establishing the means by which to manufacture and distribute that piece of equipment. However, because this legislation has not yet been passed by Parliament, its hands are tied. Because Bill C-113 has not yet been passed, the Minister does not have the ability to fund the many proposals submitted to him.

In the light of that situation, I would ask why it is that the Liberals and the NDP are holding up this legislation. The only funds that the Minister has today for use through the Western Economic Diversification Office are those already put in place through DREE and through various federal-provincial subagreements in relation to agriculture. There are many projects presently on hold awaiting passage of this legislation.

The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) made the point that the small business sector should be involved. He went on to express the view that, under this legislation, small business is not going to have a chance, that it is going to be left out in the cold. He is saying that the only way to achieve western economic diversification is to involve the small business sector, on the ground that it is the small business sector in this country that creates jobs—and certainly, that is something with which all Members of this House can agree. In my view, Bill C-113 does exactly that. Through the Western Economic Diversification Office, funding will be funnelled to the small business sector.

Having listened to the remarks of the Hon. Member in this respect, it is obvious to me that he has not read the legislation. Perhaps he could tell the House why it is he feels the small business sector is not going to be involved.

Mr. Speaker, for the first time in the history of Canada, a full Department of the federal Government will be located in western Canada. The head office, to be located in Edmonton, Alberta, will house the deputy minister, the assistant deputy ministers, and the administrative infrastructure of the Department. The full departmental infrastructure will be located, not in Ottawa, but in western Canada, the part of the country which will be affected by this legislation and the decisions taken under it. In addition to the head office being located in Edmonton, there will be sub-offices in each of the remaining western provinces.

Clearly, that is a departure from the traditional way in which programs aimed at western Canada have been handled. If locating the head office of this Department in Edmonton, Alberta, with sub-offices in each of the remaining western provinces, is not a step in the right direction, I would ask the Hon. Member for Regina East what he would propose in its stead.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his questions. I laud the decision to have the head office of the Department of Western Economic Diversification established in Edmonton, with sub-offices in each of the prairie provinces. We have yet to see, however, how effective those offices will be, and the degree of decision-making that will in fact take place in those offices.

We know that, with this Government, there is a great deal of smoke and mirrors. It is little wonder that we are concerned. We are not the only ones who are concerned. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business, in its brief, expressed the same concern.

Mr. Shields: That was a brief that was submitted prior to Bill C-113 being introduced.

Mr. de Jong: That Federation, in its brief, raised a concern about the "narrow and highly centralized approach to diversification, with continued emphasis on megaprojects and traditional resource extraction and development." It also raised a concern about there being a "political slush fund to support vulnerable constituencies to lure in big business, or to bail out obsolete industries, in the hopes of gaining short term political profile". We are left to wonder how much clout these regional offices will have.

One objective of this legislation is that the Western Economic Diversification Office will function as an advocate for western Canada, to attempt to influence the decision-making by the federal Government, such that the concerns of the West and the impact of economic decisions being made here in Ottawa that will impact upon the West, will be known to the Government.

That is certainly a laudable objective, and one about which I make no criticism whatsoever. But, I certainly hope that that office is now telling the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of the effects that his high interest rate policy is having on the producers in the West, particularly those in the red meat industry. I certainly hope that the Western Economic Diversification Office is already active in talking to the people in the Department of Finance in terms of the effects and the impact of the current high interest rate policy on western Canada.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Athabasca can make it his business to ensure that that office is in fact talking to the Minister of Finance about the impact of high interest rates on the farming community in western Canada.

The Hon. Member has expressed the view that this debate is preventing various applications under the Western Economic Diversification Program from being acted upon. He cited the example of a small business person who has devised a new piece of equipment for the handling of grain, a piece of equipment that the small business person wishes to manufacture and market in western Canada.

From the description given by the Hon. Member, certainly that sounds like the kind of entreprenurial effort that the Western Economic Diversification Program should be supporting. Here we have a small business person, a person with mechanical experience and know-how, who has brought about an improvement on existing equipment, and certainly he should be supported in developing a market for that piece of equipment.

There are farmers like that in my own constituency. When I go to the farmyards and look in their garages, I see that they have tinkered and improved upon existing equipment. I know that if it were left to the big equipment producers, that technological innovation would never occur. It is the small scale entrepreneurs who will ensure that those new improvements and technologies will indeed be actualized.

The reason given to this individual that his application had not been approved was that the legislation has not been passed. I wonder if this person is not really being given the runaround. The lack of passage of this legislation has not stopped the diversification office from committing some $75 million to a soil erosion program or from granting some $5 million to potash marketing. It has not stopped the diversification office from granting some $9.5 million to a Japanese pulp mill nor for making some commitments to B. F. Goodrich for a petrochemical plant. Perhaps it is the big guys who have already found their way into this fund, but it is the small guys like the one the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has pointed out who are still standing at the door being given the runaround.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain why it is possible that this office can give $9.5 million to a Japanese pulp mill but it cannot approve the application of the person to whom he referred. I am not quite certain what the Hon. Member's first question was. I think it dealt generally with the type of optimism or pessimism that exists in western Canada today.

Mr. Shields: The support that this Government has given to—

Mr. de Jong: And the support of this Government. I am somewhat surprised that this Hon. Member has not recognized that this Government is in trouble out there from both the left and the right. It almost lost a by-election in Alberta, which is considered to be the heartland of the Tory Party.

I attended the founding convention of the Western Reform Party in Vancouver. There were a number of Conservatives and the odd Liberal present. They were having problems with the federal Government and were recognizing that nothing has changed. In many aspects—

Mr. Shields: Did you join?

Mr. de Jong: No, I did not join. In many ways, I disagreed with what that Party stands for, but I certainly saw that Conservatives from British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba feel a deep-seated frustration with this Conservative Government. Those Conservatives believe that this Government has not delivered, and on that I agree with them.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I also want to take this opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-113, introduced on the initiative of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification.

What is important here, Mr. Speaker, is that we are now at the third reading stage of this Bill. We have spent five or six hours on third reading, and our colleagues in the New Democratic Party, who have been demanding equitable regional development across Canada, are filibustering to prevent us from adopting this Bill.

These are the same Members who believed in regional equality and nevertheless voted against Bill C-22, which would enable the pharmaceutical industry to expand in the Montreal region and across Canada.

These are the same Members, of the same Party, who voted against the sale of Canadair to Bombardier which would bring more technology and more development to Quebec.

So in fact, the New Democratic Party's aim is not to promote equitable regional development programs but to systematically prevent this Government from creating such programs.

[English]

Therefore, I move:

> That the House continue to sit through the lunch hour for the purpose of continuing consideration of Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish a Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will those Hon. Member who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Fewer than 15 Members having risen, the motion is adopted.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my hon. friend and to the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) before him. I notice that we have debated the Bill on western diversification for about five hours. I am curious that members of the Government would consider a five hour debate to be excessive, too much, a filibuster, wrong-headed and inappropriate. I wonder if Canadians who are watching us on their television sets and from the gallery would consider five hours of debate on a major western economic initiative to be an excessive amount of debate.

I want to remind my hon. friend opposite that a democracy is not the most efficient system of government. The most efficient system of government is that which is found in totalitarian regimes and military dictatorships where they do not have to bother with Parliament and where members of the Government do not have to bother with members of the Opposition. Government members can ignore the people of Canada and their concerns. That is the most efficient system of government, but we do not have that system in Canada.

The Conservatives are attempting in devious ways to turn this into a totalitarian form of government where there is no debate in the House of Commons. My hon. friend was not here at that time, so I certainly do not hold him responsible for the behaviour of his colleagues before him, but I remember the day in this House when the Members of Parliament, duly elected by the people of Canada, were presented with the spectacle of a whole group of Conservative Members of Parliament rushing the Speaker's chair, brandishing their fists in his face and saying that they would bring Parliament to its knees.

I remember that day. I must say that it was one of the saddest days of my life. I was saddened to think that people who were elected to represent their views had decided that it was appropriate to stop Parliament from functioning. Day after day after day, the bells rang. Parliament was muzzled. The heavy jackboots of the Conservative Party had been brought down on the necks of parliamentarians. There was no opportunity to debate, there was no opportunity to ask questions.

I know that this is a touchy issue for some Conservative Members, and I recognize that most Members here were not there at that time, but that is the kind of Government we are now beginning to see take form. After five hours of debate on third reading of the Western Diversification Bill, Members are saying that this is excessive, that Members of Parliament should not debate this for more than a few minutes.

There are 282 Members of Parliament here. Not all Members of Parliament will speak on a piece of legislation, but there are four or five Members from the New Democratic Party, four or five Members from the Liberal Party and four or five Members from the Conservative Party who want to express their views. However, the Government is saying that it will muzzle those Members. It does not want to hear the views of those who represent the people of Canada.

I just want to say that every time the Government attempts to muzzle Parliament, to choke off the voice of the people, we are going to remind people of what is going on. That is what is going on now. The Government is trying to bring to a premature end the thoughtful, positive debate on the Western Diversification Fund. I want to say very clearly that we support the Bill. We are going to vote in favour of it. We will probably vote unanimously in favour of the initiative because we think at least the principle is a good one. However, we have many concerns which have been raised by my hon. colleagues such as whether the best way to spend taxpayers' money through this fund is by giving $9.5 million to one of the largest pulp and paper consortiums in the world. Would it not go ahead without that money? Other smaller businesses are being denied funds. Those are the questions we want to pose at the close of this debate.

Again, I want to remind the people of Canada that we have seen some dictatorial tactics and antics by the Conservative Party in the past and we are seeing them again. They have a complete disregard for what democracy is. They have a complete disregard for the traditions of Parliament. We will always oppose dictatorial practices by the Conservative Government whenever and wherever they take place.

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond briefly to what was said by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), and especially his comments on democracy. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we did. We moved to extend the debate for another hour so that more Members would be able to speak to the Bill, and then the spokesman for the New Democratic Party rose, together with the Liberal Whip, to vote against the motion. They rose to object to an extension of this debate that would allow Members to speak to this important Bill. And then they have the nerve to accuse the Progressive Conservative Government of violating the principles of our democratic system in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I heard another Member of the New Democratic Party . . .

An Hon. Member: The socialists!

Mr. Grisé: . . . the socialists, of course. The Hon. Member said that as usual, the federal Government was questioning the capability of public servants to manage a department if they did not happen to be on the Hill or in the Ottawa region. I think it is unconscionable that anyone should make that kind of judgment regarding the federal Public Service.

[English]

I want to respond to the Hon. Member when he tells people sitting in front of their television sets that he is talking about what is important, that is democracy. I tell him and all the NDP Members that what is important for the people of Canada, particularly the people of western Canada sitting in front of their TV sets right now, is that this Government approved the Bill as soon as possible so the Minister responsible can apply the new policies and help western farmers and the western business community. That is what is important and that is what democracy is all about.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about democracy. I want to remind him once again that I have been in this House almost 20 years and this is one of the more important debates we have had. It seems to me very strange that the Conservative Party is complaining about this debate going on too long when it has lasted about five and a half or six hours. That is absolutely incredible for a debate about a major economic initiative affecting an important region like western Canada. I have seen many debates over many issues much smaller and much less relevant than this go on for days in the House of Commons without complaint by the Conservative Party. Why would they complain about five or six hours debating western issues? The west is very important to this country.

Another point I want to make is that the Parliamentary Secretary was waxing eloquent about an extra three or four hours of debate. If he is so concerned about that, why did the Government take months and months to introduce the Bill? The agency was announced in August of 1987 and here we are now nine months later only just at third reading. Why did the Bill not come forward back in September for second reading, then into committee hearings, and third reading before Christmas? I do not know why the Hon. Member is complaining because we want to spend a few extra hours debating very important western initiatives.

[Translation]

It is important, not just for people in Western Canada but for all Canadians across this country to have a debate on matters that are of vital importance to the West, because we now make up 30 per cent of the population of this country, and I would like to have several days' debate on the major economic issues in our region.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, the socialists are talking about democracy and about the Government muzzling Hon. Members. We are starting on hour six of this debate on third reading, Mr. Speaker, and we have just moved a motion to continue sitting during the lunch hour, and the NDP voted against the motion.

Mr. Nystrom: I did not!

Mr. Grisé: We had the debate on second reading, Mr. Speaker. That debate is finished, and we did not muzzle anyone. There were no Members of the socialist party left to speak to the Bill.

After second reading, the Bill was referred to a legislative committee, and no amendments were introduced by the New Democratic Party.

We have now reached the third reading stage, and the most important thing now, Mr. Speaker, is to have this Bill adopted, and while it is particularly important to Canadians in Western Canada, it is also important for regional equality. Whenever a Bill is introduced, the socialists are always against it. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that they voted against Bill C-22, the bill on drug patents. They also voted against the Bill to sell Canadair to Bombardier. They voted against all these Bills, while claiming they were in favour of regional equality in Canada. Mr. Speaker, this does not make sense because, and I would like to conclude at this point, the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party have had every opportunity to discuss this Bill on second reading and in committee.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter this debate on western diversification by telling my hon. friend opposite that he makes the point that what is important is that we get going on the western development initiative and pass this Bill quickly. Let me point out to him as a Member from western Canada, which I have been for nine years now, that what we need is to do the job properly. We need to get on with diversification, but we have to do it properly. We have had too many failures in the past and western Canadians know that.

I will give him an example. One of the policies that got Peter Lougheed, the former Premier of Alberta, elected in the early 1970s was that he was for diversification of the Alberta economy. He was going to use the oil and gas revenues of Alberta to diversify that economy. Indeed, I believe the Heritage Fund was developed to put some of that money aside for a rainy day and also to help diversify the Alberta economy. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has been speaking in this debate. He is from the oil sands area of northern Alberta. He knows about the problems of bankruptcy and economic difficulties that developed when the oil industry went into a downturn.

We have the same old pattern of boom and bust in Alberta, even after the efforts of diversification of the Lougheed Government provincially. We have the same situation in Saskatchewan, in spite of great struggles in the past by Governments on both the left and the right. NDP Governments used Crown corporations for public policy purposes to try to diversify and develop the potash industry and so on. Governments to the right used different methods of bringing in foreign capital and so on as they saw fit to develop that economy. Yet, what happens when world wheat prices go down? Saskatchewan farmers and other farmers in western Canada suffer.

A few minutes ago a government Member asked whether the $5 billion that the Government gave to the wheat farmers was not aid to western Canada, whether that will not make the people happy. It was aid to western Canada but it was bail-out aid. It was not to diversify the economy but, in fact, to save some farmers in western Canada from almost certain bankruptcy. That bail-out was necessitated by the fact that the western economies are still not diversified and are still in a boom and bust situation.

The forest industry in my own Province of British Columbia is another example. When they are building houses in the United States, when that market is active, our industry is booming. When that goes down our industry is in a bust situation, people are laid off, and we have a stagnant economy in British Columbia.

It is the same in mining and in fisheries in the Province of British Columbia. Western Canada exports these resource products, often in raw form. A wonderful example of the lack of diversification is that the Province of British Columbia exports raw logs to Japan where they are cut up into lumber. A country with that kind of economy will always be subject to boom and bust.

There is a great feeling in western Canada that we must have diversification. However, we do not want phoney diversification. We know that it will not be easy. I will give you another example. I live in Vancouver. The Vancouver airport is in a suburb of Vancouver called Richmond from where you take the bridge to Vancouver. Between the airport bridge, the Oak Street bridge, and the Knight Street bridge there is a store called Ikea. It is a Swedish store to which young families go to buy wooden furniture. The furniture is fairly cheap and you assemble it yourself. It is very popular and beautifully designed.

Outside that store you can smell the Canadian wood. You can smell the log booms in the Fraser River and the odour of the mills near the Fraser River which are cutting up Canadian lumber. They either export the raw logs or cut up the lumber and export it. However, the young Canadian family goes into the store and buys Swedish-manufactured goods made from Swedish lumber. That is an incredible example of the lack of diversification of an economy in western Canada.

The same situation exists in Alberta with oil and gas, although there have been attempts to diversify in terms of having a petrochemical industry by using the cheap resources like the natural gas to manufacture different products from oil and gas rather than just exporting it south of the border. The same situation exists in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. That is why we want to take time to debate how good this diversification is. People are very suspicious about it.

I particularly enjoyed the speech of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) who said that he had spent some time—and I give him credit for this because it is not easy for a New Democrat—listening to the right wing movement in western Canada, the Reform Party. That Party is not challenging the New Democratic Party in western Canada. It will challenge the Conservative base in western Canada because it is a right-wing Conservative group. As my colleague from Regina pointed out, that group is very alienated from the Conservative Party. That group thought that with the Trudeau Government gone, which western Canada perceived had given it the finger, and with a new, fresh wind of conservatism blowing in from western Canada, there would be a change. They feel, however, that there has not been a change.

We must ask ourselves why there has not been a change. It is partly because the Conservative Government has not been listening to western Canada. It is because it is inherent in the nature of this House of Commons and where the population is located in Canada that Québec and Ontario will control this House of Commons and in fact control Canada. The genius in governing in Canada is that a federal Government must try to balance all the different regional concerns and deal with all the different regional interests.

One of the criticisms of former Prime Minister Trudeau was that while he did work amazingly in Quebec, while he fought the separatists in Québec and showed a great understanding of Quebec and was rewarded with 74 out of 75 seats there, he sort of wrote off western Canada. That was the failure of the Trudeau years.

The reason there is alienation in western Canada is because of some of the actions of the Trudeau Government and also because of the failure to have diversification in western Canada, and I am not blaming any particular Party or group of people for that. That is why we must take some time to debate this Bill.

I do not want to get into a shouting match with the Government. I have tried to take a higher road on western diversification. However, the Government does have 211 Members, it does control the legislative timetable of this House. It must know that it has put so many Bills before the House and mismanaged the time of the House so that everything is now inevitably crowded into the last part of the four year legislative session. That is why we want to take some time to debate the Bill.

We also have some concerns with the Bill. I have a report from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which is not a support group for the New Democratic Party. If anything, this group is more conservative, populist if you like. That does not mean that we in the New Democratic Party cannot work with them or do not listen to them. Indeed we do and they often have some very interesting things to say.

In the executive summary of the report which they prepared for the Minister responsible for western diversification, they say that their enthusiasm has been tempered toward the initiatives that the Government is bringing forward on western diversification by growing concern that the western diversification initiative is degenerating into a political slush fund to support vulnerable constituencies, lure in big business, or bail out obsolete industries in hopes of gaining short-term political profile. That is the way the Liberal Government of Pierre Trudeau treated western Canada. They say that it could be a bureaucratic slush fund available for other line Departments and Ministers to raid in lieu of other national programs that should have their fair share spent in the West. They state that it could be a narrow and highly centralized approach to diversification, with continued emphasis on megaprojects or traditional resource extraction and development.

The Federation of Independent Business shows some wisdom in questioning the megaprojects because the traditional panacea for development in western Canada that has been offered by western and national politicians has been the great megaprojects like the Mackenzie Valley Pipeline, tarsands development and other projects like the coal project in northern British Columbia. These megaprojects provided lots of money and short-term jobs, but not much diversification.

The former Premier of British Columbia, Dave Barrett, said it very well when he talked about the development of Northeast Coal in British Columbia. Now, it is almost being sold at subsidized prices to the Japanese. He said, referring to the Japanese: "They got the coal and we got the hole".

Finally, the Federation of Independent Business states that this could be a confusing black box lacking clear criteria or policy direction and on a collision course with a myriad of client groups which are inevitably going to see thousands of applications rejected and thousands of hopes dashed.

That is a searing criticism, but to be fair, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business goes on to suggest ways of dealing with this and letting diversification really work in western Canada.

It is important that this debate continue so that we may air these concerns. Canada has always been an exporter of raw goods. Harold Innis, a great historian and economist, spoke about Canada as a colony that served as a traditional resource base for the French, the British, and now the Americans. It is difficult to change that tradition. Indeed, that is a cause for concern in western Canada about the so-called free trade deal.

We already have free trade in western Canada. The Mulroney-Reagan trade deal is not offering us very much more in western Canada. In spite of having free trade, we have seen the Americans impose tariffs on our shakes and shingles, impose countervailing duties on our lumber, put more restrictions on our fish exports and threaten our gas and potash exports. The free trade deal will not change that.

It does not guarantee secure access for western Canadian goods to American markets, which is what we were really seeking. The American Congress can still take countervailing actions and, in return, we gave up control of our energy industry. We agreed to share our oil and gas with the United States on a non-discriminatory basis. This means that we cannot help a plant or mill in the West diversify by allowing cheaper energy prices than we charge the Americans because it would break the free trade deal. We would be giving Canadians a better deal with Canadian resources than we would be giving the Americans.

That is the flaw in the free trade deal, and that is why so-called western diversification will not work. It cannot work if the resources of the nation are not available to encourage diversification of industries in the regions of Canada. Western Canadians are concerned about the so-called free trade deal because it does not provide the federal Government with that authority. In our opinion, the $1.2 billion over five years promised by the Government comes from existing programs and arrangements. It is essentially playing a shell game and not using new money.

What are the long-term chances for diversification? I want to refer to a seminar of the Academy of Sciences from Sweden and Canada. I want to conclude by referring to the comments of the President of the Royal Swedish Academy of Engineering Sciences. He said that knowledge is the fundamental element of competitiveness. Their recommendations include an increase in the appropriations to education and research, improved salaries for teachers in technical colleges and universities, improved money for fundamental research. That is being cut back in western Canada by the Vander Zalms and the Gettys.

The President of the Royal Swedish Academy went on to say that the Government plays an important role as a purchaser of complex technical systems for energy supply, telecommunications, transportation and defence. He concluded by saying: "The sometimes painful restructuring of parts of the manufacturing industry necessary in order to cope with major changes in the international market have most often been supported not only by the government but also by the labour unions".

He went on to say: "In principle, the labour unions accept that changes must occur in vulnerable industrial sectors and will take an active part in the restructuring process or at least not raise obstacles". He said: "We cannot expect to be on top everywhere because it is simply too expensive. What we have to do is identify a few centres of excellence which we should support wholeheartedly". He says that we must be open-minded and prepared to adapt to change.

I believe that is the way to the future both in the world and in western Canada. There should be an emphasis on science and research, and on the education of our young people so that they will have these skills. We should encourage labour and business to work together, and should define centres of excellence to study the future for the fish sector, forest sector and mining sector. These centres of excellence could develop mining and oil and gas technology, rather than concentrate on the export of raw resources. That is the key to diversification in western Canada. That is why we want to debate this Bill and will study closely whether this will simply be a slush fund or another failed attempt at western diversification. I hope that we can elect a New Democrat Government so that we can make a real attempt at western diversification. Give us a chance and we will diversify western Canada.

• (1300)

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, I certainly enjoyed the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), particularly the point he made in his summation of the need for a joint co-operative approach, an approach which involves labour, business and the public sector on municipal, provincial and federal levels. It is a co-operative approach that is needed to get all the factors and elements involved co-ordinated and focused on several areas that need development where we can become winners regionally, nationally and internationally. The Member made the point that the Vander Zalms, the Gettys and the Devines in western Canada have done a lot to put elements against each other, particularly capital and labour, as opposed to bringing them together in a co-operative way. I think he also made the point that only through a joint co-operative approach can we begin to tackle the problems of the 21st century, not just in western Canada but as a nation as a whole. It is important to have a joint co-operative approach.

The question I would like to ask concerns energy and the trade agreement negotiated between our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States. I remember when the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau first introduced his constitutional changes. There were many people in western Canada, myself included, who were quite concerned that the constitutional changes were really an attempt by the central Government to grab control of the resources of western Canada.

Prior to that, in the 1970s, Mr. Blakeney, then Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan, had to fight hard with the Hon. Otto Lang and the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau because of an attempt by the federal Government to grab control of the marketing and developing of our potash. Yet it seems to me that in this deal negotiated between our Prime Minister and the President of the United States, not only the provinces but the federal Government, the country as a whole, will lose all ability to plan and develop our gas and oil resources, as well as our other natural resources, including potash. How these resources get developed, the rate at which they are developed, the prices we can charge, and how much we can export, are all given away in this agreement.

For a long time we in western Canada thought we could use our resources, such as our oil and gas, to overcome our disadvantages. The disadvantages are that we are far from major centres of population, so we have the extra expense of transporting. We generally have harsh winters so we have the extra expense of heating plants and equipment which our competitors south of the border in states like Alabama, Nevada and Arizona do not have. We have always attempted to use our advantages to offset our disadvantages, but in this trade agreement all of our advantages are taken away from us. We cannot use the advantages we have, the abundance of energy, for example, to overcome our disadvantages. What people like Mr. Blakeney and Mr. Lougheed fought for, we now lose.

I cannot understand the Conservatives from western Canada here in Parliament who support this agreement. I wonder if my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, (Mr. Waddell) can comment on that observation?

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, that is a very important observation, especially when the Member says we should use our resources in western Canada, which we have in abundance, to overcome the disadvantages we have, such as our distance from markets and so on. Before I answer, I would like to point out something the Hon. Member said earlier about the co-operative approach. A lot of people in eastern Canada, when they look at the West, think it is the kind of Alberta hard-rock Conservatism which is western Canada. There are two elements of western Canada, two traditions. There is the kind of buccaneer free enterprising system, but there is also the co-operative tradition in western Canada.

When Tommy Douglas went into Saskatchewan, there was a drought and a depression. The place was a disaster. They rolled up their sleeves and worked together in a co-operative approach with Government and private enterprise. Western Canada is now the largest exporter of minerals in Canada, the largest exporter of lumber in the world, mainly through my Province of British Columbia, and the second largest exporter of wheat in the world, mainly through the efforts of the prairies. That was quite a job we did in western Canada since those years of the Depression.

We have to now look to the future. The Hon. Member made reference to oil. A lot of Conservatives do not want to see the national energy policy ever again, so they put it in the free trade deal that that cannot happen again. So Ottawa will not be able to take any of these measures to have any government control over energy. I find that incredibly short-sighted. Who is going to control energy? We are told the free market. One has to be a fool to believe that the free market controls world energy prices. They are controlled by OPEC, the middle eastern nations, or the seven sisters, the big oil companies, or a combination of both. Even the most right wing commentator in the United States will tell you that. Instead of allowing Ottawa to have some say in the control over the resource, they are going to let Saudi Arabia, New York or Washington have control over our energy resources. That is incredibly naive.

When I saw some of the evidence before the free trade committee, I could not believe it. As the Member opposite knows, I am not advocating total Ottawa control over the resource. I had the privilege, together with my Leader, to bring in a constitutional amendment that was accepted by the Trudeau Government and the country.

Mr. Shields: Was that the ownership, property rights?

Mr. Waddell: No, it was the ownership of energy resources in the province. The Member from Regina said that what is really important is that we have these energy resources in western Canada and we have to use them to diversify our economy. We should not give them away either totally to the federal Government or to the Americans or to the Saudi Arabians. We should not give that control away. That is the flaw in the free trade deal.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask if this is relevant to the western diversification Bill before the House. We have heard this rhetoric before and we will hear it again, but I would like to suggest that he get back to the Bill at hand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Cossitt): The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is responding to a question and comment as a result of debate he has given previously.

Mr. Waddell: I do not want to monopolize the time if Hon. Members want to ask questions. Of course, I am responding to the Bill. The Hon. Member knows that. You must have some control if you want to diversify. Who is going to have the control—Ottawa, the West, a combination of both, or the Americans? You figure it out.

Mr. Shields: The owners of the resource, like Alberta, like Saskatchewan, like British Columbia. You don't like that, do you?

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the Hon. Member has another question.

Mr. Shields: I won't ask him anymore.

• (1310)

Mr. Greenaway: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member probably does not know, and it is not his fault, but last night in Vancouver there was a program announced by the Western Diversification Office. It has contributed $171,000 to COFI and the IWA. The plan is to send IWA members to Europe, to Asia and to the United States to look at the lumber markets there and to come back to report what they have seen to the IWA workers right across the province.

The Hon. Member was talking a few moments ago about co-operation and diversification. I thought that he might like to hear something positive. It was announced last night and he probably did not have a chance to see the press release. It is a program involving $171,000, a co-operative effort between COFI and the IWA. It is a bench-mark, a very positive initiative. I am pleased about it. I think everybody is happy with it. It should bring some real benefits to the B.C. industry.

Mr. Waddell: I could not agree more with the Hon. Member. I am very pleased to hear that. That is a very good example of co-operation. We want to hang together, both in business and in labour in western Canada, or we will hang separately. We are in competition with the whole Asia Pacific, the fastest growing economy in the world. That is why I quoted some of the Swedish engineers. I think they have got their thing together in terms of specializing in co-operation and looking into education, science and research. That is the future. I am pleased to hear that.

I thought my speech was quite positive. I am glad to end on a positive note.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate, or is the House ready for the question? On debate, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to once again participate in the debate on the Bill that, hopefully, will be the beginning of diversifying the western economy. As a westerner I want to say that we have waited a long time for an initiative that would be a major effort—

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I may be mistaken but I would have thought that the Hon. Member had spoken in debate at third reading and therefore cannot speak again. Perhaps the Table could check.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Hon. Member did speak at third reading but did not speak on the motion which is now before the House, that the question be now put. Therefore the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap may speak, of course.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very happy to participate in the debate today on the western diversification initiative. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this is my second speech that I have given on this important issue. As far as I am concerned in terms of diversifying the western economy I would like to make many, many more speeches on ways and means of enhancing the economy of western Canada and participating in any initiative that would result in expanded economic activity.

I wish to speak today on behalf of a group within our western communities for whom I have a great deal of respect. I refer to the small and medium-size business sector represented by men and women who are the engines of growth in our western economy. It is interesting to recognize that there are 20,000 small businesses in western Canada that are represented by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. This is a business organization that is the largest small and medium-size business organization in Canada, with membership across the country. It represents the voice in a formal way of small business, along with its sister organization, the Canadian Organization of Small Business.

It has provided us with some interesting analyses of the recent intiative taken by the Government. Just to set the record straight right at the beginning, I want to indicate where it stands. This is in no way to criticize what the Government is attempting to do, at least in principle. Mr. John Bulloch, who is the spokesperson for the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, called the western diversification initiative a political slush fund. I hope it does not become that. I know that that is a fear that others have indicated. I hope that the Govenrment does not use it as a political slush fund, to paraphrase the words of John Bulloch, to support vulnerable constituencies, lure in big business or bail out obsolete industries in hopes of gaining short-term political profile, presumably for the local Member of Parliament. I hope that that is not true.

The organization raises another concern. It is the concern that this initiative might be a bureaucratic slush fund available for other line Departments and Ministries to raid in lieu of other national programs that should have their fair share spent in the West.

There is some good reason for this concern. I do not have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the very important initiative that was taken some months ago in the creation of South Moresby Park. It is pristine, world renowned parkland on the Queen Charlotte Islands which was set aside for a national park. That cost money, of course. It cost $75 million to the federal Government. From where did it get its money? Did it get its money from the Parks Canada envelope? No. Did it get its money from the other programs from which parks are normally purchased? No. It took the money out of the Western Diversification Fund.

Anybody in government would say that if we have budgets for parks and we have western diversification funds, the two are quite separate. We also saw that the Government wanted to put some money into salmonoid enhancement in British Columbia. Did it take the money from the fisheries envelope? No. Did it take its money from various budgets within the fisheries ministry? No. It took the money out of the Western Diversification Fund.

We cannot go on like this. We cannot go on and use western diversification funds for all the work that regular government Departments should be funding. If that is what the fund is used for, then it is a scam. It is misleading to call it a western diversification fund for that reason.

There is another reason that I am concerned about because one of the first drains on the fund was the Daishowa pulp mill to be built in northern Alberta. This pulp and paper consortium is one of the largest in the world. First, it received $150,000 from the Western Diversification Office to do a feasibility study. I really wonder if one of the largest pulp and paper consortiums in the world needs to dip into the western development fund in order to conduct a feasibility study. It has the world's capital markets at its disposal. Does it really need to use this precious western diversification fund?

Also, in early 1988 the Western Diversification Office announced that it would give $9.5 million to this pulp mill. Does it really need this kind of money? Does this really diversify the economy of western Canada?

These are questions that many of us are asking. We ask them in a certain context. I am personally aware of a number of small and medium-sized businesses in British Columbia that have made modest requests to the Western Diversification Office. The one that springs first to mind is a request by the Thompson Nicola Manufacturers Association which requested $40,000 to enable it to provide an infrastructure to assist the 500 manufacturers in the Kamloops region of British Columbia. Was it successful in obtaining $40,000? I am afraid to say that it was not.

I am also aware of a whole list of small businesses that have made requests for $5,000, $25,000, $35,000 and $37,000. All those requests were rejected. One gets somewhat cynical and frustrated when one considers that an international pulp consortium receives $9.5 million but a small manufacturer in central British Columbia cannot even receive $37,000.

I could go on in terms of a number of the questions raised. I do want to say that the intent of this is to diversify the economy of western Canada and to assist those entrepreneurs who are interested in expanding into new areas beyond the resource-based economy of western Canada. That is not to say that we do not wish to assist in developing the resource-based economy, but this is to diversify.

I notice with interest that there have been moneys from the Western Diversification Office for soil erosion studies. Those studies will not do much to diversify the economy of western Canada. There is also money for assistance in marketing potash. We do not say that that is not a good idea, but will marketing more potash diversify the economy of Saskatchewan? I suppose one could find some indirect way to justify that, but what are the terms of reference of this particular office?

On this issue, I have to return to our friends in the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They point out that one of the major problems of the Western Diversification Office is that it lacks a business plan. No one is certain what the framework is for its operation; no one is quite certain of what type of projects will be supported. Therefore, it has led the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and others to believe that perhaps it is used as a slush fund. If one has the right political connections, or is a large multinational, one may receive some money. If one has some good friends in the office, or good political contacts, some financing can be arranged for a business. That is not what we need in western Canada, and I would like to think that this is not the manner in which the Western Diversification Office will operate.

I wish to return to the point I made earlier regarding those people who are the engines of growth in western Canada and who make the economy work, that is, the small and medium sized businesses. When one studies the role played by small and medium-sized business in western Canada, their successes and contributions are quite amazing.

In the West the number of small businesses is growing expediently as the resource sector becomes less secure, experiences slower growth, and creates fewer jobs. The Economic Council of Canada recently reported that three-quarters of all the new jobs over the last 20 years have emerged out of the service sector, which in turn is dominated by small business.

It is a little known fact that over the 54 year span from 1926 to 1980 manufacturing output per capita in Ontario and Quebec was actually outstripped by per capita growth in manufacturing in western Canada. That is absolutely astonishing. During the period from 1978 to 1984, including the boom by the large resource industries in the late 1970s and early 1980s, businesses with less than 20 employees were responsible for 80 per cent of all net job creation in western Canada. In 1985, the most recent period for which information is available, this strong performance continued. The job growth in small firms, meaning less than 20 employees, was 64 per cent of the total new jobs in Manitoba, 66 per cent in Alberta, 76 per cent in Saskatchewan, and 100 per cent in British Columbia. This corresponds with the much smaller contributions by large industry. For example, in 1985 in British Columbia there was a 6.6 net loss of jobs by big businesses compared to the previous year.

These impressive economic achievements are driven by the entrepreneurial spirit for flexibility and change. Researchers have noted that small firms with less than 20 employees take 27 per cent less time to complete the full research and development cycle from concept to market-place. They create two and a half times as many innovations per employee.

Surveys prepared by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has found that in typical three year cycles, three out of ten of their members changed their clientele and markets, and one out of every four businesses make major changes in their methods of production, promotion, and distribution.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the small business sector is able to dodge and weave, to take advantage of market opportunities, and to meet market niches in a rapid and creative manner. Studies have indicated that half the businesses in western Canada were actively searching for new technologies to improve the competitiveness of their business on a regular basis. In other words, at any point in time half the businesses in western Canada are involved in new initiatives to search for appropriate technologies and to find ways and means of becoming more competitive in the market-place.

These statistics clearly indicate that small business owners are the unsung heroes of western Canada, measured in terms of job creation, economic stability, competitiveness, and innovation. Yet for years this crucial sector has been lost in the shadows of public policy as one Government after another has devoted its attention to funding megaprojects and providing big businesses with major grants. Although the grass roots has been patient, frustration has mounted with the traditional regional development approach. I do not think that there has been anything more frustrating than seeing year after year the support that successive federal Governments have given to large multinationals that have the ability to easily obtain capital on international money markets. Yet the struggling small business or the struggling entrepreneur who is attempting to develop a regionally sensitive business for either the domestic or international market is largely by-passed.

That is why on August 7, 1987 many of us from western Canada viewed the establishment of the Western Diversification Office as a fresh start. I must say that the initial support that many of us had for the principle is rapidly turning into confusion due to the absence of any clear guidelines or a business plan for the management of the $1.2 billion over the next five year period.

Always in the back of the minds of those of us who are not Liberals is the great Western Development Fund. That fund originally started at $4 billion, it eventually fell to $2 billion and then evaporated. One of the major jokes circulating at the time was about this evaporating Western Development Fund that the Liberals brought in, but no one ever saw or heard about other than the original announcement by the then Minister of Finance.

When one looks at the expenditures to date coming out of the Western Diversification Office, the best way to describe them is sporadic. Another way to describe them would be relatively limited. No clear pattern has emerged from these early actions. While many groups have criticized this lack of policy direction and apparent inertia, there does appear to be a critical window of opportunity now to establish policy for the Western Diversification Office at this embryonic stage. I would like to take a few moments to do just that. While we are determining the terms of reference and establishing a clear mandate for the Western Diversification Office, perhaps I could make some suggestions as to what might be considered.

First, in each year in western Canada literally of tens of thousands of people start new businesses or expand existing firms. This is the heart of diversification; opportunities identified, resources gathered, and market niches established. The financial resources of the Western Diversification Office ought to be directed, in large part, to reinforcing this entrepreneurial activity by small businesses in order to be an efficient catalyst to broad sustainable market driven change.

When one looks at the various options available, one of the things we have to recognize is that the major problem faced by western entrepreneurs is having access to proper financing. If the Western Diversification Office can help the financing needs of many western Canadian small and medium-sized businesses, it will have made a major contribution to diversifying the western economy. Small business is financed by personal capital, reinvested earnings, debt financing, and equity investments. Bank lending practices, government taxes and programs, under-capitalization, and inadequate management preparation all combine to put a financial strait-jacket on the entrepreneurs within every western community. Measures that leverage greater access for small business through established private sector markets have greater credibility and business respect.

The IFIB brief went on to point out that the relationship between the financial institution and the entrepreneur has changed substantially; that various business organizations have documented problems, including tight lending policies that are insensitive to individual circumstances, extreme collateral/security requirements, high cash-flow requirements, the arbitrary alteration of lending and administration practices, and the inadequate expertise of lending officials.

It goes on to state, however, that, regardless of these complaints, bank financing is the predominant element in local economic development and must be addressed that government initiatives, whether through the Small Business Loans Act, or interest shielding in Saskatchewan, or the Alberta Term Assistance Plan, "have met mixed success, but give some indication of how it can be better handled".

It points out that the Western Economic Diversification Office should undertake to have the Business Development Loans Program under the Small Business Loans Act revised and refinanced "to better encourage financing of small business entrepreneurs by financial institutions".

We might consider putting in place a regime whereby guarantees could only be available on loans made at interest rates that reflect significant risk, in other words loans made at prime plus one and one-half per cent. As well, interest rates should not be kept at a level that has the effect of interest shielding. Combining efforts to leverage risk financing with interest shielding will discourage banks from considering risk loans and encourage use of the guarantees in respect of lower-risk loans that do not require additional incentives. The single purpose of the guarantee provision must be to maximize the leveraging of these resources to higher risk initiatives, initiatives that would otherwise not proceed. The interest rate charged by the lender should be allowed to reflect that risk.

The Federation makes the point that loan guarantees should also apply to working capital, pointing out that the growth potential "is increasing in sectors where physical capital requirements are much less than working capital requirements". It goes on to state that the Alberta Term Assistance Plan "offers a good example where loans for working capital were leveraged with partial guarantees", with 35 per cent of the loan being government guaranteed, to recognize the lesser collateral value of the assets involved.

There is a great deal more to suggest in respect of the Western Diversification Office, a great deal more that should be done. In closing, I simply want to say that, while we intend to support this initiative in principle, we do hope that it does not turn into a slush fund, whether political or bureaucratic, and that it really does lead to major gains in diversifying the economy of western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reimer): The Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) on questions or comments.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the speech of the Hon. Member, and it is the same one that he gave the other day.

Is the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) aware that the Western Diversification office in British Columbia is willing to send out officials from that Office to conduct one day seminars on western economic diversification? It may be that the Hon. Member would be interested in arranging for such a seminar to be held in Kamloops.

I had occasion to visit the Thompson Nicola Valley Manufacturers Trade Fair held in Kamloops last fall, and I can readily agree that it is a good organization. I am at a loss as to why the Western Diversification Office has not funded that organization.

I am wondering what the Hon. Member has done to bring about a positive decision on funding. Has he visited the Western Diversification Office in Vancouver to lobby on behalf of that organization; has he talked to the various Ministers involved?

I stand ready to offer any assistance I can provide in terms of getting funding for that organization. Certainly, it is a worth-while organization and should be one which is representative of what is required by the WDO.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, let me first point out to the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) that the speech I made yesterday outlined all of the areas where the federal Government has failed in terms of delivering a fair deal to western Canada. In that speech, I was specific, citing Supply and Service contracts, CIDA contracts, Regional Development grants, Employment and Immigration programs, and so forth. Being of the view that the Hon. Member opposite had heard enough of that, I had no desire to repeat it today.

The short answer to his first question is that, yes, I am aware of the opportunity to introduce people to the Western Diversification Office and what that office can do.

I, too, share the concern that the request for funding by the Thompson Nickel Manufacturers Association was rejected. I listened with interest when he asked whether I had talked to the Minister, whether I had talked to the Western Diversification Office. While I did in fact get involved, I would like to think that political intervention would not be necessary. I should like to think that Members of Parliament need not go to bat for every single initiative.

Mr. Greenaway: Why was the request turned down?

Mr. Riis: The reason given was that there was another community doing something similar. One is left wondering whether that is a criterion. If an initiative is being undertaken in one community, does that mean that it cannot be done in another?

These are some of the questions we need answered. I do not want to cast aspersions on this initiative. It is not my view that it is a bad initiative. My point is that we ought to have clear terms of reference as to what will be funded and what will not. We need some clear direction. I agree with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business that we ought to have a business plan. In trying to get information on the terms of reference, I have been in touch with the offices in Vancouver and Edmonton, as well as with the Minister, but to no avail. What I am told each and every time is that the application should be submitted. Well, do we submit an application for tourism, for soil erosion studies?

When I learned that a study aimed at finding new ways to a market potash had been funded, I wondered how that would assist in diversifying the economy of western Canada. Will the selling of more potash abroad result in a more diversified economy for western Canada? While that may in fact be the case, it is not clear to me how it will come about.

As well, a request for funding for a soil erosion study was approved. While there is no doubt that we need to learn more about soil erosion, one wonders how such a study is going to result in a diversified economy for western Canada. Again, it is not clear.

As Members of Parliament, each of us will go to all reasonable lengths to assist local organizations, local businesses in getting their fair share of a government program; but, if that means that one has to use one's political influence in order to make the program work, that is something I do not want to be a part of.

In making that comment, I am not suggesting that the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin was saying that one has to use political influence in order to obtain financial support through the Western Diversification Office. I believe the principle of western diversification is a good one. It is one that we need to develop and expand upon in the future. I want to be a part of any process that will develop a business plan for western Canada for use by the Western Diversification Office.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reimer): The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), on questions or comments.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to have the opportunity to put some questions to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who quoted extensively from the submission of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. I should point out, however, that that submission was made to the Minister responsible for western diversification prior to Bill C-113 being tabled in the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: Come on, Jack! How can you stand there and not blush!

Mr. Shields: The NDP continually refer to that submission, and certainly the Canadian Federation of Independent Business was expressing concerns that it might have with the legislation, though it did so prior to the legislation being printed and tabled in the House.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap has some question in relation to the funding provided for a potash market study, a soil erosion study, as well as funding for a pulp mill.

In answer, I point out to the Hon. Member—and it is something, I am sure, he already knows—that that funding took place under programs in existence prior to the western economic diversification legislation being tabled. The Minister gathered, under the Department of Western Economic Diversification, those programs that were available to him, and it was under those programs that that funding took place.

• (1340)

The Hon. Member was pointing out that there was no plan in the terms of reference of the Bill. Perhaps he has a copy of the legislation before him. If he does not, I could probably get one of the Pages to bring him a copy so that he could read it with me.

Clause 6 (1) reads:

> 6. The Minister may
> (a) formulate plans and integrate strategies to support development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada;
> (b) oversee the implementation of programs and projects in pursuance of plans and strategies referred to in paragraph (a) and, where those programs and projects will not be undertaken by another Minister or department or agency of the Government of Canada, initiate or implement those programs and projects;
> (c) plan, direct, manage and implement programs and projects intended to contribute directly or indirectly to
> (i) the establishment, development, support and promotion of enterprises, and more particularly, small and medium-sized enterprises, in Western Canada—

It goes on and on to outline the kind of points to which the Hon. Member referred dealing with clear directions. My caviar socialist from Kamloops—Shuswap is only making political hay in an attempt to delay this legislation, and that is all.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have studied the legislation carefully. As a matter of fact, I have almost committed it to memory by now. That is why I am so perplexed about why the request of the Thompson Nicola Manufacturers Association was rejected.

Since my hon. friend from Athabasca has obviously taken such an interest in this fund, perhaps I could ask him as a representative of the Government to look into the matter and to explain why this request for $40,000 was rejected. I am asking these kinds of questions because I know of other initiatives that were funded.

Mr. Shields: Because it doesn't fit any program until this legislation is passed. Is that clear?

Mr. Riis: If he will let me speak, I want to tell my honest friend that in August of 1987, the Government announced that it planned to introduce the Western Diversification Office. This is now 10 months later. Where was the legislation for month after month?

If the Government really did care about doing something for the diversification of the western economy, it could have done something in the previous 10 months. I do not want to sit here and take flack from an individual who says that we are holding up the legislation. I have said that we support the legislation.

The Government sat on its hands for nearly a year after it announced this legislation. If it were serious about the diversification of the western economy, it would have acted on this months ago. To tell the Opposition that to take an extra few hours of debate will somehow hold up the legislation is absolutely silly.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) keeps asking the same question even though it has been answered several times. He claims that a small firm in Edmonton had made an application which had been turned down because this legislation has not been passed. Yet we have put on the record this morning various examples of projects that have been given the okay including that of a big Japanese firm which wants to build a pulp mill. The millions are there for them, but small business is being told that it cannot get any because the legislation has not passed. What sort of nonsense is this? I sure hope that the Hon. Member for Athabasca will stand in his place and for once be honest with the people of Canada and particularly the people of western Canada.

I know that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has been concerned about the high interest rates that exist in Canada, and I know that it affects western Canada detrimentally. Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has told us that we cannot have a lower interest rate because of inflation.

Is it not true that the reason there is a 4 per cent inflation rate in Canada today is because of the sales taxes that the Conservative Government has introduced? If those sales taxes had not been introduced, our effective inflation rate would be around 2 per cent rather than at 4 per cent, is that not correct?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, once again, that was an incredibly thoughtful intervention made by my hon. friend. He is quite right that that the monetary and fiscal policies of the Government of Canada discriminate against western Canada. Yes, the Government's own programs have resulted in interest rate practices which are discriminatory to western Canada.

Perhaps I will use this as an opportunity, if I can get your attention, Mr. Speaker, to ask if there is a quorum in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We do have a quorum.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is encouraging. I was just worried that—

Mr. Shields: That's the only way you can get somebody to listen to that garbage.

Mr. Riis: I thought that some Hon. Members had missed the comments of my hon. friend from Regina. Now that they are back in town—

An Hon. Member: You're wasting the time of the House.

Mr. Riis: I can hardly be wasting the time of the House when the House does not normally sit at this time of day.

As usual, the intervention of my friend from Regina was thoughtful and most perceptive. A lot of westerners are asking why interest rates are so high here and why they have to be so much higher than they are in the United States. The Minister of Finance always reminds us that we must have high interest rates because of the inflation in Ontario and Quebec. Let us think about that just for a moment.

Because of the relatively strong economy in parts of Ontario and small parts of Quebec, the rest of Canada is held at interest rate ransom. The fear of pockets of inflation in some parts of central Canada has resulted in the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) keeping interest rates excessively high. That mitigates against efforts by western, eastern and northern entrepreneurs to develop regional economies.

Quite frankly, it is a policy that discriminates against western Canada. It discriminates against other regions of Canada as well, but today we are talking about western Canada. It discriminates against western Canadian consumers, entrepreneurs, farmers and fishermen.

It is time that the Government recognize that, and, in recognizing it, take extra steps to compensate. If it is to discriminate against western Canada through its interest rate policy, then for goodness sake, it should do something to counter that discriminatory initiative.

The Government has only offered us the Western Diversification Office. We feel that that is inadequate and that it falls far short of the mark. Therefore, my colleagues in the New Democratic Party are trying to put forward positive alternatives, encouraging and thoughtful suggestions, as to how we can better assist those people in western Canada who are very keen on diversifying the economy through expanding into new products and markets.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to say a few more words on this Bill. A government has been asking us for co-operation in passing the Bill, and we have been attempting to give it, though we find ourselves filling in time during the noon hour so that Members from our Party who have been scheduled to speak may be able to do so later on in the debate. Forcing debate at times when it is difficult for Members to be here is rather a queer way of trying to get the co-operation of the Opposition.

There are a number of alterations we would like to see the Government make to this Bill. The Government has not suggested, through the western diversification legislation, the Atlantic opportunities legislation or the northern Ontario diversification legislation that there are a lot of things that need to be done.

• (1350)

Last November a federal-provincial task force made a fairly broad and comprehensive statement suggesting that there are a lot of areas where the western diversification fund could be used to develop the economy of those regions feeling the pinch these days. It was pointed out, for example, that over the past 25 years less than 3 per cent of federal economic expenditures have gone to specific regional development. In other words, past legislation of this kind has not done the job it was supposed to do in diversifying expenditures into various regions. Although the legislation was in place, it did not make the impact it should have. This particular legislation is no more likely to do so. In fact, maybe even less so because one of its main features is advocacy and co-ordination.

We in the West know from experience, as people do in the Atlantic provinces, that there is a need for more than a fledging group of bureaucrats to co-ordinate the work of large line departments such as the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Transport and so on. Those departments have their own well-established bureaucracies and are not about to let a fledging department such as that being set up here to direct them in the expenditure of their money.

If we need proof of that, we just have to look at the so-called increase in procurement in the last couple of years across the country after the Government made a specific promise that it would increase its expenditures in the western provinces. As I am sure you have been told many times in this House, in 1984-85 government expenditures in the West amounted to 13.9 per cent of procurement. Over the years, with a certain amount of pushing by the Government to increase those expenditures, it went down to 11.5 per cent in 1986-87.

Obviously the attempt by the Government to increase expenditures on economic development in those regions will not happen as a result of this legislation, particularly when the money being given to the Department is meagre compared to that spent in the regions by other Departments. Even members of the Conservative caucus who have some concern about the West have indicated that $1.2 billion over five years will not have a major impact upon economic development in the West. The Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) said that it sounds like a lot of money but in the over-all scheme of things it is not that great. A Member from an Edmonton riding, speaking to a downtown Rotary Club said that the announced strategy, though inadequate in its funding, is certainly a modest step in the right direction. A Financial Post editorial suggested that there is no doubt whatever that the potential contribution to Ottawa's western initiative is truly piddling. Some $50 million per year per province will not diversify very much.

It would appear, and this is the kind of change the Government needs to make, that there needs to be a differentiation in policy and programs between the various areas of the country in order to establish a major opportunity for the development of effective and relevant economic structures. We know, for example, because we have brought it up in this House before on many occasions, that in the 1960s and 1970s, when a great deal of money was spent on infrastructure, it had a real impact on regional economic activity. The infrastructure requirements for cities, and rural areas to a certain extent, of the 1980s and 1990s are broader and more necessary than those put in place in the 1960s and 1970s. The services, training and technology required for this kind of development is very closely related to the economic development of an area, so that, even as a rider to this legislation, if the Government brought in a policy of infrastructure development in the cities, particularly those in the regions that are suffering most from a lack of development, there would be a valuable increase in the effectiveness of the program.

As well, the federal-provincial task force suggested that the three Departments concerned with defence, energy, and transportation could, by diversifying their expenditures, create much more economic development than is going to be the case with, as The Financial Post suggested, a piddling investment by the Government to look for some entrepreneurship which will develop future businesses in those areas.

If we look at the areas of defence, transportation, and energy, while some of those contracts should go to areas where there is need for development, more could be done in this area for regional development than this legislation calls for. As I and others have mentioned before, there is a danger in depending upon the development of resources as the basis of regional development. Regional development does not necessarily increase the amount of activity in those areas producing resources. Second, if you have an area with meagre resources to start with and you take any amount of money and say you are going to develop a particular region by processing the resources in that region, you are not going to increase a poor resource base a great deal by spending a lot of money and putting in place the kind of structure that might in some other place be worth while. Consequently, it appears that we should not do that kind of resource development without knowing exactly the direction we are going to take.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will have eight minutes left when this matter is brought up again.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH MORESBY—SALMON RIVER WATERSHED—DRILLING FOR MINERALS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are shocked to learn today that the British Columbia Government has authorized Diamond Resources to begin drilling and exploration for minerals in the Salmon River watershed, a pristine wilderness within the South Moresby National Park reserve currently being negotiated.

• (1400)

The Haida people plan to oppose mineral exploration and drilling in the proposed national park reserve in the same manner they oppose logging on Lyell Island.

Mining exploration and drilling on South Moresby must be stopped. The Haida people need the support of all Canadians who believe that South Moresby is a national treasure worth saving for future generations without encroachments on land and sea.

POLAND—ANNIVERSARY OF 1791 CONSTITUTION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, today Poles throughout the world are observing the anniversary of one of Poland's most important days, the signing and ratification of the Polish Constitution of May 3, 1791. For workers in present-day Poland, May 3 is a day of struggle for the fundamental rights embodied in the Constitution of 1791, freedom of expression and association.

The current strikes and demonstrations serve as a reminder that the Polish nation will not endure the present government suppression or the atrocious economic conditions. Meaningful and serious dialogue must be initiated between the Church, Solidarity, and Government in order to alleviate the deteriorating state of affairs.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Government of Canada to press Polish government officials to relegalize the independent trade union Solidarnosc and to respect the inalienable rights of all Poles contained in the Constitution of 1791.

