For Her Sake;

—OR—

The Murder in Furness Wood.

CHAPTER XXXV.

"Because," said Mr. Cameron, "we thought—that is, Lady Cameron thought—you were paying some attention to Evadne."

"Not more than I pay generally to all nice girls," answered the young lord, with a smile of supreme self complacency. "There is one thing I should like to say," continued Lord Clanronald. "Miss Cameron will have a large fortune, I suppose?"

"In all probability," replied the master of Furness.

"Well, I am a rich man myself, and I want none of it. I shall have the most beautiful wife in England, and I want nothing more. Let her fortune be settled on herself."

"Is my daughter aware that you are consulting me on this matter?" asked Mr. Cameron.

"She authorized me to do so," was the answer.

And that completed the elder man's bewilderment. That his dainty, imperious Diana could have made such a choice was astounding.

"You do not seem very enthusiastic about the affair," remarked Lord Clanronald. "I hope it will please you better in time."

"You must remember that it is a very great surprise to me," said Mr. Cameron, slowly. "Diana is young; but she has always been her own mistress, and with respect to her marriage, as with respect to everything else, she will doubtless exercise her own judgment. Frankness and honesty between man and man are always best, and I therefore say frankly that I do not approve of this marriage. I do not think Diana and yourself suited to each other at all."

"I suppose we are the best judges?" interrupted his lordship.

"You must understand that I offer no objection," said Mr. Cameron. "My intimate acquaintance with Diana's character tells me how useless that would be. It would simply have the effect of hurrying on the marriage. You must also understand, my lord, that it is neither your birth, position, nor rank which fails to satisfy me."

"I should think not," observed his lordship.

"It is simply from my knowledge of Diana's character and my reading of yours that I do not think the marriage can be a happy one."

"Time will prove that," said his lordship. "Then I may take your consent for granted?—although I must say I wish it had been more graciously given. Will you speak to Lady Cameron, or shall I?"

"I will speak to her ladyship myself," said Mr. Cameron, sadly.

Then the interview terminated, and Diana was sent for. She met her father without any of the confusion or embarrassment that might have been expected on such an occasion.

"Do you really love this man, Diana?" asked Mr. Cameron, when he had told her all that had taken place.

"I am going to marry him, papa," she answered, quietly.

"That is a question I can answer only to my own heart," she replied.

"Oh, Diana, my darling, how changed you are," he cried—"cruelly changed to me!"

"The world has changed altogether," she said. "Life is no longer the same." Her father's face had grown pale; and there were both pain and despair in it when he said, earnestly—

"Diana, you do not love this man. I believe in my heart that you love Sir Leslie. Why are you going to marry him, child? Relieve my mind of a terrible fear."

"What fear?" she said.

"Tell me that you are not marrying that man because my marriage has made him unhappy for you. Do not let me think, Diana, that I have made such a terrible mistake. Tell me, child, that it is not true."

She could not tell him that. She kissed him with despair in her face, and left him.

And from that time Peter Cameron had always a painful feeling that his marriage had driven his daughter to take her present course.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

"I am sure, my dear, that there is some mistake; you must have misunderstood Lord Clanronald."

Lady Cameron stood, as it were, at bay. Her husband had sought her with the striding intelligence he had just received, and she positively refused to believe him. It was not possible, she declared, that the two ardent desires of her heart were to be so ruthlessly thwarted in a moment.

Mr. Cameron had found his wife in her boudoir, the nest of rose velvet and gold which he had fitted up for her with so much care. She was looking very handsome too, in a dress of rich silk with gold ornaments, as she lay on the couch reading, when her husband entered. She was struck at once by the anxious expression of his face. Peter Cameron could not forget his daughter; the thought of this marriage was hateful to him.

"Why in the world could not the girl have fallen in love with Sir Leslie? There would have been some sense in that," he mused.

Peter Cameron derived what satisfaction he might from the fact that his wife was quite as discomfited as himself. She rose hastily from her couch. As a rule, Lady Cameron was far too well bred ever to show anything like temper, and whatever she felt, it was seldom that the surface of her manner was ruffled; but now she looked angry, impatient, and incredulous.

"I should think not," observed his lordship.

"It is simply from my knowledge of Diana's character and my reading of yours that I do not think the marriage can be a happy one."

"Time will prove that," said his lordship. "Then I may take your consent for granted?—although I must say I wish it had been more graciously given. Will you speak to Lady Cameron, or shall I?"

"I am sure, my dear, that there is some mistake; you must have misunderstood Lord Clanronald."

Lady Cameron stood, as it were, at bay. Her husband had sought her with the striding intelligence he had just received, and she positively refused to believe him. It was not possible, she declared, that the two ardent desires of her heart were to be so ruthlessly thwarted in a moment.

Mr. Cameron had found his wife in her boudoir, the nest of rose velvet and gold which he had fitted up for her with so much care. She was looking very handsome too, in a dress of rich silk with gold ornaments, as she lay on the couch reading, when her husband entered. She was struck at once by the anxious expression of his face. Peter Cameron could not forget his daughter; the thought of this marriage was hateful to him.

"Why in the world could not the girl have fallen in love with Sir Leslie? There would have been some sense in that," he mused.

Peter Cameron derived what satisfaction he might from the fact that his wife was quite as discomfited as himself. She rose hastily from her couch. As a rule, Lady Cameron was far too well bred ever to show anything like temper, and whatever she felt, it was seldom that the surface of her manner was ruffled; but now she looked angry, impatient, and incredulous.

"I Wonder Would It Help Me?"

THIS question has been answered by many thousands of women who have found health and happiness in the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Sleeplessness, irritability, nervousness, gloomy forebodings of the future, depression and discouragement—these are some of the symptoms which tell of exhausted nerves.

In order to avoid nervous prostration or some form of paralysis it is well to get the building up process established at once by use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"Are you quite sure that his lordship said Diana?" she asked.

"I could not make a mistake in anything so important," answered her husband. "Assuredly, and to my great annoyance, it is Diana; and, to speak my mind frankly, my lady, Diana is far too good for him. He is vain, conceited, and, unless I am much mistaken, both ill-tempered and cruel. Diana is far too good for him."

"What did he say?" cried her ladyship, impatiently. "Why do you not come to the point?"

"He said that he wanted my consent to marry Diana—that she was quite willing; and he added that she had referred him to me."

Lady Cameron's face grew pale with anger; her lips quivered with vexation.

"It is incredible," she declared, with a gesture of angry disdain. "I will not and cannot believe it. It destroys the two great hopes of my life."

When she thought of her daughter, her ladyship's arms fell nerveless by her side, and there was a gleam of despair on her face. Evadne had fully determined to become Lady Clanronald; her heart was set upon what would she do? If Diana had seen her ladyship in that moment, she would have known how complete her vengeance was.

"He is a dishonorable man!" she cried, vehemently. "He has devoted himself to Evadne, and she had every right to expect an offer of marriage from him—every possible right!"

"So I thought," said Mr. Cameron, slowly.

"I asked him here purposely for Evadne's sake," she continued. "I felt perfectly sure that he was attached to her—and he was; I am sure he was. There has been some underhand plotting to take him away from her."

"Not by Diana," said Mr. Cameron, defending his daughter against such an accusation.

"And what did you say?" asked Lady Cameron.

"I told him distinctly that I was not pleased at the proposal. He is not half good enough for Diana. He is not at all the kind of man I would wish her to marry."

"Indeed?" questioned his wife, with emphasis.

"I am not speaking of birth; I mean character," said honest Peter Cameron.

"Character?" interrogated her ladyship, scornfully. "Lord Clanronald is as good as his neighbors."

"But his neighbors would not be good enough for Diana," said Mr. Cameron, rather annoyed at his wife's remarks.

"Did you give your consent?" asked his wife.

"I told him that I did not like the match—that he was not at all suited to Diana. I told him so plainly, and he did not like it."

