CANADA'S REVENUE BOOMING MAY REACH $120,000,000

Expenditure Does Not Increase Nearly as Fast as Receipts—August's Total Over Ten Millions—Prospect of Record-Breaking Surplus.

Ottawa, Sept. 10.—The statement of Dominion revenue and expenditure for August and for the first five months of the current fiscal year shows that the promise of "a vaster surplus than has been" is being steadily borne out. The total revenue for August was $10,174,830, and for the five months $45,830,370, increases, respectively, of $1,705,082, and $7,330,210. If the same rate of increase is maintained for the balance of the year this year's revenue will reach $120,000,000, or nearly eighteen millions more than last year. Expenditure, on the other hand, shows comparatively little increase. For the five months the expenditure on consolidated fund accounts was $27,645,017, or $1,192,838 more than for the same period of last year, and $18,284,353 less than the revenue.

Expenditure on capital account for the five months totalled $9,161,450, an increase of $47,798, as compared with the corresponding period of last year. The net debt of the Dominion at the end of the month was $327,345,552, a decrease during the month of $1,270,135.

KIDNAPPED BOY MYSTERIOUSLY TURNS UP

Detectives Lay Trap For Black Hand Gang But Fail
to Catch.

[By Associated Press.]
New York, Sept. 10.—Although little Michael Scimeca, the three-year-old son of Dr. Michael Scimeca, a prominent Italian physician, is today safely in the hands of his relatives, having been held for nearly three months a captive by Black Hand kidnapers, the abduction of the boy has so far escaped the police trap set for them when it was learned that the little fellow was about to be returned to his guardians.

Laid a Trap.
Fifty detectives of the Italian squad had been for hours watching ferries and railroad stations and the vicinity of Dr. Scimeca's home in Manhattan in expectancy of the trapping of the kidnapers when the lad mysteriously turned up late last night at the home of Dr. Scimeca's father-in-law, Dr. Michael Scimeca, in Brooklyn. The police had heard that Dr. Scimeca was trying to raise $2,000, which had been demanded as a ransom for the boy. Dr. Scimeca today, however, denied that he had paid a cent for the ransom.

A Deep Mystery.
Much mystery surrounds the circumstances of the boy's disappearance. It was said at the Petrelia home that a telephone message was received during the evening that the boy had been found walking on Fifty-fifth street in Manhattan. The Petrelia drove in their carriage to that locality, they said, and spotted the lad alone on the sidewalk. The boy uttered a cry of joy when he saw his relatives and was soon snuggled, wrapped up in the carriage and on the way to the Petrelia's Brooklyn home.

A report which had come to the police that the kidnapped boy had been found alone on the street had been brought to the waiting carriage at the curb by a roundabout way, it was said, as soon as he had delivered his charge, was today being investigated by the police. Michael Scimeca, of the Italian squad, declared that he knew the identity of the boy's captors and arrests in the case are considered probable.

Michael Scimeca was taken away from his parents on June 15 by men who lured him with promises of candy. Shortly afterward demands for large sums for his ransom began to pour in upon his well-to-do father through the mails and in mysterious letters.

Threats that the boy would be killed were also received, and his parents were in agony of terror lest harm would come to him.

LONDON MAY SECURE A MOTOR FIRE ENGINE

Underwriters Association Consents to One of at Least 800 Gallons Capacity.

The city may purchase a motor fire engine of 800 gallons capacity, or a steam engine of 1,000 gallons capacity. While in Toronto, Ad. Ashplant, chairman of No. 3 committee, had an interview with Secretary Robertson and Inspector Howe, of the Underwriters' Association, and secured from them their consent to the city purchasing a motor-driven engine of 800 gallons to 1,000 gallons capacity.

"We have made a number of inquiries regarding motor-driven engines," said Ad. Ashplant, "and from what we learn they are better and more cheaply maintained. I have written to several fire chiefs in Canada and the United States, and from all I have received the information that they work most satisfactorily. Chief Hunter, of the Springfield, Ill., brigade, is enthusiastic over the motor engine. In a letter to me he states that he has an engine of 700 gallons capacity, that carries 1,000 ft. of hose and six men. Last winter it had to respond to an alarm immediately after a big snowstorm. It reached the fire, put it out, and then helped to drag the truck and some of the other horse-driven apparatus back to the station. One man can run it, and it costs about 12 cents a day on the average for fuel. Several other chiefs write the same way. In Vancouver they have an aerial truck, four hose wagons, and two chemical engines, all motor-driven, and have ordered two more hose wagons and two more chemicals of the same type."

Ad. Ashplant states that it would cost about $2,500 to purchase a motor-driven engine, and that it would be maintained at less than $1,000 per annum.

He will report at No. 3 committee next Tuesday night and it is expected that tenders will be called for at once.

FAVORS THE BRITISH SAYS MR. AYLESWORTH

And Sir Edward Grey Cables Congratulations Over the Fisheries Victory.

[Associated Press.]
St. John's, Nfld., Sept. 10.—Governor Williams, of this colony, has received an official cablegram from Sir Edward Grey, secretary of foreign affairs for Great Britain, acquainting him with the decision in London of a formal report from the Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, Canadian minister of justice, and British agent before The Hague tribunal in the fisheries dispute between Great Britain and the United States recently decided there. Minister Aylesworth describes the award as "in favor of Great Britain on all questions of main importance," and the foreign secretary adds that he "desires to tender at once to your Government the warmest congratulations on this point."

Nowhere has fisheries dispute been a matter of keener interest than on this coast, and Governor Williams' announcement of the official interpretation of the award of the court gives the greatest general satisfaction.

TREAT WITH BLACK HAND Murderous Band.

[Associated Press.]
Rome, Sept. 10.—The Tribunal declares that the operations of the Black Hand Society have reached such proportions that the authorities have been forced to treat with it in order to save lives and property. The newspaper demands exemplary punishment for the murderers of Policeman Rovellino and his family at Pellarò recently, saying that otherwise the population will lose all its confidence in the administration of justice.

TENS OF THOUSANDS AT OPEN-AIR MASS

Immense Gathering at the Foot of Mount Royal—Cardinal Vannutelli Present.

Montreal, Sept. 10.—A congregation running into the tens of thousands assembled on Fletcher's Field this morning, favored with fine weather, to participate in the open-air mass of the eucharistic congress, which had to be cancelled yesterday owing to the wet grounds.

Today everything was favorable, and all roads led to the beautiful altar erected at the foot of the Mount Royal. Cardinal Vannutelli and many of the other high dignitaries of the church, attended.

The other important function of the morning was the pontifical mass at St. Patrick's Church, over which Cardinal Logue, of Ireland, presided. There were no meetings of the English section of the congress today, but the French and educational sections held sessions and discussed a great variety of papers appertaining to the eucharist.

SUDDEN DEATH OF FARMER'S WIFE

Fell Dead While Holding a Horse That Was Restive.

Woodstock, Sept. 10.—A startlingly sudden death occurred here last evening when Mrs. Overholt, wife of an Eastwood farmer, fell dead on the street.

Mrs. Overholt, with two children, drove into town to do some shopping, and the rig was standing at the curb when a street car came along. The horse became frightened and the lady endeavored to take it by the head. Suddenly she fell to the ground, and when picked up life was extinct. Heart failure is given as the cause of death.

EARL GREY TO VISIT THE WEST INDIES

[Special To The Advertiser.]
Ottawa, Sept. 10.—Earl Grey is planning to make a trip to the West Indies soon after the first of the year.

He will probably go south late in January, in one of the Canadian Government's steamers, and make a thorough tour of the British islands in the West Indies.

DRUNK OR THE "SHAKES"

Giant From St. Kitts Was Panhandling
With Sad, Sad Story.

Joseph O'Brien, a huge specimen of humanity, who says his home is in St. Catharines, was placed under arrest last night on a charge of vagrancy. O'Brien told Mayor Beattie this morning that he had been suffering from spinal trouble for about fifteen years, and was unable to work. He was shaking badly in the cage. The police said O'Brien was helplessly drunk when brought in yesterday, and that the "shakes" were due to that more than to spinal trouble. O'Brien had little cards in his possession, stating that he was a cripple. He offered these to people on the street, and requested help. If they refused he told them what he thought of them. Business had apparently been good, as he had more than $4 when arrested.

"I'll get out of London, and never come back, if you let me go," he said. Mayor Beattie decided to remand O'Brien to jail for a week rather than having him harrassing the public around begging from fair visitors.

NEW S. A. OFFICERS

Lieut.-Col. Chandler and Mrs. Chandler, of the Salvation Army, have arrived from New York and will take command of the force in this district. Thursday and Friday School Fair Holidays

Thursday and Friday will be holidays in the public and separate schools and the Collegiate Institute to permit the children attending the Western Fair.

The different boards of education have decided upon this, and the youngsters may feel assured of the two holidays.

Some years ago, it was the custom to hold Children's Days on Monday and Tuesday, but it was found almost impossible to keep the attendance anything like normal during the rest of the week. It was decided last year to make a change, and Thursday and Friday were selected.

A MARRIAGE AT MIDNIGHT IN A TENT ON THE MIDWAY

Sailor-Lover Delayed by Gale On Erie Failed to Turn Up at Hour Named for Wedding But Locates Fiance at Fair Grounds and All Is Lovely.

One of the most unique weddings that was ever celebrated in London took place in the tent of Mrs. Alfred Hall at the Western Fair Grounds at midnight last night. The ceremony was scheduled for Wednesday last, but the groom, Mr. Robert Clark, an assistant engineer on the Marquette and Bessemer ferry, running between Conneaut and Port Stanley, was unable to get in time owing to rough weather. As soon as he reached Port Stanley last night, he made all speed to London to locate his fiancée, Miss Mary Dickinson. Miss Dickinson's home is in Port Stanley, and her future husband learned that she had gone to London to help her aunt, Mrs. Hall, at the Fair. Mr. Clark took the first car, went to Mrs. Hall's home, only to learn that the family were temporarily located at the Fair Grounds.

Taking No Chances.
Mr. Clark headed for the Midway, deciding not to take any more chances of missing his sweetheart. Rev. Wm. Lowe, of St. Matthew's Church, was sent for, and in the tent the happy lovers were made man and wife. Owing to the lateness of the hour, and the somewhat unusual circumstances, there was no time to get the bridesmaid and groomsmen that had been arranged for, so Mr. and Mrs. Hall acted in that capacity.

"I never officiated at a more unique wedding," said Rev. William Lowe, "and I don't think if one more unusual were ever performed in London. I am not expected to marry after 10 o'clock except in cases of emergency. I guess this was one all right."

The bride and groom were both very happy, and the ceremony was a great success. The wedding was a very quiet affair, and the only guests were the bride and groom.

Washington, Sept. 10.—"Business and agricultural conditions throughout the west and northwest are notably prosperous. The crops this year scarcely will be bumper crops, in the ordinary sense of the term, but they will be very large."

The corn crop will be made now within a couple of weeks," continued Secretary Wilson.

CRIPPEN'S COUNSEL TO DEFEND GIRL

Defence to Use the Evidence of Expert Pathologist.

[Associated Press Cable.]
London, Sept. 10.—Arthur Newton, counsel for Dr. H. H. Crippen, who is on trial here charged with murdering his wife, has been engaged to defend Ethel Clara Leneve, Crippen's typist, who is on trial as an accessory after the fact. This will enable closer operations between the two accused persons, who heretofore had not been permitted to consult with one another.

Another step in the fight to save the prisoners from conviction was taken yesterday, when two pathologists, engaged by the defence, examined the body unearthed in Crippen's cellar.

Solicitor Newton expects to receive reports from these pathologists in time for use as the basis of his cross-examination of the police experts when the trial of Dr. Crippen and Miss Leneve is continued next Wednesday. An analyst has also been retained by the defence to investigate the alleged finding of poison in the body.

The engagement of experts to controvert evidence offered by the prosecution is unusual in England.

PREMIER ADDRESSES EUCCHARISTIC CONGRESS

Audience of Twelve Thousand Hears Eloquent Address by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Montreal, Sept. 10.—One moment eclipsed all others during the slow passage of noted prelates and laymen to the platform before the altar of Notre Dame Church last night, when the 12,000 people assembled caught sight of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. They rose to their feet as one man and cheered and cheered again as the Premier moved to his place on the platform. The interest which has been evinced in these services throughout the week reached a climax last night when anxiety to hear the Premier caused the crowd to gather an hour before the opening of the doors, when it was found there were many who could not find admittance.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier.
A splendid reception was accorded Sir Wilfrid Laurier as he came forward to the railing arranged for the speakers. He was looking exceedingly well, and his voice carried easily throughout the whole building. Sir Wilfrid said he had returned from the western provinces of this vast Dominion in his capacity as Prime Minister of the country he might offer to Cardinal Vannutelli and the Congress his warm congratulations, and his assurances of the perfect freedom, both civil and religious, enjoyed in the Dominion. Nowhere in the world could a place have been selected, which gave better proof of this freedom than from Montreal, where there was freedom in such matters which few countries could boast of.

"Canada is essentially a land of contrasts," said Sir Wilfrid. "We have contrasts of peoples, of religions, of climate, and everything that goes to the making of a great people. We are a monarchy, and yet democracy. We have no privileged classes. We are equal before the law, to the humblest citizen. Our sovereign does not profess the faith which has brought us together, yet here we Catholics have more freedom than in any other country. We are a free people, and for that reason I claim for my country, Canada, and Great Britain, that of all countries they are the most truly free."

In this Sir Wilfrid said he did not even except the United States, which shared with Canada its spirit of freedom and religious tolerance. "And," he said, "it seems to me it is for that reason that Montreal was properly chosen for this congress, to show to the world the privileges which are here exercised under the law, without any person or organization being offended. All religions here are on the same footing. These we do not profess we respect, and those who do not share our belief respect it, and thus we of French origin proudly continue the faith of our ancestors. Without ostentation we have continued the faith of Champlain, of Maisonneuve, and of those heroic priests and missionaries and navigators who in bygone days opened up the country, and were the real pioneers of this Dominion and of the faith which we perpetuate. This is the certainty of the eternal justice of God. Instead of the idea that there is nothing in the after life, how much better it would be to believe that in future there is real life? And it is in freedom to believe and to promulgate this belief that this country has so much more to show than some European countries have evinced of late."

The speech was continually punctuated with applause, and the audience persisted for some time after the had taken his seat.

CHASED OUT OF TOWN

In the police court this morning the case of Norman Jones and Willis Haskett, two colored youths who are charged with throwing stones, was adjourned until next week, as another said to be implicated in the case has not yet been located.

Harper McLaren, a young man, charged by his wife with non-support, was bailed in the sum of $200 to appear in a week.

John McKenzie, a drunk, who has appeared very often lately, was given an hour to get out of town, and if re-arrested was told he would be sent to the Central for a long term for vagrancy.

