CHAPTER XLIII. A DANGEROUS TASK.

Captain Dartmouth's apartments lay to the right; facing the door of the ante-chamber rose the narrow flight of stairs leading to the upper story, consisting of rooms used for lumber, and remaining in the same condition as when the squire owned the Dale.

The great extension of the old mansion by additional wings had rendered them superfluous, and the captain had had them locked up and left untouched.

These the secretary was to explore to-night for a means of communication with and observance of the boarder of the countess.

With a glance at the stairs as he passed, the secretary made his way to the ante-chamber of his master and, entering, stood listening.

"Asleep," he murmured; "asleep! How can he sleep, I wonder? One would think that his dreams would be deep and vivid enough to render sleep unbearable! Well, he sleeps soundly, dreams notwithstanding; so I can go on without fear of interruption. Now, whatever chance falls in my way Heaven give me strength to use it!"

So saying, he turned from the ante-chamber and stole up the narrow staircase.

At the first bend the fresh paint

What is more distressing than being unable to sleep?

Sleeplessness is one of the first and most certain symptoms of exhausted nerves.

This is the warning that you need the assistance of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to restore vigor to the nerve cells and thereby avoid the development of serious nervous troubles.

By improving the quality of the blood and building up the nervous system this food cure brings new energy and strength to the whole body.

and gliding ceased, and the dim light of the turned-down lamp fell upon bare boards and worm-eaten balustrades.

At the first landing a number of chests, rolls of carpet and bundles of odd litter threatened to stop the way; but the midnight explorer noiselessly climbed over all obstructions and paused before two doors.

There was no look of hesitation or curiosity upon his face, as one would expect to see on that of a stranger in a strange place; on the contrary, a look of recognition and familiarity crossed it, and, with a deep sigh, he turned over the keys, looking for the one belonging to the first door.

He found it almost directly, and unlocked the heavy door, opening it carefully so that it would not creak, and passed into the room.

Here again were old lumber, dust, and neglect. Holding the lamp above his head, the secretary looked round, and again stifling a sigh, made his way to a cupboard and, kneeling down, examined the boards carefully.

Then he ventured to sound them, tapping them lightly with his forefinger.

The gave forth a hollow sound that seemed to satisfy him, for, with an exclamation of pleasure, he rose from his knees and returned for the lamp.

After an examination of the worm-eaten boards he went back into the room and, searching among the lumber, found an old stair-rod.

Armed with this, he sat to work at the middle board and, using the strong piece of brass as a lever, succeeded in raising the board a few inches.

As he did so a gleam of light penetrated through the darkness and the hum of voices reached him.

CHAPTER XLIV. FOR SIMPLE JUSTICE.

Something the heart must have to cherish.

Must love and joy and sorrow learn; Something with passion clasp or perch.

And in itself to ashes burn.—LONGFELLOW.

With a sigh and a strange hesitation the secretary bent his ear to the opening, murmuring:

"Let me not forget my purpose. I do this not for you, but for justice, Reginald Dartmouth."

After a few moments he grew accustomed to the low tones of the speakers and caught every word, recognizing the voices of the count and countess.

The count was speaking, and in a low, supplicating tone.

"Lucille, let me implore you! Think how much this man can help us. Remember how much we need help. Our lives are pledged to Italy. I would give mine gladly. Can you refuse—can you hesitate to make this sacrifice? Nay, why should I call it by so hard and unpalatable a name? He is young, handsome, and ah! how rich."

The countess interrupted him with a sigh which was profound enough to reach the attentive ears above.

"Think not I forget. I remember all this, and more," she said, in her musical voice, and with a deep melancholy. "How should I forget when you do not fail to remind me nightly? You ask almost too much!"

The count paced the floor hurriedly.

"Do you imagine it costs me nothing thus arguing, Lucille?" he asked, brokenly. "Do you think that I do not partake of the sacrifice I ask you to make? Is it nothing to me that the being I love almost as a daughter has to leave me? Is it nothing to me that I shall be compelled to urge a Vittorini to wed an ignoble Englishman? Oh, Lucille, I tell you it cuts me to the heart! If I could save myself and you this sacrifice by giving even my life I would lay it down gladly."

The countess sighed and, from the sound, had risen and walked to his side.

"I know it—I know it. But—ah!—but the pain is greater with me—I do not love him!"

The count turned sharply.

"Do you love any other?" he asked. "Can you ask?" she replied, with a significance that made the listener start. "Can one without a heart love? Can I, who live for one thing only—save Italy—find a particle of soul for such a thing as love? Oh, you forget, sir, that my life is wrapped up in one thing, in one object, one longing—you forget!"

"No, no, Lucille," replied the count hurriedly, "I do not; but I had hoped that—that the purpose died out—expired—"

"Expired?" interrupted the countess, with fiery energy. "Not till I shall expire. Died out? It grows stronger each day. I can not rest, least of all love, till I find her."

"Her?" almost cried the excited listener, springing to his feet with forgetful indiscretion—"her? Is the countess's mystery a woman?"

"What is that?" exclaimed the countess. "I heard a noise."

The listener, realising the danger of the situation arising from his involuntary movement and exclamation, dropped down again and remained breathless and motionless.

"A noise up above?" said the count. "Do not look so alarmed. The house is old. It was the rustling of the wind or the rats."

"No; it sounded like a man's voice and the movement of feet," rejoined the countess, slowly.

"Tis nothing, Lucille. You are tired, too tired to listen to me to-night. I will go. Good-night! Heaven bless you!"

There was a dead silence, broken only by the sound of the count's footsteps as he left the room and walked to his own apartments.

The secretary rose to his feet and pushed the hair from his forehead, keeping his hand upon his puzzled brow.

"More mystery! Where is it all to end? For whom is the countess looking? What is the purpose which fills up her life and prevents her loving? Shall I do my master's bidding and find it out? No. What good will it do me? How far would it help my purpose? Ah! who knows? Link within link, they say; through this countess I may reach Reginald Dartmouth. Yet, I will do his bidding."

Arrived at this resolution the secretary took up his lamp and prepared to return, taking care to replace the board, and made his way over the chests and lumber carefully and noiselessly.

After locking the door he stood for a moment with uplifted lamp, gazing round him, the same sad expression upon his pale face.

Then he moved toward the stairs; but suddenly, as if actuated by an irresistible impulse, he turned and proceeded along the disguised passages, casting sad and curious glances at the closed doors on either side.

One especially seemed to attract him, and for a moment he felt inclined to unlock it; but the key would not open it, and, holding the lamp close to it, he murmured:

"Oh, screwed up still!"

Then he turned with a sigh; but, again moved by the same unaccountable feeling, retraced his steps and stood before the closed door.

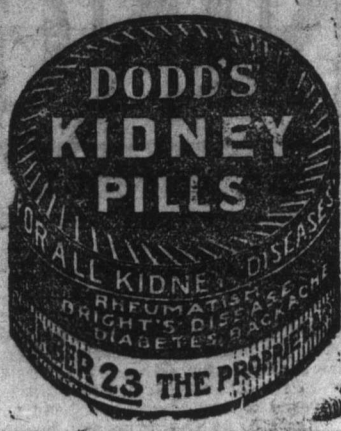

"The screws are half out. I could unfasten them in a few moments. I seem drawn to the room. Why should I not see it?"

Strengthened in his desire and curiosity by the self-asked question, he turned back to the room he had first entered, took up a chisel, which he had noticed among the lumber as he passed out, and going back to the fastened door commenced unscrewing it.

With the last screw in his hand John Stanfield paused. An expression of dread, or some other intense emotion, passed over his face, and he leaned against the door-post to wipe the perspiration from his face, removing the disgusting spectacles for that purpose, and disclosing a pair of beautiful but startled, frightened eyes.

Fully three minutes passed. Then, as if with an effort, he gathered up courage and, with a hand still quivering and cold, turned the key. A damp current of air rushed out to meet him as he opened the door, chilling his blood still further and almost extinguishing the lamp.

But carefully guarding his flickering light, and overcoming his dread, John Stanfield crossed the threshold and entered the room of Hugh Dartmouth.

But carefully guarding his flickering light, and overcoming his dread, John Stanfield crossed the threshold and entered the room of Hugh Dartmouth.

For a moment the dim light served only to increase the darkness, as it seemed; but after awhile the silent figure could see that, unlike the other neglected rooms, this was a properly furnished bed-chamber, with all the appearance, notwithstanding a number of articles of wearing apparel and such like scattered about, of recent habitation.

Indeed, save for the musty atmosphere, the trembling secretary might have imagined the grim, dark bed occupied, and the clothes lying on the chair beside it still warm with the warmth of their wearer.

It was a strange sight, but there was not so much of curiosity in John Stanfield's face as of an expression of dread, fearful expectation, which dwelt in his eyes and upon his quivering features.

Staring at the bed and upon the scattered articles lying about the chairs and floor, he seemed unable to move from the center of the room.

Presently, however, he ventured to draw near the bed, and started with a cry of amazement to find it in his order.

The cry awoke him from his half-conscious state, and, turning from the bed, with a quivering hand he raised the lamp so that its bright light might fall upon the wall.

As he did so his eyes fell upon a picture hung on the wall opposite him.

It was a portrait—dim and distained.

John Stanfield, with wide-opened eyes, raised the lamp still higher and drew nearer.

As he did so he uttered a cry that ran through the room with a ghostly reverberation, and, with his eyes still fixed upon the picture, dropped the lamp and fell full-length upon the floor, uttering the one word as he fell—

"Laury!"

WILLIAM FREW, Water St.

HE DIDN'T DARE LEAVE HOUSE, SAYS STEVENSON

Was So Weak And Nervous Before He Began Taking Tanlac That He Couldn't Hit A Lick Of Work.

"If everybody only knew what Tanlac has done for me every suffering person in New Brunswick would be taking it," declared George Stevenson, 4 Egbert Street, St. John, New Brunswick.