"I should imagine not!" said Lady

Cameron. "But did he say nothing of Evadne?"

"I did. I thought it was Evadne he was seeking. He asked for my daughter; but I never thought of Diana. I believed he meant Evadne, and I said that I was sure you would be very pleased."

Lady Cameron's indignation and vexation knew no bounds.

"How you have humbled me!" she cried. "How could you do that?"

"My dear Hermione, it was most natural that I should come to the conclusion I did. You have always talked to me of your desire for Evadne to marry the young fellow. He has always been by her side; you told me that she was fond of him; what, then, could be more natural than that I should think he wanted to marry her? I said 'Yes' at once; but I soon changed my mind when I found that it was Diana's hand he sought."

"I must recall you to a sense of courtesy, Mr. Cameron," she said. "It is not good taste to reiterate that the man who is not good enough for your daughter is good enough for mine."

"He is your own choice for your own daughter, Lady Cameron," was the reply; "he would never have been mine."

And to that stinging rejoinder her ladyship could make no reply.

"He is one of the best matches in England," she said, after a time.

"Not to my thinking; I should infinitely prefer Sir Leslie."

Lady Cameron's face softened at these words.

"That was the very marriage on which I had fixed my heart for Diana," she said. "I cannot understand her. I was quite sure that she was attached to Sir Leslie; I am more than convinced of it."

"Well, facts point the other way," returned Mr. Cameron. "Diana has sent Lord Clanronald to me, and he asked whether he or I should speak to you. I know no more of it."

Lady Cameron's wrath and vexation were boundless. For the first time her husband saw her without her society mask, and the revelation was not pleasant to him.

"I do not know," she said at last. "How Evadne will bear it. Strange to say, she is really fond of Lord Clanronald, and her whole heart is set upon marrying him. She has talked of it continually to me. She has thought of nothing else. She has felt certain of becoming Lady Clanronald. It will be a most terrible disappointment to her."

My Boat With Wings!

CARINNE GRIFFITH CHATS ABOUT A NEW WOMAN'S SPORT.

Gorinne Griffith, the fascinating and clever Vitagraph player, has discovered a new way of combining business with pleasure. She was the first woman to test the new flying sport-boat which has been manufactured especially for woman's use.

In a conversation with our representative, Corinne stated that she has christened the sport-boat "The flying Limousine," and the makers have decided to stick to the name. "People should not mistake this for a hydroplane," continued the clever cinema star, "because it isn't. It is simply a boat with wings, and that's just why I like it so. You see, I'm not one of those 'stunt' actresses who are always risking their lives, and delight in dare-devilry.

She Skims Along the Surface.

"I'm just a wee bit nerry, and I hate to feel that I have left dear old Mother Earth—or rather Water. The beauty of this boat is that she simply skims along the surface of the water. She can go terribly fast, but speed I don't object to, providing I know I haven't got to fall far if anything should happen.

"Any woman can handle one if she can drive an ordinary motor-car, but particular care must be taken with the elevator, for this lifts the boat from the water, and converts it into a boat of the air.

"I think flying boats should become very popular as a seaside sport. A fairly quiet stretch of sea should be found, where there are not too many boats about, and, of course, if the water is nice and smooth, this adds to your enjoyment.

I do My "Make-up" in It.

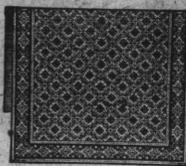

"My 'flying motor' contains three seats—one for the driver, and two for passengers. So, you see, three can be company nowadays. Single and double seats are also made, though.

"My sport-boat" is particularly handy for me, because it enables me to live in my beautiful "up-river" bungalow. I shall I say fly, or motor—to the studio every day which is a good many miles from my home. It's so lovely and smooth-riding, too, that I always do my "make-up" on the way down."

Facts You Should Know About Congoleum:

First, it is sanitary and easy to keep clean. There is no burlap in Congoleum, so water won't hurt it. A damp mop will keep the patterns clear and bright. Think of it! All you need is a damp mop.

Second, Congoleum is very durable. The surface is wear-resisting and absolutely sanitary. Then, too, it lies perfectly flat without any fastenings. No fastenings needed because the felt base has no tendency to curl or "kick up" at the edges.

We have sold a great many of those remnants to the housewives about town and have yet to hear a complaint.

Mariners Taken From Schooners at Sea

REACH NEW YORK—SOME DIFFICULT RESCUES.

NEW YORK, October 26.—Twenty-three mariners rescued from four ships sunk in storms which swept the Atlantic during the last two weeks, were brought into this port today by the vessels which picked them up or to which they had been transferred.

The steamer Toronto brought eleven men rescued from the fishing schooners General Knox and Alice M. Moulton, both bound for Oporto from Newfoundland. They were sighted, rudderless and with decks awash, on October 17, in latitude 44.20, longitude 49.50 west. Notwithstanding a heavy north gale, the chief officer of the Toronto managed to launch a boat and at daybreak took off five men from the General Knox. An hour later the Toronto's crew rescued six men from the Moulton, but only after a lifeboat was smashed against the Toronto. The crew of the General Knox reported its cook was lost overboard in the storm of October 15. Ten more American sailors arrived on the American steamer Kyle from Guasamo. They were from the five master auxiliary schooner Diria, which foundered off the Cuban coast on October 13 while bound from Santiago to Baltimore, with ore, and had been transferred to the Kyle from the craft which picked them up.

The American steamer Kelsa brought in Captain Keating and the cook of the yacht Beatrice. The men were discovered on Tobago Island, which they had managed to reach when the Beatrice went on the rocks while bound from Portland, Maine, to Martinique.

Wedding Bells.

PENNEY—BROWN.

On Nov. 3rd, at St. Mary's Church, a very quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized, when Mr. Samuel O. Penney, (ex-Sergt. of the U. S. Army) was joined in the holy bonds of matrimony to Miss Minnie Brown, of Badger's Quay, B.B., who lately returned from New York. The bride, who was prettily attired in a costume of white satin and spangled net and wore a bridal veil and orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of white roses, was attended by Miss Fannie Chislett, who also looked very becoming in a dress of white net and crepe de chine with hat to match and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The groom was ably supported by Mr. Herbert Chislett. After the ceremony the party drove to the residence of Mrs. Chislett, 84 George's St. where supper was partaken of and a very enjoyable evening was spent. The happy couple leave by to-day's express for their future home in Trinity. We wish Mr. and Mrs. Penney many years of wedded life.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL GETS FUNNY REQUESTS.

Some people seem to regard the Postmaster-General as an oracle. Scores of letters are directed to him every week from all parts of the country, desiring advice on anything from mushrooms to matrimony.

Rather amusing was the request made him a short while ago from a soldier convalescing at one of our military hospitals.

"Dear sir," he wrote, "Will you please put me in touch with a nice London girl, 5 feet 8 inches in height, with a fair hair and blue eyes. I feel I should like to marry a London girl, and I'm sure you will know somebody suitable for me. My own height is 5 feet 3 inches."

And old lady wrote:—

"Dear sir,—I wish to tell you that yesterday I caught the postman who visits our house kissing the cook. As I object to such proceedings I would be glad if you will see that this young man is given another district."

A few weeks ago strange mistakes began to arrive at the G.P.O. addressed to the Postmaster-General. They contained long sheets of foolscap, covered all over with strange hieroglyphics. Each one bore the same postmark—it was of a Midland town—and there was, attached to the foolscap sheets, a small note demanding "the prize."

So many of these mystery packets arrived that inquiries were forwarded to the local postmaster. The explanation was found in the following announcement inserted in a provincial paper by some practical joker:—

"Prizes will be awarded to the persons sending the largest list of motor-car numbers to the Postmaster-General, G.P.O., London."

Needless to say, the P.M.G. refused to shell out!