WATERBURY WINS.

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 10.—Although the 1910 season for the Connecticut State League is not yet closed, Waterbury has already clinched the pennant. The remaining games to be played will not affect the standing. Bridgeport will be in second place in the race.

Mother Earth Is Hefty

New York, Sept. 9.—Mother Earth weighs 7,000,000,000,000 tons, Reinhard A. Wetzel, instructor in physics at the College of the City of New York, finished today a series of experiments by which he has compiled the weight of this mundane sphere. According to Mr. Wetzel the result is more accurate than has hitherto been obtained.

The apparatus used in the experiments was so extremely delicate that they were carried out entirely after midnight to avoid even the jarring of footfalls in the farthest corridor.

ONT. LIBERALS IN CONVENTION

Stirring Addresses Heard at Annual Gathering at Toronto.

MR. MACKAY FOR LOCAL OPTION

Hon. George P. Graham Tells of Premier's Tour of West—
Address By Sir
George Ross.

Toronto, Sept. 9.—"The Liberal party in Ontario is not dead," said Sir George Ross in the course of a strong address before the sixth annual gathering of the General Provincial Reform Association in the Temple Building this morning. "A Spartan band of twenty or thirty men could revolutionize that House in a short time."

There was a large representation of well-known Liberals from all parts of the province. Mr. H. M. Mowat, K. C., the stirring president, occupied the chair, and Sir George Ross was seated at his right. Hon. A. G. MacKay, leader of the party in the Provincial Legislature, was also on hand. Communications of regret at inability to attend the convention were received from Hon. Charles Murphy and Sir Richard Cartwright. Sir Frederick Borden wired that he hoped to be able to attend the latter part of the session.

Sir George Ross' Speech.
Sir George, who spoke from his chair, said that he was much more willing to serve the party than capable. It was a case of "the spirit willing, but the legs weak." He was glad to see the Liberals still girt for the fight. Like Napoleon's old guard, the Liberal party might still at times, but it could never retreat.

Senator Ross complimented the association upon the excellence of its officers and the splendid progress that it was making.

"You are still two years from a general election in the House of Commons, and probably just as long from an election in the local Legislature," said Sir George. "And in the meantime much good work may be done by the meeting together of man and man. More has been done for the propagation of Liberalism from Winnipeg to the coast by the recent tour of Premier Laurier than could be accomplished by thirty years' speeches in the House."

"It becomes the Liberal party to repel all charges of criticism and refute all political lies. We must keep out the tares."

The Tariff Question.
The last decade, said the speaker, had been a red-letter period in Canadian political history. One of the most important aspects was the development of Liberalism from Winnipeg to the coast by the recent tour of Premier Laurier than could be accomplished by thirty years' speeches in the House."

"We cannot abolish our present tariff," said he, "free trade is absolutely impossible in Canada. But, of course, we must see to it that the tariff does not become a burden or an obstacle."

FROST LAST NIGHT
BUT DEW SAVED

The Local Temperature Fell to Thirty-Five.

Last night the local temperature fell to 35.5, and in the country districts a fairly heavy frost was experienced. No great harm was done, however, as the frost was accompanied by a very heavy dew, which protected the autumn crops.

A severe frost just now would be disastrous to the farmers, who expect to shortly harvest one of the best crops of corn in years. It would also work havoc with a great deal of late garden stuff.

Among the places that must be seen by women visiting London during the Fair is our Millinery Salon.

Here you will see what is authentic and authoritative for the present fall season, and get a glimpse of the beautiful new models designed by the world's most famous milliners.

MONDAY, besides the imported models we will have an advance showing of handsome Hats from our own workrooms, turned out by our own experts.

We might say Paris ideas, but to some extent modified; also a fine display of Willow Plumes, Osprey and Heron mounts, and Paris feather novelties.

This preliminary display has been particularly arranged for the benefit of our Fair week visitors, who annually make it a point at this time to procure their fall millinery. Our formal opening announcement will appear later.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPT. 10.

THE MOTOR RAGE.

The motor craze is one of the most salient facts in the United States today. Fifteen years ago American industry turned out $150,000 worth of cars. Even five years ago automobiles were still regarded as ministers to the idle pleasure of rich men. Today the output of cars is 200,000 a year, worth $225,000,000. More than a billion dollars are invested in the manufacture; 400,000 persons are engaged in it;
there is a car for every 160 persons in the States; and the demand shows no signs of being satisfied. Detroit produces 60 per cent. of the total output.
A completed car is there turned out every three minutes; the evolution from steel billet to finished machine takes six days.

Mr. Maurice Low, an Englishman qualified by years of residence on this side of the Atlantic to comment on American affairs, writes in the London Morning Post that "the motor rage" is one of the causes of pessimism over the immediate financial outlook in the United States. Comparatively poor men are mortgaging their homes and selling their savings to get the $500 car. The market is relatively greatest in the west. In Nebraska there is an average of one machine to every 100 of population; in Los Angeles, California, it is one in 40. There are intelligible reasons for this western demand. In a region where many are thirty, fifty, or a hundred miles from a railway, the automobile means an enormous advance in the possibility of community, human fellowship and the amenities of living. It means also a reversing of that steady, slow drift
of the rural populations into the cities, which a great writer nearly a hundred years ago branded as "the graveyard of civilization; a drift which in Europe was the cause of a cosmopolitan anxiety, and in new lands like Australia had become a menace." "To some extent," says Mr. Low, "the motor has changed city life. The automobile has changed the point of view. To live ten or twelve miles out and to come backward and forward under your own steam is now a sign rather of moderate affluence instead of (as before) of scrimping poverty." The "railway age" has lasted something near a century; the "motor age" may fill up the century to come; after which aviation will probably make our rejoicings over the automobile themselves look ridiculous, as a man will easily rise on his monoplane from his back-garden to take dinner with a friend a hundred miles away, and return comfortably by midnight.

What Mr. Low says of the motor in relation to the Western States is applicable in an almost equal degree to the Canadian west. In that country of sparse settlement, magnificent distances, and level roads, the automobile has come as a good fairy to town and country folk alike. In the United States there may be the making of a financial panic in the fact that so many automobiles are being purchased with borrowed money, but there is no evidence that the motor fury is raging to nearly the same extent in this country. There is a large and growing demand for automobiles, but no one imagines that it is sufficient to upset
the financial equilibrium of the Dominion.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

For the first time in centuries the investiture of a Prince of Wales will take place in Wales. Cardiff and Carnarvon have been contending for the honor. The King has decided on Carnarvon, probably on historical grounds.
Tradition has it that the first Prince of Wales, afterwards Edward the Second, was born in Carnarvon Castle,
but research has proved that the castle was not then built. The prince, however, was actually born in Carnarvon in 1284, the year in which Wales was formally annexed to England by Edward the First. His first title was Earl of Chester and Prince of Wales in his 17th year, the investiture taking place at Lincoln.

Since the reign of Edward the Third,
the eldest sons of kings and queens of England have been always Dukes of Cornwall by birth, and with few exceptions, Princes of Wales by creation.
When a Prince of Wales succeeds to the throne the principality in all cases merges at once in the crown, and can have no separate existence again, except under a fresh creation, while the dukedom of Cornwall immediately descends to his son, or remains in abeyance until he has a son if one is not already born. If, however, a Prince of Wales and Duke of Cornwall should die in the lifetime of the sovereign, and leave a son and heir,

both dignities are extinguished because his son, although he is heir, is neither a king of England, nor the first begotten son of a king of England.
If instead of a son, the prince should leave a brother his heir, the dukedom would pass to the brother as the eldest living son of the king, but the principality would become merged in the crown. This was decided upon in the reign of James the First on the death of Henry, Prince of Wales, whose heir was his brother, Charles, Duke of York.

It is an illustration of the continuity of the English monarchy, and the English liking and reverence for precedent, that the future Edward the Eighth will be created Prince of Wales at the same age at which the first Prince of Wales—also an Edward—was invested with that dignity 610 years ago, and at the town where the first prince was born. The decision of King George to hold the ceremony in Wales is a compliment to the little principality which will be keenly appreciated by the Welsh people.

THE WESTERN FAIR.

Londoners live so close to the Western Fair and are so accustomed to it, that many of them regard it like the return of the seasons—they are somewhat indifferent to it, but they would wake up to its importance if it failed to materialize. A great annual exhibition is not made in a day or a year. It is a gradual growth, and the Western Fair is a remarkable growth indeed, a fact which will be appreciated more by old residents, who watched it in its infant days, than by those who see it now, firmly founded,
well ordered, and ample beyond the dreams of its first promoters. It holds an unchallenged position as the second best of its kind in Canada, excelled only by Toronto and Winnipeg, and not surpassed even by these in some of the particulars which the farmers appreciate more than the city folks. We Londoners should be proud of it as a local product. Fortunately it has always appealed to a large number of our foremost citizens, who have given it their time and services freely.

We have the word of the directors and officers, corroborated by the entry lists, that the Fair next week will be in no detail behind any of its predecessors. It has been a bountiful year in husbandry. The orchardist has some cause for complaint, but only in respect to one or two products. The season of plenty will be expressed at the Western Fair, for it is supreme in the department of agriculture, including live stock and the dairy, no less than the products of the soil.
Mechanical industry, which is also flourishing like the Ontario harvest, will be adequately represented, and there will be the usual, or rather better than usual, entertainment in the ring. The Western Fair is a great event in Western Ontario. There is no better "boosting" agency for the city of London. The surrounding counties do their duty by it. The citizen of London should do the same.

The Western Fair is always able to "come back." Mr. Frank E. Leonard is the type of citizen that should be welcomed to a place on a municipal board.

After reading his address on present-day tendencies, no one will deny that Father Vaughan shines as a maker of epigrams.

Premier Roblin will stump Ontario
again. His last tour of this province ended abruptly and ignominiously.
Conservatives may well hope that he had mended his manners.

The Winnipeg Telegram, the chief Conservative organ of the prairie provinces, calls upon the Government to take an axe to the tariff. The eastern and western organs of the party are not playing the same tune.

Mr. Aylesworth's plan in preparing the British case in the fisheries dispute is not being overlooked. "E'en the rank of Tuscan" can scare forbear a cheer. He is a great jurist, whatever his qualifications as a literary censor may be.

Mr. R. L. Borden reproaches Mr. E.
M. Macdonald, M. P. of Pictou, for saying at Lethbridge: "You want a postoffice here and you certainly need one badly, but you will never get it so long as you vote Tory." If Mr. Macdonald said such a thing, he deserves the castigation. But Mr. Borden is not fair when he implies that the Federal Government is responsible for the utterance of a private member.

Wireless telegraphy saved 35 lives on Lake Michigan yesterday, but nearly as many were lost through the suddenness with which the vessel went down. This is the second disaster of the same kind within a year, although no lake carriers look safer than these mammoth car ferries. There seems to be no machinery for investigating such affairs and enforcing preventive measures. For years it has been a complaint among the lake sailors that they are without the protection afforded ocean sailors. A Plimsoll is needed to do for them what was done for the seamen.

STURDY STOCK.

[Kingston Standard.]
Scottish farmers from the Duke of Sutherland's estates are coming to Canada as settlers. We can't have too many Scotsmen and we shall be glad to see a million of them in the west.

COSMOPOLITAN LONDON.

[Manchester Guardian.]
In the matter of Americans in London I may give the following census of a boarding-house in the neighborhood of

Russell Square, which was taken today and is probably typical. There are 20
American boarders (17 women and 3 men), 5 English, 7 Irishmen, 1 South African,
1 Dane, 1 Norwegian, 1 Swede, 1 Austrian,
1 Spaniard and 1 Italian. Three Russian girl students left last week-end and also a doctor on holiday. The landlady, it should be remarked, is Irish. My informant is the Italian boarder, who until the arrival of the Spaniard was the sole representative of the Latin race. They are now bosom friends. I asked him what he thought of the Americans. Were they rich? "No," said he, "not very rich, but "humorous." I thought he said "humorous," but he corrected me and repeated it "humorous." This was a new word to me, and cross-examination elicited the fact that he had coined it from the Italian word "rumore," which means noise.

BIRD NEST LINED WITH GOLD.

[Cleveland Leader.]
Mysterious thefts of gold leaf used in decorating the dome of the courthouse have been reported the last few days.
Sheets of the valuable material disappeared even with the closest watch kept by the foreman. When it was decided to have a detective guard the dome, the thief was discovered. An English sparrow flew into the building and out again so regularly the detective became interested in its movements. The little visitor was observed to pick up the gold sheets being used by the workmen and to fly across the street to a chink in the Italian wall.
Investigation was made and the missing gold recovered. The sheets had been used to line a nest.

THE QUALITY OF MERCY.

[Puck.]
See the woman. Why is the woman's hat trimmed with a nestful of little birds with the mother bird brooding them?
It is because the woman is merciful.
The woman wished to trim her hat with the mother bird alone, but rather than leave the birdlings to starve she trimmed it with the whole family.
Must it not feel lovely to be merciful like that?

THE RIGHT WAY.

[St. Paul Dispatch.]
William Muldoon, the noted trainer, was talking apropos of the Jeffries-Johnson fight of training.
"In training," he said, "the strictest obedience is required. Whenever I think of the theory of training I think of Dash,
who, after eighteen years of married life,
is one of the best and happiest husbands
in the world."
"Dash," I once said to him. "Dash, old man, how do you take married life?"
"According to directions," he replied.

NO HELP.

[Washington Star.]
"That's a fine dictionary you have,"
said the city relation.
"Yes," replied Farmer Cornstossel.
"Mandy thought I ought to have the book in the house so's to help my spelling."
"But your spelling is just as erratic and unusual as ever."
"I know. I'm one of these fellows that don't believe half they see in print."

SHE DONE THE WORK.

[Fort Saskatchewan Chronicle.]
Take off your hats to the ladies, Mrs.
Joe Vance, with the assistance of her son, had the shingles on their new barn (12x20, with 14-foot rafters), in two days, and Big Joe, the infant, says, as good a carpenter as he is, he don't believe he could do it in that time. All Joe done was carry shingles up the ladder all day, while the woman on the roof, she done the work.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

[M. A. P.]
A prosperous grocer in a certain Lanarkshire town had occasion recently to engage a new errand boy. Trade was very brisk, and the lad had a great deal of work to do in delivering parcels in different parts of the town.
"Well, George, how did you get on on Saturday?" asked the grocer on Monday morning.
"Oh, fine," replied George, "but I'll be leaving at the end of the week."
"Why, George, what's up now?" queried his master. "Are the wages not high enough?"
"I'm not findin' 'em fault to the pex," replied the boy, "but the fact is, I'm surdacin' a horse out o' a job here."

WHY DOESN'T HE KICK?

