

DEVOTED TO TEMPERANCE, SCIENCE, EDUCATION, AND AGRICULTURE.

VOLUME XVI., No. 6.

MONTREAL & NEW YORK, MARCH 15, 1881.

SEMI-MONTHLY, 30 CTS. per An., Post-Paid.

THE BLACKSMITH OF GRUNDER- | yet nowhere could one see more meagre crops WALD (From Sunday at Home).

CHAPTER I.

Travelling in the Tyrol was not an easy business in the year 1769. The country, which might be called an eastward wing of the Alps, and rivals Switzerland in its alternation of towering summit and deep valley, had few roads, and those it had were neither safe nor smooth; its towns, besides being few and far between, were generally small and poor, and their inns afforded but scanty accommodation to strangers. Yet the Tyrol was then, and had been for many an age, the highway of trade and travel between the Teutonic and the Latin race, and the connecting link of the Kaiser's empire, as it the German, and the other on s the Italian soil. Gallant cavalcades escorting imperial viceroys to Milan, had wound through its valleys, powerful armies had descended from its heights, to crush insurrection in Lombard cities, or strengthen the hands of Imperial partisans, and Charles the fifth had fled through its mountain passes, pursued by his Protestant enemies to the very borders of Italy.

These days were done before the period of our story, the Lombard cities rested in tranquil bondage under the rule of Austria and the Church ; Maria Theresa and her son Joseph jointly occupied the throne of the Kaisers. But the roads of the Tyrol were as bad as they had ever been ; and one of the worst, though forming part of the beaten track to the Italian frontier, was that which led to the isolated village of Grunderwald.

The situation of that village was peculiar; a cleft in a great mountain side two thousand feet above the level of the sea, in the form of a deep dell. It was sheltered from mountain storms on the north and east by the pine forest that grew between it and the perpetual snow, but was open to the genial influences of the west and south. It was a rustic place of thatched cottages clustering round an old, but well-preserved church, and encircled by a broad belt of vineyards and cornfields, Its institutions consisted of a well, to which the women resorted for water and gossip, a green on which the young people played, a slow-going windmill, and a blacksmith's forge. Like most of the Tyrolese people, its inhabitants were of the German stock, a strong, active and hardy race, nestling in the mountain's breast : sickness seldom visited their homes. The soil of their dell was reckoned or ill-cultivated fields, less-carefully dressed vineyards or more garden-ground running to waste than in the purlieus of Grunderwald. The roofs of its cottages were generally in want of thatch, the machinery of the draw-well, primitive at the best, was dangerously out of repair ; broken-down fences, and hingeless gates were the prevailing fashion. The windmill looked as if it must give up work on some early day ; and nothing about the village seemed in good order but the blacksmith's forge.

A short sojourn at Grunderwald would have made the cause of such general dilapidation evident to the least discerning mind. In common with the majority of the Tyrolese, its inhabitants belong to the Roman Catholic Church, and they now had a high men and martyrs whom the Church had | half cultivated, and buildings out of repair. thought worthy of canonization, overpassed the bounds of his natural good sense and Christian prudence.

The zeal of Father Felix was not according to knowledge, but it was fervent, and brought about a new order of things in Grunderwald. The simple villagers were at first astonished to hear vigils and feasts, of which neither they nor their fathers had dreamed, announced from the altar, and their observance enjoined as the most solemn of Christian duties. Names of which they had never heard the sound were made known to them in the Father's sermons, with ample details of miracles performed and work, of abstinence or flagellation done by way of proving the saint's right to his day. The priest's eloquence and influence soon brought began what the priest called his reforms in existed at the time, with one end on repute for piety throughout the mountain the saints into fashion; there was scarcely the parish, and settled there, as the place was abundant observance of saints' days. It was not always so. The number of the canonized had become so great in the progress of ages that most of their days, and names too, had slipped out of memory among the industrious peasants and hardy hunters of the Tyrol except the patron of a village or the guardian of a mineral spring from which cures might yet be expected, few of the calendar got any commemoration at all. And so it was in Grunderwald, till Father Felix came to reside there as the village priest.

He was a man devoted to the duties of his office, and the flock committed to his charge. He had nevertheless one spiritual hobby, to which the system he served under gave more than sufficient scope ; his ideas country, on account of their strict and a week of which two or three days were not honor of some unknown saint, and squandgiven up to martyrs, confessors, or holy The villagers had no objection to hermits. work on the Lord's Day ; indeed the Sabbath rest had never been regarded among them, but on a saint's day nothing would tempt man, woman or child in Grunderwald to do any worldly work, or mind any terrestrial business, however needful. After the morning mass and its accompanying ceremonies, the young people played rustic games on the green or danced the hours away; the old smoked and gossiped in convenient places. There was a good deal of beer-drinking done, and the habits of idleness and timespending thus acquired had an evil effect on the working days ; everything that could be shirked or put aside, was allowed to be so,

Thoughtful and intelligent peasants murmured among themselves at the sacrifice of time and the neglect of needful work occasioned by the observance of so many holidays, but nobody really ventured to question the propriety of the new institutions but Ludwig Estermann, the blacksmith of Grunderwald.

Ludwig lived in the freedom of a man who had neither kindred nor connections in the village, and could therefore speak his mind. His native place was on the Swiss frontier, and his sturdy frame and sober, resolute face belonged to the Swiss rather than the Tyrolese stock. He had come to Grunderwald with his wife and their only child, some fifteen years before Father Felix without a blacksmith. In the taken from him his faithful wife. His only child, a fair daughter named Margaret, had grown up to fill, in some degree, the place she left vacant in his heart and home.

> The late device for honoring the saints went against his good sense and his conscientious convictions, and Ludwig did not hesitate to express his opinion on the subject. "No doubt some of them were holy men and servants of God in their day," he said, "though we know nothing about the most of them, by reason of their times and countries being so far from ours ; but can any rational man believe that either they or their blessed Master would have the time in which poor Christians ought to work for themselves and their families frittered away in long services and useless holidays ?"

Many of the villagers said that "Estermann had the rights of it," yet next day left their ripe corn, or wind-stripped roofs, to crowd the church while mass was said in ered the succeeding hours in idleness or sport.

Many more disputed and grew angry with him, applying every ill name they could think of, from "Lutheran" downward, to the blacksmith, but it was all the same as far as he was concerned. While they kept the saints' days, he attended to the work of his forge or field, set things to rights that happened to get out of order about his premises, and so contrived to have the best kept and most comfortable home in Grunderwald.

The blacksmith's customers were many, but his returns were small, and there was a millstone hanging about Ludwig's neck, in the shape of a debt due to Adam Finkler, the richest man in the village. Some people among the most fertile in the Alpine land, of the honor and reverence due to those holy and the necessary consequences were, fields agreed that Adam was the best bargainsaid he was the oldest man, too, but all maker; he had made a shrewd one with | Ludwig Estermann, regarding the house which the latter occupied. Adam had sold, and Ludwig had bought it, on the agreement that the price was to be paid in annual in-stalments of fifty thalers each, to be duly deposited in Finkler's hand, on or before the feast of St. Martin ; and if the purchaser failed to pay any one of these instalments within the stipulated time, the house should revert to its original owner, without any al-lowance for the payments formerly made, or the expense incurred by repairs or improvements. It was an unsafe contract for Estermann, but the house was cheap on the whole. It suited his necessities and had taken his fancy; his trade was good, fifty thalers could be easily saved in the course of a year, and old Finkler would sell on no other terms.

2

It was said that he had become the proprietor of many a village home by similar agreements; but prudent men will do imprudent things at times. Unwarned by that report, Ludwig accepted the conditions, and made the house his home.

Almost seven years has passed away since Almost seven years has passed away since then. The greater part of the purchase-money was paid; the bare, scarcely finished building, of which Ludwig took possession, had become a pleasant dwelling-place as could be found in all the mountain country. Snug and warm in winter, fair and flowery in the summer time, passing strangers paused to admire its outward aspect, in such re-markable contrast to the rest of the village homes, and neighbors knew how bright and cheerful it was made within by Margaret Estermann.

Margaret spent a useful and contented life, though it was not expected to flow always in the same channel. Ernest Muller had been her father's apprentice ever since the Estermanns took possession of the purchased house. He was a neighbor's son, the eldest of a large family, and the help and hope of his parents.

Between him and Ludwig's daughter a mutual attachment had existed from their childhood, which increased with their years till the young people seemed to have but one heart and one mind. It was cordially approved of by the parents on both sides, especially Margaret's father, whose earthly hopes and aims were centred in the wellbeing of his only child.

"It will be a good dowry for my girl," he would say to himself when contemplating, with honest pride, the home which his own industrious hands and well-earned thalers industrious hands and well-earned thaters had made of the purchased house; "she and Ernest Muller shall live here, with the Lord's blessing, a happy wedded life, and bring up their children to play about the arm-chair where I sit Grandfather Greybeard."

The best-founded hopes and most promising plans of men are doomed to disappointment at times, and so it was with the honest blacksmith in those days of our tale. Lud-wig's hand did not lose its cunning in the forging of iron, but his trade fell rapidly away, the non-keeping of saints' days did it as much damage as their observance had done to village affairs in general. Ludwig's un-popularity was at its height, when a blacksmith from the neighborhood of Innspruck, partly in hopes of finding a better field, arrived and established himself in Grunderwald.

His first act was to publish a verbal manifesto in favor of the saints' days, in one of which he declared no money would induce him to lift a hammer, and that orthodox profession gave the finishing blow to Estermann's business.

Henceforth his forge was forsaken, while customers flocked to that of the new-comer, who was by no means so good a workman, and rather patronized on account of the saints, than employed for his skill. The most friendly of the neighbors advised Ludwig to recover his position among them by at once conforming to the established custom but his manly spirit spurned the thought of giving up declared convictions for the sake of trade and gain. He remained in his empty forge, framing curious specimens of iron-work, or teaching Ernest the most hidden secrets of his craft, as the youth's apprentice-time was now drawing near its end. So was the specified time approaching for paying the last instalment of Ludwig's debt to Adam Finkler; but with all his exertions and savings too, the blacksmith could not scrape together half the sum. I gave you so much bother," said Ben, as he bounded to the door, to welcome his father home.

(To be Continued.)

la . 1

Temperance Department.

JOE'S PARTNER.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE BABES IN THE BASKET," &C.

(National Temperance Society, New York.) CHAPTER IV .- A RESOLUTION.

There was no more sleep for Ben White that night. He had entered that poor home in a merry mood, excited and exhilarated by battling with the storm. Full of health and prosperity, he had thought it a fine joke to rough it a little, and have a good story to tell about in the future. Ben called himself a Christian boy. He had never thought it possible he could be anything but a member of the aburch and a victor wincide member of the church and a right-principled man. Now the awful reality of the truth of God came home to him with power. How would his life look when pictured before him at the last day ? The hand of his Lord he had before taken as a right and natural thing ; now, with new love, he grasped again that outstretched hand, and felt that only so could he be safe from destruction, and pass through this world of temptation to the rest above.

In Kate's prayer for her husband Ben had heartily joined. How he realized the power of that habit against which Harry Barber had so long struggled in vain ! Then and there Ben White made a resolution : Not a drop of anything intoxicating should ever again pass his lips. Wine he had occasionally taken at his father's table with older Christian friends. Henceforwith older Christian friends. Hencefor-ward he would not touch it, lest some one possessed of the demon should say: "It was with you I first learned to drink, and now I can not get free." How did he know that he was himself secure from temptation? There was but one absolutely safe path. He would have nothing to do with that which at the last could burn like a five and sting like an adder. sting like an adder.

