Upon the porch most drowsily Is stretched the setter sleek and red, While circles wild a honey-bee Among the roses overhead.

He sharply eyes his longed-for prey Then like a tiger swiftly springs; But from his teeth and far away The bee with little effort wings. And then the bee comes darting down, Swift as an arrow to the plain, And Fido feels upon his crown A lump that undulates with pain.

Poor Fido doesn's look as proud As usual while flying fleet, Enveloped in a great dust cloud, And howling madly down the street. I'm glad he's stung; I'm sure it's right
That one so big and strong as he Should come to grief for trying to bite
A little inoffensive bee.

DAVY'S ANGEL.

"Davy, oh, Davy, come home; mamma wants you."

The mother's call rang out clear and good naturedly shrill over the long garden where the convolvulus bells were closing, and the nasturtiums nodded their yellow heads, and reactied the ears of a little boy who was playing "all by his lonesome" in the old fashioned summer-house at the foot of the garden.

"He's a strange child, Davy is," said the mother.

This was no gossip she was talking to, and it was a relief to speak of Davy's peculiarities to one who would listen to her, and aid her by advice or sympathy. The child's father looked upon his fears as the expression of rank heresy. His Davy—his little man! There neverwas such a boy in the world, none as bright and companionable. At the same time the father knew that his boy was not quite like other children, or why would he prefer to play alone rather than with the little ones of the neighborhood.

"Yes," Mrs. Pond was saying, "he talks to himself nearly all the time. I can hear him in the arbor, and I have stolen down there often, but he was always alone, playing with the leaves, or talking in a low voice. And he has hallucinations. I know it, because he talks in his dreams of a playfellow he calls 'Angel.'" talks in his dreams of a playfellow he calls 'Angel.'"

"Perhaps," suggested the neighbor cautiously, "he really does see the Angels. I read in a book once a story of an old lady who had died but couldn't rest in her grave because she had hidden her will, and her niece, to whom her money was left, could not find it. So she came back to earth to try and show her where the will was. The girl could not see her, but walked through and through her, but the dog could see her, had the child in the cradle, and it reached out its hands to her."

"That," said Davy's mother, "is only a book story. I couldn't believe it if I tried."

"Angel—my boof'l Angel!"

other woman: "some are born of flame, some of fleesh and some of the spirk. Perhaps Davy is under control: he may have visions."

At that moment the little fellow came running in. He was a pretty boy, but not healthy-looking. His soft, curling hair lay in ringe on a pale, high forehead. A blue mark, said to predict early death, lay between his delicate brows. The same blue appearance settled about his mouth. He panted with the control of the control of

"Were you singing, Davy?"

"Were you singing, Davyt"
"No, papa."
"Who then, my boyt"
"Angel," and the child hung his head.
Then Mr. Pond did what he was very sorry for long after. He shook the child angrily, and insisted upon a description of the angel who was supplanting father and mother in the heart of the boy. But Davy would only sob and say, as he had often done before, that his angel was
"boof", an' Davy loves him."
It was a circus day in the new town to which Davy's folks had moved, and Mr.
Pond tried to interest the child in the street parade, but his sick senses were wholly inadequate to the task. The disappointed man bore the little whitewholly inadequate to the task. The disappointed man bore the little whiterobed form back from the low window opening on the lawn, and laid him on the pillow with a sinking heart. He knew now, what neither doctor nor parson could have made him believe, that the hours of his boy's life were numbered. If the prancing horses, the gay bands of music, the wonderful animals could not charm away his sickness, then nothing could help him, and the father cursed, in the feeble fashion of impotent humantty the unknown evil that was destroy-ity, the unknown evil that was destroy-ing his child.

While the child lay panting on his pil-low, there was a lively scene under the JOSEPH M. RUDDOCK, - - - PROPRIETOR

This lady was advertised in mammoth posters as the Queen of Snake Charmers, and she drew great crowds, for this was really the part of the show that answered fully to all its advertised attractions. Mine. Houssan was young and beautiful, and handled her snakes in the most fearless and expert maner. She stood within a railing, and close to her was a glass case filled with baby snakes, that looked like silver ropes as the twined about a blanin which they wrapped. She wore snakes on her wrists, clasping them like bracelets. Big boa-constrictors wreathed the most wonderful Blemish Care ever known. War ranted by J. Pallen & Son.

"Now," said the madame, taking out off its box a beautiful, brilliant striped snake of the variety known to naturalists as the "Colubres, Eximitus," or house snake, "I show you my so unique pet, my beauty. He loves me; he knows what I say. See, how smart he is!—the nice feilow!"

Madame put the snake through his paces, and he was indeed a pet and prodigy. He saluted her with so many varieties of Oriental kisses that the young fellows wanted to strangle him. Then he playfully bit her finger, and was scolded, whereupon he sulked.

"Now you shall hear him sing," said Madame, and at her prompting, he gave a little chirping sound that answered very well for a song, and was curiously swe 's and fascinating.

"Now I shall show you something so wery strange, so uncommon." said the snake charmer and she tied a piece of blue satin ribbon around the arched neck of the dappled snake. "You watch, you see. What you call a transformation scene—so."

Next madame laid her pet on the shelf while the turned the baby snakes loose

The crowd lost sight of the ribbon-decorated pet in the excitement of seeing the new excitement, and so did madame herself, and it was not until she had finished her performance for that time and reached out for the pythoness and the anaconda, that she missed it.

There was an instant clearing of the place, people tumbled over each other in their haste to get away, but never again did the eyes of Madaune Houssan rest upon her "so unique pet." He had vanished from her horizon forever.