[St. Paul Dispatch.]
If man came from monkey,
As some folks like to maintain,
How patient is the gentle ape
That he does not complain.

NO DECEPTION.

[Ally Sloper.]
Madge—She said I put rouge on my face to deceive people. Wasn't that mean?
"It was, indeed, dear. The way you put it on doesn't deceive anybody."

CLOSE CALCULATION.

[Washington Evening Star.]
The businessman who stays at home
And figures night and day,
Gazes at his girls and loved ones
When summer time is gay;
When summer time is gay;
He shouted welcome from afar
And viewed them with delight,
Even though the sun should melt to mar
Complexions once so white.

And then to work again he turned,
The weary hours he spent,
Where values of all kinds he learned
To fractions of a cent.
He found when he had figured out
The bills at Billings and Co.,
That this year's freckles cost about
Two hundred dollars each.

"A Toothsome Flavor"

True for you, there's a treat in the crisp, nutty, delicate sweet taste of Grape-Nuts served with cream or milk.

(Don't spoil the food by trying to cook it. That's the worst and perfectly done at the factories.)
The cream should soften it a bit, but not enough to excuse the teeth
from at least a few good earnest
"chews" for old Dame Nature sends rich blessings to the strong chewer. Of course, the one with weak teeth can soften the food with milk down to a mush if necessary, but the good old Dame doesn't smile quite so cheerfully on them.

You know, children and adults must use the teeth and grind freely to make them grow strong and to preserve them. Then the act of chewing brings down the much-needed saliva from the gums, and that helps amazingly in the digestion of foods of various kinds.

The saliva is not so much required with Grape-Nuts, for this food is partially pre-digested; that is, the starch turned into a form of sugar in the process of making, and that helps give it the fascinating flavor.

Grape-Nuts people are healthy and enjoy good things. "There's a reason."
Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in package. "There's a Reason."

Eli Colbeau, Saginaw, Mich., is believed not to have been aboard, but if he was, he also lost his life.

Ludington, Mich., Sept. 9.—The worst disaster on the lakes this season came this morning with the drowning of 28 persons, and the saving of 33 more of the passengers and crew of Pere Marquette ferry No. 18, which had left here at midnight bound for Milwaukee. The fate of one man cannot be learned till it is found whether or not he was on board the fated vessel.
Charles Sylvester, formerly chief engineer of No. 18, owes the fact that he is not drowning to the place of Chief Engineer Robert Leedham, who lost his life, to a remarkable premonition.
Sylvester had been engineer on No.
18 for some time, but a few weeks ago he told his friends he became convinced that a serious accident would overtake the vessel, and decided to leave her. He could assign no reason for his fears, as No. 18 was one of the best and newest ferries on the lake, but they were too strong to permit him to keep his place.

Leedham was sent for from Port Huron, where he had been living, and came, bringing his wife and family with him. His wife was one of the frail crowd waiting for No. 17 to come in tonight with tidings of the disaster, and was prostrated when she learned that her husband was suddenly dead.

The gale which caused the wreck was not unusually strong, and it is suspected that there must have been some carelessness in making the cars fast before the ferry left here. She carried 24 loaded cars and 400 tons of coal in the bunkers.

Wireless Told of Danger.
The first intimation of trouble to those on shore came in a wireless message early this morning from a point about 20 miles off Sheboygan, Wis.
"Far ferry No. 18 sinking. Help."
The message was repeated constantly till nearly 6, when it suddenly faded. At 7:30 Superintendent Mercereau, of the P. and M. ferry line, received a message from No. 17 saying that No. 18 sank about 7. A few details were received by wireless,
but little was known till No. 17
reached this port at 6 o'clock tonight.
The scene at the pier when No. 17
came in was one of deep grief.

Crowds lined the docks, hoping anxiously for a sight of loved ones who might be saved. Weeping women and children ran about wringing their hands as they looked in vain for bodies of their dead. The bodies of Capt. Kilty, Joseph Brezinski, A.
J. Mack, Steward W. H. Cummins,
Chicago, S. F. Sepeanek, N. L. Bertrand, city, and Mrs. Marion Turner were taken off as soon as the boat landed.

The men who were saved watched from the dock as the dead were slowly carried off. Officers are on guard on the docks and no one is allowed on the boat nor is any one from the boat allowed to leave it.
The officers of No. 17 will not talk of the disaster, and others who know are dead.

It is supposed that the dead lights in the stern of the boat were either broken or left open. According to stories gathered from the surviving members of the crew, about 4 o'clock this morning the engineer reported to Capt. Kilty that the boat was filling with water. The latter went below and was heard to state that they might reach their destination if the water was lightened. Seventeen of the 24 cars were run off, and the vessel sank suddenly. Then, without any warning, the ferry gave a lurch, the stern went down and she sank to the bottom about 7:30. Many were in bed, others who had heard of the trouble and had risen were thrown into the water with scarcely any clothing on.

The explosion stunned many, who went to the bottom and never rose.
After their terrible experience, and the sight of screaming men and great timbers mingled in a confused mass,

the survivors look dazed and as if they had passed through months of illness.

When the accident occurred a freighter was passing about two miles off and saw distress signals, but passed on. Pere Marquette ferry No.
17 happened to be coming from Milwaukee, and came up as No. 18 went down. Her crew assisted the men and women into boats. Tug A. C.
Tessler, of Port Washington, and Sheboygan tug assisted, the former receiving bodies that will be brought back today.

Pere Marquette ferries Nos. 20 and 6 left this port this morning at 6 o'clock and at 7 tonight were still searching for bodies. All the bodies recovered are bruised and covered with blood.

Jas. Fray, the cook, who was saved, has a hand badly injured by flying timber. He was in the car ferry when she went down and says he was carried down about 40 feet, when an explosion forced him out with broken timbers. He was picked up more dead than alive.

The Rescue.
At 7:30 this morning, without warning and before the horrified gaze of 50 men on board, Pere Marquette ferry
No. 17, which had just arrived on the scene in response to a distress signal, the great black bow of the flagship rose high in the air, the stern settled swiftly toward the bottom and with a roar the ship shot downward and was lost to view.

The crew of No. 17 rushed overboard with a lifeboat with four men. The waves picked it up in an instant and crushed it against the ferry's side.
Two of the sailors were rescued by those on board, while the other two, Jos. Peterson and R. J. Jacobson, a scrubber, immediately sank.

Another lifeboat was successfully launched. This boat in charge of Duncan Milligan, of Ludington, did heroic work in less than an hour picked up fourteen survivors, who were floating about and clinging to bits of the wreckage.

Then another lifeboat was manned and in the face of great danger more than 30 persons were saved.
Meanwhile the tug A. C. Tessler, of Milwaukee, car ferry P. M. No.
20, steamer P. M. No. 6, and a tug from Sheboygan, towing the Shebo-yan lifesaving crew, arrived on the scene. They instituted a thorough search for survivors and bodies and succeeded in picking up seven of the former, and eight of the latter.

THE WOMAN'S CORNER

New "Gable" Hat Gives Chin Saucy Tilt

Behold the "gable brim" hat, one of the smartest styles for fall. The woman who wears it must tilt her chin very high if she is to see ahead at all. Squared in back the brim of the black hatters' plush hat is turned sharply up, like the end of a barn gable. The rest of the brim droops almost on a line with the crown, screening lady's face to her lips when her head is held naturally or dropped a trifle.

Also squarely in back, but underneath the brim—under the gable, so to speak—is a thick bunch of uncurled ostrich feathers. On each side is a sage rose of pleated velvet ribbon and forget-me-nots.

A DAILY THOUGHT.
A cheerful word will smooth a frown,
A blithe word stop a tear;
A laugh may go resounding down
The dull aisles of a year.
A nod may make a friend for you,
A song may still a sigh
Within a heart where sorrow grew
And win a sweet reply.

ADVERTISER PATTERNS
BEAUTY PATTERN COMPANY.

NO. 8705—A STYLISH ONE-PIECE DRESS.

Ladies' Princess Coat Dress, With or Without Chemise and Shawl Collar. There is no style of dress that gives the long, slender lines so effectively as a princess model. It is a style that apparently adds to a woman's height. In the model here shown we have a style comparatively easy to make, and most attractive to wear. Tan brocade with black silk facings was used with good effect. Green pongee, with a braid finish, and tucked chiffon for the chemise will develop equally well. Pattern cut in six sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure, and requires 7½ yards of 44-inch material for the 36-inch size.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of ten cents in silver or stamps.

CYNTHIA GREY'S CORRESPONDENTS

Dear Miss Grey: Will you please answer the following questions in your valuable paper:

1. A business associate asks a young man to lunch at his house, which he accepts. Owing to engagements party can only talk to hostess about ten minutes besides at the table. What would be a proper way of thanking her?

2. On reaching a young lady's home after having taken her to the theatre, and she thanks you for the pleasant time she has had, what should the young man say; or should he say anything beyond that he is pleased she enjoyed herself?

TOM.
1. When you are about to depart tell your hostess that it was very kind of her to have you for lunch, or that you appreciate her kindness or some such remark.

2. It is polite to let her understand that you consider she conferred an honor on you by accepting your invitation.

A Clear Voice.
Dear Miss Grey: 1. What will make the voice clear and strong?
2. Is there any way of making the lips red, except by painting them?

SWEET SIXTEEN.
If you have any trouble with the vocal chords I advise you to consult a throat specialist as soon as possible. If you have no control of your voice it would be well for you to take a training in elocution.

Usually, when one is enjoying good health, the lips are red, but occasionally we hear of persons who naturally have pale lips in spite of their sound health. If you belong to the latter class let me beg of you not to paint your lips, thinking their beauty will thus be doubled. If you keep the skin of the lips smooth they will have a certain freshness and charm in spite of their pale rose color.

Sallow Complexion.

Dear Miss Grey: I would like to ask what is the cause of a rather sallow complexion with very deep, dark circles around the eyes, and what remedy can you suggest? Also, how can I fill out hollow cheeks?

AN INQUIRER.
Your questions indicate that your health is not in the best condition, and I advise you to consult a reliable physician and have him prescribe a remedy.

Moles on the Face.

Dear Miss Grey: Will you kindly tell me of something harmless with which I may remove moles from my face?

Moles should never be removed by any one but a specialist. If you do not know of a reliable one, ask your family physician to suggest one.

COOKING RECIPES

Cottage Pie—Chop cold meat very fine. To each cupful add one salt spoon of salt and one and a half salt spoons of pepper, a pinch of summer savory and one-half cup of stock. Put into a baking dish and cover with a crust of mashed potatoes. Brush over the top with milk and bake in an oven to a golden brown.

Baked Salmon—Wipe the fish with a damp cloth, but do not lay it in water. Rub with a little salad oil and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Lay in a baking dish and add a cupful of boiling water in which two tablespoons of butter have been melted. Bake, covered, basting every fifteen minutes. When done, transfer to a hot platter and set in the oven while you thicken the gravy left in the pan with cornstarch wet with cold water, and season it with lemon juice and a dash of onion juice. A little tomato catsup is an improvement. Boil up once an hour into a gravy boat. Garnish the fish with parsley.

When a Man Marries
By Mary Roberts Rinehart.
Copyright, 1910, The Bobbs-Merrill Co.

He grunted savagely under his breath.

"Be quite honest," I pursued relentlessly. "Say that when you are married, you will be a better man than you are now."

"The woman does not need it," Dal retorted. And then, because Max looked angry enough really to propose to me right there, I got up hastily and went into the den. Max followed, and closing the door, stood with his back against it.

"Contrary to the general belief, Kit," he began, "I did not intend to ask you to marry me."

I breathed easier. He took a couple of steps toward me and stood with his arms folded, looking down at me.

"I'm not at all sure, in fact, that I shall ever propose to you," he went on unpleasantly.

"You have already done it twice, you are not going to take those back, are you, Max?" I said, looking up at him.

But Max was not to be cajoled. He came close and stood with his hand on the back of my chair. "What happened on the roof tonight?" he demanded hoarsely.

"I do not think it would interest you," I retorted, coloring in spite of myself.

"Not interest me! I am shut in this blasted house! I have to see the only woman I ever loved—really loved!" he supplemented, as he caught my eye. "pretend she is another man's wife. Then I sit back and watch her using every—every—trick she can think of to make still another man love her. I mean, I think she is a married woman. If Harbison were worth the trouble, I would tell him the whole story, Aunt Selma be—obliterated!"

I sat up suddenly.

"That you do not love him," "I don't," she snapped irritably. "Do you suppose I mean the policeman?" I looked over at Jimmy. She had got me by the hand, and Jimmy was making frantic gestures to tell her the whole thing and be done with it. But I had gone too far. The mill of the gods had crushed me already, and I didn't propose to be drawn out hideously mangled and held up as an example for the next two or three weeks, although it was clear enough that Aunt Selma disapproved of me thoroughly, and would have been glad enough to find that no tie save the board of health held us together. And then Bella came in, and you wouldn't have known her. She had put on a straight white woolen wrapper, and she had her hair in two long braids down her back. She looked like a nice, wide-eyed little girl in her teens, and she had some lobster salad and a glass of port on a tray. When she saw the situation she put the things down and had the nastiness to stay and listen.

"I'm not blind," Aunt Selma said, with one eye on the tray. "You two silly children adore each other; I saw some things last night."

Bella took a step forward; then she stopped and shrugged her shoulders. Jim was purple.

"I saw you kiss her in the dining-room, remember that!" Aunt Selma went on, giving the screw another turn.

It was Bella's turn to be excited. She gave me one awful stare, then she fixed her eyes on Jim.

"Besides," Aunt Selma went on, "you told me today that you loved her. Don't deny it, James."

Bella couldn't keep a quiet instant. She came over and stood at the foot of the bed.

"Please don't excite yourself, dear Miss Caruthers," she said, in a voice like ice. "Everyone knows that he loves her; he simply overflows with it. It—it is quite a by-word among their friends. They have been sitting together in a corner all evening."

EUCCHARISTIC CONGRESS OPEN-AIR EVENTS

Rain Prevented Morning Mass—Thousands of Children in Afternoon Procession.

Montreal, Que., Sept. 9.—Although a tremendous crowd gathered on Fletcher's Field this morning for the open-air mass which was to have been one of the principal outside events of the eucharistic congress, the ceremony had to be abandoned on account of the weather. A heavy thunder and rain storm during the night made outside devotions out of the question.

It has been arranged to have the open-air mass tomorrow if the weather permits.

The repository on Fletcher's Field at which the ceremony was to have taken place was finished last night and presents a beautiful appearance. This morning the ceremony was to have taken place at St. James' Cathedral where Cardinal Vannutelli viewed the procession and bestowed the Pontifical blessing, after which the parade returned to Notre Dame Church, where Archbishop Farley celebrated mass.

with decent people, and wonders when they are systematically robbed!" "You are unjust!" I said, rising and facing him. "I do not like Mr. Harbison—I hate him, if you want to know. But as to his being a thief, I think it quite as likely that you took the necklace."