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

In the Railway wreck near Manuels, which took place at 7.30 p.m. on October the 31st, the mail that was destroyed by fire included:—

(1) Canadian and American inward letter mail for St. John's and vicinity, Bell Island and Ferryland District, leaving North Sydney on the night of October the 28th.

(2) Local inward mail from Cross Country and Bonavista Railway, due at St. John's on October 30th.

(3) Outward mail from St. John's for points along the Heart's Content, Bay de Verde and Placentia Railway, also for Ports of Call of S. S. "Argyle", posted from 6 p.m. October the 29th to noon October the 31st.

No English mail was burnt. No inward mail from any Bay steamers was burnt.

No outward mail for the Cross Country train or for foreign points were burnt.

About 86 outgoing registered letters were destroyed.

It would, therefore, be well to duplicate all outgoing mail posted from 6 p.m. on October the 29th to noon October the 31st.

Met His Match.

It was at Blackpool. He was a foppish-looking young man, with an overhanging lip, loud plaid clothes, a gold-tipped stick, red necktie, straw-colored gloves and a small-brimmed hat. He walked into a tobacconist's and slammed half a crown on to the counter, saying:—

"Well, this is the worst town I ever saw. I am utterly unable to see how a person of fastidious taste can live here. I say, Mr. Shopkeeper, can you sell a fellow a decent cigar?"

"Yes, sir," said the cigar man meekly, "what kind of cigar would you wish?"

"Now look at me, sir, a moment, and see for yourself what kind of cigar would suit me," said the knut, he drew himself up proudly and gazed down at the shopkeeper.

The man looked across the counter, then, going to a box, took out a cigar and handed it to the knut with two-and-sixpence change.

The knut looked at the shopkeeper, then at himself, then at the cigar, and walked out of the shop.

Surprised the Caddie.

Gowfer was making a fearful exhibition of himself. His caddie was an unusually quiet, stolid lad, with a freckled and expressionless face. Never once did the boy laugh or sneer at his play, and Gowfer took quite a fancy to him. At the end of the round, in the hope of getting a compliment, he said:—

"I've been travelling for the last six months. I am quite out of practice. That is why I am in such bad form to-day."

The caddie replied calmly:—

"Then you've played before, have ye, sir?"

They Eat Rotting Roe.

Things Rich Gourmets Like.

While we are threatened with a scarcity of the necessities of existence, it is interesting to note that strange eatables which some people consider delicacies, but for which others could cultivate a taste only when faced with starvation.

The famous "pates de foies gras" are made from the diseased livers of geese. The unfortunate birds are kept in dark hatches, too small for them to turn round, and are forcibly fed with enormous quantities of grain until they suffer from fatty degeneration of the liver. When the poor creature is almost at the last gasp, it is considered in fit condition to be killed. The pies are sold for as much as £3 and £5 each.

Caviare was introduced from Russia into this country, and is the decomposed and salted roe of a kind of sturgeon. It was, before the revolution, prepared on the Astrakan coast, and could be smelt miles away. Its price averaged about £1 a pound, but at the present time the genuine caviare would be considerably dearer.

The Gremen dainty, Sauerkraut, is not often seen—or rather smelt—in England now, but it was quite a usual feature of delicatessen shops. It is only a preparation of white cabbage, but it is doubtful if anyone not accustomed to it from childhood would be able to acquire a liking for its strong taste and penetrating odour.

The "drishin," made from sheep's blood, and flavored with parsley, is a kind of white "black pudding" very popular in Ireland.

The birds' nests used by the Chinese to make soup are also the European gourmet's delight. Another strange soup is that made from the sea slug, the "beche de mer." Compared with these shark-fin soup seems quite a wholesome and dainty dish.

WHAT BOTH WANT.

There is an interesting little anecdote which a recent visitor told me about the eternal problem. She had been visiting in a home where the lady of the house does her own work but employs a scrub-woman to wash and clean. Some change in arrangements for this work had been made which did not suit my lady of the tubs, and she promptly made the usual threat that she guessed she wouldn't be coming much longer. She'd been thinking of going to work in the shoe factory.

Her Dire Threat.

When a conciliatory mistress had adjusted matters to suit her, she went back to her tubs with the dire assurance: "You may not know it, but you ladies is coming closer to the wash tubs every day!"

Can't you feel the sense of power and of malice in that threat?

"We've got you," it seems to say. "You need us more than we do you. We can get along without your work, but you can't get along without our help, and if you don't stand around and put up with poor work, bad temper, and broken engagements, we will just leave you to shift for yourselves."

Suppose the mistress could answer to that threat. "We can get along without you and if you push us too far we will"—what would be the result.

A Trained Nurse's View of the Servant Problem.

Here is how a trained nurse with 14 years insight from the standpoint of a disinterested party, answers that question:

"The servant problem as I see it," she writes, "would solve itself if the mistresses knew a little more about the business of homemaking. Many of them are as helpless as an infant when it comes to the easy task of preparing a meal, and are panic-stricken when Mary or Kate gives them notice. The maid knows that well. Hence the problem. The woman who has solved the servant problem is the woman who can step into her kitchen and prepare a good plain meal and I have met her. I wish there were more like her."

I call that a very fine analysis of the case.

Of course, there will be some who, on reading this will accuse me of lack of sympathy with the maid.

I'd Like to See a Balance of Power.

That is far from the case. I only feel that having been placed in a position where the inescapable law of supply and demand gives her great power she is inclined to abuse that power just as the mistress herself did in times past when she was on top. And I would like to see an adjustment that gave neither the advantage, for I think too much power is band for anyone.

A working housekeeper who is among my valued friends told me that she overheard a woman who was looking for a maid in the intelligence office say plaintively to the manager of the office. "When we talk to a maid she begins by telling us what privileges she expects. It isn't what we want any more, it's what they want that we talk about."

Now is that entirely fair?

Shouldn't it be what both want?

THE DARK DAY.

When the day of sickness comes, as it comes to every gent, and you sit, with folded thumbs, far too weak to earn a cent, will you have your little roll, to defray the beastly bills, to procure the grub and coal, and to buy the needed pills? Feeling well, men do not think, do not keep that day in view, when their health is on the blink, when they have the itch or flu, and they blow in all they make, blow it with their hearts serene, for glad rags and angel cake, blasing gems and gasoline. Each one thinks he is immune, sickness will not come his way, and he blows the round dubloon in his large and princely call. But some morning there's a call for the doctor and the nurse; there's congestion of his gall, and he's hourly growing worse. And he lies around in bed, just a weak and futile wreck, with a poultice on his head, and a plaster on his neck. And his wife has pawned her duds, and she's washing by the day, in a cloud of steam and suds, just to keep the wolf away. And he hates himself so bad! And he sighs, "When I am well I will grip the useful scud till I make the eagle yell."

his wife has pawned her duds, and she's washing by the day, in a cloud of steam and suds, just to keep the wolf away. And he hates himself so bad! And he sighs, "When I am well I will grip the useful scud till I make the eagle yell."

Rats Kill for Fun.

And Foxes Eat Few of their Victims.

Sport, or killing for pleasure, apart from the obtaining of food, is supposed to be purely a human pastime, but many animals seem to take a cold-blooded delight in killing for its own sake.

A rat will kill off all the young ducks or chickens he can find, so too will a fox, though he can carry away but one of his victims. Weasels, stoats and otters kill not only to satisfy their hunger but apparently from sheer bloodthirstiness. Lizards and frogs slaughter insects, worms and other small creatures by the thousand.

Then there are the animals which kill for food, but so deliberately that they can almost be accused of consciously planning the details; crocodiles which drown their prey under water, snakes which swallow their captures alive, and cuttle-fishes which use their sucker-studded arms to enfold other animals in a deadly embrace.