Ben grew impatient for the morning light. There was work for him to do. He longed to be up and at it. This vacation, which Ben had meant to idle away, must be a busy time for him. Who could tell whether he should live till school began again, and what had he done for the Kingdom of his Redeemer ? What had he done for his fellow-creatures, if he should suddenly be called to his account ? What could he say of his stewardship ? Fourteen years of health of body and mind in a Christian land, a luxurious home and a full many what a luxurious home, and a full purse. What had he rendered to God for all his blessings? Ben had had no mother to prompt him to a spiritual, Christian life, or to deeds of mercy and love. His father had been satis-fied to know that Ben was what he called a "correct boy," a good scholar, and a merry, happy fellow, whom everybody loved. His father was now away from home on a long journey, and Ben was quite the master of the house, as he was an only child, so he had not hesitated to spend the night as he could, to escape further buffeting of the storm.

As soon as it was light, Ben opened the outer door, and, fishing-rod in hand, he went out silently. How delicious he found the fresh morning air ! The three-mile walk was a mere pas time !

What a breakfast he made, and how he did wish "the giant" were beside him to enjoy the good-cheer with him !

Ben had not finished his comfortable meal, when the old housekeeper stepped into the room.

He had been ashamed to find that she had He had been ashamed to find that she had sat up all night for him. He had not once thought that any one could take any trouble about him. He felt himself so completely the master in his father's absence, he did not realize that to the old servants he was but a child. and a child left in their charge. "Your father is at the door," said the bousekeeper soberly; "shall I tell him about your not coming home last nicht?"

your not coming home last night ?" "I'll tell him myself. I am sorry, though, I gave you so much bother," said Ben, as home.

Mr. White was a quiet, reserved man, and

him. Now, however, the boy's heart was so full, that as soon as they were seated at table, he poured out the story of his last night's adventures.

Mr. White ate silently, but evidently Mr. white are shelly, but evidently listening with interest; as Ben described the tall, thin woman, the courageous "giant" and the empty larder, he looked into his father's cold, light-blue eyes. Could it be that they were full of tears?

Mr. White said nothing, took another muffin quietly, the eyes grew clearer, and Ben thought he must have been mistaken. Ben found no difficulty in telling his story, until he came to the point where his own feelings had been so deeply roused ; this he passed over shortly, simply saying : "I never realized before what a miserable, useless life I have led. I trust I shall be forgiven, and helped to do better. But, father," he continued, "one thing I have resolved, that I will never drink a glass of wine again. It is not that I think my influence will be worth much, but I want that very little to be on the right side. And then, father, I might go wrong myself, who knows ? Some of the boys no older than I am take too much for them. So you won't mind, father, if my glass stands empty ?" "No, child !" said Mr. White soberly ;

'no, child, but you shall never be tempted to break your resolution at my table, nor shall my example be in your way. At home, and everywhere, my glass shall stand empty too, from this day henceforward."

To Ben's surprise, his father rose hastily, kissed his forehead, and with a "God bless you, my boy," quitted the room. In the boy's young face, touched with deep feeling, Mr. White had seen again the earnest, appealing expression of the wife, who had once softened his calm, cold nature, and prompted him to many a loving deed. She had been received "up higher," while her hushand was left, in his speechless grief, shut out by his reserve, as by a strong wall, from human sympathy, and had little by little grown almost forgetful of that Divine love which can alone cheer and sustain. His Christian Iife had grown dull and formal : it was paralyzed, not dead. Ben sat alone, in silent gratitude. He had but thought to make to his heavenly Father the poor offering of the influence of a penitent boy, and now he had the promise of his earthly father's sanction and help for the cause that was already dear to his heart. help for the

(To be continued.)

THE BOY WHO COULD SAY "NO." "No !" Clear, sharp and ringing, with an emphasis that could not fail to arrest attention. "I don't often hear such a negative as that," remarked one gentleman to another as they were passing the playground of the village school.

"It is not often any one hears it. The "It is not often any one hears it. The boy who uttered it can say 'yes,' too, quite as emphatically. He is a new comer here, an orphan, who lives with his uncle about two miles off. He walks in every morning, bringing his lunch, and walks back at night. He works enough, too, to pay his-board, aud does more toward running his uncle's farm than the old man does himself. He is the than the old man does himself. He is the coarsest dressed scholar in school and the greatest favorite. Everybody knows just what to expect of him."

"Quite a character. I should like to see him. Boys of such sturdy make-up are getting to be scarce, while the world never had more need of them than now."

"All that is true, and if you wish to see Ned, come this way."

They moved on a few steps, pausing at an

They moved on a few steps, pausing at an open gate, near which a group of lads were discussing an exciting question. "It isn't right, and I won't have anything to do with it. When I say 'no,' I mean it." "Well, any way, you needn't speak so loud and tell everybody about it," was re-sponded impatiently to this declaration. "I'm willing everybody should hear what I've got to say about it. I won't take any-thing that don't belong to me and I we'r drink eider any way." "Such a fuss about a little fun! It's just what we might have expected. You never go in for fun." "Inever go in for doing wrong. I told you 'no,' to begin with. And you're the ones to blame if there's been any fuss." "Ned Dunlap, I should like to see you a minute."

Ben had never been very confidential with hat as he passed through the gate and waited him. Now, however, the boy's heart was so to hear what Mr. Palmer might say to him.

"Has your uncle any apples to sell ?" "Has your uncle any apples to sell?" "No, sir. He has some, but he has sold them. I've got two bushels that were my share for picking. Should you like to buy them, sir?"

"Yes, if we can agree upon the price. Do you know just how much they are worth ?"

"Yes, sir." "All right then. I will call for them, and you may call at my house for the pay." This short interview afforded the stranger an opportunity to observe Ned Dunlap closely. The next day a call was made at his uncle's, and although years elapsed be-fore he knew what a friend he had gained, that day his fortune was assured. After he had grown to manhood and accepted a lurative position, which was not of his seek-ing, he asked why it had been offered him. "Because I knew you could say 'no' if occasion required," answered his employer. "No,' was the first word I heard you speak, and you spoke it with a will. More people, old and young, are ruined for want of using that word than from any other cause. They don't wish to do wrong, but they hesitate and parley until the tempter has them fast. The boy or girl who is not afraid to say 'no' is reasonably certain of making an honorable man or woman." "Yes" is a sweet and often loving word. "No" is a strong, brave word, which has signalled the defeat of many a scheme for the ruin of some fair young life.—*Temper*ance Banner.

THE OPIUM VICTIM.

From Nankin Mrs. Adams writes :--- A From Nankin Mrs. Adams writes :—A few weeks ago messengers came to our house asking that the foreign teacher would go and see a woman who was dying from opium poisoning. Mr. Adams and Mr. Tomalin took some medicine, and, after walking some distance, they reached a fine large house, evidently the residence of a person of some distinction. They were shown into evidently the residence of a person of some distinction. They were shown into a room filled with people talking, smoking, and drinking tea, and speculating upon the re-sult of the foreigner's visit. The poor wo-man was in a death-like stupor, and, roused, complained of great pain at the heart and a weary desire for sleep. My husband gave her a strong emetic, which soon produced the desired effect. While watching the result of the treatment, the following story was had formerly held a lucrative and responsible position in a Mandarin Yamen, or court. While there he first tasted what the natives called "Western dirt." As long as he kept his situation his wife and family did not suffer, but he lost it as the opium obtained more complete mastery over him. He could get no other employment, though the taste grew daily. His poor wife did all she could to keep up appearance and provide food for her family by winding silk and weaving the satin for which Nankin is noted : portions of their house were let off till they had but one small room left to themselves. At last the bitterly cold winter set in, and the poor creature found herself without money, without food, without clothes, for those which should have protected them from the cold had long since been sold to hux the cold had long since been sold to buy the fatal drug, and yet the infatuated husband fatal drug, and yet the infatuated husband must have money to satisfy the cravings of appetite. At last the poor wife, in a fit of desperation, determined to put an end to the struggle by taking her life; and thus, ignorant of God, ignorant of the future, she was very near the unseen world, when it pleased God to restore her, as the remedies used were blessed to her recovery. The hus-band came afterward to hear the Gospel preached, and seemed very grateful. This is but a picture of what is occurring in thousands of families in this city, and in myriads of families in this empire.—Word and Work.

THAT WAS A stinging rebuke which a tobacco-chewing father received, when he heard that his young son had been begging licorice from the apothecary, and when asked why he wished to chew it, replied, "So I can spit black, like papa."

MRS. DURRANT, Secretary of the Working Women's Teetotal League, having completed 40 years of teetotalism, and her husband 36, they invited abstainers of 35 years' standing to tea at Mr. Varley's Tabernacle, Notting-hill. Nearly three hundred persons accepted "Yes, sir." And the boy removed his presided over by the Rev. Dawson Burns.

NORTHERN MESSENGER.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

A SERMON TO GIRLS .- DRESS.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

The subject of dress naturally and properly occupies an important place in the thoughts of women. Every young girl thoughts of women. Every young girl should have ideas about it-ideas which are her own, and which she has gained as the result of intelligent consideration of the theme. She should determine her dress from elevated She should determine her dress from elevated and not from ignoble motives, and decide its cost, its, style, its beauty, and its harmony, with conscientious regard to her income, and her duties in life. It is perfectly right and womanly that we should care about it and devote to it a legitimate portion of decorous and reasonable attention.

And reasonable attention. A young lady needs, as a matter of course, what may be called her business dress, after that her every-day leisure dress, and last, her best dress, to be worn on state occasions, and laid aside that its freshness may be retained.

By a business dress I mean this, something strong and serviceable which you can wear engaged in the daily work, which every selfcting girl finds to do. I am not writing for idlers, for I hold, as a part of religious duty, that no womanly girl, whatever her station, can be content to simply exist, help-ing, comforting, and blessing nobody in God's busy world. Some have one sort of work to do and some another. Mary may set the breakfast table, sweep the chambers, or dust the parlor. Eva may attend school. Flor-ence may read the Bible or the newspaper to her father, whose sight begins to fail. Louisa may knead and bake the bread. Clara may stand behind the counter, measuring yards of ribbon and matching shades of silk for fastidious buyers. Eleanor may manage a kindergarten. Maria may be the gem of the family, sole daughter, in a great merry circle of boys. Each in her way and place has her vocation, just as much as if she had been called and set apart to it by an audible voice from heaven. And while I would not re-commend that all these girls should dress after precisely the same pattern, because such a recommendation would be a very manifest absurdity, yet there may be a uniformity of tone, which suits the whole great sisterhood of nice girls, who are at this moment per-forming the various tasks alluded to above.