Max threw his cigarette into the fire angrily.

"So that is how it is!" he mocked. "If either of us is the thief, it is I. You do hate him, don't you?"

I left him there, flushed with irritation, and joined the others. Just as I entered, the room, Betty burst through the hall door like a cyclone, and collapsed into a chair. "She's a mean, cantankerous old woman!" she declared, feeling for her handkerchief.

"You can take care of your own Aunt Selma, Jim Wilson. I will never go near her again."

"What did you do? Poison her?" Dal asked with interest.

"G—got camphor in her eyes," snuffed Betty. "You never—heard such a noise. I wouldn't be a trained nurse for anything in the world. She—she called me a hussy!"

"You're not going to give her up, are you, Betty?" Jim asked imploringly. But Betty was, and said so plainly.

"Anyhow, she won't have me back," she finished, "and she has sent for 'guess'!"

"Have mercy!" Dal cried, dropping to his knees. "Oh, fair ministering angel, she has sent for me!"

"No," Betty said maliciously. "She wants Bella—she's crazy about her."

CHAPTER XI.
Really, I have left Aunt Selma out of it, but she was important to a cause, not as a result; at least at first. She came out strong later. I believe she was a very nice old woman, with some likes and dislikes, which she was perfectly willing to pay for. At least, I only presume she had likes; I know she had prejudices.

Nobody ever understood why Bella consented to take Betty's place with Aunt Selma. As for me, I was too much engrossed with my own affairs to pay the invalid much attention. Once or twice during the day I had received her, and had been received frigidity and with marked disapproval. I was in disgrace, of course, after the scene in the dining-room the night before. I had stood like a naughty child, just inside the door, and replied meekly when she said the pillows were overstepped, and why didn't I have the linen slips bunched in starch water? She laid the blame of her illness on me, as I have said before, and she made Jim read to her in the afternoon from a book she carried with her, Coals of Fire on the Domestic Hearth, marking places for me to read.

"She sent for me that night, just as I had taken off my gown," I threw on a dressing-gown and went in. To my horror, Jim was already there. At a gesture from Aunt Selma, he closed the door into the hall and tiptoed back beside the bed, where he sat staring at the figures on the silk comfort.

Aunt Selma's first words were: "Where's that libberly-gibbet?" Jim looked at me.

"She must mean Betty," I explained. "She has gone to bed, I think."

"Don't let her in this room again," she said, with awful emphasis. "She is an infamous creature."

"Oh, come now, Aunt Selma," Jim broke in; "she's foolish, perhaps, but she's a nice little thing." Aunt Selma's face was a curious study. Then she raised herself on her elbow, and taking a flat chamol-skin bag from under her pillow, held it out.

"My cameo breastpin," she said solemnly; "my cuff buttons with gold rings and storks painted on china in the middle; my watch, that has put me to bed and got me up for forty years, and my money—five hundred and ten dollars and forty cents—taken with the goods locked under my nose."

Which was ambiguous, but forcible.

"But, good gracious, Miss Car—Aunt Selma!" I exclaimed, "you don't think Betty Mercer took those things?"

"No," she said grimly; "I think I probably got up in my sleep, and lighted the fire with them, or sent 'em out for a walk." Then she stuffed the bag away and sat up resolutely in bed.

"Have you made up?" she demanded looking from one to the other of us. "Bella, don't tell me you still persist in that nonsense."

"What nonsense?" I asked, getting ready to run.

"That you do not love him."

"I don't," she snapped irritably. "Do you suppose I mean the policeman?" I looked over at Jimmy. She had got me by the hand, and Jimmy was making frantic gestures to tell her the whole thing and be done with it. But I had gone too far. The mill of the gods had crushed me already, and I didn't propose to be drawn out hideously mangled and held up as an example for the next two or three weeks, although it was clear enough that Aunt Selma disapproved of me thoroughly, and would have been glad enough to find that no tie save the board of health held us together. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur

B. Stephenson was the scene of a happy event on Wednesday, when their daughter, Miss Eva, became the bride of Mr. Douglas Wheeler, London. The ceremony was performed at high noon, under a horseshoe of asters and myrtle, by Rev. T. W. Cosens, and was witnessed by about fifty guests. The bride, who was given away by her father, was handsomely gowned in white silk mull, and carried a bouquet of lovely white asters. After hearty congratulations all partook of a dainty wedding repast. The esteem in which the young couple are held was evidenced by the numerous presents. After a short honeymoon trip to Toronto and other points, Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler will settle in their home on the London road, two miles from Clinton.

CRUELTY CHARGED AGAINST THE C. P. R.

Its Failure to Feed and Water Cattle in Transit Is Alleged.

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 9.—A second charge of cruelty to animals through not properly feeding and watering cattle in transit was laid against the C. P. R. in the police court this morning, it being alleged that thirty head of cattle shipped from Toronto to Fiesherston, 86 miles, on Aug. 25, received no attention from the railway officials, notwithstanding they were 48 hours on the road.

The animals were shipped by William Boyd, of Fiesherston, who said they were so weak when they arrived that they could not stand.

The C. P. R. solicitor pleaded not guilty, and the case was remanded for a week.

Police Magistrate Denison fined the company $75 a few weeks ago on a similar charge, holding that full responsibility in such cases lay with the transportation companies and not with the shippers.

Buying an Automobile Tire.

You don't buy an Automobile Tire out and out, you buy it upon the understanding that under certain normal conditions of usage it will give you so many thousand miles of service—therefore the actual cost of a tire is not its initial purchase price, but the purchase price plus the cost of tire repairs, during the time you are running your car. Dunlop Automobile Tires give a low average cost per mile because, besides the quality of the tire, there is a further guarantee of service in the ready willingness of the Dunlop Company to thoroughly satisfy every user of Dunlop Tires.

500 CANAL COMMERCE

Figures for August Show a Decrease Compared With July.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Sept. 9.—Lake commerce through the United States and Canadian canals in August shows a decrease in freight and vessel tonnage, as compared with July.

Vessel passages through the United States canal were 2,116 and through the Canadian canal 1,045.

Freight tonnage passing through the United States canal was 4,219,551 net tons, and through the Canadian canal 5,397,975, a total of 9,744,556 net tons, as compared with 9,975,183 net tons in July and 8,988,223 in August 1909.

Mrs. Pankhurst's society of English suffragists has just cleared $8,500 at a suffrage bazaar held in Glasgow.

Satisfying the Purchaser.

You may buy Dunlop Automobile Tires from dealers anywhere, but no matter where you buy them the Dunlop Company accepts the responsibility for every tire, and is thoroughly anxious to satisfy you, as its purchaser—that is why Dunlop Automobile Tires give a low average cost per mile.

AN AMERICAN ON THE EXODUS

At a dinner in honor of a party of American newspapermen in the west not very long ago, Mr. Elmer E. Griffith, of Chicago, said:

"A good many things have been dropped on our way up here which give us from the other side of this imaginary something called a boundary line, occasion to think. People are telling us, or rather a few people have been endeavoring to tell us, that some of our former citizens who decided to cast in their lot with you have become dissatisfied and are flocking back to the States."

"Gentlemen, the people on the other side of the line who really count for anything and who really do things and help to make the big world go round understand the animus behind this declaration. You need not be worried in any particular about that declaration because it is not true. It is not a fact that our people who come over here are going back to the United States. It is not because the people are dissatisfied with you, or with your country, or with your government, or with the administration of your laws, or of the conditions which they find that they are going back. You are all big enough to know that occasionally a man becomes dissatisfied without cause. The disgruntled individual is not going to do you any good if he remains here. Let him go back."

"We have a department of our Government whose duty it is to enter and make a complete check on every man who crosses this imaginary line and out of the 75,000 we have gladly contributed you less than 204 of them have come back." (Loud applause.)

NOT RETURNING TO ROME SAYS THE BISHOP OF LONDON

Halifax, Sept. 9.—The reports of some of the speeches at the Montreal Eucharistic Congress have aroused criticism here, especially the statement that one-half of the Church of England was occupied with agnostics and politics, and the other half was going over to Rome as fast as it could.

"Not a word of truth in it," said one indignant Canadian bishop, not long elevated. The Bishop of London was seen by the press, but he laughingly put it aside as unworthy of serious notice. "It was Bishop Creighton, who was a much better scholar than I can profess to be," he remarked, "who said the reformation was a return to sound learning, and it will be found to be so. I heartily agree with him."

Not Ashamed of Church Truths. Dr. Ingram, perhaps, bore the matter in mind, for in his address after convocation, he said: "We are not ashamed of the truths of the Church of England," one of three points he dwelt upon. "I think I saw in the papers something about the Church of England going back to Rome. I could not help smiling. There is about as much chance of the church going back to Rome as there is of it going back to Druids."

He thought there was more and more a turning of the sections of the church to each other, and they were learning to teach the great Catholic, not Roman Catholic, truths.

CUT DOWN HOTEL LICENSES

Hamilton Temperance People Want Bylaw Submitted to Voters.

Hamilton, Sept. 9.—Last evening the Hamilton Temperance Federation decided to ask the city council to submit a bylaw to the people to reduce the number of hotel licenses from 66 to 50.

Today City Clerk Kent stated that the council had no authority to submit such a bylaw, the only thing it could do being the submission of a plebiscite to the voters.

The dispute will be settled later.

THE REASON FOR IT

Mellowness of tone quality in a piano is secured in part by a good sounding board, and the only way to secure a perfect sounding board is to adopt the expensive but thoroughly adequate method in use by the firm of Gourlay, Winter & Leeming. For the Gourlay Piano the sounding board is made of clear spruce that has been subjected to the severe eye of an expert. Every piece must be perfect and must stand the extraordinary heat test before it has passed as suitable. Because of this care in manufacture, the piano has received unnumbered compliments on the unique sweetness and charm of the tone.

Be sure and see the exhibit of Gourlay Pianos in the Main Building at the Fair Grounds.

STEPPED OFF TOO SOON

Fatal Accident to G. T. R. Passenger Going Into Ottawa.

Ottawa, Sept. 9.—As a result of injuries received in alighting from a moving G. T. R. train the night of Aug. 24, John Welford, of Montreal, died here this morning.

Mr. Welford was coming to see his son, Mr. John M. Welford, and when the brakeman called out Ottawa, a short distance beyond Rideau Junction, and as the express slowed up passing the junction, he stepped off in the darkness, apparently thinking the station had been reached. The result was that he was thrown with great force against a fence.

Mr. Welford leaves an aged widow in Montreal.

SMUGGLED A PIG INTO THIS COUNTRY

Animal Did a "Stunt" in Hamilton Theatre—Owner Fined $20.

Hamilton, Ont., Sept. 9.—At the police court this morning J. T. Vancamp was fined $20 for smuggling a pig into Canada.

Vancamp was coming to see his son, Mr. John M. Welford, and when the brakeman called out Ottawa, a short distance beyond Rideau Junction, and as the express slowed up passing the junction, he stepped off in the darkness, apparently thinking the station had been reached. RABIES MIGHT SPREAD TO WILD ANIMALS

Hunters Cannot Use Dogs This Fall—Muzzle Order Still Holds Good.

Ottawa, Sept. 9.—Dogs will have to wear muzzles for some time yet, and cannot be transported in Western Ontario before December at the earliest. The work of stamping out rabies has not proven an easy task, in spite of the stringent regulations and the strict enforcement of them. Cases of rabies continue to be reported from the west of the peninsula. The veterinary department has therefore determined not to relax the war. The order forbidding the transportation of a dog anywhere in the embargo district has been extended from September to December, and the department is prosecuting all infractions. The order requiring dogs to be muzzled is still in force. It has no term and will be continued until the epidemic is stamped out. Just how tremendous pressure is being put on the department to relax the regulations so that hunters who live in the embargo district can take their hounds to the woods for the deer-hunting season. That is just the thing the department is determined not to do. It is stated that rabies among dogs is difficult enough to handle, but if wild animals are once affected the trouble becomes ten times greater. At present Nebraska is struggling with rabies among the smaller wild animals, particularly among skunks, and in spite of all that can be done the thing is spreading. There is a considerable district of Russia which is having great trouble among wolves.

JUST A CHURCH PARADE

The 65th Will Take Part in Sunday Procession at Montreal.

Ottawa, Sept. 9.—As the result of a conference between Sir Frederick Borden and Hon. L. P. Brodeur, it has been decided to allow the Roman Catholic members of the Sixty-fifth Regiment, Montreal, who volunteer for the service, to act as a guard to the host in the eucharistic procession at Montreal next Sunday. The regiment has for many years past done its annual religious observance by parading with the Corpus Christi procession as a guard to the host. As the regiment does not act as a guard to Cardinal Vanutelli, as was first proposed, the service on Sunday does not bring it into conflict with army regulations. The service of the corps is regarded as a church parade.

BOARD OF EDUCATION

Trustees Pass on Application of Teachers.

There was little other than routine business transacted at the board of education meeting yesterday afternoon. Miss Emma Northcott asked for a year's leave of absence, and her request was granted.

Miss Grave Dickson resigned from the kindergarten staff, and her resignation was accepted.

Miss Anna M. Kennedy applied for a position on the kindergarten substitute list, and the application was sent to No. 1 committee.

It was decided to appoint a new janitor to the Colborne street school. Inspector Edwards reported that:

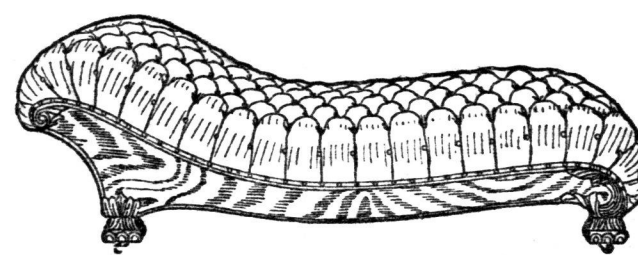

- 1.—The public schools reopened on Sept. 1.
 - 2.—The two senior rooms at King street school were closed, the children going to Simpson, Empress, and Colborne street schools, these being the districts in which they live.
 - 3.—An additional room has been opened in Wortley road school, with Miss Knott, formerly of King street school, in charge.
 - 4.—A kindergarten has been opened in King street school, with Miss Boake in charge until Miss Rowntree returns.
 - 5.—The attendance at the schools is very satisfactory, and in the following it is taking the accommodation to the limit—Aberdeen, Empress avenue, Talbot street and St. George's.
 - 6.—The school buildings have been thoroughly and well cleaned during the holidays. In many cases the janitors have cleaned and varnished the desks so that they look like new ones.
- He recommended also (a) That a sufficient number of "Concise Imperial Dictionaries" be purchased to put one in each class, where needed, above

How You Can Save 9 Bars of Laundry Soap

WHILE Lawrason's Snowflake Powdered Ammonia has been on the market twelve years it has never before been advertised to the public. Nevertheless it has enjoyed an enormous sale.

