in Quebec arising out of an appointment made by the late Hon. Mr. Mercier. Be that as it may, in this case we have it recommended by the Attorney General and by the government of Manitoba, that another county court judge is necessary in that province. You have that recommendation endorsed by the present judge of the county court who informs the Justice Department here, that it is absolutely essential to the administration of justice that he should have assistance. We have the fact known to us that this part of Canada, above all others, is increasing in population. I agree to some extent with what has been said by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, that in other parts of Canada the judges now have not got enough work to do. Any one who knows the facts, in the maritime province, knows that the judges have not enough work to do. I am informed that in large centres of population like Montreal and Toronto, and in Manitoba where the population is increasing year by year, such criticism cannot be applied, and that the judges have plenty of work. I am surprised that a gentleman like the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), a legal gentleman of his standing who has held the position of Minister of Justice, should for a moment hesitate to take the proper action to carry out the decision of the local government where they declare that this judicial officer is necessary, and where their declaration is supported by the recommendation of the judge of the district. Suppose we do not do so, what other inquiries can you make? Are you going to send a gentleman out there to put the judge upon his oath, and ask him how many cases he has tried, how many he is unable to overtake, and what remains there are? The true rule is, that the Justice Department must satisfy themselves generally that conditions have arisen which justify the local government in calling for another judicial appointment. They are not bound to have an investigation as to how many hours a day the judge sits, how many cases he has been able to try, and how many he has not been able to take up. Of course the Justice Department must be satisfied that the demand made by the local government, in whom the constitution vests the power, is reasonable and proper. If it is plain that the power is being exercised improvidently there might be occasion for the Government to advise Parliament to stay its hand in making the appointment. But there is no suggestion of that kind here. You have the conditions which are always necessary in such cases. You have in the first place the declaration of the local legislature that the appointment is necessary, and in the second place, you have a declaration from the judiciary there that in its opinion the appointment is necessary. These two combining together, and the amount not being so very much, I cannot see the reason for the very grave objection which hon. gentlemen opposite have presented.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to explain to my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) why he formed a wrong impression of what I stated. My hon. friend attempted to restate what I stated, and in the attempt he put in my mouth words that I never used, and he made his argument upon a set of statements that were never made by me in this House. My hon. friend (Mr. Davies) used to be in the habit of doing that when he was on this side of the House. But, I thought when my hon. friend took upon himself the dignity of a Minister, that he would leave that bad habit aside. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) stated in so many English words, that I talked about the salaries of judges not being sufficient, about it being necessary to reorganize in order to give sufficient salaries without an adequate expenditure; and he said, that I had made a demand that until investigations were made into this we should ask for no judges' salaries. I made no such statement. My last words were as absolutely clear as the English language could make them. After having talked about the state of our finances, I said that for my part I would vote for no more judges' salaries until it was made plain to this House that there was an absolute necessity for the judge. I went upon that ground and upon that ground alone. My hon. friend (Mr. Davies) formed his impression and thought I was not in serious earnest, because he took a wrong assumption as being the statement I made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very glad that the hon. the First Minister is in his place, because I regard this as a very serious matter indeed. A proposal is made by the hon. the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to vote $2,000 for the salary of an additional county court judge in the province of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) in making that proposal to the House stated distinctly (unless I entirely misunderstood him) that he did not expect that appointment to be made, and that it required legislation on the part of this House which would precede the appointment. And when he was asked whether he had satisfied himself as to the absolute necessity for that judge being appointed, the Solicitor General said he had not, but in the meantime there would be ample opportunity to do so. He stated that an Act had been passed by the local legislature to this effect, and that he had in addition the opinion of the judge, whose duties I presume would be relieved to the extent of 50 per cent if this appointment is made. But, the hon. the Solicitor General stated frankly to the House that he had not the information that would enable him to say that it was absolutely necessary to make this appointment. He said there was no difficulty in voting this $2,000, because legislation would be required before the appointment could be made.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will not say that the hon. gentleman said that legislation would be required; but he expected that legislation would be required so as to make it conformable to the local Act. He said, that this would give ample time for the Department of Justice to obtain the necessary information as to whether this appointment should be made or not. That was a very clear and distinct statement. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries starts a very dangerous proposition—I use that term most advisedly—he propounds the very dangerous proposition, that this Parliament is bound to vote salaries for all the judges that any local legislature may choose to provide for. I say, Sir, a more dangerous proposition than that, and one more calculated to induce local legislatures to provide for unnecessary additional judges, could not possibly, in my judgment, be made to the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Was the hon. gentleman referring to me?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. To you.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the hon. gentleman will do me the justice of saying that I expressly guarded myself by saying, unless the action of the local legislature was improvident.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am quite aware that the hon. gentleman did qualify it by saying, unless the action of the local legislature was improvident. But who is to be the judge of that? If you lay down the bald proposition that this House must provide whatever salaries the legislation of the local legislatures renders necessary, I say it is calculated to lead to most improvident legislation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman do me the courtesy to say, if the proposition I lay down is not the correct proposition constitutionally, what is the correct proposition constitutionally?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to conclude my observations, I will leave no doubt upon his mind what I think the correct proposition constitutionally is. The question of what is provident or improvident is a relative one. The hon. gentleman knows that the legislature of the province of Manitoba, with a population of 200,000, has passed legislation requiring six county court judges, about the same number as exist in the province of Nova Scotia, with half a million people. Gentlemen who are engaged in the legal profession in the province of Manitoba, may have information which we do not possess.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

We must go by general principles, and there must be some relation between the judiciary of a country and its population; and, when you find a proposition made for as many judges for 200,000 people in one part of the Dominion as there are for half a million people in another part. I say you have prima facie evidence that an improvident demand is made. I am told that a petition also came from another province for some two or three additional judges, but that there was two or three years' delay in granting them, showing that this House has never felt bound to respond immediately to the provision made by the local legislature, by voting the salaries. I am told that two or three years afterwards, when those appointments were made, the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. McMullen) denounced the voting of those salaries in a speech of two hours' length. I do not mean to say that the hon. gentleman had not good grounds for the position he took; I am not aware of the facts, as I was not here. But I merely mention that as evidence that it has been customary for local legislatures to make provision for judicial appointments without this Parliament responding by providing the salaries. There is a graver objection still to this, and that is in the statement advanced by the hon. Solicitor General, that this is to be a provisional appointment. He gives as a reason why the House should vote this money now, that, if information is obtained afterwards, the House can readily drop the amount, and the appointment will fall to the ground. Objection has already been taken to that proposition, on the ground that you could not obtain the services of any man qualified to discharge the duties of a judge, who would leave the profitable business in which he is now employed—and he ought to be employed in profitable business in order to be entitled to such judicial preferment—and take this position, if the appointment were merely a provisional one. But there is a much more fatal objection: that is, that this strikes at the root and foundation of the principle of the independence of the judges. If you appoint a judge, under the Canadian constitution and under the law passed by this Parliament, everything goes to show that at the moment a man is put on the bench, he is placed beyond the control and influence of the Government; and yet my hon. friend the Solicitor General has gravely proposed to this House that we should make an additional appointment, and that it should be in the power of the Government, if satisfaction was not given, or for any other cause, to drop the salary and allow the gentleman to lose his position. I say that the very first principle in relation to our judiciary is undermined when an appointment is made to rest on the will or fiat of the Government of the day, or some other Government which may succeed them. I think the First Minister will agree that, under the circumstances, as stated by the Solicitor General, it is only right that this item should be dropped until the Department of Justice have absolutely satisfied themselves as to the necessity of having this expenditure made and this appointment completed; and that an appointment to the bench in this country shall not be, in any sense, a provisional appointment, resting on further information that may or may not be obtained, and leaving the salary and position of a judge in any part of this country at the pleasure of the Government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I was not in the House when this discussion arose; but I am quite sure my hon. friend has mistaken the views and the language of my hon. friend the Solicitor General. To my mind, the Solicitor General could never have said that the appointment contemplated under this vote was a provisional one, because there is no such thing under the law and the constitution of this country as a provisional judge. A judge, when appointed, is appointed for life, and can be removed only in the manner we know. Therefore, I think my hon. friend is quite mistaken in the views he attributes to the Solicitor General. The reason for the appointment of a judge is this. In the first place, there is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman has said as to the character of the legislation under which we have to proceed. I have always said, and I can only repeat, that the provisions of the British North America Act in regard to the administration of justice and the appointment of judges is most unsatisfactory. If there is one thing that does not reflect credit on this Act—which, on the whole is, I think, creditable, and the hon. gentleman was one of the fathers of that Act—it is that provision. Under section 92 of the British North America Act, the administration of justice is entrusted to the provincial legislatures. Section 92, with subsection 14, reads as follows:—

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say:

14. The administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

Here it is very clearly defined that the provincial legislatures, and not the Dominion Parliament, have the power, and the exclusive power, of establishing courts, determining what shall be their jurisdiction, determining the number of judges, and so on. My hon. friend will not contend that we have any jurisdiction over these matters. We have none at all. We cannot say to the legislature that the Supreme Court or the county courts of the province shall be composed of four, or five, or six, or two judges alone. The hon. gentleman said it was outrageous to say that six county court judges were necessary for Manitoba, when no more were required for Nova Scotia.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think I said outrageous. I said that "prima facie," by the only means by which we could form a judgment, that is, the population in relation to the number of judges, it seemed improvident.

The PRIME MINISTER. Accepting the statement of the hon. gentleman, I wish to put this question to him: what jurisdiction has this Parliament over local legislation in this respect, either in Nova Scotia or in Manitoba? What jurisdiction have we to say to the people of Manitoba: You are improvident, and to the people of Nova Scotia: You are provident? We have no jurisdiction at all over that. And it is our duty to take the action of the legislation in any province in these matters, unless—there must be some limit to that—unless there is a case of absolutely gross fraud or something of that kind. Otherwise, this House has no power to revise the discretion of local legislatures.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Has not this House again and again declined, and properly declined, to provide the salaries after local legislatures have provided for judgeships?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware of any such case and would be glad to hear of it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the case of the province of Quebec, a provision in the statutes for the appointment of assistant judges has never been acted upon.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is altogether astray. The statute to which he refers provided for the appointment of two additional judges and was passed in 1890.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, I am referring to an Act that has been on the statute-book in Quebec for about twenty years. I have examined the Act and know what I am talking about.

The PRIME MINISTER. I believe the hon. gentleman is astray yet. The only instance I know is that of the Act passed about 1890, which never came into force. It was to have been brought into force by proclamation. Moreover, if there had been such a case in the province of Quebec as the hon. gentleman mentions, of which I am not aware, I cannot conceive how this Government could go against the wish of the legislature when there was cause shown. The hon. gentleman asked why six county court judges should be necessary in Manitoba, while the province of Nova Scotia does not require so many. Well, the hon. gentleman knows that the distances in Manitoba are immense, and that a judge has sometimes to administer justice in what would be a kingdom elsewhere. That might be one of the reasons why the constitution provides that the administration of justice shall be within the exclusive powers of the provincial legislature. While they alone have to provide for the organization of the courts, at the same time the British North America Act provides, by section 96, that the Governor General in Council should appoint the judges of the superior, district and county courts in each province except the court of probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. This is a most extraordinary provision and a blot on our constitution. I do not see why the legislature which provides for the establishment of the courts and the number of judges should not at the same time have the power to provide for the payment of the judges. The logical conclusion of section 92 of the British North America Act, which gives powers to the local legislatures to provide for the establishment of courts and the number of judges, would be to place under the same legislatures the duty and responsibility of appointing the judges. But that is not the case. The local legislatures provide for the number of judges required, but they have neither the duty nor the responsibility of making the appointments, and this Parliament has to do so. I should like to know what we, under such circumstances, have to do but execute the views of the local legislatures. What can we do otherwise? I say very humbly, and I submit it to the judgment of the intelligence and fairness and common sense of any man, here or elsewhere, in order to give a proper interpretation to the working of the constitution, that we are bound to take the will of the local legislature unless we are satisfied that the local legislature has gone upon a basis which is absolutely untenable, amounting to fraud or wrong. Otherwise I cannot see that we can substitute our discretion, indeed we have no discretion whatever. I am sorry I did not know this matter was coming up because I have the correspondence and will bring it down at the next stage of the proceedings.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman lay on the Table, at the same time, the letters of the Attorney General of Manitoba and the county court judge?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly, these are what I refer to. The Attorney General of Manitoba sent us the request of the county court judge setting forth that he was unable to discharge the duties of his office and required another judge. The district is a very large one to administer. Then the legislature of Manitoba created a new district under the law. This new district requires a judge, and that is why we ask Parliament for power to pay the new judge. In this matter we exercise no discretion but take the case as it was made by the Attorney General of Manitoba and brought to us. The hon. gentleman says we ought not to have so many judges in Manitoba.

Mr. LAURIER.

That may be, but my hon. friend who leads the Opposition is one of the fathers of this constitution, and he is one of those who placed this power in the hands of the local legislatures.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to call the attention of the committee to the new and very serious position in which this vote is put. The hon. First Minister frankly states that the Government exercises no discretion whatever, and he announces the very interesting doctrine that, in view of the present Government, we ought not to exercise discretion in this matter, but that wherever a provincial legislature sees fit to create a new judicial office, all we have to do, is to vote the salary required. The hon. gentleman may possibly be right. It would, on the moment, be very bold in me to say he is absolutely wrong; but I think he will agree with me that he has announced, for the first time, a most important opinion with reference to the construction of the British North America Act.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not for the first time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I say it is contrary to the traditions and practice of the Department of Justice of this country, under every Administration, to follow out the hon. gentleman's opinion. That department has invariably exercised its discretion before coming to Parliament to ask for a single dollar for an additional judge. In the case to which I particularly refer I find that the Department of Justice always refused, with a single exception, to act under the provisions of the old statute, under which an assistant judge, so called in the statutes, could be appointed "ad hoc" in any of the various districts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Ad hoc judges.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Practically, an "ad hoc" judge; called an assistant judge during that time—certainly an ad hoc judge. I found that my predecessors had objected, in the strongest manner, to taking action under legislation of that kind, which involved coming down to the House for money to pay the barrister or other person, who for the time would act as assistant judge. Now, the hon. gentlemen from British Columbia will be surprised to hear this doctrine, because, in every case where they have reorganized or rearranged their judicial districts, the Government have assumed, and the Department of Justice have gone on the assumption, that they were responsible, as a government, for every additional dollar asked for, whether for new judicial districts or for old ones. And, in connection with the county courts of the province of British Columbia, one of these judgeships—I do not know whether this position is filled now or not—was for a long time, both before my day and afterwards, left open and not filled, because the department was not satisfied, from the investigation and examination made, that that office was really called for or required, could not advise the Government as to the necessity of coming to Parliament and asking for that amount of money. So there has always gone on a friendly correspondence between the Attorney Generals' departments in the different provinces and the Justice Department, in connection with this matter or after legislation of this character on a proposition or suggestion for an arrangement of judicial work or judicial districts. And so, while I will not say that the hon. First Minister has no warrant for the ground he has taken, I do say that I have not heard that doctrine previously announced in this House. I do not agree with him as to what was intended under the British North America Act, that the Act only provides that the local legislatures shall create the office and this legislature supply the money, and the Executive or the Crown nominate the officer, and that it is merely automatic, with no discretion in this Parliament and no responsibility on the Executive. On the contrary, I say the Federal Government is held, and properly held, responsible by the people of this country for the appointments to this judicial office, for the number of them, and for their character, and for the increase of expenditure brought about by appointments; and that responsibility has never been shirked by any Government that has hitherto been called to account for it. Whether my view be right or wrong, I can only say that the hon. gentleman has, for the first time, pointed out the contrary. The Solicitor General brought no such idea from the Department of Justice. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that that hon. gentleman did his best to show the necessity for this vote and to show the grounds for which he should provide for the office. He did not say, as the Prime Minister did, that it followed, because the statute had been passed in the province, that this expenditure should be made. The First Minister will see how outrageous that doctrine is. If the provinces have no responsibility, if they can create any number of offices, distribute this work as they please, and add to the burdens of the people of Canada at large sufficient to pay the salary, unnecessary expense, and even extravagance, will be caused by any capricious action on the part of the local legislatures. We had warning on that subject from the province of Ontario. The present Minister of Justice himself found that the Act which he passed involved in practice unnecessary expenditure. Formerly, a judicial district in which the population reached a certain figure—80,000 people—was entitled, ipso facto, to two judges. But the hon. gentleman lived long enough, as the head of the government of Ontario, to find it necessary to come down and propose legislation to provide that one judge should do the work in these districts. In the province of Ontario, I understand, one county judge is provided for a population of 80,000. In the city of Halifax, with a population of 50,000, there is one county court judge. In the city of St. John, with about the same, there is one county court judge. We are asked to provide two county court judges for the northern district of Manitoba, and yet I venture to say that the Solicitor General has no more idea than I have as to the population. The population would naturally be one of several good tests as to the need for this appointment. But this committee is absolutely in the dark on the subject. The position of the First Minister is far more tenable than that of the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General felt that it was his duty to convince the committee that the office is required, but the First Minister gets rid of all these difficulties and meets all arguments by saying that this is not a matter of discretion, but a matter of duty. I remember, on another subject, hearing the First Minister taking altogether different ground as to the matter of duty. I never took the ground that this Parliament was bound to act automatically on any subject coming within its jurisdiction, and I hope I shall never be driven to such a position as to say that we are to deal with any matter without consideration, discretion and responsibility. But the view I take is so diametrically opposed to that of the hon. gentleman, that, unless this item is to stand until these reports—the report of the Attorney General and the report of the county judge—are before us, I will take the responsibility of moving a resolution to indicate how strongly opposed I am to the proposition which the First Minister advanced.

THE PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman is quite at liberty to take any course he sees fit; but I would suggest, as we are within a few days of the close of the session, that my hon. friend could move it at a later stage with just as good effect. I will agree, I may say, that, when we have this item up in concurrence, the same attitude of discussion shall be allowed with regard to it as is now allowed in committee.

SIR CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I defer to the wish of the Prime Minister, on the condition he named. I do not desire to make a further condition, but I would press upon him the desirability of having before the House the two reports that have been referred to—those of the Attorney General of Manitoba and the county judge.

THE PRIME MINISTER. Certainly; they are in the form of letters simply, and I will bring them down to-morrow afternoon.

SIR CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. An hon. gentleman has put in my hands the statutes to which I referred, and which the First Minister had overlooked, the Revised Statutes of the province of Quebec. Section 2323 reads:

Whenever any judge of the Superior Court, by illness, suspension from office, or otherwise, is unavoidably prevented from performing his duties as such judge, an assistant judge may be named either for a time certain, or during the time the judge first mentioned continues unable to perform his duties, in which last case the appointment of such assistant judge shall determine whether such first mentioned judge resumes the performance of his duties or another judge is appointed in his place.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When was it passed?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The late Attorney General of Quebec tells me that the statute was first passed in 1857.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I thought so, before confederation; because it is quite obvious it would not have been passed since confederation. It would not have been allowed.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is a re-enactment of the last consolidated statutes for the province of Quebec for 1887.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No legislature would undertake to pass an Act of that kind now.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot complain of the tone of the remarks of my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and I would be disposed to agree with him in a large measure. But the misfortune is that at the present time we find ourselves in presence of this peculiar provision of the constitution, an extraordinary one, and which cannot be reconciled to the general principle. The general principle is, and it is one upon which we are all agreed, that the party who is responsible for determining how many judges there shall be, and who they shall be, should also provide for their salaries. But such is not the law at the present time, such is not the provision of our constitution, which imposes upon one body the duty of determining how many judges the court shall be composed of, and it imposes upon another body the duty of determining who the judges shall be. Now, I will say this to the hon. member for Pictou, as a proposition of general law, and one that is necessary to work the constitution in peace and harmony, that all public bodies should discharge their duties, whether as legislators or as judges, independently within their own sphere. But let us say for the purpose of the present discussion that all provincial legislative bodies must be presumed to act with a better knowledge of their circumstances than we can have here. That is the theory upon which we must go. Now such being the theory, and my hon. friend must accept it, whenever a statute is brought to us providing for the constitution of a court and providing for an additional judge in any province, the duty of this Government is to take that statute as prima facie evidence of the requirements of the people of that province; and I lay it down as a doctrine of safe government that it is not open to us to question that provincial statute, unless it be so shocking as to be repugnant to the sense of right of ordinary men. I do not see how we can act by any other rule. Now, my hon. friend to some extent, disputed that position.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The words "prima facie" were not in the statement I disputed.

The PRIME MINISTER. Unless something is shown to us why this should not be done, it is not open to my hon. friend to say that it should not be done; he must accept the provincial statute as correct and proper, and as representing the needs of the province. It is not open to him to dispute it. But why should it be so? Why should there be so many judges? I tell him that it is not open to him to question the provincial statute. The constitution of the courts has been devolved by the fathers of confederation upon the provincial legislatures. That is the proposition I lay down; but my hon. friend says this is the first time this doctrine is affirmed. Well, Sir, I make bold to say that when we discuss this question again, I shall be able to convince him, by the debates of this House, that the view I now take is not new, but it has been taken again and again by gentlemen who at different times have filled the post of Minister of Justice. My hon. friend asked why there should be two judges in that district. I do not know myself what the reasons are; all I know is that prima facie the men who passed that law are better qualified than I am to judge of the circumstances and of the requirements of the people. But if my hon. friend could say of any Act: This is outrageous legislation, this is an improper exercise of the discretion vested in the legislature, which actually amounts to fraud, or something of the kind; then, I would say that Parliament, in its wisdom, must interfere, Parliament must stay its hand and not confirm such legislation. But unless there is such a case brought before us, I submit again to the logical mind, the judicial mind, of my hon. friend, that the position taken by the Government on this case is sound and cannot be questioned.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The First Minister and myself are not, after all, so very far apart. I do not quarrel with much he has said where he uses the words "prima facie." But supposing these reports are laid before us and they make a prima facie case, as they have made to the mind of the First Minister, and there is not, after reasoning here across the floor, any evidence to show that these reports are wrong. I am not at all averse to saying that the benefit of the doubt should be given to the local authorities.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The onus lies upon us.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The statement I quarrel with was that the Executive here should exercise no discretion. I say we must exercise discretion and discharge the responsibility.

Mr. DAVIN. If the construction put upon it by the Prime Minister is correct, why should the Attorney General of Manitoba send in a report, and why should it be thought necessary also to have the report of the judge sent down. It would have been enough that the Manitoba legislature had passed this legislation.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is exactly the case.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. No man will tax me with any sympathy with the local authorities in Manitoba, but at the same time I think that if this question had been properly put before the committee, we would not have spent so much time upon it. In Manitoba we have only two sets of judges. We have not, as there are in the other provinces, different courts, supreme courts, superior courts, courts of revision, &c., but we have the Court of Queen's Bench, composed of four judges, who have to exercise their jurisdiction over the whole province, which is subdivided into three judicial districts. We have also five county court judges having jurisdiction in the several subdivisions of the province. But it must be borne in mind that the jurisdiction of these county court judges goes as high as $500.

The PRIME MINISTER. $400.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Therefore a vast number of cases are submitted to their cognizance. They also act as judges in probate, and in some districts they act in small criminal cases; so that our county court judges cannot be compared with the county court judges of the other provinces in the extent of their jurisdiction. Now, it is true that from the number of our population, we appear, perhaps, to have a larger number of judges than we are entitled to. But we must take into consideration the fact that our country is sparsely settled, that the distances are great, and in order to avoid inconvenience to those who have to resort to the courts we have had to establish several county court stations that have to be attended to. It was not my good fortune to hear the remarks of the hon. Solicitor General, but I know that in the northern part of the eastern judicial district where Judge Walker has jurisdiction, the judge of that court is overworked. His district comprises the city of Winnipeg which alone is quite enough for him to attend to, and the consequence is that for several terms he has had to ask the judge of the central section of the eastern district to take over the court in the rural part of his district. This interferes a good deal with the work of Judge Prudhomme who has been attending to the work of Judge Walker. I am not surprised at all when I hear that the local government of Manitoba asked the Federal Government for the appointment of an additional judge. I do not know who shall receive that position, nor am I interested in the matter. The fact is that the territory of this judge is mostly all outside of my own riding, but I happen to know the facts, and I say that as far as Manitoba is concerned, with the few judges that we have, in comparison to the extent of the province, and even in comparison to the population, we cannot be surprised if a request is made for an additional judge.

Mr. SPROULE. I would not have spoken on this question were it not that the Prime Minister said that the principle which he now lays down has been followed, again and again, by Ministers of Justice. I understood him to mean by this, that the British North America Act provides the right of the provinces to lay out a judicial district and intimate that a judge is required; and then that it is the duty of the Minister of Justice and the Dominion Parliament to obey that intimation of the need by appointing a judge. I must say that this does not accord with my experience during the time I have been in this House, because a number of years ago when an application was made by myself for the appointment of an additional judge in our county, the Hon. Sir A. Campbell, then Minister of Justice, took the ground, that although the senior judge had recommended that another judge was needed, and although the bar had asked for the appointment of another judge because the business was falling in arrears; yet, that was not a justification for his making the appointment, and he must himself have satisfactory information that there was more business than could be done by one judge. He withheld that appointment for two or three years upon the same ground, and finally the appointment was made. I remember appealing to the late Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald with reference to the same case, and he insisted that the Minister of Justice must be the judge as to whether or not the appointment should be made. I remember also that the late Right Hon. Sir John Thompson made a similar reply in this House. I, therefore, contend that the principle laid down by the First Minister (Mr. Laurier) is not that which has hitherto been followed in these matters. But, if the contention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) is right, why did the present Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) who was the Attorney General of Ontario only a year ago, pass a law limiting the number of judges? Originally the provincial law provided that there might be a senior and a junior judge in a county, but Sir Oliver Mowat found that the applications from judges and from the bar were so numerous that there was an evil growing up, that too many judges were being appointed, and, therefore, he passed an Act which provided that in any county with a less population than 80,000 inhabitants there should be only one judge. If you apply that standard in the present case and take 80,000 inhabitants as the basis for the appointment of a judge in Manitoba, what do we find? The population of Manitoba is about 200,000, and after this appointment is made they will have six county court judges, who, under the Ontario law, should do all the judicial work for a country with a population of 480,000, more than twice the present population of Manitoba. I am surprised at the present Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) assenting to a proposition of this kind, because he was the man who checked the growth of this abuse in Ontario. Now, that gentleman (Sir Oliver Mowat) comes to this Parliament, and takes the ground that as soon as a provincial government establishes a judicial district, and without his finding from any other source the knowledge that such a judge is necessary, he takes the ground that the local government must be obeyed and that an additional judge must be appointed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I cannot see any inconsistency in the action of the present Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has referred. In one case, as far as I can understand, the Minister of Justice, when Premier of Ontario, found it necessary to pass an Act to limit the number of judges. I suppose the reason he passed that Act was, that if there was not an Act limiting the number of judges the Federal Executive would in the natural course of things be obliged to go on making appointments to fill all the vacancies which the former provincial statute provided for. In this present case he is taking the same ground, and as the provincial legislature of Manitoba has in a certain way constituted a court the Federal Executive is now bound to make a proper appointment. It seems to me that this is the only way in which you can read the federal constitution aright. In my opinion the theory contended for by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) would lead to some such state of affairs as this. If a provincial legislature should pass an Act, as provincial legislatures usually do, constituting a provincial court fixing a certain quorum of judges as necessary for the transaction of judicial business, and if the Federal Executive in its judgment, and in the exercise of the discretion which it is now contended belongs to it, should think that quorum too large, and should insist upon appointing only a smaller number of judges than the provincial legislature has established as the quorum; I would like to know whether there could be any judicial business done in that jurisdiction under those circumstances. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) knows, that a court cannot be properly constituted until there are so many judges in the court as the provincial legislature determines shall be the quorum. It may be that I am altogether mistaken about this, but I do not think that the fathers of confederation made any such mistake as, according to the contention of the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, they must be held to have made. They must have known very well, they did know very well, that if a provincial legislature undertook to pass an improvident Act with regard to the constitution of provincial courts, thus throwing unnecessary burdens upon the federal treasury, the Federal Executive would have the power to disallow such legislation. But, if the Federal Executive should allow to go into force a provincial Act providing for a certain number of judges,—constituting a court in a particular way, and providing for a particular quorum, then, in my opinion, having allowed the provincial Act to go without veto, they cannot consistently nullify that provincial legislation, by the indirect method of refusing to provide for the salaries of the additional judges. If an improvident Act is passed by a provincial legislature which throws too much burden upon the federal treasury in the way of judicial salaries, then the proper course is for the Federal Executive to exercise their supreme power of disallowing such legislation. To my mind that seems to be the logical and constitutional way out of the difficulty suggested by this discussion. It seems to me to be a practical solution of the problem which is presented on its face by our Act of confederation in its partition of federal and provincial authorities. I must say that I was not greatly impressed by the precedent about the Quebec judiciary which the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) mentioned. I am not familiar with the Act to which he referred. To be perfectly frank, I never heard of it before—but as I heard it read, it only provides that assistant judges may in certain contingencies be appointed, and it does not make the appointment of these judges necessary to the constitution of the court. If the Quebec legislature had made such assistant judges necessary to the constitution of the court, and if the Federal Executive had not provided for those assistant judges, then no judicial business could have gone on in that jurisdiction so long as the Federal Executive stayed its hand, and I should think, that, to say the least, it would be straining the constitution of this country to nullify the provincial enactment in that way. I think that the limitation which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries put on his proposition made it an absolutely safe one. But I doubt if that limitation was strictly necessary, as the power of disallowance seems to me to be the appropriate check upon the possible disposition of the provincial authorities, in the constitution of their systems of judicature, to impose unnecessary or undue burdens upon the federal treasury.

To provide for a retiring allowance to Constable Prudhomme ..... $439 25

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend explain this item ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This man has been in the Dominion Police for a great many years, and he retired previous to the formation of the new Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this under the law ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. So I understand.

Penitentiaries—Commissions for investigating the affairs of the penitentiaries of Canada ..... $3,000

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to say a word or two before this item passes, with regard to the management of the penitentiaries of this country. Looking over the Audit report, I find that for Kingston penitentiary alone the expenditure is $120,000 a year, and in round numbers the revenue only $3,000. For all the penitentiaries in the Dominion the expenditure is about $440,000 a year, and the revenue is about $11,000. It is doubtful if there is to be found in any country any penal institution which yields so little revenue for such a large expenditure. I understand that the penitentiaries of the United States are, to a certain extent, self-supporting ; at any rate, they yield a large revenue. The people of this country feel that, if our penitentiaries were properly handled, they could be brought nearer to a self-supporting condition ; and, if this commission is for the purpose of investigating that matter, and any good comes of it, it will be about the best expenditure of money that could be made. It is a common thing to hear of prisoners brought up for trial requesting to be sentenced to the Kingston penitentiary, and not to the Central prison. Whether that is because the Kingston penitentiary is a soft place or not, I do not know ; but some people say that they are better off there than they are outside. I do not wish to appear harsh or hard, or to illustrate the old saying that "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless millions mourn." but I feel that something is wrong with our prison system, when men will commit larceny in order to get back to the penitentiary ; and there are many instances of this. This is a matter that should be thoroughly investigated, if this commission is appointed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. Solicitor General explain the immediate purpose of this vote ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Representations have been made with reference to the management of the different penitentiaries in the Dominion, especially the Kingston penitentiary. It has not yet been decided that there shall be any investigation, so far as the expenditure of this money is concerned ; but it is quite possible, in fact probable, that an investigation will be held with reference to two penitentiaries.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The inspector of penitentiaries, a very energetic man, and a man of first-class business ability, came into office only a year or two ago ; and, when I was at the head of the department, I gave him instructions to make very careful and thorough inquiry into the working and management of every penitentiary in Canada. It would naturally be his duty to do that in any event ; but I called his special attention to the necessity of going over every one of these institutions from the top to the bottom, giving him, so far as I could, a free hand in making suggestions. Now, I think the hon. gentleman ought to be in some other position than he apparently is, before asking for this amount. I am not at all against a full and thorough inquiry ; but, before asking for a vote for a commission, the hon. gentleman should be in a position to inform us what report, if any, the present inspector has made, so far as he has gone into the work. I think he has visited every penitentiary in Canada. I think he has been on both coasts, and in Manitoba, and certainly he has been very often at the Kingston penitentiary. I would like to know from the Solicitor General whether he has had an opportunity of discussing this subject with the inspector, whether the inspector has made any formal report upon it, and whether it is in view of any recommendation from that officer that a more formal commission is suggested.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not able to answer the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) on that point. I have never seen the report, if any report has been made by Mr. Stewart, who, I believe, is the gentleman to whom my hon. friend refers. But, so far as the department is concerned, it has been suggested to me that this item is necessary. The request made by the hon. gentleman is so reasonable, however, that I think I ought to allow this item to stand until I get the information.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think it would be a protection for the hon. gentleman himself, if this is not a very urgent vote, not to take it ; because the pressure would be very heavy, even in the best regulated family, to spend the money if it is at the hon. gentleman's disposal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman must not overlook the binder twine, and the fact that we have still 490 tons on hand and unsold.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not see what that has to do with the commission.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Some investigation has to be made in reference to that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would be very glad to see it investigated.

Item allowed to stand.

Department of Public Works—

To pay arrears of subscriptions to newspapers, reviews and other publications .....	$1,450
To provide for one third class clerk omitted in the Estimates.....	450

Mr. FOSTER. I think that ought to be explained.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). A certain number of newspapers had been taken in the department which has not been paid for for years and years; so, as we owed the money, I thought I would ask Parliament for it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It is unusual for the department to owe such large amounts on this account.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The facts of the case are these: When I took office I found that a certain number of papers had been received from year to year and had not been paid for. Wishing to pay our debts, I have applied for the money. If hon. gentlemen wish me to strike off the item, I will do it. The money is due. I can give the names of the papers, and I will be glad to give them even now.

Mr. FOSTER. An arrangement was made by Order in Council some five years ago by which the cost of newspapers in the departments was brought down. Undoubtedly too much was being expended by the departments, the sums running from $1,000 to $1,500 for newspapers in each department. After a thorough investigation an Order in Council was passed by which each department was limited to a maximum sum for this purpose—I think it was $500, and the departments were duly notified, and every officer in the departments knew that his subscriptions to newspapers had to be arranged accordingly. This account was sent over while I was Minister of Finance, and I refused to pass it. If the bill has been contracted, it has been contracted by officers without authority, and it ought to be paid by them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The officers of the department have informed me that the late Minister of Public Works agreed to receive these papers. Of course, if my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance tells me that the Government do not wish to pay for these papers, I am perfectly prepared to have the item struck out. No objection at all. I move that the item be struck out.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman can do that if he likes. I do not say that he ought to repudiate any debt. But when the officers of the department, with an Order in Council staring them in the face, subscribe to papers in an unauthorized way, then I say that while payment ought to be made it ought to be made by the officers of the department themselves.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We must not lay the blame on those who do not deserve it. The officers of my department, if interrogated, will tell you that the late Minister, in spite, perhaps, of an Order in Council or an agreement, received the papers for which that amount is due. We on this side of the House are not responsible for this state of affairs. Both of these papers are unfriendly to us. If hon. gentlemen opposite object to the payment, I am prepared to have that item struck out.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). We ought to have the names of the papers. It is claimed that $1,450 will pay for a great many newspapers and periodicals, and after the explanation of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), I think the House ought to know the names of the papers.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the item should be struck out. If the late Minister of Public Works, in the face of an Order in Council limiting the amount to be devoted to subscriptions to papers gave subscriptions in this way he should pay for them himself. Those who sent the papers had better look to him for payment.

Mr. SCRIVER. What I do not understand is why these accounts were not rendered year by year as they should have been.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I receive every day accounts for papers that have not been paid for years and years, although the papers have been received.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). In other cases, Ministers have had the experience of receiving day by day accounts for newspapers and periodicals, but when they come they are paid in the regular way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) says he got this bill and would not pay it.

Mr. SCRIVER. I think this is an honest debt and should be paid.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The names of the papers for which the accounts are due are as follows:—

Nova Scotia—

Annapolis "Spectator," $4.50; Antigonish "Casket," $4.50; Halifax "Critic," $4.50.

Mr. FOSTER. What years are these for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Up to the 1st of July, 1896. I will give the names after recess.

It being Six o'clock, the committee rose, and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again in Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). Before recess I had begun reading the names of several newspapers whose publishers claimed payment for sending their issues to the department.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt my hon. friend has a long list there, and it would take him considerable time to read it. If the hon. gentleman is assured that the newspapers have been bona fide sent to the department, I suppose the newspaper men ought to have their pay.

Mr. McMULLEN. I object to the adoption of this item. From the statements that we heard in the committee before six o'clock from hon. gentlemen opposite, I think in justice to the country we should strike this item out. The late Minister of Finance stated that by an Order in Council each department was instructed that they should not exceed the sum of $500 each for newspapers. In face of those instructions, if a Minister of any department chose to exceed that sum, he did it in open violation of that Order in Council, of which he was personally cognizant. Under these circumstances I think it would be setting a bad precedent if we are now to gather up the accumulated fragments of newspaper accounts for the last seven or eight years, and put them all into one item and pass it. I move that the item be struck out.

Mr. DAVIN. I think my hon. friend will not embarrass his Minister, who considers that this should be paid. I see from the few items the Minister read out that they consist of small sums of four, or five, or six dollars; and the papers like the "Casket" and others that supplied their issues to the Department of Public Works, could have known nothing of this arrangement, and they are clearly entitled to be paid. I think the Department of Public Works is responsible, and could be made to pay. The smallness of the sum, however, would make it inconvenient for each of these papers to sue the department, but as a fact there would be nothing to prevent one of the newspapers suing the department and recovering. If the motion of my hon. friend is adopted, all that would be done would be to deprive those people of what is justly their due, because they won't take the trouble to enforce their claims, they being so small. The proper thing to do, I think, is to lay down the rule that a thing like this should not occur again.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. The account should be paid, and charged to the Minister.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the late Government was so absolutely regardless of their duty that they allowed newspapers to come to their department in violation of an Order in Council, until a bill of $1,400 had been accumulated?

Mr. FOSTER. Now you are striking the old note.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, that is all right. I hope the hon. gentleman will discharge his duty to the country, now that he sits on that side of the House, as well as I did when I sat there, and after he has had as long an apprenticeship as I had, perhaps he will. Now, my hon. friend says that the late Government allowed these papers to come to the office, and if they did, they allowed them to come there in violation of an Order in Council of which they were personally cognizant. Had they done their duty, they would have required their officials to notify the publishers to send their papers no longer, but they neglected to perform that duty. Now, I object to setting a bad example of this kind. We should stop at this point and say that in no case, I care not what the papers are, should we pay for them, unless they have been ordered.

Mr. FOSTER. There are a number of religious papers.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no objection to religious papers amongst the rest, but we should not set the bad example of allowing these people to send their papers when they are not ordered, and then being paid for them.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not so much blame the heads of the department as I do the law that allows publishers to send their papers, either to a department or a private individual, and compel him to pay for them. It could hardly be expected that the head of any department would watch all the papers that come there, and keep in mind the very day the subscription runs out, and then send back the next paper afterwards as refused. If an individual does not do that, it becomes a contract, and he is responsible for payment of the paper afterwards. I think the law of contracts in regard to newspapers, is radically wrong, and the provincial government should amend it. I have always held, and I think most people will agree with me, that a publisher should not have the right to send these papers on from time to time, and throw the onus and the trouble upon the individual of keeping trace of the day that the subscription runs out, and then sending back the paper. I am told there are many instances where papers are sent back, and no attention is paid to it by publishers, and the paper continues to be sent on, and a bill is presented at the end of the year for payment. I have no doubt that was the case with many of these papers. The custom seems to have obtained for a long time, the publishers regard it as a just debt, and I do not think we should repudiate it. Take, for instance, members of Parliament. While absent from their homes, many papers come from different quarters, and those who take the mail out of the office, do not know whether the papers were subscribed for or not. It accidentally happens that two or three issues are taken out of the office, either of papers or periodicals he has not taken before, or of others after the subscription has expired, and therefore he becomes bound to pay the subscription for the year. I can readily understand that the head of a department has so much mail matter coming to the department, that it would be impossible for him to keep trace of the dates the subscription runs out.

Mr. McMULLEN. If any further arguments were needed to prove that it is the duty of this committee to strike out this item, it is the statement just presented by the hon. gentleman. He virtually says that newspaper men will persist in sending their periodicals, even after they are refused; therefore, this would be an excellent opportunity for giving them a lesson by refusing to pay this item. Let the publishers distinctly understand after this that in every case where their periodicals are refused by the department, and they continue to send them on, they send at their own risk. The Minister says, no doubt, some of these papers were returned, and yet the publishers persisted in sending them. I lay the whole blame on the late Ministers who allowed this thing to be continued from month to month and from year to year in their departments. They declined to discharge their duties by returning these periodicals, and thus save the country paying this $1,400. I persist in the demand that the item be struck out.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I take issue with the sweeping statement made by the hon. member (Mr. McMullen). I can understand how it would pay this country very well to have the newspapers sent to the Ministers of the Crown; because they can better understand the wants of the country through its press than in any other way. Here are petitions coming in to have certain things done in a particular district in a far-off province, and here coming to the Ministers, are the papers of both sides who have no interest except to represent the matter correctly. The Ministers cannot afford to pay for these papers themselves and as an educator of the wants of the various provinces, I think they should have them and the country should pay for them. There are certain papers that we might dispense with, but I will not name them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These papers have certainly been received in a bona fide way and it seems to me they should be paid for. For the future we will be responsible, and we will see that this matter is properly attended to.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). It is extraordinary that the member for York (Mr. Foster) should be the one to complain of the abuse of this system of subscribing to papers. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is disloyal to his late colleague who has been placed upon the bench and is not in a position to defend himself. He should be the last man to attempt to stop the payment of these small accounts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I see a manifest unfairness to my own province in this debate. At the beginning of the discussion a list of papers was placed before the House, and my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) began to read it. Now in the light of what has been said by hon. gentlemen on the other side, we are given to understand that this is a list of claims of a very illegitimate character which have been presented to us for payment. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) only got so far as to name two papers on the list, and these two, it so happens, are in the province of Nova Scotia. One of these was the Annapolis "Spectator." It is most unfair to the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) that that paper should be singled out for special reference. Another, was the Antigonish "Casket," and the "Casket" is a particular favourite with hon. gentlemen opposite. It is not only a good Conservative paper, but it claims to be a very religious paper.

Mr. FOSTER. You had better keep that on the list.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The suggestion from the other side of the House that this good religious paper would present a claim which is unlawful and illegitimate is one which I, as a Minister from Nova Scotia, am bound to resent. I do not see why Nova Scotia Conservative papers should be held up as scapegoats for all the others, and so I think we should have the whole list read. But, if one must be serious in this matter, I must say that the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) that this item should not pass, is a suggestion which I must oppose. In the first place I have been a party to putting this item in the Estimates, and that is one reason why I should support it. But there is another reason. In by-gone days—perhaps I should say in my better days, before I fell from grace—I was a newspaper man, and I do not wish to see the newspapers singled out as a special subject for attack by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not think they should strain at a gnat and swallow a saw mill.

Mr. FOSTER. Was yours a religious daily?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Any paper which I ever was connected with was conducted on sound religious principles. After all that has passed through this House with the assent of hon. gentlemen opposite, they need not make such wry faces at this little matter of a newspaper account. Even though it is beyond the $500 limit, yet if a Minister of the Crown, even improvidently, ordered these Conservative papers and received them. I think it would be a small matter for us to refuse to pay for them.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If it is a matter of right then the public money should be paid for these newspapers, but not otherwise. With all due deference to the noble profession from which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has descended, I firmly believe that not one of these claims should be paid unless it is right they should be paid as a matter of contract. If they insisted on sending their papers to the department without being ordered, then they should not be paid for them.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has failed to make out a case. We were told by gentlemen opposite that the late Government was very extravagant, but here is an account for $1,450 which they righteously refused to pass, and yet the present Government are anxious to pay out the money, when there is no legal obligation to pay it. These newspapers have evidently been sent without being ordered, for if it were otherwise, there is no department of the late Government which would not have paid for them. The present Government have no right to demand this money from the House unless they show that there is a legal obligation to pay it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like to understand if the late Government refused to pay this amount?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. They refused to pay this amount?

Mr. WALLACE. So the member for York (Mr. Foster) has stated to the House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Do you know that of your own knowledge?

Mr. WALLACE. It was stated in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. There may be some misunderstanding with reference to that. The matter came before the Treasury Board on a demand for contingencies to pay it, and it was decided by the Treasury Board that it should not be paid out of contingencies since the department had had its proper apportionment. In fact the contingencies would not allow the payment of it, with proper regard to the demands on that vote for the year. That simply is an advertisement to the department that it cannot get any money in that way, and must have recourse to Parliament for a vote.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have a certain number of papers that are coming to the department and I cannot stop them unless I first pay for them. If we do not make up our minds to pay for them, we cannot stop them, and they will be constantly coming in. All things considered, it seems to me it would be a great deal better policy to pay for them, and discontinue those that are not useful.

Legislation—Senate—Leather trunks ordered last session ..... $2,150

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have an explanation of that item from the Finance Minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know what my hon. friend will expect us to add. I cannot alter the character of the trunks, nor can I alter the fact that they were ordered last session.

Mr. McDUGALL. By whom were they ordered?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand they were ordered by the Senate Committee on Contingencies.

Mr. SPROULE. While this item is under consideration, I would like to ask, who has the authority to order trunks, because we have different versions as to where this authority lies. It seems to me the contract for the last batch of trunks we got was a very poor one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend will acknowledge that the present Government could not order these trunks last session. This is of a class of items belonging to Parliament and regarded in a certain way as outside the line of executive action. Both branches of Parliament claim the right to do some things voluntarily, of their own motion, and I think that this trunk business is one of the things in regard to which the Senate would hardly be willing to accept our judgment. It is the habit of the Committee on Contingencies of both Houses to suggest what should be done. In this way these trunks were ordered under the authority of the Joint Committee of both House on Printing, and I fancy that this has been the custom of Parliament for many years.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood some members of the committee to say that the committee had not the authority to order, and that the power rested somewhere else.

Mr. FOSTER. The rule that was adopted, and that, I think, still exists, with reference to this House, is this. The Printing Committee, acting in connection with the clerk of stationery of this House, and in connection with the Clerk and Speaker of the House, arrange for the stationery and such things for the use of members. Practically, the way in which it is done is this. The clerk of contingencies makes out an estimate of stationery and such things required for the members; that is presented to the Printing Committee; and the Printing Committee, through its chairman, or through a sub-committee, revise that, and, if there are any suggestions or additions to be made, they make them. It then goes back to the clerk of contingencies, and through him it goes to the Clerk of the House, who includes it in his estimates; and from him it is sent to the Minister of Finance, who revises it and places it in the Estimates. Then it comes down to this House, and is generally voted.

Mr. SPROULE. We are as far from having the information as ever. The question I asked was, who has the authority to order the trunks or to make the contract for them?

Mr. FOSTER. After the report of the committee passes, the chairman or the sub-committee of the Printing Committee makes the contract. I think it has been generally left in the hands of the two chairmen.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think this difficulty has arisen from a very strained interpretation of the rules of Parliament. Those rules provide for a Joint Committee of both Houses on Printing. Some years ago, it appears, this joint committee was virtually divided into two committees. The Senate chose to assume the right to have the Senate portion of the committee act by themselves; so that the Senate chairman is elected by the Senate portion, and the Commons chairman by the Commons portion. The Senate portion of this committee attend to all matters connected with their House, independently of the other members of the committee. Now, where the rules of Parliament provide for the joint action of both Houses, I cannot see that it is right to divide this committee into two committees. That is the way matters stood when the last trunks were ordered, and that is the way they stand now. In my opinion, the Committee on Printing should act jointly, and not as two committees. If it did, these difficulties would not arise, and there would be some one in this House to answer for the action of that committee. The Senate take to themselves the right to act absolutely independent of this Chamber. They do as they please, and there is no person here responsible to Parliament for what they do or what they do not do. It is because of this strained interpretation of the rules of Parliament, that this difficulty has arisen.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). This vote is the result of the joint action of both Houses. In 1891 the Joint Committee on Printing reported in favour of doing away with the old system of supplying a trunk at the beginning of each session to each member and senator; and instead of supplying a trunk each session, decided to provide one large leather trunk at the beginning of each Parliament. That was approved of by both Houses, and the officer who ordered the trunks did so on this joint report approved by both Houses.

Mr. SCRIVER. It was very unfortunate that the selection of these trunks was not left to the Senate committee, considering the kind of trunks we receive and the kind they receive.

Mr. SPROULE. That was just my object in trying to find out where the authority lay, because the leather trunks we got were very poor ones. I had a competent judge examine one of these trunks, which cost us $25 apiece, and he said they were worth only $12.50 or $13 apiece, and were not by any means as valuable as the trunks which the Senate got for the same money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am told that the trunks we are asked to pay for now are very good ones.

Mr. SPROULE. There is another matter in this connection. I have always regarded the class of stationery we get as very unsuitable for the wants of business men. There is a lot of knickknacks in it which are valueless. We get a lot of small note paper and envelopes, some beautifully printed, that might be useful for young ladies, but certainly not for men who have reached our time of life.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Speak for yourself

Mr. SPROULE. I think we might very well have the selection revised and get a class of stationery that would be useful.

Mr. McMULLEN. I must say that these trunks which were supplied last Parliament were a gross fraud. The trunk I got was made of solid pasteboard, each side of which was pasted over with a piece of sheepskin, and was not fit for anything. If the same kind is supplied this year, I prefer not to have any. I hope that whoever is in charge will see that something worth the money is supplied.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am glad to hear the remarks made with reference to stationery. Of course the expense was all incurred by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). In my days there were no pocket books, no purses and no card cases. The members got some paper, and perhaps there might be some excuse for giving paper on which to write to our constituents, but when this thing costs the country $8,000 to $10,000 a year, I am opposed to it. Hon. members opposite, who take up this thing now, are in Opposition and make a virtue of necessity, but in their day they could have stopped it. If all this tinted paper and the rest was procured by the late Government, it is time it should be stopped. I am determinedly opposed to our spending the people's money in buying all this trash. When the late Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) allowed the people's money to be spent from year to year in this way, it is time for the present Government to take another step and repudiate such practice.

St. Lawrence Valley Exhibition of Three Rivers ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is adopting an entirely new policy. For a number of years past the Government adopted the policy of not granting money to aid exhibitions at the different local points. Applications were sent in from time to time from the exhibition associations of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and I think almost all the other provinces, for aid to hold these fairs, and the rule was established that aid should be given by this Government only to such exhibitions as were of an international or Dominion character. Under the system which prevailed before that rule was adopted of giving grants to local exhibitions, there was a good deal of abuse, and the other policy was adopted; and for a number of years we have had no votes of that kind. Is it the policy of this Government to undertake to bonus all those small divisional or local exhibitions? If so, my hon. friend will find a great many demands made upon him.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Government should explain why they have selected what is evidently a local fair in order to give it this large grant of $5,000. I presume there are at least a hundred fall exhibitions in this country, which, so far as we know, have an equal claim for $5,000 as the Three Rivers Exhibition. As the late Finance Minister has pointed out, it was the custom some years ago to give a grant of $10,000 to an exhibition which was made the Dominion Exhibition for that year. It would make a Dominion exhibition that year. The money was expended largely on lines laid down by the Government, and the expenditure gave an impetus to the portion of the Dominion in which the exposition was held. But this is not such a case. It appears to me that if you commence giving to an ordinary exhibition without making it a Dominion exhibition then, unless the matter can be explained, it seems to me you run too great a risk of bringing down upon the Government claims from every agricultural society in Canada. We have an exhibition in Woodbridge which I venture to say off-hand, is a more famous exhibition than this. We are not asking for $5,000; we are not asking for anything. We have a flourishing exhibition, everything paid for and money in the bank, and we do not require Dominion Government aid at all.

Mr. DAVIN. In this connection I wish to point out that there is nothing in these Estimates to pay the North-west exhibition debts. In the Supplementary Estimates brought in last year there was an item of $12,000 to pay the outstanding accounts of the North-west exhibition, which was a Dominion exhibition. The amount due was $14,000, but I understand that $12,000 was put in the Estimates by the late Government with this view—that they found that amount due in any case and they would take time to investigate the question whether the remaining $2,000 should be paid. The men to whom this money is due belong to both political parties and they have already been a couple of years out of their money. This was really a Dominion matter and the honour and credit of the country was pledged to them. I do hope that my hon. friend will consider these points and will see to it that these debts are paid.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I would not like to admit as fully as the hon. gentleman does the obligation. It is a fair matter of inquiry, and the Government are now making it a matter of inquiry with a view to do justice in the case. With regard to the other question, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) will explain.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I find that in this case as in many others, I feel bound to assume the obligations incurred by the late Government. In this case, Sir, you may scarcely believe me, after hearing what was said by gentlemen on the other side, there is an Order in Council, to which my hon. friend has been a party, accepting a tender for the exhibition at Three Rivers.

Mr. FOSTER. How?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A tender for the amount of $5,000. I will have the papers here in a few moments.

Mr. FOSTER. What does my hon. friend mean by a tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For a building.

Mr. FOSTER. For an exhibition building? A Dominion building?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it done by the Experimental Farm in connection with their work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What I say is that I found an Order in Council adopted by the late Administration pledging themselves to erect a building at Three Rivers. I simply carried out the pledge that had been given.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better see that paper. The hon. gentleman had better let the item stand meantime.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Very well.

General Statistics ..... $1,753

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he has had occasion to look into a claim on behalf of an officer who held the office of Registrar of Statistics of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Halifax. One of the members for Halifax who had to leave, asked me to call the Minister's attention to the subject. As I remember, there were two officers, one having to do with Protestant cases and the other with Catholic cases. These offices were abolished and a gratuity was voted by Parliament to one of the officers, the case of the other being overlooked. I believe the giving of a gratuity to the other was favourably considered by the department, and the answer sent to the gentleman that the amount would have to be included in the Estimates as in the other case. But I see no mention of it here. In the event of further Supplementary Estimates being brought down, I hope the hon. gentleman will include this amount.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The hon. member for Halifax to whom the hon. gentleman refers sent me some papers in connection with this matter, but, in the press of other matters I have not been able to look into them. I understand that the hon. member for Halifax had an interview with my deputy, explaining the matter to him; but my deputy, perhaps through oversight, perhaps because he decided against the case in his own mind did not bring the matter to my attention before these Estimates were prepared. I will look into the matter, and if necessary, carry out the understanding formerly arrived at.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Before I left Halifax, Mr. Stoker, who makes this claim, called upon me. I must say I was impressed with the idea that his claim was a fair one, but I have had no opportunity of bringing the matter to the attention of the Minister. Had I been able to do so, perhaps the item would have appeared in these Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this addition to general statistics?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the main Estimates there is an item of $2,500 under civil government for statistics. On page 34 of the main Estimates, item 86, general statistics, you will find $2,500 for the purpose of carrying on the statistical bureau, which, as my hon. friend knows, is in the Department of Agriculture. It is for paying the clerks and those engaged in the work of collecting statistics. I find in my department the following staff engaged in that work—I can give the hon. gentleman the names and the details, if he desires, but the amount comes to $4,258 for salaries alone for the staff engaged in that department on this work, and engaged for some years on it, as I understand. I found this staff there, and I have not had an opportunity yet to see whether the staff can be decreased. The amount being $4, Str CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

258, and the amount in the main Estimates being only $2,500, as was the provision of the year before, and the year before that, I believe, it leaves a deficit of $1,758, the amount of this item. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I trust when I have had time to take charge of the department in earnest, and to look into the details, I will be able to reduce that staff, so that I may not have to expend the whole of this amount. But in the meantime, the salaries of the staff actually engaged there amount to this sum; and until I can inquire into it and see where any reduction can be made, I do not feel justified in asking for a lesser amount.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be very reasonable. I remember going over this with the late Minister of Agriculture, and in canvassing the whole matter with him, and the conclusion we came to was embodied in the vote for $2,500. He had arranged his plans by which the services were to be kept within that vote. Of course, my hon. friend is not able at present to make his reorganization; he simply provides for what he may have to use, but may not take the whole of it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is the position.

Mr. SCRIVER. I would like to know how the deficiency in past years has been provided for. According to the Minister this staff has been in existence for some time, and this deficiency must have existed, as only $2,500 was appropriated. How was the deficiency met in past years?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand from the officers of my department that it has been met by similar votes in the Supplementary Estimates.

Manitoba Census ..... $1,700

Mr. FOSTER. Does that complete?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Yes. I may say that the original vote for the Manitoba census was $15,000, of which $5,000 was given in the Supplementary Estimates for 1895-96 in case the census should cost more. The whole cost, however, including this $1,700, will be considerably under the original $15,000.

Statistical Year-Book ..... $3,589 16

Mr. McMULLEN. I think some explanation should be given by hon. gentlemen opposite why this matter was allowed to stand over—balance due on 1894, and balance due on 1895.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The explanation furnished me by the chief of my department is that the accounts for the Year-Book of 1894 were not sent in until after the Supplementary Estimates of 1895 had been prepared. I may say that this account was sent in by the Printing Bureau to our department. The book is printed in the Printing Bureau, and the procedure is that the bureau should send the estimate of the expected cost, and that estimate is taken as the basis of the estimate prepared in the Department of Agriculture. For the last two, and now three, years the Year-Book has been increasing in bulk, and consequently the Printing Bureau has found it much more expensive to print than it expected when the estimate was made. The result is that for the last two years there has been this deficit. The reason this deficit of 1894 was not paid for before was that the completed accounts were not sent in from the Printing Bureau until after the Supplementary Estimates were prepared.

Mr. WALLACE. How many copies of the book are printed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For the Year-Book of 1894 there were 750 copies of the French edition and 2,400 copies of the English edition. The cost of the French edition was $2,763.47 ; of the English edition, $3,091.12.

Mr. WALLACE. Over $3.50 per copy for the French edition.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That includes the translation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I am afraid the hon. gentleman did not look after things as well when he was in the Government as he ought to have done.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For 1895 there were 2,400 copies of the English edition, costing $3,821.93 ; and of the French edition 750 copies, estimated at $1,800. The account has not been actually made up, but the Printing Bureau has sent in an account to my department saying it would come to about $1,800.

Mr. WALLACE. $2,763 for 750 copies of the French edition is an exorbitant figure. Now, if there is a necessity for this book, and apparently there is, there should be a much larger edition printed, it would cost very little more money. I know that requests have been made from many parties to be furnished with additional copies of this Statistical Year-Book, and they were unable to get it, the edition had run out. Several thousand more copies could be printed at very little additional expense.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am surprised the hon. gentleman did not think of that when he was in power.

Mr. WALLACE. Our attention had never been called to it before.

Mr. SCRIVER. It ought to have been. That augurs great carelessness.

Mr. MONK. There is an item of nearly $2,000 here for the translation of statistics into French. I do not deny that that may be necessary, but it seems to me that in future some scheme might be devised by which that expense should be avoided. The statistics are perfectly well understood in English, just as well as in French by the members in the province of Quebec, and it seems to me that something might be done—say if it were placed in the hands of a committee of French members to prevent this expenditure. Most of the expressions used in our province with reference to the statistics are English expressions, and this would consequently appear to be an absolute waste of money.

Cattle quarantine ..... $12,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture, what are the quarantine regulations between Canada and the United States at the present moment ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Cattle going into the United States from Canada are subject to a ninety days detention at the frontier, and they are also subject to tuberculin tests before entering into the United States. Coming into Canada from the United States cattle are also subject to ninety days quarantine before they can be released on this side.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand that United States cattle are exported from the port of St. John without a quarantine of ninety days. I wish to know whether the farmers of Canada have the right to export cattle via Boston on the same terms, because the rates from that port are very much less than on the Canadian steamers.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no provision for the export of American cattle from any Canadian port. There is a provision for the export of United States cattle in transit from one part of the United States, through Canada, to another part of the United States, as has been the case for many years. Canadian cattle exported from Europe are allowed to pass through Portland, subject to certain conditions and regulations of the United States quarantine service. Just lately the port of Boston was also laid open in the same way for Canadian cattle passing in transit to Europe. The conditions under the arrangement made were, that the Canadian Pacific Railway might carry such cattle from the western parts of Canada, through the province of Quebec, to Boston. The United States authorities require certain inspection and certificates, before these cattle were allowed to enter the United States. The Canadian Pacific Railway was obliged by these conditions to provide cattle yards at Richford, the first station on their line going to Boston after entering the United States. After three or four shipments the United States authorities stopped any further shipment, until the Canadian Pacific Railway had provided the necessary facilities for taking the cattle out of the cars, and for inspecting, and watering them at Richford. At the present moment our cattle are not allowed to pass through Boston in transit for Europe, and only Portland is open to us for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIN. I have information—I do not know whether it has come to the knowledge of the hon. Minister or not—that cattle are being crowded across from Montana into Assiniboia west, from old Fort Walsh to Point Bute south of Parkbeg. The rancher who writes to me says that this will end in very serious trouble. The Minister is probably aware that trouble did occur a few years ago south of Maple Creek in consequence of sheep being crowded across without any examination.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have no doubt the information of the hon. member (Mr. Davin) is correct, although I have not myself received any information with regard to that particular case. I know that along the whole frontier from Manitoba westward, there are constant cases of American cattle coming across the border. The cattle pasturing on the two sides of the line naturally drift from one side to the other, and even supposing the ranchers are willing to do so, it is a most difficult thing to prevent the cattle crossing the boundary. That has been the case for years and it is the case to-day. I really must acknowledge that I am a little at a loss to know how to guard that long frontier, so that this may be absolutely prevented. I may tell the hon. member (Mr. Davin), that recently, Dr. McEachren, who is now chief veterinary inspector for the Dominion of Canada, has taken a trip through the western country and he has presented a report dealing with that very question and others of a kindred nature. That report suggests certain improvements in our quarantine system, which may meet the difficulty to as great an extent as possible. I trust that before long—and I do not wish in any way to cast any reflection on what has been done before—I will be able to make a little more effective the protection of our north-western herds from any contagion from American cattle.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Did I understand the Minister to say that at the present moment Canadian cattle were not allowed to be shipped from Boston? A few days ago, I had a letter from one of the largest cattle shippers in Toronto stating that he was shipping cattle from Boston at 27s. 6d., as compared with the Montreal rate of 47s. 6d. He said that the trade was going via Boston instead of via Montreal. That gentleman may have been mistaken, but of course the Minister may have received more recent information.

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Such an arrangement had been made by the United States authorities, but in consequence of no proper cattle yards for the inspection of stock at Richford, having been arranged for by the Canadian Pacific Railway, they have suspended the operation until such yards can be provided. That has occurred only within the last few days.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister of Agriculture said that cattle could be shipped via Portland on certain conditions. What are these conditions?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The conditions are in short: that the cattle shall be inspected on reaching the American frontier, and it is also demanded that they shall receive a certificate from Dr. McEachren. That certificate is not given by Dr. McEachren as our inspector or official, but it is given by him in his private professional capacity at the request of the American authorities. The arrangement is one that had been carried on for some time before I came to the department and one which I only knew of the other day in consequence of investigations I was making into the subject.

Mr. McMULLEN. The certificates can be easily obtained, I suppose.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. It is Dr. McEachren's duty to give these certificates, in his arrangement with the United States authorities.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. Minister made any representations to the Canadian Pacific Railway to provide the necessary buildings and equipment for carrying on this trade through the port of Boston? If the difference in the freight rates is as great as the hon. member for Hamilton says it is, it is very important to the shippers of the country, as it affords competition between Portland, Boston and Montreal.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are very much interested in that trade being carried on, and I understood the chief veterinary inspector to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were hurrying up the arrangements as quickly as possible.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we must have some explanation why this large supplementary vote is required. I notice that the economy which was on the face of the main Estimates, $70,000 being asked, as against $95,000 for the preceding year, has faded away in this estimate; and the account now stands: $95,629 for 1895-96, against $107,100 asked for 1896-97.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will give the information very shortly. In the first place, last winter Dr. McEachren was appointed by the late Minister chief veterinary inspector for the whole Dominion. The hon. gentleman may not be aware, but many members of the House, no doubt, are aware, that for many years, almost since quarantine regulations were introduced into this country. Dr. McEachren has been the veterinary inspector for the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces. Last winter, the late Minister arranged to increase his duties and his salary: and by Order in Council dated, I think, the 9th of May last, Dr. McEachren was definitely made chief veterinary inspector for the Dominion, with an increase of salary of $1,000 a year. The result is that to-day we have to provide for that increase of salary. The late Minister also agreed to provide Dr. McEachren with a type-writer, involving an expenditure of $600, making a total of $1,600. In the main Estimates we had an item for the Pictou cattle disease, and in these estimates we put down $1,000 to pay for cattle slaughtered under the arrangements with reference to that disease. The hon. gentleman may not be aware that in Nova Scotia there is a cattle disease of a rather mysterious nature, which has been under the control of the veterinary inspector for many years. It was thought that by a little more vigorous policy this disease might be exterminated, and orders were issued to try and exterminate it by the slaughter of more animals than usual.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the disease?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nobody knows what it is. It has so far baffled the veterinary science applied to it; but it is of a nature that incapacitates the cattle for proper human use. While not completely exterminated, the disease is kept under control and is prevented from spreading. Then, there was omitted from the main Estimates $4,100, which is the quarantine share of the pay of the Dominion mounted police for their services in the North-west Territories, in looking after that frontier which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has just spoken of, and the diseases of cattle in those territories. Then, there is a new quarantine ground at Victoria, B.C., for which there is a rental due of $350 a year, under a contract which was entered into by the late Minister; and the officers of my department inform me that possession of the ground was taken before I became Minister. During this season there has already been a very large amount of hog cholera in the province of Ontario, and, under the arrangements of the quarantine service, payments have been made for slaughtered animals affected with this disease.

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion do you pay?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Speaking from memory, I think it is one-third of the value of the animal when it is really affected with the disease, and two-thirds when an animal is slaughtered on suspicion.

Mr. FOSTER. They are perfectly useless when slaughtered. Is there any sale for them?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. They are not allowed to be sold for food. I may say, as showing the necessity for this $1,500 which I am asking for that purpose, that I shall probably have to ask for yet more, because up to this day bills on this account, to the extent of $3,400, have been sent into the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the disease extensive?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It seems to be very intermittent. Sometimes it seems to be entirely stamped out, and then we have new outbreaks. This season, in the province of Ontario, there have been considerable outbreaks, and a considerable number have been slaughtered. The veterinary officers are doing their best to try and prevent the contagion from spreading. We shall probably have to isolate certain districts for that purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. Have all these cases been confined to the counties of Essex and Kent?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, not all. There have been some in the neighbourhood of Toronto, and some have been traced to the market of Toronto.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that those shipped to Toronto were from the west, purchased by a party in West Toronto.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think that is correct, though I speak subject to correction. Then, there is an addition of $1,000, which was necessitated by the inspection of horses for export to England. Some of our horses, I believe, arrived in England were suspected of having glanders, and one or two, I think, were shown to have had that disease. We, therefore, agreed to inspect all shipments of horses to England and see that none of them were affected with this dread disease.

Mr. SPROULE. That inspection will be made at the port of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At the ports of Montreal and at St. John, N.B. There is besides $530, being the amount of accounts received from those veterinarians who were appointed by the last Minister, in the month of June, and whose appointments I cancelled. They sent in accounts to this amount for expenses, and I was very glad to be able summarily to cancel their appointments. Then there is $1,889 for travelling expenses and contingencies. In consequence of Dr. McEachren being employed as veterinary inspector for the whole Dominion, he has taken an extensive tour in the west, and will have probably again to pass through Ontario, in order to investigate and make such reorganization of this branch of the department as may be necessary. This increases very much contingencies and travelling expenses, and I thought it wise to put in a larger sum.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. gentleman decided on any plan by which veterinary inspectors over the country shall be appointed for carrying on the Quarantine Department? The plan devised by the late Minister of Agriculture was to avoid the heavy expense of one veterinary surgeon travelling all over the country. The intention was to appoint different surgeons in different localities, who would be available, at any time, by communication from the central office.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have been giving some consideration to this subject, but have not yet been able to go thoroughly into the matter and decide what is best to be done.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the Order in Council increasing the salary of Dr. McEachren provide that his whole time is to be devoted to the duties of his position? We know that for years he has acted as veterinary surgeon for this Dominion and at the same time has been manager of the Waldron Ranch Company in the North-west.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that the present arrangement is an enlargement of the old one. Up to the 1st March last, he was paid $1,500 a year, to look after the quarantines in the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces, and there was no stipulation as to how much time or labour he should give to this work. The memorandum or recommendation of the Minister to Council—because it was not passed by Council, although it was a definite arrangement between the Minister and Dr. McEachren, and, I think, was binding in consequence of Dr. McEachren doing the work—provides an extension of his work to the whole Dominion, with an increase of $1,000 in his salary. There is no stipulation as to how much time Mr. McEachren shall give to the work, but simply that he shall have charge of it.

Mr. FOSTER. The understanding was that he should give his whole time to it. The great objection to the services of Dr. McEachren before was that he devoted only partial time to this work and conducted besides other work of his own, amongst which was a ranch in the North-west. The Government felt that his services were very valuable and ought to be utilized by the Dominion, and that the wants of the country in that direction at present, were such, take our whole country through, that the services of such a man should be utilized for the whole of his time. So they came to the conclusion to give him what was thought a sufficient salary for his whole time. There was a memorandum to Council recommending that he should get $2,500 per year, but there was no vote for that. What was passed by the Treasury Board and the Council was that he should receive the appointment and that his salary to the 1st July, 1896, should be at that figure and that thereafter the agreement was he should have $1,000 more, although we could not pass it as an Order in Council as there was no vote for it. But that was perfectly understood. The explanations of the hon. Minister are all satisfactory with reference to the increases. In the case of a man like Dr. McEachren, it has been the policy, in framing the Estimates of late, to take such men who are appointed permanently by Order in Council, and estimate for them, under their own names, as having a stated salary. The former practice was to pay them out of the general vote, and really the Council had the power, at any time, to make the salary whatever it pleased out of that general vote, and Parliament did not know what these gentlemen were getting. I think it would be well to follow the practice in the case of Professor Prince and others, and ask for a special vote.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I quite agree that in such cases it is much better to do this. I would just like to refer to the matter of the increase to Dr. McEachren. I understand what the hon. member has said, but I must say that Dr. McEachren understood the arrangement was that his salary should commence the 1st of March. The memorandum from the Minister practically authorizes him to expect his salary to commence from that date.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not like to say as to that, but the hon. Minister will know more than that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The reason I say so is this, that at that date the evidence is absolutely conclusive that the Minister did promise Dr. McEachren this increase, and he went to work, in fact, before the 1st of March, and from the 1st of March up to the 1st of July was doing this work for which this extra salary was given.

Mr. FOSTER. Then he certainly deserves the pay, but it was impossible for the Order in Council to give him a rate of salary that had not been voted.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it is very desirable that, whatever connection Dr. McEachren may have had in the past with the Waldron Ranch Company, that connection should absolutely cease. I have no objections to giving any veterinary surgeon a good round salary for his services, but in the interests of the Dominion it is absolutely necessary that he should be completely cut loose from any associations in the North-west which might be detrimental to the interests of stock-raisers in this country or the purity of the herds. Otherwise he might be tempted to admit cattle from the United States into the North-west, without inspection, for the benefit of the Waldron Ranch Company. Cattle have before been admitted from the United States without inspection, and I think it is desirable that Dr. McEachren should be in such a position that he will not have any interest in any particular ranch company, and will thus be more likely to deal equitably with all. That is unfair to the rest, and I claim that Dr. McEachren should be required to cut loose from any connection with any ranching company, so that he may deal with all ranching companies on equal terms, which he cannot expect to do so long as he has an interest in one.

Mr. SPROULE. Were we correct in understanding that Dr. McEachren was expected to give his whole time to this work for $2,500 a year? Also, I would like to know whether this item covers payment to Dr. Smith of Toronto, Dr. Cowan of Galt and other veterinaries employed in this work?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Those items are included. The agreement between the Minister of Agriculture and Dr. McEachren makes no mention of Dr. McEachren giving his whole time to the work, and Dr. McEachren does not so understand it. When I come to reorganize this department, I will remember what the hon. gentleman has said.

Mr. SPROULE. That is why I spoke. I understood that Dr. McEachren lectured in one of the schools in Montreal and had other important work besides. This amount would be no compensation for him if his whole time was to be given to the work. He is a man of high standing in his profession and can earn more than this. I understand that if he gave his whole time, he would require a much larger salary, but that he might continue his work, and also do all that the department required of such an officer.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it would be a pity to have such a valuable citizen as Dr. McEachren wasting his time in the service of this Government for $2,500 a year. He is a most versatile gentleman. While managing the Waldron ranch in the North-west and also directing the quarantine business in the east, he has made himself busy in interfering with settlers. If he is to be employed by this Government, he should be kept strictly under the control of this Government. He should not have the authority of this Government for showing partiality as between the different ranchmen or between the ranchmen and the settlers, which he has done in the past.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The ex-Minister of Finance is not quite correct in saying that there is an increase in this vote over that of last year. Last year the amount in the main Estimates was $22,000 and in the supplementaries, $8,500. In the supplementaries now under discussion, the hon. gentleman will find that $6,500 is required to pay a deficit on last year's accounts. So the whole standing of last year's vote was $37,143.15, while this year's vote, with the supplementaries, amounts to $34,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To avoid possible misunderstanding, which may have serious consequences, I wish to add a word on the subject of the Pictou cattle disease. The efforts of the late Government and the present Government to investigate, and, if possible, to exterminate it, are commendable; still there is danger that we may magnify the danger of the disease and thus do harm. I believe it is established that the disease is of local character and it has never been regarded as of so serious a nature as to threaten the health of the cattle of the province generally. I remember that a few years ago we suddenly found our cattle excluded from the United States owing to an order issued from Washington. We found that an official had seen some reference to this Pictou cattle disease in the press, and, without knowing its nature, took it for granted that it must be dangerous, and therefore the order was issued. The provincial government had to enter into communication with the Washington authorities, and I am glad to say, that after a short correspondence, the difficulty was removed. I desire to guard against the danger that may be involved in a reference to the Pictou cattle disease without some explanation. It is important that it should be exterminated, but I would not like anybody to think that it is so serious in its nature as to affect the health of the cattle of the provinces generally.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a slight correction I wish to make in the vote of $6,500 in the line of what was said about Dr. McEachren. This item includes $333.33, due to Dr. McEachren for his services, 1st March, 1896, to 1st July, 1896. If some words are not put in with regard to that, Dr. McEachren will not be able to get his salary for these months. Therefore I propose to add:

Including $333.33 for Dr. McEachren, chief veterinary surgeon for the Dominion, being for increased services commencing March, 1896, arranged for by the late Minister of Agriculture.

Tracadie Lazaretto—Omitted in main Estimates ..... $600

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the leprosy island in British Columbia. There are there some six or seven Chinese lepers who are paid for by the different municipalities. We have applied to have these lepers taken over by the Dominion Government, and I cannot see why this cannot be done as it has been done in the case of the lepers in New Brunswick. Of course I know that the arrangement relating to New Brunswick was made at confederation, and no arrangement was made with British Columbia at the time she entered. I notice also that a case of leprosy has been found in Montreal. That may make many gentlemen in this House take more interest in British Columbia and in the Chinese question.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say the matter referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) has not been called to my attention. I would like to explain one point with regard to this item of $18,000 for general quarantine and public health. I may say that of this, $9,703.50 is a deficiency in last year's expenses in connection with this department. The actual vote for this work last year was $40,000, as the main estimate was this year; but the actual expenditure under the department, up to the 1st July, 1896, was $49,703.50, requiring me to put in now the difference of $9,703.50, so as to overcome that deficiency in last year's work. Another item is the hiring of a disinfecting tug for the Grosse Isle quarantine to the end of navigation this year, $4,790, including the disinfecting upon it. This was a contract entered into by the late Minister last spring, and which was not paid for and not provided for in the main Estimates which that hon. gentleman prepared for his department last session. This contract was entered into, and is being performed, by the people to whom it was given, and no provision was made for the payment. There is also $3,000 for a disinfecting tug for St. John, N.B., quarantine for next winter. I may say that this work, which is not yet actually under contract, was prepared for and promised by the late Minister. This accounts for the large item altogether of $18,000, which I have here as an addition to the ordinary general quarantine vote.

St. Lawrence Valley Exhibition at Three Rivers ..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am now ready to give the explanation asked for by the late Minister of Finance. An Order in Council was passed on the 4th July last, accepting the tender of F. E. Verret at $1,130 for constructing buildings at Three Rivers for housing the exhibits of the Central Experimental Farm. When I took office, I found that Order in Council, and on the 25th July I confirmed it with this much more, and the contract, which had been awarded to Mr. W. Verret, was transferred to Mr. Duressne. I only carried out the agreement made by my predecessor.

Mr. FOSTER. If it were put in that form, I should not have made the remarks I did. I have a recollection of that. It was an arrangement made by the experimental farm authorities, that they should have, in a central part of Quebec, at this exhibition ground, permanent buildings, where they could exhibit their farm products. That is not granted to the exhibition. It is an erection by the experimental farm people, or by the Department of Agriculture, of permanent buildings there for the exhibition, and it is owned by themselves.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The papers will show that it was.

Mr. FOSTER. It must not be carried in that form, because that would be provocative of claims for aid by all exhibitions. I would suggest to the Minister that the item should read something like this: "Permanent buildings for experimental farm exhibit at St. Lawrence Exhibition Grounds, Three Rivers."

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am quite willing to accept that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture if he would not put up buildings at the city of Chatham. I think it would be in the interest of the people of the western part of Ontario, if the Government would send some of the experimental farm exhibits up there.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the explanation given makes this vote still more objectionable. It says: "For housing the exhibits of the Central Experimental Farm." Every place you go, you see exhibits of the Central Experimental Farm and of the branch farms, and I think it is a desirable thing. These exhibits should be displayed at all the fairs throughout the country. Why, then, should there be at this place a special grant to put a special building costing $5,000? I have no information, but I presume that there was not $5,000 worth of buildings altogether on the fair grounds at Three Rivers. This vote is an objectionable one. The Minister stated the Order in Council was passed on the 6th July. I do not know whether there was any particular Government in existence then. One Government was going out, and another was coming in, and there was no money available.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On the 13th; we were not there on the 6th.

Mr. WALLACE. The 12th was Sunday, and the new Government came in on the 13th.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the date of the Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The 6th July. You passed it all right.

Mr. WALLACE. This Order in Council was passed at a time when the Government was not supposed to perform anything but the most pressing duties before they resigned. The Minister of Public Works says he is trying to give it effect, because it was passed by the late Government. I think he should have told this House that he was proposing a vote for $5,000 because the case had merits, because this Government must take the responsibility of every vote they ask us to pass. The fact that the late Government passed this Order in Council immediately before they went out, is not sufficient reason for me to consent to this vote. I hope the Government will be able to give us a sufficient reason, which has not yet been given, why this $5,000 should be voted for the purpose of housing the exhibits of the Central Experimental Farm at one and one only of the hundred exhibitions held in this country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I deeply regret that my hon. friend who has just taken his seat knows very much less about the province of Quebec than I should like him to know, and that he takes probably less interest in looking into what is done in the province of Quebec than he should do, from the position he occupies as a prominent public man in this country. I believe that the representatives of the people who meet here as Canadians, should set aside all questions of provincialism, and discuss matters from the standpoint of the general interests of the country. I was somewhat surprised to hear that my hon. friend the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) had taken exception to an Order in Council passed by the Government of which he happened to be at that time a member. Viewing the question from the standpoint of Canadian interests I can tell the hon. gentleman that the $5,000 for the purpose of exhibiting the products of the Experimental Farm at Three Rivers was money well spent. It was an object lesson to the farmers of a very large portion of the province of Quebec who attended that exhibition at Three Rivers, and the people of Three Rivers and the surrounding districts, themselves expended $40,000 of their own money to produce one of the most perfect exhibitions that has been witnessed for a great number of years in the province of Quebec. If you take the amount of money expended in the maritime provinces, in Ontario, and in the other provinces, and all of which I very willingly conceded, you will see that the $5,000 expended upon the Experimental Farm exhibit at Three Rivers was a very small contribution indeed for that section of the country. I am glad that the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has brought down this amount, which is not his contribution so much as it is the contribution of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) who formed part of the Government which granted it. I was somewhat surprised to find that he should to-day take objection to that contribution.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) would be more surprised if he found that I took no objection to it.

Mr. SCRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the somewhat laboured explanation, or attempt at explanation for this grant, made by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron). I have been a little surprised to see that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has been far from displaying his usual logic with regard to this matter. I fully agree with him that such grants as this to local exhibitions by the Dominion Government are very objectionable, and for my part I hope they will not be continued, because I do not see where the line can be drawn if the Dominion Government undertakes enterprises of this kind. I fail to see any justification whatever for this grant in the laboured declaration of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron). I suppose he attempts to justify it because he represents the town of Three Rivers, but I do not know why the town of Three Rivers should receive $5,000 for a local exhibition like this, any more than other towns in the province of Quebec—the town of St. John, for instance, where they have a very good exhibition open to a large section of the country. In fact, as the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) truly said the whole principle is a false one, and it should not be followed up. I trust we shall never be called upon to vote an item of this kind again.

Mr. WALLACE. What reason is there for voting it now?

Mr. SCRIVER. Because you and your party have made it incumbent upon us to do so.

Mr. WALLACE. My party and I repudiate it.

Mr. SCRIVER. Remembering what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) did not long ago in North Grey, I think we can safely say "his party."

Mr. WALLACE. I hope the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) will advise the Government to withdraw this item, because there has been no explanation given to satisfy the country why this item should be voted. The experimental exhibits have to be housed at every exhibition as well as at Three Rivers, but the people of the different localities do it themselves without asking for $5,000 from this Government. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) lectured us about setting aside all questions of provincialism. He might perhaps take that advice to himself just as much as anybody I know of. If he refers to me, I can tell him that there is no member of this House who is more prepared to view the claims of every province of the Dominion fairly and equitably. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) tells us that because this comes from the province of Quebec, the province of Quebec is entitled to it. Well, we will have to have a stronger reason than that. I do not think it is a sufficient answer to say that the province of Quebec demands this money. The province of Quebec has made many demands which have not always been granted in this House, and it is good for the country that they have not been granted.

Mr. BERGERON. Thank you.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think it is fair that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) should reflect so severely on his old associate (Sir Adolphe Caron).

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) tell us if he is in favour of this grant?

Mr. McMULLEN. I will tell you this. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) happened to be one of the Jonas on the late political ship and he was thrown overboard. He knows perfectly well that that grant was made for the purpose of carrying Three Rivers at the last election; and if it had been necessary a few years ago to erect a drill hall at Woodbridge to carry West York I have no doubt the hon. gentleman would have got it. I admit that he did not need it the last time.

Mr. WALLACE. This Order in Council was passed on the 6th of July. The hon. gentleman is wrong in his dates.

Mr. McMULLEN. Seeing that we have got through the contests, it is hardly fair to treat the hon. member for Three Rivers in that way.

Mr. WALLACE. I am surprised to find the hon. member for North Wellington coming out and supporting this $5,000 grant.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not.

Mr. MARTIN. I think it is hardly fair that the larger provinces of the Dominion should receive grants from this Government for exhibitions when the smaller provinces have to contribute to the expense of their exhibitions out of provincial funds. If we are going to open the door for such demands from every part of the Dominion, I hope the Government will be prepared to treat all the provinces alike. The Experimental Farm is a great convenience to the farmers of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and I think that should be enough for them. The province from which I come has not an experimental farm, and is very far away from any of the stations, a state of affairs which should be remedied. The provincial legislature of Prince Edward Island every year makes a grant of $2,000 or $3,000 out of its own funds to the provincial exhibitions in that province; and unless this Government are prepared to grant a sum of money to each province for this purpose, I think it is unfair to start with the grant which we are at present discussing. I hope the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, representing an important section in the province of Prince

Mr. WALLACE.

Edward Island, will see that his native province comes in for a grant. If he is prepared to vote away $5,000 on this occasion, I think he should see that the same rule is applied to his own province. I think this is a very bad precedent to set, but if the Government has plenty money, and is bound to spend it, let all the provinces be treated fairly.

Immigration—Further amount required for the Woman's Immigration Protective Society ..... $500

Mr. FOSTER. That is an addition to the ordinary vote, I think?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The vote has always been $1,000. Last year it was reduced to $500, which they find is not sufficient for their work, and they ask that the amount should be restored to $1,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What are they doing?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are taking care of female immigrants arriving from the old country. They are a number of women in Montreal engaged in this work, and an excellent work it is. They look after the young women who come out unprotected, and see that they get homes.

Mr. HUGHES. Under what auspices is this immigration society managed? Is there a joint board?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, a board of the leading citizens of Montreal and their wives.

Militia—Pay of a Deputy Assistant Adjutant General at headquarters, Ottawa ..... 1,800

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What is this?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). This is to pay the salary of the Deputy Assistant Adjutant General, Major Bliss, at headquarters, Ottawa—an office which was created by Order in Council of the 4th of April, 1896. I can explain in detail the duties of this office, if required. The explanation will be found in the General Orders, No. 27.

Militia—Clothing and necessaries .... $127,207 50

Mr. PRIOR. I would like the hon. Minister to give us some details in regard to this vote. It is a large amount. I see there is another vote taken in the general Estimates of $90,000 for the same purpose.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). This is for militia clothing for the whole militia force, under Order in Council of the 14th February, 1896. The clothing has been ordered, and is to be delivered inside of three months after the 1st of October, 1896, payments to be made on delivery. The Order in Council is here, and gives the quantities.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know whether the property in the city of Ottawa, which was recently used as a store-house for militia stores, and which has been converted into a railway station, has been sold, or what is its position at present?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The arrangement with Mr. Booth is that he has undertaken to put up a building precisely similar, on the opposite side of the canal, or pay its value in money.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Has the site been selected?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot say.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Will the selection of this site be left to the Department of Militia?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. LOUNT. I would like to know if that sum of $125,000 covers those contracts which were rescinded recently—the three year's contract?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It covers the clothing to be delivered the first year, under the three year's contract.

Mr. BRITTON. Large as this item is, I would have very much preferred its being considerably larger because the Minister of Militia has to face a difficulty, and it might as well be faced now as later. The policy pursued by the late Government was a very bad one with reference to the different properties all over the Dominion. I speak with actual knowledge of some of them and by report of others. The fortifications in different places have been allowed to get out of repair, under a penny wise and pound foolish policy. They are either worth maintaining or they are not. If they are, they ought to be attended to in time; if they are not, much better to raze them to the ground. It has been suggested to the department by those better skilled than I, that it would be a matter of economy to have a permanent corps of engineers, composed of about twenty-five men, whose work it would be to go from place to place and make the necessary repairs. I am sure this would effect a considerable saving. The walls of the fort at Kingston, the barrack buildings, the towers about the harbour, are all in such a bad state of repair, that unless money is expended on them almost immediately they will be gone beyond repair. I regret also that the Militia Department has not thought proper to put in an estimate for the Drill Shed at Kingston. The late Government had an estimate of $15,000 last year for this work, which is very much needed, because the property that was formerly used for that purpose was sold by the late Government, and its value, some $5,000, received by the Dominion. I faintly would hope that in the Supplementary Estimates provision will be made for this. If not, I sincerely hope that another session will not be allowed to pass by the Government without their doing justice to the city of Kingston, and using, at all events, for the new drill shed, the money they received for the old one.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I concur in a good deal that has been said by the hon. member for Kingston, excepting of course what he said about the late Government. I know that the late Government spent a good deal of money in Quebec in repairing the fortification walls, but a good deal still is needed. I may say that a great many promises were made in the last election that a good deal would be expended on the fortifications in Quebec. The walls around the city are badly in want of repair; and if not soon repaired, will tumble to pieces. Not only the walls, but a good deal of other property belonging to the Militia Department in Quebec, has been for some years badly in need of repair. I understand that the city have agreed to take over the Esplanade, which belongs to the Militia Department, and I would ask if any steps have been taken to that end. I would ask also if, in the amounts which have been voted, any sum will be devoted to the repairs of the walls in that city or on the military property there? Everybody who has seen the condition in which the walls of the city and these properties are, must admit that a great deal more money will in a short time be needed to put them in good order. Of course the question is a difficult one to deal with. These walls and fortifications in Quebec are more ornamental than useful, but still they belong to the Federal Government and it seems to me that Government is bound to maintain them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I can only say that no very large amount can be used this year for the purposes to which he refers. There is a general vote, out of which urgent repairs may be made, but, as I understand from him and from the hon. member for Kingston and others, to take up and do justice to the repairs of these fortifications and walls would require a very considerable amount of money, and at the present session it was impossible to ask Parliament to vote that money. I intend, at the earliest moment, to visit Quebec and Kingston and see for myself, accompanied by competent persons who are able to advise me, the condition of affairs; and I hope that, when Parliament meets again, I shall have been able to advise the Government as to the course to be pursued, and also shall be ready to make some statement to Parliament with reference to these matters. There is no provision in the present Estimates for the Esplanade, nor can I promise that there will be any this session.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I believe there was some agreement between the mayor of Quebec and the Militia Department, or the Government, that the city should take over the Esplanade and maintain it. If this were done, the Esplanade, no doubt, would be made something for the city to be proud of. I understand that in the present state of affairs it is impossible to repair at once all the Government property in Quebec, but the city would maintain this portion, if it were given over. That, I believe, is the arrangement that was about to be come to between the city and the Government.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It has not been brought to my attention. Hon. members will understand that, owing to the tremendous expenditure of late for clothing and arms, it was impossible to ask the House this session for any sum for expenditures on these works. With reference to the drill shed for Kingston, the same answer may be given. That is a matter, however, for the Department of Public Works. I am personally anxious that the drill shed should be built, but I do not think I can promise the hon. gentleman that it can be done this year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not believe that any Minister of Militia, upon the appropriation voted by Parliament for repair, can keep up the military works we have in Quebec or Kingston, and I agree with the Minister that, at this moment, when the country is making a heavy expenditure for new arms and better accoutrements for the force, it would be very difficult indeed to ask Parliament to vote the amount of money that would be required for keeping up the military property. But I would suggest that, outside of the amount voted by Parliament for ordinary repairs, an amount of money should be voted to keep up the fortifications at Quebec. It is true that for defensive purposes these works are of no importance, but their historic value is incalculable. Moreover, in a ruinous condition, they are likely to be a danger to the citizens in a place like Quebec. In one of the highways, St. John Street, a portion of the wall was bulging out and tumbling down. Out of the small amount voted for military repairs, it is quite impossible to keep up these works. There are works in Kingston, also, that have cost the Imperial Government a very large amount of money. Fort George there, if repaired, would be a very valuable property for military purposes. Still, I think, to keep the historical position of the country, a certain amount should be voted every year to be expended on works of this kind.