"Almost thirty years ago," said Mr. Stevenson, "I began to suffer with my stomach, and the misery I have endured is simply inexpressible. My appetite left me so completely that at times I couldn't even force myself to eat a thing, and then for days, I lived on soup and bread altogether. What I did eat didn't digest properly and seemed to lie in my stomach and form gas in large quantities. This gas pressed up into my chest causing an awful tight feeling and making my heart palpitate frightfully, and my breath was shut off until I felt like I was going to smother. Finally I became so weak and nervous I couldn't do a lick of work, and didn't even dare to leave the house. "I took a great many medicines but got no relief until I started on Tanlac, and the way it has helped me has simply been astonishing. My stomach is in almost perfect condition now, I no longer suffer from bloating, palpitation, or shortness of breath, and that tight feeling has left my chest entirely. My appetite is just splendid, and I'm so much better in every way that I do quite a bit of work. It's everybody's privilege, of course, to take the medicine they want, but you can give me Tanlac every time."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors; by Reg. Sullivan, Pouch Cove; Sound Island Store, Sound Island; Dennis Flynn, Avondale; J. J. O'Brien, Cape Broyle; J. W. Smith, Baine Harbor; W. A. Burdock, Belleoram; John Morey, Fermanese; Mrs. Jos. Quinn, Renewa.—adv't

Moderates Meeting.

At the public meeting of the Moderate Prohibitionists held in the Casino Theatre last night, much indignation was expressed at the manner in which the request of over 15000 people for a plebiscite had been ignored by the Government. The correspondence between the Government and the Committee was read. The Government requested the Moderates Prohibition Committee to appoint 21 members to act on a commission of investigation, on which 3 members appointed by the Vigilance Committee and 2 members appointed by the Governor in Council, would sit. The Committee turned down this proposition and their decision was upheld by the meeting, various speakers pointing out that a commission was answer to a demand for a plebiscite. The conduct of Mr. Squires in introducing no legislation regarding the question after his promises in his manifesto which Mr. St. John read, and in which he stated the present is a farce, the refusal of other members of the Government to bring a bill and the refusal of Messrs. Myrdal and Targett to present petitions from their districts till it was threatened they would be handed to the Opposition were strongly denounced. Mr. Coaker too, in his writings, which were quoted, had described the evil effects of moonshine resulting in three deaths in Bonavista District, implored his constituents not to use it, conveyed the idea that modification of the Act would be thought about and the issuing of scripts abolished, but showed his insincerity by stating in the House that he would do nothing till those who favored prohibition asked for modification, a thing which is not to be expected. Several speakers took the position that the Long-shoremen should refuse to handle any liquor when imported by the Government, many of the members of the Union agreeing with the proposition. It was decided that the Moderate Prohibition Committee remain in existence, and continue the agitation for a plebiscite.

A Blessing in Disguise.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir.—It is reported to-day that the Civic Commissioners have resigned because the Charter was not rushed through the Legislative Council. If this be true perhaps 'tis well. A general shaking up would not do a bit of harm in my opinion. Look at the condition of the sidewalks along New Gower Street. On all sides are numerous unchartered rocks, large enough to sink the Great Eastern and over these the public have been walking for years. Look at the filth in the drains, look at the cess pools and weep. Pass along George Street and see the disgraceful, filthy condition of that portion running from Beck's Cove to the Post Office. Look anywhere you like and see if you can find one spot that is tidy or clean. Let the Commissioners go and may they rest in peace, and when they are gone let us have new, bright, wide awake, enthusiastic young men put in their places. Too long in a job often causes the tired feeling. 'Tis good to have a change as it relieves us of that ennui that one gets from the monotonous work of day in and day out business. New men will do good work for a time and then they will become weary, but there are plenty of good men in the town, who are proud of doing their part for the city, and no one owns this city as far as the running of it is concerned.
Yours truly,
CIVIC.

Careless Driving.
The driver of Motor Car No. 1029 is either a dare devil individual or one who does not give a hoot for the rights of pedestrians. Yesterday afternoon this car came down Prescott Street and sharply turning Eastward into Duckworth Street, barely avoided colliding with a team coming West. Not a sound from the horn or a motion of the hand to indicate in which direction the car was going was heard or seen. A police officer stationed on the corner of Prescott and Duckworth Streets, by the store of F. B. Wood Co. might have an effect in causing reckless chauffeurs to observe the amenities.

To Save Clothes Wash Them Often

With a good, honest soap made from pure neutral oils and fats. Allowing clothes to get badly soiled, for fear that frequent washings injure them, is a wasteful policy. It isn't the washing that does the harm. It is the free caustics and bleaching alkalies in cheap, impure soap that do the damage. They do not wash—they bleach and eat out the dirt and the fabric with it.

You can save your clothes by washing them often with

KIRK'S FLAKE WHITE SOAP

The solid white cake is the most economical form of soap. Its pure oils and fats are wholly soluble, even in cold hard water, and as it leaves no scum or slime, it is proved that there are no impurities or fillers.

For every sort of house work—from the bathroom to the laundry—Flake White is without an equal for economy and purity.

It will not injure the skin or the most delicate fabrics, and always leaves the clothes lily white, sweet smelling and clean.

Perfectly adapted for use in any washing machine. Try it and tell your friends.

A Course In Courtship

By P. O. D.

(In Saturday night—Toronto).
Poor old human nature is certainly not being left very much its own untutored instincts these days. Every human impulse is being codified and standardized and made the subject of college courses. Marriage has, of course been long since shorn of any vestiges of romance it might possess by the Eugenists and the Psychoanalysts and the whole noisome tribe of sex cranks. But one did think that they would leave the business of courtship alone. Here, at least, young love might be left to its own gracious devices. Why hasten the disillusion? But nothing, it seems, is sacred to the people who are engaged in the pleasant pastime of reforming the rest of the human race, and now we have a prominent clergyman in England coming out with a plan for a series of classes in the right methods of courtship.

Incidentally, isn't it wonderful how advanced and scientific the clerical profession is becoming in these hurried modern times? Old-fashioned clergymen were content to preach religion and let it go at that. They stated with the usual divine sanctions the basic principles of ethics, and left the members of their flocks to make their own individual applications of them. Not so your modern parson. He is all for scientific management and concerted effort and as much meddling in the other fellow's business as possible. It may be the best and most efficient system, perhaps, and the right way to get results—even if the only obvious result is to get the clergyman's name and picture in the papers. But, personally, we like the old way best. If we were to go to church, it would be to get religion and not to get tips on the newest and best methods of courtship—much as we may need instruction in that difficult and perilous art.

To come back to the Rev. Hugh Marsh, vicar of Mansfield, and his classes in love-making, he, of course, lays the necessity for such things at the door of the modern parent. "If parents neglect their duties to their marriageable daughters," he says, "and leave them in a state of ignorance, then the clergy should step in and conduct regular classes on the subject."

Certainly, blame it on the parents. They are responsible for everything. The job of being a parent has always been an onerous one, so far as we can make out, but as time and civilization go on, it is rapidly becoming an almost impossible one. No wonder a lot of them are shirking the responsibility—it is too great a strain on the mind and the nerves. If the average man and woman had to start in and study up all they ought to know before tackling the task of becoming parents—why, by the time they had acquired all the necessary knowledge, they would be too old to try it out. Perhaps it would be wiser and more effective if the very advanced thinkers were to frame their theories for the instruction of grandparents—then there might be time to catch up.

Mediæval parents and even parents so late as the Victorian age had a comparatively easy time of it. All that was expected of them was that they should feed their children and clothe them and see that they got a certain amount of ordinary instruction, and public opinion was satisfied. Never did the old style mother feel called upon to tell her daughter how she ought to conduct her courtship. She might drop an occasional shrewd hint—usually as to the young gentleman's financial prospects, and whether or not he meant business—but the rest was left to the girl. About the only right parents used to retain was that of the veto, when the young lady plucked the wrong man. And this right, of course, has long since been taken away from them.

Incidentally, we would like to ask the Rev. Hugh if he really thinks there is anything about love-making that the modern mother could tell her marriageable daughter which that young lady doesn't already know. Now, if he were to renege the matter and suggest that it was high time modern children took their parents into their confidence and open their old-fashioned eyes to the facts of life as set forth in sex literature and the movies, there might be some sense in the suggestion. But, of course, modern youngsters wouldn't—they would be afraid of shocking the old folks.

Why, we solemnly ask, why should it be taken for granted that the girl of to-day is a minnyhammer and a hoody-doddy, without a shred of intelligence or enterprise? Aren't the newspapers, for instance, as open to her as they are to her mother? And, Heaven knows, there is so much sex talk going on that hardly an ape in the heart of Africa can have a single doubt left on the subject. Hasn't somebody or other yet published a series of books, "What a Young Monkey Should Know?"

But we had better give up this moaning about the spirit of the times—it is a sign of age and ossification of the cerebrum—and get back to the Rev. Hugh and his famous classes. So far as we can judge from the cabled reports, which are necessarily rather brief and fragmentary, these classes are of two kinds—classes for young people who possess "a very low code of morality" and classes for "healthy-minded couples." In the first case, we should judge, the instruction is largely of a restraining and sadistic nature, and is devoted to solemn warnings and pious exhortations. In the latter case—well, the only reason we can think of for the Rev. Hugh holding classes for "healthy-minded couples" at all, is that he would like to see them put a little more "pep" into their work. Quite right, too.

One thing that rather puzzles us about the Rev. Hugh's system, is how in the world he is going to get students for his "low-code" classes. Young people with that sort of morality are not likely, one would judge, to go to a clergyman for instruction in courtship. They are far more apt to seek for knowledge by some rough and ready method of personal experiment—in fact, that's how they acquire their peculiar code. But, after all, the reader is probably not much interested in that sort of young person. Neither are we—our own code of morality being painfully high.

But the classes for "healthy-minded couples"—really, in spite of our opening tirade against mediocresome clergymen, we are rather taken with the Rev. Hugh's idea. We wouldn't mind joining such a class ourselves, if we could only overcome the handicap of our years and our natural embarrassment. Besides, why does the Rev. Hugh insist on his pupils being "couples"? We could hardly invite a young lady to join a class in courtship, with us—not without giving her the idea that we meant something very personal by it.

