DO NOT MARRY THE GIRL.

Who nags.
Who is lazy.
Who is in an old wrap.
Who cannot control her temper.
Who is not neat and tidy in her dress.
Who is deceitful, and not true to her friends.
Who fusses, fumes, and fidgets about everything.
Who has highest aspiration has never soared above self.
Who is amicable to editors and "horrid" to her family.
Who has a great deal of interest in life and dress and amusements.
Who cannot bear to hear anyone but herself praised or admired.
Who never thinks that her mother needs an outing, amusement, or a change.
Who humiliates servants by snapping, then "brags" criticizing them before guests.
Who dresses in the height of fashion who goes out but does not care how she looks at home.
Who always comes to the breakfast-table late and cross, in an old wrapper or dressing-jacket, with her hair in curl-papers, and who grumbles and scolds at everything and everybody.
Who puts everything she can get on her back, so that she may make a good appearance, when she is together obliged to patch and do up for herself old cloaks, gowns, and bonnets.

Mrs. Casey—An' phwat did I dope? I was called yer Mr. Casey—'Doddie'—'Mrs. Casey'—'Oh, sorry!' I know how you feel, but it's worse than Sunday suit.

The Ticket-of-Leave Man

"Spoofed; sold; done brown. Sam Pettit, you're in luck, and now for the first time in your life, you're a free man."

"Sam Pettit, my boy, you're in luck. An' old man with white hair, close cropped, bent over a grumpy nose, wearing a clay pipe with bowl turned down hung out of his mouth, and a leg of his foot stuck at his elbow."

"What was it he said? 'Pettit, my boy, you're in luck. An' old man with white hair, close cropped, bent over a grumpy nose, wearing a clay pipe with bowl turned down hung out of his mouth, and a leg of his foot stuck at his elbow.'"

"The advertisement, sir, for the whereabouts of Esther White, my daughter, an' if a man don't want to marry her, he's a damned fool, an' I'm not concerned in the happiness of his child."

"Insurance." "SCOTCH UNION AND NATIONAL IMPERIAL LONDON & LANCASHIRE LONDON & LANCASHIRE LONDON & LANCASHIRE"

"Dear Father—there, do you hear that? 'Dear Father—I understand that you are shortly to be released, I promised mother before she died that I would have a home ready for you to come to. I have kept my word, I enclose the money for your fare, and hope you will lose no time in coming here—'E.W.' There! what do you think of that?"

"Oh! I know an old ticket-of-leave man can only count upon being kicked out of pillar to post. I'll take the money; and here's the address. He wrote the address on a sheet of paper and pocketed the money. After carefully polishing his hat on a greasy sleeve, he bade Mr. Bell good morning and departed. Once outside the door, however, he turned round with a chuckle, and placing his thumb in his nose he spread the fingers out."

PERSONAL NOTES.

Notes of Interest About Some Leading People.

Adam Siepen, the armless painter, has just died at Düsseldorf. He was blind from birth, and his left hand was his right foot.

Among the cherished treasures of Sir Robert and Lady Bancroft is a square wooden box containing a silver plate, and adorned with a brilliant diamond.

Queen Margherita is a great linguist, and is justly proud of her fluency in several languages.

HELPFUL HINTS.

If the hands are rubbed on a stick of celery after peeling onions the hands will be entirely relieved.

Half an hour once a week after spending in manicuring the nails if the hands are to have a well-kept appearance.

Save all the egg shells, and when broken up finely, or if it will be found useful for removing stains, etc., from enameled saucers.

All saucers and kettles should be turned upside down when not in use. Let the saucers project a little over the edge of its shelf to admit air.

When the hands have become soft and shrunken by using soda and hot water, rub them with common salt, and it will help to make them smooth again.

Chloride of lime should be used about the house all the summer, and in the out-buildings also. It will drive rats from the cellar at any time of the year.