Those who tried it told their neighbours about its remarkable cleaning powers and wonderful economy. And so the news spread by word of mouth, resulting in a huge demand for Snowflake Ammonia.

But we have the facilities to supply a still greater demand. So we have decided to tell the housewives of the Dominion about Snowflake Powdered

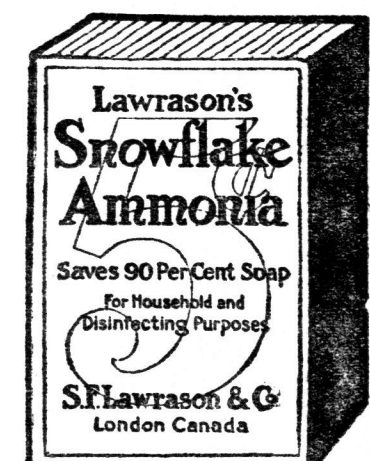

Ammonia, which is destined to supplant the use of laundry soap and washing compounds almost entirely.

While chemists have known for years that Ammonia possesses remarkable cleaning powers it remained for us to put it in powdered form, in which state it is most effective and economical.

Snowflake Powdered Ammonia dissolves instantly in water. It starts to work immediately. It loosens dirt and grease. When washing clothes it makes the soap work faster. Only one-half the amount of soap is required.

Where you formerly used two bars of soap for a large washing you will use but one bar of soap and two table-spoons of Snowflake Powdered Ammonia. The two table-spoons of Snowflake Ammonia are equal to a bar of soap.

When cleaning floors, linoleums, carpets, curtains, dishes, cutlery, kitchen-ware, milk cans, woodwork, windows, etc., no soap is required. Snowflake Ammonia does the work better alone. By using it for all household cleaning you need buy but one bar of laundry soap where you formerly bought ten—a saving of nine bars of soap, costing 45c.

Lawrason's SNOWFLAKE Powdered Ammonia

In the Giant 5c. Package

Snowflake Powdered Ammonia does all and more than borax or washing soda will do. It softens woollens. Whiteness white goods. Whiteness the white portion of colored goods without fading or bleeding the colors. Clears and beautifies the colors. And when used in the rinsing water it removes the greasy smell of the soap from the clothes. Gives them a delightful fresh, clean aroma.

Snowflake Ammonia is harmless. It is good for the finest, flimsiest, most expensive fabrics. Unlike soap it contains no grease, resin or any adulterant.

Ammonia is present in the air we breathe and in rain water, which is one reason why rain water is superior to hard water for cleansing purposes. Add Snowflake Ammonia to hard water and it becomes soft, like rain water.

Don't judge Snowflake Ammonia from the ordinary kinds of powdered ammonia you may have used. Ordinary powdered ammonia cakes and turns solid, because it is made from inferior stock and not made properly.

Lawrason's Snowflake Ammonia remains in its powdery form permanently, because we, the originators, use superior stock and know exactly how to make it right.

Be sure you get Snowflake Ammonia, in the giant 5c. package. The 10c. packages of ordinary ammonia are only about one-third larger, while washing compounds are only about one-third as large. Borax costs twice as much as Snowflake Ammonia.

Now that you understand the wonderful economy of Snowflake Powdered Ammonia you'll want to commence using it to-day. So go to your grocer and get a package, but be sure it's Snowflake, the original powdered ammonia.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE BURIED IN COUNTRY CHURCHYARD

Graphic Description of Simple Obsequies—No Pomp After Death—Laid Among Her Own People.

In all simplicity and quietness the body of Florence Nightingale was buried in the churchyard at East Wellow. It was all as she had wished. After the long years of self-effacement following upon that splendid memory it was the due and proper end. Pomp after death would have been out of tune indeed with the life that went before. Soon after the hour when in St. Paul's all kinds of people, the representatives of the nation, were sowing and remembering, half a dozen men of the foot guards were carrying the coffin from the train in Romsey station to the hearse. Behind the wreath-laden coffin a few plain carriages followed, and this procession it proceeded to must be called—set out on a five-mile journey to the tiny church of East Wellow, the church where she worshipped when she was a girl. Here she was laid, a few scores of country-folk looking on, mourning, as few in London could do, a familiar friend. In London her name was already a legend bright in remoteness, but in Romsey and the lovely country round it there are many men and women who new her well. Romsey is as proud of her as it is of the wonderful gray abbey. Today as the hearse went by all blinds were lowered in the plain brick streets, and some at least of the shutters were blackened. In the country men's memories and thoughts cling strongly to the soil. Today in the country town and in the fields round it they are talking of the great lady that is gone, half forgetting that she belongs to the nation even more than to them, remembering not so much the shining deeds of half a century since as the stories of her childhood and womanhood at Embley when she lived among them.

The bell in the squat wooden cage on the abbey tower tolled solemnly, the rain as the carriages went down the town. A big Union Jack hung at half-mast on the roof. Families came out of the doors and stood behind the hearse. People noted that in the coffin instead of a pall lay a white cashmere shawl which she used to wear—a detail of a piece with the homely simplicity of the rest. Behind the hearse came a country cart piled high with wreaths. Romsey was soon left behind, and then for an hour or so the procession went over some of the loveliest roads in England, with not a village and hardly a farm within sight. The way goes uphill, and looking down as well as we could for the rolling, smoke-like rain we could see the lines of the abbey roofs barely raised above the dull red cluster of Romsey. After this we entered the white gates of a park and came to a stately, modern house. This was Embley Park, where the father and mother of Florence Nightingale lived, and where she spent her childhood. Beyond the park we came again into a region of "empty" fields, a place of richly horizoned woods and yellowing corn, and came suddenly at last in a pleat of a hillside upon East Wellow Church. On the roads a few farmers and their wives trudged after the procession were the only followers, but in the narrow lane below the church there was a long line of market carts which had brought people from farms and cottages many miles round. But there was nothing of a town, and a crowd of people there is no village at East Wellow, and one wonders how they get a congregation together to fill the tiny flint church. Perhaps two hundred men and women were there under the roadside trees and in the churchyard.

Again the tall red Guardsmen—picked from the regiments that fought in the Crimea—took the coffin on their shoulders and carried it into the church. In the front of it walked six old men chosen from those who had known Miss Nightingale when she lived in East Wellow—sawyers, carpenters, small farmers, and the like. Along the grass of the pathway was laid a border of wreaths, bright in the dull weather. The uniforms of the Guardsmen gave the procession the quality to the procession to the church, unless one counts the little group of nurses (one of them wore the South African medal) who had come to pay honor to this the most renowned of nurses. When the mourners had passed into the church there was little room for anyone else. It is about as big as a barn, an exquisite barn that has lasted from the thirteenth century. Strange mediaeval frescoes, faintly crimson, have been found under the peeling whitewashed walls; they are dim, but here and there some face with staring eyes has kept its uncanny outline. So well has the church escaped the restorers that it still has pillars of rough-cut oak and a rough timber ceiling.

The coffin was laid on trestles in the tiny chancel, and on it lay the white cross sent by the queen mother, inscribed "To the greatest benefactress of suffering humanity," and the wreath of gladioli from the family mourners. The altar was hidden in wreaths, and wreaths lay round the porch outside and by the grave. Friends and admirers in high places and in obscurity had sent these offerings—societies of nurses in this and other countries, Crimean regiments, hospitals in London and the country, old soldiers and old friends. One was sent by the survivors of the charge of the Light Brigade, "Our friend of nearly sixty years." There was a simple laurel wreath from the daughter of a Crimean veteran. One of the nursing associations sent a model of the famous lamp in flowers, a lamp such as watchmen used to carry in the streets at night.

While in the cold little church the very simple service was going on, many for whom there was no room waited in the pervasive rain outside in among the grassy graves. Miss Nightingale's favorite hymn, "The Son of God Goes Forth to War," was sung at the beginning of the service, and as the Guardsmen carried the coffin out to the grave at the close the village organist played the funeral march from Handel's "Saul." The grave is only a few yards from the church door, so that it was only a few minutes more and then Florence Nightingale had been buried behind her father and mother. Over the vault is a pyramid of masonry, the top now stained with lichen, which Miss Nightingale put up to the memory of her parents many years ago. It stands out almost the only monument among the rows of soft green mounds.

As the body was borne into the church there was sitting in the porch a little old man in decent black, wearing pince on his waistcoat the Crimean medal with the Sebastopol clasp. Once he was Private Kneller, of the 23rd Foot, now old Mr. Kneller, the Crimean veteran of Romsey. If you talked to this cheerful, kindly old man he would readily tell you how in the trenches before Sebastopol he was shot in the eye and was taken to the hospital at Scutari—how as he lay in the ward there, night by night, he would see a tall lady going along past the beds carrying a lamp. He does not remember at all whether she ever spoke to him, nor whether he spoke to her, but he remembers like a spark in the embers of his dwindling mind the apparition of the lady who came softly along the beds at night carrying in her hand a lantern—"one of them old-fashioned lanterns."

SIR HENRY SAW THE RULER'S HAREM

Extraordinary Compliment Paid
Governor of North Nigeria
by an Emir.

There is probably no parallel for the mark of confidence which a Mohammedan chief in Africa has just shown to Sir Henry Hesketh Bell, governor of Northern Nigeria. This energetic administrator has just completed a tour of inspection in the southern provinces of Nigeria, and the report he has furnished of his experiences makes very interesting and instructive reading. The episode which is likely to excite most interest, and which has already been widely reported, is that which occurred at Bida, town with a very prosperous air and, for Africa, one that is remarkably neat and clean. It is ruled over by Emir Mahamudu, a man of advanced age and enormous bulk. He has always been conspicuous for his loyalty to the British administration, and he rendered valuable services in the early days of the protectorate. He and the other chiefs are intelligent men, and are credited with progressive ideas. It may therefore be inferred that he was genuinely glad to receive and honor the representative of King George. The governor made the customary presents of kola nuts, but the Emir returned the compliment with a sword in a silver scabbard of exceptional

Is it the Hair or the Face that Makes the Woman?

If you think it is the face, take another look at the two heads pictured here. One shows a girl which the most critical would pronounce beautiful. While her features are fairly perfect, her greatest charm lies in a mass of fine, lustrous hair. The opposite picture is identical as to features and other detail, except that the wealth of hair is wanting.

Both of these ladies would attract attention anywhere, but each for a different reason, one on account of her superb beauty, and the other on account of her comical appearance.

The hair makes all the difference. A woman loses her good looks in exact proportion as she loses her hair.

Newbro's Herpicide Saves the Hair

There is nothing which is so destructive to the hair as dandruff.

This annoying trouble, to which everyone is more or less exposed, is due to the working of an invisible growth or microbe called the Dandruff Germ. It robs the hair of the snap and luster of health, burrows down into the follicle, and eventually loosens the hair, allowing it to fall out.

Newbro's Herpicide applied regularly and intelligently kills this germ, keeps the scalp clean and hair healthy.

Falling hair is thus prevented and, if the hair follicles have not become atrophied, a new growth of hair may be anticipated.

The life and luster of Herpicide hair is beautiful to see, is unmistakable. An abundance of fluffy, glittering hair is woman's chiefest beauty, and to permit its needless destruction is unpardonable.

RUSSIAN FURS FEWER

Close Time Needed to Conserve White Foxes and Sables—The Government Asked to Adopt Conservation Policy.

In the course of a consular report on the trade of Russia and the consular district of Moscow in 1909, it is stated that the year emphasized the progressive decrease in the numbers of fur-bearing animals, principally sables. The decrease was especially noticeable in the far north, and hunters are of opinion that the cause of it there is the growth of the timber trade, which attracts workmen, and so gradually drives the animals away to the north-east. However, the Samoyedi (a race inhabiting the extreme north of Russia) are said to have done very well this year, the more so since prices were high, especially for white fox skins of which rose to 20 roubles, and never fell below 15 roubles, even after the Irbis fair, when the demand for fur generally falls off. Such a high price is explained by the small number of cubs born, says the report, owing to the reckless way in which these animals are being exterminated in the far north. The Tungus, a tribe living on the island of Saghalien, last season obtained on an average of 20 sables per gun, the average price got per skin being 30 roubles. The rise in the price of sables is also explained by the fact that various big dealers came to the meeting place of the Tungus hunters, and ran up prices by bidding against each other. Some of them even went into the forests to intercept the hunters and bought before they came to the fair. The sable also is moving into more and more remote districts, to which the hunters have to follow.

According to the report prepared by the Siberian members for submission to the Russian imperial duma, the quantity of furs obtained is steadily decreasing every year because the number of animals is decreasing, mainly owing to the devastating methods used for their capture. In some districts the sable has been exterminated, and in others, of late years, it has rapidly decreased. A good instance of the methods employed is afforded by the government of Tobolsk, where from 50,000 to 75,000 fox cubs are caught every year, and only 5,000 or 10,000 full-grown animals are left. In the governments of Yakutsk and Yenisei cubs are not caught, and each of these governments produces from 15,000 to 25,000 full-grown animals yearly.

Sables are caught in large numbers in the early autumn and spring, when the animals are moulting, and the females are pregnant, a system, or want of system, continues the report, at once useless and ruinous. In view of this, the imperial government are to be approached on the subject of instituting a close time for fur-bearing animals in general.

FLOATED ACROSS SEA

Picked Up in the Azores Three Years
After It Was Cast Adrift Off
Carolina Coast.

Floating sluggishly at the mercy of the waves for three years, a pint bottle containing the address of Wm. H. Windolph, this city, travelled across the Atlantic Ocean and was finally picked up off the eastern coast of the Azores about five weeks ago.

The wayward travels of a little bottle are most mysterious. It crossed the Atlantic or at least reached the other shore; whether its course was straight eastward or whether currents or winds took it miles in detour before it reached its destination is a subject of conjecture.

On Jan. 27, 1907, Mr. Windolph on his way to Tampa and Key West passed down the coast of the Carolinas in a Merchant and Miners steamship, the Merrimac. Off North Carolina in an idle moment he put his card within a whiskey bottle and pushing in the cork against the rail of the vessel, tossed it overboard. Until it disappeared from sight in the green waves Mr. Windolph watched the tiny adventurer, never thinking to hear from it again.

Three and one-half years after the card came to him from the fishing firm of Manuel Vasconcelles & Co., Spain. Within the envelope was the same card which he had sent out unattended by the water, uninjured after its long voyage.