Mr. LANGELIER. The fortifications of Quebec are in the division of the city which I have the honour to represent; and I must say that what has been stated by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron), is perfectly true. These fortifications are in a disgraceful condition, and have been so for several years. Some years ago, a portion of the main wall of the city, near St. Louis Gate, crumbled down and remained in that condition for I do not know how long. It was only when a by-election happened to take place, that we succeeded in obtaining the repairs to that wall. Some years ago, a good deal of work was done on the walls, but it was so wretchedly done that, in about six or seven years, grass was growing where the cement ought to be. One of the martello towers is quite close to my own residence, and I know that it is in very bad condition. I am very much afraid that it will crumble next spring. I regret very much, although I do not blame, the course followed by the present Minister, because I do not think he could do otherwise. I think it is too late now, even if the money were voted this session, to make these repairs for next winter. They could not be done properly before the winter sets in, and I think the course proposed by the Minister is the only right one. The officers of his department should come down to Quebec and visit these fortifications, and see what repairs need to be done. Now, I may be perhaps allowed to give a piece of advice to the Minister. Some years ago under the Mackenzie Administration, the Dominion Government got rid of a large portion of these military properties and handed them over to the city corporation. I will mention amongst other properties the Esplanade, which was spoken of a few moments ago. A few years after the Mackenzie Government went out of power, the Esplanade was taken back from the city corporation. It had been granted on a lease for a nominal rent every year. I think the rent was one dollar a year; but the lease was conditional upon the Government being allowed to resume possession of the property in question whenever they chose to do so. A few years after the Mackenzie Government went out of power the Dominion Government resumed possession of the Esplanade. I happened to be mayor of the city then. I do not know what the real reason was, but the reason given was that the Esplanade was then wanted for military purposes. But we never could see what military purposes were served by it. The Esplanade is and has been since in the possession of the Dominion Government. They spent a sum of money on it, they allowed the grass to grow on the property, and it has been ever since in a most disgraceful condition. I pass alongside of it every day when at home, and every citizen of Quebec knows that it is a disgrace to the Dominion Government to allow their military properties to remain in such a state. I think the best course for the Government would be to do what the Mackenzie Government did eighteen years ago, and hand over that property to the city of Quebec for a nominal rent. It might be used for military purposes; one of the purposes to which that property can be used is for reviews. We have not large reviews now, the large reviews take place on the historic Plains of Abraham, and this is only used for small reviews. The Esplanade was frequently used when we had a large garrison, for the daily review of the city garrison, which was composed of several thousand men, because the Plains of Abraham were too far away. But since we have had no permanent garrison, the Esplanade is of no use whatever. I remember only one occasion within the last twenty years when a review has taken place on that Esplanade. But for military purposes it is of no use whatever. It is only a kind of public square and might be used for that purpose, but I do not know to what military purpose the Dominion Government could use it. It is only a source of expense, and not of revenue to the Government. Then there is another property which had been handed over by the Mackenzie Government to the city of Quebec, and which was resumed by the late Government, that is the property known as the Cove fields. These Cove fields are between the city and the Plains of Abraham. They could be converted into a very fine park. A portion of this land was granted by the Mackenzie Government for building lots, which were sold at auction bought by the citizens and have been built upon to a large extent. But the greater portion of these fields could be made into a splendid park, one of the finest parks, perhaps, in America. But nothing can be done with the property, it is simply kept now for grazing purposes. The city cannot do anything with it, because we do not own it, and the Dominion Government does not do anything with it because they have no use for it. The late Government have been simply playing with the city corporation the role of the dog in the manger. They have had no use for that property, and because, I suppose, the city had the misfortune to elect Liberal representatives, the property was withdrawn from the city. The Government did not want the property at all for military purposes. I think the best course for the Militia Department would be to hand over that property to the city for a nominal rent, and to be kept in a proper state, on condition that it would not be built upon, so that in case of need it could be used at any time for military purposes.

Now, there is a large number of other properties to which I call the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence. There are a great many houses, some of which are now uninhabited, and have been unoccupied for several years. There is the old military hospital which was used for many years as a temporary court-house. I do not know who lives in the hospital now, but I know it is of no use at all for military purposes. Then there are other houses which are used as residences for the officers who live in Quebec. I think it is a great injustice to the city that these properties should be kept by the Dominion Government. They should be sold at auction and disposed of, so that they would yield a revenue in taxes to the city, and be held like other properties. Let the Government increase the salaries of the officers in question, I think that would be much cheaper to the Government. I know, as a fact, that on some of those properties in St. Louis Street, large sums of money have been spent of late in repairs. If the Government were to add three or four hundred dollars a year to the salary of the officers who have been living in these houses, it would be a great saving of money to the Government. These properties are too expensive to repair. I think the best plan would be to sell them by auction, to make them private properties, and yield taxes to the city. That plan would be a great saving to the Government, because what they would have to pay in increased salaries to the officers—I do not want to deprive the officers of their vested rights, they have had a certain salary coupled with free rent of their houses—but let the Government pay them an increase of salary such as would allow them to lease residences in the city as other citizens do, and I think it would be much better for the Government. But I say by all means let the Government see in what state their city properties are, because I can predict, without being a great prophet—

Mr. CASGRAIN. Could these properties be sold by the Government or do they belong to a certain class of properties which cannot be sold by the Government?

Mr. LANGELIER. They can be sold, a large portion of them has already been sold.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Which has been sold?

Mr. LANGELIER. In 1876 a large block of these properties was sold at public auction, and yielded a pretty large sum of money to the Government. I say what has been done for a portion of these properties can be done for all of them, as they are of no use to the Government. I say it is a waste of money for the Government to keep this property, and the state it is now in is a blot on the progress of the city of Quebec. One-half of all the property in the upper town of Quebec yields no revenue whatsoever to the city corporation. I say it is most unjust to compel the city in that way to pay a large part of the expenditure which should be borne by the whole country.

Now, coming to what was said by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) he is not entirely correct when he said that it was promised during the last election that these properties would be properly repaired. For my part, I did not promise anything, but I expressed the hope, and I express the same hope in this House, that the future Government would do better than their predecessors have been doing. The state in which those properties are constitute an eye-sore for the whole city of Quebec, and I say that it is a disgrace to any Government to keep them in such a state. I hope that the present Government will see to it that these properties are put in a decent state, which will be a credit and not a disgrace to the Government of Canada.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When the Imperial Government handed over the military properties to Canada they were divided into two classes. One description of properties classified under letter "A" were reserved for defensive purposes and these properties cannot be disposed of. The others were classified under letter "B" and these were properties which could be sold by auction and no other way. What is proposed by my hon. friend from Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) it would be impossible to do. The Cove fields are reserved for defensive purposes, and no commanding officer will say that they can be sold, except that strip which was handed over to the city and which was divided into building lots. I mention this to show that there are certain military properties which it is not in the power of the Canadian Government to dispose of.

Mr. HUGHES. I would endorse the statement of my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) in reference to the repairs of military properties. A discussion on this matter goes on from year to year in the House, but yet the properties are not repaired. Some years ago I made a suggestion that there should be attached to each of the permanent corps a few carpenters, a few masons, and a blacksmith or two, whose duty it would be to look after the repairing of those properties. If we turn to the Auditor General's report we find large sums of money paid out every year for day labourers who are employed in the large cities but who have no connection whatever with the military force. Yet nothing seems to be done towards keeping these buildings in repair, while a few men belonging to the militia employed a month or two every year would be sufficient for the purpose. The inner walls of old Fort Henry are crumbling to the ground and tons of stone have fallen down within the last year. This might have been prevented by a little necessary outlay at the proper time. There is another item in this vote which we have not come to yet, but which I desire to speak on now. I refer to the cartridge factory at Quebec. I presume that the new cordite cartridges for the Lee-Enfield rifle used in the various camps are manufactured in our Quebec factory, and I draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that six out of every ten of them hang fire. I would like the Minister to inquire what the cause of this is.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I presume that the members from the city and district of Quebec are not going to quarrel over this matter. Why, these walls and fortifications are crumbling, and the Minister must now be convinced that they are in a very bad state of repair. I may add to what my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) has said, by stating, that a very short time ago a part of the wall along the ramparts in Quebec fell on two or three houses, and the Government was obliged to pay a large sum for damages. The Minister will remember that part of the citadel cliff which is military property, also fell down. If these works were looked after in proper time probably such accidents would not happen. I understand that it is a very difficult question to know whether or not the Government of Canada is obliged to maintain these works, which as I have said are more ornamental than useful. On the other hand, is the city of Quebec which derives no benefit whatever from them, obliged to maintain them? I do not agree with the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) that a small sum of money expended each year would be sufficient to maintain these walls and fortifications in good repair. They have been built for seventy or eighty years and quite a large sum of money would be necessary to maintain them properly. I would like the Minister to decide upon some fixed policy in this matter. I should like to know from him whether or not the Government is going to maintain these walls, or whether they have decided they are not going to maintain them; but to remove them. I take it that as these are Government properties, the Government would be responsible for any accident that may happen. The hon. the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) has said that he will come to Quebec. I was most happy to hear him make that statement, and I hope that on the occasion of his visit the city of Quebec will maintain its proverbial reputation for hospitality.

Grant for a roadway connecting the drill shed at Charlottetown, P.E.I., with Fort Edward ..... $4,000

Mr. HACKETT. I do not intend to oppose this vote, as I believe it to be necessary in the interests of the country. This roadway forms a very important part of the military defences of Charlottetown. I would ask the hon. Minister, however, whether it is his intention that the road should provide a means for the men to advance or retreat in case of emergency. The enemy might send a detachment to Souris Bridge, and therefore have command of the whole situation. In that case, I would beg to ask what provision the Minister has made or intends making to protect the militia force. Our men never run away in the presence of the enemy, and I think it only right that if such a contingency should arise the retreat should be made as safe as possible. This roadway, it is true, connects the drill shed with Fort Edward, but it is possible the men might be separated from the base of supplies. I would beg to suggest, from a military point of view, that in addition to building this roadway there should also be a few of the best guns mounted and made ready for use on the front of Government House farm, in order that our brave volunteers should be so protected that it would be impossible for the enemy to decimate their ranks. I make those suggestions as an old militia man, and trust the hon. Minister will act on them.

Mr. WALLACE. I am informed that this roadway is not required for military purposes at all. There is a roadway at the present time from the drill shed to Fort Edward, and this proposed roadway is simply to enable the citizens of Charlottetown to have a pleasant boulevard or drive to their public park.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If we are going to discuss this item out of its place, I will answer the hon. gentleman. He has been altogether misinformed about this roadway. There is no roadway from the drill shed to Fort Edward at all. There was a foot-path along the bank, and the year before last, I think it was, the local legislature made a free grant of this roadway to the city, on condition that the city would build a breakwater along the front to protect it from being washed away by the sea. At the end of this roadway is Fort Edward and the ordnance land where the magazine stands, and this part has to be protected from the sea, as well as the other parts of the road. When the city took this grant from the provincial legislature, they said they would agree to the conditions, provided the Dominion Government bore part of the expense. An estimate was made of the cost, and it amounted to $12,000. The city corporation came to Ottawa and entered into negotiations with the Dominion Government, and an agreement was come to between the Dominion Government and the corporation of Charlottetown last April that, if the city would build this roadway all the way, the Dominion Government would pay the cost of that portion of it which was opposite the Dominion ordnance land. On the 23rd of April, the then Minister of Militia wrote to the then mayor of Charlottetown, who was then in Ottawa, the following letter:—

H. E. Dawson, Esq.,
Mayor of Charlottetown, P.E.I.

My Dear Sir,—I am sorry in having to inform you that it has been found impossible to secure parliamentary sanction to the appropriation which the Government proposed to make towards the construction of the roadway along the front of the Government farm, from the west end of Kent Street to Fort Edward in the city of Charlottetown. On my recommendation to Council the sum of $4,000 was placed in the supplementary estimates for the next fiscal year, but it was impossible to reach them.

The main estimates for the next year were for nearly three months before Parliament, but not one item was agreed to, and of course the supplementaries would not be voted until the main estimates were disposed of; therefore it was useless to submit the supplementary estimates to Parliament. I have to inform you, however, that it is the intention of the Government to obtain at the first opportunity parliamentary authority to enable them to contribute the amount above mentioned towards this much needed public improvement.

I am, sincerely yours,

A. DESJARDINS.

On the faith of this contract, the mayor went back to the city and submitted it to the city, and the city entered into a contract for the construction of the whole work, in the faith that the Government would keep their part of the contract; and this Government, coming in and finding the contract made, implemented it and carried it out.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to ask whether anything is provided in this estimate towards meeting the claims of those who suffered from the landslide in Quebec.

Mr. BENNETT. This year.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not this year; the landslide that occurred some years ago. I may say that a promise was made that a commission would be appointed to inquire into the claims of those who had suffered from the landslide from the Citadel Hill. I believe it is the policy of this Government to carry out that promise. It is only to see whether these people have suffered any damage, and whether this Government is liable. I understand that the Government is not strictly liable in law, but, from an equitable point of view, I think something should be done. This promise was made by the late Government, and I understand that the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) has made some promise in this direction. I would like to know if it is the intention of the Government to carry out this promise.

Mr. DOBELL. The member for Quebec West has learned a lesson in being careful of promises. He is trying to take a lesson from the gentlemen opposite, who made many promises, but did not fulfil them. I hope the hon. gentleman will see that the Government will be more careful in making promises, and what they make, they will fulfil.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is not quite an answer to my question. If I cannot get an answer directly, I would like one by telegram.

Mr. DOBELL. Well, the hon. gentleman shall have it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think an answer might be given to the question, which I put in parliamentary language. It is a fair question, and calls for a fair answer.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I might say to the hon. gentleman that there is no sum in the Main Estimates, or in these Estimates, for the particular matter to which he refers; but I know he will be glad to hear that the matter is being considered by the department.

Mr. DOBELL. I would like to have one word. I thought I was pretty explicit that I made no promise whatever. I carefully guarded myself against making any promise about the landslide.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did I understand the hon. member for Montmorncy (Mr. Casgrain) to say that the late Government had promised a grant?

Mr. CASGRAIN. No. What the late Government promised to do was to appoint a commission to inquire into the claims. Such a commission had been appointed after a judgment rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada in a case which came from Prince Edward Island, in which an accident had occurred on one of the Government railways. What was promised was that the claims would be investigated by a commission, and, if they were found to be founded in equity, some relief would be given to those who established their claims. That was the only promise made, and certainly it would have been carried out, if the landslide had not occurred.

Mr. DOBELL. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how long it would take to get that commission appointed; because I think it is about seven years since the landslide occurred.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am sorry to see that the hon. gentleman's memory is not very good. The promise was not made seven years ago but in the month of April, 1896.

Mr. DOBELL. That is much more likely, because it was near election time, but these poor unfortunate people lost their property seven years ago.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Now that the hon. gentleman represents those poor people, it seems to me that it was his duty to have something put in the Estimates this session for their relief.

Mr. LANGELIER. At every election we have had promises, not from the late Government but the late Governments, that something would be done for those unfortunate sufferers, and at last, during the last election the present leader of the Opposition went down to Quebec, and promised everything in the world to the people of that city if they would only return Tory members. Unfortunately for the hon. gentleman the people knew what value to attach to his promises. They had had from him another promise, during the election of 1891, when he told them that they might consider the bridge as an accomplished fact.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I was at that meeting and the hon. gentleman was not, and nothing of the kind was promised.

Mr. LANGELIER. I read in the House, without being contradicted by any one, the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition as published by the "Morning Chronicle," the organ of the then Government. I read the very words put into the mouth of the hon. leader of the Opposition, and those words were that the citizens of Quebec might consider the bridge as an accomplished fact, and that was what I was told by every one whom I met who had been at the meeting. Well, the hon. gentleman went down last spring to that city and said to the sufferers of the landslide in 1889—we must not forget that it took place in 1889—that they would get justice. The citizens of Quebec, however, looked upon that promise in the same light as that in which they had been compelled to consider his promise made in 1891 to give them a bridge, when nothing was done towards the completion of such promise, except to bring down, during the election, the Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals. When the hon. gentleman promised the people of Quebec a commission of investigation, they looked upon it as a huge joke. A commission of investigation to ascertain what? To ascertain that people had been killed? Why, the whole city of Quebec attended the funerals of fifty-two people, who lost their lives by this landslide. The people know very well that this was simply an election promise by the hon. gentleman, and that the only hope of the sufferers was in the present Government. I must say that the late Government have changed their opinions very much on the subject. When first application for compensation was made to the Government of Sir John Macdonald, he said: Go before the courts of justice, get judgment against the Government, and you will be paid. An action was taken out by the city corporation, and was dismissed on a technical point. The technical point was this: that no officer of the Government was blameable in particular, and therefore there was no legal claim in a technical sense against the Government, but the court held that the Government was morally responsible for the terrible calamity. Hopes were held out, from time to time, to the poor sufferers, who, at last, thought they were going to obtain justice, when, in another case arising out of another calamity in which there had been given a judgment equally against the sufferers, I speak of the accident on the Intercolonial at St. Joseph de Lévis in 1890, at which several persons lost their lives and others were severely injured—the Government paid the claims of the victims.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What date?

Mr. LANGELIER. I do not remember.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman will excuse me, but these claims were only paid one year ago, just about the time—

Mr. LANGELIER. Of an election.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not an election at all. The hon. gentleman is afflicted with the same malady as his colleague from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell)—loss of memory. It was just about two or three months before this promise was made by the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. LANGELIER. Why such a distinction was made by the late Government, I am at a loss to know. There was the same legal decision in both cases, that the Government was not liable, but still, in the St. Joseph de Lévis case, the claimants were paid, whereas in the case of the landslide at Quebec, they have not yet been paid, although they have been promised payment by hon. gentlemen opposite, not only at every general but every by election. We have had two by elections at Quebec West—one after the late member was expelled and came forward for re-election. On that occasion, the promise was held out to the sufferers that their claims would be entertained by the Government, and at the last election the promise was made by the leader of the Opposition that a commission of inquiry would be appointed to investigate the claims of the sufferers—that is to say, to ascertain whether some had been killed or injured. That is all the unfortunate victims have been able to obtain. It is an insult to them to talk to them of what was done by the late Government. The late Government never intended doing anything.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I only want to reply very briefly to the hon. gentleman who has made a most aggressive speech against this side of the House on this question. I say that the justification for the late Government in this matter was this, that the question was taken through the courts and went through the Exchequer Court to the Supreme Court. I was one of the counsel for the city of Quebec in the case. The case could not be brought before the Government for settlement until judgment was obtained, and I distinctly repeat that the hon. gentleman was mistaken when he said that any promise was held out, were McGreevy to be returned, to the electors of Quebec West. I distinctly deny also that any promise was held out to the electors of Quebec West when the late Hon. John Hearn sat for that constituency. The fact of the matter is that no decision could be taken by the Government before the judgment of the Supreme Court was given on the action brought by the city. The first public utterance made in Quebec on this question was when the leader of the Opposition went down to that city and addressed the electors. What did he say? Did he hold out any promises which were dependent upon the question whether or not supporters of the Government were nominated? Not at all. He simply said this. He gave a parallel case which arose in Prince Edward Island, and he said that, in his opinion, the same measure of justice should be accorded to these people in Quebec West which was accorded to the people in Prince Edward Island. Nothing was further from the mind of the hon. gentleman than the ridiculous pretension from the centre that a commission was to be appointed to see whether any people had been killed by the accident. The hon. gentleman has been a Minister of the Crown in his own province: will he say that this House is now prepared to vote what amount should be paid to the several individual sufferers. What should be done is to pursue the same course as that taken in relation to the case in Prince Edward Island—a commission should be appointed, not for the ridiculous object of ascertaining the amount of damages caused to each individual sufferer in this catastrophe. The promises held out and accepted by the people of Quebec were that this should be done. What my hon. friend says is nothing but a reproach to the present Government. If the late Government is to be found fault with for having done nothing, the present Government, advised by my hon. friend, who, all at once, has become a very ardent defender of the Government, for what reason I do not know, is to be found fault with on the same ground. However, I did not rise in any reproachful mood, but to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to this matter, which is entirely outside of any question of party politics. Now that the Supreme Court has rendered judgment, and now that the Government have the matter before them, they should take some steps to come to the relief of these people. I regret exceedingly that the hon. gentleman in his new role of defender of the present Government should be so hostile to this side of the House. I hope the hon. Minister of Militia will take this case into his serious consideration, and that at the latest, by next session, we may have something proposed on this question.

Monuments, battlefield of Canada—claims unpaid 30th June, 1896 ..... $1,000

Mr. BERGERON. Is it the intention of the Government to continue this building of monuments?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware that that matter has yet been considered.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This item is for claims incurred in the erection of monuments at Lundy's Lane, Chrysler's Farm and Chateauguay, which have already been built.

Annual drill 1895-6 ..... $692.20

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is to pay for the annual drill for 1895-96 of the Manitoba dragoons which was authorized, but funds for which, for some reason or other, were not provided, and also the Winnipeg Field Battery.

Dominion Rifle Association grant towards erection of permanent quarters for the Canadian teams at Bisley ..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The estimate cost of these permanent quarters is $10,000 of which the Government has been asked to provide one-half. In view of the excellent work our volunteers have done in these rifle matches, I think it is only fair to make this grant.

Mr. HUGHES. I congratulate the hon. Minister on this vote. I take the liberty of suggesting that in the construction of the building that Canadian wood should be used. I suppose that the plans will be submitted to the Militia Department. I would like to ask the Minister of Militia about the rifle ranges at Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Investigations have been made with a view to selecting a rifle range, but no conclusion has been arrived at, and I do not think the Government will ask any vote this year. But I hope that at an early date, a rifle range suitable for our volunteers will be provided near Ottawa.

Militia—Chargeable to capital—

To pay for arms, ammunition and stores purchased in March and April, 1896 ..... $844,466

Artillery, guns, &c., for armaments of forts ..... 100,000

To provide for the construction of implacements and the mounting of heavy guns ordered from the Imperial authorities ..... 10,000

$954,466

Mr. BERGERON. I am sorry that my hon. friend from St. James Division, Montreal (Mr. Desmarais) is not present. But I am glad the Government has brought this item down, and glad that the House will vote it. We struggled on this for a long time last session, and we heard a great deal about it in the last election. We heard it declared that this was the amount paid to Great Britain to bring out guns to shoot our children with, even though there was no money to maintain the Manitoba schools. I see my hon. friend from St. James Division is present, and I hope he will vote for this. The people will now be more likely to realize that if we are to have a militia force it is necessary to provide them with the best arms and equipment in order that they may be an efficient force. I speak of this because I have suffered in relation to it in the ten or twelve counties in which I spoke in the last election. We were not allowed to talk about anything else—fiscal policy, school policy, or any other. We were told that this was something most terrible and indefensible, that we were spending money to send our children to war to fight for the British Empire. That was said in the remotest French parts of the province of Quebec. Where there were a few English voters they would not mention it. I hope this vote will be carried unanimously and that my hon. friend from St. James, who is such an eloquent speaker, will vote for it without saying one word.

Railways and Canals—Wharf improvements at Dalhousie ..... $3,000

Mr. McALISTER. To what wharf does that particularly refer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not able to describe the wharf to my hon. friend. I suppose it will be at the terminus of the Dalhousie Branch of the Intercolonial Railway, and I am advised that it requires this expenditure upon it in order to afford the necessary facilities to the patrons of that road.

Mr. McALISTER. The reason I ask the question is that the wharf extends east and west of the railway track. Last fall, they started to make some improvements on the western side, which were abandoned. I understood that the great necessity for repair was on the eastern end. I would like to know whether this is intended to be applied to the eastern end or the western end. I think the amount is not sufficient to make all the repairs required.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The improvements are on the eastern extension, and are more particularly for the purpose of affording accommodation for the loading of timber.

Mr. McALISTER. I know that the western end badly needs improvements, but I do not know if the western wharf belongs to the Intercolonial Railway.

Intercolonial Railway—Increased accommodation at Halifax ..... $45,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If hon. members will turn to page 43 of the Main Estimates, they will find there was an appropriation of $105,000 for increased accommodation at Halifax. That amount has been supplemented so as to make it $150,000. The $150,000 is to be expended on the following items:—Wharf for merchandise, $55,000; freight sheds on the wharf, $12,000; coal trestle, ditto, $17,000; crib-work and filling tracks, $25,000; dredging, $15,000; coal wharf, $26,000. The additional $45,000 is to carry out the contemplated improvements which were proposed by the late Government, and are to be found in the Estimates which were prepared by my predecessor.

Mr. SPROULE. How much of this work has already been done ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not much, if any, of the work included in these items has been done. There has been a good deal of money expended upon the freight and wharf extensions at Halifax covered by expenditures of previous years. Very little of this sum has been laid out.

Mr. WALLACE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that $150,000 covers the expenditure for that increased accommodation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said there was $150,000 proposed to be laid out this year in completion of the extension of these works, and that $105,000 of that amount had already been provided for in the Main Estimates, and that this $45,000 would be the balance making up the sum of $150,000 required to complete the work. I pointed out that there had been expended in connection with these works during the previous year, I think, at all events one or two years preceding, a further sum, just what amount I have not now in my memory.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this vote complete the accommodation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This vote completes the estimate for providing the accommodation now proposed, and all that is proposed up to the present moment.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this make the accommodation at Halifax sufficient for the business at present.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am advised that this vote will complete all that has been proposed to the department as being necessary. I have not heard of anything further being required ; but I would not like to say there might not be something more.

Mr. GILLIES. I remember that some years ago quite a discussion was raised in the House with regard to this increased accommodation at Halifax. The sum of $150,000 was placed in the Estimates then, and the late Minister of Railways told us that the cost of the land required for this increased accommodation would be some $40,000. I recollect that the House was quite unwilling that such a sum should be appropriated for land at Halifax, some hon. gentlemen arguing, very cogently I thought, that the land for this purpose should be placed at the disposal of the Government by the city of Halifax. I wish to ask the Minister what was the cost of the land ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not aware that any portion of the money expended last year or the sum now asked for, is intended to be devoted to paying for any land which has been expropriated.

Mr. FOSTER. The property was expropriated and it must have been paid for.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, yes ; years ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall be glad to find out for the hon. gentleman the cost of the land, but I really do not know now.

Mr. GILLIES. The town of North Sydney and several other places gave the land to the Government for a similar purpose to this, and it was the opinion of the House some years ago that the least thing the city of Halifax should do would be to give a free grant of the land needed for this purpose.

Extension of the Halifax Cotton branch.. $40,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This item is intended to supply a very urgent and pressing demand as I am informed, for an extension of the system on the high level in the neighbourhood of, and beyond the Halifax Cotton Factory, chiefly for the purpose of freight. About a year ago what is called the extension to the cotton factory was constructed. That piece of the Intercolonial Railway has been found to be very profitable, and I am told that a great deal of business has been stimulated by its construction. It is claimed to be very necessary that this piece of road should be extended beyond the factory and in the direction of the water. When I took up the original Estimates and the Supplementary Estimates as they were prepared in the department, I found that this sum was included. Upon inquiring as fully as it was possible for me to do under the circumstances, I was led to believe that it was a useful purpose which was to be served by this extension, and I have therefore retained the amount in the Supplementary Estimates. As nearly as we can judge from the value of the land in the locality, it will take probably $30,000 to acquire the land, and the balance of the $40,000 will be necessary for grading, tracklaying and ballasting.

Mr. FOSTER. The $30,000 comes out of this $40,000 vote.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was the expectation.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not taking any objection to the vote, but I wish to understand it. The first extension was, I suppose, to get the traffic of the cotton factory. If the extension already made gives access to the factory what is expected to be accomplished by this other extension ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The extension was by no means designed simply for the purpose of reaching the cotton factory. That was probably in contemplation as one of the expectations of the scheme, and no doubt it does contribute quite largely to the freight carried on the line. This line has been carried on the higher level, and in such a direction that it affords accommodation for the transfer of a very considerable amount of other freight into a populous part of the city, and the railway has been in the habit of charging additional sums from the ordinary station to this point. The demand for the carriage of general freight has been so considerable that the department has concluded that it would be a paying enterprise to extend the road still further through that populous district, so as to meet the business demands of the city.

Mr. FOSTER. What would be the length of the whole extension?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Something over a mile.

To provide snow fences on Oxford and New Glasgow, Cape Breton, and St. Charles Branch Railway..... $12,000

Mr. FOSTER. Are these new fences, or is this to repair old ones?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These are new.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the hon. gentleman builds these fences by contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would certainly endeavour to do so, if it were at all practicable and in the interest of the public service.

Mr. FOSTER. It is certainly practicable.

To provide increased accommodation at Lévis ..... $48,500

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would ask the hon. Minister to explain this item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am led to believe that there has been a great deal of complaint made at Lévis, not only by the general public, but by the corporation of the town, in its public capacity, against the continuance of the inconvenience and danger resulting from the want of the accommodation proposed. The mayor and corporation have complained that the approach to the station is very much blocked, when trains are shunting or standing at the station. It is said this cannot possibly be avoided, under existing arrangements, and it is proposed to purchase additional property and lay additional sidings, in order that the danger may be removed and the public convenience served.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you going to remove the station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not attack this item, and I do not intend to criticise it in an unfriendly spirit; but I would like to have some details about it. No more sidings can be put down at the spot in question, because the river is on one side and the cliff on the other, and there is a street between the two. I cannot understand where the sidings will be put, unless it is intended to extend the yard to the east or to the west. You cannot extend it south or north, so far as I can see.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is proposed, I understand, to extend it west.

To grade a space in rear of Rivière du Loup Station for carriages ..... $1,600

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is an item on which I would like to have some explanation. I cannot really see that there is any necessity for this vote. I happen to know the place very well, and I think there is enough space there for all the cabmen in the town of Fraserville and all the adjoining parishes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The officers of the department are of opinion that it is necessary to enlarge the yard for carriages at that station. In order to enlarge it, the rock will have to be cut back.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the rock is to be cut away, it seems to me that some expropriation will have to be made there. If so, this sum is not sufficient.

North Channel—Deepening, widening and straightening ..... $100,000

Mr. REID. Is it the intention of the Government to proceed with this work at an early date? The water in the river St. Lawrence is very low and vessels are having a great deal of trouble. As I understand, this North Channel is a short distance below the town of Prescott, between Prescott and Cardinal, and there are places there where at present there is only about eight feet of water, so that vessels can come down as far as Prescott drawing about 17 feet of water, and after there is only about eight at certain places between Prescott and the head of Galops Canal. This is on account of the shallow part where this North Channel should be built, and it is necessary this work should be proceeded with at an early day. There is a great deal of complaint about it. The hon. member for Kingston, where many marine men live, can bear me out, so far as these complaints are concerned.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the intention of the department to proceed with all despatch with this work. I realize, from the information I have received, the importance of taking this up without unnecessary delay, in order that we may have the channel deepened, so that there may be a proper and continuous channel. I know of no reason why the hon. member may not look for an entrance upon this work at once.

Cornwall Canal—Enlargement ..... $100,000

Mr. SPROULE. What has been done with this canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This canal has been deepened from 9 to 14 feet, and this is only a very small portion of a very large expenditure. My information is that its enlargement, up to 30th June, 1895, cost no less than $3,900,000, and during the year ending 30th June last there was an addition of $420,000. It is estimated that $285,000 will complete the work, and the $100,000 now asked for is the final sum. There was an appropriation in the main Estimates, and this will make the final appropriation required to complete the work. When it is completed, the cost will be something over four and a quarter million dollars.

Galops Canal—Enlargement ..... $50,000

Mr. QUINN. Is it the intention of the Government to remove the obstruction at the mouth of the Galops Canal and deepen the water, so that we may have 9 feet of water there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand that the difficulties in that canal do not arise so much from the existence of any obstructions as from the fact that the water is low, and the mitre sill now has, I believe, a depth of only 8 feet of water. There is no obstruction at either end of the canal which shows a less depth of water than that, so that the main difficulty is that the water has been falling permanently. Unless the canal were lowered generally, we could not look for any greater amount of water there than we have now, at all events at this season of the year.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the hon. Minister should make an investigation into the cause of the low water in the River St. Lawrence and the canals. My opinion is that there have been so many obstructions removed that the water passes down more rapidly than ever before, and the Government will have, at an early date to place obstructions by building wing walls, to prevent the water escaping so rapidly. In the last three or four years, the water has been lower than it ever was before. It is down now 3 to 4 feet lower than we have had it in the last twenty years up to the year before last.

Mr. REID. With reference to that obstruction at the head of the Galops Canal, perhaps I can give a little explanation. The trouble there is at what is called the Old Lock, the lock that is being removed. The bottom of that lock is rocky, and the contractors have been busy removing it. It is rather difficult to remove, and the mitre sill is right on that rock. The barges and steamers load down to 9 feet, which is supposed to be what they can go safely to, through all the canals to Montreal. But when we have a heavy east wind, it lowers the water two feet, so that when they come to the head of the canal to go through the new lock, and there is an east wind, they cannot get over this mitre sill, and are blocked until the water rises again. Is it the intention of the Government to proceed at once with the enlargement of the canal from Iroquois to the head of the canal. The whole canal system from Montreal to Morrisburg has been under contract, and I believe has been nearly completed, with the exception of this part of the St. Lawrence Canal, that is the Galops Canal from Iroquois to the head of the canal, a distance of about five miles. There have been two new locks built, and the upper entrance has been under contract for dredging, and is about completed. But from that to Iroquois nothing has been done, and at present there is only about 7 feet of water in that canal from Cardinal to the head of the canal. It is almost impossible at times for boats to go from Cardinal to the head of the canal. Therefore, it is most important that the work should be begun at an early day. I see an amount of $250,000 in the Main Estimates for this canal and this $50,000 is also for enlargement. I do not know whether they are both for the same work or not. Is this vote to be applied for new work on this canal from Iroquois to the head of the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; this is for completing the work on the upper entrance, which is estimated to cost $300,000. We have already appropriated $250,000, and this vote is for the balance.

Mr. REID. Is this $250,000 for the completion of the upper entrance?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. REID. Tenders were called for in May or June last for the work at Iroquois which is the part of the canal I mean. Does the Government intend to abandon that part of the work or go ahead with it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps the hon. member is aware that the tenders he refers to were withdrawn, and I have not yet had the opportunity of considering whether these sections should be proceeded with at an early day or not.

Mr. REID. If this part of the canal is left as it is, the canal system will not be complete. Marine men understand that the work is to be proceeded with at once, and they would like to have some idea whether the Government intend to abandon it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should be very sorry to have the hon. gentleman assume that it was the intention of the Government to abandon the work. I have endeavoured to state to him that I am not in a position at present to say what the intention of the Government is in the matter.

Mr. McNEILL. I think it would be impossible to exaggerate the importance of the matter referred to by my hon. friend beside me—the very remarkable fall in the water of the St. Lawrence and the great lakes. This has become a very serious matter in the interest of navigation, and if the Government could inaugurate some inquiry into the cause, it might be of the very greatest possible value to the country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is to be considered by the deep water ways commission.

Mr. REID. I would like to know if it is the intention of the Government to open that outside lock for the balance of the season as is usually done. The special reason for doing it now is that a vessel may come on Sunday when the water may be high and when it would be easy for her to get through. But if she is compelled to wait, an east wind may spring up lowering the depth of the water and causing, perhaps, long delay. Seeing that St. Mary's lock is kept open the whole season, I think it would not be a much greater sin to allow this lock to be open until the close of navigation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What the hon. gentleman has stated will receive careful consideration.

Sault St. Mary Canal—Construction and equipment ..... $129,000

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask if this completes the work? I would like to state what I learned while on a trip, which I think will be useful information to a good many of the members here. We have heard a great deal about the St. Mary's Canal. I happened to be on the steamer "Alberta" and when we came to the canal we took the American side. I was very much interested as a Canadian and as a member of Parliament, knowing the immense amount of money we have paid for the lock. I asked the captain why we did not go by the Canadian side. He said: We will not go that way if it is possible to avoid it. There were many boats waiting to get through, as it was Monday morning. After a time the captain said: You will be gratified as we must pass on the Canadian side. I asked him why he did not always pass on the Canadian side. He told me—and this I would like to call to the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals and the members of this House, because I think it is important—He said: There is no place for us to stop on the Canadian side. There are no docks where we can stop. The only thing we can do is to pass through the lock. He said this: I may say to you that the Canadian lock between the American side and the Canadian side is a great deal better than the other one; but we have no docks there, we have got to go straight into the lock or come out of it. More than that, he said, it is at Sault Ste. Marie that we buy everything we want, there is nothing at all on the Canadian side but a factory. I said: Well, this is a very serious matter. Then it would not cost a great deal to Canada to build a lock there, and he said, No. Moreover, he said, It is not of much use to build that lock with the obstruction they have left in the canal. I said, What obstruction? He said, The piece of a bridge or the abutment of a bridge, which takes half of the canal. I may say that the work itself is probably the finest work of the kind that has ever been constructed in these times. The lock itself is purely and simply a jewel. My hon. friend from Niagara (Mr. Gibson) will substantiate that, because he knows these works well. But as soon as we leave the lock there is a piece of bridge belonging to the railway company that takes one-half of the canal, and it looks very bad. The captain of the "Alberta" told me it was a most dangerous piece of work. He said: I do not know why this piece of bridge has been left there, but every time I pass I am afraid that the wheel of my boat will be broken, and I have to make a round-about turn to pass that abutment; but when it is windy it is almost impossible to pass there. Now, Mr. Chairman, I bring these things to the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals. We have spent nearly three million dollars there, we have built a lock which is a great credit to this country, but which is, according to the captain of the "Alberta," very nearly useless, unless this piece of bridge is taken out, and unless some docks are built down below where the boats can stop.

Mr. GIBSON. I am glad my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has brought this matter before the committee. He will remember that this question was under discussion a great many times in this House, and the attention of the Government of which he was a loyal supporter, was called to it by myself, and I stated then, as I am prepared to state now, that it was an engineering monstrosity. It was a most thoughtless piece of work to place an obstruction in so valuable a canal as the Sault Ste Marie Canal. So far as the work is concerned, that has been criticised in the committee and in the House. I agree with many of the remarks of the hon. member for Beauharnois, but I am sorry that the hon. gentleman did not have an opportunity previous to this summer of going up and seeing this work as we saw it. The fact of the matter was that it was in order to save the railway company from making a longer span, a larger draw bridge, that this pier was put practically 56 feet from the side of the canal. The vessels in passing up and down have to go out of their way, have to hug the north side of the bank, in order to clear this obstruction; and I predict that it will come to pass some day that a vessel will lose her moorings, the men will lose control of her, and undoubtedly this obstruction will be carried away, and the result will be that the country will be made to pay over again for building a new bridge, or a new span, which in my opinion should never have been placed there at all. I may say here that if the late Government had taken the advice that was offered to them after we returned from Sault Ste. Marie two years ago, this obstruction would have been removed. I was in company with the contractor; I have no fault to find with the work; and I can assure this committee that the contractors, for their own credit, would rather have been without the profits they made out of this work, than to have built this pier. When I approached the work I thought it was really a temporary arrangement simply for the purpose of carrying the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge, for the time being; but to my surprise, when I came up I found a beautiful piece of masonry and a permanent pier built there. I believe, if the Government insisted on it at the time this work was being completed, the Canadian Pacific Railway would have been obliged to provide a longer draw bridge. But in order to save them—I may as well say what I think, for that was the only conclusion I could come to—the Government was put to the expense of building this obstruction in the middle of a fine piece of work, and it stands to-day as an eyesore to every man who passes up and down that lock. I want to say to the hon. gentleman who brought this matter before the committee, that it is the fault of his own political friends that this monstrosity was placed in the centre of that canal. No doubt if it were removed the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would very properly demand from this Government the extra expense of putting up a new draw-bridge. When the line was opened it was pointed out by Mr. Page that the canal would have priority of the passage up and down because they had expropriated the land, and the canal was then under construction. If the railway bridge had been built and the railway had been located prior to the location of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal on the Canadian side, then of course the Canadian Pacific Railway would have had the right of way, and all the cost of the drawbridge would have been borne by the Government. Now, alongside of what my hon. friend speaks of are two draw-bridges, spanning almost identically the same opening on the American canal; so that there was no engineering difficulty at all. I think, if I remember correctly, that if the bridge had been extended from the centre, because it radiates from the centre, the structure could have been increased in size, for only one or two extra panels would have been required to make this bridge sufficiently long enough for the purpose of carrying the cars of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How much of a span?

Mr. BERGERON. About 120 feet.

Mr. GIBSON. Perhaps a couple of hundred feet. We have draw-bridges that are 450 feet from end to end. So that as far as the engineering difficulties are concerned, they are mere matters of detail. There was no difficulty in making a bridge sufficiently long enough. It was a matter of common talk in Sault Ste. Marie that it was, and will be for all time to come—I was going to say a standing disgrace, but at all events it will be an eyesore to the Canadian people who use it in passing up and down the St. Mary's channel. Now, with reference to using the American side instead of the Canadian side, it was pointed out by the hon. member for West Laubton that only 2 per cent of the carrying trade of our inland waters was done through the Canadian locks, and that statement is confirmed to-night by the hon. member for Beauharnois. One of the principal reasons why Canadian steamers do not use the Canadian locks is simply because they tie up at the end of the American wharf, where they receive their coal, and being good loyal subjects, wherever they can get it they take it, without paying duty, and avoid coming over to the Canadian shore, and pass through the American locks.

Mr. BENNETT. Take the duty off coal now.

Mr. GIBSON. Then we will be able to use our Canadian lock in a canal upon which we spent three million dollars. Then if the lock is of any use at all, you will have the advantage of all the locks being used together, and stop the very blockade my hon. friend spoke about. If the American and Canadian vessels were not compelled to pay a duty upon coal, I venture to say there would be no stoppage in the Sault Ste. Marie Canal at all, because with the old American and the new American lock, and without Canadian lock, they have more than ample accommodation for inland navigation for fifty years to come. I have no fault to find with the work, but I agree with every word that my hon. friend has said. It is now too late to make the complaint. If my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), together with the other members who were supporting the then Government, had listened to the criticisms offered by this side of the House, which were made at the proper time, there would be no need for his remarks to-night.

Mr. REID. Can a Canadian steamer coming in at Sault Ste. Marie, on the American side, take coal without paying duty?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes.

Mr. REID. Well, they cannot do it at Ogdensburg, when going to Kingston.

Mr. GIBSON. Of course not, because the vessel is coasting.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) is wrong in saying that the matter could be rectified at the time his friends offered the criticism on this pier. The bridge was already constructed then.

Mr. GIBSON. We offered the criticism at the proper time, because the water had not been let into the canal, and the cribs could have been removed, and the stone pier could have been removed, and the additional spans could have been added to the bridge.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think it is yet too late to redress this grievance. I passed there the other day, and I saw a bridge which was made to cover the whole canal for another railway. If they make one, they can make another. The whole width of the bridge is between 120 and 150 feet. This piece of work, which I have seen, and which is really a disgrace to the place, covers half the canal. A vessel has to make a sharp turn there to get around it. I hope the Minister of Railways and Canals will take steps to have this thing removed. It is a matter of national importance that it should be done.

Mr. GIBSON. What I want to point out is, that the difficulty in getting the work done now will be to obtain the consent of the Canadian Pacific Railway to make their bridge long enough to span the whole banks. It was quite within the power of the late Government to have got that done, because they need have put up only temporary trestles until such time as the Canadian Pacific Railway had made provision for the extension of their bridge.

The Lachine Canal enlargement ..... $25,000

Mr. QUINN. Is a portion of this vote, or is the whole of it, for the purpose of building one or two new locks at the foot of the canal? If so, is it the intention to build the locks this winter, and whether will they be built by contract or by day labour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This appropriation is for the purpose of deepening the canal to 15 feet.

Mr. QUINN. As I understand, there is no item here for the purpose of building locks No. 1 and No. 2.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not provided for in this vote.

Mr. QUINN. Is it the intention to build locks Nos. 1 and 2 this year? In the Main Estimates, a sum of $238,000 was voted for the Lachine Canal, and now there is a further sum of $25,000 asked for the enlargement of the canal. Under which of these votes would the building of the locks come in?

Mr. GIBSON.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It certainly would not come under this item.

Mr. QUINN. Might I ask the hon. Minister if it is the intention to build these two locks?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The department have not, so far, concluded to build the locks this year. We have not asked for any appropriation, up to this moment, for that purpose.

To pay judgment of Supreme Court in St. Louis vs. the Crown ..... $76,500

Mr. BERGERON. I understand, there is a case of the Crown against St. Louis for a certain amount of money, and this judgment of St. Louis versus the Crown will settle the other case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, it does not.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not see how that can be. Is it the intention of the Government to proceed with the other case against St. Louis?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the opinion of the Government that the judgment recovered in this case does not dispose of the counter claim which the Government has against Mr. St. Louis, in any respect whatever. The counter claim might have been raised as a set-off in the suit of St. Louis against the Crown, but it was not so raised. A good deal of facility was afforded this gentleman to get his case before the court, and in consequence of that, judgment was recovered against the Crown. The same facility, apparently, was not afforded in the action pending against Mr. St. Louis by the Crown. That is still going on.

Mr. BERGERON. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has not got the facts very well.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. St. Louis sued the Government for $70,000, and he lost before the Exchequer Court. Then the Department of Justice, for what reason I do not know, sued Mr. St. Louis for $80,000. At the meantime Mr. St. Louis appealed to the Supreme Court which unanimously gave judgment in his favour. The other case of the Crown vs. St. Louis was still going on. I remember hearing the lawyers in the case state that the case of St. Louis against the Crown would settle the other one. When that case was taken by the Government to the Privy Council, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada was confirmed.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, but they refused to give leave to appeal.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, the effect was just the same. That is why I ask if the Government intend to drop their action, or if they intend to appeal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know how the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) could have assumed that my statement was not correct, because it does not differ materially from the statement of the hon. gentleman, although he went somewhat more fully into one branch of the case. I repeat that the Government does not consider the recovery of the judgment in this case as settling the case of the Crown against Mr. St. Louis. That case is still pending, and it is the intention of the Government to prosecute it to a final result. It is therefore in that position. In the meantime this judgment has been finally recovered. An attempt was made to review the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada by an appeal to the Privy Council, but the Privy Council refused to give leave to prosecute the appeal, and as a result we are called upon to pay the amount of the judgment. Therefore, this appropriation is now asked.

Rideau Canal ..... $11,200

Mr. SPROULE. I saw a rumour some time ago that a superintendent of this canal was to be appointed. Has he been appointed yet, and if so, who is he?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There has been no superintendent of the canal appointed by us.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention of the Government to appoint one soon, and if so, whom?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure my hon. friend that I am quite unable to tell him who may be appointed.

Resolutions reported.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.55 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 30th September, 1896.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

STATIONERY SUPPLIED TO MEMBERS.

Mr. GIBSON moved that the first report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament, be adopted.

Mr. SPROULE. Before that is adopted, I would like to say a few words to emphasize what I said the other night. It seems to me that the selection of stationery which is distributed to us, is a very bad one. We have a large quantity of very small note paper, with a lot of small envelopes, that are of very little use to business men, and a small quantity of a kind of paper which every business man can use, with the envelopes. Then we have a lot of other things that may be of some value to some persons, but of very little value to the great majority of the members. I think if a good selection of stationery in the way of paper and envelopes suitable for business purposes, was made, instead of a small quantity of what is suitable, and a large quantity of what is unsuitable, it would be better for those who receive it. I merely make the suggestion, because I have heard complaints frequently made by members, and I think the parties who make the selection ought to know it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). Not only is there something to be said of the quality of the stationery which is supplied to us, but a good deal is also to be said of the quantity. I think I would meet the views of the House in proposing that the supply of trunks and boxes of stationery which have hitherto been given us, be dispensed with in future; and therefore I beg to move that the following words be added to the report of the said committee:—

That the practice of supplying each senator and member of the House of Commons with a leather trunk and a box of stationery, be discontinued in future, and the order of the House sanctioning the same dated 5th May, 1892, be rescinded.

If this motion carries, members of the House will receive all the stationery they want, and of the quality suggested by the hon. member for Grey, and that, I think, will amply meet the case.

Motion as amended, agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION.

Mr. BAIN moved that the second report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization, be concurred in. He said: Perhaps I may draw the attention of the House for a moment to the contents of the report, which will be found in the Votes and Proceedings of the House, No. 29, Tuesday. I may say that there are only two items upon which the committee make any recommendation. One is with respect to a relaxation of the American regulations as promulgated by the Secretary of State at Washington, respecting the admission of Canadian thoroughbred animals, without registration, in the American Stock Book. Our people in Canada feel that the registration in the Canadian herd and stock books, is a guarantee of the purity of breeding and the quality of the stock, and we simply ask,—as the action of the American breeding association has been thus endorsed by the official action of the Secretary of State for the United States—that our Minister of Agriculture be requested to open negotiations with that gentleman to ascertain whether we cannot secure some modification of these regulations, so as to place our breeders in a better position in exchanging stock with the breeders to the south of the line.

The only other recommendation is with respect to securing to the dairymen and farmers and fruit growers of the Dominion better facilities for placing their surplus products on the English markets in first-class condition, and avoiding as much as possible depreciation in transit. The committee after a careful consideration were disposed to ask the Government to consider some principle of securing cold storage for transit by rail and by ocean steamship to the English market, with such additional facilities as may commend themselves to the judgment of the Government to secure its preservation of these perishable products in the best condition before and during transit. I would like to draw the attention of the House to one difficulty which will surround the action of the Government in this matter. It will involve considerable expense on the part of the ocean steamship-owners to furnish the necessary cold storage for the transit of these products, and the fitting up of necessary machinery to provide either cold air or other such appliances to preserve these articles in good form. It is unnecessary to say to any business men that steamship-owners will not go to the expense involved in fitting up this accommodation unless they have a reasonable guarantee that there will be business for them for some years, so as to recoup them for the first expenditure. I think the House will object, and very properly object, to the country bearing the first cost of these fittings and then be at the mercy of the owners of the vessels in which they are placed. If the Government take a favourable view of this question, the House will have to consider whether it would not be wisdom to authorize the Minister to cover a period of four or five years in the contract with these lines which fit up the necessary cold storage. This would give them a certain guarantee that they would have a return of the capital invested in furnishing these equipments. I believe it will be found in practice that it will require continuous care for four or five years to establish the business and place it on a successful footing. I need not say that parallel with that the greatest care will be required on the part of the Government to see that the contracts and terms of arrangements are of a nature to protect the public interest from being unduly imposed upon by the steamship companies, while at the same time giving every facility to secure the development of the cold storage system. It is to these two points that I draw the attention of the House in moving the adoption of the report, so that if the Government should favourably consider the situation, then the House will be seized of the fact when we come to discuss the Estimates in which will be included provision for the carrying out of the suggestions of this committee.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words with reference to this report, as I regard it of great importance to the country. The question engaged the attention of the last Parliament, but unfortunately it was at a time in its life when it was impossible to make any adequate provision for the carrying out of the principles involved in it. It was brought to the notice of the present Government through the Agricultural Committee, at an early stage of this Parliament. There are three things which this report deals with which might very well be taken up at an early date by the present Government, and which, if they take up in earnest and successfully carry out will redound to the interests and benefit of the farmers of Canada.

The first is with regard to the necessity for cold storage to transport our perishable food products to the markets of the world. That is strongly advocated by the resolution which accompanies this report. At this period of the year it would, I apprehend, be impossible to do anything that would result in any great advantage for the present season; but there will be sufficient time between now and next spring to provide for that cold storage for transportation which is now so much needed by the country. The attention of the Government being drawn to the matter so early, gives them an opportunity of carefully considering it and of making the provision which is required.

The question of the relaxation of the quarantine regulations is also referred to in this report. It is believed by a great many that our quarantine regulations, which compel every importer of thoroughbred stock to have his cattle quarantined for ninety days at the frontier, are a serious drawback, because they enhance the cost to the importer, cause him great inconvenience and necessitate the expenditure of a great deal of time and money. It is held that our herds are not kept up as well as they otherwise would be if there was a relaxation in this respect. In other words, it is felt that if importers of thoroughbred stock were allowed to bring them in after a careful veterinary examination, before the cattle were shipped to Canada, and also a re-examination here, it would be a great improvement. A certificate should accompany the imported stock stating that they were selected from herds and from parts of the country where diseases of an infectious and contagious nature did not exist. This would enable the importers to bring in their stock without the ninety days' quarantine, and it would be a great saving to them. This suggestion is made for the purpose of securing greater freedom in the importation of stock, and it is believed that as a result there would be a great improvement in the stock of the country, which some believe to be rather deteriorating in consequence of the existing quarantine restrictions.

It was brought to the attention of the committee as to whether it would be advisable to invite the present Government of Canada to make representations to the government of the United States for reciprocal relaxation in quarantine regulations, so that grade stock as well as thoroughbred stock might be included in the privilege. A great many objected to that, and I think they very properly did so. It is therefore not included in the report. While we thought it might be desirable to relax quarantine regulations to the extent suggested in the report, we scarcely thought that it would be desirable to go so far as some of the buyers and importers wished.

The next question dealt with in the report was with reference to the privilege which was partially secured a few years ago, of exporting cattle to Europe from some American ports. The concession was granted to Canada some years ago of exporting cattle to the English markets through Portland, Me., and at that time this was the only United States port so opened to us. That privilege was lately extended to us in connection with the port of Boston. The advantage in this is that it affords competition for our exports, and the opportunity of availing themselves of the low freight rates which sometimes may be obtained for the shipment of stock from Boston and Portland. It is believed that this would result in a general reduction of freight rates for exports from this country. The last subject the committee dealt with was a suggestion that the Government might look into the question of railway freight rates, which are believed to be much higher today than they ought to be, and also into the system of discrimination between large shippers and small shippers, and between one part of the country and another part, against localities where there is no railway competition, and localities where competition does exist. These are the principal subjects dealt with in that report. They are questions of great importance to the agriculturists of the country, and questions that demand early consideration and the very best attention the Government can give to them. I draw attention to them now, in the hope that the Government may be able to deal with them at an early day.

Mr. McMILLAN. I highly approve of the suggestions made in the report in reference to cold storage. The encouragement which the Government is giving to both cheese factories and creameries in different parts of the country, will be incomplete, and the full benefit of the money that is being spent will not be realized, unless cold storage is provided, in order that the goods may be taken in first-class condition to the old country market. I approve of the suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, that an arrangement should be made with the steamship companies for five years, because it is within my knowledge that both the Allan Line and the Dominion Line did provide some vessels with cold storage compartments, but did not receive a sufficient amount of trade to warrant them in continuing those compartments and they had to take them out. So I believe it will be necessary, until these facilities are fully established, to make an arrangement with the steamship companies. I believe it would be money well invested. With regard to the trade in cattle for breeding purposes between the United States and Canada, there is a strong desire in the west to get our cattle; but, owing to the arrangements that exist at present between the several livestock associations in the Western States and the similar associations in Canada, our animals are not allowed to enter the United States unless they are registered in the registration books there. I hold that there is something wrong here, because our system of registration is more strict and our standard is higher than that of the United States. I, therefore, hope the Government will do everything they can to get these restrictions relaxed, by making the proper representations to the Department of Agriculture at Washington. In Kentucky, there is some of the best-blooded stock, both of cattle and horses, to be found on the continent of America; and many of our breeders would go there to purchase animals and bring them to Canada but for the restriction of the ninety days' quarantine. But for the same reason, many of our animals would be sent to the Western States for breeding purposes. So that it would be to the mutual advantage of both countries to have these restrictions removed, so far as breeding animals are concerned. The same is true with respect to bringing animals from the old country. We want an infusion of fresh blood into our stock. Being largely engaged in purchasing animals, I find it very difficult to get animals of the right stock; and, if we want our animals to maintain the position they hold in the British market, that can only be done by importing animals and mixing them with our stock. With respect to shipping our stock through United States ports, that will be a great advantage to every shipper. During the short time the regulations have been in existence, it has been possible to put cattle on the cars and send them to Boston for shipment to England at 27 shillings, as against 47 shillings by way of Montreal; and, although the regulations have been suspended for a short time, until proper accommodation can be provided for taking the animals from the cars to have them watered and fed, they will be continued again as soon as the proper accommodation is provided. With respect to freight rates, the farmers of the province of Ontario suffer severely. We are paying this year $60 for a car from Seaforth to Montreal, and the time has been when we could get it for 29 or 30 shillings. At the present time, a carload of cattle will be taken from Chicago to Montreal, a distance of 1,000 miles, as cheaply as from Seaforth to Montreal, a distance of a little over 300 miles. I hold that that is not just to the Canadian farmers, especially in view of the fact that we have spent large sums of public money in building railroads. Although the Grand Trunk Railway was subsidized by the Government, the municipalities through which it passes, contributed very large sums of money towards its construction. I hope the Government will take this matter into consideration, and see whether something cannot be done to obtain fair carrying rates from the different parts of the country to the seaboard, in the interest, not only of farmers, but millers, breeders and the public generally.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I desire to say a word, and only a word, with regard to the subject-matter of this report, which I confess I have read with a good deal of pleasure. I rise chiefly for the purpose of saying to the Minister of Agriculture, and to the gentlemen who now control the Government of Canada, that they will find—I think I can speak for all our friends on this side—very earnest and anxious helpers in any efforts they may make to provide cold storage accommodation for the farmers of Canada. We were in favour of that when we were upon the other side of the House, and I can, I think, with the full concurrence of members on this side, promise to any scheme which may be brought down, while reserving to ourselves the right to offer fair criticism as to the nature and details of that scheme, as enthusiastic support, provided it be for the advancement of the interests of the agriculturists of Canada, as we should have given it had it been introduced by ourselves. With regard to the quarantine regulations in the case of thoroughbred animals coming in from the United States, these regulations were regarded as necessary, in the first place, in order to protect the health of our own herds, and, in the second place, in order that we might retain as long as we had them, and regain when we lost them, those special privileges which, for some time, we enjoyed in the market of Great Britain. With all due respect to the statement made a short time ago by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), when addressing a second audience of farmers, my opinion is that the reason for keeping strictly these quarantine regulations has been practically removed.

Mr. McMILLAN.

The hon. Minister declared to an audience of farmers that he has not altogether given up hope of yet securing a removal of the restrictions in Great Britain upon Canadian cattle. I hope he is correct, but from conferences which I had personally with the President of the Board of Agriculture and other members of the British government, I am convinced that his hope is not well founded, and I am so convinced by the very reason that they are not able to give any tangible reason for the action they have taken. Public opinion in the great majority of districts in England is in favour of the Act which was recently passed, taking out of the hands of the Government the power of even relaxing these relations; but that public opinion is formed, not by the belief that Canadian herds are unhealthy, but because the people over there do not desire the importation of Canadian cattle into Great Britain to compete with the cattle produced in that country. I am convinced that that opinion is growing stronger. I know, from conversations with people in different parts of the United Kingdom, that they support the Government, not on account of the want of faith in the health of Canadian cattle, but because of the reason I have given, and which has been often suggested to this House. Then the question narrows itself down to what is required to protect the health of our cattle, and I take it for granted that should the Minister of Agriculture follow out the suggestion of the committee and relax the regulations, he will not relax them in such a way as will at all injure or endanger the health of our herds. This being guarded, I do not see any reason why those who want to purchase thoroughbred cattle on the other side, as well as those on our side who desire to sell their thoroughbred cattle to American breeders, should not be relieved of the restrictions which exist now provided the hon. gentleman formulates a plan—and I believe it can be done—by which the health of our cattle will not be interfered with.

Mr. DAVIN. I desire to say but very few words on this matter because my views have been expressed already pretty well by those who have preceded me. But I wish, in this connection, to say to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that the views which he has received so sympathetically have, for some time, occupied the attention of Parliament and of his predecessors. There is a subject that I may appropriately mention in connection with this report of the committee, and which I pressed upon the Minister's attention early in the session, and that is the extending of help to the creameries in the North-west. I hope that he will this session be able to carry out what I urged on him, and put a sum in the Estimates which are yet to come down to aid creameries in the way I have suggested. On the occasion when I proposed such aid before, it was suggested by a gentleman in this House, who professes to speak with a sort of aggressive authority for the North-west people, that I did not express the sentiments of the North-west. He got up and rather opposed my motion, but when the report of his remarks went up to the North-west Territories, the newspapers, which express the opinion of the Territories, did not support his view but mine. I do not bring this forward for the purpose of any controversy, but merely for the information of the hon. Minister, who, I think, has done everything he could and seems desirous of doing everything he can, to meet any proposals for the advantage of the people with which his department has to deal. I want to show him that I was expressing the opinion of the North-west, when I made the motion I did, and to which I cannot further refer. The papers of the North-west, some of them opposed to me, have endorsed my views. There is a paper almost bitterly opposed to me in the North-west Territories, namely, the "Regina Leader." There is no man in the North-west so opposed to me as the gentleman who now edits that paper which he purchased from me, with a strong clause in the contract that he would support me. Hon. gentlemen laugh, but it is one of the most dishonourable transactions in the history of human infamy. This is what this man says, in the "Leader" of the 17th September, 1896 :

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). How about an immoral consideration invalidating the contract ?

Mr. DAVIN. There was no consideration invalidating it. If it went into a court of justice I could get damages, but there would not be much in getting damages if you could not collect them. This is what the writer says, and I quote his article for the purpose of informing the hon. Minister. It is in defence of Mr. Oliver, and is headed :

OLIVER AND THE DAIRY INTEREST.

Several contemporaries have animadverted severely on the tone of Mr. Oliver's remarks in the House last week on Mr. Davin's resolution advising the voting of $20,000 to establish creameries in the North-west, and have interpreted his speech to mean that he opposes the idea of the Government aiding creameries.

No such meaning can possibly be attached to his words.

Now, this is what the editor of the "Leader" said. And then he quotes what Mr. Oliver said. And, having made some further excuses, he goes on—and this is what I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to, for my object, as I say, is not to refer to anything the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) may have said, because what he said was of very little importance to me personally :

It is, however, language which reveals that Mr. Oliver is not agreed with the majority of the advocates of creamery development upon a plan of action. And with all our admiration for Mr. Oliver and our confidence in him, we think he is mistaken in his views upon this matter. We are convinced that cows will follow the creamery just as people will follow the railroad. It is sometimes not a mistake to build a railway line to induce population, and, with proper caution, there can be no mistake in establishing creameries to induce dairy development. In Prof. Robertson's plan the proper caution is duly embodied, and by it Mr. Oliver's fear that factories might be started where patronage is impossible is fully met. The first stipulation in the plan is, when application is made for the loan, the ability to make a stated number of cows contributory to the proposed creamery must be shown.

Now, this is a paper published in the capital of the North-west Territories. It is a paper bitterly opposed to myself and very friendly to the hon. member for Alberta. That it should differ from that hon. gentleman at all and in any way support my contention shows that the public opinion amongst the readers of this paper forces the editor to do unwilling justice to the person, namely, myself, who moved that motion in regard to creameries. So I just bring it forward so that the hon. gentleman who is at the head of the department may know that the views I expressed on that occasion were the views at least of the Territories as understood by the writer in that paper, which is the leading paper of the North-west Territories.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that I should be dragged in as a party to taking up the time of the House at this late stage of the session, that I should assist the hon. gentleman in what he has been so busy at since he came here. It is really too bad that when he has talked to this House, and at this House, and to empty benches of this House, as often and as long as he has, that he should not be content with that but must read extracts from newspapers and apply his remarks to me in order to compel me to take up some of the time of the House, and thus make me guilty with him. I therefore apologize to the House for being put in that position, and I hope hon. members will justify me on the ground that it is not my fault but my misfortune—my misfortune, I suppose, to have the hon. gentleman as a colleague in the representation of the North-west, as it is a misfortune to the North-west to be represented by the hon. gentleman. As to the opinions of the newspaper, he says that the newspaper is bitterly opposed to him. I can only say that that is evidence of sound judgment on the part of the newspaper, a statement which will be accepted by gentlemen on both sides of the House. The newspaper understands to what extent he has represented public opinion in the North-west Territories in the past. If the fact that that newspaper differs from me to a slight extent is a proof that I have not represented the opinions of the North-west, the fact that it differs from him very widely is surely proof that he still more than myself does not represent the opinions of that region. However, in one way I am very thankful to the hon. gentleman for bringing this question up at the present time as it gives me an opportunity of removing any misapprehension that might exist as to the remarks I made in the House on the occasion referred to. If my remarks were interpreted as being in opposition to the Government assisting the creamery industry of the North-west Territories, I certainly failed utterly to express my idea. I think the first words I said when I spoke on that occasion should have set that matter right, as I then declared, if my memory is correct, that I supported assistance to the creamery industry in the North-west, but that I did not agree with the particular form of the assistance proposed by the hon. gentleman. His scheme was one, to my mind at least, that would not suit the part of the country that I represented, and, being in duty bound to represent the interests of that part of the country, I was bound to oppose the proposition. I do not claim to represent Western Assiniboia; I do not claim to represent any part of the Territories but Alberta. I do claim to represent Alberta, and I deny to any other hon. gentleman the right to speak for that section of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. That, Mr. Speaker, is what I understand I am here for.

Mr. MILLS. Better get a better understanding.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose the hon. gentlemen who "ha, ha," do not understand that they are here for the purpose of representing their constituencies—that is a matter they can settle with their constituents. We do not know upon what principle these gentlemen were elected, and it does not concern us. I understand that I represent the district of Alberta, and I deny the right of any hon. gentleman to represent that district. I speak for that district because I know, other hon. gentlemen do not know.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. Again, the hon. gentlemen laugh. I hope they enjoy the joke; I hope they understand it; I confess I do not.

An hon. MEMBER. You can't see it.

Mr. OLIVER. I certainly cannot. Their laughter reminds me of the—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Don't. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER—reminds me of the statement made by a noted Englishman that it required a surgical operation to get a joke into a Scotchman's head; and the reply was that that only applied to English jokes. Now, if hon. gentlemen will kindly allow me to proceed, if they will allow me to exercise the rights I have in this House, I will explain exactly where I stand on this question of assistance to creameries. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) made a proposition that would have absorbed $20,000 of the money of this country in establishing new creameries throughout the country. I say, from the knowledge I possess, that creameries have been established in the Territories that require a share of that assistance; and I am here to declare that principle and to maintain it in opposition to the "ha, ha," and lack of knowledge of gentlemen opposite. I maintain that where enterprising men have put their money into a creamery industry, and where, owing to the circumstances of the country, that industry has not been profitable, the enterprise that they have shown entitles them to as much consideration at the hands of the Government as should be shown to gentlemen who have shown no enterprise except to come here and ask for favours. But I do not agree to a proposition whereby $20,000 of the money of this country shall be taken to erect buildings and establish creamery industries here and there in the Territories, ignoring other sections which have spent more than $20,000 of their money in establishing these industries.

Mr. SPEAKER. Hon. gentlemen will be good enough not to interrupt the debate, because the hon. member who has the floor is a new member of this House. I do not think it is quite courteous in hon. gentlemen to do so.

Mr. OLIVER. I say that where gentlemen have put in their money into these enterprises, if the enterprise has failed, it is owing to no fault of their own, but owing to the conditions of the country being unfavourable at the moment, and owing to the scarcity of patronage for these creameries. Therefore, in opposing the hon. member's motion, I asked for assistance to these enterprises already established, so that they may be able to tide over the present difficulty until there is sufficient patronage in the country to keep them going. That is what I ask, and that is what I understand the Minister of Agriculture has agreed to. It is in support of that proposition that I opposed the hon. gentleman's motion, that would have prevented that, and would have given all the money that we propose to vote to another section of the country, and ignore that particular part of the country. In the district I represent there are six or seven creameries in operation, and there is a larger investment in the creamery industry than in all the rest of the Territories put together. It is not an experiment there to the same extent as it is in other places; people know what they are talking about in that country; they know where the shoe pinches them; and when I speak, I speak from knowledge, knowledge that we have acquired at our own expense. The hon. gentleman proposed that 400 cows shall be necessary to starting a creamery. Let me tell the hon. gentleman and the House that certain of these creameries have been started on a patronage of less than 400 cows, with 250 or 200 cows. In very few cases has it been possible to get 400 cows tributary to one creamery, or to one separating station. A scheme that requires the patronage of 400 cows before assistance will be given to a creamery, is one that is, to a large extent, impracticable in the part of the country where I live, as proved by experience, and is a scheme that will not be effectual. In reply to the charge that I have in any way opposed assistance to creameries in the North-west Territories, I want to say that I have not done so, but I have only demanded a fair division of the assistance that is to be offered by this Government to those creameries, an assistance which we expect from this Government, and which I believe will be received.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I do not rise to offer any great objection to this report, but merely to express my surprise that it does not recommend the establishment of abattoirs. In 1894 the Committee on Agriculture reported as follows:—

That it is advisable that substantial aid be granted to any company or companies who may undertake to establish and operate abattoirs and refrigerators in connection therewith, for the purpose of slaughtering, and the preservation of meats in a fresh condition for exportation.

I regret not to find in this report, with which I agree in the main, some such recommendation to the Government. I do not object to the Government giving aid to cold storage, but I think it would be better to add a sum of money to establish abattoirs, for in establishing abattoirs, cold storage will follow of itself. I know some objections have been made to such a proposal. I do not care who the parties are who take up this abattoir scheme, but I think the Government should grant them some assistance. One of the recommendations of this committee is:

The committee would recommend that the Government be requested to make provision in the Estimates for a sum of money sufficient to secure an efficient system of cold storage and transportation.

I should like to add that "and for abattoirs," because I say that unless you have a strong company to buy up cattle and sheep, and to buy up perishable articles of the farmer, a company that is able to transport them to cold storage, and unless you have also somebody on the other side of the water to dispose of these things, I think cold storage would be of little benefit to this country. I know that in Quebec and Montreal they have tried this cold storage system, that the farmers who have cattle and sheep, or turkeys to sell, are not to go to Quebec or Montreal to carry these goods to these cold storage houses, and to wait until they are sold. If a company is formed able to build an abattoir, it will be in the interest of that company to go around among the farmers and take up their cattle, their sheep, their butter, their eggs, &c., and bring them to the cold storage, and ship them to the other side, and have somebody there to dispose of it. I do not care who the men are who take up such a scheme, I do not care to whom the subsidy is given, but I think that unless an abattoir scheme is established in connection with this cold storage and transportation scheme, the country will not derive much benefit from it. I do not object strongly to the report, I think the recommendations are good, but I think the recommendation made by the preceding committee was better.

An hon. MEMBER. Next session.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Well, there are a great many things to be done next session. In the appendix to this report I am glad to find the following:—

A matter of no inconsiderable moment has been under consideration by the committee, viz., the establishment of abattoirs in different parts of the Dominion. The benefits which would accrue from them would be the utilization of every part of the animal when slaughtered, some of which now goes to waste, the canning of meats, which in parts of the United States has become a great industry, and the encouragement this would give the farmer to increase his herds, and to abandon a practice, now too prevalent, of killing his young stock because found unprofitable to bring to maturity. The committee has been impressed by the great value that such enterprises would be to the community, but thinking it wiser in seeking Government aid to err on the side of safety.

I do not think the committee would have erred in adding to that report that a certain sum should be granted to a company who would be willing to undertake the construction of abattoirs in connection with the cold storage business. I know parties who would be quite willing, for a reasonable subsidy, to establish an abattoir in connection with cold storage, or to establish each separately, and when we have both abattoir and cold storage, it will be necessary to start a fast freight line of steamers, and the whole country will be benefited by it. But although my views have not been adopted so far, I am not going to abandon them. I think next year I shall bring the matter up again, and although I believe that cold storage and transportation will be a benefit to the farmers, they would be benefited still more by the establishment of abattoirs.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, although I do not share in the views given expression to by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette), who states that if abattoirs were not established, cold storage would serve no purpose—

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) I did not say that.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) I understood the hon. gentleman to say—

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I did not say that the refrigerators without the abattoirs would be useless, but I stated that they would not be as useful to the country.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) At all events, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the recommendation made by the Committee on Agriculture with a view of securing cold storage on ocean steamships is of great importance, not only for the province which the hon. member for Montmagny comes from, but also for all the provinces of the Dominion. That is about the only means of transporting with profit our perishable agricultural products to the markets of the world. On that ground, I think the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the Government should take into their most earnest consideration the scheme propounded and so strongly advocated by my hon. friend from Montmagny. The farming community would be greatly benefited by the establishment of abattoirs, because it would enable the farmers to sell to the owners of those abattoirs their young stock now found unprofitable, as often stated, and which could be slaughtered at an age at which their meat cannot now be profitably sold on our market, owing to the small number of consumers in this country. Moreover, we have not got in Canada a sufficient number of consumers to buy all the meat which we could produce, and it is of importance that we should, by means of abattoirs or refrigerators, take the necessary steps to transport those products, preserved in good form, to the markets of the world.

I trust that the hon. Minister of Agriculture should be not see his way to come to a decision on the matter during this session, will take the matter into his most serious consideration and carry out the scheme advocated by my hon. friend from Montmagny. I hope that he will take the scheme into his most serious consideration with a view of bringing to maturity, efficacious measures and see whether it will not be within his power, at the next session of Parliament, to seize the House with a scheme calculated to carry out the recommendation of the Agriculture Committee to transport part of the perishable products of the farming community, which in the actual state of our market, cannot be profitably disposed of.

I hope that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will take into his earnest consideration the scheme propounded by the hon. member for Montmagny for the establishment of abattoirs in any part of the province of Quebec, whether at Quebec, at Lévis, or at any other place; I hope, I say, that the hon. gentleman, while fully awake to the importance of the question for the farming community of this country, will take all necessary steps to ascertain whether the scheme can be carried out; and I hope that the conclusion may be reached that not only is the scheme practicable, but that it can be successfully carried out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Mr. Speaker, not wishing at all to delay the adoption of this report, I will only say a few words on this occasion. The recommendations of the report strongly accord with my own desires, and I may say, also, with the desires of my colleagues in the Government. I can assure the House that the report and the recommendations in it are entirely in harmony with what the Government wish to carry out. I think I may say that the House will find that the Government is ready to propose such means as may be necessary to accomplish the ends herein indicated. I shall not now go into the details of the matter. My remarks in this regard apply to the question of cold storage.

Now, with reference to the quarantine regulations which are referred to in the report. I understand that the anxious desire of our people is that we should obtain entry into the American market for our thoroughbred animals, and that in that, and along with that, we should obtain recognition of our own records from the American Government and the American association. This is indeed a very important item, and one without the other would be of comparatively little value to our breeders of thoroughbred stock. I would point out, however, that this is a matter of negotiation with a foreign country, and one in which our Government has not complete control. I have reason to believe that the American authorities are ready to meet us on common ground in this matter, and, this being the case, I trust we may be able to accomplish what this report aims at. I need not say that in that matter I will be only too glad to do my best to carry out these recommendations.

The reference in the report to quarantine is of great importance, but it is not dealt with to the same extent as the other questions. I refer to the regulations for carrying our animals through the United States for European export. I must warn hon. gentlemen that this is somewhat complicated by the fact of reciprocal demands on the other side, that American cattle may be carried through Canada for shipment from Canadian to European ports. The question has, therefore, to be considered and dealt with in the light of such reciprocal arrangements. This involves a little more than the recommendation that this report points to. It is possible, after careful consideration and while guarding the interests of our own people, that it may be advisable to negotiate for such reciprocal advantages as I have indicated. I do not pledge myself to it until I have had every opportunity of investigating what it might lead to, but I wish to point out that the privileges that our people are asking for in the United States will probably have to be offset by similar privileges extended by us to United States shippers of cattle.

Now, with regard to the abattoir scheme which has been suggested. I wish to point out this, that, while the report does not make any recommendations distinctly in favour of assistance being given to abattoir companies, cold storage is a necessary part of any scheme for abattoirs, and any assistance given to cold storage is so far an assistance to anybody who wishes to undertake abattoir work in the country. It, therefore, is practically an assistance to abattoirs indirectly, if not directly. At the same time, the assistance to cold storage includes the greater assistance to the other industries which are concerned, and does not make a special mark for the one particular industry. In reply to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I may say that, while, probably, the remarks made about creameries in the North-west are out of order in discussing this report, which does not refer to the matter, yet I will say that the hon. gentleman may be sure that I have not forgotten the promise I made to the House the other evening with reference to this question, and that the assistance to creameries in the North-west is under the serious consideration of the Government, and I trust may be carried out.

Motion agreed to, and report concurred in.

CAPE CROKER INDIAN BAND—MEDICAL ATTENDANCE.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to call the attention of my hon. friend the Prime Minister to a circumstance which has occurred in connection with the Cape Croker band of Indians. The services of Dr. Fisher, who has been the medical attendant upon that band—and who is a gentleman of the very highest standing in his profession, being coroner, and being examiner of the Toronto College of Dentistry—have been dispensed with. A Dr. Jimby, of Wlarton, is, I understand, about to be appointed in his place. I wish to say that I am not making any kind of a charge against the Department, or the acting Minister, or any of the officials concerned, but I want to call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) to the fact that I have been informed, upon authority which I deem to be very reliable, that there are some very grave charges in connection with Dr. Jimby, and, if my information is correct, I think he is really not such a person as should be appointed to a position of this kind. Before the matter goes further, I would beg that my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) would be kind enough to have some investigation made as to the charges to which I have referred. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) so desires, I will communicate and specify those charges to him.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). Mr. Speaker, the information just given by my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) is of a serious nature, but he will himself realize that it is of such a general character that no departmental action could be taken on it. If the hon. gentleman is so kind, as he has just intimated, as to particularize the charges which are brought to bear against the new appointee, I will be very glad to take action in the matter.

SUPPLY—TARIFF LEGISLATION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise, Sir, before the House goes into Committee of Supply, to make the following motion:—

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following added instead thereof:—"having regard to the promises of the leaders of the Liberal party while in Opposition, and the consequent expectations raised; That in 1893 the leading members of the present Government and the Liberal party, including Messrs. Laurier, Mulock, Davies, Sutherland and others, to the number of 51 supporters, voted for the proposition 'That it is expedient to place binding twine on the free list'; That candidates of the Hon. the Prime Minister in Manitoba and the North-west promised that should he get into power he would place binder twine and agricultural implements and coal oil on the free list; That hopes to this effect have consequently been excited; witness that, at a representative meeting of the Rockwood Liberal Association, held on the 15th August, 1896, at Stonewall, a resolution of confidence in the Hon. Wilfred Laurier and his Government having passed, a resolution was passed in favour of placing binder twine, coal oil, barbed wire and nails on the free list; that, therefore, in the opinion of this House, when revision of the tariff is made the Government is bound in honour to place agricultural implements, binder twine and coal oil on the free list."

I move this, seconded by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd). It is unnecessary that I should take up the time of the House with any lengthy remarks in support of this motion, because we have had the opinions of leading members of the Government in regard to the matters set forth in it. In moving this, I am endorsed by my constituents, and am fulfilling their desires and wishes in the matter. It is unnecessary that I should do more, in proposing the motion, than to refer to the earnest advocacy of the matter referred to in it, by members of the Government, and by their supporters, especially the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson).

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I understand that there is a protest in Western Assiniboia, and that in the near future there are certain probabilities, especially as my hon. friend's majority is not large. We have, therefore, the explanation of this motion. Whatever may be the merits of the proposition to place agricultural implements, coal oil, binder twine, etc., on the free list—and it is a question which is debatable, and upon which parties on either side may have views—I want to ask my hon. friend if he seriously thinks that the House is to give notice, six months in advance, of what changes should be made in a revision of the tariff. The proposition is so preposterous that the hon. gentleman cannot expect that his motion will be carried.

Mr. DAVIN. The same thing would apply to the speeches of the hon. Postmaster General when he made those motions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman having mentioned my name, I wish to say that I am with him heartily in the desire to secure the placing of binder twine, coal oil and agricultural implements on the free list. I believe it is desirable, in the interests of the North-west, that these articles should be placed on the free list, as well as other important commodities required by the farmers of that country. But I can see the object the hon. gentleman has in bringing in this motion at this particular time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As the hon. First Minister has said, there is a by-election pending in Western Assiniboia, and the hon. gentleman hopes to be able to retain his majority of one. In fact, it is scarcely a majority of one, because the majority is the casting vote of the returning officer. Now, I do not propose to yield to any member of this House in my desire to have these articles placed on the free list; but I am here to say that I think a motion introduced at this time, is introduced for no other purpose than that—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not finished my sentence yet, and if it should be out of order, perhaps I had better not finish it. However, the introduction of this resolution at this time looks to me to be a mere matter of annoyance; and, while I propose to use my very best endeavours to see that the pledges I have made to the electors of the rural constituency of Lisgar are carried out, I do not think I would be voting in the interest either of my constituents or the country if I voted for that resolution, because if I did so, I might assist the hon. gentleman's return to this House in the next by-election, and I am sure the country would never forgive me if I did that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I do not intend to occupy the attention of the House more than a moment; but inasmuch as my name has been mentioned by my hon. friend who moved this amendment, I wish to congratulate the House and the country upon the progress the hon. gentleman is making in matters affecting the economics of Canada. In 1891 I did present to the House for its consideration the following motion:—

That binding twine be placed upon the free list.

And I endeavoured, unsuccessfully, to secure a majority in the House in favour of that proposition. Eighty gentlemen did vote in favour of it; 100 voted against it. One of the noble hundred was the hon. gentleman who has moved this amendment.

Mr. CRAIG. I should not detain the House at this moment on this resolution but for the fact that in the town where I live there is a binding twine factory; and I want to say, in case the yeas and nays are not taken on this resolution, and it might be thought that I would vote in favour of it, that I should vote against it. I do not want the Government to imagine for one moment that I think they are bound, either in honour or in any other way, to make binding twine free. I do not want binding twine made free. I think that would be an unfortunate thing for the country. I do not think it would at all reduce the price to the farmers, and I think it would have the effect of closing up the factories of this country.

Hale,

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) has not voted.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the hon. member in the House when the question was put?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER. On which side does the hon. gentleman desire to have his vote recorded?

Mr. ROGERS. For the amendment.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for West Bruce (Mr. Tolmie) has not voted.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the hon. gentleman in the House when the question was put?

Mr. TOLMIE. I was.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then the hon. gentleman must declare whether he votes for or against the amendment.

Mr. TOLMIE. For the amendment.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Pettet) has not voted.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the hon. gentleman in the House when the question was put?

Mr. PETTET. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman vote for or against the amendment?

Mr. PETTET. For the amendment.

Mr. BOURASSA. The hon. member for Halifax has not voted.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am paired with my hon. colleague (Mr. Borden), otherwise I should have voted against the amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Russell has not voted.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am paired with the hon. member for St. Antoine Division, Montreal (Mr. Roddick).

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has not voted.

Mr. CHARLTON. I was paired with Sir Charles Tupper. Had I voted, I should have voted against the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In this connection I should say to the House that pairs made are made on Government questions and do not count on a question like this unless made between the two members on the particular question.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course I have to take the member's statement.

THE SHORTIS CASE.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we go into Supply, I wish to call the attention of the House to a matter which is of some importance. Last year papers were asked for and granted in the very important case of Valentine Shortis. Those that came down were printed in English, naturally. Afterwards I asked that they should be translated from English into French, and in the French translation, I find that one of the most important letters, a letter from the then Minister of Justice, was not properly translated. The letter is as follows:—

Department of Justice,
Ottawa, 24th Dec., 1895.

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council.

The undersigned has the honour to submit the report of Mr. Justice Mathieu upon the case of Francis Valentine Cuthbert Shortis, recently convicted at Beauharnois of murder and sentenced to be executed on Friday the third day of January next, together with the record of the proceedings had and the evidence given at the trial; also several petitions, letters and other communications urging the commutation of the death sentence, and generally all the correspondence touching the case.

Upon careful consideration of the whole, the undersigned has the honour to recommend that the law be allowed to take its course.

Humbly submitted,
CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER, Minister of Justice.

In the French translation, the last paragraph of the letter is omitted. I bring to the attention of the House, therefore, this fact, that the French translation is not a faithful reproduction of the original. I may say that I do not attach any blame to anybody for that, because I have no doubt that the translator made this omission purely and simply without intention to do so. Although, as every hon. gentleman will understand, it is of the greatest importance, as far as I was concerned, during my election, because I may say, the election in my county was fought simply upon that case. Another thing to which I would like to call the attention of Parliament, and particularly of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), is a remark which was made, and at the time, and which I think was unjust towards that hon. gentleman, and it is this, which appears in this letter in English :

Upon careful consideration of the whole, the undersigned has the honour to recommend that the law be allowed to take its course.

Which was omitted from the French translation. Another document brought down reads like this :

The Governor General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

I have been expressly requested by the Minister of Justice to ask opinion on following position :—

Valentine Shortis was sentenced to death for murder. Cabinet was equally divided upon consideration of petitions on Tuesday. No advice was, therefore, forthcoming to Governor General, without which, according to instructions, he cannot act. If no intervention were to take place, execution would be carried into effect January third. In view, however,—

That is the part which, I think, throws a shadow, if I may use the word, upon the report of the ex-Minister of Justice :

In view, however, of equal vote he recognizes now that his course might be liable to objection. I may add that the judge's confidential report on the whole favours commutation. I concur.

ABERDEEN.

I have communicated with the authorities of the House, and the Clerk has taken upon himself to have the translation of the English portion put into the French book, at least in those that remain, because a great many are distributed. This is a most important matter considering the consequences it might have had ; and I hope that in the future, in any case of that sort the greatest possible care will be taken, for any one will understand the consequences that might flow from such a bad translation. As far as my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice is concerned, I think it only an act of justice to give him the opportunity to say whether this letter is correct or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) was good enough to tell me that he intended to refer to this subject. There is only one portion of his observations that makes it necessary for me to say a word or two. The account which he gives of the subject places me in rather an awkward position, and I recognized that such a thing might follow when this blue-book was brought down. I was not a member of the Government when these papers were prepared and laid upon the Table, and I had never seen until I saw it in print, the telegram from His Excellency to the Colonial Office. Not agreeing with the statement of the case as it appeared, I took the opportunity of asking the Governor General for permission to make a statement should the subject come up in Parliament at any time ; and, so that there should be no misunderstanding in the matter, I submitted a draft statement to His Excellency, and when the hon. member for Beauharnois told me that he intended to refer to this subject to-day, I looked up this memorandum. If any one who has followed the matter cares to examine the correspondence, he will see that while I recommended that the law should take its course as Minister of Justice, I am almost made to appear to have hastened to Government House with some other view ; and that is so far from being a full representation of the facts that I desire to read a statement which places the matter in a better light. In order to prevent any misconception regarding my own position, in relation especially to the telegram from His Excellency to the Colonial Secretary, I wish to say (I have obtained the necessary assent to the making of a statement of this nature) that, although in the first instance, I considered that in view of the fact that the Cabinet had not tendered advice to the Governor General, it would be open to His Excellency to use his discretion in the matter, yet after examining the royal instructions as amended, I came to the conclusion, and so informed His Excellency, that in my opinion the proper course under the circumstances would be that the Governor General should allow the law to take its course, and recommended His Excellency if he had any doubt in the matter, to communicate with Her Majesty's Government. To some the difference between this statement and the record may appear slight, but, at all events, it exculpates me from the position in which to one closely reading the papers I would appear to stand, of tendering one opinion in Council for His Excellency, and tendering another to His Excellency. No one in the House, I think, would think that was characteristic of me, and I think the statement I have made would put an end to any doubt of that character that might arise in the minds of hon. gentleman.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would ask the indulgence of the committee while the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) is present. While I was not in the House reference was made to the case of St. Louis and the Queen, and the Minister of Railways is reported to have said that a good deal of facility was afforded to this gentleman to get his case before the court, it being inferred that as a consequence, judgment was secured against the Crown. The hon. member for Verchères (Mr. Geoffrion) is also present, I am glad to see. I have simply to make this statement in regard to the matter, which, I am sure, the Minister of Railways will accept: I was Minister of Justice at that time, and so far from my department or myself individually offering any facility to Mr. St. Louis, nothing was further from the fact. The then Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) was instructing us, and his instructions permitted of no indulgence being considered so far as Mr. St. Louis was concerned. I did take this responsibility—and it is probably to something of the kind that the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) had reference—the hon. member for Verchères was counsel for Mr. St. Louis. He had contested a by-election, and about the time the papers for the appeal from the judgment of the Exchequer Court should have been made out, meeting me, he asked me, as Minister of Justice, not to take advantage of any delay of a few days that had occurred in that connection, and mentioned, what was, of course, apparent, that the responsibility of that delay was his. Without hesitation I agreed to that, and undertook that responsibility as one barrister, or counsel, acting with another. I think my position was not in any sense changed by being Minister of Justice, but I extended to him that courtesy which one counsel at the bar would extend to another. That is the only fact that would warrant any statement being made that facilities had been given to Mr. St. Louis. Otherwise, we pressed the case as earnestly as possible, and the judge of the Exchequer Court, so I was informed,—I was not acting immediately before that court, but the learned and hon. member was acting there—and I was informed by counsel for the Crown that the judge of the Exchequer Court declined to go on with the case of the Crown against St. Louis until the case of St. Louis, which had been first conducted before him, had been finally settled and determined, as incidentally it bore upon the case of the Crown against St. Louis. So that the case is free from any entanglement or any difficulty of the kind suggested by the language that was brought to my attention to-day; and I spoke of it, both to the Minister of Railways and the member for Verchères (Mr. Geoffrion) before making this statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I do not profess any particular familiarity with the circumstances connected with this litigation. I have not made any inquiry into them; but I was stating what I believed,—at all events until the hon. member made this statement—and there was a general impression on this side of the House, at least, to that effect, that facilities had been offered to the plaintiff in that suit which had not been offered to the Crown in the other suit brought by the Crown against St. Louis. I had not in my mind at all the idea that the ex-Minister of Justice had any improper understanding at all with the plaintiff. I had not associated him in my mind with the proceedings in the remarks I made to the committee; and I have now no hesitation whatever in accepting unreservedly the statement the hon. gentleman has made.