The parasites which live on the skin, or even in the flesh of other animals, gradually weaken their living homes, so that they die from exhaustion. Sometimes, like the ichneumon fly, they lay their eggs in another creature, often a fat caterpillar, so that the young, when hatched out, can live upon an unwilling but powerless host, who pines away as the intruder flourishes.

Robbers are common in the animal world. Perhaps the most unscrupulous is the skua, a sea bird with hooked beak and webbed feet armed with talons. These lie in wait for seagulls which have been out fishing, and, chasing them until they drop their booty, seize it before it can reach the water. If a gull proves obstinate, the skua will shake it by the tail until it drops its property.

A druggist can obtain an imitation of MINARD'S LINIMENT from a Toronto house at a very low price, and have it labeled his own product.

This greasy imitation is the poorest one we have yet seen of the many that every Tom, Dick and Harry has tried to introduce. Ask for MINARD'S and you will get it.

BUILDING A HOME.

Buildin' a home! Well, I reckon that's fun. Because it's a job that you never get done; For after the plannin' an' worry an' fuss An' the carpenters quit an' you clean up the mussy, An' the buildin' is finished from cellar to dome You've got to get busy an' make it a home.

Home must be built out o' laughter an' tears, It's got to be perfumed by memories sweet An' carelessly raced through by glad little feet.

An' though mother may fret some when company calls, There's got to be thumb marks all over the walls.

It's a job you can't hurry or do to a plan— Home isn't built to the whim of a man. The Lord takes a hand long before you are through In buildin' an' shapin' the dwellin' for you;

He comes to a place that is faded an' worn, An' it grows as the room where the baby is born.

You may guard it from danger as much as you will, But sorrow and grief shall come into it still; An' you shall discover when weepin' is o'er, The old home is dearer to you than before; There shall linger about it the memories rare Of the wonderful spirit that used to be there.

Buildin' a Home! Well, I reckon that's fun. Because it's a job that you never get done. Each day brings its changes of gladness or woe, 'Till dearer an' richer to you it must grow. So fill it with lovin' an' laughter an' tears Until as the home of your souls it appears.

WAITING!

The day of decision has passed. The 3rd of November, the fateful day of 1919, has gone, but what it has carried with it still remains to be seen.

We hear it said that W. D. Reid is backing R. A. Squires and Coaker for confederation purposes, and if the latter have won, then we may hear immediately of the putting into practice of plans for the furthering of that purpose.

Reports of the first count to hand, viz., that of Port de Grave, heralds a victory for the Government. Sir J. C. Crosbie, despite all the sectarianism used, and the presence of R. A. Throwing Away Their Franchise.

After a short perusal of the election returns of the 1918 General Election, we find that the total vote polled was 49,719. The number of voters, in that election, was 60,468; so that 10,749 men threw away their franchise and did not vote. No sensible-minded man will hesitate to condemn this state of affairs, for it is an axiom that the citizen of any country or municipality who is not sufficiently interested in the affairs of his home to vote for his choice of men to attend to the vital matters of the state or municipality is not an ideal citizen, but is so wrapped up in his own selfish affairs that he cannot or will not give the slightest thought to such an important subject. He is enjoying the privileges of the citizen without shouldering his share of the responsibility. The analysis of the figures follows:—

The Value of a Vote.

By BETTREL.
In To-day's Daily News.

There are some narrow-minded persons who believe that clergymen ought to cut themselves off from the stream of human life; really intelligent minds however, are convinced that to rightly appreciate the power of the pulpit we should regard it as the chief stronghold and fortress of our civilization. It is but natural that ministers bring to the pulpit the result of much study and a good deal of meditation as well as much practical knowledge of the ancient law makers, and consequently a congregation may safely accept guidance, not only in things pertaining to the spiritual life, but also in these matters concerning our social and industrial welfare. St. Thomas's Church on last Sunday evening was crowded to its utmost capacity; young men and maidens, old persons and children all reverently listened to the sermon preached by a pastor whose courage is greater than his conventionality. The Rev. Doctor began his discourse by reminding the voting portion of his congregation that as they were about to exercise on the morrow their right of franchise, so also they would discharge a high Christian obligation, and that each man ought to feel in his conscience that the members for whom his vote is cast are men worthy of the confidence of the people over whom they desire to make laws. The preacher held that the moral and commercial life of a people depends largely upon the status and character of a government; it is therefore the solemn duty of citizens to place in power those men who are best fitted to meet and overcome those social and political evils which continue to impede our progress as a Christian population. The preacher referred to the fact that both education and politics in this country being still carried on along sectarian lines, it is right and fitting that the Church of England organize its forces and secure a fair representation in the House of Assembly where in the past they have been behind other churches. In politics there is much that is wholesome and much that might tend toward the furtherance of moral reforms. The price of a man's vote has a moral significance and consists in his interest to secure for the service of his country those men who are best fitted mentally and morally for the particular work of politicians. And it must be borne in mind that there is a distinct connexion between the moral and political elements of a government, not only so but it is vitally necessary that a man who aims at political life ought to be a man of some education, ignorance being a very great limitation and is apt to make it impossible for a man to look beyond his own immediate and individual wants. An uneducated man in public life is usually only nominal; he cannot be a real member. Though this sermon partook somewhat of the nature of a platform address, the congregation could not fail to be struck with the religious sincerity of the preacher who closed with his usual beautiful exhortation and prayer; and we of the laity cannot but feel that such a sermon, so earnestly delivered, may perhaps influence those who are engaged in the government of this country that they may duly feel the great and sacred responsibility of their position and rise to their great opportunity.

'IT SAVED MY HAND'

"I am a blacksmith. I contracted a sore finger, which led to blood-poisoning. After three months of doctoring, the finger had to be cut off. It was too late! The poison had spread to my hand and arm. My hand was opened and the bone scraped. No use! Doctors said hand would have to be taken off. I refused, and began to use Zam-Buk. I used it regularly and freely for a few weeks. It subdued the blood-poisoning and by the time I had used 7 boxes of Zam-Buk my hand was quite healed. Zam-Buk surely saved my hand, and I firmly believe it would have saved my finger too had I used it at first." These facts were sworn to by Mr. John Evans of 87 Lawrence St., Halifax, N.S., before Supreme Court Commissioner O'Hearn, and the sworn statement may be seen by any person so desirous. Zam-Buk cures ulcers, eczema, abscesses, skin, cuts, cold sores, burns, scalds, babies' rashes, etc. See box, all drug stores and stores, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

Some Notable Statements.

ABOUT FINANCE, TRACE, FRANCE, GERMANY AND RUSSIA.

Mr. Justice Astbury Speaks Out.

"A daniel come to judgment to-day in the person of His Majesty's Judges. Mr. Justice Astbury's letter in the Times is something like a tocsin or trumpet-blast. It will certainly stir a good deal of blood—good, bad, and indifferent," says the Star.

"We are on the road to ruin. How can we be saved and made solvent? He boldly advocates 'an emergency tax on capital, preceded by the restoration to the State of all unearned war increment.' This, he holds, 'would enable the direct taxation of income in the future to be brought within practical limits.'"

"Mr. Justice Astbury says that if the country had been prudent it would have provided by legislation that no one should make any profit out of the war. Instead of this, however, great fortunes have been made by exploiting the needs and necessities of the State during the last five or six years, and before any capital levy is made it seems only fair and reasonable that so much of such gains as represents unearned war increment should be restored to the State. This would, no doubt, entail many difficulties of detail and machinery, but desperate ills require desperate remedies, and we have encountered and solved much more troublesome problems while the war lasted."

Cheerfulness About Trade.

"It would be childish indeed to find fault with anyone who insists upon being optimistic about the present state and prospects of the country; and we must congratulate Sir Auckland Geddes on the cheerfulness which keeps breaking into his philosophy as President of the Board of Trade," says the Morning Post.