Frankly, this strikes us as a very serious defect in the Rev. Hugh's system. By the time a young man and a young woman have got to the point where they are a "couple"—with their names in the social columns and the girl's friends giving her showers and all that sort of thing—they would seem to an ignorant bachelor like ours to have got past the need for lessons in courtship. What they need is a few lessons in matrimony.

If the Rev. Hugh really intends his classes to be for engaged persons, there is a distinct danger lurking in the scheme. What is to prevent three or four young men in the class deciding that they prefer the style of some other young lady student and the greater enthusiasm she puts into her lessons? It would be terrible if these classes for "healthy-minded couples" should have for immediate result the busting-up of several of the couples and their rearrangement on a new basis. That's the worst of conducting your courtship publicly under a supervising eye—the chances for comparison are far too great. It would naturally never do for young Mr. Brown, who had brought young Miss Green to the class, to put in his time gazing yearningly at the superior work of Miss Dolly Flutter. Or Miss Green, on the other hand, might discover, as her knowledge broadened, that Mr. Brown was a dud and a goof compared to the masterful and fluent Mr. Montmorency. It is not well to run such risks unnecessarily.

The people the Rev. Hugh ought to go after are the bashful souls who are not yet a "couple" but would like to be, only they don't quite know how to go about it. This is the case where specific instruction is of value. Of course, the neighbors might be inclined to talk if an unattached young lady openly went off to a class in love-making—they would probably regard her as a designing hussy—but this feeling would soon wear off, if the classes became popular as they no doubt would. No one could feel that it was a rather brazen proceeding, if all the young ladies and young gentlemen in the congregation took to attending them.

Perhaps it would be a good idea if the Rev. Hugh in the beginning held the classes separately—the girls in one, the boys in another—by way of obviating the inevitable bashfulness and confusion. He might devote these preliminary lessons largely to theory, and in this work he would find a few movie-films of very great assistance. Kissing, for instance, which would naturally form a very important feature of the Rev. Hugh's curriculum of studies, could hardly be better taught than by running off before the pupils a few select scenes by Mr. Wallace Reid or Mr. Francis X. Bushman. A kiss by these gentlemen is a very rhythmic and impressive performance, lasting for about seven hundred feet of film, at a rough estimate, thus affording every opportunity for study. In fact, the film might easily be slowed down so that every detail of the action could be followed. Not even the Rev. Hugh himself could conceivably give a better demonstration—oh, with

Mrs. Hugh, of course, or one of the more elderly deaconesses, who would presumably take a maternal interest in the success of the class. For the young men a more vigorous course of instruction might be required, as the more active part of the work naturally falls to their share. We would suggest, for instance—we are full of good suggestions—that they should be put through some kind of physical drill tending to strengthen the right or left arm, as a preparation for the severe strain of keeping it round a young lady's waist for hours at a time.

They might also be trained to hold a sack of flour—if flour is too expensive, make it sand—on their knees for protracted periods. The weight could be gradually increased till they got so strong they could hold almost anything without either foot going to sleep. How important this is only a man who has tried it can understand. We haven't, but this is what an imagination has been given to us for.

When the dear boys and girls have gone successfully through these preliminary courses, the classes might then be combined for more practical work—it would also add greatly to the interest of the student. But when the classes are finally assembled for these more advanced studies and the task arises of dividing them off into couples, we would very respectfully and humbly suggest that the Rev. Hugh should do this by lot. It would be fair to all and would prevent an unseemly scramble on the part of the gentlemen for the more alluring co-eds. But perhaps we can safely leave this to the Rev. Hugh—he knows, he knows.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

ARE YOU A SNOB?

An acquaintance of mine was saying recently how thankful she was (the Pharisee's prayer is still in style) that she was not a snob. "She was moved to this form of thanksgiving by contact with some people who, having recently acquired quite a little money themselves, looked down upon everyone who has not seen so fortunate and plainly made money their only standard of valuation."

She doesn't care whether people have money or not, she declares, she couldn't be such a snob for anything.

Her type later I saw her turn up her nose when a certain woman was mentioned and say, "My dear, she's impossible! Have you heard her talk? The way she drops her words!"

Now is that snobbery, or is it not? This woman herself has little money; therefore, money should not be made a standard of value. She has a measure of education; therefore, an educated speech should be the measure—and all who fall of living up to her standard in this respect should be set down as inferior and "impossible," no matter what the characters they may have or how much native intelligence, or how much force.

Don't you think the majority of us are snobs in one way or another? Every now and then I catch myself doing it.

I Do Hate Stupid Clothes.
For instance, I find myself looking down on people who wear stupid clothes. I don't mean inexpensive clothes or shabby clothes, but just stupid clothes—clothes that show an utter lack of thought and taste. For instance, I took a perfectly absurd dress to a new acquaintance because, though flat-chested and long-necked, she always wore fitted waists with deep flat yokes that exaggerated her bad lines. I like her immensely, but before I could make room for that liking of a very lovable woman to enter my heart, I had to cast out that absurd dislike.

One of My Snobberies.

Again, I find myself drawing back from association with people who are sure to say the obvious and bromidic things, who respond to a mention of the photographer by saying, "I'd rather go to the dentist's than have my picture taken." (I always wish I could confront such people with the actual alternative of a good stiff session in the dentist's chair or a half hour at the photographer's and see which they'd really take), who react to a regret that one has brought an umbrella when it turns out sunshiny with, "It never rains when you take your umbrella." And yet when I really know these people, I often find they have much to give me.

Of course, one has not time for more than a few close friends, and it is inevitable that one should select these fastidiously.

But it wasn't inevitable that one should permit one's self to look down on anyone just because in some particular they don't measure up to one's standards. And to do so is to show a form of snobbery to my way of thinking.

THE ENIGMA.

That monster of the western coast is now within the prison's gate; his wives, when counted, made a host, and he had murdered ten or eight. He married girls wherever he went, and you, on hearing this, will say, "He must have been a winning gent, who had a fascinating way. But no, he had a feline face, a wolfish mouth, a furtive air; as shy of beauty as of grace—yet he won brides most everywhere. The blooming damsels seemed to see in Bluebeard Watson things that charm; and when he said, "Will marry me?" They answered him, "You bet your arm." And so they decked themselves in white, and with him sought the altar rail, and at the finish of the rite he butchered them and swiped their kale. And I could name a dozen lads, all loaded down with sterling worth, who've searched for brides in many grades, who searched in vain throughout the earth. I have no doubt the Bluebeard wives refused the hands of many men who have no blemish on their lives, who are not headed for the pen. I cannot understand those maids who'll blithely marry unknown naves, of wolfish men, who carry spades, with which to dig the ladies' graves.

got her to sup with him after the performance.

In order to keep this engagement the Czar had to snub the Empress Eugenie and Napoleon by begging off from a state dinner arranged for him by their majesties. Nor was he the only visiting royalty who paid greater homage to the queen of opera bouffe than to the royalties of France.

Hortense's love affairs were soon the talk of Europe and Napoleon III. himself is said to have given her a "peck of jewels." Until the fall of the second empire she could fill any theatre in Paris. During the Franco-Prussian war she hid herself, but returned to Paris with the accession of MacMahon and built a fantastic villa at the entrance of the Bois de Boulogne, the garden of which adjoined Prince Murat's, latter James Gordon Bennett's residence.

There she gave wonderful entertainments, at which the heirs apparent of half the kingdoms of Europe were present. Naturally, she had many suitors, but she refused all offers until, in 1881, she surprised all her friends by accepting the hand and name of an Italian, a Comte de Bionne. They soon separated, Hortense asserting that her husband was squandering her large fortune. Also there was some question as to the validity of his title. She withdrew to a convent in 1900, but did not long remain there.

Her last appearance in the news was in 1915, when she presented her beautiful villa at Pecamp to the Orphelliant des Arts, a society formed to care for the orphaned children of soldiers who had been in one of the artistic professions. At that time she was living in strict retirement at Auteuil, with only the memories of her romantic career as queen of opera and of hearts.

THE BOY AND HIS STRING OF FISH.

Home he comes with a string of fish. A barefoot boy with a freckled face And a grin as wide as a king might wish;

Home he comes from his favorite place, Triumphantly trudging the village street. Envy'd by all he may chance to meet. "Hey there, Buddy!" an old man cries, "Let's have a look at the fish you caught!"

There's two or three of a decent size; I'll bet there was fun in the way they fought. Give you much trouble? I'll bet they did; Well, you surely are a lucky kid!"

Home he trudges and well he knows That all eyes follow him down the street. Some will stop him wherever he goes. The richest man he may chance to meet. Will look at him with a wistful eye And envy him as he marches by.

For he has been where the air was pure, Where no one battled for gold or fame, He has lived a day where his joy was sure, And comes with the trophies that all would claim;

And each of us now, could we have our wish, Would be a boy with a string of fish. Minard's Liniment Co., Limited. Famous Actress of Napoleon's Day.

Hortense Schneider, the celebrated strem of the Second Empire, died recently at Auteuil, France, at the age of 82.

Born at Bordeaux in 1838, she went on the stage at the age of 15 and by the year 1864 had danced herself into the hearts of masculine Paris.

"La Belle Helene" and "La Grande Duchesse de Gerolstein" she was affectionately called because she had played the title roles in Offenbach's two famous operas.

Princes and dukes were at her feet—and paid royally for the privilege of being there. When she was starring in "La Grande Duchesse de Gerolstein," Czar Alexander II. of Russia telegraphed ahead to have a box reserved at her theatre and beg-

The House Closed.

