and the day of reckoning or some st trap Mr. Huntington will not enter: and yet without power to compel witness to speak the whole truth if he thinks it would tend to criminate be held in the Drummondville Grove, him, it is useless to expect from the Commission such a full exposure of facts as Mr Huntington deems necessary. To submit to an investigation conducted by a body so objectionable and void of necessary powers, and to be compelled to rest his case where and how it pleased, would be to practically abandon the prosecution. Mr. Huntington is too old a lawyer to be tripped up in such fashion, and he will certainly avoid the fate of Mary Howitt's fly. He will quietly will be present and deliver orations on the situation. The chair will be traken at 11 a.m. Three brass bands will be on the grounds. Arrangements for railway half-fares are being effected. Commission such a full exposure of bide his time, proceed with his charge in the manner deemed advisable by Parliament, and place before the country a complete case—a case free from the restrictions and interference of one-sided judges, or the suppression of truth by protected noncommittal witnesses. That every effort will be made to misinterpret his action is already apparent. Conservative press is uttering its cry of "You're afraid!" The Toronto bell-wether has sounded the key note, and every lambkin of the Ministerial flock is sending forth its responsive "baa." Mr Huntington is a slanderer and coward, and his supporters are banditti, in the mouths prefers to wait for the re-opening of the great court of the nation before which the accused have already been arraigned, and in which a true bill was found when the Committee of Enquiry was appointed. He knows that the doors of that court have been only temporarily closed, and he sensibly and patiently waits the re sensibly and patiently waits the resumption of the hearing of the case. He will not prejudice his position, or lessen his chances of obtaining a full and exhautive investigation, because the defendants have sought to change the venue, and impudently set up a court of their own. He knows that however much noise interested or blinded partizans may raise at this determination he has the country at his back. He is strengthened by the conviction that men of all parties are resolved that the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth shall be told. In the meantime he will be assailed by those whose work it is to misrepresent and create a prejudice against him. He will be twitted, and taunted, and sneered at. It will be said that he has no case, that he is a ratiocre of spotless, that he dare not face the accused, that he has been entangled in his own tolls, that he is unworthy of belief, that he is a traducer of spotless men, that he is a catspaw in the hands of designing conspirators, and that he is politically and socially dead. He has seen all along that this would be the upshot of his refusal to go before the Commission. He has counted the cost, and is prepared to put up with Minusterial abuse. He sees that his own turn must soon come, and can afford to wait. The facts with which he is armed fully justify his resolution to place them before a court in which the whole and not a part only can be told. That court must reassemble, sooner or later, and when it does all Canada will know he did well in refusing to submit his charges to any other tribunal than one competent not only to fairly try but to properly punish the wrong-doers.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

A WILD BEWILDERING HOPE BURSTS ON PHILIP WESTON—HE AND JIM TAKE A JOURNEY AND MAKE DISCOVERIES.

The communication which Sally Primpose made to Philip related, as the reader may surmise, to the extraordinary and astonishing things she had seen and recognised when she crept up stairs to take one look at Aunabel as she lay in her coffin. It will be recollected that she was then much struck by the resemblance which the face of the corpse bore to Ellem Mattocks—a resemblance which, indeed, did not surprise her beyond measure, for it had often been observed and remarked on when the two were living at Rockstone. To Sally's startled vision, death seemed to have deepened this resemblance yet it would not have made any very strong impression had she not on bending down caught sight of earnings and mark on one of the ears which to her knowledge were connected "with Ellen Mattocks. The moment after she made this discovery, Mrs Langton entered the room, and, with a look and words of fury, ordered her to be gone.

What she had seen, Sally had prudently kept to herself. But for days and weeks after, it afforded her food for strange bewildering thoughts. Nothing like a satisfactory explanation of what had so startled and stunned her. The unaccountable anger of Mrs Langton also had been much wondered at by her, and do as she would she could not refrain from connecting it with the observations she had made.

As time wore on Sally had gradually ceased to think of the matter, and for some time back it had not occupied her at all. But this singular discovery of an envelope addressed in Annabel's handwriting, and dated nearly three weeks after her death, brought the whole matter back upon her mind with fearful suddness, and gave to it a startling importance, under which she felt Feady to faint with excitement and apprehension. It flashed upon her mow that there was something terribly wrong, and under this alarmed and gave to it a search, mader which she felt Feady to faint with excitement and apprehension. It flashed upon her now that there was something terribly wrong, and under this alarmed feeling she told Philip all that the reader already knows.