Speaking to the Aldwych Club, Sir Auckland said: "If my considered opinion, after the most careful investigation of all the information I could collect, there is no country in the world better suited to take advantage of this great opportunity than this old land of ours, if only we will determinedly seize it. He supported this by an extremely interesting passage on the position of those countries which are, or are supposed to be, our serious rivals in this connection. So far as the rivalry of Germany goes, he roundly declared that the business men who are apprehensive about it are 'trembling before a shadow.'"

"He disposed similarly of exaggerated and ill-informed ideas of what can be done by Japan, a country in which the whole basis of producing activity has been profoundly changed by the rise of world-prices for raw material, and by wage-rates measured in shillings instead of in pence as they used to be. He advanced very strong reasons also for declining to regard American competition with the Germany Not Dead.

"To-day Germany lies prostrate.

"But she is not dead," says Lord Halifax in the Westminster Gazette. "I do not think that for generations to come she will dream of building again on military foundations. Her people have had a lesson in the overwhelming forces which are inevitably called into action where there is brutal indifference to the moral rights of others."

"Germany will be heard of again with a field of activity that probably will not include devotion to military affairs in the old way. Against her competition of this other kind, formidable as soon as she has recovered from her misery, we must prepare ourselves in the only way that can succeed in the long run. We, too, must study and organise on the basis of widely diffused exact knowledge and high ethical standards. I think, if I read the signs of the times aright, that people are coming to realise this, both in the United States and throughout the British Empire."

Ending the Russian Crisis?

"The next few weeks will be critical in the history of Russia, and, as Russia touches our interest and sentiment at so many points, of Great Britain also," says the Times. "Unless all the signs miscue, Russian Bolshevism is nearing its worst crisis. It has lived through crises nearly, if not quite, as grave in the past, but only through the faults of its opponents—faults of vacillation and indecision which, we should hope, have carried their lesson and are likely to be repeated. The Bolshevik Government is nearing its end, and it is quite conceivable that a continuance of the successes of General Denikin may bring about in the next few weeks a sudden collapse."

Clemenceau Speaks Out.

"The French Premier during the discussion of the Treaty of Peace delivered what is probably the most memorable speech of his long, stormy, and victorious career. M. Clemenceau bade farewell to the old France, the France before the war, and greeted the France of the future, with wise words which the Allies of France, not less than France herself, will do well to ponder and to lay up in mind," says the Morning Post.

"M. Clemenceau said: 'The terrible catastrophe which was let loose on the world cannot be concluded simply by pages of writing which we shall sign and then go to sleep. How can one make a peace which does not entail vigilance? The work of The Hague Conference has grown and become the League of Nations, but the latter is born of war. M. Clemenceau stigmatised the manifesto of the 93 German intellectuals denying that Germany had provoked the war as an impudent lie, and added that when the Germans wished to enter the League of Nations France would ask them what they thought of the manifesto.

"We entered the war alone. If at any given moment we had been asked if we desired the present treaty, no one would have refused it. In order that the League of Nations may live, there must be men to make it live. Before reforming others we must reform ourselves."

"The whole assembly cheered M. Clemenceau, and his speech was ordered to be posted up throughout France."—Public Opinion, Oct. 17.

Skyscraper Flagstuffs.

AND THE LOFTEST FLAGS THAT FLUTTER.

In the year 1861 British Columbia presented Kew Gardens with the towering flagstaff which many of us have seen and which was 150 feet high. This, after a life of more than fifty years, is no more, and the Dominion has replaced it with another, which is even longer. It is 214 feet long, and is actually higher than the Monument in London by a matter of 10 feet.

It is nearly 3 feet through at the base and 12 inches at the top, and is a single stick of the splendid Douglas fir which grows in Vancouver Island. Huge as it is, this staff is not the biggest in existence. At the Panama-Pacific Exhibition, held in San Francisco in 1914 to celebrate the opening of the Panama Canal, a flag floated at the top of a pole which was no less than 246 feet long—half as high again as the Nelson column—and 66 inches in diameter at the base. It weighed over 40 tons, and was cut in the Nebarem Valley of Oregon. It was also a fir, not one of the giant Sequoias of California.

From Australia it would be possible to procure an even longer spar. On the West Coast there grows a species of gum tree which reaches 400 feet or about the same height as the spire of Salisbury Cathedral.

These trees are taller even than the giant red woods of California, though not of anything like their circumference. The record redwood is on the King River near Visalia. It is 352 feet in height and its circumference at the ground just 100 feet.

Fads and Fashions.

Velvet suits are popular. Lace neckwear is popular. Smart motor capes are circular. The tricorne hats are variously worn. Box coats are made of tan polo cloth. Blue is in favor for bridal costumes. Skirts show a tendency to greater length.

What It Feels Like

TO LEAVE FLEET STREET.

"To-day I am among the demobilised. I have put off the harness of a lifetime and am a parson at large. For me, Fleet Street is a tale that is told, a rumour on the wind; a memory of far-off things and battles long ago. Fleet Street's Nightly Paroxysm.

"At this hour I fancy it is getting into its nightly paroxysm. There is the thunder of machinery below, the rattle of lictypes above, the click-click-click of the tape machine, the tapping of telegraph operators, the tinkling of messengers who don't come, reports coming in with 'stories' or without 'stories', leader-writers writing for dear life and wondering whether they will beat the clock and what will happen if they don't, night editors planning their pages as a shopman dresses his shop window, sub-editors, breasting the torrent of 'fimefes' that flows in from the ends of the earth with tidings of this, that, and the other. I hear the murmur of it all from afar as a disembodied spirit might hear the murmurs of the life it has left behind."

"So writes 'Alpha of the Plough,' in the Star, and we know that Mr. A. G. Gardiner, late editor of the Daily News, is leaving Fleet Street.

"An enterprising Journal has asked me to write about it. It wants my 'mellow reflections' on my experiences of Fleet Street. I am hardly in the mood yet for 'mellow reflections.' I am still overcome by the novelty of what in Lancashire they call 'shaking a loose leg.' I feel much as a policeman must feel when, pensioned, and in plain clothes, he walks the Strand submerged in the crowd, his occupation gone, his yoke lifted, his glory departed.

"But yesterday he was a man having authority. There in the middle of the surging current of traffic he took his stand, the visible embodiment of power, behind him the sanctions of the law and the strong arm of justice. He was a very Moses of a man. He raised his hand and the waters stayed; he lowered his hand and the waters flowed. He was a personage. He was accosted by anybody and obeyed by everybody. He could stop Sir Gorgius Midas' Rolls-Royce to let the nursemaid cross the street. He could hold converse with the nobility as an equal and talk to the cook through the area railings without suspicion of impropriety. His cloud of dignity was held from falling by the pillars of the Constitution, and his truncheon was as indispensable as a field-marshal's baton.

No More Fleet Street.

"And now I share his liberty. I, too, can snap my fingers at the clock and take any 'bus I like to anywhere I like. No more shall the pavement of Fleet Street echo to my punctual footsteps. No more shall I ring in vain for that messenger who had always 'gone out to supper, sir,' or been called to the news room or sent on an errand. No more shall I cower nightly before that tyrannous clock that ticked so much faster than I wrote. The galley proofs will come down from above like snow, but I shall not con them. The tumults of the world will boil in like the roar of many waters, but I shall not hear them. For I have come into the inheritance of leisure. Time, that has lorded it over me so long, is henceforth my slave, and the future stretches before me like an infinite green pasture in which I can wander till the sun sets. I can let the legions thunder by while I tend my bees and water my plants, and mark how my celery grows and how the apples ripen.

"And if perchance, as I sit under a tree with an old book, or in the chimney corner before a chessboard, there comes to me one from the great noisy world, inviting me to return to Fleet Street, I shall tell him a tale. One day Wang Ho, the wise Chinese, was in his orchard when there came to him from the distant capital two envoys, bearing an urgent prayer that he would return and take his old place in the Government. He ushered them into his house and listened gravely to their plea. Then, without a word, he turned, went to a basin of water, took a sponge, and washed out his ears."