FORESTS

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, this week, May 1 to 7, we are celebrating National Forestry Week throughout the country on the theme "Forests—Wealth for All."

Need I remind you of the vital role the forest industry plays in Canada and Quebec? Forestry provides jobs for more than 750,000 Canadians and brings in over $37 billion to our economy.

Quebec alone accounts for 14 per cent of world pulp and paper production and 35 per cent of Canadian production. More than 85 per cent of Quebec forest products are exported outside the province and 65 per cent are exported outside the country.

In 1985, forest products accounted for 22 per cent of Quebec exports. In that year, the federal Government invested $150 million in a $300-million subsidiary agreement for forestry development with Quebec.

In my riding of Témiscamingue only, more than $5 million has been allocated under this agreement and 5,000 weeks of work have been provided.

In conclusion, let me pay tribute to all business people and workers in the forest industry, who with their knowledge and ability play a large part in the Canadian economy.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—WITHDRAWAL OF LOBSTER FISHING LICENCES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has finally taken action to reverse his decision to grant four offshore lobster licences in Nova Scotia. Previously he ignored advice, and as a result caused the resignation of all but one member of the Southwest Nova Lobster Advisory Board by granting the licences. He has brought into disrepute the whole process of granting fishing licences in Canada.

It required enormous pressure to get him to change his position. The Maritimes Fishermen's Union, the Eastern Fishermen's Federation, inshore fishermen throughout Nova Scotia, provincial and federal New Democrats, the Nova Scotia Government, and eventually even Conservative Members of Parliament, have all publicly opposed his decision. By his action he has confirmed that his original decision was wrong.

The granting of licences in the fishery confers enormous economic advantage or opportunity. The process should be public, open, subject to agreed upon guidelines and, above all, fair. The Minister failed this test.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CHILD WELFARE AND FAMILY SERVICES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, on April 6 the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) announced his intention to seek cabinet approval of a framework for negotiations on Indian child welfare and family services. He wants cabinet approval by the summer. He is allowing less than one month for consultation with Indian people on this very important issue.

On April 21, here in Ottawa, at a conference organized by the Assembly of First Nations of Indian child welfare directors, participants denounced the Minister's plans. In a statement delivered at the conference by elder Angus Swan from Manitoba, the reasons for the rejection were outlined: the process and principles have been unilaterally developed by the Department; the time frame is unrealistic; existing mechanisms for negotiation are being ignored; and the right of Indian First Nations to make decisions about the lives of their children is not being respected.

The process is an insult to the recognized right of Indian self-government in Canada.

MENTAL HEALTH

FIGHT AGAINST PREJUDICE

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Mental Health Association has been co-ordinating activities to make Canadians aware of this difficult area for 30 years in Canada, in an effort to reduce the stigma associated with mental illness and to encourage the community to accept those who need mental health services.

Having a Mongoloid little sister, Monique, whose birthday was yesterday, I was happy to participate with the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Canadian Mental Health Association in this worth-while effort to draw attention to the importance of all these issues.

The slogan for Mental Health Week this year is, "Mental health, it's up to me!" We therefore ask all Canadians to give their full support to the activities planned by the local offices of the Canadian Mental Health Association in their various communities, and in particular in LaSalle and Ville-Émard, for this Mental Health Week.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PORTUGAL—GROWTH OF DEMOCRACY FOLLOWING OUSTER OF SALAZAR REGIME

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, 14 years ago on April 25 the Portuguese people threw out Salazar's fascist Government by a peaceful revolution. The signal was a certain popular song about farming people. When it was heard on the radio on a certain day, civilians and members of the armed forces, in a co-ordinated plan, simply took over government firmly but without bloodshed.

Human rights were restored, including the rights of women, workers, and trade unions. Democratic elections were set for a constitutional convention, and then for a Legislature and President. Since then the Portuguese people have maintained their freedom and their respect for each other's rights in a vigorous political debate.

The Portuguese, by hard work and quiet mutual respect, have set a heartwarming and noble example to all the world of a people throwing off the burden of tyranny peacefully. I am sure every Member of this House would join me in wishing them well in their democratic future.

ATLANTIC LICENSING APPEAL BOARD—EXPANSION OF MANDATE ADVOCATED

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge that greater authority be conferred upon the Atlantic Licensing Appeal Board. This Board was established as a forum for fishermen to appeal decisions on licensing made over the years by departmental officials. Fishermen in Atlantic Canada welcomed this Board, as did I, Mr. Speaker.

The result has been many equitable decisions. There are, however, a lot of appeals that are not being successful because the Board's mandate is too narrow. I believe the Board must be able to make decisions based on all the circumstances being considered. Presently it seems restricted to narrow principles. The Board reflects a good direction, but its powers and procedures must be expanded.

SMALL AND MEDIUM-SIZED BUSINESSES

TRIBUTE TO ENTREPRENEURS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, this week is Small Business Week. It is a fact that small businesses contain the most dynamic, innovative and entrepreneurial elements of our Canadian business community.

In the favourable economic climate created by this Government, small businesses have been responsible for 17 per cent of the 1.3 million jobs created since 1984. Out of 43,000 small businesses who answered a questionnaire on free trade, 87 per cent were in favour.

Mr. Speaker, when we pay tribute to our small business entrepreneurs, we are paying tribute to the driving force of our dynamic free enterprise system.

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the drought in western Canada worsens daily. In fact western Canada has received the least amount of moisture and rainfall in 99 years, since 1889. Tumbleweeds and sand storms are shown on television screens across the country. Dug-outs are dry. Seeding will not be possible in some areas because there is not enough moisture for germination. Community pastures are not accepting livestock because there is not enough grass.

The Government must make a commitment to transport cattle and to help move feed into the drought area. Emergency funds are needed now for new dug-outs, new wells, and emergency water systems. I call on the Government to make a commitment now to the Prairies to assist in this worst of natural disasters in western Canada.

IMPORTANCE OF FORESTS TO SASKATCHEWAN ECONOMY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, this is National Forest Week. Although Saskatchewan is recognized for its agricultural production, it is easy to overlook the fact that half of our province is covered by forests. These forests have played a key role in Saskatchewan's development, providing the economic and industrial base for more than 30 communities. These towns owe their livelihood to the commercial and recreational use of the forest.

Maintaining this resource through forest renewal and intensive management is vitally important. In recognition of this the Government of Canada is spending over $1.1 billion with the provincial Governments to enhance forest management.

In Saskatchewan we know how important a role forestry plays. All Canadians should make every effort to learn more about our forests and their prominent place in Canadian life.

HISTORIC EVENTS

POLAND—ANNIVERSARY OF 1791 CONSTITUTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today the people of Poland are celebrating the May 3 Constitution of 1791, which was the first recognition of fundamental rights in an age of despotic rule in Europe. The legacy of this centuries-old struggle for human rights continues to unfold in Poland today.

In 1980 the world saw the birth of the independent trade union Solidarity in response to a deteriorating economic crisis which was mismanaged by the Government. Despite martial law, Solidarity inspired a broad social movement on human rights. Today, Polish workers are again exercising the right to strike, guaranteed by international conventions to which Poland is a signatory, in the face of sky rocketing price increases and no prospect of managerial reform within a rigidly hierarchial party system.

Instead of taking the opportunity to negotiate a social accord as persistently offered by Lech Walesa, the Polish Government has launched widescale arrests of Solidarity leaders and provocation of workers demonstrating peacefully for real economic reforms.

The New Democratic Party considers both outside interference in Polish affairs and the desperate attempt by the Polish Government to impose a temporary solution through internal force as unacceptable. Canada should make it clear to the Polish Government that only a peaceful solution leading to real economic reform with the support of a broad range of social and trade union organizations, can expect approval from Canadians.

UNIONS

INTER-UNION MEMBERSHIP RAIDS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, on May 9 the Canadian labour movement will be holding a convention in Vancouver. Their get-together promises to produce more fireworks than the Liberal Party.

Consider the following. One of the main points of tension is the present vicious in-fighting between unions raiding each other's memberships.

The leader of the 23,000 members of the United Food and Commercial Workers arranged secretly with the CAW to take its members. The rank and file were not even notified and the raider is none other than Bob White, who prefers to call his action an "opportunity for change in unions". Here is the same Bob White who screams, whenever there is a corporate takeover, that rights are being ignored. It seems that "solidarity forever" and "a democracy in the union movement" are just shallow rhetoric.

Mr. Speaker, I am therefore relieved that the Liberals have agreed to improved access to private pension plans, portability, gradual retirement, participation of homemakers in the

DECLINE IN EMPLOYMENT IN FORESTRY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last week the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) claimed that Canadians have much to celebrate during National Forest Week. They also have a lot to worry about.

Lands not sufficiently restocked increase annually by the size of Prince Edward Island. We are rapidly running out of first growth timber. Professional foresters are out of work.

Exports are up, but employment is down. In 1979 employees in the forest industry totalled 307,000. Five years later this number was almost 38,000 lower. In 1985 it went down again.

Last year a study of forest graduates from UBC showed that of 290 graduates less than 50 per cent found jobs as forestry professionals. Twenty-one per cent were unemployed.

When we are losing employment and sufficiently restocked lands it is clear that, although short-term gains may be reflected in increased exports, the long-term prospects for Canada's forest industry are not good.

Four years ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised to create a full-fledged Ministry of Forests. It is completely unacceptable that this important sector has been relegated to a junior Minister under the Department of Agriculture.

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to bring good news to the House.

Last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was in Washington. I want to quote a statement by Senator George Mitchell of Maine who said:

> In his eloquent address to the Joint Meeting of Congress, and in private meetings as well, Prime Minister Mulroney made a forceful, effective and persuasive presentation on the need for acid rain controls. I know firsthand that he made a powerful impression on many members of Congress. I was heartened to learn that, as a result of his efforts, the President has designated Secretary of State George Shultz as the administration official responsible for handling the negotiations for a U.S.-Canadian treaty on acid rain and that he will be meeting with the Canadian Foreign Minister in that regard.

Clearly, this is more positive evidence of the success of the visit of our Prime Minister to Washington.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INCREASED TAXES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in the House of Commons, the Minister said and reiterated that 24 per cent of the increase in income tax paid by Canadians was the result of economic growth. Later, he said that 80 per cent of this increase as the result of economic growth. The contradiction between the two replies he gave here in the House yesterday afternoon represents nearly $18 billion per year.

Didn't the Minister of Finance increase sales tax in Canada, not once, not twice but three times? Isn't it true that since he became a Minister in this Government, Canadians are now paying $4 billion more in sales tax as a result of the increases introduced by the Minister? And didn't the Minister of Finance increase the excise tax on gasoline, not once, not twice, not three times but four times since this Government came to power, from 1.5 cents per litre to 6 cents per litre, Mr. Speaker? Are Canadians now paying 3 per cent more in taxes on gas, that is, $2 billion more per year, than in 1984? Is that the truth, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know that today, 1,200,000 more people have jobs compared to the situation at the beginning of our mandate. I think that is very important, and that is also why most Canadians are now paying more in taxes.

[English]

I am very pleased that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has brought attention to the error I made in my answer yesterday. I am pleased that he gives me this opportunity to say that fully 80 per cent of the increased amount of taxes that Canadians are paying is because of the increase in economic activity. More people are working, and the people who have jobs are earning more money, and their personal disposable income is up. It is a direct result of the fact that Canada has been leading the G-7 countries in economic activity in the last three-and-one-half years. That is why tax revenues are increasing.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will have to persist here because Canadians have been taxed more under this Government than in any time in our history, including two Great Wars. That is the increase in taxes we are talking about.

Oral Questions

INTRODUCTION OF NEW TAXES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as of 1988 is there not a brand new 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls and a brand new tax on cable television? Do not those amounts add another $1 billion a year in new taxes?

Did the Minister not put a new tax on pet food, soft drinks and snacks? Is that not another $500 million a year in new taxes? And did he not partially deindex the system, and that means an extra $1 billion in new taxes this year and more next year and every year thereafter? I ask the Minister, did he not impose these new taxes? And did this Minister and this Government not say during the last election campaign that there would be no increases in taxes?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition put his foot in the glue when he said we are being taxed more than at any time in history. If he will go back to the time he was the Minister of Finance in the early part of the 1970s, he will find that something like 17.5 per cent to 17.9 per cent of national income was represented in federal government revenues. Today that amount is less than 17 per cent. I have the amount here which I will check while he is posing his next question, but I believe the comparison is 17.9 per cent when he was in office against about 16.7 per cent this year.

EFFECT OF NEW TAXES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister has time to look at his figures, he will find that I was last Minister of Finance who brought a surplus down in this House of Commons, and not the $30 billion deficit the present Minister is bringing down. The average deficit over my four years was $710 million, not the $30 billion range this Minister is talking about.

I have only just begun with this Minister, Mr. Speaker. Did the Minister of Finance not slap a 3 per cent surtax on taxpayers, which means a loss of disposable income for Canadians of over $2 billion a year? Is that not new? Did he not put new taxes on airline tickets? Did he not put a new tax on paint and wallpaper and raise it by 50 per cent? Did he not give wealthy Canadians a capital gains exemption, all of which means that, as a result of four years of this Minister, 99 per cent of Canadians pay more in total taxes than they did in 1984, and only 1 per cent of Canadians, those earning more than $117,000 a year, pay less in taxes? Isn't that the fact?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): This may be the last time the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition raises these questions in the House. If you will give me some time, Mr. Speaker, in 1974-75 revenues as a percent of gross national product were 19.2 per cent. In 1986-87 they were 16.8 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: More!

An Hon. Member: He had the last surplus.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Yes, he had the last surplus, but he then put it quickly into deficit and the deficit increased from 1.6 per cent of national income to 3.3 per cent.

Mr. Gauthier: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He doubled it in his very short term in office. Revenues increased by 91 per cent during his time in office. That is a lot of tax. Personal income tax revenues increased by 76 per cent. Here is the reason why it increased. During that time, total spending rose by 107 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I do not even have to look at the briefing note here because it is indelibly printed on my mind. In his last year as Minister of Finance spending went up 29 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: More, John!

NEWSPAPER REPORT—TERMS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the anticipated tough Canadian film Bill intended to curb American dominance of film, TV, and video distribution here in Canada was raised once again at the Mulroney-Reagan love-in. The Toronto Star reporter, Sid Adelman, quotes from a memo from the Canadian representative of the American major film distributor to his American bosses indicating that a deal has been reached to soften the long promised tough legislation.

My question is directed to the Minister of Communications? What is that understanding? What is this great collaboration. And what deal was just reached in Washington?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the Hon. Member who seems to rely so much on American sources—

Mr. Broadbent: The Toronto Star!

Mr. Riis: It is still Canadian!

Miss MacDonald: Americans being quoted in the Toronto Star! Who else would the Toronto Star quote but Americans?

May I say that the story is both inaccurate and misleading.

Ms. Copps: But not false.

Miss MacDonald: I would like to tell the Hon. Member and Members of the House that there are two issues with respect to the film industry, production and distribution. In the field of production, this Government has added $165 million to production, set up a feature film fund, and set up a dubbing fund.

We are now moving to the issue of distribution. We have said that we will bring in, by legislation, the means to establish a separate market here in Canada for Canadian film distribution rights. We have said there will be other measures for Canadian film distributors. We have said we would do that, and we will do it.

NEW LEGISLATION—EFFECT ON INDUSTRY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the last time I looked, I think the Toronto Star still belonged to Canadians. I think Mr. Sidney Adelman is a rather well respected reporter, and I think Mr. Millard Roth is still the head of the Canadian Film Distribution Association even if he speaks for the Americans.

Is it not true that the Minister is planning a giant loophole through which, by regulation, the Americans will still come out the winners and win all the major films that are coming in here? Does the Minister not realize she is just setting up another shell game so the Americans can maintain their status quo, and the interests of the Canadian film distributors and manufacturers will not be met with her new Bill?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, Millard Roth, who the Member cites with such ease, is the Canadian representative of the American film industry. That is the person she is shilling for in the House.

Ms. Copps: That's what she just said.

Miss MacDonald: I just want to say to the Hon. Member that the Liberal Government had three Ministers that I know about, Mr. Faulkner, Mr. Roberts, and Mr. Fox, all of whom promised legislation. After 40 years, much of that occupied by a Liberal Government, there is no legislation. Nothing has been done for the Canadian film industry in this respect.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: Our legislation will not address the needs of the American industry. It will address the needs of the Canadian film industry, as I have said right along.

RIGHTS OF AMERICAN DISTRIBUTORS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. According to this report which came out today, the Canadian Government—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead)): Just a pale echo of the Grits.

Mr. Broadbent: Joe is twitching again. Just calm down, Joe. It's all right.

Mr. Shields: Welcome back, Shirley Carr.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the Minister. The same report that refers to the collaboration of the Minister's Department, even in writing the regulations with this group that is speaking for the American industry, has made the contention that the Minister has backed down completely. One way the Minister has of avoiding that accusation would be to assure the House today that the essence of what she promised in the old Bill, that never did appear, will be repeated, namely, the commitment that she made, and, if I understand correctly, the Prime Minister is also on the record as making that commitment, that American distributors of films in Canada would be restricted in their rights to films they had actually financed, or to films to which they had a world copyright. The net effect would have been to leave to Canadians some 15 per cent of the market.

Will the Minister guarantee that the Bill she has promised to introduce will essentially maintain these provisions?

• (1430)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have said throughout from day one that what we will be doing here is taking the necessary step that has not been taken before. We will be setting up a separate market for distribution in Canada.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party may not think that that is necessary, but that is the first and most important step to take, and we will be doing it.

We will be bringing in regulations so that it is a workable scheme. We will also be introducing measures to assist Canadian distributors. We are gearing this toward Canada, not toward the United States.

DRAFTING OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who have been producing films from British Columbia to Newfoundland, and who want to have access to see Canadian films, will have heard what the Minister has said, which is not to confirm that she will stand by her rather tough legislation of before but, in fact, confirms that she has backed down once again to American pressure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If she has not done so, we will give her a chance to answer the question again.

Will she retain the very tough minded points that she and the Prime Minister addressed before in her legislation? While she is answering that question, will she also reply to what I regard as an accusation that her Department has already agreed—and these words are in the memo, they are not mine—to collaborate with the American industry in writing the regulations for a Canadian Bill? Is it not the ultimate humiliation for the Tory Government to get the American industry to help draft our Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, that is utter nonsense. I am finding more and more that that is all the Leader of the New Democratic Party is capable of—utter nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, he talks about collaboration. May I just say, because this is common knowledge, that I had one well publicized meeting with Mr. Valenti here in Ottawa some 14 months ago. At that time Mr. Valenti put forward a number of proposals. They included no legislation and no separate market for Canadian rights. He proposed that moneys be raised by putting a tax on Canadian film-goers at the box office. Those were the proposals that were put forward.

I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that none of them were acceptable, and none of them will be introduced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we now know that the Minister has said she will produce legislation, and the American industry is being urged to pretend it is opposed to it to appease Canadian nationalist feelings. That is the whole thrust of the memo that the Minister is denying.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I have a copy here in my hand of the original Bill that had the tough provisions that said that the Americans would be restricted, in a reasonable way, to the movies they financed, and to the movies on which they have a world copyright. Why will the Minister not say that her Bill will do that and that, for once, she will encourage real distribution, real access to Canadian markets, of Canadian produced films?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I must tell the Hon. Member, who is relying on a memorandum from American sources, that I have seen that memorandum and it is wrong. He may not accept that, but I can tell him it is wrong.

I also want to assure him that the work that we have done on this Bill and on the regulations has been done in this city, in this country, and by Canadians.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PRESENCE OF FREON IN COOKING OIL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is a sad situation when the contents of the Bill are known by Americans before they are known by Members of the House of Commons.

In the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as well as of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I would like to address my question to the Prime Minister.

The whole country knows that freon is destroying our environment by killing off the ozone layer. We have now learned that not only is it killing our environment, it also has the potential of killing young children, children who as schoolboys or schoolgirls thrill sniff cooking oil, freon-based Pam. Why is it that freon is illegal in hair sprays, it is illegal in aerosol deodorants, but it is still legal in cooking oil in Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is not in the House today, I point out that the Government, the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, have given unprecedented attention to the problem of chlorofluorocarbons and the pervasive effect they are having on our atmosphere in all their forms. Canada has taken world leadership in establishing initiatives to deal with the proliferation of various chemicals based on chlorofluorocarbons, including freon. All its health effects are being examined thoroughly by the Government at this time.

PAM—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL FROM SHELVES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, three young people in the Ottawa area alone have died in the last four months. I would like to ask the Prime Minister again, given that his Minister of National Health and Welfare is unprepared to act for the health and safety of Canadians, give the leadership and follow the example that was taken with hair sprays and deodorants, will he demand that freon-based Pam be immediately pulled from cooking shelves across Canada so no more young Canadian children have to die?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think we all agree that we regret when deaths occur whatever the circumstances. What has to be underlined here is that those deaths related to Pam use are related to Pam misuse. When products such as Pam are used as instructed they do not cause any hazard for the consumer.

Ms. Copps: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

DRAFTING OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the Minister of Communications. I want to quote a line from the memo that is in issue from the basically American industry, as the Minister said. It states: "We do have an understanding with the Department of Communications that quiet collaboration is available on the wording of supporting regulation". Is the Minister saying that that is false?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am saying that it is false.

CONTENT OF MEMORANDUM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, also in the memo the American industry—

Mr. Shields: She said it was false, you clown.

Mr. Riis: How do you think of those catchy lines, Jack?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people do not think that selling the whole film industry to the Americans is very funny.

I want to ask the Minister this. It also states in the memo:

> It is important that we will be clearly perceived as being opposed to this approach, so as not to dislodge support from either the Canadian cultural milieu or the opposition parties.

Is it any wonder the Canadian people do not trust this Government in the sense that here is an American industry saying that it has a deal with the Canadian Government? Not only has it got a deal, but it will turn around and enter a pro forma protest.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have said before to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that I base my responses on Canadian documents, not on American documents. If the NDP wants to use American documents, I am sure that there are many openings, many avenues. The Hon. Member can go to the American Embassy. He can go to any number of places to get them.

When we are dealing with Canadian industries we should be basing it on Canadian facts, figures, and statistics. Nothing is more important—

Mr. Blaikie: Show us the Bill!

Miss MacDonald: —than the fact that this year the Canadian film industry, with the help of Telefilm financing, has been winning prize after prize in national and international film festivals. That is the kind of work that we have been supporting as a Government.

Un Zoo la Nuit won top prizes, as did I've Heard the Mermaids Singing. These are the kinds of films into which we have been putting our money.

ENERGY

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—DELIVERY OF REASONABLY PRICED ELECTRICITY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Several weeks ago I raised the issue of the long-standing concern of Prince Edward Islanders, namely, a secure, long term, reasonably priced supply of electrical energy. I know that negotiations have been ongoing between Quebec, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island regarding this issue.

Can the Minister inform the House and the residents of P.E.I. what progress has been made for the delivery of reasonably priced electricity to P.E.I.?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are, of course, monitoring very carefully the negotiations that are now taking place between Hydro-Québec, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. The solution to the problem of electric power rates in Prince Edward Island lies, first and foremost, in long-term contracts that would stabilize prices, and that is why the present negotiations are so important. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in Ottawa is not directly involved in these negotiations, since they are taking place between the utilities, the parties concerned. However, we are keeping a very close watch on the situation, and we have the firm conviction that with the co-operation of all involved, the people of Prince Edward Island will finally have a long-term solution that is in their best interests.

[English]

POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. What efforts has the federal Government made on behalf of P.E.I. to ensure that Québec and New Brunswick can come to a negotiated compromise and therefore deliver reasonably priced electricity to P.E.I.?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have urged the utilities to negotiate amongst themselves because that is the level at which the decisions are made. Second, as the Minister responsible for Energy, Mines and Resources in Ottawa, I have had several meetings with my colleagues in Quebec and Prince Edward Island, and I intend to continue those meetings, which will also include my colleagues in New Brunswick.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH MORESBY—SALMON RIVER WATERSHED—DRILLING FOR MINERALS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The British Columbia Government has just authorized Diamond Resources to begin drilling and exploration for minerals in the Salmon River watershed, a pristine wilderness within the South Moresby National Park Reserve presently under negotiation.

What is the Government doing to stop this insane decision and to protect South Moresby?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to respond to this question on behalf of the Minister of the Environment.

If the Hon. Member would look at the Memorandum of Understanding which was entered into between Canada and British Columbia in July of last year, it clearly indicates that areas which are presently the subject of existing mining claims, which have not been under development, are excluded from the area designated as a national park reserve.

This Government is proud of the decision to recognize in perpetuity the precious values that South Moresby Island represents by declaring a national park. We have taken provisions in concert with the Government of the Province of British Columbia to preserve that area in that fashion.

I repeat, the areas where this particular mining claim is being pursued, are not contained within the area designated as park reserve at this time.

POSITION OF HAIDA PEOPLE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure I would be as proud as the Minister for having arrived at an agreement which excludes mineral rights and exploration. It is a shame that they did. The agreement should have excluded such rights in a manner such as to protect the integrity of this pristine area.

Since the Haida people are quoted as having decided to put their lives on the line to stop the mining, what will the Government of Canada do to match this type of commitment?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, to hear the Hon. Member speak, one might expect that he would wish all of British Columbia or all of Canada to be placed in a national park reserve.

In fact the two Governments were very conscious of the existence of pre-existing mining claims in the area of South Moresby Island. For that reason, in May of last year the Government of British Columbia placed a moratorium on the issuance of any further claims. The number of mining claims on the Queen Charlottes has dropped from 25 per cent to 8 per cent in the last several years. These areas are excluded from the area designated as a national park reserve. Any activity on those lands will be subject to provincial and federal environmental legislation.

NATIONAL PARK RESERVE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, who was vitally involved in the negotiations to establish the national park reserve at South Moresby. Canadians cheered when that happened thinking that the land was going to be saved from logging. People think that perhaps they cheered too soon, if that same land is now going to be wrecked by mining.

Does the Prime Minister not agree that mining is totally inconsistent with a national park reserve, that it is necessary to bring these other areas under the terms of that, that the Memorandum of Understanding very clearly states that British Columbia will hand over all of these rights, that the compensation will be paid indeed, but that we need to have the national park reserve as one which really is a national park reserve and is not a place where mining is going to take place, with or without that type of gerrymandering?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the arrangement worked out between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia represented a very significant advance in the area of environmental protection. I think that it was quite properly encouraged and celebrated by all Members of the House.

The terms and provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding, and I believe that very distinguished representatives of the New Democratic Party were there and I was grateful for their presence at that time, were widely known and appreciated. We have insisted vigorously upon the enforcement of each and every one of those provisions. We shall continue to do so.

The Government of Canada's position was very clear from the beginning, and remains that way today. We are unaware of anything that has taken place inconsistent with the fundamental provisions of the undertaking that we signed.

NATIONAL PARKS POLICY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would comment on the national parks policy which very clearly states: "Commercial exploration, extraction or development of natural resources which exists prior to the establishment of a new national park will be terminated before . . . " the establishment.

The other provision in the national parks policy is: "The Government of Canada will own all land and resources within national parks".

Is it not an absurd situation where the boundaries are simply changed a little to allow for mining within a national park? In effect, is this not doing the same thing as the British Columbia Government is doing in Strathcona Park? Is this not entirely contrary to the the spirit of having a national park system? Will he agree to that and act on it?

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the Minister of Fisheries, has responded on behalf of the Government. I have already indicated to my hon. friend that we viewed the South Moresby agreement as a most important one. It is a very significant milestone in the evolution of Canada's policy in this important area.

We gave very serious and costly undertakings to the Government of British Columbia to ensure that this be achieved. We insist upon the integral respect of that agreement. We are unaware of anything at variance with the fundamental provisions of that agreement.

Given the importance of this, I will be happy to look at the question my hon. friend raises, examine it very carefully to ensure that there is nothing inconsistent with government policy, and report back to her and to the House, because this has been a matter of great national interest.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TUITION AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism and Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I have in my hand a telegram which I received from Chief Joe Mathias of British Columbia, Vice-Chief, Assembly of First Nations. In the telegram, Chief Mathias states:

> On April 20, 1988 the Minister of Indian Affairs signed a 5 year master tuition agreement between the federal Government and the Province of British Columbia. This was done despite the clear and explicit objections of the Indian people in B.C.

I would ask the Minister of State for Indian Affairs to explain to the House, as clearly and precisely as possible, why the Minister of Indian Affairs signed such an agreement, an agreement that is to be in effect for a full five years, contrary to the strongly stated wishes of the Indian people of British Columbia.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that, historically, the federal Government has accepted financial responsibility for Indian students attending off-reserve schools.

The current federal-B.C. agreement on education provides, for the first time, for the development of local level tuition agreements between Indian bands and provincial school districts, something which was not available under the predecessor agreement. The existence of this provision, which itself is an outcome of the consultation that took place with Indian leaders in B.C., supports Indian control of Indian education, and as such is a step in the right direction.

LOCAL CONTROL OF INDIAN EDUCATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have to tell the junior Minister that he does not know what he is talking about. If he looks at Sections 6 and 12 of that agreement, he will know that such a locally controlled agreement is only possible where the local trustees agree and where Canada and B.C. agree, and he will also know that they may or may not accept such an agreement.

Mr. Speaker, local Indian control of Indian education has been the policy of the federal Government since 1973. It has now been shattered.

I would ask this Minister to stand in this House and admit, once and for all, that the promises of self-government, a policy which this Government claims to follow, is nothing but a sham and an empty pretence.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, given the record of past Liberal Governments when it comes to self-government for the Indian people, certainly when members of the Liberal Party talk about a "sham" they know what they are talking about.

The Hon. Member is talking about Indian students who attend provincial schools, and in that respect there is an agreement as between the federal Government and the provinces whereby the federal Government reimburses to the province the per capita costs in relation to the education of such students.

The objective of the agreement in question is to shift more control in that respect to the local Indian band.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—COST OF AZT DRUG—SITUATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Is the Prime Minister aware that while people across the country are dying from AIDS, British Columbia is the only province that refuses to pay the total cost of AZT, which is the only drug available to treat those suffering from this dreadful disease?

Given the fact that all other provinces have agreed to provide this drug free of charge to those suffering from AIDS, and given the fact that one year ago in this House the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that AZT should be covered under our universal health care system, I would ask that the Prime Minister personally contact the Premier of B.C. to request that AZT be made available free of charge to AIDS patients in that province.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is out of the country at the moment. Certainly I shall get in touch with him on an urgent basis to inquire into this matter.

The Hon. Member raises a very important matter, one that requires a compassionate response, and as such I will be happy to look into it immediately and advise her.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East, on a supplementary.

FUNDING OF FEDERAL CENTRE FOR AIDS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for his response and for his assistance on this urgent matter. Hopefully, he will make inquiries of the Premier of British Columbia in this regard.

I would also ask the Prime Minister to inform the House as to when the Federal Centre for AIDS, which is being starved for funds, will receive the $139 million which was requested of Cabinet. It is funding which is urgently needed for this essential service.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of any obstacle to the normal progression of that request through the approval process. The very important commitment made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, both in terms of research and care in this important area, will be respected fully. We view this as a most important societal problem, and one deserving of urgent action and the urgent devotion of national resources.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has made significant statements and commitments in this respect in the House of Commons, and I can say, on behalf of the Government, that all such statements and commitments will be respected.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PRESENCE OF FREON IN PAM

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the answer the Minister of Labour gave to my colleague regarding the use of freon in Pam. I would ask the Minister to reconsider the policy he described of not insisting that freon be removed from Pam.

We know already that three young children have died from the effects of inhaling freon.

The Minister has given the Government's rationale for its policy of not insisting on its removal, that being that the product is not dangerous when used as it should be.

Well, children do not know that, obviously. They see it in the kitchen, and they assume that it can be used without mortal danger, in a way that the product label describes—which many of them, of course, cannot read.

An Hon. Member: Even soap suds are dangerous when not used properly!

Mr. Kaplan: We have seen the results of the present policy. Surely the Minister realizes that it is a policy that has failed. In the light of what has happened, I would again ask the Minister to reconsider the policy in respect of the use of freon in Pam.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the point has to be made that the deaths in question came about as a result of the misuse of a product which, when used properly, would not necessarily cause harm to the user.

An Hon. Member: It kills the ozone layer.

Mr. Cadieux: Educational programs emphasizing the danger of misuse and abuse of this product will be encouraged.

YOUNG CHILDREN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, although the United States is not as advanced as we are in this respect, it is their policy to remove freon from Pam. Doesn't the Minister realize that the program he is suggesting will not work with young children like those who were killed by this product?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I think we should remember that the accident in this case was caused by misuse of a product—if the Hon. Member would care to listen, I will finish my sentence—and if the product is used according to the instructions on the container, there should be no risk of harm for the consumer. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we will start a campaign to increase public awareness, and we hope that parents will help by telling their children about the dangers involved, as they generally do as responsible parents.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ETHIOPIA—CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and it has to do with the increased concern on the part of a number of Canadians with respect to the situation in Ethiopia and the feeling that the Canadian Government has come to the point where it needs to review the uncritical attitude which it appears to have toward the Ethiopian Government and some of the measures that Government has taken recently.

Is the policy of the Government of Canada with respect to the Government of Ethiopia under any kind of review, and does the Minister have anything to tell the House at this time in that regard?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for raising these concerns about the deplorable situation existing in Ethiopia at the present time.

We have indicated on several occasions that the war in Ethiopia makes it extremely difficult to deliver food to the people behind rebel lines.

We have actively endorsed certain steps taken by donor countries and the mission undertaken by the Assistant Secretary-General of United Nations to ask the Ethiopian government to allow international organizations to return to the areas in question and deliver food to the people who are in need.

We are now looking at other possibilities as well, and I can assure the Hon. Member that we are very much concerned about the present situation and that we are considering various options for getting food to the people who need it.

NEED FOR FOOD TO REACH STARVING PEOPLE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to say to the House, and through this House to the Government of Ethiopia and to others that are concerned, that there is a place where Canada will draw the line, where Canada will say that the humanitarian need for food to get to starving people, regardless of the political circumstances, is paramount in Canadian policy. I would like to know where that line is.

A great many Canadians are becoming increasingly concerned about the apparently uncritical relationship between Canadian government policy and the actions of the regime in Ethiopia.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has answered the substance of the question with regard to Ethiopia. There is not an uncritical approach on the part of the Government of Canada. We are very much concerned about developments in that country.

The Hon. Member is the spokesperson for his Party on foreign policy. If there are specific changes that he would want to recommend to me or to my colleague with respect to policy affecting Ethiopia, I hope he would do that.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question of Question Period, a single question from the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

TRUMP PROGRAM—CONTRACT OFFERS—MARINE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Layton, the main contractor for the TRUMP Program, has given the Minister the bids submitted by Marine Industries on the contracts for the destroyers Athabaska and Huron.

Could the Minister inform the House whether Marine Industries has been awarded the contract for the refit, as the Prime Minister promised when he said that Quebec shipyards would have their fair share?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this issue is currently under evaluation. As the Hon. Member will know, we are in the process of opening up even further the procurement process in Supply and Services in such a way that Canadians, and particularly Canadian businesses and suppliers, will know ahead of time of the process within Supply and Services. As soon as this process is dealt with, the announcement will be made in due course.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

NOTICE OF ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER THIRD READING STAGE OF BILL C-113

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate that since an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Orders 115 and 116 with respect to an allocation of time for the third reading of Bill C-113, I therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 117, give notice of my intention to move a time allocation motion at the next sitting of the House for the purpose of allocating a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of the third reading stage of the said Bill.

To be fair, I want to point out that this filibuster against western Canada is being carried out by the NDP and not by the Liberals. We had hoped to send the western diversification Bill to the Senate today for speedy passage. Under those circumstances, we will now be calling Bill C-89, an Act to compensate victims of crime.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear that after seven hours of debate at third reading stage, I feel we are not prolonging debate. We have two or three more speakers and are quite prepared to wrap this up expeditiously. I do not think it is necessary for the Government to prolong the debate on western diversification by having time allocation and a portion of the day set aside for discussion of that. I would like to think that we could perhaps wrap this up later today and get on with the other business of the House.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I was consulted by the Government House Leader. I told him we had no speakers and were willing to have the vote now and that we would support the legislation. I am happy that he brought to the attention of the House the fact that indeed we are not obstructing this Bill.

I find it somewhat unusual, however, that the Minister would invoke that Standing Order, because for my part I think there is co-operation on all sides.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in this session of Parliament and in the last session of Parliament, the only Bill that took more time at third reading was Bill C-22, the amendments to the Patent Act. I do not understand, nor do the rest of my colleagues, why the New Democratic Party is blocking this legislation which will benefit western Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps while the House deals with Bill C-89, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) could get together.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think what concerns us and why we felt it appropriate to have some debate was that after the Government cut out $3 billion annually from the regional development programs, it is important that the initiative on the diversification of the western economy receive thorough debate in order to make it the best piece of legislation possible. That is what we are committed to and that is what we want to see done. That is why I say that we should wrap this up expeditiously later on today so that we may get on with other important pieces of legislation.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime), be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is once again an honour to rise in this House to consider legislation which addresses the needs of those Canadians who are often the forgotten persons in our criminal justice system—victims of crime.

The legislative proposals presented in Bill C-89 represent concrete measures sought by and on behalf of crime victims. They will enhance the capacity of the criminal justice system to fairly respond to the special circumstances of victims of crime.

[English]

Since second reading of this Bill, I am pleased to advise the Members of the House that, in furtherance of the spirit of federal-provincial co-operation, a statement of basic principles of justice for victims of crime which will serve to promote access to justice, fair treatment and provision of assistance to victims of crime has been adopted by federal, provincial and territorial Ministers responsible for criminal justice.

The legislative committee reviewing Bill C-89 has now considered these proposals and presented its report to the House. I would like to thank the members of the committee for the due diligence and utmost dispatch they have displayed in reviewing this important piece of legislation.

In summary, the amendments to the Criminal Code presented in the Bill will create a victim fine surcharge, will allow input by the victim at the time of sentencing through the use of victim impact statements, will allow the use of photographs and affidavit evidence to provide for the early and prompt return of recovered property to the victim, will require the court to consider restitution in all appropriate cases and will extend the ban on publication of the identity of victims and witnesses of sexual and extortion offences.

I would like to highlight one particular amendment to the Bill which was adopted by the legislative committee. Victims have long expressed the view that the impact of a crime upon them should be taken into consideration by the court at the time of sentencing. In certain cases, however, the victim of an offence is unable to present a victim impact statement; if the victim is deceased or, by reason of age or infirmity, incapable of providing such a statement.

For this reason, the legislative committee added a definition of "victim" to the victim impact statement provisions of the Bill to ensure that such statements can be made by family members and others where the direct victim is dead, ill, or otherwise incapable of making a statement. This will enable the introduction of victim impact statements by those closely connected to and affected by the commission of the offence, for example, families of homicide victims, child victims, and disabled victims.

The proposals presented in Bill C-89 enhance and strengthen the current restitution provisions in the Criminal Code. Victims of crime have stressed the need to increase the opportunities for a victim to receive financial reparation for the losses resulting from the criminal activity. In addition, the committee adopted a number of amendments to the Bill relating to enforcement of the proposed restitution provisions. These amendments will further serve to ensure that restitution orders are satisfied by the offender.

Finally, I would like to refer to one additional amendment adopted by the committee. That amendment will add the offence of robbery to the procedures dealing with photographic evidence outlined in Section 446.3, so that these victims may also have the benefit of prompt return of property. In this way, they will be subject to less inconvenience before and during any court proceedings.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am most heartened by the support that has been voiced for the principles presented in this Bill—by victims' groups, the Canadian public, Members of all parties, the various witnesses who appeared before the legislative committee and the committee Members themselves.

I believe that we have a common goal—to make the criminal trial and sentencing process more responsive and sensitive to the special needs of victims of crime, so that no further victimization is suffered through their involvement with the criminal justice system.

To this end, I urge the Members of this House to allow the passage of Bill C-89 so that we may move closer to ensuring that justice for victims of crime becomes a reality.

Hon. Robert Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see this important Bill adopted on third reading because it really is a step forward for victims in Canada. I would also like to say that I was very pleased with our work done in committee that the Minister just mentioned. I had many amendments. I suggested eight, nine or ten amendments and finally some were adopted. I accept them with an open mind; the work we do in committee is much more important.

[English]

We did a lot in the committee, and I think at least four or five of my amendments were adopted. In fact, the difficult amendment we voted on last night was a result of my French being not as good as I thought it was and the necessity to correct at report stage what I thought was a pretty good translation of one of my amendments. I want to apologize to the Minister for not putting forward the French text in my amendment in better form.

[Translation]

Every amendment we make here in the House is said to cost $4,500. That shows that if as much had been spent on my French training, the cost of this amendment might have been saved. But in any case, the Committee was really moved by a desire to improve the legislation.

[English]

Regrettably, I cannot say this is an entirely good news Bill because there is a lot more that could have been done for victims. If I can reminisce, I remember that the plight of the victim, the injustice to the victim in the criminal justice system, was very little recognized until recently. I had the honour of being the first Minister of the Government of Canada to call a conference to look at the question of victims' rights in the criminal justice system, way back in 1981. The meeting was held at the Park Plaza Hotel in Toronto. I am a lawyer, my experience was in the courts with people who had grievances against the criminal justice system, and all of us who attended that conference had our eyes opened with respect to a system that we knew very well from a point of view that, until that time, it seems, had never been fully appreciated.

We were told how the victim, having suffered from the crime, can then suffer from the criminal justice system itself, in some cases worse than at the hands of the criminal. I am thinking of the delay in getting property back while a trial carries on for a year or, in some cases, more than two years. I am thinking about the problems of coming to court to testify, only to find that the case has been remanded without notice. People have taken time off work, gotten babysitters, made other arrangements and so on, and then were not given notice of the situation.

These grievances poured forth by the hour at the meeting, and since then a number of steps have been taken to make the criminal justice system more responsive. What I regret is that the Government had the opportunity to do a great deal more for victims but did not do it.

First, we have to recognize that the remedies for victims that are found in this Bill only apply in cases where an accused is found and convicted. We know that the vast majority of attackers are never caught and convicted. Yet the losses suffered by the victims are real. They are victims of crime and even with this Bill the criminal justice system does nothing for them.

I visualized and would have liked to see a foresighted Government coming up with some type of system like workmen's compensation or unemployment insurance or some of the other grand visions we have had in our country in the past which have worked to compensate the victim. Whether the criminal is ever apprehended or convicted, we need a larger vision of the loss and the way in which all of us as a society can be insurers of that loss.

Often if the criminal is caught under this system there will only be compensation where the criminal can afford to pay. This is another remarkable thing. These measures are welcome and I support them, but if the accused when convicted does not have any money—and I think if someone examines a cross-section of criminals who are convicted, not many of them are people of means—then the victim is not compensated. Again, I would have liked to have seen a larger system that provided for some type of balancing so that there would be compensation in court cases where the court ordered it, whether or not the accused was able to pay.

It is also a limitation of this legislation that we keep narrowing the amount of relief that we are getting out of it. When you narrow it down to the accused who are caught and convicted and can afford to pay, there is an even greater narrowing of the relief available to victims who, if I can put it this way, are lucky enough to have found themselves in that situation through the criminal justice system that they are compensated for readily ascertainable damages such as loss of income or property. However, they are not compensated for pain and suffering which may have resulted from the crime.

Pain and suffering is a ground upon which compensation can be achieved by a victim, but in such a case the victim must start a private civil action against the convicted person for compensation for pain and suffering. Why not roll it into the criminal procedure? There are lots of ways to do this. In committee I and other Members suggested ways in which we could do better by victims through the criminal justice system than the measly and very tight solutions being proposed by the Conservative Government.

Further, most crime victims will still have to resort to provincial compensation boards. There are, in almost every province, boards set up which provide relief for victims who cannot get compensation directly from the criminal. However, the amounts paid in each province for exactly the same type of loss differ widely. In this legislation the Government provides a new source of funds for the provincial compensation boards, and that is the tax that will be levied on fines and paid to provinces.

However, I object—I objected in committee, and the Official Opposition objects—to not having a national standard applied. We would hope that a province would be bound to use the money it receives under this program from the federal Government to compensate victims. However, there is no such limitation contained in the legislation. A province is free to take the money but is not compelled to use it for compensating victims.

This would have been a perfect opportunity to establish a new important national standard with money provided by the federal Government out of this limited but very real source of funds for compensating victims. In his intervention the Minister indicated a little bit of progress, and I want to note that. He said that a federal-provincial conference has been held and that some voluntary national standards have been developed. That is fine by me, I do not say that it has to be legislated or contractual. However, how effective will it be? The standards contained in that statement are general.

I would have liked to have seen the federal Government committed to trying to improve compensation for victims, the number of victims who receive compensation, and the types of losses for which compensation is available. All of this could have been done and I regret very much that it was not.

I want to refer to the amendment which the Minister signalled in particular in his remarks. I proposed an amendment in committee to deal with the problem of a victim impact statement under the preceding law. There was a case in British Columbia which was brought to the attention of my leader, the Member for Vancouver—Quadra (Mr. Turner), by the Jacobson family which was the family concerned.

In that particular case the court refused a victim impact statement for the ironic reason that the victim had been killed and was not, therefore, able to put in a statement. The court felt unable to accept a victim impact statement from another member of the family even though other members of the family suffered from that particular crime.

I proposed an amendment which would cover that situation and permit the court to receive a victim impact statement, from a sponsoring relative. When I moved that statement a funny thing happened in the committee. I see the Parliamentary Secretary here and he will remember this because he was involved in it. Suddenly, from a briefcase behind the witness table, a form of amendment was produced which would cover this situation. On behalf of the Government an amendment was proposed to deal with this situation.

I resent such a way of achieving a reform. The Parliamentary Secretary is here and he can set the record straight if he disagrees with me, but the Government was sitting there with this improvement on the status of victims in the briefcase. If some opposition Member raised it, a government amendment on the subject would be brought forward, but if no opposition Member raised it the amendment would not be brought forward and this particular improvement to the legislation would not have been made.

I wonder what else there is in the Government's briefcase. I wonder whether, if we had been able to spend more time and effort, the Government would have done even more for victims than it did. The Government is not taking a reformist approach. It is very conservative, with a small c, to be dragged into bringing forward a reform like this which, in the City of Vancouver, in the constituency of my leader, means something. It covers a wrong which was revealed in an actual criminal procedure.

Since I talked about the research, I want to express my gratitude to the tremendous number of groups that came forward with amendments. They appeared before the committee and made very good suggestions. Allan Kaufman of my office, who is a lawyer called to the bar of Manitoba, was able to draft a lot of the amendments which are brought forward, many of which were accepted. I want to signal his efforts which were very much appreciated. He is heading, in the next two days, to Manitoba to seek a Liberal nomination in the Winnipeg area. The work which he did on this legislation in itself demonstrates a very considerable ability which I hope will commend itself to people in Winnipeg.

In conclusion, I regret the fact that three of the amendments in particular which I proposed and are on the committee record were not accepted. I think the Government recognizes that they would have been very significant improvements in the situation of victims in the criminal justice system. They were rejected without very much in the way of a solid explanation by the Government.

I hope there will be another day on this Bill. I commend it to our colleagues in the Senate. I hope that they will look at some or all of the amendments proposed by us in committee. I look forward to seeing the Bill come into force. I expect that some of the shortcomings of the legislation will be demonstrated as the legislation comes in.

[Translation]

Thus we will have the benefits and the reforms of the legislation and we will see what still needs to be done and what further improvements need to be made. It is regrettable that with the Conservatives, improvements come very slowly and only after pressure from the people, interest groups and the two Opposition parties. But I still hope that we will be able to review the situation of victims in the very near future in order to improve it further.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to speak on third reading of this Bill. The legislation was introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on November 5, 1987; got second reading in this House on November 19, 1987; was in committee from December until March; and was reported back to the House with amendments on March 30, 1988. Therefore, the Bill has moved along.

The New Democratic Party supports this Bill in principle. Indeed, we have tried to facilitate its speedy passage to committee with only one speaker per Party in second reading. Because of the Government's failure to consult with the Opposition before scheduling debate on Bill C-89 on Friday, April 29, we did not give unanimous consent to proceed directly from report stage to third reading. However, we are most certainly co-operating now in the speedy consideration of the Bill at third reading stage.

I believe there are a few of my caucus colleagues who wish to speak to the Bill because it is not often that we have the opportunity to consider in the House a Bill such as this, which deals with the victims of crime.

I want to pay tribute to Roland Penner, the former Attorney General of Manitoba who lost his seat in the recent election. He pioneered this kind of legislation when, in 1986, the Manitoba Government was one of the leaders of Governments in the world that were prepared to assist the victims of crime. It takes a lot of courage to pioneer such a Bill, but he had enough courage to put it through the Manitoba Legislature. He had enough courage to put through the sexual orientation Bill which Quebec and Ontario have also passed but the federal Government so far has been afraid to touch. I want to pay special tribute to Mr. Penner for his Bill on victims of crime.

Each year in Canada some 700 families are victimized by murder; 2,500 people lose a family member due to a drunk driver, and over 100,000 people suffer some emotional trauma from crime. Victims of crime often suffer twice: first from the crime, then they suffer from a lack of assistance and support in getting their property returned quickly.

It has been said in the House that victims suffer from crime and then suffer from the criminal justice system. I am a former Crown attorney from Vancouver and was a defence counsel for a few years. I value our criminal justice system and believe that it is one of the best in the world. However, I wish we had done more for the victims of crime. I think of witnesses who had to suffer through court cases and victims to whom not much attention or respect was paid.

If I have any regret, I suppose it is that we did not give enough respect and assistance to the victims. I am pleased that this Bill will change that.

We must also concentrate on the prevention of crime. I am pleased to see the advent of such things as Neighbourhood Watch programs, community and urban planning to ensure the sense of community responsibility that can reduce crime, as well as alcohol and drug program funding, which is so important, especially with respect to programs dealing with impaired driving. There is funding for programs to assist mentally ill and those with learning disabilities.

We must also concentrate on ways to attack the root causes of crime, including poverty, homelessness and unemployment. I regret that in a society as rich as ours there are still homeless people even in Metropolitan Toronto, which is booming.

We have assisted victims of physical and sexual abuse. We are teaching how to deal with violence, including violence in the media. We are moving toward stronger gun control. I believe all these measures will help to reduce crime.

While Canada has a relatively low crime rate, it still exists and there is much to do to attack it. There are serious inadequacies in our legal aid system, which should also be addressed.

I believe we should have a different definition for crime. In this respect, let me refer to a speech by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), the NDP justice critic. During his speech at second reading of this Bill in the House on November 19, 1987, he gave a very interesting definition of victims of crime. He said, as reported at page 10981 of Hansard:

> I want to note that the definition of victims of crime is far too narrow. I suggest that we examine the nature of victimization in our society today. When we do that examination, we will see that there are many victims who are left uncompensated by this Bill. What are some of the examples of that, Madam Speaker? The victims of corporate crime and white collar crime are not compensated by this legislation. The victims of a corporation that pollutes and destroys the environment, that poisons a lake or river and victimizes people in a community, receive no assistance from this legislation. The victims of a corporation which in its greed for profit produces unsafe and hazardous goods resulting in injury or death receive no compensation whatsoever.
> A corporation or a mine, which is not prepared to take the basic steps to protect the health and safety of men and women who work in a mine who, as a result, experience injury or death, will not be required to pay any restitution under the terms of this legislation. The crimes of multinational corporations in the Third World and elsewhere are not dealt with by this legislation. Racially motivated crimes and other organizational crime is left untouched. I hope the Government will recognize that there are victims in this area as well.

Maybe that broader definition can be used in future legislation. After the second reading debate on the principle of this Bill, it proceeded to committee consideration where the real action takes place. Several witnesses appeared before the legislative committee dealing with this Bill, and the committee received many written representations.

The submissions to the committee focused on three principle areas, all of which the NDP responded to by amendments that were defeated by the Conservative members of the committee. I would like to outline briefly the three key areas in which the NDP proposed amendments. Perhaps the Government will consider these amendments in the future.

The first area is victim-offender reconciliation programs. This was a major area of concern for witnesses who appeared before the committee and groups who submitted briefs. It was proposed that judges should have the option of accepting as the basis of restitution to a victim of crime an amount arrived at following mediation between the victim and the offender. This amendment had very strong support from those who made the submissions to the committee. The Government should be criticized for rejecting this suggestion.

Some of the groups which provided written submissions include Victims of Violence from Edmonton, Alberta, and one group from the Minister's own riding in Saskatchewan.

Amendments were also moved to ensure that funds raised by victims' surcharge would be directed to new programs and would not simply go into general revenues. We believe that these funds should not be used to supplant existing victims' programs in the provinces or indeed used in other areas. There is concern that the Bill as it is presently worded allows the province to take federal money and spend it without any assurance that new programs for victims of crimes will be created. For example, it could go into existing criminal injuries compensation programs which come under provincial jurisdiction.

Professor Irvin Waller is a leading expert on victims in Canada and a Professor of Criminology at the University of Ottawa. He raised strong concerns about this point. Let me explain, because we are very familiar with this in British Columbia. The federal Government gives money to the province, and the province blacktops a road or puts it into a coal project in northern British Columbia. It may not be quite so gross as in those cases, but the province could take the money and put it into existing programs for aid to victims of crime, and there is very limited aid in a province. What would happen, of course, is that the good works in this Bill, the idea in this Bill to compensate victims, would be virtually dissipated. That is why we proposed these amendments to restrict the provinces and we are sorry the Government did not accept them.

• (1540)

The third area is that funds should be dispersed consistent with the federal-provincial statement of principles. At present there are very uneven standards for programs for victims of crime across Canada. This is understandable because it is a fairly new concept of the Government helping the victims. The normal concept in common law was that the victim sued privately. Often, of course, it is very hard to get money out of those people who perpetuate a crime. We proposed an amendment to ensure that funds raised by the fine surcharge in this Bill should be dispersed in accordance with the statement of principles for victims of crime, which was agreed upon in March, 1988 between the federal and provincial Ministers of Justice. Again, I regret to say, the committee rejected this amendment.

I just want to put the principles on record in my remaining time, so that the Hon. Minister of Justice will make it an even better Bill the next time since he agreed to them with his provincial Attorneys General. I hope they will find some way of getting these principles up front. Funds should be dispersed in a manner consistent with the following principles: First, victims should be treated with courtesy, compassion and with respect for their dignity and privacy and should suffer the minimum of necessary inconvenience from their involvement with the criminal justice system. I have already told Members about my experience as a Crown Attorney and as a defence counsel. Looking back, I think that while we had a fair system, we could have improved the way in which we treated victims and witnesses. That is the "people" part of the justice system, and it is something worth looking at.