Your business dress should for one thing be short. It should clear not touch the ground. Nothing is less agreeable than to ee a young woman stepping about upon her see a young woman stepping about upon her domestic errands, encumbered by a long trailing robe. Nothing is less appropriate than a garment, worn to market, or to the shop, which sweeps the ground and gathers to itself soil and stain at the contact. It to itself soil and stain at the contact. It should be, in summer, of calico, or muslin, or some cool, light material that will wash. A neat, well-fitting and tasteful print, that does not fade, is far more lady-like for common wear than a soiled and half-worn silk. In winter a dark, warm dress of gray, brown, or black, with a white apron, and clean collar and cuffs, is most convenient and economical for work and wear and hard service. The habit in some families of taking half-worn habit in some families of taking hall-worn dresses, which in their time have been con-sidered stylish, and wearing them to work in, encumbered with rags and tags, beads and bugles, yards of kilt-plaiting, and quantities of shabby ribbons and lace, is not in good taste. I do not think a thoroughly neat, refined woman would wear an old silk wrap-ner, or a loose cashmere morning dress, in per, or a loose cashmere morning dress, in her kitchen, when making pies was her busi-

But you have duties to the parlor as well as to the kitchen and the chamber ; and it is poor management that keeps the housework around all day. In the afternoon when the morning duties are accomplished, or in the evening, when the day's work is done, put on your fresh pretty dress, as simple as you please, of whatever fashion you prefer, but for your friends and those around you.

How many girls linger at the mirrors, studying effects, trying now a pink tie, and now the white, and again the cardinal, anxious each time to look the very prettiest in the eyes that are not likely to be too is not superfluous. And it is not a bit wrong or sinful to dress a little for your own de-light. God who makes the flowers so lovely, right hand when at home, is in request in her over and let it rise until tea time; bake in a quick and sets them in so many varieties, and with so many delicate differences and variations of shape, of color, and of perfume, is not indifferent we may be sure to the beautiful. It is right for you to be as blossom-like and flower-like as you can be, and to enjoy being so while you are in the bloom and spring of your life.

116

When you receive an invitation to a party, the first question usually is, "What shall I wear?" Sometimes you decline pleasant in-vitations to houses, in which you would meet cultivated people and make pleasant acquaintances, because you have no great variety of dress. Sometimes you stay at home from church, because you have not what you want to wear, the new dress and the new bonnet not being ready on the day that fashion has decreed a change. "They," mysterious power, that we all feel, though none can exactly define who and where it is, "they" are wearing feathers now, and you have none; or wreaths, and you have only a single rose. bud. Never stay at home from church for that reason, I beg. Think of the real mean-ing of worship, and of your own responsi-bility, and do not absent yourself from God's house because your gown and mantle are not a la mode.

But about entertainments and companies, let there be this to console you. People in general are not especially interested in you and your dress. They will like your youth, your enthusiasm, your fresh and eager enjoy ment, but they will not care very much whether you are in tulle or tarletan, or satin or velvet. To say, like Flora McFlimsey, "I've nothing to wear," when you have even one presentable dress, is to act very foolishly. Wear one dress over and over ; who will know or care, so long as you do not grossly violate the proprieties of the occasion? If you yourself tire of the monotony of your costume, you can vary it by altering trim-mings a little; but, depend upon it, the friends you visit will not be impressed one way or the other by your garments, except as they convey the nameless aroma of grace and daintiness, which is the birthright of the real lady, wherever she may be and however she may be arrayed.

Your dress should be, to some degree, the expression of your own individuality. This it cannot be, if you are contented to be the slave of the dressmaker and the abject victim of every caprice of fashion. For the rest it should be faultlessly clean. Outer cleanliness is a sort of plaque of incomparity. It had is a sort of pledge of inner purity. It should be whole ; nothing is more repulsive than a frayed and tattered gown. If you belong to the set of unfortunates who catch on every nail, and are always getting garments torn, learn to darn neatly, and make a point of doing it at once, after each catastrophe. Don't despise what may be called the finishing off, the ruffles and cuffs and edges, which should always be immaculate. And once you are dressed to your own satisfac-tion, think no more about it.—S. S. Times.

BITS OF ADVICE.

BY AUNT MARJORIE PRECEPT.

When you receive an invitation from a friend to made a visit at a specified time, it is polite to answer it as promptly as possible, and to say distinctly whether or not you can accept the offered pleasure. Your friend may have others whom it is desirable to ask after you have been entertained. Be sure you state by what boat or train you will go, you state by what boat or train you will go, and your hour of leaving home, so that there will be no uncertainty about meeting you. When nothing is mentioned as to the dura-tion of your visit, it is usual to asume that a week will be its sufficient period. Do not stay longer than that time, unless you are urged to do so. The most agreeable guest is the one who is regretted when he or she goes significant of the fact that you have now be prepared to contribute your share to it. reached the recreative part of the day. Dress Be pleased with what is done for you, and away. Always anticipate a good time, and express your pleasure. Do not be obtrusive in offering help to your host, but if an op-portunity arises for you to give assistance, do not be afraid to embrace it. There are little helpful things which come in our way at home and abroad if we have eyes to see friends' houses, for somehow she scatters sunshine wherever she goes, she is so bright, so animated and cheery. When visiting we ought to conform to the family ways. It is ill-bred to give trouble or cause annoyance. Harry's father and mother dislike extremely to have people late for meals. meals. When the Lesters were staying there they seldom heard the breakfast bell, and never came home from an outing until dinner was almost finished. Harry said he could not help it, but reproof nevertheless came upon him. Boys should not go tearing wildly through a friend's house, nor, for that matter, through their own. Grown-up ladies and gentlemen have nerves which should be considered. Of course well-behaved young people will put away their outside wraps when in a strange house, and not leave overshoes in full sight in the pasnot leave oversnoes in the same and gloves age, nor shawls, cloaks, hats and gloves be locally around the parlors. Young lying loosely around the parlors. Young girls should be careful in their use of pretty girls should be careful in their use of pretty things that adorn their chambers. Do not rumple that dainty lace pillow-sham, nor strew your clothing over every chair and sofa, to the irritation of the mistress. Do not follow your friend and host everywhere, but at the busy times of the day amuse your-selves with books or work, and remember to thank them, on leaving, for what they have done for you.—Harper's Young People.

FOLDING HANDS.

I cannot conscientiously advise you never to sit with folded hands. A great deal of to sit with folded hands. A great deal of what John Weslev called the lust of finishing work is a sin. Rest is a Christian duty Besides there is a kind of activity which amounts after all to what may be styled at best a busy idleness. Girls, you may be employed from morning till night, but if the employment leads to nothing, benefits neither yourself nor your homes, nor your inner or outer life, of what avail is your energy ? Or, if you let your surplus animation flow into a channel of curiosity concerning other people's busin ess, and so you become meddlesome and hypercritical in affairs that do not concern you nearly or remotely, might you not better lead a nun's life behind a cell door ? Once in awhile be content to sit down and Cultivate the habit of thinking in a lear sustained way, on some subject which is higher than the trimming of a dress, or the shape of a bonnet. Give your friends the satisfaction occasionally of seeing you look as if life were not all work, but as if it had a margin, now and then, for leisure. I have sometimes wished that how to sit still might I have sometimes wished that how to sit still might somehow become a compulsory part of the education of girls. If you think of it you will be surprised to see how few of your young friends have acquired the really elegant accomplishment of sitting quietly for any length of time. Even in church some people keep up a perpetual fidgeting and changing of place, which must disturb their own at-cention, as it does that of their neighbors. No human soul grows harmoniously, with out time to consider its relations to the world around it, and to God. I hope you will always improve some time by daily medita-tion.—Margaret Sangster.

To CLEAN FLOORS.—If you have a paint-ed floor, keep soap and soapsuds off it, for it spoils the brightness of the paint, makes it spons the orightness of the paint, makes it soft, and then it peels off, leaving the floor looking worse than if it had not been painted. If your floor has not been painted, keep soap off it, for it gives it a dirty, grimy look and keeps growing worse all the time. Just take clean hot water, put a teaspoonful of spirits of ammonia into a three-gallon pail of water, stir it, and with a clean, long-handled mop rub the floor all over; then wipe it off with rub the floor all over; then wipe it off with clean water. It will take a little while to get the gray out of the boards, but it will come s, but out after a time and you will find it far easier to keep your floor white and nice than it was when cleaned with soap and suds."— Woman's Journal.

TEA ROLLS .- The following will be found a good recipe for rolls : Two quarts of flour, into which rub a large spoonful of lard, one cup of cold boiled milk, one-quarter of a cup In the eyes that are not likely to be too critical. But to bid you dress in the after-noon, for your home folks : for father, who comes in at night so wearied and jaded, for mother, who so seldom gets anything new for herself, that you may have all the more for Brother Tom's or Sister Sarah's pleasure, the second s

3

CHEWING MILK .- Milk taken alone and quickly swallowed by a healthy adult coagu-lates in a dense, impenetrable curd. Held lates in a dense, impenetrable curd. Held for a minute or two in a healthy mouth, and chewed, or mingled with saliva, it is found to coagulate in a soft, custard-like mass, which enables the gastric juice to readily pen-etrate and emulsify it. So says one of our medical exchanges. It is certainly worth trying, tor it can't do any harm.

To Cook ONIONS.—It is a good plan to boil onions in milk and water ; it diminishes the strong taste of that vegetable. Chop them after they are boiled, and put them in a stew pan with a little cream, and let them stand about 15 minutes. This gives them a fine flavor, and they should be served up very hot.

PUZZLES. RIDDLE.

I have nor shape, nor form, nor state, Alack ! I nothing have but weight ; Yet sometimes in fine clothes I swing, Holding fast a precious thing. At others hide me, cold and bare, Deep in earth—pray leave me there. Should I chance through air to fly I might fright some passer by. If they yet knock off my head, Gentle and kind I'm heard instead ; If yet another head should go, I still have one—pray leave it so.

HIDDEN AUTHORS.

- 1. The cynic owl eyes all with distrust in day time.
- Where the will is there is the way.
 Where the leaves are dry, denizens of the forest repose.

REVERSIBLE WORD SQUARE.

Each word may be read four ways. 1. To cook ; 2. A characteristic of the sea ; 3. To prepare for publication ; 4. Moistens.

DIAMOND.

1. In Philadelphia. 2. Laceration. 3. bird. 4. Turning upon a pivot. 5. Small. 6. Denial. 7. In Philadelphia.

CURTAILMENTS.

Curtail to allure, have a species of salmon. Curtail contempt, have to deceive. Curtail an article of dress, have a blemish.

WORD SQUARE.

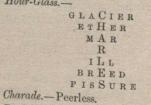

First a piece of ordnance formerly used for blowing up barricades and other defensive works. Second, a female name. Third, to feel a sharp, pricking sensation. Fourth, a state in Africa. Fifth, part of a printing-press. Sixth, having a melancholy appearance.

METAPLASM.

First I am one of Shakespeare's kings; change my head and have a highly-prized fruit ; change again and have precious ; again and have an animal ; again and have to cauterize; again and have a boundary; another change and have one of the passions ; again and have the use of one of the senses ; again and have the use of one of the senses; again and have to consume slowly; again and have apparatus; again and have adjacent; again and have a drop of water; again and have part of a century; one more change—the fourteenth and last—and have the end, or hindmost hindmost.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES OF FEBRUARY 15. Charade.-Rasp-berry. Transposition. - Love thy neighbor as thyself. Rebus

The season is backward. Hour-Glass .-

Buried Cities .- One in each line. Tyre, Leith, Pau, Derby, Waterloo, Rome, Lee, Ghent, Gath, Agra, Perth, Kew, Stoke, Sedan,

行

NORTHERN MESSENGER.

I

ONLY BUTTONS!

CHAPTER III.-(Continued.)

They were so much engrossed with each other, that Tom did not notice for some little time the shy, awkward figure, standing, half turned away, at the gate. "Holloa, Jim! is that you?" said Tom. "Come on, old fellow, and sit down a bit with me."

now he had got Buttons back; and he would, I believe, have blacked the boots of his worst enemy. But Jim still hesitated; if he would like to run away.