Buttermilk is excellent for cleaning sponges. Steep the sponges in milk for some hours, then squeeze it out, and wash in cold water. Lemon juice is also good.

For billboards the first thing to do is to get rid of the excess of moisture in the blood. For this purpose nothing is better than a Serravallo's powder.

BREAKING THE REMOUNTS

TRAINING RUSSIAN CAVALRY HORSES.

How the Cavalry Regiments of the Czar's Army Are Kept Up.

Unlike the British soldier, the Russian cavalryman knows very little and cares even less about the management and treatment of his horse. The officers in Russian "crack regiments" consider it very much below their dignity to take any hand in the breaking in of a remount, and such work is usually relegated to those in inferior positions.

Most of the mounts used in the Russian army come from the vast plains that lie around the basins of the rivers Don and Dnieper. Those bred in the neighborhood of the Don are looked upon as the best mounts, but all have a fine character for speed and endurance.

The Russians have rather a peculiar system of supplying their army with remounts. Botted here and there over the back, doublet stirrups are military stations, or riding-schools. Each school supplies a certain regiment with its remounts and an officer from the regiment is usually retained at the riding-school ostensibly for the purpose of studying the art of breaking-in. Needless to say, the object is to bring his course of study to its least possible minimum.

The stations are very cheerless places. They are usually situated miles distant from any town or village, and consist of a few huts, or three houses for the officers, some large wooden shanties for the men, and large paddocks and stables for the horses.

As soon as the horses are broken in to the station, Kalmucks are employed to break them in. As soon as the most difficult part of the breaking-in is over, the morning of a "round up" comes. The horses are mounted on their feet and well-trained horses, ride after a troop of embryo remounts. They carry at their saddle-sides coiled lassos, in the use of which they are as dexterous as the American cowboy. As soon as they are drawn within a reasonable distance of the quarry each Kalmuck selects his victim. He unlooses his lasso, and whirling it around his head, he whips it so that it flies about his head with marvelous accuracy over the back of a fleeing horse. The noise quickly attracts the attention of the other riders, and the animal, suddenly checked in its mad career, is pulled violently to the ground. The others at once start in pursuit, bring him back, and another Kalmuck mounts him. The too is likewise drawn, and the chase starts afresh. Sometimes this continues for half-a-dozen times before the work is over. The excitement and allows it rider to sit comfortably in the saddle.

Next day the horse is exercised at "lunging," by means of a head-rope which is slung round its neck, and mostly so these exercises are continually gone through, until the horse has become so tame that he shows any sign of bad temper the Russian puts him up and feeds him back into a good humor. The work is done in a very hasty manner, and the Russian cavalryman is not a very good rider. The first two or three times this is done the horse plunges about, terrified by the sudden din, but after that the noise has become a matter of course and shows no sign of alarm.

It is taught to stand perfectly still while the rider slips out of the saddle and sits astride its stirrups. Another exercise also indulged in is the "cavalryman's stand," in which the rider remains all the time without movement. The final stage comes when the remount receives its baptism of fire.

A squad of from twenty to thirty remounts is led out into the barrack-yard. They are then mounted by their respective riders and carefully blindfolded with handkerchiefs. A Russian instructor then takes each of his stand before each horse and fires over its head a rifle containing blank cartridges. The first two or three times this is done the horse plunges about, terrified by the sudden din, but after that the noise has become a matter of course and shows no sign of alarm.

Miramichi Advance. BOROVED LIBRARY BOOKS. A communication from the efficient secretary of the Chatham Free Public Library Commissioners, which was presented to the Town Council on Monday evening is well deserving of general attention.

The customs, collections of Canada in the fiscal year, ended June 30th, amounted to $40,908,912, an increase of $3,889,252 over last year.

Not long ago the local government was the subject of severe comment because the N. B. Coal and Railway Company's line was not operating satisfactorily.

Mr. H. Hunter, at present in the employ of the I. C. R., at Moncton, has tendered his resignation and will in a short time be appointed superintendent of the first named road.