Second, victims should receive, through formal and informal procedures, prompt and fair redress for the harm which they have suffered.

Third, information regarding remedies and the mechanisms to obtain them should be made available to victims promptly. It is useless to have this legislation if no one knows about it or how to take advantage of it. Fourth, information should be made available to victims about their participation in criminal proceedings and the scheduling, progress and ultimate disposition of the proceedings. Many people who are victims or witnesses will ask what happened. They are told the Crown stayed the charge or the accused pleaded guilty and the original charge was dropped and they were charged with another charge. Victims would not even know about that. They are not even considered important in the system.

Fifth, the views and concerns of victims should be ascertained and the appropriate assistance provided throughout the criminal process. If the Crown would just consult with the victim where the accused intends to plead guilty and there will be a sentence, that is a help to a victim of a crime, because they will feel they are part of the justice process and are receiving justice for the wrong done to them.

Sixth, where the personal interests of the victim are affected, the views and concerns of the victim should be brought to the attention of the court, where appropriate and consistent with criminal law and procedure. In other words, it should not be just the judge and prosecutor. If possible, the victim should get a chance to express his or her opinion to the judge before sentencing.

Seventh, measures should be taken, when necessary, to ensure the safety of victims and their families and to protect them from intimidation and retaliation. I think that speaks for itself.

Eighth, enhanced training should be made available to sensitize criminal justice personnel to the needs and concerns of victims, and guidelines developed, where appropriate, for this purpose. Again, that is humanizing the system of justice.

Ninth, victims should be informed of the availability of health and social services and other relevant assistance so that they might continue to receive the necessary medical, psychological and social assistance through existing programs and services. I recall the programs for women who have suffered violent assault such as rapes.

Ten, victims should report the crime and co-operate with law enforcement authorities. So there is an obligation on behalf of the victim.

Those are some important amendments that could have been included in the Bill. By and large, as I said, we in the New Democratic Party support the Bill. We have said that on a number of occasions. I will just conclude by saying that some two thousand and five years ago, the great Athenian, the Greek legislator Solon, said that there can be no justice until those of us who are unaffected by crime become as indignant as those who are. For too long victims have been forgotten by those in the criminal justice system. This has to stop. This legislation is long overdue and I am pleased to support it in principle.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it is also with pleasure that I rise to speak in support of this legislation. As the preceding speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), I have experience in the criminal justice system, not as a Crown prosecutor, but as a defence counsel, for a number of years. One thing, I suppose, is obvious to anyone involved in the criminal justice system, and that is that in the course of events there are essentially two players or two sides. On the one hand there is the Crown prosecutor and the law officers of the Crown who represent Her Majesty the Queen and whose purpose is to prosecute offences. The concerns of the Crown attorney are to ensure that the proof is available, that he or she has sufficient evidence to present to the court so that it is aware of all the legal implications, and that witnesses are available at a particular time.

All of those things go together in ensuring that all of the evidence is put before the court in such a way as to convince the court beyond a reasonable doubt that a crime has been committed and it has been committed by the person against whom the charge is laid.

Quite often in a very busy court system, although this is less true at the higher levels of courts, but certainly at the provincial court level where 95 per cent or more of the crimes in this country are tried, there is a very great crush in terms of numbers of offences, numbers of accused and numbers of witnesses involved. I think it is clear to anyone who has practised law that the prosecution side of the justice system is taken by someone not representing the victim, but the justice system, Her Majesty the Queen. On the other side of the equation is the accused and the representative of the accused. The job of the representative is to ensure that the individual who is accused is given a proper defence. A person ought not be be convicted of any crime unless it can be proven beyond a reasonable doubt that a crime was committed and that it was committed by that particular accused. That is the adversarial system that has grown up over the last 700 or 800 years from the British justice system we inherited, and I hope improved on, in this country.

What is obvious, as I mentioned, to those who have been in the practice of law is that in the adversarial system there is no one set up to represent the victim, the victim's family or the witnesses. Indeed, one can rightfully say that there is no victim until there is in fact a conviction. That side of the justice system has to continue unaltered, in a sense, because one cannot assume that, because an allegation has been made, there is indeed a victim from the beginning of the trial process. What there is, I suppose, is a complaint from the beginning. Once a conviction is entered there is a person who is a criminal and a person who is a victim.

While we all have compassion for the victims of crime, we have to understand that the process takes place in the context of a trial, a process which attempts to discover whether indeed a crime has been committed and whether the person charged with the crime is the person who is guilty of it. Inevitably, that process has left out complainants, the ones who are the victims of crimes proven to have been committed. We see them every day as witnesses in courts. We see them being told, quite often after the fact, why it is that they have to come back another day, or why it is that the trial has not gone ahead on the particular day on which they have been called, often without explanation as to what is going on. Frankly, it is often difficult to explain in detail why a particular trial has to be postponed, or why a trial cannot continue to its completion on a particular day. However, that effort has to be made. It is important that there be a concentration of effort by, in particular, Crown counsel to ensure that the victims of crime, the witnesses who are called before the courts, are aware of the role that they play and of their importance in co-operating with the authorities.

Prior to my election I saw an awareness by the courts and by the judges of that concern. They took the time to explain to witnesses and to complainants how the court system works and the importance of their co-operation. They are told about the fact that sometimes it is an inconvenience to come back and forth. They suffer the loss of property which may be used in evidence for a period of time. These are difficult matters to explain to someone who does not know the intricacies of proof and the requirements of proof in a criminal case.

I welcome the streamlining of some of the activities contained in this Bill. For example, with respect to a theft, if someone broke into your home, Mr. Speaker, and stole a stereo, a TV set or a VCR, there is no reason why that item ought to remain in police custody for six months or longer to prove that, yes, it is the VCR that was stolen from your house. However, that has been a factor in numerous cases in which property was stolen and the evidence happens to be or has to be kept by the justice system in order to be used as evidence to prove that in fact it was stolen.

The ability in this legislation to streamline that process and to allow the return of those goods makes the process more reasonable. It is now possible for a photograph to be taken of the goods and to allow that photograph to be used in evidence. All these matters streamline the process and make it more reasonable and practical. Yet it still preserves the rights of an accused person to be able to know what evidence there is against him. That has not been lost in this particular provision of the Bill.

Further, there are provisions for the taking of affidavits to verify ownership and requirements for reasonable notice to be given to an accused or to the counsel of the accused with respect to the contents of an affidavit. For example, if a victim of a break-in loses a video tape recorder and wants to make wild claims that he also lost a TV set, a valuable diamond watch and some other things, particularly if he wants to claim compensation for them under other parts of the Bill, then that can be brought to the attention of an accused person. Further, that person can be brought before the court, be cross-examined and be required to prove in the ordinary way that the goods as indicated were stolen. Again, I am commenting on some favourable aspects of the Bill.

With respect to determining restitution, the Bill requires that there be an ability to pay on behalf of an accused. If someone in the Chamber wanted to go out to commit a crime for the sake of committing a crime, for the sake of stealing something to which they were not entitled, for example, they could quite properly be considered to be a pure criminal. They can be treated with the type of serious and unequivocal breach of the law that would require them to compensate totally what they had stolen. Anyone who has practised criminal law in Canada knows that many of the people who perpetrate and commit crimes, particularly petty property crimes, break-ins and thefts, are themselves somehow victims of society. On quite a number of occasions it is not possible for them to make any form of restitution at all.

I give one example of a 12 or 13 year old boy who was a client of mine and who was charged and convicted of stealing a bicycle. The bicycle was stolen from a well-to-do family. The young boy eventually pleaded guilty in youth court. As part of the sentencing process the boy was required to make restitution. The criminal justice system, in this case under the Young Offenders Act, was used to require a young boy, who had no money and who came from a broken home, a single-parent family, who, along with a couple of other lads had been lured into grabbing kids' bikes, to make restitution. As a result of being convicted of his crime he was required, as part of the court restitution, to pay money which he did not have to this wealthy family who lived several blocks away across a street that separated their two neighbourhoods.

One can argue in many ways about this matter. However, to me it seems that this boy, who himself was a victim of a broken home, perhaps a victim of inadequate parental guidance and inadequate support from the school system, was somehow failed by us as well. To say to him that he should compensate someone to whom the loss was not particularly great and who was perhaps covered by insurance is not necessarily the route that we have to go. This is not of course the case in all cases.

Quite often there are people who perpetrate crimes and as a result of those crimes or other crimes have plenty of money or the wherewithal to make restitution and repay. It is quite proper that this Bill require that payment to take place.

We do see a major step forward in recognizing that those who commit crimes have a responsibility, not only to society, because society can exact its penalty by putting someone in jail, by depriving them of their liberty, or by forcing a fine to be paid to Her Majesty the Queen, but they also have a responsibility to the victim. It is an important step forward in this legislation that the justice system not only berates, punishes, or seeks retribution from an individual towards society, but that there is recognition that the victim of that crime is entitled to restitution. The victim mediation program mentioned by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway and the victim criminal reconciliation program can be effective, not in all cases, but in some cases to bring about some type of understanding on the part of the criminal as to what effect his or her acts have upon the victim. Not all people who are convicted of offences are aware of the consequences of their action.

In the same vein, the victim impact statements can provide the basis for that type of understanding. When considering sentencing matters, the courts have always taken into account the effect or the consequences of a particular crime. If one looks at charges such as assault causing bodily harm, certainly the extent of the bodily harm, whether the victim ended up in hospital, whether the victim lost time from work as a result of a particular assault and hospitalization, and to what extent the injuries were caused and aggravated by the nature of the assault, have always been taken into consideration by a court when imposing sentence. They are important consequences of the crime and give an idea of the seriousness of it. Under this new Bill the provisions institutionalize that in a manner that is perhaps more acceptable.

One has to be careful that we do not allow victims of crime to get carried away with personal retribution or revenge, to exaggerate or overblow the consequences of a particular incident, which may well be horrendous to an individual, but has to be recognized in a balanced way by the court.

I have not seen the types of procedures that might be established in the various provinces for the preparation of these victim impact statements. I would hope that great care is taken to ensure that the victims of crime who are making victim impact statements are encouraged to elaborate on the factual circumstances and the emotional reaction in a measured way, and not in a way that may be designed by them personally to seek revenge against the individual who has perpetrated the crime.

It is unfortunate that more attention and consideration was not given to the suggestions made in committee and that the victim/criminal mediation services were not considered more seriously as a first step to bringing the criminal and the victim face to face. Again, this would not be appropriate in all circumstances. In some circumstances it would be totally inappropriate for that to happen and would not be wished by the victim in any manner whatsoever. But it may be appropriate in certain circumstances. We must recognize that the most important point in our justice system is that there be justice, and that recognition of the rights of the victim do not prevent justice from being done to those who are accused of crimes and who may not be guilty or fully cognizant of what it is that they have done.

I say that as a defence counsel who practised for many years and have seen that we have a very good justice system. We do not have a perfect justice system, and we cannot be complacent. I have seen instances where the treatment of individuals as victims prior to any conviction being registered has affected the handling of a particular case. I would not want to see our justice system swing the other way and pay too much attention to victims during the course of a trial. The most important thing is that we have a system of justice that is just. For too long the victims have been ignored. Finally, we are giving recognition to them in this Bill. I welcome it, but I urge caution and balance. I look forward to seeing the implementation of this Bill in a proper and balanced manner.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his speech which was very thoughtful, and I learned a lot from it. I wish to pursue the question of victim/offender reconciliation programs mentioned by the Hon. Member. I know that our colleague, the justice critic, the Hon. Member for Burnaby raised this matter in the legislative committee and proposed amendments in this area.

Could the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) comment on some of the representations made to the legislative committee in the area of victim/offender reconciliation?

Mr. Harris: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The Hon. Member for Burnaby did indeed propose several amendments in that area in the legislative committee. Unfortunately, all of the amendments were defeated by the Tory majority.

On the specific question of victim/offender mediation and reconciliation services, I wish to point out that there are many groups that made representations in this area both to the committee and to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). It is an important point, and I briefly referred to it in my speech. Perhaps I could quote from a letter sent to the Minister of Justice from a group in the Minister's own riding in Saskatoon. The letter is from Carol Riekman, the Executive Director of the Saskatoon Community Mediation Services, and she states:

> On behalf of the board and staff of Saskatoon Community Mediation Services (SCMS), I would like to congratulate you on your work with Bill C-89. As an organization that works with victims of crime, we are pleased with the changes that this amendment promises for victims. However, it is our opinion that the proposed Bill C-89 as presently written falls short of its potential and, therefore, request your consideration of an additional amendment.

> It has been the experience of our program and others like it that in selected cases, victims benefit from the experience of meeting with the offender as such a program allows the victim the opportunity to be personally involved in a safe and controlled process. Mediation programs that provide this option to victims and offenders of crime have become increasingly recognized over the past two decades as a legitimate option for police departments and crown attorneys in dealing with cases.
> Studies in both Canada and the United States have indicated high rates of victim satisfaction with such programs because they meet the needs of victims to confront the offender . . .

This is an important point. Confronting the offender is something that one often hears victims talk about.

The letter continues:

> . . . to reconcile with the offender (especially in those situations where there is a pre-existing relationship) and to personally set a payment schedule for compensation. A secondary benefit of mediation diversion programs is the relief of pressure on already overloaded court systems.
> Although we are aware that Bill C-89 is well on its way to being adopted, we request that an additional change be included that recognizes victim/offender mediation programming. We offer ourselves as a resource to your committee should you require further comments or information.
> Sincerely,
> Carol Riekman
> Executive Director

It is an important point that this organization is sponsored jointly by the Mennonite Central Committee in Saskatchewan and also the John Howard Society of Saskatchewan. It specifically calls itself an organization that works with victims of crime. It is proposing here, and it proposed to the committee, this very valuable tool of reconciling victims and offenders, providing for payment schedules and victim and offender involvement through properly set up mediation services. This is a valuable tool, not in all cases, but obviously in certain cases.

• (1610)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): I recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on a question or comment.

Mr. Waddell: It is my understanding that a number of new fines will result from the passage of this legislation. It is also my understanding that the moneys so generated are intended to assist in new victim assistance programs. Fines levied against those found guilty of a crime are to be used in the funding of new victim assistance programs.

In my speech on this measure, I raised a concern about provincial Governments spending such funds on new programs. I would ask the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) to comment on the need for such programs and, more important, on the need to ensure that any moneys generated as a result of the fine schedule set out under this legislation and the Criminal Code in general, are in fact used to fund new programs in respect of victims of crimes.

Mr. Harris: I thank my colleague for his question. While the Criminal Code is a federal statute, the administration of justice is carried out by the provinces, and any fines to be paid under this legislation will become part of the general revenue fund of the province in which that fine is levied. Victim assistance programs will be innovative and, as such, will be expensive to develop, and provincial Governments that are hard strapped, such as my own Province of Newfoundland, often have difficulty in raising funds for such innovative programs.

Under Bill C-89, the federal Government will put in place a regime that will result in increased revenues for the provinces, and certainly it should insist that any funds so generated be used in establishing mediation services, victim-offender reconciliation, where possible, and other such innovative programs in the criminal justice area. Certainly, it should be looked upon as a forward step in the criminal justice system in this country; it should be looked upon as a step to involve victims in the process. Once a conviction has been achieved, the victim is to be given a role in the process.

This is a new step in the criminal justice system in Canada, and any funds generated as a result of the surcharges to be levied against offenders in respect of certain crimes should be allocated to those programs which help this whole process become more effective, as opposed to going into the general revenues of the provinces for use in other areas.

Certainly, the provinces face very great demands in terms of educational funding, highway maintenance and construction, and so forth. Funds should be raised specifically for those purposes. Any moneys flowing into the coffers of the Crown in right of a province as a result of fines levied under the Criminal Code should not be used for such general purposes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards) There is sufficient time for one brief question or comment, and response.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Waddell: No.

Mr. Grisé: On debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, on debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on Bill C-89, and I would also like to take this opportunity to thank colleagues from the other Parties and Members of the Committee, some of whom proposed amendments and who all did their share to have this Bill adopted as quickly as possible. It is an excellent piece of legislation, introduced by our excellent Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and it will provide victims of crime with better protection than is now the case.

I would like to give a short summary of the amendments to the Criminal Code contained in this Bill. They provide, among other things, for a victim fine surcharge; the victim's participation in determining the sentence through the court's use of a victim impact statement; the use of photographs and affidavits as evidence in order to accelerate the return of recovered property to the victim; a requirement for the judge to consider restitution in all cases where appropriate; and finally, an extension of the authority to ban publication of the identity of victims and witnesses in cases involving sexual offences and extortion offences.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and explain in more detail the principles of Bill C-89. However, it was my understanding that there was an all-Party agreement that there be one speaker per Party. Certainly, that was something that was agreed to by the Liberal Party. As far as I can tell, the NDP does not seem to be in agreement. Therefore, in order to permit the members of the socialist Party to speak on Bill C-89, I move:

> That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment, for the purpose of continuing consideration of third reading of Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): It is moved by Mr. Grisé, seconded by Mr. Vincent, that the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment, for the purpose of continuing consideration of third reading of Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime).

Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places.

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): Fewer than 15 Members having risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is adopted.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Cochrane Superior (Mr. Penner)—Finance—Northern tax allowances—Geographical delineation of affected communities/Request that regulations be amended; the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley)—Excise Tax Act—Farm fuel rebate—Alleged delay in passing Bill C-117; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Energy—Low sulphur western coal—Proposed use by Ontario Hydro.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime), be read the third time and passed.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill C-89. When the federal Department of Justice, in the early 1980s, instituted a study on the question of victims of crime, I carried out the Yukon section of that national study. Given that history, it is an area in which I have a particular personal interest.

We in the NDP consider Bill C-89 to be an important piece of legislation, and certainly we support it in principle. In fact, we agreed, on second reading, to put forward one speaker only, thus enabling the Bill to be quickly referred to committee for detailed consideration and amendment.

The issues today in respect of victims of crime are not much different from those I encountered when participating in the national study conducted in the early 1980s. It is the view now, as it was then, that the lack of enforcement of restitution provisions among others, tended to undermine the community's confidence in the criminal justice system. A large area of concern centred around the treatment of victims, both as a result of the crime itself and the criminal justice process. Whether they were victims of property offences or of bodily offences, many of the people to whom I spoke were very concerned that they had not really received respect from the system nor the kind of support from the system that a Canadian citizen should expect.

We have in Canada, quite justly so, I feel, having been involved in this field myself, put a lot of emphasis on the rights of the prisoner, on improving the correctional system, though not to the extent some of us would like to see it improved. However, it has been improved substantially. It is certainly long overdue that we give very special recognition in law to the rights of victims of crime. Much of the credit for this must go not to politicians but to those people and their families who have been victims of crime and have lobbied long and hard for justice.

I would like to talk about a couple of parts of this legislation that I think are very good and about several that I hope will be worked on in the future in order to improve the legislation. The first is the issue of restitution.

I found out one thing when interviewing some 400 people in the Yukon about their experiences as victims of crime. The majority of the offences involved, of course, in any jurisdiction, are property offences and not personal offences. The recommendation people consistently made was not to send everyone to jail, and in a way, this surprised me. I thought we might hear from the victims a very hard-line attitude: "Let's put everybody in jail". However, they did say that they simply wanted their property back or some compensation for it. They feel that the perpetrator of the crime should have a responsibility to rectify the situation with the victim.

There have been many programs in Canada which have worked on the principle of the criminal making restitution in some form to the victim for what has happened. There are clauses in the Bill which will, I hope, enhance and develop more services for the provision of restitution.

What has happened over and over again, not just in my jurisdiction of the Yukon but in others, as I found because this was part of a national study, is that the people would go to court, would make their cases, and an amount would be awarded for property damages, however, they would never see a thing. In many cases, the person who had perpetrated the damage was ordered to pay restitution, everyone would leave the courtroom, the victim would feel that at last there is some justice, the criminal will have to pay, but would never see a cent of it, not one cent.

This kind of thing sadly undermines the confidence in the justice system. It makes people very cynical about the process. I would say, therefore, that the restitution provision is a very important one and I hope we will address this issue. In probably about 60 per cent of the cases studied in which restitution was ordered, the people involved never saw a cent, and that is not a fair and equitable justice system.

People are generally very fair-minded. I found that they are willing to accept that justice has been done if there is redress. It was heartening to learn that.

In talking to many victims of crime, one of the things that was mentioned consistently was the trauma that is felt when going to court. It is an extremely difficult thing for many people to do. I think lawyers, Crown attorneys, social workers and others who are involved in the process every day really forget what a traumatic experience it is for someone to have to go to court. Therefore, victims groups have placed a great emphasis on providing assistance to people who have to go to court.

One thing which is not included in this legislation which would have been very important, and my colleague from Burnaby made this recommendation which unfortunately was not accepted by the committee, is a victim reconciliation program. I have some considerable familiarity with such programs. Marvellous work is being done by the Mennonite Central Committee which, in about 1974, began programs like this in the Kitchener-Waterloo area. These programs were very, very effective.

We now see a great emphasis on the part of the current Department of Justice on mediation. This has grown out of the victim reconciliation programs. Mediation programs are very prevalent throughout Canada. These programs attempt to get the victim and the criminal together in a negotiating process outside the court in order to resolve the issues in a way that will be fruitful for the victim.

Through these victim reconciliation programs and the mediation programs, the criminal is actually faced and has to sit down in a room with the victim. This has a great impact. It is very different from being in court where victims and criminals are separated by lawyers. Under these programs, they sit down in a room and work out solutions.

Having seen this done with juvenile delinquents as well as with adults, I have found that it has an impact far beyond that of simply resolving the issue. It has a personal impact on the victim who perhaps comes to understand some of the things which led the criminal to commit the crime, but, more important from a criminal's perspective, he or she has to deal face to face with the person from whom he or she has stolen or whom he or she has assaulted. It is very unfortunate that such a program has not been included in this legislation.

The issue of personal assaults is probably the most difficult one. People have the most concerns about the court procedure when personal assaults are involved. Certainly, studies have shown that both the elderly and women feel extremely threatened in society. Studies have indicated as well, however, that statistically, women and the elderly do not constitute the largest number of victims of assaults. It seems that their fear is somewhat disproportionate to the actual number of offences committed against those particular groups. However, in certain areas, and particularly in domestic violence, women are over-represented.

Certainly the statistics on this are very frightening. I remember when I first came to Ottawa last fall, I was walking down the street at night and I saw a group of women marching with banners. I could not understand what this was all about, and someone told me it is something that groups of women do in many urban areas and it is called taking back the streets. Women march to show solidarity in that they can walk the streets at night. It is a very sad comment on society that it is felt that this is necessary. Many of these groups have fought long and hard for victims' assistance.

Certainly, the statistics indicate as well that there are about 17,000 sexual assaults in Canada every year, and that about 90 per cent of those are on women. We see also that women as victims are over-represented in family-related assaults, some 77 per cent. In assaults between spouses it is 90 per cent. In assaults between ex-spouses it is 80 per cent. Generally speaking, women in the justice system are under-represented. However, I understand that the number of women lawyers registering in law school has increased considerably. Many more women are going into law, but the justice system is seen by many female victims as a very male and sometimes unsupportive system.

There have been many programs and organizations which have been helpful. Victims of Violence, for example, is a very good organization which I understand receives some funding from the federal Government. It is extremely vocal and has done some good work in bringing to the attention of Members of Parliament and the public generally the personal experiences of individuals. It is very easy to think or talk about victims of crime, but it is very different when you have to go through it yourself. Going on the stand and being interrogated about your personal life or lifestyle is an extremely difficult thing to have to go through. Many voluntary groups such as the Salvation Army have very good programs for assisting a victim to deal with both the administrative matters that come up involving the court, how to present evidence and that kind of thing.

Let me say just as an aside that of all the victims of crime that I interviewed as well as those interviewed by my colleagues involved in the study, the thing people were most surprised about was that they thought, when they went to court as the victim, that the Crown attorney was their lawyer. We know that in our justice system the Crown attorney is the prosecutor for the state. People had a tremendous problem with this because they felt that the criminal's lawyer is out there fighting for him or her and their lawyer, whom they saw as the Crown attorney, is not doing that much for them in representing their interests. People felt that somehow that their personal interests were not being represented. That is not to say that is entirely the case, but that was the perception people had.

This legislation is particularly important in that respect because it indicates that the state has a particular interest in the victim, and many of the sections in this legislation will support the victim and tell him or her that we are giving them specific support. Yes, the Crown attorney represents the state in our system of justice, but here are extra supports that we give to the victim, acknowledging that they have already been traumatized by the crime itself and we will assist them to deal with the process so that they are not traumatized a second time.

I mentioned the efforts of a number of organizations such as the Mennonite Central Committee, Victims of Violence, and the Salvation Army. They have brought the concerns of victims to the fore. The families of victims have of course been extremely important. The emphasis on drinking and driving that we have seen over the last several years was the result of the efforts of either victims of that offence or their families.

I think this legislation will greatly enhance two things, respect for the justice system and acknowledgement that the victim is deserving of special consideration and concern. I know these are federal-provincial or federal-territorial agreements so they will be largely administered by the territorial and provincial Governments, and I hope the kind of services that are really needed will be implemented through this legislation. Certainly the other jurisdictions will have a large say in how they do that, but it is extremely important that the principles embodied in this legislation are reflected in the actual service.

I can certainly say from my own experience in speaking with many victims of crime that there is a tremendous and traumatic effect on people even in coming home to find that their residence has been robbed. The invasion of the personal security of a person cannot be measured simply through the court process. Again, those groups I mentioned earlier, the elderly and women who feel particularly vulnerable, feel that trauma even more. In a just and equitable society we have to make sure that our citizens feel secure and that they can see that justice is being done.

In principle we support this legislation. There are several points which, we feel, would have made it somewhat stronger and better, but in principle it will begin to acknowledge the rights of victims of crime.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): Questions and comments.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin). When I spoke it was from my own experience as a defence counsel, and you have to perform your job as defence counsel to the best of your ability. The Hon. Member spoke from her vast experience in dealing with victims of crime.

As she quite properly acknowledged, the Crown attorney is not the victim's lawyer but the state's lawyer. There ought to be some institutionalized system which provides counselling, advice, and understanding for the victim as to what the process is and what might happen, not necessarily to act as an advocate in the trial process but to make perfectly clear to the victim of crime what support services are available, what is going on and what it will be like. I know we have rape crisis centres, which are supported sometimes for other reasons, but we do not have any general system like this. Perhaps the Hon. Member would care to comment on the desirability of an institutionalized system through either legal aid or the various provincial justice systems separate from the police. They have a role in the prosecution, collecting evidence and so on, and are in a sense involved in one aspect only of the justice system.

We have a role for the Crown attorney and police to play in investigating and prosecuting the crime. We have a role for the defence counsel to play in legal aid in making sure that justice is done for those accused of a crime. However, we do not appear to have any institutionalized system which will make certain that those who are truly defenceless and truly vulnerable are not ignored by the system. Would the Hon. Member care to comment on that?

• (1640)

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, my colleague from St. John's East has hit upon a very important point. There have been such programs as he mentioned, including crisis centres. I know that the Province of Manitoba had, and may still have, a good victims' assistance program. In the Yukon we have had a victims' assistance program separate from the courts.

In my study, 80 per cent of victims of crime saw the police in a favourable light. People felt that the police had been helpful. However, as my colleague mentions, the police can go only so far. My colleague is quite right that there is a need for a second organization which provides assistance, even in such basic things as helping those people to find their way around the court-house. In some instances the Crown may help out with that, but in the larger courts they do not. Even in the smaller court systems in my own constituency there is simply not the time to do that.

Victims' assistance would show that the state does care. It need not be expensive. It could include things like telephone hot lines to which people can call to ask for advice about what they should do and where counselling is available. Studies have indicated that even victims of property theft, which may not seem as serious to some of us, can be very traumatic, especially if it has been in your own home. They may be afraid for years every time they walk over the doorstep. I have heard people say many times that that is a very traumatic experience.

We could provide assistance in resolving the emotional effect on them personally, with administration, and with the technical details of how they go through the system and what information they are allowed to have. People just do not know these things and many prosecutors do not have the time to spend a number of hours with them. That is where an imbalance comes in. The defence lawyer is being paid by his or her client and can take the time to explain all the procedures and exactly what is going to happen. The experience of many victims has been that no one has been able to take the time to explain to them what is happening.

In the victims' assistance programs which I have seen, whether run by governmental organizations such as in the Province of Manitoba and in the Yukon Territory, or by voluntary organizations like the Salvation Army and others, they have tried to do this. It has had a tremendously beneficial effect on individuals. Being so removed from it it is probably hard to comprehend how beneficial this is. Unless victims of crime feel that they are being treated fairly in our justice system they will have no respect for the system and, in my view, the system then begins to break down.

Therefore, I would certainly agree that victims' assistance programs which offer concrete counselling and assistance with the process must be in place, not only before the court trial but after the trial as well, because there are often things arising from the trial in which they need to be involved. We are dealing with a group of people who have, through no fault of their own, been involved in a crime.

In addition to the victims' assistance programs, which my colleague mentioned, there is the area of prevention about which I did not have the opportunity to speak. It goes hand in hand with victims' assistance because, obviously, we want to prevent more crimes. In my discussions with the police I learned that they are often able to counsel people briefly—and I think a victims' assistance group could do it more fully—on how to prevent a crime. Many crimes are repeat crimes and many victims have been the victims of many crimes. Counselling services in transition homes for battered women and in rape crisis centres often focus very much on that kind of counselling.

I am sure we would all agree that crime prevention is important and should be a major focus. Every year there is a Crime Prevention Week during which all police departments emphasize crime prevention. However, it must be done all through the year, and I think that working with victims can facilitate that.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question. I enjoyed the Hon. Member's comments made from a different perspective. They were very interesting. Could she comment on the area of adult victims of child sex abuse? Can they get help which may stop them from committing similar types of crimes?

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, this is also an area in which I have had considerable experience. This is a large area, and 10 to 15 years ago the issue of adult victims of sexual abuse and child victims of sexual abuse was not a topic that was even discussed. There is now a move by many adult victims to start self-help groups. There is certainly a need for funding to assist them to do that and to get professional counselling. It has a profound and long-lasting effect, as my colleague says, not only on them but on those with whom they deal in their own families and others.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): I regret that the time for questions and comments has expired. Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to be able to speak on a Bill of significant importance to my constituency and to millions of people across the country. We as a Party have supported this legislation from its introduction in the House in November, 1987. It has been given a fairly thorough going over in committee. Various amendments were made to it before it was brought back to the House at the end of March. We certainly intend to support the Bill.

However, those of us who come from parts of the country which have experienced serious difficulties with problems of crime across our border—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I enjoy seeing you in the Chair today, Sir. We are wrapping up debate on the very important justice Bill before us. However, it is unprecedented that we are debating a justice Bill when the Justice Committee is travelling. In other words, the members of the Justice Committee are travelling throughout Canada on justice business and the Government has brought a justice Bill before the House. There is no precedent for this. This has never happened before and, as a matter of fact, there was an understanding that it ought not to happen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that that is not a point of order. It may be a point of debate if the Hon. Member has the opportunity to participate in the debate. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor has the floor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am certain that my colleague will be able to find occasion to make that point in debate in the future.

• (1650)

From our perspective in Windsor, across from Detroit, which is one of the highest crime centres in North America, the principles in this Bill are important. They are important to many people in our city who have been victims of crime, sometimes from within our community and sometimes from those outside our community who cross our borders. Since this Bill recognizes the concerns of victims of crime, it gives a greater sense of security to those not directly involved in law enforcement that they will be able to look to some recompense and responsibility on the part of the Government and the community for the suffering which has been caused by crime.

I represent a mixed constituency of urban and rural sections. One might think that the problems of victims of crime would be most evident in the urban sections of my constituency. However, I have found, in our community meetings across Essex—Windsor and in discussions I have had with my constituents, that many of the small towns and villages within my constituency have also been subject to pressures from crime to which they often feel tremendous helplessness to respond. That is why I believe this Bill is welcome.

During the committee hearings witnesses made several suggestions for amendments. Unfortunately, these amendments were defeated because I think they would have made this Bill more beneficial to people in my constituency of Essex—Windsor.

For example, one amendment sought the provision of victim offender reconciliation programs. A number of witnesses before the committee and groups who submitted briefs recommended such a program.

It was also suggested that funds raised by victims' surcharges be directed to new programs and not simply go into general revenues. It was also suggested that funds be dispersed consistent with a statement of principles on victims that was recently agreed to by federal and provincial representatives of the Departments of Justice. Frankly, I believe this Bill would be much better if some of those amendments had been accepted.

There are three important aspects to dealing with crime in a community like Essex—Windsor. First, citizens and citizens' groups should be drawn into the process of assisting police and the community at large in dealing with crime. We have had a very active Crime Stoppers program, which has involved careful surveillance of different neighbourhoods that are subject to higher levels of crime than other parts of our community. There is also a system by which those who have information about a particular crime could make confidential reports to the police to help solve these particular crimes. That kind of public approach is an important step forward in dealing with a very serious problem in my community and others.

Other citizens in our community who are concerned about the problems of victims of crime have organized groups to deal with child abuse. Last year, an important conference was held in Essex—Windsor in which the various difficulties which afflict victims of child abuse were outlined, not just in the immediate instance of the abuse being suffered but in terms of the psychological damage that goes on far into the future.

Such child abuse is at the very heart of an attempt to respond to victims of crime in our society.

Finally, I want to speak about problems of public awareness and the difficulties that are brought to bear on victims of crime in our community. Public awareness must be pushed as vigorously and actively as possible in order to achieve a sense of community caring for those victims of crime and those who wish to reduce crime levels within our cities. May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Harris: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, it was agreed that the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) would be our last speaker on this matter. However, I want to put a comment on the record on behalf of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who called from Montreal.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): I think I would ask the Hon. Member to come immediately to his point of order.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, there is room for questions and comments at the end of the Hon. Member's speech. I would like to make a comment on the record before the question is called.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): If the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) still has the floor, he has the floor until five o'clock, and will continue to have the floor at six o'clock, then there will be time for questions and comments.

Mr. Waddell: In order to facilitate the business of the House, we are prepared to allow this debate to transpire now, to finish it off now, then have the Private Members' Hour so this Bill can pass. What we are trying to point out is that our justice critic is in Montreal with the Justice Committee, and yet the Government called this Bill. That is hardly fair ball. We want to put that on the record, but we do not want to hold up the House. If you would call the vote on this Bill, Mr. Speaker, if that is possible, I think you will see that the House is prepared to pass third reading of this Bill and then we can move on to Private Members' Hour.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, we would like you to put the question, but we, of course, do not accept that the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) should be allowed at this time to put any questions or make any comments. We on this side would agree to have the question put right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Harris: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): If there is not consent to put the vote now, we will proceed to Private Members' Business.

Mr. Harris: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): On the issue of Private Members' Business, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris).

Mr. Harris: I have a point of order. We have gone until five o'clock. The Parliamentary Secretary who spoke interrupted. There is one comment I wish to make on behalf of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who worked very hard in this debate—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): I do not accept that as a point of order. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic has the right to present his Bill in the hour for Private Members' Business.

It now being five o'clock, the House will proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

APARTHEID

ADVISABILITY OF RESCINDING SOME SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of rescinding two categories of sanctions against South Africa namely (a) those which impact most less well off citizens (b) those rendered inapplicable by recent progress towards the dismantlement of apartheid.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a motion which has been on the Order Paper for well over a year. During that time, as I reflect upon it, I became more and more convinced of the rightness of this approach. I think the Government of Canada ought to reconsider its policy with respect to South Africa. The imposition of the present sanctions, in my opinion, are having quite the opposite effect to what was intended. They are not helpful at all.

The policy initiatives to date are negative. They are negative in effect and negative themselves. They are based on a lack of complete understanding of what is a particularly complex situation. They are certainly having the opposite effect of what was intended. In my opinion, the policy of sanctions ought to be reversed. They ought to be replaced with positive and constructive initiatives. Canada ought not to be scared of doing that which is right and just, just because we might be criticized on that account by countries and people who have some other axe to grind.

I compliment the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for the way in which he has been speaking out rightly and justly on controversial issues in the recent past. I would hope he would extend that also to the situation as it exists in South Africa. What I think is needed is a friendly approach to assist the people of South Africa in solving their problems. They have made remarkable progress over the last few years. It has necessitated a whole change in people's thinking. People who were brought up to think one way have had to reverse that thinking in the space of just a few years, and they have adapted remarkably well.

South Africans do not need us kicking them when they are down, which is what sanctions do. They need a helping hand to raise them up. The stated rationale of the Government of Canada for the imposition of sanctions is—and I will try to paraphrase the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs—to demonstrate to the people and to the Government of South Africa a repugnance for the apartheid policy, to let them know that such a policy is unacceptable internationally and that they must change it. If this was the reason, then the sanctions should be lifted immediately. South Africans know this already.

The stated policy of the Government of that country is to dismantle apartheid— we applaud them for that—and to find a system of government where all South Africans can play a full role. Their country is a country like ours which has a parliamentary system, and it takes time to make these changes. It is very difficult to do it overnight.

I know that a fantastic amount of intellectual effort has been put into this problem by the Government at various levels, the academic and business community and people on practically every street corner of the country. I would suggest something we could do as an experiment. Whenever we meet a South African, and it does not really matter what colour, race, or whatever else he or she might be, we should sit down with that person and try to talk about the weather or anything other than the apartheid policy and the initiatives to change it. We will find we cannot get past five minutes because within five minutes that person is going to tell us what they are doing to change it and what his or her ideas are and all about the debate going on in that country. If the stated reason for the imposition of apartheid ever existed in the past, it certainly does not exist today. South Africans themselves are well aware of the problem and are well on the way to a solution.

In looking at some of the sanctions we have imposed, it is not too difficult to see a certain air of selfishness about them. We continue, for example, to import some of the materials, such as chrome ore from South Africa, which is our cheapest source of supply, but on the other side, we will not buy its coal or steel. Perhaps there is an element of protectionism for our own industry in that. I sometimes wonder about the ban on the krugerrand, and to what extent that was put on to help the sales of the Canadian Maple Leaf gold coin rather than to effect any social change in that country.

What are the effects of the sanctions? What they do is to impose economic hardships on the people of that country. They create unemployment. They increase the cost of living and reduce the standard of living. Most, of course, can be avoided one way or another. It is not hard to figure out ways to get around them. But there is a cost to this, and this cost is borne by the consumers in that country.

The increase in cost has the most effect on those who already have the lowest standard of living. That is always the case, and it is the case there. We also have to remember that South Africa is the economic giant of southern Africa. The health of the neighbouring countries is very much dependent on the economic health of South Africa itself. So sanctions against that country also have a negative effect. They hurt people in countries such as Zimbabwe, Mozambique, and Zambia and the surrounding areas.

Just as an aside, it is interesting to note the number in very many cases of illegal immigrants or refugees coming in to South Africa from countries such as Mozambique and these others what one might call international basket cases surrounding this area. If it were not for South Africa, those countries would be in an even worse state than they are today. It is probably the mineworkers' earnings that just manage to keep Mozambique partially afloat. If the mineworkers were all told to go home, then that country would be in a worse state than it is now.

From where does the main opposition with respect to the process of dismantlement of apartheid come? Generally speaking, it comes from that sector of the white population which is in the lowest economic bracket. It is not the president of the bank or the insurance company who wants to keep apartheid. He is going to keep his job regardless. The same thing is true with respect to the chief geologist in the mine. He can go anywhere in the world to make a living. He is still going to be chief geologist before or after. It is the locomotive driver and the union member at the bottom of the economic ladder who see the jobs being taken away from them. They see themselves being left destitute or not enjoying the present advantages. That is where the opposition comes from. Sanctions, by lowering the employment rates, creating unemployment, and making it difficult for people to maintain those jobs and that standard of living are exaggerating and exacerbating this problem.

When times are good and the labour force is expanding, that does not have to be bothered with so much, one's job is secure and there is less resistance to change. But sanctions have had exactly the opposite effect. They have generated more opposition to change and the policies that the South African Government would like to pursue.

It is an observation that unequal employment practices are concentrated in the older industries, the railways and the mines. It is the new industries, petrochemicals and plastics, that very often have been financed by outside capital where people have been treated equally in the job place. Disinvestment therefore again has a negative effect.

Just one aside to what disinvestment has done. It has enabled the South Africans to take control of their own economy at a few cents on the dollar. They have been able to buy their industries back cheaply, which was not the case in Canada under the regime of the previous Government when we had to pay something of a premium to regain control of certain of our industries, such as the petroleum business.

In my motion I refer to sanctions which have the worst effect on those who we are presumably trying to help the most. I would like to cite two examples of this. First, there is our discouragement of tourism. The hotel trade and the tourist industry in South Africa, just as is the case in Canada, is an intensive employer of labour, very much of which is unskilled and semi-skilled. How many chambermaids and how many kitchen staff have been laid off as a result of our policy? I just wish that when our Minister went to that country he would have had the opportunity to speak to some of the chambermaids. Undoubtedly, they would have told him what their view with respect to sanctions are.

Another example is with respect to farm products, apples, grapes, wine, et cetera. Most of these come from the fruit growing area of Cape Province, the home of the coloured people, the people who are officially designated as coloured. They are a mixture between white and the indigenous Hottentot population. Most of these people work on farms, either permanently or seasonally. They badly need the income that is generated from that activity. With our sanctions, in the worst cases, they will go hungry as a result of what we have done to them. I cannot believe that Canadians would willingly and knowingly use hunger as a weapon. There are too many of our people who have had first-hand experience with this type of policy in Ukraine and elsewhere. I cannot see how we would ever deliberately use that tactic against somebody else.

Our policy is misguided, in my opinion, and probably stems from listening to the few self-appointed spokesmen who themselves will not be affected by sanctions. We have not listened to the vast majority of South Africans who want the same things of life as we do. They want jobs, education for their children, a decent standard of living and opportunity for the future. I do not know of one single elected leader, somebody who is responsible to the people who elected him—

Mr. Manly: Who the hell has a chance to vote there? They don't even have a chance to vote!

Mr. Nickerson: —either municipally, nationally, or tribally—or people of any colour or religion—who approves of these trade sanctions. It is not necessary to burn South Africa to the ground. It is not necessary to destroy it so that magically some new Phoenix-like society can arise from the ashes.

Nearly all the petty segregation has already been set aside in that country. There are still remaining problems, such as with respect to the Group Areas Act that has to go. But already more and more grey areas are appearing.

Second, there is the constitutional challenges. Municipally, there are now mayors and councillors of all colours. Nationally, there is a tripartite Parliament, albeit without black representation. That has to change, too.

Measures have been taken to ensure a role for all South Africans in the executive branch of government, witness the national council that has been established. This is admittedly imperfect but it is not a lot different, say, from the situation that existed in the United States a generation ago.

I have never met a South African of any colour, and I have met many, whom I did not like. I have a great admiration for the people of good will of this embattled country who are trying to resolve their problems while having to put up with terrorism at home and misguided sanctions imposed from abroad, not to mention the existence of certain unfriendly neighbouring states liberally supplied with Soviet weaponry.

In Canada, we should be encouraging visits and exchanges between ourselves and South Africa so that we can learn more about each other and each other's problems. We should trade with and invest in South Africa. That will make change come about easier in that country. We should set a good example by putting our own house in order. There is some room for improvement on that score, even in Canada.

I find some issues difficult to understand, for example, the Japanese treatment of its citizens of Korean origin who were originally brought over there as slave labour during the war. We are remarkably quiet on that issue. When the Government of France sends troops to New Caledonia, we do not hear too much from the Government of Canada. When there is a slaughter of 1,000 Dinka tribesmen in the Sudan, there is a small write-up of one paragraph on page 16 of the newspaper and there is not much said by the Government of Canada. Yet it seems that there is no condemnation too severe when it comes to South Africa. That is something that I cannot understand. This country has made a great effort to put things right, an effort that has not been made in other parts of the world.

With this presentation this afternoon, I do not expect to change everyone's view overnight, because there is a lot of learning to be done. There is too much misinformation around. What I hope will come out of this debate today is that people will start to think a little more than they have in the past. I hope that they will think positively and constructively in order that we can take the action to ensure that South Africa can be welcomed back into the family of nations as soon as possible.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this most misguided motion. The misguided nature of the motion was only equalled by the misguided speech that we just heard. The motion itself speaks about the concern for the less well off citizens. The people whom we are most concerned about in South Africa today cannot be regarded as citizens, because they do not have the rights of citizens. The laws in that country deny them the rights of citizens. Therefore, the motion itself is badly worded as well as misdirected.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) talks about the hardships that sanctions will impose upon poor people. He talked about the discouragement of tourism. The question that perhaps we should face is, does tourism help the poorest of the poor in Third World countries, or rather does it not encourage an elite to scoop up the beauty and the wealth of those countries and make them available to wealthy people from the first world who can take advantage of it, and a few people from the Third World who are lucky if they can get those jobs mentioned by the Hon. Member as chambermaids or servants, servants to others in their own country? I do not think that tourism is the answer for Third World countries. That is not the type of development that is needed.

The Hon. Member talked about agriculture. What type of agriculture did the Hon. Member talk about? Agriculture producing food for other peoples rather than themselves; producing food on farms and ranches that are not owned by blacks but by a white supremacist class that has put apartheid in place and is keeping it in place. They are the people whom the Hon. Member purports to be concerned about in this motion.

The motion itself is most ill-advised, and it reflects a tragic misunderstanding of the real situation in Africa. It reflects the very real success of the past two ambassadors from South Africa to Canada. Last September, the present Ambassador, Johannes De Klerk, said in an interview that South Africa is "in the process of abolishing the last remnants of apartheid". What a lie that is. He stated that that would come "the day we decide on a new constitution, because the Government has already said all the black people living in South Africa must have political rights". The Government does not state what political rights. It does not say that blacks will have the same political rights as the white minority. The Government just states that they will have a few specific political rights.

Mr. De Klerk also said, "Neither the details of how minority rights—with whites making up one of those minorities—will be protected nor how they will affect the political rights of blacks have been worked out". The details have not been worked out. It is just a minor thing, Mr. Speaker. Mr. De Klerk also stated, "We've acknowledged that racial discrimination based on the colour of somebody's skin is wrong, and that white political domination must disappear". He was reluctant, however, to put any kind of time-frame on when it could happen. It will happen sometime in the 21st or perhaps the 22nd century. There are people in South Africa today who are violently opposed to any change.

As the Hon. Member has stated, it is wrong to say that sanctions propose opposition to change. It is the very suggestion that there should be change that has aroused that opposition to change. There are people in South Africa who have put those vicious apartheid laws in place, and will do everything they can to maintain them. Far from South Africa moving to dismantle apartheid, a couple of months ago we saw this Bill of theirs that was euphemistically entitled "The Promotion of Orderly Politics Bill". It banned within South Africa all organizations that were seeking to work against apartheid, and all organizations that were seeking to work non-violently. As the Reverend Allan Boesak of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches stated: "This is an illegitimate Government that deserves no authority and does not have it, that deserves no obedience and must not get it".

The Reverend Khoza Mgojo, President of the Methodist Church of South Africa, stated: "The South African Government wants no non-violent actions. That was proved today. The South African Government is the enemy of any non-violent or peaceful demonstration in this country and that will be the message to the people".

When South Africa banned the 17 non-violent organizations that were working against apartheid, leaders from the major Christian churches stated in a letter: "We believe that the Government, in its actions over recent years, but especially by last week's action, has chosen a path for the future which will lead to violence, bloodshed and instability". These are the leaders of Christian Churches who for years have been attempting to work within that system to get some change that would grant those political rights for the blacks talked about by the Hon. Member.

This is the time when we should be stepping up sanctions and not downgrading them. We can look at the actions of South Africa in destabilizing neighbouring countries of Mozambique and Angola where our best efforts to try to provide some type of development assistance for Mozambique, one of the poorest nations on the face of the earth, is destabilized by a South African financed rebel organization that is fighting a war against development.

If the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members want to know the real situation in South Africa, I encourage them to read a March 8, 1988 column by Michael Valpy published in The Globe and Mail. The article states:

> What is the reality of South Africa?
> The pillars and foundations of apartheid remain firmly in place. Its pillars are the Population Registration Act, the Group Areas Act, the constitutional mechanisms that ensure white control over all key areas of national political life, and the national disfranchisement of blacks.
> The Population Registration Act requires all South Africans to be racially classified at birth. It determines where they may live, be educated, be treated when sick and buried at death.
> The Group Areas Act specifies what residential districts may be occupied by which racial groups. The act is not fading away through lack of enforcement.
> South Africa's National Party Government has vowed repeatedly that it will never be abrogated. The group areas police have recently been reactivated and are again busy at work in the cities, looking for people of the wrong race living in the wrong neighbourhoods.

The article continues:

> There is no national political power for blacks. The Government takes visitors—from Canada, among other places—to meet members of municipal councils in black townships, introducing them as elected representatives who can speak for black South Africans.
> It is seldom, if at all, explained to visitors that only about 5 per cent of the municipal electorate goes to the polls, that the councils have virtually no power, that they are widely believed to be corrupt and collaborators of Pretoria, that forthcoming elections to racially mixed regional councils have been strongly criticized as sham political vehicles for blacks.

• (1730)

Mr. Speaker, the situation in South Africa has not improved; it has deteriorated. There have been a few "sham" changes made on the facade of apartheid, but the structure of apartheid remains intact. Canada should be taking a stronger position against it, not a weaker one, and I know that all Members, once they have had a chance to think about this, will want to vote against that vicious system.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, apartheid is an odious system of racial discrimination that is an integral part of the very constitution of South Africa. Apartheid not only determines where people may sit in the bus, which bench they can use or which movie theatres they can go to. It is the systematic repression, under-development and exploitation of the majority of the population of South Africa. It forms the basis of national policy on education and health, and it also has the effect of regrouping a large number of citizens in geographical areas that are, for the most part, arbitrarily designated. It is also characterized—and this is the most important point—by the way it totally deprives the majority of all political rights, so that the majority cannot use the political process to change the situation.

South Africa is the only country where this repressive system of racial discrimination is legislated. Canada raises its voice in protest whenever and wherever human rights are violated, but South Africa has put itself in a different class altogether. Since its citizens espouse values that are diametrically opposed, Canada has no choice but to take a stand against apartheid with all the means at its disposal.

When it started to exercise pressure with a view to the peaceful dismantling of apartheid, Canada immediately made two decisions. First, if its action against apartheid was to have any real weight, this country had to have a clear view of the position it would take as a last resort. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) clearly indicated that Canada was prepared to apply total sanctions and to break off diplomatic relations with South Africa, once it had exhausted all other means. Second, it was decided that it would be more effective for Canada to join other countries in intensifying international pressure on apartheid than breaking off, suddenly and spectacularly, its relations with South Africa. Our ties with that country, commercial and otherwise, are not crucial enough for Canada to be able to force a change in policies through sanctions and incidental measures. To exercise any influence at all, Mr. Speaker, we must therefore join forces with other countries.

Sanctions are obviously not an end in themselves. They are only a way to exercise pressure, and that is how they should be evaluated. One can, of course, debate their effectiveness. In fact, a large number of very clear-headed opponents to apartheid in South Africa, as well as discerning public figures in other countries, have some reservations about economic sanctions.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, sanctions are among the only peaceful methods that countries have to clearly express their opposition to apartheid and to demonstrate that they are prepared to go beyond mere speeches.

To the average South African, sanctions are tangible evidence that the world considers his country's system repugnant. They also have a concrete effect. All the sanctions now in place have without any doubt played a role in the growing number of private sector decisions to withdraw investments in an increasingly unstable system. Sanctions add to the costs and difficulties of maintaining apartheid.

Black South African leaders have called for sanctions. Thousands of black South Africans have voted for effective international measures with the only means at their disposal: strikes, rent boycotts and demonstrations. They are also concerned with the immediate and future consequences of sanctions. However, their first priority is freedom.

As for exports, we have forbidden the delivery of products that contribute to apartheid. Regarding imports, we have emphasized products that are most important for the South African business community. These measures have cut in half our trade with South Africa. The other measures we have taken affect the South Africans who can afford to travel abroad, government representatives and large South African corporations.

Nevertheless, we recognize that sanctions do have an impact on the victims of apartheid. Even so, this is a price that many black South Africans seem prepared to pay as part of the pressure to end a system that systematically deprives them of their most basic rights. And this price is very small compared to what the great majority of the country always pays in the form of unemployment and poverty directly related to apartheid.

South Africa sets itself in a different class altogether. Apartheid is a unique system of racial prejudices enshrined in the Constitution. This deliberate inequality under the Constitution is all the more scandalous in a hypocritical society which maintains that it respects the values of Western democracies and free societies. It should be pointed out that South Africa itself imposes on its neighbours sanctions and trade restrictions that have more impact than the obstacles set up against it.

Canada's policy also includes scholarships for poor South Africans, support for NGOs, aid to victims of apartheid, a code of ethics for Canadian companies doing business in South Africa and other measures. Together with the sanctions, they are a package that clearly shows Canada's commitment to change in South Africa. Were they not combined with sanctions, the other measures would be incomplete. We now see signs of a growing malaise in South Africa. That country's government is spending more and more money on propaganda. It is trying to convince the world that it is making basic changes, although they are only superficial. These attempts show that sanctions have an effect.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that economic measures have given rise to a vigorous operation aimed at circumventing sanctions or lessening their impact. This is an understandable and predictable reaction on the part of the South African government. Its activities in this respect should not be ignored.

At a meeting in Canada last October, Commonwealth heads of State adopted the Okanagan action program on Southern Africa. They set up a Committee of Foreign Ministers, chaired by The Right Hon. Joe Clark, to ensure that the program would take off with full force. As far as sanctions are concerned, the Committee will concentrate in the coming months on expanding, tightening and intensifying their application. The Committee held its first meeting in Lusaka last February, and will be meeting soon in Canada this summer.

In Lusaka, the Committee approved the terms of reference and scope of two major studies on sanctions, aimed at shedding light on new trade avenues, accounting practices and delivery routes, and South Africa's relations with the international financial community. The Committee will also try to gather concrete evidence of such practices and will examine specific measures to ensure enforcement of the compulsory embargo on arms shipments.

Sanctions are applied for two reasons, Mr. Speaker: The first is economic and the second is psychological. Measures taken by Canada and other countries have had an impact on both levels. They have sent a clear message of disapproval to the defenders of apartheid and of encouragement to its opponents.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the objective of the international community is to promote real change that can form the basis for justice and prosperity in South Africa. We are trying to change a devastating social system, not to paralyze an economic power, and we hope the system is changed before violence plunges South Africa into total chaos.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have an opportunity to speak against this very misleading motion. The motion of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of rescinding two categories of sanctions against South Africa namely (a) those which impact most less well off citizens (b) those rendered inapplicable by recent progress towards the dismantlement of apartheid.