In the first place, he was shocked to see how pale and ill Tom looked, for he had no idea that he had been ill even; and then he knew he had done him a great injury. So altogether, Jim looked unhappy and ashamed, and sat down beside Tom very reluctantly, turning his face away. At last it all came out.

With red, burning cheeks, and a broken voice, Jim told Tom the whole story; how he had been tempted to steal the dog and get the sovereign; how he had fought against the temptation day after day and night after night, till it seemed to tear him in pieces, and he could hold out no longer. He told Tom exactly how he had got hold of Buttons, how he had put him in the bag, how nearly he had run back from Major Browne's lodge-gate: and somehow, when he had once begun to tell the story, it seemed easy to go on.

Then he related his adventures in Bristol; how he had tried to get work at one place after another; how every one told him he was too small and weaklooking to be of any use, besides knowing nothing; and how quickly his sovereign had melted away.

But he said as little as possible about this, and Tom could see by Jim's worn-out clothes, and and scraping, hard work, and little, if any, food, he got together a sovereign, and walked all the twenty miles.

There he saw Major Browne, who had, fortunately, just return. ed home, and Jim screwed up his courage and told him the whole story, and gave him the sovereign, begging him to let him take the little dog back to his own master.

"That you certainly shall do," said Major Browne, "for the dog has never been happy with me.

"Of course you weren't, Buttons," said Tom, looking at him proudly, and rubbing his cheek against the little silk ears, whispering into them, "If you only knew how glad I am to have you back !"

To which Buttons responded by giving him a good lick, and by creeping even closer into his arms. "Tom, can you ever forgive me?" asked Jim, earnestly, look-Tom did not care for anything ing him full in the face for the first time.

"Of course I can !" answered Tom, quickly. "Why, old chap! you've had a much worse time thing but skin and bone; and I an effort, Tom answered,-

"Did Susie tell you, then, that influence each has had on the had gone away?" other has been of good to both of "Yes," said Tom.

"Did she tell you the very day left home?" Jim went on eagerly, almost under his breath.

"Yes, she did," answered Tom. "Then, Tom," he said, seizing him by the arm, "you must have guessed about your dog; you must have thought it was I that stole object for hiding was a thing, not Buttons; you must have known I a person; and a small thing, morewas the thief !" he added slowly, letting the word fall as if it were ary parlor. burning him. Every one knows the nooks he grew very red, and looked as of it than I have. You look not- to Jim for a long time; then, with the nooks and corners in a wide

"YOU'VE HAD A MUCH WORSE TIME OF IT."

pinched haggard look, that he had, am sure," he added, laughing, "if Yes, Jim, I did think it might, long dressing-gown, over which

Jim smiled, too. He was very, very tired; but he did not mind way back to Melcombe, nearly that, now he had confessed every-twenty miles. It was the great burden of sin lying on his mind that had worn and wearied him more than both his nands, a his eyes he said,he began to feel less tired.

> "By-the-by, Jim," said Tom, I have got your blackbird. Susie brought it me to take care of for you, and I can't tell you what a friend he has been to me."

passed a very wretched time of you were to take off your coat you be you; but I tried to put the fell the fair, silky curls, and, alto-it. But by dint of great saving would fall to pieces."

And do you mean to say you never told any one what you holding out a chubby hand for thought about me ?" And seeing the purse. Tom shake his head, Jim seized both his hands, and with tears in in ages; and it is me now," rea-

"Tom, I can never repay you for all this kindness !"

Those words were a sufficient reward to Tom for having fought and conquered the suspicion that Freddy was good-natured, and had crept into his mind.

Jim flushed up and said quickly, lads were inseparable, and the little faces were soon hidden them.

E. P.

HIDE-AND-SEEK.

It was drawing-room "Hideand-Seek, at which the children were playing; that is to say, the over, suited to the size of an ordin-

Tom remained silent-it seemed and corners in such are not like range of fields, and gardens, and out-buildings.

Under the corner of the hearth-rug, or tablecloth, or among the folds of a curtain, is a capital hiding-place for a thimble or purse, but would scarcely conceal anything much larger, to say nothing of the person of a little boy or girl.

The party-the party engaged in the game, I mean, for we will not count the father, mother, and grown-up sister, sitting by-consisted of three children: Frank, about seven; Freddy, nearly six; and Annie, only just four.

They had come down from the nursery after the late dinner, and, providing they were good, might amuse themselves as they liked till bedtime. And they were good-for the present, at any rate; but then nothing had happened to vex any of them. They took it by turns to hide, the others shutting their eyes and covering their faces so as not to see. Each one had played fairly, and there had been no dispute.

"Oh, here comes Nellie!" they cried out together, as nurse opened the door, and the youngest child of the house toddled in-a wee, dimpled little child not yet three years old. She was all undressed, ready for bed, and wore over her night-clothes a

"Tom, you are a good fellow ! hardly be seen.

"Let me hide," said the child.

"Wait for your turn. We go soned Freddy.

"No, me! I want to!" was the baby answer. "Yes, let her; she is such a lit-gave in at once, running with the From that day to this those two others to the sofa, where a row of

4

Meanwhile Nelly walked about that it scarcely hid the green in his hand. It rested on Johnny to those on tip-toe, uncertain where to leather; only, as we all know, we hide the purse.

her work-basket.

triumph, feeling that a very secret hide once more. place had been chosen.

and about in an moment, but no seize, when her mother gently kept warm in the frosty autumn one had ventured hitherto to in- said,terfere with Jane's work, so it was a long time before the corner in the basket was searched and because she is so little, you know?" the purse brought out.

"Now it's me !" cried Amy. "No, it's me !" said Freddy.

cause she's so small. You must to grow like Him, I am sure.' let him hide now."

could bear, and she burst into a and how He was kind to every flood of tears.

"That is naughty," said mother. "It is only waiting just for once, and then your turn will come. Now, hide your face on my knee, and don't cry, dear."

But Amy could not so easily get over her trouble, and she still come to us from Sunday. pouted and sobbed.

the nursery and let the others play without you." And mother led the little girl out of the room.

"Cuckoo !" cried out Freddy, for himself.

Amy may come back," kindly suggested Frank.

"Hide! hide! hide !" and present- and finding each bush more ly little Amy came back, clinging heavily laden with fruit than the the feeble life in him. to mother's gown, and rather last, till evening came, and his tearful still, but ready to be coaxed little head grew puzzled. Was by her brothers into helping in home up here or down there? the search, and very soon gaining through that tangle of briers, or life. But his children cared for like father. back her smiles.

" She is little, too," whispered Frank, spying the purse under and trees, all nearly alike. The father's newspaper, "so I will let poor little man tried this way and her find it." "Am I hot or cold?" that, but home came no nearer. he asked roguishly. Freddy cried "Hot! hot! burning hot !" Amy made a dart toward in the wooden hut began to grow the heated spot and pounced alarmed, searching the woods and upon the hidden treasure. She beating the bushes, and crying clapped her hands in delight, and for Johnny everywhere.

brightest of bright faces. "Shut night, and the next day, and and does not regret that he has your eyes, every one of you, the day after that, and for three, while 1 find a place."

and then Amy appealed to then every one, except the father are six of the Indian nations re-father for advice. Great was her and mother, shook their heads, presented on this reserve, includdelight when he slipped the purse and would have given up the ing the Mohawks, the Cayugas, the into her own little pocket, and search. But the poor parents Onondagas, and the Tuscaroras; it was to attend the fires. The loud her cry of "Cuckoo! cuckoo! went on, searching with their his interpreter speaks all those King immediately got up, and cuckoo!" as she slipped away to worn-out eyes, calling with their languages, but being a self-supthe other end of the room.

"You'll never find it this time," said father.

And they never did. Search was found. as they might, it never once oc-generally find where we look. weak-only just alive. "Here !" whispered sister Jane, So Amy asked at last, "Do you finding a nice little snug hole in all give up ?" and as they all did milk, and carried him home. By- him for two dollars a week. He er work-basket. "Ready!" called out Nelly in laws of the game, her turn to could answer their questions. low estate," and only longing for

The three seekers were all up fortune which Amy was about to ways berries. But how had he "Can't you be generous, like Freddy, and give up to Baby; It certainly was a trial, and the child hesitated a moment.

"It is nice to give up," went "Yes; it is certainly Freddy's on mother. "Jesus gave up all in the neighborhood. There were turn," decided the mother; "he sorts of good things to make little gave up, you know, to Baby, be- children happy. You would like

This was just the right appeal. It was more than poor Amy Amy loved to hear about Jesus, one; she felt that nothing could be so nice as to be something like Him. So she yielded now, with a perfect grace.

> from my little story of "Hide-and man to share his lair. Seek," it will be one more help

"Well, then, you must go up to THE KIND BROWN DOG.

A SETTLER'S STORY.

In the wilds of Canada, where the settlers' wooden huts lie many who had chosen his hiding-place miles apart, and the ground is covered with thick forests, a little have turned on her little Johnny "Let us call at the door that boy went astray one autumn day.

So the boys ran and called, on and on, picking and eating, past that clump of pines?

Alas! there were so many briers And as He was indeed lost.

Meantime the father and mother Frank was fully rewarded for his by-and-by the far-away neighbors en Reserve, in the county of Brant, kind action. Eame to help, and the little Ontario, Canada. He seems curred to any of the three seekers rested a moment by a grim old employ his whole time, visiting the that a possible hiding-place could fallen tree. Did it seem to stir in its tribes, attending their feasts, &c,; KEEP your ears open to all be on Amy's own little person. hollow depths? He peered into we could do a good work. Much that is worth hearing, and closed And yet the pocket was so small the hole trembling, and then put prayer and sympathy are due to all that is not.

-warm, breathing, but very

This was a great piece of good seven long days? Berries-alnights? Oh, he had slept in the tree, and a kind dog had kept them. We shall gladly be the him warm by lying near him; a channel of forwarding assistance brown dog, a big dog.

The neighbors looked at each other; the father looked at the mother: they all knew every dog very few, and all had masters. Notone dog answered to this description; not one settler owned a big brown dog, or had missed one in all that long anxious week. The hollow tree where Johnny had lain with his warm bedfellow all those seven nights was then carefully inspected, and the conclusion arrived at as certain, that a If we all learn the same lesson kindly bear had allowed the little

This was the big brown dog which had warmed and cherished lost Johnny! The mother shuddered as she clasped her little boy in her arms, and shut him closely in the wooden hut, for ting gaily, and the old woman's bears in Canada, or indeed any- face beaming with gratitude and where else, are not safe bedfellows, pleasure. and the big brown dog might and made a breakfast of him.

He meant only to pick berries. But God willed it otherwise-close to home; but he sauntered willed that the fierce beast should lie peacefully by the little child a great, soft blanket, to keep had met you carrying a clothes-he feeble life in him. basket! How could you do it?"

Johnny grew up a strong, lusty settler, a backwoodsman able to tell many a stirring tale of settler am. I am a Bible-gentleman, nothing so much as to hear from father in the winter's evenings the story of the kind brown dog. -Sunday.

AMONG THE NORTH AMERI-CAN INDIANS.