Lachine Canal—To complete the electric light station ..... $3,500

Mr. REID. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to the fact that all the canals, the Lachine, the Beauharnois and the Grenville, I understand, have electric lights, but we have no electric lights on the Galops Canal. I think it is necessary, and I hope the hon. gentleman will see his way to give a few electric lights along that canal. It is only ten miles long.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I would not like to give the hon. member an assurance to the effect that he desires, at all events, until I have been able to give some personal attention to the state of matters, and to the reasonableness of the request. I have been myself unable, perhaps it may be due to absence of knowledge on my part, to see the propriety of incurring so large an amount of expense in establishing these plants for lighting the canals by electricity. Possibly there can be no doubt of the propriety of that expenditure. My view may be the outcome of the want of knowledge on the subject, but I should be very sorry to enter into any undertaking for a further expenditure in this direction, beyond completing pending works, without satisfying myself that the expenditure is justifiable. I shall be glad to look into the case of the Galops Canal, but the fact that it had been found necessary to make these large outlays for the purpose of lighting the other canals would constitute a strong reason why it should be done in the case the hon. member has named.

Beauharnois Canal—To improve channel at upper and lower entrance ..... $3,000

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the Minister what kind of works are contemplated at the entrance of the channel?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There is a report, which I have no doubt is correct, that there are shoals, both at the upper and lower entrances, which require to be removed, and it is for that purpose this appropriation is asked.

Mr. BERGERON. Last winter some work was done at the foot of the canal, for which the then Minister asked $700 last session, which was not voted. I hope that amount is comprised in this $3,000. The work was done at that time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am under the impression that the particular work that the hon. gentleman alludes to, was covered by an appropriation in the main Estimates. This is an appropriation for work which has not yet been commenced, but which, I am advised, is very necessary.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad of that, because there is no question that there is an obstruction particularly at the foot of the canal, which impedes navigation. There is a good deal of work to be done there. Not only are there boulders to be removed, but I think that even the piers on which the vessels have to throw their lines when they are waiting at the lock, are in a very dilapidated condition.

Trent Canal—To build a fishway at Lindsay ..... $500

Mr. BENNETT. I am sure that to the many constituencies interested along the route of the Trent Valley Canal, the absence of a tangible appropriation will be greatly regretted; and I cannot but think that the absence of a large amount with which to proceed with the construction of that canal, is not due to the hon. members for South Victoria (Mr. Hughes), East Peterborough (Mr. Lang), and East Hastings (Mr. Hurley), because, as they are all supporters of the Administration, I have no doubt that they have pressed upon the Minister of Railways, as well as upon the whole Government, the necessity for a very substantial appropriation in this regard. It is quite true that in the general Estimates for the year, a fairly considerable amount is appropriated, but when it is borne in mind that this is in respect to work already undertaken, and work the contracts for which have already been let, it is disappointing to find that the policy of the Government is different from that of the late Administration. The Minister of Railways and Canals may not, perhaps, be aware of the fact that within the past five years, year in and year out, large deputations have waited upon the Government of the day, pressing upon them the advisability of the construction at an early day of the Trent Valley Canal. That work has been pressed on, not as one of local interest, but as a work of great national importance, because the construction of this canal means a cheap and direct transport for the grain from the North-west and from the Western States to the port of Montreal. As there are other gentlemen who are interested in the early completion of this canal, I do not propose to discuss the whole route now, but I will ask the hon.

Mr. BLAIR.

Minister (Mr. Blair), even at this late stage, even after hon. gentlemen who live along the route of the canal and represent constituencies along that route, have failed to secure from him an appropriation—I must assume that they have pressed to the very best of their ability that a large appropriation should be made—even at this late stage I would ask the Minister to place in the Supplementary Estimates which are yet to be brought down, an amount of money sufficient to complete the section between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe. There is now in course of construction between these two points some five miles, and nine miles further are required to complete that most important section. While we may not hope to see a vote asked for this year to complete the portion between Georgian Bay and Lake Simcoe, it will certainly be an intense disappointment to those interested in the canal if that large section which will be in part completed early in the coming year, between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe, is to be permitted to remain in a useless condition for the want of communication to connect it with the waters of Lake Simcoe. There is also a large portion of the work under construction between Lakefield and Peterborough, the expenditure in respect to which will, I understand, approximate some four or five hundred thousand dollars. I press upon the Minister of Railways and Canals my request, and the request of my constituents, that even at this late date the further Supplementary Estimates will contain a sufficient sum to complete the division between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe. It is true that a vote of $500 is asked for some trivial work at Lindsay, but that does not interest those who are concerned in the construction of the canal. After all these large expenditures that have been made in the past, and notwithstanding that a million dollars' worth of work is now under contract, if we are to be told now by the Ministry that the whole work is to be abandoned, it will be a matter of great regret to the people of that section of the country. It cannot be said that it is because of lack of money that the balance of that division is not now placed under contract, because, if my memory serves me right, the sum necessary to complete the work between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe would be only $300,000. Further, I notice in these Supplementary Estimates which we are now considering, that thousands and tens of thousands of dollars are being voted for improvements to docks, and piers, which can only be regarded as local works. Are we to be told by the Government, with these works under contract on the canal, and a great portion of the canal constructed—because nature has done a great deal in that regard—that this whole scheme is to be dropped? I trust that the efforts of hon. gentlemen who may not be in political accord with the Government, but who have interested themselves successfully with past Governments—I trust that their efforts, united with the efforts of hon. gentlemen who support the Government, and whose constituencies adjoin this canal, may have sufficient weight to cause the Minister of Railways and Canals to place in the Estimates this year an appropriation sufficient to complete the canal from Balsam Lake to Lake Simcoe. I hope that this fall, if time will permit, the hon. Minister (Mr. Blair) may be pleased to give some personal supervision to this great work, by going over the route himself. If the Minister will do so—and I have no doubt he will, owing to the importance of the project—I feel confident that next session he will come here convinced that the work should be carried on even at a faster rate than it has been carried on in the past. It has been the opinion of past Governments that this work should be carried to a speedy consummation, and I trust that the absence of a large amount in the present estimate may not be regarded as an intimation on the part of the present Government that the work is to be abandoned. I hope to hear the Minister state that it is the intention of the Government, for the next two, or even three years, to place such sufficiently large sums in the Estimates as to complete the work in its entirety, and to make that canal what it was destined to be, and what it will be when completed, an important national waterway from Lake Huron to Lake Ontario.

Mr. HUGHES. Before the Minister replies to the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), I would like to ask him: is section No. 2 of the Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe division to be proceeded with at once, or is it to remain in abeyance another year? I would respectfully draw the attention of the Minister to a very important item which I regret the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. McHugh) has not insured would be placed in the Estimates. I refer to a sum of $5,000 which was in last year's Estimates, for the purpose of clearing the River Scugog between Lindsay and Sturgeon Lake. If the Minister visits that locality—and I trust he will—he will find that occasionally hardwood logs have sunk in that river and have materially interfered with its navigation. There was also an item of $11,500 placed in the Estimates by the late Government, which has been removed from these Estimates. It was for a log-slide at Fenelon Falls, in order to facilitate the navigation of the Fenelon River between Cameron Lake and Sturgeon Lake. This river, about three-quarters of a mile long, is rendered completely useless for the greater part of the season, owing to the fact of a large number of logs jamming it, and preventing steamers from passing up and down. There is a report in the Canals Department, stating that a log-slide should be constructed there at a small cost, and which would facilitate the passage of the logs through that river. It is not my intention to say anything further with regard to the canal, but I wish to know from the Minister if the second section of Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe division is to be completed this year. The land is all purchased, surveys all made, and everything is ready for the work to be proceeded with. It will not cost $300,000, as stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett), and, if completed, it would give us communication from the head of the Lake Couchiching right down to Campbellford. That would leave but a few miles between Campbellford and Trenton on Bay of Quinté to be completed. I express the hope that, during this fall, the Minister will be pleased to visit that country, and I am satisfied that the members along the route, whether they are of his political complexion or not, will be glad to offer him every facility in their power.

Mr. McHUGH. I may say, in reference to the construction of the Trent Canal, and the improvements of navigation along that route, that I have had the pleasure of interviewing the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) in reference to that particular work. I am pleased to find, in regard to these improvements in that section of the country, that I am going to have the assistance of hon. gentlemen who sit on the opposition side of the House. I know that they are just as much interested as I am in the progress of the country in general. The improvement of the means of navigation is a matter in which the whole country is interested, and in which we should all agree. I entirely approve of the course which the hon. Minister told me he was going to take in this matter, namely, to pay a visit to that section of the country at as early a day as possible, look over the ground, examine into the advantages of this system of navigation, and see where the public money can be expended to the best advantage. I told the hon. Minister, when he made that statement to me, that I was perfectly satisfied with it; and I would leave the matter in his hands; all I would ask him to do, until he had that opportunity, was to appropriate what was necessary for such work as could not wait until that time.

Mr. KENDRY. I am very glad to be able to speak to-day on behalf of the work that has been undertaken in connection with the Trent Valley Canal. Up to the present time there has been, as hon. gentlemen are aware, a great deal of money spent on that canal, and I am very glad to be able to support the hon. gentleman who has spoken (Mr. McHugh), in the view that unless the Government appropriate a sufficient amount to complete the works already undertaken, the country will get no benefit from the expenditure. I am very glad the matter has been brought up, and I hope the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will see his way clear to putting a sufficient amount in the Supplementary Estimates to continue those works. As suggested by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, I would be very glad if the hon. Minister would visit the work, and see for himself the necessity that exists of continuing it. I would like to ask him how much money has been spent upon the canal up to the present time. I would be glad to do what I can to support the Government in any appropriation they may make to further this canal. When the Minister goes over the ground, I am sure he will find that the money expended on this work has been well spent, and that a further amount should be appropriated to continue it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think I ought to allow the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), who first called attention to this subject, to entertain the belief, or expectation, that there would be any further grant asked for, in the Supplementary Estimates yet to be brought down, for the prosecution of this work. He is quite correct in assuming that the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Lang), and other hon. members interested in that section of the country, have very strongly urged the claims of this work upon my consideration; but I did not feel, when preparing the Estimates for presentation to this House, that I would be free to ask the House to enter upon any very large expenditures upon public works in respect to the wisdom or prudence of which I had not an opportunity of exercising my own judgment. The amounts in the main Estimates were for the execution of contracts already entered into. I had no other alternative than to ask Parliament for the means of completing those works which had been contracted for. But the question of entering upon any undertakings, even if those undertakings might be in continuation of works partially carried out, would be a question on which we would have to take responsibility. I felt that if I recommended to Council the approval of appropriations for the prosecution of work on other portions of this canal, I would be expected by the members of this House to say that I had applied my own judgment to the expenditure, and approved of them. Now, I am not prepared at this moment to say that the continuation or the prosecution of this work, to the extent to which the hon. member for East Simcoe has urged, could not very properly be approved. I am in no position to say whether the hon. gentleman's judgment on that point would harmonize with mine or not; but I am prepared to say that I shall take the earliest opportunity, before Parliament shall meet again, to look over the whole matter. I am not unaware of the fact that there is a very great difference of opinion as to the wisdom of Parliament in having embarked upon this undertaking; and if it has been an unwise action on the part of Parliament, surely it is the part of prudence for us to stop at the earliest possible moment at which we can stop. If the work cannot be justified on its merits, if it was unwisely initiated, then I think the public judgment would approve of the Government taking the responsibility of telling Parliament that we would withhold any further appropriation in prosecution of it. I am not prejudiced on the subject; I have not formed any judgment one way or the other, nor has the Government. I say, speaking for myself personally, that I can bring an open mind to its consideration; and if, upon a careful examination of the work and a careful consideration of its claims and merits, I should be satisfied that I ought to ask Council to further prosecute the undertaking, the hon. gentleman will doubtless find in the Estimates submitted in another year a sum for that purpose. But I cannot, as I said at the outset, hold out any assurance to him at the present time that it will be done. The hon. gentleman who last addressed the committee asked to be informed as to the amount that had been already expended on the Trent Valley Canal. I am informed that down to the 30th of June, 1895, there had been expended in round figures, $54,000; at the end of June, 1896, that amount had been increased by $393,000; making about $450,000 in all. In the main Estimates which have already been adopted, we have been authorized to expend a further sum of $500,000 on the work. That is in execution of contracts which have been already agreed to. Beyond that we have not asked any authority from Parliament.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the hon. Minister to kindly give his attention to the suggestion I made to appropriate about $5,000 for clearing the River Scugog from Lindsay to Sturgeon Lake. It is absolutely necessary, for steamers cannot pass up and down with safety.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Possibly my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) has in his mind the work which has been undertaken by the provincial government of Ontario.

Mr. HUGHES. Not at all. I understand it thoroughly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a small item which we are going to present to the House with respect to some further work on the Scugog River.

It being Six o'clock, the committee rose and the Speaker left the Chair.

Trent Canal—To build a fishway at Lindsay ..... $500

Mr. BENNETT. I heard with regret the announcement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that it was not the intention of the Government to carry out what they had for years advocated while in opposition, or, at any rate, what they had certainly acquiesced in, and that was the adoption of the principle that this Trent Valley Canal should be carried to a completion at an early date. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the debates of last year, he will find that, when the large contracts which were then announced to be let—two contracts, each approximating half a million dollars, namely, the section between Lakefield and Peterborough, and the portion between Lake Simcoe and Balsam Lake—hon. gentlemen opposite then offered no resistance or demur to such grants being made or contracts being entered into. Not only that, but, from time to time, it was openly advocated in this House by supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, that this work should be carried out, and, in this connection, I particularly refer to Mr. Barron, who had the honour of representing North Victoria in this House some five years ago. If I understood the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals rightly, his position in the matter was this, that he brought to the subject an unbiassed and unprejudiced opinion, that he had not looked into the matter until recently, and was not conversant with the proposition of constructing this canal, but that, being affected by reports which he heard, opposed to the construction of this canal, he was at present, while not impressed against it, by no means in favour of it. Let me say, in reply, in the first place, that the construction of this work has been before Parliament for a great many years, that on all occasions it has had no opposition from hon. gentlemen opposite, that, moreover, within the past ten years large deputations have from time to time, irrespective of politics, pressed upon the Government the early completion of this work. Even at the risk of wearying the House, I shall go briefly into a description of the enterprise, as it has in the past been depicted, and on which representations the Government have been pleased, from time to time, to make large appropriations, which have always been endorsed by hon. gentlemen opposite. The canal is not by any means wholly an artificial way, because there are large stretches of natural waterways utilized in its construction. There is, first Lake Simcoe, which is a very considerable sheet of water. Then, there is Cameron Lake, a lake of very considerable extent. When you pass Cameron Lake and Rice Lake, you find a waterway infinitely superior to the Erie Canal, with which this canal has often been contrasted. If it is borne in mind that at present all grain carried from the northern lakes, from Port Arthur and Chicago, is carried either to Kingston or Buffalo, then it must be seen that the completion of this work would mean a much shorter route than either of the other two. By passing down this chain of lakes and rivers, through central Ontario, one arrives at the town of Trenton, and from there grain would be carried on further to the port of Montreal. The interchange of grain would be made at some point on the Georgian Bay. On the other hand, if the other route be pursued, the route by way of Lake Erie and St. Clair, then there is a change at Buffalo into canal boats of even smaller dimensions than the boats which would ply this proposed route. The hon. gentleman, being open to conviction as to the feasibility or desirability of the canal, and the hon. gentleman knowing, as he will by reference to his colleagues, that they have in the past approved of the large expenditure that has been made, surely it cannot be anticipated that, after this large expenditure of a million dollars has been made, after mile upon mile of waterways have been brought together by the construction of the locks, he will allow the whole thing to be thrown back on the country and abandoned. If he objects on the plea of expenditure, then I can only say that the Estimates which have been brought down, certainly contain large expenditures in respect of works which are of a purely local character, such as the improvement of harbours by dredging, the construction and improvement of docks at different points, and it would be better public policy and manifestly better in the public interests that a large grant should be given to go on with this canal, especially as so large an amount has been expended on it already. May I, therefore, ask that the hon. Minister of Railways, who brings to this question an unprejudiced opinion, will consult with his colleagues, and even now, in the remaining days of the session, be pleased to recommend in the extra supplementary Estimates a grant of at least $200,000 to complete the section between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe, which has not yet been let for tender? The approaching season of the year is one that will be particularly adapted for work of this nature. I may tell the hon. gentleman also that in that portion of the country, owing to the fact that very little business is being done in the lumber woods this year, there is a large number of unemployed men who could be utilized in a work of this kind. If this portion of the work is let under contract between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe, the result will be the completion of the work in its entirety from all points on Lake Simcoe to the town of Peterborough, and, while that will not have the effect of promoting or stimulating the grain traffic from the upper to the lower lake, it will have the effect of opening up through the back townships a large portion of country that at present is served by one railway company alone. At Peterborough, Barrie and Orillia and other towns along the route there are large tanneries; and if access can be had to the back townships, the work of taking out tannery bark and timber will be greatly stimulated. I trust that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, seeing that his colleagues have in the past acquiesced in and approved this expenditure, and seeing that such a large amount has already been spent, will not drop the work at this time, but that a sufficient amount will be placed in the Estimates for this year to ensure the completion of the work through to Lake Simcoe. I trust that hon. gentlemen who are politically in accord with the hon. Minister will press this matter to a speedy completion, and not be content with trifling grants for mere intermediate and local matters, such as the only estimate relating to this work that we now have before us.

Mr. ROGERS. I have no personal knowledge about the matter, but I desire to communicate to the House a view of this matter that was given to me on pretty good authority. The history of the Trent Valley Canal is pretty well known throughout the country, and the general feeling is that it involves a nearly worthless expenditure of public money. I was speaking with a gentleman who had taken a prominent part in the political contests in one of the counties on the route of this canal, but whose name I will not mention unless I am obliged to do so. It was felt that the constituency would go against the Government, and a number of the leading gentlemen gathered at Peterborough to consider what scheme they could put forward to carry that constituency. It struck them that if they could bring some influence to bear upon the Government and induce them to promise a certain amount of money for this canal, they might carry the riding. They themselves laughed at the idea of the scheme being of any use, but they thought they would try the effect of it politically. They formed a deputation and came to Ottawa and secured a grant of money; and, on the strength of the great boom that was to come to that section of the country and the amount of money that was to be spent, they carried the constituency.

Mr. BENNETT. Which constituency does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Mr. ROGERS. The constituency in the vicinity of Peterborough. The gentleman who told me was a reliable and responsible man. I can assure you?

Mr. WALLACE. What was the name of the constituency?

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. ROGERS. It was back of Peterborough. This gentleman said that the canal never could be made workable.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would tell us by which party this was done, as both parties favoured this expenditure?

Mr. KENDRY. I am very much surprised that any hon. member of the House should speak as the hon. gentleman who has just sat down has spoken. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that the Peterboroughs were not carried by this canal. This work was done with the approval of both sides of the House, and both Conservatives and Reformers came here by the hundreds in deputation to press upon the Government the necessity of this work. I may inform the hon. gentleman that the amount expended on this canal, including the amount now appropriated, is nearly $1,000,000. Gentlemen on the other side have advocated this scheme as strongly as we have on this side of the House, and I am surprised that any hon. gentleman should make the charge that this expenditure is merely for political purposes. The scheme has been for the public benefit, and I hope the Minister of Railways will see his way clear to proposing in the Estimates in the future a sufficient amount to complete the canal. The work is under construction between Lakefield and Peterborough. We have spent so much money that we ought to go on and complete this canal. It is absurd to say that this work is carried on for political purposes, for both sides were represented in the deputations which came here and members on both sides favour the scheme. I believe the hon. member who represents North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is an advocate of this scheme, as are other gentlemen who represent constituencies along the line. What we want is the connection with the lake. I consider that when completed this canal will be as important to the province of Ontario as is the Erie Canal to the state of New York. I understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rogers) who last spoke is a farmer, and is supposed to be the special representative of the farmers. If any class is to be more benefited by this canal than another it is the farming community. I simply rose to express my surprise at such utterances as those of the hon. gentleman, and to impress upon the Minister of Railways and Canals the importance of placing in the Estimates a sufficient sum to continue this work.

Mr. McHUGH. I think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendry) might well have been satisfied with the statement made before dinner by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). That gentleman said that he would go over the route and would judge for himself where expenditure could be made to the best advantage. This canal is a gigantic work, and will be of great importance to the country through which it passes. The scheme became discredited throughout the country because it came to be looked upon—as I heard a candidate in one of these constituencies say—as a political barometer; it was said that people knew when the elections were coming on by the increased activity in connection with this scheme. I feel satisfied that the hon. gentlemen who have this matter in hand will not make political use of it, but will proceed with the construction if found advisable, having in view only the best interests of the country at large.

Farran's Point Canal ..... $27,500

Mr. REID. What depth of water is there now at Point Avoyon ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I believe the depth is seven feet.

Mr. REID. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister again to the necessity of proceeding with the Galops Canal. Vessels going westward from Montreal, and drawing nine feet of water, can reach Iroquois when this point is dredged to nine feet, but after they get to Iroquois, with the low water we have had for some time, it will be impossible to get up through that canal. At the present time there is only about seven or seven and a half feet of water between the Cardinal lock and the head of the canal; therefore, if this work is not proceeded with, vessels cannot go any further westward than that canal drawing over seven feet of water. I understood from the Minister last night that the Government have not decided yet whether they will go on with that work. They withdrew the tenders that were called for in June last, and if this work is not proceeded with at an early date, there will be a delay of another year. This winter is likely to be a hard one, and there is not much prospect of good times, there is likely to be a lot of men out of work, and I think it would be well at present to start this work. I would like the hon. Minister to say definitely whether he intends doing anything at this work during the coming winter ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I have stated the general principle by which I felt I ought to be guided in the matter of all these extensions. So far as this particular work is concerned, we do not propose to ask any further appropriation this session; I am speaking now particularly of this part of the system, Farran's Point Canal. We do not propose to ask for any further appropriation than has already been given by the House, or is now in the Estimates.

Rapide Plat Canal ..... $23,000

Mr. REID. Is this the Morrisburg lock, the lock in the old canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is.

Galops Canal ..... $14,000

Mr. REID. This is the canal to which I drew the Minister's attention. If none of the amounts that are in the general Estimates or in the supplementaries are to be applied to the new work to be proceeded with, I would like to urge upon the hon. gentleman the necessity of placing an amount in the additional supplementaries for that purpose. Tenders were called for this work by the late Government. It is very necessary that it should be proceeded with. It is well known that the St. Lawrence route is the natural route for all grain that comes from Chicago and other western points. If this work is not at once proceeded with there will be a delay of another year. A great quantity of grain from western points now goes through the Erie Canal, whereas if we had fourteen feet of water through to Montreal, there is no question that a great deal of that grain would go through the St. Lawrence route. Now, when we consider how small is the piece of work that is yet to be done, every year of delay is a very serious matter to the people throughout the Dominion. I earnestly hope that the Minister will consider this matter, and place an amount in the additional supplementaries.

Iroquois Canal ..... $5,000

Mr. BRODER. I would like to ask the Minister if we are to understand that the work on the Iroquois Canal enlargement is not to be proceeded with this year. The late Government asked for tenders, but I understand they were afterwards withdrawn. The water in the river last season, and this season, is so low as to make the enlargement almost an absolute necessity. I regret to see that it is apparently proposed to drop the enlargement for the present.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certain works will be prosecuted under grants that were obtained in the main Estimates. The hon. member, by referring to them, will see what expenditures we propose under those estimates for the several divisions of these canals. The present vote is simply being asked for to make certain repairs, which will be paid out of income, forming no part of the general expenditure upon capital account.

Mr. REID. I asked the Minister that question a few moments ago. Now, that work is part of the canal I am speaking about, and I understood the hon. gentleman to say there was nothing in the main Estimates for that work. Now I understand him to say that there is something for it in the main Estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member misunderstood me, for I did not say that. I was not speaking of any grant that had been procured under the main Estimates at all. I do not propose to withhold the prosecution of any work which we have had authority under those grants to carry on. I presumed that it was in the mind of the hon. member that we had obtained, in respect to the Galops Canal, a large sum of $150,000 for the further enlargement of the canal. I thought he was urging that in addition to the sums which we have already procured, we should bring down further Estimates. I have said over and over again that I do not feel we are in a position to do that, and I cannot hold out any prospect to hon. members that there will be any sums included in the further Supplementary Estimates for such a purpose. We have gone as far as I feel we are able to do in the appropriations we have already asked for.

Welland Canal ..... $11,500

Mr. HAGGART. I would ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if the policy of the Government is the same as the policy of the late Government with reference to the building and repairs of bridges. As an example of the policy of the late Government in this respect, I may cite the building of the railway bridge across the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. When I took charge of the department, I found that the plans for that bridge had been approved by the engineer in charge of the works, submitted to the Canadian Pacific Railway whose railway crossed the bridge, reported on by the department, approved by the chief engineer of the department, and sanctioned by an Order in Council of my predecessor. Under these circumstances I thought it was my duty to let the contract, and so the bridge over the Sault Ste. Marie Canal was built. I was not aware that that was an obstruction to navigation until I went up there, and saw the bridge after it was built. As political head of the department I took the report of my officers as to the proper manner in which the bridge should be built, and it was built according to their plans and specifications. The responsibility is on the head of the department, but the Minister in charge was obliged to take the recommendations his officers made to him, and on those recommendations the work was carried out.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where is this raceway that is to be renewed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It is at Welland.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman desire to increase the water power there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; this money is for the purpose of repairing the raceway.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Have any new leases been recently given there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not recall that there have been any granted, but I can procure that information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. HACKETT. The Government has asked the House to vote large sums of money for building canals, and I would ask the Minister of Railways whether it is his intention to carry out the building of the tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. It is a most important work to the whole Dominion, and it would to a great extent facilitate travel between the mainland and the Island. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) place an amount in the Estimates to carry out this work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sure that the hon. member (Mr. Hackett) does not harbour any personal feeling of enmity against me, and I would entreat him to ask me something easier than that.

Mr. HACKETT. That is a pretty poor answer. This is an important work. It is a work that has been entered upon by the Government of this country and borings have gone on there for some years. I ask the hon. gentleman seriously if it is the intention to prosecute this work?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the Minister propose to do any work this year at Port Maitland?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not at all certain, but possibly that work may be included in some of the Estimates. If it is not, then it is not in contemplation to do any work there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It might come under the general vote for canals. I might say, for information of the Minister, that it is at the mouth of the Grand River to which the branch of a feeder of the Welland Canal runs. Has the hon. gentleman any information with regard to the construction of a new bridge or the renewal of the old bridge across the Grand River at Dunnville? The bridge is in very bad condition, being patched up in every possible way, and the construction of a new bridge there is absolutely necessary. Last year the very high water damaged the bridge very much. I am positive that it was the intention of the Government to construct a new bridge there. If the hon. gentleman visits that section he will see that the work is badly needed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no general vote for canals, and the appropriations that have been granted have all been specific. There was a small grant of $5,000 for improvements on the Welland Canal, and that is the only vote which would apply to the Welland on capital account. I have not been advised that the bridge is in the condition which the hon. member states, and I think I am safe in saying that in the Estimates prepared by the gentleman who preceded me in the department, there was no sum allotted for that work.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We need not discuss that, because the point I desire to make is to call the attention of the Minister to it. I suppose we are not far from another session of Parliament, and I hope the hon. gentleman will secure a report with reference to the bridge. If he finds it in the condition I have represented, I am sure he will take the necessary steps to renew it.

Harbours and Rivers, Ontario—Improvement of Collingwood Harbour..... $20,000

Mr. BENNETT. About two weeks ago, when an item of $2,500 in the main Estimates was being considered, for improvement of the piers at Collingwood harbour, the Minister of Public Works, in answer to an inquiry, stated that works were contemplated at Collingwood which would involve an expenditure of $200,000, but that it was not intended to undertake that expenditure this year. I now beg to ask whether this $20,000 is in respect of the contemplated works, to cost $200,000, and, if so, have contracts been let for the expenditure of the $200,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). This sum of $20,000 is asked for to begin work in the important harbour of Collingwood. The estimated cost of the work, as my hon. friend says, is about $200,000. We intend beginning the work as soon as possible. In the month of January last, the late Government asked for tenders, and two tenders were received; but nothing was done in regard to them, and I thought it best to send the two tenderers their cheques.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be interesting to know whether this expenditure is to be undertaken on the general plan outlined by the Government engineer for the improvement of this harbour, so as to afford the proper width and depth of water for carrying on the necessary navigation there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The note I have is to the effect that this amount is required to carry out works of improvement, consisting of dredging a twenty-foot channel into the harbour from the twenty-foot line outside to the wharf. Before asking for new tenders, I think I shall have to have a new survey made. I will look into the question carefully before incurring any expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understand the hon. Minister, he contemplates making this expenditure along that line.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand that the town of Collingwood proposed to contribute a certain sum of money, and the Grand Trunk Railway a certain sum, on condition that the Government would make certain expenditures. Do I understand that this $20,000 is with a view to accepting the larger proposition?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. This expenditure will be made, of course, subject to all the conditions. If I remember rightly, the town of Collingwood has offered $25,000, and the Northern Railway the sum of $28,000.

Mr. REID. Is this $20,000 for any other work than dredging—any wharfs or anything of that kind?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman has not yet answered my question. Perhaps he misunderstood me. Are tenders to be called for $200,000 worth of work at once, or is this $20,000 to be expended for a work independent of that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. What I said was that tenders have already been called for and received. Of course, these tenders were made on certain plans. We do not pledge ourselves to spend $200,000, or any other sum of money. We have plans before us for certain works, but I say again, before going into these works, I will carefully revise the plans, and then ask for tenders.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the hon. Minister is wrong in saying that the Northern Railway has offered $20,000. The offer that has been made is that the Grand Trunk Railway and the town of Collingwood, between them, will contribute $25,000. The last Government accepted that offer, and agreed with the town of Collingwood that, if the town would pay the $25,000, this large Government work, which the Government engineer estimated would cost $200,000, but which I believe has been tendered for at a much less sum, would be done. In pursuance of that agreement, the town of Collingwood, having raised the $25,000, last spring proceeded to expend a portion of that money in removing boulders and other obstructions in the harbour. What I understand the Minister to say is, that he will either accept one of the tenders in now, or have a new survey made and call for new tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What depth of water has the harbour now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could really not tell, as my chief engineer is not here now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand it is down to rock bottom.

Mr. McCARTHY. The rock bottom does not extend very far. The principal part of the bottom is hard-paq and not rock.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not object to this vote because I know that the important town of Collingwood is a great centre, but I would ask whether there will be any estimate in the further supplementals for the town of Owen Sound, or is that to be given to what the Hon. Mr. Hardy called "cold justice?"

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a very large sum for that town voted in the main Estimates.

Mr. HAGGART. If the statement of the hon. member for North Simcoe is correct, the town of Collingwood is spending at present some of the money which it offered to give the Government, and upon their spending the money, there would be no conditions at all attached to the contract afterwards that the town or railway should contribute any part of the expenditure.

Mr. McCARTHY. This money, which is being now expended and which is not a very large sum, is on account of the $25,000, and the Order in Council which was passed when the hon. gentleman was a member of the Administration, provided that whatever was expended during this summer was to be credited to the town of Collingwood on account of that $25,000. But the arrangement still stands.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think that the arrangement which was finally adopted was that in the meantime the Government should do some dredging, and that for the removal of boulders, &c., the town should go on and spend money, and the Government should go on to a certain extent with dredging.

Mr. McCARTHY. No; the Government were doing nothing. The town has been going on.

Mr. BENNETT. We are as far from understanding this as we were at the outset. What the Minister of Finance said a couple of weeks ago was this, that the department proposed to undertake to expend an amount of $200,000 at Collingwood harbour.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We cannot pledge ourselves to spend $200,000. We pledge ourselves to do the work necessary and will do it for less if we can.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it proposed to undertake the work in this fashion? $20,000 will now be voted by Parliament. When that is expended, you will ask for a further grant. If that is to be the case, I contend that where the expenditure is to be so large as contemplated, $200,000, it would be a business-like arrangement to have the specifications placed before Parliament and ask for so much money and have that money allowed and the work proceeded with. Is the $20,000 part and parcel of the $200,000 contemplated to be spent on the work, or is it for something else?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is intended to form part of the $200,000, and my hon. friend knows that the late Ministry asked for tenders. I presume the specifications and plans were then before Parliament.

Mr. REID. According to the tenders, you expect that this work will cost in the neighbourhood of $200,000 and the $20,000 will only go on account.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have stated, over and over again, that I do not know what the cost of the work will be. We are going to call for tenders, unless we accept the tenders that have already been sent in.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount tendered for the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know that it would be in the public interest to give the prices tendered.

Mr. REID. Was there any security taken from the town or railway that the amounts they are to pay will be paid?

Mr. McCARTHY. The town will be prepared to put up its amount before the work is commenced, and so will the railway.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand, from the answer the Minister of Railways gave, that no further sums are to be voted this year for Owen Sound harbour.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think I can give away state secrets.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I took it the hon. Minister of Railways spoke for all the departments when he said the Government could not go any further this year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He spoke for himself.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not for you, and you may go a little further.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may, but I cannot tell.

River St. Lawrence ship channel ..... $3,101 39

Mr. REID. What is the depth of the water there now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Twenty-seven feet at the lowest.

Mr. REID. What will this expenditure make it up to?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay old accounts.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that money to be spent?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has already been spent between Sorel and Montreal, and this is to pay the old account.

Nanaimo Harbour, B.C.—Improvement of south channel ..... $10,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. It will be within the recollection of the Minister of Public Works that the present leader of the Government made a very pleasant and, as it turned out, rather profitable trip to the Pacific Coast, and when he was addressing a meeting in that province, I think he called very decidedly the attention of his auditors to the very serious obstructions that there were at the entrance of Vancouver harbour. I do not see any vote here for the removal of these obstructions.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know what the leader of the Government may have said, but I am sure he made good speeches out there. This is a very useful work. We are going to dredge the harbour, which, as my hon. friend knows, is an important one.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like an answer with regard to Vancouver harbour, because it is stated by the leader of the Government (Mr. Laurier) when he was leader of the Opposition that the obstruction there was very dangerous to the shipping, and in his glowing periods he held up the late Government to ridicule as not being alive to the public needs because they did not remove this obstruction. Has the hon. Minister of Public Works taken steps to inquire into the correctness of his leader's statements?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) has not been called to my attention in this connection. When I have more leisure, I will read it carefully and will try to profit by any good lessons that it contains.

Mr. REID. Does the hon. gentleman intend to ask for tenders for this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have already a dredge there and we think it is more profitable to do the work with our own dredge.

Public works and buildings chargeable to income—Quebec Post Office ..... $155 35

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to ask if this is all that is to be expended this year on the Quebec post office. As I stated the other day, that post office is in a bad state of repair.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay an amount due for work already done.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Can the hon. Minister tell me whether anything further is to be done, or is that a state secret also?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not a state secret. I am glad to be able to say that there is an amount of $2,500 to make the repairs to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. REID. Does the hon. gentleman intend to ask for tenders for this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Coaticook Public Building ..... $1,287

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I am requested by an hon. member who is not able to be present to ask for an explanation with reference to this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On the 25th of June, 1896, an order was given by the late Minister of Public Works for certain repairs to the public building at Coaticook. These repairs were made and we are bound to pay for them. The late hon. Minister gave this order on a telegram from the late Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives) asking that the repairs be made.

Public works and buildings chargeable to income—Ontario—Dominion Public Buildings—Improvements, renewals, repairs, &c..... $6,096 48

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. Minister tell us for what buildings this amount is asked?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for work done at Belleville, Brockville, Brampton, Cayuga, Chatham, Gananoque, Goderich, Galt, Hamilton, London, Lindsay, Napanee, Pembroke, Smith's Falls, Stratford, St. Thomas, Toronto—a pretty large amount in Toronto—Walkerton and Windsor.

Public works and buildings chargeable to income—North-west Territories, Regina Government House, to pay for site.... $1,590

Mr. SPROULE. Is it probable that the site for this Government House has not been paid for until this late day? I thought we had an item a year or two ago to pay this.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The site was bought from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but never was paid for, and we are bound to pay it.

Mr. SPROULE. If it has not been paid for, of course this amount must be voted. My recollection is that we had an item in the Estimates one or two years ago to pay for this site.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No; there has never been such an item.

Public buildings, Ottawa, including ventilation and lighting, repairs, materials, furniture, &c.. . . . . $12,252 19

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us more particularly what this vote is for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). First, it is to cover the amount of a special warrant obtained from His Excellency on the 18th of August, 1896, to pay the wages up to the 1st of July, of certain employees in the Public Works Department, the Government shops, whose services were dispensed with at the end of July, 1896, the appropriation for the year 1895-96 having proved to be insufficient. The warrant was for $2,333. When I took office, I asked my officers to make a report to me of the employees who were wanted and the employees who were not wanted, and I found there was a certain number of men, seventy-five all told, who were not wanted, and I dispensed with their services, of course, before doing so, I had to pay them their wages. The second item is for outstanding accounts for work done, material supplied, &c., in connection with the public buildings at Ottawa, in 1895-96, together with the wages due the workmen retained after the 1st of July, 1896, for services rendered previous to that date, amounting to $9,919. I have here a long list of accounts in my hand, which I will read if the committee desires.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman speak of the first item, or is he mixing it up with subsequent items? Because the first item has nothing to do with wages, but with ventilation, lighting, repairs, &c.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The item covers that.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says that an officer in his department reported that these parties were not wanted.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it the same officer who reported to the preceding Minister that these men were necessary?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have under my hand a list of the men.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not want a list of the men. I suppose these parties were not employed by the preceding Minister unless upon a report by the officer in his department that they were necessary. I wish to know if it is the same officer who reported subsequently that this large number of employees were not necessary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must say that so far as I have been able to ascertain, a great number of men had been employed in the Department of Public Works against the will of my officers. Not only this amount I have asked for, but another amount of $1,700, were spent during the last election upon work for which there was no appropriation, and, I say, against the will of my officers, so far as I have been able to ascertain, and without any recommendation from certain of my officers. I cannot say more than that, I have not been long in the department; but I can say this, that the men who were discharged were not wanted at the time their services were dispensed with.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman knows that it is only on a report of the officer that these men are necessary that the amount is paid.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot vouch for what took place when my hon. friend was in the office, I vouch only for what I have done myself. What I have done is this: I asked for a statement and a report from the heads of each branch in my department of all the men that were employed, and of those whose services were not needed.

Mr. HAGGART. We don't want to hear that, it is only the principle.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know on what principle they were employed.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman states that his officer told him that there were many parties employed for whom there was no necessity, and that he advised the Minister to discharge them. But the hon. gentleman knows that not one of these men could be paid until the officer had signed a certificate that they were necessary, and that the amount had been earned.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that these men were under the supervision of Mr. Ewart, in the architect's department.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must withdraw his statement. He says that his predecessor employed men who were unnecessary, that the head of his department reported to him that they were unnecessary. I want to know if it was the same officer who was responsible for their employment in the first place, and who certified that the amount paid them was due.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What I have said, and what I repeat, is this, and it is true: when I took office I asked for a statement from my officers, and they informed me that the men, a list of whose names I hold in my hand, were no longer necessary. I did not state anything further than that.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask my hon. friend at what time was that statement made by his officer upon which he dispensed with the services of these men?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it was at the end of July, a few days after we came into office.

Mr. FOSTER. Why, then, does not my hon. friend make the whole statement? He is involved in one of two contradictions. Either he is stating something to the House which conveys a wrong representation of the facts of the case, simply because it is not all; or he has an officer who is willing to certify at one time that certain men are necessary and at other times that they are not necessary. It is impossible to get pay for a single man until the pay sheets are properly certified to by the responsible officer of the hon. gentleman's department. Now, if these are in the architect's branch, I suppose it is the chief architect who has to certify that these men are necessary, and have performed their work. Now, with respect to these men, and under equal conditions, will my hon. friend say that the very same officer at one time reported that they were necessary and at another time reported that they were not? Or is not this the fact? That as no estimates were voted last year, and on the 1st July, 1896, as there was no money to pay these men, and no money to buy material upon which these men had to work; therefore at that particular time the officer might say that these men had no work to do and were not necessary; simply because the appropriation not having been made the material was not there for them to work upon. I remember the Minister of the department at that time having consulted myself with reference to some of the workmen, and he told me he had no money to buy material and consequently there was nothing for them to do. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) say to the House, whether this very same officer, under equal conditions, in one month said that these were necessary, and in the next month said that they were surplus men.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not responsible for what the officer may have said before I took office. I am responsible only for what he told me, and for what I have ascertained since to be the truth. The truth is, that a great many men were employed who were not necessary. I will not say more than that, and my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) should not push me too far.

Mr. FOSTER. Take out all you have in your sleeve. Let us have the whole of it. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) must not play the trick in this House of holding cards up his sleeve that he can let fall whenever he likes to. Let them all out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) keep cool. He has lost his temper many times since the session commenced. I suppose he does not like the atmosphere on the Opposition side of the House. He should set a better example to us new members. I will keep cool he may be sure. Now, about his remark as to letting little things fall, my hon. friend should be more manly. If he has something more definite to say about the matter, he should say it. We are here face to face, and I ask him has he anything to say about me. Has he got any accusation to bring against me. If he has let him say so like a man.

Mr. FOSTER. Keep cool.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will keep very cool.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) misunderstood me, and I will tell him a little more plainly what I meant. In the press and on the public platform, for the last three or four years my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte), beside making certain disclosures has always kept a sort of reserve arsenal partly open, and he has told his audience: I have made a partial disclosure and I can tell lots more, but I won't just now. What I meant by saying that my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) may have cards up his sleeve now was, that he may have that threat holding over the House. Don't hold it over us, please. Let us know all that you know.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have managed to do the best I could in the press in the past, and my friend did not find out that I was such a bad newspaper man after all. I am about the same as I was; improved a little perhaps. I will try to say everything I can for the information of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) because he has forgotten a great many things; Orders in Council, for instance, to which he was a party. I repeat, when I took office I asked for a statement from the officers, and the chief architect gave me the names which I hold in my hand, of seventy-five men who were not wanted. I dispensed with their services, I paid them, and everything is going on well without them. I cannot say more than that.

Mr. REID. Were these 75 men whom the Minister discharged all the men on the repair staff, or are there still some remaining on the repair staff?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have still 55 or so men who are now doing the work.

Mr. REID. Have you taken on any since you discharged these 75 men?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I did not take on any of them.

Mr. REID. But, did you take on any new men?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, not one new man.

Mr. REID. Does the Minister expect that these 75 men will be able to do the repairs for the next year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope even to be able to dispense with a greater number of men. I cannot say where precisely, but the reports that have come in are to the effect that I can safely dispense with the services of some other men.

Mr. REID. If the Minister finds that he will require more help, will he give a first chance to some of those he has laid off?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is a fair question and I am prepared to answer it fairly. Among the men who were dismissed, there are very good men against whom there is not the shadow of an accusation, and I will certainly make it my duty to take these men back if I want any men. I will do it with pleasure.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it out of this vote that these men are paid? I understood they were paid out of contingencies.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These men were employed in the public buildings here, and that is a reason we have put the item under that head.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the Governor General's warrant which was used to pay these men is included in the first item?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. HAGGART. On concurrence on this item, I would like to have the report of the officer upon which these men were paid, and also the report on which the Minister acted in dismissing these men.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will bring down the report with pleasure.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not know when the men came into the service who are considered not to be now required, but in view of the statement made by the Minister as to the services of men being dispensed with in the architect's branch, I want to call attention to the state of affairs in 1892 when the chief architect was examined under oath before the Civil Service Commission. He was asked this question:

Q. Have you any suggestion to make whereby the expenditure of your branch of the department could be reduced without impairing its efficiency?

A. I think our branch of the department is about as economical a department as any in the Government. I submit a statement which I prepared for the Minister showing the cost of employing outside architects to do the work as compared with the cost of doing it by the staff. I have on my actual drawing staff only two more clerks than there were on the staff in 1871, when there was not one-third, certainly not one-half the work there is now.

The further evidence seems to show that at any rate in 1892, that branch of the Minister's department was not overmanned. I think that important in view of the misapprehension that at first was caused by the statement of the Minister, that there were a great many men in that department whose services were not required. It is quite consistent with the interests of the public, that men have been on who were required, and men have been discharged who are no longer required.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) should not lose sight of the fact that he has quoted part of a report in which the chief architect was dealing with his own staff.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the chief architect's branch.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes; but the men whose services have been dispensed with were employed in the workshops. They were under the care of the chief architect, but cannot be classified as being on his staff.

Mr. DAVIN. I hope my hon. friend will be able to tell me now that he has reinstated Mr. J. K. Lambert.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I told my hon. friend that when I had a little time I would look into the case of his friend, in whom he takes so much interest, and I will do it.

Mr. DAVIN. I may say that it is not in the interest of my friend alone that I am speaking. I am also looking after the interest of the court-house. What I want to point out to my hon. friend, and what his architect will tell him, is this, that no experience of public buildings in the east will enable a man to judge what is necessary to be done in regard to a public building in the Territories. The least neglect in regard to frost at the beginning of the winter may ruin a building completely, because if the frost gets under the building it will lift it like a match box. This man was an experienced man, there is nothing against him; and my hon. friend has been really deceived in regard to him. I have no complaint to make of the way in which my hon. friend has received my representations, and I hope he will reinstate this man.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works to be kind enough to give the names of those who have been dismissed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will do so.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand these are all employed in the workshops here ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and at Sorel.

Mr. BERGERON. Can my hon. friend say altogether how many men have been dismissed since he has been in office ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 75 at Sorel, and about 25 other officers, besides men employed in the workshops, such as carpenters, painters and so forth. In round numbers, there were altogether nearly 200.

Mr. BERGERON. Any one will understand that the dismissal of all these men is a reflection on the previous Ministers. I do not know what opinion my hon. friend may have of them politically, but every one here will admit that they were honest men. The late Minister of Public Works, Mr. Desjardins, and his predecessor, Mr. Ouimet, are both known to be honourable men, and this is a reflection on their administration. As my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) said a moment ago, these appointments must have been made at first on the recommendation of some of the officers of the department. I do not want to cast any reflection on those officers; they are all first-class men; but either these men who were dismissed were doing nothing, or the hon. Minister will have to employ them when the work begins again.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not want to reflect on any of the men who have been dismissed, or on any of the men who employed them. My duty was to consider whether these men were necessary or not. I must say that I found men in the department who I know were not necessary, and who were drawing very large salaries. I made up my mind that they could not be kept any longer. Among the men dismissed there were very good men indeed—men against whom there were no complaints at all. Some other men who were dismissed should never have been employed. I said on a former occasion that it was better not to ask for the names of either the good men or the men who were not good, because these men will now have to earn their living outside of these buildings.

Mr. SPROULE. What building does the second item refer to—"Geological Museum at Ottawa—fitting up building?"

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A few days before the late Administration withdrew from office, they hired from Mr. Baskerville the balance of the building, the upper flat of which was occupied by the department before. The Order in Council for this purpose was sanctioned on the 6th of July, on a report dated the 18th of June. The rent paid is $600.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the building on Sussex street, where the geological museum is ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand that the Minister says that on the report of his officers he has dismissed about 75 men.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. More than that, nearly 200. I may say that I did not dispense with the services of any men included in this list without having a report from my officers. I would not take it upon myself to be the only judge. The names were brought before me, and I asked in each case why the man was not wanted, and it was only after carefully looking into the matter that I agreed to the dismissal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How many written reports did the hon. gentleman obtain ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are all written reports, but I have not got them here.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman bring them down ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes; with the exception of a certain report, which I would not like to lay on the Table because it reflects on the conduct of a man whose services were dispensed with. I will show it, however, to the hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman told a public meeting that when the House met, he would lay these reports, with regard to some 160 officers, on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will be glad to lay them on the Table.

Mr. WALLACE. Why should a part of the reports be suppressed? We are entitled to them. The Minister of Public Works has been telling the whole country, over and over again, that he is dispensing with the services of hundreds of men. He told the country that in Ottawa he discharged 75 men, and he has read out the names of 70 whose salaries amount to $32,000 a year. One would suppose that that amount would be deducted from the Estimates of last year, but it is not. In the Main Estimates there is a considerable reduction, but he is now asking for an additional $36,000. $420,000 seems an enormous sum to expend for the maintenance of these buildings, but the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with that and asks in the Supplementaries for $36,000 more, making in all $456,000. If he has dispensed with the services of 75 men here and 280 elsewhere, we ought to fairly look for a reduction in the Estimates. The reduction is very slight on the Estimates of the year before, and these were framed just previous to an election, and we know that immediately before an election, the Estimates are apt to go up a little. I do not see why, after the election is over, we should have the Estimates just as large, especially from men who are continually boasting of their economy. Here is an estimate for $456,000 for the maintenance of public buildings in the city of Ottawa alone.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has not looked a little sharper. He would then have seen that out of the amount of $100,000 which was asked for by the late Administration, the estimate this year is only $75,000, just $25,000 less. Of course, I have applied that $25,000 for a more useful purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say a word with regard to what was done to the sidewalks and approaches to Parliament. I notice there has been some granolithic pavement put down, is it the intention of the Government to take up all the sidewalks and lay them with this pavement?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are asking for $17,500 to lay down these sidewalks.

Mr. SPROULE. Could you give us some information as to the cost per square yard, and if the work was done by contract or day labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Those that were built by the late Administration have cost $2.50 per yard. We propose to call for tenders so that I hope to obtain a cheaper price.

Mr. SPROULE. I am told that this work can be done for about $1.25 per yard, and leave a fair margin for profit. It may be that when only a small portion is laid, the cost is greater, but it is very important to know whether the hon. Minister intends to let this by contract. $17,000 will hardly do the whole work. Is it the intention of the hon. Minister to do only a portion or finish the whole thing?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say whether $17,000 will do the whole work. The work done in the past was ordered by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I do not know whether the price they agreed to pay was too high or not. When I took office, the work was nearly completed.

Mr. SPROULE. Will this work go on this fall or go on again next spring?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope to begin this fall, but cannot say positively.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman propose having the centre gravel walk done in the same way?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not in a position to answer that question to-night.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman knows that he has in his department an officer who has been engaged for a number of years in the public service, and who, together with another one not in the public service now, designed the buildings in which Parliament meets. It is reported that this officer is to be superannuated. I refer to Mr. Fuller. Has he decided to superannuate Mr. Fuller, and on what ground?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have made up my mind that Mr. Fuller could not very much longer be retained in the service. After talking over the matter with Mr. Fuller, he agreed that the time had come for him to retire.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. gentleman has conveyed the impression that the request came from him and not from Mr. Fuller. May I ask the question directly—did Mr. Fuller ask to be superannuated, and what is his age?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Fuller is 73 years of age. He has done a considerable amount of work, and I think he has proved to be a good officer. But I think also that all those who have come into contact with him lately will agree with me in saying that the time has come to superannuate him. His memory has been failing very greatly indeed. I would not like to say more about it, because he has been, as my hon. friend knows, a useful officer. I have discussed the position with him, and he agrees that the time has come for his superannuation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the facts are as stated, I regret that I brought this matter to the attention of the House. Do I understand that failing memory is to be the cause of retirement ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would not like to say that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the hon. Minister selected his successor ? I quite concur in the tribute he has paid to Mr. Fuller, as I am sure all hon. members do, and I am very sorry I referred to the matter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not yet chosen Mr. Fuller's successor.

Mr. HACKETT. I entirely approve of the Minister's course in getting rid of unnecessary employees and reducing expenditure as far as possible. I would like to know if he intends getting rid of any of the officers who are employed as caretakers in any of the public buildings in Prince Edward Island ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted. Carried.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HACKETT. I have asked the hon. Minister a question.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am quite ready to answer, but several hon. gentlemen rose and I could not get the floor.

Mr. WALLACE. I may say that I rose because the Chairman is in the habit of calling "carried" before we have an opportunity to rise.

An hon. MEMBER. The Chairman has not eyes in the back of his head.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) I desire to say that as soon as I have a little more time, I will investigate the employees in Prince Edward Island, and if there is anything to be saved, the hon. gentleman may rely upon it, I will save it.

Mr. HACKETT. The men who are employed are good, faithful men, and the hon. Minister will not get better. If he dismisses them, it will be for political reasons and not because of their inefficiency.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to ask with regard to another officer of the Public Works Department, a gentleman who for a long time occupied a very important position there and who had a long and unstained record, and was undoubtedly one of the ablest officers ever employed in the department. He, unfortunately, was involved in some trouble some years ago under circumstances which, I think, won for him the sympathy of the whole country, at least of those people who were acquainted with the circumstances. I wish to know from my hon. friend whether the services of Mr. Perley have been dispensed with, and if so, whether they have been dispensed with temporarily, and if there is any prospect of his obtaining employment in that department again.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In answer to my hon. friend's question, I must say that I found Mr. Perley was employed in my department at a salary of $215 per month. He was preparing reports. I thought I could not consistently keep him any longer in the service of the Public Works Department.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that in the Main Estimates there is an item which reads as follows:—

Heating Public Buildings, Ottawa, including salaries of engineers, firemen, elevator attendants and caretakers.... $65,000

And also another item much to the same effect, $65,000. And now we have this item of $8,000 for the same. It seems to me that in order to give us some idea of the cost of these public officers, the amount for salaries ought to be kept separate from the amounts for fuel, lighting, &c.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. One of the items of the main Estimates referred to is for the public buildings in Ottawa, while the other is for salaries for engineers, firemen, caretakers, &c., all over the Dominion. The item of $8,000 now under discussion is required because the amount asked by the late Administration was not found sufficient to pay salaries for engineers, firemen, caretakers, &c., all over Canada.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—To pay William Howe account rendered for painting, glazing, cleansing, &c., done by him in 1889 and 1892 ..... $5,181 61
(Approved by Order in Council, February 6, 1896, and ordered to be paid.)

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Minister of Public Works please explain. This is an account seven years' old.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As the hon. gentleman can see I found that there was an Order in Council dated 6th February, 1896, approving of the account of Mr. Howe. The new Government felt they were bound to pay an account so approved by their predecessors. I can give the details of the account; it is for painting.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You just followed the Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so. The chief architect reports as follows, in reference to that account, under date 30th October, 1895:—Mr. Howe has frequently been requested, both verbally and by letter, to render an account covering the works authorized to be paid, but failed to do so until recently, giving as his reason that the party whose duty it was to attend to such work, had neglected to do it, without his knowledge. The accounts, as soon as received, were rendered to the clerk of works, who reported that he had compared them with those previously rendered by Mr. Howe, and found that none of the items in the present account are included in the previous accounts. The foreman carpenter and the foreman painter also examined the accounts and the work, and their report stated that the quantities were found correct. The account for painting and glazing the House of Commons, September to December, 1889, was $1,389. And here follows a long list of the accounts for painting the public buildings.

Mr. POWELL. I notice, in the estimates passed the other day, page 49, the item referred to, in which there was a reduction from $71,000 to $65,000. On the occasion of the passing of that item, the Minister of Public Works stated that this was an instance of a remarkable saving that he had effected, that this was a judicious application of the pruning-knife, without impairing the public service. I see this item has been increased in the Supplementary Estimates by over $8,000, leaving a net increase, taking the whole thing together, of some $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is wrong.

Mr. POWELL. I am not wrong, but the hon. gentleman's papers may be wrong. The item particularly referred to is that of Dominion buildings in both cases.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am just asking $8,000 to pay accounts for the year past, accounts rendered and due all over Canada now. For next year, I am asking only $65,000.

Mr. POWELL. That is scarcely a fair statement, because there must be back bills year after year; that is not exceptional in the administration of public affairs, and that must be taken, I presume, as a fair estimate of the amount of the delinquencies every year.

Roads and Bridges—Sappers and Dufferin Bridges, Ottawa, contributions towards asphaltting of approaches by the city, as per agreement ..... $5,956

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the date of that agreement?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. June 21, 1895.

Telegraphs—For purchase from D. H. Têtu of land, buildings, furniture, fittings, &c., at the River Penticost, telegraph station, in full settlement of all claims ..... $508 64

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Têtu was the agent of the department; he constructed a house there, and, when he left, the department took the house and paid him for it.

Salaries of engineers, draughtsmen, clerks, Engineering Branch ..... $371 67

Mr. HAGGART. I would like the hon. gentleman to state whether he found that the engineers, draughtsmen and clerks in the engineering branch were in excess of the requirements of the service.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have dispensed in that branch with the services of a certain number. Messrs. Chabot, Moffette, Smith, Roy, Friel, Aubé, Marion, Perley, Tremblay, Lamontagne, Connell and Dorais. The two latter were employed in Sorel; Mr. Tremblay was employed below Quebec, and Mr. Lamontagne at Lévis; but Chabot, Moffette, Smith, Roy, Friel, Aubé and Marion were employed in Ottawa. I dispensed with the services of these men on the report of Mr. Coste, my chief engineer.

Mr. HAGGART. I draw the attention of the Minister to the evidence given before the Civil Service Board as to the requirements of that department, by the deputy head of that department, under oath:

Is not the list of your temporary clerks too large for the work you have for them? A. The number may not be too large, because, I believe, the number of clerks for that staff of the department will have to be increased, taking the engineers and architects together. But of those who are employed at present, we could dispense with some and replace them. For instance, in the engineering corps there is no doubt that some draughtsmen might go without impairing the efficiency of the service, but in the higher branch some other men should be taken on.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Whatever may have been said in the past my action is before Parliament to-day.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not questioning your action, but the officer's.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to ask whether Mr. Dorais has been replaced?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Dorais of Sorel has not been replaced, and I do not intend to replace him.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Were some of the men dismissed in Sorel replaced by others?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There were none of the men dismissed in Sorel who to my knowledge have been replaced. Of course my hon. friend knows we have very important works at Sorel, and there may be times when there is more work than at others. Connell and Dorais that I dismissed were not replaced.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Were these the only men dismissed in Sorel?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, there were 75.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Did I understand the Minister to say that none of these 75 have been replaced?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that none of them have been replaced since. I do not think that any new men have been taken on.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend says that probably he will have to take on some new men. Can I take it for granted that he will give a chance to some of these poor men who have been dismissed.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope my hon. friend will allow me to answer myself. A great many of these men whom my friend (Mr. Casgrain) calls poor men, have been imposed on the department during the last election. The shops at Sorel were filled with them and Mr. Howden who was the chief officer there told me that a lot of men for whom he had no work at all had been simply imposed upon him.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is not an answer to my question. I ask whether some of these dismissed men will be taken back when the Minister finds he wants new hands?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not mean to pledge myself to take back the men that were imposed on the department by Mr. Desjardins.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is not an answer. I suppose that among the 75 men some were useful. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) does not think he is going to make us believe that some of these 75 men had not something to do at some time of the year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say more than that.

Quebec Immigration Buildings..... $5,000

Mr. REID. Does the Minister intend letting this work by contract or doing it by day's work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will certainly call for tenders for the greater part of the work. There are some small details we cannot ask tenders for.

Mr. REID. In case the Minister should receive a number of tenders, and that two of them were for the same amount, are we to understand that the Minister will refer them to the defeated candidate?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I won't be caught twice, I think.

Toronto Public Buildings, improvement, repairs, &c. .... $8,000

Mr. OSLER. Is this to pay old accounts for work already done?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for work to be done including a vault that has to be constructed.

Mr. CLARKE. There were some accounts outstanding for repairs to public buildings in Toronto. Was provisions made in the main Estimates to pay these accounts?

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These accounts are covered by a sum of $6,096 voted under the head of Public Buildings, Ontario.

Harbours and Rivers, N.S..... $34,500

Mr. McDOUGALL. I called the attention of the Minister in the earlier part of the session to the Cow Bay breakwater in the county of Cape Breton. That breakwater was first built 25 or 30 years ago, and it has rendered a great deal of service to the shipping around that coast, especially to the people engaged in the coal industry there. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will bear me out in the statement that no public work on that coast has been more serviceable to the general public than has the Cow Bay breakwater. I wish to get the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) so that he may correct me in what I state if I am wrong. As an evidence of the importance of that breakwater, I believe I am within the mark when I say that the treasury of Nova Scotia, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) was premier of that province, received something like $100,000 as revenue from the coal that was shipped in the shelter of that breakwater. Less than two years ago, the breakwater was injured and I may state—it is within the knowledge of the officers of the department who are within my hearing now—that I communicated with the then Minister of Public Works with reference to it. I called his attention to the fact that the breakwater was in a dangerous condition, and that if it did not receive timely attention, it might after a heavy storm cost the country a great deal more to repair the injury that might be done to it. I understood from the then Minister that there was no money available at that time to do the necessary repairs. I had the impression that to save a work of that importance the Minister might very well justify an application for a Governor General's warrant. However, it was not done. At a subsequent session of the House, that is, the session of 1895, a grant of some $5,000 was made; and I understand that $4,289 was spent in the year 1895 towards repairing the injury that was done. I may say that the injury which I predicted might be done by a storm was done, and done to a much greater extent than I anticipated. I urged upon the department making a further grant to repair the balance of the injury. I was given to understand that this $4,000 was to be spent in securing the breakwater from further injury, and that Parliament would grant the further sum required during last session. I understood from the officers of the department, particularly from the Minister, that a recommendation had been made to the Government by the Minister for an appropriation of some $20,000 for the necessary repairs; but, as hon. gentlemen know, no appropriation passed the House. My understanding was that the appropriation was to be made in the Supplementary Estimates; but they did not come down; and I was surprised to find, when the present Supplementary Estimates came down, that they did not contain a vote for that breakwater. This is a valuable property, which has cost this country a great deal of money. From the time the Dominion Government undertook it it has cost the country $150,000 or thereabouts. It is a breakwater 1,300 or 1,400 feet in length, and one which has rendered great and important services, not only to the coal industry, but to the fishing industry along that coast. A large number of vessels come from the western part of the province—from Shelburne, Guysborough, Richmond and other counties, and find shelter behind that breakwater. Besides, it is of great importance to the people who live in the neighbourhood. There is a flourishing village there, where a large number of people do business, and a large number of fishermen live in the neighbourhood; and it is of the greatest importance to these people to have that breakwater maintained as it has been for the last twenty-five or thirty years. I hope, therefore, that in the further Supplementary Estimates that work will not be forgotten. I would suggest that if the Government are not in a position to ask Parliament for as large a grant as is required to thoroughly repair the work, they would ask for such a sum as will save it from any further injury from storms. I would like to have the attention of the hon. Minister to another very important work. For some years the people of the village of Gabarouse, nearly all fishermen, have been asking the Government to take steps to build a breakwater at that place. Steps were taken towards getting surveys, and I was given to understand last winter that the late Minister had decided to ask Parliament for an appropriation for that work. The place is an open harbour, very much exposed to east and south-east winds. There is a large fishing industry carried on at the village; and it is of the greatest importance to have a breakwater constructed. I hope the hon. Minister will see his way clear to pursue the policy of his predecessor in respect to these two works, and ask Parliament for an appropriation to carry them out.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister to three districts in the county of Pictou not referred to in these Estimates; and perhaps, even if they were included, the season of the year would not admit of much being done. But I hope his officers will be able to look into these matters before next session. One district is that between Cape John and Toney River, in the western part of the county of Pictou. There is a large business carried on there by small boats engaged in lobster fishing, and along that stretch of coast there is not a harbour of any description, so that of course the landing of these boats is sometimes a most difficult affair. There have been surveys conducted at my own request hitherto; but the reports of the officers have shown that to build anything like a breakwater for a harbour in the ordinary sense would involve an expenditure of far more money than even the people of that district would expect to be spent there; and so these investigations have come to nothing. But having been recently in that part of the county, the proposition has been put to me, and I promised to bring it to the attention of the authorities, that an effort should be made to give them something, not in the sense of a harbour exactly, but a comparatively cheap work which would give these boats protection as they approach the shore in rough weather. If the hon. Minister would kindly have a note made of that, and before next session have the subject looked into, it might appear that a great deal of good could be done with very little money. The other two points I would like to have looked into are the two wharfs owned and controlled by the Government on Pictou Island. This island is situated off Pictou, in the St. Lawrence, and is practically a life-saving station, inhabited by fishermen and farmers on a small scale. The inhabitants have often rendered important services to ships in distress. Two small wharfs at the west end and the east end of the island, have been built at a considerable cost of public money, and they are not now in a good condition. I think they ought to be strengthened, or else there is danger of their going to pieces, which would be a serious matter to the people of the island. I would also call attention to the Lismore wharf in the eastern part of the county of Pictou. I shall be obliged if the Minister will have reports made on these matters by his district officers in time for necessary action in regard to them at the next session of Parliament.

Boularderie, wharf at Rose Ferry..... $2,800

Mr. BETHUNE. Is that amount considered sufficient to complete this wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The contract was let when I came into office and the work was begun.

Mr. BETHUNE. A few days ago I asked the hon. Minister if he would consider the advisability of constructing a station at Wycocomagh station. He said he required some further information, and I would like to know if he has put an item in the further Estimates for this work, and would be very much pleased to learn that he had.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The question is whether the old wharf should be repaired or whether it would not be better to have a new one. We are looking into it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do with the Cow Bay breakwater? He said it was under consideration.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). This is a matter of considerable importance, but the work is no better or worse than it has been for some years past. It is a very large and important public work and will require the expenditure of a considerable sum of money. I think it was rather unfortunate that my hon. friend was not able to press his claim more successfully and at an earlier stage during last Parliament. It was only at the eleventh hour of that Parliament that he was able to impress his views on his colleagues. I do not depreciate the importance of the work, but it is one of a number which require considerable expenditure, and if we are to recommend the expenditure required on all of them, we would have to make a draft on the treasury which we do not feel warranted in doing in our present circumstances. The Estimates we are providing are somewhat liberal, and I hope that hon. gentlemen will not press us to go too far. This is an important work, but I do not think it will suffer very much if it is allowed to remain as it is a little longer.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman is very much mistaken. It is only a little over a year, or a year and a half since the breakwater got into its present condition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a long time.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There was only one opportunity for making a grant to repair this breakwater since it was injured by the storm, and that opportunity was taken advantage of to the extent of $5,000. It was considered impossible to provide that session the money necessary to put it in thorough repair, but it was proposed at the next session to provide a large grant for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not only was there no grant made, but none proposed.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I am satisfied there was a grant proposed and agreed upon by the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am speaking in the light of documents submitted to Parliament.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It was to have been provided for in the Supplementary Estimates of last session, but they did not come down.

Mr. GILLIES. During this session, I caused a question to be put to the hon. Minister of Public Works with respect to an important public work at L'Ardoise, Richmond county. I ask the hon. gentleman if it was the intention of the Government to provide for the repairs and extension requisite to be made to the breakwater there. He replied that the matter was under serious consideration, but I see no mention whatever of it in these Estimates. I am quite sure that when the hon. gentleman is longer in office he will agree that that is a work which requires to be immediately attended to. The people of L'Ardoise are a very large fishing community who draw their living entirely from the sea, and who have no shelter of any kind from the harbour of St. Peter's to Louisburg, a distance of 70 miles on that iron-bound coast. When I drew the attention of the late Government to the matter, they met my request in a very liberal spirit. The place was examined and reported upon, and the request of the people was met by the construction of a breakwater at that point. It is a very good work as far as it goes, but it was the policy of the late Government to extend it seawards and also towards the land, in order to afford as complete protection as possible to the boats. In pursuance of that policy the department sent an engineer to examine and report, and his report and plans are now on file in the department. He recommended that the breakwater should be extended and made an estimate of its cost, which he placed at about $19,000. It was the policy of the late Government to have this done, and this amount expended upon the L'Ardoise breakwater this season, had their Estimates been allowed to pass during last session, and I took it for granted that some provision would be made in this year's Estimates, and I was strengthened in that opinion by the answer of the Minister of Public Works that the matter was under serious consideration. I am aware that a great many demands are made on the Treasury, but this is one of the localities that ought not to be overlooked. The number of boats there amounts to something like 250, and every boat with its equipment is valued at something like $300, so that the Minister will see the large amount of property which is there seeking shelter. The people of L'Ardoise are an industrious, frugal and deserving class, and suffer great hardship in pursuit of their dangerous and hazardous calling, and there is no possible excuse for the present Government for not having carried out the policy of the late Government in extending this breakwater to the length required and reported upon by Mr. Bernas-cour, the departmental engineer.

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course this is one of numerous cases, and I understand the importance of it, but for the time being I am not in a position to do more.

Harbours and Rivers, N.B..... $5,500

Mr. McALISTER. I regret very much that no provision is made in the Supplemen-tarries for the purchase of the Mowat wharf in Campbellton, and for making improvements that are required for the shipping there. As the public wharf stands now, it is of no service to shippers, from the fact of its being out in the river and only connected with the land by a private wharf owned by Mr. Mowat. Campbellton is one of the most important shipping ports on the Baie des Chaleurs on either side, and the lack of needed shipping facilities makes shipping inconvenient and expensive, as well. About eighteen months ago, the late Minister of Public Works sent an engineer down with instructions to examine this place and report thereon. On the strength of the report sent in by that engineer, and on the representations made from time to time, the then Minister of Public Works recommended an item of $8,000 to be put in the Estimates last session, for this improvement. But, as the Estimates were not passed, of course this amount was not granted. I regret very much that the hon. Minister of Public Works has not included this item either in the main Estimates or in the Supplementaries. I see that there is an item of $3,000 for Little Métis, and also $2,000 for repairs to the wharf at Port Daniel. I do not find fault with these appropriations; perhaps they are required. But I do complain very much that a more important place than either has been entirely omitted. The report on Campbellton harbour is in the department, and from it the hon. Minister can learn exactly the situation. I trust that in the Supplementary Estimates that are yet to come down, an item for this wharf will be included.

Mr. POWELL. I wish to call attention to the condition of Tormentine harbour, upon which a very large amount of money has been expended. As it now stands, an expenditure of $5,000 or $6,000—$10,000 at the outside—would place the harbour in an excellent state of repair. But, if it is allowed to go much longer, it will cost from $60,000 to $100,000; in fact, the works will have to be practically rebuilt. I would press upon the Minister the desirability of making an appropriation for this work, on the principle that a stitch in time saves nine.

Harbours and Rivers, P.E.I. .... $11,850

Mr. HACKETT. I would ask the hon. Minister to say whether he intends to make improvements at Miminegash, as he said a few days ago it was his intention to do. This is a very important matter. You have here a vote of $2,500 for Tignish, but that is a small item for the improvement of that breakwater. Will the work at Tignish be carried on by contract or by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is some work going on at Tignish, which place is very well known in this House. As to the work at Miminegash, I am very sorry that we have not been able financially to undertake this work; but, later on, we may be in a position to do so.

Mr. YEO. It has just come to my knowledge that this work at Miminegash requires attention almost immediately, and I desire to call the hon. Minister's attention to it. I am glad the work at Tignish breakwater has been ordered. This work was much neglected by the late Government, though my late colleague (Mr. Perry) and myself drew the attention of the then Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) to the necessity of looking after it. The answer repeatedly given was that there was no money to undertake these repairs. Shortly after the present Government was formed, my late colleague happened to be in the city, and he and I waited upon the Minister (Mr. Tarte), who very kindly promised to attend to the work. We pointed out that, unless it was attended to this fall, the whole work, which has cost the country a large amount of money, would probably be destroyed. I am glad to know that the work is being proceeded with, and that it is in a fair way of being protected and saved. I fear that unless Miminegash is attended to this season, a larger expenditure will be necessary to put it in repair next year. While speaking of this, I may say that the public wharfs in Prince county are, with a few exceptions, in a bad state, having been much neglected by the late Government. We often called attention to their condition, and received promises that they would be attended to, but nothing more. Many years ago, the Dominion Government took over the pier at West Point, which had been built at considerable cost by the local government, that government being recouped by the Dominion. But, after taking over that work, the Dominion Government paid no attention to it, and allowed it almost entirely to disappear. I have asked the Minister to have a survey made there with a view to having that work rebuilt. The member for West Prince (Mr. Hackett) pointed out a few days ago the great necessity there was for this work, and I quite agree with all he said. The people living there are 12 miles distant from any railway communication, and the wharf is almost an absolute necessity for them. As they are situated to-day, they are obliged to do all their shipping with boats, which is attended with great risk and cost. In this neighbourhood there is a very fine farming country, and is one of the best points for fishing on the whole coast, and altogether any one knowing that country, must come to the conclusion that the wharf is an absolute necessity. I may also say the same thing with regard to Broe. The work has been begun there, but it has been carried on very slowly. Two or three small grants have been made, but it still requires a larger outlay to make this work of the service which it will be when completed. I am glad to see that the Minister has put an amount in the Estimates for harbour improvements at Summerside. This is a work which has been called for for a long time, and is one of absolute necessity. Summerside is, perhaps, the principal port we have in Prince Edward Island, and any one who has taken the trouble to make an inquiry into this matter, must be convinced that this outlay is very much needed. I wish the amount was much larger, but I am in hopes the Minister will have contracts entered into, and probably the amount which he has put in the Estimates now, may be all that is required for the present year. There are other public works all around the coast in Prince county which require attention, and I hope before this season is past the Minister will instruct his engineer at Prince Edward Island to survey and report on these works. I will say for myself that I do not want one dollar of public money to be expended unless it is going to be a benefit to the country, I do not wish to see it wasted. But we have strong claims in Prince county, because our wants have been sadly neglected in the past—I suppose it has been owing to the fact that that county has sent members who have been opposed to the Government, I know of no other reason that can be given for our wants being so neglected. Before I resume my seat I would again ask the Minister to make a note of Miminegash, and see if a small amount could not be put in the Estimates yet to come down, so as to protect the work for this season.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I thank my hon. friend for the useful remarks he has made to the committee. Miminegash will not be lost sight of by me. As to the work to be done at West Point, the question was whether we should repair the old wharf or make a new one. I will order a new survey, and see what is best to be done.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I wish to direct the attention of the Minister to some of the public works in King's county. There are several wharfs there, important public works, that are much in need of repair. The farmers of the country are depending on those wharfs to ship their produce. There is one at Cardogan Bridge, called Lewis's Point Wharf, a very important wharf in that locality, and a large shipping place, which is much in need of repairs. There is also a wharf at Montague, called Stevens's Wharf, which is one of considerable importance, and the repairs of which were left over last year, because the one adjoining it was being repaired, and the other was to be taken up this year. There is also a wharf of great importance at Annandale, which is much in need of repair. There is also a public work on the north shore called Campbell's Cove breakwater, which was undertaken by the local government in the first place, and a sum of money was expended on it, but it has since been taken over by the Federal Government. It is used by a very large fishing population; a great number of toilers by the sea, and on the sea, who have to earn their living in a very precarious manner, are solely dependent upon this harbour. The breakwater is the only harbour of refuge they have for about 75 miles of coast, so I think we have strong claims on the Government. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, knows that he has many friends in that locality; but apart from that, it is a public work of great importance, and I trust that when the further Supplementaries come down, there will be an amount for repairing this work at Campbell's Cove breakwater, and doing what has been in contemplation for some time.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the piers at Mink River and Red Point, and to the Belle River breakwater. I hope that in the Supplementary Estimates yet to come down we shall find sums for those three works. We have been voting hundreds of thousands of dollars in the last two days, but you would require a very powerful glass indeed to see a few dollars for Prince Edward Island. The people of that Island were given to understand that when the Liberal party came into power, and when that Island would have a Minister in the Cabinet, as we have now—and a very able man he is, I must say, and a man who has rendered great service to the Liberal party—we were told that Prince Edward Island would be dealt with very liberally. But I find that in place of its being dealt with more liberally, it is being dealt with less liberally than before. Now, I would remind the committee that yesterday the Minister of Public Works made it a sufficient plea for giving $5,000 for the Three Rivers Exhibition, that the late Government had proposed to do the same thing, and that an Order in Council was passed to that effect. On the same ground I say there is strong reason why the sums that were proposed to be extended by the late Government on these three works at Belle River, Murray Harbour and Gosh River, should be included in these Estimates. I can tell the Minister of Public Works that the late Government proposed to expend on Belle River breakwater $2,000, on Mink River pier $1,000, and on the Red Point wharf $500. How is it that one rule is applied to Quebec in reference to these expenditures and another rule applied to Prince Edward Island. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has, I hope, strong and powerful influence with the Government. He has been over the whole of the Maritime Provinces to help them out, and we thought that he would help his native province when he got into the Ministry. I must say, Sir, that Prince Edward Island is dealt with very illiberally in this matter. I hope that the Minister of Public Works will yet consider this question. I hold in my hand a letter which I received from the Public Works Department in regard to these three works. It is dated the 18th May, 1896, and it says :

I may say that my predecessor had included in the Supplementary Estimates for the consideration of Council the following items, viz. : $2,000 for Belle Creek breakwater, $1,000 for Murray harbour pier, besides several smaller appropriations, including $500 for Red Point pier.

Why should we vote $5,000 as we did last night for an exhibition at Three Rivers, with which the Dominion Government has nothing to do, and leave these important public works, which are immeasurably more necessary and which are under the control of this Government, without any excuse whatever. I say that the province of Prince Edward Island has not been generously treated, and I am sure that the people of Prince Edward Island will receive the news with no very good grace if the present Government do not intend to proceed with the expenditure proposed by the late Government. I do not wish to detain the committee, but I could not do less, and I am sure I ought to do more if I could convince the Minister and his colleagues that it is right to give a fair share of the public moneys to Prince Edward Island. On this very page of the Estimates we have reached over $2,000,000 which is to be expended. You have been voting hundreds of thousands of dollars for railways and canals, but what share did Prince Edward Island get of that money? It got none. When a few paltry thousand dollars is refused for breakwaters in Prince Edward Island, I say that there is no disposition on the part of the Government to treat that province with fair-play.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I have not a word to say against the arguments advanced by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) for the voting of certain sums of money for the repairs of these works. I question very much whether the hon. gentleman is putting his case upon the very best ground? There is no use in his overstating the case. We are not voting $2,000,000 here to repair breakwaters in different parts of the Dominion.

Mr. MARTIN. I did not say that. I said there were $2,000,000 on this page of the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of that $2,000,000 over $1,000,000 has to be paid for debts already incurred for the Militia.

Mr. MARTIN. I said nothing about the militia. I said that upon this page there were $2,000,000 asked for, and that Prince Edward Island had very little of it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We might as well have the facts plainly stated. If the hon. gentleman's first statement went unchallenged, it would appear to those who read it in Prince Edward Island that we were voting $2,000,000 for the repairs of breakwaters all through the Dominion.

Mr. MARTIN. I did not make that statement. I appeal to the House to accept the statement which I did make and which I intended to make. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries stands up here and says that I said what I am sure I did not say. What I said was that we have already reached on this page of the Estimates which I have in my hands over $2,000,000. Let the Minister of Marine look and he will find that I was correct, and that out of these $2,000,000, he would require a very powerful glass indeed to see very much for Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not at all want to misrepresent the hon. gentleman, but I wish to point out to him that he is not putting his case upon the strongest ground. If he looks at the Estimates he will see that of these $2,000,000, over $1,000,000 is to pay debts incurred by the late Government for the militia service. I do not deny that there is some foundation for the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) that Prince Edward Island has not been treated in the past as it ought to have been, and a singular fact is that my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) has been one of the most violent supporters of the party and Government who treated Prince Edward Island so badly. I do not want to recriminate, however. I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman that the breakwater at Belle Creek is only three miles from the Wood Island breakwater, and within the past three years $10,000 has been expended on the latter breakwater. Now, when we are asked to expend a few thousand dollars on the Belle Creek breakwater, only three miles off, the hon. gentleman will see that Parliament must move slowly. Before we vote this other expenditure we must be satisfied that the $10,000 we have already expended has not created a good harbour at Wood Island. If it has not, we must have proper surveys made at Belle Creek. I am not saying that at the proper time this work will not be considered. I hope it will, and I shall have much pleasure in pressing it upon my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. But we must move discreetly and prudently. Now, with respect to Red Point and Mink River. We have been in power only a few months, and we have not had time to get proper reports from our engineers, so as to justify us in voting money for these works; nor from my own personal knowledge can I say that I would be justified in recommending any immediate expenditure of public money at these two points. With respect to the wharf in Prince county there is an amount in the Estimates for $2,500 for Tignish. I am quite sure my hon. friend is well satisfied with that. He has also referred to Miminegash. I had the pleasure of visiting Miminegash last year. I walked over that breakwater and conversed with the fishermen there, and I am quite satisfied that before we expend any more money on Miminegash we should have a proper survey made to ascertain whether we can carry that breakwater out beyond the bar which obstructs the fishing boat from coming into the breakwater. I do not think the expenditure of the money there at the present time would do any good, unless we are prepared to remove that bar, either by carrying the existing breakwater out beyond it or by dredging it. The hon. gentleman knows that the dredge cannot go there this year, but I am in hopes that it will be attended to. The former member for the county was here a few weeks ago, and he pressed that matter upon the attention of my hon. friend, and my hon. friend did me the honour to talk it over with me. I told him that I would not be justified in asking for public money to be expended on the Miminegash breakwater at the present moment. I did believe that, if a survey were made, the report of the surveyors would justify us in constructing a work which would be of permanent value for the large number of shippers and fishermen who would use that breakwater. We have appropriated a large sum of money, $7,500, for the beginning of protection works at Summerside harbour. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, will join his voice with mine in recommending that expenditure to the House. He knows how thoroughly necessary it is, and he knows that this is only the beginning of large works which are required to make the second harbour in Prince Edward Island a far better harbour than it is at present. He knows that there must be give and take in these matters—that we cannot have every wharf and breakwater in the maritime provinces, important as they are, repaired in one year. We must discriminate, and I think we are doing pretty well so far. We are now dealing in these Supplementary Estimates almost entirely with debts that have already been incurred, or works for which absolute promises were made by the previous Government, and for which estimates were brought down; and whatever new votes may be recommended to Parliament will come down in further Supplementary Estimates this session. Therefore, I would urge my hon. friends to be reasonable, and not to press matters too strongly until they see exactly what is being done. I know that Prince Edward Island, in the past, has had to take the small share of public expenditures. That was inevitable. We are a small province, and our voice has not been as strong in the past as I think it ought to have been. The hon. gentleman does me the honour to refer to myself. All

Mr. DAVIES.

I can say is that I have from time to time pressed on the Government the necessity of making public improvements in the Island; but it stands to reason that I cannot hope to get all I ask for, just now at any rate. We must go along quietly. My hon. friend who represents the East Riding of Prince (Mr. Yeo), pressed very strongly for the expenditure of public money on that necessary work, the improvement of Summerside harbour, and I am glad to see that he acknowledges that this vote of $7,500 this year is a good beginning. It may amount to an expenditure of $20,000 before we are through. But we cannot do it all in a day. I am in favour, as I always have been, of an economic expenditure; and, even though I represent Prince Edward Island in the Cabinet, I will not be a party to advocating the indiscriminate expenditure of public money. We must discriminate, and we have discriminated in these appropriations. We cannot hope to get Miminegash this year; but I hope, in the near future, after a report is made upon it, we may be able to do something for that harbour also. As we are bringing down further Supplementary Estimates, the hon. gentleman may perhaps find things in them which will please them. I hope so myself. I hope some things will be done for Prince Edward Island which are essential, and which they will thoroughly approve of.

Mr. MARTIN. If the hon. gentleman wishes to prevent a grant being made for Belle River breakwater, he must present his reasons on fair grounds, and support them by fair arguments. He has stated that the distance between Belle River breakwater and Wood Island breakwater is three miles. I presume the hon. gentleman knows that part of the district very well, and if he had considered carefully, I think he would have added at least two miles more. While the hon. gentleman may say that I have not made a very strong argument, I think he has made a very weak argument.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It may be five miles. The hon. gentleman knows the distance better than I do.

Mr. MARTIN. I think the hon. gentleman must have weakened his argument purposely, in order to defeat the object I had in view. In place of coming to my rescue and strengthening the arguments I used, he has come before this committee to weaken them by stating that the distance between these two breakwaters is only three miles, when it is five miles or more. The next thing the hon. gentleman says is that a large sum of money has been expended on Wood Island breakwater. I am sure that neither the hon. gentleman or the present Government need take any credit for that, and the Wood Island breakwater still is not in a very good condition for shipping, as it requires a good deal of dredging. The hon. gentleman is going to close his heart against East Queen's, so far as the expenditure of any public money is concerned, because, he says, I am a violent political opponent. But I hope he will send a dredge there to dredge out that breakwater, in order that the people of that section may be able to ship their produce. He says, further, that it is necessary to get surveys for this Belle River breakwater; but if the hon. Minister of Public Works will search the records of his department, I think he will find that surveys of that breakwater have been made very lately—within a year, or two years at most; and the hon. gentleman is only misleading this committee under pretense of wanting a survey made. Now, I did hope that, if I made a very poor argument in favour of these breakwaters, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would help me out; but, in place of that, he has done his best to pour cold water on both. In one breath he says my arguments are too strong, in the next that they are weak—I am sure I am sure I am not asking too much—and the people of Prince Edward Island will feel disappointed at the stand the hon. gentleman has taken on these matters.

Quebec Harbours and Rivers..... $34,350

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I would like to inquire from the hon. Minister of Public Works whether he has been informed that the appropriation of $3,000 which appears in the Estimates for repairs to the works on the river Ste. Anne de la Pérade, is fully adequate? Last winter a larger sum has been expended for works in that locality, and it was found inadequate. I am of opinion that, owing to the urgency of those works for protecting the town of Ste. Anne on the east and west sides of the river, it would be desirable to vote a larger appropriation. Would the hon. gentleman be ready to take any further information as might lead to an increase in that vote?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). (Translation.) I believe that the sum appropriated is quite sufficient for the works we have in view. The reports which have been handed down to me are to the effect that by piling up stones and fascines around the actual works, we could prevent them being carried away by the spring flood. Of course, if we wished to build new works, a larger appropriation would be needed; but, in the present state of things I think the appropriation asked for is quite sufficient.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Was the attention of the hon. gentleman drawn to the fact that works are required on the west side of the River St. Anne?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman should not overlook the fact that, properly speaking, those works are not within the province of the Dominion Government. The reason why the Public Works Department is contributing a certain amount is that those works involve a very heavy expenditure.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) This item of the Estimates covers a great many wharfs situated in the province of Quebec. My hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, is no doubt aware that there are certain dues received on those wharfs, which, small as they are, represent, none the less, a tax upon the people who use those wharfs. On the island of Orleans, for instance, there is a due of two cents received on each bushel of potatoes, and similar products. I would like to know whether the Government contemplate amending the law or the regulations on that matter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman ought not to forget that the question he has just put does not concern my department. The department concerns itself with the building of wharfs or their repairs, and with nothing else. I am not ready to tell him what will be, for the future, the policy of the Government on that point. I am free to admit, however, that the collection of that tax up to now has been a public nuisance.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) If the hon. gentleman allows me, I will take this opportunity of reminding him that a question has previously been put by the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), asking that engineers be sent out to make a survey along the St. Lawrence, with a view to ascertaining the means of preventing the ice damming up in the spring, thus causing the lands to be flooded along the St. Lawrence. This is a question of great importance, owing to the fact that the lands which suffer from the flood are greatly depreciated in value. I may remind the hon. Minister that there is no appropriation made in the Supplementaries for that purpose, notwithstanding the promise made by the hon. gentleman to the hon. member for Berthier, that the Government would concern themselves about it, without delay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) The question put by the hon. gentleman has been under consideration for several years. I need hardly tell him that I fully realize its importance. There may be found in the pigeon-holes of my department, many reports on the matter. We shall make it our duty to get further information, and when all the desirable information is at hand, I will take the necessary steps to remedy that state of things.