The end of the serio-comic drama in which all the members of the House of Assembly played leading parts, was reached yesterday afternoon, when His Excellency the Governor pronounced the vice regal benediction on the labors of the session. The play lasted just eighty-four days, including Sundays, and though no business was conducted on the Sabbath, apart from that which trekked upon the opening hours of last Sunday, the time used has to be taken into account. Twelve weeks of seven days each, which according to the time-table studied and learned by pupils of our educational institutions, make exactly three months. On the basis of said table that four weeks make one month, there has been nearly a whole quarter of the calendar year spent by our legislators in their patriotic efforts to do something which may eventually result in helping the dominion forget that the first session of the twenty-fourth General Assembly was long drawn out, and finished minus the flourish of trumpets heralding its opening. The session of 1919 was prolific in speech, if nothing else. In fact so vast was the lingual spread that none of the official reporters were able to keep track of the flights of oratory and personal recriminations indulged in by honorable members, and hence there is no complete record of last year's gabfest with which that of the session now closed can be compared. Hansard was not able to retain it, and thus there is lost to posterity language that for nervous force and strident declamation was never equalled on the floors of our local Parliament even in the palmy days when real speakers held the floor.

But though the quality of the speeches of the recent session may never approach that of the last, yet in quantity and in volume, it cannot be gainsaid that the pages of the official proceedings of the 1920 session when bound together will make a truly ponderous tome, for there were more miles of talk traversed than ever the ears of the lieges who daily assembled to hearken to the words of wisdom so freely dropping from the tongues of members on both sides, had hitherto heard. The palm for long speling must, we think, be handed to members of the Opposition. They certainly did their duty in that respect, and if they permitted at odd intervals members on the Government side to get in a word or two edgewise, it was not due to any deficiency in verbiage, but rather to being obliged to rest for a brief period in order to recover breath for more doughty onslaughts. Notwithstanding all the eloquence, which was more or less wasted, it is not yet evident that any Government legislation was blocked. Everything and every bill brought down was passed, and if a few minor amendments were made to oblige honorable members, we do not know that the main features of the numerous bills were particularly impaired or their purpose affected. The Estimates, the Budget, the Fishery, Education and other Bills went through, much to the satisfaction of Ministers, and the two million dollar increased expenditure, though productive of much violent language, remained as it was introduced. But the session was not barren of results as the future will show. To-day we but desire to compliment members of both sides on their endurance and the facility with which they voted themselves an abnormally increased sessional allowance, in which of course Opposition members share equally with their Government confreres. How far from being barren the legislation of 1920 is will be discussed in subsequent articles.

Teachers' Convention.

At yesterday morning's session of the Convention, Dr. V. P. Burke, who was the appointed speaker, was unavoidably absent, owing to the recent death of his mother. His place was admirably filled by Dr. H. Pedley, Dr. Pedley, in the treatment of his subject "The Ideal Teacher," spoke humorously, yet clearly. He referred to his own experiences of the teaching profession (1) as a teacher for one or two years, (2) as a pastor, (3) as a father. Four characteristics of the ideal teacher as given by Rev. Dr. Pedley, are in short, as follows: (1) He should love the child; love of children may not be a strong point in the teacher's career, but he can be sympathetic, and sympathy often begets affection. (2) He should know the child. By this is meant not the mere knowledge of the child's name and family, but the idiosyncrasies and characteristics, also the sympathies and ambitions of the individual. (3) A right ideal of education, which means not the mere acquisition of knowledge, but the deeper spiritual, psychological truths of the world. (4) High ideals: the ideal teacher emphasizes by example as well as precept the importance and necessity of good citizenship and patriotism.

After Dr. Pedley's address, a vote of confidence was passed to Dr. Burke in his recent address. A letter was also read from Mr. Llewellyn Colley regretting his absence, but affirming his zeal for the good work.

Messrs. W. Verge and I. J. Samson respectively moved and seconded that a meeting be held at 7.30 p.m. for the purpose of discussing salaries.

R. R. Wood, Esq., then delivered an address on English. He pointed out the aptitude there is for teachers to narrow themselves, this aptitude being increased by the yearly presented syllabus, which names so much for imparting that the whole is far from thoroughly mastered. The lecturer laid stress on reading, pronunciation and composition as the chief aids towards the mastery of good unadulterated English. The difficulty of English arises from our spelling, and until we have our spelling simplified our difficulties will be about the same as now. For formal grammar, an interest for the subject can only come from deductive reasoning, and not from the mere memorization of rules of syntax. Composition, so sadly shirked in many of our schools because of the time involved, must be more widely stressed, ere good English results. It can be made more a part of the school curriculum by a greater amount of oral composition (and we think debating and discussion in the older classes). In this respect the importance of school libraries cannot be too strongly emphasized.

At the evening session, Dr. W. W. Blackall outlined a programme for outport schools. He prefaced his remarks by congratulating Dr. Barnes on his rise from the charge of a low grade school to his present position. Coming to his subject, he gave the following as the subjects to be taught, viz., Reading, Arithmetic, History, Geography, Drawing, Singing, Drill, Reading, of course, includes writing, spelling, composition, etc. His programme was possible of fulfilment, but as Dr. Blackall himself found, by experience, difficult.

After a few minutes' recess, Mr. S. P. Whiteway addressed the Convention on the growth of education in Newfoundland. It would be interesting to quote the local part of his address in full, but I regret that I am unable to do so. After dealing with the growth of education in England and America, pointing out that the first normal school was founded in Scotland in 1827, in London in 1842, and in Massachusetts, America, 1829, as well as much more interesting history, he traced educational growth in our island. Among other things, he mentioned that the first school was held in Newfoundland in 1720 at Bonavista, by a Rev. Mr. Jones; the second school being held at Old Perlican by Mr. John Hopkins, in 1773. In 1798 the people of St. John's subscribed $200 for a teacher to teach three years in this city, and Rev. L. Anasch accepted the commission. In 1827 the B.I.S. was formed and the orphans school founded by the Society was supported by Protestant and Catholic alike. In 1823 Bishop Fleming influenced education, while in 1833-34 the Nuns came to our shores. In 1833 Samuel Codner was instrumental in bringing from England more than 20 teachers, most of whom eventually became clergymen. In 1839-44 Bishop Spencer greatly influenced education and laid the foundation of Queen's Theological College. In 1843 our first educational grant was made, the mover of the bill being Mr. Barnes, rather striking when our first Minister of Education is a man of the same name. In 1844 our first academy was founded. In 1874-5 the denominational question in education was sharply defined into distinct bodies, Roman Catholic, Church of England and Methodist. In 1876 the Christian Brothers came here, and in 1893-4 the C.H.E. came into existence. At the present time there are more than 700 persons holding A.A. diplomas, while not a few have attained higher intellectual honors in our land.

At the night session, which met at 7.30, quite a bit of discussion took place on the question of teachers' salaries. Finally it was decided to form a committee of teachers, three and then, to draw up a schedule showing the minimum wage which a teacher could live on at present, and to bring in resolutions for the betterment of existing conditions. The following committee was appointed: Messrs. Wood, Griffin, Whelan, Verge, Hodder, Parsons, Bros. Ryan and Strapp; Misses Brett, Forward, Worral, Collins and Butt, the President and Secretary of the N.T.A. Messrs. Dwyer and Butt, being ex-officio members.—S.J.H.

House of Assembly.

Closing Session, Tuesday, July 13th.

The House met at 2 p.m. for the purpose of passing amendments to bills sent down by the Legislative Council. These bills were: "The Trustees Amendment Act", "Sealfishery Act", "Dog Act" and "Peace Treaties Act." The new Municipal Bill, providing for a Commission Government from January 1st to June 30th, 1921, was introduced by the Prime Minister, who explained the attitude of the Council in rejecting the measure.

Messrs. Bennett, Higgins and Fox protested against the action of the Government in introducing the measure. The whole thing was a muddle and discreditable. It was not the fault of the Council or anybody else but the Government. They had hoped that the Government would have taken sufficient time to let the Council discuss the matter. They did not blame the Legislative Council for representing the treatment meted out to them whereby they were asked to put the bill through in one sitting. The Government was in such haste to get the House closed that no time was given at all for discussion of such an important bill. It was bad enough to have to appoint a Commission for 6 months, but to have the city governed by that form of government for 12 months was really too bad. The Commission appointed last week, it was understood, had resigned with the exception of Mr. Mullaly. There could do no more at this stage than protest. The Bill was then put through all its stages and passed. Shortly after the usher of the Black Rod summoned the members to the Council Chamber for the closing ceremonies.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. President and Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council: Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly:

I am glad to be able to relieve you from the responsible duties of this extended Session, and I desire to express my appreciation of the zealous manner in which you have applied yourselves to the discharge of your legislative labours.

Many of the measures to which you have given your attention are of great importance to the future of Newfoundland. The application of the regulations regarding our staple industry will result in an improved cure and enhanced value, while the control of the forwarding of shipments should prevent overstocking of the markets. The legislation in respect of Agriculture marks the commencement of a policy which is constructive, and will tend to positive results. The Department of Posts and Telegraphs has been created, and this important branch of the Public Service will now receive the personal attention of a responsible Minister, who will take into immediate consideration the important problems demanding solution. In common with many other countries, Newfoundland has awakened to the value of Education, and the necessity for an improvement in our present system. The Department of Education has been established and special attention will be given to the training of those who devote themselves to the profession of teaching. While the higher branches of Education will not be neglected, special consideration will be given to the Elementary Schools. An effort will be made to bring the great boon of education within the reach of every boy and girl in Newfoundland. It is very gratifying that the returns of the fiscal year just closed show the Colony to be in a sound financial position.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly: I have to thank you for the liberal supplies which you have made for the various Departments of the Public Services. These will be expended with due regard to economy and efficiency.

Mr. President and Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council: Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly: In taking leave of you at the close of this Session, I am glad to note that the prospects are favourable for the industrial operations of the year. I desire to express my sincere wish for your prosperity and general welfare.

Will War Be Renewed?

Germany Stubborn Over the Coal Question--Allies will Take Forcesful Measures--Montreal Faces Gas-Famine--American Opinion Not so Optimistic--Longshoremen at North Sydney Rubbed Wrong Way.

ALLIED-GERMAN DEADLOCK.