With the card was a letter stating that it had been picked up in a whiskey bottle off the eastern coast of the Azores, in the Province of Pralado by one of the crew of the fishing smack D. Carlos, DeLanza, captain. The letter was in excellent English, but from the style had evidently been written by an educated Spaniard. It did not state the exact date of the finding of the bottle.

"Can be depended upon," is an expression we all like to hear, and when it is used in connection with Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy it means that it never fails to cure diarrhoea, dysentery or bowel complaints. It is pleasant to take and equally valuable for children and adults. Sold by all dealers.

QUIET DRESS FOR MEN

London Forecast of the Autumn Modes
in Masculine Attire.

According to a London tailor it is going to be a simple matter for Englishmen to be fashionably clad this autumn. They need only take care that their clothes, hosiery, hats, boots, etc., are unobtrusive and avoid any article of dress which is at all conspicuous or extravagant in style.

The death of King Edward is, of course, primarily responsible for this quiet tendency in men's clothes. In the early spring there was promise of a season of brilliant waistcoats, ties and socks, while the lightest colors for bright colors prevailed. Now the dull tones used this summer are to be continued.

"There will be no startling changes in the cut and style of autumn suits," declares the same authority. "Dark grey clothes will be mostly worn for sack suits."

The seabra suits of large and gaudy stripes which were favored by men who want the latest thing in clothes are no longer seen, and with second men's stores are showing dark colored silk socks and ties. The Hamburg hat, which the late King

Edward made popular, is found in many colors ranging from pale sage green to dark greys and browns. In fact, one hatmaker shows thirty-six different tints for this hat, all of which will be in perfect taste, he assures his customers.

As King George favors the quietest and most unobtrusive style in clothes no doubt this fashion will continue. Edward's hat for bright colors when he was Prince of Wales and after he came to the throne did much to bring somewhat startling garments for men into popularity. He was interested in clothes, and prided himself on his good taste, but as King George takes small note of the matter tailors will not flourish to the same extent as they did when King Edward inaugurated a new style each season.

A WILD ALLIGATOR'S NEST.

"An alligator's nest is an interesting thing," said Alligator Joe. "Wild alligators build their nests on the bank of a river or in marshy places. They are made of mud, saw grass and leaves and mold."

"A mother alligator will sometimes have four or five dens, and she takes her brood from one to another, repeating the washing process in each one until the young ones have had a full meal."—Leslie's.

They are a sort of natural incubator, for the eggs, which are laid from 35 to 50 in a nest at one time, are hatched out by the steam which comes up through the mud as much as by the sun. Around the nest a pile of grass is laid, sometimes as high as six feet, and from a distance resembles a stack of hay. The mother 'gator has her den near by. She makes it by burrowing into a bank of soft mud, and sometimes it is 70 feet or more inland. The only way to get her out of a den like that is to take a long steel rod and thrust it down the tunnel, which is always slanting. When the 'gator feels the prodding she will come out to see what the trouble is. It takes alligator eggs two months and six days to hatch. When the little ones come out, the mother calls them together by a noise which is something between a cluck and a grunt, and they all scramble down from their nest to her den. If it is on the edge of a river, the den is filled with minnows. As the mother enters the den she wishes her tall around with terrific force, killing the smallest fish, and when they float the little alligators nab them up.

"A mother alligator will sometimes have four or five dens, and she takes her brood from one to another, repeating the washing process in each one until the young ones have had a full meal."—Leslie's.

SPEECH BY SIR EDWARD GREY

The British Foreign Minister Discusses the Veto Conference—A Life and Death Matter—Lords Question Must Be Settled.

Sir Edward Grey was the principal speaker at a picnic held recently by the Berwick Division Liberal Association at Tilmouth Park, near Berwick, the home of Sir Francis Blake, president of the association. Addressing an audience gathered from all parts of the constituency, and presided over by Sir Francis Blake, Sir Edward Grey said that before the Liberal party could put their hands to a great deal of the work that lay before them they must deal with the House of Lords question. He believed some people had been a little apprehensive because the conference of the leaders on each side had met to consider the House of Lords question. In his opinion, it was a very good sign that the conference had met, and he would certainly be most unwilling to say anything that could in any way impair the prospects of that conference. What the result would be it was too soon yet for any of them to know, but there was at least this to the good, that there was goodwill on each side. He was one of those who would always very much rather see a thing settled by consent and agreement, provided he got his own way. (Laughter.) He was sure that many people who were afraid that the conference must result in a settlement in which they would not get their own way at all. It was quite true that if the conference resulted in an agreement, there might be some people on each side who would not be altogether contented with the result, but he believed it was just as true to say that if the conference after it had resumed its labors separated without having reached an agreement there would be a still greater number of people who would be disappointed.

A Life and Death Matter.

There need be no fear that the conference was going to shelve or bury the House of Lords question. On the contrary, it was precisely because on both sides there was a conviction that the House of Lords question could not be left as it was that the conference had met. It was absolutely out of the question that the meeting of the conference should put the House of Lords question into the shade. On the contrary, it was one more illustration of how serious and urgent that question was. Of course, if the conference could not settle the question the fight would be resumed and the question settled by fighting, but he believed there was a general desire in the country that the question be settled by consent, and he thought a grave responsibility would have rested upon either party if when the mind of the country was like that it had refused an opportunity of having a discussion of the question and seeing whether it was not possible to reach a settlement by agreement. (Applause.) But let them be quite sure that, so far as they on the Liberal side were concerned, there must be some settlement of the House of Lords question which would prevent them from being placed again in the position in which they were placed in 1906, of finding themselves with a large majority and yet unable to overcome the deadlock between the House of Commons and the House of Lords, some settlement which would prevent that occurring again was, politically speaking, a matter of life and death to the Liberal party. (Applause.) They had pledged themselves that they would not drop the House of Lords question, that they would not continue in office without settling that question or having brought it to a head. That pledge, which was made before the last election, held just as good today as it did then. (Applause.) If the conference proved a method by which the question could be settled by agreement he believed the country at large would be delighted, provided it was a really fair settlement, by which the object was achieved of redressing the balance between the two parties. If it was not settled the question would remain as acute and as urgent as it would be taken up on the Liberal side in the last election. (Applause.)

Gain From Result of Last Election.

Earlier in his speech Sir Edward said the hush which fell upon the country because of the death of King Edward had for the time being put some of the most controversial questions in politics in suspense, but for all that the last election had not been without a result. The budget had been passed, and it had been passed intact, and honorably passed. (Applause.) It was the same budget as they defended and fought for. It had been said that the budget would alter things in the budget of this year, but no promises of that kind had been made, and there had been no alteration. Let his hearers think what would have happened if the last election had gone wrong. They would not have had at least the same expenditure. That expenditure had been met by the budget, and they had not had to impose a single new tax. Judging by the programme of the Conservative party, had they won the last election they would have met the expenditure by imposing duties on articles which were used in manufacture of articles of general consumption, and the country would be today at the beginning of what they saw was so frequent in protectionist countries—a great agitation against the increased cost of living. Thanks to the result of the election free trade was still secure in this country. Had they not more reason than ever to be glad that it was so? (Applause.)

The Increase of Trade.

He could not help thinking that those who, in the face of the course of trade, still believed that this country was going to be ruined unless it became protectionist had not given their minds a fair chance by reading both sides of the question. (Applause.) Did anybody believe, looking back to 1903, the first year in which they were told that unless protection was adopted the country would be ruined, that if at that time the country could have been told and assured that in seven years' time the figures would be what they are now the country would have listened to protection for a moment? Under free trade the trade of the country had gone on growing ever since the last election, whereas in protectionist countries they were seeing an increase of the agitation against the cost of living, and following upon that an increase in the Socialist vote. Of course, that happened because if the state once undertook by the imposition of duties to create wealth, or to say that it could create wealth, there was a demand that if the state made wealth by increasing the price to the

ART OF SARDINE-CATCHING

Some Figures of Breton Fishing Industry.

Holiday-makers in "dear, delightful Brittany" have returned home to speak of its quaint, picturesque people, steeped in folk-lore and old-time superstitions; but they have usually overlooked the fact that Bretons are the most brave, hardy and competent fisherfolk in the world. In the proper seasons, for instance, 6,000 men are engaged in cod-fishing, and 25,000 in sardine-fishing. In addition, much trade is done in oysters, shrimps, tunny, mackerel, and lobsters, while in some years as much as £200,000 worth of seaweed has been collected, taken inland, and either spread on the land as fertilizer or dried and burned to produce soda and iodine.

There are over 4,000 oyster-growing establishments round the coast of Brittany, from which in twelve months as many as 135,000,000 oysters have been collected. Sardine fishing, however, forms the chief industry. In an average season the Brittany sardine fishermen catch 100,000,000 pound to 150,000,000 pound of sardines, for which they receive anything from £300,000 to £400,000, while the shore industries dependent upon this

The Annual Contest From Richmond Lock to Blackfriars on the Thames—Woman Gets Fifth Place.

The annual swim from Richmond Lock to Blackfriars took place on Saturday, Aug. 27, when 49 starters took to the water on the journey of 15 miles in the Thames. These included 14 women, of whom seven finished the course, and holding their own very well with all but the very best of the men. The weather was not all propitious for the event. The wind was high, and the water consequently was rough, but the wind was behind rather than against the swimmers. Notwithstanding the conditions, the time accomplished by the first man in the battery, of Wigton, who is the long-distance champion of England and the holder of other records—was the fastest that has yet been done over the course. With his strong, steady over-arm stroke Batteries went ahead from the start, and although he was seriously rivalled at the first by Taylor, of Oldham, he steadily forged ahead, and although it cannot be said that he had a walk-over, he won by a few hundred yards in 3 hours, 21 minutes and 27 seconds. The race was one of the keenest that has yet taken place upon the Thames. The fifth place was gained by a woman, Miss Olive Carson, who is a member of the Leicester Ladies' Swimming Club, was the first woman in the Humber race of 1909, and in the same year was third in the swim through London on a much shorter course. Throughout the whole of the distance she swam with a left or right over-arm stroke, and finished up, fresh, in conspicuous contrast to the condition in which many of the men competitors were hauled aboard their

A CROCODILE HUNT

How a Giant Saurian Was Killed in Bengal—Full of Old Wounds.

A writer ("J. M. J.") in the Field tells the story of an exciting crocodile hunt in Bengal on a tributary of the River Ganges. In the month of March last (he says) I was staying with Mr. Abbott, of Kara Mari, in the west of Mozaffarabad district, about four miles from the Big Gaudak. He had arranged for a day on the river for the purpose of shooting a specimen of the fish-eating crocodile that is found there, and we started at 6.30 a. m. for the river. Our destination was a point of land jutting out into the river about two miles below, where a large male, which Mr. Abbott had already made several attempts to secure, was known to take his midday siesta. We sighted him half a mile away, and drifted silently and cautiously towards him. His nose was pointing in our direction, and he was lying beneath a steep bank about 16 feet high on a narrow shelf of sand about 3 feet broad, with his tail in the water. This habit of lying on the edge of the deep water was a very difficult one to secure, their bodies, for, however badly hit, unless their brains are blown out with an explosive bullet, they always manage to get back into the water, and die there, leaving no trace on the surface. I was armed with an ordinary service carbine and a leaden-nosed .303 bullet, while Mr. Abbott had a heavy two-barrelled .500.

The Increase of Trade.

He could not help thinking that consumers, then at any rate that wealth should be distributed by the state and not go into the pockets of individuals. It was altogether fallacious to argue that wealth could be created by the state undertaking to increase the price of articles by duties. Supposing it did so, they would have no answer to the demand that the state having created it, the state should own it and distribute it. Protection was the short cut to socialism. He knew that protectionists did not think so, but then people of their temperament were constantly led to places they very little expected to reach. (Laughter.) They used socialism on the protectionist side as an epithet of reproach, but he was not sure that they knew what they meant by socialism. (Laughter.) They on the free trade side knew what they meant by free trade. They meant imposing taxes for the purposes of revenue of such a kind that the whole of the increase of price due to the taxes found its way, not into private pockets but into the public revenue. Out of the revenue raised more and more had been going to such things as old-age pensions, which improved the lot of the people in the country generally. He believed that the sound policy. His nose was pointing in our direction, and he was lying beneath a steep bank about 16 feet high on a narrow shelf of sand about 3 feet broad, with his tail in the water. This habit of lying on the edge of the deep water was a very difficult one to secure, their bodies, for, however badly hit, unless their brains are blown out with an explosive bullet, they always manage to get back into the water, and die there, leaving no trace on the surface. I was armed with an ordinary service carbine and a leaden-nosed .303 bullet, while Mr. Abbott had a heavy two-barrelled .500.

We slowed down as we got near him, for one flash of his powerful tail would have swept us into the water. We were about ten yards off when the great head came slowly up again to a point which was very nearly at right angles with the water. Mr. Abbott emptied his heavy weapon into the top of his head, and I put another snub-nosed bullet behind his right shoulder. This settled him, and he was dead as a stone. With some difficulty and a good deal of luck we then got him to shore and proceeded to examine him.

Besides the wounds caused by our own rifles, we found eight others, all of them great holes into which one could get one's finger, but apparently pretty old. On removing the skin we found the man surrounded by rotten flesh inside. Three holes were in the right shoulder blade and one had penetrated the scales above the shoulder, though how any of them failed to disfigure him is a mystery. Two holes were in the back of the right hand, and the bullets seemed to have torn the flesh inside without getting near any vital part. A seventh had hit him full in the stomach on the left flank, and the eighth had split against his chest bones. Mr. Abbott's bullet had almost blown out the brain pan. My first shot had got him just behind the left shoulder, and the bullet had spread at once. On the left side of the chest was a hole big enough to put one's fist into. The left lung was badly damaged. The right lung had smashed up the lung as well, but I fancy he was dead before the bullet entered.

DISCOVERED OLD NORMAN WORKS

While Repairing Canterbury Cathedral—An Old Painting Also Comes to Light.

[From a Letter in the London Times.]

Some few months ago you enabled me to record the discovery of one of Lanfranc's original tower piers embedded within the northwest pier of the great Angel Steeple of the cathedral. Following upon this, some further notes may possibly not be without interest to many of your readers. The portion of the Norman pier discovered proved to be the central pier of that part of the pier which carried the Norman tower arch across the north transept, and we find that Prior Childen's men cut away parts of the pier, and the masonry of the pier, and added largely to its southern or inner side. They planned their new tower the same size as Lanfranc's, but thickened its walls materially internally.

Of the shaft in question we have been successful in finding the capital in situ—a simple cushion of early Norman design and of very considerable projection. The Norman arch-spring was some fifteen feet below the present one.

