But I didn't think much of his attentions; Several times the manager took me he took some of the other girls out, teo, I never thought a gentleman like him, well born, and highly connected, could care much for a drunkard's daughter. But I came to like his attentions. Than too he was always as tentions. Then, too, he was always so kind and polite to mother.

But there are always changes in this world. The manager's father died, leaving him a large and valuable farm near the city. He at once resigned his position, and the night he left he shook my hand warmly, and—yes, he held my hand quite a long time.

'I have much on my mind, now,' he said, 'but in a few days I want to see