SPA, Belgium, July 13. A deadlock has been reached by the Allied representatives and the Germans on the coal question, and Marshal Foch and Field Marshal Wilson, Allied military chiefs, have again been summoned to discuss possible enforcement measures. The Allied Premiers, having been informed that the Germans were ready, called a meeting for five-thirty this evening instead of to-morrow as planned. The German reply was not considered favorable and the summoning of Marshal Foch and Field Marshal Wilson, it is understood, means immediate measures to enforce the treaty unless Germany modifies her attitude.

TWO RUSSIAN GENERALS KILLED, ANOTHER CAPTURED.

WARSAW, July 13. The severest fighting since the Polish withdrawal began, with much bayonet work, is reported in the region of Ovruch, south of the Pripiet Marshes, in dispatches from the front on Monday. Two Bolshevik generals, Kratjinski, Divisional Commander, and Oryaov, Chief of Staff, have been killed as well as four hundred other Bolsheviks in this region. General Matkowski, former officer of the Russian regular army, who has been the right hand of General Budenny, Bolshevik cavalry leader, is reported to have been captured in the region of Iovno, where the Polish Lancers clashed with the Bolshevik cavalry, slaying several Bolshevik detachments.

THE COMING YACHT RACE.

NEW YORK, July 13. It has not been decided who will bring down the third ship.

Borden's Retirement.

Sir Robert Borden would have loomed larger in statesmanship had the record of the last fifteen months of Union Government never been written. Following the conclusion of the world conflicts and the consummation of peace, the Canadian Premier had an exceptional opportunity to win a noteworthy place in history. The war work of himself and his Government was done. The task for which they were given an emphatic mandate was accomplished. The Government ought to have followed the manly and straightforward course of rendering account of its stewardship and submitting itself to the electors for a renewal of confidence.

Instead it elected to cling to office. The Premier talked from time to time of retiring, but as often was persuaded, many believed, against his own better judgment, to remain. His health was reputed to be poor. In consequence, he became an habitual absentee. A leaderless Administration, whose dominant passion seemed to be to continue to hold office, rapidly lost the respect and confidence of the Canadian people. It became timid, inert and useless, going from bad to worse, until to-day it faces a coming political deluge.

It is somewhat tragic that a Premier who a few months ago could have retired from office with the assurance of an important place in the history of Canadian achievement now resigns with the knowledge that the only other alternative left him is hopeless defeat at the polls. But it may be a lesson to those who come after him. The safe, the wise, and the right course for public representatives is to trust the people.

Sir Robert Borden for many years has been a prominent figure in Canada's Parliament. For ten years he was Leader of the Conservative Opposition in the House of Commons. For nine years he has been Premier of the Dominion. His name will be associated with the political annals of this country during the period of its most stressful and heroic history. His greatest achievement came at the darkest hour. The outstanding event of his career was the bringing about of a union of men of both political parties to raise reinforcements for the Canadian fighting forces in the field and the creation of a Coalition Government to carry out that patriotic purpose. It was at this momentous his real stature.

His resignation comes now in a period of chaos. Whether or not the man chosen to succeed him will try to continue the futile policy of clinging to office in defiance of the public will remains to be seen. Sooner or later the electors will have their say. The pity of it is that Sir Robert retires after a long period of public service, having forfeited so much of the confidence of his fellow-citizens and leaving the party of which he is the Leader to face swift and certain disaster at the hands of the electors of Canada.

Mr. Rowell's resignation, tendered at the caucus but not as yet accepted, is an indication that the President of the party as the old Conservative party under an assumed name. It has been evident for some time that the high protectionists among the supporters of Union Government were determined to return to the fiscal policies of pre-war days. The Royal Budget strained the loyalty of the Liberal Unionists almost to the breaking point. It proved that the interests are in the saddle, and have no intention of surrendering the reins. During the past two years Mr. Rowell has swallowed a good deal. If he did so unwillingly he gave no outward sign. It would appear, however, that he has no stomach for the nauseous dose involved in the acceptance of the leadership of Hon. Arthur Meighen or Sir Henry Drayton. By his retirement the Government will lose the last semblance of a Union Administration.—Toronto Globe.

DIAMOND DUST

Nothing But the Truth—Without Fear or Favour.

THIS AFTERNON'S GAMES.

At 3 o'clock this afternoon the battered B.I.S. will face the Cubs in a regular league fixture. It is thought O'Leary will be well enough to go in the box for the Harps, though if not, the veteran Dick McGrath will be the slab artist. Richard T. has terrific speed and should be effective. The lineup will be:—

CUBS.	B.I.S.
Hall O'Leary	P Power
Canning French	c c
DeMers Wallace	1b 1b
Gosse Phelan	2b 2b
Sawyer Walsh	3b 3b
Manning O'Donnell	ss ss
Duggan Delaney	rf rf
Phelan Gleeson	lf lf
Edwards Power	cf cf

PRELIMINARY GAME.

The second game in the Junior League will be played previous to the big clash when St. Ben's will play the Shamrocks. The youngsters are producing classy ball (which is more than some of the elders are doing) and a spirited contest is assured. The game will be five innings and will start sharp at 2.30.

LAST NIGHT'S GAME.

The less said about last night's game the better. It was a terrible fiasco, the Wanderers trimming the B.I.S. by the awful score of 21 runs to 5. Phelan and O'Donnell were hammered most unmercifully by the blue and whites, and the fielding errors were horrible. Andy Clouston even worked the fent throw, which was successful in getting Duggy French to lift his feet off first. This latter gentlemen was not in good form last night, for 3 errors were charged him, and Walsh at short had 3 more against him. Even gallant little Tush O'Donnell was guilty to the extent of a brace. Of their 21 runs the Wanderer crew only earned 8. Britt and Clouston poked out three batters while McCrindle, Dillon and Smith had double sackers. Clouston and McCrindle pulled two good double plays. Grandpa Smith was in the box for the victors and had 7 strikeouts though 3 errors are charged to him. There was great disappointment that Dusty Sinnott was not used as he is reported to have the whole 57 varieties but does not seem to be given a chance. Clouston played a star game all through. The Wanderers are now second in the League, having a slight lead on the Cubs. The Irish boys without O'Leary, are like a big corgi tramp wallowing lazily in the sea with their main shaft broken and her propeller gone. The exhibition they gave last night was the worst seen for years, and Manager Channing is indeed to be pitted. However, they shouldn't lose heart as all they need is a good shaking up and a strengthening in one or two positions.

THE ORPHANAGE GAMES.

The fixtures were drawn last night for the Mount Cashel and C. of E. Orphanage games, resulting as follows:—
Mt. Cashel—C.E.I. vs. Wanderers; Cubs vs. Red Lions; B.I.S. vs. by.

Church of England—Cubs vs. Wanderers; Red Lions vs. B.I.S.; C.E.I. vs. by.
The games will be five innings each, and a doubleheader will be played each night (commencing Tuesday) until the whole six games are finished.
Rev. Mr. Fletcher is presenting a set of medals in addition to the cup for the winners at the Church of England Garden Party.

Household Notes.

Sugar is not needed for canning perfectly sterilized fruits.
To make novel potato canoes, cut lengthwise before stuffing.
Never pour gravy over meat that is to be carved at the table.
Cornstarch used as a thickening should be thoroughly cooked.
Raveled yarns, cut into bits, can be used to stuff sofa pillows.
If sausage is rolled in flour before frying it will not burst.
A handy cake tester is a piece of steel wire with a loop in the end.
If paper dolls are pasted on coarse muslin they last a long time.
The flavor of meat should not be destroyed by the flavor of its gravy.
Airproof and moisture-proof containers should be used to store coffee.
Meat for sandwich filling should be chopped or minced and well seasoned.
Save the juice from pickled fruit and add to water in which you boil the ham.
Washed and dried cherry pits make fine filling for kiddies' bean bags.
To be tempting a sandwich should be free from stickiness and crumbs.
Tiles, two inches by six, are enjoyed more than blocks by little children.

Homes for the Homeless.

The Chicago Housing Corporation, which has formed a number of capitalists of the Windy City, is building 2,000 houses for workers to help get some of the toilers out of the tenements. The houses are sold for $4000 each on payments of only $33 a month which also takes care of the interest and provides fire, health, life and accident insurance for the head of the house. Of course it takes quite a while for a man to acquire a substantial interest in the home, but he can call it is own the moment he moves in, and if he has a steady job he can finally pay out on as easy a basis as paying rent. The company does not expect to make any profit, and the revenues will be used to extend the home building programme. The houses are sold only to heads of families who are regularly employed and who indicate a ninterest in keeping them up. There's somebody waiting to move in as fast as a home is finished. The programme will help relieve the housing problem of a big city, and the plan is extending to other communities. It looks like a good investment, even if the promoters get no dividends. It helps for a more substantial citizenship and stabilizes industry.—Acadian Recorder.

THE OLD LADY AND ST. PAUL.

Who has not heard of Dr. Peddie, of Edinburgh? The ladies of his congregation determined to present the Doctor—(which is a thing very common now)—with a pulpit gown. The Doctor, on the Sunday after it was presented, intimated to the people in the church, "The ladies have been kind enough to present me with a pulpit gown; but, lest any member should object to my wearing it, I shan't put it on yet, and will hear objections on Thursday night." Nobody came to object but an old lady. The Doctor said, "Well, Janet, what objections have you to the pulpit gown?" "Aweel, sir," said Janet, "we never read o' the Apostle Paul wearing a gown." The Doctor said—and there was a sign of feancy in the reply—"You are quite right, Janet; but we never read of St. Paul wearing breeks." That satisfied the old lady.

Lipton's Armada.
Irish Invasion of America.

New York, July 8.—(By the Associated Press)—There's a little bit of Ireland floating off the Jersey coast and its ruler is a familiar figure in yachting flannels and cap. It's Sir Thomas Lipton and his "navy"—six craft strong—invading the United States to capture the America's Cup in a Yachtmen's battle off Sandy Hook this month.

The man to whom a large patch of water is an alien sight thinks of the cup races as a few impromptu jousts between a couple of sailing sloops which cost a mite more than the average man can afford. He does not realize that these yachts and their crews had to go through a period of training as long as that of any football team and a thousand time more costly.