By the aid of the grouting machine we have been able to introduce 1,140 gallons of liquid cement grout into the cavity of the pier. This can be visualized by regarding the pier as equivalent in a close-grained solid material. It would just make a solid column the full height of the pier as measured from the nave floor, and two feet by one foot in area. It is hardly surprising that a composite structure containing such cavities, and sustained by so great a weight, should show signs of stress, a source of anxiety which those in charge of the fabric are glad to be free from.

The rebuilding of the nave were evidently aware that they were dealing with a problem of some delicacy. They seem to have tied together the old work and the new by lead plugs, run molten into cavities cut in the old work. At what intervals apart these were inserted we do not know, but one such is now exposed just under the Norman capital.

The pier having been so much strengthened by our recent successful operations, it has been possible to leave a small recess in which Lanfranc's capital can be seen from the floor, a point of no small added interest in the building.

The scaffolding has now been removed and transferred to the south-west pier, also in a defective condition, but which we shall strengthen in the same manner, and we hope with equal success.

Incidentally I may perhaps refer to an interesting oil painting which has lately come into my possession. It is inscribed "Thos. Johnson fecit. Canterbury Quire in 1657. Ye prospect from ye Clochouse. Johnson drew for Dugdale, and it is on record that Mr. Johnson of Canterbury showed the Royal Society in 1685 (when Sir Christopher Wren was one of its founders, was a prominent member), a curious prospect of the cathedral, drawn by himself in oil colors. Whether this is that identical work or not, it introduces its author as an English architectural painter of no little skill and of painstaking accuracy. He shows with minute—almost photographic—exactness the condition, at the close of the commonwealth, the interior of the choir as seen from Prior Childen's pulpit or screen, upon which the clock stood. It is a singular record of the building soon after the depredations of Richard Culmer (Blue Dick). His myrmidons are depicted at their fell work, breaking the windows and carrying the ancient, and at that time still surviving, thirteenth century stalls; but the real value of the painting lies in its laborious detail, which is exact, even to the number of stones in the wall, and the courses in the pillars. Although both are gone, the original and proper position of the high altar and its altar screen with the pavement and the high altar for its focus round which the monuments of future centuries grew of set purpose, has been falsified. Needless to say, that such a picture is a picture, where we would find still with us. Had it only been painted fifteen years earlier it would have been a priceless record of lost treasures.

The Danger Mark Is The Low Water Mark

With the arrival of fall, take precautions, and add "MONTERRAT" to the drinking water.

Now is the season when the sources of water supply are getting low and the danger of Typhoid Fever is increasing. The sudden change from country to city life, and especially the change of water, are apt to develop this terrible disease. "MONTERRAT" Lime Fruit Juice will protect the whole family against Typhoid.

Scientists at the Molson Laboratory of McGill University proved this conclusively. They took a tumbler of city water, teeming with typhoid germs, and added "Monterrat" Lime Fruit Juice. In fifteen minutes, every germ was destroyed.

Adding "Monterrat" to the drinking water not only protects you against typhoid, but also makes the water more wholesome and palatable.

This is because "MONTERRAT" is the pure juice of choice West Indian Limes, as proved by Inland Revenue Bulletin No. 197. Your druggist or grocer has "Monterrat".

You have only to pick up Jane Austen's novels to find gentlemen of 35 described as middle-aged. At 60 they were grizzling in their dotage. And there is Mr. Pickwick—that dear, delightful, benevolent old gentleman of 45!

Fifty years ago, when a man reached the age of 45 he grew a beard under his chin, bought himself a pair of drab gaiters and a white neckcloth, and spoke with anxious concern of the rising generation, whose manners were so different from those he had known as a "young man."

Nowadays the popular notion of irrepressible, irrepresible youth is illustrated by Col. Roosevelt, who is 52. In our generation 32 is outwardly indistinguishable from 52, save in that the former has a slightly more youthful tint in its cheek and its waistcoat.

As for the fair sex, the genius old lady is all but extinct. The pretty, vivacious matron you admire at a garden party may have seen 25 or 30 summers. As Queen Alexandra not long since said to Mme. Adeline Patiti: "We two are two of the youngest women in England." The illustrious royal example has been so sedulously followed that the ladies always young, always active, always in the height of fashion—may be said to laugh in the very face of Father Time.

Constantinople's Dogs

They Are Meeting Their End on a Miserable Island—Starving to Death by Thousands.

Constantinople's street dogs, which have been as much a part of the remarkable city as San Sophia or the Bosphorus itself, are really meeting their end. A few weeks ago the sidewalks, gutters and doorsteps along the most frequented streets were covered with sleeping dogs. Today there is scarce one to be seen.

The passing of these famous dogs is a historical event, and even the cable dispatches have given some space to them, but the government's method of disposing of its charges has aroused such general indignation and called forth so many protests and humane societies throughout Europe that the detailed facts will be found interesting.

The Moslem does not kill animals, not even to save them from torturing pain. The government, therefore, could not kill the dogs. It dares not even make a contract with some American or German glove-manufacturer, firm which would buy them properly and pay gladly as much as 50 cents per dog—a considerable item of income instead of a large outgo which it is remembered that in Constantinople, including the Bosphorus, there are probably 80,000 dogs. But the prejudices of the Moslem portion of the Ottoman empire, with its dangerous reactionary possibilities, must be taken into account by the most liberal government.

It would seem that the gradual extermination of the dogs might have been quietly and successfully planned. But, no, the capital of the regenerated empire must be cleansed at a sweep. And so it was decided to collect the dogs, segregate the sexes and feed the animals at the public expense. That sounded well enough, and parliament appropriated $22,000 toward this "Europeanizing" of the city. The local press then made humorous remarks about the pampered pensioners of the government.

The collecting began with great vigor. In the first three or four nocturnal onslaughts on the unsuspecting animals 2,500 unfortunates were captured. No trouble was made by the populace, for martial law, proclaimed after the Macedonian army entered the city in April of last year, still exists.

The dogs were taken out to the old Byzantine walls of Stamboul and penned up near the "Top Kapu" or the Cannon gate. The space between the inner and outer walls is fifty feet wide. Here a dozen inclosures, forty feet square, were constructed and into them the dogs were dumped. With remarkable stupidity one pen was packed with 600 animals, while the next four pens, opening into one another, were given over to less than 500 dogs. Even in these latter pens, however, the filth was indescribable. The noise and stench disturbed the country round. But still worse was the wholesale suffering. Nervous, trembling dogs yelped pitifully day long, angry dogs barked savagely into the air, some snarled and bit at one another, a stronger dog lacerating a weaker one which could neither resist nor even move, others were too sick to do anything but lie in the filth and await death. In one corner of the most crowded pen dead dogs and live dogs were heaped upon one another.

These conditions lasted for three weeks. The collecting had been stopped, awaiting developments. Then the dogs were removed to the steep, bare rock of Ochia in the Sea of Marmara. This small flat island, off the Bosphorus, is visible from the city. Bulwer's Island, by the way, was the notorious habitation of the slinger of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the ruins of his fine castle are still there.

Ochia is effectively described by Lew Wallace in the second chapter of "The Prince of India" as seeming in the summer over the spongy, simultaneous combustion, so hotly does the sun radiate from its bare surface. And this is the place, without water or shade, and indeed without even space to lie down, so steep is the island, and so sharp its surfaces, where the dogs are today dying by hundreds. The cleansing of the city has been going on, and the unmerciful suffering of the animals has been allowed to continue in spite of violent protests. The inhabitants of the summer resort "Princes' Islands" and of the capital in general have been wrung up over the danger of disease from the dying animals. Even if this danger is exaggerated or groundless the smell from the carcasses at Ochia is carried out to sea for a mile or two with enough solidity to strike terror to any passing vessel.

Sinking Spells Every Few Days

"At the time I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I was having sinking spells every few days. My hands and feet would get cold; I could scarcely breathe, and could feel myself gradually sinking away until I would be unconscious. Those about me could not tell there was life in me. After these spells I would be very weak and nervous, sleepless and without appetite; had neuralgia in my head and heart. After taking the remedy a short time all this disappeared and in a few weeks all the heart trouble was gone."

have recently been published, but these pictures give no idea of the state of the animals. The Constantinople street dogs, in spite of many detractors who think chiefly of him as under foot by night, and barking by night, is an amiable animal, at least at the moment when he responds to a friendly word or makes an expectant appeal for bread. The photographer stood in front of the dogs at Ochia, even out of their horrible misery they assumed a momentary expression of question and hope that does not seem to require great pity.

In reality the conditions of the dogs at Ochia would move the heart of one naturally indifferent to the worst animal suffering. The supply of bread and the little water brought daily to the island only prolonging unendurable misery. But as it is, starvation and thirst shorten the period of suffering for many of the dogs.

The collection and transportation of the dogs, moreover, is done in a brutal way. They are collected at night by men armed with long iron tongs curving at the ends. The dog catchers clamp the tongs about the animals' haunches, and heave the crying beasts into wooden crates. And the removal from the crates to the deep black barges that transport the dogs to Ochia was a sickening sight. In most parts of the world the crates would have been lowered into the barge, the cover opened and the dogs forced out. Not here. Grabbed by the iron tongs, each helpless animal was lifted, yelping, from the cage, slammed to the ground, grabbed in the vice-like grip of another pair of tongs, dragged back to the cage, and then, with a swing into the air, and finally dropped into the barge. During this process it seemed as if some infuriated dogs would bite in two the iron tongs that held them by the haunches.

With the inability to do things thoroughly characteristic of this part of the world, the dog catchers have left various stray dogs, and particularly female dogs, about the streets, to become a future care or problem to the authorities. Who knows but what the parish dog of Constantinople may still be seen by the tourist of a century to come, though probably not in such numbers as before the famous slaughter of 1910.

This is not the first attempt that has been made to rid the city of the dogs. Mahmoud II, the reformer, who in 1826 succeeded in killing off his 30,000 Janissaries, was unsuccessful in his effort to dispose of the dogs. The matter was broached several

THE LONDON PIT

Time-Honored Division of the Orchestra Floor of English Theatres.

In the orchestra of a London theatre there are only eight or ten rows of stalls, and immediately behind them is the pit, which is walled off by a barrier or fence that stretches clear across the theatre. In the pit there are no individual seats—merely rows of long benches on which the people sit rather closely together. It is, of course, impossible to reserve seats in advance, says the Bookman, and people who are going to the pit have to be content with the seats they can get. The performance in order to secure the best places.

Hence in the case of a popular play a long queue of people may be seen at 11 o'clock stretching from the pit door all the way down the street to the theatre. They keep their places very close to the pit, and in the common mood of pleasurable anticipation.

One manager a while ago made the experiment of selling reserved seats

They that touch pitch will be defiled.—Much Ado About Nothing, Act II, Sc. 2

In the Book of Ecclesiasticus in the Apocrypha to the Holy Scriptures are the words, "He that toucheth pitch shall be defiled therewith." In Shakespeare's time the Apocrypha was widely read, and many of its words of wisdom had become incorporated into the common speech of the day. The proverb in question seems to have been a favorite one. Dogberry uses it and Sir John Falstaff gives it its application. "This pitch," says Sir John, "as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company that they keep."

Pitch as symbolical of sin has evidently been chosen on account of its color. White from remotest times has been the emblem of purity; black that of sin.

"Black is the badge of hell, The hue of dungeons, and the suit of night."

Ill news is "the blackest news." A day of great loss on the stock market has remained in the memory of men as Black Friday. Pitch the substance of blackest hue has appropriately been chosen to call to the mind evil. Is it possible to associate with evil, to touch pitch, and escape detriment? Can a man mingle sympathetically with evil companions and keep his character above reproach? Shakespeare evidently did not think so. He uses that strange moralizer Falstaff to express his thoughts on the question: "It is certain that either we bear with or ignorant character is caught as men take disease, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company."

It would clearly be well to avoid evil companions. However, the man who determines to associate only with the righteous will be an exceedingly lonely man or one lacking in discernment. As society is at present constituted every one has to come daily into contact with individuals who make little or no attempt to conceal their proneness to indulge in sin. Moral pitch is everywhere. It is to be found in our libraries. There are thousands of books that have a pernicious effect on the ordinary reader. The young mind, or the mind of the mature man or woman who lacks moral strength, is seriously injured by perusing literature which glooms over other times in the nineteenth century, but no sultan or grand vizier was bold enough to undertake the task. These animals are peculiarly sacred to the Moslems of the old type, for they believe that with the removal of the dogs some great calamity will befall the city—even that greatest calamity which can be conjured up to their minds, "the pushing of the Turk back into Asia." That, however, is an old phrase which has outlived its usefulness. But just now an earthquake, a great fire, or even a political upheaval, would answer as the judgment of Allah.

There are certain popular errors about the Constantinople dogs. The good health of the city does not, and probably, even before the days when the refuse was regularly collected, never did depend upon the scavenger value of the dogs. They were, on the whole, distributors of filth and a great source of filth themselves.

The dogs are not the descendants of those who saved the ancient city from Philip of Macedonia by their barking. They came with the Turks from the steppes of Asia, and thus do not date far back into Constantinople than 1453. In certain Moslem quarters the dogs were formerly taught to be dangerous to foreigners, whom they recognized at a distance by their dress, but this inimitable character has entirely disappeared in recent years. The street dog is hardly ever known to be aggressive. He may resent being stepped on and may even give a snap, but generally he shows his feelings by diving out of the way, his tail clinking and his mouth emitting howls beyond all proportion to the injury done. He does not move readily even from the sidewalk. If a road, but this assumed ownership often costs him dear, and it is not true that a driver is molested for any injury he may do to a dog. Indeed, even within the regime of Abdul Hamid, a protest was made by a Moslem for a cruel kick administered, as was done frequently by some member of the Christian population.

There is one word which every dog understands and that is "oost." It means "get out"—but it should be applied only to dogs; for people, if it is good Turkish as well as bad English, "oost" is a reasonable polite imperative to a dog, if spoken from the mouth only; heaved up from the diaphragm it is as effective as a stone hurled at the poor animal and sends him out of the way in an agony of yelps.

The oft-repeated story of the dogs living in precincts happily needs no denial. The romance of their shelterless life has yet to be written, but it may end in the tragedy of Ochia.

THE LONDON PIT

In the pit at the usual price, but to this people, the pit is a place of great interest. The ground that they could seldom know in advance just when they would find themselves possessed of that happy condition of mind and an evening off which would permit of their going and preferred to take their chances waiting in line when the fortunate opportunity arrived.

The pit is patronized by people of a very estimable class and is often frequented by well-educated men and women who wish to save money and do not care to dress. A seat in the pit costs half a guinea, or approximately $2.50, a place in the pit costs only two and six, or approximately 60 cents; and the play can be seen nearly as well as in the boxes.

In the pit the same programme that is sold in the stalls for sixpence is sold for twopenny, and the pit has a refreshment bar of its own which is open to the main bar of the theatre. Of course, the real reason why there is a pit in the London theatre is that there has always been a large number of people of the British mind; but it must be admitted that the system is on grounds of common sense an exceedingly good one.