COST OF BOOK PRODUCTION.

I referred recently to the constant increase in the cost of printing as it is affecting the owners of periodicals. To-day I had a talk with a publisher on the total cost of book production. From this it appears that, speaking generally, the total cost is about three and a half times what it was before the war. What is even worse is that the expense is higher than it was at the time of the armistice. The main factors are wages of printers and of bookbinders, both of which have continued to increase since November last. Soon after that time the cost of the class of paper on which ordinary books are printed came down somewhat from the extraordinary figure at which it had stood during the later part of the war, but it has begun to rise again. Though it is still lower than the maximum figure which it reached, that advantage is not sufficient to compensate for the rising wages of printers and of bookbinders. Hence it costs that though books are much dearer than in pre-war days, the prices which can be obtained are not sufficient to make their issue pay, unless they have a large circulation. Yet the number of books which have only a small circulation, it is almost needless to say, is very large.

THE NEW DANCES.

The revolution which threatens the dancing world this season seems to be of a particularly peaceful variety. Dance teachers, like the world at large, after surviving several years of violence and excitement, are now anxious to return to more decorous and restful ways. The revivante to the "jazz," the "one-step," and the "fox-trot" of last season are full of languorous glides, graceful swings, and quiet movements. It must be admitted, however, that Miss Harding's display of new ballroom dances at the Empress Rooms did not seem to excite her audience even in a quiet languorous way, and they fox-trotted and one-stepped with renewed energy when it was all over. Perhaps they realized the despotic power of modern dancing mistresses, and saw in the "paso doble" and the "tango valse" the beginning of the end of jazz bands and jazz costumes. For the new style of dancing will, of course, affect the ball dresses of the ladies. Authorities believe it will lead us back to short, close-fitting pannier skirts, which they say are much more graceful and appropriate to quiet movement. The principal new dances are the "paso doble" and the "tango valse," but there will also probably be a revival of the Parisian "tango" and the "maxixe." The "paso doble," which has come from Spain by France to use makes a decided break in the individualism of the present "one-step." The movements are quick and lively, but the steps seem to be very complicated. It begins with a languorous glide sideways and a side-band towards the raised foot, but the chief feature is a double time beat, with a slightly bent knee, as the end of the first and third movement. When seen for the first time it looks amazingly difficult, but it is comforting to have authoritative assurance that the dance is quickly acquired and "much more easy than it looks." The "tango valse" is a combination of the Parisian tango and the "hesitation" valse of last season.

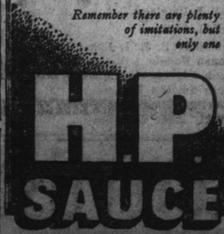

The Editor Shifted Daniel.

A religious controversy had been raging in the local Press between two ministers of different beliefs. About midnight, just before going to press, the telephone bell in the editor's room rang furiously. "I am sorry to trouble you at such a late hour," said the cleric, whose article was in type, "but I am in great trouble."

"What can I do for you?" asked the editor.

"In the manuscript I sent you to-day I put Daniel in the fiery furnace. Please take him out and put him in the lion's den."

Conductor Was Unable to Work for 8 Months

For 4 Years Could Only Work Half Time—Never Misses An Hour.

The remarkable results being obtained from Tanlac is further evidenced in the case of Albert Burgess, a popular conductor on the New York Electric Railway, living at 483 Stradbrook avenue, Fort Rouge. Mr. Burgess called at Liggett's drug store for his fifth bottle of Tanlac, recently, and made the following statement:

"I have been so wonderfully benefited by Tanlac that I will never stop praising it. For the past four years I have not been able to work but about three days a week and have had to spend a good part of my wage trying to get back my health. For eight months, I was unable to hit a lick of work, and was just barely able to get about. I suffered with awful pains through my stomach from gas and bloating. I took all kinds of medicines, but still I suffered and could not get myself in shape to work more than half time. I would go for weeks at a time without getting more than an hour's sleep a night. My condition was awful, and I didn't know what to do or which way to turn for relief."

"At last a friend begged me to try Tanlac, and now I wish I had known about it long ago, for it has really made me feel like a brand new man. I used to suffer with a dreadful hurting in the pit of my stomach, but after taking Tanlac a short while this trouble disappeared, and now my stomach is in such a good shape that I can eat just anything I want and never suffer a bit with gas or pain, and my appetite is so big that I can hardly get enough to eat. The pains have not only left my head, but all my misery is gone, and I have not missed an hour from my work since I started to begin taking Tanlac. I have also gained several pounds in weight, but what I was after was relief, and thanks to Tanlac I have found it. I can now handle my work as well as when I first got my hun seven years ago. It certainly was lucky for me that I got Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors, under the personal direction of a special Tanlac representative—adv.

Poisons Your Pores, Push Out.

HOUSE DRAINS AND HUMAN DRAINS COMPARED.

(By Dr. Robertson Wallace.)

Not so very long ago, many conditions of ill-health and even of definite disease, of obscure origin were attributed to the state of the drains. Sewer-gas was believed to be the real cause of various ailments.

But we know now that men who spend their working lives in and about the sewers are among the healthiest members of the community; and sewer-gas is no longer looked upon as quite so immediate a cause of disease as used to be imagined.

Nevertheless, the real cause of much of the preventable disease that is still rampant is to be found in the drains. But these are not the house-drains.

It is our own drains, the scavenging, flushing and cleansing system of our own bodies, that are usually to blame when things go wrong.

Germs That Make Poison Gas.

The body of each of us is made up of millions of microscopic particles called cells. If we could imagine each of these cells magnified to the size of a one-roomed house, into which so much food, fuel and water goes daily, and from which so much waste, smoke, clincher, and dirty water is thrown out, we should be able to realize that our bodies are in some ways like cities requiring each its own drainage and sewerage system.

When the bodily sanitary system goes wrong, or any department of it fails to go at all, the one-roomed house becomes in time choked with refuse, solid, liquid or gas, the highways and by-ways littered and impassable with rubbish, and in the resulting dirt the tiny, ever-hovering demons of disease get busy. That is their job. Millions of them get to work, transforming the accumulated dirt into subtle poisons that play havoc with the blood. Others produce forms of poison-gas which, if it does not kill, makes life a misery.

Others, again, produce material that wrecks the health in still more subtle ways.

In the body there are two main drainage systems to be kept open. The one discharges its contents on to the surface of the skin, through millions of openings called pores. We call this waste matter perspiration.

We are perspiring continuously day and night whether we are aware of it or not. When small in amount it evaporates as rapidly as it exudes; when exercise causes a more rapid flow, it accumulates in perceptible amount, and may even soak our undergarments, because evaporation cannot keep pace with production.

Sweat, Water and Exercise!

The other drain may be regarded as the main sewer, imperfect action of which is fraught with great injury to health, and complete stoppage with danger to life itself.

Poisonous gases from the bodily destructor pass out through the lungs, and to a less extent (along with

The prime importance of a clean skin, deep breathing, and freely acting kidneys, is now obvious. It is these agencies that clean up the battlefields of life.

The skin is kept active with soap, water and exercise. Other parts must be stimulated into action by the indigestible remains of whole-meal bread, porridge, stewed fruit, vegetables.

It must be helped to move also by mechanical means; walking, body bending exercises, or rubbing and kneading the abdomen.

Adequate exercise in the open will also keep the lungs and kidneys up to their work. All these measures must co-operate successfully in keeping a sound mind in a sound body, the hallmark of good health.

Okapi Goes to Belgium.

British naturalists who have been confidently expecting that the only live okapi in captivity was to be brought to the Zoological Gardens in Regent Park, were disappointed when the news came from Antwerp that the animal had been brought there from the Congo by Dr. Lebrum. It was the gift of Mme. Landaghem, whose husband is in the Congo medical service. This okapi is the survivor of a distant ancestor of the giraffe. An adult stands about five feet high, and although it has the general shape of the giraffe it's neck is relatively shorter and its forelegs are not so high in proportion to its hind-quarters.