By purchase or charter Sir Thomas has amassed his fleet. In addition to the challenger, Shamrock IV, and the trial horse, the 23-meter Shamrock, there is the steam yacht Victoria, the flagship of the fleet, on which the veteran yachtmen lives, anchored each night in the Hudson.

Then there is the houseboat Killarney, tucked snugly away in the shelter of the Hook. On the Killarney reside the crews of the two racing craft. But this does not complete the fleet. There is the tug Governor Smith to tow the sloops to the starting line and a snappy speed boat to run errands. Numberless smaller launches, and dingies don't count in this yachting armada.

The Irish baronet has his daily schedule enjoyable enough, but just at present a business to which he adheres as closely as the broker daily watches his ticker.

Each day he steams down to the Hook from New York to watch the challenger—his sweetheart, the elderly bachelor calls her—match her speed against the trial horse.

Each day, as dusk approaches, he holds conference with his band of yachting experts, suggesting little changes here, little change there, smoothing out a ripple in a club-topail, which to the land lubber fits exactly, or clipping a few fencibles from a topmast with which, to the uninitiated, there seems nothing wrong.

And each day he continues to deal out dollars to the 150 members of his armada. For it is an expensive sport, this quest of a hundred guinea cup and victor or loser. Sir Thomas will have paid out more than a million dollars for this year's race alone.

At eight o'clock, except in most distressing weather, raising of Sir Thomas' personal flag—a green shamrock on a field of gold—beckons that the vice-commander of the Royal Ulster Yacht Club is aboard, awake and ready to receive guests.

a lively green. The only apparent difference is that the Shamrock IV is just a little greener than her partner, for even her decks are emerald.

As soon as the Victoria's engines are stopped, the veteran of international regattas boards his launch to inspect his craft before they set out. From that moment he becomes lost to all but things maritime.

Round the course Sir Thomas follows his sloops as they race, and after the finish again holds parley with their skippers. Then it's back to New York in the evening—the day's work done.

Wants to Win Fairly.

New York, July 9.—As Shamrock IV, his America's Cup challenger, was being towed up the bay, yesterday for measurement, Sir Thomas Lipton remarked:

"There has been a lot of talk about the cup yachts being lightly built. If anything happened to Resolute, such as an accident, I would wait for another race until she was repaired, no matter how long it took."

"I don't want the cup through accident. Legally I might be entitled to it under such a serious circumstance, but I want to win it fairly and in sporting competition. Let them lick me or let me lick them. And I am sure they would feel the same way if my boat should be the sufferer through mishap."

That is Sir Thomas Lipton, who smiles his best when a small boy calls his plain "Tommy," and that may have been why South Brooklyn did not have nearly as much of a blow out on the Fourth as there was yesterday when his green yachting fleet moved up there from Sandy Hook, so the challenger could be officially measured to-day with Resolute, the American defender, to figure the time allowance for the races.

All the way up the harbor passing craft, those at anchor and others in dock, blasted their salutations. The steam yacht Victoria, which towed the challenger and her 23-meter sister, was kept busy acknowledging the three-whistle salutes.

The whole Lipton fleet was towed up to the Morse Drydock and Repairs Company's plant at the foot of 56th street. The boathouse Killarney and the 23-meter boat had to be taken along to house the racing crew of the challenger. The crew has to be on board when she is measured. The tug Governor Smith towed the Killarney.

Shamrock IV, was placed in one of the big docks at 1 p.m. and five hours later Resolute arrived in tow of her tender, the steamer Homestead, from Glen Cove, up the Sound. Her topmast had to be lowered to enable her to pass under the East River bridges.

During the afternoon Shamrock's bowsprit was taken off and a slightly longer one put in its place. The measuring of the yachts will begin at 10 a.m. to-day, under the direction of the America's Cup Committee.

Sir Thomas Is Optimistic.

Sandy Hook, July 9.—Sir Thomas Lipton's fleet, comprised of the Shamrock IV, the 23-meter Shamrock and the house boat Killarney, left for Sandy Hook to-day for a drydock in Brooklyn, where the challenger and the Resolute, America's Cup defender, will be measured officially to-morrow to determine the handicap to be given the Resolute in the races off here this month.

While the Shamrock IV had not as many trial races as was expected, Sir Thomas said he was pleased with her behavior and felt confident that he has a good chance of lifting the cup this year.

Resolute is the Betting Favorite.

New York, July 9.—As the time for the holding of the international yacht race draws nearer, betting on the outcome of the event becomes much more lively. To-day several thousand dollars were put up in the hands of James W. Bell and Company, No. 67 Exchange Place, at odds of 2 to 1, that the Resolute will win the cup. A considerable amount of cash was also placed in the hands of "Fred" Schumm, the Brooklyn stakeholder, on the same basis. The latter still has between $4,000 and 5,000 to bet that the American boat is the winner.

Schumm also has $1,000 to put up even that the Shamrock crosses the finishing line first in the opening contest of the series. Last week he was laying only 5 to 6 on this proposition. Some betting is being done even, that the Shamrock wins one race. Schumm has $1,000 to wager this way.

Frozen Lamb From Australia.

Heralding possible competition from foreign supply sources is a recent invasion of the United States market by New Zealand and Argentine frozen lamb. An entire shipment of 251,000 carcasses consigned to United States packers reached Boston recently, with smaller consignments aggregating 100,000 carcasses additional. The product has been distributed all over the country, as far west as the Missouri River. The immediate result is a decline of about $3 per cwt. in the price of the domestic article. The prospect is not reassuring. Rumor has it that a million more carcasses are in transit. So far consumers have not benefited. The quality and condition of the foreign stock are excellent. The New Zealand contribution is from the north Canterbury district. It was slaughtered in January and is superior to much of the native product reaching the Chicago market.

Since the meat trade was internationalized before the war, domestic producers have no alternative but to meet this foreign competition. That it would have materialized earlier had marine refrigeration been available, is obvious; but there is danger of demoralization during the next few months, owing to an accumulation of the war period in Australia, which is now moving in large volume, glutting the British market and forcing the accumulation across the Atlantic. A few weeks ago London had 1,600,000 frozen lamb and mutton carcasses in cold storage, 11 meat-laden ships lying at the docks with 903,000 carcasses. Since this meat is the property of the English Government, an effort is being made to maintain prices by diverting the surplus to the United States, the probability being that if this market is capable of digesting the package, about 1,500,000 carcasses will be diverted to New York and Boston. Recent Australian advices state that the British Government is selling this lamb to United States packers at 15 cents a pound. It is being wholesaled at 25 to 31 cents on the U.S. market.—Breeder's Gazette.

The Scot Abroad.

A story appeared in a well-known serial several years ago, describing the disappointment of an Englishman who went out to the East as an interpreter, and whose ruling passion was a hatred of everything Scotch. Strolling through the camp one day with a Turkish officer, and abusing the Scotch to his heart's content, to his astonishment Hassan Bey, the Turk, broke out, "I'll tell ye whaat, ma man, gin ye daur lowse ye're tongue upon my country like that, I'll gie ye a clood on the lug that'll mak' it tingle fra this till 'Hallowe'en!" The thunderstruck Englishman stammered out, "Why my good man, I thought you were a Turk!" "An' aye I am a Turk the noo, ma braw chiel," said the angry Glasgow Mussulman, "but ma father's auld leather breeks ne'er travelled farther than just fra Glasgow to Greenock, and back again, but when I gang home—as I'll dae or its lang, if it be God's will—I'll just be Wully Forbes, son o' auld Daddy Forbes o' the Gorbal, for a' that's come and gane!"

Not a Love Match.

It was German agents who conceived and brought about the marriage of my son Charles," declared Queen Marie of Rumania, in speaking to a correspondent in the morganatic marriage contracted in September, 1918, between Crown Prince Charles of Rumania and Zisis Lambino, a young woman.

The Queen declared that many unflattering reports had been published of her own action of herself and King Ferdinand. She declared she had been seduced as a young girl by a young man.

"I am convinced that it was not a case of true love," said Queen Marie. "I have never seen the girl, except at public balls. She is not pretty, but she is intelligent and ambitious. She saw her chance to capture the affection of Charles with its great advantage and she took it. It was against the public policy of this country to have a member of the royal family intermarry locally, and thus become mixed in party intrigues. That is an established fact.

"I begged Charles to consider all these facts, and he promised to forego his personal wishes for the benefit of the country, but the marriage took place at Odessa, and it was aided by German. Later an assassin-ment was granted on the grounds that no bans were published.

"Charles joined his regiment, compelled to do so under military discipline, and he went to Budapest with our army. Association with patriotic Rumanians showed him his duty and he quickly realized how foolish he had been to lose his country for a girl. He has now accepted a mission to Japan, where he will stay for six months. Should the girl marry another person the affair will be ended."

I want another bottle of "Brick's Tasteless", it is the best preparation I have ever taken to give me an appetite.—apr25.17

Heroines of the Switchboard.

The telephone switchboard has produced numerous heroines, many of whom have never been heard of.

Standing out in bold relief is the story of Tessie McNamara, an operator at New Jersey, munition plant, who saved several thousand lives by her quick wit and iron nerve. Miss McNamara happened to glance out of a window which overlooked a long avenue of concrete and iron one-story buildings of the munition plant, and noted a wisp of smoke curling from the eaves of a building stored with two hundred gallons of gasoline. Right close to this building were six cars stored full of TNT in bulk. In a shed just next to the tracks over seventy-five thousand shells were packed ready to be shipped to the Russian army.

All of these buildings were only a few yards apart. Miss McNamara galvanized to action; she full well knew that she still had time to reach safety; she knew what was going to happen when the fire reached the TNT and loaded shells; but she didn't hesitate; her nimble fingers flew up and down the switchboard notifying the workmen in the various sheds to get all the men out at once.

This brave operator saw the fire leap from the gasoline shed toward shed 28, and it required all the nerve she could summon to stick to her post, because she knew what would happen. Nearly ten minutes had passed since she saw the smoke curling from the gasoline shed. In that ten minutes her fidelity and courage had got warning to every building of the 36 in the twenty-acre plant.