It is understood that the new arrangement has been brought about by recent action of the local government.

Can anybody explain on what grounds Chatham's pulp industry is discriminated against by the Intercolonial railway, which carries pulp from St. John to Montreal at two and a half cents less per one hundred pounds than it does the same article from St. John to Montreal?

This is not a political question, but one for the Minister of Railways and his subordinates to answer. If Chatham is to be discriminated against in this way, we have a right to know the reason why.

Can anybody tell us why there is no close connection with the "Ocean Limited" express between Chatham and the Junction? Why are passengers by the new and fast train, who expect—and have the right to expect—to be carried from the Junction to Chatham in the usual way, kept waiting at the Junction for more than an hour because no connecting train is provided? Is it the intention of the railway managers to keep Chatham the chief and most populous commercial town of the North Shore of New Brunswick—shall be shut out from the benefits of the "Ocean Limited"? If so, why should this splendid train stop at Chatham Junction? If it is not the intention to give Chatham the advantages of the new train why was not the fact known beforehand? If Chatham is to be ignored in this new railway arrangement—there will be a practical protest as will suggest to those responsible for the slight that their course will be effectively reversed.

Even in view of party interests and political prejudice it is well to be accurate when dealing with the country's administration. Lord Dundas seems very ready, just now, to promote the cause of the parliamentary opposition at Ottawa and of the conservative party throughout the country in retaliation for the government's failing to give him carte blanche to spend as much money as he pleased on the military of Canada.

Two Records. The effect of helping to maintain the British characteristics of the people, and the sense of continuity of Canada to United States, there exists a natural tendency towards Americanism in social customs and manners, but British sentiment and devoted loyalty to the Mother Land had unwaveringly prevailed, and Canadians would prefer to be the Canada of their model.

The Intercolonial Railway. Hon. H. R. Emmons, Minister of Railways, gave a detailed statement in the House of Commons, on Monday, of the working of the Intercolonial. He showed that while there was a small surplus in 1903, the conditions had so changed as to bring about a deficit for 1904.

Another terrible steamship calamity has taken place, the Danish liner, Norge, being wrecked in the North Sea, being off and sinking in deep water, drowning about seven hundred passengers and crew.

Severe forest fires in the interior of Newfoundland have destroyed large lumber mills and the railway stations in the lumbering settlements.

Cleophas Belanger and son, Etienne, were killed by a bear near St. Francis P. Q. on 27th ult. They were hunting in company with Theodore Gauthier when they came on three large bears.

A Grapes. The despatch of 1904 was a British officer was killed and two officers and five men wounded, and the "Tribune" as a result of the latter sent to ask for an expedition against the arrival of the "Tribune" from the "Tribune" to negotiate with C. L. Youngblood, the leader of the British expedition.

At the last dinner of the Canadian Club, London, Mr. C. A. Duff Miller, Agent-General for New Brunswick, proposed "The Imperial Forces," a toast which he described as extremely popular in Canada.

The ill-luck of the Russians in the war has evidently made them querulous. It will be remembered that when they received their first knock-out from the Japanese they appealed to the world against their opponents' treachery in committing a hostile act before making a declaration of war.

Up to Saturday reports of the movements of the respective armies on the Liau Tung peninsula showed a gradual withdrawal of the Russians under Kurapatkin towards their northern base of supply.

There is a story that an independent Japanese force of 10,000 men has landed on the Elliot Islands, Corea Bay, to be added to the main force of Kurapatkin.

A detailed report from Admiral Togo records a desperate and successful torpedo attack at the entrance of Port Arthur, June 27, in which a Russian guardship and a Russian torpedo boat destroyer were sunk.

During the mobilization exercises Friday at Halifax, Sergeant R. Conroy, 66th Princess Louise Fusiliers, was named for life by one of the Royal Garrison Regiment of regulars.

McLain's Vegetable Worm Spray—their food mother used, the original and genuine worm spray.