Mr. BOISVERT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, in connection with the appropriation made for the building of works on the River St. Lawrence, I deem it my duty to call the attention of the Government, and more particularly that of the hon. Minister of Public Works, to the expediency of making an appropriation, in order to have surveys made at different points on the River St. Lawrence, with a view to ascertaining whether some means could not be devised, through the building of some works, to prevent such flooding as took place last spring, resulting in considerable damages, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars. Not to mention the damages sustained elsewhere, I may say that in several localities in my constituency, last spring, the ice has demolished several houses and carried away a great many other buildings. And I may say that many other localities have suffered similar damages. Now, it seems to me that the Government are in duty bound to see to it that means be provided whereby the recurrence of such disasters might be averted or reduced to a minimum, and to prevent the danger being intensified in the future. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the opinion of experts, were a pier to be built in the channel of the River St. Lawrence, at a small distance up the stream at Cape la Roche, opposite Ste. Anne de la Pérade, in order to facilitate the passage of the water, the desired result would be reached. As I quite understand that the scheme I advocate requires a few words of explanation on my part, I will try to state the case as briefly as possible. As the hon. gentlemen know, when the ice bridge takes first, opposite Quebec, and goes on forming higher up the river, up to the Richelieu, where the water is very deep and the current very swift, the ice bridge takes very slowly at that latter point, owing to the fact that that part of the ice breaks into pieces which go off and, passing underneath the ice bridge, ground in large banks on the rocks, thus obstructing the passage of the water. From that moment, the level of the river begins to rise, and it only goes down when the ice breaks up. It is within my recollection that the ice bridge having taken in that way, the river level, opposite Three Rivers, rose about ten feet during winter, and the result was that a serious inundation took place in the spring of that year. And I may add that spring floods invariably take place, when the ice bridge forms on the Richelieu, opposite Ste. Anne de la Pérade. Now, Mr. Chairman, if a pier were built at the head of the Richelieu River, the result would be that the ice bridge would form with the first hard frost of the season, and when the ice bridge takes later on, opposite Quebec, it would go on forming up to the mouth of the Richelieu. Now, as at that latter point, the stream is pretty swift, and the Richelieu does not run over a great distance, there is but little doubt that the channel of the river would be free from ice during winter. And whenever the waters, in the spring, would reach that spot, they would find an easy passage. And so, the lands in those localities situate above that point would not be flooded.

Mr. BOISVERT.

The hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beau-soleil), a few days ago, called the attention of the Government to the urgency of building ice-breakers opposite the town of Berthier. Now, I do not wish to take away from the hon. gentleman any credit he is entitled to for his exertions on behalf of his constituents, but I hold that should the Government yield to his request, they ought also to build similar ice-breakers opposite the city of Three Rivers, which has suffered such heavy damages last spring. A large portion of the houses in St. Philip's ward were then demolished by the ice. The Government would also have to build several similar ice-breakers along the banks of the River St. Lawrence, opposite the villages, in order to protect the dwellings of the inhabitants. Now, it is easily understood that the building of all those works would involve a heavy public expenditure, without preventing the waters of the river rising to a great height, as witnessed last spring. While, through the building of a pier in the channel of the River St. Lawrence, as I just said, a two-fold benefit would be secured, that of facilitating the passage of the waters of the river and, in addition thereto, that of obviating the necessity for the Government to build ice-breakers at different points along the river. But it might, perhaps, be urged that through the building of the projected pier, in the channel of the river, the navigation of the St. Lawrence would be obstructed. I do not think so, Mr. Chairman, on the ground that the location of such a pier could be shown by means of a beacon at high water, or by a lighthouse.

In 1890, at the time when, as now, I sat in this House for the county of Nicolet, I took occasion to have resolutions passed by several municipal councils in my constituency, which were chiefly exposed to suffer damages from the recurrence of the flood. Those resolutions were to the effect that a wharf should be built at Cape la Roche. Later on, in reply to a question which I put to the then Minister of Public Works, I understood the hon. gentleman to say that after having talked the matter over with his engineer, he had come to the conclusion that the cost of the work, should it be deemed necessary to build it, would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $5,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, such an expenditure would be a wise one, were it calculated to facilitate, through the building of that wharf, the passage of the waters of the River St. Lawrence. I may say that the building of piers at different points on the river would involve a much larger expenditure.

I think the Government could also give instructions to some of those who live in the localities to the south of the river, opposite the River Richelieu, to watch the progress of the ice, next winter, and to report, next spring, to the Public Works Department, which would be a means of securing valuable data by which the Government might be enabled to take action, with a thorough knowledge of the matter.

While I am on my feet, I think it worth the trouble to convey to the House the opinion of a pilot, Mr. Joseph Léveillé, who is apparently thoroughly acquainted with the progress of the ice, at the time of its breaking up in the spring, as also with the causes of the extensive inundations which have occurred at different times. With regard to those inundations, he says :

Reports have appeared in the public prints giving the details of the disasters which have befallen the flooded localities. The losses suffered by them were enormous ; and the ruins resulting from the flooding of those lands will require a long time before they are made up. Eloquent wails were heard in favour of the victims of the flood ; a great deal of sympathy was extended to those in distress. Very well ; but is there nothing else to be done ? Shall not a single voice be heard throughout the country, urging that something be done to prevent the recurrence of similar disasters in the future ? Shall nobody endeavour to ascertain whether there are not any means of preventing the recurrence of those disasters, or at least minimizing the danger ?

For a number of years I have acted as pilot between Montreal and Quebec. I had made myself acquainted with the River St. Lawrence in its natural state, before they began dredging it. I have watched carefully all the important works carried out by the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, and I have looked into and ascertained the results. Now, availing myself of the data and information treasured up in my youth and matured by many years of experience, I think it would be worth while to bring to the knowledge of the public certain facts which, unknown as they are, are very material to the question I am dealing with.

Flooding in the localities situate along the shore of the St. Lawrence, is caused by ice dams. There are certain places where the ice piles up in huge masses, as at Maisonneuve, a little lower down Montreal, and at Ste. Anne de la Pérade, about twelve leagues distant from Three Rivers.

And, further on, he says :

There is, in the river, about five leagues above Ste. Anne de la Pérade, between Champlain and Gentilly, an extensive shoal called the Gentilly shoal. That shoal is two miles wide by five miles long. In the spring of the year, when the snow thaws, and the level of the river rises, that shoal, as it were, breaks and goes off in a single bank, loaded with boulders and pebbles embedded in the ice ; it floats down the river and runs against the Ste. Anne pillars. As it is too solid yet to break up, it stops there and forms a dam which goes off only a few days later ; while floating down to Cape la Roche, where it breaks up, it drops the large boulders it carries along. For pretty nearly twenty years past, the Government have had the larger boulders removed, which are carried away by the ice from the Gentilly shoal to that at Ste. Anne. The larger boulders are removed, but there still remains a quantity of them which pile up in the bottom of the river and obstruct the passage of the water.

Now, it stands to reason that it is on the Gentilly shoal that piers or wharfs should be built, in order to prevent the ice breaking up too soon, and to cause it to disintegrate itself on the very spots where it forms. Now, it may be urged, how comes it that some thirty or forty years ago those boulders were not thus carried away by the ice ? I give two reasons for it ; first, because the currents of the river were not the same as they are now ; secondly, because the rise of the waters, at that time, occurred much later in the season, about the close of May, while now it generally occurs between the 20th April and the 15th May. That is a matter of general notoriety. The ice, at Gentilly, was then kept back by the shoal itself. As to the change that has taken place in the time at which the rise of the water occurs, the reason for it is to be found in the fact that the province of Upper Canada, formerly covered with forest trees, has been cleared of trees, and is now thickly settled. It is now the most prosperous and thriving province, from an agricultural standpoint. The clearing of the lands and the system of irrigation have first brought about a change in the climatic conditions of the country, and then secured an easier and more rapid passage for the surface waters. The level of the great lakes rises and the River St. Lawrence swells up, while in Lower Canada, where spring is backward, the ice is still solid. Those are facts which cannot be disputed.

That boulders are being carried away from the Gentilly shoal to the Ste. Anne shoal is a fact which may be testified to by all the earlier inhabitants, by all the navigators who have witnessed it ; it is a fact beyond dispute. It was the ice from the Gentilly shoal which, in 1865, after breaking up in a solid mass, floated down stream and caused the localities of Ste. Anne de la Pérade, Batiscan, and other lower lands, down to the Sorel islands, to be flooded, everywhere occasioning considerable damages. Had that ice been kept back by piers it could not have floated down the stream in a solid mass.

I think I may dispense with reading any further extracts from that letter, as what I have quoted from it sufficiently illustrates the opinion of that expert.

With these few remarks, I am satisfied that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) will take my request into his most serious consideration. From the encouraging utterances fallen from the hon. gentleman, a few days ago, when he stated that he would have all necessary public works built, without taking into consideration the political colour of the gentlemen who applied to him, I am led to entertain the hope that he will implement his promises, and that he will not turn a deaf ear to the demands of the hon. gentlemen who apply to him for the construction of necessary works in their constituencies.

Burlington Channel, repairs to piers..... $10,000

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works if in addition to this $10,000 for repairs, he intends deepening Burlington Channel to the same depth as Wellington Canal? It is very important to the city of Hamilton that that should be done at an early day. I suppose the hon. gentleman is aware that there is a very large smelting works recently built at Hamilton, and that we have to go to the Lake Superior country for our ores, and that in order to get the ore delivered at the cheapest rate we have to bring it in as large vessels as possible. If we could get the Burlington Channel to the same depth as the Welland Canal we would be able to bring down large barges from Lake Superior with the ores of that country. I hope it is the intention of the Government to begin that work early next spring.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must say that I will give my best attention to the matter. Of course, I have not been long enough in the department to give a definite answer to-night, but after having heard what the hon. member has said, I shall certainly be glad to do what I can.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). This was brought to the attention of the former Government, and I understand they promised to perform this work, and I was somewhat surprised to find that they did not carry out their promise.

Mr. HENDERSON. In connection with the Burlington Channel, I would ask whether the bridge recently constructed over it for passenger traffic has yet been opened to the public? I understand it has been opened for the use of the electric railway crossing the bridge, but I am told that the approaches to the bridge are not yet completed, and the general public are deprived of the privilege of crossing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The bridge is now completed and in full working order and open to the public. The approaches are not altogether finished, but very shortly they will be.

Goderich—Reconstruction of breakwater and repairs to pier..... $28,000

Mr. REID. What is the total amount paid out by the Government on Goderich to this date?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The port of Goderich, as far as I have been able to ascertain, has cost the Dominion nearly $600,000.

Mr. REID. What is the annual expenditure?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is quite impossible to say.

Mr. REID. Is there not a certain amount paid out annually?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. REID. What are the total receipts?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are no receipts.

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. gentleman ought to know. It is a free harbour, constructed by the Conservative Government, and started 24 years ago as a harbour of refuge. It is the only harbour of refuge from Sarnia to Cape Hurd on the east coast of Lake Huron, a distance of 150 miles. It was commenced after thorough investigation by the Government of Sir John Macdonald in 1872. A commission was issued at my request by that Government to take evidence, and it was decided that Goderich was the only point at which a harbour of refuge could be conveniently constructed. The Government expended about $250,000 on the harbour, and the succeeding Government spent in the neighbourhood of $250,000, making in all $500,000. Then an additional sum of $50,000 was expended for extending the North Pier. In the neighbourhood of $600,000 was spent in all to make it a harbour of refuge. The first works were undertaken about 24 years ago, and the second about 20 years ago. From that time until now nothing has been done at all except to extend the North Pier a distance of some 50 to 100 feet.

Four years ago the engineer of the Department of Public Works reported to the Government that unless the breakwater, which was the protection to the harbour, was repaired, serious consequences would result, that the breakwater had given way, having been erected 20 years before, and that then it would cost $6,000 to repair the work. The Government of the day turned a deaf ear to the warning of their own engineer and did nothing. The next year the engineer of the department again drew the attention of the Minister to the condition of Goderich harbour, and pointed out that further damage had been done by the spring and fall freshets, and that then it would require $18,000 to repair the northern breakwater. The Government still did nothing. The town of Goderich sent delegations over and over again and pointed out that if the Government wished to preserve this great public work from absolute destruction, they must repair it at once. And still they did nothing. Next year the engineer again made a report pointing out that still further damage had been done to the northern breakwater and that unless it was repaired at once, this harbour for which $600,000 had been paid, would be destroyed, and that the cost of repairs, if undertaken then, would be over $18,000. And the Government did nothing—absolutely nothing. Last session from my place in the House I asked the Minister of Public Works what it would cost to repair the breakwater then, and the hon. gentleman replied that the report of the engineer showed that it would cost $53,000. And yet the Government did nothing. When this Government came into power, I asked the Minister of Public Works in the public interests to send his engineer up and examine the northern breakwater. The engineer went up and made a report showing, I understand, that it will cost $115,000 to repair that breakwater. So that for five years the engineer of the department persistently drew attention to the condition of the work, and for five years the late Government neglected it. If they desired that a work, which cost the people of Canada $600,000 and which makes the only harbour of refuge on the east coast of Lake Huron for a distance of a hundred and fifty miles, to become useless, they could not have pursued a better course. The necessity for that harbour of refuge was shown a week ago when an equinoctial gale passed over Lake Huron, and the Government dredge and two Government tugs had to seek refuge there, and several sailing vessels besides. Yet when hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side, they persistently failed to do their duty in respect of Goderich harbour. I regret that the late Minister of Public Works, who has gone to his reward, is not here that I might tell him what I think of the conduct of himself and his colleagues in relation to this matter. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) knows, or ought to know that there is no revenue from Goderich harbour. It is a harbour of refuge and no tolls are charged. The late Government abolished the tolls, and therefore no revenue could be expected. If the present Minister of Public Works desires to do his duty in the interests of the public and in the interests of the navigators of the western lakes, this harbour must be completed and made a thorough harbour of refuge. I have no interest in the matter except as a resident of the town, and as I do not want to see $600,000 of public money wasted, as it must be, unless it is saved by the energy and pluck of the present Minister of Public Works.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister, despite what the hon. gentleman says, are the docks at Goderich harbour of any commercial value, and are they rented as in past years? I think the hon. gentleman is incorrect in this respect and that the docks are rented. But if they are of no commercial value, it is well the House should know. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the "Hansard" of 1894, he will find that a grant of $33,000 was made for this harbour.

Mr. CAMERON. I mentioned that. It was for the extension of the northern pier. And I may say, that although there are no tolls from the harbour, nor the docks proper, but the northern breakwater is rented for piling lumber, and there is a small revenue from that, but the Government get nothing from the harbour proper.

Mr. REID. What does the revenue amount to?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have nothing to do with that; that belongs to the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Mr. CRAIG. I am a little disappointed not to find anything in this estimate for the harbour at Port Hope, which, I think is the best harbour and the most important one between Toronto and Kingston. I would say nothing about the matter if it were not for the fact that some repairs are absolutely necessary and ought to be made this fall. I hope that in the Estimates that are yet to come down the hon. Minister will have the sum necessary to make these needed repairs.

Mr. TISDALE. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that nothing is appropriated here for the harbour of Port Dover. I presume he has had time to examine the papers I submitted to him showing a case of urgency for a grant of money for that harbour, and I hope that in the further Supplementary Estimates he will be able to do something in that connection. I do not propose to go into the matter, but I may say that a large sum of money has been expended by private parties for the improvement of this harbour, one grant alone having amounted to $15,000. There has been one grant given already of $15,000. I merely wanted to ask the Minister with regard to the further sum that was promised.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As my hon. friend has said, I had not time to look carefully into the question which has been submitted to me. I am sorry that I cannot extend any hope to him of a further sum of money during this session. I can only promise to give my best attention to the papers which have been brought to my notice.

Mr. GUILLET. I desire to thank the Minister for this appropriation for much-needed repairs at the Cobourg harbour of refuge. This is a most important harbour. When completed, it will contain 50 acres of harbour, of an average depth of 17 feet, with 26 feet at the entrance. It will then be certainly the most important harbour between Toronto and Kingston, if not between Port Dalhousie and Kingston. The amount appropriated for repairs is small, but they are urgently needed. A much larger sum will be required to complete the repairs in a permanent manner, and I trust that a further appropriation will be made next year. Dredging is also very necessary in the inner basin, as it has to be used until the outside harbour is completed; 800 feet of breakwater requires to be built to complete the outside harbour. I hope the Minister will be able to send us a dredge later on, as the harbour commissioners have been promised the use of a dredge to make the inner basin more accessible in stormy weather, as the water is now so low in the lake.

Mr. BENNETT. I would ask the Minister of Public Works whether each of these docks, wharfs or piers, or all of them, are private, or are they Government docks?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are all public property, with the exception of L'Original.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice an item of $1,000 for repairs to Thornbury wharf. It is very much needed, and, on behalf of the people, I thank the Minister for it. I regret that he could not see his way clear to put an item in for a little additional dredging that is very much needed there, and also in Meaford. A year ago last summer, a dredge was doing some work there, but, owing to the money running out, it was obliged to stop before the work was done. A little more work is badly needed both in Thornbury and Meaford.

Mr. TISDALE. I wish to thank the Minister for the grant to Port Dover. I hope I will not be asking too much, if I suggest that, before next session, his engineers should examine and see if the papers I submitted to him are correct.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will go carefully into the whole question.

Mr. HACKETT. What is the amount of revenue collected from these public piers and wharfs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These are all free harbours.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg to draw the Minister's attention to the harbour at Oakville, the only harbour of importance between Hamilton and Toronto on Lake Ontario. A year or two ago, the late Government spent a sum of money in dredging Oakville harbour, but a further sum is needed to complete that work. The dredge had to be taken away on account of pressure elsewhere. I would ask the Minister to make inquiry with reference to this important harbour, and see if a little grant, possibly a thousand dollars, could not be made for the purpose of completing what was undertaken at that time.

Harbours and Rivers, B.C..... $19,000

Mr. PRIOR. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that there is nothing in these supplementaries for Victoria harbour. There is an item in the Main Estimates, but it is altogether insufficient for the work that is required. This matter was brought to the attention of the late Government, and it was their intention to give a much larger sum. There is, as the hon. gentleman's deputy will inform him, a very fine dredge in Victoria, purchased a short time ago for, I think, $28,000. It is one of the most modern kind; but for the sum of $10,000 it cannot be worked any considerable portion of the year, because of the large amount of money that is used up in wages, and, therefore, it is idle for the greater part of the year. I would ask the

Mr. BENNETT.

Minister, if further supplementaries are to come down, to put a further sum in for Victoria harbour. He must remember that the sea-going vessels now visiting Victoria, bring it up to the second largest port in Canada.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This item of $10,000 was put in last year, and I take it as I found it.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman will find, on looking over the correspondence, that a larger sum was promised by the late Government.

Telegraph line between Marjorie and Cheticamp, re-poling ..... $1,000

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Has this line to be re-poled or is this money awaiting expenditure?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). This is to do the work.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Is there any report in the department to show that the poling is absolutely necessary?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is such a report.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). During the late political campaign there was a vast number of telegraph poles strewn along that line. As the Minister's assistants in his office must know, that line was built only a few years ago. I can tell the hon. gentleman that if he sends a competent inspector to look at these poles he will find that they are afflicted with that disease which the hon. gentleman from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) referred to the other evening as the rickets. I warn the Minister that he should send a competent person to examine these poles before he expends this $1,000. I must say that there is considerable dissatisfaction at the management of that line throughout. The repairs and maintenance of that line are entrusted to the agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company in St. John, N.B. There is a sort of partnership between that gentleman and a certain Mr. Keeley in one of the departments here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He is the chief officer for that work in my department.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Yes, I think so. The agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company manages these affairs. Mr. Keeley does not appear in the matter very frequently at all, but the agent of the Western Union Company sends a detachment of his men about once a year to repair that line. Seeing that the Public Works Department is in new hands now I trust that there will be a change with regard to the management of that line. I have given these few points in order that the Minister may see that the management is taken under his own department, and not left under the ægis of the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Mr. ELLIS. I presume that when the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) refers to the agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, he means the superintendent.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Yes.

Mr. ELLIS. There can be no question that that gentleman is a most capable and thoroughly reliable, and honest, and honourable man.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I raised no doubt whatever as to the capability of the superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Company. But the Western Union Company is an American corporation, and I do not think that its agent should be permitted to manage this very important business for the Department of Public Works of Canada. I do not reflect in the slightest degree on the honesty or capability of the superintendent. But I do say that he is hardly the proper person to manage our business.

Mr. ELLIS. It ought to be said with regard to these employees of the Western Union Telegraph Company, that they are all Nova Scotians or New Brunswickers, and that they are all deeply interested in the work. I know nothing about this particular matter, but I can readily understand that it might be much cheaper for the Public Works Department to entrust the management of this small service to men who are engaged constantly in carrying on such work. They are men who are capable of doing it, and who have all the necessary appliances at their hands.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ellis) that the men in the different counties through which this line passes are perfectly capable of doing this work. I submit that it is hardly worth while to send a detachment of men from New Brunswick to replace a few telegraph poles in the county of Inverness in the province of Nova Scotia.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1897, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, September 30th, 1896.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.40 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 1st October, 1896.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. CHOQUETTE moved that the fourth report of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the official report of the Debates of the House during the present session be now concurred in.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) if this is the report which recommends the appointment of certain translators in the place of those who were dismissed?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Sir, I have to say about it, now that we know the facts, that the whole proceedings culminating in this motion is one of the most extraordinary, and I venture to say one of the most scandalous that has ever come before Parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman should proceed to criticise the proceedings of a committee of this House as scandalous.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course if I have done anything out of order I will withdraw it. What I wanted to say is this, and I will try now to express myself more in language that will be within the rules of the House; I wanted to say, that the action of those who have followed up the translators with a view of having them dismissed, is, in the light of their subsequent action, the most extraordinary proceeding, as I believe, that has ever taken place in any Parliament. Here are hon. gentlemen who come before the committee and prosecute four men with a view of having them dismissed and apply the most rigorous and inquisitorial process in their regard, and it turns out that their object in dismissing them was to appoint in one case the son of one of the judges, in the other case the partner of one of those who were at once judges and prosecutors. The hon. member for Napierville (Mr. Monet) when asked in regard to the qualification of one of the candidates, said in committee—

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). Order. The hon. gentleman cannot refer to what occurred in the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. If this occurred in committee the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) must not refer to it in the House. The hon. gentleman must get his facts outside the proceedings of the committee, if they are not contained in the report. That is the rule of the House.

Mr. DAVIN. We have the facts then, and these facts are eloquent enough. One of these gentlemen who is recommended for appointment now is the partner of the hon. member for Napierville (Mr. Monet).

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. DAVIN. It is not carried; and if hon. gentlemen opposite were to cry out "carried" until the crack of doom, the people of this country will hear more of this matter. I say here, that in the history of parliaments, trifling as this matter is in its incidents, nothing has occurred that calls more for the scrutiny of the public outside of these walls, than what has taken place in regard to these translators. Here is one hon. gentleman in this House whose son is to be appointed, and another hon. gentleman whose partner is to be appointed, and, Sir, what guarantee have we of the fitness of these gentlemen? These gentlemen also are as violent partisans as any of those gentlemen could possibly have been whose dismissal was sought with so much eagerness. Now, Sir, let us suppose hon. gentlemen acting in this House, ostensibly in the public interest, ostensibly in the interest of efficiency in regard to the officers of Parliament; let us suppose that an hon. gentleman in this House had made out a case for rendering vacant offices in the gift of the Government of the Day, and it turned out that he wanted the vacant place for a partner of his own or for a relative of his own. Why, Sir, it would so clearly vitiate his position and his bona fides as a member of Parliament that it might fairly be a question whether he should retain his seat any longer in this House. I think I am not going too far in contending that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. DAVIN. Hon. gentlemen smile at that, but if they will look over the records of Parliament and the standard of honour that is held up in the great mother of parliaments, by whose standard we measure ourselves here, and in whose glass we try to dress our proceedings, they will find that there is more in what I say than they think. When Mr. Butt brought before Parliament the case of an Indian Prince and advocated his cause with the eloquence and the resources that belonged to that great man, Mr. Roebuck found out that Butt had taken a fee for doing that, and what was the result? In order to avoid expulsion, Butt not only retired from Parliament but he disappeared from the Four Courts of Dublin, and did not return for years to the city. What is the difference between an hon. gentleman taking a fee to advocate a certain course in Parliament, and an hon. gentleman coming, first to a committee and subsequently to this House, and advocating the dismissal of a man against whom there is no charge as regards inefficiency, and then placing in that position a man who is his own partner?

Mr. MONET. Would the hon. member allow me a word? I may say that Mr. Geoffrion is not and never has been my partner.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I am now in a strait betwixt the two. I do not know how to take what the hon. gentleman says, because it was the hon. gentleman's own word that I had for it, that Mr. Geoffrion was his partner.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must accept the hon. member's statement.

Mr. MONET. I have no interest whatever in the appointment of Mr. Geoffrion. I practice in the county of Napierville, and very seldom go to Montreal; but when I do I have, as is said in French, a pied-à-terre in Mr. Geoffrion's office. My name is on a sign at the door of his office, but I am not his partner and never have been, and I have no interest in his appointment.

Mr. DAVIN. I am bound to take what the hon. gentleman states; but I heard him, and gentlemen around me heard him say that Mr. Geoffrion was his partner.

Mr. MONET. Will the hon. gentleman oblige me by saying who told him that Mr. Geoffrion was my partner?

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Monet—that is the name. I was sitting at the same table in the committee room with him at the time. Then, we have another gentleman whose son is to be appointed. I hope there is no doubt on that subject. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of importance; it is a matter that affects, in my opinion, the honour of this House; and, although I do not intend to make any motion on this matter, I think the House should not pass this motion without understanding the motives that have actuated those who have prosecuted these cases.

Mr. Fiset. (Translation.) I feel quite surprised at the remarks fallen from the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Davin), in connection with the fact that my son has, it happens, been appointed on the staff of translators. I am so much the more amazed at those remarks, as when that appointment was suggested, I mentioned the matter to the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House, and asked him how he would view the proposed appointment of my son as a translator. Then the hon. gentleman told me: I shall be most happy to see him appointed, and should his name come before the committee, I will vote for him. Those are the very words used by the hon. gentleman. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman turns around, and in the same breath, charges me and my son, before this House, of violating the law concerning the independence of the members of Parliament. I may tell the hon. gentleman that, if we are guilty of such a breach of the law, we have become so only after having sought his advice on the matter.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I may remark that this is only a question of justice towards the dismissed officers, as well as one of justice towards this House, and the gentlemen whom it is proposed to appoint as translators in the place of those who were dismissed. The hon. gentlemen who are members of the Debates Committee have thought it fit to report to this House, after having dismissed, on the ground of active interference in politics, three translators from the staff of the official translators of this House, that three other translators should be appointed to fill the places of those who were dismissed. We are entitled to know from the Government whether the gentlemen whom it is proposed to foist upon us, are men who have kept altogether aloof from the political arena; whether they have not taken an active part in the late elections, and whether they have not used offensive and abusive language with reference to their political opponents, during the late electoral contest. Why, Sir, if those gentlemen were guilty of exactly the same offence as those whose dismissal was sought for with so much eagerness were guilty of, I fail to see why these three men should be dismissed and three partisans put in their places.

I think the House should deal justly by the dismissed translators. As a rule, those to whom some wrong has been done are entitled to appeal to the tribunals for the redress of their grievances. But there is no gainsaying that when this House, or a committee of the House choose to commit an injustice, there lies no appeal to the tribunals for him who is wronged. So that, however modest may be the position of an officer of this House who suffers an injustice at our hands, I hold that it is a very serious matter for this House, or for a committee of the House, to do him an injustice. But, it may be urged, where is the injustice when those translators are treated exactly as the previous translators, whose places they are to fill, were? The same measure of justice is meted out to them, and they have nothing to complain of. Let me ask the hon. Prime Minister whether he was of opinion in 1888 that justice was done by the translators who were dismissed at that time, and whether he did not qualify, in the strongest terms, the course then pursued by the Government, when he stated that a crying wrong was being perpetrated against those officials of the House. I say, therefore, that the hon. gentleman has no right to appeal to the precedent created at that time and to come and tell us that they are simply doing by those who go out, what we did in 1888 by those who were then dismissed. If in 1888 when he was leader of the Opposition, the hon. gentleman cried out that the policy of the Government with regard to the translators was a crying injustice, I hold that neither the Government nor the hon. gentleman himself have a right to come and tell us now that they are dealing justly both by those who go out and by those who are put in their places.

If I understood aright the programme of the hon. gentlemen at the late elections, they claimed to be a Government pledged to reform. Well, Sir, I venture to tell the hon. gentlemen that the people of this country will say that this Government, who have so far refrained from declaring their policy, except by persecuting the civil service employees and the translators of this House, is not a Reformist Government, but an apish Government, in so far as they are trying to ape exactly the dangerous precedents established by their predecessors in office, while doing nothing to mend the mistakes made by the late Government. The hon. gentlemen are dumb as to their general policy: they have not, so far, made known their policy either on the Manitoba school question or on the tariff. It is only when it comes to persecuting the civil service employees and the official translators they agree upon a policy. With the exception of a few items, such as removing from the civil service a certain number of Conservative officials, they have so far refrained from disclosing their policy. I say, therefore, that the course of the hon. gentlemen will be condemned at the hands of the people of this country.

Why, Sir, the hon. gentlemen opposite have no time to concern themselves about those great questions of public policy affecting the interests of the people of this country, but they have plenty of time to spy upon the civil service employees and the servants of this House, and to hunt for arguments for dismissing them. But I hold, Sir, that such a course is not creditable to a Reform Government, but rather worthy of a Government with a pack of hungry followers to provide for, in order to redeem the promises made during the late electoral contest. The Government of the day are more concerned about providing for those hungry followers than about giving satisfaction to the people of this country who are calling upon the Government to declare their policy upon the great issues of the day. The Government do not deal justly by the civil service and the officers of this House, and their actual course shown clearly that the hon. gentlemen, before organizing this persecution, and providing for their hungry followers, should have announced before this House their policy concerning the great issues of the late electoral campaign. The Government should have enunciated their policy on the Manitoba school question. They should also have disclosed their policy concerning the reform of the civil service, but a just and fair reform, not one of persecution against journalists, members of the translating staff of the House, and against tribunes of the people who took part in the late electoral contest. The Government would have done more creditable work if they had undertaken the great reforms which they had pledged themselves before the electors to achieve, with a view of carrying the country, instead of persecuting those orators who took part in the late electoral contest and the publicists who sought to impress upon the people the views which they deemed the best in the interests of the country.

I am really amazed, Sir, to see my hon. friend the leader of the House, posing as a persecutor of tribunes of the people, of publicists and journalists, when those gentlemen, according to the doctrine laid down by the hon. gentleman himself in 1888, were free, outside the session, to go into journalism, to take part in the electoral contests and to give free expression to the views they thought the most conducive to promote the public interests. Let not the hon. gentleman come and tell us that he is meting out to the translators who have just been dismissed the same measure of justice as was meted out by the late Government to those dismissed in 1888. Let the hon. gentleman allow me to tell him that, from the grounds alleged by himself in 1888, what he is now doing is not giving a full measure of justice, but rather one of injustice, and that as a reformer, granting that there is anything to reform, the hon. gentleman is bound to reform the civil service on the lines of justice. He should not try to ape the late Government, who, as he stated, had made a blunder in the matter.

Mr. STENSON. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I remarked, while listening to the remarks just fallen from the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Dupont) that he qualified as persecutors of the tribunes of the people those who dismissed the officers of the House who participated in the late electoral contest. One would be led to believe that the Reformist party is the only culprit in this case. I shall not take up a great deal of the time of the House on this question, but, as I am one of the victims of persecution, I may remind the hon.

Mr. DUPONT.

member for Bagot that it is not only the Liberal party that has been guilty of persecuting civil servants. And in my case, there was no similarity, as I was not a federal officer, but a civil servant in the employ of the provincial government, and of the provincial House of Assembly, whose rulers belong to the party which the hon. gentleman is supporting in this House. Not only was I denied an opportunity of vindicating myself; not only was I dismissed, before committing any fault for which I might have been brought to trial, but no sooner had I been invited to run for the Dominion Parliament than I was notified by the Attorney General of the province of Quebec, a gentleman of the same political persuasion as the hon. member for Bagot, that I had to make my choice between being a candidate or a school inspector, and that without any delay.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I did not wait till I was brought to trial. As soon as I was notified by my employers that I had to make my choice between keeping my position and running for the Dominion Parliament, although I did not see any inconsistency in being an office-holder under the local government and being a candidate at the federal elections, I complied with their request, without needing much urging. I received that order on the 2nd June, and on the following day I resigned my position. From the fact that a member of the local government objected to an office-holder under him running for the House of Commons, I understood that it was the proper course for me to resign. If those who have committed the offence for which they have now atoned had pursued the same course, we would have been spared a great deal of discussion and the time of the House would not have been wasted in useless wrangles, and a large sum of public money would have been saved. I challenge the late Attorney General of the province of Quebec to rise in his place and state to this House that I had uttered a single offensive word against the local government, notwithstanding that they opposed me most bitterly. And I hold that, after resigning his position in the Quebec Cabinet, he had no more right than I had to take part in the federal elections. I may say that, in my opinion, he was less justifiable than I was to pursue such a course, because I had been invited by the people, whilst he should have kept quiet and minded his own business in the provincial government. I believe that this charge of persecution recoils upon the hon. gentlemen opposite and that it becomes them ill to raise that cry, because they were the first to persecute their opponents, and they did it mercilessly.

Mr. MONET. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in explanation of the remark I made when I interrupted a little while ago, the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). The hon. gentleman stated that he had heard me say that Mr. Geoffrion was a partner of mine, and he even hinted that such was the reason why I had brought up charges against some translators of the debates. When the question as to whether Mr. Geoffrion had the proper qualifications came up for debate before the committee, I said that I knew him well, and that we used the same office.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member cannot allude to what took place in the committee. It is against the rules of this House.

Mr. MONET. (Translation.) I only made allusion to that, to illustrate what I had said, but I bow to your ruling, Sir.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can deny having made any statement under any circumstances, if he chooses, but it is against the rules of this House to refer specifically to what has occurred in the committee.

Mr. MONET. (Translation.) I never told the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) that Mr. Geoffrion was a partner of mine in the common acceptation of the word, meaning thereby a legal firm drawing part of their revenue from the general practice of the office, so as to enable him to draw part of the revenue accruing from my practice, and vice versa. As a matter of fact, there is no such partnership between Mr. Geoffrion and myself. The partnership existing between us is a merely nominal one. I practice in the district of Iberville, but I have also cases which require my presence before the Montreal courts, and whenever I go there I use Mr. Geoffrion's office; and my partnership with him only amounts to this, that I have the freedom of his office.

I need hardly add, Sir, that I have no pecuniary interest whatever in Mr. Geoffrion's appointment, and that that gentleman will reap all the profits, should any accrue to him, which I am inclined to question, as he will have to leave his office and neglect his practice, in order to come to Ottawa during the session to discharge his official duties, should he accept the appointment, which, after all, may prove detrimental to his interests. So that I have not the slightest interest in Mr. Geoffrion's appointment.

The hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) has referred to the gentlemen we have appointed to fill the vacancies created by the dismissal of the translators, as hungry office-seekers. Such an utterance, when applied to the gentlemen whose appointment is recommended to this House, to say the least, lack politeness. What is there so extraordinary? Why, looking at the course followed by the hon. gentlemen opposite, I do not see in it any difference whatever from that we are now pursuing. In 1888, when the appointment of translators to fill up the vacancies created by the dismissal of the three translators came up before the House for ratification, were not three Conservatives appointed in the place of the dismissed translators? The only exception made to that rule was when the translators dismissed in 1888 were first appointed on the staff. That was a means of rewarding those who had taken an active part in politics in favour of the Conservative party. Why, then, I ask, should not the party now in power pursue the same course? The only thing we want is that the Government employees, of whatever rank, so long as they are in the service, should refrain from infringing upon the rule of strict neutrality imposed upon them. Such is the principle we have acted upon in those dismissals. Now, Sir, I am charged with having voted in committee upon the complaints which I had lodged against those translators, and which resulted in their dismissal. I object to those translators interfering in politics while in office. Should the same grievance exist later on, those whose appointment is now recommended to this House by the report of the committee, then the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) or any of the hon. gentlemen opposite will be free to lodge a complaint against them. I am accused of being a persecutor, because, after having lodged a complaint in committee, I voted as a member of that same committee against the accused. Previous to lodging a complaint against them, I had investigated the facts of the case, and when the complaints were brought before the committee I was fully cognizant of the facts which, to my mind, fully warranted the dismissal of those gentlemen. Those charges have been substantiated, as I expected, and the facts found quite sufficient to warrant the action being taken. Previous to lodging my complaint, as well as after that, I had found that the facts of the case were sufficient for that purpose, and I think it was only consistent on my part to vote for the dismissal of those translators who had interfered in politics while in the service of this House. True enough, I might have followed the course quite frequently pursued in this House by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and voted against the dismissal of those translators. The hon. gentleman, as the House knows very well, has frequently moved motions which he afterwards undertook to vote down. But I did not think it fit to tread in his footsteps, and to vote down complaints which I knew were well founded.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, permit me to make a personal explanation, as you permitted the hon. member. I heard somebody ask if a certain gentleman was qualified, and I heard Mr. Monet say, "Yes, he is qualified; he is a partner of mine." Others heard the same.

Mr. MONET. I never said that.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, there are one or two things that make this case somewhat peculiar. I thought I should have heard the chairman of the committee, or some member of the committee, say something with reference to the qualifications of these gentlemen whom it is proposed to appoint as translators; but the chairman of the committee, who moved the adoption of the report, did not seem to think that was a matter of the least importance. The main thing with my hon. friend seems to have been to get three out, and to get three others in; and he has not vouchsafed to this House one single word as to whether there has been any test at all made of these gentlemen's capabilities—whether they are literary men, journalists, whether they know something of public life and what may be called the atmosphere of a discussion which ranges over the whole field of Canadian politics, and which no translator can well turn from one language into another unless he is somewhat familiar with that atmosphere, and with the general history of Canadian politics. Not a word from my hon. friend about these things. With him qualifications seem to be not worth mentioning. But if one has been an offensive partisan—and by offensive it will be recollected the hon. gentleman means aggressive as opposed to defensive—that is sufficient. The hon. gentleman has spoken, but I should like some member of the committee, before we vote on this matter, to give the House some information as to whether these men are qualified, what their qualifications are, whether any test is applied by the Committee on Debates, and whether that test has been applied in this instance. So far as I could follow the hon. member for Napierville (Mr. Monet), he came very near to acknowledging to this House that he and Mr. Geoffrion were partners. At first he decidedly said that they were not partners and never had been; but his explanation brings their relationship very close to a partnership. It shows a very strong interest between the two, going so far that they use each other's office and take each other's cases. Well, that may be a distinction, but it is a distinction without any difference, so far as principle is concerned. With reference to the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Fiset), I want to ask my hon. friend the leader of the Government, in view of the position taken by himself and by other members of the Reform party in this House for so many years, as to the great necessity of maintaining the purity of Parliament intact and of having the independence of the members thoroughly hedged around, whether he thinks it contributes to that independence and that purity of Parliament for a member sitting in this House and criticising the acts of a government, as every member is supposed to do, to have his own son appointed to an office which has not a life tenure, which is only a temporary office, from which he is liable to be dismissed on the whim or the wish of the party in power. I do not see the least difference in reality between that and giving the office to the hon. member for Rimouski himself. You give it to his son, and his son can only keep it so long as he is a persona grata with the Government and the party that is; and it will not tend to the hon. gentleman's independence in criticising or disagreeing with the policy of the Government to know that he is held by such a bond as that. I would like to have my hon. friend state whether he thinks that does not come very close to trenching upon the independence of Parliament; and when he answers that question, I do hope he will not answer it by quoting an instance, and resorting to the argument that the other side did the same thing, but that he will give his opinion of this state of things.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I state that, because that argument is pushed so far that it takes away any ground of independent action on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite at all. Whenever they go back on their pledges, their answer to the arraignment is simply to look up a precedent in which some other party did something in the same line. That may satisfy them, but it is not a fair answer; and I hope the hon. gentleman will in this case treat the question on its merits as I put it to him. The whole question with reference to these translators has been a page in the history of this Parliament which will not conduce to the dignity of Parliament, or the good judgment of Parliament in the eyes of those who read its history.

Here you have an hon. gentleman preferring charges against the translators, into the particulars of whose tenure I will not take up time by going at all—his case fails, as we were informed by all the newspapers, before the committee, he goes for further evidence, and at last he gets a vote of the committee and has these men put out. At the very next meeting of the committee, something must have transpired, for just after the solemn vote of the House that these should no longer be translators of the House and relegating the duty to the committee of appointing other translators in their place, we have a further report from that committee asking Parliament to undo what it did a day or two before and to keep these men on until the end of the session. Why? Evidently because there were two parties who wanted to divide the spoils, and they could not agree.

Mr. SCRIVER. That was not the reason.

Mr. ELLIS. That is not true.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. gentleman has said that the committee could not agree upon the translators, and that therefore the matter went over. The fact of the matter is that it was considered an act of humanity or justice, or kindness, to allow the old translators to continue until the end of the session.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that I was not referring to what took place in the committee. I was not there, and even if I were, I could not refer to it. But, I say, putting the two things together, that when this Parliament, the day before, solemnly decided that these men were unfit to be translators of the debates, and imposed on the committee the task of appointing others in their places, and when the committee met for the purpose of appointing men worthy and fit to do the work—

Mr. SCRIVER. And you then drew the inference you were not warranted in drawing.

Mr. FOSTER. I can draw any inference I please. The very next day the committee comes down, evidently not being able to agree upon the translators, and asks this House to go back upon its solemn assertion of the day before, that these men were not fit to be translators of this House, and to keep them on until the end of the session. My inference is that the committee found it impossible, at that meeting, to make the new appointments; and from what I have seen in the newspapers, there were more applicants than were recommended, and there were more recommended than were required to fill the places, and as the committee could not agree, they decided to recommend the continuance of the dismissed translators until the end of the session. That is my inference. Is it unfair? I think not. Then, according to the newspapers, one gentleman withdrew a name he had placed before the committee and agreed to substitute another in its stead, and because the nominating parties had prepared notes, and come to an arrangement, we have this recommendation of the committee. Were these gentlemen who were recommended, and as to whose qualification we have not a word from the chairman of the committee, active partisans before they became translators? In the election ending June 23rd last, were those men actively engaged in politics? Were they Liberals who took part in that contest, and if they were—and I can scarcely doubt it—where is the principle that my hon. friend stands upon?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. They were not holding office then.

Mr. FOSTER. I apprehended that that would be what my hon. friend would say, and I will come to that in a moment. I ask the hon. leader of the House on what principle he stands, when one day he asks this House to take three men off the translators' list and take their living from them because they actively engaged in politics in the election ending June 23rd, and then to-day he asks us to put on three men who were actively engaged in the same election.

Is there any gentleman in this House prepared to rise and say that none of these men took an aggressive part in politics? The chairman of the committee made his own definition. I am keeping him to it. His definition of offensive partisanship was that it was opposed to defensive and was aggressive. It was not necessary to be discourteous, but simply to take an active part in politics. Did these gentlemen take an active part? Where is the principle on which my hon. friend stands? Surely he will not take refuge under the miserable subterfuge that was hinted—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid that the statement "miserable subterfuge," as applied to the statement of the hon. member, is quite out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think I applied that to his statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, I will take anything back for the sake of peace and quietness. I will take it all back. But what I meant to say—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). That is not respectful to the Chair. The hon. gentleman said: "Certainly, I will take anything back." That is disrespectful to the Chair. He was ordered to take it back, and the hon. gentleman should bow to the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has given an instance to this House of his utter incapacity to make a fair statement.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman has not taken back the expression yet.

Mr. FOSTER. I leave it to the Speaker himself. I made two statements. I said, at first, I will take anything back, and then afterwards I said: I will take that all back.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For peace and quietness.

Mr. FOSTER. If Mr. Speaker does not bear me out in that, I will make the apology necessary.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not hear the latter part of the statement that he would take it all back. Of course, if the hon. gentleman said that, it covers the ground.

Mr. FOSTER. I really did say that and meant it in good faith.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was not the hon. gentleman's complete statement. He said he would take it back for the sake of peace and quietness, and not because he was ordered to do so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He said, in the presence of the House, I will take it back.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another example which the hon. gentleman has given of his utter incapacity—

Mr. DOMVILLE. I think that should be taken back also.

Mr. FOSTER. That is another example of the hon. gentleman's utter incapacity to make a re-statement of what an hon. gentleman has just said in the House. I said at first, in a jocular way, or an earnest way, if the hon. gentleman wishes: "I will take anything back for the sake of peace and quietness." And after that I said to Mr. Speaker: "I will take it all back." I did not mean any disrespect at all. What I meant to say was that the interpellation of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville) was, I thought, a subterfuge, and if that is too strong, I take it back. What I meant was that it does not meet the case fairly. It is not an answer to the question of principle to say that these men were not officers at that time. The principle goes deeper than the mere holding of the office. If you are going to purge the civil service of this country, so far as this is concerned, you must purge it in one way—you must make it a rule that partisanship shall not entitle a man to an office, and shall not keep him in office after he is appointed. The mere fact that a man is not an office-holder, does not take him out of the category of partisans, so far as the principle is concerned. This episode is a page of our history that will not read to the credit of the House. Once, twice, three times, we have discussed the manifestation of the persecuting spirit which appears in this dismissal of three translators, one of whom did nothing at all, except that, when he was called to the platform at a meeting, he expressed his opinions in a courteous and manly way, without allusions that could be taken objection to. These three men are dismissed, and three partisans are put in their places; and we have taken up hour after hour in this House discussing this small matter of persecuting men who do not think as the dominant party do, and putting others in who persecute the other party.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has, in the course of his remarks on two or three different occasions, assumed to state the policy of the Government on the question now before the House. I have only to state to my hon. friend that upon the whole question the Government have no policy and did not endeavour to influence in any way the decision of the committee. Every member of the committee is ready to bear witness that, when they applied, as it is not unnatural they should do under such circumstances, to know if the Government had any wishes or desires to express, or rules to lay down, in every instance they were told that it was a matter for the committee to deal with, and one with which the Government had no desire to interfere—it was a matter of the discipline of the House. But, as a member of this House, I am free to admit, and free to say, that I have strong convictions, which I expressed on a former occasion. The hon. gentleman has asked me upon what principle I stand on this matter. I stand upon the very principle laid down by his own friends in 1888. I stated, on a former occasion, and I repeat now, that it is no pleasure for me to see these three men dismissed; but, if they are dismissed, it is not the fault of the party now in power, but it is altogether in pursuance of the rule laid down in 1888—laid down at that time very unfairly, laid down this year with justice—because in 1888, when three men were dismissed, it had been well understood that the translators should be free to engage in journalism or in any other occupation, and even to participate in politics. But, in their case, the rule was laid down that translators, temporary employees of this House who were not required to give all their time to the business of the House, were not to interfere in politics. After that, any officer of this kind who interfered in politics, did so at his own peril. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says that the inconsistency is shown in this, that, if you dismiss men who are active partisans, you appoint men who have been active partisans. The only answer I have to make is that at the present time we are not concerned to know whether the men whose appointment is now proposed, were or were not active partisans. If they were such, they were within their rights. But, if they become active partisans now that they are promoted, they do it at their peril, and they must expect the same measure to be meted out to them as is meted out to the others. If we were to introduce the system of preventing men being appointed to office because they have been active partisans, we should have to completely revise the rule of the civil service. It is childish for the hon. gentleman to bring forward such an argument. But, while it is childish to bring forward such an argument, because it is contrary to the whole tenor of the civil service, as we have it, we have the right to expect that every man who has been an active partisan, the moment he enters the building as a member of the civil service, shall cease to be a partisan. The hon. gentleman says that we know nothing of the qualifications of these gentlemen whose appointment is recommended by the committee. For my part, I am willing to take the sense of the committee, who have passed upon this question, and I presume that the committee we have appointed and in whose judgment we have trusted, have selected men who are fit to discharge the duties entrusted to them. I might go further than that. Of the three gentlemen appointed, one of them, the gentleman with whose name that of my hon. friend from Napierville (Mr. Monet) has been connected, Mr. Geoffrion, I know personally and well. I will answer for his qualifications. As to the young gentleman who is the son of one of the members of this House, I cannot say I know; yet I believe that he also is well qualified. As to the third, I do not know him, except as a political friend. Referring to the point made a moment ago, in raising the question whether it was proper for the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Fiset) to have a son appointed to this office, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was wise, very wise, to anticipate the reproach that might be made. Why, looking at the other side, I have yet to see a man who has not a relative of some kind in the civil service. We bring that forward, not simply to justify our own cause, but to show the inconsistency of hon. gentlemen opposite and the length to which they are ready to go in order to raise an objection. The hon. member for Rimouski is not a member of this committee. It is true, he is a member of this House. I must say that I cannot see any impropriety in the son of a member of this House being employed as an officer of this House. If the hon. gentleman sees any impropriety in this, well, he is endowed with a scrupulousness which is not manifested in the actions of his friends.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to refer to a remark made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), in drawing the inference that, as the committee did not appoint the translators at their first meeting, they could not agree upon the men to be selected, and were obliged to retain the services of the three translators. Now, the fact is that the present translators were kept in these positions for this session out of consideration for them. We thought that they ought to be allowed to discharge the duties of the office for the remainder of this session and draw the full indemnity. It was out of pure benevolence to these men that the proposition was made, and it was made at the meeting at which these new translators were appointed. So the hon. member for York was entirely in error in this respect. The arrangement was made at the last meeting of the committee, and I made the proposition myself, that these men should be paid for the remainder of the session, because I thought they were entitled to it, the session being so near its close. We have never found fault with the work of these men. We assumed that they were faithful translators. It was no harm to any member of this House to keep them in office; in doing this we felt that we were simply doing an act of justice to them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not propose for a moment to protract this very lengthy discussion. The subject appears to have been pretty well exhausted, and it does not require anything more to be said on either side. But I rise for the purpose of drawing the attention of the First Minister to a statement he made in the course of his remarks just delivered to the House. As I understood that hon. gentleman, he took the ground that if a matter was brought before Parliament, that if he contended that what Parliament proposed to do was a grave injustice, a thing that ought not to be done, and voted against it, and if his view was overruled, that for all future time he was bound by the action of Parliament in which he had been in a minority, he was bound by the action of a majority to which he was opposed, and he was bound to adopt the precedent and the principle that he regarded as a grave injustice and an impropriety. Now, that is a doctrine which I hardly think the hon. gentleman intends to propound. Does he mean to say that in questions of public policy, if the majority opposed to him place on record a bad precedent, that is to bind him for the term of his natural life, and that when he comes into power he is going to adopt that bad precedent as his rule of action, and carry it out? Let the hon. gentleman pursue that doctrine a little further. The question of the National Policy has been before this House for 18 years, and the hon. gentleman has taken a position of antagonism to that policy, but the House has voted him down. He is recorded on the journals of the House as disbelieving in the National Policy, and every one supposed that when the hon. gentleman came into power he would carry out the principles which he had advocated in the House when he had been in a minority. Well, where is the difference, if the hon. gentleman is bound by a policy to which he was strongly opposed as immoral, as unjust and improper. Every one supposed that the hon. gentleman's views placed on record in Parliament and before the country, were a pledge that if he attained power, he would change the National Policy and carry out the policy he had himself maintained as being more wise and just; but that is not at all the view he takes of his duty as manifested in his policy towards these translators. I only rise for the purpose of drawing the attention of my hon. friend to the position which he seemed to assume, in his previous remarks, that having opposed a policy which was overruled by a majority of this House, he is now bound to maintain a policy in which he did not believe, and which he had strongly denounced.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I think the hon. gentleman has entirely misunderstood the position taken by my hon. friend. As I understand it, what the leader of the Government maintained, was this: that some years ago a new rule was introduced. His objection to the punishment inflicted on the late translators who were dismissed by a preceding Government, was that they were punished without any rule having been established; that was his position. Up to that time it had been supposed that these men were free. The House then decided that these translators, although employed but for a part of the year, were not to interfere. That rule was violated by the gentlemen who have been dismissed. My hon. friend's position was that while he had opposed the punishment of the former translators because no such rule had been established, that after such rule had been established, and due notice had been given to these men, they were justly dismissed. That was the position of my hon. friend.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I wish to give the information asked for by the hon. member for York about the qualifications of the men who have been recommended by the committee as translators. I know intimately the three gentlemen who are recommended to this House for appointment. Mr. Pelland is a lawyer of about ten years' practice. He speaks and writes, and can translate, both French into English, and English into French, to perfection. He knows both languages perfectly. I may say the same thing of Mr. Geoffrion, and also of Mr. Fiset. I have known the three gentlemen for a number of years past, and I know their qualifications. When I moved the appointment of these three gentlemen, I stated in the committee, and I repeat to this House, that if I had not personal knowledge of their eminent qualifications, I would not have taken the responsibility of moving their appointment. I may say that although we have no fault to find with the qualifications of the three translators who have been dismissed, I believe the House will be as well served, if not better, by the new appointees. While I am on my feet I may take occasion to contrast the conduct of the Liberal party in 1896 towards the translators who have been dismissed, with that of the Conservative party in 1888 under similar circumstances. The Liberal party in 1896 has called before the committee the parties complained of, we have heard their explanations, we have given them every opportunity to set themselves right, and we have acted according to the rules laid down in 1888, according to right, justice and fair play. Not only so, but we have come before this House recommending that they should be kept on till the end of the session, and receive their full salary. What did the Conservative party do in 1888? At almost the very beginning of the session, three men were dismissed without trial, without a hearing, and received only $150 each on their salaries. They were dismissed contrary to justice and fair-play, without investigation, and upon the mere dicta of one of the Ministers of the Crown. Well, Sir, I am prepared to stand by the contrast between the two parties and the two policies, and I believe that the conduct we have adopted towards these translators is more just, more fair, and more humane than the policy carried out by the Conservative majority in 1888.

Mr. EARLE. I do not rise for the purpose of continuing the debate on this question, but simply to say that after having heard the statement of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and the hon. member for Napierville (Mr. Monet), I desire to say that I have heard the member for Napierville state that Mr. Geoffrion was his partner. I thought it was only an act of justice to the member for Assiniboia that I should state this fact.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The hon. member who leads the Opposition has been criticising the position taken by the leader of the Government in respect to this question, and he seems to complain that the leader of the Government has referred to a precedent which was laid down some time ago in a recent Parliament upon a subject of a similar character. Now, it appears to me that it is entirely proper for the leader of the Government to have referred to that circumstance, not because it would be an entire justification for his action in the present case, but because it materially affects the value which the members of the House, and probably the public at large, would place upon the criticisms pronounced by the hon. leader of the Opposition. I think the best evidence which can be afforded of the value of an opinion expressed by that hon. gentleman is to show that his conduct has been in entire conformity with the views he has expressed. If his conduct has not been in conformity with those views, I think every one would be justified in attaching less importance to his criticisms. Now, since we are discussing the subject of dismissals, and since the subject has formed so important a topic of debate during the present session, perhaps I might be justified in calling attention to a precedent of some importance which may have some weight with the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition. I know how strong his opinions are upon the subject of dismissals. I know how averse he is, as he has now declared himself, to dealing summarily with persons who, being in the public service, have taken an active part in election contests. I know that he has a very strong opinion that it is introducing a system of terrorism to dismiss a Government employee from office, unless his conduct has been subjected to a very careful investigation, and the matter has assumed something of the form of a judicial inquiry. I know how strongly he holds these views upon that question, and not only are they held by him, but they are held by very many of the gentlemen who support him, if we are to draw that inference from the strength of the language which they employ. Now, Sir, I take much pleasure in calling to the attention of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) to a case which has occurred in his own experience, a case in which he himself was a somewhat prominent actor, a case which occurred when he was administering the department over which I have now the honour to preside. When I bring to his personal knowledge the circumstances which I have now in my mind, and when I adduce for his benefit the evidence which I possess, I think it will have a very marked effect in influencing his judgment and his opinion upon the conduct of others. I think he will be led to conclude, that that which he has called a system of terrorism, that that which he has characterized as gross and brutal in the extreme, and that which in others he has rebuked as being the conduct of cold-blooded and unfeeling persons; is not after all open to any such criticism, but was on the contrary very proper and very commendable. I may call the attention of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) to a case which occurred not later than the year 1883. During the month of April of that year and for some time previously the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) presided over the Department of Railways and Canals, and he took occasion in view of what he alleged to be improper conduct in one of the minor and subordinate officials of that department, to summarily dismiss him; without any trial, without any jury being summoned and without any investigation being held. A young man some seventeen or eighteen years of age, in the receipt of a very moderate income, was summarily dismissed, no doubt with others, but of his particular case I have knowledge. He was summarily dismissed from office because he ventured to take part in an election contest. Did the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) in that case invite him to submit the matter to an investigation? Did he appoint a judge; did he summon a jury; did he take the utmost pains in order that no system of terrorization should prevail, that no injustice should be done, and that no brutal exercise of arbitrary authority should be perpetrated by him? Not at all. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) simply gave his order, the fiat was issued, the services of the employee were dispensed with and he was dismissed from office. And further, Sir, notwithstanding that this young man sought to be informed as to why he had been dismissed, notwithstanding that his friends had made application to tell them why it was that he had been dealt with in this summary way; he was refused information, he was refused the reason of his dismissal; and it was not until months after the discharge took place, that at last the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) was constrained to make a statement of the reason which led him to take the course he did. I hold in my hand now a letter headed:

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 7th April, 1893.

That letter is in these terms, and I will read it for the information of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition:

My dear sir,—In reply to your letters of the 17th November and the 9th of February on the subject of the dismissal of your son from the service of the Intercolonial Railway, I have to state that the reason for his dismissal was that he openly took a very active part in opposition to the Government at the last election. This, as you will readily understand—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mark you: "as you will readily understand." My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) was amazed that any one should have entertained a doubt as to the entire justice and propriety of his meting out this summary justice upon this young lad who had dared, as the hon. gentleman alleged, to take an active part in the election.

This, as you will readily understand, no Government officer can be permitted to do, and your son's action was so conspicuous that it could not be passed over.

Yours faithfully,

CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Who is that to?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This was addressed to James Ryan, Esq., Moncton.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Who was it signed by?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Signed by my hon. friend; signed by Charles Tupper.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know the handwriting of the hon. gentleman, and I can certify that this is his own proper signature. Now, Mr. Speaker, one word of comment upon this letter. Hon. gentlemen know when the general election took place which preceded the 7th of April, 1883. They know from the statement in this letter that on the 17th November, 1882, the hon. gentleman had been applied to by the father of this boy to know upon what ground he had been dismissed from office. It is apparent also from the letter that on the 9th February a similar appeal was made to the hon. gentleman. It was not, therefore, until after he had been called upon for an explanation on the 17th November, and after the intervening months between that date and the 9th February passed by, and after a further delay from the 9th of February to the 7th of April, that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper)—who when the occasion calls for it can rise in his place and in the most impassioned terms denounce the brutality and the injustice, and the wrong of dismissing a man from the public service unless he has a trial and an investigation—it was not until after all these months had elapsed, that the hon. gentleman condescended to give the slightest reason or explanation of why that boy was dismissed.

Motion agreed to on division, and report concurred in.

SUPREME COURT—TEMPORARY JUDGE.

On the order being called for the following proposed resolution :—

That it is expedient to provide that a temporary judge of the Supreme Court may be paid, in addition to his ordinary salary and free of all taxes and deductions imposed by any Act of Parliament, the difference, for the period during which he has acted as temporary judge, between such salary and the salary of a puisné judge of the Supreme Court, and also such travelling allowance as the Governor in Council directs.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that this order be discharged. Since the Bill to which this resolution refers was introduced in the Senate, we have ascertained that Mr. Justice King would be available for the present term of the Supreme Court, and that Mr. Justice Gwynne has returned to Canada.

Order discharged.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PETTET. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House for a few minutes to a portion of an article which appeared in an Ottawa city newspaper this morning, which reflects upon myself and upon other members sitting upon this side of the House. The portion of the article to which I refer, reads as follows :—

A somewhat unusual scene preceded the vote on Mr. Davin's amendment. For the first time in the recollection of some of the oldest parliamentarians, groups were caucussed and votes canvassed in the Chamber. As a general thing the House divides on such clear cut issues that every party man knows just about where he stands. But in this instance the party men, especially among the Opposition side, were a little at sea. As between their protectionist principles and the desire to "show up" the Liberal party, however, there was not much wavering, and the great bulk of the Conservatives voted solidly with the Government and against the motion. But it did seem strange in view of their particular tenets to see the miserable attempt made by the Patron members to shirk the vote. Messrs. Rogers, of Frontenac; Tolmie, of West Bruse, and Pettet, of Prince Edward, were in the House and heard the question put, yet it was not until Mr. Davin arose and called attention to the fact that the hon. members had not voted, that the three Patrons reluctantly arose and declared in favour of the amendment. The incident was altogether an unusual one.

I have only to say to the House that, being a new member, I was not aware of the rule that those sitting on this side of the House were expected to vote first. It was not a miserable attempt at all to shirk the vote, but it was for the reason I have given. I have only to add that as long as I have the honour to sit in this House, I hope I shall not be guilty of shirking any vote.

SUPPLY OF MILITARY CLOTHING.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to read a telegram which I have just this moment received from the Hon. W. E. Sanford, referring to a statement made by me in the House on the occasion of the debate on the military clothing. He has requested me to read the telegram to the House, and I think it only fair to him that I should do so :

My attention has just been called to your statement on the floor of the House that you were informed I had an absolute monopoly of the output of the scarlet serge manufactured by the Sherbrooke mills. I have no interest nor has the W. E. Sanford Manufacturing Company in these mills. The scarlet serge was offered to the trade generally, at the time of tendering. The suspicion that there was an understanding among those tendering, I am assured by our manager, has no foundation in fact. As you have no desire to do me personally an injustice, nor the company of which I am president, I trust you will make this explanation to the House.

W. E. SANFORD.

I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that I have very great pleasure in reading to the House the telegram which Mr. Sanford has sent to me.

SUPPLY—MAJOR GENERAL CAMERON

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put, I would like, on behalf of a gentleman who complains of the treatment he has received at the hands of the Government. I refer to the late Commandant of the Royal Military College at Kingston to bring his case to the notice of the House. This complaint is a dual one. In the first place, he complains that he has been dismissed without a fair opportunity of making his defence. In the second place, he complains that he has not been equitably treated in the matter of allowance, even supposing he was entitled to be dismissed. This gentleman has had a very honourable record, and that record should have entitled him to honourable treatment at the hands of the Government. He is now quite advanced in years, and he has in his lifetime, on numerous occasions, received at the hands of his Sovereign, and also at the hands of the military authorities in England, marked manifestations of approval of his conduct and his ability. To relate briefly this gentleman's history, I may say that he entered the Royal Artillery in 1856; became captain in 1866; major in 1875; lieutenant-colonel in 1882; colonel in 1886; and retired major general in 1887. This history of itself goes to show that the gentleman was at least entitled to some consideration, but apart from that, he has received distinguishing marks of approval from his Sovereign and the military authorities in England, which are direct credentials of his fitness for the office he held. I may mention that in 1859, on the establishment of the School of Gunnery at Shoeburyness in England, he was one of the first class of officers elected to graduate as instructors of gunnery. In 1863 he was selected to organize the Armstrong Mountain Battery, as the base of operations for the Ambeyla campaign, then in progress. The campaign ended, he was sent from Peshawur to Dinapore in command of a military train, including the Armstrong mountain battery, preparatory to the Bhootan campaign. Appointed adjutant of the artillery of the four columns of the Dooar field force operating against Bhootan, he displayed great military ability and received flattering marks of approval from the commanding officer. From 1877 to 1880 he commanded an artillery district at Malta. He was invited to take a sub-commissionership in Cyprus, under Sir Garnet Wolseley, but was debarred by regimental exigencies. In 1886 he declined the command of the artillery at Guernsey for family considerations. For the same reason he declined to accept the command of the troops in South Australia. Then he was offered the commandership of the Canadian militia on the retirement of Major General Middleton, which, I understand, he also refused. From 1872 to 1876 he was appointed Her Majesty's Commissioner for the delimitation of the international boundary from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, and was in military command and civil charge of the expedition, and superintended the marking of the line. For this, on the recommendation, no doubt, of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, the leader of the Reform Administration, he received the decoration of C.M.G. at the hands of Her Majesty. He also received a letter from Lord Derby acknowledging his eminent services on that occasion. In 1881 he was invited by a committee of the Royal Society to superintend in Canada the British magnetic and meteorological observations, but was prevented from accepting by military exigencies. He was also appointed to the commission for the delimitation of the international boundary between Alaska and Canada, and he made a report on that subject, which was highly commended by the home authorities. In 1883 he was appointed secretary to the Canadian delegation at the International Conference at Paris for the protection of submarine cables. In 1887-88 he acted as official secretary to the Canadian commissioner at the Washington Fisheries

Conference. These are all acknowledgements from the highest source of his possession in a marked degree of a mastery of those special branches of science and military subjects which are the requirements of a military educationist of the highest order. In 1888 he was appointed to the position of Commandant of the Royal Military College at Kingston. We start General Cameron's regime, then, with strong presumptive proof of his fitness for the position of commandant. I am not going to enter into a full detail of General Cameron's regime; but I will say this, notwithstanding rumours that may be, that are abroad, which led to the appointment of a commission by the late Government, or rather led to the sending of a delegation to inquire into the working of this establishment, so idle and unfounded were these rumours that the present major general commanding the militia of Canada, Major General Gascoigne, made a report which entirely exonerates the commandant. Yes, if anything was required to justify the mastership of that institution, it was that report, which shows how shadowy were the criticisms of his administration. The report was in two parts. A portion of the first part I shall read, simply to show how full and elaborate was the investigation which General Gascoigne made into the affairs of that institution. He said, in his first report, dated 2nd December, 1895, that he had "made a most exhaustive inspection throughout," and in the more detailed report which accompanied this letter, or report—the fourth paragraph reads as follows:—

I was greatly pleased with the physique and general appearance of these young men. Take them all round, they were a body of youths of whom Canada may justly be proud. They were of unusually good physique, well set up, with a healthy appearance and pleasant manners. I noticed that their hair was not kept as closely cut as should be in a military, or indeed in any other college, but with this trifling exception to which I directed attention, there was nothing whatever to take exception to, but quite the reverse. I feel confident that every one of these young men, whatever his future may be, whether civil or military, will leave the college greatly benefited by his stay there; will be improved in tone and manner, and will, therefore, be a better citizen of this great Dominion. The country should therefore be proud of the college, and to do its utmost to improve and help it. I consider that the mixture of civil and military education is a most happy one, the discipline taught by the military element at the college being of the utmost benefit to all alike, whether their destination be civil or military, and as the number of military openings to young men is exceedingly limited in Canada, it is absolutely necessary that there should be a civil education side by side, and I consider that this is most happily arranged.

At that time this delegation reflected on the management of that institution, and one of the grounds of complaint of the commander of the college is that no fair opportunity was given him to make his defence before that commission. They proceeded in a thoroughly un-British way, not tolerated by the rules of the British Army or by any principle of British jurisprudence. They proceeded ex parte, they denied him the privilege of being brought face to face with his accusers, or even the privilege of hearing the testimony adverse or favourable to him, of asking a single question in cross-examination. They even denied him a copy of the evidence. On the report of this delegation and the report of General Gascoigne, which latter is a complete exoneration of the hon. gentleman, the commandant was dismissed. Apart, however, from these reports of General Gascoigne, I may say that the record of the institution is itself its greatest justification and the greatest vindication of the commandant. The report of the delegation was in two parts. One part was fair enough; the other was strongly condemnatory, in general terms, of the commandant, as being unfit for his position. This last report, based on the evidence of the cadets and professors examined was never submitted to him, and he never knew of its existence until the beginning of this session. On the 30th June, 1896, the commandant made a report on the state of the institution, and I will read a few paragraphs in that report, which are not the opinions of the commandant himself, but simply facts of history, and which afford the strongest justification of, and the highest encomiums that can be passed on the commandant. He says:

If our critics could for a moment have realized this point, and allowed honesty guided by intelligence to regulate their remarks, they could not have yielded to the malign influence which led them to disparage the work being worthily done by the instructors and cadets here. They might have learnt that in 1893, the Inspector General of Fortifications of Her Majesty's Forces, on a deputation on military education to the Secretary of State for War, spoke of our graduates in the highest terms, saying: "The officers we get elsewhere than from Woolwich, are far better than those who come from Woolwich, either with regard to science or with regard to general education. The officers which we get from the Military College of Canada are very good men indeed; it is true we get only one or two from there so perhaps they are the best the college can produce." Again, before a Royal Commission to inquire into the entrance examination, in 1894, they are referred to as having had a higher standard of work, and more knowledge of what was required by Royal Engineers, than graduates from Woolwich.

Our adverse critics might have learnt too, that within a few weeks preceding the commencement of their attacks, general progress had advanced to a point never before attained in the history of the college since its foundation in 1876.

Previous to the last four years, the most distinguished gold medallist of the college was Mr. Wm. J. Stewart, who graduated so long ago as 1883 with a record of 54,656 marks.

During the last four years that record has been exceeded in four instances by from 924 to 1,802 marks.

Mr. POWELL.

The next highest record made previously to 1892, was by Capt. Lang, D.S.O., R.E., with 53,505 in 1883. Since 1891 his record has been surpassed seven times by an average of 1,769 marks.

The third highest record up to 1892 was made by Mr. R. W. Leonard, with 53,271 marks; this again in 1883. His score has been surpassed, since 1891, eight times, by an average of 2,760 marks.

Only three graduates just named—inclusive of but one gold medallist—find place and rank as 5th, 9th and 11th, amongst the following gentlemen, who, with one exception in 1891, all graduated since 1891:—Messrs. F. H. Vercoe, G. R. Frith, G. S. Wilkes, R. J. F. Hayter, G. F. F. Osborne, V. L. Beer, J. F. Fraser, G. N. Cory, W. C. Dumble, N. S. Ridout, D. S. McInnes, J. W. Osborne.

So that but for the men of 1883, all those whose names I have read, graduates of the last few years, surpassed all previous records since the foundation of the college in 1876. Moreover, prior to 1892, in only one instance did the marks of a gold medallist exceed the mere average of the graduating class of last year.

Since that report was penned, the result of the examinations to England for admission to the Imperial service of graduates from the military schools has come to hand.

The following graduates of the Royal Military College, Kingston, have been granted commissions in the Imperial service, a notification having been received to-day from the War Office:—W. A. S. Evans, to the Royal Engineers; W. W. H. N. Cantlie, to the Royal Artillery; M. C. Stephen and W. C. C. Wood, to the Infantry, and Mr. G. E. Hardie, to the Indian Staff.

These facts are sufficient raison d'être for the Military College, and an admirable proof of its effective management by its late commandant; but the objections that have been taken to this institution are not, either from the reports of the Major General or the commandant themselves, so much objections to anything the commandant did or was incapable of doing, as objections to the general administration of the college itself. Some of them claim that, in the administration of the affairs of that college, there should simply be military instruction given, and that it is absurd in this country, where we have numerous colleges graduating men in arts, to combine an ordinary arts course with a military course. I shall not engage in a discussion of that matter. It is one concerning the general administration of the Militia Department, and it is not one in which the commandant could exercise the slightest authority, or is in any way responsible. Having so high a record, both as to the military career of General Cameron and his career as an educationist, in connection with the Military College, he is entitled to fair treatment. What treatment did he receive? His engagement was one continuing from year to year, and he was entitled to a fair notice before being discharged. The notice he received was entirely too limited. He was discharged with simply fifteen days' notice, and awarded two months' pay, when he was entitled to one year's pay.

Mr. DOMVILLE. No.

Mr. POWELL. I state that in ordinary institutions he would be entitled to twelve months' pay, as a matter of law. Of course, the Crown can do no wrong, and he may not be able to recover in a court of law. Let us see what the regulations are with respect to other professors of the institution. Under the rules and regulations governing the institution, every instructor in the college is compelled to give six months' notice before he can resign. There should be some mutuality of contract. If a man is compelled to give six months' notice before he resigns, the Government should give him six months' notice before calling on him to resign or award him six months' salary at least in case of immediate dismissal. And if they dismissed him summarily and immediately, they should at least have given him six months' salary. Now, in the case of his predecessors in that office, it must not be forgotten that they were appointees from the active list of the British army, and, according to the rules of that army, they were simply given leave of absence, and, at the termination of their employment under the Dominion Government, their regular employment in the British army at once recommenced. In the case of General Cameron's immediate predecessor, he was granted two months' pay and travelling expenses back to England. Immediately these men left the Canadian service, their pay in the British army re-attached. But this does not hold good in the case of a man on the retired list, and that is one of the hardships that General Cameron suffered. He was not even allowed travelling expenses back to England, but, by the Order in Council, he is allowed travelling expenses from the Military College to any point in Canada that he may select as his home.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment. What he says is true as regards the first Order in Council, but the Order in Council has been amended, and the hon. gentleman will see by the Estimates laid on the Table that there is provision for the return of General Cameron to England or to any point in Canada, which is the same as in the case of General Luard.

Mr. POWELL. I was not aware of the change, and I presume that this has been made since the papers were laid on the Table, for I have examined those papers carefully and I find no record of such an Order in Council.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) allow me to ask him one question? Where does he get these war services that he quoted? I hold here the services of all the officers of the Royal Artillery, and I do not find what he has quoted. Will he please tell me where he finds these services?

Mr. POWELL. I am not sure that I understand the question, but it seems to me that it is not pertinent to the subject I am discussing. Of course the rules governing employment in the Military College under the Dominion Government are not the same as those of the British army.

Mr. DOMVILLE. You have stated certain services as bearing on this claim on the Government. Where do you get them from?

Mr. POWELL. I base the claim from the Government regulations and the principles of justice, not from my hon. friend (Mr. Domville) who is a gallant Colonel—

Mr. DOMVILLE. Never mind the "gallant Colonel."

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman is a bright and shining light in the volunteer service who offered his services to Her Majesty, declaring himself ready to command a brigade and shed his blood upon the battlefields of Soudan, and he should not be ignorant of the fact that the general army regulations are not the regulations that control military schools and colleges.

Mr. DOMVILLE. That has nothing to do with the question I put.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I have asked a question, and I would like an answer.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has no right to put a question, except with the consent of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. POWELL. I have no objection to answer any question put to me. But the hon. gentleman must surely understand that I am discussing the Military College, and not the regulations of the British army. At the time I was interrupted I was proceeding to refer to the particular points of which Major General Cameron complains. I will take the army regulations. One of the regulations, as my hon. friend (Mr. Domville) is no doubt aware, is that when a superior officer has ground of complaint against an inferior, he must specify with great particularity the points that he has to urge against him. The words of the regulations are as follows:—

Whenever an officer is disadvantageously reported upon by his commanding officer or when the answers contained to any of the questions in the confidential report made by him are not thoroughly satisfactory, the particulars of the reports are to be read verbatim to him by the officer making it in presence, when possible, of the inspecting officer (i.e., General) of the senior officers of the corps.

Nothing of this kind was done in the case of Major General Cameron. He asked to be allowed to meet his accusers face to face, and the Government denied him the privilege, nor would they give him the opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses against him, or even seeing the evidence on which he was condemned. Then at a later stage when application was made to the Minister of Militia by the late commandant for an investigation into these matters he was courteously asked not to continue the correspondence. The following is the closing part of the letter of the Minister of Militia :—

You are now in possession of all the information in this department relative to your case. You furthermore find fault with the Government for not having furnished you with a copy of the Supplementary Report of the Board of Visitors, recently laid on the Table of the House. Had I supposed it possible that the late Government had not furnished you with a copy of this document, I should certainly have done so. It is inconceivable to me how such an omission could have occurred. But I do not think that you have any right to hold me responsible in the slightest degree. I have no means of knowing whether this report, or what reports affecting you may have been considered by the late Government, but in view of the two reports of the board of visitors and of the report of General Gascoigne, the Government felt that it would be unjust to you as well as to the college and the country at large to require you to remain longer in the position of commandant of the college.

I trust that you will not consider any continuance of this correspondence necessary.

Yours faithfully,

F. W. BORDEN,

Minister of Militia and Defence.

To that the commandant replied :

Kingston, Ont., 23rd Sept., 1896.

The Honourable F. W. Borden,

Minister of Militia and Defence.

Sir.—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st inst., communicating to me the only two recommendations to Council in my case.

In one of these reference is made to my claim to travelling allowance, and to a communication on the same subject from the Major General commanding the militia of the nature of which I am ignorant, but no reference is made to my claims, on equitable grounds, to one year's salary in lieu of notice terminating my appointment.

I learn from your letters that you are now aware that by your action I was required to immediately vacate office—followed by the publication of the statements of opinions of others which gave rise to your actions, without prior invitation to me to meet the allegations which influenced you ; and further, that even under such circumstances you desire correspondence on the subject should cease.

You disclaim responsibility for the consequences to me of the course that has been followed, and dispute my right to complain on the ground that to some one else was due the oversight of not communicating to me the charges against me.

But he with whom rests the authority to condemn and who exercises it, cannot justly overlook his duty to hear both sides, nor honourably evade his responsibility to give redress, by mere reference to the alleged faults of others.

I have the honour, to be, sir,

Your most obedient servant,

D. R. CAMERON.

Mr. POWELL.

I think, Sir, from the tenor of the correspondence and from the facts of the case this gentleman has been very severely and very unjustly dealt with, and I hope the hon. Minister of Militia will not pursue the course he intimated here of discontinuing all communication with the late commandant, and that in justice to him he will allow the commandant one year's salary as a matter of fair-play and equity—an act consonant with that justice that is meted out to even the humblest menial.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Before addressing myself to the facts which the hon. gentleman has been discussing, I may call his attention, as an old member of Parliament, to the fact that he did not extend to me the usual courtesy of notifying me that he intended to bring this question of the Military College and the resignation or removal of Major General Cameron as commandant of that college. So important a question as that of the Military College, I think, demanded from him the extension to me of the usual courtesy of notifying me that he intended to bring it up at this time.

Mr. POWELL. If the hon. gentleman will pardon me—I presumed he was well aware of the fact that the matter would be brought up, since the letters and returns were called for, and, inferentially, at least, he was notified that this matter would come up for discussion. I certainly did not intend any discourtesy to him, and had it occurred to me, I would have notified him. I might have brought it up in Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I certainly expected that the question would be brought up in connection with the Estimates, but I received no notice, and no notice had been placed on the Order Paper that it would be brought up in this way. But I might not have been present in the House when the hon. gentleman brought the question up, and it would have been more fitting that he should have given me notice, and more in accordance with the custom. But, as it has turned out, no great harm has been done, because I am, to some extent, prepared, and I happen to be in my place. Now, the hon. gentleman concluded his remarks by expressing the hope that it was not my intention to cut off all communication with Major General Cameron, with reference to certain claims which he makes upon the Government, one of which is for a year's pay. Most assuredly, it is not my intention to cut off all communications ; but I felt that the letters which that gentleman was writing to me, and the correspondence which was going on at the time I made that observation in the concluding part of my letter, were such that nothing useful would come out of it. That was the reason I expressed the hope that that particular branch of the correspondence might not continue.

Most assuredly, any claim which General Cameron has, will be considered. I have no desire, nor has the Government, to treat General Cameron or anybody else unfairly. With regard to the short notice which was given, it was impossible for the Government to have acted otherwise. The Government did not take office until near the middle of July, and at the very earliest moment thereafter the Government took action in regard to this matter. The usual course has been pursued, two months' pay has been granted, and the money necessary for the return of General Cameron to his home in England, or to any part of Canada that he may select to settle in, the House will be asked to grant. Now, that is precisely what was done in the case of General Cameron's predecessor. If he has a case, as the hon. gentleman thinks, for a larger grant than two months' pay, it will be considered. The hon. gentleman, speaking as a lawyer, thinks that General Cameron has such a claim; it is not my opinion that he has, but I can assure him that the claim, whatever it may be, will be fairly considered. The hon. gentleman has said that General Cameron had no opportunity to answer the report of the Board of Visitors appointed to investigate the affairs of the college. Well, I am informed that this report was made precisely in the same way as the previous reports. It is a matter of almost yearly occurrence that the affairs of the college are investigated by a Board of Visitors, and I believe that precisely the same course was pursued when the last inquiry was made by the board, in November, 1895, as was pursued in previous cases.

Mr. POWELL. I may remark to the hon. gentleman that I am informed of what is certainly an extraordinary proceeding, and which never before occurred in the history of that institution, namely, that the commandant was not asked to be present at all, but that the students and professors were brought in one by one, under promise that nothing would be said as to their statements, and behind his back, and in this un-British manner, this gentleman was condemned.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, these allegations of the hon. gentleman have not been brought to my attention. I believe that the composition of the board was such as to guarantee that the investigation made by that board was fair and honourable. Walker Powell, colonel and adjutant general of militia, was chairman of that board; T. J. Duchesnay, lieutenant-colonel and deputy adjutant general of district No. 7, was a member of that board; H. Smith, lieutenant-colonel and deputy adjutant general of district No. 1, was a member of that board; Duncan Macpherson, captain and divisional engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was a member of that board; and Mr. Sandford Fleming, who, it is true, did not agree with those gentlemen in their report, was a member of that board. But his disagreement was not so much with reference to that part of the report concerning Major General Cameron, as it was with reference to the lines of instruction in which the college should be conducted. Now, when the hon. gentleman makes a statement on the floor of this House that this Board of Visitors proceeded in an entirely unfair and un-British manner, he is making a direct charge against gentlemen who have hitherto occupied high positions in this country, as men of honour and men of integrity. I shall be loath to believe it possible that these gentlemen conducted any Star Chamber investigation; I cannot believe it possible that they proceeded in any other way than in a fair, honourable and truly British fashion. Well, Sir, I do not propose to enter into details in reference to this matter.

The hon. gentleman has referred to the career of General Cameron prior to the time of his taking charge as commandant of this college. Now, I do not desire even were it possible for me, to detract in the slightest particular, from the high encomiums which that hon. member has bestowed upon General Cameron. He is a distinguished officer of the British army; there is no doubt about that. He has done important service for the British Crown; I agree with that fully.

Mr. POWELL. Would the hon. gentleman allow me. I am sorry to break the continuity of his remarks, but on page 15 of the return brought down last year, in the report of the commandant, in which he answers the charges which are preferred by this commission, you will find this statement:

That the board received evidence of slackness in discipline prevailing—I cannot question; but I am not aware what the evidence was, nor of the weight due to it, for, at the special instance of the board, I absented myself from presence while they were examining members of my staff and cadets.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have simply to say as I have said already, that the names of the gentlemen who composed that Board of Visitors are a guarantee that everything done at the time of that investigation was done fairly, and in accordance with proper rules, and without any departure from the code of honour. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) complained that General Cameron did not receive a copy of the second report of the Board of Visitors which was laid on the Table of the House with other papers this session. I have said in my letter to General Cameron, that I could not conceive it possible that he did not receive a copy. Of course I am bound to accept his statement, and I do accept his statement. Had I had the slightest idea that he had never seen that report, I should certainly have sent him a copy at once. It is not my fault that he did not receive it. He was in the hands, I suppose, of his friends, and surely he had a right to expect fair treatment from them. His complaint should be against the late Government and not against the present Government. That Board of Visitors was appointed a year ago when the late Government was in power. Both of these reports were in the hands of the late Administration, and if General Cameron did not receive fair-play by the manner in which the investigation was carried on, it was their duty to see what he did. I had a right to assume, and this Government had a right to assume under all the circumstances, that General Cameron must have received from the hands of the late Government the fullest fair-play.

Mr. POWELL. I am unaware that the late Government took any action upon the report of the commission. I understood that General Cameron's answer was regarded by them as a conclusive answer, and that they retained him in office.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The late Government published one report, and they had in their possession all the reports. The late Government failed to place in the hands of General Cameron the supplementary report of which he complained, and which was laid on the Table of the House this session.

Mr. POWELL. With General Gascoigne's report in hand, they considered the matter did not require explanation, and they retained the General.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What was the nature of General Gascoigne's report?

Mr. POWELL. The only objection General Gascoigne raised was that the cadets had not their hair cut close enough.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have here General Gascoigne's report, which in referring to the commandant, reads as follows:—

1. The Commandant.—I am decidedly of opinion that there should be a limit to his term of appointment. I cannot but think that after a certain lapse of time, any man loses that zeal, activity and interest which it is so absolutely essential should be kept up in the case of the officer in chief command of a military educational establishment. Young men are especially quick to receive impressions; and energy and great personal smartness of dress and appearance are, in my opinion, essential to form a good commandant. In my opinion, this position is one that should be thrown open to some exceptionally smart, energetic officer of the Canadian militia. But there should be a fixed limit to the term of appointment, renewable, perhaps, for a limited extension at the option of the Government.

Now that is the report of General Gascoigne.

Mr. POWELL. But take the whole report and there is not a word condemnatory of the commandant from beginning to end.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). What do you call that. It is as severe a condemnation as could be.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. POWELL. That report refers to general regulations.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Powell) has read this report. General Gascoigne divides it under different headings. The first, referring to "the commandant," and the others to the professors, the hospital, the cadets, commissions in the permanent forces, and so on. The part of the report I have read was that which General Gascoigne limited to a criticism of the commandant.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Did General Cameron have that report?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly. The report I have read from, has been published to the world for six months. Now, in the report first published the Board of Visitors referred to the commandant as follows:—

The board, therefore, considers that the education of cadets who attend this college should be continuous, be thorough so far as the means within reach will permit, and of a modern type, and that, in order to insure this desirable result, the commandant should be changed at short intervals of, say, five or seven years, as may be found expedient or necessary; also, that as long as it is necessary to employ the services of a military officer from Great Britain as commandant, he be required to be an officer of not higher rank than lieutenant-colonel on the active list of the Imperial regular army.

That is the part of the main report of the Board of Visitors which refers especially to the commandant, and they say that he should not be kept in his position for longer than from five to seven years, and that he should not hold rank higher than that of lieutenant-colonel. Well, Major General Cameron was in this position for about eight years, I think, and it is as clear as can be what is the meaning of the report of the Board of Visitors. The supplementary report also deals with the commandant, and it has been laid on the Table of the House. It is dated the same day as the report from which I have just read, and referring to the officers composing the staff, it says:

The board of visitors for the Royal Military College for the current year desires to say in addition to the general report, that according to evidence produced to the board, it is necessary for the well-being of the college and in the interest of the country that several of the staff should be replaced by better men. The first of these is the commandant. This officer, it is clear, does not take that interest in his work and does not exercise that supervision over those under him which he should do. To this more than anything else appears to be due that lack of confidence in the college which seems to have spread throughout the country. At all events, that is the feeling amongst the staff and cadets, and the board is satisfied that no real improvement can take place in the college until a change has been made in the commandant.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the hon. gentleman whether, in the face of a report like that, signed by such men as those who compose this board, it would be possible for the Government to retain in his place a gentleman described as Major-General Cameron is there described.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman asks me a question, and I will answer it. I would say that where an ex parte charge of that kind is made, without an opportunity for cross-examination by the person charged, any tribunal which would render a judgment of dismissal would act in a way entirely unjust, and in a way which so far as I know has no parallel in the history of jurisprudence in any country in the civilized world.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, I have pointed out, over and over again, how this Board of Visitors is constituted, and how deliberately it went about its work and made the reports which I have given to the House. It would be an insult to the men who compose that board to say that they made that report without having first satisfied themselves that it was a just and correct report, and in fact, first, of the report of the Board of Visitors, the main report; secondly, the subsequent report, and, thirdly, the report made by the Major General commanding, it seems to me it was absolutely impossible that the gentleman who was in the position of commandant of that school should remain in that position any longer. Even if the report was an injustice, if you like to put it in that way, it was absolutely impossible that the college should succeed or should even go on under those conditions. What are the facts with regard to the college? The facts are that from some cause or other the college has been steadily going down until this year there are only eight or nine new cadets going in. With regard to the college itself, there is a wide field for discussion, and I admit frankly that I have not yet had an opportunity of taking the matter up and considering it as I propose to do, and as I believe its importance demands. I have read very carefully the report of Mr. Sandford Fleming, a report which I think is entitled to careful consideration. But for the present the college is going on as usual. The hon. gentleman seems to lean to the view that the college should be changed to a purely military one.