We have been given by the Hon. Member the standard phoney story, whether he understands it or not, that South Africa, the Government and the people of South Africa, for the most part, are trying to remove apartheid. That is a lot of nonsense.

In the end of the 1940s, about 1948, when the Nationalist Party came to power in South Africa, they brought apartheid in as law. Apartheid did not drop on them from the moon or the sky, something they are struggling to free themselves from. They created it. They are not struggling to remove it. They are struggling to disguise it but not to remove it.

They have got a very good reason for keeping apartheid. Apartheid is the key to slave labour. It is the key to the slave labour of the great majority of the people of South Africa, the black people. Without that, the white people there would have to pay more for their labour. They would not have such an affluent life on the backs of the black people who must struggle in crowded townships, many of them, to get jobs outside the townships, because they are forced by military force, by guns and whips and tanks and tear gas, they are forced to live in those townships. Some of them are allowed to come and work under great restrictions in the cities controlled by the white people at wages controlled by the white people.

We are told it is the poor whites only, like the locomotive driver or the people at the bottom of the union ladder, who want apartheid. That also is nonsense. When people have tried to organize multiracial unions, the Government and the police have smashed them. When the black people have organized their own labour federation, 750,000 workers, the Government has banned it, outlawed it. The Government only believes in unions to the extent that it can manipulate white membership against the black people.

The Member for Western Arctic did not seriously expect us to pay attention to his motion because he did not explain in the motion what were these two categories of sanctions that should be removed. He did get around to it in the last three or four minutes of his remarks, and he talked then about the kind of services that are provided by desperately poor people in Third World countries for the benefit of people from our countries. The export of food in a country where millions of children are starving for lack of food, not because the country doesn't grow food but because they are not allowed to eat it, and the service to well-heeled tourists.

In return for that, what he did not bother to tell us, South Africa wants to import things, and therefore our Government has, for example, banned the sale of sensitive equipment such as computers to the South African police and Armed Forces. If the Hon. Member says that those computers and the Armed Forces impact on the black people, that is true, for sure. They do impact and we could see the impact on television until South Africa banned the freedom of the press and the freedom of the media. We would still see the police, with their computer guided equipment, impacting on the black people if South Africa dared to have freedom of the media there.

There is an embargo on imports of South African arms to Canada. Good. South Africa is becoming far too militarized for the good of its own people, all its people, or the good of its neighbours, and should not be encouraged to be an arms peddlar.

There is a ban on the imports of Namibian uranium. South Africa is an international thief. It has gone in by violence and robbed Namibia of its uranium and many other valuable metals and stolen the proceeds of the sale. The United Nations declared long ago that Namibia should have its independence from South Africa, but South Africa despises the decision of the world community through the United Nations and continues to rob the people of Namibia for the sake of exporting valuable minerals from that country. When the people of Namibia opposed that robbery, South Africa brought in the army, called the Namibian people bandits for defending their own land and killed them or driven them out of the country.

We are asked to believe that the Botha Government wants to dismantle apartheid. They have not said that. They want to dismantle some of the little fringes of apartheid, but they do not want to change the basic purpose and system of apartheid, which is segregated labour so that a black person is not entitled in almost all cases to have the wages that a white person would have for the very same job, whether man or woman.

We are told that the people will be hurt by our sanctions, and yet those who are leaders in non-violent action, non-violent protest, speaking as black people, like Archbishop Tutu, like the Reverend Mr. Boesak, those people are silenced, as far as the Government dares, by police threats. They are not allowed to speak publicly. Their demonstrations, their public actions, are banned, and these are non-violent leaders, so that the South African Government wishes to create the impression that it is a besieged civilization, opposing invasion by violent people, because it will not permit any movement, non-violent, towards change.

One of the best things that the present Government has done has been its move in the direction of sanctions against South Africa. They have not been successful in bringing down apartheid yet, it is true. For one thing, the Government has only gone partway, in spite of the Prime Minister's promise several years ago to go the whole way. The Government keeps holding off and holding off. It is true that there are trade considerations and that the Government in Canada does not want Canada to go short if other countries are making money by selling to apartheid.

It may be that because of Britain particularly, the sanction movement will not succeed in its direct economic effect on South Africa. But to the extent that the Government of Canada, backed by thousands and tens of thousands of the people of Canada, backed by the great majority of the people of Canada, has supported the idea of sanctions, at least there is a message given of hope to the black people and the coloured people of South Africa that is a message of warning to the white slave owners.

• (1750)

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this topic today. I believe that one of the contentions of the motion is that recent progress towards dismantlement of apartheid has rendered inapplicable some of the sanctions Canada has imposed on South Africa. In spite of the very passionate speech by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), I do not believe there have been major reforms in South Africa. However, contrary to what my friend from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) said, I do believe that the sanctions we imposed impact upon the poorest people in South Africa. I favour a continuance of our policy of moderate sanctions while leaving the door open to be involved closely with South Africa as the situation changes.

It is true that we now have the phenomenon of the Government of South Africa engaging in an international campaign to try to convince the world that it is prepared to let the black majority share in political power. However, it has not addressed the basic issues and has not demonstrated that it is prepared seriously to contemplate negotiations with the majority towards the creation of a non-racial representative Government.

Apartheid is a system which attempts to preserve all political and economic power in South Africa for the 15 per cent of the population who are of European descent. The theory was that the different races should develop separately. By pretending that the non-white majority, 85 per cent of the population, were not really South African, the Government of South Africa attempted to rationalize the operation of a whites only parliamentary system. The Government went so far as to declare approximately six million South Africans to be citizens of totally uneconomic and geographically fragmented "homelands", which it declared to be independent. For all others, the South African Government introduced rigid restrictions based on race to determine where people could live. Similar restrictions were imposed on the use of schools, hospitals and all other public services.

I assume that the motion under consideration supposes that the minor relaxations in the application of some of these race-based restrictions constitutes significant reform. Relaxation of restrictions has, however, been a minor phenomenon, usually in the large cities which are frequented by foreigners. For almost all the population of South Africa, race continues to determine living standards, where one can live, go to school, to work, or be treated for health problems.

On the political level, the assumption may be that a proposal by the Government of South Africa to establish a national council with only a minority from the 85 per cent of the population which is not white somehow constitutes reform. However, we should note that it is only a proposal so far. It also excludes from participation most of the individuals whom most of the population regard as their leaders through a clause which disqualifies anyone convicted of what many regard as political crimes. Additionally, the majority of members would be appointed by the Government, presumably to represent the white minority or its interests. It is not surprising that the proposal has been rejected by all significant black leaders, including Chief Buthelezi who said that he would consider participating only if Nelson Mandela were released and allowed to participate, and if the bans on the ANC and other organizations were lifted.

Indeed, recent messages out of South Africa are negative and appear to be clear evidence of an unwillingness to face the prospects of real change. The Government acted to place even further restrictions on the peaceful political activities of opposition organizations and a number of individuals. It acted to detain church leaders who tried to deliver a letter to the President asking him to rescind these political bannings. It introduced legislation that could put in jeopardy international funding of organizations that oppose apartheid. I do not believe these are the actions of a Government which is serious about facing fundamental change. The majority of South Africans remain without political rights and continue to suffer gross economic and social inequities.

In Nassau, in 1985, the Commonwealth heads of government identified five criteria by which South Africa would be judged. The authorities must declare that apartheid will be dismantled and take specific and meaningful action to do so. They must terminate the existing state of emergency. All those imprisoned and detained for their opposition to apartheid, including Nelson Mandela, must be released unconditionally. The political bans on the ANC and other political Parties must be lifted. Finally, in the conditions these actions would create, and in the context of a suspension of violence, a process of dialogue must be initiated across lines of colour, politics and religion, with a view to establishing a non-racial and representative government.

Action towards satisfying these five conditions are the criteria of progress and the test of any claims by the Government of South Africa that it is serious about reform. While I am aware of the major problems that can occur as they proceed towards dismantling apartheid, I am concerned that some regard as substantial movement the minor tinkering which has so far taken place. The basic realities of the situation in South Africa are so stark, however, and the fundamental injustices so clear, that I am confident Canadians will continue to demand a policy in South Africa which reflects Canadian values.

Now is the time for the Government of South Africa to act to bring about a peaceful settlement. Progress remains possible while there remains some willingness to compromise. If more time is lost, inevitably the passions of racial hatred will continue to grow and the future of South Africa may be too grotesque to contemplate. The goal of Canadian policy must be to continue to press for real reform and real negotiations now, while a prosperous, humane and just South Africa remains an attainable goal.

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I would like to make some comments about Motion No. 89 moved by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

The Government of Canada's policy on South Africa is to do everything possible to help avert a disaster. South Africa is a bitterly divided and violent country which risks a devastating conflagration. The security clamp-down on the vast majority of the people, the inequalities based on race, and the refusal by the Government of South Africa to accept the requirement for fundamental change, have created hardship, disaffection and discontent. If not positively dealt with, the frustrations arising from these conditions will sooner or later spill over again into ever escalating violence.

Canada has been at the forefront of international efforts to pressure South Africa to change course and chart a new future in which all South Africans can play a full role in the nation's social, economic and political life. It is a new future that will also allow Namibia its rightful independence, and South Africa's neighbours a chance to develop unhindered by South African military and economic destabilization.

To impress upon South Africa our conviction that real progress must be made urgently in achieving fundamental change, we have imposed a series of strong economic and other sanctions unilaterally and in concert with the Commonwealth and the UN. These measures are important and they are working. They are also a concrete expression of Canada's strong condemnation of the system of apartheid and the repressive actions taken to maintain that system. Those actions include the imposition of Draconian additional restrictions on the peaceful activities of anti-apartheid organizations and individuals, introduction of legislation that could restrict foreign funding of anti-apartheid activities, detention without trial of thousands of South Africans for their opposition to apartheid, and the increasingly repressive censorship regulations.

Equally important in Canada's policy are positive measures which we take to assist the victims and opponents of apartheid. Programs to provide support, both psychological and material, to help overcome additional suffering imposed on those who dare to speak out and try to bring about change, are essential for humanitarian reasons. Even more important, they are a practical demonstration to those involved in the struggle to change South Africa that the world supports their cause and cares about their faith.

I see the time has expired, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the Order is dropped from the Order Paper.

Pursuant to an order made earlier this day, the House will now resume consideration of third reading of Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime), be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to comment on this important piece of legislation before the House. Before I get into the text of my speech I want to comment on today's process. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was very gracious in his comments. He indicated at the outset that he appreciated the co-operation which the opposition Parties had given him and the Government in the development of this Bill. Today we are debating the last stage of the Bill, third reading, before it goes to the Senate.

Having said that, the Minister of Justice went on to introduce the final stage of the Bill knowing two things. First, the House traditionally recognizes that Members of Parliament carry on their duties and responsibilities not only here in the Chamber but also in other jurisdictions, not the least of which are the standing committees of the House of Commons. One of the most active standing committees and one of the most critical in the administration of justice is, of course, the Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. That committee is travelling today and holding hearings in other parts of Canada on important matters.

There is an understanding among Members that you cannot be in a committee and in the House of Commons at the same time. It is a physical impossibility. There has, therefore, been an understanding that a committee will not sit when a Bill in which it would normally be interested is before the House. In the alternative, there would be ample notice given to allow the spokespersons from the various political Parties to have a chance to be in the House to participate in the debate.

That is one tradition or common courtesy which was broken in this case. There is a second. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) worked hard with the Minister of Justice and his colleagues on the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. He worked to develop a piece of legislation in the best interests of victims of crime. We are debating that Bill today. The Minister of Justice recognized that co-operation. The Hon. Member for Burnaby is recognized by Canadians from all parts of the country as an outstanding Justice critic.

He was unable to be here today because he was participating in a committee of the House of Commons, and the Government knew that. Nevertheless, the Government decided to bring before the House legislation which he had worked hard to develop in co-operation with the Minister of Justice, in spite of the fact that he could not be here for this last stage of the legislative procedure.

I am not complaining particularly or saying that this is terribly unfair. However, it certainly indicates an insensitivity and indicates that the Government is prepared to ignore tradition, procedures, and practices. I simply wanted to make that case.

The crime victim in Canadian society is victimized first by the offender and then by our justice process. Remedial action is long overdue. Every year almost 700 Canadian families are victimized by a murder, 2,500 lose someone to a drunk driver, and 100,000 other Canadians suffer lasting emotional trauma as a result of crime. Many more lose property or have their homes entered.

I understand that process, having been subject to a break and entry in my own home recently.

For these Canadians there is rarely any assistance to recover from the shock, fear, and anger. They experience delays in return of property—if there is any return at all—a lack of information about the investigation, and occasionally a summons to a court room where they are considered to be virtually a nobody.

Only one in 50 victims of violence receives any form of compensation at all from the state. Only one Canadian community in 100 has practical and emotional assistance organized for victims of common crimes. One in 25 has a rape crisis centre or shelter for battered wives.

This is not news to federal and provincial Ministers responsible for justice. Few have denied it, most have lamented it, and all have studied the recommendations of numerous reports. However, legislation has not been introduced or basic services established.

• (1805)

One Justice Minister was not content with this talk. Manitoba's former Justice Minister, Roland Penner, introduced a justice for victims of crime Bill which would have provided a coherent response to victims' needs for assistance and recognition. The Bill would have placed Manitoba among world leaders in recognizing the plight of victims of crime. Manitoban crime victims would have been informed promptly about remedies such as counselling, restitution from the offender, and compensation from the state.

I only hope, Mr. Speaker, that the change of government in Manitoba will not hinder the implementation and progress of this incredibly outstanding initiative taken by the former Government in Manitoba.

Victims would be kept informed of the investigation concerning the crime of which they were a victim. They would have their property returned when recovered and told how to prevent further victimization. Services would be created to help them cope with the longer-lasting problems of fear, anger, and sleeplessness. Judges and lawyers would consider the victims' needs, particularly when ordering restitution.

The Bill introduced by Manitoba's Roland Penner would achieve this by establishing a permanent committee which would use a victim assistance fund to promote specific principles of justice for victims. The inclusion of two victims on the committee would keep the innovations focused on the victims' needs.

You will recall, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that in 1985 the United Nations General Assembly unanimously adopted a detailed declaration on victims' rights, calling on countries for more effective measures to prevent crime and basic programs to assist victims.

The General Assembly, like other international bodies of which most of us are aware, stresses that victims have personal interests that are affected by decisions of the criminal courts. Victims must be given access to justice and fair treatment.

Reparation from the offender to the victim must be given priority. Services must be provided to help victims recover.

Officials concerned with national policies on victims in Britain, Switzerland, and India are already studying the Manitoba Bill to which I referred earlier, which is the first to implement the United Nations resolution in a local jurisdiction with a committee which has real teeth. In other words, it would have real powers to act in this very critical matter dealing with victims of various crimes. However, it covers only those principles that relate to provincial jurisdiction, and even then it does not deal with crime prevention or state compensation.

This leads us to ask what the federal Minister can do besides talk on the initiative which we are discussing here today. Most victims first contact the police when in a serious situation. Any action to help victims should start there. The federal Government's responsibility for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police gives it direct influence over one in three police officers in Canada in the best regarded police force in the world.

There is no question that the RCMP is the most respected police force anywhere in the world and one of which all Canadians can feel very proud. As a western Member of Parliament I know that it is traditional to have the Royal Canadian Mounted Police represent us in terms of law and order. Whenever there is a special event to honour an officer who has carried out his or her duties above and beyond the normal call of duty, the response from the community is overwhelming. I am proud to be able to say that and to be part of a Parliament which has seen fit to have such an outstanding police force.

The federal Government could set an example of how police should respond to victims by establishing public guidelines for the RCMP. These might specify how the officer would give the victim information on services and remedies available as well as how the victim will be informed as the investigation continues.

At the National Police College, where senior officers from Canada and abroad are educated on strategies for the future, the police leaders for the next decade could be committed to treating victims as people, too.

In 30 U.S. states, the judge is required to consider restitution and usually will study a report on the losses suffered by the victim.

One could go on and on to talk about the need for seeking ways and means of offering justice for the victims of crimes. This legislation is a step in the right direction.

As the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has said on a number of occasions, it is a step in the right direction, and we are pleased to be associated with it.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby was a master of the content of the Bill, having been part of the drafting process. He was almost intimately knowledgeable about every aspect of the Bill. He indicated to me that had he been here it would have been quite appropriate to have one Member speak this afternoon. Since he was unable to be here, some of my colleagues have seen fit to make appropriate comments with regard to the development of the legislation.

With that, I will simply say that we are in favour of the Bill and believe it is a useful step in the right direction. We support it enthusiastically.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.12 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

The House adjourned at 6.12 p.m.

HEALTH

DEATHS AND POISONINGS CAUSED BY DRUGS AND FOOD

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, during the past weeks, there have been reports in the media on deaths caused by the freon contained in food products packaged in aerosol containers, and also about babies born with congenital defects attributed to Accutane and anti-psoriasis drugs, prescribed by dermatologists and general practitioners.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are concerned. Their fears are justified because they wonder whether they should trust their doctors when they prescribe their medication, and they also wonder whether they should trust their supermarkets to sell them food that is safe to eat, and they wonder whether they should trust the Government that is supposed to protect them with its legislation and thus prevent food poisoning or serious illnesses as a result of ingesting medication or food products.

Mr. Speaker, how long will Canadians have to wait for the Government to react with stricter directives on food and drugs? Do we need a higher rate of birth defects before the Government decides to react?

HEALTH

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS—VOLUNTEERS' WORK TO ASSIST RESEARCH

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, this week thousands of Canadians are banding together to fight multiple sclerosis, a potentially crippling disease of the central nervous system. At least 50,000 Canadians have MS, a disease which, as yet, has no known cause, no cure, and no effective treatment.

Some have called MS "Canada's disease" since our prevalence rate is among the highest in the world. Recognizing this, Canadians, through the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada, are working to conquer MS. All across the country this month volunteers are joining forces to raise $2.3 million for MS research and services for those who have MS.

MS research is making progress and Canadian researchers are among the world leaders. Researchers at the University of British Columbia, under the direction of Dr. Donald Paty, are pace-setters in using a device called MRI to diagnose and follow the progress of MS. In Toronto, Drs. Roder and Dunn have cloned the gene for a substance that may be extremely important in understanding how the nervous system works.

The contributions that Canadians make during this month-long campaign will be vital to continuing this very necessary research. I urge the Government and all Canadians to support the MS carnation campaign generously.

CHEMICAL WEAPONS

UNITED STATES' PRODUCTION OF BINARY AGENTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the use of chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq conflict has once again focused world attention on the horrific consequences of their use. Canadians will not soon forget the terrible images of men, women, and children lying dead, of mothers and fathers huddled over the frozen bodies of their children, all victims of a silent and unseen weapon.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) recognized the true nature of these weapons when he told this House last Friday, "There are hideous weapons in the chemical weapons field on which we are trying to make progress". In light of the Minister's remarks I urge the Government to reconsider its misguided and unqualified support of the United States' production of a new regime of chemical weapons, namely, binary agents.

Real progress toward an international convention banning chemical weapons will be encouraged if the Government of Canada now takes a strong stand against these new agents of death.

NATIONAL FOREST WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF FORESTRY SECTOR TO ALBERTA ECONOMY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, this week marks National Forest Week in Canada. When people think of Alberta they think of oil, cattle, agriculture, and now forestry. For two years the forestry sector of Alberta has attracted over $1 billion in projects being considered.

In 1985 there were 59 large firms employing 18,200 people. The Alberta Government plans to double the output of the forestry industry by 1991.

Western diversification is working. It has funded several forestry projects in the West.

We now have the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program for resource industries, an incentive of 30 per cent, up to $10 million a year per company, for exploration expenses by issuing flow-through shares. Mr. Speaker, the Government does care.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLEGED INJUSTICE AGAINST POOR PEOPLE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on the weekend I had a chance to meet a number of community organizations involved in sports, social, cultural and recreational activities. These groups have been accustomed to submit job creation projects for the Jobs Strategy, Section 38 and the new program that was announced recently.

All were unanimous, Mr. Speaker, in condemning the federal Government's attitude.

Mr. Speaker, the federal Government provides, in its criteria, that a person receiving welfare benefits will be allowed to work only once in these Jobs Strategy programs. After six months, that person is not entitled to be hired a second time under these programs and is put back on welfare.

Mr. Speaker, everybody condemned this injustice and lack of sensitivity to the needs of the poorest and neediest in this country.

NORTHERN TAX DEDUCTION

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my pleasure with the announcement of the establishment of a commission looking into the problem of border communities seeking the northern or isolated deduction. For most of the people in border communities it is very important that whatever changes are recommended be retroactive. For people in areas most affected it is very important that any eventual benefit be applicable to the 1987 taxation year.

Given that the essence of this problem of northern deductions has been the perceived absence of equity, it is important that every effort be made to restore equity. As a critical step I urge the commission to look favourable upon retroactivity so that no one feels they have lost.

NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO FOREST FIRE—EVACUATION OF RESIDENTS BY CABOOSE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, this is National Forest Week. Unfortunately, however, it is also a week in which forest fires are tearing through regions of Manitoba and northwestern Ontario.

With respect to northwestern Ontario, the fire known as Kenora 14 proceeded through an area where many people in my riding have camps, Malachi, Ontario and Ottermere, Ontario. I want to say how pleased I believe they were with the way the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources handled the fire, and the way CNR co-operated in evacuating people from Malachi and Ottermere.

I might also mention that CN used a caboose to evacuate these people. I have been asked by those who would like the railways to keep the caboose to let the House take note of the fact that in this instance, and some others where people have been injured, cabooses have made possible the evacuation of people from these areas and from difficult situations. It is one more reason to keep the caboose.

SOCIALISTS

PHIL EDMONSTON OR BOB WHITE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the leader of the socialist party how he can reconcile statements by Phil Edmonston, the defender of car owners' interests in Quebec, who is upset about the position taken by the big labour unions who are against foreign car imports. Bob White, vice-president of the socialist party, is also against foreign car imports. On the other hand, Mr. Edmonston who is also a member of the socialist party, is in favour of foreign imports because it is better for the consumer.

Is the leader of the socialist party going to ask Mr. Edmonston to keep quiet? That is what we would like to know. Who is the socialist leader going to smother with the smoke from the Cuban cigars he smokes when the blinds are drawn: Bob White or Phil Edmonston?

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

BILL C-114—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on February 24, 1988, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) introduced in the House Bill C-114, the conflict of interest Bill.

I know it is extremely unfair to quote the Prime Minister by using his own words, but I will do it anyway. In a press release he sent that day, he said:

> The Bill, which represents the Government's proposals in respect of conflict of interest, affects the rights and privileges of all Parliamentarians. It is a landmark piece of legislation . . .

He further added in a letter to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner):

> I believe it is in the public interest that consideration of these proposals should proceed expeditiously so that the Bill may be enacted and proclaimed as soon as is prudently possible,

Two months later, the Bill has yet to be debated in the House. So much for expeditious, so much for the Prime Minister's words.

POLITICAL PARTIES

INCLUSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS IN CONSTITUTION—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the right to own property is fundamental to millions of Canadians who were disappointed when the former Liberal Government ignored property rights during the 1981 constitutional debate.

Now the House of Commons has passed a Private Member's Motion which calls for the inclusion of property rights. This is a victory for those of us who have supported this proposal. It is also encouraging for the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) parliamentary reform proposals that new status and importance can be given to Private Members' Motions. I hope this resolution will now hasten the constitutional reform process.

However, one fact must be observed by all Canadians. Because the New Democratic Party favours nationalization, state farms, and intervention in the economy, the NDP is opposed to the right to own private property.

This week, every NDP member in the House rose to vote against property rights. Is this in the best interest of farm families, small businesses, and of ordinary Canadians? No, it is not. For the NDP, common sense appears to have taken a back seat to philosophic socialism. Now we see the NDP for what they really are, pathetic—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

NORTHWESTEL

SALES OF COMPUTERS—EFFECT ON DEALERS IN WESTERN ARCTIC

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, computer dealers in my constituency are concerned about what they consider to be unfair competition in the field of micro computer sales from the Crown corporation NorthwesTel which is really in the telephone and telecommunications business.

They feel particularly vulnerable when sales to other Government Departments or Crown agencies are involved.

It is interesting to note that in Alberta the provincial Crown corporation Alberta Government Telephones, following similar complaints, has stopped selling "stand-alone" computers and peripherals.

Perhaps NorthwesTel ought to take the lead from AGT in this matter.

AIRPORTS

SYDNEY AIRPORT—RECLASSIFICATION OF CATEGORY LEVEL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House a matter which concerns the Sydney Airport in Nova Scotia. The Department of Transport has reduced the CFR level of service at the Sydney Airport from a category 6 level to a category 5 level. The Department believes there is not enough air traffic to justify a category 6 level.

The downscaling of the airport will mean there will be a downscale of employees at this airport. These employees include firefighters and safety personnel. I call upon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to assure the House that this downscaling will not result in the loss of any jobs to those workers at the Sydney Airport, as well as to ensure that safety standards at this airport will not be affected in any way.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION—REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS BE TABLED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is clear the Minister of Communications is prepared to sacrifice Canada's film industry and cave in to the demands of U.S. movie mogul, Jack Valenti, in order to save the Prime Minister's trade deal.

As this legislation is pointless without the regulations, and as the Americans say they have a secret deal with the Minister, can the Prime Minister remove the cloak of secrecy around this entire film legislation deal? Will he insist that his Minister, to save his face, table not only the legislation but all the regulations that will attend that legislation, and indicate that we intend to capture part of our Canadian market?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications fully responded to this question, and others like it, yesterday. She is going to be discussing the new film distribution policy with representatives of the Canadian film industry, I think it is tomorrow. An announcement is going to be made at that time.

There is no secrecy involved. The secrecy was that during the last 40 years the Liberal Governments of those days did absolutely nothing—

Mr. Gauthier: Sit down!

Mr. Crosbie: —in connection with the motion picture industry in Canada, absolutely nothing, whether it was secret or was not secret. That is the problem.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, if this Minister was less facetious and a little bit more honest, and would stop trying to rewrite history—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put her question.

Mrs. Finestone: My Tory colleagues agree in this instance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADIAN FILMS' SHARE OF MARKET

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that Australian films take up 20 per cent of its market, British films take up 26 per cent of the British market, Italian films, take up 44 per cent of the Italian market and French films take up 46 per cent of the French market. Canadian films take up only 3 per cent of our market. Historically, this is a sad situation.

I wonder if the Minister, who is responding to the question, will ensure on behalf of the Minister of Communications that there is the potential and that he will ensure the potential for recapture of 15 per cent of the market for Canadian film distribution.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, certainly the Canadian film industry is an industry that needs assistance and we have established a $165 million fund to assist the Canadian feature film industry. Prize winning films are being produced with those funds. It is quite possible they might get the scenario for another film from last week's activities, which certainly would permit another epic, something like Gone With the Wind, which is what the Hon. Member and her colleagues seem to want to have happen with respect to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

• (1420)

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am so glad that the Minister of—what are you, international funny?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rossi: International clown.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put her question.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just brought to our attention the importance of the development of the film industry. He forgot to add that the Minister of Finance just cut the wings out from under it with the cutting of the capital cost allowance.

The Minister said that she plans a tailored in and made for Canada film distribution policy, just like she said she planned a made in Canada protection for the cultural industries, which she did not do—she broke her promise.

What is the Minister doing today—not tomorrow, Mr. Minister—selling out the Canadian film distribution industry like she sold out the Canadian cultural industry before? She is meeting them today. What is she selling them out on?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should reconsider. The Minister has said that she is meeting with the Canadian film industry tomorrow—

Mrs. Finestone: Today.

Mr. Crosbie: —today or tomorrow, whichever—

Mr. Gauthier: You don't know, John, sit down.

Mr. Crosbie: It is tomorrow; once again I am right. She is meeting with the industry. She is making an announcement then. If the Hon. Member then has any questions, surely she can put them about the policy.

I can give the same details that were given yesterday with respect to the $165 million fund; in publishing we increased assistance by $65 million. We established a public lending rights program. There is a $25 million sound recording development program, and copyright legislation which has been stopped by Liberal Senators in the Senate, and interfered with.

Our record is a good one. We are not afraid to defend it. In fact, we are delighted to have the opportunity.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

FREON—REQUEST THAT PAM BE REMOVED FROM STORE SHELVES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I direct my question to the Minister of Labour who, I believe, will respond on his behalf.

The Minister will know that three Ottawa area teenagers have died in the past four months after inhaling cooking sprays from the product Pam which contains freon. Yesterday an expert in the field of medical toxicology, Dr. Robert Peterson, Director of the Provincial Poison Information Centre at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario, stated that this oil spray is too dangerous to be sold to the public.

Will the Minister now act to have this product removed from the shelves, thereby lessening the hazard for Canadian consumers?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, these deaths were caused by the abuse of the product which, if it had been used according to the usual practice, would not have caused any harm to the consumers.

That being said, I have met with officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I have been informed that they have communicated with the manufacturer in order to see what can be done about the problem caused by the misuse of this product. I am informed that discussions are being planned in order to accelerate the reformulation to exclude freon.

REQUEST THAT MANUFACTURER STOP INCLUDING FREON IN PRODUCT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister who will know that the issue here is not one of use but one of abuse. The fact of the matter is that the Government of Canada is allowing a highly toxic substance to be sold on the market and that children looking for a cheap high have easy access to it.

Will the Minister do one of two things? Will he either remove this product from the market in its entirety? Or will he now do what is done in the United States, which is to order the manufacturer of this particular product to stop using the ingredient freon? Will the Minister give us an undertaking to do that forthwith on behalf of Canadian consumers?

• (1425)

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): As I have just indicated, Mr. Speaker, there are some technical discussions that are being planned with the manufacturer in order to accelerate the reformulation of the product to exclude freon. On top of that, the manufacturer has a pamphlet which indicates the dangers of misuse of such products as Pam. As the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members in the House know, there are a variety of other products that, if misused, can also cause death.

In this case the unfortunate incident was caused by misuse by teenagers, and differently from what was indicated yesterday, they could read the warning on the label of the can that indicated that if it was misused it could cause death.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION—MEMORANDUM ISSUED BY UNITED STATES PRESSURE GROUP

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday on a CBC news report an official from the Minister of Communication's Department was alleged to have said that the proposed compromise Bill on film legislation was a necessary compromise that had to be brought in as the price to pay for the trade deal.

In the memo that the U.S. lobby sent out that I referred to yesterday, and the Minister acknowledged yesterday in the House that she had read, in talking about the legislation and in collaborating with the Government, this group of American lobbyists in Canada say: "This would assist the Prime Minister with respect to the sovereignty issue in the free trade debate, the Canada-U.S. relationship issue, and the over-all question of his leadership".

Does the Prime Minister think that his Government ought to be so intimately connected to a U.S. pressure group that sees itself as aiding in his re-election?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the weakness of the position of my hon. friend was in the preface to his question where he quoted an unidentified official who, he says, was "alleged to have said". That is the preface or the premise of the hon. gentleman's question. The preface is, of course, fragile and misleading, and the conclusion is false.

We will see who needs whom in an election campaign. We will stand on our policies and with our candidates, as I am sure my hon. friend will. But I think my hon. friend has more to do than raise unsubstantiated allegations from anonymous and unidentified people. If he has a complaint or a statement to make, let him make it to an attributed spokesman, and then we will deal with it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely wish the Prime Minister would listen to the whole question and not just the preamble.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It may be funny to the Prime Minister, but in my question I was quoting from a document that the Minister has. I will quote the words again, and I ask the Prime Minister to respond. This is a document prepared by a U.S. film lobby in Canada. They say they are supporting the proposed legislation because it will aid the Prime Minister in his leadership, and it will further their interests in getting the trade deal accepted.

My question to the Prime Minister is the following. Forget the alleged official, deal with the issue that the Minister has, which is a document. Does the Prime Minister of Canada believe the Conservative Party ought to be actively collaborating with the U.S. pressure group that is working against the Canadian film industry for its own political gain? That is the question.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on a document that comes from a third party or a lobby somewhere for which I am not responsible. I believe that that document was the one that was brought to the attention of the Minister yesterday, and the Minister indicated that it was inaccurate and misleading. That is my information.

• (1430)

Perhaps more important than that, the Hon. Member asks me to forget the preamble to his question, to pay no attention to the preambles. The preambles are argumentative, vexatious, and misleading, and I can understand why he would not want Canadians to pay any attention to them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED PRESENCE OF AMERICAN LOBBYISTS IN CANADA—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is very straightforward. According to this document—it isn't my document, it is a document the Minister has in his possession—there is a group of lobbyists here in Canada, a U.S. group, that wants to work directly on this legislation to help the present Government, and this against the interests of the Canadian film industry. The question is very simple: Does the Prime Minister agree that the present Government should co-operate with a group of U.S. lobbyists?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): What a frivolous question! I am asked whether I approve of the present Government co-operating with a U.S. lobby group, while there is no proof of any link between this lobby group and the Government. I said so in English and I repeat it in French: Such statements are false, vexatious and designed not to obtain information in the House but to get you your 30 seconds in English and French on the networks this evening. I say those 30 seconds are equally false in English and in French!

PRESENCE OF FREON IN PAM—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare my question is directed to the Minister of Labour and it concerns the news that over the past four months, three young people died after inhaling the fumes of the oil contained in the product Pam. The Department of National Health and Welfare has revealed that six more youths had died previously. Let me tell you their families are not very pleased with the Minister's reply.

Considering the fact that the Government is now aware of the problem, and in order to prevent the disaster we had when the Government reacted to the mussel affair, and before any more people die, could the Minister promise the House that he will ask the manufacturers to remove the freon from this product, since it is a health hazard and may be fatal? Will you make a decision to protect the lives of our children?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe I said yesterday that the deaths of these teenagers are something we cannot tolerate. However, we must still look at the facts of the matter, even if those facts are not necessarily pleasant. What we have here is improper use of a product that, if it is used for the purpose for which it was intended, does not constitute a hazard for the consumer. However, Mr. Speaker, because we realize this is a dangerous situation, I met officials from the Department of National Health and Welfare, and I was informed that discussions are already taking place with the manufacturers to accelerate the removal of freon from the product in question.

REQUEST THAT PRODUCTS BE PLACED OUT OF REACH OF CHILDREN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. We are trying to get the Minister to be a little more aggressive in his approach to this question. Before we get reports tomorrow or the day after, that more children have made improper use of this product—and we know the problem exists—could the Minister make a formal request so that, in a matter of weeks, these products are shelved in such a way that children cannot get at them? Other hazardous products are strategically placed so that children cannot reach them. Could the Minister take action and immediately ask to have these hazardous products, which are now on the shelves, put away where children cannot get at them?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, it is unfortunate that the incident occurred. The fact remains that it happened as a result of improper use of a product by three teenagers. I agree that we cannot tolerate this kind of thing happening, as I said before, and discussions are already under way with the manufacturer to accelerate the removal of freon from the product in question.

EFFECT OF CANADA—UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Prime Minister, concerns the fact that not only are the Americans rewriting Canadian film distribution policy but also the fact that there have been sell-outs throughout the trade deal in terms of our cultural sovereignty, namely, Articles 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2012, as well as Articles 401 and 1607.

An Hon. Member: Is this the preamble?

Ms. McDonald: Throughout the free trade negotiations our cultural industries have been on the bargaining table, despite everything that the Prime Minister has said to the contrary. Perhaps the worst of the many features I have in mind in making that assertion is that contained in Article 2005, paragraph 2, which states:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this Agreement, a Party may take measures of equivalent commercial effect . . .

In other words, retaliation.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to refrain from quoting extensively, and to put her question.

Ms. McDonald: My question is the following. Does this retaliation feature in Article 2005 not make it possible for the Americans to retaliate against any film distribution policy that is going to establish an independent film industry in Canada, as well as make it possible for retaliation in other cultural industries?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I cannot see the connection between the question the Hon. Member is asking and the situation. There are a number of clauses in the agreement. She quotes Article 2004, Article 2006, and Article 2010, none of which have any relevance to the question she is asking. The free trade agreement has not yet been adopted by either country, with the result that any U.S. interests wishing to secure a change to the agreement, or wishing to block the agreement in its entirety, bring to bear on the U.S. Congress whatever lobbying pressures they can.

That is the way the system works in the U.S. It has been working that way since 1789.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, again my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it is one that concerns the general position this Government has taken in respect of our cultural industries, that being that they were not on the bargaining table.

My question, which I would ask the Prime Minister to answer, is this. Would he not agree that the articles I have cited show very clearly that all kinds of cultural industries were bargained away; that it was not just film, but included the print media? As well, the tariff elimination in this sector will also affect sound recordings.

Will the Prime Minister not come clean with Canadians and admit that we will suffer a serious loss of our cultural sovereignty through this trade deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, these ridiculous fabrications and misconceptions are touted around the country by the Hon. Member and members of her Party, and the labour movement, and repeated time and time again. But that does not make them true. The answer is categorically "no": N-O.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—CONSTRUCTION OF CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING UNITS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Would the Minister advise the House why, when there is a severe and growing affordable housing crisis in Metropolitan Toronto, CMHC would actually reduce the number of co-operative housing units allocated to Metropolitan Toronto, from a modest 458 in 1986, down to only 126 in 1987?

What is going on at CMHC? Will the Minister go back to his Department and read the Riot Act to his officials?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, when this Government took office it undertook the most massive consultation in the housing industry since CMHC began business, and the direction we unequivocally received, from all groups, including co-ops, social groups, bankers, and builders, was to direct our funds toward those most in need. At this time, 99 per cent of our budget goes to those most in need. Compare that to only 40 per cent under the previous Government. That resulted in 2,400 social housing units in Toronto last year, including co-op units.

BILL C-114—DELAY IN PASSAGE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Two months ago amidst much pomp and fanfare the Prime Minister introduced Bill C-114, the new conflict of interest Bill for cabinet Ministers, MPs, and Senators. Since then not one minute in this House has been spent on the Bill which the Prime Minister called landmark legislation.

Can the Prime Minister tell this House why the Government is stalling on this Bill? Is it because the PC Spouses' Association has been lobbying against it? Who is in charge over there, the Back Bench Committee, the PC Spouses' Association, or the Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a very inviting question.

One of the reasons we have not been able to deal with the conflict of interest legislation and other pieces of legislation, such as the lobbying Bill, which I understand has been reported out of committee, is simply because the Opposition has been filibustering important Bills, for example, the Environmental Protection Act, the Western Diversification and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities legislation. These are the kinds of things that are holding the House up. They are very important pieces of legislation and should be dealt with.

The Deputy House Leader will be meeting later today, I believe, with representatives of the other two Parties to deal with the priority pieces of legislation that we must deal with before the summer. I can assure the Hon. Member that the legislation to which he has referred will be in that priority list.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has just admitted that he does not control the agenda of the Government in the House. He can bring the Bill in this afternoon if he likes.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT BILL BE ADOPTED QUICKLY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, since he has chosen to answer. In a letter sent to the Leader of the Opposition on February 24, the Prime Minister said, "I believe that it is in the public interest for Members of Parliament to act quickly so that the bill can be passed and enacted as soon as possible." What has become of this bill? Why have the Prime Minister and the Government changed their mind? Do we need to act quickly or don't we?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Senate has been holding up very important legislation for over a year. I can assure the Hon. Member that if he has any influence with the House leadership of his Party, and if there is an agreement to put some limitation on the time that we can debate this issue in the House and get it on to committee for full study, we will be very happy.

Mr. Gauthier: Bring it in.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Deputy House Leader will be meeting this afternoon with the House Leaders to work out a program whereby all this important legislation can be dealt with before we break for the summer.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS ON BILL C-72

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice with whom I spoke briefly last night on the matter of Bill C-72.

The Minister is aware that the legislative committee dealing with the multiculturalism Bill is being forced by the Government to conclude its deliberations on that Bill at a much earlier stage and to conclude its hearing of witnesses in order to begin clause by clause consideration. Does the Minister plan to express the Government's support, indeed, the support of all three Parties for the official languages Bill, by taking similarly decisive action in the legislative committee dealing with this Bill?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the premise of the Hon. Member's question. Is he suggesting that we use the oppressive power of Cabinet to force our Members with respect to matters within committee? Is that what the Member wants us to do? If that is the case, then he should check with his Leader because he is always complaining or alleging that something like that has happened, which never does.

If the Member is asking us whether we are going to pass Bill C-72, you are darn right we are, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT HOUSE GIVE IMMEDIATE CONSIDERATION TO BILL

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Is the Minister prepared to have the Official Languages Bill considered by the House as soon as the Committee has finished its deliberations?

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

PURCHASE OFFER FOR CDC LIFE SCIENCES BY FRENCH COMPANY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology, and it concerns a French company's bid for CDC Life Sciences.

CDC owns Connaught Laboratories which has about 700 employees in Canada and is a world leader in developing vaccines. CDC also owns Bio-Research and Nordic in the Montreal region.

Could the Minister give the House the assurance today that the Government intends to keep in this country the research and development, technology, production and jobs that are part of the CDC Life Sciences group?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expension and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I informed one of my hon. colleagues last week that the Government is very concerned about the attempted acquisition by Mérieux of shares in CDC Life Sciences. As the Hon. Member is no doubt aware, an injunction was granted, at the request of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to delay any transactions on the stock market to acquire these shares.

Following the injunction, I personally met the president of Mérieux to explain in detail the Canadian Government's position on foreign investment and the Canadian Government's concerns with respect to the developments mentioned by the Hon. Member.

EFFECT OF TAX REFORM ON MEDICAL RESEARCH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance, if I may. A Connaught official revealed last week at a conference on university research in Edmonton that, as a result of the Minister's tax reform measures, it had to abandon plans to raise $60 million in Canada through an R and D limited partnership. Research to develop an innovative therapy to control diabetes, done at the University of Toronto, has been transferred to a large offshore multinational.

Will the Minister review his tax reform measures which are damaging the ability of companies like Connaught to do research and keep jobs in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it clear that we have done a study on tax treatment of research and development in this country in relation to all the other industrialized countries. There is no question that the tax treatment by Canada is better than other countries, and by quite a margin. What the Hon. Member is suggesting that we do here is to recreate a tax shelter. Out of one side of their mouths the Liberals say we should be doing away with tax shelters, while out of the other side they say we should be recreating them.

The Prime Minister just announced in January $1.3 billion of additional spending on science and technology.

Mr. Foster: That is recycled.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says that it recycled. That is not recycled, Mr. Speaker. It is new money to be spent on research and development. We have a good record here in direct spending by the Government of Canada where $4.2 billion, plus the $1.3 billion, is being spent. In addition to that there is a fine tax treatment for research and development.

INVESTMENT CANADA

LAPP INDUSTRIES—COMMITMENT TO GOVERNMENT—ESTABLISHMENT OF INQUIRY

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Investment Canada. The Government supported Lapp Industries purchase of Canadian Porcelain Industries in 1985 over a workers' co-op. The Minister knows that company has not met its commitment to the Government. He said the Government will establish an inquiry into the whole business of the company not meeting its commitment, closing the plant and leaving people without work. I would like to know when the investigation is going to take place and when he will report to the House.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member said, I asked for an inquiry into this matter. It concerns me very much. The inquiry is under way and I expect to have the results very soon. It is very difficult at the moment to give the Hon. Member a specific date, but I can assure her that the review by Investment Canada is under way at my request and should be completed in a very short time.

ASKING PRICE FOR PLANT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, "a very short time" is very innocuous. I would like the Minister to tell the House if he looked at the outrageous price of $11 million that Lapp asked for the plant, which means the plant will not be operating, and has he included this in his investigation?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says "a very short time" is a very innocuous answer. As I indicated very clearly, the review is under way. I told my officials in Investment Canada that I wanted the report as soon as possible. They assured me I would get it in the very near future, and I will be very happy to report to the Hon. Member and this House as soon as I do.

INDUSTRY

GOODYEAR CANADA—USE OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and concerns the continuing reports of discussions between Goodyear Canada and the federal Government about financial assistance for a new tire plant in Napanee.

Given the fact Goodyear just got a remission order from the Government worth up to $50 million over four years, and a $32 million interest-free loan from the Ontario Government, and then got instructions from head office in the U.S. to send an additional $25 million to $30 million a year to the American parent, will the Minister confirm that not a single cent more of Canadian taxpayers' money will be paid to Goodyear Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been working very closely with the tire industry since 1986 to encourage it to restructure and modernize. Duty remission obviously is available to all tire companies in Canada that are taking steps to meet the objective the Government set. Goodyear is planning to restructure its operations in Canada and that would make it eligible for duty remission if it does the restructuring.

I recognize that it is unfortunate that some people may remain unemployed as a result of the Lakeshore plant closure. I believe there are some 40 people involved. However, on the other hand the new plant investment which Goodyear is contemplating involves the creation of 800 new jobs. It is in that spirit that we are trying to help the industry and Canada, and create new jobs.

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—USE OF SOIL CONSERVATION FUNDS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He knows the drought situation in western Canada is worsening every day with topsoil blowing away and dug-outs dry which have never been dry in history. Earlier this week the Minister indicated he was going to take funds from the long-term conservation and degradation soil program to deal with emergency water supplies for wells, dug-outs, pipelines and so forth.

Can the Minister indicate whether he is willing to provide the full $75 million if that is necessary this year, and can he also explain why he is not bringing in new money rather than taking funds from a long-term three-year program, I understand, for soil conservation and degradation?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Hon. Member is assuming a little too much. As usual, he is getting a bit ahead of himself. He said the other day that funding for soil and water conservation had been slashed. That is false and misleading. In fact it has not been reduced or slashed but has increased from about $42 million in 1983-84 to $55.6 million in 1989. If we take into consideration other activities during that same period of time we have an increase from $44.7 million to some $64 million. That is not a decrease, it is an increase in that general area.

I said in response to the Hon. Member on Monday that we are working hand-in-hand with provincial Governments and providing assistance in the form of technical and engineering advice, making available equipment we have in western Canada through PFRA, and providing assistance with respect to moving water to locations where there is none. We will continue to work over the next 10 days in the same manner.

REQUEST FOR HELP IN MOVING LIVESTOCK FROM AFFECTED AREA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I will debate the Estimates with the Minister in the Standing Committee on Agriculture, but he knows one of the most urgent matters is the fact there is not adequate water for herds of cattle. There is no feed in many areas. Is the Government prepared to provide funding for moving livestock herds out of the drought area or bringing supplies of feed into the area? As he knows, many community pastures are not accepting cattle herds because there is no feed or grass for them.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, common sense dictates that, if the situation continues, those would be options. We are receiving the advice and information on a day-to-day basis, and these are, at this point in time at least, options. Again, I hope Mother Nature looks favourably upon us and these options do not become reality. However, common sense would dictate, and because of the priority this Government places on agriculture, that if those options become reality, then naturally we will, as in the past, be quite prepared to do what we have to do to assist in any way possible.

FINANCE

NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS—SITUATION IN NELSON, B.C.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance regarding tax fairness. The question involves those areas designated as eligible for northern benefits. The Minister is likely aware of the situation in Nelson, British Columbia, where a suburb was designated to receive northern benefits but not the city itself.

Will the Minister explain the fairness of this approach where someone on one side of a road is eligible but on the other side is not?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the reason we appointed a commission under the chairmanship of René Brunelle to review and study the conditions which have led to this kind of inequity. We recognize there is a problem, but it must be dealt with in a global way. We cannot just deal with one community or another, or a group of communities; we have to review the whole matter on a nation-wide basis. That is the mandate of the commission and we hope they will be able to report quickly. However, we recognize it is a complex issue which we have asked them to deal with.

DESIGNATION OF SUBURB AS QUALIFYING AREA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain, since the community of Nelson is only a 25-minute drive from the U.S. border, how the situation developed? It was his Government which approved this designation in the first place, and why would it approve a suburb receiving northern benefits but not the city itself?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is incorrect in what he just said. The designations for these isolated communities have been built up over the years by Treasury Board, going back well before we took office. We adopted the designations they had in place and have since found there have been difficulties, to which he alluded. That is what we are trying to deal with through the commission.

AIR CANADA

ACQUISITION OF NEW AIRCRAFT—INDUSTRIAL BENEFITS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the much discussed plans of Air Canada to make a substantial procurement of aircraft, in the order of $1.5 billion according to reports. We know that Airbus, with the assistance of Frank Moores, and Mcdonnell Douglas and Boeing are all bidding for this major purchase. Has the Government made any effort to ensure that this big order by Air Canada will result in industrial benefits and the creation of new jobs in the aerospace industry in Canada?

• (1500)

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have always said, and repeat today, that this decision belongs to Air Canada and not to the Government. The company has to take into consideration what will benefit the company. That is why we are waiting for the decision. Once again, I do not want to interfere in Air Canada's decision in any way whatsoever.

BOEING CORPORATION—PRODUCTION OF DASH 8-400

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, de Havilland, which is now owned by Boeing of Seattle, has indicated that it is on the verge of making a decision about whether to proceed with a very important development, the Dash 8-400.

Has the Government taken steps to ensure that the decision to proceed with this aircraft, which is very important for jobs in my riding, will not be tied to whether or not Air Canada buys planes from Boeing?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I remember well, the Hon. Member was against the privatization of de Havilland. I am sure that with the lesson he has learned today he will be in favour of the privatization of Air Canada.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—POSSIBLE USE OF FEDERAL LAND FOR HOUSING PURPOSES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for CMHC. The average house in Metro Toronto is now selling for $200,000 which is well above the means of the average person. Part of the problem is the excess of demand over supply. The fact is that there is some federal land in Metro on which housing could be constructed.

What progress is being made toward using some of that federal land for housing?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, last year in Metro Toronto there was a 57 per cent increase in housing starts, a record for the previous 10 years. There is a problem in Toronto. We are trying to determine whether there are any federal or provincial Crown lands available which might be utilized to respond to this situation. I have previously given undertakings to my friend who has insistently inquired about what progress is being made. I congratulate him for that, and I hope we can respond reasonably soon.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 17 petitions numbered as follows: 332-4327, 332-4328, 332-4330, 332-4355 to 332-4360 inclusive, 332-4377, 332-4378, 332-4451, 332-4467 to 332-4469 inclusive, 332-4475 and 332-4486.

TRANSPORT—PRESENTATION OF FORTH AND FIFTH REPORTS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the fourth and fifth reports of the Standing Committee on Transport.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—PRESENTATION OF TWELFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the twelfth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

In the spirit of parliamentary reform, a new budget committee is proposed to examine departmental Estimates. The Public Accounts Committee further recommends that reducing Estimates should not be considered a non-confidence matter. Standing Committees now tend to concentrate on policy questions when considering the Estimates. While the Public Accounts Committee reviews audit findings after the fact, effective management does not depend on audit alone.

We consider that the establishment of a special budget committee with powers to change or reduce Estimates and to do a more careful examination of expenditures before the fact would add significantly to parliamentary accountability.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED ADDRESS BY QUEEN OF THE NETHERLANDS—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties with respect to the visit of Her Majesty Queen Beatrix next week. I think you would find unanimous consent to pass the following motion:

> That, notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1), on Tuesday, May 10, 1988, the House shall meet at two o'clock p.m.;
> That, for the purpose of the operation of the Standing Orders, such sitting shall be deemed to be a Wednesday, except that Private Members' Business shall be taken up between five o'clock p.m. and six o'clock p.m.;
> That, the address of Her Majesty Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands to be delivered in the House Chamber on Tuesday, May 10, 1988, at eleven o'clock a.m., before the Members of the Senate and House of Commons, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an appendix to the House of Commons Debates of that day and form part of the records of this House; and
> That, Her Majesty's address, together with all introductory and related remarks, be made available to the media for transmission in the usual way by the House of Commons broadcasting system.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that there have been consultations and that there is a disposition on the part of the Official Opposition, both to give leave to have this motion presented and to agree to it.

However, I do want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader whether he can confirm that the Government is aware of Standing Order 22(2) which says:

> Government Orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the government determines.

I ask that question because during Question Period the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) seemed to suggest that the Government could not call certain pieces of legislation until certain other pieces were completed by this House. As far as I know, the Standing Orders make clear that the Government has complete control over what measures it calls and when it calls them during government time.

If necessary, Mr. Speaker, I will raise a point of order to ask you to confirm that this Standing Order is still part of our Standing Orders and is as much a part of them as any other portion, so that any argument by the Government that it is being held up by the Opposition and prevented from calling something on the Order Paper which it wants to call, is completely inaccurate.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if it would help my hon. friend, we could start each day by confirming that the Standing Orders are still in effect. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said that we have consistently followed a practice of trying to move legislation through the House. We are now being stymied by the Opposition and have had to bring in time allocation on a very important initiative for the Western Diversification Fund.

In view of the depleted number of Members in the Opposition, we have tried not to jam up too many things in one area. My hon. friend knows very well that the same people who considered the lobbying Bill will probably consider the Bill to which he refers. We have simply tried to manage the business of the House and the committees. He will find that it very soon goes to committee.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members could assist the Chair. If there is a need to proceed with this, which is really a point of order, I will see Members in a few minutes.

I think it is probably procedurally more tidy to deal with one thing at a time. There is a motion before the House. I understand from the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that there is agreement with respect to that motion which was put by the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). Perhaps the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) could assist the Chair with respect to whether or not there is agreement to the motion.

If it is necessary to continue with a point of order, I will hear Members a little later.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, let me say that there have been complete and thorough consultations. In an effort to expedite the business of the House, we are prepared to enthusiastically lend our support to this order.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap and the Hon. Member for Windsor West. Does the Hon. Minister of State have unanimous consent to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to remind the House that the Government has the obligation and even the duty to deal with this matter of the order of business and to determine what the Members will consider in the House. Standing Order 22(2), which my House leader is referring to, reads as follows:

> Government Orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the government determines.

Mr. Speaker, based on our experience of the last two or even three weeks, the Government does not trust the Members of this House. It prints an agenda, a Projected Order of Business, regularly changes it at the last minute and expects that Members of the House of Commons can react to the way the Government wants the debate to go. Mr. Speaker, if the House is to function in a correct, orderly fashion, we must know what plans the Government intends to present to us under Routine Proceedings.

So if the Government cannot decide before the day itself on the order in which it will bring forward bills, be they on abortion, capital punishment or anything else, on official languages—God knows we could talk about that!—the Government is the only one responsible for the disorder. It sets the order of business and decides what the House will discuss. We in the Opposition can only deal with what the Government presents.