"My God! what can it all mean?" grasped the youth, with ashen face and eluvering lip.

What, indeed! It was a question which every shaking fibre of his being forced him to ask, but one to which no answer could come. The wildest conjecture of the most inflamed imagination was inadequate to reach a glimpse of the truth.

The subscribers, in thanking che public for their patronage since they started business, "where is she?"

"This girl Ellen Mattocks," said Philip, at length, with startling abruptness, "where is she?"

"Can't say, sir. She never came here, It was said she had gone insane, and her brother had taken her away to some quiet place to keep her."

"Her brother! what sort of a man is he?"

"Can't ssy that either, sir. Nobody here ever saw him. He was with them in France, but joined them somewhere on the road."
"Strenge all very strange." ejaculated nn France, but joined them somewhere on the road."

"Strange—all very strange," ejaculated Philip, "Great heaven, can this be further plotting on the part of Barnard Hayes?" he added, and at the thought he paced the room in uncontrollable excitement. Every moment the conviction grew that that there was a mystery, and for the first time a suspicion of Mrs Langton entered his mind. He thrust it from him at its dawning, but it would not be driven back. He was compelled to entertain it—first from Sally's story of the strange manner in which the dead body had been treated, the anxiety manifested by Mrs Langton to prevent the inmates of the mansion from seeing it, her fierce anger at finding Sally at the side of the coffin, and the look of anger and consternation she wore when she ordered her away; then second, the agitation into which Mrs Langton had been thrown by the receipt of the letter whose envelope had in such a singular manner come into his hands, coupled with the fact that the address was in Annabel's handwriting.

Philip felt himself choking from the iolence of his sensations and his thoughts Philip felt himself choking from the violence of his sensations and his thoughts flew on from point to point, gathering conclusions as at hey went, which pointed to guilt of the most frightful character, and he would have been overwhelmed with horror if a momentous and transporting possibility which lay behind all had not flashed in upon his soul till his very being reeled. To that possibility he durst not give expression in words, even to his own heart, for the joy it involved was too great to be glanced at from the abyes of wo into which for weeks he had been plunged. Was the earthly heaven he had lost about to open for him again? Was Annabel, so wildly and hopelessly mourned, to be given back to him? No wonder that such a possibility as this threatened to overmaster him utterly. The sight of his wild agitation made Sally helpless and petrified, and shi threatened to overmaster him utterly. The sight of his wild agitation made Sally helpless and petrified, and shi, following him with her eyes as, in frenzied gesticulation, he rushed to and fro in the apartment.

The Bosrows are to play with the Kingston club this afternoon. We await the result with interest.

The Dauntless club of Toronto had a agame with the Bosrons on Saturday, which resulted in a score of 48 to 10. The score of the Bosrons is much larger than in their game here, but we can't see how the Toronto club batted ten runs with the superior fielding of the Americans. The following is the Pelitical Lacrosse.

The match between two twelves of the renowned Toronto club — each twelve being composed of Tories and Grits respectively—came off on Saturday on their ground on Jarvis street. The distinctive colors were red for the Tories, the Grits in white. Up to four o'clock the field was noisy with the good-tempered chaffing of the partiam athletes, and calls from their respective friends in the crowd, whose interest indeed seemed to be greater than that of the players. The ball was started at 4 o'clock, and for half an hour the play was as lively as any one could desire. The determination of the ball was, however, towards the Tory end of the field, which furnished an opportunity for considerable scandal on the benches, and indignant crief from the "Red" faction to their favorites to "go in," "scoop it," and to perform some other acts which appeared altogether out of the question. The day was won by the Grits; three games to one; but won after a hard contest. Pelitical Lacrosse.

POVERTY IS BAD, but the worst kind of poverty is poverty of the blood; this makes a man, "poor indeed," for it takes away his strength, courage and energy; but enrich the blood with its vital element, Iron, by taking the Peruvian Syrup (a protozide of iron) and you will feel rich and "as good as anybody." Try it, which can be cured by a timely resort to this standard preparation, as has been proved by the hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors. It is acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most reliable preparation ever in-troduced for the relief and cure of all Lung complaints, and is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years. When resorted to in season it seldom fails to effect a speedy cure in the most severe cases of Coughs, Bronchitis, Croup, Whooping Cough, Irduenza, Asthma, Colds, Sore Throat, Pains or Sore-ness in the Chest and Side, Liver Complaint, Bleeding at the Lungs, &c. Wistar's Balsam does not dry up a Cough, and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most preparations, but it loosens and cleanses the lungs, and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.