Mr. POWELL. No; I was simply stating the objections urged by certain members of the commission. I did not express any opinion upon it. If the hon. gentleman wishes my opinion, I think the Canadian constituency is altogether too small to conduct a college on the lines recommended by Mr. Sandford Fleming.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is a feeling in the country that it is no part of the duty of this Dominion to run a university in competition, to some extent, with the regular universities of Canada. As I have said, it is a question which requires very careful consideration and very delicate handling. In view of the fact that the Imperial government has placed annually at the disposal of the gentlemen who graduate annually from this college five important places in the British Army, we have to consider whether it is not our duty to maintain the college as it is. There are certain Imperial interests in connection with it which have to be considered, and I think it would be premature for me, particularly as the hon. gentleman says he himself has not formed any opinion in reference to it, to discuss this particular branch of the subject.

I have nothing further to add to what I have said with reference to Major General Cameron. The Government have acted in good faith in this matter, believing that their action was in the best interest of the country, and that they were doing full justice to Major General Cameron so far as it was in their power to do so under the circumstances.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do not think the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) was as courteous to me as he might have been when I asked him his authority for his statement of the services of Major General Cameron. He retorted by saying that I had offered to go with my regiment to the Sudan. That was no answer. If he were to go into the courts of Westmoreland and conduct a case in that way, his client would not be satisfied. I think my hon. friend ought to tell us where he got his information, in order that the House may not labour under any mistake. My hon. friend does not think fit to take any notice of my request. Therefore, I say he has omitted one circumstance. He might have stated that Major General Cameron received a medal from the Royal Humane Society for wading into the canal at Ottawa to take a little boy out of it. Major General Cameron needs no recommendation from this House. He needs no eulogy from my hon. friend from Westmoreland, who put forward a very bad case for the General. I suppose that any officer of the Royal Artillery who severs his connection with it honourably, is satisfied with what rank the British government bestows upon him. I have no desire to disparage Major General Cameron in this respect; but my hon. friend makes him suffer under a hardship. He talked about the rules of the British army. What does he know about the rules of the British army, coming as he does from Westmoreland? I will tell my hon. friend that any man who enters a school of gunnery in England, whether at Sandhurst or at Woolwich, is appointed for seven years, and if he had ever so much distinction he could not remain one hour longer, and for the very reason laid down in my hon. friend's report, in order that they may have a younger man, one who has not been there so long, and has not had time to grow careless. That being the case, what complaint have we from Major General Cameron. He says he was dismissed. He was not dismissed. He was only there on sufferance. He had retired from the British army, in which he had served with distinction, and had taken this position. There could be only one reason for his remaining there, and that was that he belonged to a distinguished family of Canada and was entitled to an appointment as well as the rest of them. Under the new conditions and changes, it is necessary that we should get rid of some of these old men, who have, in their day, done good service, but whom it is now desirable we should replace by younger men. Everybody feels that something should be done for this college. I do not know where the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) got his brief, but he certainly did not get it from any of the records, and he would not tell us where he got it. He was kind enough to refer to my son who graduated from the Kingston College with honours, but I say that had any one else but General Cameron been in charge, he would have done very much better in that institution. General Cameron had a pique against him because I needed him at home one day. There were family reasons why he could not join the college that day, and General Cameron, to whom the application for leave of absence was made, did not attend to the matter himself but had a telegram sent by one of his junior officers refusing to grant the request. I applied to the then hon. Minister of Militia (Sir Adolphe Caron), who very kindly said that he would have the matter made right, and it was, and from the day my boy went back to the college until the day he left, he received no consideration from General Cameron. Instead of giving him, after he had passed with honours, a certificate of good conduct, he gave him a certificate that his conduct was not satisfactory. How could he have passed with honours, had his conduct not been up to the mark? Although this boy passed out with honours, fifth or sixth from the top, yet because he got his leave of absence, on that particular occasion, from the head of the department, and not from General Cameron himself, General Cameron gave him a certificate which was a slur on his college. I have placed in the hands of my hon. friend, the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), a protest from the ex-cadets against the manner in which this college is conducted. I do think that when the Government gave him $1,600 in place of the pension he had from the British government, they did very well for him, much better than he expected. Had he been under the Imperial government, he would have had nothing because, being retired, he is not entitled to have a position of that kind. But he received from this Government very generous treatment, perhaps on account of his relationship to an hon. gentleman in this House. Considering that he had served eight years, and that the Government proposed to give him $1,600 in lieu of any damages he might sustain by the change in his position, which position I maintain he had no title to, I think the hon. member for Westmoreland went a long way to make out a case. I do hope there will be a great change in the management of the college. I have great faith in the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), who has promised to look into it. There is a feeling in this country that it does not meet the case.

An hon. MEMBER. Wipe it out.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do not know about that, but I do think some great radical change is necessary. Whatever feeling I may have with regard to the treatment of my boy, I need not take that matter up, because I find in the very report my hon. friend read a condemnation of his conduct. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) should not appear in this House as an advocate, when he does not give his authority, but should take the House into his confidence and say where he got this history from, which he gave the House.

Mr. BRITTON. I think the Royal Military College is something this country ought to be proud of. I think that it is to Canada what West Point is to the United States, and as the United States are proud of that institution, and as the people of England are proud of their military schools at Sandhurst and Woolwich, so we ought to be proud of our military college at Kingston; and instead of crying it down, we ought to see what really is the matter, if there is anything the matter in the administration of its affairs and try to apply a remedy. We would then be doing the very best that can be done to utilize to the best purpose the money now spent on that institution. The men who have been turned out from the Military College have made their mark, not only in Canada, but all over the world, and the men that have been turned out in the past—and I speak with some personal knowledge of the subject—are no better than those now being trained in the institution. I am free to admit that the numbers have diminished. It is not so very difficult to find the causes of that diminution. It is easy to criticise educational institutions. They, above all other institutions, seem to be particularly open to criticism, and there are three classes of persons that are most prone to criticise them. There is, first, the students, and no matter what his ability may be, the student knows a great deal more when at college than he does at any other time. Then, in addition, we have the parents who criticise, and of whose criticism we have had an instance to-day. Our hon. friend from King's (Mr. Domville) has brought his own personal grievances into this House. Because he thinks that his boy was not properly treated, he was ready with his criticism against the commandant. Then we have another class of critics, the tax-payers, who feel bound to see that the work they pay for is being well done, and to that extent their criticism is fair. But they ought not to jump to conclusions from letters written in the newspapers, whether they appear in the "Army and Navy Gazette," or in a local paper. They ought to know the facts before pronouncing judgment. Nobody who advocates the maintenance of that institution will say that its administration is, or has been, perfect. There is room for improvement, and I hope that, under the administration of the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), who is capable and energetic, such improvements will be made as will greatly benefit the college. And, for my part, I am satisfied he will do that, because he has everything there, the site, the buildings themselves, and the experienced staff, though it may be that some changes will be found necessary—he has all that is necessary to make the institution a success. Now, at present the cost, according to Estimates of this House, is only $66,600 for the year. The total militia estimates as passed and to be passed—for I assume that these further Supplementaries will be passed—grant for Militia and Defence no less than $2,640,835.70. I admit that the amount this year is exceptionally large owing to large contracts for clothing and arms that have to be provided for this year. Still the item, even in an ordinary year, is a very large one. In comparison with the estimate for this year, the expense of the Military College is only 2½ per cent of the total amount expended for the purpose of Militia and Defence. We have not arrived at that stage when that expense can be done away with. War is yet one of the possibilities that we have to look forward to, and it is necessary that this money should be provided for the purposes of defence. And that being so, I say without fear of contradiction by any person who will examine into the matter and ascertain the facts, that there is no part of that money for Militia and Defence that is better spent or that yields a better money's worth than the amount spent for the maintenance of the Royal Military College. That college is necessary yet, and, if it is necessary, then the only question is as to the management. Now, I admit—and the hon. Minister of Militia has referred to that—that the Government is face to face with the questions that are presented by these two reports of the Board of Visitors. The Board of Visitors is composed of five members, and has presented a majority report and a minority report. The difference between these gentlemen, Mr. Sandford Fleming on the one side and the four others on the other side, is set forth in statements in their several reports, which I may briefly quote. At page 9 of the report, Mr. Sandford Fleming says:

If I understand the purpose for which the Royal Military College at Kingston has been established, it is with the primary object to provide the means of imparting a military education, the final object being to assure the presence in the community in after years, of a number of thoroughly educated military men, who although engaged in civil life would be available for service in any critical emergency.

On the other side, it is shown at page 8 of the report, that the view of the majority is that a combined civil and military education during courses lasting four years is best suited, under existing circumstances, to advance the interest of the college and the country. These are the two views succinctly placed before the Government as to how that college is to be maintained in the future. Now, this board met on the 13th November last. On the 15th November they differed as to the object or mission of this Royal Military College, and therefore Mr. Fleming did not continue to sit at the Board of Visitors or to discuss the question with them any longer. Up to that point no question had arisen, so far as I understand their report, in reference to the efficiency of Major General Cameron, nor had they dealt with that question at all. We find, at page 9, the following letter from Mr. Sandford Fleming to Col. Powell:

Dear Colonel Powell,—Since I left you last night I have given the discussion of the Board of Visitors of the Military College, especially with respect to the system followed in the education of cadets, my earnest consideration. As I differ in my views so completely from yourself and all other members of the board, on a fundamental point, and it will be impossible for me to join in the report of the board, I can see no good will result from further attendance on my part. I propose to address the Minister in a separate communication.

It is with extreme regret that I am constrained to differ from my colleagues.

So we do not get any light from him or his report in regard to the efficiency either of the commandant or any other officer in connection with the college. But these other gentlemen have placed before the Government their views in regard to the mission of the Military College and the work it is to do; and so it must be dealt with by the Government. I admit that up to the present time the Government adopts the views of the majority of the committee, and if they do that they are in perfect accord with the commandant of the college, as will be seen by his reply. Now, these reports are dated 18th November, 1895, apparently to inform the Government, to whom these reports were presented. It is worthy of notice that while there are two reports from four members of the Board of Visitors, only one speaks particularly in reference to the commandant. The other deals very little with him, rather deals with the general principle in regard to the administration of affairs of the college than with any particular occupant of any office in connection with it. But why these two reports were pigeon-holed by the late Government, I confess I fail to see. We know nothing of these two reports until in March, and I think on the 14th of March one of the reports is sent to Major General Cameron, and he answers it in a way which has been shown, so that I need not trouble with reading that. Now, the late Government though having dealt with it in that way and having received Major General Cameron's answer, and having Major General Gascoigne's letters before them, apparently did nothing further in the matter. Whether they accepted these as satisfactory explanations, whatever may have been the reason, the fact remains that they did nothing further in the matter. Now, the next thing we know about is that prior to the new Government coming in, Major General Cameron, in the course of his duty, presented his report, dated 30th June last. That report, which is also among the papers, is a full report upon the affairs of the Royal Military College. The next thing we know is that the new Government come in. The new Government find these reports in the office of the Minister of Militia. Now, looking at it from my standpoint and considering what the Government ought to do in a matter of that kind, it seems to me that the hon. Minister of Militia is perfectly right in saying that he assumed that the late Government had done their duty and had shown General Cameron—although there is no reference to it in any way in the correspondence—or had made him aware in some way of all that there was in reference to him in the department, unless they were satisfied that whatever charges there were were entirely groundless. Assuming, as he did, that they had done so, what was the duty of the Minister of Militia in the matter? I do not think that any hon. member on this side or any on the other side can find fault with the hon. Minister if, assuming this, he concluded that it would be better for Major General Cameron to resign. If that is so, it only becomes a question of the terms upon which he would deal with the commandant. Upon that point I wish to say a word. The leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), of course, is not responsible for what the late Government did in that matter. He, of course, could not have been cognizant of the facts at the time this report was made in November last when he had not charge of the Government; and, when he did take charge of it, of course, he did not hold the office of Minister of Militia, and therefore in no sense can he be blamed for the conduct of the late Government in this matter. I think they were blameworthy primarily in not, in the interests of all parties, dealing with these reports as they were presented. If this report, which only saw the light when it was brought down to this House, is true, then, in the interest of the college and of the country, the late Government ought to have dealt with it; but if it was not true, then in the interest of Major General Cameron and of the students under his charge, they ought to have dealt with it. But it was not dealt with, and as to the action of the present Government, I am not prepared to blame them for asking for Major General Cameron's resignation. But having asked for his resignation, it becomes a question what compensation is to be made to him for allowing him to remain in that office down to the very eve of the opening of the college, and then asking him to go.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BRITTON. Before recess I said the late Government should have taken some action on these four reports that were then in the hands of the Minister of Militia. When I say these four reports, I may say that only one, and that was the second one of the four Visitors, called for any action on the lines we are discussing. If they did not do their duty, would that be a reason for doing any injustice to Major General Cameron? Will any injustice be done to him if he gets only what the Government now propose to give him? Perhaps the word "injustice" is too strong—will he be dealt with less liberally if he gets anything less than a year's salary, than the manager of a perfectly solvent company would be in a similar case? Hon. gentlemen should not make up their minds that Major General Cameron is not entitled to anything, nor should the Government be influenced in the same direction merely because some hon. members have very little regard for the Royal Military College. I think when hon. gentlemen seek to belittle its advantage to this country, it is because they have not appreciated its work, and do not know how little, comparatively, it has cost for the results attained. I do not think, however, their view in reference to the college should at all affect their view in dealing with this question; nor do I think some additional allowance should be refused because they may think that Major General Cameron was not the best man for the place, should they come to any such conclusion. I do not say that I have come to any such conclusion. I found Major General Cameron a conscientious man, a man most interested in the college, and a man, I believe, whose highest ambition was to have the college succeed, and to have the young men who went out from it, fully equipped for the work they had to do. Now, of these four reports, there is only one, I think, that really gives notice to Major General Cameron that his services were summarily to be dispensed with, or that he would be required to resign immediately. That report Major General

Cameron never saw until it was brought down to this House. Now, then the only notice he had that his resignation would be required was the letter of Major General Gascoigne, dated 14th August, by which he was given to understand that he ought to resign by the first of September, as it was intended by the Government to make new arrangements. As I said before, I find no fault with that, the necessity was cast upon the Government to do something in the line of what they did do. Now, as to what is to be done with Major General Cameron, I regard the case very like that of an improvident contract that has been forced upon the incoming Government by the outgoing Government; and that being so, I think it would be the duty of the new Government to ratify a contract fairly made, and perhaps it is only fair to deal with Major General Cameron in that way. Now, we find that in the Supplementary Estimates two months' additional salary is provided, and his travelling expenses to the place he desires to go in Canada or England. I do not think myself that is sufficient, but I recognize perfectly the good faith of the Government and their desire to do what is fair and just. He is not in the position of an individual only hired by the year. At the same time I do not forget that the statute creating the Royal Military College provides that the commandant shall hold office only during the pleasure of the Crown; but when he is there, and is continued on year after year, and when the Government could not expect him to leave unless he gave at least six months' notice, which is the rule with all other professors, then it seems to me this Government ought not to deal harshly with him in the matter of salary. I think he was entitled to longer notice, and to more consideration under these circumstances. As the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) said, there ought to be mutuality in matters of this kind, and what we would expect of him, we ought to be ready to accord to him. We ought not to forget, either, that he is an Imperial officer, borrowed by us for that purpose. We sought Major General Cameron. It is true the office is a good one, a valuable one, and it was no doubt to his advantage to take it; but at the same time it is right for every man to make the best bargain he can in his own interest. We sought for an officer from the other side, and we were permitted to have Major General Cameron, and having an Imperial officer, we ought to deal liberally with him, we ought to deal in no parsimonious way with him, and if we err at all, we should on the side of generosity. It is important that a good feeling should exist between the Government and its employees, particularly those of the character of Major General Cameron. With regard to the opinions that were expressed by these Visitors who made the report, and I do not quarrel with those opinions. I think very likely the head of that institution should not be there too long; but that is all beside the question we are discussing now. If time permitted, I think I could show to the satisfaction of the House that the efficiency of that college could be maintained at an expenditure somewhat less than is asked for this year. I am satisfied that when the Minister visits that college, and when he considers any new departure that he may take in reference to it, he will find opportunities which I am sure he will not be slow to take advantage of, whereby the highest state of efficiency of that Royal Military College can be maintained with economy, and at such an expenditure that no hon. gentleman could object to. I speak not on account of personal friendship to the gentleman in question, although I have the pleasure of his acquaintance. In reading these reports, and finding the notice that Major General Cameron had of them, I felt that if it were my case I would think an injustice was done to me, and I try to do to others as I would they should do to me.

Mr. BEATTIE. I do not rise in order to take part in the debate, but I merely wish to ask the Minister of Militia a question. In reading the report of the board appointed to investigate the state of affairs at the Military College in Kingston, I understood him to say that the board was composed of six gentlemen: three lieutenant-colonels and commandants of military schools. Surely, I must have misunderstood the hon. gentleman, because these gentlemen recommend that no officer should hold a position like Major General Cameron's, for more than five or eight years. It seems very strange to me that gentlemen holding a somewhat similar position should bring in such an extraordinary report. Perhaps if these gentlemen had a little of their own policy carried out in their own case, it might change their opinion.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOLS QUESTION.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to call the attention of the Government to an important question. I will relieve the House immediately from any anxiety by stating that I do not intend to make a speech. I regret that the First Minister is not here, but at this late period of the session, if I defer the question I intend to put, I might not have another opportunity of asking it. I would like to know whether or not any settlement has been come to on the Manitoba school question, and if so, what is that settlement. If there has been no settlement, I wish to know if negotiations are actually proceeding, or if correspondence is still being carried on between this Government and the government of the province of Manitoba. It was promised all through the last campaign in the most formal and solemn manner, that as soon as my hon. friend who now leads the Government came into power, he would appoint a commission to proceed to Manitoba to effect a settlement of this vexed question. I ask the Ministry to vouchsafe some information on this point, and to tell the country and the House whether this commission has been appointed. It was held out to us, and I think the promise had a great deal of effect, that Sir Oliver Mowat would be appointed as the chief commissioner in this matter and that by his good offices, no doubt a satisfactory settlement would be brought about. Has anything been done in this direction?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I might just reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) that, as was stated by the Premier on more than one occasion, there is every reasonable prospect of this matter being amicably settled. Beyond that, at present, I am not in a position to go.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee).

To provide for the establishment of a fog alarm at Belle Isle..... $20,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). On the south-east coast of the Island of Belle Isle lying outside the Straits, there has been hitherto established a fog alarm by the throwing of bombs. That has been found very unsatisfactory, and for some time past the steamship owners and the committee of Lloyds have been pressing on the attention of the Government the absolute necessity of having a proper fog alarm there. I need not state the immense importance in a place like that, of having a proper fog alarm system. Col. Anderson went there at my request some two months ago and examined the place, and made a report in which he strongly advised compliance with the request of those interested for a proper fog alarm. This vote is to carry out his recommendation.

To provide for two gas buoys at Lake Erie ..... $3,500

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where are these gas buoys to be placed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Col. Anderson has visited the place and selected the sites.

Mr. McGREGOR. One is near Bar Point, the other at Colchester Reef, and a third at Pelee Point.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A large delegation of masters and seamen came here and agreed with Col. Anderson as to the points at which the buoys should be placed.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Have these buoys been already procured?

Mr. McGREGOR. Col. Anderson is there now, placing the buoys.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The buoys have already arrived from London.

Mr. TISDALE. Has the Minister provided in the main Estimates for an additional buoy at Port Dover?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. REID. Would the Minister have a buoy placed on the rock in what is called the Narrows, just west of Brockville? The main channel there is only 100 feet wide, and there is a dangerous rock right in the centre of it. A large steamer with a barge in tow was stranded on this rock this summer. It would only cost a few dollars to have a buoy placed there, which would be of great assistance to mariners. I would like the hon. Minister to get his deputy to investigate this matter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will take care that the hon. gentleman's remarks are brought to the special attention of the officer charged with that.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. Minister will find in his department correspondence from me in relation to that matter. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries under the late Government did take some action to reduce the shoal in question; but owing to the low state of the water during the last year or two, it proved to be insufficient, and I think it would be well if the Minister would make some inquiries in regard to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Marine to the state of the lighthouse on the pier at the town of Oakville. Some two years ago, owing to the pier becoming partially undermined, the lighthouse was moved towards the shore, and remained there a considerable time. During the early part of this year the pier was repaired and levelled up; so it would be no trouble to remove the lighthouse to the end of the pier where it was before, and where it would be useful. It is of very little use where it is at the present. I would ask the Minister to make a note of that.

To provide for the expenses of the British Commission appointed under the Behring Sea claims convention, and the remuneration and expenses of counsel and witnesses, and other expenses in connection therewith ..... $50,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This amount is, I think, larger than we shall require. When the Estimates were first made up, I had no data upon which to judge what the expenses would be. I knew that the American government had provided a sum of $75,000, and I thought in a rough way that we had better appropriate $50,000; but after I had made that recommendation to Council, I sat down with my officers and went over the subject very carefully, and it seems to me I shall not require to ask the House for so large a sum. I would therefore move that this vote be reduced to $30,000, which, I think will be sufficient.

Mr. ELLIS. Does this Government pay the whole cost?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Each government is to pay one-half of the expenses of the commission. Negotiations were carried on by Great Britain and the United States with the view of apportioning the expenses between them. No final decision was arrived at; but at last the United States government agreed to pay one-half of the cost, and the Imperial government agreed to bear all of our expenses, beyond 5 per cent on the amount of the award. Up to 5 per cent we have to defray, and in the meantime we have to make provision for them.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman give us some idea of what will be the plan and the composition of the commission, not only as regards the commissioners, but as regards the counsel?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows that before the late Government went out of office, Mr. Justice King, on behalf of the Dominion Government, and Mr. Justice Putnam, on behalf of the United States government, were appointed. Communications have passed between the respective governments with the object of having the appointment of these two gentlemen simultaneously announced in an official way. Informal negotiations are now proceeding between the two commissioners in order to ascertain approximately when the commission shall meet. The United States government have appointed two counsel to represent them before the commission, and the Canadian Government have done the same thing. A local agent in British Columbia will also be necessary to act as a solicitor for the purpose of collecting the witnesses, and getting them ready for the sitting of the commission.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any selection been made?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, Mr. Bodwell will be the agent in British Columbia, and the Hon. Mr. Peters and Mr. Beique of Montreal are the two Canadian counsel; and the claimants themselves have selected counsel to represent them. I have no doubt that these counsel will act in unison with the counsel appointed by the Dominion Government.

The time for the sitting of the commission has not been fixed; but the informal negotiations are proceeding between the commissioners on that subject. My own idea is that it will meet about the middle of November. I cannot give any more definite information than that.

To provide for paying cost of a new sailing schooner built for the Fisheries Protection Service, to replace the "Vigilant," including sails..... $10,500

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What are you going to do with the "Vigilant"?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When my predecessor was in power he made a contract for the construction of a new boat called the "Osprey," which was launched about three weeks ago. One of the terms of the contract was that the contractor should take the "Vigilant" at the value of $2,000 as part of his payment.

To pay balance costs recovering license fees wrongfully exacted by Newfoundland government from Dominion fishermen.... $500

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the litigation yet concluded?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not absolutely concluded yet.

To provide for expert investigation into seal life, in connection with Award Regulations, Behring Sea..... $3,500

Mr. FOSTER. Is this an investigation that is now under way?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Independent investigations are proceeding, on the part of the respective government, for the purpose of examining into the whole question of seal life, the habits of the seals, their destruction, and the causes of that destruction. The late Government appointed Mr. Macoun and Mr. Halkett, who are out there now. We have received some reports from them.

Indian Schools, Manitoba and North-west Territories ..... $16,176

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the difference between moneys voted for purposes "in" the North-west Territories and for purposes "for" the North-west Territories. In this House, from time to time, complaint is made that there is a large amount expended in the North-west Territories for the North-west Territories, a great deal more than this country can afford. It is necessary for the representatives of the Territories to come before this House, from time to time, and make a claim on behalf of the people for certain expenditures for the development of those Territories; and if they are met, in making those claims, by the assertion that already vast expenditure has been made in the Territories, then the claims they make on behalf of the improvements they require for the development of the Territories are at a certain disadvantage. What I want to point out is that this particular expenditure is not expenditure in any way connected with the people of the North-west Territories. It is not an expenditure connected with the development of the North-west Territories. It is not an expenditure for which the people of the North-west Territories have asked, but it is an expenditure in pursuance of a certain policy settled upon by the Government of this Dominion, on ideas which they have derived from sources not connected with the people of the Territories. When this expenditure is swollen to the amount that it is apparently swollen to now, it is certainly bound to have a detrimental effect on the interests of the people of the Territories, in the minds of members of this House. We recognize the principle of dealing justly with the Indians of the country. We have no complaint against the Government for dealing justly with those Indians. The treaties that have been made should certainly be fulfilled, not only in the letter but in the spirit, generously and intelligently. But over and above all that is contained in the treaties of those Indians, in pursuance of a certain policy of the Government, expenditure has been undertaken with regard to them which has come to alarming proportions, such proportions as are detrimental to the welfare of the people of the Territories when asking money for ordinary public improvements to which the Territories are entitled as well as the other provinces, and which are necessary in the Territories to a greater extent than in the other provinces. I allude to the expenditure on the education of the Indians. I find in the main Estimates a vote of $285,000 for the education of Indian children in Manitoba and the North-west Territories during the year, and in addition I find this sum of $16,000 for the same purpose. I find that the main estimate shows an increase over the amount expended last year, to the extent of $56,000. I say that when the amount expended on the education alone of the Indians of the Territories has reached this enormous sum, and when it is being increased to the extent of $56,000 a year, it is time for the people of the Territories, it seems to me, to put themselves right before the House by showing that this expenditure is none of their making and is for none of their benefit. They decline altogether to be charged with this expenditure as a part of the expenditure of this country for the benefit of the Territories. A short time ago, I laid before this House a statement of the requirements for the ordinary business of the government of the Territories, in the matter of public improvements and education. There seemed to be a feeling on the part of hon. members that I had a good deal of hardihood to claim on behalf of the people an increase over the amount appearing in the main Estimates, of $242,000 for these purposes. But the total sum spent to carry on the government of the Territories, supply the needs of education and provide the necessary public works throughout the territory, is short of the amount we have already voted in the main Estimates for the education of the Indians of the territory by about $43,000. In other words, this Parliament is spending on the education of the children of the Indians of the Territories $43,000 more money than it is expending in carrying on the government of the Territories and making the public improvements that are necessary for the development of the Territories, so as to make them what the people here are legislating to make them—a market for your manufactures and a field for the operations of your merchants and your capitalists. This is the purpose for which, as I understand it, money is being voted for the Territories. That is why we ask you to supply money for the North-west Territories, and the amount of money that is now voted does not suffice for that end. I desire to call attention to the fact that, in voting this money, Parliament is voting it for a purpose not related to the development of the Territories, and not in any sense chargeable to the Territories. We have not asked for the expenditure, and it is not in the line of the development of the country. I do not know that hon. members are aware as they should be, of the magnitude of the sum or the purpose for which it is voted. In answer to a question I asked in the House a short time ago, we were informed that the total number of pupils in the industrial schools in the Territories, which absorb the greater part of that money, was less than 1,000. Now, in the public schools of the Territories there are ten thousand pupils in attendance. Where you spend $285,000 in educating less than a thousand Indian children, you decline to spend more than $242,000 in educating ten thousand white children in the Territories, in providing public works and carrying on the public business of the Territories. I wish the House to have a thorough understanding as to who is responsible for this vast expenditure, so that the people of the North-west may not be charged with any part of it.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the Minister will not allow the statement to pass without saying something with regard to it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. FOSTER. No; not carried. I have never heard a worse indictment of the whole system of the educating of children in the North-west than we have just heard from one of the strongest supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. He said that this expenditure was not asked by the North-west, and was not for the benefit of the North-west.

Mr. OLIVER. If I might be allowed a word in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), I would say that I think the answer to my question would come very much better from himself than from the hon. Minister, who did not direct the policy that brought about this state of affairs, and who, in this supplementary vote, as I understand, is simply carrying out the obligations of the previous Government.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) is quite wrong in the last statement. As to his first statement, I am not sure but that he has struck the nail on the head; I think, if any answer is given, I will have to give it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. member (Mr. Oliver) says his criticism is directed chiefly against the late Administration. I trust we may have some statement with reference to the policy of the Government.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted? Carried. Moved that a sum—

Mr. FOSTER. I protest—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. FOSTER. I protest against your declaring this item carried and calling another while I am on my feet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. gentleman has nothing to say.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, you do not know what I can say.

Mr. DOBELL. It gives me very great pleasure to explain this expenditure. We are asking to spend $700. That is to provide a school building to cost $400 and a teacher, $300. The reserve is situated a great distance from the others in the township, and the hon. gentlemen opposite, though for the last eighteen years they have had the power to provide schools, have not provided this school, which was required under the treaty. We intend to carry out the treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest what the Minister has said. The hon. member for Alberta said that this expenditure was to carry out obligations of the late Government. But the hon. Minister says that this is a new expenditure, undertaken by themselves, undertaken because we neglected our duties in reference to it. But I wish to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) who is acting for the Minister of the Interior, if he has not missed the point of the charge of the hon. member for Alberta. The charge was that $285,000 was being spent for the cultivation of the intellectual areas of about 1,000 Indian children, and that this expenditure was not wished by the Territories, and was not for the advantage of the Territories.

Mr. DOBELL. I am sure my hon. friend the member for Alberta will be quite satisfied, if I give the explanations seriatim, as the items rise.

Mr. FOSTER. Under all the circumstances, I think we shall have to take the items seriatim.

Removing the present buildings to new site, to provide outbuildings for the Elkhorn Industrial School..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. We must have an explanation of this from somebody.

Mr. DOBELL. This is owing to the destruction by fire of the main buildings of the school. It is necessary to erect a new building, for which provision has been made in the main Estimates, and also outbuildings. It is intended to remove the buildings not destroyed to a more suitable site. The details are as follows:—Laundry, $1,000; gymnasium, $1,500; bakery, $1,000; removal, $1,500; total, $5,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How far is the removal?

Mr. DOBELL. We have not yet decided as to the site, although we have decided upon the neighbourhood. It is only a matter of some $1,500 or $1,600.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be interesting to know what progress is being made by these Indians. We are spending a lot of money in educating them and turning them to useful pursuits. Could the hon. gentleman give us information as to the number of pupils that are taught in these schools, and what progress they are making? I notice a nice display of their work in the vestibule of this building; could the hon. gentleman tell us where it is from?

Mr. DOBELL. I do not think anything could be more satisfactory than the object lesson which we see in this building. That is the result of work in several schools, and it shows the capacity of those Indians to learn useful pursuits, and to benefit from the lessons taught them. Our treatment of the Indians is in striking contrast to that accorded the Indians in the United States by the government of that country; and it reflects a great credit on the Dominion of Canada and shows the care and patience with which the Indian children have been trained.

Mr. OLIVER. I examined the exhibit that is made in the Parliament buildings, and I would like to remove the impression that it is all the work of the Indian schools. Some of the exhibits there are the work essentially of Indians who are not instructed in that particular direction in the Indian schools. Besides, there is what is known in the west as cooey sticks. They are in the shape of a nicely-smoothed stone, fastened on to a moderately long rawhide handle, and are for the purpose of knocking out the brains of their enemies who happen to come within reach.

Mr. DOBELL. I may tell my hon. friend that those instruments will not be required in this House.

Mr. DAVIN. I am sorry to see the levity with which this important subject is treated. The education of our Indian children reflects the greatest credit upon this country. If the Conservative party and the late Conservative Government are responsible for the policy that has been dealt out to the Canadian Indians and for the policy of educating those children, it is one of their greatest achievements. Nothing that the Canadian Government can do reflects more credit upon them than the care we are taking of the original possessors of the soil of Canada, from whom we have taken their land. I am surprised at the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). When his Minister rose up to reply to his criticism, he gave an example of what the children had done, by pointing to the exhibit in the basement. But the hon. member for Alberta rises up and says that the work there exposed was not all due to the skill of these children who are taught in the Indian schools; and, of course, it is calculated to go abroad that, in some respects, the Government and the department which the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) represents so well in this House, have committed a fraud on Parliament, and a fraud on the public. With the exception of a trifling matter, to which that hon. gentleman has referred, I may say that all these exhibits are the work of children taught in those schools. A similar display, made at the Chicago Exhibition, of the work of our Indian children, excited the admiration of the world that thronged to that exhibition. In the exhibition in the North-west, there was nothing that attracted so much admiration from everybody who visited it, as the exhibit of the work of our Indian children. But I am not surprised that the member for Alberta directs his cannon against the Government that he is forward to support, if only he can rise up and appear the protagonist to an indifferent and incapable member like myself, who has so badly, for ten years, represented the North-west in this House, and who has now to sit at the feet of this highly cultivated Gamael, and highly modest gentleman, who comes here to give me instruction. I am not surprised that he pitches into his own Government, because it is consonant with his past, and it is entirely consistent. Before hon. gentlemen are delighted with their bantling, they had better reflect upon the story that Æschylus tells in one of his dramas, of the little tiger that is played with as if it were a kitten, and, when the animal grows, it becomes ferocious and unmanageable. Within two years, those hon. gentlemen opposite will find it a little difficult to deal with the eccentric gentleman who now gives them his support. We have had his opinion to-night, flippant, as all his opinions here have been flippant, as all his attempts to enlighten this House have been. I want to give you his opinion of the Liberal party four years ago, and his opinion of the Conservative party. This is what he said some four years ago:

The reason that the people of the Territories do not kick more vigorously when election day arrives is because they have no assurance that if the Opposition attained power to-morrow they would do any better in these respects than the Government is doing. The Liberals have never made a study of the North-west or its affairs, have never championed its cause or that of its settlers—more than to score a point for the party when opportunity offered—and, indeed, have permitted themselves to rest under the libel that they are anything but friends of the North-west. Whatever may be the shortcomings of the Government party, they at least profess an interest in the Territories, which the Opposition does not even profess. Under the circumstances the people of the Territories can scarcely be expected to enthuse much over a prospective change of Government, or to give a majority in favour of it.

When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) pitches into his own Government here, he is entirely consistent and I entirely endorse the sentiments which I have quoted from him. I may say in addition that I entertain a higher opinion of the Government of my opponents, than he does; because, seeing that our treaties with the Indians are founded in justice and humanity, the present Government are not merely treading in the traditions of the past, and in the footsteps of their predecessors, but they are taking a wise, a humane, and a statesmanlike course.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose I should apologize to the House for having alluded to this matter at all.

To pay for the removal of Canadian Indians from Montana and expenses in connexion therewith ..... $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this?

Mr. DOBELL. These Indians belong to various bands in the North-west Territories, and they have been residing in Montana. They aggregate about 800 souls and the American authorities desire to have them returned to Canada. Measures will be taken during the present year to accomplish this and to settle the Indians on the reserves to which they belong.

Mr. FOSTER. How is the money to be expended for these Indians?

Mr. DOBELL. It is for the cost of removing them, and I suppose helping them to put up wigwams or something of that kind.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In what manner is it intended to move them? Are the Mounted Police to be employed?

Mr. DOBELL. Six hundred have come in, many of them were brought by railway from the northern part of Montana.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will scarcely be able to pay wigwams for them out of this vote. I do not think the Auditor General would consent to the payment out of this vote for palatial residences for these Indians. When the hon. gentleman brings these Indians to Canada, has he any guarantee that they will stay here? Will they not as they did before, scatter and go across the border?

Mr. DOBELL. I believe the Mounted Police have supervision over these men and keep them on the reserve.

Mr. FOSTER. How long is it since they strayed over to Montana?

Mr. DOBELL. Since the rebellion.

Mr. FOSTER. The Mounted Police were there then to exercise supervision over them.

Mr. DOBELL. The force of men were scattered at that time and were unable to watch them.

Mr. FOSTER. That is hardly satisfactory, because the Mounted Police force was much larger then than now.

Mr. DOBELL. These were men that were actual rebels and who fled into Montana at the time of the rebellion.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the Indians get more afraid of the police from year to year.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there any request that these Indians should be brought back to Canada; did they ask it themselves, or have we invited them back?

Mr. DOBELL. They belong to Canada, and the United States insisted upon our taking them back.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they willing to come back themselves?

Mr. DOBELL. I think they are very glad to get back again.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In what way has that request come from the Government of the United States, and when did it come?

Mr. DOBELL. We have sent some Indians across to the United States, and we have received our Indians back from the United States.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we cannot put up with an answer like that. The hon. gentleman stated that the United States had asked us to remove these Indians, and when I asked him in what manner the communication came from the United States, he tells me that we have exchanged Indians.

Mr. DOBELL. I thought the hon. gentleman would have known about this because the request came from the United States eighteen months ago when he was a member of the Government. An official application was made through the Secretary of State, and it came through the proper channel.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these Indians do the Government intend to bring back?

Mr. DOBELL. The total number is 800, and 600 have been received already.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this vote to provide for all of them, or merely for the balance who remain in the States?

Mr. DOBELL. All of them.

Tannery on Blackfoot Reserve, and for the services of an instructor in tannery ..... $1,300

Mr. SPROULE. Is this tannery controlled by the instructor, and are the Indians taken in to learn the trade?

Mr. DOBELL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it simply a school of instruction, or is it supposed to carry on something for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. DOBELL. I believe it is exceedingly difficult to find employment for the Indians. It was thought by the late Government very desirable to teach these Indians certain trades, and this tannery is the natural outcome of that purpose. The late Government, I believe, sent instructors there, and this vote is to carry on this enterprise.

To provide for ten additional pupils at Crowstand Boarding School at $70 ..... $720

Mr. SPROULE. How many pupils are at this school?

Mr. DOBELL. This school is a Presbyterian school. There are thirty-two pupils already provided for.

Mr. SPROULE. How are the pupils taken in? Are all taken in who apply, or is there any system of selection?

Mr. DOBELL. They have to pass a medical examination.

Mr. SPROULE. Are all who pass that examination admissible?

Mr. DOBELL. I believe they only take the most intelligent.

To defray the expense of delimitating the boundary between Canada and the United States along the frontiers of New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia ..... $75,000

Mr. FOSTER. We would like an explanation of this?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I believe part of this money is for the purpose of defining the boundary line between British Columbia and the United States. The hon. gentleman is aware that there have been considerable disputes over the proprietorship of the gold fields of that region, and a good deal of territory claimed by the United States appears to have been adjudged to Canada, including some very rich gold fields. The great bulk of the expenditure is, I believe, to be made there.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any work going on in Quebec and Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is, I believe, a little.

Mr. PRIOR. Does the hon. gentleman think this is for the Alaska boundary, or chiefly for the southern boundary ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Chiefly for the southern boundary. I think.

Mr. PRIOR. I did not know there was any dispute as to the southern boundary.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman knows that under the treaty there was considerable difficulty in deciding where the line ten leagues from the coast is found. So far a good deal of progress has been made, but a good deal remains to be done, and from the nature of the country it is rather expensive work.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us how many are employed on this work ?

Mr. DOBELL. There are about twelve employed at present. The United States government have, I believe, appropriated $75,000 for the same work.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they all employed in British Columbia ?

Mr. DOBELL. A portion of the twelve are employed on Lake Erie. I will give the hon. gentleman the particulars. On the 3rd of July, 1895, the acting Secretary of State of the United States called attention to the apparently conflicting claims on Coleman's Island, Hunter's Island and other islands adjacent to the boundary line between Minnesota and the province of Ontario. It appears that the government of the United States was not aware that by the treaty of 1842, concluded by Lord Ashburton and Mr. Daniel Webster, the British and the United States plenipotentiaries respectively, a certain line traced by the plenipotentiaries on a map had been agreed to as the boundary. This information was conveyed to the government of the United States; but in order to avoid any future difficulty the United States government was invited to join in the appointment of a commission to travel over the whole boundary line from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods to determine whether the maps of 1842 were sufficient to decide all doubtful points without ambiguity. The United States government have not yet expressed their assent to this proposal; but in order that this Government may have a full knowledge of the details so as to meet any difficulty that may arise, a survey party has been sent to travel from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods to collect information. This exploration has been completed, but the report has not been received.

Mr. FOSTER. Upon the hon. gentleman's statement, it seems that the point in dispute is upon that part of the boundary line between Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Part of it. There is some dispute in New Brunswick also.

Mr. FOSTER. In New Brunswick, I understand, it is the water line in Passamaquoddy Bay that has been before a commission. I do not understand that there is any dispute as to the land boundary line between New Brunswick and Maine. There cannot be much to do on the water line. The commission have been at work on that for two seasons, and their work must be pretty well completed by this time. I understand that the proposal with regard to Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods is for a joint survey, but that the Government are going to send a party there themselves.

Mr. DOBELL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The point that strikes me is this. Will it be satisfactory to the United States that these two parties should make independent surveys, or would it not be better to do as they are doing in British Columbia and make a joint survey, in which the two parties work alternately and then alternately survey each other's work, so that when once the work is done there is no point of dispute between the two, whereas if they work independently is it not likely, if they differ, that a joint survey will be required ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It seemed to have been thought by the department that the maps and plan and data in our possession would give sufficient information to enable this line to be delimited, but the United States, not having agreed to a joint commission, the department thought it essential, in order to an intelligent discussion from our standpoint, that an actual survey should be made, and that is being proceeded with for the purpose of giving us accurate data on which we can discuss intelligently the dispute between the two countries as to the exact location where the line should be.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are the surveyors at work on the boundary ?

Mr. DOBELL. In British Columbia, Washington Territory, and also Meridian 141, which is the boundary between Canada and the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. Have these survey parties been out for the season in anticipation of this vote ?

Mr. DOBELL. Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I want to call the attention of the committee to a question which is of great importance to the province of Quebec. There has been an agitation going on for a long while in the province of Quebec as to the northern boundary of the province, and I believe the question was debated here a great many times by Sir Hector Langevin. If my information be correct, the late Administration passed an Order in Council fixing the northern limit of the province of Quebec at a point at or near the east Maine River and considerably extending the territory of the province of Quebec towards the north. Is there anything in these Estimates to fix that boundary?

Mr. DOBELL. No.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Why, then, is the name of the province of Quebec included? I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that this Order in Council has been passed, and we would like to know whether it is the intention of this Government to carry out that Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This vote does not touch the point referred to by the hon. gentleman at all. The important question to which the hon. gentleman refers has not yet come before the Government at all.

To defray the expense of exploring, surveying, &c., the country lying between the Stickine River and the sources of the Yukon ..... $6,000

Mr. PRIOR. Has anything been done yet on this work?

Mr. DOBELL. No, nothing has been done.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to draw the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that there is another route besides the one from the Stickine River to the Yukon. The other route is from the head of Lynn Canal over the White Pass to Teslin Lake and thence to the Yukon River. There is no proper road now for miners to come in by, and it is very hard for them to get their goods in in any quantity. At present nearly all the goods going to the Yukon country are coming around by the mouth of the Yukon. They have to go up by St. Michael's, and they are American goods that are mostly coming in. If we could get a good road through the Lynn Canal into the Teslin Lake and so on to the Yukon, that would be much shorter. If that cannot be found, I take it that the Stickine is the best. The Government should put on two surveys.

Mr. DOBELL. It is the intention to survey all possible routes to open up that country and not to spare any expense in having the routes properly surveyed.

Mr. PRIOR. I should like to see it done as soon as possible. Better spend $15 000 in one year than five or six thousand dollars per year in three years.

Mr. DOBELL. It will be gone on with early next spring.

Collection of Revenue—Customs..... $32,566 94

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see the Controller of Customs here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps the item had better stand. I have sent for the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson).

Electric light inspection—To provide for the payment of standard instruments already purchased or ordered last fiscal year ..... $4,000

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would like to ask the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue (Sir H. Joly de Lotbinière) how much the department proposes to expend on capital account for the purpose of electric light inspection, that is, for standard measures?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir H. Joly de Lotbinière). My hon. friend (Mr. Wood) knows that a law was passed in 1894 respecting units of electric measures. There are certain instruments still wanting in order to comply with the requirements of the law. And these instruments are the following:—Current balances, electro-motive standards, and subsidiary standard for outside work. These instruments are indispensable to the carrying out of the provisions of the law. I may say, at the same time, that the inspection and measurement of electric light is one of the few services that not only meet expenditure, but leave a balance in our favour. Last year, the revenue from that service was $8,066, while the expenditure was only $6,693, leaving a balance of $1,373.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I cannot forbear expressing my gratification at hearing the statement of the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue that this service is more than self-supporting. I suppose the instruments are necessary. At the same time, I would express the hope that this sum will complete for some years the equipment of this branch.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask if the expenditure of $6,693 includes the expenditure for the standard instruments? I suppose not.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes. The figures are even more satisfactory than I stated, because this expenditure of $6,693 actually covers $3,000 for instruments.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman give us what has been expended up to this time for the standards?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. So far, $3,031 has been expended for instruments. So the working expenditure was a trifle over $3,000, while the revenue was $8,066.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When the Department of Inland Revenue organized this branch, it was largely, as to cost and income, an experiment; and the department were wise in placing the fee so that the income of the branch would be at least as large as the expenditure. But my hon. friend (Sir H. Joly de Lotbinière) must know that the cost of the inspection bears rather heavily, especially upon the smaller companies which have been organized now in almost every town and village in Canada. Now, the hon. gentleman has stated that, while the expenditure on this system—which was organized, I understand, while my hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood) was Controller of Inland Revenue—has been only about $3,000, the income has been something like $8,000, leaving out the question of the purchase of the instruments. This leaves a balance in favour of the branch, on the year's working, of about $5,000. I think that, in view of that splendid showing, the hon. gentleman might very well consider seriously the reduction of this system to these local companies.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) would like me to communicate to the committee and to himself a regulation passed on the 21st August last:

In view of the great number of small companies having an installation of 500 lamps and under, the department is of opinion that the registration fee of $25 in such cases is excessive, and its recommendation that the fee be reduced to $10.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That is the second reduction. There was a reduction about a year and a half ago.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is a reduction made last month.

Dominion Lands—Chargeable to capital —Further amount required for surveys, examination of survey returns, printing plans, &c..... $16,500

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. Minister please tell us what this is for, and what surveys are being carried on?

Mr. DOBELL. Three years ago, the department had an appropriation of $150,000 for surveys. Two years ago the amount was cut down to $100,000, and last year it was $75,000. Surveys are going on in all directions, and it is thought quite evident that that appropriation of $75,000 proposed for the current year is not sufficient. At the beginning of the present season, it was estimated that in addition to the vote for the last fiscal year, the sum of $25,000 would be required. $8,500 of this sum was voted by Parliament last session, and was made available up to 30th June last. This further amount of $16,000 is to provide for the expenditure for the remainder of the year.

Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

Mr. FOSTER. How much has been spent of the $75,000?

Mr. DOBELL. $8,500.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend sees that of that $75,000 $8,500 is still unexpended. It seems a little odd to ask for $16,000 now.

Mr. DOBELL. The total amount two years ago was $150,000. This year we voted $75,000, and $16,500 are required to provide for the balance of the year over and above the $75,000 already voted, making the total amount to about $91,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us how these surveys are being done, whether by day labour or by contract?

Mr. DOBELL. The surveys have all been conducted by day's work.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It used to be all by contract.

Mr. DOBELL. I cannot speak positively, but I think it has all been done by day's work.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that a part of the work was done by day labour at $5 a day, but another part was done by contract. I want to know whether the same system is continued?

Mr. DOBELL. There has been no change made.

Penitentiaries—Commissions for investigating the affairs of the penitentiaries of Canada ..... $3,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the Solicitor General say what he intends to do with this money?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). My hon. friend will admit that in taking charge of the Department of Justice, it is necessary that we should acquire a full knowledge of the administration of the penitentiaries. Now, my hon. friend stated a few days ago that we would find in the penitentiary branch a report of the inspector, Mr. Stewart. I may say that no such report exists. Let me give the committee a few facts to show the necessity there is to make this investigation. There are five penitentiaries under the control of the Department of Justice, and in addition there is the Regina jail, and the daily average of prisoners is 1,256. Three years ago the administration of our penitentiaries cost $359,000 a year, and it has now reached $481,000, an increase of $150,000 inside of three years. If we take the per diem expenditure, for instance, we find that at St. Vincent de Paul it is 68 cents, at Kingston 89 cents, Manitoba $1.26, British Columbia $1.15. Now, how is it possible that the per diem expenditure can vary so greatly among these different penitentiaries? If we look at the Central Prison at Toronto, which exists under somewhat similar conditions as the penitentiaries, we find that the per diem expenditure is only 27 cents a day.

Mr. CASGRAIN. 17 cents in Montreal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let me point out this other fact, which is important, regarding the per capita cost per year. In Kingston it is $367.15; St. Vincent de Paul, $234, a difference of over $100 per capita. How can we explain that? In British Columbia the per capita cost $424; in Manitoba, $541; while in the Central Prison at Toronto, is only $99 a year. I take my facts from the report of our own inspector, and the report of the Central Prison at Toronto, and I think they show the need of finding out why so great discrepancies exist.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think my hon. friend will have to make a stronger case than that, before he asks for a special commission. The hon. gentleman cannot, as he practically admitted, have gone very far into the management of the penitentiaries, or have consulted the records of the department, when he puts before the committee these figures. As regards the difference between the maintenance of prisoners in British Columbia and Manitoba, as compared with the maintenance at the Central Prison of Ontario, every one is aware that the circumstances are entirely different. Prices cannot be compared for the ordinary commodities of life between the western provinces and the eastern provinces. Time and again in connection with that department, this Parliament has heard that explanation, so often, in fact, that I hesitate to go over the different reasons that have been given for the great divergence. The hon. gentleman says that he requires an investigation. Well, Parliament has put at his disposal an officer for that express purpose. He cannot pretend that that officer has proved unequal to the discharge of his duties. That officer is the Inspector of Penitentiaries. He came into the department only a year or two ago, and he was at that time of life, and endowed with such business ability, that those in charge of the department at that time supposed that he would be able efficiently to discharge those very duties the hon. gentleman now proposes to put upon a new board of inspection. Some years ago, there was a board of visitors, so to speak, who went through the form of reporting fully on the condition of the various penitentiaries. That system was supplanted by the present system, and instead of there being that board, there was constituted an inspector whose duties are to visit each penitentiary every year, to go thoroughly into the management, and report the result of his investigation. Mr. Stewart was appointed about a year ago and the first duty he undertook at my request was to make a thorough and independent inquiry into these various penitentiaries. I was perfectly correct in saying the other night that we should have the reports which Mr. Stewart made, not only during my incumbency, but those which I suppose he made since. If we had the benefit of these reports before us, or if the Solicitor General was able to say that the inspector had advised that he was unequal to the task of making such a report, something of a case might be made out for this additional inspection. Mr. Stewart, although a very short time in office, had done sufficient work to enable him to write a very interesting report for the year ending June, 1895, and that is the last of his reports we have published. The hon. the Solicitor General hardly does that office justice in expressing astonishment at the increased cost of the maintenance of these penitentiaries, because the hon. gentleman has left out the increased revenue we derive from them. One great increase was caused by the establishment of the binder twine industry which involved a huge outlay and a large increase in the annual expenditure, but we are deriving a revenue from that now.

Mr. MCGREGOR. When we compare the cost of Toronto with that at Winnipeg and other penitentiaries, it should be remembered that they have a binder twine industry at Toronto the same as at Kingston.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am quite aware of that. I say the Solicitor General omitted from his statement the industries which have been established in the penitentiaries in recent years. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) shakes his head. Surely he does not deny that these industries have been established within a recent period.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I stated most positively that I have taken into account the revenue, and I deducted that revenue from the expenditure in the result which I gave to the House a moment ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman's statement in detail would be interesting. He simply said that the expenditure had increased at a certain rate, but he did not explain to the House that that expenditure was materially added to an account of the recent policy of equipping the penitentiary for the management of this new industry. Again, as the Minister of Public Works may have learned from his officers, in late years the penitentiary branch has been doing the work that used to be on the shoulders of the Public Works Department, and the Estimates this year show that that policy has been continued. All that swells the expenditure, and there should in consequence be a proportionate reduction in other departments of government. The fact that these new industries have been undertaken more vigorously in recent years, would account at once for the sudden increase in the cost of the penitentiaries. The report which I have in my hand shows that Mr. Stewart has begun to do the work which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) suggests should be undertaken. In the short time he has been in office, Mr. Stewart could not thoroughly sift all the information it is possible to obtain. But, the Solicitor General has advanced no argument to show that in the regular manner and in reasonable time—if he has confidence in his inspector—all the information will not be obtained by the inspector, which any commission the hon. gentleman may devise can succeed in acquiring. Mr. Stewart's report to which I have referred gives a financial statement, the revenue as well as the cash outlay. The prison population of Canada per capita, costs \$348.26, which for the population of Canada is  $8\frac{1}{2}$  cents per head. The inspector adds :

The increasing demands in connection with prison accommodation are being, to a large extent, met by the increased utilization of convict labour. It is, therefore, safe to assume that the requirements of this branch of the public service will not materially increase for many years to come.

That puts briefly the criticism which I have ventured to offer that the figures which have startled the Solicitor General are due to the exceptional causes, which causes were the equipment of the penitentiaries in order that convict labour could be more thoroughly utilized.

In that report, Mr. Stewart says :

Since my appointment in February last I have visited each of the institutions under my supervision.

He then submits various criticisms in regard to each of the penitentiaries in order, and I would call attention to some of his concluding observations :

The deputy wardens are the officers upon whom devolve, more directly, the duty of enforcing discipline. They are, without exception, experienced and faithful.

The great majority of the prison police are intelligent and efficient, but in a few cases an apparent disregard for neatness, a shuffling gait and awkward use of weapons indicate needed improvement. A system of regular police drill and occasional target practice has been introduced at each of the penitentiaries, and from which good results are already apparent. A prerequisite to permanent appointment should be a thorough knowledge of police drill, including the proper use and care of fire-arms.

So far as I am able to judge, by observation and by correspondence, I am convinced that each of the prisons is under the control of a warden who is competent, energetic and devoted to his work, and whose sole aim is the success of the institution which has been confided to his charge.

In the brief period that I had the opportunity of advising with this officer, he had been able himself to effect a great many reforms in the internal economy of these various institutions, and he was steadily reducing the cost of supplies, both food and clothing. My recollection leads me to say that the troubles that were reported were troubles that were within the control of the department. There is no advantage to be derived from a commission, so far as I am able to see, and the Solicitor General has not pointed out any which the inspector cannot himself afford. With the reduction of these expenses of maintenance going on under the advice and work of the inspector, I think that all the Solicitor General desires to do can be done. Some motion has been made in connection with the difficulties concerning the binder twine deficits, and the condition of affairs in connection with the Connor and Kelly contracts. With regard to the Connor contract, the particulars have been fully put before the House. The fact is that these men broke down with their contracts. In the case of Connor, the warden, who should have obtained satisfactory security before handing the goods over to the contractor, neglected doing that, taking bonds of no considerable value. Notwithstanding that, the Solicitor General was able to convince the committee a short time ago that there would be no actual loss to the country. What is a commission going to do that cannot be done by a committee of this House at the very next session of Parliament? For instance, in regard to the binder twine industry, there is not a single particular that a commission could obtain that cannot be obtained by the Public Accounts Committee or any committee to which this matter might be referred by Parliament. So that the fact that there has been a very heavy expenditure in connection with these penitentiaries, and that the expenditure varies according to the province, cannot in my opinion warrant the hon. gentleman in asking for an expenditure over and above the regular expenditure that is put in his hands to enable him to obtain through his inspector all information that this commission would be asked to obtain. Although it is some time since I was in the department, I am certain that the hon. gentleman will not say that the present inspector is not actively and energetically attending to his duties, and I am certain that he will not intimate that he has not full confidence in that officer's ability and integrity. Under these circumstances, and considering that there has been no suggestion at large for an inquiry of this character, I do not think the hon. gentleman has made out a case for a special commission.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is for the committee to decide whether I have made out a case or not. I cannot leave that absolutely in the hands of my hon. friend. I am not concerned with the capacity of the officials in the department. I am dealing with a condition of things which we ascertained at the time we came into possession of this department. My hon.

friend accounts for the difference in the expenditure on penitentiaries generally by stating that the binder twine industry had brought about increased expenditure. The expenditure for 1892-93 was $359,000. That was the year the binder twine industry was started. That industry necessitated an outlay on capital account of $40,280. The next year the expenditure was increased to $446,000; the next year it was $389,000, and this year we have an increase of $100,000 over last year, the amount being $481,900.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the prison population?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. 1,228 in 1893, and 1,256 in 1895. Let us see what revenue we derive from these penitentiaries. According to the report, we find that the binder twine industry at the Kingston penitentiary has given us $34.58 per capita a year, whereas the industries connected with the Central Prison yields $62.18 per capita a year. In the presence of such a condition of things as that, surely the least we can ask, without imputing any bad faith, or reflecting in any way on the officials of the department, is that an investigation should be held, so that we can ascertain how it comes to pass that under similar conditions such different results are obtained. Let me answer the other point. My hon. friend says there is a difference between the expenditure in Manitoba and British Columbia, and that in the eastern provinces. That is true to a certain extent; but perhaps my hon. friend would bear in mind that Kingston is not so far from St. Vincent de Paul, and between these two there is a difference in the expenditure of $130 a year per capita. That may no doubt be accounted for to some extent by the increased expenditure at Kingston arising from improvements and the binder twine industry, but that does not account for it wholly.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the population of each prison?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. At Kingston, 516; at St. Vincent de Paul, 376. Now, take the expenditure at Manitoba, for instance. Of course, I understand that the conditions existing there are such as justify a greater expenditure; but how is it possible to reconcile such differences as these; Manitoba, $541 per capita; British Columbia, $424; and Dorchester, N.B., $278.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does that include capital expenditure?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am taking the figures from the report of 1895, pages 37 to 41.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the number of convicts in Manitoba?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The daily average is 82½. In British Columbia the daily average is 102. I give these figures, and I say, further that, there is considerable friction in some of our penitentiaries, which has existed a long time, and must necessarily be investigated in order to discover the cause and apply a remedy. Take the binder-twine industry, which comes out in this way: capital, $40,280; revenue, 1894-95, $15,000; revenue, 1895-96, $29,000. In that year we were short $21,600, being the balance due on sales not paid; but I am glad to say that these accounts are in such a position that we stand a good chance of collecting them all.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the hon. gentleman say that in Ontario there was a profit on binder twine?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I was not discussing that, but for the hon. gentleman's information I will tell him that, instead of the expense in Ontario increasing per diem, the expenditure in the Ontario Central Prison, last year, was 27 cents per diem, and the year previous to that it was 36 cents.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the cost of maintenance in the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. 68 cents.

Mr. QUINN. In Montreal jail the cost is only 17 cents.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is a very serious reflection on the administration of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. If it is only 17 cents in the Montreal jail, how can you account for it being 68 cents in the penitentiary, which is within 4 miles of the jail?

Mr. QUINN. The food is better.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The convicts are better fed than the prisoners in the jail. The central prisoners in Ontario stand on exactly the same basis as our penitentiaries.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is my information, and, when they can reduce the expenditure as they do, and ours shows an increase, that seems to me to suggest food for reflection and cause for inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you the population in the case of the central prisoners in Toronto, on which that calculation is based?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The average is 320.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has not taken into account the extraordinary expenditure, even outside the establishment of these new industries at Kingston, which have been going on for years. We have had to come down, in recent years, for heavy votes in connection with the rearrangement of that penitentiary altogether. First of all, the only place we had for the lunatic prisoners was Kingston, and additional arrangements had to be made for their accommodation. It was arranged afterwards that all the female prisoners should be taken from the eastern provinces and kept at Kingston. Then, very heavy expenditure was found necessary in order to establish a new system of locking, and this new system was adopted in consequence of the many escapes that had occurred. The new arrangement of prison wings and cells, a new female prison and a criminal insane asylum, and cottages for the keeper's guards cost a great deal of money, and were all taken up within a few years. That would explain the extraordinary increase, and make intelligible the observation of the inspector that that was rapidly coming to an end, and, had the hon. gentleman taken these into account, the difficulty which the hon. gentleman felt, would have been at once removed. I gave a good deal of attention to these subjects, when I was in the Department of Justice, and I am satisfied that there is nothing extraordinary to be found in connection with any of these expenditures. The friction to which the hon. gentleman alluded, have existed, no doubt, in connection with some of these penitentiaries, and I am afraid will exist for a long time. But that has more to do with the discipline and the interference that the outside public are always attempting, sometimes with very good motives, in connection with religious matters, as to whether one denomination is more favoured than another. All these troubles are incidental to any institution managed by a government. I have heard nothing from the hon. gentleman that, to my mind, justifies any extraordinary steps being taken. I am not at all opposed to a most thorough investigation, if he comes armed with the statement of an officer in whom he has confidence, and makes out a prima facie case, which that officer cannot grapple with, without neglecting his duties; but surely we are all desirous of avoiding unnecessary expense, and this is a case where this $3,000 might well be dropped. The case of the binder-twine industry the hon. gentleman has referred to, and he frankly admits that, in the end, the money will be paid all right, but if any other suspicion is lurking in his mind that there is something which reflects on the credit of either the political head or subordinate, let him make out a prima facie case; but, until he has done so, the proper machinery would be a committee of this House, and that inquiry might be attempted before we adopt an extraordinary proceeding.

Mr. DAVIN. I would ask the hon. gentleman to look at page 28 of the report of the Minister of Justice, and, if I understand it properly, the hon. gentleman is not correct in saying that the cost of St. Vincent de Paul is 60 cents. At the close of the second paragraph of the report of the warden, I find this statement:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

If the earnings of convicts amounting to $56,835.10 are taken into account, the expenditure will be reduced to $22,810.67, and the yearly cost of each convict amounted to $60.66½ or per diem, 16½.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the cost per diem is 16½ cents?

Mr. DAVIN. There it is in your own report, page 28.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the report of the warden of the penitentiary. I am not going to analyse it, I have not time to do so standing on my feet. But I would just ask the hon. gentleman to take the report of the accountant and warden at page 38.

Mr. QUINN. I do not think it is fair to compare the expenditure in a jail with that in a penitentiary. We all know that the great cost of the penitentiaries is in the fact that people are confined there for a term of years, and it is intended that they shall learn some useful employment while confined there. In this fact the difference in cost in the various penitentiaries is very largely accounted for. It does not require a royal commission to find it out; it appears in the figures. For example, the principle item which causes excessive cost in Kingston is $84.14 4-10 per capita on account of the binder twine industry. There is also the maintenance of buildings, $14.87; repairs to buildings, $10.57 6-10, and the maintenance of machinery, $10.08 2-10. In St. Vincent de Paul the binder twine industry does not appear, while the cost of maintenance of machinery is only 25½ cents, and repairs to buildings only $6.10, while for the maintenance of buildings I do not see an entry at all. The real basis upon which to calculate the cost per capita of the convicts is to compare the cost of rations. If we look at that we find that in Kingston it cost $40.68 4-10 per capita; in St. Vincent de Paul, $46.66½; in Dorchester, $38.45; in Manitoba, $64.55; and in British Columbia, $71.72. I say it would be unreasonable to compare the cost in the penitentiary with the cost in the jails or in the Central Prison of Toronto, where the longest term of imprisonment, I believe, is three years. In these institutions the convicts are not put at labour which is designed to give them a trade to which they can apply themselves when they are released as in the case of our penitentiaries. This enters largely into the per capita cost of the prisoners.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Supplementing the observations that I made I would like to quote a few words from the report of the warden of the Kingston penitentiary:

Many years ago expenditures on capital account were made through the Department of Public Works, which may account in some respects for the advance in penitentiary maintenance. Of late years all improvements—

And I have mentioned how heavy they were.

—have been directly under the control of the Department of Justice. This change has been advantageous, while at the same time involving increased responsibility and labour as regards administration of the prison. Besides the permanent improvements mentioned, repairs of an extensive character are required every year, keeping on constant duty such mechanical skill as can be made reliable from among the convicts.

He says further :

Herewith is a return I caused to be made giving the value of labour and material expended on the property during the years mentioned. Probably a more accurate one, if time permitted, would be in excess of this amount.

Total estimate of labour.....	$334,749 88
Total estimate of material, including stone and lime.....	175,277 74

Total .....	$510,027 62
-------------	--------------

This labour, &c., is entirely confined to the buildings, &c. There is no reference to the other labour expended, necessary for meeting the requirements of the prison, such as tailoring, shoe-making and whatever may be termed domestic work of the place. The estimated return of labour as given in the annual reports each year, gives an aggregate value of $558,591.50, or an average per year of $62,065.72.

When all this is considered, it will be observed that if all is taken into account, the per capita cost would appear much less, and maintenance proper reduced.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not wish to be understood as saying that what the hon. gentleman has said is not fair. Nor do I wish to cast any reflection upon the department. But we think it is proper to have this investigation for the reasons I have given. Perhaps it might be fair to add that I have found, so far as St. Vincent de Paul is concerned, that the taking over of the quarries has increased the expenditures; in Kingston there has been an increase in connection with the binder twine industry; and in British Columbia the newly established brick yards have added to the cost.

Mr. MCGREGOR. It seems to me that a commission would do good for this reason. In the city of Detroit they have a house of correction in which are 700 prisoners. Last year they gave to the city $36,000 over and above the cost of maintenance of the prisoners. Now, in speaking about Manitoba, he said that twenty-five years ago it cost a little more than $600 per year to keep a prisoner. But now we have cheaper flour, cheaper beef, they grow their own potatoes, and the larger portion of the vegetables required for the prison, and these things ought to be much cheaper now. If there is anything that requires a committee of inquiry, it is the maintenance of our penitentiaries. We are not finding fault with the former Minister of Justice. I am strongly impressed that he did his duty, as did also the gentleman who preceded him, the late Sir John Thompson. But if they can get $36,000 out of the House of Correction in Detroit, there is no reason why we should not make our prisoners defray a large portion of the expenditure in keeping them.

Mr. FOSTER. The question of penitentiaries is so important that I would not object to any necessary expenditure of money for the purposes the hon. Solicitor General has indicated. I listened carefully to his statement of the reasons why this commission should be appointed, and I confess that I cannot see that he has made out a case. He has put the necessity for it on several grounds, but they are all grounds which, as it appears to me, require no commission. They are simply the actual, bald facts which his own officers in the penitentiaries, or the inspector, can find out. For instance, he says the cost per capita of maintenance is different in different penitentiaries. That is a fact, and the documents on the face of them show that the cost is different. But is that a reason why we should spend $3,000 upon a commission? If a commission goes to these penitentiaries what will it find out more than is known by the Minister, or the Solicitor General and his officers at the present moment? The cost on capital expenditure has increased from year to year in the way of the enlargement or erection of buildings, putting in machinery, or the like of that. It is a mere question of account to find out why that cost has been incurred, and in what direction. Will the commission get you anything more than what you have already? Again, we have, as another item, the amount of the staff. You have a warden, you have an assistant warden, guards and officers. The commission goes and finds the exact number, and their salaries, and when it reports on these things, it reports to you not a single fact that is not now known to the officers and the inspector of the department. What is your inspector for, if he is not for that purpose? You know your present population, you know what is necessary to spend to guard your prison? Your inspector knows whether you have too many or too few guards. If he is ordered to report, and if the department is in earnest to carry out his recommendation, why, it can be done without a commission. That commission cannot give you a single fact that you have not at your fingers' ends already. Another item is the cost of provisions. Send your commission to Manitoba or elsewhere, and it will bring you back the very figures you have already. How can the department get anything from a commission you do not already know? Your officers know the current rates in these different places, they know whether they are paying too much or too little. If they are being charged too much, how do they get them? If by contract, they can make comparisons between the contract prices and the current prices. If by contract they are paying too much, let the proper officer go into the markets at Winnipeg and pay the same as everybody else pays. There is another point, and that is the plant put in for trades and instructions. You have come to the conclusion that you want to drill the prisoners in the different trades. You buy your machinery at market rates. You know whether you are paying too much or too little, and will the commission give you a single item of information upon that? You know that if you put in plant you have got to pay for it, and you need not pay for it any more than current market rates. A commission will not help you there. You yourselves are always to be the judges of what you will pay for your plant. In all these things, what is there that the commission can give you that you have not now? My hon. friend from Essex (Mr. McGregor) brought up the question of making these institutions self-supporting. That is a question of policy. Is the department here prepared to go to work and put the prison population into competition with the trades of the country in a way which will bring them in the most revenue, and put their goods upon the market in competition with the people? If so, they can easily make these prisons more self-sustaining than they are now. They may make them largely self-sustaining under equal conditions with other institutions. That is a question of policy. That is not what my hon. friend wants to get at with his commission. If that is all he wants, he has the history of the prisons in the United States and other countries where, in some cases, they go on the principle of making them self-supporting, and in others they do not compete with the trades people. In making up their minds on what policy to pursue, a commission can not help them. They have their officers and their inspector. They have not said that they have not a proper inspector. They have every machinery they need to find out all these things. If a commission is to try and strike out a new line of policy, if the department itself thinks it would like to have the help of a commission in order to define a policy so as to make these prisons self-supporting, that might be a reason for a commission; but no commission will do more in that respect than merely to collate the history of prisons now in existence, and of the results of the different systems. These you can gather with your superintendent and the men of your department, without the help of a commission. If you think the management is bad, the superintendent and the department itself can look into that management; they are not so extensive; you have only five prisons. Then before my hon. friend asks for $3,000 for what seems to me a useless expenditure, he should tell us what is to be the scope of this commission. Is it going into lines of policy? Is it going to make an investigation in order to inform the Government whether the prisons can be made self-supporting? If it is going to take up that line, there may be something more to be said, although that is open to the objections I have stated. What is to be the formation of this commission? We want to know that from the Government before we vote them $3,000. Are they going to make up the commission out of their own officers, or are they going to make it up from experts, from other countries? Or are they going to give to some one who is not an expert, simply a job? Before you ask us for $3,000, you should give us the scope of the commission, and you should give us some idea of what will be the constitution of that commission. Surely you are not going to ask this committee to vote you $6,000 under the circumstances unless you give us information on these points.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I regret very much that the hon. gentleman has taken the stand he has done on this matter. I do not object to some of the questions he has put at all. Where he seeks information I think that information should be given. But those of us who have sat in this House for some years, know that for the last ten years at least, there has been every year a long and animated and critical discussion upon the expenditure in connection with these penitentiaries. The hon. gentleman knows that the opinion is deep-seated in the minds of most of the representatives of the people in this House, that extravagance has reigned in these penitentiaries. The argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), if good for anything, is good against the appointment of any commission under any conceivable circumstances. No matter how bad the internal economy of one of these penitentiaries may be, the answer of the hon. gentleman to it is perfect: You have got an inspector, and why have a commission? The hon. gentleman knows very well that the hon. the Solicitor General has given the House some very startling facts. The discrepancy existing in the cost of those several penitentiaries is startling. The hon. gentleman himself (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) can give no explanation of it. I have seen Minister of Justice after Minister of Justice attempt to do it, but I have never seen one of them do it successfully. We have the statement made here by gentlemen from Montreal, that the cost of maintaining prisoners in the provincial prisons is immeasurably below the cost of the Dominion Government expenditure. We have the same statement made with respect to the Toronto prison. With these facts before us, it is our duty to find some explanation of them. Considering the question of the expenditure of these penitentiaries, and considering the extraordinary and indefensible increase during the last three years, it is time that a thorough investigation should be made into the internal economy and management of every one of them. Let us know whether the staff is too large; let us know whether, consistently with the efficiency of the institution, that staff can be reduced; let us know whether the manner of purchasing the goods for the penitentiaries is the best one in the interests of the country; let us know whether too high prices are being paid; let us know whether the accounts are being properly kept.

Why, it is within the knowledge of every hon. gentleman here that the Government of which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was a leading and distinguished member, was obliged to appoint a commission into the condition of the British Columbia penitentiary, because the accounts of that penitentiary had got into a disgraceful state. The inspector was there then, but the inspector was not sufficient, and the hon. gentleman himself had to send a special commissioner to make a special examination. I am here to-day to say that to this day I have never had a satisfactory explanation of the condition of that penitentiary. I have seen hon. gentlemen representing British Columbia, supporting the then Government, express in this House their extreme disapprobation and disapproval of the condition of affairs in that penitentiary, and their extreme dissatisfaction with the explanations that were given. No one knows to this date whether that matter has been properly cleared up or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman forgets that there was a complete reorganization after the report, and that some officers were dismissed and new officers appointed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Although you had the inspector, such was the condition of affairs that you had to send out a special commissioner to report upon the facts, and, when you got it, you reorganized the penitentiary. Was your commission, then, a farce? I trow not. In the face of this precedent, established by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) himself, in the face of the startling facts which the Solicitor General has given here, in the face of what I assume to be the desire of hon. members on both sides, to cut down extravagant expenditure to the lowest point consistent with the efficiency of the institutions; in the face of those facts, I must express surprise that there should be any opposition to a thorough investigation being made into the internal economy, the management and the details of cost of those penitentiaries. I am not aware that the Department of Justice is in a position to answer as to how the commission will be composed, but I assume it will be composed of men who will be thoroughly conversant with matters of this kind, and who will have such practical knowledge as will enable them to make valuable suggestions.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How many commissioners?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not aware. I will leave that to my hon. friend the Solicitor General to answer. As the matter now stands, the people of the country will not be satisfied unless better explanations are given of the extraordinary increase of the cost of the penitentiaries, and unless they are assured that there is no reasonable hope of cutting it down. From the part I myself have taken in the criticism of this expenditure, year after year, I am satisfied, comparing the expenditure of one penitentiary with the other, that there is gross extravagance and that the management requires thorough examination and revision. The precedent set by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) himself, shows that, although you have an inspector, there are times when you should have an additional examination and a commission such as the Solicitor General now proposes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does this not rather treat the inspector in rather a severe manner? If the inspector is doing his duty, we should have a report from him as to such a state of affairs as will warrant a commission. The House will remember that before Judge Drake, in British Columbia, was commissioned to inquire into the penitentiary there, a scandalous state of affairs was brought to the surface by our officials. There were charges and counter-charges by the officers of the penitentiary, and almost a revolt amongst them. Irregularities were discovered in the accounts, and such a condition of things, of course, demanded investigation. No one on this side of the House is pretending that a case cannot be made out, but what we say is that no case has been made out. We have no report from the inspector since the one to which the Solicitor General refers, and surely the House ought to know what that officer has discovered himself. I see, however, that hon. gentlemen are bound to have a commission. That seems to be their temperament, and I regret it very much, because I think it is going to be a waste of money. I would ask the Solicitor General how many commissioners are to be appointed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not prepared to answer that now. I think our sole duty, at the present time, is merely to make out a case for the appointment of a commission. If we have made out that case to the satisfaction of the majority of the House, it must be left to those in charge of the administration of justice to determine how many commissioners will be appointed, and the scope of their duties. Hon. gentlemen on the other side, it appears to me, are too intelligent and have demonstrated their ability up to the present time to too great an extent, not to seize upon what we are after. When you come to realize that in the central prison of Toronto the average revenue per prisoner is $62.18 per year, and that in our St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary it is only $3.07; in Manitoba, $13, and in British Columbia, $10, surely there is something in that to inquire into.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. gentleman asked his inspector to give him any explanation of that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not. I claim that our expenditure has gone up $100,000 in the last year, and I say that if the administration of our penitentiary affairs has been such that we have not produced better results, then it is time we should inquire into it. I am prepared to take this responsibility without reflecting in any way on the character of the inspector. I am not doing so; it would be wrong for me to do so; I could not do so with any justice. I am not dealing with his character or capacity; I am dealing with existing conditions. In addition to that, I would draw the attention of the hon. member for Picton to an interview which took place with him in June, 1895, when he was asked by Mr. Meredith, a representative of the Prisoners' Aid Association of Canada, to have an investigation into the affairs of the penitentiaries. That association thought at that time that it was important that the whole question of prison reform should be investigated with reference not only to the buildings, but the internal economy of the buildings. In a letter of the 14th of June, 1895, to Mr. Meredith, my hon. friend said:

Dear Dr. Meredith,—With reference to our conversation on Wednesday last, regarding the memorial of the Prisoners' Aid Association of Toronto, I beg to assure you of my desire to meet the views of the memorialists as fully as it shall be found practicable to do so.

My hon. friend went on to say—it is only fair that I should read the whole letter:

I am not yet in possession of sufficient information to warrant me in arriving at a definite conclusion regarding the various points raised, but as regards the two principal suggestions, namely, the appointment of a commission to investigate reformatory methods and prison construction, and the feasibility of establishing a separate reformatory in an urban locality, I shall not fail to bring your views to the attention of my colleagues at the earliest possible moment.

At that time, therefore, this question was brought to the attention of the hon. gentleman. So that not only from the standpoint of the economical administration of our affairs, but from the standpoint of prison reform, a commission is desirable; and I am authorized to state that the scope of the inquiry will extend not only to the economical features of the penitentiaries, but also to the features pointed out by this association.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Surely the committee ought to have some information as to where this commission is going to begin and end. How can we expect reasonable men in the House to consider that the Solicitor General has gone into this subject with that care which should precede a request for public money? No man in the House knows what this commission will cost, because the hon. gentleman cannot tell us how many commissioners there will be.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It does not matter how many commissioners there will be. The amount is $3,000, and that is all you can spend.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows better than that. He knows that if he comes down to Parliament and gets an initial vote of $3,000 for a commission, that is no limit to it. I would ask the Solicitor General if a name has not already been under the consideration of the department—one name, at any rate?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think my hon. friend might be more definite, and say what name he refers to.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Noxon.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I never heard the name before.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understood that Mr. Noxon was to be given a commission, and that this provision was to enable the Government to pay him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How could that information get abroad?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I mentioned it as a rumour, nothing more, and I have the hon. gentleman's statement, which, so far as it goes, is satisfactory, that he never heard the name before. The hon. gentleman is not able to say anything more than that he is unaware of Mr. Noxon's name having been mentioned.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I never heard any name mentioned. I may say that this very day, before coming up, I had a conversation with the Minister of Justice about the matter, and I asked him if he had determined on the names of the commissioners, and he said he had not. That is all I know about it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman able to state whether there will be on the commission a judicial officer or an expert in penitentiary matters.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. All I can say is that if we get the money authorized here, the House must trust us to do our duty.

Mr. FOSTER. I must say that is a very unsatisfactory statement. I do not think I ever before heard a vote proposed for a commission without some particulars being given to the House as to the scope of the commission and its probable constitution. If you are not going to have a commission of acknowledged experts, I think it will be perfectly useless. If you are not going to confine your inquiry to the economics of the penitentiaries, the only report that you can get which will be of service to you is a report of experienced experts. Does the hon. gentleman know whether that point has been decided upon—whether you are going to get experts in penology, or whether this is just going to be a scratch commission?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the hon. gentleman will find that we shall find men able to do their business and make a report satisfactory to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I submit that that is not an answer which a Parliament with independence ought to have when it is asked to vote public money. If a set of trustees are going to hire a teacher and ask for money for that purpose, they do not get the money until they come to an agreement as to what kind of teacher they are going to get—whether a first-class, a second-class or a third-class. Here is the Government coming down and asking for $3,000, and the Solicitor General is not able to tell us whether this is going to be a commission of experts or a scratch commission. I do not think he has risen to the occasion when he says: "Give us the money and we will be responsible for it." You must be responsible for it, of course, but at the same time if that is going to be the principle adopted, you might as well ask this House for thirty-eight or forty million dollars, and say, "Ask no questions, give it to us, and we will be responsible for its expenditure, and you must trust us to expend it properly." We do not do that. Every Minister that puts his estimate before the House, at a normal session, is bound to give a fair and frank explanation of every item for which he asks an expenditure. Am I outside of the rule in asking whether this is going to be an expert commission or a commission of business men?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman has told us frankly that nothing has been determined on. Surely that is sufficient. The question, I take it, is whether he has made out a prima facie case that this commission should issue at all. I think he has. Then the question is, has the House confidence that the gentleman at the head of the department has sufficient knowledge to select the proper men to serve on this commission. You cannot expect him to come to this House and submit names before the commission issues. Surely Sir Oliver Mowat's experience is sufficient to warrant us in entrusting him with this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I acknowledge that Sir Oliver Mowat is a very excellent man in his way and a very good Minister of Justice, but I do not care who he is or how distinguished he is, he has no right to send down one of his subordinate officers and say to the House: Give me $3,000, and I am not going to tell you whether the commission is to be one of experts or what it is to be. The Solicitor General knows nothing about the scope or the constitution of the commission, and he tells us plainly that he will tell us nothing about it.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the hon. gentleman asked us to vote an amount for a commission on the liquor question, did he say whom he was going to appoint or whether they were to be experts or not? No; he came down and asked the House to vote a grant of money for a commission on that question, which cost $100,000, and he gave no information as to who the commissioners would be. Yet he has the brass to get up to-night and insist on the Government doing what he would not do himself.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that my hon. friend has been dining out and his memory is not too good, or he would not have made the statement he has made. If he would take up the "Hansard," and peruse it as industriously as he used, on former occasions, the Auditor General's report, he would find that the scope of the commission was plainly expressed and that there was no doubt as to how far it was to go. But we have no such explanation with regard to this commission. All we have is a demand for the money. We are not even told whether it is to be a commission of experts or not. Nobody has asked the hon. gentleman to tell the names.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to know them, but there are a great many things that one must do without this session. However we ought to know, at least, whether it is to be a commission of experts or one composed of men who are not scientific, so far as the management and the knowledge of prison discipline and methods are concerned.

Mr. McMULLEN. They are not going to appoint their own relations on this commission anyhow?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend voted today to appoint the son of a member of this House as an officer of this House. The hon. gentleman alludes, I suppose, to one of the members of the prohibition commission. Will he tell me what is his relationship to me, or if he is or is not, or in a remote or any degree a relation, will the hon. gentleman tell me that for the temperance people of the country, from one end of the Dominion to the other, he was not looked upon as their ideal man.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not wish to prolong this debate but I must dissent from the statement of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that a prima facie case has been made out. I wish to call the attention of the Solicitor General to the fact that the two tables he has taken for the purposes of comparison, namely, the Central Prison of Toronto and the Kingston penitentiary, do not correspond at all in their items. Let me point out the different items that appear in the penitentiary of Kingston, and which do not appear at all in that of Toronto, and which amount to a very considerable sum. There is the item for gratuities, another item is officers' mess. Another is maintenance of machinery. Then there are the female prison, and the item of repairs to the building, which is not included in the statement of the Toronto prison. Then there is the item of the new stable, which is charged to capital account in Toronto, and another item is the binder twine industry. These amount to $121, reducing the whole thing to a very small fraction between the case of the prisoners at the Central Prison, Toronto and at Kingston. Another point of difference is in the fact that in Toronto prison no females are taken care of. It must also be remembered that at Kingston the prisoners are all of a desperate character and require double the number of guards that are required in Toronto. When hon. gentlemen consider that the circumstances in each penitentiary are as wide apart as possible and the services not the same at all, they will find that a prima facie case has not been made out. With regard to the investigation of the Central Prison at Toronto, Mr. Noxon, who made the investigation, simply walked through the prison with his hands in his pocket. No witnesses were called, no evidence was taken and there was no report. He simply came to certain conclusions of his own sweet will and the whole thing was a perfect farce. I do not say that there are not abuses in the penitentiaries because it would be impossible that in any institution entrusted to man, there would not be abuses. But I do not think that the hon. gentleman has made out a case for investigation. I would like to ask the Solicitor General if he will oblige me and, I think, the committee at the same time, by agreeing to ask his inspector to make a preliminary report, before the constitution of this committee is decided upon, on the very subjects he has stated to be those that have given him some trouble and of which he wants an explanation. If the inspector, as I believe will be able to give a satisfactory report, there will be no necessity for this commission. The inspector has made no report, as the hon. gentleman admits, and it would only be necessary to refer to him the observations the hon. gentleman himself has made and ask him to deal with these subjects. With that report the hon. gentlemen will be in a better position to arrange for that investigation should it be found necessary. With reference to Mr. Noxon, I may say, that the gentleman who mentioned his name to me as likely to be appointed was a gentleman from Toronto not connected with the service, who spoke to me on the subject this afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have a question I would like to ask—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Better have the questions stated, and then I can answer them all together.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to deal with another question than that which has been discussed. I wish to ask the Solicitor General a question in justice to parties who were accused a few nights ago. I understand him to say that the accounts in reference to the binder twine were in such a position that the country was not likely to lose anything; that the accounts were going to be paid. We have in the newspaper a list of names of the parties who are owing the Government. I read from the Minnedosa "Tribune:"

An hon. MEMBERS. Dispense.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not going to "Dispense." I want the Solicitor General to say if the money is due by one of these gentlemen as claimed. He says he does not owe it:

The Winnipeg "Tribune," in its efforts against the late Conservative Government of the Dominion, publishes in a recent issue a list of names of dealers indebted to the Government for binder twine made in the Dominion penitentiary, and in it is found the name of Mr. J. F. Boyd, of this town, said to owe $150. Mr. Boyd says he does not owe the Government one cent, having paid his account in full almost one year ago.

I would like to ask the Solicitor General if that is correct. A long list was read in the House of parties who were said to be indebted to the Government. It was promised that an amended list would be brought down. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardsor) made this statement:

Now, let me read to hon. gentlemen some of the other amounts that are owing by various gentlemen throughout the Dominion; and, although I may not know the political complexion of all these gentlemen, perhaps hon. gentlemen who are listening to me will know it.

Then he read a long list of names. I would like to ask the Solicitor General also if he read the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee on the 1st April last, when an officer of his department came before the committee and gave evidence on this subject. I have the evidence here. If the hon. gentleman has read it, I have no doubt he will freely take back what he said the other evening. The officer stated that the department had ample security for the account in the form of New Brunswick bonds and real estate, as well as in the form of $700,000 of binder twine which was still held by the Government—quite sufficient to pay all the indebtedness of Mr. Connor at that time. I would like to know from the Solicitor General, who says the country will not lose anything, what amount he has received from the parties whose names are on the list?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The first question asked by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) I believe, was as to Mr. Boyd. He was informed. I understand, that Mr. Boyd had paid the amount due by him a year ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is what this paper says.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. On the 18th September, Mr. Boyd was returned to me as a debtor in the sum of $150, the return being made by Mr. Stewart, the inspector of penitentiaries. The next question I understand to be whether I have read the evidence given before the committee of this House. I have not read it all, but I have read a portion of it. I am not called upon to dispute anything that was said there. One of the statements made was that we had ample security for the $20,000 due from Mr. Connor. I am informed that to-day Mr. Connor owes $21,649, and we are having considerable trouble to get it notwithstanding that we are transferring everything we have in the way of collateral security. We have not got the money yet.

Mr. QUINN. Before the item passes, I think the committee is entitled to an answer from the Solicitor General to the question of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I desire to answer, but we cannot all speak together.

Mr. QUINN. I recognize the good will of the Solicitor General and put it in contradiction to the conduct of his friends behind him who are so anxious to have the item carried that they do not want to hear the Solicitor General's explanation. I would like to have him tell us what amount of money is to be spent on this commission. I feel a little anxious about this, because I am totally opposed to the idea of a commission being appointed, outside of the regular staff, to investigate this matter. Notwithstanding the statement made about the startling difference that exists in these expenditures, I think that any book-keeper of ordinary intelligence who would examine the accounts of the different penitentiaries as given here in the report, would see how that "startling difference" is to be accounted for. It simply means that in some portion of the Dominion we are carrying on works that are not necessary in other portions, and that in some portions we are paying large sums for the heating of a building which expenditure is unnecessary elsewhere on account of the nature of the building or the clemency of the climate. I think it is not a matter to be investigated by a commission. I am afraid it is intended, perhaps, for the benefit of some two or three friends of the Government, who, it may be, have been doing good service and deserve that sort of thing from the Government. But I should like some assurance that the amount will not be exorbitant, and if these gentlemen must be supported from the public revenues, at least we may have some idea of the amount to be expended, and not begin by voting $3,000 now only to be asked for $10,000 or $20,000 next February. I would, therefore, ask the Solicitor General if he would be kind enough to state, if he can state—it is unfortunate the Minister of Justice is not in this House who might give the explanation, and I understand the difficulty the Solicitor General labours under in not having all the information himself—but he might be able to tell us within what limit this commission will operate.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is very much exercised by the fear that this expenditure is going to be exorbitant. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that it is not going to be exorbitant. The hon. member for Pictou asked a question with reference to an examination to be made by Mr. Stewart. I cannot give any assurance on that point.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this vote of $3,000 supposed to cover the whole cost?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am in a position to state positively, from the conversation I had with Sir Oliver Mowat, that if it does not meet the outlay, it will come very close to it.

Customs—Collection of Revenue—Amount required to meet salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports..... $3,000

Mr. BENNETT. I will take this occasion of asking an explanation from the Controller of Customs in regard to a vacancy that may or may not exist at the port of Barrie. Some two or three years ago, one Mr. Grant then being collector of customs, was dispossessed of his office by the then Controller of Customs, or, at least, suspended, and an official from the port of Toronto was placed in possession of the office, and up to the present time the duties of the office have been discharged by a clerk from the customs-house in Toronto. Now, on the 1st April, 1895,—and I want the hon. gentleman to bear the date in mind—an Order in Council was passed appointing one Mr. David Dunn collector of customs at the port of Barrie. Mr. Dunn was sent to the port at Chatham in order, as I understand it, to be schooled in the duties of the position of collector of customs. On or about the 1st July, an Order in Council was passed appointing Mr. Craig as collector of customs at Barrie, and about the same time an Order in Council was passed appointing this Mr. Dunn to the position at the port of Chatham. Now, I find, in a return brought down to the House, that the name of Mr. Craig is placed in the schedule of appointments from which the assent of His Excellency is withheld, and I am at a loss to understand why the name should be so placed. I suppose it is not too late that the name should be transferred from that schedule and placed in the other. On reference to the return, I find this statement :

That His Excellency's approval is withheld from appointments on the following grounds :— 1st, by reason of the fact that it was a newly created office ; 2nd, that it was the filling of a vacancy which had existed for more than one year ; or 3rd, by reason of the fact that it was an appointment made on the event of a superannuation.