We deal with it democratically, after debate, and we hope that the Government will not stifle the debate with delaying tactics such as those used regularly in the House by the Parliamentary Secretary, who always has a petty point of order to find out whether the House could not sit during lunch hour. Of course we can sit during lunch hour! That happens regularly. We want to work! But the Government knows very well that in doing so, it prevents the Opposition from preparing for question period and Members from attending committee meetings. It knows that it disturbs the Opposition and that is why it does it, Mr. Speaker, because it wants to have the country believe that there is a crisis in the House, but that is wrong! The Government has been going through a crisis for a long time—we know that! It is in a crisis because it does not know where it is going. It has no direction.

Take official languages for example: I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Justice Minister behind; he is there looking at us attentively... Where is he on the committee to give direction to the back-benchers, the gang of dinosaurs who have fun by always delaying Bill C-72? Where is he to stop them?

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member. I think that the argument may be very interesting. I well understand that it is most important, but we have a point of order here and I think that the speech by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is perhaps... He has made a point. I understand the problem exactly and I am sure that the Hon. Minister of State can perhaps answer and after that, I think that it will be necessary to continue with other business.

[English]

Does the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) wish to respond?

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short intervention on the same point of order. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) suggested during Question Period that somehow he was unable to introduce legislation because of something the Opposition Parties were doing. Let me make it clear that the Government has a right to introduce legislation whenever it wants. It can introduce any legislation it wishes.

In an effort to make the House of Commons work more effectively, would the Deputy House Leader be more consistent? When the Deputy House Leader states what will be the business of the House at one hour, and we are prepared to make our thoughtful contribution, but then changes the order of business, it makes it very difficult for us Members in the House and makes it very difficult to conduct the business of the House in a proper way.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, once again it is an honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 on behalf of a number of constituents from western Canada who are very concerned about the way the Government is handling the designation for northern benefits for tax purposes. Some communities are designated and others are not.

As I indicated earlier, there are situations where half a community is designated and the other half across the street is not. It is a complete boondoggle and makes a mockery out of our tax system. It certainly flies in the face of any just, fair, non-discriminatory tax system.

The petitioners are asking the Government to consider declaring all communities in Tier 3 ridings as eligible for the northern residents deduction.

IMMIGRATION—REQUEST FOR CLOSER CO-OPERATION WITH VIETNAM

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition from some 70 residents of Spadina and other parts of Toronto nearby. They point out that a goal of the Canadian immigration law is to facilitate the reunion in Canada of Canadian citizens and permanent residents with their close relatives from abroad.

Nevertheless, they are concerned that many Canadians from Vietnam find that it takes months, often years, to bring relatives from Vietnam to Canada as immigrants, partly because of the delays caused by the Vietnamese Government.

Therefore, the undersigned call on the House of Commons to ensure that the Canadian Government negotiates actively with Vietnam to secure an agreement providing for closer co-operation on immigration, including quicker action on Canadian sponsorships.

IMMIGRATION—REQUEST FOR EARLY HEARINGS FOR REFUGEE CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from some 50 residents of Spadina who point out that Canada has established standards of refugee status determination but the existing procedures have broken down under unexpected strains. Therefore, with the support of many Canadian groups, including the Canadian Council of Churches, the Bar Association, Jewish Congress and other individuals, they ask Parliament to ensure that the Government will enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board that is independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to these hearings for every claimant in Canada, and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from about 200 residents of Canada and Toronto. They point out that the Government of Canada, that is to say, the Prime Minister of Canada, has been negotiating a trade treaty with the United States for which he had no mandate from the Canadian people in the last election. It is a treaty which will reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs we need. Furthermore, contrary to what many people apparently wish, it would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

• (1520)

For these reasons, the petitioners ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate result in a national general election before an agreement is signed.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present a petition signed by some 3,200 constituents from my riding, and from people outside of my riding. It states that wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass legislation to protect unborn Canadian children from conception onward, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and privilege to present a petition signed by many residents of Quesnel, British Columbia, and the following communities in New Brunswick, Fredericton, Macnaquac, Temperancevale, Melville, Canterbury, and Truro, Nova Scotia and in Ontario, Thorold, Hamilton, Toronto, Brampton, Sudbury, Willowdale, Guelph, White Fish, and Stratford.

The petitioners claim that this Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade agreement with the United States. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the so-called bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. They claim, in fact, that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic and cultural future and would indeed undermine its ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has great respect for the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) in presenting this petition, but I have been listening carefully and I think we are to be reminded that the statement given at the time of presentation is to be brief and not to be necessarily argumentative. I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Rodriguez: The petitioners call upon this Government, since it does not have a mandate to implement this agreement, to dissolve Parliament and call upon the people of Canada, giving them the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement with the United States in a general election.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition prepared and sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Wyndham of Acme, Alberta. The petitioners, mostly from Acme, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72 so that unilingual speaking people will have a chance for a position in Government. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

[Translation]

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of some 706 constituents in Hull—Aylmer who humbly ask Parliament to pass a bill granting all unborn children full legal protection from the moment of conception.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 297 and 298.

[Text]

HUNTING OF BOWHEAD WHALES

Question No. 297—Mr. Nickerson:

1. To the knowledge of the Government, are Alaskan whalers killing bowhead whales travelling to their calving areas in Canadian territorial waters?

2. Has the Government received requests from Canadian Inuit for similar bowhead quotas and, if so, what has been the response?

3. During 1986, did the Government receive a request from the Eskimo Whaling Commission to conduct joint research with the United States into the number and habits of bowhead whales in the Beaufort Sea and, if so, what has been the response?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Alaskan Inupiat hunters take bowhead whales during migration to and from Canadian waters. However, Canadian territorial waters of the Beaufort Sea are a primary feeding area, not a primary calving area.

2. The Inuvialuit of the western Arctic and Inuit in the east have requested permits to take bowhead whales in Canadian waters. These requests have been refused on the grounds of conservation.

3. The Department has received informal requests from the Eskimo Whaling Commission to conduct joint research on bowhead whales with the U.S. We have assisted U.S. research in U.S. and Canadian waters through issuance of permits for tagging studies, aerial surveys and associated feeding studies, and provision of scientific advice. Large scale studies contracted by LGL Consultants of Toronto have been supported by funding from the U.S., DIAND, and bridge funding through DSS.

INTERNATIONAL WHALING COMMISSION

Question No. 298—Mr. Nickerson:

Has Canada withdrawn from the International Whaling Commission and, if so (a) for what reasons (b) is any consideration being given to rejoining?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): (a) Canada withdrew from the International Whaling Commission (IWC) in 1982 following an intensive review of our whaling policy that concluded that we no longer had any direct interest in the whaling industry or in the activities of the IWC related to the whaling industry since the Canadian Government banned commercial whaling in 1972. The 1946 Whaling Convention, which Canada signed in 1946 as a whaling nation, was intended to "provide for the proper conservation of whale stocks and thus make possible the orderly development of the whaling industry."

(b) Although we are not considering rejoining the IWC, Canada continues close co-operation with the Commission's Scientific committee and support international co-operation for the conservation of the world's whale stocks.

PRIVILEGE

HURTIG ENTERPRISES COURT ACTION

Mr. Speaker: I have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege which I believe goes to the very heart of a Member's privilege in this House to ask questions in a free and unfettered way either by way of Question Period or by way of tabling of questions on the Order Paper.

If you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, on October 14, 1987, I placed the following question on the Order Paper:

Question No. 207

Since April 1968, have (a) grants (b) loans (c) loan guarantees (d) contracts been provided by the Government to Hurtig Publishers of Edmonton or other Hurtig enterprises and if so, how many and, in each case (i) on what date (ii) in what amount (iii) for what purpose?

The answer was tabled in the House of Commons on January 27, 1988.

So that you have a full understanding of the implications of my breach of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly go over the answers with you.

Several Departments and agencies reported that government records for these fiscal years are not retained by the Public Archives in Canada in accordance with the General Records

Disposal Schedule of the Government of Canada directive. However, in some instances the Department was able to provide information. The following Departments provided information: Canadian International Development Agency indicated that there was $1,625 for expertise in connection with the Country Program Director Training Program. The Department of Communications listed the grants or contributions from the Department's Book Publishing Industry Development Program. In 1979-80, $131,793 for sales and marketing assistance, 1980-81, $169,555, sales and marketing assistance, $2,760 for a feasibility study, $4,837 for a feasibility study, for a total of $177,152.

In 1981-82, $146,613 was granted for sales and marketing assistance, $4,797 for computerization study, $49,947 for computer purchase, for a total of $201,357. In 1982-83, $94,659 for sales and marketing assistance, $10,233 for computerization implementation, for a total of $104,892. In 1983-84, $96,440 for sales and marketing assistance, for a total of $96,440. In 1984-85, $110,527 for sales and marketing assistance, $33,939, company analysis for a total of $144,466.

I just have a couple more, Mr. Speaker, if you will bear with me. In 1985-86, $227,324 sales and marketing assistance, $1,307 international marketing assistance for a total of $228,631—

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member has probably been anticipating some concern on the part of the Speaker. This information is, of course, available and may very well be very pertinent to the question of privilege the Hon. Member brings to the Chair, but I am having a little difficulty in seeing exactly where the point of privilege comes and I would ask, in the interests of brevity in argument, that the Hon. Member conclude whatever it is the Chair needs to know and then argue the point of privilege. I have tried to be very patient here.

Mr. Shields: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I am trying to point out—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Athabasca could just be patient for a moment and I will come back to him. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively for the last four or five minutes and I too have difficulties. If the Hon. Member actually has a grievance with the quality of the answer, he should state so at the beginning of his remarks. I would like to know what the question of privilege is. I would like to know what the question of privilege is. According to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition an answer to a question cannot be the object of a question of privilege.

• (1530)

If the Government has not given the Hon. Member a definitive or satisfactory answer, I refer him to Citation 19 of Beauchesne's which states that a dispute arising between two Members, or the failure of a Minister of the Crown to answer a question may not be raised as a question of privilege. I do not mind sitting here and listening to the Hon. Member's question, but I would appreciate it if he would come to the point.

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member would like to get to the point. Clearly, what the Hon. Member has advised the House and the Chair is that over a period of time certain government grants or other forms of government assistance have gone to either the gentleman mentioned or the gentleman's firm. However, I am not clear yet as to whether or not the Hon. Member's complaint, which may or may not be privilege, is in the adequacy of the answers, the fact that a government Department may or may not still have the records, or just exactly where the argument is leading. I would ask the Hon. Member to assist the Chair.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member and yourself for the guidance that has just been given to me.

In late February, as a result of the answer tabled in the House, I received a letter from a Mr. A. H. Lefever of the law firm of Reynolds, Mirth, Richards and Farmer of Edmonton stating that he was acting for Mel Hurtig and intended to proceed with a defamation action and would be issuing a statement of claim in seven to ten days.

I ignored the letter because I felt that it was rather silly and vexatious and an attempt, basically, to silence me. We know that Mr. Hurtig had led the charge against free trade. As a former Liberal candidate in Edmonton, he was leading the charge. He became very political.

I then received a second letter in late March which was double registered. It was from a Frans F. Slatter of the law firm of McCuaig, Desrochers of Edmonton in which it was stated that they were acting for Hurtig Publishers Ltd. They indicated that, pursuant to Section 13 of the Defamation Act, their client's intention to bring an action against me for information that I received in reply to my question on the Order Paper of October 15, 1987.

The letter further indicated that the information that I received was inaccurate and misleading as to the amount, nature, source and circumstances of government funding obtained for The Canadian Encyclopedia and related projects. Again, I felt that this was an obvious attempt in that the first law firm had dropped the case because, in my view, it felt it did not have one. Mr. Hurtig then approached another law firm and it proceeded with an action.

It is my belief that these two letters were a deliberate attempt to intimidate me from seeking further information with regard to grants given by the Government to Mel Hurtig or Hurtig Publishers.

I then had a phone call a couple of days ago from a Mr. Keith Davidson of Edmonton who is a process server. He indicated that he would like to meet with me for a brief moment the next time I was in Edmonton. I asked him what it was for. He said: "Well, I might as well tell you. It is to serve you with a statement of claim". I asked him where the statement of claim was from and he said it was from the solicitors for Hurtig Publishers and that I was now being served with a statement of claim and going to be sued.

I am truly surprised that Mr. Hurtig has decided to proceed in this fashion. However, the action by Mr. Hurtig and Hurtig Publishers goes to the very heart of a Member's obligation, a Member's right, a Member's privilege to ask questions in a free and unfettered way in the House of Commons. If we lose that—

Mr. Speaker: I only interrupt the Hon. Member to ask if it is possible to have copies of these letters and the notice of intention. Also, does the Hon. Member have a copy of the statement of claim to which I think he referred? If so, I would like to have those copies as soon as possible.

Mr. Shields: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I do have copies of the two letters. I do not have them with me but I will make sure that Your Honour receives them. I phoned my solicitor in Edmonton and asked him to receive the statement of claim on my behalf, which he said he would do.

If a Member of the House cannot place questions on the Order Paper or indeed ask questions in the House without the fear of legal action being taken against him, then the very heart of this institution in my view will be cut out. Individual Members' effectiveness will be destroyed because it is their privilege to speak freely without fear.

I believe that my privilege as a Member of Parliament has been violated by the actions of Mr. Hurtig and Hurtig Publishers. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, that if you feel that I do have a prima facie case of privilege that the case be referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Elections, Privilege and Procedure.

I have had assistance in putting my privilege together by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) who will discuss some of the technical matters.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), especially for his co-operation brought about by not only my own intervention but by the intervention of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who, along with perhaps other Members and the Chair, were a little concerned about just exactly what was the point. The Chair has no doubt at the moment as to what the point is.

I might indicate to the Hon. Member that on the basis of what he has said thus far that it is a matter that is giving the Chair some concern. I will hear the Hon. Member for Peace River and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in a moment, and other Hon. Members if it is necessary.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a few moments to intervene on the question of privilege put forward by my colleague, the Hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). From the information that I have received and from looking at the case very briefly, there appears to be no doubt that the case does apply to the guidelines of a prima facie case of privilege.

I would like to put before the Speaker a couple of arguments that I think will demonstrate why we have a prima facie case of privilege here. The first valid point is that it is a well known rule and recognized fact in the House that the absolute fundamental of any case of privilege is the freedom of speech. I do not need to refer to the various quotations that would apply to that from either Beauchesne's, Erskine May or any other documents.

In addition to that, we know that Hon. Members are also to be free from intimidation or threats that would try in some way to direct their actions. If we look at Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 67, we see that it states:

> It is generally accepted that any threat to a Member, attempting to influence his vote or his actions as a Member, is a breach of privilege.

After the evidence that I have heard from the Hon. Member for Athabasca, I do not see any doubt that what we are dealing with here is a clear threat or an intimidation, an action that is designed to silence or influence the actions of the Hon. Member for Athabasca.

If we also look at some other references, for example, page 17 of the Précis of Procedure, the second edition that has been put out and which has been very useful to Members, we see that it states:

> Every Member may state "whatever he thinks fit in debate, however offensive it may be to the feelings, or injurious to the character of individuals; and he is protected by his privilege from any action or libel, as well as from any question or molestation."

It is very clear that we as Members are free to ask questions, whether they be written or oral, in the House of Commons, no matter what information comes out of them, and no matter how injurious that may be to the character of an individual or corporation. We are then as individual Members protected from libelous action.

If we look further and return to Beauchesne's, Citation 56 very clearly states that any statements made in the House are not to be subjects of court actions, and they are absolutely within the privilege of the House of Commons.

What we are dealing with here is a question put on the Order Paper by the Hon. Member for Athabasca. That question was responded to in the House. That information has then become the basis of this lawsuit. I think it is very clear that the Member for Athabasca should not in any way be involved in this particular lawsuit. The fact that he is involved in one is clearly a breach of his privileges.

I wish to refer to two other citations that are very pointed on this particular subject. In Erskine May Parliamentary Practice, Twentieth Edition, at page 159 it states:

> Sending a letter to a Member threatening him with the possibility of a trial at some future time for asking a question in the House . . .

—is described or listed as being a clear case of privilege.

In this particular example there are two such letters which have been followed up by a third action between the lawyers for the Hon. Member for Athabasca and Mr. Hurtig.

There is a further citation in the Twentieth Edition of Erskine May which is applicable to this situation, found at page 162, which states:

> To commence proceedings in a court of law against any person for his conduct in obedience to the orders of either House or in conformity with its practice, or to be concerned in commencing or conducting such proceedings, is a breach of privilege.

On the basis of those citations from Beauchesne's and Erskine May, based on the information put forward by the Hon. Member for Athabasca, I believe it is very clear that there is a prima facie case of privilege.

I would encourage you, Mr. Speaker, to check the references, and give this all serious thought, as I know you do and will do in this particular case. Not only are the concerns of the Hon. Member for Athabasca affected by this particular lawsuit, but also the concerns of all Members of Parliament. We have to function in an air of freedom where we are not concerned about threats of lawsuits or threats of violence, or any of those things that would very much infringe on our rights, actions, and statements in the House.

I believe from the evidence that has been put forward and from the arguments that can be made out of either Beauchesne's or Erskine May, our respected journals on procedure, there is no doubt that we have a prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I wish to make a few comments. No doubt the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) has had time to research the question, and I think that he has covered the territory very well. Indeed, I endorse his position, if the facts are as they were related to us by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). I believe, as do other Hon. Members, that nothing can impede the privilege of a Member to ask questions in the House, either by written deposition or orally during Question Period.

I do not have anything to add in terms of citations from Beauchesne's quoted by the Hon. Member for Peace River. Perhaps the most important one is Citation 56, which the Hon. Member quoted. Citation 55 is also important. It states:

> The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House and in committee. It is primarily guaranteed in the British Bill of Rights . . .

It goes on to explain that no one should be impeached or otherwise impeded in his work in asking questions of the Government.

I would like to ask the Speaker to take this matter under deliberation. If, in the opinion of the Speaker, there is a question of privilege, I take it the Hon. Member would be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) indicated that he would be prepared to move the appropriate motion. In case there is any doubt, his colleague from the other side of the Chamber, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), wants to assure that that is indeed on the record, and I ask the Hon. Member for Athabasca to do so.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, yes, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated a few minutes ago, the Chair takes this particular matter with some deep concern. I want to thank the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) for his contribution. I especially wish to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier who, despite the fact that there may be differences of opinion politically among the different Parties here, on a matter of this importance it is interesting to note that all Hon. Members on both sides of the House recognize what the issue is, and that is the absolute right of Hon. Members to proceed without fear and to be able to speak freely in this place.

The Chair will look carefully at the documentation that the Hon. Member for Athabasca has indicated he will bring to my attention. Assuming that the facts are as related, I will of course return as expeditiously as I can to the Chamber. If there is any need for any further assistance from Hon. Members, I will be in touch with them. I think I have the situation as it has been presented, and again I thank Hon. Members for their intervention. I will return to the Chamber as soon as it is possible.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, May 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the third time and passed, and the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

> That this question be now put.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this very important issue. Unfortunately, the Bill is not as important as the issue. The Bill is a very weak and timid step in the direction of some type of environmental protection, although it has the very pretentious title "Canadian Environmental Protection Act". An unsuspecting or politically unsophisticated person looking at the title of that Bill might suspect or be led to think that it was going to provide a regulatory framework that was going to give some type of total protection for the environment. When we look at the Bill we see that this is very far from being the case.

The only real emphasis of the Bill is to regulate the introduction of toxic substances into the environment. This is important, but it is far from being the total comprehensive protection of the environment that Canadians need and want the Government to provide through legislation.

For example, the Bill does nothing to deal with the destruction of the environment through logging practices, or the deforestation that occurs, or the soil erosion, and the erosion that pollutes our streams and lakes as a result. It does nothing to protect the environment from the loss of farmland through salinization, over use of pesticides, or urbanization. It does nothing about the clean-up of toxic waste sites. It does nothing about acid rain. The Government has made a lot of noise about acid rain, but it has done very little about it.

This Bill has no power to deal with questions such as pesticides, because they are regulated by the Department of Agriculture and where one Department has regulations that are already in place, Bill C-74 is not effective. It does nothing about polluting forms of energy use. It does nothing about the nuclear industry. There is a whole constellation of problems relating to the environment that are not dealt with by this Bill.

Perhaps I could give one example on Vancouver Island that is very important, that is, the introduction of a new chemical called TCMTB as a replacement for the old PCP type anti-sap stain that was used in treating lumber. Since this new chemical TCMTB was introduced on December 7—Pearl Harbour Day—there have been more than 75 first-aid or medical cases reported to the end of April at Harmac Mill near Nanaimo.

• (1550)

Workers at that mill have complained about nausea, about sore throats, about nose bleeds, sinus problems, and headaches. In some cases, they have suffered from nose bleeds lasting for as long as two weeks. As a result, the workers themselves have asked that a study be carried out on this chemical.

The Workers Compensation Board of British Columbia uses as a guide the level set by Agriculture Canada, that being .5 parts of TCMTB per millogram per cubic metre, and at a level of less than half of that amount, the workers at the pulp mill in question are suffering from severe health problems.

It has become obvious that the Department of Agriculture passed the regulations in respect of the use of this chemical without having had any long term studies in place and completed.

It saw the need to replace the old PCP anti-sap stain type of chemical, given the obvious detrimental effects of that chemical on the environment and on human health, and it rushed through regulations in respect of the use of TCMTB without having conducted adequate studies as to its effects.

When questions regarding the use of this chemical were released in the B.C. Legislature by Dale Lovick, the NDP member for Nanaimo, he was told that there was to be a study conducted by the University of British Columbia on its short term health effects. However, when Mr. Lovick called UBC, he was told that the study was not scheduled to begin until the summer, the reason being that there were not a sufficient number of mills using TCMTB.

Here we have a chemical which is widely suspected, on Vancouver Island, as causing severe health problems for workers, a chemical which needs to be studied, and the entity which is to conduct the study saying that it cannot begin the study until it is in wider use. That is the kind of perverted logic that we face. Here we have a situation where we cannot begin to study the harmful effects on human beings flowing from the use of a given chemical because that chemical is not in wide enough use.

Once the study begins, it will take three to four months to collect the data, and another three to four months for analysis of the data, which means that the results of the study will not be available before the end of the year. In the context of the health of Canadian workers, this is simply not good enough. In raising the example that I do, I simply want to make the point that Bill C-74, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, would have absolutely no jurisdiction over this particular chemical, given that it is a chemical that is already regulated by the Department of Agriculture. In fact, Bill C-74 is not much more than an updated version of the Environmental Contaminants Act.

When one looks at the pretentious title, the "Canadian Environmental Protection Act", one suspects that it must have been named and baptized by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself. It smacks of his typical exaggeration. He is not able to talk of a light bulb without speaking of it as a huge hydroelectric project. He is not able to talk of a minor Bill that does something that is important and significant without giving it this great pretentious title. Of course, the Minister himself, in speaking of this Bill as being one of the "toughest environmental Bills introduced anywhere in the world", suffers from the same kind of pretention.

Bill C-74 has a declaration and a preamble, most of which is acceptable. But, a declaration and a preamble setting out general goals and desirable objectives is not what Canadians want and need; what the Canadian people want is an environmental bill of rights, a bill of rights which will recognize the right of Canadians to a clean and safe environment, and one which will have sufficient teeth that they can insist that the environment be clean and be safe.

The preamble talks about objectives and guidelines. Yet, the Bill itself does not give the Minister the power to either set standards or to enforce standards. When we talk about the environment, what we want is not simply a recitation of objectives and guidelines, but standards. What we want is something that will assure Canadians that the environment is going to be protected. It is their environment. The environment is not something that is simply "out there". The environment is the space in which we live, and we need to protect it. It is not good enough to simply have guidelines. This Government brought down conflict of interest guidelines, and we had example after example of Ministers violating those guidelines and then simply shrugging their shoulders and saying: "It is only a guideline".

We are afraid that the same sort of thing is going to happen if all we have are environmental guidelines. What we want are standards, and standards that can be enforced, and this very weak-kneed Bill does not provide us with such standards.

The proposed Canadian Environmental Protection Act would give the Government some desirable powers, including the power to identify toxic substances, and the power to regulate such toxic substances as it identifies. As well, it gives the Government the ability to screen new substances before they are used in the environment. It gives to Canadians the right to complain to the Government when substances have not been identified or regulated to their satisfaction; it allows the Government to ban the export of toxic substances whose use is banned in Canada, and to restrict the export of toxic substances whose use is restricted in Canada. It gives the Government the right to regulate, on the basis of environmental quality, the use of fuels; it gives the Government the regulatory authority over nutrients in water conditioners; it legislates federal authority over environmental matters with respect to federal lands and undertakings. It legislates governmental authority to bring down environmental regulations with respect to federal Departments and Crown agencies.

One very important provision of Bill C-74 is that it would protect "whistleblowers" who report on breaches of Government environmental regulations. As well, it gives the federal Government the authority to protect citizens of foreign countries from air pollution of Canadian origin. In addition, it would establish boards of review, to be created on petition of individuals who are unhappy with the enforcement of the regulations under the Act. In addition to all of the foregoing, it provides for fines up to $1 million for environmental offences, which is more significant than fines have been in the past.

While the powers to be given to the Government under this legislation are desirable, the Bill itself, when one looks at what it does not do with respect to the environment, falls far short of its pretentious title, and falls far short of what is needed to protect the Canadian environment. For example, it does not deal with pesticides. No matter how toxic, pesticides will be regulated by the Department of Agriculture. Bill C-74 specifically excludes substances which are regulated under other Acts of Parliament.

Bill C-74 does not set down any standards for environmental quality. Rather, it has guidelines; it has objectives. It does not have standards. In short, Bill C-74 does not change the kind of perverted logic we have been operating under in terms of the protection of the environment, that being that a substance has to be proved harmful before it can be regulated. Again, we have the example of the pulp mill workers, who are, in effect, human guinea pigs in terms of the harmful effects of TCMTB. Until that substance can be proved to be harmful to human health, it will continue to be used in pulp mill operations. Its use will continue to be acceptable under both the federal regulations and the applicable regulations of the Province of British Columbia.

Before new chemicals are introduced into the environment, there should be some assurance that they are safe. Bill C-74 does not have incorporated in it an environmental bill of rights, a bill of rights that would give Canadians the right, by law, to a healthy environment. It does not do anything for the major issues that I mentioned earlier, such as acid rain and the overuse of pesticides. Finally, when we look at what the Bill is attempting to do, regulating the introduction of toxic substances into the environment, it still uses an outdated and outmoded method of regulation. It still uses a substance-by-substance approach. It is still based on trying to manage toxic chemicals rather than seeking to reduce them.

• (1600)

It has been estimated that there are some 60,000 industrial chemicals in use in North America today. Ross Hume Hall in an essay in Probe Post in the spring of last year pointed out:

> According to a report of the National Academy of Sciences, in the U.S., the number of chemicals in industrial use today for which there is a complete spectrum of toxic effects is zero.

In other words, we do not know how any of these really affect us in a toxic way. He goes on to say:

> Of the 60,000 industrial chemicals, 50,000 have never been tested for any toxicological effects whatsoever. For the other 10,000 chemicals, information is scanty.

Of course when we are talking about chemicals such as this, we are not talking about chemicals in isolation from one another, we are talking about chemicals that enter into all kinds of weird and strange combinations that are completely uncontrolled by the people who sometimes release them into the environment and completely unforeseen by the people who claim to be regulating these releases in the interests of a clean and protected environment. Mr. Hall points out that Bill C-74 continues to use the old approach of substance by substance identification rather than taking a more sweeping and comprehensive approach. He points out from 1976 to 1986, a period of 10 years:

> —the Contaminants Control Branch had completed regulations for five chemicals—three of them (including PCBs) no longer manufactured. Five chemicals assessed in 10 years.

We are talking about a total of 60,000 industrial chemicals in use. We have continued that substance by substance approach in the legislation we are dealing with today. In fact, the procedure is dragged out even more. A chemical that is determined to be a toxic threat is now put on a Schedule 4 list and only after it has been placed on that list are the regulations written. In order to get on that list, there are all kinds of hurdles. Manufacturers of chemicals will be putting all kinds of obstacles in the way of the Government in trying to determine that certain chemicals are toxic and wanting to have them listed. Once a chemical is listed and the writing of regulations starts, the Bill allows the raising of more objections and the convening of a second review board to review the proposed regulations.

How can such a cumbersome process operating on a substance by substance basis deal with the 60,000 chemicals that we are operating with in modern industry? We are dealing here with the problem that Environment Canada is a weak member of the federal bureaucracy. Instead of being a lead agency and instead of being central to all the Government's planning, it is way off on the edge. Instead of requiring that everything the Government does and everything that industry does be environmentally acceptable—we have that kind of an approach when it comes to dealing with money matters which have to go through Treasury Board—the Department of the Environment tends to be a weak member of the federal bureaucracy. It is like the Baltimore Orioles in baseball. I see they won one game last week, but they are still on a major losing streak. Unfortunately that is the way the Department of the Environment is.

When will we have a Government that takes seriously the threats to the environment and that the environment is the space in which we have to live and breathe? When will we have a Government that takes seriously that any threat to the environment is a threat to individual human health, as I showed it was to the workers at the Harmac pulp mill and to other pulp mills? It is a threat to our quality of life when we destroy the environment. One of the things we have going for us in Canada, which they do not have in some large cities of the more built up parts of the world, is a decent environment that we can protect. It adds a great deal to our quality of life. We need legislation that will protect it much more than this legislation does. When will we have a Government which recognizes that destruction of the environment leads to a destruction of our long-term economic welfare? We can take shortcuts with the environment and think that we are saving money, but in the long term it is destructive economically. We need a Government to recognize that. Finally, we need a Government which recognizes that ultimately the total fate of our earth depends upon the protection of our environment. We need a Government that will act.

We will support this Bill when it comes to a vote. It is a step forward but it is a very small step. It does not take the comprehensive view of the environment and the need for regulation that we would have wished our Government to have taken and which the rhetoric of the Government would lead us to expect.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I listened to my colleague's very comprehensive review of this Bill. As he says, in principle, it is an improvement. However, it is a misnomer because it is basically a recycling Bill taking into account the old Ocean Dumping Act, the Clean Air Act and the Environmental Contaminants Act. It is not the kind of comprehensive environmental Bill that I think many Canadians have been calling for over a long time.

I would like to focus on one point to which my colleague referred and I will ask for his comments on it. He referred to an article by Mr. Hall in Probe Post and the issue of the single chemical approach to environmental pollution. This is a very serious question for consideration. Let us think back to DDT. We recognized the concern for that. We enacted laws to control it but found that it was not controlled internationally—of course, we cannot do anything about that—but there were other equally serious and important pollutants. We have seen other examples of this single chemical approach. There are something like 60,000 chemicals that could be considered industrial chemicals. To try to identify, as my colleague pointed out, and to regulate those chemicals is an almost incomprehensible prodigious task. Mr. Hall in his article gives a good analogy of how feasible the single chemical approach is. He gives the analogy of the Health and Welfare Department where he notes that it is responsible for testing additives and drugs and the quality of those additives and drugs. They number somewhere in the hundreds. It is very difficult for that Department to do that. We are talking, and I reiterate, about tens of thousands. We have neither the resources to test those chemicals in a really credible way that people will feel is a forceful method of addressing the environmental pollution.

Mr. Hall suggests that this approach is simply untenable and unrealistic. The approach should be to simply keep chemicals out of the environment, because testing takes considerable time and the toxicity is often a long-term situation which may not appear in the first test. I would like to ask my colleague what he thinks about this single chemical approach. Certainly it is better than nothing, but is it really the answer?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for the question. Obviously the single substance approach is not going to work. It has not worked over the 10 years since it was introduced. Mr. Hall points out that it is like being surrounded by 60,000 bees and trying to decide which one is going to sting you and where.

Mr. Hall points out that the 19-member team of Contaminants Control Branch took 10 years to assess five chemicals. That adds up to 190 bureaucrat years to write five regulations, or 38 years per chemical. If Environment Canada took all of its 10,000 employees, everyone from the janitors up to the Deputy Minister, and put them to work writing regulations, at 38 bureaucratic years per substance they would be able to write regulations for 260 substances a year when the industry is introducing 1,000 new substances every year.

We are simply falling further and further behind no matter how many people we put into this substance by substance approach. It is not a workable solution. We have to find another approach and I think it has to be that people who are going to be using chemicals have to demonstrate that they are not harmful to the environment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on behalf of my Party and discuss Bill C-74, the Environmental Protection Act. I believe that the environment issue will crop up in any public opinion poll which tries to determine what is of fundamental concern to Canadians across the country. Concern for preserving and promoting what is essentially a great national jewel is very much a centre-piece of their thoughts. It crosses all lines, be it age, region or cultural background. It strikes a chord in the public's sensitivity to the environment. It is viewed quite correctly as a national heritage which ought to be protected and preserved, not only for our well-being today but for the enjoyment and well-being of those who follow us.

A clean environment is also of great concern because many Canadians perceive pollution as perhaps being irreversible. If it can be corrected, obviously it is going to be at a tremendous cost. Therefore, Canadians think of the environment in a proactive rather than reactive sense. If we react too lightly, not only will it be a great drain on our resources at all three levels of Government, but by the time you develop the political will to combat an environmental problem or hazard, it might be too late. Therefore, the feeling is that now is the best time to do something to protect our environment and correct the problems.

People feel that now is the time to protect the soil which grows our food. Now is the time to protect our rivers and lakes before the damage caused by acid rain, for example, is irreversible. Now is the time to protect our water supply and treat it as a national resource. That is what it is when you compare our water supply with that in other parts of the world.

When they look at our mountains, lakes and forests, Canadians want us as legislators to put in place legislation which will provide effective leadership at the federal level through national standards. Whether you live in British Columbia, northern Ontario, or Atlantic Canada, we must have one standard and one philosophy guiding this great country with respect to the environment. We cannot have environmental legislation which allows the provinces or municipalities to opt out so that you have an environment which is actively protected and enhanced in British Columbia, let us say, and less so in Ontario.

If you accept the premise of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and I believe you and most Members of this House would, we have to ask ourselves how Bill C-74 fits in with those values and principles which we attach to the protection and enhancement of our environmental backyard. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), in presenting Bill C-74, suggested to Canadians that this is the toughest environmental legislation ever introduced in the western hemisphere. Those were his very words, yet over the last number of months he withdrew some of his own amendments and allowed other amendments by government Members which weakened the legislation. In that respect, his words melt like snow on a hot summer's day. If they were ever true, they are no longer true. This legislation should not be heralded as the premier legislation of the western world. That is empty boasting at best. Because of those changes I mentioned it is a weakened, battered and tired piece of legislation. It certainly does not do justice to the press releases being put out by the Government and Minister.

There are a number of different aspects to this situation which give rise to the fragility of this legislation. The first is that this legislation does not—

• (1620)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize to the hon. gentleman for interrupting him. However, of 282 Members I count seven in the House. I ask that you please take a quorum count.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not see a quorum. Please ring the bells.

And the bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do now see a quorum.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I must thank my colleague from the New Democratic Party for inviting more Members to participate in this debate and to listen to my remarks on Bill C-74.

I was just getting to what I think is the first fallacy of Bill C-74, namely, that there is no commitment by the Government or the Minister to try to clean up the current environmental mess. They were prepared to try to regulate toxic materials through industry, but there was no concerted effort or political will to deal with regulatory bodies which in the past have contributed to a number of serious pollution indicators. They are willing to let that go by and try to prevent it in the future.

Our environmental spokesperson, the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), has been an advocate and champion of environmental concerns. His position and that of the Liberal Party is to try to prevent environmental pollution from occurring in the future while recognizing that we must determine now to clean up many parts of our community rather than trying to pass the political buck to future Governments. It is a very serious fallacy for the Government to try to prevent future pollution without acting on existing problems.

The second disturbing aspect of Bill C-74 is that the public was only partially consulted. The provinces closed themselves behind locked doors with the federal Government and the Minister and worked out a compromise which is not in agreement with the position of all the major witnesses who came before the legislative committee studying Bill C-74.

When the Minister tabled the Bill and made amendments on behalf of the Government, he recognized that in the discharge of its environmental responsibilities the federal Government must not be clouded by any mandatory consulting with the provinces. He recognized the need for unfettered federal leadership in cleaning up the environment and being the leading edge of that reform. It is very disturbing that the federal Government, and eventually the Minister, backed away from that commitment.

The provincial Governments maintained that the federal Government could initiate changes only after they had received provincial approval. That is a very serious step backward. We are not suggesting that the federal Government run roughshod over provincial concerns. That was not the complaint of the witnesses. The witnesses legitimately complained that the federal Government is in essence undermining its moral and legal authority, given to it by the Constitution, to act quickly and decisively when there are environmental issues at stake. It is alarming that the federal Government is prepared to inflict such wounds upon itself. Moreover, the Government did not permit the witnesses an opportunity to discuss that.

In essence, the federal Government was closeted with a number of provincial interests in whose interest it was to push forward this mandatory provincial decision-making in order that they can buy time if a matter arises involving provincial or regional interests. The provinces were, in essence, allowed to write this important clause of the legislation. Those working toward furthering principles of environmental protection, whether in a paid or a voluntary capacity, were left out in the cold.

The Government has essentially retreated from its responsibility toward the environment and the need to act nationally.

This brings me to the third area of concern. The federal Government has given up the right to regulate toxic chemicals federally. There can be no national standard concerning the environment when provinces can either opt in or opt out. That is indeed serious because there will be a checkerboard of standards when it comes to the environment, in which some provinces will be seen to be more progressive than others. That weakens the national fabric in terms of the resolve of Canadians to come to grips with the very serious hazards facing our environment today.

The fourth area of concern to which I want to bring the attention of the House is that the federal Conservative Government gave in to the pressure to change the regulations concerning federal Departments or agencies that pollute. Contrary to the amendments put forward by my colleague, the Member for Davenport, this Bill will require the Minister of the Environment to obtain the concurrence of the Minister whose Department is responsible for the pollution before making regulations to protect health and the environment. That is a very serious concern because it essentially prevents the Minister of the Environment from taking action within his own jurisdiction until he consults with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, for example, who must regulate some of the firms that are polluting.

The first priority of the Minister of the Environment is to defend and protect his environmental portfolio in Cabinet. The Minister should not have to waste time consulting with another Minister when a firm in another part of the country is contributing to acid rain.

The responsibility of the Minister of the Environment is to stress continually the need to create and maintain a clean environment. A progressive Minister cannot falter in putting the environment first by not only requiring a firm to clean up its act, but by sending a strong signal to his ministerial and government colleagues that there can be no stronger argument than trying to clean up the environment to ensure an environment of which future generations of Canadians will be proud.

I am shocked that the Minister would include in his own legislation a requirement to consult other Ministers from other jurisdictions before attempting to charge a polluter with an environmental crime against our country.

When Bill C-74 was introduced in the House in June, it included a provision to give the Minister of the Environment the power to direct the polluter to pay for the cost of the investigation of the offence. This was a very good provision, in light of the great expense of investigating crimes against the environment. All of the witnesses pointed to this clause as one of the successes of the Bill.

However, the Government caved in to one of its own backbenchers, the Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson), who moved to delete this clause. I am sorry that the Minister capitulated because it was a good clause that would have required the polluter to pay the price of the investigation into that environmental crime. It would send a strong signal to other firms and industries that while it is important to create and protect jobs, it is equally important to make the commitment now to protect our environment.

In summary, the Minister withdrew a number of positive clauses from Bill C-74. As well, a number of important elements to the legislation that were offered by our environmental critic were not incorporated into the Bill. I appeal to the Minister to accept some of the amendments put forward by my colleague, the Member for Davenport, in an attempt to strengthen what is an increasingly weaker Bill.

Second, I ask him to reinstate some of his own clauses, rather than distil this legislation by giving more power to the provinces to prevent environmental clean ups. He should ensure that there is a national standard and should reinstate the clause that would put the onus on the polluters to pay for what they did to the environment.

At least he should try to reinstate clauses that he recognizes are important. I suggest that if he allows this Bill to pass in its present form his credibility as a Minister and his Government's record are clearly on the line.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, my comment particularly concerns the question of a national standard. That is an extremely important concern that has not been at all strengthened in the legislation, even after the committee review process.

Originally, Clause 37(4) included consultation with provinces and territories. Certainly as one who has spoken often on the need for consultation with the territories and provinces, I do not now speak against that. However, I support my hon. friend in his assertion that there is a need for a national standard because pollutants and pollution do not know provincial and territorial boundaries. There must be at least a minimum national standard in which Canadians can feel confidence if they happen to live in an area where pollution may be occurring.

The Brundtland Commission report, Our Common Future, certainly had a great impact on Canadian thinking. It received great support from the Government and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). I want to quote the following brief sentence from that report: "National governments should establish clear environmental goals and enforce environmental laws, regulations, incentives and standards on industrial enterprises. This should normally be done at the national level with local governments being empowered to exceed but not to lower national norms".

That is what we are saying about this Bill. The new Clause 33, which addressed this issue of consultation, and the inclusion of Clause 6 concerning the federal-provincial advisory committee not only do not enact a national standard, but even more strongly turn it over to the advisory committee. I would like to ask my colleague what his comments are, since the Minister gave such favourable responses in this House to the Brundtland Commission report, which did just what my colleague has suggested by stating there must be national standards which at least advocate a minimum standard.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question and comments of the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) who, obviously, because of the region she has the honour of representing, is perhaps as sensitive, if not more sensitive, to environmental concerns, than other Members of Parliament. She is quite correct when she says environmental hazards, pollution and acid rain know no political provincial boundaries. In fact, they know no national boundaries. That is why the opposition Parties, both the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party, were obviously pushing for more from this administration vis-à-vis its good friend the President of the United States. We have to try to clean up our environment from our own perspective, but we also have to begin to educate President Reagan that 50 per cent of the pollution, if not more, and the sulphur emissions with respect to acid rain, come across our borders from the United States of America. Therefore, the Hon. Member's comment about knowing no boundaries is very apropos.

On the question of the Brundtland Commission, I completely concur with my hon. friend that the Brundtland Commission report enjoyed a very positive and enthusiastic reception. Indeed, I had the opportunity of being in the forum of the United Nations when Madam Brundtland tabled her report before the United Nations and, in fact, before the world. There was a tremendously spontaneous and enthusiastic support and reception from various Ministers who were in attendance on this very auspicious day in New York. Perhaps that day heralded a new era vis-à-vis the concern about our environment by the international community.

On the question of national standards, I am saddened by the equivalency provisions adopted by the Minister, for example, the ability of the provincial Government to be consulted as a mandatory step before the federal Government can take action. I believe we have weakened the spirit of the Brundtland Commission report, which is to try to have an international code of environmental ethics. When we talk about our own backyard, that is what we are talking about. We are saying we should have a national standard, an ethical definition of what it means to protect our environment.

I believe we cannot simply have a part of the region, or one province, more progressive on environmental concerns than another province. I have a stake in this country. I own the Rockies just as British Columbians own the Rockies. British Columbians own Algonquin Park, just as much as Ontarians do. Therefore, if we accept that we are 25 million shareholders in this one beautiful country, you can see it is in the interests of all of us to have one standard that protects the environment in all regions of the country.

It should be our duty not only as legislators, but as citizens, to protect the environment wherever we live. It is simply unconscionable that I would say I am glad I live in the Province of Ontario where we protect our environment and I really do not care about the Provinces of British Columbia or Saskatchewan. We cannot take that attitude. We have to believe there is one environment, that it is our country, and there should be one law that guides our environmental standards. This Bill does not provide that mechanism. I would hope that the Minister recognizes that because even though the Bill is at third reading, it is still not too late to change it for the better in a way that will protect and nurture environmental protection laws for years to come.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the next speaker, may I say that I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) that he is unable to move his motion during the hour of Private Members' Business on Thursday, May 5, 1988. It has not been possible to arrange an exchange of positions in the order of precedence pursuant to Standing Order 39. Accordingly, I am directing the Table Officers to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence.

Since notice will be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be cancelled, and pursuant to Standing Order 39, the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan, that Bill C-74, an Act respecting protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the third time and passed, and the motion of Mr. Hawkes.

That this question be now put

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on Bill C-74. As has been pointed out, the subject is very important. We have been warned on all sides by national writers, by international critics, by people from many countries and, certainly not least, from people in our own country, that we are in great danger if we do not look after the world we live in. Apart from the damage we may do directly to each other through war or other misbehaviour towards people, there is the damage we do to the earth, the water and the air, without which we do not live. Therefore, the Bill for the protection of the environment is very necessary.

As our country becomes much more industrial, we must take some thought for the protection of the environment, and that will mean spending money. The question of who spends the money is part of the problem. It will cost something to look after the environment. But we certainly know that however much it costs to take care of our environment today, it will be less than what it will cost to clean it up tomorrow. It is for that reason I regret that this Bill is such a weak Bill.

The New Democratic Party will, of course, support the Bill. It is better than nothing. But it could have been a great deal better than it is. Time is running out. If we use only timid methods of correcting our mistreatment of the environment, we may find some day that it is simply too late and the damage is beyond repair.

The main fault in this Bill is that it works basically on the principle of treating each hazardous substance as a sort of court case by itself, in which people who wish to complain against the substance must prove that they personally have been injured physically or financially. They then must show that the injury was caused by that substance. The trouble with that system is that it is too slow. We have heard examples of how long it can take just to test one substance, to write the regulations and put them into effect. We are told that we have at least 60,000 industrial chemicals being put into our environment which have never been tested. We will never catch up with that if we only take them one by one on the basis of complaint, requiring complainants to prove they are injured and the injury was caused by that substance.

It would be far more efficient—not only would it be faster but it would save money—if we used the principle of testing substances before they are released into the environment. Let the producer or the user of the substance do that testing and pay for its cost.

There are some good principles, some good actions in this Bill, and I will mention a few of them. It does give the Government scope to identify toxic substances and to produce a legally effective identification of them. It does give them the ability to screen new substances before they are used in the environment. The trouble is it does not require that. It does give them the ability to ban the export of toxic substances whose use is banned in Canada—that is certainly a good thing to do—or to restrict them if they are restricted in Canada.

Among other things, it protects whistle blowers who find a breach of the environmental regulations and bring it to the attention of the Government. I think that is a very necessary step to take since so many people are subject to intimidation. I am going to come back to that question later, the matter of intimidation.

It also allows the Government to establish boards of review on petition of individuals who are dissatisfied with the regulations. But, as I said, the weakness there is that if it is only a citizen saying: "I think that is harmful", he does not have the right to pursue it in that way until he can prove that he individually or she individually is harmed by that substance. That is far too slow, as I have said.

What the Bill fails to do most notably is to provide standards of environmental quality to say that people shall not be allowed to put certain substances into the air, or put substances in a greater quantity into the air, the water or earth, to set a limit, at least a limit, not a guideline but a limit, a firm limit, and if the person or group is found to violate the limit they are subject to penalty. That is what this law fails to do.

I want to give an example of an extensive experience that I had with the problem of pollution control. As a member of Toronto City Council a few years ago, and Alderman for Ward 6, I was approached by residents of Ward 6 who found that their homes, their houses, their yards, the air they breathed, the ground their little children played on was being polluted by a lead smelter right next door. It was as close as the space behind the curtains is to the space where we sit in this House. This was an old junk yard which had evolved into a lead smelter for recycling car batteries, which of course is a worthy goal. Car batteries particularly have lead in them which should be recycled rather than just left lying about the city, or wasted by being put into dumps. But they were doing it carelessly. They were doing it in a way that allowed lead dust to escape into the streets around the smelter.

When the residents first came to the Board of Health, the Board of Health said: "We do not have the jurisdiction. Air pollution belongs to the provincial Government". There was a good deal of discussion back and forth about the health effects. There were surveys done. It was found that little children, who are the most vulnerable, had unsafe levels of lead in their blood.

The Board of Health made enough noise about it that finally the Government of Ontario, through its Environmental Protection Department, had to take the matter in hand because it did have legislation dealing with this to some extent.

Then, once the matter started to be investigated, after a year or two of argument and a year or two of continued poisoning of the air, once the provincial Government got into investigating it, enter International Lead Zinc Research Organization, ILZRO. This is an international body supported by the lead and zinc producers. They have a stable of experts who fly around to wherever there is a dispute about lead. It may be in England. It may be in Yugoslavia. It may be in Toronto, Ontario. They will give testimony, sworn testimony, to the effect that a little bit of lead does not hurt, and that really you cannot get rid of the lead out of the world and therefore you should put up with a little bit of lead.

They carried on weeks and months and even years of debate. They ran up quite a bill. They ran up a bill for the provincial Government, for the city Government, even for individual members of the board, because at one point the lead companies, as I say, tried to intimidate us by taking a court action against us. Their court action failed. They withdrew it. But it was a harassment. That is why the idea of a whistle-blower clause is a good thing in this Bill.

My point is that in order to clear up the poisoning of the air caused by one smelter on Bathurst Street, and, as we found, also another smelter on Pape Avenue, at the foot of Pape, it took years of dispute because wealthy companies resisted the clean-up. One smelter was not a wealthy company. The other smelter was part of Canadian Pacific Investments, one of the biggest outfits in Canada, willing to spend any amount of money to prevent the law from being enforced the way it should have been enforced.

This is the kind of thing we are up against. This is why it is unfortunate that Bill C-74 is such a weak law. It does not insist on standards. It talks about guidelines, so that companies will be offered sweet persuasion, which they will laugh at, if it means that they would be required to spend money to clean up. This does not do what many members of the public have asked, to declare a bill of rights. It does not say that people have a right to clean air, clean water and clean earth to live on. It suggests that the polluter may have rights overriding the rights of people whose lives are being polluted, that the polluter should not be required to lose money. That is not what the Bill says, but it is what it implies tacitly by refusing the public request made by many people to write in an environmental bill of rights.

This Bill appears to be ineffective against acid rain in Canada. It does not do much about it.

It is barred from dealing with pesticides, which are a problem, not just in the food producing areas but right downtown in the City of Toronto where it is a question of using pesticides in the parks.

It does not do anything about the nuclear damage to the environment: "Oh, that is somebody else's responsibility". That is being policed by the people, essentially, who make money out of producing nuclear energy and out of producing potential fuel for nuclear weapons. In other words, you put the fox in charge of the hen-house.

It does not do anything about the over production of packaging materials. A paper bag is not a toxic substance. But the amount of garbage, which is mostly packaging, is a very serious pollutant to the environment of our cities. This does nothing to reduce that.

We have a very weak law. It is made even weaker by the fact that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is prohibited from taking action on these matters until he has consulted all the relevant provincial Ministers, and until he is satisfied that there is one or more of them that is not going to take action that would come up to the expected goals of the federal laws. The federal Minister is required to offer that consultation within 30 days, but there is no time limit within which the provincial Ministers must answer. They can delay and delay and say, "We are thinking about it. We are talking with the polluting industries. Give us more time", and the pollution goes on and on. The staff work and the cost of the work goes on and on, but there is no action. There is nothing to require provincial Ministers to answer within a certain time, "Yes, we have done it", or "Yes, we are going to do it within a certain time", or "No, we are not going to do it". Therefore, the federal Minister will find himself tied hand and foot when he wants to take some type of action.

A further problem is that the consultation program as carried on by the provincial Governments, and I give the example of Ontario in connection with the lead and zinc organization, can carry on quite indefinitely. I have mentioned this action that was carried out in the 1970s. In 1973 we began it, and to this day the problem of lead in the soil has not been fully corrected. That is 15 years later. There is lead in the soil of the houses near those smelters. In spite of the orders of the city board of health and the provincial Government, in spite of lawsuits back and forth, in spite of innumerable tests conducted by provincial officials of the environment, the lead is still in the soil. In some cases where soil was removed and replaced with lead-free soil, more lead has been put into the soil by the same offending smelters.

That is the type of delay and log rolling that wealthy companies will use to prevent a law like this from becoming effective. To give them a two-tiered method of defence that first they can block the provincial Government, then they can force the provincial Government to block the federal Government, is simply asking for inaction in most cases.

We have heard reference to the very good principle stated by the Brundtland Commission to the effect that the standards should be national and they should be enforced nationally. Of course we have a divided jurisdiction between provincial and federal, but in a matter of national importance, which this is, that is no reason for essentially handing over control to provincial Governments and therefore to provincial private corporations that can dominate those Governments. There must be strong action by the national Government to prevent further pollution of the environment.

Of course this Bill will pass and we will support it. If somebody owes you a dollar and they are going to give you two cents, you do not refuse the two cents. This is worth approximately 2 per cent of the type of Bill that we ought to have and could have. We will accept it as far as it goes, but we are saying that it does not go anywhere near far enough to begin correcting the problems that we have with the pollution of our environment. It does not stand up to the industrial corporations that prefer to dirty one part of the world, and when it is impossible to live in or when it has removed everything that it wants, it moves on and dirties another part of the world. This Bill will not protect any part of Canada from that type of international thuggery by the corporations that have no respect for the environment when it comes to making money out of it.

We will be supporting the Bill, but I very much regret that the Government has produced such a weak Bill, and even weakened it a little since it was first written. I hope that the Government will reconsider some of its negative decisions on this Bill.

Mr. Skelly: I listened to the speech of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), and I certainly identify with the remarks and his very cogent and intelligent analysis of the weakness in the legislation.

In a comment, I would like the Hon. Member to respond to the very real situation of environmental concern where 35 tonnes of concentrated sulphuric acid was inadvertently leaked from a pulp mill in the Campbell River area. This situation pointed to some very serious shortfalls in the manner in which the environment is protected, and certainly it would be our hope that legislation such as this could prevent it. It would provide the tools in order that the federal Government could require those companies to put in place the mechanisms that would prevent those types of inadvertent spills and contamination of the environment. In this particular case, it would be a simple matter of holding tanks and settling tanks where the materials would not escape directly into the environment. That provide people with a back-up to impose a safety situation in this area, and also in the settling tanks would provide additional and more careful treatment of materials that are eventually released into the environment.

The Hon. Member for Spadina may be able to comment on the seriousness of this particular case, or perhaps other Members of the House might add a comment at this particular time. I know the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), who is present and has been apprised of the situation, might be in a position to give the House a comment on that particularly serious situation.

Mr. Heap: I am not familiar with the details of the incident described by the Hon. Member. There is no question that it is a very serious failure to dump 35 tonnes of sulphuric acid in that manner.

I would compare that situation with the one I have already described in which, after it was well established that lead was harming the little children of the neighbourhood, it has still taken years to force a wealthy company to clean up the lead pollution. There is no question about the harm done. There is no question about the source of the harm. Yet after 15 years it is still extremely difficult to get those companies to spend money. The companies spend some money, but they will not spend enough to keep their operation from poisoning the neighbourhood.