Restful sleep renews the life.

Turpentine is a sure exterminator of bedbugs.

Never sleep with the face turned toward a near wall.

Never have children habitually sleep with older persons.

Pure air is fully as important in sleeping as in waking hours.

"One bed for one person" is the best rule for health and comfort.

Study common sense and comfort rather than custom and fashion.

Rever set a bed in the cornor of a room; there should be open space on at least three sides.

Sleep is nature's season of repair; the more quiet and unbroken the sleep, the more perfect its work.

Feather beds are not only unwholesome and uncomfortable, but they harbor and transmit disease.

A pleased expression flashed across Mrs. Goodwin's worn face. She was a little woman, slender and with bent shoulders. The expression of determination and nervous force in her eyes and mouth told plainly why it was that she was habitually able to do more than seemed possible from her frail bodily appearance.

"Yes." ruminatingly went on Mr. Goodwin, "we're all glad to get home again—except Fred."

"This's what I'm afraid of," said Mr. Goodwin.

Jeannette was divided between hope and fear. A school friend had invited her to spend a week at her father's cottage on the shore. She had no money to spend even for her fare now, having given it all to her mother. She was a little woman, slender and with bent shoulders. The expression of determination and nervous force in her eyes and mouth told plainly why it was that she was hubitually able to do more than seemed possible from her frail bodily appearance.

But if you can make her do what you say for a single week, and you'll pay all her expenses—you want to pay half anyway, you say—why. I'll pay the whole amount right back to you when I find out if it's done her good. But you'll have to take the risk. "Net's a biggoose to throw her money away like that!" said Fred with another sniff. "Might's well burn itright up at once. Making mother do something that'll make her miserable!"

"You wait and see!" called back Jean-nette, going into the house.

That night at supper-table mother was almost ill-natured.

"Why, mother!" protested Mr. Good-

"Why, mother!" protested Mr. Goodwin. "Why, mother!" protested Mr. Goodwin. "What in the world's the matter? Kinder tuckered out, ain't you?"
"Well, yes, I am," said Mrs. Goodwin. "Netty is so exasperating! Here she's been and bought tickets to Block faland and return, and engaged a room for a week at the house where the Packards are, and now she's changed her mind and won't go. She says I've got to go!"

and remarked, quietly:

"Yes, I bought the tickets a month ago, and engaged the room, but have changed my mind about going, and want to stay in Ralston this summer."

All of which was quite true.
"I should think a girl who had to

"The try to next time," said Jeannette, meekly.

"Well, goright along, mother," said father. "It'll do you good."

"Good!" was the impatient rejoinder. "Yes, it must do me lots of good to go where I don't want to! If I should' go I'd be miserable the whole time, thinking of all the more I'd got to do when I got back. I'm going to try and sell the tickets before the fifth of August, if I can. That's the date the room's engaged for. If I can't sell the tickets, I guess they won't care if we give up the stoom. There'll be plenty more to want it at this time."

Jeannette smiled. The tickets were in here own hands yet. Even if her mother should chance to find some one in this sleepy old town who would care to buy them, she couldn't very well dispose of them when Jeannette held them. The fourth of August came. By dint of persistence, seconded by father's advice that it might be a "downright good thing for mother to go," Jeannette had actually induced her mother to go to Block island.

The early morning of the fourth found Mrs. Goodwin's valise packed and Tou couldn't hire me to put that thing on!" she exclaimed.

"Well, I'm going to pack if, just the same," said Jeannette. "You have never been to the seaside, mother, and when you're there, you'll feel like doing as others do. And you know you're going to board right in the same place with Mrs. Packard and Louisa, and they're famous swimmers."

Mrs. Goodwin groaned. "Twon't do say good," she declared, resolutely. "I won't wear it!"

The middle of summer is a bad time for a farmer's wife to go visiting, especially when she does all her own work and that of two hired men besides. But Jeannette started bravely in. She was determined that when her mother returned, there should be no extra work for her to do.

"I thought you came home for a rest, I said Frail Trail."

thought you came home for a rest, 'said Fred. "Getting a fine one, Oh," said Jeannette, hopefully, "I may go to Block Island myself when mother gots back."

"You mean if it's done mother good, and father pays you back? But I give you fast warning, that will never be."

The next day they received a letter from the absent one, written on the evening of her arrival—a despondent, homesick epistle. She had been seasick on the water; and while writing was suffering with sick headache.

"I expect to be down sick when I get back," the letter hopelessly ended.

"I expect she will," added father, gloomily. "It's always best to let well enough alone, Net."

After this a week passed by, during which she was not heard from, then came a postal card simply saying, "Will be home the 14th."

"Mother's been sick, or she wouldn't have stayed so long," said Fred, confidently.

That evening the matter was talked over quite frankly. When Mrs. Goodwin understood the little ruse Jeannette had carried out for her enjoyment, she was greatly touched.

"Why, Nettie!" she said, and the tears sprang into her eyes: "What a kind, thoughtful, little daughter 1 have."—The Companion.

This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of indigestion, dyspepsia, and diseases of the general nervous system. It is also of the greatest value in the cure of all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the great nervine tonic qualities which it possesses, and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body, and as a great renewer of a broken-down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the lungs than any consumption remedy ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic, almost constantly, for the space of two or three years. Nervine Tonic. NERVOUS DISEASES. As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired diges-When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied; and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous derangement.

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITAS' DANCE OR CHOREA. CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely a dicted with St. Vitus' Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus' Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, and for alk forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health, from whatever cause.