Nearly four thousand men had either reached or gone through the gates to the open roads and meadows—then shed 28 let go. As Miss McNamara sent in her final calls red-hot fragments of steel ripped from the bursting shells and, flying high in the air, descended on the roof of the headquarters building, a few feet from her head. One just grazed her, and then she fainted. They carried her out to safety.

It was all over in a few minutes, yet during that time she had saved four thousand lives.

Flood heroines fill an important part in the phone girl's gallery of fame. Certainly no individual in the world's history is deserving of more credit than Mrs. Rook, the telephone operator at Folsom, New Mexico, who stuck to her post when a terrific flood swept down Cimarron Creek, engulfing the town.

This brave woman received word that the flood was sweeping down the valley, and was advised to flee for her life. However, she did not flee. She started plugging every line on the board, and kept at her task until every one within reach had been notified.

While still sending out calls farther down the valley the full force of the raging torrent struck the exchange, and they found the lifeless body of the heroic operator twelve miles down the canyon, with her head-piece still strapped to her ears.

Settling a Vexed Question.

(From the Ottawa Citizen.)

Who won the war? The question threatens at times to break up international good feeling. In every country some enthusiasts are to be found who are willing even to fight to demonstrate what should, if their contentions were true, be beyond argument or doubt. The average sensible individual realizes that no particular individual or nation won the war, although some had more to do with that happy culmination than others. But the French War Office has opened an appalling prospect, or pleasing one, by its tacit intimation that a half century or more must elapse before the question is definitely answered. We must, perforce, decide to lay the argument aside, which would be the more satisfactory and amicable course, or continue to wrangle about it for the next fifty years. Says a special despatch from the French capital:

"The prospects of deciding just who won the war are not gratifying for the present generation. The French Ministry of foreign affairs has announced that it would shortly resume publication of the volumes regarding the diplomatic origin of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870.

"Ten volumes regarding this war have been published but the work was held up when the new war broke out, and the documents thus far revealed date only up to 1866. If there is no greater speed regarding the world war we will be unable to know the truth for another fifty years."

As a happy alternative, however, we are glad that at last we are fortified with an unanswerable point in this ever recurring debate. All we now have to do to silence an opponent who attempts to prove that his country won the war is to quote our main arguments and conclude with a casual reference to the forthcoming work of the French War Office. "My dear fellow," we can remark, "your statements are interesting, of course, but entirely erroneous, as you may note by consulting the official record, which will be published by authority of the French War Office, about 1970." This, we imagine, ought to fetch 'em and hold 'em.

Mainly About People.

Major General Leonard Wood lost his job as interne, while young, at a hospital by performing an operation on a child just brought in whose life depended upon immediate action. This was a violation of the rule requiring him to wait for the surgeon. He saved the child by his prompt action, but had to get out. Such is the story told by some who claim to know.

Vicente Blasco Ibanez, who was quoted as a believer in governing women by the "treat 'em rough" method, and who has denied that interview ever since, admits that on the contrary he's "even abashed in the presence of women." He has been kept explaining that "rough stuff" ever since. He insists that a situation would become unbearable if women had the upper hand.

Margaret Calkins Banning, "who has been blessed with undiluted Irish blood," when she was in French convents and even more so while at Vassar, was convinced that her duty of life was to reform men and other things. When she got her degree she started on Chicago stock yard life, but concluded that they weren't so much dependent on social workers after all. Now she is in Duluth writing, and rearing a family.

Henry Watterson never had the young man's period of disbelief in religion. Nothing has ever shaken during his long life his childlike faith in Christ and His crucifixion. He would have ministers free to discuss the things of this world as the statesman and the journalist. The pulpit is the moral force of the universe, and the spiritual light of mankind. He has found clergymen sympathetic, manly, broadminded and many-sided.

When William E. Massey, of Gardiner, Me., was a boy he put $14.05 in the Gardiner Savings Bank. It amounts now to $157.03, and Mr. Massey is thinking of turning it over to the city to be left at compound interest for a long term of years. A State bank examiner has figured that in 504 years, at compound interest, this $157.03 would amount to $42,144,366,592.23, or about 10,536 times the valuation of Gardiner.

For 15 years Theodore Tsavalas, a Greek artist from Sparta, has been decorating the orthodox church, attended by his countrymen, in New York. The church of the Holy Trinity is lined with beautiful Biblical paintings, all his work. The expenses have been borne by wealthy New York Catholics.

George Main of Manchester, N.H., who recently celebrated his 100th anniversary, is believed to be the oldest Odd Fellow in the world. He was an Odd Fellow in the White Mountain Lodge at Concord, N.H., March 23, 1844. During his younger days Mr. Main was a decorative painter.

James R. Patten of Chicago, multi-millionaire and philanthropist, the only man in the known history of the world, except Joseph of Egypt, who ever cornered wheat and got away with it, attributes his unparalleled success in grain speculation to the fact that he "always fooled them with the truth."

Mrs. George Pullman, whose life has been filled with sorrows and domestic troubles, quite unassaged by the Pullman millions, is much disturbed over the death threat sent to her son-in-law, Gov. Lowden of Illinois, and extra guards were placed about the home in anticipation of attempts at murder at the coming out party of her granddaughter, Miss Harriet Lowden. Despite the fact that the affair passed off happily, the vigilance will not be relaxed at the grandmother's home.

Totally blind, John Whall has for 29 years been the active editor of the Middlesex Chronicle, a well known English daily paper. Before he became an editor he was a teacher of music for the blind. He frequently reports for his paper personally. Mr. Whall is an expert typist on the typewriter and has devised his own method of shorthand. This shorthand device, for it is more of a device than a system, is in itself most interesting. Equipped with a steel point, fashioned like a bradawl, and a brass frame, which may be compared to a two-foot jointed flat rule, Mr. Whall is ready to report any speech or case. Half of the frame is covered with a series of indentations, the other half being pierced with tiny oblong holes. The paper is clipped and folded between and over the two sections of the jointed frame, and the report is made by feeling and working from right to left along the frame, puncturing the paper with the steel point in the corners or centres of the oblong holes by pressing into the indentations, which represent the words spoken. When the paper is taken out, Mr. Whall is able to tell from the dots the words he has "written," and either dictate them to an assistant or transcribe them himself on his typewriter.

WEAR A DAWSON HEALTH PAD AND PROLONG LIFE.
Has your Complaint failed to yield to every known remedy? Are you tired of experimenting with Pills, Mixtures, Tablets and other useless nostrums? If so you will welcome with delight a DAWSON HEALTH PAD. Perfected after years of research by the inventor who had drugged himself for years in vain, and designed this marvellous pad to take the place of nauseous stomach medicines. Worn over the pit of the Stomach Day and Night its absorbent action drains all Uric and other injurious acid deposits from the body, which if allowed to remain you never can recover. From the moment of wearing the pad the sufferer experiences almost immediate relief. Colour returns, the appetite improves, calm restful nights are ensured, and finally the entire body takes on a renewed lease of sound vigorous health. The pad will be found of special benefit to those suffering from Rheumatism, Gout, Lumbago, Eczema, Ague or Malaria, Liver Complaints, Asthma, Palpitation, Female Weakness, Nervous Exhaustion, and all complaints of a lingering nature which have not yielded to internal Medication. Indisputable testimonials from patients now restored by this health giving pad. Stop taking useless drugs. Don't destroy the lining membranes of your stomach with DO NOT CURE. Start wearing a pad right away. Order by next mail. PRICE Mailed in Box 12.

Suggestive.

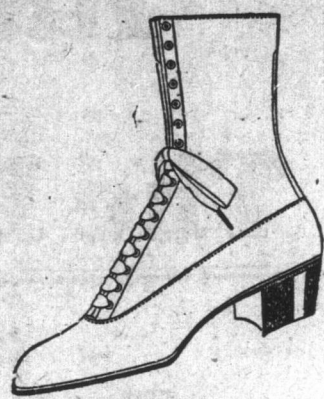

A company had opened a new swimming bath in the place, and as a compliment sent a free ticket to the mayor.

That worthy man was very pleased. But he began to wonder when another ticket arrived.

Sitting down, he wrote to the bath proprietors as follows: "Gentlemen.—Your first ticket I received as a compliment. Your second strikes me as being rather suggestive. If you send me a third, I shall take it as a personal insult."

"Vanitie" Scrapped.

Beautiful Yacht Now a Stripped Shell.
New York, July 8.—Possible defender of the America's Cup a few days ago and now a mere hull on the beach at City Island. That is Vanitie, most beautiful of all the yachts built for cup capture and retention.

It was a matter of only a few seconds. No defending candidate ever came as near being chosen to become the adulation of all eyes within range and historic as Vanitie and not succeed.

Constitution failed of cup selection because the late Capt. Charles Barr was on the two-year-old Columbia. She was a beaten boat when Barr took the wheel of the older one.

Vanitie, on the other hand, always will be remembered by the present generation of yachtsmen as a boat that never had a chance. Even Wm. Gardner, who designed her, unwittingly was against her. It was apparent to many from the time copper duck was first hoisted over her that her balance was wrong.

First of all, her mast should have been stepped further aft. Mr. Gardner had such confidence in her he would not listen. The change never was made. Through the summers of 1914 and 1915 she tasted the salt wash of Resolute and again in the trials this year.

The first two seasons the bronze beauty was beaten consistently, but she showed flashes of speed that Resolute never had in her. Last month, off Newport, merely lightened a bit, she beat Resolute several times so decisively that those who had held faith in her became convinced. Yet Resolute's record had not been surmounted.

What will become of Vanitie remains to be determined. She has been dismantled, her bowsprit even removed. A mere hull is left. It is of bronze and a tempting object to the junkman's bid. Bits of her may be made over into inanimate dogs for the front lawns of those whose taste runs to such things.

Some one who wants a fleet schooner might purchase her and convert her into a double sticker. It is safe to say she will never spread across the sails that all but swept her to glory.