In this case, since the matter concerns the fisheries, I am sure the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) is fully aware of the situation described by the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), and has given it very careful thought. My colleague believes that the Minister of Fisheries would want to respond. I certainly have faith that the Minister would do that. It has been suggested that I yield the floor to him to do so now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On another question, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, when one looks at the contents of the Bill it calls for consultation with the Premiers. Could my hon. friend give us his view about whether there is any prospect whatsoever of agreement by the Premiers. My experience has been that they do not even agree on the time of day. All one has to do is to look at Newfoundland and Saskatchewan. Is it the view of the Hon. Member that the national Government should be setting national standards rather than attempting to get some type of unanimity out of the provinces? I wish to remind my hon. colleague that the territories are not even mentioned, only the provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope that the Hon. Member would address the Chair.

• (1710)

Mr. Benjamin: Certainly. I would also ask my colleague to comment on any differences he might be aware of as between standards put in place by the Province of Ontario, or any other province, and those that are put in place at the federal level.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), in response.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the Hon. Member over here?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I shall recognize the Hon. Member for Richmond—South Delta (Mr. Siddon) after the Hon. Member for Spadina answers the question.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I did not make myself clear. I was suggesting that the Hon. Minister of Fisheries deal with the question raised by the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly); and if it is in order, I would be glad to have him make that response now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not in order. However, it would be in order for the Hon. Minister to comment on your speech now, if in fact he has any questions or comments in relation to it.

The Hon. Minister for Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), on questions or comments.

Mr. Siddon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond—

Mr. Benjamin: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Siddon: —to respond to a matter—

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We are now at the stage of questions and comments in relation to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)—

Mr. Benjamin: That is right, and the Minister neither put a question nor made a comment.

An Hon. Member: If you would sit down and listen, you will hear a question or comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have recognized the Hon. Minister on a question or comment, and I would ask that he be permitted to proceed without interruption.

The Hon. Member for Regina West has been a Member of this House for many years, and he knows the process.

Had I seen the Minister rise in his place before recognizing the Hon. Member for Regina West, I would have given him the courtesy of asking him to proceed first.

I shall now recognize the Hon. Minister on a question or comment in relation to the speech already made by the Hon. Member for Spadina, following which I shall recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Benjamin: But he is only asking his question now. I have already asked my question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister, on a question or comment.

Mr. Siddon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have this opportunity to make a comment on the important and exceptional speech made by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) in respect of Bill C-74, a Bill which will establish, for the first time in Canadian history, an important regime for centralizing the management of the Canadian environment. We risk further degradation of the environment and irreversible damage if we do not soon bring abuse of the environment under control.

This Government, and particularly the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), attach such importance to the problems of the environment that we have brought forward Bill C-74, the aim of which is to create a more effective regime for ensuring a balance between necessary industrial development and the need to protect the environment.

As was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), in responding to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Spadina, there was indeed a serious spill of sulphuric acid, in a fairly concentrated form, into Discovery Passage, near Campbell River, British Columbia. This "leak", as it was called by the offending company, apparently occurred on or about the 20th of March last, but was not reported to my officials until around April 20, with the report coming from a Member of the Pulp and Paper Workers Union. Within two days of that report coming in, a proper account of the incident was given by Crown Forest Products, the company in question, to the B.C. Department of the Environment.

Under the federal Fisheries Act, effluent offences, or alleged effluent offences, are administered by the Minister of the Environment, with the actual task of ensuring adherence to the applicable standards being delegated to the provincial governments. In this case, there appears to have been a serious discharge of something in the order of 31 tonnes of sulphuric acid, not 35 tonnes, as mentioned by the Hon. Member. The incident is under intensive investigation at the present time.

I am very concerned that a discharge of such magnitude could have gone unreported for a full month, and it is a matter in which I am taking a very intense interest. The area in question is a very important one in so far as the fishery is concerned, both recreational and commercial.

Once I have the results of the investigation in hand, I shall take appropriate action at the earliest possible time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Spadina, in response.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond, briefly, to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) in respect of the consultation process.

What I find most discouraging is the fact that, under the legislation, the Minister will not recommend a regulation unless he is satisfied that not all of the Governments of the provinces are prepared to implement, by or under provincial law, provisions substantially the same as those contained in the regulation.

In other words, if the Minister finds that nine of the provinces are doing it but one is not, he may go ahead, or perhaps even "shall" go ahead. But how long is he going to take in consultation with the provincial Ministers? If he gets a less than satisfactory answer from the current Minister, will he await a change in cabinet responsibilities in that province and consult the new Minister? How long will the consultation process take?

That aspect of it is very unsatisfactory. While the federal Minister operates under a time limitation, the provincial Ministers do not. As a consequence, that particular clause of the legislation amounts to an invitation to do nothing at all, so long as the federal Minister finds that at least one province is still hanging in the air on a given question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments is now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé), the Parliamentary Secretary.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to a Bill that is so important to the Canadian people, and whose purpose is to protect the environment, life and health of all Canadians. The Canadian Environmental Protection Act is a very important piece of legislation. In fact, for the first time in more than ten years, the Government has tabled major legislation that constitutes a commitment to protecting the environment for present and for future generations. The Bill deals, of course, with air pollution and the contamination of waterways, land and the oceans. It provides the authority to regulate toxic substances, whether organic or inorganic, animate or inanimate.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill also tells everyone that polluting the environment is a crime punishable by law. And we have our work cut out for us, because once this legislation is adopted by Parliament, its provisions still have to be enforced.

We realize this, and last week, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when he met the President of the United States in Washington, was very serious in his discussions about protecting the environment, about acid rain and about other areas of concern as well. We realize this, Mr. Speaker. We have earmarked $37 million for this purpose and set up investigation services in all regions.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of discussion about Bill C-74. On second reading, twenty-four Members spoke to this Bill. The Legislative Committee met twenty-seven times. One hundred and forty-six amendments were approved. At the report stage, forty-one Members spoke to the Bill, and we are now at the third reading stage and we have already had nearly seven hours of debate. And it seems that we will need more, and that we will have to continue the debate on this important Bill.

• (1720)

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of third reading of Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Grisé). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): According to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), if 15 or more Members rise in their places to object the motion is defeated.

Shall the motion carry?

And more than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since more than 15 Members have risen, the motion is deemed to be withdrawn.

Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. First, I want to indicate that out of 208 Progressive Conservatives there are fewer than 20 in the House of Commons at the moment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has been a long-time Member of this House and knows why I am rising. He should not bring to the attention of anyone or even the television audience the presence or absence of Members in the House. There are televisions in the lobbies where Members may be watching the debate. I hope the Hon. Member will please not comment on who is or is not in the House.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Government does not want to debate the issue of the environment. This is one of the very few opportunities we have had in the last four years for Members from all sides to speak on this issue. I do not think I have heard a single government Member speak on this important legislation in the last few days.

An Hon. Member: They are ashamed of their record.

Mr. Riis: The Government is ashamed of its record, no question. The Government now wants to muzzle and curtail debate and invoke closure.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We just moved a motion to extend hours so the debate could continue. The Hon. Member and his Party refused that offer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. I believe the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) was questioning or commenting with regard to Bill C-74. If Hon. Members want to discuss House business, I would appreciate it if they would do so outside the Chamber.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that with such a large majority the Government cannot manage the business of the House in a more productive and businesslike way. That is another problem for another debate, as you have indicated, Mr. Speaker.

One of the proposals which the New Democratic Party originally put forward in 1980 with the previous administration and now with the Progressive Conservative Government was the suggestion that we ought to take steps to move low sulphur coal from eastern British Columbia, western Alberta and Saskatchewan to provide coal for Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Shields: We are working on it.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) said the Government is working on it. The Conservatives have been in Government now for almost four years and we ought to have seen some progress.

The trade deal which the Government is about to sign would make it impossible to strike an arrangement that would transfer coal from the West for Ontario Hydro. The thousands of jobs it would create are very important, but today the issue that is important would be the environmental implications of that transfer of coal. If that coal were to be moved from western Canada to Ontario Hydro, it would be lower in sulphur than the present coal that is imported from the United States. Consequently, the creation of acid rain would be significantly reduced as a result of the burning of that western coal

I have a question for the Member who is concerned about environmental issues. When it comes to fighting acid rain—we have not seen a single initiative of any substance by the Government yet—why does not a representative of the Government rise today and say, "We are committed to moving low sulphur western coal which will create thousands of jobs for Canadians and result in a significant reduction in acid rain in Canada", rather than prolonging the discussion year after year after year and taking no action? Eventually a trade deal with the United States will prohibit the Government from ever making that announcement.

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is accusing this Government of trying to muzzle the Opposition, while in fact, the exact opposite is happening, because when I personally moved a motion to extend the debate today, fifteen Members of the New Democratic Party rose to object to the motion. There were also six Liberals, Mr. Speaker. Was it . . .

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am going to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that he should not indicate the number of people in the House. I hope he will just put his question or make a comment.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I am going directly to the point; and I want to thank you for your comments.

[Translation]

So I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that we really want to continue this debate, and that is why we moved the motion. As for the most important part of the question asked by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) . . .

[English]

As far as the transfer of coal from British Columbia to Ontario Hydro is concerned, there is some activity now for the transfer of coal from B.C. to Ontario Hydro, and it is my understanding that this will improve in the coming months.

As for the comments of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis)—

[Translation]

. . . he says he is concerned about the impact of the free trade agreement on the environment. Mr. Speaker, obviously, the only favourable impact the free trade agreement has, as far as the NDP is concerned, is on the electoral district of Oshawa.

[English]

There is nowhere else. The only place where free trade is good for the NDP is in Oshawa.

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé). I too have often spoken from my side against the Reagan-Mulroney Accord. It is not good at all for Saskatchewan and all families where I come from are against it as are all families in Quebec. As the Hon. Member knows, I know Mr. Jacques Proulx, president of the UPA, very well, and he is opposed to the Accord. The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) attended a meeting of the UPA only a few months ago. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not at all the debate here; the issue is free trade, it is the environment and our Prime Minister said that he had a special relationship with Mr. Reagan. He often spoke about acid rain. But the Prime Minister suffered a great failure, because he did not at all convince the President of the United States to come up with something positive on acid rain. Perhaps the Hon. Member across the way could explain to the House why the Conservative policy on acid rain, which is so important for Quebec and throughout Canada, was a big failure. Despite the special relationship between the Prime Minister and Mr. Reagan, two very conservative gentlemen, there was a big failure. Why?

• (1730)

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has not been in Quebec for some time, and if he did so, he probably went straight to the office of the UPA, because if you talk to the people in Quebec ridings, especially in the riding of Chambly, they will tell you they are very much in favour of the free trade agreement with the United States.

As far as environmental policies are concerned, this is the first Government in ten years to introduce a sound piece of legislation on the environment, and not just in Quebec but in Canada. This legislation will benefit the entire population of Quebec which is very concerned about the environment, one example being the damage to our maple stands and the impact on maple products in the Bois-Francs and Beauce regions. This is very important. We also have our waterways. Mr. Speaker, you know how important these waterways are to Quebec. This Government was the first Government to invest $37 million to help clean up our waterways, to protect the environment and prosecute those who pollute the environment in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Thank you, Sir. Dai brozja, tovarich. I want—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That translates into "good luck to you, Mr. Speaker", just in case Hansard did not receive the Hon. Member's words.

Mr. Benjamin: I said that because I noted that you were nominated the other day and I wish you good luck in "Redmonton".

I want to begin by reminding my hon. friends on all sides of the House that every time we deal with the matter of our environment we forget that neither we in this House nor any other Canadian has any right to continue to pollute our air, our water, our land, degrade our forests, our wildlife or our fishery. I pose the question: Who the heck do we think we are that we can leave for our children and grandchildren the mess that we have left? The longer we leave it, the more it costs to clean up.

I look upon this Bill as a half measure, half-baked, and I know I have to watch my language so I will have to say, half rear ended. The Government should be laying down a national standard which every province, every municipality, indeed every citizen would have to abide by. Since we have no right to leave that mess for succeeding generations, and because we are all going to have to share in the cost of cleaning it up, it will mean higher taxes for individual citizens, it will mean lower profits for corporations, and it will mean a smaller dividend for shareholders. However, we all must share in the cost because we have no other choice.

That means, Sir, that leadership must come from our national Government and Parliament. If some province or other wants to do less than that, that is too bad. The province that does not want to measure up with the rest of Canada should meet national standards, and I profoundly believe that the overwhelming majority of Canadians would agree with that, no matter what political Party is in power in Ottawa. This concerns the welfare of our country. It is in the national interest, it is for the public good and, most important, it is in the interest of succeeding generations.

I could go through a list of half a dozen things in this Bill which I think are very good. However, when it comes to the crunch, the federal Government is abdicating its responsibility and the responsibility of Parliament. It will leave it up to more studies. It will leave it up to the provinces and consultation. As I said in a question to my colleague from Spadina, the provinces cannot even agree on what time of day it should be. Anyone who thinks they are going to get unanimity on national environmental standards among 10 provinces and two territories is dreaming in technicolour. No matter the political stripes of those respective Governments, you are not going to get it. We need a national Government with the political courage to set down national standards, and anything that moves across a provincial border has to be covered. I do not see how it can be any other way if we are to have any kind of success over the next 15 or 20 years in cleaning up our air and water.

My colleague from Kamloops—Shuswap raised with the Hon. Member on the government side the matter of the use of low sulphur coal. After all the noise we heard from the previous Government and the present Government, the lovey-dovey love-in between our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States on acid rain, for the fourth time, Canada has increased its own tonnage of acid rain fall-out over the last 20 years. Until 1960, Canada had a far smaller tonnage of acid rain, in fact it had the lowest fall-out. That is because from your province, Mr. Speaker, from mine, and from eastern British Columbia we moved anywhere from five to 20 trainloads of low sulphur western coal a day to Manitoba Hydro, Ontario Hydro, and even some to Quebec Hydro. I do not think there is one coal mine left open in the entire Drumheller Valley where there is a 200 or 300-year supply of low sulphur coal. There may be a very small amount moving out of the Crowsnest Pass coal mines but most of Blairmore, Coleman, and Crowsnest are shut down.

In southern Saskatchewan you need strip off only six to 20 feet of earth to find the lignite coal, but the only coal we are using is for the Saskatchewan Power Corporation. As I understand it, that coal has the lowest sulphur content of any coal in western Canada, and there is a 200 or 300-year supply right there just beneath the surface as well.

Until 1960, the federal Government paid the railroads a subvention. I am sure that my hon. friend, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer), knows about this and understands it. Until 1960 we paid a subvention of up to $5 a tonne, which was really a subsidization of the transportation costs to move that coal from western Canada to central Canada. That has gone by the boards.

With a few dozen coal mines shut down in western Canada we are bringing high sulphur coal up from Kentucky and Virginia which are, of course, closer, which means that the transportation costs are lower. Where are the priorities of Canada? If we want to do something about acid rain, why, in heaven's name, are we burning high sulphur coal in Ontario brought in from the eastern United States when there is Canadian coal lying in the ground?

I see the new Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) here. I hope he does better with that portfolio than he did with Transport. He is a nice fellow. I know he is competent and capable, but methinks he has a problem. The Minister might want to get up and correct me, and if I am wrong I am sure he will be anxious to do so. However, I suspect that if we provide a subvention of $5, $10, or even $15 a tonne to take western coal to Ontario Hydro, it will be a violation of the Reagan-Mulroney trade deal, it will be considered an unfair subsidy.

Any sovereign nation worthy of its nationhood and independence will not allow the Government of another country to decide what it can or cannot do. We want to do something as essential as reducing acid rain and cleaning up our air, yet we allow another nation to dictate to us, and the Government is dumb enough to sign a trade agreement which prevents us from using coal from western Canada. That is traitorous behaviour in my books. That is a betrayal of our nationhood. We have no excuse for doing that. We have no excuse for being party to an agreement which prevents Canada from using its own coal from the West in central Canada because the Americans do not like it.

Every time we provided transportation assistance on commodities in Atlantic Canada or western Canada it was to take into account our geography, climate, location of population, and location of resources. We tried to provide equitable treatment. We do not want to discriminate against people because of where they happen to live or where they happen to produce a resource. This goes back to the Crowsnest Pass Agreement of 1897 and other programs funded by the national Government in the 1870s and 1880s. We recognized the handicap we have because of our geography, climate, and location of population.

This has now gone by the boards. We no longer have the capacity as a nation to carry out our responsibilities in the name of our own national interests and our own public good. Clean air is a public good from coast to coast and from the 49th parallel to the North Pole.

These so-called Canadians who sit on the government side and on the treasury benches are weak-kneed and lily-livered. I am tempted to buy those nice, thick knee pads that my mother used when she scrubbed floors and send a pair to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in case he makes another trip to Washington. I feel embarrassed, betrayed, and outraged as a Canadian that they would be party to something which prevents us from doing things in my province, your province, Mr. Speaker, and in British Columbia, which the whole nation needs. I call that traitorous behaviour.

The Government sits by and relies on the beautiful word "consultation". It has been consulting and consulting. Every time the Government has consulted, whether with the U.S. or the provinces, it comes back to Ottawa and says that since some of the people with which it has consulted do not like the measures, it will water them down.

My hon. friend, who is bellowing like a bull moose in fly time—

Mr. King: At least I am saying something sensible.

Mr. Benjamin: —needs to be reminded of something from the earliest days of the trade union movement in this country, from which ranks I come. It was the trade union leadership of this country which, for over 100 years, stood up for the protection of the environment, for safety and security, for the rights of individual Canadians and for the health and welfare of Canadians. Conservative Ministers of Finance would ask whether we thought money grew on gooseberry bushes. I remind my hon. friends that on September 6, 1939, they found the gooseberry bush containing a whole pile of money. For what? For war.

• (1750)

Why not do the same thing as we did following the declaration of war, except call it a declaration of peace and spend $1 billion a year to clean up our air and water? We would all share in the costs, both directly and indirectly, because we are the ones who should pay, not our children, grandchildren and great grandchildren. That is what should be in this legislation.

There should be national standards. Expert environmentalists, scientists, the Canadian Labour Congress and the NDP are all calling for those national standards.

Mr. King: You will not have to pay for it.

Mr. Benjamin: The Hon. Member asks how you will pay for it. That is the same line we heard in the "Dirty Thirties". Let me inform my colleague that one of those nuclear submarines will pay for it. Why are their priorities so skewed that they will place greater priority on a nuclear submarine than on clean air and clean water? Who do we think they are?

Mr. King: We live in a real world.

Mr. Benjamin: We have no right to give greater priority to a nuclear submarine than to clean air and clean water. I ask my hon. friend to get up and say who he thinks he is, with that kind of priority. Where has he been? He sounds like the Tory of the 1930s and 1880s: "Where are you going to get the money?"

Mr. King: I didn't ask that. That is your question.

Mr. James: Where were you on property rights the other day?

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friend's property is not worth a damn when it's being polluted with acid rain. It is not worth a darn when the land is no longer any good and the forests are gone. It is in his best interests to make sure that his property is safe and preserved through national environmental laws and standards that achieve what must be done before the end of this century.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks vehemently and passionately about the environment. Yet we hear questions about where we will get the money.

I want to ask him a question about his own province. When talking about generating the necessary power that we need in society, particularly in industrialized areas, the Hon. Member says that it can be provided by non-polluting, low sulphur coal from Saskatchewan. Is this not something that would generate the economy not only in Saskatchewan but in central Canada and the West? While we are trying to protect our environment, we should also try to provide economic development. Has the Hon. Member considered the implications of developing the low sulphur coal in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for her question. Many of those huge machines that dig coal in Saskatchewan are made in central Canada. If Ontario Hydro used the lignite coal from Saskatchewan, we would probably require another 12 machines. These are monstrous machines that will lift 25 to 50 tonne loads in one scoop.

Furthermore, if they began using low sulphur coal in central Canada for hydro generation and other industrial uses, I suspect that Stelco and Algoma could convert some of their remaining coal-fired furnaces. That would reduce the acid rain fall-out from Canada, which would reduce the amount of money that must be spent by Ontario and the federal Government to clean up the air. That is an example of the multiplier effect.

It creates employment not only in the coal mining industry but in manufacturing and transportation. Of course, there would have to be some conversion of power plants in Ontario back to low sulphur coal.

Incidentally, the use of low sulphur coal would result in less money being spent on scrubbers. The cost of installing the latest technology in plants using high sulphur coal is substantially higher, which Ontario Hydro, hydro users and the Ontario Government will have to pay.

It seems to make sound business sense, sound economic sense, and sound environmental sense. I am amused when socialists have to tell those Tories about sound business practice. I would not let them manage a chicken coop when it comes to environmental matters.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I want to change the area of discussion somewhat. One of the weaknesses of the Bill is that it exempts the Pest Control Act from the new environmental protection law. That concerns us on the Prairies because it has the effect of completely neutering the control of agricultural chemicals in the food supply.

Researchers have concluded that 86 per cent of non-occupational exposure comes from food, 11 per cent from drinking water and 3 per cent from air. This legislation does not take into consideration the whole question of how chemicals get into the food chain and cause problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it six o'clock, may I note that the Hon. Member will have four minutes remaining for questions and comments when debate resumes on Bill C-74.

It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Government's response to eight petitions numbered as follows: 332-4185, 332-4187 to 332-4191, inclusive; 332-4211 and 332-4213.

[Editor's Note: For above petitions, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS

PRESENTATION OF NINTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Ninth Report of the Standing Joint Committee for the Scrutiny of Regulations.

Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the Joint Committee requests that the Government table a comprehensive response to this report.

STATUS OF DISABLED PERSONS

AUTHORIZATION TO VIDEOTAPE COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you would find that there is consent to put the following motion immediately without notice. I move:

That the Standing Committee on the Status of Disabled Persons be empowered to videotape its proceedings of Monday, May 30, 1988 and that an edited version be used solely for educational purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has had heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty, in accordance with Standing Order 106, to present a petition signed by some 200 residents of the constituency of Spadina and nearby in Toronto. They point out that Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed trade deal between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, for which the Prime Minister has no mandate.

Further, it would reduce Canada's ability to plan the programs we need for economic, social, and cultural needs, and would integrate us further into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, they request that Parliament make sure that there will be a debate in a national general election before this agreement is finalized.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of many residents of Stormont—Dundas concerning schizophrenia and the amount of money presently being spent. Over one per cent of the Canadian population is affected by this disease, and the petitioners hope that the Government would encourage further research in this area.

PROHIBITION WITH REGARD TO KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, once again I rise to present a petition with respect to the problem of killings and injuries as a result of people carrying knives.

I have petitions from residents of Burnaby, Surrey, Langley, New Westminster, Vancouver, and Richmond, British Columbia, as well as from other cities across the country. I hope the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will respond.

The petitioners state that whereas the incidents of crimes committed with knives, including murder, robbery and sexual assault, are on the increase in all major cities across Canada, and the federal Criminal Code and court decisions allow citizens to carry knives, and whereas the carrying of knives by persons in public places is directly responsible for a variety of crimes, therefore these petitioners call upon Parliament to amend the federal Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places, except for those where knives are an integral part of legitimate work or carried for religious reasons, such as with the Sikh religion.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a petition in the name of some 200 constituents. They ask the House of Commons to encourage further research into schizophrenia because it is a major illness in Canada affecting about 1 per cent of the population, causes severe mental anguish and suffering to the patients and their relatives, and costs Canadian society more than $3 billion annually.

The petitioners state that recent research findings obtained in Canada have shown the illness to be a biochemical brain disorder, in part caused by genetic malfunction. Schizophrenic patients, their relatives and friends desperately hope that a cure and method of prevention can be found as soon as possible through larger research efforts dedicated to schizophrenia.

Whereas the research effort in Canada dedicated to schizophrenia is very small and not commensurate with the seriousness and cost of the illness in Canada, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to make sure that the research efforts on schizophrenia in the future will be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I am pleased to have an opportunity to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents. They are concerned about the way the Government has handled the determination of those areas eligible for northern residents tax benefits. They see no rhyme nor reason for which communities are in and which are out, particularly those south of 55.

They are asking that Parliament declare all communities in what it calls Tier 3 ridings across Canada eligible for the northern residents deduction.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the third time and passed, and the Motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That this question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose yesterday there were four minutes remaining for questions and comments on the speech by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest when my hon. friend was making a delightful presentation on the environmental protection legislation. He has been a Member of the House of Commons for a number of years and has seen successive Liberal and Conservative administrations. In fact, he will be celebrating his twentieth anniversary here in just a few days.

Today we are debating the environmental protection Bill brought forward by the Government. While we plan to support it because it is a small step forward, will he pass some judgment on why we have waited so many years to debate the introduction of an environmental protection legislation? What have successive Conservative and Liberal administrations done in this regard?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question and his comments about my twentieth anniversary here. I wish I looked and felt 20 years old. My hon. friend is perfectly correct that I have seen Governments and Ministers of Environment come and go.

The main reason there has been slow and inadequate action in Canada is that this Government, like previous Governments, believes that the so-called market forces, free enterprise principles, and business practices should take priority. As long as there is a buck to be made, the control of dangerous and hazardous products will take second place.

For example, this legislation exempts pesticides used on farms. As my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) pointed out yesterday, 86 per cent of non-occupational exposure to pesticides and herbicides comes from our food, 11 per cent from our water, and 3 per cent from air. Obviously it has been apparent for many years that the vulnerability of every citizen to the bad effects of these substances is still very high.

I do not know why this legislation would exclude substances that are regulated by other Acts of Parliament because it should encompass all of them. Emissions from motor vehicles are excluded from this legislation because they are the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport. Pesticides and herbicides are excluded from this legislation because they come under the Pest Control Products Act.

We have a multiplicity of legislation scattered through several Departments, and one does not know what the other is doing. There is conflict among the Departments, the public, and the interests of those who manufacture, distribute, and sell dangerous and hazardous products. It will require some real political courage and determination by any Government to gather all of these laws under one jurisdiction. We can have the best law in the world and the best regulations, but they are only as good as the paper they are written on if they are not enforced. Without adequate inspection and enforcement, the law is meaningless. Inspection and enforcement both at the federal and provincial levels have been woefully inadequate all these years.

While the Bill is fine in principle, it leaves out a lot. I hope the Government is persuaded to move substantial amendments and accept some significant amendments from Members on all sides of the House in order to make this legislation a world leader.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say with all sincerity how delighted I am to participate in the debate today on the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. In just 25 days Canada will begin to celebrate Environment Week, which is set aside to encourage people to reflect on the importance of environmental issues. That will be relatively easy to do, because recent public opinion surveys reveal that 70 per cent of Canadians describe themselves as being more concerned about their environment than ever before.

If there is an issue that brings people out from the comforts of their homes to a public gathering, it is the area of environmental concerns. In my own constituency, when there is a problem of pollution of the Shuswap Lake system, we can be guaranteed that hundreds, if not thousands, of people will show up to hear the issues presented by the various experts. Right now one major issues is whether or not the central part of British Columbia should become a waste disposal area for western North America. I must say that is something that concerns me a great deal. I cannot be very enthusiastic about having our community becoming famous for its waste disposal facilities.

These are the issues we are facing today. We have increased pollution of our soils, our atmosphere, and our river and riverine systems. As a result of various levels of government bringing these problems to the attention of Canadians, we are becoming more and more concerned. I remember the publication that discussed acid rain a few years ago, in the early 1980s. The Government thought it was appropriate that people understand this issue. Most of us had never heard of acid rain. Now it is a household word, I suspect. Young people in particular have a real understanding and appreciation of this problem, which I think bodes well for our future. We have seen this concern develop in the United States over the years, as we have educated Americans to the realities of the acid rain phenomenon.

As we in the House of Commons speak on this subject today, we are all aware that between the rocks of our walls the mortar is falling out and that the stone itself is deteriorating as a result of the acid rain we find around us. When you and I, Mr. Speaker, attempt to go fly-fishing on some of the beautiful lakes surrounding Parliament Hill, we find that although the lakes look clear and we can see right down to the bottom, we cannot see anything in them. There are no bugs, no worms, no fish; there is no life. the lakes have been turned into a lifeless hole. These are the concerns about which we are aware, and today we have an opportunity to discuss the Government's effort at bringing in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

I want to say right off the top that we plan to support this initiative, although we feel it is a minute step in the right direction. I really must emphasize that I find it difficult to become enthusiastic about this initiative. I find it impossible to be laudatory in my remarks, but I want to say that at least we have an Environmental Protection Act. At least we have taken that initiative as a Parliament, and I am pleased about it. However, while we certainly recognize that this is a movement in the right direction, we still have a long way to go.

I had the opportunity the other day to read the report of a fellow named Ross Hume Hall, who is a member of the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council, a body which advised the federal Minister of the Environment between the years 1975 and 1982. He is presently a professor of biochemistry at McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario. He presented us with an incredibly valuable insight into just how serious the situation is. I think we all recognize that there are something like 100,000 industrial chemicals in existence in the environment today. Each year approximately 1,000 more chemicals are added. It is out of hand. As Mr. Hall points out, almost all these chemicals have never been tested for any toxicological effect whatsoever. Of the other chemicals, we know very little. We are filling up our environment with tens of thousands of new chemicals, one thousand each year, and we know very little about them. Obviously, that causes a lot of concern.

Mr. Hall makes the case that the blame lies not so much with the Department of the Environment, because the officials working for that Department have had some serious handicaps which prevented them from doing a lot of their work over the last number of years. He indicates in his article that we have seen a parade of 11 Ministers of the Environment, when he calls either disinterested or politically feeble, passing through the Department since 1972. He says successive federal Governments, both Liberal and Conservative, have encouraged weak management, so that the Department of the Environment has become a declawed and neutered tom-cat, showy but unaggressive and docile. It is an interesting observation. When we consider that so many Ministers of the Environment have passed through the system, we see how difficult it is for any Minister to take real control and provide strong leadership for the Department. I think that has been one of the problems for the last number of years.

This particular legislation should be worked on in terms of improvement. We made that effort as a political Party. The New Democrats submitted literally hundreds of suggestions and amendments to improve this particular piece of legislation. While the Government accepted some of the amendments, it rejected an overwhelming number of amendments that we put forward. What I believe we are getting with this Environmental Protection Act is not really the Bill Canadians want in terms of protecting the environment of Canada and, indeed, the environment of the world.

I can say without any hesitation that the legislation is quite weak. While it is called the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, or Bill C-74, it is very modest in scope. It is not really an Environmental Protection Act. It is really an update of the Environmental Contaminates Act, with some aspects of the Ocean Dumping Control Act and the Clear Air Act thrown in. In some cases there has actually been a regression in protection because of a weakening in the regulatory power which used to be in some of these other Acts.

To be fair, Bill C-74 gives the Government the scope to identify toxic substances and the scope to regulate these toxic substances once they have been identified. It gives the Government the ability to screen the substances before they are used in the environment. There is one fundamental improvement in the approach, and that is the change in the onus of proof.

Industry could bring in virtually anything it wanted, after the fact people had to go to a great deal of trouble in order to prove that the substance was toxic, and then some regulation would be brought in. In other words, an industry could introduce some chemical into the environment, and unless one could prove it had adverse toxic effects on our environment, nothing was really done. We have changed the onus, and I think that is a major improvement to the legislation. Industry will now have to convince regulators that substances are safe to use. It will have to show the criteria that it used to prove that point, and the substances we presently use in the system will have to be put on a priority list and tested.

We have some means of redressing the mistakes made in the past. However, let us be very clear that this is a very cumbersome and flawed process. Largely, it relies overwhelmingly on laboratory tests of various sorts. Laboratories deal with substances as you well know, Mr. Speaker, one at a time, and they do not take into account the cumulative effects of different kinds of toxic contaminants. Therefore they do not consider what is happening in the real world, or the environment per se. It is one thing to test a chemical for its toxic qualities in a laboratory setting and quite another to see what happens in the real world when, in fact, there could be a serious cumulative effect or an intermixing of chemicals from the natural environment. Let us recognize that it is certainly better than what we have had in the past.

Under the Environmental Protection Act Canadians will have the right to complain to the Government when substances are not identified or regulated to their satisfaction. As a Party, we had amendments in this case which would reduce the number of people necessary to complain in order to initiate some action. However, this is another positive aspect of the Bill.

The Bill will also ban the export of toxic substances when the use of the substances is banned in Canada. You might think, Mr. Speaker, who on earth would export a toxic substance that was banned in Canada to another country, often a Third World country. You would be surprised, Mr. Speaker, since there are literally hundreds of cases of not very scrupulous exporters taking advantage of products that have been banned in our country for obvious reasons, that is, because of their harmful effects on the environment, and then exporting those to other countries. That now will be stopped. This is a major step forward that this legislation has provided us.

The Bill will also give the Government the right to regulate fuels on the basis of environment quality. Here again, this is something that we are very pleased to see because emissions from motor vehicles are a prime source of pollution, particularly in our metropolitan areas. Also, it is well known that the emissions contribute to acid rain. This particular element gives the Government an opportunity to act in the future in order to keep down the pollutants going into our atmosphere.

I was encouraged to see the fact that the Bill gives the Government regulatory authority over nutrients and water conditioners. I suppose this is really a relatively minor matter, but, again, it is a step in the right direction. This is particularly important to myself and others because we have seen in some of our very pristine western lakes an element of pollution creeping in through the use of houseboats.

Houseboating has become a very popular recreational activity. On some lakes such as the Shuswap Lake system we have literally hundreds of houseboats floating around. When people are on those houseboats for a few days they have to do certain things. Often those things are not necessarily done in the proper way. I think you will understand what I am referring to, Mr. Speaker.

Not only are those things people end up doing to the environment in a direct way a problem but, more important, is what is called grey water. You are a person familiar with this concept, Mr. Speaker, being a recreationalist yourself. Grey water is the kind of thing from dishwashing and showers, when we use soap and detergents and dump that into the water. That is one problem.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, an experience I told you about some time back when I was having a chance to do some boating in the Gulf Islands. We tied up in a little cove with about 35 or 40 other boats for the evening. It was very shallow but protected from the wind conditions and other problems to boating. I got up in the morning and jumped in for a refreshing dip, only to notice an awful lot of material floating in the water that seemed to be foreign. Indeed, when I recognized exactly what it was, I wondered what on earth we were doing in this little protected cove. I cannot imagine that we have a country that would allow people literally to flush out toilets from hundreds of people, sitting in a little cove, directly out into the salt chuck. But that is what has happened. It is a bit of an aside, but in a very vivid and personal way it points out how important it is for us to have a Canadian Environmental Protection Act that hopefully will deal with these sorts of horrible situations in the future.

The Bill before us legislates governmental authority to make environmental regulations with respect to federal Departments and Crown agencies. This clarifies something that many of us have been concerned about for some time. I want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a letter that was sent recently by the Thompson-Nicola Regional District to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). It states:

> The Board of Directors of the Thompson-Nicola Regional District considered the following recommendations of the Union of B.C. Municipalities with respect to the Draft Environmental Protection Act:
> 1. The liability of local government be more clearly and reasonably defined in line with the tone and substance of our specific concerns.
> 2. The Federal Government establish a mechanism whereby potential conflicts between Environment Canada and local government can be resolved in a co-operative fashion.
> 3. The Federal Government agrees to compensate local government for any added regulatory costs this legislation may place on it.
> 4. The Federal Government take a balanced approach to environmental concerns and make a commitment to fund infrastructure costs.

These are concerns that reflect a region in British Columbia trying to identify clearly who is responsible for what kind of activity. Often in the past when we have seen problems of environmental pollution everyone passed the buck. It was said that it was not a local concern but a provincial concern, or others said that it was not their concern but a federal concern and the federal Government said that it was not its concern but someone else's. As a result the pollution continues, environmental degradation continues, and everyone steps back and blames it on someone else's incompetency. The Bill provides us with an excellent opportunity to take federal leadership on these issues. Again, this is one of the woeful inadequacies of this Bill. It fails to do that as the request comes to us from the Thompson-Nicola Regional District.

There is one aspect that the Government, if it is concerned about environmental conditions and, in particular, the pollution of our waterways, ought to consider more seriously. It is the issue that was put before us by the Association of Canadian Municipalities. That organization represents the urban areas of Canada where they, in co-operation with the provincial Governments, have proposed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a cost-sharing program in which, for sewage treatment facilities, for example, the local taxpayers, the local Government, would assume one-third of the costs. The provincial Government would assume one-third of the costs, as would the federal Government. This would allow municipalities, both large and small, to develop the necessary sewage treatment facilities.

It is a sad situation when we still have many, many communities, both large and small, some as large as the City of Montreal, that are for all intents and purposes still depositing raw sewage into our river systems and our lakes. Yet that goes on in 1988. It is almost hard to believe. One of the reasons that a great many smaller municipalities indicate why they do it is that they do not have the tax base to perform. This is one way that the federal Government could co-operate to do that. All the cities agree. All the provinces and territories agree. There is only one hold-up, that is, our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We have to put a little heat on him to take action.

This legislation is encouraging because it establishes the possibility for boards of review to be created upon the petition of individuals who are dissatisfied with the regulations under this Act. If there are citizens who want to take a petition to ask that a board of review be set up to examine a particular component of his Bill, that mechanism is provided. I think that is another major step, as well as the fact that the Bill finally provides for some reasonable fines for those people who simply ignore environmental regulations. I am referring to fines of up to $1 million a day for offenders in terms of environmental crimes under this Bill, and also prison sentences if necessary. We are finally getting gutsy and saying that the environment is important and, if one is going to conduct crimes against the environment, then an individual or a company must pay the price. Fines of up to $1 million a day and jail sentences are long overdue.

This is also a very clear signal that we can provide to the people of Canada that we are serious. If one is going to go out and dump toxic wastes into a river system or into our atmosphere, then we will be prepared to lay charges.

• (1140)

There is a number of things that I should mention that the Bill does not do. I have one minute left, so I will mention only one of the major flaws. The Bill fails to incorporate the much demanded environmental bill of rights. The overwhelming majority of Canadians who are concerned about this issue want an environmental bill of rights. It is very clear where we stand on the whole matter of environmental pollution. As a society, we are against it. A comprehensive environmental bill of rights would do just that. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, all we have is a preamble at the beginning of this Bill which goes in that direction. Rather than having a preamble, let us have the development of a comprehensive environmental bill of rights. Every Canadian should have the right to a healthy environment and should not have to be exposed to a polluted environment, whether it is on land, or water, or in the atmosphere.

The Canadian Environmental Protection Act has not done anything on some of the major environmental issues. I refer to the issue of pesticides which is set aside. The Bill does not address acid rain, the issue of the nuclear industry, or the packaging and the treatment of consumer products and the pollution that occurs there. In other words the Bill does not address some of the most critical environmental issues in our country—nuclear energy, acid rain, and the use of pesticides, which is out of control these days. Obviously, this is a very major weakness in the legislation.

In this Bill the Government fails to put a time limit on how long the Government can take to decide if a substance is toxic after it has been put on the priority list. This again is a major failing, because we do not want to take 35 years to determine if a chemical is adversely toxic.

I could go on, but I know there are others who want to say a few words on this critical issue before we vote on it, presumably later in the day. I appreciate this opportunity and look forward to the next debate when we take this legislation and upgrade it in order that when we have a Canadian Environmental Protection Act it is an Act that protects Canadians from a polluted environment.

Mr. Murphy: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) commenced an explanation of why he believed it was important to have an environmental bill of rights. He mentioned that there was only one minute left in his speech and, therefore, he did not have adequate time to expand upon that point. I wonder if in using the time available for questions and comments the Hon. Member could expand upon that and explain to us why he believes that an environmental bill of rights would be useful in our Canadian context.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) realizes that I gave him an extra couple of minutes, so if he would wind up I would appreciate it.

Mr. Riis: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker, I would be only too pleased to co-operate with your request.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), has indicated that there is obviously a need for an environmental bill of rights. I do not think there is anyone in the House who would say that that is not a reasonable request or suggestion.

While I indicated at the outset of my comments that Bill C-74 is a minute step in the right direction, it is not a comprehensive piece of legislation. It excludes pesticides, no matter how toxic they are. It excludes nuclear contaminants, no matter how toxic or dangerous they are. Obviously it is not comprehensive legislation. It is actually very narrowly focused. It does not provide any standards of environmental quality. What we have in the legislation are guidelines and objectives, but they are not as strong as the standards that must be met. I feel that we should be setting very specific standards. Therefore, this is again one of the major deficiencies in the legislation.

We all agree that Canadians have the right to a healthy environment. If there is any country in the world that is in a position to provide that, it must be Canada. We are extremely fortunate that in most of Canada the environment is relatively clean. In other parts, unfortunately that is not the case. We ought to focus our efforts not only on cleaning up the waste material and the pollution that exists in certain zones of the country but on taking steps to ensure that this stops and that we simply do not have those types of contaminants in our atmosphere, soils, and water.

There have been repeated demands to the Government to provide the necessary clout to give citizens the right to take polluters to court. For example, citizens on behalf of future generations, on behalf of their children, and on behalf of their neighbours ought to have the opportunity to do that. That is not provided in this legislation. It is only if a person has a direct financial stake that he or she can take the polluter to court.

We can have a very narrow focus that pollution may cause some immediate harm that can be dealt with, but there is not the real understanding that pollution is harmful to everyone. We are all in this together. Pollution in one area will move to another; underground rivers can eventually unite and mix these toxic chemicals and other contaminants. What a person does in one part of Canada might have a profound effect on an individual in another part of the country, to say nothing of the toxic chemicals that are in the atmosphere.

Pesticides that are sprayed on a field in Alabama will eventually turn up in the Great Lakes system. Do you know how long it will take to do that, Mr. Speaker? Sometimes it will take less than five days from the time that the fields are sprayed in Alabama to the time those chemicals reach the Great Lakes system. It is quite incredible how quickly those contaminants can move about the continent.

A Canadian Environmental Protection Act of a comprehensive nature that would include an environmental bill of rights would not only provide a safer environment for people, but it would send a very clear signal to all Canadians of how serious we are as a country in terms of a clean environment. Once that signal is made and that leadership is provided, many Canadians would be more inclined in their own personal lives to clean up their act when it comes to dealing with perhaps something as simple as recycling garbage. They look to see if it is a serious problem, then of course they can expect the Parliament of Canada to act. That is why we are a little less than gleeful as we close off debate on the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, because it fails to provide this necessary environmental bill of rights for which most thoughtful Canadians have called for years. Now, as the polls indicate, the majority of Canadians have indicated a sincere interest in seeing it produced.

Ms. Dewar: My colleague referred to the study that was conducted by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, and indeed the type of pollution that is taking place by urban living, the industrialization of the urban society, and the types of things that are happening to the degeneration of the sewage systems where there are treatment centres. He also referred to the areas of some cities where no treatment is taking place.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member if, when looking at this type of study, he sees the ability to implement the results and the recommendations if this Bill were strengthened to give us some control in environmental assessment?

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the comment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar). The point that she makes is very valid. There is certainly an interrelationship between the position of the urban areas in terms of their ability to treat sewage and deal with other environmental matters, and I can think here of all types of waste material.

If this Bill had been stronger in terms of requiring action and setting very clear standards as opposed to guidelines, we could make a much stronger case that the Minister of Finance ought to act in terms of providing the necessary sewage treatment facilities which are obviously needed, but a useful spin-off would be the tremendous amount of employment that would be generated over the years these new systems are being introduced. In terms of job creation, taking people off the unemployment insurance roll and giving them an opportunity to participate in meaningful and useful work in their communities, as well as cleaning up the environment, it would certainly be worth the money invested.

When it comes to dealing with the environment it is a non-partisan issue. That is why it is in the interest of all of us on all sides of the House to do what we can as cabinet Members, front-benchers, and back-benchers, to bring as much pressure to bear on the Minister of Finance as we possibly can so that he joins with his political colleagues from every part of Canada and every level of government to deal with the very tragic crisis facing our country and, in this case, our municipalities. They do not have the tax base to allow them to develop the necessary sewage treatment facilities and infrastructure in most cases, so it requires a partnership. We are all concerned about it because if one municipality upstream is polluting the river system and we are sitting downstream taking a glass of water out of that system, we want to make sure it is as pristine as possible. We all have a vested interest in ensuring that all municipalities have the ability to deal with their sewage problems in a proper way.

I want to thank my hon. friend for the suggestion that if we had the necessary standards that we want in this legislation, we would obviously be able to make a much stronger case to our municipal, regional, and provincial counterparts that we must all join together in a co-operative effort to clean up the environment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a privilege for me to have the opportunity to enter this debate. One of the reasons I became a Member of Parliament was my concern for our environment in general, as well as our work environment. As our House Leader said earlier, the NDP caucus will support this legislation but we do so with some reluctance. We are seeing a step-by-step process to ensure the quality of our environment, but the steps are small. Indeed, with the number of new chemicals and contaminants being developed every year, we are in a very serious race just to try and maintain the quality of the environment as it is now, let alone restoring it to the condition it should be.

This debate reminds me of other debates we have had in that quite often the legislation being debated looks quite sound. The ideals are there. The general direction outlined is where we would like to progress to. However, we then discover that through the regulation-making process the concept of the legislation is often diminished. Let me give a couple of examples outside the environmental field.

There is an amendment to Bill C-79, dealing with the Elections Act, which says that the average size of a poll in Canada, presently 250 voters, will be changed. It will set the minimum size of a poll at 250 voters. The legislation has not yet been passed by Parliament, but we have already heard that the Chief Electoral Officer has instructed some returning officers to read that legislation as saying that the minimum size of a poll in Canada would be 400 to 450. That shows us that when Parliament changes one word in some legislation, or a very small clause, further down the road someone can use that small change to make a drastic change in the effect of the legislation.

If this was the only example of that kind of thing, then perhaps we would not be worried about what happens to the regulations concerning the environment after this legislation is passed. However, there are other examples. Bill C-124 has not been passed by this House, but we are told that the industry is waiting for it to be passed so that it can increase the number of dust particles in the air in the coal mines of Cape Breton. The legislation does not indicate that there will be an increase in those particles which create a fire or health hazard, but we know there are people who have been working behind the scenes to make sure that the regulations allow the corporations to do so.

A third example relates to an issue which has been dealt with in Question Period over the last couple of days. The American film industry has said in a circular it sent to its membership that it has the agreement of the Government of Canada to be involved in the setting of regulations after the House finally deals with legislation concerning film distribution. This legislation has not even been debated in the House, yet the lobbyists for the American industry are saying they already have the Government's agreement that they will be in a position to make sure the regulations fit the needs and concerns of the American film industry, not those of the Canadian film industry or Canadian distributors. What does that do to the debate in the House? We will be dealing with legislation which seems to indicate that the Government is to stand firm and ensure that there is a healthy Canadian film industry, but with this statement by the Americans that they have won their battle, the whole process that we go through becomes a joke.

This kind of situation occurs in so many pieces of legislation that the lobbyists know it is not what is in the legislation that counts as long as it is vague enough; it is what is done by the bureaucrats and cabinet officials after the legislation has passed that really matters.

I have seen, as I am sure have others including yourself, situations where companies and individuals dealing with government officials make sure that the regulations concerning the legislation are either very weak, watered down, or are not capable of being enforced properly. That happens on a consistent basis, and every time it does Parliament is the loser. The people are losers as well.

There are groups in this country that have been fighting for a strong Environmental Protection Act. They have talked to Members of the House. They have made their presentations to the committee that studied Bill C-74. They talked with cabinet Ministers. They assume that is the process they should be going through. They assume that when the House passes the various amendments it will produce legislation to protect the environment. What they have never been told about is the silent lobbying, the quiet voices that are getting to the Ministers behind the scenes. This has become a routine, Mr. Speaker. While those of us in the House and the groups out in society are fighting for the actual wording of legislation, making sure that as many of the i's are dotted and the t's are crossed as possible, quiet conversations are going on, not behind the curtains of Parliament, but in the offices and in the board rooms of the nation. Those are the places where too many decisions are being made.

• (1200)

When I looked at this Environmental Protection Bill I had those same concerns. There are some good ideas in this Bill, ideas that we accept, but we are not sure what will happen when the regulations are passed. This Bill gives the Government scope to identify toxic substances. But, how will that be done? The Bill gives the Government scope to regulate those toxic substances it has identified. Again, how will that take place? The Bill gives the Government the ability to screen new substances before they are used in the environment. Again, there is no indication of what the regulations and the requirements will be. The Bill gives Canadians the right to complain to the Government when substances are not identified or regulated to their satisfaction. But, what happens after those complaints are heard?

Canadians are writing letters and phoning their Members of Parliament and government offices across the country on a daily basis. It is what happens there after that becomes important. Again, this legislation does not give any guarantee that those complaints will be listened to. I could list each and every area where the Bill gives the Government power to act, but it does not say what will happen. That is our concern.

It is a major problem with much legislation passed in this House of Commons. We pass Bills in good faith and assume things will happen. We know though that there have already been some quiet deals made, such as is the case with the film distribution legislation which is yet to be introduced in this House. We know the same thing will happen with the labour legislation. We have had this experience with past legislation affecting health and safety in the workplace. Will the same thing happen with the environment Bill as well? It will be very interesting to see, once this legislation is passed, what the regulations are that result from the Bill and what effect they will have on our nation.

There are many areas not covered by the environmental protection legislation before us. For example, this Bill does not deal with many of the destructive substances in use today. Specifically it excludes substances that are regulated by other Acts of Parliament. Pesticides and motor vehicle emissions are examples.

The federal Government took this same approach with regard to the Workplace Hazardous Materials Information System. We passed that legislation approximately a year ago. The Bill stipulated that if hazardous goods were being used in the workplace labels must be affixed to the containers listing the chemicals. Within that workplace there must be information sheets explaining the dangers of the various chemicals, what safety measures can be used and if there is an accident, what action should be taken. This was very useful legislation which resulted from negotiations among the unions, the corporations, and the provinces. We approved of this legislation. However, the same exemptions were there—pesticides, agricultural products, tobacco, and a number of other products which affect workers.

It became obvious to us that that was an example the Government wanted to follow in many areas. In Bill C-74 we see the same process. The Government says that we do not have to deal with pesticides, even though they are known to be a danger to the environment of this nation, in the Environmental Protection Act because they can be dealt with through some other Act of Parliament. We do not have to deal with emissions for motor vehicles because they, too, can be dealt with through some other Act of Parliament.

Pesticides and most vehicle emissions have been a major problem to the environment of Canada. If we keep excluding them from a Bill which is supposed to be protecting our environment, then we are forgetting the whole purpose of the Environmental Protection Act. We do not have one Act which is supreme when it comes to dealing with the environment.

When it came to the workplace hazardous material legislation we compromised. We said that the Government could pass the legislation and that it could exclude all these areas from having to provide information about what is dangerous in the workplace. However, we insisted upon a parliamentary review of each and every one of those exceptions within a two-year period. After a bit of bargaining the Government agreed to the compromise. This was done to make sure the Government would take some action within the next two-year period. Industries excluded from the workplace hazardous material legislation will automatically report to a committee of the House of Commons within a year from now.

This creates some motivation for industries and government Departments affected to provide protection for their workers. The compromise was very substantial and important, but we did not achieve the same type of compromise in this legislation. We have no guarantee in the Environmental Protection Bill that pesticides, motor vehicle emissions, and a number of other areas that are excluded by Bill C-74, will ever provide the protection to the environment that is needed. The very fact that the complaint procedure listed in Bill C-74 will not apply to pesticides or motor vehicle emissions means that the public does not have the same protection from environmental contaminants coming from these sources. We have no guarantee that the appropriate Act of Parliament to control pesticides, to control emissions from motor vehicles, et cetera, will ever be changed to provide similar protection for the Canadian environment and our population.

This is the type of perverted logic which makes people very skeptical of this legislation. We are seeing major areas of environmental pollution exempted and no indication that the Government will act in these areas in a short period of time. One must then question the sincerity of the Government. I really must question what lies behind this legislation.

In his final remarks the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) talked about the need for an environmental bill of rights. When we pass Bill C-74 we will be failing to meet that request of many Canadians who believe that we must have an adequate bill of rights to protect our environment. We must ensure that people who have a complaint about major polluters, or even about minor polluters, can take advantage of some due process that would see that their complaints are studied and that there is some appeal mechanism if they feel that officials or industries have ignored their concerns.

We know that this legislation can be a step in the right direction. Regulations can be drafted to protect the environment. We know that there could be adequate legislation on those excluded industries and products, but that did not happen. I see that you are signalling that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, but I find those to be the major flaws in the legislation that I really must wonder if the Government is attempting to pass legislation that looks good but, in a year or two, will not any better protect the environment.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) about the large areas of concern that have been excluded from the effect of this Bill, and I would like him to comment a little further on the process which he touched on, the process for determining by which members of the public may raise issues about the regulations.

Is it the case that through that process they may raise issues or questions or that they are excluded from raising questions about the limitations of the Bill in regard to auto emissions, in regard to pesticides, in regard to nuclear wastes, or in regard to acid rain, or is there any kind of mechanism provided by which those issues can be raised by interested members of the public through this Bill?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, that is a very valid question. As I said, this legislation takes a number of small steps which are important. One of them is that it establishes boards of review to be created if there are petitions or if individuals are dissatisfied with some of the regulations that are put in place under the Bill. That is a step in the right direction. It does not guarantee that there will be an adequate review, but it provides a process for reviewing some of the regulations that will be put in place.

As I stated earlier, I really believe that quite often, regulations are even more important than the legislation itself. If we have weak regulations, it does not matter if the legislation is fairly strong; the regulations will allow the polluters to get away with environmental murder.

As the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has pointed out, if things such as pesticides, the nuclear industry, and motor vehicle emissions are exempt from the Act in the first place, then there will be no regulations under the Environmental Protection Act pertaining to these substances, and that obviously means that there will be no appeal mechanism for members of the public who have very major concerns with pesticides and the other substances I mentioned earlier.

I would like to amplify on that for a few seconds, because it seems to me—

Mr. Lewis: Amplify? What's that? Expand.

Mr. Murphy: The Deputy Government House Leader wants me to expand rather than to amplify, so I will lower my voice and will speak longer, at his request.

If we have a piece of legislation, the main purpose of which is to protect the environment, the legislation should have an over-all effect. It should cover all bases. Let me give an example of that.

In 1983, the industries that fell under federal legislation for occupational health and safety reported to 17 different Departments and agencies. If there was an accident at a work site or a problem related to health and safety at the work site, one of 17 different agencies or Departments would be involved. Obviously, that created an administrative nightmare and meant that there were areas for which there was no proper enforcement.

In 1984, we changed the Canada Labour Code and put most of those 17 different Departments or agencies under one roof. When it came to occupational health and safety, most of the industries fell under the Labour Code and it was up to the Department of Labour to ensure that the Labour Code was being enforced. That is not happening with Bill C-74.