Mr. Benjamin Needham has settled down among the North And American Indians of the Ohswek-Ontario, Canada. He seems "Now me !" she said, with the frightened company searched all happy in his work among them, turned away from evangelizing four, five, six days after, but still among his Christian fellow-coun-The eyes were obediently shut, there was no Johnny. And trymen for their sakes. There coals that was required, rang the tired voices, groping under tangled porting helper, cannot give his On the seventh day the father salary, how profitably I could self."

poor, lost, trampled people !" Our brother is living in a little room, 6 ft. by 12 ft., given They drew him out, gave him him by an Indian, who also feeds What had he lived on all those more means that he may benefit them the more effectually. He wishes to go with his interpreter to visit the Indians of the prairies, and to establish schools among for this mission to the Red Indians, to our brother Needham, who is carrying it on in simple faith in God, and on his own responsibility, in obedience to the command, "Preach the glad tidings to every creature."

A BIBLE-GENTLEMAN.

It was a hot July morning, and old Mrs. Dawes, carrying the clean linen home to the Rectory, thoughther basket seemed heavier than usual. Johnnie Leigh, the son of the village doctor, overtook her half-way up the hill.

"Why, mother," said he, "that's more than you can manage! Let me have one handle, and then we'll trot it up easily enough.'

Away they went, Johnnie chat-

"The idea !" said Fanny Leigh, who came down the lane just in time to see her brother and Mrs. Dawes turn in at the Rectory gate. 'You are a gentleman, Johnnie! Supposing Lady Blake Johnnie whistled.

"A_gentleman !- Of course I

Fanny looked puzzled, so Johnnie explained.

"Father said that a Bible-gentleman is always civil to poor people as well as rich ones; and poor old Mrs. Dawes is my "neighbor" just as much as lady Blake.". Sunday.

THE KING AND THE SER-VANT.

When George III., King of England, was sitting alone one day in his palace-library, he rang the bell for coals. A page who came, as soon as he heard it was bell himself. The King asked him why, when he replied it was for the old footman, whose duty put the coals on himself.

"There, sir," said his Majesty, bushes, prying into hollow trees. whole time to evangelizing. Mr. giving the page the coal-scuttle, Johnny must be found. And he Needham writes; "If some friend "never ask an old man to do what would enable me to pay him a you are better able to do your-

KEEP your ears open to all

5

NORTHERN MESSENGER.

C

The Family Circle.

TELL ME YE WINGED WINDS.

Tell me, ye winged winds, That round my pathway roar, Do ye not know some spot Where mortals weep no more-

Some lone and pleasant dell, Some valley in the west, Where, free from toil and pain, The weary soul may rest? The loud wind dwindled to a whisper low.

And sighed for pity as it answered, "No !"

Tell me, thou mighty deep, Whose billows round me play, Know'st thou some favored spot,

Some island far away,

Where weary man may find The bliss for which he sighs,-Where sorrow never lives,

And friendship never lives, The loud waves, rolling in perpetual flow, Stopped for a while and sighed to answer, "No!"

And thou, serenest moon, That with such lovely face,

Dost look upon the earth, Asleep in night's embrace, Tell me, in all thy round

Hast thou not seen some spot

Where miserable man May find a happier lot?

Behind a cloud the moon withdrew in woe, And a voice, sweet but sad, responded, "No !"

Tell me, my secret soul, O tell me, Hope and Faith,

Is there no resting-place From sorrow, sin, and death? Is there no happy spot Where mortals may be blessed, Where grief may find a balm, And weariness a rest?

And weariness a rest ?

Faith, Hope and Love, best boons to mortals

Waved their bright wings and whispered, "Yes, in Heaven !"

A "OFFSCOURING."

BY ELEANOR KIRK.

"Well, yes, ma'am, I have stole !" "Why, John !"

"You asked me, didn't you ?"

"Yes, I asked you !" the mission teacher replied, a sad, almost disgusted expression on her sweet, young face. 'What did you ask me for, if you didn't want me to tell you? I could 'a' lied !" the boy went on in a stolid sort of a way, the boy went on in a stolid sort of a way, and yet with a ring of feeling in his voice. "No, you couldn't, Johnny," the teacher answered with a smile, "because you pro-mised, you remember, that you would al-ways tell the truth to me." "Well, I didn't go back on it, did I ?" "No, Johnny. Have you any objection to telling me how sten you have taken things that didn't belong to you ??

things that didn't belong to you ?"

"Mebbe I couldn't remember them all," the boy replied, "but I never ifted anything very partikeler. Once when the old woman where I hang out got sick, and cried a blue streak for oranges, and nobody had any money to get 'm, I asked the old cove that kept the grocery store to trust me for a couple till the next day. He wouldn't do it, and that night I stole six from him." "Why, Johnny !"

"Why Johnny ! "Why didn't he let me have 'em, then ?" the boy went on doggedly. "I'd 'a' paid him, 'cause I said I would. Anyhow the old woman got well off them oranges. "Then you are not sorry you took them ?"

the teacher enquired. "Well, the old- woman had to have the

her. upon him.

"Don't make me tell you any more, please, ma'am," he said, drooping his eyes, while his face flushed scarlet, "I ain't no-no go to fret about what I do. I was kinder dragged into this place, else I'd never a bothered you." him to step in again soon, which the lad pro-By nightfall these "back debts," as Johnny Hen the gentlemen separated, the one who "What name did you call yourself?" the teacher enquired. "I didn't understand you." "Granny Leeds always said I was a off-scouring, and so I am." "What is an offscouring, John ?"

"Oh! the leavin's of something that ain't no good." "Granny Leeds, as you call her, was very much mistaken, and you are very much mistaken about yourself, Johnny," the teacher replied. "You are not an offscouring, but God's own child, and he is giving you a chance to make something of yourself. How much do you think the things are worth that you have taken, in all, Johnny ?"

"Them oranges was worth four cents apiece when I took 'em : that's twenty-four ; and then two loaves of bread I lifted for two fellows that froze their feet last winter, and a mackerel to make the bread go down. It's awful tough to eat bread without nothing with it : and then a base-ball that was worth fifty cents, and all them things would make near hand to a dollar. I don't remember anything else now." "Well, John, I shall give you a dollar, and I want you to go to those places and pay for all those things." "Then I'll have to own up," the boy in-terrupted, in his bewilderment relapsing at once into slang.

"Wouldn't you feel better to confess, Johnny ?" the young lady enquired, not a little troubled at the effect of her words. For a moment the boy seemed lost in thought, and then lifting a frank face to his com-panion said, "I ain't never felt partikeler bad about any of them things 'cept the base-ball, and that I could 'a' done without, but if you say so, Miss Lee, I'll give the whole thing away : only as I ain't lifted anything lately, and don't never mean to again, they would always suspicion me, and make me out a thief when I ain't no such thing. Don't you think 'twould do, ma'am, if I dropped the money in them places so they'd be sure to find it ? If you don't think so I'll blow the whole thing, if it takes me to the Island." "What will you do, Johnny, if somebody. a moment the boy seemed lost in thought,

"What will you do, Johnny, if somebody needs bread and oranges, and you haven't any money to buy them with ?" "That's a sticker, ma'am. I dunno."

"And it wouldn't be strange if something of that kind were to happen any day ?" "No, ma'am. There's something putty gen'rally to pay with the folks I know." "Well, Johnny, I will tell you what to do," the teacher replied. "Here is my card, and when any of your acquaintances are in trouble I wish you would come directly to me; and if anything is amiss with you at any time be sure and send a messenger. You had better come up to-morrow, anyway, Johnny, for I want to give you some warm clothes, and then it will be easy for you to find the place the next time."

Johnny hung his head. This kindness had overpowered him, and not a word could "I didn't mean to hurt you, Johnny,"

"I didn't mean to hurt you, Johnny," the tender-hearted teacher hyrried to say. "You are willing I should help you, are you not?" "I guess you had better let me git, now, Miss Lee," the boy replied, huskily. "You could knock me down with a eye-winker. You needn't worry about my remembering all you've said; but just now I'm all broke up,"

up." "And I can trust you, Johnny ?" the lady enquired. "It is a go, ma'am," the boy answered,

Miss Lee tucked a dollar bill in his hand, and Johnny hurried out of the building. It took considerable tact and skill, as well as time, for the boy to satisfactorily manage the business which his teacher had provided the business which his teacher had provided the money for. For instance, the grocer from whom he had "lifted" the oranges had sold out to another man, and Johnny was obliged to hunt him up. He was at last "The diamonds were all of the first water." oranges, and somebody had to get 'em for found, poor and ill, and the boy without a moment's hesitation confessed the theft and The teacher's face was very grave, and as her companion looked up he saw the tears it thirty cents," he said, "and that'll be a in her eyes, a sight which had a curious effect little interest. If I wouldn't like to give you five dollars then you may shoot me for a crow."

naively called them, were all settled, and then, after a scanty meal, the boy started out with his evening papers. About a quarter to eight he had sold out, and then, as fast as his fleet feet would carry him, he hurried to the neighborhood of the Academy of Music to watch the people go into the building. It was opera night, and this was one of Johnny's greatest pleasures; and so with his back to the lamp-post, he gave himself up to the delight of watching the gay throng. Johnny wondered what it would be like to drive round in luxurious carriages and have plenty of money to spend on fine clothes. He thought of the bread and herring he had eaten for his supper, and tried to imagine what it would be like to have turkey and cranberry sauce every day. Every Christ-mas Johnny had turkey and cranberry sauce for his dinner, and he knew from experience how nice they were. He had once ridden in an ambulance with a friend of his—a news-hov—who had heen run over he are boy-who had been run over by an express waggon, and this was his nearest approach to a carriage ride that Johnny had ever enjoyed. He wondered, as he watched these happy, gayly dressed people, why it was that some people had all they wanted while others were cold and hungry, and sometimes starved to death. This was not the first time that Johnny had been perplexed with such thoughts, but they had never made him feel quite so uncomfortable as on this occasion. He called to mind the warm underclothing and tidy jacket and pants which Miss Lee had given him that day, and tried to com-fort himself with the thought that there was one person in the world who cared for him.

There had been a heavy fall of snow that day, and as Johnny, still absorbed with his thoughts, started to cross the street he saw something sparkle in the snow at the side of the crossing. There had been a rush of car-riages, and a few had not been able to pull up at the curb. As he picked it up he saw that it was an ornament in the shape of a cross, and studded with diamonds.

Johnny knew they were "shiners," as he called them, as soon as he looked at them, so with his heart in his throat he tucked at them, so with his heart in his throat he tucked the precious jewel in his pocket, still holding it firmly in his hand. Johnny's ambition had been to start a coffee and cake establishment where newsboys could be entertained at low rates. For more than a year he had nursed this object, and here was a chance to carry it into execution. There were nine stones in the cross. Disposing of one at a time so as to avoid suspicion, there was money enough to last him "for years and years" he told himself. It puzzled him to know where he could keep the shiners, for there wasn't a soul among his acquaintances whom he dare trust with the secret. Not until he had crept into his poverty-stricken bed, with his treasure his poverty-stricken bed, with his treasure carefully hidden among the straw, did the thought occur that he ought to try and find an owner for it. Then followed a hard battle between the natural honesty of the lad and his very natural desire for creature comforts. The person who could wear a gold thing like that "chock full of shiners," he said to himself, "must have money enough to buy more shiners." Here he was, cold and hungry half the time, with no prospect before him but to be always hungry, if not always cold; and here were these "shiners" always coid; and here were these "shiners" which would set him up in business and give him a chance to help the boys. Johnny honestly wanted to help the boys. Why should he find the owner of this cross when he had nothing and the owner had everything? This fight continued until it was time for the lad to start out for his morning papers. All through the busiest part of the forenoon the battle still raged, and the news boy's thoughts were so occupied with his new-found riches that he almost forgot to attend to his customers. About half-past ten, as he crossed City Hall Park, he noticed a gentleman in earnest conversation with another gentleman, and as he passed he heard

"You will advertise it, won't you ?" his companion enquired.