They that touch pitch will be defiled.—Much Ado About Nothing, Act II, Sc. 2

In the Book of Ecclesiasticus in the Apocrypha to the Holy Scriptures are the words, "He that toucheth pitch shall be defiled therewith." In Shakespeare's time the Apocrypha was widely read, and many of its words of wisdom had become incorporated into the common speech of the day. The proverb in question seems to have been a favorite one. Dogberry uses it and Sir John Falstaff gives it its application. "This pitch," says Sir John, "as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company that they keep."

Pitch as symbolical of sin has evidently been chosen on account of its color. White from remotest times has been the emblem of purity; black that of sin.

"Black is the badge of hell, The hue of dungeons, and the suit of night."

Ill news is "the blackest news." A day of great loss on the stock market has remained in the memory of men as Black Friday. Pitch the substance of blackest hue has appropriately been chosen to call to the mind evil. Is it possible to associate with evil, to touch pitch, and escape detriment? Can a man mingle sympathetically with evil companions and keep his character above reproach? Shakespeare evidently did not think so. He uses that strange moralizer Falstaff to express his thoughts on the question: "It is certain that either we bear with or ignorant character is caught as men take disease, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company."

It would clearly be well to avoid evil companions. However, the man who determines to associate only with the righteous will be an exceedingly lonely man or one lacking in discernment. As society is at present constituted every one has to come daily into contact with individuals who make little or no attempt to conceal their proneness to indulge in sin. Moral pitch is everywhere. It is to be found in our libraries. There are thousands of books that have a pernicious effect on the ordinary reader. The young mind, or the mind of the mature man or woman who lacks moral strength, is seriously injured by perusing literature which glooms over they have not allowed the pitch of public life to defile them.

In society there is sham, flattery, extravagance—pitch of many degrees of blackness. Would it be wise to shun society, to avoid the world of business? Surely the style on his pillar was not a very admirable creature. The hermits of the world are little better than suicides. There is pitch everywhere, but it is not necessary to let it defile. Indeed it can be turned to good uses. Pitch when properly applied can help make the hull of a ship sound or a water cask tight. So a wise man may take the evil of life and turn it to good uses. The ingenuity of the thief, the brutal cunning of the bow-ery tough, the shrewd trickery of the businessman, the unscrupulous scheming of the politician, are all merely evidences of misdirected energy. Direct the energy properly and what was pitch may turn to the appearance of fine silver. If a man sympathizes with crookedness or delights ever so slightly in the follies of dissipated companions he cannot escape defilement.

AN IRISHMAN IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

HOW BIRD FOLK SPEND THE NIGHT

Self-Preservation the Idea Displayed by Both Wild and Domestic Fowl in the Choice of Sleeping Places.

When I was a boy, it used to give me great amusement, when I had a house during the evening, to see the fowls were generally more anxious to go to roost than others seemed to be, and certain perches were sought after, if I had had few fowls upon them. Now and then, perhaps, they were too soundly, a fowl lost its hold and fell to the floor, making quite a commotion till it got back again. A cross-temperamented fowl, however, was not so easily satisfied. It would give his neighbor a vicious peck and she retaliated on the next one, until the whole row was disturbed. I used to wonder, too, how the London sparrows, flocks of birds, as a place to sleep, especially in winter, when the elms and limes are bare of leaves. But it appears that they look out for themselves, where they can shelter from wind and rain, and they sleep in the ivy upon walls. It is thought that a good many rest at night amongst the chimney pots or eaves of roofs.

About the country in the winter season, some sparrows and other birds sleep in old nests, or hide within haystacks, or in woodstacks, or perhaps hop into holes on the bank of a ditch, or rest, while there are birds of wandering habits which go about from place to place, not roosting often in one place. There are also birds which will, night after night, sleep in a favorite retreat, not leaving it until forced.

Wrens are nesting into old thrushes' nests, and three have been found in a nest, crowded together for warmth, the clay structure being torn open by the wrens. A St. Louis Globe-Democrat contributor, a St. Louis man who had hung up in his garden an empty cocoon shell, discovered

SAVAGE APPETITES APPALLING CAPACITY

Tremendous Quantity of Food That the Untutored People Can Eat.

There has always been an impression that an Indian's stomach has almost unlimited capacity, and it is true that the Indian, as like certain wild beasts in that he is accustomed to take long fasts and afterward to gorge himself for these periods of enforced abstinence he consumes at one sitting an amount of food that no white man could get away with. But there is an end to the capacity of even an Indian.

In Pendleton, Ore., an officer arrested an Indian who had committed some slight infraction of the peace. The beauty of the Shakespearian there made no resistance, though there were others of his companions followed him to the lock-up. There the culprit was searched and was found to have in his possession two dollars in silver money, consisting of three half dollars and two quarters. "I will take this money," said the searching officer, "and give it back to you when you are let out."

Lo did not understand. He thought the money was being taken away from him "for good." Jabbering and struggling, he attempted to give the money to the officer, but the officer refused to accept it, saying the man out of reach. Then the arrested Indian began to swallow the silver, beginning with the half dollars; nor did he stop until he had swallowed three half dollars and two quarters. Assistance, prevent this proceeding. One after the other the Indian gulped down the coins, all but one quarter, which he was manifestly unable to swallow, although he made several trials.

As the event showed, he had a swallowing capacity of but one dollar and seventy-five cents in silver money. The officer had to own himself beaten so far; but this is far from being the end of the story. The Indian by and by began to show signs of distress at the stomach, and the officer, fearing he was about to die, went in all haste for a doctor. As soon as he was out of the way the Indian made a sudden recovery. A meal of silver money rather cold, and the officer, and his sickness was only a stratagem. A rescue was organized by the other Indians, and when the officer returned he found his captives making a horse at the door of the lock-up, and before he could reach the spot the man was off, followed by his companions.

Natives of Africa display the same adaptability of the North American Indian in the matter of feeding. The African's recklessness about his food is a striking characteristic. Explorers who have occasion to employ certain Gregory has said that, at the commencement of a new stage in the journey, he had to serve out ten days' rations, and that the natives of the day would eat so much in the first few days that by the end of the week they had none left.

But they often go on for great distances on what appears to be the most insufficient food. Some of the natives referred to carried loads of 110 pounds from dawn to dusk, with only an hour's rest in the middle of the day, on a pound and a half of beans, and try. In the last issue to hand we find among others, the impressions of Mr. Henry Sheridan, of Drumcondra, Dublin. Mr. Sheridan is clearly well pleased by his experience of the Pacific province. He thinks that the "Garden of Eden" British Columbia is, and that the reason it is not better known is that it allows other countries to get ahead of it in the matter of publicity, and the advertisement of its attractions.

"What do I think of your climate? Well, I truthfully say the climate of British Columbia cannot be beaten by any other country on the face of God's green earth."

And the enthusiast is a considerable traveller, too.

"I have studied your needs here? Well, I have. You need a lot of young women as domestics. Lots of women in Scotland, England and Ireland are paid about $40 a year, whereas here they could earn that amount in about two months, and eat at the same table as their employer."

"Again, there are a great number of fine young fellows in the old countries eating their hearts out through poverty, strikes and other causes; whereas in British Columbia they could earn nearly three times more per week than they ever received over there, and it would cost them no more than about $15 to come here—third-class."

The more that is known in the mother country of impressions formed by ordinary travellers like Mr. Sheridan in Great Britain, the better for the empire—Standard of Empire.

ONTARIO LIBERALS

Obstacle to the development of our land, and the well-being of its citizens.
"I thank you for the kind words that you have tendered me," said the eloquent speaker in closing, "and I trust that the work of your association will always be well received, and that you will always lead in a good cause, and help to bind closer together the great Dominion and Empire to which we belong."

The unexpected arrival at 3.30 of Hon. George Graham, who had previously wired his regrets, was the signal for a great burst of enthusiastic applause.

George Graham is back with first-hand news of the work of our leaders in the Northwest," said President Mowat, in introducing the Minister of Railways.

Referring to the western tour, Hon. Mr. Graham said that the reports of the press were all that they might be, but no printed report, or spoken report even, could give any adequate idea of the enormous extent of the Premier's success in his two-month tour.

"I used to think that I knew the man," said Hon. Mr. Graham, "but it took such an expert to British subjects just to show up the Premier in all his versatile power and ability. He is a master hand at winning and holding men, and during the past two months, when I have been almost continuously at his side, I have never heard him say the wrong thing either to a deputation or on the platform. His task was no easy one, and in handling all the difficult cases which came before him, his courage was equal to his ability. And that is the greatest compliment that can be paid him."

"The manner in which Sir Wilfrid discussed the boundary question in Winnipeg—and this is the one grievance that they have been keeping out there—was most convincing in a manner that showed his grasp of the situation, and his absolute courage. He made certain promises, but if he didn't agree with any of the points brought forward by the men who had called upon him, he frankly and fearlessly told them so."

"In Vancouver, Sir Wilfrid boldly took up the Oriental labor question, and from the way that he presented the case, I really can't see how any man could take offence. The best way to restrict the influx of Japanese labor, he said, was not to humiliate an ally, but to go in a friendly way to Japan and ask her to remedy the thing. She had agreed to limit the number of her people who might emigrate to Canada to 400 annually, and he challenged anyone to show that the terms of this agreement were not being strictly observed."

Political Amenities.
"At Victoria, the magnificent reception given the Premier by Premier McBride was a good thing for the Dominion of Canada, and showed the trust that ought to exist between really big public men."

Prince Rupert, said Mr. Graham, was one of the greatest delights of the long trip to Sir Wilfrid. He believed that the people of that north-western country would before long be asking for another transcontinental railway.

"Liberalism in British Columbia is far from dead," said the Minister of Railways. "They have had what I call their midwinter sleep, but they are now waking up, and another general election comes along, with care in the selection of candidates, I feel confident that we can win back at least one-half of the seats."

The Alberta Liberals.
"North Alberta is a second Ontario, and will be ere long supplying the world with its stock and dairy produce. The people of this province have made a great find in their new Premier, Mr. Arthur Sifton. He is cordially respected, and in my opinion will make one of the greatest builders for Liberalism in Canada and the west. In Saskatchewan, we encountered Premier Walter Scott, a marvel of geniality and ability to bind his party together. The Liberal leader in Manitoba is also a good man, and a very few more votes would have changed things very materially in this province."

"I needn't tell you that I am glad to get home," said Hon. Mr. Graham, in conclusion, "but just let me say that I believe that when the history of Canada and partyism comes to be written, this tour of the Prime Minister will stand out in the forefront as one of the best things ever undertaken, not only for the party, but for the Dominion of Canada."

"And now we can settle down to our work with more energy, and with the fullest confidence in the ability and absolute integrity of the great leader whom we all delight to follow."

Hon. George Graham reached the city at 11.15 this morning, after having hastened across half a continent on four special trains.
Hon. Duncan Marshall, minister of agriculture in the Province of Alberta, said that Mr. Graham's descriptions of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's triumphal tour of the west were not the least overdrawn. He also had some very complimentary things to say of the impression made upon the western citizens by the Minister of Railways. Coming to Ontario, he congratulated the party on its possession of such an able leader as Hon. A. G. MacKay. Before closing, the speaker referred to the able chairman in which the Canadian Premier was dealing with the three topics in which the west was primarily interested—transportation, population and tariff.

Mr. MacKay's Speech.
"I am proud to be present at the largest convention in the history of the association," said A. G. MacKay, M.P.E., leader of the Provincial party, whose introduction was the signal for enthusiastic cheers. "It may seem a sort of a come-down to bring up local matters after listening to the speeches from the Dominion House; but, after all, the man on the street is more frequently touched by the work of the Provincial Legislature, than by that of the Commons."

"In the first place, let me say that I should like to see every Liberal candidate in the field before we meet next year. Indeed all ought to be on hand before the printing of the lists in June."

There were large practical issues before the electorate in the province at the present time, said the Opposition leader. And one of the most important of these was to be found in the education field. As a result of the injudicious policy of the Conservative Government in suddenly wiping out the Model schools, the province was now facing a dearth of teachers. In North Grey alone, thirteen schools had been compelled to close their doors.

"This, in itself," said Mr. MacKay, "is a large enough issue upon which to conduct a campaign. We warned the ministry against the move, and they did not heed our advice, and the thing has now become serious."

Property Rights.
Another field for much needed improvement, said the speaker, was shown by the handling of the Florence Mining Company's case, to lie in property and civil rights and guaranteed capital investments.

"Shall we stand meekly aside and allow a case in which a million of money is involved," said he, "to be taken from the hands of the judiciary and to decide by the action of the courts in Queen's Park? Is that a small issue? The Premier of the largest empire that the world has ever seen does not consider it a small issue. It is a case of right to British subjects the right laid down in Magna Charta. That is the class of legislation that has been rampant in Ontario during the last six years. It seems to me that it might be well to substitute for the motto, 'Suaviter in modo,' the words 'Fortiter in re.'"

Temperance Question.
Referring to the temperance question, Mr. MacKay said the Liberal party would always be found on safe ground. There were a few Liberals, he said, who were anxious for a convention to be called because they wished to make the temperance question an issue. He cautioned them that local option was as far as it was wise to go.

"Temperance men—and I have consulted them all over the province—say that local option is the best temperance measure yet adopted. They would like the three-fifths clause removed, and on this we have forced six divisions in the House."

"On that issue the Liberal candidate is on safe ground, for 99 out of 100 say local option is the strongest measure. That was a Liberal measure, and they realized it."

MR. H. M. MOWAT AGAIN PRESIDENT

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 9.—Despite the fact that he announced two days ago that he would give up the presidency, Mr. H. M. Mowat, K. C., was today again elected president of the Liberal Association of Ontario.

Hon. George P. Graham, who has just returned from his western trip, made a rousing speech.

SAVED FROM THE KNIFE

Appendicitis Cured By "Fruit-a-lives"

Newburgh, Ont., Feb. 12, 1910.
"Just about a year ago our daughter Ella, 14 years, was taken with terrible pains in the right side. The pain was so severe that we had to carry her to bed. We at once put her under the care of a first-class doctor, who pronounced it a case of Appendicitis, and advised an operation."

"We took her to a hospital in Kingston, where she was again examined by an eminent specialist. He said she had Appendicitis and must be operated on at once if we wanted to save her life. As we had taken her to Kingston to have this done, we were ready, but our daughter was afraid and cried and begged so pitifully that we postponed it for that day. Luckily for us and for her an uncle came in with some 'Fruit-a-lives,' and insisted on Ella taking them. Good results were apparent, almost from the first dose, and the continuous treatment cured her."

"Fruit-a-lives" saved our daughter from the surgeon's knife, and today she is enjoying the best of health."