We are not seeing the Department of the Environment taking over major responsibility for the environment. We are not seeing all the various pieces of legislation and categories of pollution being put under the Department of the Environment, and that is what is causing the problems to which I have referred.

After this legislation is passed and after the regulations, whatever they may be, are finally put in place, those people who are concerned about the environment will not automatically go to the Department of the Environment. They will not know to which Department they will have to speak, whether they will have to speak to nuclear regulatory boards, to one of the government Departments, to Energy, Mines and Resources, to the Department of Agriculture or to the Department of the Environment.

If it is the environment that is being threatened and if people have legitimate concerns about what pesticides or other contaminants are doing to their environment, they should know that one Department has over-all responsibility for pollution, whatever the cause. That does not exist in this legislation, and that is one of the major problems with it.

Quite often we talk about trying to simplify laws. We talk about making it easier for the average concerned citizen to know where to go with his complaints. In many areas we have tried to achieve that simplicity but, when it comes to the environment, Bill C-74 still allows a number of other different government agencies to have their own fiefdoms. This means that concerned citizens will have to bring in expensive lawyers and go through a very complicated process just to try to clean up the environment in their own neighbourhoods, and that is unacceptable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move at this point:

> That the House continue to sit through the lunch hour for the purpose of continuing consideration of third reading of Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Fewer than 15 Members having risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is adopted.

Motion agreed to.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this Bill to which many of us looked forward. When the Minister described Bill C-74 as probably the most progressive environmental Act in the western world, he certainly did not take into consideration the many things which he neglected to put into this Bill. All we really have is a continuation of the identification of toxic substances and an unchanged Ocean Dumping Act combined in one Bill.

The Brundtland Commission, which reported in 1987, caught the vision and imagination of all Canadians and all people internationally. One of the recommendations in the report Our Common Future was that national Governments should establish clear environmental goals and enforce environmental laws, regulations, incentives, and standards on industrial enterprises. This should normally be done at the national level with local Governments being empowered to exceed but not to lower national norms.

After that report was published there was a great surge in the opinion polls in this country. Canadians want to protect the environment not only for today but for the future. If this Parliament is to leave any kind of credible legacy for the future, it should be strengthening this Bill. If we had a strong Environmental Protection Act with the necessary legislative power, we would not have the major concerns which we have about what the environmental impacts of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement will be. There are some major concerns in that area.

I come from a riding where there are very deep concerns about industrial pollution of the environment. The industries are now taking steps to attempt to improve this situation. A major initiative by a group of citizens who call themselves the stakeholders, identified and put forward on the public agenda the need to protect Hamilton Harbour from further pollution and to restore it to the state it was in when our ancestors were enjoying it.

The federal Government should be commended for announcing a grant to clean up the Windermere Basin in conjunction with the province, the Hamilton—Wentworth region, and the United States. However, it gives me great grief that the environmental Act before us will not give us the legislative power to restrict types of pollution in the future. I say that with deep regret because there has been much debate in this country on the U.S. trade agreement. Yet there has been absolutely no commitment by the Government to protect the environment with any international trade agreements, and this gives me great concern.

We will, however, be supporting this Bill since it is at least a small step toward identifying more toxic substances and stopping them from being dumped into our environment. We have a vision for this country. It will not be long before there is a change in government. A New Democratic Government will protect the environment because it will believe in a country with total environmental protection. That will certainly have to come to pass before this dreadful trade agreement is implemented.

I have a study which was done by the Canadian Environmental Law Association which is very concerned. It says that the environmental implications of these changes are profound. We face significant restrictions on our options to develop conservation strategies for our resources. It must put fear into all Canadians to realize that we will have to supply the U.S. market in the same proportions, even in times of shortages. That means that we will have to continue to exploit our resources far beyond what our needs would be because we entered into this agreement.

If we look at what is happening with regard to the harmonization of agricultural technical regulations, we soon recognize that the provisions provide that technical regulations and standards for agricultural food, beverage, and certain related goods, are to be harmonized, defined as "made identical". The standards to be harmonized include animal quarantine restrictions, accreditation procedures for inspections, approval requirements for new goods and processes, and technical regulations, including levels of quality, performance, and safety or dimensions. Working groups will be established to harmonize standards on various agricultural issues including veterinary drugs and fees; food, beverage, and colour additives; unavoidable contaminants, pesticides; and labelling and packaging of agricultural food, beverages, and certain related goods for human consumption.

The Government has consistently refused to include pesticides in this Bill. To identify that there will be a need to harmonize this with the trade agreement is very serious. In Canada we do not concede that a category of unavoidable contaminant is permissible in food products, and I hope that we never reach that stage. The Canadian Environmental Law Association has a very deep concern with the implications of what this regulation and harmonization for the regulation of pesticides are all about.

According to federal officials, between 1971 and 1981 total pesticide sales in Canada increased twelve-fold in current dollars, from $57.3 million to $698 million, and more than four-fold when adjusted according to Statistics Canada price of index pesticides. At least 10 million acres in 1975 were treated with herbicides on the Canadian Prairies. By 1978 this had increased to about 15.5 million acres. In 1976 alone Canada imported almost 117 million pounds of pesticides from the United States. Yet, at this time we are refusing to include pesticides as part of our Environmental Protection Act. One must question what the word "protection" means in the title of this Act.

We know that the use of pesticides involves the deliberate application to land and water of chemicals which are intended to be poisonous to selected organisms. Two categories of undesirable affects resulting from pesticide use have been identified. These are the development of the resistance in pest species and the impact on non-target species and organisms.

• (1230)

The United Nations Environment Program has stated that even when properly used chemical pesticides have a number of unavoidable side effects. These include three million bird deaths in New Brunswick during 1975 from aerial spraying of approximately seven million acres of forest with phosphamidon and penitrothion; the death of a farm worker in 1983 in British Columbia from pesticide poisoning; the possibility that 10 per cent of Alberta grain farmers may be experiencing pesticide poisoning every year; and the Canada-Ontario report on pollution of the St. Clair River, estimating that about 70 per cent of the 2.5 million kilograms of agricultural pesticides used annually on the lands draining into connecting channels of the Detroit and St. Clair Rivers are potentially environmentally hazardous.

In addition, the presence of agricultural pesticides and residues in food has also been identified in Ontario. It seems insane to exclude pesticides from an environmental protection Bill when we know these facts.

Currently in Canada our regulatory scheme for pesticides has received increased scrutiny with the publication of the Law Reform Commission Report on pesticides regulation, and the legal political controversy surrounding the federal Government's decision to cancel the registration in Canada of pesticides. Several hundred public interest and environmental groups in Canada are involved in research and advocacy issues related to pesticide use, particularly on how it affects the environment and our health.

The free trade agreement provides for the harmonization of standards and regulations regarding pesticides. Not only does this Bill exclude pesticides, further legislation will be introduced requiring us to harmonize these regulations with the United States.

The trade deal raises great uncertainty about the future of environmental protection standards. It remains to be seen how legitimate domestic objectives will be applied. At a minimum, the Canadian Government and public policy groups will be required to lobby in the United States for standards that are affecting our environment. Surely this is unacceptable to Canadians. The deal provides for no public participation in the harmonization process, so Canadians will find out after the fact rather than be part of that process. This undermines the movement toward wider public interest in participation and debate over setting the standards for product safety and environmental protection.

We know that the environment is one of the greatest concerns of Canadians. Yet, the Government is entering into an agreement with the United States that reduces our ability to participate in a discussion of those environmental standards.

Canadians have tended to ignore the importance of the service sector in our country. Services account for about 70 per cent of our jobs, and the service sector is the only major sector in the United States which manages to generate a trade surplus. Therefore, American business seeks to expand its trade services world-wide and most countries in the world, including the poor and undeveloped ones, recognize the importance of this sector for employment and have resisted American penetration. However, the Conservative Government has tried to sell this to Canadians as a good deal. Thankfully they are resisting such promotion.

It entails treatment no less favourable than that accorded in like circumstances to Canadian companies with respect to measures that are covered by Chapter 14. This Chapter specifically obliges states and provinces to follow the same policy with respect to service investments from another country.

In other words, if the legislation itself cannot be strengthened, how will we have any legislative clout when these regulations must be harmonized with the provinces and the states?

Another problem arises as a result of Article 2010 regarding monopolies. A monopoly is any entity, including any consortium that in any relevant market in the territory of a party that is the sole provider of a good or a covered service. The agreement prevents anti-competitive practices by monopolies and compensates any enterprise which could be deprived of business opportunities through the establishment of a monopoly in any sector of the market.

If we establish a national program, it could be identified as a monopoly. This would reduce public policy options including those that are meant to protect our environment. I believe the only way to proceed is through public policy. The Government rejects this option when it refuses to strengthen the legislation.

The free trade agreement raises further questions when we consider the Ontario reforestation practices. Under forest management agreements, the licensing system which covers 70 per cent of our forested lands in the Province of Ontario subsidizes the holder of a license to replant logged forest lands. This practice could be attacked by the American forestry service as an anti-competitive practice.

Surely, when we are dealing with the protection of our environment and our resources, we are also talking about our ability to practice reforestation. That cannot take place if we are giving any of that decision-making power to the United States.

The analysis of the trade agreement indicates that there will be significant impacts on the environment, as there are with most economic development proposals. It is only in the last 10 to 15 years that we have seriously considered the impact of economic development proposals on our environment.

It was clearly pointed out in the Brundtland report that we must have regard for the protection of the environment when we are considering sustained development.

This deal is the Government's blueprint for Canadian economic development of the future. It entrenches a market oriented approach to economic decision making which will accelerate resource development in Canada and put added stress on the environment. However, there is absolutely no involvement in the negotiations by Canadian federal or provincial environmental Ministers. There is no government assessment of the environmental impact of the deal and absolutely no opportunity for examination of these impacts or for any form of public participation in the negotiations.

With the surrender of both the federal and provincial powers to enact environmental protection through various policy alternatives, the actions of the federal Government in negotiating the agreement are in direct contradiction with its claim to adopt the approach and recommendations of the report of the National Task Force on the Environment and the Economy.

When we look at Bill C-74 we firmly believe there was absolutely no sense of that goodwill. Bill C-74 represents a good public relations exercise to make Canadians believe that the Government cares about the environment and will introduce legislation so that people will think it cares about the environment. However, it certainly does not give us the legislative ability to deal with the importance of Canada's environment. It does not give us the ability to say that we are to include acid rain as one of the non-negotiable items and that we are to make sure pesticides are included in that and the replacement of any polluting forms of energy with environmental benign sources. We want to ensure that we have the legislative ability to stop any nuclear damage to our environment. Certainly we want to stop the overuse of environmental packaging materials.

If the Government were sincere about environmental protection, there is no question in my mind that not only would this Bill be strengthened, but it would have originally been a strong Bill, one which says that the future of Canada's environment is important, that the environment will be part of the negotiations of any trade Bill which we would be part of with any country. Let us when we look at the weakness of this Bill and the great giveaway, which is what the U.S. trade deal is all about. There does not seem to be any kind of consistency in the words the Government uses when it says that it cares about the Canadian environment.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) had to say about pesticides since that is, as she said, a widespread serious problem in Canada. She seems to have gone into it in very specific detail, more so than many of us have been able to, perhaps. I wonder if she would comment on an aspect of the problem as presented to me by someone who has some familiarity with government regulations. It was suggested that the general mistake of Governments—and I think this would apply to this Bill—is that when there is a problem such as pests they deal with it by allowing private industry to find some saleable product that will apparently get rid of the pests. If that saleable product, the pesticide, causes problems, then the Government tries to regulate the pesticide. In other words, the Government does not deal with the original problem, the pest. It does not look for the best way of doing whatever the pesticide was supposed to do. It does not look to see if there is a better chemical, or perhaps a better biological agent, to get rid of the pest until the pesticide has caused great damage. Then there is a desperate search to find an alternative because the control mechanism is inadequate.

I wonder if the Hon. Member can comment on whether this Bill improves on that approach, or does it fall into the category of simply attacking the attacker instead of attacking the original problem, the pest?

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for a question that is certainly very important. I think what he is really addressing is our inability to deal with ecology. Ecology is the very delicate balance which exists within our environment. This Bill refuses to be inclusive as far as pesticides are concerned. It is refusing to protect the ecology that is so important to us.

The pests have been there and have been a concern for years but we can usually define some of those so-called pests as having a role to play within the total environment. Surely what we should be defining is the role these pests play, and how we can counteract it so that it becomes a constructive and not a destructive role.

One of the good things about the Bill is that it gives us the ability to screen new substances before they are used in the environment. I certainly applaud that. However, when they talk about these new substances, they exclude the use of pesticides. I think we should recognize that in the past we have been ignorant of and have ignored our ecology, and this Bill does not address that. The Government is saying, after the fact, that it will spend much more money and perhaps never be successful in restoring the fine balance which was needed in the first place. One of our major concerns is that pesticides be included in the Bill.

Surely our approach to environmental control in legislation should be a preventative approach. It should be one which protects the ecology and one which ensures that the fine balance is always there. We should not try to remedy it after the fact. We should use that approach in our health care system. I am constantly frustrated by the fact that we allow diseases to happen and then spend billions of dollars trying to cure them. We should be looking in the first place at how we could prevent many of these diseases, maintaining a level of health. We should look at that as we look at our environment. I think a lot of research is being done now with respect to the disease AIDS to find some immunity or protection against it. Over the years we have been able to eliminate smallpox. I think that is the kind of thing we should look at when we talk about immunization. We could immunize our environment with respect to further pollution if we were willing to put forward the kind of law that says our environment is important to us.

We do not need a weak-kneed legislation that is afraid to include the things we know are very destructive to our ecology. The Canadian people have a right to have their legacy protected. I would hope that it would not be very long before the Canadian people are given that right, but obviously the only way they will get it is by throwing this Government out and voting in the kind of government which will implement legislation that really protects the environment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will entertain another question from the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain made the striking point that this legislation, if it goes through, might allow Canada and Canadian interests to be dangerously vulnerable to the so-called free trade agreement with the United States, if it becomes law. Her point of focus was Chapter 14, I believe, which concerns equal treatment in the sale of services.

Does she mean, for example, that if a certain pesticide or pesticide service in the United States does not meet Canadian health standards or Canadian environmental standards, and therefore is excluded from Canada, that Canada may find itself under pressure to reduce our environmental or health standards so as to allow that pesticide service in the United States to compete on equal terms with Canadian services which have been meeting the higher standard?

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I think it is part of our concern. If we have established a higher standard and do not have the legislative ability to implement it in this Environmental Protection Act, and because there is absolutely no negotiations about the environment in the trade agreement, we will have to treat the national standard as the national standard in the United States. What I said earlier is that we will find ourselves lobbying particular state legislatures and Congress to protect our environment here in Canada. To me that does not make any sense.

Many people have said that people are attempting to define what our sovereignty is all about. What we are finding is that we are being accused of wrapping ourselves in the flag. One does not wrap oneself in one's flag when the Parliament of Canada is elected to put in place laws that protect our environment. Instead, what is happening is that it is refusing to put a law through that has the type of clout to it that would give us that type of protection. Therefore the trade agreement could be annulled if we had the protection in the legislation. However, the trade negotiation did not once involve any of the environmental Ministers, either at the federal level or at the provincial level.

What we do know is that at the federal level, both in Canada and in the United States, current administrations have downgraded environmental protection. This Government has cut funding to Environment Canada. We know that American environmental protection assessment has also experienced great funding cuts. The administration is downgrading both its standards and enforcement in the United States.

When we have to be treated on national standards we will find that we will be downgrading our own. This is a very serious concern with what is happening, both in the trade agreement and in the environment. I wish government Members would look seriously at not isolating one law from another. Unless they are looked at in an holistic way, what we will find is that we are in an irreversible position down the road and hanging our heads in shame with the legacy of the environment that we will leave to our children and our grandchildren. That is a very serious implication. It becomes much greater than just partisan legislation.

What it concerns is the ability to comprehend that delicate balance in our society that protects our environment. We must recognize that every economic development agreement we make and every undertaking we make in economic development must be included in terms of what are the environmental implications. To say that that is nonsense is irresponsible. Until we get to the point that that becomes conclusive, we are going forward in mass destruction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) on debate.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the debate on this very important Bill with great interest. I feel that my colleagues in the New Democratic Party have raised a number of very important points, some of which have been accepted by the Government but many of which have not been. I suppose at this stage that it is unlikely that the Government will take anything further that we say very seriously, which is a pity because in my view at any rate many of our suggestions have been worth while.

Indeed, many of the suggestions made to the legislative committee which have not been adopted by the Government were also very worth while. I am thinking at the moment of the brief from the Environmental Law Centre in your own community, Mr. Speaker, Edmonton, and the subsequent letter written by the Environmental Law Centre to the chairperson of the legislative committee on Bill C-74, regarding in particular the legal entrenching of federal-provincial co-operation and equivalency agreements.

The Environmental Law Centre's letter points out that the centre has no particular objection, nor should it, to a policy of federal-provincial co-operation in environmental protection. However, the centre is concerned with the implications of imposing statutory requirements in federal laws which will have the effect of fettering federal powers to legislate in areas of their own competency. Therefore, while having in the Bill a mandatory requirement on the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to establish a federal-provincial advisory committee for the purpose of review of proposed regulations sounds like a good thing, because we all approve of federal-provincial co-operation it would in fact impose a legal requirement of consultation, rather than simply a provision to require consultation that would say that one has to do this legally.

The centre points out that the issue of required consultation on regulation-making is quite separate from the issue of providing for agreements that specific regulations already in effect will not apply in certain provinces or territories.

By way of example, the federal Government may wish to make regulations for proper handling and storage of hazardous wastes generated on federal lands such as national parks, Indian lands, or the Northwest Territories. The centre goes on to state that while it may make practical sense to consult with those provincial authorities with legislative experience in this area, it is totally inappropriate to presume that provincial Governments should exert any jurisdiction in this area. These are areas of federal jurisdiction such as parks, Indian lands, the Northwest Territories, and so on. It seems to me very anomalous that federal jurisdiction should be limited by a legal requirement of provincial consultation in areas of clear federal jurisdiction.

The centre also states that for similar reasons it expresses serious reservations about amendments which require consultation not only with the federal-provincial advisory committee prior to the making of federal regulations but also an opportunity to render its advice. Apart from the delay factor involved, this requirement again imposes a degree of provincial control over the federal law-making power which appears most inappropriate. The provincial advisory committee should be established in its more appropriate advisory role.

As a final comment in this matter, the Environmental Law Centre queries why the requirements of legally entrenching federal-provincial co-operation are being proposed only for federal laws for the protection of the environment. If the true objective is to avoid unnecessary duplication and to embellish a co-operative approach in regulation-making, then similar provisions should, as a matter of course, be included in all provincial laws. I think it made a very good point on that. One wonders why the Government did not take such a significant brief into consideration when we were proposing amendments at the time of the committee hearings.

We have argued many times in favour of a high degree of federal-provincial consultation. However, to have legally binding provincial power over the federal Government in areas of federal jurisdiction, we feel lends an aura of deference to provincial authority that is far too excessive in the field of regulatory control. One wonders if this is indicative of the Conservative penchant for deregulation entirely, and perhaps this is a way of getting not national standards on the environment but a highly deregulated regime across the country.

I had hoped to go on, but owing to another engagement, which I believe that you perhaps also have, Mr. Speaker, I will not be able to go on any further.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is as follows. Mr. McMillan moved that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be now read a third time and passed, and on the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That this question be now put.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Jewett: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion (Mr. Hawkes) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.03 p.m. the House took recess.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

CHLOROFLUOROCARBONS—USE IN MILK AND MEAT CARTONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Allied Signal and Du Pont Canada are the only producers of chlorofluorocarbons in Canada. These are chemicals used in refrigerators, air conditioners, some aerosol sprays, foam products, and electronics.

CFCs released into the atmosphere contribute to the depletion of the ozone layer and the greenhouse effect, increasing the incidence of skin cancer. Friends of the Earth approached grocery chains urging an end to the use of egg cartons and vegetable and meat trays made with CFCs. So far, Provigo of Montreal is the only chain committed to phasing out such products. For refrigerators and air conditioners, Du Pont and Allied are considering a new compound called HFC-134A.

While all this goes on, the Government of Canada remains silent, offering Canadian consumers no leadership on this important matter. Yet it is urgent that Canadians realize how vital it is to stop purchasing and using products containing CFCs. A rejection of such products by consumers would tell manufacturers and retailers that the public wants harmless alternatives. Chlorofluorocarbons has become a bad word.

NETHERLANDS LIBERATION DAY

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, today the Netherlands celebrates Liberation Day, a day of celebration which, better than any other, demonstrates the strong bonds between Canadians and the Dutch. On this day in 1945 the Netherlands were liberated from German occupation. I am proud to say that Canadians played a prominent role in freeing the Dutch people from Nazi oppression.

The tulips which brighten Ottawa's and Toronto's spring remind us of the ties we share with the Netherlands. Canada and the Netherlands will always share a special attachment based on history and friendship. From the sheltering of the Dutch royal family during World War II, through liberation from the Nazis, to the current enrichment by immigration, our bonds have only been strengthened.

As the Member of Parliament for Etobicoke North, I would like to offer my congratulations, on the occasion of Liberation Day, to Canadians of Dutch heritage and the people of the Netherlands.

FORESTRY

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SEPARATE DEPARTMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, during the 1984 election campaign the Conservative Party promised to establish a Department of Forestry to oversee this important Canadian industry. It employs nearly 900,000 workers directly or indirectly. Its value of shipments exceeds $30 billion annually, and its annual exports exceed $16 billion. New Democrats continue to support the establishment of a separate Department but the Conservative Government now appears to have abandoned this promise.

New Democrats have been calling upon the Government to bring in a new National Forest Act to replace the old one dating back to 1966. Research expenditure in the industry is at an extremely low level. It is currently running at less than half the level of expenditure of our major competitors. It is also below the Canadian average for industrial sectors and other resource sectors such as agriculture and mining. Silviculture expenditures need to be increased at both government and industry levels.

New Democrats call upon the Government to give Canada's number one industry the attention it requires. Only then will this renewable resource be able to continue to provide its benefits to all Canadians and do so indefinitely.

FORUM FOR YOUNG CANADIANS

TRIBUTE TO PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, as you know, today we welcome the leaders of tomorrow, the Forum for Young Canadians.

The program is rich and varied, thanks to the co-operation and assistance of Ministers, Senators, and all Members of this House.

[English]

I loved the thoughts from a counsellor who described the shared impressions of the participants as anxious, energetic, polite, boisterous, cute, intelligent, bright, calculated, receptive, merciless, fun-loving, handsome, motivated, durable, hungry, warm, physically fit, talented, pleasant, comical, and above all, truly Canadian. We welcome the Forum for Young Canadians.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

KAPUSKASING—SUPERMAILBOX TO SERVE THREE HOMES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, in the constituency of Cochrane—Superior there is only one community which receives door-to-door mail delivery. That community is the town of Kapuskasing.

Recently three new homes were erected on Progress Crescent. To the owners' astonishment and dismay, Sir, they will not get home delivery of mail. Progress Crescent gets instead, can you believe it, a supermailbox. It is located about 100 feet away from where the letter carrier's route abruptly ends.

What justification is offered by Canada Post for this absurdity? The reason given is, and I quote: "This diversity of service is a natural result of geography and the diverse demographic patterns of our country".

When meaningless mush like that becomes a substitute for common sense, need we ask any more whether Canada Post has gone utterly mad?

MINES AND MINING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday afternoon the Minister of State for Mines (Mr.

Merrithew) announced the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program for junior exploration companies across Canada. Along with this good news, he advised of the six-month extension of the 133-1/3 per cent earned depletion allowance.

At this time, may I say to the Minister of Mines and his staff; Eveline Kasner, Chairperson, Canadian Save Flow-through Committee; John Larch, President, Prospectors and Developers; the mayors, reeves and councillors from across Canada; the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse); the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that, working together, we have achieved a bright and stable future for the junior mining companies and the communities across the northern regions of Canada. Congratulations, and thank you to all.

IMMIGRATION

SELECTION OF NICARAGUAN AND GUATEMALAN REFUGEES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, our new Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. MacDougall) ought to deal quickly with a problem she has inherited, that is, the double standard that our immigration officers abroad apparently use in selecting Central American refugees.

In 1987, for example, the Canadian consulate in the United States gave refugee status in Canada to 168 Nicaraguans living in the United States but only 71 Guatemalans. This smacks of a two to one political bias. These are not the ones who come to the Canadian border seeking refuge. These are people living in the U.S. who ask to be resettled in Canada as refugees from Nicaragua or Guatemala.

We know that the big majority of Nicaraguans claiming refugee status in the U.S. are accepted there, but scarcely any Guatemalans. Yet, on the other hand, Nicaragua has no pattern of death squad activity such as reigns in Guatemala.

Why then does Immigration Canada bring in twice as many Nicaraguan as Guatemalan refugees?

INDUSTRY

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH DURAL PLANT IN JONQUIÈRE

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, this week, Jonquière's socio-economic partners held an economic summit and made it clear to the authorities at Alcan that they wanted the new plant that will manufacture an entirely new product, dural, to be located in Jonquières. The new product, which combines the stength of steel with the light weight of aluminum, is said to have great potential.

Mr. Speaker, in our region, this plant is a symbol of the ongoing struggle and efforts to diversify our economy and lessen the loss of jobs due to technological change. Alcan's involvement with the academic world, its research centre, the employment committee, the work that has been done on aluminum processing, and the company's involvement in SOCCRENT, all these elements point the way to further involvement by locating the new plant in Jonquière.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PRIME MINISTER'S SCHEDULED VISIT TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, we are told that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is going to be in New Brunswick later this week. It is hoped that the Prime Minister will put the time to good use instead of playing politics.

There remain some outstanding issues in New Brunswick which the federal Government has yet to deal with, not the least of which is the closure of the Moncton rail shops. The Prime Minister received a rude welcome on a previous visit because of this issue, and I remind him that he has yet to offer any concrete solutions to this problem.

Also, there is the matter of New Brunswick being the only province in Canada without full CBC broadcasting services. This is an important issue, and his Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) is refusing to act. New Brunswick is also a victim of discrimination with regard to the designation of communities for the northern allowance. While practically every community along the Gaspé coast as well as 65 communities in Nova Scotia have been designated, only one island community in New Brunswick is on the list.

I respectfully ask the Prime Minister to deal with these issues and bring justice to the people of New Brunswick. Now is the time to show to New Brunswickers that they have the right to receive the same treatment as all the people in the other provinces of Canada.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CANADA WEST FOUNDATION'S STUDY

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, over the past four years the Canada West Foundation has done extensive research on the free trade issue. Its most recent report is entitled "Evaluating the Fine Print—The Free Trade Agreement and Western Canada".

The foundation concludes that for workers 83 per cent will notice little change, 2 per cent are in industries that assistance programs should focus on, and 15 per cent or over half a million are in industries that will benefit. However, these half million people work in industries that now produce one-quarter of our Gross Domestic Product, so one can expect expansion and job creation in these dynamic Canadian industries.

The report also states that perhaps the biggest winners from the free trade agreement are consumers on both sides of the border. As part of its conclusion, the report said:

> While there are individual winners and losers in the short run, none of us should neglect to place the free trade agreement in a nation building and international trade perspective. This agreement represents a landmark decision.

Such independent studies emphasize the critical importance of the free trade agreement to western Canada.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

FIRE SERVICES EXEMPLARY SERVICE MEDAL—INELIGIBILITY OF RETIRED FIRE-FIGHTERS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the issue of the Fire Services Exemplary Service Medal. This medal is awarded by the Chancellery of Canadian Orders and Decorations to fire-fighters who have served 20 years or more. However, fire-fighters who were retired on or before August 29, 1985, are not eligible to receive this honour due to the fact that the medal did not exist before that day.

The Province of Ontario recognizes fire-fighters with long service regardless of when they retire. The same should apply to the federal Fire Services Exemplary Service Medal. This medal represents the sole compensation to fire-fighters for putting their lives on the line fighting fires for 20, 30 or 40 years.

These individuals, some of whom are Second World War veterans, have put forth a great contribution to our society throughout their many years of service. They have saved many lives. It is unjust that, simply because the medal did not exist before August of 1985, fire-fighters who were retired on or before that date should not be recognized for their great contribution.

Fire-fighters across Canada are concerned about this particular issue. I urge the Government of Canada to amend its policy in order to recognize fire-fighters who retired on or before August of 1985. This will allow these fire-fighters to wear this medal of honour proudly which they so rightly deserve.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

DAY CARE

WAGES OF EMPLOYEES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Government seems determined to ignore its obligation to address serious flaws in the way Canada cares for the children of working parents. The current system suffers from chronic lack of day care services which are exorbitantly expensive and exploits the dedicated child care providers, most of whom are women, by paying them disgracefully low wages.

Care giver wages, according to Statistics Canada, average $8,900 per year. That is below the wages of housekeepers, waitresses, bartenders, and farm labourers. In fact child care is the worst paid job in the country.

If the Government values the work of women who care for children, if it cares about the quality of care our children receive, it will listen to the parents and workers who are concerned. If it does not care, it will follow the advice of an arrogant Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who has turned his back on the child care community.

The Minister says that he is not impressed by noise and lobbyists. Why then did he prefer to participate in partisan provincial politics instead of accepting his invitation to participate in the recent national child care conference? He should resign.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PLANNED VISIT TO CANADA BY POLISH PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Polish community is outraged over the planned visit to Canada next week of a Polish parliamentary delegation headed by Deputy Speaker Rakowski.

The Government of Poland continues to violate fundamental human rights by refusing to restore full legal status to the trade union Solidarity, outlawed in 1982, by refusing to rehire all workers who were dismissed under martial law, and by refusing to release all political prisoners.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to cancel the visit of the Polish delegation to Canada next week to demonstrate Canada's protest of the Polish regime's flagrant suppression and denial of workers' rights.

ROAD SAFETY YEAR IN QUEBEC

TRIBUTE TO HÉLÈNE SIMARD, HONORARY PRESIDENT OF REGIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, today I wish to pay tribute to a young woman from Quebec, Hélène Simard, who is a paraplegic. Ms. Simard has agreed to be Honorary Chairman of the Regional Action Committee for Road Safety Year in Quebec. Ms. Simard considers it unacceptable that 90 per cent of road accidents are caused by human negligence. The fact that I have to organize a campaign of petitions to have shoulder seat belts for back seat passengers and inflatable bags in front, shows that we still have a long way to go in this country.

We all have a responsibility in this respect. Drivers should learn and practise defensive driving. The police should enforce traffic regulations. Manufacturers should make vehicles safer, and finally, legislators at all levels of government should make this a priority.

I therefore ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) who has just arrived in the House to take this opportunity to make road safety a genuine priority. I may remind Hon. Members that accidents can happen to all of us.

THE CONSTITUTION

ENTRENCHMENT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it was a distinct pleasure and honour for me to second the main motion, M-8, of the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), which would amend Section 7 of the Charter of Rights to include property rights. It was encouraging to see such overwhelming support in the House, with the notable exception of a few Liberals and all the NDP or socialist Members who would want Canada to be a truly socialist country where the state owns everything.

I am sure that many who have chosen Canada as their new home and fled from Communist oppression must treasure this motion and be confused by the socialist NDP and some Liberals who voted against this most important and basic human right. I hope that Canadians will not forget that Mr. Trudeau and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) would not include property rights in the Charter.

I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government to ensure that property rights are put on the agenda for the next First Ministers' Conference this fall.

MINISTER'S MEETING WITH INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES IN MONTREAL

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, when meeting with the film industry representatives yesterday in Montreal the Minister of Communications, skating as per usual, refused to acknowledge that her film policy will contain the long-promised, tough legislative measures designed to break the stranglehold of the American distributors on the Canadian film market. The Prime Minister believes he can save his trade deal by having his Communications Minister dupe the distributors and attempt to buy their peace while he concocts secret deals with President Reagan to sell out their interests to American movie moguls.

Does the Prime Minister not realize that giving the industry more funds is just a temporary measure and is no substitute for a policy implemented by legislation, and that such legislation with fair regulations is the only way Canadian distributors can permanently recover more than their present 3 per cent of the Canadian film distribution market?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to figure out what the question is in the speech the hon. lady just made. As she should know, the Minister of Communications is meeting with representatives of the Canadian film industry later this afternoon and she will be making an announcement then. A full information package will be given to those who are so anxious to have information, including the Hon. Member opposite. She will have that before the meeting.

The Government has certainly realized that it is necessary to take action. That is why legislation has been introduced, and that is why we have established a $165 million fund to assist the Canadian feature film industry and have taken other steps to assist in the cultural area.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, that is why the Minister of Finance cut the capital cost allowance. I suggest that the Government has dropped its fair film policy.

RESTRICTION ON FOREIGN FILM IMPORT PERMITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Does the Government intend to maintain its position and limit import permits for foreign films to foreign distributors who financed the films and have the world rights?

What kind of message does the Government have for our Canadian distributors who are going to Cannes next week? Is it that the rich American movie moguls I can go on as usual and keep their monopoly on distribution rights for the Canadian market? Or can the Canadian film industry expect new legislation that would create a new market for our distributors?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, after years of neglect by our predecessors in this area the Minister of Communications and the Government have taken an initiative to assist Canadian film distributors and the Canadian film industry.

• (1420)

The exact contents of that policy will be announced by the Minister of Communications this afternoon in Toronto, I believe, where a healthy representation of the Canadian film industry resides. Once that has been done, we will welcome questions on interpretation of the details of the policy.

The Minister is creating a separate market for Canadian film distribution. That is the principle of the steps she will be announcing.

REPORTED VISIT TO CANNES FILM FESTIVAL BY FORMER TELEFILM OFFICIAL

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, April 13 is the anniversary of the last day at Telefilm Canada of the Prime Minister's friend, Jean Sirois. We now learn that he too is travelling to the Cannes Film Festival at public expense. Will the Prime Minister tell Canadians why his friend, Jean Sirois, is going to Cannes after he was canned by Telefilm? Does he not think it is rather a disgrace that he is having another free treat from the public purse—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if I can I would like to take notice of that question because I had not heard about this visit. I am not the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Gauthier: We know that.

Mr. Crosbie: She is my desk mate. I will certainly pass on the Member's question and provide her with an answer in due course.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

FREON—REQUEST THAT PAM BE REMOVED FROM STORE SHELVES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. He will know that yesterday Dr. Albert Liston, Assistant Deputy Health Minister, was quoted as saying that: "The manufacturer of Pam oil spray is already working on removing freon and the intent of our discussions is to see how quickly we can bring that to fruition".

In light of the fact that the Government has finally recognized the seriousness of this situation, does the Minister not think it prudent and wise for the Government of Canada to remove this product from Canadian shelves until such time as the manufacturer finds a suitable substitute for freon?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as Dr. Liston indicated yesterday, there will be discussions with the manufacturer in order to see how the reformulation can be accelerated. As a matter of fact, discussions on that particular subject are going on this afternoon.

Mr. Dingwall: I say respectfully to the Minister that this is a situation which requires immediate leadership by him and the Departments involved, not next week or the week after.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BAN PRODUCT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is aware that in other jurisdictions, in the United States, freon is removed from that product. It is removed from hairspray and deodorants. We know that there are substitutes for freon. We want the Minister to put a ban on that product until such time as the manufacturer comes up with that substitute. Why is the Minister risking the health and the environment of Canadians by allowing this product to remain on the shelves for Canadian consumers?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I have been indicating for a few days now, the terrible incidents that have occurred with respect to this product were a result of the misuse of the product. It is misuse of a product that has caused terrible injury and death which would not have occurred if the product had been used for its intended purpose. It has been abused.

It is very important that people know that this product should not be abused in the way it has. I will not go into the details that were reported in the papers.

Since these incidents I have acted responsibly and asked the Department of Health and Welfare to communicate with the manufacturers to get them to Ottawa in order to discuss the acceleration of the reformulation. Those discussions are going on this afternoon.

MINISTER'S MEETING WITH INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES IN MONTREAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who is handling culture today, the Minister for International Trade. The Minister will recall that a couple of days ago I asked the Minister of Communications a question based on a memo prepared by representatives of the U.S. film industry in Canada which alleged that the Government was about to water down completely its commitments to the film industry. At the same time it said it was important to support the Government because this was related to the free trade agreement.

The Minister then said she was not interested in hearing what the Americans had to say but wanted to know what Canadians had to say.

Considering that she met with Canadian representatives yesterday in Montreal to go over the details of the package she will be announcing later today, and they agreed with the American lobby group that the Bill had been substantially gutted and watered down, will the Minister, who is now responsible for the trade deal, explain to the House why the Government has sacrificed the Canadian film industry in order to get an undesirable trade deal for Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe that any objective observer, when he hears the policy the Minister is outlining today—

Some Hon. Members: Or she.

Mr. Crosbie: —he or she—when they see the legislation that is introduced, they will realize that the legislation has done precisely what we said it would do. It will put an end to Canada being part of the domestic market of the United States in connection with film distribution.

I might note that the president of the Quebec Distributors Association stated that the new policy must do exactly that, put an end to Canada being part of the domestic market of the United States. This is going to be a major step forward and the Hon. Leader of the second opposition Party should welcome that.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Bill ought to do what the Minister has said. The representatives of the Canadian film industry actually had access to the information yesterday, and with all due respect to the Minister I say to him we are more inclined to accept their judgment than the Minister's judgment. They have said that the Government has betrayed them, that their interests have been sold out once again.

Considering that last October, when this deal was first announced, briefing notes prepared for the trade representative, Mr. Yeutter, in the United States, and Secretary of the Treasury Baker, said then that Mr. Valenti's interests would be met, that the Canadian Government would abandon its commitment to the film industry, why is it that the Canadian Government denied it then, denied it earlier this week, and the Minister is denying it today? Just for once, why does the Government not be frank and come clean with the Canadian people?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would only accept his own advice and start being frank and clean with the Canadian people, we might be able to have a sensible debate on the free trade agreement with the United States, which we cannot do now because of the misstatements of fact and errors the hon. gentleman and his Party continually promulgate about the country.

With reference to this question, it is a question of opinion, and it is our firm opinion that this is a major step forward for the Canadian film distribution industry.

The hon. gentleman opposite likes to take the opinion of anyone who might be critical of this Government. It does not matter whether they are Americans or what nationality they are. If that is the opinion he chooses to take, then he can take it.

CONFLICTING STATEMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the Minister to accept our opinion. I ask him to consider they were briefing notes for Mr. Yeutter and Mr. Baker, American sources, not ours. It was a memo, an American briefing memo, three days ago that said the Canadian Government had sold out. It was the Canadian film industry spokesman in Montreal yesterday who said the Government had made a secret behind-the-scenes deal on free trade. Why is it that everyone, whether on the American side of the border or on the Canadian side of the border, says one thing, and the Canadian Government says the other on this important matter?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is another case of anticipatory indignation from the hon. gentleman who seems to specialize in indignation. What do briefing notes from Mr. Yeutter have to do with it? This Government does not prepare briefing notes for Mr. Yeutter, or briefing notes for the Motion Picture Association, or briefing notes for anyone else. We prepare briefing notes for ourselves. Why does the hon. gentleman not quote from some relevant document, not from some American document, prepared by Americans for Americans?

Oral Questions

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTS OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED CARS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. On March 31 of last year the arrangements Canada had for restraining imports of Japanese and Korean cars into Canada expired. More than a year has gone by and the Government still has not completed negotiations for new arrangements. I would like an explanation for this from the Minister.

• (1430)

Has the Government abandoned the policy of restraining imports of Japanese and Korean cars into Canada? If not, why has so much time gone by without any new arrangements which are important for the preservation of jobs and production in the Canadian automotive industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is no reason for any change in the policy or approach at the moment. I have had no representations that there should be any change in that direction. If the hon. gentleman is concerned that there may be dangers here, I will undertake to look into them.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I understand that offshore cars, cars imported from abroad, now take up some 35 per cent of new car registrations in Canada. These are mostly from Japan and Korea.

Over a year ago the Hon. Member for Langelier, when he was the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, said that the Government would soon create a national automotive strategy. Last September his successor, the current Minister, pledged that there would also be a national automotive strategy from the Government. Nothing has happened so far.

Has the Government abandoned this commitment, as it has so many others? Will it have a strategy? If not, what explanation can it give for abandoning this pledge, a pledge which if carried out would be important in preserving tens of thousands of jobs in the Canadian automotive sector?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion is not here today. That is the Minister to whom the hon. gentleman is referring. I suggest that he hold his indignation and perhaps splutter later in the week when the Minister returns.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON GRAPE PRODUCERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He will likely recall that during the last election campaign on the Prime Minister's tour through the Niagara Peninsula the Prime Minister promised the grape and wine producers there that the Government would keep farmers on the land, that the Government would promote Canadian wines, and adopt other protective measures because it would be "far less costly to the public treasury than to allow this vital Niagara industry to literally wither on the vine."

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is this. Why did the Prime Minister break his promise to the grape producers of the Niagara Peninsula when he signed a trade deal which essentially has devastated this industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that this kind of silly and partisan question is asked in the House of Commons.

Mr. Broadbent: He's quoting the Prime Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: The Prime Minister has not broken any commitments or promises to the grape growers of the Niagara Peninsula, or any other peninsula.

The grape growers of Canada are in a difficult position for several reasons. The first is because certain practices adopted by the provinces were contrary to the GATT, and had been contrary to the GATT for many years. A GATT panel report came in to this effect some months ago, which has to be observed if we believe in the GATT system. The members of the New Democratic Party have told Canada—the world—that they are great believers in the GATT system. That is the basic reason why the grape industry is having some difficulty.

In addition, the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement also has an effect on the grape industry that has to be dealt with.

Third, the grape growers of the country were in some difficulty anyway because of an over-production of the wrong kind of grapes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: All of those problems are being dealt with. The Minister of Agriculture has a report recommending certain steps be taken for adjustment measures to help the grape industry. That will be done.

The Prime Minister is not going back and has not gone back on any commitments made to grape growers in Canada.

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION PACKAGE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, what has become perfectly clear in that response is that the Government has decided to sacrifice the grape producers and wine producers on the altar of the free trade deal with the United States. That is what has happened.

Howard Staff, a grape grower in the Niagara Peninsula, said recently: "Everyone has been gearing up in this industry, replanting and expanding, and suddenly the umpire has called us out. They changed the rules in the third inning and we didn't even know it."

Since the deal has devastated this industry, does the Government plan to introduce a compensation package for all of those thousands of people who will lose their livelihood as a result of the trade deal? When will the Government announce the contents of that particular package?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if there is any umpire involved in this situation the umpire is the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the GATT organization to which this country has belonged since its inception. We are proud supporters of GATT.

When this country adopts practices that are contrary to the GATT rules, the rules that govern civilized international trade, then we have to comply. That is who the umpire is. We are going to act to assist the grape industry.

I would recommend to the hon. gentleman that he read an article by Mr. George Bain in The Halifax-Chronicle Herald that deals with a matter he brought up about a week ago which throws a lot of light on some other sensational approach that he tried a week or 10 days ago.

AIR SAFETY

1985 GANDER AIR DISASTER—REPORT OF POSSIBLE EXPLOSION PRECEDING CRASH

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I questioned the Minister of Transport regarding the preliminary report of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board into the 1985 Gander air crash which killed 258 people. I pointed out that the autopsy report, which suggested that perhaps there was a fire on board the aircraft before it crashed, was not included in any part of that preliminary report.

Is the Minister aware of a report by Irving Pinkel Associates of California, explosives experts, which outlines the possibility that "an explosion tore a piece of the fuselage free prior to crash impact and that it was ingested by number 3 engine". Is the Minister aware of that report? Is he aware that none of that was included in the preliminary report of the Aviation Safety Board?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what I am aware of is that the answer today has to be the same as the one I gave two weeks ago. My friend knows very well that this report in December was a preliminary report. He said that himself. It has to be provided to the parties for their comments. When we have those comments, and when the final report is issued, I think at that time it would be wise for the Minister to make comments if he has any to make. In the meantime I believe that it is better to wait for the final report of the CASB.

CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I also suggested that perhaps the Government should investigate the investigators. Little did I know that that is exactly what the Government has done.

I ask the Minister of Transport is he aware of a report dated a couple of months ago, February 3, written by a Mr. John Sopinka, Q.C., in which he states he was retained as a consultant by the Minister of Transport, and that the board members of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board which inspected the crash "have been unable to obtain investigation of facts which they consider essential in order to carry out their function."

Is he also aware that the investigators themselves have been called into question, along with their competence, and the quality of their investigations? Is the Minister aware of that outright condemnation of the board that investigated the Gander crash? If he is, is he now prepared to order a completely new investigation into the Gander air disaster?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my friend knows I never comment on that type of document. He knows very well why I do not.

What I can say is that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is an independent body. My friend knows that it is not the role of the Minister of Transport to take over its responsibilities.

The Hon. Member also knows that shortly I will introduce a Bill in the House dealing with accident investigation and the different modes of transportation. At that time I think it will be possible to correct some ambiguity we may have in the actual Act. We are dealing with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. But in the meantime I repeat that it would not be relevant for the Minister to comment on the operations of what we call an independent body.

AIR TRANSPORT

SAFETY INSPECTIONS OF AIRCRAFT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In light of the middle of the night wire story from the senior person in charge of inspections in his Department that the airlines in Canada will be allowed to do their own inspections and certify them, which is like putting a coyote in charge of the chicken coop, will the Minister see to it that the Government does not try to get by on the cheap, that it hires enough inspectors to do it itself, and does not leave it up to the airlines to judge themselves?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised because the Hon. Member is an experienced Member of the House of Commons. He should know that we have done this since 1968. For the last 20 years the companies have had the right, under inspection by Transport Canada, to do what he said, and it is a question, if I understand it, that we should expand that authority to other companies.

The Hon. Member knows full well that those inspections have always been controlled by inspectors of Transport Canada. They are well certified if there is any security problem.

OLDER AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR EXHAUSTIVE INSPECTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Minister does not know what his own Department is doing. Those airlines will sign the final authorization on work previously reviewed and approved, whether it is maintenance, repairs, or anything else, and no government inspector need look at it. They will sign it off.

Is the Minister prepared to go through this nonsense of having convertible aircraft where the roof lifts off when a plane is in flight? In light of the experience in the United States and the recent incident in Hawaii, is the Government seeing to it that all aircraft over 10 to 15 years old, Boeing 727s, 737s, DC-9s, and DC-8s, are being exhaustively inspected by government inspectors for metal fatigue, aircraft and fuselage cracks, or is he leaving it up to the airlines to do it?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to repeat what I already said. All those inspections were already done by the companies, with personnel certified by Transport Canada, through licences and operating certificates. Everything is controlled by my Department, and for 20 years we have been doing that. I do not believe that it has to be changed, because it has proven to be effective.

AIR CANADA

REDUCED IMPORTANCE OF OPERATIONS IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport, but concerns another topic. It concerns transfers of Air Canada flight personnel from Montreal to Toronto. When the Minister was still Minister of State (Transport) three years ago, he was very reassuring. In a statement on January 29, 1985, he said that Air Canada had suspended all transfers related to personnel training and flight operations from Montreal to Toronto. He was very reassuring. He said the process had been stopped, so there would be no turning back. If bilingualism and the French fact at Air Canada must be centred in Montreal, we will make sure that is the case.

Now that the Minister has full control over the Department of Transport, I would like to ask him how he can tolerate the erosion of Air Canada's base in Montreal, as flight personnel transfers to Toronto continue. Is the Minister already acknowledging that privatization will have an impact and that the pilots and the Montreal area will just have to hold their noses and let it happen?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will admit we cannot compare apples and oranges. This has no connection with privatization, which has yet to take effect. Furthermore, I agree that in 1985, I asked Air Canada to put a stop to the transfer of pilot training from Montreal to Toronto. That was done, and Air Canada has not departed from its decision since then. In other words, there have been no transfers with respect to training. If we look at operations, it is true that flights to and from Toronto have increased. Once again, I think the Hon. Member will have to admit that in Toronto, operations have increased by 54 per cent over the last three years. However, what I said in 1985 still applies, namely that Air Canada pilots are still being trained in Montreal, on the same terms that existed at the time.

PILOTS BASED IN MONTREAL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is no fun for people in the Montreal area to see how little clout they have with this Government that has no Minister from the Island of Montreal in Cabinet.

The Minister tells us that much of the training will continue to be done in Montreal, but that people will continue to work elsewhere. And he would like us to accept that.

So I shall ask the Minister what guarantee that pilots can continue to be based in Montreal he will obtain from Air Canada. Fifty were transferred in the last three years. What guarantee can he obtain, especially before privatization takes place?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, it makes me smile when the Liberal Party says that there is no Minister from the Island of Montreal in the Government. When there were six from Montreal, between 1976 and 1984, Montreal lost almost all its economic development. Even the Prime Minister himself was from Montreal!

Mr. Speaker, I must once again correct an impression that my colleague is trying to give. The number of employees who are now in Montreal is about 8,500, exactly the same as it was in 1982 when you were in power.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In 1987, according to the Department's records, Canadian consulates in the United States, in New York, Atlanta, San Francisco, and so on, selected 168 Nicaraguans who were living in the United States to be resettled in Canada as refugees, but in the same year only 71 Guatemalans who were living in the United States were to be resettled in Canada.

Given the well known fact the opponents of the Nicaraguan Government are not subject to the death squad reign of terror that exists in Guatemala, why accept more than twice as many Nicaraguans from the United States for resettlement in Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member well knows that we deal with all of these cases on a case by case basis, and with some considerable sensitivity. The people who are in the field of selecting immigrants do so on the basis of sensitive judgments about the position that a particular person is in. We have brought in a considerable number of Guatemalans one way and another.

We also notice, and I have received this information from some of my human rights advisers, that the regime in Guatemala is less volatile than it used to be. We are watching this situation very carefully. We regard refugees as individuals, and look at them one at a time.

STANDARD USED IN SELECTING REFUGEES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the situation in Guatemala is less volatile than it was three years ago does not mean that the death squads still do not terrorize people with murders and kidnappings in Guatemala. If the Minister is talking with human rights specialists she should know that.

Is there not a double standard used in which Nicaraguans are more easily accepted from the United States, in spite of the fact that Nicaraguans as a majority of the applicants can be accepted as refugees in the United States, whereas scarcely any Guatemalans are accepted as refugees in the United States?

Does that not suggest that a different standard is used for selecting Nicaraguans than that used for selecting Guatemalans when the standard ought to be essentially the refugee standard—is this person in danger of persecution if he goes back to his country?

• (1450)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thought that is what I just said. We do look at these as individual cases and we do consider them on an individual basis. If they are in danger, then we ensure they do not get sent back. That is exactly what I replied to the first question.

NATIONAL REVENUE

EVALUATION OF USED AGRICULTURAL MACHINERY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Will he give favourable consideration to amending or rescinding any and all interpretation bulletins or other documents issued or used by the Department of National Revenue which permit employees of that Department in effect to change or alter the list price of manufacturers and/or the invoices of farmers when a used machine is traded in on a new machine?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this question from the Hon. Member who has been particularly conscientious in focusing on this matter which is, of course, of great importance to western farmers, indeed all farmers. I want to assure him that my Department is always anxious to administer this program in an equitable manner.

I will take his question as a representation and remind him that we cancelled the special audit over a year ago and are endeavouring to find ways to give special attention to farmers who feel that the question of over-evaluation or otherwise of used equipment has not been dealt with properly. We are sensitive to this and will continue to monitor it.

BILL C-72—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate some details about what this Government intends to do with Bill C-72. Some of us think the Government is hiding behind Members of its Caucus referred to as dinosaurs, which the Government has ordered to do its "dirty work". According to some Members, the only future this Bill has is a third class burial. I would like to ask the Minister—I am not sure which Minister, since the Minister of Justice is not in the House—when the Government will order these backbenchers who are opposed to this enlightened and progressive legislation to stop the filibuster they have been conducting during the past month in committee.

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that the Bill passed the House at second reading with unanimous consent, after considerable filibustering by the Opposition. The committee is engaged in hearing witnesses and it is our understanding that there is another week or so for witnesses to appear. The Government is committed to pursuing this legislation but, at the same time, I would tell my hon. friend that we are not going to be pushing around our members on the committee. We want to allow for full hearing of witnesses and full development of the clause-by-clause stage.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Member for Charlevoix said yesterday that the only thing he knows for sure about the plans of the Government regarding official languages is that they are going around in circles in the caucus.

Mr. Grisé: You better take care of your own caucus.

APPROVAL OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, what specific measures does the Government intend to take to make sure this Bill is approved by the House before the end of June? What can the Minister tell the House about the future plans of the Government?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, if the Government were to order committee members to take certain actions, my hon. friend would be the first one up on his feet complaining about it. I say to him as a member of the committee: Do the committee's work in committee, not on the floor of the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—REPATRIATION OF CITIZENS LIVING IN HONDURAS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. A fact finding mission for peace team just returned from a tour of Honduras and Nicaragua. Among other things it recommended that Canada assist with a reconciliation fund to provide economic incentives for the repatriation of thousands of Nicaraguans presently living along the Nicaraguan-Honduras border, rather than prematurely providing for the possibility of resettlement in Canada.

Is Canada prepared to assist with a resettlement and reconciliation fund to help those people reintegrate themselves into the life of Nicaragua, as part of our contribution to the peace process?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had an opportunity to see or study that report. I will certainly look at it.

The Hon. Member will know that a parliamentary committee will be visiting the region this month as a result of unanimous party agreement here that Canada should be looking at every constructive way open to it to encourage peace in the region. He will also know that the Foreign Ministers of the five Central American countries have agreed to submit a request to the Secretary General of the UN to establish auspices under which designated countries, including Canada, might be able to play a specific role in aiding the peace process in that region. We are prepared to respond to that kind of invitation if it comes and naturally if it takes account, as we think it will, of legitimate Canadian security requirements.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF CANADIAN ASSISTANCE TO HONDURAS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to respond to another recommendation of the committee that, in light of the instability of the human rights situation in Honduras, increased militarization, and the fragility of civilian democracy in that country, we are prepared to review the level and nature of our development assistance program in Honduras, which gets more of such assistance than any other country in Central America and which is making poorer use of it?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of the effectiveness of the use of development assistance is almost always subjective. I will look at the recommendations to which the Hon. Member refers. He will know the income situation in Honduras, in a region where poverty is endemic and extensive, is particularly acute. That is one of the factors taken into account in our development assistance program.

I repeat, the general attitude of this Government is that it is interested in being helpful in any way it can and we are looking at options which might be open to us, in this particular case by way of an all-Party committee visiting the region.