"Don't make me tell you any more, please, ma'am," he said, drooping his eyes, while his face flushed scarlet, "I ain't no-thing but a offscouring anyhow, and it ain't shook the boy's hand heartily and invited thing but a offscouring anyhow, and it ain't shook the boy's hand heartily and invited the boy's heart be bo

When the gentlemen separated, the one who was interested in the diamonds entered the City Hall, and after a little enquiry Johnny discovered that this gentleman held a very honorable office in the city department. After finding this out the lad took a turn round the Park to think it over again.

"Granny Leeds said I was a offscouring, and Miss Lee says I ain't," he argued to himself. "If I keep these shiners Granny'll be right and Miss Lee'll be wrong. She said the Lord was giving me a chance to make something of myself. Well, now, the question is, am I or am I not a offscouring? If I keep these shiners I am, if I give them up I ain't. Well, I ain't!" and with these words on his lips Johnny started for the gentleman's office. Nothing daunted, he entered, and presented himself at the desk. "Some of your folks have lost something, ain't they ?" he asked.

ain't they is a sked. "They have," said the gentleman. "Will yer honor tell me what it is like ?" "It is a gold cross set with diamonds," and the gentleman described the relative position of the stones. It was lost either in the Aca-demy of Music last night, or on the way to or from that place." or from that place."

Johnny's coat was off in a twinkling, and with a rip at the stitches which confined his with a rip at the stitcnes which commed his treasure he took it out and put on his coat again. "I s'pose this is it," he said handing it to the gentleman. "I wanted to keep them shiners awful bad," he continued. "They'd 'a' set me up in business, them "They'd 'a' set me up in business, them shiners would, but you see I couldn't get to be such a offscouring as that, though I have been trying to be a thief all night long. If I was your folks," he went on, "I'd get a stronger string to hold them shiners, for fear they'd be gone for good and all next time."

"What is your name?" the gentleman enquired, as the lad, with his cap in his hand, stood modestly before him. "John Resney," the boy replied. "Have you a father and mother?" was the part question next question.

next question. "Nobody, yer honor, but myself." "Which would you prefer to do, Johnny," the gentleman next enquired ; "go into busi-ness or go to school ?" "Why, I would rather go to school, ten to one," said Johnny, "but there ain't no show for that."

"We will see," said the gentleman. "Will you come into my office, Johnny, until I see what is best to be done?" "Yes, sir," Johnny replied, the tears start-

"Yes, sit, Johnny Tephed, the tears state ing to his eyes. "I shall want you to go home with me in an hour or two, and give my wife her diamonds, and see what she thinks of you." "All right," said Johnny, brushing away the tears. "Anything to do now, yer honor?"

The following Sunday Johnny went to the Mission School for the last time, and in such good clothes that Miss Lee hardly knew him. The grateful boy told his teacher all that had happened, and concluded as fol-and that had happened, and concluded as fol-lows: "I am going away to school to-morrow, and if I've got the learning stuff in me I can go to college; but, Miss Lee, if it hadn't been for you and God I should have been a off-scouring all the days of my life."—Christian Union.

AN AMERICAN GIRL'S LAMENT.

"I wish I was rich," exclaimed Agnes. "I suppose you wish to live in an elegant home, dress magnificently, receive and enter-tain elegantly," said Mary. "Not at all." "Perhaps your desires take a higher range," said Jenny. "You would like to have your home filled with beautiful paintings and other works of art, to indulge your taste for music, to have well stocked green-houses and conservatories?" Agnes shook her head. "I know," said Kate. "You would make that tour round the world you have been so anxious for, ever since you read Dr. Field's "I wish I was rich," exclaimed Agnes. the words "diamond cross" spoken. Johnny slackened his pace and listened. "The diamonds were all of the first water," the gentleman said. "It was a present to my wife from her father, and she is terribly cut up at the loss. I don't suppose we shall ever find it." that I love the privileges and opportunities that money brings, but to me the dearest privilege, next to the luxury of doing good, is the independence it confers upon its pos-sessor."

"Really !" exclaimed Kate. "I did not

Americans, chartered and sealed by the most oppressively hot. The mercury in the Declaration of Independence." "By no thermometer rose higher and higher, and to means," returned Agnes. "In the very face of the Declaration, we have in this free country the very worst aristocracy in the world —that of money." "Money," replied Kate, "cannot buy goodness, refinement, cultivation or any of the graces of the mind and heart." "I know thet" and Amer. "I know that," said Agnes; "I am only speaking of the perfect independence it allows its posthe perfect independence it allows its pos-sessors. If they live in an elegant home, dress in the latest fashion, &c.,—why, they display their taste. While on the contrary if they live and dress plainly, it is only a proof of their independence. In fine, they proof of their independence. In fine, they may confuse their tenses and double their negatives, may never have heard of Milton, and think Shakespeare to be the name of a new plant, possibly of a mineral, eat with their knives, dress in colors at war with each other-all is right, because they are rich. While we have to wear heavy suits in summer and take ourselves out to freeze in winter, because the claims of society require it of us."

"Here, Agnes, you are wrong," said Aunt Susan. "You may not be able, for the lack of wealth, to live always as you please, yet the privilege of dressing in comfort and with reference to the season is certainly yours."

"By no means, my dear good Aunt Susan. Now, let me explain. When I was visiting in the city last winter, my friend Julia Newbold sent me word that she had engaged a carriage to return some stylish calls upon their fashionable reception days; and as the obligation was mutual, she would call for me. On the appointed day, which was bitterly cold, I dressed myself in my blach silk suit, over which I threw my cloth cloak, which every one says is so becoming to me; then I put on my felt bonnet, trimmed with velvet. When Julia came, I saw disappointment in her face. 'Am I not dressed suitably? I enquired. 'Why, dear Agnes, it is not exactly the dress for carriage and reception calls. Why do you not put on that pretty mauve silk so becoming to you? and then you could wear a large India shawl and a set tors of ti of ermine; or, if you have not the ermine, seal-skin might do.' And without waiting for my reply, Julia told me she would attend to a little commission of her own, and would be back in a few moments, leaving me just time enough to change my dress. So I arrayed myself in my mauve silk which, being intended to do double duty, is cut pompadour waist and elbow sleeves. As I had no large India shawl and neither ermine nor seal-skin, I was obliged to employ the best substitute, which was a stella with camel's-hair border. My concert hat is only a white lace frame, covered with pansies and mauve ribbon. A nice dress for the therm-ometer at six above zero! When Julia returned she smiled in approbation, and with a 'Now, you do look fit to be seen,' we took our places in the carriage. I do not have our places in the carriage. I do not know how I looked, but I never suffered so with the cold in my life ; my ears tingled, the end of my turned-up nose was as red as my shawl, and my teeth chattered so it was impossible for me to hold any connected con-versation. While calling on the fashionable Mrs. Grantley, that rich Quakeress, Mrs. Morris, was there in her drab suit. Above all, that great millionnaire, Mrs. Harding, came in her elegant coach. She was dressed in a cachemere dress, an ulster cloak, and a velvet hat; for she was rich and could afford to dress so. While speaking of the severity of the cold weather as well as my stiffened muscles would allow, Mrs. Morris, with grave irony in her Quaker dialect, said to me Does thy dress keep thee warm ?' while Mrs. Harding looked me through with her discriminating eyes and said in words of sympathy, in which were encased a decided sneer, 'Poor child.'

make matters worse, there was that rich Mrs. Walker (whose husband holds such a splen-did position under Government as, in addition to his enormous salary, to have made a large fortune out of it) dressed in a linen duster with a large shade-hat over her face. Her excuse for her apparel was, that she could never bear to hold an umbrella or any other article in her hand when not in the carriage. So there she was in her shade hat and duster, the star of the occasion, every one seeming to feel honored by and grateful for her presence.

"Now I am through," said Agnes. "but one thing I wish understood—I do not envy Mesdames Grantley, Morris, Harding, Walker, & Co. the velvets and satins, the silks and laces, the diamonds and furs that their wealth brings, but the independence that allows them to wear ulsters and cachemere in winter, shade-hats and linen dusters in summer.'

"My dear Agnes," said Aunt Susan, "I think you are entirely wrong. Why should not this independence be yours? Why should you, the daughter of a clergyman, a person of education and refinement, submit to a thraldom which you feel to be oppressive, even if you have not wealth? In neither case which you have quoted were you properly dressed, for the first principle of taste in dressis comfort. You went shivering in winter at the risk of ruining your health (for out-raged nature always avenges herself), to call upon some persons of great wealth and posiupon some persons of great wealth and posi-tion, and who probably, as your personal suffering must have been apparent to all, only criticised your folly. Why should you be almost overpowered by the heat and dust of summer, attired in a heavy silk, when Mrs. Walker could dress in such great comfort because, as you say, she was the possessor of a large fortune made (as she herself may see in the sharp criticisms of the daily press) in in the sharp criticisms of the daily press) in over-pay in the office of trust with which her husband has been invested by his fellow-

"As a nation we are almost servile imita-tors of the rich. Wealth has entirely too much power, and there is truth in your assertion that our moneyed aristocracy is the most tyrannical in the world. A few mag-nates lead the way and we follow on. We see too much with other men's eyes; we hear with their ears; we eat with their palates; we follow the fashion set by them in the choice of our churches.

"Now, my dear girls, be truly independent. Be contented with your lot in life and willing

Be contented with your lot in life and willing to appear just yourselves, endeavoring to ful-fil all life's duties in that station in which it has pleased God to call you ; and your lives will be both useful and happy. "In ourselves maintaining, and regarding in others, the simple standing that God has given, there is a native dignity and a moral elevation which sets aside these false as-sumptions of pride and vanity, gives an influence over all with whom we are thrown, and enables us to fill with integrity and and enables us to fill with integrity and honor those earthly positions to which God has called us."

"Thank you, dear Aunt Susan," exclaim-ed Agnes. "I feel you are right. Now, for my part, I shall abide by the maxims of the Declaration of Independ ince and regard myself as 'free and equal;' and so, even if not rich, I feel as if I too can afford to dress plainly."—Christian Intelligencer.

THE CABMAN'S FAITH.