Now, the case of Mr. Craig certainly cannot come under any of these three categories. It is quite clear that it is not a new position, because it has existed for twenty years past. It is quite clear it is not an office that was vacant for more than a year, because Mr. Dunn had been appointed to the post on the 1st April, 1895 ; and it is quite clear that it is not a case of a superannuation and a consequential appointment. So it comes under none of the three categories that I have enumerated. If there is any question at all, it can only be on the point that the office had been vacant for more than a year. But, in this connection, I have this to say : Had Mr. Dunn been appointed on the 1st May, this year, and had he been sent to Chatham or any other place to be schooled in his duties, surely it could not be contended that the office had been vacant for a year, by reason of the fact that Mr. Dunn had not been formally installed in the office at Barrie. If that argument prevails, then, it must of necessity follow that the fact that the appointment was made on the 1st April, 1895, does not disentitle Mr. Craig from the benefit of being placed in the category of appointments from which the approval of His Excellency has not been withheld. Now, there was a debate a little while ago on the appointment of the collector of customs at Berlin. At that time, the leader of the House stated, in answer to the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), that such appointments would stand like every other appointment until removed for cause. I would ask the Controller of Customs if he would direct that the name of Mr. Craig be removed from the present schedule and be placed among those appointments which have been approved of by His Excellency, as not coming within any of the three exceptions I have mentioned. As to Mr. Craig's qualifications, I can say that he is in every sense fitted for the office. I regret the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is not in his place, as he could acquiesce in what I am saying. Mr. Craig has occupied the position of warden of the county of Simcoe, and has been chairman of the finance committee for that county for many years. I trust the Controller of Customs will do what is right under the circumstances, and permit his appointment to go through, as has been done in many other cases.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). With reference to this case, the records of the department show, I believe, that Mr. Dunn was appointed sub-collector at Barrie by Order in Council of 1st April, 1895. But he was never notified of his appointment, nor was such appointment ever gazetted. The previous collector had defaulted, and was suspended on the 1st December, 1893, and was dismissed from the service on the 12th March, 1894. Mr. Dunn, as I say, was appointed sub-collector on the 1st April, 1895, but was never notified of it, he never took possession of the office, and was never there at all, so far as I am aware, but he was placed on the extra staff at the port of Chatham, and he has been there ever since drawing his pay which is charged to the port of Chatham and not charged to the port of Barrie at all. He is not acting as a permanent officer. If I understand the argument of my hon. friend aright, it is, that because he had been nominally appointed to the office at Barrie, therefore, that office could not be said to have been vacant, and, therefore, the placing in class "A" of the name of the gentleman he mentioned, instead of class "V" is wrong. He asks me if I would not take steps to have the name transferred from class "A" to class "B," with a view, I suppose, of having that gentleman appointed sub-collector at Barrie. I am pleased to hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) say, what I dare say is quite correct, with reference to the character of that gentleman, but he will not be surprised if I should say to him, that if there be a vacancy at the port of Barrie, possibly I would like to have a larger range of selections than just one which might be mentioned to me by hon. gentlemen opposite. I have not taken any steps in the direction which the hon. gentleman has indicated.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand the Controller of Customs to say that the passage of an Order in Council is merely a nominal matter. Surely that cannot be correct. I ask the Controller again : if Mr. Dunn's appointment had been made on the 1st of April this year, and if Mr. Dunn had been sent, as he would have been sent, to some port to be instructed in the duties of his office ; would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) then contend, that there had been a vacancy in the office ? Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) contend that Mr. Dunn has never been notified of his appointment? He admits that Mr. Dunn was sent to Chatham. For what? It was to be versed in the duties of a collector of customs. It was not to be expected that a man would be appointed one day, and the next day installed in the position without his having a preliminary schooling in the duties appertaining to the office. There stands to-day, and the Controller of Customs admits it, an Order in Council appointing Mr. Dunn to the position of collector of customs. Does the hon. gentleman contend that that Order in Council has ever been cancelled. There is no record in the department to show it. Surely that Order in Council must have had the effect of appointing Mr. Dunn to the position, and until it is cancelled, Mr. Dunn is to-day to all intents and purposes the collector at the port of Barrie. It must be patent to everybody that the Order in Council appointing Mr. Dunn exists until it is cancelled, and existing as it did then, it cannot be argued that there has been a vacancy for over a year.

THE CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I have given the facts as I have them here. The members of the late Government are here, and they can speak for themselves. I will have to ask them in answer, how it is that they appointed a collector to a certain port, never notified him of his appointment, and never gazetted him.

MR. PENNY. While this item is before the committee, I would like to ask the hon. the Controller of Customs, if the Government has given any consideration to the question of establishing a Board of Customs experts?

THE CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. In answer to the hon. gentleman I would say that I believe that subject has been brought before the attention of Parliament in times past. It has been mentioned to me rather in a casual way, and I promised to give it some consideration. There is no vote taken in the Estimates this session for the constitution of such a board, and, therefore, it cannot be formed at present. If there be merit in it, and if it be in the interest of the public service that such a board should be created, I will, of course, endeavour to give effect to it. I have not fully considered it yet. We have heard our board of appraisers, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Penny) knows, and what strikes me just at this moment—without saying anything against the fact that it might be desirable to have such a board as he mentions—is that it would be necessary to consider the whole question relative to its cost, and as to whether any change or lessening of expense in the matter of appraisers could be made if we constituted another board whose duty would lie in the same direction as the duty of the present appraisers. That is all I can say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Penny) at present.

MR. QUINN. I am very glad that my hon. friend from St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Penny) has brought up this question, as I was going to speak on the very same matter this evening. Early in the session I moved for all the papers and petitions which have been submitted to the Department of Customs asking for the appointment of a Board of Commissioners, or of a judge for the trial of causes between merchants and the Department of Customs. The papers have not yet been brought down, and were they before us at the present time we would be able to discuss the question more intelligently. I have had some experience in contesting cases with the Customs Department, and my own view is, that it would be well to appoint an independent board to take the matter out of the control of the departmental officers who have been in the department for a number of years, and place it in the hands of independent judges. I do not mean to confine the cases to trial by one judge in the Dominion, but to have the Board of Commissioners asked for by these petitions, consist of judges, to the number of three, from different portions of Canada, if necessary, who might meet from time to time and settle any differences arising. One thing of which the merchants of Montreal complain is that goods will be imported at Toronto and entered there at a certain rate of duty, whereas at Montreal the same articles would pay a very much higher rate. This is a thing that happens very frequently, and the ports at which it occurs particularly, as I am informed, are Hamilton, Toronto and Winnipeg. Another difficulty often arises with respect to the duties that will be charged by one officer of the department upon a certain line of goods, as compared with the duties charged by another officer. One will believe that the article is subject to say 30 per cent duty, and another will say that it is dutiable at 20 per cent, and the consequence is that the duties charged by the department on the same article are not uniform. The object of appointing a Board of Commissioners would be to establish the rate of duty which, in cases of doubt, should be charged throughout the entire Dominion. A further reason why judges should be appointed for the trial of these causes is this: Any person who has had experience in criminal law knows, that persons who are continually coming in contact with criminals come to think that every person brought before them is a criminal. That is the condition in which I think the officers of the Customs Department are. It matters not what the merchant may be, what his character may be, or what may be offered in his defence, the very moment that a complaint is made against him, that moment the officers of the department think him guilty. It cannot be pretended that they could afterwards investigate his case, and give an honest, fair and unbiassed decision upon it. The only way to have an unbiassed judgment given is to appoint men of high character throughout the country, who will form a board, have a code procedure, and, having characters to maintain by the judgments which they will render, guide themselves by the precedents which they establish and those which have been established in other countries. I am glad the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Penny) has mentioned this question, and I would ask the Minister, if at all possible, to leave some part of this item open so that the question may be discussed more fully when the papers come down. While on my legs, I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Collector of Customs to the matter of the salary of Mr. O'Hara, the present deputy collector of customs in Montreal, who for three years acted as collector of customs there. This matter was brought up by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) some time ago, when the main Estimates were being considered. I would now ask the hon. Minister if any of these items are for the purpose of providing for the salary which Mr. O'Hara claims to be due to him for acting as collector of customs after the death of the late Mr. M. P. Ryan.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). It is not included in any of these items. If the case were dealt with, it would be dealt with in a separate vote by itself. With reference to the other question brought up by the hon. gentleman, it is worthy of attention, and it will engage my attention. I did not know that the papers he refers to had been asked for or I would have been pleased to have brought them down. I am afraid it is a little late in the session now to accomplish it, but if he will renew the request next session, I shall be pleased to bring down any papers we have in regard to that matter.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the hon. Controller of Customs, admitting as he does that Mr. Dunn was appointed by Order in Council on the 1st of April, 1895, and is consequently the appointee to the position at present, will not hold to the ruling that the position has been vacant for more than a year. Surely there can be nothing more positive than an Order in Council. As to the statement that there has been no notification to Mr. Dunn, surely the hon. gentleman must remember that Mr. Dunn was apprised of his appointment by his being placed at Chatham in order to become versed in the duties of his office. As to his not being gazetted, surely it is not intended that every trivial office to which men are appointed shall be announced in the "Canada Gazette." I maintain that this appointment should be placed in the same list as the other appointments, and I trust that the hon. gentleman, seeing that it stands on all fours with them, will not make an exceptional case of it.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I am giving every attention to the hon. gentleman. Mr. QUINN.

man's representations, and I see the point he makes; but in addition to what I have stated, the port of Barrie, ever since March, 1894, has been served, I think, by an officer sent there from Toronto, for cause he was removed and another one has been sent there. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Dunn was sent to Chatham nearly two years ago to be taught his business. It would not require that long to learn his business; and when the second one who was there for more than a year was removed for cause, why was not this collector recognized as a collector, and sent to the port of Barrie, but a special officer was sent from Toronto? These things indicate that it was never intended that he should be there.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the hon. gentleman himself is responsible for that, as it occurred only a few days ago. With regard to the statement of the hon. Controller of Customs that Mr. David Dunn did not receive notice of his appointment, I gave him notice of it when I was Controller, and sent him to Chatham in order to get a little instruction from Mr. Stevenson, a very competent collector of customs, and because an officer was required there at the time. Whether the appointment was gazetted or not I cannot say. It belongs to the Department of the Secretary of State to see that appointments made by Order in Council are gazetted. That is a detail that does not invalidate an appointment, and I contend that Mr. David Dunn is entitled to retain the position of collector at Barrie, and that he has never been deposed.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he notified him privately?

Mr. WALLACE. He was notified by letter from the department, and detailed to do service at Chatham for the reasons I have stated.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. My information is that he was not notified, that there is no record on file in the department of his having been notified.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the circumstances, I would like to add my plea to that of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). If an Order in Council was passed, and the person appointed was notified in the regular course, that makes the case very strong. I do not see how you can fail to look upon it as an appointment.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Does not my hon. friend see how cruel he has been to Mr. Dunn, if he takes that position? Why did he, as a member of the Government, without giving him any notice at all, pass an Order in Council which cut him off?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That is the argument of the hon. member for Simcoe, that by your last Order in Council you cancelled the appointment of this efficient officer.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot understand that, neither do I think that was argued by the hon. member for Simcoe. If that were his argument, it would not be mine. I think that the second Order in Council appointing a man to a position is invalid, if previous to that there was an Order in Council filling the position which had not been cancelled. You cannot put two men in the one place. If there is an Order in Council saying that so and so is a collector, he is that collector; and a simple Order in Council appointing John Jones, or anybody else, to that office, without cancelling the first appointment, would not be valid.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). De facto, it cancels the first.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all. The first man is there until his appointment is cancelled. I have sat at the Treasury Board for eight years, with the Minister of Justice always there, and, in cases where, through inadvertence, recommendation was made for the appointment of an officer, the first thing ordered was a report from the officers of the Treasury Board stating whether there is a vacancy or not. If there were not a vacancy, the Treasury Board always considered the place filled.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the Controller of Customs to say that there was an Order in Council appointing Dunn at Barrie, and he afterwards went into service at Chatham. Was there another Order in Council appointing him to a position at Chatham? If he went into service there without having an Order in Council, it must be on the strength of the one which was passed appointing him collector at Barrie.

Mr. WALLACE. I would consider Mr. Dunn as collector at Barrie. The Order in Council was never cancelled.

Mr. SPROULE. You say there was an Order in Council at first appointing Mr. Dunn collector at Barrie, that he afterwards turned up in the service at Chatham. Was there another Order in Council appointing him to the position at Chatham, because otherwise he must have been acting, under the Order in Council, at Barrie?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. He was not appointed by Order in Council at Chatham.

Mr. SPROULE. On what strength did he get there?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I suppose he was sent by the then Controller.

Mr. MONTAGUE. With all due respect to the Controller of Customs, the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has made out a very strong case. His Excellency says his approval is to be withheld from any appointment made to a place where a vacancy had existed for over a year. The first point to determine is whether that vacancy did exist for over a year or not. My hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has given the facts with regard to the appointment of Dunn. He was appointed the 1st July, 1895. There was no question at all that he was appointed. What does the appointment consist of? It consists of being recommended by the Minister in charge of the department, by the adoption of that report by Council, and by the signature of His Excellency. All these things were done, and Mr. Dunn went to work in the Customs Department. If that is not an appointment, then there never was one made. But the Controller of Customs said: You did not put him at his duties in the town of Barrie. Well, that may be a charge to make against the late Government, but certainly the hon. gentleman cannot charge the fault of the late Government—if it was a fault—to this officer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not quite so clear that the mere appointment of an officer by Order in Council and not followed by any other proceeding, is a valid appointment. A man might be appointed by Order in Council and not be notified, and never sworn in, and never enter on the duties of his office, yet, according to the hon. gentleman, he would be entitled to draw a salary. That does not seem to be a reasonable argument.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Dunn was performing the duty of an officer of customs at another place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that he was never sworn in as collector at Barrie, and was never notified. The late Controller says he was, but there must be some misunderstanding.

Mr. WALLACE. I presume he was.

The FINANCE MINISTER. It is only a presumption then?

Mr. WALLACE. It is more than a presumption, because the inspector of customs installed him in office, and he must have been in the first place notified, and in the second place sworn in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Controller of Customs says that he has searched the records and can find no record that Mr. Dunn was notified.

Mr. WALLACE. How did he perform the duties of this office?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He never performed the duties of collector of customs at Barrie. It might be that he was appointed temporarily and was sent to Chatham where he entered upon the duties of a temporary employee and he is still there. I believe it is customary, when a gentleman is appointed, that a commission is issued to him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Often it is years afterwards. There are officers in the public service who have been there for twenty years and who have received no commission.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The argument that a man may be appointed, no notice being given him and not entering upon the duties of his office, simply on the basis of an Order in Council passed, and that therefore he is to be regarded as a collector of customs and entitled to the salary of one, seems to me, open to debate.

Mr. BENNETT. If Mr. Dunn had been appointed on the 1st April, 1896, and had been sent to Chatham or to some other place to become versed in the duties of his office, would the hon. gentleman consider that his appointment had not been made properly under the Act?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would depend upon what he was notified of.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There was an interesting report made by the late Sir John Thompson after an investigation into the question of Orders in Council. There was a case of superannuation, and the question arose whether the Order in Council was completed if approved by the Governor General, and, for instance, lost before issuing from the Privy Council. The conclusion at which Sir John Thompson arrived was that the Order in Council did not become effective where it had not left the Privy Council Chamber. The whole subject is reviewed in that case.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I think you would have to give effect to the Order in Council departmentally. For instance, in the case of this collector of customs at Barrie, would the hon. gentleman consider that he might be collector of customs during two years without any security given? Was any security ever given by David Dunn?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We cannot get a satisfactory conclusion upon any particular case without the statute. If the statute requires in the case mentioned that before he is appointed security must be given, that settles it. But according to many statutes covering appointment by Order in Council, when the order is passed the appointment is complete.

Mr. QUINN. I would like to draw the attention of the Controller of Customs to the case of Mr. O'Hara, which has not been provided for.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It stands for consideration.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. QUINN. I would urge the desirability of recognizing Mr. O'Hara's claim. He is entitled on every ground of fairness to the salary of Controller of Customs. He is one of the most deserving officers in the service and has performed his duties in the most exemplary and most efficient manner. I am sure no officer in the department stands higher with the commercial community of Montreal than Mr. O'Hara, the deputy collector of that port.

Mr. PENNY. I would like to say that this is a very deserving case and that I think the services of Mr. O'Hara should be recognized. The only fault I have to find is that the friends of the hon. member for Montreal Centre did not think it wise to give this extra salary to Mr. O'Hara while they were in power. I hope the Government will take the matter into its favourable consideration and do justice to Mr. O'Hara.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In the list of appointments of the Customs Department, I expected to find the name of Mr. Geo. R. Smith. Will the hon. Controller let me know to-morrow why that name does not appear.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). I gave the reason yesterday in reply to a question of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson).

Department of Agriculture, chief clerk. $1,887 50

Mr. MONTAGUE. What Chief Clerk is this?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Mr. Dionne. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) will remember that in the Department of Agriculture when he was Minister there was one chief clerk and one first class clerk to whom he gave notice of superannuation. In consequence of that and some other arrangements, the number of clerks provided for in the main estimates prepared by the hon. gentleman was reduced. But the hon. gentleman left the department without having carried out his intention to superannuate these clerks. Having accepted his estimates, perhaps without sufficient consideration, I now find that these gentlemen have not been provided for for the current year. I may say that I have not had the opportunity to go into the whole question of the assistance in the department sufficiently to say whether these gentlemen should be superannuated or removed or left where they are. I may say also that these gentlemen objected to being superannuated, and they are not of the age or length of service which demands superannuation. Consequently I felt that it was necessary to look into the matter. Meantime, I propose to take the necessary sum to pay them for the year, without binding myself to spend the money if I find it unnecessary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What the hon. Minister says seems to call for a word of explanation from me. When I went to the Department of Agriculture and arranged for the disposition of the service, I did propose to superannuate Mr. Dionne, Mr. Dauray and Mr. Leveque. I did so because I did not think their services were required. I had an Order in Council prepared and intended to carry it out, and when I went away to the old country, I expected the late Minister of Finance would have had it carried out. But friends of those men pressed very hard that reconsideration should be given to their cases, and the late Minister of Finance, in his kindness of heart, allowed the matter to stand until my return. I got back very late, and we went to the country shortly afterwards, and the matter was overlooked. However, they had their notice of superannuation, so that they can make no complaint on that score. In the next place, they are absolutely unnecessary to the workings of the department. I am aware that they did not want to be superannuated, but they were given all the law allowed them, and, as the hon. gentleman knows, it is in the discretion of the Minister, with the concurrence of his colleagues, to superannuate any officer who may not be necessary, provided he is given his proper legal allowance. I think the hon. gentleman should not ask for the whole year's salary. He might take a couple of month's salary, and then carry out the superannuation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman should not press that suggestion. While I appreciate his knowledge of the department, still circumstances might arise where his suggestions could not be carried out. We must not forget that while the superannuation of these men would relieve the department of the expense of paying them, we would still have to provide for two-thirds of their present salary, or thereabouts, and the men superannuated would do no work at all; whereas they are now obliged to do their work, and having been long in the department, I take it for granted they are competent. If they are not needed in their present positions, they may be found useful in some other positions.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When I superannuated any officer, either in the State Department or the Department of Agriculture, I invariably abolished the office. I think we might ask the hon. gentleman to say that if he does carry out the superannuation, notwithstanding that the salary is voted for the year, he won't make a new appointment.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman knows that in the department it frequently happens that a clerk does not do the work of his class, but the work of some other class. The work a clerk does, does not fix his status in the class in which he may happen to be.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I was not raising that point at all. The hon. gentleman is asking for a whole year's salary for these men, and I am asking that if he proposes to superannuate them, he shall make no new appointments in their place.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot bind myself to that, with my present knowledge of the department, although I would be very glad to listen to the suggestions of the hon. member.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am only calling attention to the fact that there is ground for the superannuation of these men, on the ground that they are absolutely unnecessary in the department. What I want the Minister to say is that if he decides that they are unnecessary and superannuates them, he will not fill the vacancies, although he has a year's salary voted to him.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am willing to say that if I superannuate them and put somebody else in their places, I will assume the responsibility of that act.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think that is a fair answer. I want to give the hon. gentleman the fullest possible latitude in the re-organization of his department; but if he superannuates these men on the ground that they are unnecessary, then he ought to say to this committee that he won't fill their places.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I really cannot accept the hon. gentleman's request in regard to the management of the department which I now occupy. If I find, after investigation, that these officers are not needed, but that other officers are needed, I certainly must appoint the other officers, and I am ready to assume the responsibility.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think the request I made of the hon. gentleman was at all out of the way. If he superannuates these gentlemen he can only do so on the ground that they are not needed in the department.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That may be so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If he superannuates them for any other cause, he has a right to fill the offices. If he superannuates them on the ground that they are not fit for duty, and puts better men in their places, he has a perfect right to fill the offices. But if he superannuates them on the ground that their services are not needed, then he ought to say to the committee that he will not fill their places.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly, if I superannuate them because they are not needed and the office is not needed, I am not going to fill it again.

Resolutions reported.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 2nd October, 1896.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I desire to present a motion and to ask for it the concurrence of all the members present. It is in relation to private Bills which have been presented during the present session, and on which fees have been paid. It is as follows:—

That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that the following resolutions be adopted:—

Resolved, That all proceedings upon every private Bill which has been introduced before this House, in the present session, shall be suspended on the day on which Parliament shall be prorogued, in order that the promoters thereof may proceed with the same Bills in the next session of Parliament.

Resolved, That an alphabetical list of all such Bills, with a statement of the stage at which the same were suspended, shall be prepared by the Clerk of this House, and printed.

Resolved, That a list of such Bills, with the certificate of the Clerk of the House of the stage at which proceedings were suspended, be laid upon the Table of the House in the next session of Parliament, in the order in which they shall stand upon such list.

Resolved, That in respect of every Bill so laid upon the Table, the petition for the Bill, and the order of leave to bring in the same in the present session, shall be read, and thereupon such Bill shall be read a first time, and a second time (if the Bill shall have been read a second time previously, to its being suspended); and if such Bill shall have been reported by any committee in the present session, the order for referring the Bill to a committee shall be dispensed with, and the Bill ordered to lie upon the Table, to be referred to a committee of the whole House, or to be read a third time, as the case may be.

Resolved, That all petitions presented in the present session for and against private Bills, and which stood referred to the committees on such Bill, shall stand referred to the committees on the same Bills in the next session of Parliament.

Resolved, That all instructions to committees on Bills in the present session, which shall be suspended previously to their being reported by any committee, be instructions to the committee on the same Bills in the next session.

Mr. FISHER.

Resolved, That the said orders be considered sessional orders, to be in force till the end of next session, and that the same be printed.

A number of the promoters of private Bills have gone to the expense of inserting advertisements in the papers; but the session has been so short that there has not been time to dispose of them. This arrangement will be of no advantage to any person, and it will save the promoters of private Bills from again incurring that expense. I found a precedent for this, and I think hon. members on both sides will agree that this ought to be done.

Mr. BERGERON. Quote your precedent.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). In the year 1865, in the Upper Canada legislature, Sir John Macdonald, seconded by Mr. Cartier, moved a motion to the same effect, and it passed unanimously. This motion is in the very same words, except that it refers only to private Bills, whereas the other motion included all Bills.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid it will be impossible to accept this proposal, for which there has been no precedent in this Dominion Parliament, without an opportunity of fully examining the subject. It is introducing a question that may lead to a great deal of inconvenience.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course if this motion is not unanimously adopted, it falls to the ground, no notice having been given of it. If objection is taken to the motion, it cannot be submitted.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). I would suggest to my hon. friend that it is a question which may receive the consideration of the House at the next sitting. Therefore, I do not think it would be advisable to press the motion at this moment, when it cannot receive the consideration which it ought to receive, and when it may lead to controversy.

Civil Government—Department of Customs —Further amount required for contingencies ..... $1,700

Mr. FOSTER. This item, then, wipes out the economy that was made in the Estimates as brought down first, in the civil government contingencies for that department.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). It will bring them back to where they were.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know under what item of contingencies this amount is to be added. Is it to be added to the whole lot or is it for sundries?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I can give the hon. gentleman the particulars. The extra clerks are as follows: Miss Daws, a salary of $450; Miss Young, a salary of $400; Madame Jolivet, a salary of $550; Miss Gauthier, a salary of $300; George Rathbone, messenger, a salary of $180; and John Bain, who is my private secretary, a salary of $600. Then, there are six months' statutory increases to the first five, at $30 per year. This brings the amount up to $2,555. The main estimate is $1,500, the additional amount required for printing and stationery is $500. The main estimate is $1,500, or $500 less than that of 1895-96. The expenditure for 1895-96 amounted to $2,021.74, and for 1894-95 to $2,158.39.

Secretary to the Speaker of the Senate—

Two sessions at $500 ..... $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman explain the first item?

The PRIME MINISTER. We think that the Speaker of the Senate, as well as everybody else, is entitled to a secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend proposes to introduce a new system into legislation and provide extraordinary expenditure. The Speaker costs us a good deal of money at present. The Deputy Speaker, against whom hon. gentlemen opposite lifted up an almost unanimous voice, when the proposal to appoint one was made, is continued without a wink of either eye. And, in addition, we have this new expenditure for a secretary for a Speaker of the Senate.

The PRIME MINISTER. I move to strike out this item of $1,000.

Motion agreed to.

Pages .....	$ 9,000
Sessional messengers .....	17,050
Charwomen ....	800
Stationery .....	5,900
Debates .....	8,000

Mr. FOSTER. I want to know if this will be the only amount required for the payment of the pages, messengers and charwomen for the session of 1897, or is any portion to be used for making up any deficiency in the present session?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My information is that it is all for next session.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it sufficient to carry on next session's expenditures?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have no intimation to the contrary. I understand it is sufficient, but there may be some mistake about it. The estimates are forwarded by the Clerks of the two Houses.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to debates, is that for the printing of "Hansard"?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the Senate "Hansard."

Mr. DAVIN. After the vote we have passed, will $5,900 be required for stationery for the Senators?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the case of the House of Commons, we proposed a reduction of the vote. I have not given my attention to the Senate. Perhaps a smaller sum would suffice. These are matters which are regulated by the Contingent Committee of the Upper House, and all we could do would be to refuse to vote it.

Mr. FOSTER. I have every respect for the Lords and have been taught from my youth to reverence those in authority, but the Commons have some rights as well. It is proposed by the Government to vote the sum necessary to continue these little douceurs of stationery to the Senators, but to cut off the perquisites from the independent Commons. Does the Government think that is fair treatment? Has the Government used its immense influence in the Senate, through the leader of the Government there, to bring it to a proper consideration and equal treatment of its brethren in the House of Commons?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How will we control that majority of yours in the Senate?

Mr. FOSTER. By sunny methods. I do not want the Government to pass a remedial order, but the great pacificator is in the Senate, the man who was promised a seat in that body, if the party were successful, and who is there to conciliate all parties and remove all difficulties.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have every hope of his success, in every respect but one, and that is, inducing the Tory majority in the Senate to be economical.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In so far as the Government have the power, it is their desire to have the two Houses treated similarly, and that whatever economies be resolved upon by this House, shall also extend to the Senate. Whether or not this vote is too large, I cannot say, as I have not given the matter close attention. I should prefer that the item be accepted on the assurance that it is the desire and intention that both Houses should be treated alike. When we come to the Commons, I propose to make a reduction.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend from North Wellington said "Hear, hear," by way of approval. Is he in favour of granting the stationery?

Mr. McMULLEN. My "Hear, hear" was emphasizing the statement made by the Finance Minister that the Commons and Senate should be put on the same footing.

Mr. FOSTER. Now my hon. friend occupies good ground. He will find that, in the end, the stationery will be kept for the Senators, and, in order to have both Houses on an equal footing, it will be given back to the Commons.

Additional amount required for stationery next session ..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose that this item be reduced to $6,000, and I hope that even a less sum will be sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. Four thousand dollars is the estimated value of the trunk stationery?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the estimate—yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before this item is adopted, I wish to call attention to two cases of what I regard as hardship that have existed for a year or two in connection with two hon. members of this House. The first is the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Corby). As hon. members will recollect he was taken ill last session and was only in attendance some three or four days, and, under the interpretation of the law, he is not entitled to indemnity. The other is the hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Livingston), who had his leg broken and had to remain at home. Had he remained in the city, he would have drawn his indemnity. These cases, I think, ought to be provided for either by being included in this vote or by a supplementary vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Any question of that kind might well be considered in the future, but I think it would be inconvenient to deal with it now. My attention has not been drawn to the cases mentioned by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. the Speaker if he can tell me why Mr. Samuel C. Moore, who was a sessional messenger in the House, was discharged, and Mr. Chipman Vaughn appointed in his place?

Mr. SPEAKER. With reference to the appointment of sessional messengers, I had to arrange matters in a great hurry when I was elected Speaker, so as to have the necessary staff. I took the recommendations of the officers of the House with reference to the rejection of the old messengers, who certainly were appointed from session to session and were not permanent employees, and I appointed those whose appointment was recommended, and filled other vacancies with those whom I believed to be suitable persons for the positions. I cannot remember the particular case referred to by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). If Mr. Moore was dropped, he was dropped because that course was recommended by the permanent old officers of the House.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to call attention to the case of Mr. Patchell, who was left off the messengers' staff this session after having been fifteen years in the service of the House. So far as I can see from his record, his duties were well performed. I know he was thought a thoroughly reliable man and the chief messenger had, for the last year or two, asked him to take charge of the books in his department, and in every way treated him as a reliable and confidential man.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is the case, I believe, which the hon. member (Mr. Foster) mentioned to me in committee before, and I told him then that I did recollect the reason why Mr. Patchell was dropped and said I would tell the hon. gentleman what it was. I will tell him now if he wishes.

Mr. FOSTER. If you please.

Mr. SPEAKER. He was reported to be entirely above his business and uncontrollable as a messenger. He did not seem to appreciate the position he was in.

Mr. FOSTER. Did not he do his work well?

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not know. But he considered, apparently, that he was in a position inferior to his merits and acted without due subordination. That was the report given to me, and it was on that account I dropped him. I know nothing about the matter personally.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to say with reference to Mr. Patchell, that he has been around the House of Commons for the last fifteen years, and I think he has been a most capable and efficient messenger. He was door-keeper in this western corridor, and he always performed his duties very faithfully and very courteously. I was surprised to know he had been dropped from the list of messengers, because, from my observations of him I regarded him as one of the most capable messengers in the service of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. There are two old messengers who, I think, were very good messengers, and whom we have missed this session. I refer to Mr. Gratton, who used to be downstairs, and Mr. Samson, whom all the members know as the attendant at this western door. I would be glad if the Speaker would give me the reason why they were left off.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot undertake to give the reasons why the officers of the House recommended that they should not be appointed. I did not appoint a commission to investigate. These messengers are appointed from session to session and the internal discipline of the House demands that we shall have messengers acceptable to the executive officers of the House. A Speaker coming in, as I did, without any personal knowledge of the qualifications of messengers must rely upon the reports of permanent officers of the House. That is what I did, and I propose, unless there are very good reason to the contrary, to rely upon their report in the future, in fact there is no other way.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand in the case of the messenger referred to by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), a reason was given. I should be glad if I could learn the reason that governed Mr. Speaker's action in this case. The men themselves are asking the reason why they were dismissed.

Mr. SPEAKER. One of these was a similar case to that of Mr. Patchell. I happen to recollect what the reason was in both these cases. It was reported to me that Mr. Samson also seemed to be altogether above his business. That was the practical effect of his report.

Mr. BERGERON. What about Mr. Gratton?

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not remember about him at all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In some cases Mr. Speaker has acted for cause; and where there is no special cause, the Speaker, as I understand it—and he may be right—claims that as the appointment is not a permanent one he could act according to his own discretion and choice. In justice to Mr. Moore I desire to read this letter, which was sent to him by the Minister of Militia, so that it will be apparent that the reason for dispensing with Mr. Moore's services was largely to give Mr. Vaughn, who comes from the same county and who has taken Mr. Moore's place, a turn, Mr. Moore having had his turn before:

Ottawa, August 12th, 1896.

Dear Mr. Moore,—I have received your letters.

Personally I have no feeling whatever in the matter, and I have no hesitation in saying that I have always found you most respectful and diligent, and that I do not in any way hold you responsible for annoyances to which I have been more than once subjected at public meetings by members of your family—minors though they were.

But you entirely misapprehend the nature of your appointment, which is an annual one and not permanent. The notice you received was not suggested by me and was similar to that received by every employe of the House. If you had been appointed a member of the civil service you would have come back as a matter of course, but, seeing your appointment is an annual one and in the gift of the new Speaker, I can scarcely think you can seriously expect to be re-appointed. You have had a good many years of service and ought now to be willing to allow one of your neighbours to have a chance.

Yours very truly,
F. W. BORDEN.

So, I think, perhaps that may cover the whole of the cases.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want this resolution to pass until we have an explanation of this next item, which either means something in connection with the resolution which was passed here the other day, or the resolution means nothing. This is the item of $5,325 to provide trunks under an order of the House of 1891. Now, the House knows well that several years ago we came to the conclusion to do away with the yearly trunks, and in lieu of that, one trunk was to be given at the first session of a new Parliament, and no other trunk, outside of the stationery, was to be given during the remaining years of that Parliament. While that was still a rule of the House, the Printing Committee, following on the line of that rule, suggested this report and sent it down to the House, the report being of this tenor, that the trunks which had been usually given at the beginning of each parliamentary term, should be given this year, and that report was asked to be adopted in order to authorize the arrangement to be made. Thereupon the leader of the Government arose and made a motion, which was seconded by my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

That the practice of supplying each Senator and member of the House of Commons with a leather trunk and a box of stationery, be discontinued in future, and the order of the House sanctioning the same, dated 5th May, 1892, be rescinded.

That passed, and it has been heralded throughout the country as a signal instance of the new reign of economy which has been inaugurated by the Reform Government, that at one fell stroke they had done away with the quinquennial trunk, and the order of the House under which, as I understand, it could alone be given, was rescinded. The resolution passed, the proclamation of economy is issued to the country, and here we find the Finance Minister, in spite of the resolution, coming down with a vote for—what? For the quinquennial trunk. The resolution has passed heralding the great reform, the vote comes down, and the same trunk is given that would have been given if the resolution had not passed at all. What does it mean?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think there is any difficulty in understanding what it means. I have not had the pleasure of reading many of the interesting reports to which the hon. gentleman refers as having been heralded throughout the country; but the only reference I have seen about the matter has been to the effect that it was the intention hereafter, after the close of the present session, to abolish that system of providing trunks. That is what I understand has been heralded throughout the country. Now, as a matter of fact the Printing Committee some years ago adopted a resolution under which these trunks had been provided for. We know that as a matter of fact our neighbours in the other place—as it is customary to speak of the Senate—have received their trunks and are enjoying them. Now, among other things that the hon. gentleman, I think, ought to be most anxious about, is that there should be perfect equality in these matters. I thought he was very anxious a few minutes ago that there should be absolute equality in the matter of paper, and pens, and ink, and stationery; and why he should draw the line at trunks, I do not very clearly understand. But what I believe the House intended—though I have not given great attention to the resolution—was that after the present session this practice of issuing trunks and stationery should be abolished. It is not a very insignificant matter. True, we live in an age when we think in millions, and we talk here of large sums. But a saving of $5,000 or $6,000 is not so insignificant a matter that it can be treated as of no importance. The motion of the leader of the Government was not dissented from, and the whole House resolved that hereafter we would not have the trunks ordered. But I do not think there was anybody in this House or out of it who understood that, as respects the present session, there was to be any change. What we all understood, I believe, was that inasmuch as a portion of these trunks had been ordered for a portion of Parliament, we would complete the order and supply trunks to all the members of both Houses for the present session, but that from and after the present session, these trunks should be discontinued. Whether it is a large or a small economy, is not to the point. Let us be sure that we have the facts correctly before us.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend seems to have missed the entire point, which is this: The resolution, taken in connection with this vote, makes no economy at all for the duration of this Parliament. Another point is this: the Premier moved a resolution, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce sanctioned it, and the ipsissima verba of the resolution are spread upon the pages of our journals. How can you give the trunks now in face of that resolution? That is what I want to ask my hon. friend to explain, especially as the resolution was given as an answer to the report of the Printing Committee that the trunks should be provided. That report was not passed, but this resolution passed in its stead. This resolution states in so many words that for the future the trunks shall not be given, and it rescinds the order under which they could be given by this House. Now, before the Finance Minister votes this, let him call in the Premier and ask him to move a resolution to rescind the resolution of the day before yesterday.

The MINISTTR OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman has not stated this matter fairly. In the first place, he says there is to be no economy during the present Parliament. My hon. friend the

Mr. FIELDING.

Finance Minister says that a matter of $4,000 a year is to be saved on trunks and stationery. The reason why I say the hon. gentleman has not stated the matter fairly is this: The report that came down, recommended the purchase of these trunks by this Parliament, and that report was adopted, with a rider added to it in the words which the hon. gentleman read, that while the trunks are provided for this Parliament, in future no trunks shall be provided. That seems to be very plain. The report came down, and it was not adopted, but the paragraph in it recommending that trunks be provided by this Parliament, was assented to by the unanimous vote of the House, and the Prime Minister moved a rider to it that in future this practice should be discontinued. Now, taking them both together they are not open to any but the one construction.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No one deserves much credit, then, for voting such a resolution. We say that Parliament for five years shall have trunks, but the other Parliament over which we have no control, shall have no trunks.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. There was an old rule proposed by the joint committee of both Houses, and adopted by this House, that for all time to come trunks shall be provided by the officers at the beginning of each Parliament. That rule we have rescinded. Now, when another Parliament meets, either in one year or five years hence, there is no order or rule providing for trunks; and in the meantime the annual stationery trunks are abolished, as the Finance Minister told us, at a saving of about $4,000 a year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It means that this Parliament has resolved to have trunks, but that there shall be no trunks for the next.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is what the old Parliament did say, and we are making it perfectly plain now, that for the future there shall be no rule existing on our books authorizing any officer to incur liabilities for leather trunks, they are done away with for all times. But I was more concerned with the interpretation that my hon. friend chose to put upon the report of the Printing Committee. There is an express recommendation that leather trunks be provided, which he voted for and I voted for. There is a rider proposed by the leader of the Government that in future no leather trunks be provided.

Mr. FOSTER. I see it all. It is a most delightful thing. I was not in the House when this report was brought up, but I did come in when the leader of the Government was on his feet, moving this, and I thought it meant something. I thought it was a case of real self denial, but it is not. The whole of it pared down is this: That we, the members of this Parliament will have the trunks, but when the next Parliament comes in, we will keep the other fellows from having them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) does not intend to be here next Parliament, or he would not talk that way.

Mr. FOSTER. On the face of it there is very little gain. The Minister of Finance says that we cannot bind the Senate, and that we will have to give them the stationery, and next year when Parliament comes here it will no doubt be said, that it is rather inconsistent that the members of one House should have the stationery and that the members of the other House should not. Let us know how much there is in it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). There is this much in it, that we have reduced the stationery vote from $10,000 to $6,000. If we assume that this is correct, then there will be a saving of $4,000 a year which will be $20,000 for the five sessions, or if we should follow the example of hon. gentlemen opposite, there will be a saving for six sessions. That saving of $20,000 during the present Parliament is not to be despised. As to the argument that we are not unselfish in taking the leather trunks ourselves and not giving them to our successors, I may say that we on this side of the House expect to be our own successors.

Mr. FOSTER. I recollect a celebrated character named Pip who had great expectations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is only fair to the committee that I should state to the House the position we are in with regard to this matter. It is perfectly true that some members of the Commons thought that the time had come when this expenditure should be saved to the country, and that the trunks and stationery supplied to members outside of what was necessary during the session of the House, should not be given in future. There might be some difference of opinion, but it seemed to me that the great majority were indifferent, and it was a matter of very little importance to them. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was present when the matter was discussed in the committee, and the conditions of things we found existing was this: That as it was a rule of Parliament for a great number of years, that two trunks and stationery should be given to the members; on the strength of that rule the officers of the House ordered the small trunk, put the stationery into it, and had it delivered to each member. We found that the Senate had gone further, and that they had not only their stationery trunks, but the leather trunks as well for the Parliament. A large number of the members of this House do not seem to remember that there was no increased expenditure to the country in adopting this good leather trunk for the whole Parliament, instead of giving an inferior trunk for each session—that is five trunks for the Parliament, as formerly was the case. I wish it to be perfectly understood that there was no increase of expenditure by adopting the one good trunk instead of the five poor ones. Having found that more than two-thirds of the expenditure had been made, and all that was left to do was the mere furnishing of this usual parliamentary trunk, the committee recommended that this should be done this year according to the rule. It is only fair that that should be stated. As I have said, a few members thought that the time had arrived when perhaps this expenditure for stationery might be abolished, and no one seemed to be opposed to it when my hon. leader moved that the report of the committee be amended in that respect. I expect that it probably will be a saving of some three or four thousand a year if we abolish the usual trunk and stationery, issued each session. That is all there is in it. As far as I am personally concerned, I believed when this representation was made to the Government, that I was representing the great majority of the members on the opposite side of the House as well as the majority on this side. It was out of deference to that wish and rather than to have a matter of so little importance discussed, that the suggestion was made that the custom should be abolished. The committee did not consider it from a party standpoint at all. The majority of that committee are opponents of the present Government, and in making this recommendation it was after full consideration of the circumstances, and with no desire to make party capital out of it. It was done in order to act in accordance with the wishes of the great majority on both sides.

APPROPRIATION FOR EXPENSES OF NEXT SESSION.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the Government. A very peculiar state of things is shown on the face of these Estimates. It appears we are to have a session of the Senate next year and that the usual legislative work is to go on there, but it does not appear from anything in these Estimates that we are going to have a session of the House of Commons next year, inasmuch as there is no appropriation either statutory or otherwise for it. I would like to ask the leader of the Government, if he proposes to run a one-sided machine next winter and if the Senate is to sit without any House of Commons? It is only an amount of about $400,000, and surely there should be an item in the Estimates for it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is not serious in making that remark, because he is well aware that the $400,000 sessional indemnity is provided for by statute.

Mr. FOSTER. I am entirely serious. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) is following the bad example of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in saying that I am not serious, when I take objection. I know that the indemnities are statutory, but I know just as well that from 1867 down to the present time no Estimates have ever come down to this Parliament which concealed the fact that about $400,000 was absolutely necessary to be added to the expenditure on current revenue account in order to carry on the work of Parliament. Why is it not done now?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Is it necessary to be voted?

Mr. FOSTER. It is statutory so far as the indemnities and mileage are concerned, but it always appeared in the Estimates—and no criticism of the Liberal Opposition was stronger than the criticism which was devoted against the late Government, because on one occasion I left out a steamship subsidy which had been provided by Bill and was paid under an Act. In all candour the cost of the next session of Parliament should appear on the Estimates. As they now stand, they simply put before the country that what is required for 1896-97 is $400,000 less than what really is necessary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) can hardly imagine that there was any attempt to conceal the fact that the sessional indemnity amounts to a very considerable sum and must be paid. Therefore, I cannot think he is very serious when he takes that objection. I would defer to the opinion of the hon. gentleman because it should be better than my own in this regard, but my recollection is that in bringing down Supplementary Estimates it is not usual to extend upon them items provided by statute. In one of our Estimates we have done that, but I have been informed that it is not customary and so I did not include it in these Estimates. The larger portion of the sum to which the hon. gentleman refers is provided by statute, and does not require to be voted. Surely no member of the House, or no one outside with any intelligent knowledge of the affairs of the House, is unaware that the session of Parliament has to be provided for. But there are, it is but fair to say, other items which are not provided for by the statute, and which are usually voted; but I have reason to believe that the sum provided for the present session will exceed the actual requirements, owing to the session being a short one, so that when we come to next session, I hope the appropriation required then will be a small one.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman, in getting out of one difficulty, has got himself into another. Let him look over the Estimates presented to Parliament since confederation, and point out a single instance in which the expenditure required for a regular session has been left out of the main Estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Let me ask the hon. gentleman another question. Will he find an instance in which all the sums provided for by statute have been extended in the Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. Everything has been extended except the subsidies for Pacific steamships, which I had not found extended when I took the position of Finance Minister, and which I did not think of at the time. But when the omission was pointed out to me by my hon. friend, I felt that the criticism was so fair and just that I immediately had those items extended on the pages of the Estimates. But aside from this, and without any attempt to justify or to incriminate, it is only fair and right to the country to spread upon the pages of the Estimates the various amounts you propose to expend, and not to leave out such a regular and absolutely essential sum as $400,000 for a regular session of Parliament.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). You do not suggest that it is required to be voted.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one part that is required to be voted—the amount for the publication of the “debates.” You have extended the amount required for messengers and pages, more than half of which you have taken up for this session; and the session of next year will be three times the length of this. My hon. friend would make the matter perfectly right if he would extend on the Estimates the statutory amounts required for indemnity and mileage. The other amounts will have to go now to the Supplementary Estimates for next year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As we are dealing with a resolution before the House, we can only extend such sums as we propose to vote. We all agree that the sums the hon. gentleman refers to will have to be expended, and the hon. gentleman's statement goes to the public; so that they are made aware of the fact just as well as they would be if the amounts were extended on the Estimates, that the statutory allowances for indemnity and mileage have to be added to the amount voted, and at the next session perhaps some additional sums as well. But, as I have already stated, we have been assured that the cost of the present session will fall short of the estimate, and therefore the Supplementary Estimates for next year will not be very large. Meanwhile, I do not see anything to be accomplished by setting out these amounts on these Estimates when we have stated here that they have to be added.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not fill the bill, and I ask the hon. gentleman's candid attention to it. In the first place, his objection to inserting the indemnity and mileage is that it would not be a part of the resolution. It would not, of course. You do not bring in a resolution to expend what is expended under statute; but if, under the resolution by which you take the voted sums, you extend what is required by statute, it has this essential characteristic, that it does not mislead anybody, and it shows the person who reads that page just what is to be expended. But, with these Estimates as they are, what will take place? The Estimates passed this year will be compared with those passed last year. Nobody wants an unfair comparison. In the Estimates of last year you had all the expenses of legislation set out. Let us have in these Estimates all the estimated expenses for legislation, so far as we can have them. We cannot get them all. There are expenditures of from $40,000 to $70,000 which cannot be spread on the Estimates, but which will certainly be incurred; but I ask, as a matter of mere fairness, that the indemnity and mileage should be spread on the Estimates, and counted in the Estimates for the current year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). My recollection of these matters is that the Supplementary Estimates have always been brought down in the exact form in which my hon. friend brings these.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this such a Supplementary Estimates as has never before been brought down? If the hon. gentleman had been estimating what was absolutely necessary for the current year, would he not have put in the amount required for the present session?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If you had told us that you would keep us here for seven weeks to do what we might have done in a fortnight. But how could we suppose that the hon. gentleman and his friends would have inflicted on this country an extra expense of $400,000? We had too high an opinion of them to expect that. But, as a matter of fairness, if the hon. gentleman wanted to have a true contrast between the various expenditures, it would have been perhaps as well for my hon. friend to have done what is not ordinarily done—introduced a third column, in which he could have stated the fact that the hon. gentleman opposite had put $38,308,000 in his main Estimates, and in his supplementaries—without taking into account anything for Railways and Canals or for Agriculture—$3,160,000 to be charged to consolidated fund, as against about $1,500,000 which my hon. friend has brought or for Agriculture—$3,160,000 to be charged to capital account; making $4,660,000 additional which the hon. gentleman would have taken if the Opposition had not saved the country a good deal of money by preventing him getting his Estimates through.

Mr. FOSTER. I want the indemnity and mileage put down, because it would be a deception practised on the country to omit something that is absolutely spent. My hon. friend's suggestion would be worse than a deception; it would be an actual mensonge, for the simple reason, that the hon. gentleman's statement that $4,660,000 were the Supplementary Estimates we were prepared to bring down, is a statement which has no foundation in fact.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It has this foundation in fact. I have here a document which the hon. gentleman and his colleagues were prepared to bring down—the card up my sleeve, as I suppose the hon. gentleman would say, to show that these items had passed Council, under the hand of the hon. gentleman who sits besides him.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is mistaken, the other evening, when the Minister of Public Works trotted out that card, I explained to the satisfaction of the House exactly what it meant.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not to the satisfaction of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Leaving all badinage aside, this is merely a question of fairness, and I ask if we cannot include in these Estimates all that will have to be absolutely spent.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What is the use? Any comparison will be not between Estimates, but between the sums actually spent, and all these will be fully ascertained.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend knows as well as he knows that he is not Minister of Finance, that in the by-elections which are now to come off, that $400,000 will be entirely suppressed, and the Estimates of this year will be what will be talked of.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I promise the hon. gentleman that the $4,680,000 he asked for will not be suppressed.

Mr. FOSTER. I appeal to the First Minister for fair treatment in this respect.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). If the hon. gentleman had put a fair question, I would certainly be ready to satisfy him at once, but he will permit me to say that he has not done this. He wants to have a foot-note in the Estimates to this effect:

Let the Canadian public beware ; besides this amount, which is voted by Parliament there is $400,000 more, which is voted permanently and should be added to these Estimates. Let it be understood that this foot-note exists, let the country know positively that there is this statutory appropriation to be added. It was left out because nobody thought such a question would be raised. These Estimates are brought down in the shape in which they are always brought down.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It is not the custom in the Supplementary Estimates to include items which have already been appropriated by Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. Why did my hon. friend leave this out of the Supplementary Estimates ? We cannot leave out an item like this any more than we could the item for the payment of judges' salaries. Is he, in the first place, to leave out of the main Estimates the item of $400,000 that must be absolutely estimated for and spent in the course of the year, and then bring down the supplementaries, and justify his not putting it in the supplementaries by saying that no such thing was ever seen in them. That is very true, because no Minister of Finance has, up to this date, tried to conceal the absolute and necessary amount for carrying on the business of Parliament. I appeal to the leader of the Government. We are two parties, one on each side, and the financial basis of each different Government has always been a matter of the strongest consideration and comparison and comment. We compare the Estimates of one Government with another, but it is far later when we compare the expenditures. The ground of argument in the by-election and the press will be the Estimates of the one Government as compared with those of its predecessors. It is the Estimates compared with Estimates which my hon. friends opposite have been discussing all through this session. They take, not the expenditure of 1895-96, but the Estimates of 1895-96, and they have been comparing their Estimates of 1896-97 with ours for 1895-96.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We are comparing rather the Estimates of 1896-97 with yours.

Mr. FOSTER. Of 1895-96.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, except in the ordinary formal way in which those things are always put together.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly they are compared. What do we find ? Here is a Government which comes down and neglects to put in its Estimates an essential expenditure of nearly $400,000, which has always been put in the Estimates hitherto, and which must be expended. When the Supply Bill is toted up, when these Estimates are calculated, the amount of the Estimates will be $400,000 less in appearance, but the amount that must be expended will include that $400,000. You take off the $400,000 and you have a comparison, in favour of these Estimates, of $400,000, against the preceding year. Is that fair ? Will hon. gentlemen opposite take the position of denying a fair comparison ? If they take this position intentionally, their conduct deserves to be characterized by a stronger epithet than is eminently unfair and unjust, not only as between the two parties, but to the country itself.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The fair thing would be to add to the Estimates we have brought down plus the Supplementary Estimates which the hon. gentleman brought down, and those which we know he had and did not bring down. That would be a proper comparison and we will be under serious disadvantage unless that be made.

Mr. WALLACE. That would be a fair comparison because even if the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce be correct, that Supplementary Estimates were prepared by the late Government and passed the Council no one is responsible for them except the members of that Government. The members of the Conservative party are not responsible. I perfectly agree that the comparison would be between the proceedings of the two Governments and that there would be no reflection at all justly to be placed on individual members of the Conservative party. I was simply speaking of Estimates which were prepared and would have been brought down. The hon. gentleman was a member of the Government at the time, and I have heard these hon. gentlemen say, over and over again, that they would have been brought down but for the unexampled obstruction of last session.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to deny in the most emphatic manner the statement and imputation that we were appropriating and had authorized $4,000,000 by the Supplementary Estimates which were to be brought down. I deny that as emphatically as a man can deny anything. That statement which has been put into the hands of my hon. friend is simply a table of the demands that were made by the Ministers of the different departments and which were printed for the consideration of the Council. My hon. friend knows what the rule is. Every department has claims put before it, and none more so, for Supplementary Estimates, than the Department of Public Works. These are sifted in the department by the Minister who recommends to Council what he thinks ought to be granted. The Council then has to have those printed before they are considered, and they are sent down to the Printing Bureau. No revision is made by either Finance Minister or Council before they are printed. When printed they are brought before Council, the Council goes through them and decides what shall be brought down to the House of Commons. Last year the Department of Public Works had, as it always has naturally, very large demands upon it. When my hon. friends have come to the end of their parliamentary term, they will find that they will have very much larger demands from the different constituencies in the year before a general election than they will in any preceding year. These demands were tabulated by the Minister of Public Works, and they were printed by the Printing Bureau. They never even came before Council for discussion, and the same was the fact with regard to many other of the departmental Estimates. We commenced the discussion of departmental Estimates, but we found before we had proceeded far that we were not going to get any of the main Estimates, and we decided not to bring down the supplementaries. Part of these were discussed and decided upon, and when they came up on special report of the Ministers or in any other way, a decision of Council was had with reference to a certain number. That was all that was done. I am sure my hon. friend does not wish to misrepresent the case, and I take the opportunity of stating it as it was and giving an emphatic denial to the idea that we were prepared to bring down estimates of $4,000,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I do not know what particular mode the hon. gentleman adopted, but I do know that when I was Minister of Finance we took extremely good care never to use the words "summary" and "chargeable to capital" and "chargeable to consolidated fund." until the matter had been considered in Council. We always considered them in detail, and when they had been considered in detail, then the summary and these words were introduced. I fancy that in most cases that custom was followed. Now, I know, and the hon. gentleman knows as well, that all through the elections statements were made in a great many constituencies that particular items had been passed upon by the late Government and submitted in Council and approved when the Supplementary Estimates had been before them. I am not prepared to say that in every minute detail the Supplementary Estimates had been before them and had been considered and that these sums contained in the Supplementary Estimates were to be voted. But we have statements, if the hon. gentleman wants them, signed by his own colleagues to that effect. And I must say that when I find that they did introduce, apart from these other matters which I can well understand it was desirable to hold over, and had considered in Council Estimates having at the bottom these words "Summary—Chargeable to capital, $1,480,966." and "chargeable to consolidated fund, $2,680,030." making a total of $4,160,996, and when I knew the information relating to many of the items had been used in the election and statements had been made to that effect. I had a very good right to say that that gave us a fair idea of what hon. gentlemen would have had to bring down if he had been able to get his main Estimates through.

Mr. FOSTER. I will give the hon. gentleman the explanation. Whatever may have been my hon. friend's practice when he was Finance Minister, this was my practice: I never allowed the Estimates to go out of Council to be brought down to this House until I had set before Council, in the first place, the amount for capital and the amount for ordinary expenditure which was asked, and then discussed the question with my colleagues as to about how far we could go. After we had settled that, the cutting down process took place; and my summaries for capital and ordinary expenditure account were with a view of discussing in Council how high an estimate we could come down with and setting, as far as we could, a maximum limit. In the cases in which it was said that certain things had been decided by Council, I would give an example—the case presented by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Tisdale), the work at Port Dover, which was a special work and the subject of a report to Council. Council took the whole matter up and decided what they would do upon that individual case—decided, as my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) knows, that if the persons interested would spend a certain sum of money, about twice as much as they asked of us, considering that it was a great commercial undertaking, we would supplement their subscription by so much. We decided that as a government; and the same is true of other special cases. That is entirely consistent with my statement that we did not consider the Estimates as a whole. So far as the Public Works Estimates are concerned, the Council did not even discuss them. The Minister of Public Works sent them to me, and I sent them to be printed. And there the matter rested.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted?

Mr. FOSTER. How about this unfair comparison? Are hon. gentlemen opposite willing to be so unfair as that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How can there be any unfair comparison when more has been accomplished by this five minutes' discussion than could be accomplished by inserting what the hon. gentleman wants in the Estimate. The idea that there is any attempt at concealment is preposterous. The hon. gentleman might as well say that we are trying to conceal the fact that the House is meeting to-day. The Supplementary Estimates have been brought down the same as ever.

Mr. FOSTER. Why was this vote for legislation left to the Supplementary Estimates?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because we have never had these exceptional conditions before. It is absurd to say that there was any intention of concealment; but absurd as it may be, the hon. gentlemen have accomplished more this afternoon than could have been accomplished by having the sums set out in detail. If, in the face of this discussion, any gentleman should attempt to deny that we had to include in our Estimates and provide for the sum total of the year including the cost of a session of Parliament—well, the thing would be so absurd, that I cannot imagine anybody on this side of the House making such a statement and risking the contradiction that would be brought out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we are losing time, and very unnecessarily. It is now admitted by the Minister of Finance that this was an oversight and—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We assume that there is no desire to mislead the House and the country. Everybody admits that there must be an expenditure of $400,000—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not so much.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will be there or thereabouts. In round figures that will be the amount. In order to put before the House and the country the means of forming a comparison in future years, this ought to be included. Now it is perfectly obvious that under these circumstances, as we assume, that there was no desire to mislead the House and that this has arisen in part from the somewhat exceptional circumstances that have taken place and I do not see why we should lose time. Now, there is this point to which I would call the attention of the Minister of Finance, and I think it will be confirmed by gentlemen who have had so much experience in this House and particularly in these questions as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright)—that it is not a mere question of this matter as it appears before this House and the country at the present moment. No person knows better than the gentleman who was formerly Minister of Finance when gentlemen opposite were in power before that these become public documents and that, for the purpose of fair and just comparison in future years when this discussion will be altogether lost sight of, it is desirable that an omission of that kind should be repaired. And, as there is no difficulty in doing it, as it can be done in the simplest possible manner by merely expanding this amount, why should we lose time in the discussion when there is no desire on the part of anybody to prevent these papers from setting forth not only now but in future time as they actually exist and as they are admitted on both sides of the House to exist and thus remove all chance of misapprehension.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Did my hon. friend ever know supplementaries brought down otherwise?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend surely knows that that question is not pertinent to this discussion. It is not a question as to whether it should appear in the Supplementary Estimates; it is a fact that it has always been either in the Estimates or the supplementaries. Is the country not bound to find expanded upon the Estimates the expenditure for the year, whether it is statutory or whether it is voted? All the hon. gentleman's own Estimates, when he was Minister of Finance, presented a fair statement of everything that was to be expended and everything that was provided for by statute, and they covered the whole expenditures for the year. That is all we ask now. It should be in the main Estimates, or, if it has been omitted by oversight, it should be corrected by being in the supplementaries. Hon. gentlemen opposite admitted that, to make a fair comparison, there must be this $400,000 added.

Mr. WALLACE. The Finance Minister said that this item has never in the past appeared in the Supplementary Estimates. I would meet that by another statement: Has the expenditure of a session of Parliament ever been omitted from the Estimates submitted to the House, until to-day?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. You must remember that we are not bound by law to do it.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, I think, if it is their present intention to hold another session, it is only fair they should make provision for it, and they should put it in the Estimates, because discussions will take place throughout the country, and men will have copies of these documents for the purpose of making a comparison of the expenditures of the various years; but they cannot make that comparison unless they have the estimated expense of the coming session of Parliament, so as to make a fair comparison with the past years.

Mr. FOSTER. What is absolutely to be spent, as the hon. gentleman knows, is this: The Senate indemnity of $81,000, and the mileage of $11,900, making $92,900. The House of Commons indemnity, $213,000, with the mileage, $20,000; making $233,000 for the House of Commons, or a total of $325,000 authorized by statute, which has never yet been out of an estimate given by any Finance Minister to this House, and which must absolutely be spent in this current year, if we have a session of Parliament, as we shall have. Outside of that, is the "Hansard," $40,000, with extra accounts for pages, servants, and the like of that. Altogether, the expenditure is sure to be $400,000 or more. All we ask is that that should be put down in the Estimates. If an actuary, or the responsible financial man of a trust company, or a building society, or any concern that was putting a prospectus before the country, purporting to be a true statement of the condition and prospects of that company, deliberately concealed, by oversight or otherwise, the fact that during the next year, whereas they had estimated for an expenditure of only so much, there was to be $400,000 that they could not escape, what would the people of the country, what would the press of the country, say with reference to a statement like that? They would say it was a trick, or that it was an inexcusable piece of stupidity. We are not allowed by parliamentary language to say that on the floor of this House, but the analogy, to my mind, is perfect.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The fact of the matter is this. We are not bound by law to meet till within twelve months.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you not going to?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not mean to say we are not. There is time enough to make these additions, when we find what is required. If you want the strict letter of the law, that is the strict letter. We are holding now the session for this year. It is quite true that, in all human probability, we will hold, as we have declared we will hold, and it is our intention to hold, a further session of Parliament, and that further expense will be required. Now, the hon. gentleman has no business whatever to say that there is any concealment in the matter. The whole thing is properly set out in these main Estimates. And it was not my hon. friend's duty to assume that there would be two distinct sessions of Parliament, it was not his business, and there was no legal ground or obligation why this extra sum should be stated. I do not think the proper place to put it is in the Supplementary Estimates, and I doubt whether, at this stage, we have any authority to do so, that is, by parliamentary practice. I am not prepared to offer, off-hand, a positive opinion upon it, but my impression is that we have not got power at this moment to do what the hon. gentleman asks.

Mr. DAVIN. It is a most extraordinary thing to hear now from the Minister of Trade and Commerce that we may not have a session for twelve months.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I spoke of what the law was, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we leave this item, I would like to make a request to the Speaker and to the Minister of Public Works. Since we have become so awfully good here, and everybody knows we have abandoned entirely the lower parts of this building, that we are to have no more restaurant and no more bar-room, we shall hereafter have these rooms downstairs for other purposes. They are very commodious, and might be fixed up by the Minister of Public Works for the use of the employees of this House, so that we poor Commoners, having nothing but these small desks to work on, might have the rooms now occupied by the employees of the House. Every hon. gentleman knows how difficult it is to do any work on these desks; it is simply impossible to do work, unless we go to our hotels. I would suggest to the Minister of Public Works that the rooms downstairs heretofore occupied as a restaurant and bar, might be fitted up into rooms for the use of the employees of the House who now occupy a great many rooms in the lobbies, and which would be very good places for the members of this House, in which they could do their necessary work.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce answered himself, when he tried to excuse the Government by saying there was no certainty there would be two sessions within the twelve months, that is, in the fiscal year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I said there was no legal reason.

Mr. FOSTER. But my hon. friend afterwards showed that they have no ground for leaving this out, and he instanced their own statements that there was to be a session early in the winter.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Quite true.

Mr. OSLER. Personally, I think that all expenditures for the year should be squarely provided in the Estimates, as a matter of course. I am not at all, however, objecting that the Government should leave out of their Estimates the expenditure for the coming session. I believe they will be their own executors for a year or two, and I think the less they put in the Estimates this year, the more difficulty they will have in contrasting their future expenditures with the past.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. gentleman has raised a strong point. In defence of their own reputation for economy, they ought to accede to the request of the ex-Finance Minister and the leader of the Opposition. Take this comparison. Hon. gentlemen have always held that the Government in power should hold themselves to the expenditure within their own Estimates made to Parliament. Now, next year the people of the country who do not look into the fine details of this matter, will see that you only estimated for so much to be spent, and that it has taken you four or five hundred thousand dollars more than you estimated. I believe it to be in the interests of the Government that they should adopt the suggestion from this side of the House.

Library of Parliament—To pay for two sessional messengers ..... $250

Mr. GILLIES. Have there been two additional messengers appointed in the library, or are these two appointed to fill the place of two messengers who have been dismissed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I understand these two men were loaned by the Interior Department to the library of Parliament.

Mr. GILLIES. No.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I do not think there has been any increase, but I have not sufficient information to answer the question as to the number of messengers employed in the library. I am informed that the number is not larger than usual.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman cannot say whether any messengers have been dismissed from the library to make room for these two?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have heard of no such case, but I will ascertain for the hon. gentleman.

To promote the establishment and maintenance of creameries in the North-west Territories ..... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the principle upon which this money is to be distributed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I stated to the House some time ago that I proposed to aid the establishment of creameries in the North-west Territories. My idea is that instead of adopting the suggestion of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), we should proceed as follows: There are to-day in the North-west Territories a large number of creameries which are in financial difficulties, and in some districts there are no creameries. I desire to make an arrangement with such creameries to carry them on by means of the Government Dairy Commissioner, so that the patrons may be protected from any danger of seizure of their products, which has been the case in some instances last season. I also propose, where there are no creameries now, to make a proposal to the people of the neighbourhood that they shall provide the necessary building, the Government providing the machinery and carrying on the business for a few years. The arrangement in that respect will be the same as prevailed formerly in the North-west Territories and in Prince Edward Island. In addition to that, we propose to charge an extra cent per pound on all the butter that is produced in these creameries, which will go to a sinking fund to pay the capital account. At the end of that time, those who have contributed this cent a pound will own the creamery.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is the same principle as was adopted by the late Government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not quite. The late Government proposed to establish eight creameries, but I expect under this vote to establish fifteen creameries, and six or seven skimming stations.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, but the principle is the same.

Mr. DAVIN. I am exceedingly glad to hear the statement of the Minister of Agriculture, because it is very gratifying to me to find that the proposal I made here a few years ago has now fructified.

Two months' gratuity to Mrs. W. McNaughton Jones, widow of the late Dr. W. McNaughton Jones, General Superintendent of Quarantine in British Columbia (salary, $2,500)..... $416 66

Mr. FOSTER. These gratuities can be given only on the stated conditions in connection with the Superannuation Act, and the attempt to vote this is to get rid of the exactions of the law. Occasionally that has been done, but we ought to have very strong reasons for doing it, because otherwise we are undermining the law. This, of course, may be a case which is perfectly proper.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This case is one of the exceptions to which the late Finance Minister referred. If I am not mistaken, we had arranged to ask for this vote before I left the department, because the circumstances are exceedingly sad, and I thought it was a case in which we might well step outside the exact letter of the law to deal in that small way fairly generously to the widow of a gentleman who had been a splendid officer, and who was left in very straitened circumstances.

Cattle Quarantine ..... $3,000

Mr. DAVIN. Would the Minister say whether he has inquired in regard to the cattle that were reported to me to be crowding across the border south of Park Beg.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I have informed the Commissioner of Mounted Police of the facts, and asked him to deal with the case in the usual manner. The explanation of this vote is as follows: there has been an arrangement in the department sanctioned by Order in Council that hogs slaughtered in consequence of the infection of hog cholera should be paid for on certain conditions, and under certain rates. The item in the original Estimates was only $1,500 for the financial year. We have in my department at present bills to the extent of $3,401.96 which would require to be paid now. The committee can therefore see that the $1,500 originally voted would not cover this amount. I have asked for this additional vote of $3,000, and I must frankly say that if the hog cholera continues at anything like the rate it did last summer, even this vote will not meet the demands for the current year.

Towards providing for cold storage and carriage of Canadian perishable food products, and to secure recognition of the quality of such products in the markets of Great Britain in an undeteriorated condition ..... $20,000

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I may say that this amount is what I expect to require between this and the 1st of July next. In the main Estimates there is a vote of $20,000, some of which will be required in the course of the ensuing session, but most of which will be used in the work during the present season of navigation, as I explained when that vote went through. The country has been demanding facilities for the placing of our perishable food products on the English market in an undeteriorated condition. The hon. Premier and the members of the Government have declared that they are prepared to try and provide facilities sufficient to meet the demands of the trade now existing, and its probable development within the next few years. Representations have been made to the Government, and representations were made to the House a short time ago by the Committee on Agriculture, in favour of these facilities being given to our farmers. Our butter has, unhappily, acquired an unfavourable reputation in the old land, which we believe is entirely due to the deterioration which occurs in the course of its passage from the maker to the consumer. Under these circumstances, the farmers of the country have asked the Government to take steps to see that the proper facilities for preventing that deterioration are provided; and, personally, as representing, to a certain extent, that great interest in the country, I feel very keenly that this is a justifiable demand. The necessities of the case demand a very considerable outlay. To accomplish the result, it is necessary that there should be a continuous and unbroken chain of cold storage from the point of production to the consuming market. This would necessitate, probably, the establishment of storage warehouses, in which the perishable products could be put for a short time until ready for shipment; and arrangements with the railroads for carrying them in cold storage to the places of Atlantic shipment; possibly, arrangements for cold storage warehouses to receive them while awaiting shipment across the ocean; and arrangements for the necessary appliances in the ships for keeping these products in a cold temperature while crossing the Atlantic. It is easy to see that a very complete system requires to be established; and the Government believe it to be their duty to contribute to this system to such an extent as will enable those who can provide this deficiency in our commerce to tide over the first few years of difficulty, because, possibly, the trade of the first year or two may not pay a fair return on the capital necessary to be invested to provide these appliances. I want to point out, to justify this contribution, that to provide a vessel with a fair amount of cold storage accommodation would necessitate the investment of from $12,000 to $15,000 of capital, that is, for mechanical cold storage. For what is called insulated cold storage, where no mechanism is required, except such walls as the heat will not penetrate, and sufficient ice to keep the chambers at a low temperature, the necessary capital expenditure would range from $2,000 to $3,000. In view of this heavy investment of capital required, it seems right that the Government should contribute a certain amount for a short term of years, to induce steamship owners to make this investment. I may say that last year Professor Robertson, in his capacity of dairy commissioner, attempted to provide such accommodation on one line of steamers sailing from Montreal to Avonmouth, near Bristol, and that he found difficulty in obtaining such accommodation in consequence of the heavy initial investment necessary, and the uncertainty whether the trade would justify it and yield a fair return upon the investment. That arrangement was not carried out, in consequence of the contractors who were to supply the cold storage appliances, failing to supply them. So that we have not yet had any experience of mechanical cold storage. But, in place of the mechanical cold storage asked for at that time, we have had this season an insulated cold storage, which has been so largely availed of by the exporting trade, that in August last a request was made that the space should be doubled. Since that time, this whole double amount of space has been utilized by the exporters of perishable food products; showing that the demand for this accommodation is growing, and that the accommodation supplied has been really in the interest of the traffic. I may say that between now and the coming winter, some arrangements will have to be made by the Government with certain steamship companies, and also, possibly, with those who will put up cold storage warehouses at certain necessary points in the country, by contracts extending over a term of years, which we propose to make by Order in Council, subject to ratification at the ensuing session of Parliament. My expectation is that I shall not require to make any payments on such contracts during the present fiscal year, but that by this means I shall be able to provide satisfactory and sufficient accommodation on various steamship lines to carry the likely trade of next season to certain ports in Great Britain. I may say that those ports which are most likely to be utilized for this purpose in consequence of their being the best markets and the most suitable to our perishable products, are the ports of Avonmouth near Bristol, Liverpool, Glasgow and London, and I propose to make arrangements by which vessels will leave Montreal and St. Johns and Halifax in the summer and the two latter ports in the winter, to carry these products to the old land. I may say that this summer Professor Robertson made arrangements with the railway companies by which they are to supply refrigerator cars on certain of their lines to the main centres of shipment. The payments in this matter have been very small this year, amounting to about $1,500, and perhaps two or three thousand dollars would cover the expenditure for this year. During the ensuing season, I expect to much enlarge that service, so that all parts of the country which can fairly ask for it in consequence of their producing these products, will be supplied the necessary accommodation to enable these products to be taken to the points of shipment, where they will be put into cold storage vessels, without the risk of being heated to any extent. In the proposition I have before me, I find that it is very necessary to provide with the creameries sufficient cold storage. For that purpose, I propose to give a small bonus to any creamery which will provide such cold storage accommodation as would meet the views of the Dairy Commissioner.

Mr. FOSTER. All creameries ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All creameries that would take advantage of it. There are to-day about 400 creameries working in Canada, and I expect that next season about one-half of them will take advantage of this offer, and I would be very glad if they all would. The necessary expenditure likely to be incurred by creamery owners would vary from $200 to $400 each to provide the necessary accommodation.

Mr. WALLACE. What are the conditions?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Simply that the accommodation should be sufficiently ice-cold, that is to say that the building should be properly built, such as ordinary cold storage buildings are. There are a great many creameries which have poor accommodation, which are improperly built and not properly fitted for the purposes of cold storage, but I would require that the creameries which get the grant should furnish really effective accommodation by putting up buildings with such walls and ice in them as would keep the temperature at a sufficiently low point to prevent the butter becoming deteriorated. This would require an expenditure on the part of each creamery of from $200 to $400, according to the condition of the creamery, and what work would have to be done to put it in proper order. I propose to give to any creamery which will adopt this cold storage, $50 the coming season, $25 the following season, and $25 the third season, or in all $100, provided Parliament votes the necessary amount. My object in spreading the bonus over the three years is to secure a proper maintenance of the system and incite the creamery owners to take full advantage of the grant, and also because I expect that the first year some will shrink from the undertaking. In the succeeding years, however, I hope that they will all get the bonus. I would like to give a figure with regard to some sales, made within the last two weeks, of creamery butter from the North-west Territories, from creameries run under the control of the Dairy Commissioner. There are two creameries under his control, one of which is supplied with efficient cold storage accommodation and the other is not. There were sales made in the same week in England of the butter from these creameries, and the article from the one provided with cold storage netted two cents a pound more than the product of the one that had not cold storage. This is a specimen of what I consider would be the results of getting the accommodation to which I have referred in all the creameries of the country. At the same time, I fear that these creameries will hardly be able to give the accommodation unless they get some slight assistance, and it is justifiable that they should, in view of the fact that we are to-day making the greatest effort to improve the reputation of our butter in the English market. I have pretty complete figures in regard to this proposition, but the outline I have given is, I think, sufficient to explain what I want to do.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has not mentioned the interior warehouses.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not yet undertaking positively to provide for them. I think it is absolutely necessary that we should have warehouses at the great centres, especially at the shipping ports. If we have an abundant car service from centres of production to those shipping ports, I am not certain to what extent warehouses in the interior will be required. It may be that the trade will find it most convenient to send its products from the points of production, as rapidly as possible, to these great shipping centres. We know, as a matter of fact, that a few merchants in the great shipping centres buy nearly all our dairy products and hold them until they find it convenient to ship them to the old land. That is the present course, and I am not in a position to say whether it is the best course or not, but if it is continued, it will not be necessary to provide cold storage warehouses in a great many of the different sections of the country. If we should decide to have storage warehouses in the interior, it would be necessary perhaps to provide some assistance, by means of a direct bonus to the warehouses, or by guaranteeing the interest on a part of the whole of the investments for a number of years, during which the expenses will be heavy on them and the warehouses themselves would not perhaps be utilized to such an extent as to give a return on the investment. I think, however, it will be necessary to secure, by one means or another, at once, this coming season, the establishment of cold storage warehouses at the points of shipment where the products are put in the ocean vessels. That I am satisfied of, and I also wish to ensure the establishment of these small cold storage accommodations at the creameries. Of this $20,000 I am asking for, about $10,000 will go to that this coming winter.

Mr. FOSTER. Providing 200 took it up ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In saying that, I am only taking half the creameries in the country. I expect before the 1st of July next to have under the arrangement I propose to make with the railway companies, to spend two or three thousand dollars. I expect that $10,000 will be required for the cold storage in the creameries. And, in addition we will have to do considerable work in connection with the advancement of this system in the English market and thus endeavour to do something to overcome the prejudice against our perishable food products which exists there in consequence of the fact that those products have been arriving in bad condition. I know that this may require a good deal of work, and a good deal of—I do not think “advertising” is exactly the word—but a good deal of propaganda; and it may even involve some slight assistance to parties who may wish to send trial shipments of various kinds of products. I do not strongly favour that idea; at the same time, it is quite possible it may be necessary in order to encourage trade immediately. Especially is this the case with eggs. At present our egg trade with England is comparatively limited. We send large quantities of eggs to Boston and other American markets. My information leads me to believe that eggs sent to England and arriving there in undeteriorated condition would be very profitable to the exporter, and therefore it would be a trade to which it would be desirable to afford facilities as soon as possible—as soon as the cold storage is provided. There is, no doubt, a splendid market in England for our dressed poultry also. This is one of the things in which the ordinary prices there and here differ most. The margin between the English price and ours seems greater than in anything else we are likely to send to the British market, and I think it is very advisable that our people should be encouraged, and perhaps aided not only by cold storage, but by arrangements made by trial shipments, to make an effort to send dressed poultry to the English market. I also ask a certain amount in this estimate for investigation. But before I proceed to other points, I may say that perhaps $1,000 will probably be used before 1st July next in assisting or, perhaps, in some instances, paying the necessary cost of the cold storage to stimulate the proper collection of the eggs and placing of them on the English market in a fresh condition. I think I have thus explained pretty well why I ask this amount of $20,000. But I want to state emphatically and clearly that the completion of the project to secure the future success of this cold storage business, will involve contracts of a nature which I trust will be satisfactory, in connection with the steamship companies, and possibly in connection with warehouses in this country, which will extend over a short term of years. From my information at this time, I think the term will be from three to five years. I do not wish it to extend over a long period; at the same time I think it will be necessary, in order to establish the business on a firm foundation, to give some such guarantee as that to which I allude. The amount which will be asked in order to carry out these contracts must vary somewhat according to the nature of the contracts. Propositions have been made involving an annual expenditure for a term of five years; other propositions, especially relating to the steamships, have been made under which the greater portion of the amount would have to be advanced the first year. The reason is that in their case so great a preliminary investment might have to be made that special advantages would have to be offered to induce them to undertake it. For my own part, I favour a proportionate sum extending over five years, so that we would not only assure the establishment but also assure the proper carrying on of the service for five years. It may be that it would require four or five years before this service will be so thoroughly established that it would run without assistance. I think, however, as a matter of fact, that less than that time would be necessary to put it on a firm basis. If the expectations of the development of the trade which to-day exist in the minds of the farmers and shippers of the country are at all justified, this trade, in three years, will be in a position to carry itself without Government assistance.

Mr. FOSTER. I must congratulate my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) on the clear and business-like statement he has made and also on the general outline of his plan, with which, from my limited knowledge, I thoroughly agree. I do not propose to discuss the whole question, but there are two things I wish to say. First, as to the point touched in the concluding remarks of my hon. friend. If I were he, I would go very slow on long-term contracts with warehouses in this country, and somewhat so with reference to long-term contracts with steamship companies. The hon. gentleman himself mentioned excellent reasons for that. It is not only an advisable thing for the farmers of this country to take advantage of the cold storage system, but it seems to me an absolute necessity. The farmers themselves are aware of that. What becomes an absolute necessity, from the farmer's standpoint, becomes so from the buyer's or shipper's standpoint. So that when the hon. gentleman is stimulating these two interests, as he will by that part of his scheme, he is really building up a portion of the work which, if it ought not to be taken up at first, certainly ought to be carried on after a very short period by private capital and enterprise. A three years' contract is what I would strongly urge him to have. With reference to the contracts he proposes to enter into without a previous appropriation of the necessary money by Parliament, I would rather, for my part, that he should ask the House for the money. This House will not refuse to vote a pretty large sum for the stimulation of this extension of the business of the farmers in these trying times. We only want to know that the basis and the plan are sound; and I would rather he should bring the estimates before us than to intimate that he would enter into contracts without having the money appropriated. If he makes contracts for a short time, he will probably find that the vote is sufficient to enable him to carry on the work until Parliament meets again. In some cases, of course, it may be advisable for the Ministers to assume the responsibility of making contracts without having the money appropriated by Parliament; but, as a rule, to decide in advance that contracts are to be entered into without Parliament having been consulted is hardly the best way.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I desire to explain that it is not because I wish to give myself a freer hand that I take this course. I hope to be able to do without contracts; I hope to be able to accomplish what we have in view without binding ourselves. But I did not want to ask Parliament for a grant of money when I could not explain exactly how I was going to use it. So far as the contracts are concerned, I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) that I will make them as short and as little onerous to the country as possible. To tell the truth, I feared that if I put a large sum in the Estimates, our friends with whom we want to make the contracts would take precious good care to find a means of enabling us to spend the money.

Mr. MOORE. I desire to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture on the consideration he has given to this matter in bringing down an additional amount to provide for cold storage, and extending it to other articles than those provided for in the main Estimates. In the main Estimates it will be remembered there was a grant of $20,000 in aid of cold storage for creamery butter and cheese alone. I felt that it would be unfair to the dairy butter makers and to those who could produce other articles, to limit cold storage to these two items, and for that reason I placed upon the Order paper this motion:

That, in the opinion of this House, provision should be made for storage and transportation—in cold storage—of all dairy products, fresh meats, fruit, eggs and other perishable goods to the markets when sold.

I am glad that, on reconsideration of this matter, the hon. gentleman has covered this motion by bringing down a further amount for that object. I also agree with the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) that the amount, if anything, is rather small. I am quite certain that hon. gentlemen in Opposition would be willing to expend a greater amount than $20,000. It is a very important matter for the farmers of this country that provision should be made of the kind which has been so well explained by the Minister of Agriculture, for delivering in good condition in England, the perishable products which can be produced on Canadian farms. When we take into consideration that the English people require from outside countries, $115,000,000 worth of fresh meat, and that there is no provision for delivering fresh meat in safe condition in England, and that our cattle are scheduled and must be killed as soon as they arrive on the other side, it becomes a matter of serious moment to the farmers of Canada that they should have some means of disposing of their cattle to better advantage. In the first place, if we have cold storage provided for delivering meat in fresh condition in England, it will not cost nearly as much for freight, as for live animals, and it can be safely held until sold. When we send cattle to England they have to be slaughtered on arrival, and have to be sold at once, or the meat will spoil. This is an important matter, and I regret the amount has not been made larger. I find that for meats, butter, cheese, eggs, fruit and poultry, England pays $273,000,000 in cash yearly to outside countries. What we want is to be placed in a position to compete with other nations, and to that end provision should be made whereby we may deliver these products in good condition on the English market. There is another matter, and I think I know something of the feeling of the Minister of Agriculture in respect to it, although it has not been mentioned yet, and that is the article of margarine. It might be well for the Minister of Agriculture to consider that article as a matter of export, although its use is prohibited in Canada. But margarine might be profitably produced in this country, and exported to England. I think that the way to overcome the prejudices of the English people in respect to these perishable products, is to deliver them in England in good condition. I am quite sure we can capture in that way the Englishman's palate, as well as the Englishman's purse.

Militia—Royal Military College—To provide for two months' pay, $527.22, and travelling expenses to place of abode, of Major General D. R. Cameron, C.M.G., late Commandant of the Royal Military College, Kingston ..... $1,690

Mr. BRITTON. In connection with this item, I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence to a case which is deserving of his consideration. On the 11th of February last, a pair of horses belonging to "A" Battery were attacked by dogs and ran away. In doing so they ran against a carter's horse and killed it. The horse was all the man had; the dogs were all that the other man had, and the dogs were the real cause of the accident. This man presented a claim to the late Government. His name is James Keenan. The Government submitted the question to the Minister of Justice, and he considered that there was no liability on the part of the Government. Now, I do not dispute the opinion of the Minister of Justice. I suppose there is no doubt about it. If there was what the law calls scienter on the part of the owner of the dogs, I suppose he would be liable for this man's horse. If you value the dogs at $10 each, that would show that the owner of the dogs was worth $20. He had nothing else, but the claim is a small matter for this Government to pay, and I think they might pay it when I see that they are allowing compensations to this woman, Mrs. Burns, in the preceding item, for the loss of her husband, as a compassionate allowance. If the department are going to make such allowances as we see in the case of Mrs. Burns and another case provided for in item 42 in these supplementaries, I think the Minister of Militia ought to allow pay for this man's horse. The claim has been established to the satisfaction of the late Minister of Justice. He was not adverse to paying the claim, but there is a question of legal liability. I submit if the Government are making these compassionate allowances, a small sum ought to be paid to this man who is sadly in need of the money.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). My hon. friend has stated that my predecessor was favourable to paying this man for his horse, but I think there is no record that the late Minister of Militia was of that opinion. In fact the record, so far as I remember, is that he could not see his way clear to allowing a claim of this kind, because it was no fault of the Government. The fact is the Government suffered by the fact that the horses belonging to the battery were frightened by these dogs, and as a consequence this other man lost his horse. If the Government begin by paying claims of that kind, it is difficult to tell where it will end. I do not think there is any analogy between the case of Mrs. Burns and the case my hon. friend mentions. In the case of Mrs. Burns, her husband had lost his life in the service of the country, and it is claimed that it is only right that this woman, who is left in extreme poverty, should receive a slight compassionate allowance. I cannot see any analogy between the two cases. However, I will say to my hon. friend that I never had the case before me, and have not gone fully into it. I have looked over the matter casually, and I will promise him that I will take the case up, and examine it thoroughly.

For a loading platform and siding at St. Francois Station ..... $350

Mr. HAGGART. Why charge a small sum like this to capital account?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There are a number of similar works in the preceding Estimates which are charged to capital account, because there are so many of them. They are in a sense just as much a part of the original construction as any portion of the road that has been built.

Welland Canal, differences in value of land exchanged with the Grand Trunk Railway ..... $2,226

Mr. HAGGART. Is this part of an agreement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). This exchange took place under Order in Council made as long ago as 1884. It has been kept open until the present time. Since I came to the department the deeds in accordance with the Order in Council have been delivered to us, but they had not prior to this date been finally executed. Competent persons were sent to the locality to determine the value of the land on each side, and the difference between the value of the land which we had exchanged for theirs, amounted to $2,226 against us.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the hon. gentleman certain that an agreement of that kind was made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not seen the Order in Council, but I do not entertain the slightest doubt about it. There is a bundle of papers sufficiently voluminous to take five or six hours to read, but the Order unquestionably passed as I am informed.

Halifax Dominion Buildings ..... $1,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the Minister had time to look into the subject I mentioned in connection with the Intercolonial Railway terminal facilities at Pictou? I mentioned some time ago, in reference to the item of $5,000 in the main Estimates, that I was led to believe by the late Minister that a further sum would be put in the Estimates to provide for the improvements that has been recommended by the officers of the department. I asked the present Minister if he would inquire into it, and see whether it would not be in the interest of the service to bring down a supplementary estimate to do the work at that point.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I do recollect the hon. gentleman having called this matter to my attention, but I did not understand him to express a wish that it should be dealt with in the Supplementary Estimates this session. I have not had time to pursue the inquiry to which he directed my attention.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I hope the hon. gentleman will take time before next session, and see what is necessary.

It being Six o'clock, the committee rose and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Ottawa Post Office—Asphalting esplanade in front of building ..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether he has considered the advisability of putting asphalt there, or granolithic, and the relative cost of the two.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). It will be asphalt. My information is that asphalt will last a great deal longer, there being a great deal of traffic at that point. The cost of asphalt is about $3.50 per square yard, while that of granolithic is from $1.25 to $1.50. I am informed that asphalt will last about three times as long as granolithic. My officers tell me that it is guaranteed for fifteen years.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been stated to me that granolithic pavement is guaranteed for fifteen years.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that granolithic cannot be guaranteed where there is a great deal of traffic. Of course, I am not a specialist.

Harbours and Rivers, Nova Scotia .... $16,300

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). There is an appropriation for Nova Scotia which I would have liked to see here, that I do not see. I thought I had impressed the hon. Minister of Public Works with the importance of a certain public work in Inverness county—that is, a wharf at a port called Whycocomagh. I regret indeed that I appear to have failed to impress the hon. Minister with the importance of this work. I would ask him whether it is his intention, in the near future, to see to this very important and necessary public work being protected.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend has strongly pressed upon me the great importance of the work to which he refers. I am very sorry indeed that the Government have not been in a position to appropriate for the work an amount, which we will certainly give in the near future.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Do I understand the Minister to say that there will be a vote for this work at the next session of Parliament?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I must take some of the blame for the omission of that item. I can testify that my hon. friend urged it very strongly, in the interest of the people of Whycocomagh, and my own desire was that his wish should be complied with. But, owing to a misunderstanding, it was not included in the list, which I certainly regret. It is a mistake that ought to be corrected next session, and my full expectation is that the hon. Minister of Public Works will place that item in the Estimates next session, and I will endeavour to persuade him, as well as I can, to do so.

Harbours and Rivers, New Brunswick.. $2,500

Mr. McALISTER. I regret that there is no provision made in these Supplementary Estimates for the wharf at Campbellton. I find, as I said the other evening, that other places of less importance have received grants, while this place, which is one of greater importance, is entirely omitted, though it is of urgent necessity that a wharf should be placed there. The public wharf is of no practical value to the town because its only connection with the shore is over a private property, and the owner may stop the people from passing over it at any time. Besides those who want to use it for shipments will have to pay tolls to the owner of this wharf for the privilege of passing over it. This not only adds to the cost but to the inconvenience of shippers as well, and I had hoped that the Minister of Public Works would have provided in the Supplementary Estimates for this work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I have not had time to look into this question which was brought to my notice, but to have a general vote of $10,000, and if there are immediate repairs required they could be met out of that vote.