The sides of the animal's head are light fawn color and the general coloration of the body is a dark purple. The most striking character is that the rump and the upper part of the legs are transversely striped with black and white. It was first known in 1901, having been found in the Semliki forest, haunting low undergrowth and swamps. This particular specimen was in Mme. Landaghem's possession for a number of years, and photographs of it show it eating out of her hand.

A 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to show you its effects. See coupon.

See how teeth glisten when the film is gone. It is film that makes teeth look dirty. It is film that is the source of most tooth troubles.

Remove the Film

Film is the basis of tartar. It is the source of discolored teeth and decay. In brushing teeth you leave a slimy film. You can feel it with your tongue. It clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays. Your tooth paste cannot dissolve it. Most tooth troubles are now traced to that clinging film. That film is what discolors—not the teeth. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. So the one great object in cleaning teeth should be to end that film.

Dental science, after years of searching has found a way to do that. For home use the way is now embodied in a dentifrice called Pepsodent.

The results are known. Convincing, clinical and laboratory tests have proved them beyond question. Leading dentists everywhere now advocate its use.

A 10-Day Test Supplied

We now send a 10-Day Tube to anyone who asks. Thus we are starting countless people toward cleaner, safer teeth.

Pepsodent is based on pepsin, the digester of albumin. The film is albuminous matter. The object is to dissolve the film, then to day by day combat it.

The way seems simple, but pepsin must be activated. The usual method is an acid harmful to the teeth. It is the invention of a harmless activating method which makes pepsin possible. That, with other Pepsodent ingredients, is doing now what was never done before.

Send the coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the slimy film. See how teeth whiten as the fixed film disappears.

Read the book we send you. Learn the reason for these things. Then judge for yourself if you want your teeth kept in that way always. Cut out the coupon now.

When Weights Are Weighed.

STANDARD WEIGHTS GROW HEAVIER WITH AGE.

Among offences committed by tradesmen there are few so sharply and swiftly punished as the use of incorrect weights or measures.

A curious case of the kind was dealt with recently when a Welsh draper was fined because an assistant had used his walking stick with which to measure ribbon. The stick, reputed to be a yard long, turned out to be only 35 1/2 inches.

British weights and measures are in the keeping of the Stewards Department of the Board of Trade, the officials of which have in their charge not only the Imperial standards, but also models of all the weights and measures that may be used in trade.

The Weights and Measures Act of 1878 requires that all local standards shall be sent to the Standard office to be verified, the weights not less than once in five, and the measures at least once in ten years.

It's a queer thing, but a weight sent up for verification is frequently found to weigh more at the end of five years than it did when it was made. This is probably due to the action of moist air and a certain rusting.

Only One Changeless Metal. There is only one metal known which will not so change. It is an alloy of iridium and platinum, but is far too costly to be employed for all the thousands of weights required by local authorities.

The administration of the Weights and Measures Act is in the hands of the County and Borough Councils, and by these are employed some seven hundred inspectors who are constantly at work all over the country.

Some idea of the work that falls upon these inspectors may be gathered from the fact that in one year they verify and stamp well over ten millions of weights, measures, spring balances, and the like.

Very little error is allowed and that must be on the right side so far as the customer is concerned. For instance, on a four pound iron weight the maximum error permitted is only twelve grains.

Famous British Admiral.

John Benbow occupies a high position in the glorious roll of England's admirals. Born in 1655, he lived in an age of strife and won his way by hard fighting. In 1690 he had a prominent share in the battle off Beachy Head, and two years later he distinguished himself at Barfleur and La Hogue. Later, he commanded a squadron that burned Dieppe, bombarded Havre and Calais, and harassed the French littoral; and in 1698 he became rear-admiral. Subsequently he served in the West Indies, where he met his end as vice-admiral in command of the squadron opposed to the French under Du Casse. His last battle was eminently glorious to himself, although the misbehaviour of some of his captains robbed him of success. It was a five days' fight, begun on Aug. 19, 1702, and carried on by him almost unsupported, after his desertion by those who should have seconded his valour. In the course of it, he was wounded in the face and arm, and had a leg shot away, but he continued to command from a cradled seat on his quarter-deck, until he contrived to extricate his ship and got away to Kingston, Jamaica. His wounds, however, proved fatal, and he succumbed on Nov. 4, 1702, though not before he had taken steps to have justice done upon those of his subordinates who had betrayed their trust, their commander and their country. Four of them accordingly were brought before a court-martial, two were condemned and shot, one was cashiered, and the fourth died before the trial ended. It was General's misfortune to live in an age in which political intrigue had sapped the loyalty of some of the Navy's higher officers; but the inspiration of his life and his death helped in no small degree re-establish the great traditions, and to restore that high sense of duty by which the Navy was animated in the age of Nelson, and which it has displayed so conspicuously in the present age.

Crowns Going Begging.

GLADSTONE MIGHT HAVE BEEN A KING.

There are in Europe to-day thrones without occupants, but there is no lack of applicants for the post. Several times in the world's history, however, crowns have been so promptly rejected as though they were very damaged and worthless articles indeed. Early in the last century the crown of Greece was offered to Lord Byron, who died before he had a chance to accept it. Later on, Queen Victoria's second son, the late Duke of Edinburgh, was invited to become King of the Hellenes, but the jealousy of foreign powers decided his refusal. Then it was offered in turn to Mr. William Gladstone and Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, but neither was attracted by the honour. Napoleon anticipated the patriotic Hungarians by wishing to separate Hungary from Austria in 1809, when he offered the separate crown to the great Hungarian Count Esterhazy. But the Count refused and went into temporary exile.

Early in the history of Russia, when it was scarcely acknowledged as a part of civilised Europe, the Imperial throne was offered first to Prince Metelavski, and then to Prince Pozharski, but they feared to undertake such a difficult task.

Finally a youth of sixteen, Michael, was elected on condition that he swore that he and his descendants should resign as constitutional sovereigns. He was the first Romanoff—and now once again there is no Tsar reigning in Russia.

Later on, when Tsar Alexander I. died in 1825, his brother Constantine was the heir, but he preferred the security of private life, and handed it on to his young brother, Nicholas I.

George Washington's army wished to make him a king, but he preferred to be the first President of the U.S.A.

Has Hubby Made a Will?

AN ARTICLE EVERY MARRIED COUPLE SHOULD READ.

By GERALD COURT.

It is the duty of every woman who is happily married before she is twenty-four hours older to ask her husband if he has made a will. I say "happily married," because those who less fortunate may find it wiser to avoid difficult topics. But, if possible, the subject should be tackled by all, because otherwise the most devoted couples may be living in a fool's paradise.

If a wife dies without making a will her husband comes in to everything she possessed. I am speaking of money, stocks and shares, War Savings Certificates, jewellery, clothes, everything in fact except land and freehold houses, to which different rules apply.

There are lots of people who imagine that the same thing happens if the husband dies without having made a will, and that the wife as her natural right takes everything he leaves behind him. But this is not so.

Savings That Might Be Lost. I wonder how many wives would rest happy in their beds to-night, if they realised that a considerable portion of their husband's money might in certain circumstances go not to them at all, but to the brothers and sisters of their dead husband!

Let me try to make the position clear. I will take the case first of a man who leaves a widow and no children, but has not made a will.

So far as anything up to £500 is concerned, the widow takes the whole amount, but of anything above that sum, she only gets half, and the other half goes to her husband's next-of-kin. That is to say, if a man leaves £2,000 his widow takes, £500, and then the balance of £1,500 is divided into two. The widow takes a half (£750), and the other half (£750) goes to the next-of-kin. As a result, the widow gets £1,250 instead of the £2,000 her husband could have given her, if only he had taken the trouble to make a will.