Lord Strathcona presided at the Dominion Day dinner in London. There were 200 guests, including the Duke of Argyll, Lord Brassey, Sir Henry Edward MacMahon, governor of Natal.

Chatham Town Council. Chatham Town Council met in regular monthly session on Monday, July 5th.

Whereas it is vitally important to the County of New Brunswick that every encouragement and assistance should be given to revive the wool industry, the following resolution was adopted.

Resolved that the Board of Trade of the Town of Chatham be asked to assist by passing a similar resolution.

MISSING OR, THE MISSING WILL

She was trying to gather resolution to tell all. "Dare I say I want to see temptation?" she asked herself again and again, and the passion of her face deepened under Mr. Ingley's kind and questioning gaze, until it suddenly overcame him.

"Poor child," he exclaimed, almost before he knew that he was speaking. There was such a concentrated tenderness and compassion in his voice, that Jessie's overwrought feelings reached a climax and she burst into tears. She was about to tell him all, when the sound of a heavy iron step on the wooden footbridge made her start, while Mr. Ingley, with a sudden, half-grown air, sprang to his feet, dropping her hand, when he caught the full, indignant, sultry gaze of Roger Plummer's eyes, and crimsoned beneath it.

"The bridge was a stone's throw from the tall, dark, and narrow, partly screened from it by hazel bushes, and Roger, with a savage look on his face, and a final word, was out of sight again in a moment, leaving Jessie uneasy and half-alarmed, as she knew not where he had gone. Mr. Ingley did not again take her hand or suffer her to take his, but fully the tender compassion he felt for the lonely, lonely child he had seen grow toward manhood. He stood before her with a grave air, and preached her a nice little sermon on the sin of discontent, to which she listened with becoming meekness, though not without the reproach in her large pathetic gaze. He recommended her some devotional and other books, and chatted out various duties for her, and bid her come oftener to the rectory and take counsel of his station.

"I know," he said in conclusion, "that your position is a very trying one, but heaven will reward you as you bear it patiently. Be of good cheer, Jessie. I will be with you, and you and Philip will be united and live happy ever after, like a story book. I am not really afraid that your connection with Marwell Court has done you harm. Forgive me this speech if I say that Miss Lonsdale is not a fit friend for you. Such friendships produce heart-burnings and mortifications, and engender discontent, though you may not be able to see the feeling. Go to the Court."

CHAPTER XVIII. To Philip, Mr. Cheseam, and Mrs. Plummer, Jessie had appealed in vain for permission to return home to a world of honorable toil. But Mr. Ingley was a man of finer sensibilities, and with a fuller knowledge of life than either of her guardians; she had thought he would understand what she desired and put into words, and what she scarcely acknowledged even to her own heart, until that sudden rush of feeling in the lady's drawing-room frightened her. Realizing that she must renounce the Court, she decided to make the best of it, and was even glad to be released from the temptation that she knew she ought to resist. Was she so poor, so destitute, so frightened at Alma, but he did not run away, neither would he desert her. "I will be with you," he said, "and you and Philip will be united and live happy ever after, like a story book. I am not really afraid that your connection with Marwell Court has done you harm. Forgive me this speech if I say that Miss Lonsdale is not a fit friend for you. Such friendships produce heart-burnings and mortifications, and engender discontent, though you may not be able to see the feeling. Go to the Court."

DYSPEPSIA CURED. DRUGS IN HEADACHE.

It may be said, with little fear of contradiction from those who know the facts, that if a cast-iron law were bidding the use of any drug whatever in the treatment of headache could be made and enforced there would be much less misery for the coming generation than there is for this.

During the Spanish War numbers of the sufferers from repeated headaches because of a weak heart; and in the epidemic of pneumonia which ravaged the country last winter a very large number of deaths occurred from failure of the heart to meet the added strain. Although various causes have been less than at work to weaken the hearts of the present generation, from the sufferer from repeated headaches influence has been the indeterminate use of headache powders.