Mr. McALISTER. Repairs would be of no use until the work became the property of the Government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not ready to buy the wharf, and as it has been in its present condition for a long time past, I think it may remain so for some time yet.

Mr. McALISTER. A grant of $8,000 was recommended by the late Minister of Public Works to purchase and put this property in repair.

Prince Edward Island—Belfast—Dredge repairs to pier..... $500

Mr. MARTIN. That is a small sum. Where is that pier?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It is near Halliday's Wharf, where the steamer touches.

Mr. MARTIN. I am sorry indeed that the Minister of Public Works has not thought proper to make the expenditure on Bell River and the other works which I mentioned a few nights ago. It is very necessary that these expenditures should be made without delay. I see that the hon. gentleman has rewarded the province of Nova Scotia very well by giving it an item in the further or second Supplementary Estimates of $16,000, while the province I have the honour to represent is offered only the small sum of $1,000. The hon. Minister must have taken his cue from his colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who told us last evening that he would not advise the Minister of Public Works to spend money indiscriminately in Prince Edward Island, and I presume his advice is being followed out. I hope that the Minister of Public Works, if he has decided not to make the expenditure I recommended this year, will promise that he will do something next session. Otherwise only one conclusion can be arrived at, and that is that there is a disposition on the part of this Government, at the very outset, to discriminate against certain sections of the province from which I come.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Bell River is not our property, and I am not inclined to spend money on property which is not ours.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not then see why the Government engineers were sent down to make surveys. I believe the Government have just as much authority to spend money on these piers as on provincial exhibitions in different parts of the Dominion. I may point out that money has been expended in different parts of the Dominion on works which were never assumed by the Dominion Government. I am not bringing this question before the House for the first time. I believe that the Minister of Marine, or if not the present Minister, his late colleague, brought this very important work to the notice of the present Government. I know that some years ago this work was pressed on the attention of the late Government, and that it had the support of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. What change has come over the spirit of his dream I do not know, but certainly this work is very necessary to the shipping interests of that place, and I hope the Minister of Public Works will give his promise that next year some money will be spent on it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I desire to please my hon. friend, but I think it would be going a little too far to spend money on property that is not our own. The hon. gentleman says that the surveys have been ordered. I know that, during the last election, Senator Ferguson ordered surveys. But it seems to me that these surveys should not be in vogue in this Parliament. They are simply election surveys.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman says surveys were ordered during the last election campaign. I can tell the hon. gentleman and the House that surveys were not held or ordered during the election campaign, or for election purposes. The surveys were made, I think, about two years ago.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Examinations or surveys—we will not quarrel about the word.

Mr. MARTIN. Surely they were not election surveys, when the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) told me, the other day, that he would order the engineers down there. We were discussing public matters, and I do not suppose I am unfairly revealing any secrets, when I say this. He said he would press this matter upon the Minister of Public Works. But, strange to say, last evening he turned around and said he would not like to press an expenditure like the one I propose. There is something that requires explanation, and the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries can explain the change. How can he now condemn an expenditure which a few days ago he said he was pressing for?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is most unjust. I do not think the House will justify a rediscussion of a matter which was discussed only a few days ago. I told the hon. gentleman that, as $10,000 had been spent on the Wood Island breakwater, a few miles away, and it had not yet been decided whether the work would give us a good harbour or not, we could scarcely expect the Government to vote money now for a harbour so near. When the hon. gentleman spoke to me privately, I said that I would speak to the Minister of Public Works about it, and urge it upon him. But, surely the hon. gentleman did not suppose I was going to do that this session, with the Supplementary Estimates already down. The hon. gentleman talks about injustice to the Island. In the main Estimates are items aggregating $46,000 for Prince Edward Island, and only $41,000 for the large province of New Brunswick, alongside. Does that look as if we were being discriminated against? These two sums are given to the hon. gentleman in his county, and I have not a dollar in my own county at all.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the sums spent upon the breakwater near this harbour. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that that expenditure will be comparatively useless until this harbour is dredged out, that great difficulties must be overcome before this can be made a good harbour for vessels of any size. He knows, also, that with a very small expenditure the harbour of Bell River could be made a good harbour. But, for some reason, he puts his foot down, and I suppose we are not to have the money.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I regret that there are no estimates for the repair of Campbell's Cove breakwater. For many reasons it would be well to have this work done this season. There is a large population depending upon the precarious business of fishing, which has been almost a total failure this year. This expenditure would have been a great benefit to the people during the winter. Again, the work could have been done more cheaply during the winter than at any other season. I trust that the hon. Minister will give this his attention, and that on another occasion he will be ready to propose this expenditure, since he has not been able to provide for it now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) is too hard upon me. If I remember well, I have proposed expenditure of $36,000 in his county. And yet he is not pleased. I am caught between two fires. The ex-Minister of Finance declares we are spending too much, but every hon. gentleman behind him says we do not spend enough. If hon. gentlemen want the money spent, let them give me the money.

Harbours and Rivers, Quebec—Rivière du Sud—Protection works ..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a work near the railway—a necessary work.

Mr. FOSTER. What county is it in?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Montmagny.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that it is a protection work on the Rivière du Sud. What is the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is to protect the road alongside the railway.

Mr. DAVIES.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman going into the business of protecting roads for the municipalities?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend forgets what he himself has done. This work was begun by the late Government, and I am simply going on with it.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be all right, but we want to know the reason. Is it contended that the road is endangered by the building of the bridge?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. WALLACE. This is a most extraordinary expenditure, and we ought to have some further explanation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for the repair of the protection wharf built in 1885 alongside the Intercolonial Railway, Montmagny. The wharf was built to prevent the erosion of the banks of the river and restore the road. It was held that the building of the pier of the Intercolonial Railway was the cause of the destruction of the road. The work was begun by the late Administration, and I am following in their footsteps.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Government should have given some solid reasons for an expenditure of this kind. The explanations the Minister has made are no justification at all. It is simply that a public roadway requires protection, and the Government of Canada are stepping in to assist the municipality.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that he has made a personal examination of the works, and that the destruction of the road was caused by the building of a pier for the Intercolonial Railway. Personally I do not know much about it, and I do not know why the work was begun by my department.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Minister might discontinue the work until he finds out whether they are justified in going on with it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The report of my officers has convinced me that the work ought to be done.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman say the work was commenced by the late Government?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. I think there is a report in the department over which I presided, saying that the railway was not at all liable.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed there was a special warrant to provide for the cost of the work, a Governor General's warrant.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would ask the Minister of Public Works to allow me to go back for a moment, as I was not in the House when Nova Scotia matters were being passed. I want to ask him if his attention has been drawn to the Cow Bay breakwater, in the county of Cape Breton. The Cow Bay breakwater, as my hon. friend will find in looking into his department, is a work upon which a large sum of public money has been expended; and the late Government were prepared, if they had been able to pass their estimates, to grant a sum of money for the repair of that work. A very severe storm occurred, and did great damage to that breakwater, and I am afraid that if some means are not taken to protect the work, a very large loss of public money will ensue. I would like the hon. gentleman to look into that matter with a view to ascertaining whether it is not a case of pressing necessity, requiring a prompt expenditure in order to prevent a serious public loss.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will certainly look into this work during the recess.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Will this sum of $4,000 for Rivière du Sud complete the works?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think this amount will cover the whole expenditure, although I cannot say positively.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend knows the work as well as I do, from having gone over that section on the Inter-colonial Railway. I am not prepared to attack this vote of $4,000, though I supposed that, coming from a Government who is going to repair the errors of the previous one, it is somewhat of a poor excuse to say that this work is carried on because it was begun under the late Government. I would like to ask my hon. friend, knowing the work as he does and as I do, whether he does not think that $4,000 will be more than sufficient to satisfy the wants of the Inter-colonial Railway. The hon. gentleman knows that the pier has been under discussion for years and years. The same question has come before Parliament on more than one occasion; and the hon. gentleman knows that it is a moot question whether the building of the pier he refers to, interferes at all with the road. No doubt this work will be very useful to the municipality, but I hardly think it can claim to have the support of the Federal Government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As I said, I am not in a position to state whether that amount will be sufficient, but I hope it will be. As to undertaking to repair all the errors of the previous Government, I am afraid the contract will be too heavy for me to undertake.

Mr. WALLACE. I am still at a loss to understand why this work was undertaken, and why it is continued. The Minister of Public Works stated it had been begun in 1895. Well, I have the Estimates for 1894-95, and there is no provision in them for any such expenditure. I have also the Estimates for 1895-96, and there is no item there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already explained that the work was done under a special Governor General's warrant, and of course he will not find it in the Estimates. My officers inform me it was done under Governor General's warrant obtained in 1895, and the work has been paid for.

Mr. WALLACE. If so, that warrant must have been laid on the Table of the House at the beginning of the succeeding session, and I see no record of it. The late Minister of Railways has informed the House that this matter was brought before his department and was investigated by their engineers, who disclaimed any responsibility on the part of the department which would justify the expenditure. I think that before the item passes, the Minister should be able to give this House a complete justification for the expenditure of this money before he asks us to sanction it. If this is allowed to go, I do not know where the expenditure of public money will stop. The Dominion Government, for the first time in its history, that I ever heard of, have undertaken to do a work which belongs to a municipality, or, at all events, one in which the local government might be interested. We may fairly ask the Minister to produce the evidence to the House which would justify our expending money to make a local road through a municipality. The evidence of the late Minister of Railways is contrary to the assumption that the Government are in any way responsible to do this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) wants is evidence that this work was undertaken by the late Government.

Mr. WALLACE. That was only one request I made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) asks whether the work is necessary. If the present Minister of Public Works found that his predecessor had begun a work of that character; if, on inquiry from his engineers, he was assured the work had been begun and that some money was needed to complete it; and if the Minister himself had no knowledge that it was an improper expenditure; then, I think there would be ample cause to justify the Minister in asking for the appropriation. I understand that the statement of the Minister of Public Works with reference to this work having been begun on a Governor General's warrant is questioned. It is but natural that my hon. friends opposite should question that, in view of the very strong remarks that have been made in certain places recently about Governor General's warrants. It might naturally be assumed that no warrant would be obtained by the late Government for such a purpose. I find that on the 29th October, 1894, a Governor General's warrant was obtained, in these words :

For construction of dry wall, Rivière du Sud, St. Thomas de Montmagny..... $5,000

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Finance has stated that, if the previous Government had expended certain money, and that the works were under way, that would be a good prima facie case for continuing the expenditure. These conditions are exactly applicable to the Trent Valley Canal, and yet the present Government has not considered that they were bound to expend more money, but they rather wish to take time to consider it. I am not finding fault with that, but I believe that the same rule applied to the Trent Valley Canal should be applied to this work, which, apparently, has not a particle of justification for it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that, because a work had been undertaken by the late Government, therefore, it should be continued; but I said that, if a work had been undertaken by the late Government, and if the Minister was advised by his engineers that it was a proper work to be completed, and the Minister had no knowledge to the contrary; then, there would be a good prima facie case. But, if the Minister did not consider that it was a proper work and that the money was being wasted, that would be ample justification for not going on.

Mr. WALLACE. Where is the report of the officer to that effect?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) said the other night, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) should not think that this is all wrong because it comes from the province of Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that myself. It was the language used the other evening, in my hearing, by the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron), when he said that everything that comes from the province of Quebec was not dear to my hon. friend. I know that. I have here the report of the engineer on this work, which specifies what should be done in regard to it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Might I trouble my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) to say what he stated about the manner in which I viewed the amounts of money which were voted for the province of Quebec? I did not quite hear what the Minister of Public Works said.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was saying that, while we were discussing the Three Rivers exhibition, the other night, the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) stated that his friend (Mr. Wallace) should know a little more than he does about the province of Quebec. I am just expressing the same desire.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Of course, the Minister knows very well that it is not allowed to refer to a past debate.

Mr. WALLACE. No such insinuation as that which the Minister of Public Works has made will deter me, at any rate, from expressing my opinion on any question that comes before the House. It is simply a piece of impertinence, Sir, in my opinion, to refer to any member of this House as being unwilling to express an independent and honest view on any subject that comes before us. The assertion by the Minister of Public Works that this work is in the province of Quebec, and, if you oppose it, you are opposing the whole province of Quebec and are unwilling to give Quebec fair-play, is an assertion that is not worthy of being made in this House. The report read by the Minister says that it is not necessary to raise this wall 2½ feet in order to keep the ice from going over the road. That does not justify it as a public work, nor does it justify the Parliament of Canada in prosecuting this work.

St. Valentine, new wharf and approach.. $5,500

Mr. FOSTER. Where is this?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The wharf is on the Richelieu River, and St. Valentine is one of the parishes of the county of St. John and Iberville. It is greatly in need of this wharf.

Mr. FOSTER. How far from the mouth of the river?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About 70 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) undertaking to build all the wharfs in the province of Quebec that are on the small rivers?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I am not undertaking to do that.

Mr. FOSTER. This is most certainly a precedent for doing it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) knows very well that this is a navigable river, and there is a great deal of traffic there, especially in shipping hay. The farmers are in great need of that wharf, and, if that county had not been represented in the past by an opponent of the late Government, that wharf would have been built long ago.

Mr. MARTIN. The Minister of Public Works takes a very different ground with regard to this wharf from what he has done with regard to the wharf I referred to a few minutes ago. All he wants now is that a river must be navigable. In the case I mentioned, a Government expenditure had been made. It appeared that there is one rule regarding Quebec, and another rule regarding the province from which I come, at least.

Harbours and Rivers, Ontario..... $3,600

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the Minister providing anything for the interprovincial bridge at Ottawa?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I am not in a position to give an answer to my hon. friend. His question is one which does not come within the scope of these Estimates.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is a public work for the Dominion, and I understand that a promise was given of a grant for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that the question has been brought to the attention of the Government, but I am not in a position to give an answer to the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That my statement may not be misunderstood, I read from the organ of the Government in the city of Ottawa:

The promise of the Premier as to Governmental aid to the interprovincial bridge was so emphatic and in such unmistakable language that it is perhaps superfluous even to refer to the subject.

Then the newspaper goes on:

The public may rest assured, as we said the other day, that the work will be substantially assisted in accordance with the promise given.

But then the paper adds, in a tone not quite so confident:

Some little anxiety and doubt has been excited in certain quarters in consequence of the Supplementary Estimates not having contained any sum for the purpose.

The matter is in the hon. gentleman's department, and I think I may fairly ask him to say whether he proposes to assist that work before Parliament is called together again.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In this case, as I understand it, the question is whether this Government will give help to a railway corporation to build a bridge, and I say again that I do not think it comes within the scope of these Supplementary Estimates to say whether or not we are going to give $250,000 to that object. What would my hon. friends on the other side say if we were to-night to come to them and ask for a quarter of a million more?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is perfectly satisfactory. The hon. gentleman says the question has not been considered by the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I think not. He said it was not considered as coming within the scope of these Estimates. He did not say the question had not been considered.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think "Hansard" to-morrow will report the Minister of Public Works as saying that the subject had not been considered by the Government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that. I said that a sum of money to be voted for a railway corporation does not come within the scope of the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Perhaps the Minister of Finance will say whether the matter has been considered by the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no objection to answer the hon. gentleman's question. The matter has received some consideration, but it is not to be dealt with in the Estimates of the present session.

Port Stanley pier—Repairs..... $2,000

Mr. CASEY. I am glad to find this item in the Estimates. Port Stanley is a very important harbour just on the border of my constituency, though not in it; and, as the riding within which it is situated was not fortunate enough to elect a supporter of the Government at the last election, I feel bound to say a word about this item before it goes through. I spoke to the department some time ago about the necessity of having some temporary repairs made to the existing piers at Port Stanley, to prevent them being seriously damaged by the fall storms, and I am glad to see in the Estimates an amount which may accomplish that end. At the same time, I think it proper to notify the Government that the large district interested in the future of Port Stanley will expect something more permanent to be done in the near future for that important port. A good beginning has been made at Port Burwell at the other end of the county by the item of $15,000 in this year's Estimates, and something of a similar kind will possibly be asked for Port Stanley. But I thought it was sufficient to press the Government this year for a sum which would prevent damage to that very valuable and expensive public property by the storms of the coming season.

I hope that the Government, when they send engineers to decide as to the expenditure of this small sum, will instruct those engineers to look into the whole question of how the harbour of Port Stanley can be permanently improved at the least cost; for something in the line of permanent improvement must be done. This harbour has been sadly neglected for the last eighteen years, though represented during a considerable part of that time by friends of the late Government. Mr. Mackenzie's Government spent $7,000 or $8,000 on it, and the late Government some $5,000, but that is all it has had since it was first constructed 40 or 50 years ago. A large amount of public money was spent on it at that time, and it is not in the interest of the country that that large amount should be allowed to go to waste. I understand that there has been some hesitation in the department in regard to spending money there under the impression that the harbour was under the control of the Grand Trunk Railway. I have moved for a return which will show the exact state of the case, but I have not yet seen that return, though I hope it will be down to-morrow. At all events, when prepared, it will be a useful memorandum for the information of the Minister and the department. Whatever state of affairs may be found to exist in regard to any entanglement of that kind, I hope it will be cleared up, and that the Government will see their way next session to do something to put this important harbour back where it should be, in the list of the most important harbours on our great lakes.

To provide tug for winter mail service between Cape Traverse, P.E.I., and Cape Tormentine, N.B. .... $10,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For years we have been trying to establish better service between the capes. It has been conducted for many years back in open boats, which cross at the risk of life, and the service could be very much improved if a powerful tug were put there. I have visited the place and crossed many times myself; and every time I went there, the necessity was impressed upon me of having this experiment tried. After consulting Capt. McElhinney, the nautical officer of the department, and the best authorities I could get in Prince Edward Island, I determined to advise my colleague to put in a sum to enable the experiment to be tried. We have the offers of three tugs under consideration, and in addition we are considering the propriety of putting the "Bayfield" there instead of hiring a tug. She is up on the lakes on a hydrographic survey. She has to go into dock to be recaulked and repaired, and if sheathed all over, she would be a better boat than any of the tugs offered us for hire.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the objection to the "Stanley"?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She never could be risked there.

Mr. FOSTER. She could lie at Tormentine.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no harbour on the Island side to lie in at all. A small tug 100 feet long and of 50 horse power would make a harbour for herself in the ice. There is no wharf there, and to build one, it is estimated, would cost $300,000. We do not propose to ask for any such sum, but if the experiment be successful, it will be of great benefit to the travelling public and give us a ferry which ought to run, on most days, twice a day, as the distance across is only eight miles.

Mr. FOSTER. If this succeeds, I suppose the ice-boat service will cease?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will depend on how it will succeed. When the ice makes and this boat goes over, we will always require on her deck two ice boats in case of accident.

Mr. FOSTER. The question is whether, the passage being so short, more than one harbour is required. She could always get back to the Tormentine side, and if the weather was too bad, she would not start. In nineteen days out of twenty she could cross and make her harbour at Tormentine, and only touch at the other side to unload passengers and freight.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman were over there in the winter, he would understand that the Tormentine wharf, although very long, is not long enough to go outside of the board ice, which forms a mile or a mile and a half from the shore.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to the experiment being tried. It is one I always thought should be tried.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) On a previous occasion there was something said about bringing the "Stanley" and trying her on the route. The Minister of Marine agreed that it was objectionable to utilize such an extensive boat for an experiment of that kind, and I suggested that a powerful steam tug should be procured with which to make the experiment. I doubt very much whether a boat of sufficient capacity and suitable for the purpose could be got at a moment's notice. There are many things required that will not be found in the ordinary run of vessels. So far as the "Stanley" is concerned, she is as near perfection as anything in the shape of an ice-going vessel to be found anywhere. She performs her work exceedingly well, but there are times when she is not able to make her voyages with that regularity required, particularly for the mail service. I would suggest to the Government the advisability of getting another boat such as the "Stanley" built, and thus making a regular connection at all times. I hope the Minister of Marine will get a boat that will give this experiment a fair test, as otherwise he would only throw a damper on that route. For my own part, I am very doubtful if any boat can be found that will succeed in crossing at these two points. Certainly early in the winter season and early in the spring, there are times when there is a good deal of open water and when, in a strong breeze, the small ice boats are not able to cross, and at such times a tug would render valuable assistance. There are many things to be considered in procuring a tug for that purpose. She has to be sufficient draft, so that her propeller will be below the ice, and therefore prevent the ice interfering seriously with it. Again she has to be of very great strength to resist the ice which runs with a very powerful current at that point, several knots an hour, and if she got squeezed in between the running ice and the board ice, she would be in a very tight fix. I hope the hon. gentleman may be successful, but I doubt very much that a boat can be procured which will give the experiment a fair trial.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The difficulties are fairly stated by the hon. gentleman. He is quite correct in saying that it would be out of the question to put a valuable boat like the "Stanley" on that route, and I would not care to ask him to vote $100,000 for another "Stanley" until I have tested the feasibility of carrying out the winter service in the way I suggest. Capt. McElhinney was sent some time ago by me to Quebec, Kingston and Montreal, to examine all the different tugs there, and I communicated with all the ship-owners who had tugs suitable for the purpose, and Capt. McElhinney made personal examination of these also, and reported to me on the subject. Some of these boats, one particularly, is a very strong, steel-built boat with about 45 or 50 horse power. In many respects she seems to be a suitable boat, but I am now considering, under his advice, the desirability of fixing up the "Bayfield" instead. She seems to be a better boat even than the tug. I do not wish to be too sanguine, but the hon. gentleman knows how strong and deep the feeling is both in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island with regard to this matter. I pledged myself, if I had the power I would give it a fair trial. I am only carrying out my pledge, and I hope for the best.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P. E. I.) I have no doubt that under Capt. McElhinney the thing will get a fair trial, for no one knows the route better than he does. There are very many points to be considered in the construction of the boat as well as in her capacity for resisting the ice.

Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions
—Additional to the item of $5,000 provided in the main Estimates—The whole amount ($8,000) to be applied as follows:—The service to be performed by two approved steamers thus, daily service between Port Mulgrave, Arichat and Cape Canso; four trips a week between Port Mulgrave and Guysborough;

two trips a week during the season of navigation between Port Mulgrave and Port Hood, and one of such trips to be extended to Margaree..... $3,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose that we carry these items with the understanding that the whole matter may be discussed on the item in the main Estimates that has been reserved. I would like also to announce that on concurrence we propose to reduce the amount in the first Supplementary Estimates for the line from St. John to Liverpool, commonly called the Beaver Line, from $25,000 to $20,000. I make that announcement now so that, in case the hon. gentleman may have any remarks to make he may know that such a reduction is contemplated.

For steam service between St. John and Halifax and London (pending negotiations respecting the fast line) in addition to the $25,000 provided in the main Estimates; the whole sum of $40,000 to be applied as follows:—In the summer months a service between St. John, Halifax and London as hitherto; the winter months direct services from St. John to London, and from Halifax to London ..... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. There is evidently to be an addition to the number of vessels. Will the hon. Minister tell me what is the character of the new vessel as to size and speed?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We propose to have vessels at least as good and probably better for the service. The hon. gentleman notices that the proposition now is to have a direct service from St. John during the winter at least. Heretofore those services have been to St. John, then calling at Halifax, to which the St. John merchants object very strongly; and we propose to subdivide and have one from St. John and one from Halifax, but during the summer season the services are to be continued as at present.

Mr. FOSTER. And with reference to the new disposition of the service. Does the hon. Minister intend to impose conditions, as to the winter service, such as were imposed upon the Beaver Line last year, in the matter of the regulation of freight charges and the absolute guarantee that they should take at least maximum cargoes?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What particular regulation does the hon. gentleman refer to as to cargoes? As to the freight, these matters are now under negotiation with these gentlemen, and I propose to have maximum rates such as we exacted in the case of the Beaver Line. As regards the proposition, to which perhaps the hon. gentleman referred, with respect to the quantity of cattle—

Mr. FOSTER. Quantity of freights.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is subject to cattle being allowed to be imported freely into England, which, unfortunately, is not the case. I am not quite clear how far we could enforce this. That is a matter we are discussing.

Mr. HAGGART. Can the hon. Minister tell me whether he intends to carry out the policy of the late Government with reference to the change from Portland to St. John as the terminus of the other line of steamers that are subsidized. I understand an item is reserved so as to allow general discussion, but perhaps this subject might be dealt with now.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would suggest that as we are to have a general discussion it would be hardly worth while now to enter upon a consideration of other matters than those arising out of the item before us.

For steam service (pending negotiations respecting the fast line) between St. John, N.B., and Glasgow during the ensuing winter ..... $ 7,500

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any particular line in view for this ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Donaldson Line.

Mr. FOSTER. Just for the winter trips ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How many trips ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not less than ten, and probably thirteen.

For steam service (pending negotiations respecting fast line) between St. John, Dublin and Belfast during the ensuing winter ..... $7,500

Mr. FOSTER. What line is this ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Head Line. Similar regulations are to be made with those made with the Beaver Line. However, these are tentative propositions and it remains to be seen whether the lines will acquiesce in them. The St. John people, as the hon. gentleman knows very well, have made very strong representations on the subject, and no doubt it is important to do all we can to favour the development of winter traffic from that port now that it has become the terminal port of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Provided we don't cut it off at the other end.

Amount required to refund to Mr. James J. Foster, of Birtle, Manitoba, the bonus paid by him for a timber berth in what was known as the disputed territory..... $225

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir H. Joly de Lotbinière). The De- partment of the Interior is a legacy left me by my hon. friend for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell). A certain timber limit was granted in what is known as the disputed territory between Canada and the United States. It was granted under the condition that if no timber was cut, and it was found that these lands were in the United States, the amount paid for the license would be returned. There is a solemn declaration by Mr. Foster that no timber was taken off that lot which the Government had no right to grant, because it was found to be on the other side of the boundary line.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was not territory in dispute between Canada and the United States, but between Ontario and Manitoba.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, I beg your pardon. I am sorry to say that my hon. friend from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) did not tell me exactly where the disputed territory was.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I want to express my regret that an amount was not placed in the Estimates for the landslide at Quebec. I understood that the First Minister had been interviewed, and he expressed, according to the report I read, great sympathy with the sufferers from that accident, as we all do in that section of the country. I understood that an amount was going to be placed in the Estimates for the purpose of indemnifying those who suffered, after a commission appointed by the Government had gone into the claims to ascertain what amount it would be fair for the Government to pay to the sufferers by the landslide.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). The hon. gentleman has himself just now given the reason why no amount has been placed in the Estimates. In the course of his previous remarks, he said he had understood, and he understood correctly, that the Government intended to appoint a commission to investigate these claims. There is no need of a commission to ascertain the cause of the accident, as that is known beyond peradventure. But the Government did not feel justified in placing any sum, whether $25,000 or $50,000, or any other sum, in the Estimates, until the claims had been carefully investigated, first, as to the amount of loss of real property; and secondly, as to the loss of life—which, however, is already known—but the condition of the relatives of those who lost their lives by that accident. We have not yet any such data upon which we could decide what sum to put in the Estimates. It is the intention of the Government during recess to make a careful investigation, and I am sure that if we bring down an appropriation at the next session of Parliament for the purpose of meeting those claims, we shall have the support of my hon. friend.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand the hon. gentleman intimates that the inquiry will be as to the amount. The Government commit themselves, so to speak, to assuming the liability, and this inquiry is only to assure the amount of the payments to be made. Am I right?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not exactly. My hon. friend knows there is no legal claim against the Government, there is only a moral claim, and it is impossible to commit ourselves to make up all the losses which have been suffered. But the Government think that, after the judges who had that case in hand were forced to the conclusion that there were no legal claim for relief, they would meet the requirements of charity and of compassion, in asking Parliament to come to the relief of the indigent sufferers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then the Government is disposed to grant something?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But before deciding, they desire to ascertain how far these claims go?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It would be a misfortune if we were to acknowledge legal liability. I understand it is to be a compassionate allowance.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand that the Government, while not recognizing legal liability, before committing themselves to a claim, wish to find what amount they could fairly ask Parliament to grant. But, substantially, they intimate now their readiness to pay something?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Amount required to recoup the North-west Mounted Police for assistance to destitute Half-breeds during the years 1895-96 and 1896-97..... $500

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir H. Joly de Lotbinière). Part of this amount has been paid already by the officers of the Mounted Police in order to relieve the half-breeds. The whole amount has not been spent, and the remainder is to meet such cases of need as may occur during the winter. The condition of the half-breeds is now very painful in the North-west. Father Lacombe has obtained from the Government a grant of land, and is trying to get those who are most in need, to settle upon it. But in the meantime, some of the half-breeds are exposed to want and misery, and it has been agreed that the North-west police should be allowed to relieve them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is an unusual item, is it not?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It is something done

every year. In cases of great destitution, the officers are obliged to meet it out of their own pockets from time to time. As my hon. friend has explained, a part of this money has been already expended, and has to be recouped.

To provide for another expedition by water to Hudson Bay, to settle, if possible, the practicability of the route for commercial purposes .....$35,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course, the item speaks for itself. I was disposed, in the first place, to ask a sum of money equal to what the first expedition under Commander Gordon cost: but it was not thought by my colleagues that we could advance sufficiently for this year to justify us in asking that amount. But the preliminary arrangements can be made with $35,000, and if we go on far enough to send an expedition next spring, we can get a further amount if it is found to be required next year. I may say the expedition which went out under Commander Gordon the first year, cost $72,000: the next year he went it cost $30,000, and the third year $10,000. It is possible we may be able to fit out that expedition in time to go next spring, and, if so, we shall have to ask a further grant next year. If this matter is going to be done now, it has to be done thoroughly. It has got to be done in a manner that will leave no possible room for doubt, and if it is done in that thorough way, it will undoubtedly cost more money. All I ask for now is this amount to make preliminary arrangements.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the Minister state a little more in detail what he proposes in this connection? Does he propose to charter a special steamer and to engage a special staff as in the case of Commander Gordon? Has he arrived at any conclusion as to the officer to be in command. Lieut. Markham, now Admiral Markham, went with Commander Gordon—I do not know whether he was there in his private capacity or not—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Entirely in a private capacity.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. Minister considered how this expedition should best be conducted? There was a great deal of discussion over the report of Commander Gordon. I had great confidence indeed in that officer's judgment and ability. The hon. Minister will recollect that there was a dispute carried on for years between Admiral Markham and Commander Gordon as regards the result of that investigation, and as to the navigability of these waters for a certain period. In view of that, has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) considered any scheme which would produce a more satisfactory report as to the actual condition of navigation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not thoroughly considered it. I have contented myself with reading from Commander Gordon's reports to ascertain the lines upon which he made his investigation. I have talked the matter over generally with my colleagues, but we have not come to any definite determination yet, nor has any name been mentioned. I realize that in the selection of a man, the greatest possible care must be taken; and that only a first-class man, such a man as would give general satisfaction to the whole community, should be appointed. The matter will receive early attention at the hands of my colleagues, as soon as we can get a moment of time to consider it. The question is very important, and I am posting myself from time to time by reading Commander Gordon's report, so as to be in a position to consider it intelligently. We have not thought out yet where the boat is to be got, or what the proper and best boat is to be, but we are being advised in the matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not see how the hon. gentleman can do much effective work with $35,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not hope to do more than to make necessary preliminary preparations. I do not expect that $35,000 will meet the expenses of that expedition. To tell the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) the real facts, my colleagues put down the $35,000 because that was the amount suggested by the late Government in the estimates submitted to them. It did not pass Council, but there was a departmental estimate sent in for that amount. In all human probability, if the expedition starts next spring, a further grant will have to be asked from the House next session.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This seems to be comparatively a nominal sum, and therefore means the postponement of anything like definite arrangements.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not necessarily.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I feel almost confident that if that estimate had been submitted to Council with a view of putting it before the House on the previous occasion referred to by the hon. gentleman, it would have been materially increased, because I am sure the hon. gentleman cannot spare any of the vessels under his departmental control.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are not fit for the work.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Quite so. Practically, all this vote seems to involve is a friendly opinion on the part of the Government towards the project of an investigation. I do not think anything will be done between this and next session.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will deal with perfect frankness with my hon. friend. It has been suggested—and nothing more than a suggestion has been made—that quite probably the Imperial Government might assist us in the matter of a vessel, and steps will be taken to ascertain that more definitely. At the present moment, I cannot say more.

Mr. CASEY. I hope that this investigation will be undertaken in a spirit different from that which characterized the last investigation on the same subject. There is no doubt that it was the desire on the last occasion to find that the Hudson Straits were not navigable, and in fact I am inclined to think that hints to that effect were given to those who conducted the expedition. I merely wish to throw out one suggestion now, as we will have plenty of time to discuss it before anything is actually done. I have more than once urged in this House that the only way to make a full investigation of the navigability of the Hudson Straits—and this is really the point at issue—is to get a full powered vessel capable of sustaining the pressure of ice, and keep her sailing in and out of these straits as long as she can during the season. When she is stuck in the ice she should be let stay there until she gets out again. In the course of two or three seasons of that kind of exploring, which is the only practical way it can be done, we would get some idea as to how long these straits are navigable during the year. It is not to be assumed that the colder months of the year are the worst for passing in and out of these straits. We had explorers left out for a winter or two on the shores of Hudson Straits after the last expedition—and some of these gentlemen I know personally—but what they were able to ascertain was very indefinite. They could not tell whether or not there was open water out in the channel during the winter. I hope that whatever is done now will be done thoroughly, and it will be cheaper in the long run to do it thoroughly.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. It would be a great pity to have this enterprise undertaken in a manner which might result in creating the impression for a great many years that these straits were not navigable, when by thorough investigation we could perhaps find that they were navigable. It would be the greatest possible benefit to this country at large, and specially to Manitoba and the North-west Territories, if it were found that Hudson Straits can be navigated with success, for such a number of months in the year as would enable commerce to be carried on by this route.

Towards the expense of the meeting of the British Medical Association at Montreal .....	$5,000
---	---------

Mr. FOSTER. We should have some explanation about this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The British Medical Association, a very distinguished body representing the medical profession of the English-speaking world, is to meet in Montreal, and this vote is to assist our Montreal friends in making the occasion a notable one. I do not believe there are any men who would be more useful to Canada in making its resources known than these medical gentlemen.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. The point is not as to whether the aid should be given; but is this a contribution to the citizens' committee, who have the matter in charge in Montreal? Is it the travelling expenses of the delegates to this country, or is it for their entertainment, or what?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The travelling expenses, I understand, will be paid by the members of the medical profession themselves. It is to enable the Montreal committee, composed of medical gentlemen, I believe, to give the association a proper reception. There will be many expenses incidental to a large undertaking of that character. The committee is composed of medical gentlemen, and I am quite sure we can rely upon it that the money will be applied in the proper direction. The hon. member for one of the divisions of Montreal (Dr. Roddick) is the president of the committee, and together with Dr. Lachapelle, of Montreal, both very distinguished members of the profession, will have charge of the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the policy which was laid down by my hon. friend in reference to internal economy downstairs will prevail in this case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The medical men will be the best judges of that.

Payment of transportation expenses of His Excellency Li Hung Chang and suite through Canada from Niagara Falls to Vancouver..... $3,000

Mr. FOSTER. We want an explanation of what this is incurred for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). If any particulars are desired, my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue will be happy to furnish them. My understanding is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company bear a considerable portion of the expense, and this is our contribution. The balance will be paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. FOSTER. What does this cover?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Transportation and maintenance during the journey.

Mr. FOSTER. What about Dr. Horsey?

The FINANCE MINISTER. His expenses, I presume, will be included in the general bill. At any rate, they will be very trifling. We give this sum to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and they settle all bills.

Mr. FOSTER. Has my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue any statement to make?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir H. Joly de Lotbinière). I can only say that we attempted to receive our distinguished visitor with as much hospitality as possible. The cost of the reception at Niagara was quite out of proportion to the satisfaction it appeared to give him. The Electric Railway Company generously placed their cars at our disposal to take Li Hung Chang and his suite over the road, and show them the falls and rapids. The citizens of Niagara also contributed to do honour to our guest. When we went to Toronto, he was very well received at the exhibition there too, and I do not think we shall have to contribute in any way for that part of his entertainment. As to the remainder, I left him at Nipissing, and I am glad to believe, from a telegram received before he sailed from Vancouver, that he was perfectly satisfied with the hospitality he received at our hands.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Although the time is pressing, I think it is only right that even I should say how gratified I was at the manner in which the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue attended to these duties of hospitality on the part of Canada towards this distinguished man. While I have very strong views, and mostly in sympathy with the views of the representatives of British Columbia, in regard to the question of Chinese immigration into Canada, nevertheless we all must recognize that this distinguished man was the guest of the Canadian nation. My only regret in reference to this expenditure is that the Government felt obliged to share it with any corporation, whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any other transportation company. I think Canada has reached that period when it can be hospitable on its own account, and do such things decently and well; and, so far as the Controller of Inland Revenue is concerned, I think he discharged his duties as a representative of the Canadian Government to the satisfaction of all Canadians.

Collection of revenues—Customs—Further amount required to meet salaries and contingent expenses, Quebec .. $8,850

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would like to ask the Controller of Customs whether this item is largely made up of a deficiency which existed at the port of Montreal during the last fiscal year.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). No. The Supplementary Estimates which passed the other night provided for that. The Estimates we are preparing are with a view to securing enough to pay those at present employed with the contingencies of the various offices. The money is not necessarily all to be used; but the other night the late Finance Minister took the ground that we must confine ourselves to votes by provinces, and that we should not be allowed to do in the future as we have done in the past, apply any saving in one province to the expenses of another. On that account we feel obliged to take a full vote for the requirements of each province, as now ascertained.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think the rule has always been for Parliament to vote a sum to each province. Is it the intention of the Government to make any of these so-called extra officers in the Customs Department permanent? The subject has been one of discussion between the department here and the collector at Montreal, as to whether it would not be wise to make permanent some of these officials who have been known as supernumeraries for many years, and whose work is really of a permanent character. Some of these supernumeraries had been on the staff for twenty years and others for fifteen and ten years.

Mr. WALLACE. I am surprised to see the very large amount which the Controller of Customs is asking for that department this year. I made up the estimates for 1895-96, and went over every report very carefully, and, with a knowledge of all the business requirements, I brought in estimates for $874,000, which I considered quite ample. My hon. friend who succeeded me (Mr. Wood), brought in estimates for $902,000. We have now the main Estimates for $899,000, supplementaries $22,500, and further supplementaries $28,500, making a total of more than $950,000, a larger sum than has ever been asked for by the Customs Department. The highest expenditure on record is $924,000, and we succeeded in reducing that, without impairing the efficiency of the service, and yet we find these economical gentlemen, who have been talking of the extravagance of the Conservative party, not satisfied with spending as much money as was required when the Conservatives were in power, but largely increasing the amount, making it $76,000 more than the estimates I presented, and $48,000 more than the estimates of my successor, the member for Brockville.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot allow that to pass. The hon. gentleman reduced his estimates to $874,000, and he says he thought that was ample for the expenses. Well, I believe he did effect a reduction on paper, but only on paper. He simply made a cut off the estimates, but did not reduce the staff. He left the same staff there, and the fact of the matter is that the $22,000 which was voted the other night in the supplementaries, were voted to pay the accounts of last year, and, when the late Controller, who succeeded the hon. member for York, came in, he added largely to the list, and consequently we have to carry into 1896-97 $11,000, and some of the June accounts are not paid yet. Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to charge that to me. Without throwing all the blame on the last Controller (Mr. Wood), he is responsible for his own acts. In the main Estimates for 1895, the amount that was asked for by the then Controller (Mr. Wallace) at that time for the port of Montreal, was $38,000. He was responsible for the expenditure until the 31st December. For the six months ending 31st December, the amount paid for the services of extra officers at that port was $23,394.23, or at the rate of $46.708 per year.

Mr. WALLACE. In the month of December navigation closes, and these temporary clerks are dispensed with, until the following May, so that the next six months would not show one-half the expenditure of the year.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Then the actual pay for the whole year was $44,748.94. The hon. gentleman estimated $38,000 and said it was sufficient, which left $6,000 short, and the June accounts were not paid then, but were carried over, and there is money due on the June accounts yet that we have not been able to pay. The vote for extra officers at the port of Quebec, in 1895, in the main Estimates, was $6,500. The amount paid for the services of these extra officers, from the 1st July to the 31st December, 1895, for which the hon. gentleman was responsible, amounted to $5,423, leaving $1,100 to pay for the other six months. That was to meet the pay of the extra staff for the rest of the year, while the pay-list for six months amounted to $3,841. So that his estimate gave $1,000 to pay nearly $4,000. The total expenditure for which hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible was $9,624; yet the hon. gentleman tells us that his estimate of $6,500 was ample. He cut the amounts out of the Estimates, but he left the officers there, and they have to be paid. Some of them are not paid yet. In Charlottetown the amount of the main Estimates for 1895-96 for the pay of acting officers was $150. The expenditure for the six months ending 31st December, for which the hon. gentleman is responsible, was $474.49. At Winnipeg the vote in the main Estimates to pay extra officers was $6,500, and the expenditure for the six months referred to was $5,475.37. At the port of Vancouver the amount appropriated for extra officers, which the hon. gentleman says is sufficient, is $8,000, and the expenditure for the first six months was $4,710, or at the rate of $9,420 a year. At the port of London, he reduced the vote for permanent salaries to $12,000—it had been $13,000. And he proposed to make a reduction by superannuation, but he never superannuated anybody, and the salaries for the first six months amounted to $6,775, or at the rate of $13,550 per year. It is well enough for the hon. gentleman to say he reduced the Estimates, but he did not reduce the staff that had to be paid out of the Estimates.

Mr. WALLACE. I did superannuate at London.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman did not superannuate the man on account of whose superannuation he expected to make this reduction. Now, in the port of St. Stephen, N.B., he proposed to superannuate one of the officers and thus save $600. But the salary list was left at $6,700, while the vote was only $6,100. He reduced the vote to pay extra officers of the Board of Customs from $19,750 to $16,200. And the expenditure on this account for the first six months was $10,854. Several were added to the list of extra officers. Of course the hon. gentleman's explanation is that some were to be paid out of the 5 per cent for customs seizures, but the Auditor General held that officers could not be paid out of that fund, but that salaries must come out of appropriations made by Parliament. Here is a table showing the appropriations and the expenditures for six months:

	Amount appropriated.	Expenditure 6 months.
Ontario .....	$286,475	$145,623 35
Quebec .....	201,250	107,006 57
New Brunswick .....	88,035	44,207 29
Nova Scotia .....	108,250	54,379 66
Manitoba .....	32,250	17,492 47
British Columbia .....	60,000	32,816 10
Prince Edward Island....	16,725	8,822 16
North-west Territory ....	3,400	3,144 00
Inspection .....	21,150	11,189 87
Miscellaneous .....	15,000	6,939 41
Board of Customs .....	23,000	14,589 00
Sugar .....	4,050	2,226 00

The total estimated vote, including $5,000 for unforeseen expenses was $884,785; while the expenditure for the first six months up to the 31st December, during which the hon. gentleman administered the department himself, was $448,499.85. Half the total estimate would be $432,392.50. Thus there was a deficit of $16,000 during the six months he administered the department himself. This leaves out of account the estimate for the cruiser "Constance" because the expenditure is under the control of the Department of Marine, and we never know what it is until the end of the year. The estimate for that was $9,500, and we had to bring down an estimate of $11,062 to meet the expenditure for the year. So the hon. gentleman, while he claims to have reduced his estimates, must see that that reduction was on paper, and only on paper. While he himself is responsible for that, his successor, I think, will admit that what I say is true, that during his six months he increased by Orders in Council the salaries of these men, and added to the cost of the service very materially. That is the position in which I find the department. I am asking for a larger amount in the Estimates. The $22,000 that were voted in the supplementaries were for debts that were due from the past year, and all that has to be taken into consideration in the Estimates we are now submitting, is the amount that is in the main Estimates, and this amount is in the supplementaries now for our own purposes. If they figure up the total of their Estimates for the previous year and compare it with the Estimates we are asking here, and make allowance for the increased amount I am asking in British Columbia, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite will be prepared to vote that, as they must recognize the fact that it is possible a larger expenditure will be required—they will say that our Estimates have been prepared carefully. I do not say we will expend it all; but I say that the strong position taken by the late Finance Minister with reference to not allowing in the future what has always been allowed in the past, of savings effected in one province being applied to extra expenditures in another, forces us to take a full vote for the requirements in each province as we find them to be at the present time; and having thus taken an estimate, of course it will be our duty not to expend any of it except what we find is absolutely necessary.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentlemen says that they have been compelled to ask for a larger sum because they are not allowed to do in future what has been allowed in the past. I would like to know what difference there is between the past and the future if the votes have to be given by provinces. He has given us to understand that the vote previously has been one lump sum for all the Dominion. The hon. gentleman himself attempted to pass the Estimates through in one lump sum, and the House objected to it, because it was the custom to vote it by provinces. So there is no excuse for making a demand for a larger sum because they have to vote now by provinces. The conditions are exactly the same this year as for many years past. Now, with reference to the statement that during the six months I was Controller in 1895 the expenditures I made were only on paper, I shall be able to show that the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. He states—and of course I have not the figures to verify or contradict it—that the expenditures for the six months exceeded the amount that was appropriated in proportion for the year. Well, I can say that we reduced the expenditure. The ap-appropriation for the city of Hamilton, for instance, quoting from memory, was reduced more than $3,000, as the then acting commissioner, who is also collector at Hamilton, stated, without impairing the efficiency at the port of Hamilton. With regard to the city of Toronto, the expenditure was reduced four or five thousand dollars. These were no mere reductions on paper. He says that for the half year, during which I was Controller, the appropriation being $874,000, there were $448,000 expended, and that the half would be only $437,000. Well, that would be more than $437,000, and deducting the $437,000 which would be the half of the expenditure, from the amount which he says was expended during those six months, of $448,000, it leaves only $11,000 more expenditure than the half of the appropriation.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I stated that I had left that out.

Mr. WALLACE. The Controller of Customs tells us that during the half year $11,000 were expended, more than half of the appropriation. Suppose it was. As I pointed out before, that was largely the half year of the season of navigation. At all the large ports in the Dominion a large expenditure was incurred for the temporary service which was not incurred at all during a large portion of the other six months; and it is a proper estimate to make that $437,000 being the one half, $11,000 more was expended for the six months during the season of navigation, and that the other $426,000 would be ample for the other half of the fiscal year. There was no hap-hazard reduction of expenditure. We went over each port, carefully considering the wants, and getting all the information possible so as to make a reduction without impairing efficiency; and after months had elapsed in the financial year, the chief accountant informed me that the expenditures were being kept within the estimates. The first month or two Parliament was then in session, the proposed superannuations could not be carried out until the session of Parliament had expired, because the funds were not given, but as soon as Parliament closed we proceeded to make those reductions so as to reduce the expenditures from $924,000 to $874,000, or a reduction of $50,000. I repeat that we were keeping well within the estimate, as reported to me by the chief accountant. But what do we find with the present Controller? He is asking Parliament to vote $76,000 more, or $950,000, and he gives as a reason that we had exceeded our appropriation. It is true that Parliament was asked later on during the last session, for further sums. Well, these further sums increased this $874,000 by $28,000, making it $902,000. That was the amount voted as requested by my hon. friend the late Controller of Customs. But the hon. gentleman asks for $48,000 more, or $950,000, the largest sum that has ever been asked for by a Minister of Customs, and a sum which is entirely unnecessary.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). What particular sum can the hon. gentleman put his finger on and say is unnecessary?

Mr. WALLACE. The $10,100 for the province of Ontario is totally unnecessary, being $10,100 of an increase in the Further Supplementary Estimates. In the Supplementary Estimates the amount asked for was $22,500.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). My hon. friend is including in the amount that the Controller (Mr. Paterson) asked for, for the present year, the sum which is required to pay for the deficiencies of the last year. I want to set the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) right.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not see why there should be deficiencies for the last year?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Settle that between yourselves.

Mr. WALLACE. And suppose there are. This additional $22,000 makes a larger sum than ever was asked for, or expended by the Customs Department. The Controller (Mr. Paterson) says that he may not need all this amount, but then, why should he ask for it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) started in office about the beginning of the fiscal year, and the department should have a very close idea of its necessities because they were not estimating for five or six months ahead as is ordinarily the case. I repeat that when I was Controller, the accountant reported to me—Parliament being then in session and we being unable to make reductions until Parliament had passed the Supply Bill—the accountant reported to me that we were keeping close up to the estimates, and he expected that we would be able to keep within the amount voted by Parliament. I am aware that my hon. friend (Mr. Wood), in the face of the election, perhaps asked Parliament for a further sum during last session, but even so, is that any reason why we should be asked now for a still larger sum, after the elections are over, to reward those who supported the present Government. There is no necessity for such a large sum being voted for the Department of Customs.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I cannot allow some of the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) to pass without comment. The Chief Accountant of the Customs Department informed my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) that he could keep the expenditure within the estimates for 1895-96. Then all I can say is, that the same officer certainly reported to me that it could not be done, as also the acting Commissioner. I have no doubt that the Chief Accountant must have reported the same thing to the present Controller of Customs. I do not hesitate to say that I found the amount voted by Parliament in the Estimates of 1895-96, not sufficient. Vacancies in some places were left unfilled and they had to be provided for. I also found additional inspection necessary. I am strongly of the opinion that a larger sum of money than has ever been spent in inspection should be voted for that purpose. I do not believe that for the last ten or fifteen years there has ever been a proper inspection of all the ports of this country, and the records of some of the ports will go to show that on that account the department has met some failures. I must not allow another remark of the Controller to pass altogether unnoticed. There is such a thing as false economy, and I do not believe I have recommended any additions to the Customs staff that were not necessary in the interests of the public service. I had protests from almost every collector of customs in this country as to the insufficiency of the contingent vote; notably from the present collector at Montreal, and all the way through. I do think that the large cut, $50,000 made by my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) in the estimates for 1895-96, was altogether too much. It was the largest ever made in the history of the department. The result was that there must have been a deficiency. I wish to point out the peculiarity of the Customs Department. At the port of Montreal there are some two hundred officers, about half of whom are supernumeraries, or extras as they are called. My experience, and the experience of my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) was, that every day almost applications for permanency were made on the part of some of these officers, and I do not hesitate to say that in very many cases the applicants were perfectly justified, owing to the fact that they had been there for a great many years, and that their services could not be very well dispensed with. During the short time, comparatively speaking, that I had charge of that department, I did make recommendations for the permanent appointment of these officials, and I venture to submit to the earnest scrutiny of the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) the case of every one of these men whom I recommended for a permanent place. If he will look at the number of appointments made during the five months that I was in charge of that department—and I would remind him that there were three different persons in charge of the department during the fiscal year, 1895-96—if the hon. gentleman will examine carefully the number of recommendations that I made for permanent appointments, he will find that in every case they were necessary in the best interests of what is to my mind, by all odds, the most important service in this country.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. My remarks with reference to the Controller (Mr. Wallace) who preceded the last gentleman who spoke (Mr. Wood) were intended to point out that it would be impossible for him (Mr. Wallace) to shoulder all the blame upon the gentleman who succeeded him (Mr. Wood), because during the six months that he administered the department there were $16,000 more expended than he asked for.

Mr. WALLACE. No.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I mention that in justice to the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood). The total estimate was for $864,000.

Mr. WALLACE. The estimate was $874,000.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I left out the "Constance." However, that does not concern me, and I only mentioned it so that the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) might not have to stand all the blame of this increase. When the hon. gentleman says he would be able to meet the expenditure with $874,000, he has altogether forgotten the circumstances of the case. I have pointed out that he made the reduction on paper, but never carried it out. He made provision for reducing the expenditure by superannuation in this case and by dismissal in the other case; but he did not superannuate, he did not dismiss, he did not make his changes. The result was that during the six months he administered the department he was $16,000 short; and when, on the eve of an election or something of the kind, he found that he could not do as well even as his predecessor, he did not venture to bring down estimates for all he required. Therefore, the $22,000 or supplementary estimates voted the other night were estimates which I had to bring down to pay the debts incurred by these gentlemen in previous years. What I am asking for is the main estimates and these estimates, which together amount to $928,000. The hon. member for West York says he admitted that his successor in office brought down a supplementary estimate. So he did. A supplementary estimate of $25,000 or $26,000; but if he were perfectly frank, I think he would say that when he brought down that supplementary estimate, he was bringing down scarcely more than half as much as was requisite, but was afraid to bring down any more. Is not that correct?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). No. I am not prepared to say what the further supplementary estimates would be; but I remember that I intended to provide for a steamer on the Pacific coast, where it was much needed. But I do not think the estimates were as large as those brought down by my hon. friend.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. All I can say is that the hon. gentleman preferred to have the Government of Canada in the position of being unable to pay its public servants, and some of them have not received their pay yet. The supplementary estimates he did venture to bring down brought up the total, not to $874,000, but to $902,150.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Speaking from recollection, that included $25,000 for a steamer.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, no. The hon. gentleman is wholly wrong. If he will look he will find that that is not in the estimates at all. Now, in addition to their bringing down estimates for $902,000, there was the sum of $20,000 chargeable against them, which they ought to have estimated for, but which they did not bring down estimates for. So that it would have required $922,000 to cover what they were responsible for—to pay the increases they had laid upon the country, instead of the $928,000 which we have to ask for now. There was an inspector, Mr. McKay, appointed, for whose salary or travelling expenses no provision was made: the miscellaneous expenditure they exceeded by $890; and there was due on contingencies for 1895-96, $10,502. Here is a list, covering some sheets of paper, of officers at different ports that we were not able to pay at all, and some of them have not been paid yet; but all of them have had to wait and be paid out of these estimates now to be voted. For these arrears, amounting to $11,000, the hon. gentleman is responsible. Then there are the three months to the end of the 30th of September, for which I do not hold myself responsible; for I have not had an opportunity of examining the different ports to see where I can effect savings. I have been forced to make my estimates on the basis of the expenditures which these gentlemen have placed upon the country. What did they do by Order in Council? They made increases of salary in every direction, and put men from the extra staff upon the permanent staff, without making any provision at all in the estimates for their salaries. Here are the names, covering sheets of paper, of men appointed to positions for which no provision whatever was made in the estimates. And yet the hon. gentleman wants to hold me responsible because I have had to bring down the supplementary estimates which they ought to have brought down, to pay their debts. If they had estimated as they should have done for all the requirements they placed before the country, their estimates, instead of being $902,000, would have been $922,000; and upon the basis of present engagements and necessities, I am asking for $928,000, the supplementary estimates being entirely due to the hon. gentlemen who preceded me. The $4,600 extra is what I am talking of for British Columbia. The hon. gentleman says I am not required to take the full amount for each province by the ruling laid down here that we must confine ourselves to the votes for the province. That is true; but the other night, when I desired to have this vote taken as a lump vote, without having it distributed over the several provinces, I said that I wanted to do openly and above-board what it had been the custom to do otherwise. But the ex-Minister of Finance objected; so that, being tied down to that rule, I have to take care to estimate for each province what is required for that province, though I will save what I can out of the vote. The hon. gentleman says that was always the case. It was not, for I have this letter from the Auditor General to the Commissioner of Customs, in which, after referring to some other matters, he says:

In the last paragraph you draw my attention to the fact that the appropriations as a whole for the collection of revenue are not overdrawn.

I beg to say, while your view has been maintained by your department ever since Sir Mackenzie Bowell was Minister of Customs, the ground taken by the Minister of Finance in the House, that each sub-head of appropriation was to be taken by itself and was not to be exceeded, has no exceptions. If you desire that there should be an exception in the future so far as your department is concerned, it must be distinctly stated by the Minister of Finance or by some other person representing the Government in the House that the vote is to be taken on that condition.

When the ex-Finance Minister took exception to what was proposed, no statement was made by the Finance Minister, by which alone the Auditor General seems to think it would be possible for me to do in the coming year what he has done during all past years in reference to this amount. That is the reason, therefore, why I am taking the full estimate for each province. I again press on the House the fact that the Supplementary Estimates which we voted the other night, are estimates which should have been presented by hon. gentlemen opposite, but which they failed to present to the House. The obligations they cover were incurred by the late Government, and I cannot be held responsible for them. You can only hold me responsible for the main Estimates and the amount I am asking now

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say that the Controller who preceded him, should have provided the supplementary estimates which were passed the other night. We had no chance, no opportunity to do so, and no one knows it better than the hon. gentleman himself.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I am not attaching any blame to the hon. gentleman for not having done so, but I was answering the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace), who held me accountable for these amounts that should have been brought down by the late Government.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I asked the hon. gentleman, a short time ago, if he could name to me the number of appointments made by the outgoing Government and distinguish them from the permanent supernumeraries. The departmental procedure is very peculiar in that respect, and, if the hon. gentleman can point to a number of permanent appointments that were made to take effect from the 1st of July, when we supposed we would be in a position to pay these gentlemen, he will find that the number of permanent appointments thus made is very small. I wish to point out furthermore, that, when you transfer to the permanent staff a supernumerary, you do not thereby increase the estimate necessarily at all.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. At Antigonish, Mr. Hugh Boyd was appointed acting preventive officer on the 15th June, 1896, very near the elections, at $50 per year.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Has that been confirmed? Are you going to allow it?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot say. I have not yet had an opportunity of examining into it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am asking the hon. gentleman, in all sincerity, because he is coming down to the House and asking as large an amount as I would, and, therefore, I have the right to ask him whether he is going to pay this man?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I am going over the department, and intend to make all the saving I can. I am bound to estimate, until I know whether all these appointments are necessary or not. I do not think they are. I think the hon. gentleman has imposed upon me a duty which to me will not be personally agreeable, which a sense of public duty only would lead me to do, and that is, to dispense with the services of certain men. I thought the hon. gentleman wanted me to give the names of those he appointed. At Kemptville, there was an increase from a salary of $250 to $400. These are amounts for which there was no provision made in the Estimates at all.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The moneys are voted in the Customs Department in a lump sum to each province, and you cannot tell whether you are going to have a deficiency or not. The hon. gentleman has said that Mr. McCabe was appointed without an appropriation being made. As a matter of fact, we cannot tell, until the close of the year, what surplus or deficiency we are going to have. There are vacancies created by death or otherwise, and which are not filled, and which leave at the disposal of the department funds sufficient to meet the expense of the new appointments until the fiscal year comes on again. So that, when you say, in the case of Kemptville, that the increase of $200 was not provided for, I take issue with you, and I say that we might have a surplus at the end of the year. We might make up from one province the deficiency in the other. That is what has been done in the Customs Department.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I want to make the point very plain, because the hon. gentleman places the department in this position, that, unless there is a division made in the Public Accounts of next year, I will be charged with the increased expenditure for debts incurred by these hon. gentlemen, that I have had to pay, and I shall have to take steps to have it made plain, or I would be charged with thousands of dollars extra expenses that were paid in 1896-97. I am told that there are some $3,000 not paid yet. I am told that there are men all over the different ports who have been out of their salaries, besides contingencies, printing bills, and so forth.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). For how long before the 30th June, were they not paid?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I suppose that a month would do, scattered all over, perhaps. We have to pay it out of these appropriations voted in 1896-97.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is not that always the case?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No, these are salaries to officers, monthly salaries, and the contingencies of their offices.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The printing bills are not salaries.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That is only one item.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Very often, accounts run over one year into the early months of the succeeding year.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I intend to take a sufficient amount to pay the officers at the end of the month, when the salaries are due.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman was insinuating that there was neglect and carelessness on the part of the late Controller in allowing these to accumulate.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. It was his duty to take a sufficient estimate. When he found he had not, he ought not to have added to the fixed expenditure by putting on new officers and increasing the salaries of others. He took no estimate for Mr. McCabe's salary as inspector. Does he want me to dismiss Mr. McCabe?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I simply repeat my statement, that you cannot tell, till the end of the fiscal year 1895-96, the revenues there will be under the—

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Here is a summary of the officers that were appointed, and the increases made without being estimated for. What does the ex-

Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) think of such proceedings ?

Antigonish, N.S.—3 months salary of Hugh Boyd, appointed as acting preventive officer, 15th June, 1896, at $50 per year .....	$ 12 50

Mr. BRITTON. I notice that there was one appointment that was not read. I do not know how it was omitted. The partner of the late Controller (Mr. Wood) was appointed at a much larger salary than any mentioned by the hon. gentleman. I would like to ask the hon. Controller whether he has been able to give an increase to a very old officer to whose case I called his attention earlier in the session, Mr. Gibb?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I have not made any increases.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). No doubt my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) has a good deal of sympathy with office-holders. He has been one himself and he may be again. No doubt he would make a good judge. I have had the pleasure of meeting him in court, and I know he is a very good lawyer. So far as Mr. Webster is concerned, as his name has been mentioned, he was appointed to a vacant position for which provision had been made in the Estimates. My hon. friend himself will say he was very well fitted for the position as far as his legal abilities went. I have always contended that the Department of Customs required above all other departments, men possessing a knowledge of law, because they are not merely semi-officials, but altogether official. It is an advantage, at all events, that a man should have legal abilities in any reorganization of the department such as was recommended to me by Mr. Kilvert, and it was upon his recommendation I did act. He was appointed before the 23rd of June. There is not one of the appointments read by the Controller of Customs that he will say to-night is not necessary. He has footed up about $3,000, and that goes a very short way towards explaining the large difference in the Estimates the hon. gentleman has brought down and the Estimates that preceded him. I wish to say that some of these appointments are merely filling vacancies, as in the case of Niagara, which had existed for some time, and as in the case of Cornwall, which had existed, I think, for two years. After all that has been said as to the number of officials that were appointed, hon. gentlemen will be surprised to find that the number was so small as those named by the hon. gentleman and made during the period that I filled the office of Controller of Customs. It would be interesting if I were to go over the records of the political party opposite, and find out the number of appointments that were made by the gentleman who filled the position of collector of customs during the six months prior to the defeat of the Liberal party in 1878. I think we would find more appointments than he has read to-night. Now, I wish to repeat again that you have no right to say that no appropriations were made for those appointments because they were made in the different provinces, and you cannot tell until the close of the fiscal year whether you are going to have a surplus or a deficiency. You took very well the point that you might better lump together the votes that were granted in all the different provinces, because it undoubtedly is in the interest of the service, because, if necessity arises for a certain sum of money in Prince Edward Island and there is no sum voted by Parliament for that service, there is nothing wrong in your getting that from the same vote from the province of Quebec. But how do you know there will be a surplus in the province of Quebec? Your answer would have been: There may be a surplus. Now, that is my answer to you to-night when you state that these appointments have been made footing up $3,000; my answer is that there may have been a sum left in each province by death or otherwise, sufficient to meet the small number of appointments that were made during the last six months.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. My answer is that instead of being a surplus, there was $10,752 short. There is no "might be" about it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). You don't catch the point yet. How was I to know when I made these appointments? You knew, because when you took the Controller's office, the fiscal year had ended.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I say it is a fact that it was $10,752 short. The hon. gentleman asks why I took these votes. I have taken them because I felt it was my duty to reduce the expenditure if I could. I did what was not pleasant for me to do, but which I thought it was my duty to do. I thought that the services of some that had been employed could be dispensed with, and I have already given notice that we will not be able to continue them. Of course, I might not expend it all unless the public service demands.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman says he has estimated for every one of these men, and still he has given notice to them that he is not going to require their services.

Mr. MCGREGOR. There are four new appointments at Windsor. One gets $700, one $600, one $1,200 and one $500, and they are not on the list at all. They were all appointed between the 22nd of May and the 23rd of June.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Am I right in my recollection that you met me in the corridor and told me that the customs at Windsor needed more assistance?

Mr. MCGREGOR. No, Sir, never.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Then, I will accept the hon. gentleman's denial. But will the hon. gentleman not say to me now that they were badly in need of assistance at that port?

Mr. MCGREGOR. They discharged three men there, and better men than those you put on.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The report of the inspector does not say that.

Mr. BERGERON. I desire again to call the attention of the Controller of Customs to the case of Mr. O'Hara in the Montreal customs-house. My hon. friend the member for St. Lawrence Division of Montreal (Mr. Penny) brought the matter up last night, and impressed upon the Controller of Customs the need of paying Mr. O'Hara for the services performed by him after the death of the late collector. My hon. friend thought that the late Government might have done something in the case. Well, those of us who were here last year know that the late Government struggled for four months to get supplies and could not get any. I have something in my hand to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. I suppose it is well known that when the position of collector at Montreal became vacant, Mr. O'Hara, as assistant collector, was recommended for the post of collector, by a great many of the business men of Montreal, who pressed for his promotion. It was decided against him, and he then asked that he should at least be paid the amount of money that would have been paid to the collector at Montreal had he been appointed. I will read to the committee the answer he got from the Controller at the time. This will be interesting to my hon. friend from St. Lawrence (Mr. Penny) who says that the late Government did not care to do anything for Mr. O'Hara. The late Government believed that Mr. O'Hara deserved some recognition. The letter is dated 7th January, 1896, and is from the Hon. J. F. Wood to Mr. O'Hara. It says:

Before entirely severing my connection with the Department of Customs, I desire to convey to you the very high estimation in which I feel that the Government should regard your services to the Department of Customs during the time you had charge of the duties of acting collector at the important port of Montreal. I bespeak for Mr. White, who has within the last few days been appointed collector of customs, your hearty assistance, etc.

On the 29th January the Hon. Mr. Wood Controller of Customs wrote to Mr. White the collector of customs at Montreal as follows:—

I appreciate what you say about O'Hara's claim for a gratuity. In fact I intended to bring the matter up before this, but there has been such a pressure on my time that I have been unable to give it the necessary thought. I shall take the first opportunity of conferring with the Finance Minister on the subject.

Then, in transmitting his official request, Mr. White, the new collector of customs at Montreal, wrote the hon. the Controller of Customs, at Ottawa, as follows:—

You will remember that I have already written you on the subject urging the common justice of providing this session for the payment of the amount really due Mr. O'Hara, and I sincerely hope that an item will appear in the Supplementary Estimates for the current year (30th June, 1896) dealing with the matter. I have written to the Finance Minister on the same subject.

To this letter the Controller of Customs replied:

I have placed an amount in the Supplementary Estimates for this and shall hope to arrange for its passage through Council and Parliament, etc.

My hon. friend from St. Lawrence (Mr. Penny) will therefore see the late Government had not forgotten Mr. O'Hara's claim. Then again the collector at Montreal, writing to the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce, urging what he called "the common justice of the request of the three years difference of pay," added:

There is a widespread feeling here that this remuneration should be promptly made.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce replying to the official application of Mr. O'Hara, said:

I am quite convinced of the justice of your demand. * * * I have asked Mr. Wood to put the matter in the Supplementary Estimates for next year, which would enable you to be paid after the 1st of July. * * * I hope the payment of any amount which may be voted, until after the 1st of July, will not incommode you seriously.

That letter will show my hon. friend from St. Lawrence (Mr. Penny) that the late Government, recognized the claim of Mr. O'Hara and intended to pay it. Now, the following are some of the precedents for paying the salary of the higher office to officers filling it, for the time being, during a vacancy:

The late John Lewis, surveyor, Montreal, acted as collector from 23rd May to 1st August, 1866, interim between the death of the late Collector Holme and the appointment of the late Collector Delisie—and was paid the collector's salary instead of his own, from month to month by authorization. John Douglas, surveyor, Toronto, acted as collector there December, 1879, to April 1881, and was paid full difference between collector's salary and his own for that period—in addition to his own.

There are numerous instances where officers are paid for filling dual positions,—the salaries attached to each. Prior to 1888, the Act 51 Vic., cap. 12., sec. 12, the law (Civil Service Act, 49 Vic., chap. 17, subsec. 2 of sec 51) provided absolutely for the payment of the difference of salary. Since then, it has been the practice to provide for the same in the estimates and to apply it by vote of Parliament. For instance: John Douglas, surveyor, of Toronto, for acting as collector there 2 years, voted allowance in pay while acting, $2,666.66 vide Auditor General's Report 1890-91. Page 244 D. This was not the whole differential salary; it was, however, more than the half. D. D. O'Meara, surveyor, acting collector at Quebec, voted extra while acting, $2,200 vide Auditor General's report 1890-91. Page 249. This claim covered the period of the collector's illness as well as the interregnum between his death and the appointment of his successor; and the award, consequently, was practically the whole differential salary, or nearly so, for the period of actual vacancy. Mr. O'Hara's claim is only for the period of actual vacancy. Mr. John Conway, assistant superintendent, Lachine Canal, 1894-95, acted as superintendent after the removal of Mr. E. Kennedy, until his own promotion and appointment as superintendent, and was paid from month to month the full difference in salary, in addition to his own. Phillipe Peltier, chief clerk, Department of the Secretary of State, paid in 1891-92, full differential pay for October and November, 1893, while acting as Under Secretary of State.—vide (Auditor General's Report, 1891-92. Page 80 A.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have given the present Controller of Customs these precedents which may guide him. I am much obliged to my hon. friend from St. Lawrence (Mr. Penny) for the position which he took in this case last night, and for the manner in which he advocated Mr. O'Hara's claim. I may add that the business community of Montreal, have had nothing but compliments to pay to Mr. O'Hara for the manner in which he administered the department of customs there.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. I will say more than that, Sir. I am perfectly satisfied with the nomination of my friend Mr. White, an old member of this House. I was satisfied that he was appointed, and I think it was a very good nomination, but in order to show the strength of Mr. O'Hara's case I may add, that had it been left to the business people of Montreal, Mr. O'Hara would have been appointed collector of customs. Mr. O'Hara acted for three years as collector of customs and the sum of $4,000 was voted each year as a salary by this Parliament for the collector at Montreal. Mr. O'Hara's salary was $2,400, and it is only a matter of simple justice to him that he should be paid the difference between the $2,400 and the $4,000, which is $1,600 a year, or $4,800 for the three years. This is the claim of Mr. O'Hara, and I am very much surprised that the Government did not bring down in the Supplementary Estimates a vote of money for that purpose. I was also surprised to hear yesterday my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) say that the matter was under consideration. There is no use of that. This claim has been before the Government for a long time. I admit at once that it should have been paid by the late Government; and if there is an excuse for the late Government not having paid it, that excuse is to be found in the letter I have read from the ex-Controller of Customs, intimating that they had not time to do it. This is not a question of party politics; it is not a question of Conservative or Liberal; it is the question of a man who has been employed by the Government for thirty years, and who has served faithfully under any Government, whether Conservative or Liberal. It looks like an injustice, not only not to have paid Mr. O'Hara before to-day, but to say now that his case is under consideration. I leave the matter with the Controller of Customs, who, I know is a business man and an unbiassed man, and I am sure that he will feel that this claim should be settled. If not paid now, the claim should be taken into such serious consideration as to be paid next session.

Mr. WALLACE. With reference to the statement made by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), I think these sums should only be paid where an exceedingly strong case has been made out. I do not think the hon. gentleman has made out a strong case; and more than that, I do not think it is possible for him to do so, and I do not think the Government, even if they are considering the claim, will very seriously consider it. With reference to the statement, I might say the wild and reckless statement, made to-night by the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson), I am free to comment on it, because all the appointments or increases of officials he has named, were made after I ceased to be the Controller of Customs; therefore, I have no connection with them myself. But he makes the statement that these appointments were made without any provision having been made for them by Parliament. Surely, that is a statement which he does not believe himself, or which he made without a knowledge of the facts, because it is simply not correct. For instance, he mentions Thomas Mitchell, of Toronto, who received a salary of $750. Well, Thomas Mitchell was on the temporary staff at a salary of $730 a year, and provision was made for that. The only provision that was not made was for the increase of $20. Then, with reference to the port of Montreal, at the last session at which I brought in estimates, I provided for the transfer of eight supernumeraries who had been in the temporary employ of the Customs Department for from seven to fourteen years, from the temporary class to the permanent class; and I provided in the permanent salaries in the Estimates for every one of them, deducting a corresponding amount from the estimates for temporary clerks. The salaries being within a few dollars of each other, the only real change made was the transfer from the temporary to the permanent list. It was the same with many of the names the hon. gentleman had read. Some of the cases were vacancies. For instance, it is true there was an increase of $300 in the case of the collector at Cornwall. The late collector had died, and a new collector was appointed and given that increase of salary. At Fort Erie, G. House was an old temporary employee of the Customs Department, and he was placed on the permanent list; and so with many others. The Controller of Customs says that his estimates for the service of the Department this year, or what can properly be charged against him, amount to $928,000, though he is asking the House for $950,000. He repudiates that $22,000, because, he says, it is largely to pay accounts accrued in the previous year. Well, suppose the hon. gentleman is correct—which I do not admit—what has he to say about my estimates? He says I spent for the half year $448,000. Multiply that by two, and it will make $896,000, or $32,000 less than his own estimates for this year. That $448,000, which was spent in the first half of the fiscal year, included the pay of a large number of temporary employees, who were not engaged in the other six months at all; and I can safely say that in the port of Montreal, 30, or 40, or perhaps 50, men are engaged during the season of navigation who are not employed during the winter months at all, so that a much smaller amount will be required for the latter half of the year. But, even allowing that an equal amount would be incurred, that would make, as I have said, $32,000 less than the hon. gentleman finds it necessary to run the department for the present year. I say he is not justified in coming before Parliament and asking for such a large and unnecessary amount. More particularly, as he had told us that he has given notices to many officials that their services will not be required. If that be the case, surely not so much money will be required as last year, yet he is asking just as much, and there is no province where a larger expenditure can fairly be asked for except in the province of British Columbia, and even there scarcely any increase is needed. He says that these appointments which he read, and which were made by the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), were not provided for. They were provided for out of the $28,000 additional to the main estimates of the last fiscal year which the hon. member for Brockville asked for. Besides that, there is a sum of $5,000 voted each year for unforeseen expenses, out of which these new appointments could be met.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. If they were provided for, how is it I have this $11,000, in round numbers, to pay out of 1896-97?

Mr. WALLACE. I have not access to the figures, but I venture to say that there is a number of items which Parliament voted and which have not been expended, and which could be used for this purpose.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The whole vote was used, and you have those thousands of dollars to meet besides.

Mr. WALLACE. The $28,000 that Parliament voted in the Supplementary Estimates last year provided largely for these expenses.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That has been spent too.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, if the expenditure exceeded the amount appropriated by $11,000, Parliament voted $902,000, and that makes $913,000, yet the hon. gentleman asks for $950,000, and allowing him the $13,000, that still leaves his demand $937,000.

Mr. QUINN. I have just a few words to say in support of the stand taken by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) in advocating Mr. O'Hara's claim. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has told us that it is only when an exceedingly strong case is made out that it should be taken into consideration. Well, Mr. Chairman, on this occasion an exceedingly strong case has been made out. Mr. O'Hara has been in the service of the department over thirty years. He has occupied in the service a unique position. He has held the highest positions in it, and gained that position by his exemplary conduct and great ability, and I say without fear of contradiction that he is the most efficient and best posted officer in the Customs service.

Mr. WALLACE. Where does the hon. gentleman get his information?

Mr. QUINN. From my personal knowledge of the man and from the business men of the city of Montreal, and from my intercourse with the Customs Department before the hon. member for West York was connected with it at all. And I got it also from the Minister of Customs who occupied the position for years before the hon. member for West York ever sat in this Chamber. I have great pleasure in saying that the last Minister of Customs (Sir Mackenzie Bowell), who occupied the position, is a very strong and ardent friend and admirer of Mr. O'Hara, and has given him his very strongest support. The hon. member for West York has also said that he does not think the Government has any intention of doing anything in the matter. I regret exceedingly that such an expression should have fallen from his lips, as it indicates exactly his desire and his course of conduct in the matter and indicates the reason probably why nothing was done by the last Government.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. To whom does the hon. gentleman refer?

Mr. QUINN. I am referring to the hon. member for West York, who said, in the course of his remarks, that he did not think the Government had any intention of doing anything in the matter. That expression of opinion no doubt indicates the reason why the late Government did not act. But I hope that the hon. gentleman has not expressed the intention of the present Government in the matter. I am prepared to take the statement of the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies), backed up by the statement of the hon. leader of the Government this evening, who expressed his approval of the remarks of my hon. friend from Beauharnois—I am prepared to take their statements seriously as expressing the intention of the Government to do something in this matter, and not merely, as the hon. member for West York says, a meaningless declaration which will amount to nothing. I take it that the Government have given a serious expression of their intention in this matter, and I only hope that they will carry their intention into effect at as early a date as possible.

Mr. WALLACE. Our hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Quinn) says that Mr. O'Hara is the best posted Customs officer in the Dominion. I presume that our hon. friend is not a very good authority on that question. He will not get an approval of that statement from any man in the Customs service who is familiar with the facts. We have in the Customs Department many very able men, men who thoroughly understand the duties of the department, and who faithfully carry out the policy of the Government, and from my experience of the Department of Customs for three years, while Mr. O'Hara acted as collector of the port of Montreal, I cannot add my meed of praise to the statements of the two gentlemen from Montreal, who have not had the opportunity of knowing whether this gentleman has performed his duty properly or not.

Mr. QUINN. My authority for the statement I have made is the late Minister of Customs (Sir Mackenzie Bowell), who has supported Mr. O'Hara. And there is one thing I would like to point out. If the hon. Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) found that Mr. O'Hara was an inefficient officer, there was all the greater reason why a collector of customs should have been appointed instead of leaving Mr. O'Hara as acting collector of customs for two years as the hon. gentleman did. Surely the hon. gentleman stultifies himself by the position he takes here this evening in saying that Mr. O'Hara was not qualified for the position when he himself left Mr. O'Hara for two years as acting collector of customs.

Mr. BERGERON. Three years.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. O'Hara was acting collector of customs for one year after the hon. member left the position of Controller of Customs and while the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) occupied that position Mr. O'Hara occupied the position to the entire satisfaction of the merchants of Montreal and the general public; and I think that their commendation is more valuable to him than the commendation of the late Controller of Customs would be. I think Mr. O'Hara would stand higher with the people of Montreal than the late Controller of Customs would because one of the great sources of weakness in my campaign in Montreal was the conduct of the late Controller of Customs in the management of his department.

Mr. WALLACE. As to the statement that Mr. O'Hara is more highly regarded in Montreal than I am, I have nothing to say. I can only say that if Mr. O'Hara had performed his duties as faithfully as the hon. member for Montreal says he did, he would have stood higher in the estimation of the officers of the Customs Department than he does now.

Mr. QUINN. Mention a case in which he failed to perform his duty well.

Mr. WALLACE. He did not stand so high with—

Mr. QUINN. Let the hon. gentleman mention a case, and not merely throw out an insinuation.

Mr. WALLACE. I might repeat what a judge upon the bench said about Mr. O'Hara when he declared that he should have been dismissed from the public service.

Mr. BERGERON. What judge?

Mr. WALLACE. It does not matter?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes it does. What judge?

Mr. WALLACE. He was a judge who tried a case in which Mr. O'Hara was interested. Mr. O'Hara came before the judge—

Mr. BERGERON. What judge?

Mr. QUINN. How long ago was it, and what was the case?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman wants to know the case.

Mr. QUINN. Yes; and how long ago was it, and what were the circumstances?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know the circumstances, but I know sufficient to justify me in the statements I am making.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the name of the judge?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) can give us the name of the judge.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, I know him. Can the hon. gentleman name the judge?

Mr. WALLACE. I would ask the hon. member for Beauharnois to name him.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not here to give lessons to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WALLACE. I have made the statement.

Mr. BERGERON. Let him name the judge. I know the judge, and I will answer the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WALLACE. I am making my own statement, and I do not intend to make it at the dictation of the hon. member for Beauharnois. I say that a judge on the bench made the statement that Mr. O'Hara was unfit to remain in the public service.

Mr. QUINN. What judge was it, and where did this take place?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman knows all about it, and he can make whatever statement regarding it he likes. I am stating what the judge said. I have not the papers with me, but they are a public record.

Mr. QUINN. I think it most extraordinary that the hon. gentleman should make a statement of this kind without having the papers or being able to state some circumstances to support it.

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. gentleman knows anything about it, he knows that I am making a statement that is correct. The hon. member for Beauharnois knows that it is correct.

Mr. BERGERON. It is quite the reverse. I know what the hon. gentleman means. But it is not correct.

Mr. WALLACE. This is the statement made by the judge.

Mr. BERGERON. What judge?

Mr. WALLACE. The judge who tried the Ayer case.

Mr. QUINN. There has been no Ayer case tried for over 11 years.

Mr. WALLACE. What has that to do with it?

Mr. QUINN. Simply this—the hon. gentleman became Controller of Customs after the Ayer case, and if Mr. O'Hara was shown by the Ayer case to be unfit for the public service, why did he not dismiss him?

Mr. WALLACE. I was not aware of the circumstances in reference to Mr. O'Hara in this trial until recently. I can say further that it was not with my consent that Mr. O'Hara remained collector of the port of Montreal, because I was anxious that there should be no temporary appointment but that a permanent appointment should be made.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad the hon. gentleman has said what he has said. The case he speaks of is the Ayer case, but he does not know the name of the judge.

Mr. BRITTON. You tell it.

Mr. BERGERON. I will. It was Judge Ritchie, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Mr. O'Hara was a witness for the Government, but notwithstanding that he was in the employ of the Government he stated the truth.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know where the laugh comes in. Is it because an employee of the Government tells the truth? The lawyer for the Government in the case was Mr. Macmaster, who has been a member of this House, and who is one of the leading members of the bar of Montreal and a great Conservative. Mr. O'Hara was brought in as a witness on the Government side, and he was an employee of the Government. But, as an honest man, he told the truth. Consequently, the lawyers of the Government, who thought they had a strong case, found that they were mistaken. There were a great many technicalities in the case, which a man of Mr. O'Hara's experience was able to understand better than the lawyers were. The judge in a moment of—

Mr. WALLACE.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Weakness.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I will not say that. But he treated Mr. O'Hara very badly, I will admit that. But what is the consequence? Mr. Macmaster, who is still living, while Judge Ritchie is dead, declares that Mr. O'Hara, in the testimony he gave before the court, was perfectly correct. Is it upon this that Mr. O'Hara is to be condemned? Now, this committee represents the House of Commons, and I am very glad it has come down to this. It is upon the question raised by the hon. member for West York that justice is to be denied to Mr. O'Hara. No. This is one of the cases which explain something that the country generally has never understood and probably never will understand thoroughly. I refer to what happened in Montreal on the 23rd June last. One of the causes was the administration of the customs-house at Montreal by the Government at a time when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace), I am sorry to say, was administering the Department of Customs. What happened in Montreal? The election of Hon. James McShane and of Mr. Charbonneau—things that were corrected afterwards on the 23rd of June—are an answer to that. The Customs Department was administered in such a way that every business man in Montreal having anything to do with the customs, was angry with the Government. There was no collector, Mr. O'Hara was acting as collector. He was doing as well as he could, he was doing as well as any man dealing with him in Montreal, expected him to do. He must have been doing as well as the Government expected him to do, since they appointed no collector. My hon. friend who was then acting as Controller of Customs, would go to Montreal to meet the business men of that city, whether Conservatives or Liberals. He used to go down there, but would he call the business men of Montreal before him? Yes, he would say to them by letter: Meet me at the Montreal customs-house at such an hour. But when he went there he would meet the members of the Orange order in Montreal, find out what could be done in the order, and he neglected the commercial business of Montreal. Everything was left in the hands of the man whom he says now should not be paid because Judge Ritchie rendered judgment against him when he was a clerk, or said that he should be dismissed, a thing that the Government of the day did not believe in. But the Government had so little confidence in what Judge Ritchie had said, that they increased his salary and promoted him to the position of acting collector of customs. This is the way that the business of Montreal has been carried on by the Government of Canada. Mr. O'Hara has been acting three years as collector, doing his duty faithfully, to the satisfaction of the business community, and to the satisfaction of my hon. friend, because when he went to Montreal he never told Mr. O'Hara that he was not doing his duty. But the hon. gentleman would go into a room and meet his friends—not political friends, not the business community of Montreal, but his peculiar friends. And now he comes before Parliament and opposes justice being done to Mr. O'Hara, and I hope for the honour of Parliament, and for the honour of the Government now in power, that they will not listen to his reasons. I speak here in the name of the business men of Montreal. The Prime Minister, I know, is a just man. Let him call any one of his friends in Montreal and ask them if it is not true that Mr. O'Hara administered the business of the customs in Montreal to the satisfaction of every one. I will go further, and I will say that Mr. O'Hara has prevented the Department of Customs from committing blunders, because he refused to listen to the orders he received from Ottawa. He saved them from blunders by his remonstrance, because he knew more about customs than the hon. member for York ever knew or ever will know. This explains to-day the animosity of the hon. member for West York against Mr. O'Hara, which animosity he has carried so far as to try to-day to prevent the Government from doing justice to a man to whom justice is due.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman has been speaking about a great many matters of which he certainly can have no knowledge, and which I am in a position flatly to contradict. He says that Mr. O'Hara prevented the Government from committing many blunders in the department. Well, I would invite him, with his vast knowledge, and with his sources of information, to state one case. I challenge him to state one case to verify his statement. He cannot do it. He is simply making reckless statements; if it were not unparliamentary, I would say, statements utterly devoid of truth, but as it is not parliamentary to say it, I will leave it unsaid. He says that when I went down to the customs-house in Montreal, I did not meet the business men. Of course, he has no means of knowing. That I flatly contradict, too. I did meet the business men of Montreal every week, or every month when I went there. I met them in the room of the collector of customs, or more frequently in the room of Mr. O'Meara, the inspector of customs, himself a Roman Catholic, and who was generally present. Mr. O'Meara will not say that on any one occasion I did not meet the business men of Montreal, but met the Orangemen. I never asked a man whether he was an Orangeman or a Roman Catholic. When I was acting as Controller of Customs I treated every man fairly and impartially, and the statement of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has not a particle of foundation in fact. He says that Mr. O'Hara is an excellent collector. Well, I have said but little about him, but I said I did not think the Government were considering seriously to give him the difference between the salary he was getting as assistant, and the salary of collector at Montreal, and I do not think so now. I may be wrong, but time will tell. I said further, that I did not approve of the system of giving increased salaries in such cases. Mr. O'Hara did not perform any more work, nor work any longer hours as acting collector than he should have done in any other capacity. In fact, a general complaint was made that he did not come down to his office until nearly eleven o'clock every day, not a very good recommendation for an increase of salary. I may say that Mr. Kilvert, who was collector at Hamilton, and has been acting commissioner here for a considerable time, and a most capable officer, went down to Montreal repeatedly to set Mr. O'Hara right, and to keep him performing his duties properly. He complained to me particularly when that French treaty came into effect, that all the friction that was caused in any part of the Dominion, originated in Montreal and was caused by Mr. O'Hara. Mr. Kilvert went down to see what the trouble was, and Mr. O'Hara said: Why, there is a gentleman over there who has just been finding fault with the Government regulations carrying the French treaty into effect. Mr. Kilvert spoke to him, explaining our regulation; he was a wine importer, and he said to Mr. Kilvert: I am perfectly satisfied, and I think your regulations for carrying out the French treaty are admirable. The whole trouble was caused, as Mr. Kilvert reported to me, by Mr. O'Hara, who either did not know, or did not take the trouble to find out, what it meant. At any rate, he did not interpret and carry out the regulations which were carried out in all the other ports of the Dominion, without friction. That was the only case I know of where any trouble occurred with reference to the carrying out of the French Treaty. I say that Mr. O'Hara, in my mind, is not entitled to the very high eulogiums passed upon him by those who know nothing of the Customs Department, who do not know what is necessary to make an efficient customs officer, and who, I am free to say, are quite incompetent and unfit to judge whether a man is a good customs officer or not. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) said that I never found fault with Mr. O'Hara. How does he know that? It is not a very pleasant thing to be continually finding fault with a man, but, as I have stated, Mr. Kilvert had to go down to Montreal, on a number of occasions, to smooth matters over at that port, because Mr. O'Hara was not the very best man for the position that he occupied.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, owing to the lateness of the hour, that it would be a very good thing, if we were to finish this item and get ready for concurrence to-morrow, if my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) thinks it better to have a session of the House to-morrow. I do not think we can do anything with concurrence to-night.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would have wished that we could have taken one item on concurrence to-night.

Mr. BERGERON. I have something to say before this matter is passed over.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Do not say any more.

Mr. BERGERON. I will not be stopped in saying what I wish to say on this question. We are interested that justice should be rendered to whomsoever justice is due. My hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) is most unjust to Mr. O'Hara, who cannot be here to defend himself. I can assure the House that, if a commission were instituted, the statements made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) would be found to be entirely wrong. I did not come here prepared with a bag of proofs to enter upon a trial, but I can remember one case which I will submit to the House, and which I call to the attention of the present Controller of Customs. Here is the case. In the matter of the importation of the linings of pants pockets, there was a higher tariff put upon these articles in Montreal than was put on the same articles in Montreal and Halifax. These articles were entered at Montreal by three or four important houses, and they were charged a higher duty than if the goods were entered at Toronto. The merchants came here and remonstrated with the then Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace). They did everything they could to get justice, but they never got an answer from him. Mr. O'Hara, as an honest man, said to these merchants: "You are right; you should have the article brought into Montreal at the same price as it is brought into Toronto or Halifax." That brought the displeasure of the hon. member who was controlling the Customs department, down on Mr. O'Hara. The result was that some importers in Montreal got their entries passed in Toronto afterwards, so as to pay cheaper on these articles. There are very many more cases of the same kind. The Government, last night, took a vote of $3,000 to inquire into the penitentiaries, but I wish they had put in a small amount for examining into the customs-house, and they would probably find things that would startle them, and which would be the best answer to what my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) said.