As to who is a man's next-of-kin, the man's father, if alive, takes the money. If the father is dead, then the mother, brothers and sisters share it between them. If there are no brothers and sisters the mother takes it. If the mother is dead, the brothers and sisters share it.

Now suppose that the man, when he dies, leaves not only a widow but some children as well. The widow no longer gets that first £500 I spoke of before, but the total sum of the money left is divided into three. The widow gets only one third, and the other two-thirds are divided equally between the children.

But this raises a great deal of trouble and causes a lot of expense, if the children are young, because the money belonging to the children ought to be invested, and only the interest used until they are twenty-one. And if you want to use any of the capital for education or setting them up in business, you have to make application to a judge for leave, and all that sort of thing wastes money. And the making of a will avoids it!

That is why I say, "Ask your husband if he has made a will."

THE ROMANCE OF A GREAT BUSINESS.

The first of the great London Exhibitions, held in Hyde Park in 1851, was so great a success financially that to-day, nearly seventy years after, the surplus are still endowing science scholarships and bursaries.

One of the factors in the success of that wonderful exhibition was the enterprise of a boy of seventeen named John Cook, who personally helped to convey 165,000 visitors from the Midlands to London.

This lad conceived a brilliant idea for securing support. Hiring an empty excursion train at Derby, he would take it to one of the big Midland manufacturing towns, parade the place with a brass band and banners, meet the hands leaving the works on pay day, and carry them off to the train. Having thus filled his train, he would take it to London, escort his crowd to the Exhibition, collect them again, bring them back to their homes, and then start all over again.

At that time he was sometimes up all night for five nights in the week, just snatching a nap when and where he could.

But John Cook, at seventeen, was already a practised traveller. The son of a Leicestershire temperance lecturer, he had been brought up in very poor circumstances and had learned early to look after himself.

As a mere child he had been noted for his amazing muscular strength and independence. When only six years of age, he left home on his own account, and made a three days' journey by road, omnibus, rail, and canal, returning quite safe and cheerful. He had been, he said, to see his mother's home. His next excursion was when, at the age of ten, he helped to handle 500 children on the occasion of an afternoon excursion from Leicester.

As a mere child he had been noted for his amazing muscular strength and independence. When only six years of age, he left home on his own account, and made a three days' journey by road, omnibus, rail, and canal, returning quite safe and cheerful. He had, he said, to see his mother's home. His next excursion was when, at the age of ten, he helped to handle 500 children on the occasion of an afternoon excursion from Leicester.

Mad on Travelling!
Before he left school at the age of fourteen, he was already earning wages by setting type in a printing office.

From the beginning he was mad on travelling. There never has been a plainer illustration of the old saying about the boy being father of the man than was afforded by John Cook. His father, Thomas Cook, had at this time taken up the tourist business, but on a very small scale. John Cook's chance came when, at the age of sixteen, he was entrusted by his father with the care of 100 tourists in the Highlands of Scotland. All sorts of difficulties cropped up, but young Cook was always equal to the occasion.

In 1855, when John Cook was twenty one years of age, his father moved his office from Leicester to London. Some idea of the way in which it grew can be gathered from the fact that, within thirty years, the staff had increased from three to more than four thousand!

All was fish that came to John Cook's net. He was ready personally to conduct a tourist to Pampeluna or Patagonia, to fit him out with letters of credit, supplies of foreign money, couriers or guides, provisions or passports. He originated the hotel-coupon system by the aid of which a tourist always finds a room ready in whatever town or village he wishes to stop at.

It was John Cook to whom the British Government turned when they were anxious to send a relief expedition to General Gordon, besieged in Khartoum.

On this occasion, 18,000 troops, 130,000 tons of stores, and 70,000 tons of coal had to be conveyed up the Nile. The vessels provided for the purpose were twenty-seven steamers, 650 sailing craft, and 800 whaleboats. No fewer than 5,000 Egyptians were hired to assist in the matter of transport.

It was this firm, again, who, in 1888, acquired the cable railway which has since carried tens of thousands of visitors to the summit of Vesuvius. The Vesuvius railway was at that time in a bankrupt condition, and John Cook had to fight all sorts of claimants in the Italian law courts. Then, when at last the ownership was settled, the people of the village of Resina went on strike.

For years these truculent mountaineers had extorted a poll-tax on all travellers who came up the mountain, besides forcing the previous owners of the line to pay blackmail to the tune of £800 a year. When these robbers offered similar terms to John Cook he quietly but absolutely declined to pay them one penny. Thereupon the ruffians attacked and burned the railway station, seized the rolling stock, and flung the carriages down the crater of the volcano.
The line was repaired, and then wrecked again. Then the iron hand of John Cook descended. He closed the line absolutely, and would not open it again until the Resina people came to his agent in Naples and almost on their knees begged for peace at any price.
On another occasion—this was a good many years ago—a certain railway company, which shall be nameless, jered at Cook and Son and haughtily refused to make any concessions whatever.
John Cook boycotted the line. He put it clean outside his arrangements. Five years later the directors awoke to the fact that they were losing a lot of money. They decided to make peace. It was several years before the line was lifted. It must have been one of John Cook's greatest triumphs when, the moment his ban was withdrawn, the stock of that railway jumped upwards.
Of John Cook's personal prowess there are many stories. On one occasion he had invited a distinguished party to a trial trip of a new steamer built for work on the Nile. This steamer had a novel steering apparatus, to which the "rais," or captain of the vessel, a native Egyptian, had an old-fashioned prejudice.
The "rais," who was a giant of a man, took the wheel, and the steamer began to proceed up-stream in zig-zag fashion. John Cook saw at once how the land lay. Excusing himself to his visitors, he stepped up alongside the "rais."
"Can't you keep her on a straight course?" he asked quietly.
"Impossible," growled the giant. "It is this new steering apparatus."
"Impossible," repeated Cook.
"Well, if you can't steer I don't want you here any longer."
With that he seized the tall Egyptian round the body, carried him to the side, and, lifting him as if he had been a child, flung him into the muddy Nile. Without one glance at the swimming man he went back and took the wheel and steered a straight course with his own hands.

The Lantern Wasn't Lit.
One night a man in a trap was run down at a level crossing. Consequently the old signalman in charge had to appear in Court. A grueling cross-examination failed to shake his evidence. He said he had waved his lantern frantically, but to no avail. The following day the superintendent of the line called him into his office.
"You did do well yesterday, Tom," he said. "I was afraid at first you might break down."
"No, sir," replied Tom. "But I was in a dreadful funk that that old lawyer chap was going to ask me whether my lantern was lit or not."

Bargain Prices
We were able to purchase some Furs at Low Prices, and we have marked them and our Regular Purchases at a very moderate margin of profit.
It is an axiom that the early buyer always benefits.
BROWN MARMOT SCARVES @ $8.50 and $11.00 upwards.
BROWN MARMOT MUFFS @ $9.50.
GREY GOAT SCARVES @ $5.50.
GREY GOAT MUFFS @ $7.00.
BLACK HARE SCARVES @ $5.50, $7.00 and $8.50 upwards.
BLACK HARE MUFFS @ $4.00, $8.50 and upwards.
BLACK WOLF STOLEES @ $10.00, $14.00 and $19.00 upwards.
BLACK WOLF MUFFS @ $15.00 and $16.00 upwards.
We show many nice sets in Grey and Golden Foxes, Natural Lynx and Opposums, Isabella Opposums, Mink Marmots, etc., and our prices are for these, as per usual, the lowest procurable.
We have also a limited number of Imitation Fur Sets, but not as many as usual, as this season we considered Real Furs better value on the whole.
If it doesn't freeze it will rain, and we are now well prepared with a large stock of Ladies' Umbrellas.
These Umbrellas we have in military and other late modes in British and American makes.