There are nine children in the family, the eldest of whom is dying in consumption; the father is a cab-driver, and, through many being away from London, has for some weeks been able to earn little more than sufficient to feed his horses, leaving scarcely anything for his poor wife and their nine children. They would actually have starved had not the promises, as of old, borne the pressure child.' "When once more alone in the carriage with Julia, as I quoted Mrs. Harding as an example for comfortable and seasonable dress I was silenced by, 'Why, of course you can-not expect to imitate Mrs. Harding; she is rich and can do just as she pleases.' "And then this summer when invited to "And then this summer when invited to "And then this summer when invited to that great fair and musicale at — Park, I put on my pretty figured linen suit and gypsy hat, but I was stopped by, 'Agnes, that dress is not at all suitable ; you will meet strangers, gay and fashionable people.' So I was obliged to put on my heavy new suit, all lined, and my dress bonnet—while with my parasol, and linen duster to wear on the cars and ferry, my hands and arms were too occupied to use my fan, though the heat was answer to his wife's enquiry as to what he should do, he exclaimed, "I don't know." But she knew where her great strength lay. The mighty God of Jacob could give relief, And she prayed for herself and husband. And that mighty heart that ever beats in unison with His children's wants sent down this answer: "Them that honor Me I will honor." That was enough for her. Her great Provider demanded simple faith, a childlike trust in His bare word of promise, childlike trust in His bare word of promise, and the pledge He gave was in that event success was certain. The husband returned at dinner-time. "Well, what have you decided to do?" asked the wife. "To abide by God's Word, and take all risks," said the husband. "Thank God," exclaimed the wife "my prayer is answered!" And so they rested, two faithful children of a promise-keeping God. A lady in the neighborhood, who had heard of the tempting offer, but had not heard of their decision, yet knowing had not heard of their decision, yet knowing the Christian character of the cabman in converse with a friend upon the subject, ex-claimed, "He'll never do it;" and the blessed Spirit, who came to the poor mother on her knees, and gave that pledge of help in the text, "Them that honor Me I will honor," now came down into the heart of this other daughter of Heaven, and laid upon her this from the lips of the Saviour : "Verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." The King's word was enough. She immediately commissioned the friend to go and visit the stricken home and see how matters went. This was Satur-day afternoon. The father had again gone out, but the wife remained within. "How goes the matter?" asked the visitor. "Oh ! we are determined not to accept it," ex-claimed the godly woman. "We and the children will starve, if needs be; but we will not break God's commandment. He pro-mises, 'Them that honor Me I will honor.'" "And He has honored you," rejoined the visitor; "what would the fare have been?" "Eight shillings," replied the wife, and drawing from his pocket the exact sum, he plac d it on the table, returning home from that cottage with his own love to Christ in-flamed by "the luxury of doing good." After a little while the husband came back. "God has been as good as His word," ex-claimed the wife... 'Them that honor Me I will honor "—and she drew out the eight bright shillings, the reward of their fidelity to God—the pay without the labor, the food without the sin, the two days provided for, and provided for fifteen hours sooner than would have been the case had they yielded to the tempter.—Fanny Jones, in Word and Work. children will starve, if needs be ; but we will Work.

THIRTEEN WAYS OF BEING HAPPY. Happy is the man whom God correcteth ; for He maketh sore and bindeth up Happy is that people whose God is the Lord.

Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help. Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. Happy is the man that feareth alway

Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth. He that hath mercy on the poor, happy is he Whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he. He that keepeth the law, happy is he. If ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ.

happy are ye. Behold we count them happy which encccupied to use my fan, though the heat was cast away the bread of two days from your prostrate at the foot of the Cross, seeking out.

household." The struggle was great, and, in | peace and pardon from the Saviour he had rejected. And now he is among those who testify to the truth of Christ's religion-to his promise "Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out."-N. Y. Observer.

THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH. Shadows vanish with the light, Brightness comes with dawning : Sorrow lasteth but a night, Joy comes in the morning.

Watch then, children of the day ! Clouds may gather thickly; Heaven and earth must pass away: Jesus cometh quickly.

S. L.

Question Corner.-No. 6.

Sunday.

Answers to these questions should be sent in as soon as possible and addressed EDITOR NORTHERN MESSENGER. It is not necessary to write out the question, give merely the number of the question and the answer. In writing letters always give clearly the name of the place where you live and the in thals of the province in which it is situated.

BIBLE QUESTIONS.

- 61. What became of the ten spies who brought back an untrue report of the land of Canaan?
- 62. What punishment was sent to Korah, Dathan and Abiram when they re-belled against Moses and Aaron?
 63. How many were consumed by fire at
- the same time for offering incense ?
- 64. When these men were consumed the Israelites still murmured against Moses and Aaron, and further punishment was sent. What was the punishment, and how many died ? 65. Why did the children of Israel murmur
 - as they journeyed from Mount Hor, and how were they punished?
- 66. Which of the leaders of the Israelites had died shortly before this, and who was his successor?
- 67. What was the first miracle performed after the death of Moses ? 68. What city was called the city of palm - trees ? 69. The hand of what king of Israel withered as he tried to injure a man of God ? What king of Judah was smitten with
- 70. leprosy, and for what sin was he thus punished ?
 - For how long a time was rain withheld from Israel during the reign of Ahab, and at the word of what prophet was it withheld
- 72. Whom did Elijah raise from the dead ? ANSWERS TO BIBLE QUESTIONS IN NO. 4.
- 37. The brook Besor, 1 Sam. xxx. 10.
- He was pursuing after the Amalekites who had burned Ziklag and carried away their families captive, 1 Sam. xxx. 1, 10.
- 39. By the brook Kishon, 1 Kings xviii. 40.
 40. Elijah, 1 Kings xvii. 3.
 41. Cherith ; it ran through the northern part of the tribe of Gad and emptied into the Jordan.
- Ahab, 1 Kings xviii. 2. 42.
- 43. Chebar, Ezekiel i. 1. 44.
- 45.
- 46.
- Damascus, Gen. xv. 2. Bethlehem, 1 Sam. xvi. 1, 4. Bethsaida, John i. 44. Upon Chorazin, Matt. xi. 21. 47. 48. Turning the water into wine, John ii. 19.

dure. If ye know these things, happy are ve if you do them.—Well-Spring. A WORD FITLY SPOKEN. The following incident actually occur-red :— A father who openly denied the Christian religion, and was a professed infidel, observed his little son intently reading the Bible. "What book are recovered the Bible. "What book are recovered the constant of the solution of the bible. ANSWER TO BIBLE ACROSTIC. 1, Cain (Gen. 4 : 8); 2, Lot (Gen. 19 : 15 23); 3, Elect lady (2 John 1); 4, Abraham (Rom. 4 : 3); 5, Vashti (Esth. 1 : 12); 6, Elijah (2 Kings 2 : 11); 7, Uzza (1 Chron. 13 : 10); 8, Nabor (Gen. 11 : 26); 9, Thessa-lonians; 10, Obadiah (1 Kings 18 : 3, 12); 11, Timothy (2 Tim. 2 : 15): 12, Hannah (1 Sam. 1 : 10, 13); 13, Endor (1 Sam, 28 : 5-9); 14, Laodiceans (Rev. 3 : 14, 20); 15, Obed-edom (2 Sam. 6 : 10, 11); 16, Ruth (Ruth 1 - 16). 17, David (1 Sam. 30 : 3, 4).-Cleave unto the Lord (Joshua 23 : 8; Acts 11 : 23).

CORRECT ANSWERS RECEIVED.

To No. 4.—Mary E. Coates, 12 ac; Eliza Col-houn, 11 ac; Edward Phoenix, 9. To No. 8.—Libbie Hawkins, 12 ac; Maggie Sutherland, 12 ac; Sarah Fowley, 8 ac; Edward Phoenix, 7; H. A. Lunan, 5 ac; Deforest Leathers, 5 ac; Joseph Bell 5 ac.

The answer to question 18 in No. 2, should be Acts xvi, instead of Acts xil, and the words "of themselves" in the question should be left

3.0

7

SCHOLARS' NOTES.

8

(From the International Lessons for 1881, by Edwa W. Rice, as issued by American Union.)

LESSON XIII.

MARCH 27.] [About 27 A.D. PREACHING THE KINGDOM. Luke 9:1-6.

COMMIT TO MEMORY VS. 1-6.

1. Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.

2. And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick. 3. And he said unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money : neither have two coats apiece.

4. And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.

5. And whosoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them. 6. And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel, and healing every-where.

GOLDEN TEXT. He sent them to preach the kingdom of God—Luke 9:2.

CENTRAL TRUTH Be a missionary for Christ.

CONNECTED HISTORY.—Among the important events recorded since Jesus sat at meat in the house of Simon the Pharisee, are the charge of casting out devils by Keelzebub and Christ's teachings on biasphemy, Matt. 12: 22-37, who are his near relatives, teaching in parables, Matt. 13, stilling the tempest, the healing of a demoniac in Gadara and destruction of the swine, raising the daughter of Jairus, restoring sight to two blind man, and casting out a dumb spirit.

NOTES.—HIS TWELVE, I. Simon, Peter, Cep-has; 2. Andrew (Peter and Andrew were sons of Jonas); 3. James; 4. John, the beloved (James and John were sons of Zebedee, and were also called Boanerges); 5. Philip; 6. Bartholomew, Nathanael; 7. Thomas, Didymus; 8. Matthew, Levi; 9. James the less (Matthew and James were sons of Alpheus); 10. Judas Lebbeus, Thad-deus : 11. Simon Zelotes, the Canaanite ; 12. Judas Iscariot, the betrayer. For a more com-plete account of the calling and sending forth of the twelve, see Matthew luth chap. EXPLANATIONS

EXPLANATIONS.

LESSON TOPICS.--(1.) CALLED AND SENT. (II.) ORDERS RECEIVED. (III.) OBEDIENCE.

I. CALLED AND SENT.-(1-2.) THEN, when Jesus saw the multitudes, Matt. 9: 36-38; CALL-ED, selected previously, 6:13; TWELVE, doubt-less with reference to the twelve tribes of Israel, DISCIPLES, apostles; POWER, Jesus alone im-partis power to do good; AUTHORITY, to com-mand, subdue, overthrow; ALL DEVILS, nothing is able to separate the trusting Christian from the love of Christ, Rom. 8: 35-39; PREACH, tell men of Jesus; KINGDOM OF GOD, Christ's Spiri-tual reign; HEAL, both soul and body to be cared for.

107.
11. ORDERS RECEIVED.—(3-5.) TAKE NOTH-ING, the laborer is worthy of his hire; STAVES, plural of staff, which according to Mark was al-lowed, Mark 6.8, "the true meaning is that he who had a staff might take it, but he who had not should not provide it."-Whedon. SCRIP, a wal-let for provisions; BREAD, on which Matthew is silent; MONEY, gold, silver, brass, Matt. 10: 9; WW o COATS, in other words, follow the customs of the people; THERE ABIDE, wander not from house to house; NOT RECEIVE YOU, see Matt. 10: 0; OFF __DUST, symbolical of pollution; TEST-MONY, proof.

111. OBEDIENCE'---(6.) DEPARTED, willing ob-edience; WENT, were sent; TOWNS, in Galilee; PREACHING, teaching; GOSPEL, glad tidings of great joy; EVERYWHERE, wherever they went POINTS TO NOTICE.—How does this lesson teach: (1.) That Jesus calls us to service? (2.) That he cares for our bodies as well as our souls? (3.) That we are to trust Christ for all we need? 4.) That every true disciple is a representative of Christ?

SECOND QUARTER.

LESSON I.

[About 27 A. D. APRIL. 3.] FOLLOWING JESUS.

to another village. 57. And it came to pass, that, as they went in the way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest. 58. And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

日ち

father. 60. Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead: but go thou and preach the kingdom of God.

61. And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house.

62. And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

GOLDEN TEXT. And Jesus said unto him, No man, hav-ing put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God-LUKE 9:62.

CENTRAL TRUTH. Christ is to be followed completely.