HORTICULTURE

FRUIT AND VEGETABLE IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Over a year ago he promised the Canadian Horticultural Council and fruit and vegetable producers that he would bring in amendments to the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act to control bulk shipments of fruit and vegetables to Canada on consignment from the U.S. from its massive surplus stocks. The Minister failed to act and the entire cherry crop, for example, was left to rot because there was no market.

Can the Minister say why he broke his promise and why the legislation was not brought in to protect these producers?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, this matter is still under consideration before Cabinet and I hope it will be possible to give details as soon as possible.

REQUEST THAT AMENDING LEGISLATION BE ENACTED

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is in danger of becoming the Rip van Winkle of the Government. He has been asleep at the switch for over a year on this thing. Entire crops are being lost.

Can he assure these producers that this is not being held up by the free trade deal with the U.S. and that the proper legislation will be put in place to save the crop this year from unfair competition from the U.S?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, no Government has ever taken the interests of Canadian farmers as seriously as we have. Government expenditures in the agricultural sector have increased more than 400 per cent. As far as the free trade agreement is concerned, the industry stands to benefit very substantially. We will develop markets in the United States that we did not have before. The lowering of tariff barriers between our two countries will benefit many regions in Canada in the fresh fruits and vegetables sector. I hardly think anyone in the Liberal Party would object to expanding markets for Canadian market gardeners, Mr. Speaker!

AIRPORTS

SECURITY MEASURES—SITUATION AT LONDON AIRPORT

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Several of my constituents have expressed concern with regard to airport security. No doubt the recent escapades of the armed flying bandit in Ontario skies has heightened their concerns. My constituents and I would like to know how this armed flying bandit can use Transport Canada's airports as a means of a getaway for his guns and stolen money. People want to know why baggage, both checked and unchecked, is not looked after properly.

The Government has talked about safety as being a primary concern. What steps are being taking to ensure some safety and security at Canada's airports, particularly the London airport?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my predecessor put over $63 million into security controls at our airports.

In London as in any other airport in Canada we are increasing the security system all the time. I will be meeting this afternoon with Canadian Airlines, Air Canada, and Wardair to see how we can again improve the system. It is the policy of this Government to make improvements to the system, and I believe we can say that we have one of the best systems in the world.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre, just a single question, and that will end Question Period.

NATIONAL REVENUE

AGRICULTURAL MACHINERY EVALUATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in olden times tax assessors used extortion to extract the maximum tax from their victims rather than following a strict tax schedule and regime.

Revenue Canada seems to be reverting to that long dead practice with regard to machinery evaluation and the amount of tax owing. Can the Minister tell us why?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my colleague knows that our Department is trying, and is, I am sure, administering this program in a very objective way. I have met with many colleagues and farm organizations. We cancelled the special audit over a year ago.

There is an obligation that our Department has to administer tax programs. We are trying to do this very sensitively and we are giving extra attention to farmers who feel they have a grievance.

PRIVILEGE

UNITED CHURCH OF CANADA—OBJECTION TO DESCRIPTION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise with respect to Citations 48 to 51 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which come under the heading "Reflections on Members".

I refer to a letter written by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and dated April 11, 1988 which reads:

> Dear Joe:
>
> Enclosed is some material from my constituent, John Hart.
> Three black ministers from the UNITA side were here under the auspices of the United Church of Canada (Joe, this is the red church that I belong to, indeed I sometimes call it the "communist church of Canada").

I rise both as a Member of this House and as a member and an ordained minister of the United Church of Canada to say that this description of the United Church of Canada infringes upon my rights as a Member of Parliament to be able to speak out on a wide variety of issues. It casts a reflection on me when I attempt to articulate positions that have been taken by the United Church of Canada. It casts reflections upon members of all three Parties who happen to be members of the United Church of Canada, and I submit that this is a violation of my privilege.

The letter might be dismissed as a facetious comment from a Member who is known sometimes for making facetious comments, but on further reflection I do not believe that it can be so lightly dismissed. First, the letterhead clearly defines the Hon. Member as the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened carefully to the Hon. Member who very kindly gave me a copy of the letter prior to Question Period. I am having some difficulty, although there may be a complaint here, in seeing a question of privilege.

First, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) is not named. He is one among many hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are members of this particular church. Whether the remark is said facetiously or otherwise, it is difficult to see just in what way that makes it more difficult for the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands to carry out his duties as a Member of Parliament.

I do not know whether other Members wish to intervene. While there may be and obviously there is to the Hon. Member a complaint here, I am afraid that I cannot find a question of privilege.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader for his customary statement of Government Business.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise that tomorrow will be an allotted day. Monday will also be an allotted day.

The House will know that on Tuesday at 11 a.m. there will be an address in the Chamber by Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands. In the afternoon we will sit at two o'clock for Members' Statements and Question Period, followed by Government Orders. On Tuesday afternoon we will proceed either with Bill C-103, dealing with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and/or we will try to complete Bill C-113, the western diversification legislation.

However, I should point out that we may have to debate the time allocation motion we were forced to put on the floor in an effort to get this very important Bill through the House because there was a filibuster from the New Democratic Party. Either way, that will be the Business of the House until next Tuesday.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise at this time and participate in the debate on Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. It gives me particular pleasure to speak on this important regional development initiative. I entered public life in an effort to improve the economic circumstances of the region that I represent and in an effort to participate in the process of improving the economic lot of the ordinary men and women in the region of Nova Scotia that I represent.

We live in an area of Canada that is a so-called "have not" area, which simply means in the Canadian context that the economic opportunities are less than in the more prosperous areas of Canada like Ontario and parts of Quebec. Nevertheless over the years we have worked at the national level and through our provincial representatives to put in place a series of initiatives and incentives that were to go a long way toward erasing national economic inequality. There has been some success.

I do not wish to use this opportunity to say that the previous Government did not try to address the problem. I believe that there is widespread agreement in all political Parties that the initiatives of the past were not as successful as Atlantic Canadians would have liked nor as the national Government would have liked. We had DRIE and we had DREE. Now the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has been established by the Government.

• (1510)

What is different about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency? I would like to take this opportunity to review with Hon. Members what I believe to be the strengths of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. I believe it is these attributes that are ensuring that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will succeed. I believe that these attributes are a reflection of our Government's commitment to regional development.

These changes were not achieved without a great political effort on the part of the Government. We had to stand on end the long-standing philosophies of economic development in the regions that prevailed here in Ottawa. We had to literally tear out of the Ottawa bureaucracy the mandate for regional economic development. It is never an easy task to take from the established bureaucracy authority and to transfer it to the regions, but this Government has done so. The Cabinet and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have taken the important and tough decisions to ensure that there are improved economic opportunities in Atlantic Canada.

You will hear, Mr. Speaker, that our Government has done a lot about unemployment, about inflation, and about interest rates, but that it has been of no effect in Atlantic Canada. That, however, is far from the truth. Atlantic Canadians benefit from lower interest rates. Atlantic Canadians benefit from a lower deficit. Atlantic Canadians benefit from a lower inflation rate.

It is not true to say that the national economic process of which we all know is of no impact in Atlantic Canada. The people I represent benefit from lower interest rates when they buy homes, build homes, or buy cars. When the people of Atlantic Canada want new policies, social or economic, which will cost money, they know that we have to have the national finances under control.

The people I represent in Atlantic Canada and indeed all Atlantic Canadians know full well that fiscal management at the national level is important and critical to the long-term economic well-being of Atlantic Canada. Therefore, we have put in place significant economic goals and we achieved them at the national level.

The unemployment rate is down across the country including in every province of Atlantic Canada. Within this context of national economic growth with Canada leading the western world, this Government has not merely stood by and said that that is enough. This Government has said that we must do more for the regions. We must increase the standard of living and the opportunities for Atlantic Canada. That is why the Prime Minister announced the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, an agency with $1 billion of additional resources to spend in the Atlantic region, $1 billion to be directed at small and medium-sized business. This is new and additional money directed at the entrepreneurs of Atlantic Canada. That is a major commitment.

That money is to be delivered by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, an agency which will be headquartered in Moncton, New Brunswick, an agency which has a local board of directors. It is an agency with local offices, whether in Sydney, Halifax, Moncton, Saint John, or Charlottetown. Those local offices are manned by people who live in the communities and can make important decisions about the viability of proposals for economic development that are put before those officers.

Just to highlight the contrast, in the past these same officers working for DRIE, would receive an application and do some kind of preliminary analysis of it. Then they would send it to Halifax. Then it would go to Ottawa. Then it would be evaluated by a sector analysis branch, and it would then go to a Deputy Minister. In the end, it would go to a Minister. However, it might not make it to a Minister.

In fact, during the first part of my term as an MP, the people of Atlantic Canada were told that their applications could not be approved because they would impact on industries in British Columbia or because the bureaucracy wanted another market study costing another $50,000. These decisions showed an insensitivity to the region. The bureaucracy was overly cautious. It was not prepared to take the risk. It had a different attitude.

Now the bureaucracy, the people who man the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, know that their job is to spur economic development, their mandate is to work with local economic groups to ensure that the community can put ideas forward to government. ACOA has money to help the industrial commissions and the small communities of Atlantic Canada, to help the entrepreneurs. For example, if there is an innovation project through which something new will be advanced, as much as 60 per cent of it will be made available through assistance. We as a Government recognize that we must build a stronger entrepreneurial base in Atlantic Canada, that Atlantic Canadians who have good ideas and who need capital must be given a little extra help.

We have taken the bold step of putting the economic development task in the hands of the people who live in the regions. We make no apologies for that. In fact, that is what was recommended by the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Development one year ago.

In June, 1987 the House of Commons Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion which I chaired gave to the Government of Canada a long list of recommendations as a strategy to be followed in regional economic development. I would like to take the time of the House to review with my colleagues and with Canadians what some of those recommendations were, and whether or not they are reflected in the new policy of economic development envisioned by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

The first recommendation was that the regional economic development task must be carried out by separate responsibility centres, sensitive to the regional needs. We now have that. Each of the provinces have offices with a certain degree of autonomy, and the headquarters of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is in Moncton, New Brunswick.

The second recommendation was that the federal Government should continue to maintain a strong role in Canada's regional development efforts while recognizing the contributions that provincial and municipal Governments can and should make in this effort. The reason for this recommendation is quite simple. We want the federal Government in the regions because the federal Government has at its disposal certain levers of national economic development. It has financial resources and expertise that can be employed in the regions.

We also want the provincial and municipal Governments to recognize that they too have a role to play, that the provincial or the municipal Government can no longer say that there is an economic problem in the community because of the federal Government. The people in the regions must recognize and in fact do recognize that they have the ability and the mandate to address their economic problems and to move forward from that point onward.

Another recommendation was that areas of weak economic performance should be eligible for assistance aimed at diversifying and strengthening the local economy. Economic development assistance for such areas should vary in accordance with the needs of the local economy. We see that in Bill C-103. Bill C-103 has an explicit provision for the Minister to designate an area for special economic treatment even within the Atlantic Canada region. That shows the flexibility and sensitivity which the committee recommended one year ago.

The committee believes that the federal Government's efforts to promote economic development in Canada could be considerably improved by establishing a stronger federal presence in the regions of Canada. We see this recommendation as well reflected in Bill C-103. We also recommended that communities and local development groups should be eligible to accept responsibility and financial resources from the Government of Canada so that they can participate in the task of economic development. In other words, people who live in a region of perhaps a radius of 30 miles may have recognized a peculiar economic opportunity which, until that time, had not been recognized. There is now a mechanism under which they can promote their idea which, hopefully, will result in long-term economic development.

The regional development eligibility criteria for prospective business investments should be broadened to include all forms of business activities in all sectors of the Canadian economy. Under program coverage one year ago the committee advised the Government to recognize that there were businesses which require loan insurance, there are other businesses which would prefer an interest buy-down, there were businesses which are short of capital and would prefer a grant, and there were other businesses which might prefer some help on infrastructure. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency reflects all of these recommendations of the House of Commons committee which reported one year ago.

I came to this House with the intention of participating in the development of national economic policy. I chaired this committee which was able to bring forward recommendations that we believed to be in the best interests of economic development in the regions of Canada. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to see that these recommendations were accepted and are reflected in the regional development policy which we are discussing today.

Another very important and specific recommendations that the committee made one year ago was that progress payments be made to investors. In other words, as an investor puts up a building or acquires machinery a progress payment should be available in order that the investor does not have the burden of bridge financing over a number of months, which is costly and often very difficult because our national banks have not been supportive of regional economic development.

Our banks have not accepted what I believe is their responsibility, that is, to play a role in regional economic development. They want a nice, safe, secure investment. This recommendation recognizes that progress payments will make it a lot easier for many investors to acquire the necessary financing and get their business up and operating. That very specific recommendation was accepted and announced as government policy by the Minister some time ago as part of the action program.

Industrial development policies and assistance are continued as well. National industrial development policy is continued under DRIE. Businesses in Atlantic Canada are not restricted to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. They can take full advantage of the industrial policies which apply across the country.

We recommended that federal procurement policies, and in particular defence contracts, should play an even greater role in the federal-regional development effort. I am proud to say that since that recommendation was made one year ago the Government of Canada has confirmed that the remaining frigates will be built at the Saint John shipyard. That means security for thousands of New Brunswick workers. That is federal procurement policy working for the benefit of Atlantic Canada. That is another reason I take particular pride in the initiatives of our Government in Atlantic Canada.

All purchasing departments of Government must also be ordered to review the specifications put on goods which they are acquiring. The reality is that when a clerk draws up purchasing specifications he or she often specifies a product which is not available in Atlantic Canada. The specification may not be an essential part of the item being purchased, but when specifications are drafted people believe that they are bound to follow them to the T. As part of the regional development effort we must continue to study specifications to ensure that they are broad enough and flexible enough to reflect the capacity of the regions of the country to supply the product sought by the Government.

Another recommendation was that the federal Government should continue to lend its support to the development of large-scale investment initiatives in Canada. One of those initiatives, of course, would be the Hibernia development. I was pleased to read in the papers this week of an indication of a commitment by the Government of Canada to ensure that this important regional development project gets under way in the near future.

The Government is not restricting its support for Atlantic Canadians to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. There are many other avenues, but the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has special funding and special programs. It provides for a local board of directors and input, not only from the board of directors but from advisory groups throughout the region. There is an opportunity for local industrial commissions to tap into expertise and come forward with ideas which they believe to be good for their communities.

That, Mr. Speaker, is far more than I, as a Member of Parliament, thought could be realized in terms of economic development strategy in my first term in Parliament. It is, in fact, a revolutionary change in the attitude toward regional development in this country. I am proud that it was this Government that made that change. We learned from the past and are looking to the future with new expertise and new strategies. I believe that these changes are producing important results. We must realize that ACOA is not a trial balloon.

The Government established the Enterprise Cape Breton Agency in the spring of 1985, which agency reflected many of these principles. It has special development tools including the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit, the topping-up assistance, and the IRDP assistance. It administers loan insurance and interest buy-down. All of this is reflected in the Enterprise Cape Breton Agency which has been successful. No one has said otherwise. In fact, there is widespread agreement that the Enterprise Cape Breton Agency has been successful and that jobs have been created as a result.

Our economic development efforts in the region of Cape Breton have not been restricted to those instruments available to the Enterprise Cape Breton Agency. The Government saw that the forest resource in eastern Nova Scotia could be developed, that the full potential had not been realized. The Government put in place ERDA agreements which applied to Nova Scotia in general with relation to forestry and a special forestry agreement for the Cape Breton area of Nova Scotia with a full $10 million. We put that money into the forests and put people to work to build up the forests which had been destroyed by the spruce budworm and to build a healthier forest.

We did not stop with forestry. We put in place a special Cape Breton Attractions Program designed to bring tourists into eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton. We want tourists to come into that region because tourism is a tremendous growth industry in all of Canada, and Nova Scotia is no exception. There is a great opportunity throughout all of my riding to increase the job opportunities flowing from the tourism industry. We put the $14 million Cape Breton Attractions Program in place in conjunction with the provinces. The idea was to establish special attractions, so-called travel generators, that would bring in Canadians, Americans and people from outside North America to this region of Canada to enjoy our culture, scenery and people. In turn, we will have a stronger economy.

We have established special agreements to help the agricultural sector and the fishery. We know that more can be done and are prepared to do so.

However, in less than four years tremendous changes in regional economic strategies have occurred in Atlantic Canada, and I am proud to say that it is the Government of which I am a part that brought forward this initiative. I am proud that many of the recommendations put forward by the committee which I chaired a year ago were accepted and are reflected in the regional economic policies of the Government. Those recommendations were put forward and unanimously agreed upon by the committee. We did not fully expect that so many of them would be accepted and acted upon.

I want to pay tribute to my colleagues who travelled throughout Atlantic Canada during the hearings relating to Bill C-103. I want to pay tribute to them for their attention and genuine interest in listening to Atlantic Canadians and supporting a number of amendments affecting this legislation.

One of those amendments relates to the extension of the Enterprise Cape Breton mandate to an area on the mainland side of the Strait of Canso, which includes industrial land in the Town of Mulgrave and thousands of acres in the adjacent municipality of the County of Guysborough.

This was a major and important change. This was one of the primary areas affected by the closure of the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited heavy water plant in Point Tupper. It was directly affected by the closure of an oil refinery during the term of my predecessor, and was directly affected by the closure of a fish plant in the 1970s. This area faced severe economic set-backs in the last 15 years, and the amendment to the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation Bill means that this area will benefit from those special benefits that this corporation brings to the area. That is consistent with the mandate of the Enterprise Cape Breton Agency that was set up at the time of the closure of the heavy water plant to help in the process of economic rejuvenation in that area. Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation will have the same mandate.

I have made representations to extend the mandate of both these corporations throughout all my riding. I have worked particularly with the Town of Canso in making representations in this regard. The reality is that the boundary would stop in that area directly affected by the closure of the heavy water plant, which in a direct way forms part of the port. While that was not the best result for me, it was a big improvement.

It was consistently argued in respect of the mainland side of the Strait of Canso that we cannot take the incentives off Cape Breton without knowing where to draw the line. It was a difficult question and presumably explains why my predecessor, who represented both sides of the Strait of Canso, did not expand the special programs that applied to Cape Breton to the mainland side of the causeway. That had a negative impact on the community just across the water.

This measure helps alleviate some of that difficulty. I look forward to the day when these boundaries are expanded again to include all of Guysborough County and Antigonish County, two areas that I also represent. I believe that we have set an important precedent. The boundaries do not have to stop at Cape Breton because a balanced strategy of economic development can and should be achieved. I am proud that I have been able to convince the Government to move the boundary further west because that did not happen under the previous Government.

I know there are Members in the House who would like those benefits extended to their ridings, and even some who would like them extended to Newfoundland. We should not deny the people who have this benefit the opportunity to participate because it does not extend far enough.

This amendment is an important achievement because it brings these incentives to thousands of industrial acres in the County of Guysborough. That fact alone will benefit many additional thousands of people. Hopefully, with economic development, they will be able to commute to this area for employment. I welcome the support of my colleagues for this important change.

There are other features of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency that I believe will result in improved economic opportunities. I have already mentioned participation and local control, but have not touched on another mandate of this agency, namely, its advocacy role. What does that mean? This agency will play a role when important decisions are being made by other government Departments. ACOA has been given the opportunity to inject itself into the policy-making and decision-making of other Departments. ACOA can be represented at the cabinet table. Atlantic Canadians can give their input into decisions because ACOA is mandated by the Government to be its advocate. For example, it can advocate that more defence spending occur in the Atlantic region.

Let there be no mistake about the important role that a bureaucracy can play when it is given the mandate as public servants to be advocates who will ensure that we are involved in any decisions affecting the interests of Atlantic Canada that reach the cabinet table.

This should not be an indication of weakness on the part of Members from Atlantic Canada. We too have an important political role to play, but ACOA gives support and I, as a Member of Parliament, welcome that support from the region. That is another important role to be played by this regional agency.

• (1540)

We know that policies in the past have not realized the goals we had hoped to reach and we have committed ourselves as a Government to put in place a new strategy, and that is what we have done. There is local input, local control, a new budget and additional money. We have said to the people of Atlantic Canada: "You have a role to play and we want you to play it. We want your ideas and input and we want you to participate in achieving greater economic opportunities". That is the mandate we have given this corporation, and it is a mandate that is welcomed by the people of Atlantic Canada.

In closing, I would like to make a few comments on the establishment of the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation itself. That corporation is something which takes the industrial development division of Devco, puts it into a new separate Crown corporation, mandated by this legislation, an Act of Parliament, and tells it to go forward and do that which the industrial development division of Devco was doing but in a new corporate entity with a new board of directors. I support that. There are some who do not. It seems to me they do not support it because they are attempting to hold onto the past. The fact is that the Cape Breton Development Corporation was established to wind down the coal mines. We have the industrial development division which is supposed to improve economic opportunities for Cape Breton. What would happen if the coal industry turned around? Since the early 1970s Devco has been chiefly a coal mining company.

The priorities of industrial development in Cape Breton have not received the adequate attention of a board of directors. There are always priorities in the coal industry. This new corporation, which has the powers of the industrial development division of Devco, will be able to focus on industrial development. It will be able to do so with a separate board of directors, which does not have to worry about coal prices for that day or about negotiating contracts with the many hundreds of coal miners. We have a new Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, which is an improvement, an autonomous industrial development corporation, that will work with the Enterprise Cape Breton Agency.

The Enterprise Cape Breton Agency has worked, and so will the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. The Enterprise Cape Breton Agency has committed over $150 million to business development in Cape Breton and more than $50 million in the Cape Breton investment tax credit in addition to that. We have the ERDAs I mentioned earlier. This is not only going to big business. It is going to the farmer who can use the tax credit to put up a new barn or to acquire farming machinery. These are incentives not available in other parts of Nova Scotia but they are available in Cape Breton. They highlight the commitment of our Government to deal with a very serious economic problem in Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia. If money is the test of our commitment, then I point out to the critics that there has been a commitment of more than $500 million to Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia.

The financial commitment of the Government of Canada is clear, but money is not enough. If money were enough our problems would have been solved decades ago. If the industrial development division of Devco were the answer, these problems would be solved. But the people voted for a new strategy. They have it. They have the money, they have the opportunity, and they have proven results. We see results in this region. These principles form the basis of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Because of its success, I look at ACOA and to the future of Atlantic Canada with confidence and optimism knowing that, with this new opportunity, Atlantic Canadians will improve their economic lot. I look forward to passage of this Bill so that all of Atlantic Canada can get on with enjoying the benefits of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek the unanimous consent of the House to vary the order of speaking in this debate. I realize that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the right to speak next and for unlimited time, but I would ask for the consent of the House that I be permitted to speak next for 20 minutes only, forgoing questions and comments. I do have to catch flight in a very short period of time. I would seek the consent of the House to do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I thank Hon. Members for granting their unanimous consent. It shows a spirit of co-operation that we have not seen in the House for the last few days. I am pleased to see it today.

I want to speak on this very important piece of legislation. I want to say at the outset that although I may not be present for a vote on this Bill, it would be my intention to vote in support of this legislation. I think it does a part of what needs to be done for Atlantic Canada. In saying that, however, I want to outline very serious problems I see with this Government's approach and its attitude toward regional development.

Perhaps it is best exemplified by a comment first made by the Minister of Public Works in March of 1987. In speaking to a construction management labour bureau in Halifax, the Minister is reported to have said that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency may be the last kick at the can as far as development programs for this region are concerned from a federal Government bent on financial efficiency. What has not been tried in the Atlantic region? Just about everything has been tried. That attitude expressed by a Minister of the Crown is, I think, a most shocking attitude when it comes to an important region of Canada. One would have expected that Senator Murray, the Minister responsible for this agency, would have repudiated that attitude when asked. But he did not. He confirmed it both in committee, when he was asked, and to the media.

On top of that attitude, we have an attitude which was expressed in this House the other day when the Bill at report stage was being debated with a number of important amendments being considered by the House. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) criticized and derided a member of the New Democratic Party for speaking in support of amendments to the legislation, for speaking in favour of regional development in Atlantic Canada, on the basis that the Member represented a riding in Hamilton, Ontario. The Minister for International Trade was joined in this attack by the Minister of State and Deputy House Leader. This was an attack on Members of this Party who were speaking out in favour of regional development for Atlantic Canada. These attitudes, which were expressed by four separate Ministers of the Crown, are part of the reason we recognize that this Government's approach to regional development is entirely different from what one would find on this side of the House.

What kind of problems are we dealing with when we talk about regional development? I look to the Economic Council of Canada, which stated in a press release on September 30, 1987, that the national economy is likely to expand in the coming years but uneven regional growth will be the country's major economic problem. It stated that a prime economic target for Canadians should be regionally balanced growth, job opportunities and social services. According to the Economic Council of Canada this is the major economic problem our country faces today.

• (1550)

From what other economic body have we heard in the last year but the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development? In its annual report, which was released last August, it states that the starkness of regional disparity in Canada was especially noteworthy in the previous years. So not only does our own Economic Council recognize it as the priority problem in Canada, it is also recognized by the body which is composed of the 15 wealthiest nations in the world which does studies on economies and which makes economic predictions.

How do we treat it in Canada? How do Ministers of the Crown treat it? They say that this will be the last kick at the can, that we will try this for a few years and if it does not work it is all over. If people who are not from Atlantic Canada stand up in the House to talk about it and to bring it to the attention of the House, speaking out for the region of Atlantic Canada, they get told that they have no right to do so. That is not good enough for this Party. It is not good enough for Canada. It is not good enough for any part of Canada. It certainly will not be accepted by Atlantic Canada, Atlantic Canadians and Newfoundlanders.

We heard the previous speaker from the government side talk about spending money, which has not solved the problem, and that this will not work and that that will not work. What is happening is that the situation in Atlantic Canada is not getting better. It is either getting worse or standing still.

There was a recent presentation to the Standing Committee on Finance which dealt with the issue of interest rates in Canada. A political science professor from the University of Ottawa, Duncan Campbell, said that the unemployment rate in the regions of Canada is higher now than it was just prior to the 1981-82 recession. We have gone through a recession, an economic downturn which affected all of Canada, and we have what appears to be a recovery in certain parts of Ontario. It has been so much of a recovery that the Bank of Canada is afraid to cut the interest rates because it does not want it to overheat the economy and cause inflation in certain parts of Ontario. However, in Atlantic Canada and the regions the unemployment rate is now worse than it was before the recession.

The Hon. Member said further that in Atlantic Canada, even though we have the highest unemployment rate in the country, 50 per cent of those who are working part time are doing so because they cannot find full-time employment. Yet they are considered employed in the unemployment statistics. They are part-time employees, many of them. Those who are part-time are not part-time because they choose to be so. They are part-time because they cannot get full-time jobs.

Speaking of the unemployment rate, I want to remind Members of the House that the unemployment rate in my own Province of Newfoundland in March was 17.8 per cent. That was more than double the national rate in Canada of 7.8 per cent. That is the place that Newfoundlanders have in terms of opportunities for jobs in Canada.

When we look at the unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada and in Newfoundland we see that over the last number of years the situation has not much changed. In fact, it has got worse. In 1976, it was at 13.4 per cent and hovered around 15 per cent and 16 per cent up until early 1980. It was down to 13 per cent in 1980 and 1981. In 1982, it started going up. It was 16.8 per cent in 1982. In 1983, it was 18.9 per cent. In 1984, when the Government came in, we hit 20 per cent. In 1985, it was 21 per cent. In 1986, it was 20 per cent. We are now down to 17.8 per cent. However, we are still over double the national average. Not only have we fared poorly and are worse off now than we were before the recession, we are also at still more than twice the national average in Canada.

That is the situation. It has to be addressed by a very serious attack on regional development. We now have a Bill before us. I want to commend the Chairman of the legislative committee, for when we travelled through Atlantic Canada and heard briefs, the Hon. Member from Fredericton held open airs and was very kind and polite. He listened to all the things that were said. Unfortunately, in the end, the Government was not prepared to accept motions that would insist that this agency take on regional development as a goal with the reduction of regional disparity as a commitment and an objective.

We have a refusal to establish this as an objective. We have assistance for small and medium-sized business in the Atlantic region. That is a laudable activity to undertake.

As even the government spokesman today mentioned, spending money will not solve the problem. He did not have the courage to say what needs to be undertaken. We have to tell Ministers of the Crown to stop talking about Atlantic Canada as if it were a basket case that needed to be kicked like a can in the hopes that that will do something to improve things. We have to recognize that Atlantic Canadians, whether they be from a metropolitan area such as Halifax or even St. John's, deserve to have the same kind of opportunity as other Canadians, opportunities for a decent job, to be able to raise their families in the place of their birth, and to be able to develop their communities and live in them.

That will have to be done by all Members of the House recognizing it as a priority. If we do not do that, we are giving up on the regions of Canada. To spend what this Government has allocated toward this particular agency and suggest that this is going to solve the problem, or is even a serious attempt to solve the problem, is an act of sheer dishonesty.

What we now have to recognize as the most serious economic problem in the country is uneven regional growth. We have to recognize that in order to tackle that problem we are going to have to take serious measures. They cannot be just spending money. They will have to involve certain structural changes. We have to do something to reverse the unlimited and unrelenting concentration of money, of jobs and of opportunities in the central parts of this country. We have to do that by structuring our economy in such a way that jobs are spread out across the country.

We have gone some way in attempting at least to redistribute income from the wealthy to the poor. We recognize at least that we have an obligation to do that. We recognize that we have an obligation to keep people in decent housing. We recognize that we have an obligation to ensure that they do not starve, and that we are prepared to redistribute income from the tax system to do that. There has to be a redistribution in Canada across the regions in terms of opportunities for work and opportunities for jobs.

• (1600)

There are numerous ways in which this can be done. I will not lay out a total economic program at the present time. There hardly seems any point in telling the Government how it should behave in terms of regional development in view of the attitude of the Ministers responsible for this program. They are only willing to go so far as to provide money or support for business enterprises in the Atlantic region. I think that is an important thing that has to be done. But it cannot be done in the way in which the Government is undertaking it without doing little to resolve the problem, and in fact it may well be exacerbating it.

The Government refuses to accept an amendment which would guarantee that there would be equity between the provinces in terms of access and use of this agency. To a certain degree at least this would have ensured that the money and the programs of ACOA would not be concentrated in those areas which already have economic development. Unfortunately, there is no mechanism within the ACOA program and within the legislation to ensure that those areas, cities, and towns that are already doing well will not take up the lion's share of this regional development funding. Of course, the most important thing is that this agency, which has other mandates in terms of advocacy for the Atlantic region, is not given sufficient funds to undertake this gigantic task.

The allocation of an additional $200 million, which is 15 per cent of 1 per cent of the national budget, is a very minuscule amount when one looks at the total picture. It is a very minuscule amount to spend on what is regarded as the most serious economic problem facing the country.

I look forward to the day when Members of Parliament from across Canada, not only Members from the Atlantic region or those of us from my province, can join together and insist on putting in place a program that will tackle and genuinely do what has to be done in order to ensure that Atlantic Canada receives its fair share of economic and regional development, and that opportunities in Atlantic Canada and those parts of Atlantic Canada that are doing badly exist and are created by the Government.

There have to be structural changes that will not come unfortunately from the vision of Canada held by this Government. Its vision of Canada is made up of people acting for private motives and making a profit. The Government is extending our borders in that field to include the United States of America in the trade agreement. It is preventing us in Atlantic Canada from using our natural resources such as oil and electricity to give favourable treatment to businesses and opportunities in the Atlantic region. That is a structural change that would be required in order to assist Atlantic Canadians in developing their economy. The Government does not see the wisdom of that. In fact, it is throwing it to the wind and stating that it will only give money to small enterprises and hoping against hope that this will do something to alleviate regional disparity. I am afraid that that will not do so. I am sorry it will not do so.

I have to support this legislation because it does provide a first step, but I am sorry that the Government does not have the will to reduce and eliminate regional disparities.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—Correctional Services—Funding of agency to assist ex-prisoners in Nova Scotia; the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner)—Finance—Northern tax allowances—Geographical delineation of affected communities/Request that regulations be amended; and the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson)—Northern Development—Negotiation of energy accord with Northwest Territories.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in the debate on a public policy issue which has concerned me for quite some time.

Many Members of Parliament who have been elected to this Chamber and who are presently in this Chamber have been hoping and working toward the elimination of regional disparities in this country. Whether one resides in Newfoundland or Cape Breton, or in parts of western Canada, Quebec, or Ontario, it is clear that the issue of regional disparities is an important and all-encompassing issue.

When Governments formulate public policy to address serious situations in the country, in my view it is their role, after broad consultation, to come forward with meaningful and concrete programs within a reasonable period of time.

Dr. Donald Savoie is an economist by profession and for quite some time has been studying regional disparities within Atlantic Canada. He has prepared a report, and in that document he has highlighted the fact that agencies or Departments, private as well as public, do not and will not be the panacea for resolving regional inequalities in the country.

Some of us can look back to the days when we passed and amended the Canadian Constitution. A provision of the Constitution dealt with equality of opportunity for all Canadians, something which, rather sadly, is rarely referred to in this Chamber. There are those of us in the Chamber, as evidenced by the previous Speaker, who believe it to be the most important issue facing Canada today.

When we talk about regional disparities and the inequalities that exist within regions, what we are really talking about in a fundamental way is nation-building. For Governments to be effective in serving the people they represent, there must be an underlying political will to resolve and to address those situations.

Unfortunately, I have noted, not with partisanship but with regret, that what was said in July, 1984 has conveniently been forgotten for quite some time. In July, 1984 and in August, 1984 the Canadian people, particularly in my region of Atlantic Canada, felt that the panacea for the elimination of those disparities was to vote for the Conservative Party of Canada. We have seen the evidence of that falsehood. It has taken almost four years for the Government of the day to put a program before the Parliament of Canada.

It was once said that time is of the essence. But if the problem is so serious, as evidenced by Members opposite, if the problem is all-encompassing, as they have stated, surely it is not unreasonable for the Canadian people in Atlantic Canada to ask, "Why have you not moved with some sense of dispatch in this most serious situation?"

• (1610)

Consultations took place in committee. The committee travelled across the region but did not consult broadly within the region itself. It went to some areas but refused to go to others. The package of programs it drafted, if looked at in isolation, may be seen as if it really going to do something. However, on closer examination I think you will find the opposite to be true.

Attitude and political will are important ingredients in developing good public policy. We have had Ministers of the Crown say to the people of Atlantic Canada that this is their last opportunity. The implication is that if this is not successful, there will be no more. However, I suggest that that attitude is a tragedy for our efforts to build a better nation.

The Government developed this Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, gave it a relatively small amount of money, and tried to promote it as the new Cadillac of economic development in Atlantic Canada. The fact is that this agency, with some goals and objectives I concur with, as I have said before, is not and will not be the vehicle by which disparities in my region are eliminated.

We had some consultation, although it was not broad consultation. We had a four-year lapse of time. We have an allocation of some $200 million over five years. We now have an agency with a board of advisers, I guess you would call them, who are going to try to advise on the public policy that the agency will be implementing. However, it breaches a number of fundamentals. We were led to believe that the decision-making would be in the Atlantic provinces. Decision-making will not lie with that board and executive. The decisions will be made here in Ottawa.

On page 63 of Donald Savoie's report he said that above all the agency will require clout. It must be in a position to influence policy as it is being created. It will thus require direct access to central agency processes and cabinet level decision-making. However, the Act incorporating the agency merely makes passing reference to other Departments of the Government of Canada.

Some years ago I had an opportunity to speak with a former Minister of the Crown, a tremendously astute politician in the person of Donald Jamieson. He said at a policy conference that I attended that we must be cognizant of the fact that if Governments try to place in the hands of one single agency the complete role of regional economic development, it will not work. What has the Government done? It is clear that it is putting all its eggs in one basket. Yes, the Bill says in Clause 5(2):

> The Minister shall co-ordinate the policies and programs of the Government of Canada in relation to opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada.

As a bare minimum the Government ought to provide clear, concise objectives regarding employment, transport and the various agencies of Government. That has not been done nor is it being worked on. All this Minister of the Crown and this agency will be able to do is to shuffle papers off to another Department in the hope that somewhere along the line some consideration may be given to regional economic development.

Another shortcoming is the A-base budgeting, $200 million. You know what other Departments of the Government will be saying to that particular agency? There is $200 million allotted, if you want projects out of Transport you go over to ACOA. This will happen even if they are somewhat, shall we say, in co-operation with the private sector. This agency will become the single tool of regional economic development. What an unmitigated disaster for nation-building. We are leaving to one small agency the responsibility of addressing the concerns of the people of Atlantic Canada.

It is important, when we talk about public policy regarding regional economic development, that we not think merely of one or two items. There are many. Tax reform is one. What is the Government's position regarding tax reform and how it will benefit Atlantic Canadians and spur our economy? Procurement is another one. The procurement policies of the Government are not working. It requires political will by a Government of some 211 Members of Parliament to put forward a legislative package which will say that a percentage must go to Atlantic Canada. This cannot be discretionary. That could help trigger thousands of new jobs, as has been done in other countries. The U.S. has been able to lever procurement policies with private sector moneys to create the necessary jobs for people to lead a dignified life. Yet there is nothing in this agency in that regard. All there is, is passing reference to consultation with other Departments, hence the folly of the Bill.

The objective of the agency is to promote and assist small and medium-sized business. If one had been listening to broadly-based consultation one would have clearly and unequivocally heard that the people of Atlantic Canada want some form of state funding for infrastructure. Infrastructure takes on many forms. I believe one of the fundamental factors in turning around an economy is the human resource. That resource has to be educated and well-informed about what is going on domestically as well as internationally. All we have is passing reference to the Government trying to co-ordinate efforts with other agencies of the Government of Canada.

• (1620)

My colleague and I travelled extensively in Atlantic Canada. We heard brief after brief after brief from concerned individuals and organizations requiring and asking the Government of Canada to provide some infrastructure moneys whether on the human resource side or on the municipal side. The services and amenities that we have in Atlantic Canada are not on a par with other regions of the country. There have been some moneys directed in that regard, but suffice it to say that an insufficient amount of moneys has been directed in that regard. I think, with regard to infrastructure, notwithstanding the fears of provincial Premiers—provincial Premiers of a different political stripe than mine but the same as the Governments—there are no moneys for infrastructure, none whatsoever. I suggest to the Government that that is a mistake on its part.

The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, I am told, and I hope government Members will avail themselves of the opportunity to correct me, will be centered in Moncton, with its President living in Halifax, travelling back and forth, and with offices in the various provinces. The inadequacies of this agency are clearly spelled out in this way.

The estimates for 1988 to 1989 show the research and analytical staff complement of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agencies as representing 49 management person-years, 140 administration and foreign services, and just a mere 19 scientific professional staff. Is this agency equipped with the scientific and professional staff to do the job in the shortest period of time humanly possible and equipped to do its job well? The answer will be unmitigated delay after delay after delay as the agency checks with another Department to shuffle paper from there over to the agency and back to another agency. We will be in a time-locked situation where applicants will become frustrated, where entrepreneurs and people of goodwill and good intention will become frustrated to the extent that they will want to go elsewhere.

The Government has introduced this Bill to establish among others the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. If there has ever been a situation that is so stupid, it has been the Government's decision to do what it is doing in this particular Bill. A previous speaker today talked about the money of Enterprise Cape Breton and the opportunities it is trying to provide in that particular region. The Bill does not recognize the history which has been associated with the Cape Breton Development Division for some 20 years. This was an industrial development division that worked hand in hand with another division, the coal division, in assisting workers who may have had to be replaced in trying to start new businesses or getting into a new line of employment. They worked together. If there is one thing that I have learned about regional economic development policy it is that it takes time. Yes, it takes money and political will, but it also takes time. What the Government is doing by gutting the industrial development division of DEVCO and placing it in a separate Crown corporation is taking 20 years of working with the community, business in the private and in the public sector, and wiping it off.

I do not share—and I say that with great respect—the comments of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) when he said, "you are turning back to the past". What unmitigated nonsense, Mr. Speaker. Every economist in the regional economic field will tell you that when you address that particular subject there are long time frames. We saw it in the Richmond County Development Corporation where, for a four or five year period, people were falling over themselves. Wrong management decisions were made, but because of the mistakes and the educational process that goes on within, management has been able to turn it around and has made the corporation a positive force for that particular area of our province. This agency, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, in its industrial development division has assisted countless numbers of individuals in Cape Breton.

Of course, the critics will ask, what is wrong with making it a separate Crown corporation? What is wrong with doing that? It is very clear. The mandates are different. The programs may appear to be similar, but there are different mandates. The Cape Breton Development Corporation has a coal division and an industrial development division. By separating the two, this Government is trying to position the coal industry in one corner and the industrial development somewhere else. We know, through the number of actions over the last number of years, that the Government's commitment to the coal industry of Cape Breton has a lot to be desired. There are 604 men, Mr. Speaker, not four individuals, not five, but 604 who have gone from the payroll. We have a situation now where men on pre-retirement leave, who have no hope of getting employment, have to pay unemployment insurance, whereas in other pre-retirement leave plans they do not have to do that.

We have a situation with the coal industry where the Government of Canada, is considering the possibility of providing funds for a new coal mine in Pictou County to the detriment of the Cape Breton Development Corporation coal division. What stupidity, what idiotic public policy by a Government which is taking jobs from one poor region and giving them to another poor region of the province.

The industrial development division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation has had its share of failures too. There is no question about that and I would be the first to admit it, Mr. Speaker. Over time, however, it has been successful on many accounts. Perhaps what is not talked about often, to which reference ought to be made now, is the industrial development of DEVCO. It includes the development of individuals and the over-all community.

To individuals who are not familiar with regional economic development and to those individuals who live in the major urban centres of our country who cannot appreciate this kind of development, not for lack of desire or caring but because of lack of exposure, it is fundamental to changing an economy and changing a community. It is a vision not easily attained but nevertheless a vision to improve, to assist and to facilitate individuals in the community at large. What do we have in Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation? A mere mishmash of programs administered from an agency whose President will also be the President of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, who lives in Halifax, whose head office is in Moncton, but who is supposed to do work in Cape Breton. I have seen some pretty good ballet dancers and some pretty good running backs. That goes a long way. I think that is very telling.

• (1630)

In my view, the intent to create the Crown corporation spells the end of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Government is not committed to future coal development in Cape Breton, as evidenced by its action to date. Every miner who works within the coal division of that corporation will concur that there is not a commitment there.

There is now in Cape Breton a coal mine called the Donkin coal mine which is ready to start up. Yet the Government of Canada will provide money for a new coal mine in Pictou County which will be operating in competition with that of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. If that does not spell out very clearly what the intent of this particular Bill is, I do not know what else does.

It is very obvious to me that there is a plan, and the plan is not to assist and to facilitate research and development of the coal division. It is to wind it down. The best way to do that is to separate the two: put the coal division on one side, and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation on the other side.

If that is done, we will lose on two counts. We will lose our coal industry, which has been the backbone of eastern Nova Scotia for decades, and we will lose, on the industrial development side, because the knowledge that has been acquired, the sense of confidence and stability, the esprit de corps, the aims and the objectives and the decisions being made there and not somewhere else will be lost. Those things are pretty fundamental to developing regional economic development policies. For Hon. Members opposite to say that all is well with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is for them to say something that is not correct.

The industrial development division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation has a developmental role in ensuring that Cape Bretoners have the education, the technical and managerial skills and the entrepreneurial ability to carry through the economic plans they set for themselves. That is very well stated, and it was submitted by senior members of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

That is not to suggest in any way that the present industrial development division of DEVCO does not have a way to go in terms of improvement. However, to change it for the mere sake of changing it does not make good policy sense. We only change things because common sense demands that we change them.

I say now, as I have said in my constituency, that we are fundamentally altering a Crown corporation which has served us well for a good number of years, a Crown corporation which has accumulated the information, the knowledge and the know-how to do things in that particular environment. To change it at this time for a convenient label, Enterprise Cape Breton Development Corporation, will not meet the test of good public policy.

I hope that the Government of Canada will reconsider the serious mistake it is making. There are a number of individuals on the Island of Cape Breton, and even in the galleries—

Mr. Beatty: There's not a dry eye in the House.

Mr. Dingwall: I thank the Hon. Minister. These individuals would agree that this change will mean the end of our coal mining and the way we operate other businesses on the Island of Cape Breton.

This new agency does not have, nor is it likely to have, the empathy and the understanding that is needed to foster the attainment of regional economic development objectives. I would hope that the Government, notwithstanding its huge majority, would rethink this issue, not on the basis of partisan politics but on the basis of what is right for a people who live in a region of Canada and have contributed greatly to this country in various ways. They ought to be given the same opportunities that are given to other Canadians.

I am afraid, and I say this with regret, that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, containing these particular provisions, will lessen opportunities for the people of my region.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise to participate in this debate. The reason for that is quite simple. As a Member from Atlantic Canada, I was one of those on the government side who was anxious to see our approach to regional development change. Why that is the case is quite simple. It is simply because the approach that was being taken toward regional development in Atlantic Canada was not working.

We were seeing ourselves slip further and further behind the rest of Canada in terms of earned income and the ability of people to support themselves. If there is one thing that Atlantic Canadians want to be, it is to be self-sufficient in as many ways as possible. Of course, as a Member on the government side, I was anxious, along with my colleagues, to put a new program in place which would be made in Atlantic Canada to serve the needs of Atlantic Canadians.

Of course, we began to consult with people in Atlantic Canada, and Mr. Savoie, who has been mentioned at various times during this debate, was engaged to talk to leaders in the business community and within government circles and to any other interested parties to begin to put together the elements of a program that would work for Atlantic Canada.

What we see in this legislation is something quite different from anything we have had since the years of Prime Minister Diefenbaker who established the Atlantic Development Board and began to put major funding into infrastructure developments in Atlantic Canada. At that time, we saw a great expansion in facilities such as wharfs and highways. There was a tremendous improvement in the transportation system in Atlantic Canada.

Unfortunately, since the years of Mr. Diefenbaker, what we have had for regional development has basically been a national program which was modified a bit for the region. The process was such that if a person had an idea, it had to fit into the national performance criteria. It could not be an idea for a program that would fit Atlantic Canada itself. We saw that perhaps nine out of 10 or even 99 out of 100 people who had good ideas for development in Atlantic Canada would submit applications to DRIE or to DREE, as it then was, and would find that those applications were being turned down because they did not fit the national criteria for the programs. That was especially apparent during the latter years of DRIE, after the DREE programs were changed to give a different direction to the program. We got into tiers of support. If you were in one area of Atlantic Canada you got a little more than somewhere else, but everyone right across the country received some support under the national program.

Our approach was that development should start from the ground up and that if a person in Atlantic Canada had a good idea for development it should be encouraged locally and considered by people in the region who would judge the application on its merits and determine whether or not it would fly. That is exactly the way in which the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has been structured.

As has been pointed out, the head office of the corporation is in Moncton. There are independent offices in each province with a fantastic amount of local decision-making authority. In fact, there is a vice-president in each of the four Atlantic provinces. For example, the vice-president of the agency in Charlottetown can make decisions on all applications which come into his office up to $1 million. Those applications need not go before a screening process in Moncton, Ottawa, or elsewhere. They are considered on their own merits in terms of their contribution to Prince Edward Island. That is the kind of process which we wanted with this new agency.

If an individual has a good idea for a business which is going to create something new through manufacturing or processing, whether agriculture or fisheries products, it will be encouraged rather than discouraged. In the past, when an application was made the approach was to say that it would never work, that the idea made no sense. The new approach of the agency is to sit down with the applicant and flesh out his idea. If it is determined that it would not work initially, a little more research may be done on it, in which case we will fund up to 75 per cent of the research cost. If the research concludes that the idea is good, the person can get on with receiving government assistance through the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in order that the idea can proceed.

To ensure that the program is going in the right direction the Minister responsible, Senator Murray, has established a local board within the Atlantic area to advise on the general policy direction. That board is made up of Atlantic Canadians. These are not people sent out from Upper Canada, western Canada, or elsewhere to advise Atlantic Canadians on how to do their business. These are local business people who have been successful and can provide advice to the Minister in terms of how the program should be run. They can provide advice to the local vice-president on how best to carry out the program.

The approach is different. The decisions are being made locally. Those ventures which are sound will receive support. I was surprised when some of the Hon. Members opposite suggested that the agency would be very cumbersome and awkward in terms of reviewing projects and that it would take a long time to get approvals. In the last couple of weeks a project based in my constituency was approved by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in a matter of days.

This was a project to expand the shipyard in the town of Georgetown. The shipyard saw an opportunity to do some computer-assisted design and manufacturing and to expand into the manufacture of aluminum vessels. With that opportunity identified an application went into the agency and within a very few days the decision was made that it should proceed.

That is a radical departure from the past. Under the programs which the former administration had in place, applications would often take three months, six months, nine months, or maybe a year before they received a "no". We are trying to change that process. If the answer is going to be no, the individual will know in a very short period of time.

What kind of assistance can a person expect when he or she puts in an application? Two old programs have been consolidated and streamlined into one new program which will assist in three different ways. The first way is to provide loan insurance to the applicant. In fact, 85 per cent of a loan from a bank can be insured under this program.

The second major element is that an interest buy-down will be provided to the applicant. Up to 6 per cent of his interest payments at the bank can be bought down by virtue of this program. In other words, instead of paying 13 per cent interest the applicant would end up paying 7 per cent. Anyone in business today realizes that when you are using financing over 10, 15 or 20 years to operate a business, a 6 per cent write-down amounts to a substantial amount of money and makes it very much easier to make the business a success.

There are also grants and contributions available through the agency. The following types of assistance are available. There is business support, study support and technical assistance, innovation establishment, new product establishment, and expansion or modernization.

There are also increased levels of contributions under the new authority. For example, if it is a new business the funding level can go to 65 per cent of the total capital cost as opposed to 50 per cent under the old programs. Of course, it is not only 65 per cent as opposed to 50 per cent, but the eligible criteria are greatly broadened. If the business is going to modernize or expand, it can receive 30 per cent assistance versus 25 per cent in the past. If the project is for innovation it can receive up to 60 per cent as opposed to 40 per cent as previously. With regard to studies or research, we will now pay 75 per cent versus a maximum of 37.5 per cent as previously. We doubled that component because we know that there are a great many ideas which, if researched properly, can become viable business ventures in the Atlantic area.

In addition, there is a totally new program element called new product expansion which allows for 40 per cent of eligible capital cost. That is a very important part of the program in Atlantic Canada because, if there is one thing we can do, it is to get into new product lines. As I am sure all Members in the House appreciate, Atlantic Canada is dependent primarily on agriculture and fisheries. If we are to be successful in developing those industries we must develop new products related to those two primary industries. We have been dependent in the fishing industry in the past, for the most part, in the fishing industry, on catching the fish, doing some very basic processing, and usually exporting.

We have not developed many new consumer items which can capture a larger market or add more value to the primary product. Other countries such as Japan have made tremendous strides toward changing fish products to add value and to utilize new markets. We believe that this is an important area and that Atlantic Canada can have a considerable amount of new product development by assisting our fishing processors to develop new lines, to package things differently, and to ensure that the consumer demand is met.

The same applies to agriculture. We have tended to produce traditional products in the past, but there are a great many opportunities for new products in agriculture. That is exactly what we want to do with this program.

The Hon. Member who was speaking a few moments ago indicated that he was surprised and disappointed that there was not enough assistance for infrastructure, or that infrastructure would not be assisted under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. I want to clarify this because it is simply not true. It is quite possible that under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency a provincial Government can enter into an economic and regional development agreement with the federal Government that will provide for infrastructure. We believe that can be approached through these economic development agreements, provided that they contribute to business development in the region.

Let me give an example of another way the infrastructure can be assisted in the region. If a road or wharf is necessary for a new business that is being proposed, that infrastructure requirement can become part of the application. In those two ways, infrastructure can be assisted in the region. It is incorrect to suggest that there is no room for infrastructure assistance under this particular program.

The Hon. Member suggested that the Government should not have changed the industrial development section of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Let me point out that it was a recommendation of the advisory committee that was established in September, 1985, lead by Theresa MacNeil who is now chairperson of Devco, that recommended the establishment of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation instead of continuing with the industrial development division. The Government accepted that recommendation, and that is why it is presented as it is in this Bill.

I believe the House would agree that the worst thing a business person can experience is trying to find out what assistance is available from Government and not being able to get all the information from one location. If there is an industrial development division on one side of the street providing grants and loans and another government agency on the other side of the street providing grants and loans, whose programs do not mesh, it leaves much confusion and unwarranted bureaucracy. We did not want that to happen, and that is why Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation is outlined in this Bill as it is.

I have great faith that this corporation will do a lot for Atlantic Canada, more than we have seen any corporation or government agency do in the last 25 years. It represents over $1 billion in new funding, above existing programs, which is earmarked for economic development in Atlantic Canada. The Government is saying very clearly to the businessmen that if they want to make something, process a product or put new products on the market, we have a program that will help them do that. This is clearly a major pronunciation by our Government in addressing a problem that we know exists. I urge all Members to ensure that this Bill proceeds through the House as quickly as possible and clears the Senate so that this program can be taken advantage of as soon as possible.

We are still operating under old legislation. Some businesses in Atlantic Canada are still unable to do certain things because this legislation has not passed. Once it is passed the Minister and his officials will have more flexibility to meet the needs in Atlantic Canada. Some applications are still not being approved because they do not fit the old industrial development classifications. With this legislation, we will be able to meet the needs and respond to the ideas being developed in Atlantic Canada by Atlantic Canadians. I believe that prosperity in the region will increase and I hope all Members will join me in supporting this legislation.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member on his speech and for being very forthright about previous programs and infrastructures that were drawing some criticism.

Some people will say that we should not put money into infrastructure. I think it is correct to suggest that in the past Governments tended to create regional jobs with these infrastructure programs, calling it regional development or enterprise in the area.

We know that this type of system does not work. We can build the best wharfs, but if there is nothing to put on them there is not much point in building them.

I am pleased that the thrust of this program, according to the Hon. Member, is that if one has an idea that might be of benefit to that particular area, one will have an opportunity to participate in the program. However, one need not bother coming to the corporation with an idea from the past or for a grant to build another wharf. Is that the thrust of the program?

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the support of my colleague. He is correct that we are looking for ideas for new business development that makes sense and can be assisted.

I should point out, however, that the Government has a very ambitious program in Atlantic Canada, indeed across the country, to revitalize wharf facilities. If there is another program this Government has introduced in the last two years that is important to Atlantic Canada, it has been our Harbour Revitalization Program. We have increased what is generally known as the A-base for small craft harbours. We have put millions of dollars in additional funds into a program that would allow us to rebuild wharfs that have been condemned and are no longer safe for fishermen or other vessel owners who use those facilities.