Shamrock IV, Sir Thomas Lipton's Cup challenger, went out alone of the point of Sandy Hook yesterday for a short trial spin. She had a crew of thirty-five men aboard. She was put through various points of sailing in the northeast breeze of twelve knots or more strength. At times there were puffs of eighteen knots. The challenger had her full sails for the first time in a real breeze and made an exceptionally good showing.

The Methodist College Garden Party in aid of the Ayre Athletic Field will be held on St. George's Field, July 21st.

Hard Cash.

HARD CASH. THIS IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY. YOU WANT GOODS AT LOW PRICES WE WANT

We are not going to give you a line of talk that as philanthropists we are out merely to reduce the height of the H. C. of L. and going to cut prices in halves; we figure you are too intelligent to believe stuff like that, or would think we had certainly been jewing you on previous prices. First we start with

LADIES' & CHILDREN'S STRAW HATS.

Off these we are taking

25 Per Cent. Discount.

Our prices for Hats are notoriously low, and with this discount and the styles considered we know greatly increased buying will make a busy department busier.

We next consider

LADIES' BLOUSES.

We find a very classy lot of Ladies' Canadian made White Voile Blouses have not moved fast enough. They range in price from $5.50 to $7.50. Though the market was high and we did not like buying at these prices, we thought style and cut worth consideration. Now we think you will find them most tempting by our allowance of

We have also picked upon a lot of

LADIES' GEORGETTE CREPE BLOUSES

in beautiful designs and shades, and have marked them down from $17.50 to $12.50 each. This represents less than cost price.

LADIES' SILK DRESSES.

We have some priced very reasonably at $30.00, $33.00 and $35.00 each, but we are making a reduction in these prices of 25 Per Cent.

We do this as we are informed that with some of them the skirt; are a bit tight.

LADIES' WHITE COSTUME SKIRTS.

Canadian styles, English materials. Sale Prices only $3.00, $4.00, $4.50 and $5.00.

This summer is certainly a fine one, so you had better secure a couple of these beautiful Washable Skirts and get in accord with it.

LADIES'

ENVELOPE CHEMISES (or TEDDIES).

We have quite a stock of these in White and Pink Lawns and Imitation Silks. They are big sellers in America but have not yet started to sell so largely here. We think taking 25 Per Cent. off may help.

In order to make things more interesting we are making

A Reduction of Ten Per Cent. on Some

Staple Lines of Ladies' Ready-to-wear.

This includes all our large and cheaply priced stocks of Ladies' Cambric and Lawn Underskirts, Knickers, Camisoles and Nightdresses.

Ladies' Costumes and Costume Skirts.

Ladies' Raglans, Shower Coats and Navy Spring Coats

Ladies' Cotton, Poplin and Serge, etc., Dresses.

Ladies' Kimonos, Wrappers and Cotton House Dresses.

Ladies' Blouses of all kinds—not previously mentioned.

Ladies' Silk and Wool Sweater Coats.

LADIES' COTTON and LISLE SUMMER

GLOVES.

We are in a position to offer these at prices no higher than those of 1918-1919. We quote Ladies' White and Grey Gloves, with dome fasteners, at price only 40c. pair.

LADIES' WHITE and BLACK COTTON

HOSE, only 29c. pair.

You will also find we have some other extra good values in Ladies' White and Black Cotton and Lisle Hose, while they last.

We Know Our Prices on Goods Advertised

Are the Lowest You Can Procure.

as they are below the cost of doing business, but our desire to change goods into cash

IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY.

HENRY BLAIR

LONDON GOSSIP.

KING'S ANXIETY ABOUT PRINCE.

LONDON, June 7, 1920.

The unexpected news that the Prince of Wales had been ordered by his medical advisers to take a complete week's rest from all public engagements caused considerable uneasiness when it reached Buckingham Palace, since it was the only intimation the King and Queen had received that there was anything wrong with His Royal Highness. Cables were thereupon promptly sent to Melbourne asking for details of the Prince's condition. Fortunately these show that there is nothing seriously the matter. But the Prince has not yet become accustomed to the Australian climate, so that it is deemed better that he should take things quietly for a little.

TO ATTRACT SUBURBIA.

After the Armistice there was a public demand that foreign waiters should not be allowed again to oust the British product from, at any rate, purely British restaurants. Already, however, the foreigner is back again. There is a Japanese in the grill room of one of the smartest Piccadilly restaurants off the Haymarket, and in one of the more Bohemian establishments near Leicester Square a Siamese is employed. A friend to whom I pointed this out declares that managers are catering for the bizarre tastes of Suburbia. Suburban diners flock to any place which they are told is "quaint," and the damsel of Tooting votes a Japanese or a Chinese "an absolute darling."

COLLEGE YELLS IN LONDON.

There was just a touch of the Oxford Commem. spirit—or, perhaps one should say, high spirits—to relieve the period of waiting for the King's arrival at the School of Economics in London last week. The students of both sexes massed at the back of one of the stands varied the musical programme by contributing "Here's to the Maiden of Bashful Fifteen," "The Tarpaullin Jacket," and "Uplides" with an exhilaration that was in rather curious contrast with the daintiness of the "Spring Song" and the pathos of Sibelius's "Valse Trieste" as rendered by the string band of the Scots Guards. They even made an appropriately dismal attempt to sing Henley's "In the Fell Clutch of Circumstance." But their great achievement was the vociferous shouting of their "college yell," which was on the most approved American pattern. It ran: "Pol econ, h-sh-sh, pol econ, h-sh-sh, pol econ, h-sh-sh rah, rah, rah!" The performance of this war-whoop gave such satisfaction that it was repeated when the King arrived, when he laid the foundation stone, and on his departure. After Royalty had disappeared the students made insistent demands for speeches from their favorite professors. "We want Dr. Knowles; we want Lillian; we want Dr. Cannon;—speech—speech—up—up!" At last Dr. Cannon stepped forward and explained that he was too much affected by the funeral that had just taken place to be able to comply with this request. He was referring, of course, to the interment of a copy of his treatise on "Wealth" with the foundation stone.

AIR BATTLES TO BE RE-ENACTED.

London is shortly to be permitted to see "aerial navies" battling in the central blue, just as they used to do over the Western front. Epic-making air fights which brought fame to some men and death to others are to be re-enacted in every particular, except in their fatal ending, for the amusement of the crowd and the financial advantage of the Royal Air Force memorial. Aeroplane squadrons will be seen attacking enemy squadrons by a series of dizzy dives and daring swoops amid a blaze of machine gunfire. For downright realism one event in particular will be hard to beat, and should thrill even the most blasé Londoner: the excitement of air raids. In it a hostile aeroplane will attack and actually destroy a captive observation balloon, the occupants of which will make their escape to safety by parachute. There will also be a series of other amazing "stunts," almost as exciting, in which men will escape from a great rigid type airship by a similar means. The scene of the demonstration is to be Hendon Aerodrome, a place which in pre-war days was always associated in the mind of the Londoner with the latest aviation developments. The function will therefore serve to bring home to him some idea of the immensity and importance of the advance made in flying during the war.

EX-KAISER AS TAILOR AND CUTTER.

The story which is told from Amsterdam that the ex-Kaiser, in his new place of ignominious retirement at Doorn, is seeking to relieve the monotony of existence by turning from the cutting down of trees, which occupied him at Amerongen, to the cutting out of clothes, will not particularly surprise those acquainted with the history of the German Imperial family. It has been a tradition with the Hohenzollerns, ever since, I believe, the days of Frederick the Great, that each member of the house, whether male or female, should be trained to some trade or handicraft. The three sons of Prince Frederick Leopold of Prussia, cousin of the ex-Kaiser, who had married the ex-Kaiser's sister, were thus trained, two as turners and the third as a gardener, and passed the tests set for operative members of those callings, while their only sister, who married Prince Henry of Reuss, qualified herself for the diploma of cook, and she once prided herself on her success in boiling a potato, though she owned to comparative failure as a maker of butterscotch. The theory, it was smilingly explained at Schloss Gleincke, Prince Frederick Leopold's residence near Potsdam, was that, if any illa should come to the Imperial family, its members would be qualified to earn a living by handicraft. That explanation was made just fifteen months before the war. One wonders how far it has been put into practice since the defeat.

THE MOURNING RING.

Boxing men and that considerable section of the public that takes an interest in English athletic prowess are much disturbed about the result of the boxing matches by which Charles Ledoux, a Frenchman, beat Higgins for the bantam-weight championship, and Wyns, a Belgian, beat Honeyman in the feather-weight championship. As Carpentier has defeated the best English boxers in the heavy-weights, it is clear that England does not stand where it did. Until ten years ago the boxing championships were a sort of family matter between England and America, with Africa butting in the mighty form of Jack Johnson. Nowadays no English champion is safe from a Frenchman or a Belgian coming over and taking away his honors. There remains to us now the incomparable Wilde, who has been proving to America that he is unbeatable at his weight—a "fly weight," and a good bit beyond that. But Wilde cannot last for ever, and his present tour was spoken of as his last. There is no one in sight of the same combination of hairsprings and piston-rods to take his place. In the welter weights there is Basham, a champion who is now going to defend his title against that redoubtable but mysterious boxer, Kid Lewis. There is also a light heavy-weight called McCormick, who is thought to have the makings of a great boxer, but that completes the list of names that would stop the street traffic in Covent Garden, where is situated the National Sporting Club. There is a growing belief that if we are to beat the world now it will have to be with our heads.

THE RUSSIAN BORDER STATES AND POLAND.

One result of the Polish war with Russia is that it places the border States in a difficult position. Lithuania, for instance, wants peace with Russia, and is actually negotiating. Poland is still in occupation of half of Lithuania, including the capital. There is, therefore, the greatest inducement towards an aggressive Lithuania-Russian alliance against Poland. Rumors that negotiations were actually proceeding in this sense emanated from Berlin towards the end of last week. I am asked by the Lithuanian Legation in London to deny this rumor. "We are anxious," says the head of the Legation, "to have peace with Soviet Russia, but it is against the continued peaceful policy of our country to make any aggressive alliance." The fact that Lithuania withstands this temptation in spite of Polish provocation is proof of her desperate need of peace.