HISTORICAL CONNECTION.—With verse 51 be-gins a special section ending chapter 18:17. It introduces us to the last period of our Lord's ministry, covering six months. More especially, it contains the record of the last journeying to-ward Jerusalem. This journey, referred to in verse 51, is in all probability the same as the one spoken of, John 7:1°, to the feast of Taber-nacles. The scene of this lesson is in northern Samaria nacles. Samaria nacles. The scene of this lesson is in northern samaria. NOTES.—SAMARITANS, the inhabitants of the feutral division of Palestine. They were a mix-drace, some of their ancestors having been farst red to the country by Esar-haddon, Ezra 12. On the other hand the Samaritan woman freers, John 4: 12, to Jacob as her ancestor, they worshipped on Mount Gerizim instead of at destroyed B,C. 109 by John Hyrcanus. They ac-cepted the Pentateuch, and expected a Messiah who should be a Great Prophet, in accordance with Deut. 18:18. A bitter feeling of hatred ex-sted between the Samaritans and Jews. ELLAS, the Greak form of Elijah, the Tishbite, one of the propresentative on the Mount of Transfiguration. He was translated to heaven in a charlot of fre-buck, the mode most common amongst the Jews was entombment. The tombs were natural first place of burial mentioned in the old Tests what ha corpse or a tomb rendered the party order to prevent unconscious contamination, hiv was the custom in the time of our Lord to wash on the tombs white, Matt. 23: 27. Provens, the access in the search search and the side the provident for seven days, Numb, 19:11, etc. In was the custom in the time of our Lord to wash of the out a simply scratched, and not dee play whence and the saminet of agriculture, bot the out and the search search and not dee play the out and the search search and not dee play the out and the search and the search and the deep

EXPLANATIONS.

LESSON TOPICS.-(I.) CHRIST REJECTED. (II.) REVENGE REBUKED. (III.) TRUE FOLLOWERS TESTED.

TESTED. I. CHRIST REJECTED.—(51-53.) TIME WAS COME, "when the days were being fulfilled." The last six mouths of our Lord's ministry begin at this point; RECEIVED UP, at the ascension; STEADFASTLY SET, it was his fixed purpose; MES-SENGERS, our Lord pursued the same course be-fore the last passover, Matt. 26:18; VILLAGE. name unknown; MAKE READY, a lodging place; NOT RECEIVE HIM, the Samaritans expected the Messiah to manifest himself on Mount derizim.

Messian to manifest nimself on Mount Gerizim. II. REVENGE REBUKED. — (54-56.) JAMES AND JOHN, brothers, and sons of Zebedee. They may have been the "messengers," but it is not likely; SAVE, as it was not Christ's object to destroy the law and the prophets but to falfil, so it was not his object to destroy men's lives but to save the lost—sin de-stroys, Christ saves; WENT TO ANOTHER, Christ commanded his disciples not to remain in a place which would not receive them, Luke 10:10, Christ "knocks" at, but does not force himself into. hearts. into, hearts, Christ "Rhocks" at, but does hot force himself into, hearts.

III. TRUE FOLLOWERS TESTED. - (57-62.) (Representatives of three classes of followers.) THE WAY, perhaps a road back into Galilee or the road further into Samaria; CERTAIN MAN, a scribe, Matt 8: 19; LAY HIS HEAD, our Lord refers here to the poverty and humility of his condition. He cautions the over hasty aspirant, that to be his follower meant suffering and self-denial for "the disciple is not above his master"; Follow ME, (The second class.) Jesus commands him; BURY MY FATHER, he is willing to follow but asks for a little time, comp. Acts 24: 25. The burial of his father would entail delay. Perhaps it was only an excuse. He wanted a little more of the world; THE DEAD, ETC., let those who are dead in "trespasses and sins" bury the physically dead. "We should love our earthly father but love our Creator more."-Augustine. All earthly things are to be given up for God; PREACH, publish abroad; FIRST, the trouble with this man and the one before was that they did not "first seek the kingdom of God," Matt. 6: 39.

Samaritans, to make ready for him.
Samaritans, to make ready for him.
Samaritans, to make ready for him.
Sa And they did not receive him, because his face was as though he would go to Jerusalem.
And when his disciples James and John saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and the first see them. And them are sample.
So But he turned, and rebuked them, and said, Ye know n." what manner of spirit ye are of.
So For the Son of man is not come to destroy to another village.
And it camestant.
And the same to save them. And them to the save them.
So another village.
And it camestant.

Everything that is truly great is most beautiful when it is gentle. Even a great mind is greatest then. It was a little bird— a robin, I think—that was the first to think

59. And he said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. Stephenson we should have had to ride from taneously, perpetual motion is practically imparted to the works of the regulator town to town in coaches and carts pulled by horses instead of in trains pulled by steam. He was a great man this George Stephenson ; he had a brave heart and a strong mind, and a robin found it out first when he was still a rough-looking poor boy eating his dinner, sitting on a heap of cinders in the engine-house of a coal pit. It used to come and take dinner with him; it hopped close to his feet, then on to his knee, and looking saucily up into his begrimed face it said, "I know you would not hurt a little bird like me," and the big rough George Stephenson did not hurt it; he had too strong a mind and too great a heart for that. He fed it, and talked to it, and was proud and glad that it believed in him. And many years afterward, a robin found it out first when he was still believed in him. And many years afterward, when the boy had become a man, and the world had found out, what the robin knew before, that he had a great mind and a brave heart, he did not forget to be gentle. Let me tell you how I know this. One day he shut a window in one of the upper rooms of his house. It had been left open a long time, because of the great heat, but as the weather had grown cooler, it was closed. Little did this good man know what he was doing. day or two after, to his great sorrow, he found out, for then he chanced to observe a bird fiying against the same window, and beating against it with all its might, again and again, as if trying to break it. He at once went upstairs and opened the window that he might see what this strange conduct meant. The window opened, the bird at once flew to one particular spot in the room, and there, Stephenson saw, was a bird's nest. At the sight of the nest the poor bird fell to the floor, broken-hearted, almost dead. There sat the mother-bird, and under it four tiny little young ones all dead. Stephenson cried. In the young ones all dead. Stephenson cried. He tenderly lifted the exhausted bird from the floor, with the worm it had so long and bravely struggled to bring to its home and young still in its mouth, and carefully tried to revive it; but all his efforts proved in vain, the little thing died, and the great man wassad for many a day. He was known and praised by all civilized people; his mind had changed the face of the world; yet he cried changed the face of the world ; yet he cried at the sight of this little dead family, and most of all because he himself had unconsciously been the cause of its death. He was a great man, for he was powerful, and had a tender, gentle heart .- Sunday Magazine. A BALKY HORSE IN THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

We got safely out of the home avenue, and into the road, when suddenly the horse stops, and no persuasion of word, insistance of whip, or derision of the passing natives, can move him. Nunanu Avenue rises just here, and the creature knows it. Mount it he will not. He is willing to turn and go in the easy direction; but that we do not wish. It is a contest of obstinacy, and I propose to fight it out. In other words : I get my book and a lunch, and sit in the carriage enjoying them, while the horse stands there. I have the better of him. I can eat, and he cannot. I can read just as comfortably in the carriage as in the house. I propose to starve the creature into submission. But after an hour or two of ineffectual waiting, finding that or two of ineffectual waiting, inding that the calls would not be made in that way, and knowing that they must be made forthwith, I was led to take another and more pliable horse, and go the rounds with him. Pahaku-uni, or the Big Stone, was not speedy but he did not balk. We afterward learned that the new horse had been harnessed with a check-rein a rostraint he was not used that rein, a restraint he was not used to, and that that was the cause of all his obstinacy. Alas, how many of us are provoked to the same vice by over-restraint! I am sure I have seen children who balked at their elders' commands who only needed a little loosening of the check-rein to make them tractable. -From Alhoa, by Rev. G. L. Chaney.

SELF-WINDING CLOCKS. '

A clockmaker of Copenhagen, named Louis Soenderberg, who for some time past has had charge of that city's electric time-keepers, has just invented an ingenious ap-pliance which obviates the necessity of winding up the regulator, from which the clocks in question "take their time." By a a room, I think—that was the first to think that George Stephenson had a great mind. It was George Stephenson who found out the steam engine and taught people to make railways. If it had not been for George mechanical contrivance which periodically cuts off the stream of electric fluid emanating that is to say, so long as the batteries con-nected with it are kept properly supplied with acids. The discoverer of this important improvement has satisfied himself, by six months' successful experiments in his own workshop, that his system works fault-lessly, and has applied for permission to adapt it to the electric clocks set up by the municipality in different parts of the Danish capital.—London Telegraph.

NOTICE.

Subscribers to this paper will find the date their subscription terminates printed after the name. Those whose subscriptions expire at the end of the present month will please have the remittances mailed in time.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS IN UNITED STATES.

Our subscribers throughout the United States who cannot procure the International Post Office orders at their Post Office, can get instead a Post Office order, payable at Rouse's Point, N.Y., which will prevent much inconvenience both to ourselves and subscribers.

THE CLUB RATES for the "MESSENGER," when sent to one address, are as follows:-1 copy, 30c; 10 copies, $2.50; 25 copies, $6; 50 copies, $11.50; 100 copies, $22; 1,000 copies, $200. JOHN DOUGALL & SON, Pub-lishers, Montreal.

MONTREAL DAILY WITNESS $3.00 a year, post-paid.

MONTREAL WEEKLY WITNESS, $1.10 a year, post-paid.

JOHN DOUGALL & SON, Publishers, Montreal, Q.

ALL PERSONS are hereby warned against paying money to a person calling himself Mr. Kearney and travelling in the Eastern Townships, representing himself as our canvassing agent.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocca. Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a celicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctor's bills. It is by the judi-cious use of such articles of diet that a consti-tution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating acound us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a tatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."--Cisil Service Gazette.-Sold only in Packets labelled-"JAMES EPPS & CO., Homepathle Chemists, London, Eng."--Also makers of Epps's Chocco-late Essence for alternoon use.

NEW YORK WITNESS PUBLICATIONS

NEW YORK WEEKLY WITNESS:

Single copy 4c, or $1.50 a year, or eight months for a dollar. Club of five for a year, $6; Club of eleven for a year, $12 if sent without any diminution. The WITNESS is almost the only paper that reports the progress of the INDEPEN-DENT CATHOLIC CHURCH.

NOTE—As a special effort to double the WIT-NESS subscription list, we offer the privilege to each present subscriber when renewing his own copy to order another for a new subscriber, and both will be sent separately for a year for $2. Any old friend of the WITNESS can have the same privilege.

SABBATH READING :

A weekly eight-page religious paper, ic a copy, or 50c a year. Parcels of one hundred for 75c, or twenty-five for 20c, will be sent as samples, either all of one number, or assorted. This paper has more choice reading matter for the money than any other we know.

GEMS OF POETRY :

GEMS OF POETRY: A weekly eight-page paper, filled with the choicest poetry we can select; 2 c a copy, or 75c a year. A club of three for $2, or ten for $6. The first volume, extending from ist June to end of 1880, 31 numbers, will be sent for 40c, and any one who subscribed for the first six numbers or more can have the whole volume by remitting the difference between what he formerly paid and 40 cents. All the above prices include postage, and sample coples will be sent free on application.

JOHN DOUGALL & CO., No. 7 Frankfort st., New York.

THE NORTHERN MESSENGER is printed and published on the 1st and 15th of every mouth, at Nos. 35 and 37 Bonaventure street, Montreal, by John Dougall & Son, composed of John Dougall, of New York, and John Redpath Dougall and J. D. Dougall, of Montreal