Now, the French Treaty matter is all the reverse of what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) said it was. The merchants of Montreal went to Mr. O'Hara, and asked him what they were going to do, and he told them. He is a man who has been twenty years in the public service, and he cares no more for the Conservative party than he does for the Liberal party. The Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) sent out orders from his department completely contrary to what Mr. O'Hara said, and, when Mr. Kilvert came to Montreal, he found out that Mr. O'Hara was right, and that my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) was wrong. I will not drop this matter. I say, Sir, that, as a matter of justice, an investigation should be held into the administration of the Customs Department for the last few years, and I say that the members of this House would be startled at the revelations.

Mr. QUINN. It is exceedingly painful for me to be obliged to trouble the House for so long a time with this matter, but as I would consider myself a physical coward, if I were to allow a friend of mine to be slandered in my presence, so I would consider myself wanting in my duty to a friendship which I treasure highly, a friendship extending over thirty years, were I to allow to go unanswered the attack of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) on Mr. O'Hara. The hon. member (Mr. Wallace) has said that persons who have had no experience in customs or departmental matters in connection with customs, have no right to pronounce an opinion upon a question of this kind. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) has acquired all his knowledge from a two-years' connection with the Customs Department, as Controller, from which office he retired, or—I do not know what—either at his own will or at the will of somebody else. He, therefore, sets himself up as the sole judge of what should be done, or what should be said in connection with every matter in regard to customs. I have not the same vanity as my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace); I have not the same record as Controller of Customs; but I have had a connection with the Customs Department of this country for the last fifteen years. I venture to say I have had a very much larger, and longer, and more important, connection with that department than had my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace), even taking into consideration his two-years' controllership. I have had experience, not the experience of an office man, but the experience of a man of business, of a lawyer, who has conducted most important cases in connection with the Customs Department in Canada and the United States. Not only that, but I have had intercourse with merchants in Montreal who know more about customs than the late Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) ever knew in his life, or ever could know. You will see his appreciation of the manner in which this matter should be judged by the very first statement he makes. He (Mr. Wallace) said that Mr. O'Hara had no greater work, and that no more of his time was occupied as collector of customs than as assistant collector of customs; and, because, forsooth, Mr. O'Hara has not worked over-time at nights, he should not be given his salary. Is that the basis upon which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) proceeds? If so, the labourers in the department worked longer than the collector of customs, and, on that argument, they should have received the $4,000 a year. According to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace), it is not for the responsibility of the position that the collector of customs is to receive $4,000 a year, but for the length of time he stays in his office or the laborious work he does. I have only to mention an argument like that to show its absurdity. I am not in a position to contradict the hon. member (Mr. Wallace), when he states that Mr. Kilvert made a report to him, but it is unfortunate that the committee has not that report. I would ask the present Controller of Customs to see if that document exists, for, if such a document does exist, it will be in the records of the department. I confidently ask the Controller of Customs to see that report of Mr. Kilvert's; and if it is not one of those verbal and private reports which the late Controller of Customs has probably been in the habit of receiving in regard to his officers, but an official report, I trust the hon. Controller will examine it and base upon it his judgment in regard to the claim of Mr. O'Hara. The late Controller (Mr. Wallace) after setting himself up as a judge, and setting down everybody else who does not agree with him, says that Mr. O'Hara is not entitled, in his opinion at any rate, to be paid. But the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has read the opinion of the late Controller of Customs, the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) in approval of Mr. O'Hara's claim; and I have no hesitation in saying, what I had from the lips of Sir Mackenzie Bowell himself, that Sir Mackenzie Bowell would thoroughly sanction any vote that would be passed in favour of Mr. O'Hara, whom he looks upon as one of the most efficient officers in the Department of Customs. Furthermore, I have no hesitation in saying that at one time it was proposed, and was nearly being carried out but for the interference of the late Controller of Customs, to bring Mr. O'Hara to Ottawa as commissioner or assistant commissioner of customs. But he does not need my approval when he has the approval of such men as I have mentioned. I say it is only a matter of justice. Mr. O'Hara, since the time of which the hon. member for West York speaks, has received two promotions. He was at that time simply a chief clerk in the Montreal customs-house; that was in 1884. The hon. gentleman speaks of the case of Ayers & Co. I happened to be one of the counsel of the Ayers at the time, and I happen to know something about that case. It is not for me to say whether Judge Ritchie was right or wrong, as his judgment was in my favour. I know the circumstances of the case, and if they were disclosed to this House, they would not be to the discredit of Mr. O'Hara. But since 1885, when this trial took place before Judge Ritchie, Mr. O'Hara has received two promotions. He has been promoted from the position of a first-class clerk to that of pro-collector, as the position was called at that time; and later on, when the change was made by which Mr. Boyer was made surveyor, the then Hon. Mr. Chapleau, now Sir Adolphe Chapleau, created Mr. O'Hara assistant collector of the port of Montreal, in order to occupy a position superior to that of surveyor of the port. This was because the influence was so strong in favour of Mr. Boyer that he was appointed surveyor, and Mr. O'Hara's claims were recognized by his appointment to the other position with an increase of $400 to his salary. After this, so confident was the department over which the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) presided, that it did not hesitate to leave the position of collector of customs at the port of Montreal open for two years, and it remained open for a year afterwards, during all of which time Mr. O'Hara occupied the chair of collector of customs. But my hon. friend says that was not at his wish. Probably he would not have any hesitation in telling us at whose wish Mr. O'Hara was kept there. Evidently at the wish of somebody who appreciated his services and understood the wishes of the department, or possibly at the wish of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who was Premier at the time. I do not wish to say anything harsh about anybody. Probably too much has been said already, and it would be well to throw some oil on the troubled waters; but I do ask the Government to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for West York, and hold an investigation, and see whether these charges which are insinuated by that hon. gentleman against Mr. O'Hara are true. If they are proven to be true, I will be one of the first to say he is not entitled to consideration; but having full confidence in his honesty and integrity after an acquaintance with him of over thirty years, knowing well his ability in the position he occupies, knowing well his interest in the public service, after the experience I have had with him in many cases in which he has been acting against me on behalf of the Department of Customs, and knowing well how highly qualified he is for his position, I have every confidence in urging his claim upon the Government, and asking them to hold their investigation, which I am perfectly sure will be conducted in a perfectly fair and honourable manner.

Mr. WALLACE. I am sure the House must be greatly edified with the statements made by the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Quinn), in which he has told us of his great legal abilities, his conduct of such great and important cases in the courts, and his very wide and extensive business experience. I do not suppose there was a member of this House aware of these facts until the member for Montreal himself so modestly informed the House of them. We cannot dispute them; why should we? Has not the hon. member himself told us what a great man he is, what a great light he has been in Montreal, and consequently what a magnificent luminary he will be in the Parliament at Ottawa? There is quite a contrast, however, when you compare that eulogy of himself with the statement he has made with regard to the late chief justice of the Supreme Court of Canada; I think that was the position held by Judge Ritchie. The chief justice, I believe, was acknowledged to be a gentleman of high legal ability, who was promoted to that position, which I suppose our friend the member for Montreal thinks he is entitled to occupy better than Judge Ritchie.

Mr. QUINN. You will never occupy it or anything like it.

Mr. WALLACE. I am sure I shall not, and I am just as sure the member for Montreal will not either. If appointed to a position commensurate with his great abilities, he might perhaps be police magistrate, but I do not think he would. I do not think any governing body that has the power of appointment, except the member himself, would appoint him to any judicial position. I think he has never demonstrated, notwithstanding his high eulogy of himself, his fitness to occupy any position. In reply to what I said, that Mr. O'Hara was not judged so highly by an eminent judge, I am told that was only Judge Ritchie, and I think the hon. member for Beauharnois told us that Judge Ritchie was mistaken in his opinion of Mr. O'Hara.

Mr. BERGERON. I never said that.

Mr. WALLACE. What then?

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman does not remember at all what I said. I said that Mr. Macmaster had said.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, that Mr. Macmaster had said that Mr. O'Hara was not such a character as Judge Ritchie had described him to be. That is Judge Ritchie's opinion, at any rate.

Mr. BERGERON. He is dead now.

Mr. QUINN.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, he is dead now.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose we leave it all over till he comes back.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, Judge Ritchie after examining this man himself, has put on record his opinion of Mr. O'Hara; that is all I say about it. The fact that Mr. McMaster said that he did not think Judge Ritchie's opinion was deserved does not alter the fact that he gave that opinion.

Mr. BERGERON. The Government did not believe it.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know whether they believed it or not. I do not know whether it was called to the Government's attention or not. If it were called to their attention, and the Government did not take some action, they were derelict in their duty. With reference to the statement about myself, I have never posed as a very great man. The hon. gentleman says I will never be a judge of the Supreme Court. I do not suppose I ever will, and I am not going to commence the study of law now. I have not had the benefit of the study of law, except as one studies it in Parliament, and I am very glad of it, for one reason, and that is that I will not have to keep company with the hon. member for Montreal.

Mr. QUINN. The hon. member for Montreal will have something to say about that.

Mr. WALLACE. Both these gentlemen say an investigation should be held into the conduct of the Customs Department. If they chose to insinuate anything about my conduct as Controller of Customs, I challenge them to make an investigation. They dare not make a charge, they dare not go further than make a mean insinuation, they dare not make a statement impugning my conduct in any way while I was Controller of Customs, for three years. I challenge these gentlemen to back up their insinuations.

Mr. QUINN. I rise to a point of order. I did not say anything concerning an investigation regarding the Controldership of Customs or the late Controller of Customs. I did not refer to him any more than was absolutely necessary, for reasons best known to myself. I referred simply to the investigation he suggested with regard to Mr. O'Hara.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not raising a point of order.

Mr. WALLACE. As the learned gentleman does not even know enough of law to know what a point of order is, I do not think I need make any reference to a gentleman of such great legal talents and business ability. I say simply what I said before, that I challenge these gentlemen to make a statement or any charge that would impugn my honesty or my conduct while I was Controller of Customs for three years. Further, he makes the insinuation that I left the department without my own consent. He might have confined himself to the first portion of the sentence, for it was with my consent.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Thank God.

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. gentleman who made that remark, ever occupies any position, I hope he will leave with his consent, and not be kicked out.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want the hon. member for West York to be under the impression that I said or insinuated anything against his administration, as far as his honesty or honour is concerned. Not at all. I would be sorry he would believe that. I said that the administration of Customs, during these years, was not satisfactory to the business men, and I am borne out in that statement by the fact that the business community asked for the establishment of a board, which would see that the same tariff would be imposed throughout every province. But, in saying this, I made no personal charge against the hon. gentleman. Had I thought that he was not honestly administering his department, I would not have supported the Government of which he was a member.

Resolutions reported.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTATION ACT.

Bill (No. 33) to amend the North-west Territories Representation Act, by dispensing with the preparation of the voters' lists in certain cases (Mr. Fitzpatrick) was read the second time, considered in committee, and read the third time and passed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS—MEMBERS' INDEMNITY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I propose with the unanimous consent of the House, to move a resolution for a Committee of the Whole on the subject of allowance for days of absence. I propose that, instead of twelve days, which was formerly allowed, it be eight days. The following is the resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that for the present session of Parliament the deduction of eight dollars per day mentioned in section 26 of the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, Chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be made for eight days in the case of a member who has been absent from the sitting of the House of which he is a member, or of some committee thereof, during such number of days, but that this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section 25 of the said Act, and that in the case of a member elected since the commencement of the present session it shall not apply to days prior to his election.

Resolution considered in committee and reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE introduced Bill (No. 40) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, which was read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolution adopted in Committee of Supply, September 29.

Salary of an additional county judge in Manitoba .....$2,000

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I would like to add a word or two to what was said when this matter came up in the committee. I now produce the additional informations asked for at that time. I produce a letter from Judge Walker to Attorney General Sifton, and a telegram from Attorney General Sifton when this matter was under consideration a few days ago. The principle upon which judges should be appointed was considered by the House, and the Prime Minister said that as the organization and maintenance of the courts were under the control of the local legislatures, when the appointment of a judge was declared to be necessary, it was the duty of the Federal Parliament to make the appointment. When he made that statement there appeared to be some doubt about it in the House, and I thought myself it was perhaps rather wide in character, that the assertion was somewhat sweeping. But after having looked into the authorities I find that the statement made by the Prime Minister was practically that made in substance by Sir John A. Macdonald and by Sir Alexander Campbell, when dealing with a matter exactly similar to the present one, that is to say, the appointment of a Supreme Court Judge in British Columbia in 1879. Sir John A. Macdonald used these words, as found on page 118 of the first volume of "Hansard," for 1880:

But, as has been said before, it is very difficult indeed for the federal Parliament to decide, when a wish is expressed by the legislature of any province, that it should be disregarded. The constitution, organization and maintenance of the courts are left to the provincial legislatures. The costs and responsibility for the administration of justice, excepting the salaries of the Superior Court judges, are thrown upon the different provinces, whose governments are responsible for their peace and good government. So that, when a provincial legislature passes an Act, declaring that an additional number of judges is required for the due administration of justice, it is incurring a great responsibility for the federal Parliament and Government to say: You do not want them; you can administer justice and keep the peace of the land without them. As a general rule, I think we may safely trust to the discretion of the provincial legislatures in this regard.

Further on, he goes on to say:

The burden of the administration of justice is thrown on the provincial legislatures; and when such powers are given them exclusively, we having no right to interfere with their powers, it is assuming a very great responsibility for us to say: Although you declare certain judges are wanted, and have passed an Act constituting a particular court, we refuse you the means as required to carry that policy into effect.

These are in terms almost the words used by the Prime Minister. Another prominent authority, Sir Alexander Campbell, spoke on the same subject. He was speaking in 1880, because the Bill was first rejected by the Senate and came up the second time for consideration. His statement will be found in the Senate debates, page 460:

The House is, no doubt aware, by the British North America Act it rests with the provinces to make their arrangements about the courts and judiciary divisions and general arrangements of that character in their several localities. The section is 92, subsection 14 of the Act gives exclusive powers to the local legislatures in the administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts. The province of British Columbia, in the exercise of this power, has passed an Act by which an alteration is made in their system of judicature, they have proposed to add two judges to the Supreme Court—and they do that in lieu, I believe, of some local or district judges who now exist. It is the duty of the Parliament of this country to provide salaries for these two additional judges, and that is the object of this Bill.

He goes on:

I should be very sorry to see anything of the kind happen. Whether they have done right or they have done wrong, it seems to me it would be very unfortunate if the legislature of the province were counteracted in a plan of this kind, by the refusal of the Parliament of the Dominion to grant the salaries necessary for the judges. It would be an attack upon their autonomy, which might be attended with very unpleasant and untoward circumstances and which might result in considerable inconvenience.

I draw special attention to the next sentence and to its applicability to the present condition of things in Manitoba:

I should be particularly sorry to see anything of the kind occur just now in British Columbia, where, unfortunately, the people are not over content as matters stand; and where, in my humble judgment, they have some ground for grievance against the Dominion, without adding anything to it by refusing the salaries of two judges, to establish the court which they consider desirable.

He goes on to say, speaking about the necessity of appointments:

But in my mind, as long as they are there, we must listen to them as representing the views of the people of British Columbia, speaking in a proper and legitimate way. This Bill is brought in to give effect to the Act which they have passed. I understand from some hon. gentlemen, who are good enough to support the Government in this House, an opinion has got abroad that the Government is indifferent as to the success of this Bill, and that they would not complain if it did not pass through this House.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand both these references are to the same Bill?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. Now the same matter came up in the House of Commons, and Mr. Edward Blake, who was then a member of the House, spoke on the subject, but he would not go so far as Sir Alexander Campbell and Sir John A. Macdonald. He said it was true that the organization and maintenance of the courts was within the scope of the powers given to the local legislature, but that the Dominion Parliament are trustees for the people of Canada, and we ought, in the exercise of our discretion, to see that when a court is constituted, it shall be provided with judges. We ought to exercise a discretion in the matter. That is the limitation made by Mr. Blake. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) said that when reports of this sort came before him when Minister of Justice, they were careful to make an investigation to ascertain if necessity really existed for the appointment. I will draw his attention to two cases I have in my hand. One case was the last appointment made in Manitoba, the case of Mr. Locke. My hon. friend pretends that in this case we had not made proper investigation, whereas I have produced the report of the Attorney General, and the letter of the judge, and I have referred specially to that which was said the other night by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière). I gave all this evidence. What evidence had my hon. friend before him in the case of Judge Locke.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What year was that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It was to Sir John Thompson, in 1894. What has the Minister of Justice then before him? He had a private letter written to him by Mr. Daly, saying that he wanted this appointment made.

The PRIME MINISTER. Read the letter.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The letter is dated 21st July, 1894, and in it Mr. Daly addresses the Minister of Justice as follows:—

My dear Sir John,—

I ask to have Mr. Carter Locke, Q. C., appointed return revising officer for Lisgar in the new constituency carved out of the east end of my own.

As Mr. Locke is my nominee, for the new county court judgeship in Manitoba, could he not be appointed county judge previous to his appointment as revising barrister, or the appointments made simultaneously. His appointment would be for the southern division of the eastern judicial district of Manitoba.

That is all there is in the record. There is not a single word, not a single request from the judge, nor any manifestation of a desire on the part of the Attorney General as to the necessity for this appointment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was not that to fill a vacancy ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, this appointment was made because an Order in Council was passed by the executive of Manitoba creating a judicial division. Notice was taken of that Order in Council, and this appointment was made. Now, there is a good deal more than that. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) referred to the Quebec case, and he said that in the province of Quebec new judgeships had been created by the local authority, and that these vacancies had not been filled.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I said that application had been made under that statute passed before confederation, and re-enacted afterwards, providing for the appointment of assistant judges, so-called, and the department had not acted upon that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The section of the statute my hon. friend refers to was passed, not for any case that has ever occurred since confederation. The second statute was passed to appoint 'ad hoc' judges for the Superior Court, and assistant judges, but the object in view at the time that first Act was passed was to enable assistant judges to be appointed to replace these judges that had been taken from the bench to codify our laws. As a matter of fact, when the three judges were taken to codify our laws in 1857, two judges were appointed to replace them. Mr. Parkin, whom the members of the Quebec bar will remember, was made a judge; and Mr. Taschereau, afterwards judge of the Supreme Court, was also created a judge. In our province you have 'ad hoc' judges constantly appointed in so far as the Queen's Bench is concerned. As a matter of curiosity I took occasion to look into the number of appointments that were made since confederation under this provision applicable to the Court of Queen's Bench in our province, and there have been no less than forty of them. I have a few of them in my mind now. One was when Judge Ouimet was appointed to replace Judge Baby in the Queen's Bench, and another when Judge Marcus Doherty was appointed to replace Judge Church. This is constantly done in the province of Quebec. Hon. gentlemen opposite consider the system of appointing 'ad hoc' judges a grave scandal, but I may say 'en passant' that the thing is done continually in our province and we have never suffered any inconvenience from it. There is no judicial system in the world where 'ad hoc' judges are not to be found. Let me deal now with the case in the province of Quebec to which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) referred. There are vacancies which might be created in Quebec now; two in the Queen's Bench under the statute of 1890, and one in the district of St. Francis; but none of these statutes are in force and they cannot be brought into force except by proclamation, which proclamation has not been issued. But, Sir, notwithstanding the fact that no proclamation issued providing for the appointment of an additional judge in the district of St. Francis, what did the late Government do? They proceeded to prepare for the appointment of a judge of the Superior Court in the district of St. Francis, and notwithstanding that the statute was not in force and could only be brought into force by proclamation, to what source did hon. gentlemen opposite go for information as to the necessity for the appointment of that judge. They applied to Mr. Justice White, then judge of the district, by letter of the 3rd of January, 1896. That is exactly a similar course to what is pursued in this instance. In addition to that they applied to the Attorney General of the province by letter of the same date. These are the two sources from which they sought information, and these are the same sources to which we have gone in this Manitoba case. Let me read the answer of the Assistant Attorney General of the province of Quebec, acting for the Attorney General in this matter:

The Attorney General has requested me to say in reply to your last letter dated the 23rd inst., in relation to the appointment of a second judge of the Superior Court for the district of St. Francis, that he regrets that circumstances over which he has no control prevented him from answering your favour of the 3rd of January before this.

There is no doubt in the Attorney General's mind that there is enough work in the district of St. Francis to warrant the appointment of a second judge. As to the advisability or possibility of transferring a judge from some other district to the district of St. Francis, this is a question upon which the Attorney General is not prepared to express an opinion.

That is not a very strong request from the Attorney General for the appointment of an additional judge. Far from it. It seems to me that it is a very strong suggestion that there are probably enough judges to do the work.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is speaking of a transfer and not of an appointment.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am speaking of an appointment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Without statute and without authority.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Oh, yes, I will show you how it is an appointment. I will refer you to what took place after the letter of the Attorney General was received. How did my hon. friends of the late Government proceed? They did it in this way:

Mr. Dickey moved that the House do go into committee of the whole on Monday next to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts by providing for the salary of an additional judge of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, at a salary of $4,000 per annum.

Whereupon Mr. Dickey informed the House that His Excellency the Governor General having been informed of the subject-matter of the said proposed resolutions, recommends it to the House.

Ordered that the House do go into committee of the whole on Monday next to consider the said resolution.

Here is a resolution introduced for the purpose of giving effect to this appointment. Of course, the matter did not go further, for I presume that it suffered the fate of all the other suggestions of the late Government during the last session.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And the judge was not appointed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, and why? It seems to me that my hon. friends opposite did their best to appoint him, when their Minister of Justice introduced a resolution asking an amount necessary to provide for the salary of the judge, and the amendment of the statute. Surely the Minister of Justice would not have done that had he not intended to give effect to the resolution. I am mentioning this, not for the purpose of any reproach to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), but simply to show that in this matter we have taken the same precautions that the late Government did when they came to make an appointment for the District of St. Francis. They applied to the Attorney General of the province and to the judge of the district. These are the two sources to which the late Government went. When this present appointment came to be made, we got our information from the same sources upon which hon. gentlemen when in power relied. Further than that, when it came to be a question of making an appointment in Manitoba, our hon. friends made the appointment on the simple request of a Minister from the place, without any reference whatever to the local authorities. Surely, he cannot find fault with the present Government having taken the extra precautions they have taken in this case. Coming now to the other question, as to the necessity for this appointment, my hon. friend made a comparison of Manitoba with Nova Scotia saying that it was not proper that we should have an additional judge for Manitoba, when there were so few in Nova Scotia in proportion to the population. But the hon. gentleman has not made a fair comparison. The conditions are not at all the same. The means of communication, the area of the country, and so forth, are not to be compared at all. But let us make a comparison of Manitoba with British Columbia, and what do we find? The population of British Columbia is about 100,000; it has nine judges, and the expense of maintaining these judges amounts to $31,450 a year. In Manitoba, where this new judge is to be appointed, there is double the population and the same number of judges, and the expenditure will be $28,600. That seems to be a fairer comparison than the other. I do not wish to take up the time of the House any longer. I must express my gratitude to hon. gentlemen opposite for enabling me to make this statement. I give the House these facts and figures, and I place the report I have here at the disposal of the hon. member for Pictou.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I almost regret, though for some reason I do not, that I shall have to ask the indulgence of the House to consider the subject a little further, not at very great length though at too great a length for the present sitting. I have looked carefully into the subject, I have followed the hon. Solicitor General with great interest, and I think there is a little more to be said which may be of some advantage to the House. I, therefore, move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier) moved:

That when the House adjourns this day, it do stand adjourned until two o'clock in the afternoon of this day, and that Government Orders have precedence during the sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.30 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 3rd October, 1896.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRINTING COMMITTEE REPORT.

Mr. GIBSON moved that the second and third report of the Committee on Printing be adopted.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know what became of Mr. Boulet, and who is this Mr. Roger?

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Boulet is dead, Mr. Roger was recommended by the Queen's Printer to be promoted to Mr. Boulet's place, and his promotion effects a saving of $400 a year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Roger is a splendid man for the work.

Mr. GIBSON. The committee thought that Mr. Botterell was entitled to help inasmuch as his office is kept open until one and two o'clock in the morning. The other man appointed at $500 a year is a new man and a graduate of Toronto University.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. GILLIES. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to make a personal explanation. It will be in the recollection of the House that quite a discussion arose recently in connection with the contract of Mr. Morrison for the mail service between Hawkesbury and Sydney. I find an editorial in the Halifax "Morning Chronicle," of the 30th September, that does myself a gross injustice, and with the permission of the House I will read an extract from that article :

So the distinguished member for Richmond, Cape Breton, had an apparition of political blue ruin staring him in the face something over a year ago, and it cost the treasury, not the exchequer of Mr. Gillies, to scare off the apparition something like $6,300. That is, the mail contract between Port Hawkesbury and Sydney was relet to John Morrison for $9,000, at the very time that there was a tender in the Postmaster General's Department at Ottawa offering to do the work for $2,700.

* * * * *

Here was Mr. Gillies, M.P., for Richmond, C.B., able to have a $9,000 contract continued for another year, with an offer in the department to do the same work for $2,700.

I wish to say there is not a scintilla of truth in this statement. There was no tender for $2,700 now or at any other time in the department to do this service. Consequently there was no tender for that amount for me to head off nor any tender headed off by me. The tenders were regularly called for by the department, and two were filled—one by Mr. McInnis to do the work for $6,970, and the other by Mr. John Morrison for $9,000. The former withdrew, and the tender of the latter was accepted. The department could not do otherwise. I can only say that the statement is a base, contemptible, wanton, wilful and malicious perversion of the facts.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions adopted in Committee of Supply, September 23, 24, 25, 28.

Clothing and necessaries, ordinary vote.. $90,000

Mr. TAYLOR. I read a letter here a few days ago from Captain Webster Augustus, who had been sail-maker for some 18 years in the military stores at Kingston. I asked the Minister of Militia if he had been dismissed for political reasons, and the Minister replied that such was not the case. I received a letter this morning from Captain Augustus, in which he says :

I must thank you for bringing my name before the Minister of Militia, who, I understood to have said that I was not discharged for political reasons, but that there was no person needed there. However, there were two men sent to the militia stores this morning to take my place. This is economy with a vengeance.

And he inclosed a clipping taken from the "Whig," which says :

Albert E. Brough and James A. Jaquith have been appointed as assistants at the military stores department, where the return of stores from the volunteer camps has brought a great increase of repairing, assorting and storing. Harvey Chadwick has been allotted the carting for the military college, not for the military stores.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg to call the attention of the leader of the Government to the fact that it deprives the House of all the freedom it ought to have on concurrence, to have the Ministers absent. Now, this is an important matter. The Minister made a statement that a certain person was dismissed because there was no work for him to do. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) has information from the dismissed gentleman that two already had been sent to do that work, and the hon. gentleman reads, in confirmation of that, an item from a newspaper. The other Ministers, of course, do not know the routine of the Militia Department and cannot give an answer to the hon. gentleman. I have two or three matters with regard to post offices, to which I wish to call attention, and I do not see the Postmaster General here.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Postmaster General will be here in a moment. I am sorry to say that the Minister of Militia has suddenly been called away on urgent business.

Mr. FOSTER. Will he be here on Monday ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, he cannot be here on Monday.

Mr. FOSTER. It is awkward that the Minister of Militia is not here, but I suppose, if the business is urgent, his absence cannot be avoided.

Mr. FOSTER. There were certain questions which the postmaster General was to answer in concurrence on this item with reference to the vending of the stamps at the Toronto post office. I wish to ask, in the first place, what is the gross amount of the sales at the post office under the former tender of Mr. Dixon, and what does the commission amount to per year? I would like to know, also, who Mr. Hewitt is, as to whether he is a resident of the city of Toronto, or where he comes? Also, whether the Postmaster General is assured of what he said, that Mr. Dixon is a member of a wholesale house in the city of Toronto.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). If I have not the answers to all the hon. gentleman's questions, I hope the hon. gentleman will excuse me, because I have been working in my department and did not know this question was coming up at the moment. I had a letter from my deputy on the subject, which, I am sorry to say, I did not bring with me. Speaking from memory, the letter informs me that Mr. Dixon's profits from the office amounted to something over $1,300 a year, and at 1 per cent that would represent gross sales of about $30,000. I have the precise figures in the letter, but I dare say that is close enough. Mr. Dixon is a member of a wholesale firm, as I learned in a communication directly from himself. Mr. Hewitt is a resident of the city of Toronto, and has been a resident.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He is not a resident.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is a resident. I think he is a gentleman about seventy years of age. I observe in the morning's "Citizen" that he is described as the private secretary of His Excellency the Governor General. I was not aware of his having that position. He was at one time a hardware merchant in the city of Toronto, but was unfortunate in business many years ago, and has never since been able to recover himself. Being advanced in years, he has been in very straitened circumstances all this time. I may tell the hon. gentleman, and I think he will find it to be the case, that public opinion in the city of Toronto wholly acquiesces in the action of the department. I would say that since that letter was last before the committee, Mr. Dixon communicated with me, stating that he had devoted nearly all the proceeds of the office to works of charity; and on that point I have no reason to doubt the accuracy of his statement. He stated further that he was willing to undertake to devote all the profits of the office to charity, were he allowed to retain it. So the House will see that no pecuniary loss was occasioned to Mr. Dixon by the transfer of the office from himself, he having devoted, and being prepared to continue to devote, the proceeds generally to charity. So that the Government in selecting a most worthy object of charity, Mr. Hewitt, have really lived up to the spirit of Mr. Dixon's views.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the $1,300 profit over and above what he paid for clerk hire?

Mr. FOSTER.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have no knowledge of that. The deputy gave me that as the profits on the business out of which he would pay the expenses. I would further say, and I am not disclosing any breach of confidence in saying it, that reference has been made to Mr. Samuel Blake, and my colleague in the Senate was asked the question there as to whether the department had or had not received a communication from Mr. Blake strongly protesting against this transfer. I gave Sir Oliver Mowat the answer on that point which, perhaps, I may repeat here, and it was that there had been no letters of that character received from any Liberals or from any person. I have received something of the nature of an inquiry on the subject from Mr. Blake, for information, and when I replied, I received yesterday another letter from Mr. Blake, which I do not happen to have in my pocket at the moment, expressing his entire approval of the course taken, and his belief that Mr. Dixon would also acquiesce in it. So I think it will be found, ultimately, that Mr. Dixon wholly approves of the course I have taken.

On this point I may perhaps be allowed to say, in corroboration of the statement I made when we were in Supply, that these licenses were not regarded as creating permanent claims, that a similar instance was brought to my knowledge a few days ago in the case of the Montreal post office. On the defeat of the late Mackenzie Government, a Mr. Perry, a most worthy man, aged about seventy years, at that time enjoyed the license for vending stamps in the Montreal post office, and promptly on the defeat of the Government, that license was rescinded. I have seen the official letter, and I think it was read in the Senate, and will be found on record. But speaking from memory, I think he was called upon to resign his insignia of office inside of a couple of weeks, and that was a case in which I think the action of the Government provoked some criticism. I think this Mr. Perry was, like Mr. Hewitt, a man in straitened circumstances, and his only source of revenue was derived from the license for vending of stamps in the Montreal post office. So that the action of the Government in rescinding Mr. Perry's license practically took the bread out of that man's mouth, while in the case of Mr. Hewitt, my action has resulted in putting bread into his mouth.

Harbours and Rivers—Collingwood harbour, improvement of; and improvement of navigable channels, Rainy River ..... $35,000

Mr. FOSTER. I was not in the House when the item passed the committee, but I want to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Finance to the items 320 and 322 on page 193. I want to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance if he will not agree to substitute the word "income" for "capital," with reference to these two. I find that Collingwood Harbour, Rainy River and Nanaimo Harbour are being paid just the kind of expenditure we have been doing for years out of consolidated revenue fund, and as to their circumstances exactly on a par all through these estimates—I find they have been charged to capital. The reason why I make this request is two-fold. In the first place, because there seems to be no reason why they should be differentiated from other expenditures of like kind. It entirely vitiates all possible comparison that can be made. When I was Finance Minister, I found when I went there, two items of the kind which were put to capital. One of these was the St. Lawrence River. My hon. friend will remember that a few years ago, out of that capital which we had expended under the harbour commission, we assumed two or three million dollars. That was considered a great work, and it was done out of capital, of course. After it was turned over to the Government there were still two or three years' expenditure in order to complete it. I had an understanding with the Minister of Public Works then, that just as soon as it was completed the maintenance thereafter would be put to the consolidated revenue fund account. I do not know whether this little sum of $3,000 is for the completion of the main channel, or whether it is for the yearly maintenance. If it is for the yearly maintenance I would ask my hon. friend to charge it to income, and if it is for the completion, of course it is right to charge it to capital account. For some reason or other the Kaministiquia work had been started on capital account, and I agreed with the then Minister of Public Works that in order to keep the comparison it should be so charged until it was finished, but what the Public Works Department intended to do seems to have been completed now. My hon. friend will see that these three items should all go to income for the sake of comparison. Of course in the end it all comes out of the one pocket but it is better that we should have it right.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When I took office I found that in the Supplementary Estimates which were left in the department by the late Government, Collingwood harbour had been put down for $50,000 charged to capital account. I followed the same practice.

Mr. FOSTER. If these Estimates had been discussed in Council, I would have suggested that they should be placed to income as they always have been.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is the same in the case of the two other works also.

Mr. FOSTER. If the suggestions meets with the approval of my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) it can be easily changed in the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was done in the past and I do not see why it should be changed now.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that it is vital that he should not pick out some of those and charge them to capital account, without following the rule. We cannot have any comparison at all if that is done.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the Supplementary Estimates prepared by the hon. gentleman's predecessor to be submitted to the House, these works were charged to capital and the Minister of Public Works followed what was the usual course.

Mr. FOSTER. Not to be submitted to the House, but to the Council.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am bound to assume that the former Minister of Public Works in preparing these Estimates intended that these works should be charged to capital.

Mr. FOSTER. We have rigidly kept to the rule of charging these to income. If Collingwood harbour is to be charged to capital what reason in the world is there that another harbour should not be charged to capital?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have been informed by my officers that works of a permanent character costing large sums of money should be charged to capital.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not referring to this in any party sense at all. We have spent from $30,000 to $60,000 a year on Victoria harbour and it has always been charged to consolidated account. In your own estimate, harbours and rivers also all through are charged to income. Take the telegraph extension line below Quebec and it is the same thing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend will admit that, as to the question of cost and permanency, there is no comparison between these works and the works that are now charged to capital account. I had no other object in preparing my estimates than to follow the precedent.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has done just the opposite. We have been building a post office in Vancouver, a permanent work which will cost $200,000; we are building a drill shed in Halifax, and we have built drill sheds in Montreal and Quebec which cost $250,000, and they have always come out of income. There can be no solid rule if my hon. friend does what he is doing now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The statement made by the Finance Minister as to the nature of these Supplementary Estimates which the Minister of Public Works found in his department, is calculated, although unintentionally, to mislead the House. I happen to know something about the Public Works Supplementary Estimates, because I had a conversation with Mr. Ouimet, and what he stated to me was this—and every gentleman who had a seat in Council at that time will remember it perfectly well—he stated that that list of expenditures which he brought to Council was simply a list of the requests which had been made to him by gentlemen in various portions of Canada. He had put down every item that he was required to, but simply for the purpose that these gentlemen could have the privilege of having their requests discussed by Council. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) also stated that he was prepared to recommend certain items, but certainly not nearly all the items which were placed on the list which he brought before Council.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that. At the same time hon. gentlemen opposite must not forget that nearly every member on the other side of the House has risen in his seat and stated that he has been promised such and such an amount for works in his constituency. I know myself that these Estimates have been placed in the hands of members who have made their elections on them. On many occasions members belonging to the other side of the House have called on me, and have stated that they have been formally promised all these amounts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I think there ought to be no question about the course to be taken in this matter. We are all anxious, I hope, that there should be the means of furnishing to the House and the public a fair comparison between the Estimates of one Government and another. My hon. friend, the late Minister of Finance, has shown that there has been an invariable practice pursued in relation to this matter, and he has asked that this estimate shall be so corrected, which can be done by a stroke of the pen, as to enable us in the future, as in the past, to have a fair and legitimate means of comparison. Why should there be any difference of opinion about that? If that suggestion, carrying on its face such perfect fairness, is refused, what will be the result? Why, Sir, all confidence will be destroyed; and it will be a matter of discussion, and complicated discussion, which ought not to arise at all, as to whether hon. gentlemen have made out the Estimates in a fair and honourable way, so as to admit of a comparison of one estimate with another, or whether they have changed the system in such a way as to present a comparison of an entirely deceptive and illusory character. I cannot imagine any gentleman on either side of this House having a moment's hesitation in maintaining the principle so far carried out, of placing these Estimates upon such a basis as will admit of a fair comparison being made. I hold that there is nothing that will be more disadvantageous to hon. gentlemen opposite, or will afford a more solid ground for attack upon their mode of conducting public business, than to take, without precedent, large sums of public money which have been chargeable to consolidated revenue in the past, and make them chargeable to capital. Why, Sir, there would be an end to all fair comparison and legitimate discussion; and I do not think there ought to be a moment's hesitation on the part of the Minister of Public Works, when the matter is called to his attention, in acceding to the suggestion. Otherwise the question will arise whether any person can place any confidence in the Estimates put before the country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I do not think the matter is of sufficient importance to justify delay. The items are not large, and at this stage of business, when we are all anxious to bring the session to a close, the question is of so little importance that I do not feel disposed to adhere to the contention; and, therefore, in order to avoid delay, if my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works does not object, I would be willing that the word "capital" should be erased, and the word "revenue" inserted in its place. But I must demur to the suggestion of the hon. leader of the Opposition that the hon. Minister of Public Works has pursued an unusual course to justify in any way the suspicion that he desired to afford an opportunity for unfair comparison.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not suggest or insinuate anything of the kind; but I pointed to what would be the result or the impression. I take for granted that it was purely accidental, and I am very glad the Minister of Finance has consented to put it in the right shape.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I must add that the Minister of Public Works, in putting this item under capital account, did not pursue an unusual course. He simply followed the example of the Minister of Public Works in the preceding Government, who had prepared an estimate in which this item was put down to capital account. Whether or not that item was ultimately passed in Council does not, at this stage, seem to be a matter of importance; but it is perfectly clear that the Minister of Public Works in the last Ministry understood this to be a capital charge, and placed it in his Estimates as if it was a capital charge. Perhaps he made a mistake. Perhaps, when the item came before the Minister of Finance of that day, he would have advised a different policy; but the Minister of Public Works, in putting this item down to capital account, did not pursue an unusual course, but merely followed the example of his predecessor.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was not suggested that it was anything but an accident.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). As regards Nanaimo harbour, I think in all probability the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) is right. As regards Rainy River, I am not quite so sure. I think this is in connection with what is known as Fort Frances lock.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I rather think the original expenditure on that was charged to capital.

Mr. HAGGART. Fort Frances lock was part of the Canadian Pacific Railway system. This is for the improvement of navigation in the rapids of Rainy River.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think Fort Frances lock was considered as part of the Canadian Pacific Railway in rerum natura. I never myself approved of the way the hon. gentleman opposite divided capital from income, as he knows. For instance, a great deal of the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway was charged in that way which ought to have been charged to ordinary income. As a result, under him and his successors the capital expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway, on which capital we get no interest, was increased by $20,000,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And it seems to be going on to-day in these Estimates.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I objected to that process. I am not quite sure that I would not object even now to some extent, as to some of these items. But it is a question of fact, and not of argument. If these items were formerly charged in that way my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works would be quite right. Kaminstiquia harbour stands in pretty much the same position, and several of these expenditures in the North-west were charged to capital, and I think also the expenditures at Cape Tormentine.

Mr. FOSTER. No. I will give my hon. friend an instance in point. We have been spending for the last ten or twelve years from $30,000 to $50,000 a year on the Fraser River, for the purpose of securing and keeping open the channel and making it navigable for ships of large depth. The whole of that has been chargeable to income, and not to capital. The improvements on the Rainy River will come under the same definition. On the St. John River also, there have been improvements by dredging and blasting, from confederation up to the present time, all chargeable to income. But there is another case still more in point, that is, the Negro Point breakwater at the city of St. John. That has cost $300,000 or $400,000, and it has been constructed entirely out of income. I do not want to discuss this in any other spirit than from the merely financial point of view and for the purpose of keeping regularly the account. The hon. gentleman has brought down $100,000, added to the $40,000 of last year, to the new post office at Victoria. That is a large amount.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Under contract.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not affect the principle, as to whether you should apply it to capital or income. Take another case, the Negro Point breakwater, $20,000. That is not under contract. My hon. friend may get that done by contract or not, as he pleases. Then, you find Owen Sound harbour, where there is an improvement on which we have spent a great deal of money. That has all gone to income. My hon. friend has $20,000 in the Estimates for that same purpose. On the Toronto harbour works we spent altogether over $500,000, every cent of which was charged to income. We have in the present Estimates $50,000 for that work, chargeable to income.

Mr. SPEAKER. As a result of a conversation, rather than debate, which has been going on, I understand it is agreed, with reference to these three items, 320, 321 and 322, that item 321 shall stand where it is, under the head "Chargeable to capital," and the other two "Chargeable to income."

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I observe, in the Supplementary Estimates which the hon. gentleman intended to bring down, Collingwood harbour was charged specifically to capital.

Mr. FOSTER. That is to what the Minister of Public Works charged the two in these.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I may add that I observe Cape Tormentine harbour was charged to capital in the Estimates, which were acknowledged, at any rate, by the hon. gentleman's colleagues.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My hon. friend's experience will confirm what I say, that it was not unusual for departments to submit estimates in that form and have them changed before Council. This was never submitted to Council, and, no doubt, it would have been changed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The works which were charged to capital as follows:—Geological Museum, $20,000; Cape Traverse, $300,000; Cape Tormentine harbour, $200,000; Rimouski harbour, $50,000; Collingwood improvements, $80,000.

Commission for investigating the affairs of the penitentiaries of Canada ..... $3,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am opposed to this item being adopted, and I would like to say to the Government that I consider the explanation given as to the necessity for $3,000 being appropriated for a commission to examine into the affairs of penitentiaries entirely unsatisfactory. I put a fair proposition, I think, and a fair test as to the necessity of an expenditure of this kind, to the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), the other evening. The hon. gentleman had brought down a comparative statement, showing the cost of maintenance of the different penitentiaries, particularly, contrasting with the expenditure in the central prison, Toronto, with the expenditure in two penitentiaries. For reasons which occurred to me at the moment—I had not the opportunity of making an examination into his comparative statement—I thought I saw an explanation of the discrepancy. But, at the end of the discussion which took place, and an interesting discussion it was, I put to him this proposition, which he curtly refused to entertain. I asked him whether, if this amount were passed, he would undertake to ask his inspector of penitentiaries for a report on that statement that he had submitted to the committee, and in respect of which he was not able himself to give a satisfactory explanation, before appointing the commission. I cannot understand at the present moment why he refused to entertain so reasonable a proposition. But he said that he would give no such undertaking. He said, in effect: I have not consulted my inspector, who has examined these penitentiaries, and I will not, at your suggestion, ask him for a preliminary report or explanation as to the discrepancy of these figures, before going into this extraordinary expenditure. I think that a very unsatisfactory position for the Government to assume in connection with this matter. Since that discussion, I have had put into my hand an explanation from a gentleman who followed the discussion. The reason that the expenditure in the Dominion penitentiaries seems so large per capita of the prisoners, appears to be the difference in the way in which the accounts for the central prison and the accounts for our penitentiaries are kept. For instance, in the published reports, to which the hon. gentleman, no doubt, had reference, the returns in the case of the central prison leave out the salaries, while in the case of the other prisons the salaries are included. The contrast, of course, would be most adverse to the penitentiaries. But, taking into account the salaries in both cases—I refer to

Mr. TARTE.

Sessional Papers of Ontario, 1896, Central Prison report, page 22, and the last report of the Department of Justice—the central prison cost per capita, in 1895, $166.59, or, leaving out salaries, $102.52. In 1894, including salaries, it cost $159.47; excluding salaries, which amounted to $60.46, the net cost was $99.01. Taking from the figures the hon. Solicitor General gave the salaries, amounting to $116.61 per capita, we find that the average cost per capita in the St. Vincent de Paul was $115, instead of the figure which the Solicitor General gave, of $234, to compare with the central prison, $99.01. And of this, $9.40 per head was the extra cost of heating. So that in the St. Vincent de Paul, with the long-term convicts, the cost really compares favourably with the central prison, being only about $6 per head more. Then, in Manitoba, taking from the gross of $541 per head which the Solicitor General gave, the salaries and revenue, as they are deducted in the case of the central prison, the expense is found to be $197 per head, as compared with the central prison, $99.01; and of this, $50 was the extra cost of heating in the colder climate of Manitoba. It must be noted, also, that there are only 82 convicts in the Manitoba penitentiary, as compared with the overcrowded central prison. I am not going further into these figures, but I may say they corroborate the strong opinion I hold, from careful study of the subject during the time I was in the Department of Justice. These are the reasons that prompt me, even in the absence of the Solicitor General, before the formal approval of this vote, to ask the leader of the House that such a proposition be not entertained. It is surely not an unreasonable proposal to come from this side, or from either side, that, before spending a dollar of that money, this officer, who was appointed for this very purpose, shall have an opportunity of making an official report upon that statement of the Solicitor General. Then, if it is found that his answers to the questions so suggested are not satisfactory, and it is found that further investigation is necessary, then, and not until then, they should appoint their commission for further inquiry. I have shown that the comparison made by the Solicitor General, one of the chief reasons he gave for the inquiry, was in no sense complete.

While opposing strongly the granting of this sum, I would withdraw that opposition, on the assurance from the leader of the Government that they would not issue the commission until the inspector had made a report on those questions which were put to him by the Solicitor General.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). I do not object much to the proposition just expressed by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), but I have a decided objection to the length to which he carries it. It may be advisable that, before this money is expended, the present inspector of penitentiaries should be asked to make a report, and it may be, that, after this report is made, it will not be necessary to go any further. But the question whether the Minister of Justice should afterwards decide to have the inquiry or not, must be left entirely to his own judgment, as he is responsible for the administration of the penitentiaries. At the present time we enjoy the advantage of having at the head of the Department of Justice a gentleman who has been for some twenty years Attorney General of Ontario, and in that capacity has obtained great experience in the management of prisons and institutions similar to penitentiaries. After having had this long experience in the administration of prisons, he comes to a new department, where he has to administer a similar class of institutions, and he finds that there is such a discrepancy between the cost of the former and those he has now to administer, that he thinks it necessary to have an investigation. The hon. gentleman said there was no occasion to have this investigation, because the discrepancy can be explained in the manner he has suggested. I am not prepared to say that there may not be a good deal in what he says; but I am sure my hon. friend must agree that if the Minister of Justice still thinks it advisable to go on with the investigation, it is proper that this provision should be made for his doing so. I need not say to my hon. friend that Sir Oliver Mowat is a gentleman whose prudence, caution and experience are well known, and that he may be safely entrusted with the expenditure of the money.

Item concurred in, on division.

Steam communication, fortnightly, between Liverpool, Great Britain, and St. John, New Brunswick, during the winter season of 1896-97 not less than ten round trips ..... $25,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In our arrangement of the steamship subsidies, we have decided to reduce this amount from $25,000 to $20,000. I, therefore, move that it be reduced to $20,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend able to assure the House that we shall have just as good a service for $20,000 as we formerly had for $25,000?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The expectation is that we shall have the same service. There has been no communication with the line on the subject, but we assume they would not object to the rearrangement. They would much sooner have $25,000, I am sure; but we expect the same service will be provided.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must remember—or perhaps he is not familiar with the history of this line—that formerly we gave this line $30,000 for monthly trips, or what were very nearly so. Some five or six years ago, we got a very greatly improved service, and gave them $25,000 for it. They were anxious to have a long-term contract under that improved service, with a lessened subsidy, but the contract was not made for a long term, and has been continued from year to year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the Beaver Line.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought it was the Furness Line.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am increasing the Furness Line appropriation, but this item refers to the Beaver Line.

Mr. FOSTER. I would be sorry if the deduction of $5,000 would make a less efficient service. The very essence of a service is that it should be good. I supposed that communication had taken place between the department and the line. They were to give ten trips for $25,000, and they really gave fourteen.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Thirteen.

Mr. FOSTER. Ten were paid for, and they gave three or four extra trips. That was a great convenience, because these extra vessels took full cargoes away.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Under the propositions that are made, the St. John people get a great deal more than they had before. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact, which he will appreciate, that freights were very low last year. Freights this year, I am happy to say, have largely increased; I am not prepared to say how much, but I think I am within the mark in saying that freights to-day are probably 50 per cent better than last year.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid you are getting optimistic all at once.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, I am speaking of facts. If I found freights were not rising, I would say so.

ADDITIONAL COUNTY COURT JUDGE —MANITOBA.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding for concurrence in the resolution for salary of additional County Court Judge in Manitoba, reported from Committee of Supply on Tuesday, 29th September.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, in continuing the debate I desire to point out the curious manner in which this proposition happens to come before Parliament. One of the hon. members for Halifax (Mr. Russell) assumed, as I at the moment assumed, that there had been a considered action of the Manitoba legislature preparatory to the request for this vote for an additional judge for a county court in Manitoba. His argument, the House will recollect, which was a very ingenious one, went to the length that the proper time for revising the action of the legislature was when the Acts were being revised by the Governor General in Council in connection with the power of disallowance. But, after the subject had been more fully considered, and the Solicitor General had made his last statement, it appears that this proposition has not even been considered by the Executive of the government of the province of Manitoba, but that there happens to be a general Act in that province whereby the Governor in Council may carve out and add to the judicial districts for county court purposes. Apparently, from the Attorney General's telegrams and the papers laid before the committee last night, the Executive Council may, in the future, so decide, and pass an Order in Council creating a new judicial district in the county court organization for that province. But they have not even done that. Therefore this particular proposition is absolutely without precedent, so far as I am able to discover, since 1867. The records show us that after the legislatures—as in most of the provinces they are in the habit of doing—have dealt with such a matter by a positive and final enactment, intimating a desire for the creation of a new judicial office: then that subject is considered by the Executive of the Federal Government, and action taken under the circumstances ultimately by this Parliament. There are, I think, only one or two exceptional cases of this kind, when, after that legislative action, this Parliament has irregularly and without warrant in law, as I shall show, asked for an appropriation for the fiscal year in order to pay a judge to be appointed for some new district at the time actually created. But here is a case in which the legislature has taken no action, in which the Executive of Manitoba has taken no action, and yet the Solicitor General proposes that we shall provide the salary for one year, for a judge who may be appointed, if the Manitoba Executive carry out the intention of the Solicitor General as intimated by this telegram, and add to the judicial districts in the county court organization of that province. I say that the position of the hon. the Solicitor General is without warrant, without precedent, contrary to the statute, and contrary to that well understood rule in connection with the organization of courts and the appointment of judges, which aims to make judges independent entirely of the Executive.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. gentleman say there is no judicial district now?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. None at all. If the hon. gentleman (Mr.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Davies) is interested in that point, I will show, independently of what the Solicitor General indicated last night, that the Attorney General of Manitoba wires to him:

If Government appoints additional judge the intention is to readjust county court divisions, &c.

I need read no more of that telegram, but I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the statutes of Manitoba which I have examined, and he will see there the power which is given. Their system is unique and does not prevail in the other provinces. The statute says:

That the Lieutenant-Governor may from time to time alter and increase the limits of these various judicial divisions for county court purposes.

It is under that and other similar provisions that the Attorney General of Manitoba in this case proposes to act, as in the case to which I will refer later on, the Attorney General had acted when that appointment of Mr. Locke was made. A new additional judicial district was made in that case, but in this case they have not had the subject before them, except under that old Act giving these large powers to the Executive Council. In this case further, no Executive action of any kind whatever has been taken, but it is simply intimated that this is to be done, and pell mell, and in the most irregular manner, the Government at Ottawa rushes in—whether any discretion rests in them or not—to say: the moment this action is taken by the local authorities we must act. Even that ground is cut away from under their feet for the local authorities have taken no action whatever. I therefore say that this proposition is entirely without precedent and is fraught with the gravest possible danger.

The one or two exceptional cases—and they came before me when I was Minister of Justice—were, instead of proceeding in the regular way (which is by Bill asking this Parliament for the authority to appoint a county court judge, and on the constitution of his office by an estimate taken.) The moment the subject was brought to the attention of the department, I came down with a Bill and frankly explained that an irregular course had been taken apparently without the notice of any one, and legislation was immediately granted to put the matter on a proper basis. If we vote this money it is merely a vote until the first of July next for the full fiscal year, and I ask hon. gentlemen opposite to point out any authority under which they can issue a commission to a county court judge. There is no authority that I can discover. The general Act will not permit it, because that Act requires that the commission shall have a character of finality. In our Revised Statutes, chapter 138, there is this provision:

Every judge of a county court in any of the provinces of Canada shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold office during good behaviour, and his residence within the county.

And so on. There should be ad hoc legislation in a case of this kind, but the Government have not promised to proceed by a Bill. They are taking an unusual course. In the procedure by Bill, there is the action of this Chamber, reviewed by the Senate. But tacking on a provision of this character to a Supply Bill practically means that there shall be no consideration of the subject whatever in the Senate; and I submit that after you have voted the salary for a county court judge for one fiscal year, you will search in vain for any authority under which a commission can issue to that judge. Whatever we may say as to ad hoc judges, no lawyer will contradict the statement that in order to create such an office there must be legislation. We need not enter into a consideration of the principle of such appointment, for the simple reason that there is no proposed Act under which a temporary judge may be appointed in the province of Manitoba or anywhere else. There was a proposition, which I understand has been withdrawn, in relation to the Supreme Court of Canada. Moreover, we have in this case no action of the Governor in Council of Manitoba. But suppose there had been any such action, as in the case of Mr. Locke, there would have been an Order in Council under the statute of Manitoba, creating an additional judicial district, and then the executive would have been in a position to deal with the subject. I say, then, that the practice has been for the local department of government to advise the Executive and Parliament as to the sufficiency of the facts, and as to the strength of the case, to warrant the Executive in adding to the annual expenditure of this country by making provision for an appointment. I find, after careful search since the last debate, ever since I have been in Parliament, that practice has not been disputed or questioned by any one in this House, but that the long concatenation of precedents is in favour of it. And so the Solicitor General, as I will show, had to go before the year 1882 to a debate which took place in 1880, when he got some countenance, not from gentlemen who act with him now, or who acted with the Liberal party then, but from the late Sir John Macdonald. But Sir John Macdonald, as well as all the other leading members on either side of the House, after 1880 acted on the principle for which I contended the other day. We have no evidence of the creation of a judicial district. There has been no vacancy, and no position created into which to put this man. Even if we were proceeding by a Bill, no action has been taken by the local council, by which he can be given a position at all. The Attorney General has reported his desire, and the county court judge certainly says he is overworked; but I submit that is not enough under any circumstances for this Parliament, even supposing all the preliminary proceedings to have been taken regularly. The Act of the legislature presupposes inquiry by the Attorney General, a report from the judges, and a most exhaustive examination; and, therefore, in this case, even if the other proceedings were regularly taken, we should have, not the conclusion of the Attorney General nor the conclusion of the judge, but the facts and the statistics upon which they reached such a conclusion. We have been creating a good many additional judges in the province of Manitoba. It was only in 1894 that we made provision, after the regular steps had been taken, for the appointment of Judge Locke. What we want is a statement of the arrears of judicial business, the state of the docket, the actual state of litigation in the district concerned. Certainly this Parliament has heard of no general complaint. This matter is suddenly, and in the most precipitate manner, thrown into this House. It comes here, as I have already pointed out, without the regular and ordinary consideration of the local authorities. The matter is, in the most extraordinary and suspicious manner, launched upon us; and for all this haste and this irregularity there is no warrant in law. As the Solicitor General was compelled to say the other night, as reported in "Hansard," this is a request for a provision for a temporary judge; and he endeavoured to make the proposition more palatable by saying that we could suspend this judge practically at the next meeting of Parliament by refusing to vote his annual salary, or the Government could refuse to bring the item down. For such an appointment, however, there is no legislation on the statute-book, and none is proposed; and we have the authority of the present Minister of Justice, that where there is no action taken other than a vote in the Supply Bill, the Government has no authority to take action in regard to that except for a limited period, the period of the fiscal year. Therefore, if we pass this item in the Estimates, there is only authority to pay this judge the sum of $2,000, and there is no authority to make his engagement extend over the year itself. I have contended, and I am strong in the contention, that, even with the Supply Bill, there will be no authority to issue a commission to him as a county court judge for the limited period of one year; and any act he should do, and any business he should conduct, would simply produce confusion and detriment to all the litigants who came before him. Now, what was it the Solicitor General proposed to do? I refer to this in order to show how absent has been all the careful consideration which has hitherto been given to the important question of adding to the expense of the administration of justice in this country. I want to call the attention of the House to what the proposition was when it first took form before us. The Solicitor General, who had charge of the item, said :

It will be found necessary to amend our own statutes with reference to judges in Manitoba, and in that interval opportunity will be afforded to make the necessary inquiries to be in a position to give the information required.

What was the information required ? It was as to the necessity of this judge, and we were asked to make this appointment just for the year, as a temporary provision, and during this year an inquiry would be made into the subject. But to make clear what was the ground upon which the Solicitor General was acting, the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) asked :

In effect the appointment can be made provisionally until there is more legislation.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, he says in effect that it is provisional.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

I need only refer, in addition to what I have said on the subject of such an appointment, to the absence of warrant of law, and to the fact that it offends the very idea on which the constitution of our courts throughout the country is based, namely, the absolute independence between the Executive and judiciary, but I shall refer to the opinion of a former Minister of Justice, the Hon. Edward Blake. In 1876, when a proposition of that kind was made in this House by Mr. Taschereau, then a member of this House, Mr. Blake gave a good sound constitutional reason against admitting the principle of temporary judges, thus creating uncertainty with regard to decisions besides introducing a new practice. And the First Minister, who was in the House when the Solicitor General had explained that this was a provisional appointment, as it is in every sense of the word, said, in debate, the other day :

To my mind the Solicitor General could never have said that the appointment contemplated in the vote was a provisional one, because there is no such thing under the law and the constitution of the country as a provisional judge. A judge, when appointed, is appointed for life, and can only be removed in the manner we know. Therefore, I think my hon. friend is quite mistaken in the views he attributes to the Solicitor General.

I call the attention of the First Minister to the language he then used. It is in accord with the statement that I have made that our laws only recognize, in all the statutes we have in regard to our courts, these life appointments. In the case of the county court judges, a removal is obtained in one way ; in the case of statutory court judges, it is obtained in another ; but they are both permanent appointments, for the best of all reasons, into which I need not go. There is no authority under which these judges can be temporarily appointed. There is no special legislation giving that authority.

That disposes of one view of the case. But we come to an important issue, which is not generally understood, and that is that when all things are rightly done—I do not admit that in this case they have been rightly done—by the local authorities, and there was an office created of a judge of a county or superior court, there was no discretion in this legislation, and our only duty was to make the necessary provisions and appoint a judge to the proposed office, and on that account it is important to call attention to the exact language of the Prime Minister. In the debate on this subject, he said :

It is our duty to take the action of the legislation in any province in these matters unless—there must be some limit to that—unless there is a case of absolutely gross fraud or something of that kind. Otherwise, this House has no power to revise the discretion of the local legislatures.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Has not this House again and again declined, and properly declined, to provide the salaries for that local legislatures have provided judges ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware of any such cases and would be glad to hear of it.

Again he says :

I lay it down as a doctrine of safe government that it is not open to us to question that statute.

Again he says :

I tell him it is not open to him to question the provincial statute.

And again :

I shall be able to convince him by the debates of this House that the view I now take is not new but has been taken again and again by gentlemen who, at different times, have filled the office of Minister of Justice.

The statement, however, as the First Minister will see, is predicated on a position that does not exist here, namely, that if there be the necessary action, if there be a statute of the local legislature, then it is for this legislature, except in the case of gross fraud, to vote the money. This is not the case in this instance. There is no vacancy. There is a proposed office for Manitoba, but the local authorities have not assumed the responsibility of forming a new district where this judge will preside. Let us look at the authorities. The Solicitor General confined himself chiefly to cases which occurred in 1879-80, and, as I have said before, it was necessary for him to do so. But the subject has come up again and again since 1880, and after the last creation, whereby I am in a position to show that, with that qualification my statement was accurate, that the traditional practice and the regular procedure has been to consider carefully the reasons, whenever an appointment was challenged, and that the duty of the Department of Justice was to see that the Government was armed with the reasons for a judicial appointment, whenever it was proposed to recommend one to this Chamber. But in the case of 1880, what happened? The hon. gentleman did not give us the whole history of that case. He contented himself with the argument used by the late Sir John Macdonald in debate; but he did not point out that the Liberal party never hesitated, with regard to their view, until this extraordinary occasion, when no action has been taken by the Executive or the legislature. The Liberal party have hitherto always steadily opposed the idea or suggestion that this was not a matter where the Executive was responsible, or not a matter which appealed to the discretion of the legislature.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not I.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And the hon. gentleman who says "not I," as I will be able to show by his vote, has placed himself on record on my side of the case and no other. I shall give him the proofs. He will see that he sympathized in this view, and that the first time he opened his lips in the direction of the other, so far as a careful search on my part goes to show, was on this occasion; but on all previous occasions he either by silence gave consent to the other view or by his direct vote, as on the occasion in 1880, when he voted that the legislation of British Columbia, which contemplated the appointment of three additional Supreme Court judges, should be ignored.

And that though that legislature had said by a statute that they required that reorganization and required these three judges, he voted for an amendment that the Bill should not be read but should be voted down and that these judges should not be appointed. And I will give him the authorities on that point. Let us begin with 1877. At that time, I think the present Prime Minister was a member of the Government, at any rate, Mr. Blake was Minister of Justice, and the county judgeship of Leeds and Grenville had been vacant for two years. Here was a position created by the legislature of Ontario. In the organization of the courts as settled by the statutes of Ontario, two judges were required for the county court district of Leeds and Grenville. In 1875 one of these judges died. And after the vacancy had existed about two years, on the 19th February, 1877:

Sir John Macdonald asked when the office of judge of the county court for the counties of Leeds and Grenville became vacant, and whether it was the intention of the Government to appoint a successor, and if so, when.

Mr. Blake said he was not in the Government at the time of the decease of the late judge of the county court for the counties of Leeds and Grenville, but he understood from the papers on the 11th of January, 1875. He was informed that two or three months after his decease, the First Minister received a letter from the junior judge informing that a settlement had been arrived at by which the duties of the district could be discharged. He did not think it in the public interest at that time without further complaint of the inefficiency of the administration of the law, to appoint another judge.

So that at that time, it is quite clear, the fact that there was the provision by the local legislature for the appointment of a judge was not regarded as sufficient of itself to enable the Government of the day to ask for an appropriation for this purpose. Then, in 1879, came the case to which the Solicitor General only partly referred. I may say that there was a very interesting discussion of this whole subject, and I would point out that, instead of the Government of that day, the Government of Sir John Macdonald, resting their case on the language which the Solicitor General actually quoted from Sir John Macdonald, the Minister of Justice, Mr. Macdonald went fully into the reasons for the legislation that had been passed in British Columbia. What was the case? The first reorganization of the judicial districts after the union, in a province that was being developed, was undertaken by the provincial legislature. All the questions of distance, all the statistics connected with the work of the judges and all the reasons that induced the local legislature to make that arrangement of the judiciary were put before the House. It is quite true that Sir John Macdonald leaned towards the view which Sir Alexander Campbell adopted in the Senate, that because the province of British Columbia had taken that action and passed that statute, as they had the right to do, practically all there was for this Parliament to do was to make the necessary provision so as to carry out the will of the local authorities. But let us see how that was considered. In the first place he admits that the Senate acted quite within their right in refusing to accept the views of Sir Alexander Campbell and rejected the Bill providing the salaries for these judges. When the question came up Mr. Mackenzie, who was leading the Opposition, and with whom the present Prime Minister was working in unison, said:

He desired to know if the Government considered this demand of the legislature of British Columbia as a reasonable one.

Later on in his speech—and I am not making these references brief for the purpose of unfairly helping my own case, for I shall give Sir John Macdonald's language, which to some extent, is against me—Mr. Mackenzie said:

He did not think that because the local governments had the power to create courts, we have nothing to do but fill these courts as soon as created.

And then to make a point against Sir John Macdonald and the view he was supporting at the time, he said, and I think with great force:

The Nova Scotia Government passed an Act establishing county courts in that province, which was brought to this House and he did not think the Act was an unreasonable one, but it created great divergence of opinion, and the Bill was ultimately defeated in the Upper House, though it subsequently became law. This House should not agree to a proposition of this sort, merely because the local government of British Columbia thought it necessary to have two more judges appointed to act in that province. Some grounds should be given on which this House should exercise its wise discretion, and he looked to the Minister of Justice for further information.

I think the Solicitor General did not fairly represent the views of Sir John Macdonald, though they come nearer his position than the views expressed by any other hon. gentleman at that time, except those expressed by Sir Alexander Campbell. But those views were never adopted, and Sir John Macdonald himself, apparently dropped them in 1880, because on subsequent occasions, as I shall show, he and his colleagues and successors yielded to the view which Mr. Mackenzie expressed in the words I have read. Sir John Macdonald is reported as follows:—

This argument was taken before, when this question arose, shortly after confederation. Mr. Blake, he believed, then took the ground that it was not a matter of necessity that the Dominion Parliament should sanction the legislation of every province with respect to the increase of judges, and the consequent expense of the administration of justice. That was assented to as a general principle, but it was argued, and he argued so himself, that when the responsibility of the administration of justice rested on the local governments and legislatures, it would be a very grave responsibility for the Dominion Government to take to oppose a solemn act of the local legislature, declaring that additional judges were required.

That, of course, is strong as far as it goes. Nevertheless, Sir John Macdonald on that occasion recognized the general principle that we have a discretion, which is denied by the Prime Minister on the present occasion. He says that the case must be strong for the exercise of our discretion, because there is an action taken specially by the local legislature. The Minister of Justice said—and I will give only one quotation, though I might give more, because the hon. gentleman went fully into the case:

Irrespective of increase of expense, the local legislature gave very strong grounds on the point of necessity, showing that parties charged with crime, had to undergo, often, twelve months' imprisonment before they could be tried, and, in many cases, then proven innocent of the charges.

There could not be a stronger reason given than was given on that occasion when the House asserted its right to look carefully into all the facts; and I shall show where the present Prime Minister voted against the Bill then, though the promoter of the Bill was able to point out to him without being challenged in the statement that in British Columbia innocent men were practically imprisoned for months owing to the way in which the administration of justice was handicapped. Mr. Anglin, a leading member of the House on that side said:

He was not at all disposed to accept the doctrine, and he contended that before they consented to provide the salaries, they should be satisfied of the necessity that existed for the additional judgeships, and he did not think that they ought to be satisfied merely with the statement made by the local authorities, or made the provision because the local legislature created the office.

What was the action in the Senate to which the hon. gentleman referred briefly, and to which I wish to refer at a little more length? When that Bill finally got through this House in 1879 and went to the Senate, it was warmly opposed by members from British Columbia. The Hon. Mr. Cornwall, after a long speech moved the six months' hoist. One of the members of the present Government, the Secretary of State, the Hon. Mr. Scott, and all the Liberals in that body, to a man opposed that legislation. Mr. Scott, in supporting the six months' hoist, said:

It does seem to me, that the Government is yielding probably to local prejudice in this particular case—to the fact that the legislature of British Columbia passed this Act, and sought to change the system; and they have yielded, I think, rather too lightly in face of the large expenditure which has been entailed on the country in the administration of justice of that province.

For that six months' hoist the Liberals voted, including the present Secretary of State, the late Hon. George Brown, the present Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Pelletier, and other leading members who are now in the Senate. Without doubt, the Liberal party, without an exception, were consistently opposed, following evidently the lead of Mr. Blake taken early in confederation, to any idea obtaining whereby this legislature should be deprived of its full right to exercise discretion, and to review all these applications for adding to the expenditure for the administration of justice in any of the provinces. Now, then, the Bill came up the second time. It was defeated in the Senate, and in 1880 the Bill was re-introduced into the House of Commons, and again an interesting discussion took place. The Minister of Justice, on that occasion, no matter what the late Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald may have stated in debate, put his case on no such ground as the Prime Minister on this occasion; but he argued again at great length for the Bill, and examined the reasons for the action of the legislature. He goes into the question of expenditure, he shows the great distance, the time taken in traversing the country in the absence, at that time, of transportation facilities. On that occasion, Mr. Blake spoke as follows:—

I have always maintained, while I had the honour of sitting here, that we are not bound, simply because a provincial legislature proposes the appointment of a judge, to provide a salary. This was Mr. Blake answering the argument of the then Minister of Justice. He goes on to say :

I think any other view of our duties would result, in the nature of things, in a very expansive motion on the part of the local legislature, as to what the judicial requirements were. When you find one body creating judgeships, whose occupants are to be paid, not by their creators, but by another body altogether, it is natural that the creating body, not being checked by the consideration of the expense should be extremely liberal, and it is necessary that the scale of judicial requirements should be carefully scanned by those who are to bear the burden of paying the officers.

Then he says :

I quite agree that, as a general rule, unless there are good reasons the other way, great weight ought to be attached to a proposition deliberately made by a provincial legislature.

I will quote what Sir John A. Macdonald said on that occasion for the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite, because, in 1880, we find the last statement of such an opinion by the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, although he was in this legislature for many years afterwards. He says :

The Act is on the Statute-book, and we think it is our bounden duty, as there is no evidence that the legislature of British Columbia acted through any improper motive, or any other motive than duty to the province, in the organization of the courts of justice, not to refuse it, by saying they were altogether mistaken, and thereupon refusing the salaries required.

To that the Hon. Mr. Mills answered :

The right hon. gentleman has taken a somewhat different view of this from that which he expressed on another question lately. He thinks the House must assume that the British Columbia government acted properly, unless it can be shown it acted improperly in this matter, I think the burden of proof lies the other way. I think the House is exercising an independent power ; it has undertaken to vote this money and when the hon. gentleman asks us to provide for payment of additional judges, on him devolves the responsibility of showing that additional judges are necessary.

Now, Mr. Mills refers to this case :

Certainly when county courts were wanted in Nova Scotia he did not take exactly the same view as the functions and duty of the House in the appointment of judges and in providing for their salaries, as on the present occasion. I remember that, then, the friends of the hon. gentleman in the other House rejected the proposal to provide for the payment of the judge in a court which the people of Nova Scotia thought necessary for the due administration of justice.

Now, then I pass over that case, the last case on which any such view was put forward by either political party. In 1880 we come again to this long standing vacancy in Leeds and Grenville. Here was a case of a county court judgeship, the vacancy of which occurred in 1875. Mr. Blake, speaking of the time when he was Minister of Justice, said :

It was then my duty to reply that, the administration, having made such inquiry as they could, and having received from the junior judge a statement that he was perfectly adequate to the discharge of the whole work, it was not thought to be in the public interest to make a second appointment.

And so he goes on to say later :

We considered that there was no reason for burdening the finances of the country with a second appointment to fill the vacant judgeship in Leeds and Grenville and I am not aware that there has been any special increase of judicial work in those counties, or that there has been any serious change in the labours and responsibilities of a judge since the time the sole incumbent of the office reported that he was thoroughly competent to discharge the whole duties. * * * Therefore, I thought it right to move for correspondence, and also to ask for a statement in detail of the judicial work in each year since confederation, in order that the House may ascertain whether there exists to-day any substantial reason for the appointment of this judge that did not exist formerly.

The then Minister of Justice in Sir John A. Macdonald's Government, answered :

The Government have made no promise, have made no appointment, nor have they made any selection whatever to fill the place to which the hon. gentleman refers.

It is idle for any one to pretend that the Government which took that position seriously entertained the view that they were bound to fill a vacant judgeship whenever it occurred, or to make an appointment whenever the office was created by the action of the local legislature. In 1880, on the final discussion on the Bill concerning British Columbia, in this House, Mr. Blake moved :

That any change in the judicial system of British Columbia should be based on the utilization of the existing staff of eight judges ; that the proposed legislation will involve the pensioning of five of those judges, in full health and vigour, at an annual cost of $8,000, and will thus increase the expense, while it will diminish the efficiency of the administration of justice in the province.

This was moved on the motion that the Bill be read the third time, and for that, the present Prime Minister voted, and the whole Opposition, declaring the view that Mr. Blake says he had all along expressed. For that amendment, as I have said, the Prime Minister voted, as did also the Liberal party, as a whole. His argument was that we were not in the slightest degree bound by the action of the local legislature, that we were responsible here, when voting the money, and he finally wound up with a motion that, if carried, would have defeated the Bill and prevented provision being made for the salaries. It is the strongest evidence that can possibly be given that the view of the Prime Minister expressed in the House the other night, can find no support from the records of the Liberal party. The only view in the line of his argument which I have been able to discover, was given in debate by the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald, in 1880, but never subsequently. His colleagues in the Liberal-Conservative Government after that, as I shall show, went upon what I consider the sound interpretation of the constitution which governs this case. In Sir John Thompson's time, as Minister of Justice, in 1894, there is an interesting reference, which shows the ground which that gentleman took. In the province of Quebec, there was a provision for the appointment of judges, and, on the 23rd of April, 1894, Mr. Lépine asked whether any action was to be taken under that law, which had been passed in 1891. It provided for the appointment of two additional judges for the Court of Queen's Bench. Mr. Lépine asked Sir John Thompson what action he proposed to take, no action having been taken up to that date. And the Minister of Justice replied :

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Act was left to its operation, although the Government did not concur in the statements made in the preamble thereof, as to the insufficiency of the Court of Queen's Bench, as now constituted, to perform its functions, and it was expressly stated that such action was not to be taken as an expression of opinion on the part of the Dominion Government that the appointment provided for by an Act should be made. The French Canadian senior member of the Montreal bar presented a petition in that sense, and also asked that the claims of their nationality be considered in any appointments to be made.

There is another, and even a stronger case in Sir John Thompson's time, and I find the First Minister was present in the House, and that he did not demur to the doctrine that was announced on that occasion. It is the case of the county court judgeship for the Kootenay district in 1894. The legislature of British Columbia had, several years before, provided a much stronger case for the appointment of a judge than has been made in the present instance. There is no creation of a judicial district now. There is simply the intimation of the Attorney General of Manitoba that they intended to create one. But the legislature of British Columbia had, three or four years prior to 1894, passed an Act creating a judicial district, and the Federal Government was asked to make an appointment. Sir John Thompson came to the House in proper way under resolution, on which he afterwards founded a Bill. He was asked in committee by the First Minister (Mr. Laurier), who was then leading the Opposition :

Mr. LAURIER. What is the increase ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The object of this resolution is to provide for another county judge for British Columbia, in the Kootenay District.

Sir CHARLES HIBBEHT TUPPER.

That district was created a county court district by the provincial legislature several years ago. It has not been thought necessary to make the appointment, but it is deemed expedient to take the powers now, owing to the increased population of the district, and the population going there is of a class that requires the attendance of a court of justice.

The then Minister of Justice gave other reasons for the appointment than that the legislature had taken action in the matter. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) evidently did not share the view expressed by the leader of the Government the other night, because on this occasion, when in committee, he said :

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not wish to interfere in matters which, perhaps, belong more peculiarly to the legal members of the House ; but it does seem to me that an allowance of ten judges—five for the county court and five for the Superior Court—for a province with the population of British Columbia, is an extremely liberal provision for the administration of justice there, even after taking into account the largeness of the district. I understand that the population is not generally diffused over the province, but is chiefly found in certain districts or along the course of certain rivers.

Sir John Thompson went into the question at once, so as to vindicate his Bill, and he said :

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The number of judges would be quite out of reason if it were not for the fact that the population of the province is very much scattered, and the means of communication very difficult ; and the attendance of the judges at very distant places is absolutely necessary if we are to keep up civilization and the organization of the courts of justice in the country at all. These increases in the number of the judges in the province have been made very gradually. About ten years ago one or two additional judges were appointed for the Supreme Court, and about that time provision was made by the provincial legislature for six or seven county judges. Four of these, those of Cariboo, New Westminster, Yale, and Nanaimo, were appointed four or five years ago. Only after the lapse of four or five years have we decided to add one to the list, and that, as the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) stated, is really in consequence of an increase of the mining population in the Kootenay district.

No one will question for a moment that Sir John Thompson, at any rate, not only took the responsibility of delaying action after the local legislature had taken action, but he felt that the responsibility lay upon him in every case to satisfy Parliament that, in the interests of a more effective administration of justice, there was necessity for the proposed appointment, before asking for an increase of the financial burdens of the country. The Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), not being able to refer to the authority of any public man in this House since 1880, relying upon Sir John Macdonald's opinion in that debate—although other reasons were given by the Minister in charge of the Bill—and finding himself opposed by the whole phalanx of the Liberal party upon this ground from 1867 down to the present time; the Solicitor General refers to one or two things which have occurred lately, and the inference he drew was that there was no such traditional practice in the Department of Justice as that to which I referred, and that I was mistaken, when I implied, the other evening, that that department had always regarded it as its duty to inquire thoroughly into the matter before any appointment was made. He first cited the case of Judge Locke, in Manitoba. Let me call attention to what was done in that case, and the House will see that the proceedings were entirely different from those in the present instance. Did the Government then come down and ask for provision for a judge because they heard there was action to be taken in Manitoba, or because the Attorney General of that province had sent a telegram or a letter saying that they proposed to create a new judicial district? Not at all. The executive in Manitoba having created a new judicial district in 1894, then Mr. Daly, who was a Minister in the Government from Manitoba—and I may point out that the present Government have no representative from that province who could settle almost in five minutes this whole question, and who would give us the particulars that I have asked, and which, I think, this House should demand before this expenditure is made—Mr. Daly, being in his seat in this House when Sir John Thompson introduced in the regular way the resolution for the appointment of this judge, rose, before any question was asked, and gave an explanation for the action—not that the Order in Council had been passed in Manitoba; but, speaking as a representative of Manitoba, as the Minister of the Interior, and as a member of the Manitoba bar, his explanation was:

This is for the southern division of the eastern judicial district of Manitoba, along the American boundary, taking in the counties of Dufferin, Derby and Louise, one of the most thickly settled districts of Manitoba.

No question was asked, and the matter ended there. So far as "Hansard" tells us, nothing else was said. But the Solicitor General picks up in his office a letter written after the executive action in Manitoba, after parliamentary action here, even after the explanation of Mr. Daly, when the Government was not pressed for further information—a most natural letter from Mr. Daly, written on the 21st of July, in which he nominates, as of course was his right, Mr. Locke for the position, and suggests that before being appointed, Mr. Locke should be made revising officer; and on August 25th, Mr. Locke was duly appointed. Everything had been regularly done. Provision was made in Manitoba, and the explanation was given by the Minister of the Interior in advance of any inquiry. The Solicitor General said last night that all this was done without any manifestation of a desire on the part of the Attorney General as to this appointment; yet, strange to say, a moment afterwards he knocked that ground entirely away, by saying that this appointment was made because an Order in Council was passed by the executive of Manitoba creating a judicial position. I say it was nothing of the kind. It could not have been made without that order; but that order having been made, the Minister of the Interior, a member of the bar of Manitoba, being present in this House, gave all the explanation that was required at the hands of this Parliament. So that that reference assists him in nothing. Then, the hon. gentleman dealt with a case which I thoroughly understand myself. He spoke of the case of the district of St. Francis in the province of Quebec. That case is entirely against him. If he had been as conversant with that case as I am, he would have understood that when I spoke of the responsibility that rested upon him, I had that place in my mind. The most extraordinary pressure was put upon me from the district of St. Francis to have appointed, first, an assistant judge. I set my face against that, upon information which I obtained from the officers in my department—and I agreed with them—that that practice had not been followed in the past, and that it was not a practice that should be encouraged. Great pressure was put upon me; the batonnier of the district urged me to make the appointment; and I received memorials, which are no doubt in the department, pressing me to appoint another judge for that district. I declined, of course not abruptly, on the ground that until there was before me from the judges and from the Attorney General of the province information that satisfied me that no re-arrangement could be made by which the existing judges could deal with the business and the arrears in the district, I would not take the responsibility of recommending to Council such an appointment. My successor, Mr. Dickey, some months afterwards, went so far as to introduce a resolution into this House. I had started the initial inquiries; I had insisted on full information being given as to the condition of judicial business in the district; and after reports had been got, it appears that the Minister of Justice, Mr. Dickey, felt warranted in proposing a resolution in this House, though it got no further, whether for one reason or another I do not know. That is a case in point, and it is a case entirely against the position of the Government; because if that is the rule, how is it the present Government has not proceeded with that case? We heard of the case of the district of St. Francis long before we heard of this case in Manitoba. In the one case there is the local action and the pressure for years; and yet there is no proposition to go on with Mr. Dickey's resolution. If hon. gentlemen are bound to act whenever local action is taken, and bound to appoint wherever the appointment of a judicial officer can be made, they stand guilty of the greatest dereliction of duty in that very case of the St. Francis district. I do not know what information Mr. Dickey had. If hon. gentlemen have no more information than I had, they are not bound to take action. But if their action in the case of the Manitoba judge be correct, they are, according to their own showing, guilty of great negligence in the case of the St. Francis district. I say it is not well for the administration of justice that there should be anything in the shape of indecent haste in these matters. Here we are face to face with an admittedly irregular course of procedure. The regular course in the appointment of a judicial officer, is, without doubt, to proceed by a Bill, whether for a county court or for a superior court in any judicial district of Canada. No one denies that; and we are also face to face with the fact that the local authorities have not yet formally moved. In most cases a special Act of the local legislature is required; in this case, the general Act requires that an Order in Council of the local government shall be passed. This has not been done by the government of Manitoba. The public will ask why this great haste? In a few months we shall have another session of Parliament, when the proper preliminary action can be taken; and yet, without that, the Government are in this irregular manner pressing, and I think most unfortunately pressing, the appointment of this judge. All reasonable men will admit that it is well, where the appointment of a judicial officer is made, not only that great care should be taken that undue expenditure is not imposed on the country, but that the appointment from every standpoint should be considered necessary in the interests of justice. That will be the prime reason of the appointment, and not, as many would think in a case of this kind, in the interest solely of party.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Mr. Speaker, the question before the House involves the appropriation of $2,000 in payment of a judge whom it is proposed to appoint in the province of Manitoba. The question underlying the propriety of this appointment is one involving the exercise by this Government of certain powers and duties bestowed upon it by the constitution in relation to the administration of justice in the Dominion. It is a very important question, and I think earlier in the session the lengthy speech of my hon. friend could not be complained of. My hon. friend was careful, and justly careful, while finding fault with the course laid down by the Premier and other members of the Government as to the course the Government should adopt in cases of this kind, not to lay down any hard and fast rule for himself; but he pointed out that the circumstances under which the Government should act cannot be defined; because the constitution vests co-ordinate powers in this Parliament and in the provincial legislatures with regard to the administration of justice, and it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to lay down in precise language the circumstances under which we should act, and the circumstances under which we should decline to act.

Now, we must, in coming to a conclusion, remember it is not the case of a superior power dealing with an inferior, but of two co-ordinate powers dealing with a question which is divided between them. The jurisdiction for the constitution of the courts is vested exclusively in the local legislature; the appointment of the judges is vested exclusively in this Parliament. When the local legislature, acting upon its exclusive powers, creates a court, the duty devolves upon us of appointing a judge for that court. The late Sir John Macdonald and Sir Alexander Campbell laid down the rule, almost too arbitrarily to my mind, that when once a local legislature had acted, this Parliament is bound to act. In other words, when a court is created by the local legislature, we are bound, by that very fact, to appoint a judge. My learned colleague, the First Minister, adopted that rule, with a qualification which commends itself to my common sense and with which I think my friend opposite hardly found fault. He said: I adopt that in full, with this qualification, that if there is clearly shown a case of fraud in the constitution of a court by the local legislature, or if a local legislature creates a large number of courts, or one court which, it is perfectly plain to a man of ordinary common sense, offends against common sense and against common justice, then this Parliament should stay its hand and pause and inquire. But subject to those limitations, we are bound to act. I venture to say that that condition or limitation which the First Minister put upon our power is the correct one, namely, that unless there has been an improvident exercise by a provincial legislature of the exclusive power which the constitution vests in it, of creating these courts, this Parliament has no right to interfere. If the facts are brought to our notice showing that there has been an improvident exercise of that power, we are bound to pause, as trustees of the people, but who has suggested here that any such state of facts exists? Who has ventured to say that this was an improvident exercise of power? My hon. friend had his answer from the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière). He had his complete answer from that hon. gentleman, who is a practising barrister before the courts of Manitoba, thoroughly conversant with the facts, and who told us that not only was the action of the local legislature, in constituting this tribunal, one that meets with his approval, but that the case is one of urgency.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. All that the hon. gentleman says is correct, except that I am not a barrister.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman speaks with such precision and accuracy that I was justified in thinking him a barrister. However, he represents the people in Manitoba, and he told us, from his local knowledge, that he believes not only that the new judge is necessary, but that the case is urgent. What answer has the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper)? He has no facts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is no judicial district created.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Having laid down the principle which, I think, ought to guide us, let us see what are the facts. The hon. gentleman says that no judicial district is created. Perfectly true, but how do we stand? A local Act has passed the local legislature and been approved of by the Governor General. It is now, and has been for some years, the law of the land, vesting in the local executive the power of dividing the country into judicial districts and determining when there shall be additional districts. That is the law of the land. That law was not disapproved of. It was allowed to go into operation. No question was raised as to the propriety of it. Therefore we stand in this position, that the Executive Council of the province of Manitoba can create a new judicial district when and where they please. That being so, what has taken place? We find that on the 10th of September, Judge Walker addressed a letter in Winnipeg to the Attorney General of that province, which, for future reference, I have placed on record:

Winnipeg, 10th Sept., 1896.

Dear Attorney General,—

You will recollect that soon after the passing of the amendment to the County Court Act extending the jurisdiction of the court, I expressed to you my apprehension that I would not be able to meet the work thereby imposed. Now, after a fair and severe trial, I must in justice to myself, as well as the suitors in the courts, again formally call your attention to the fact; and respectfully urge your serious consideration of the necessity of ensuring the appointment of a puisné judge.

It is needless for me to specify particulars as I have been informed your attention has been frequently called by members of the profession to the amount of work cast upon me, and I might add it has been only through the kindest indulgence of the profession that I have been able thus far to cope with the same, although not satisfactorily.

Trusting that this may receive your most careful, earnest consideration.

I am respectfully yours,

(Signed) D. M. WALKER.

The Honourable Attorney General.

Two days afterwards the Attorney General of Manitoba addressed a letter from Winnipeg to the First Minister at Ottawa:

Winnipeg, Sept. 12th, 1896.

Honourable Wilfred Laurier,

House of Commons,

Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Laurier,—

I have the honour to inclose herewith a copy of a letter received by me yesterday from Judge Walker, the senior judge of the county court in the eastern judicial district.

In my opinion it is necessary, in the interest of the proper administration of justice in this province, that an additional county judge should be appointed for the eastern judicial district. I may say that I have brought this matter before my colleagues and they all concur heartily in the opinion which I express.

Yours faithfully,

(Signed) CLIFFORD SIFTON.

Now, what have we here? We have a judge recalling to the Attorney General's attention a fact of which he had personally spoken to him before, that he was overworked, that suitors were suffering, and that he had only been able thus far to cope with the business, through the kindness and indulgence of the profession, although he could not do so satisfactorily. The Attorney General concurs in that view, every one of his colleagues concur in it, and they propose to create a new judicial district. Then follows a telegram specifying the district which they intend to create. That telegram is as follows:—

(Telegraphic.)

Winnipeg, Man., 30th Sept., 1896.

Hon. C. Fitzpatrick,

Solicitor General,

Ottawa, Ont.

If Government appoints additional judge, intention is to readjust county court divisions. At present Judge Walker has northern division, eastern district, with fifteen sittings. This includes Winnipeg with its heavy business. Judge Prudhomme, central division, fifteen sittings; Judge Locke, southern division, twenty-three sittings; Judge Ryan, central district, twenty-four sittings; Judge Cumberland, western district, thirty-seven sittings. It will relieve the judge of the western district to take away extreme southern courts at Russell, Shoal Lake and Minnedosa, which can be taken conveniently by Judge Ryan. Courts at Glenboro, Treherne and Carman, now taken by Judge Ryan, with headquarters at Portage la Prairie, could be more conveniently taken by judge with headquarters at Winnipeg. Proposed readjustment would be as follows:—Judge Walker and additional judge, northern division, eastern district, with Glenboro, Treherne and Carman added, and new court at St. Laurent, nineteen courts. Judge Ryan, with new courts at Dauphin, Russell, Shoal Lake and Minnedosa, twenty-five. Judge Cumberland, thirty-four. Judge Prudhomme, fifteen, as before. Judge Locke, twenty-three, as before. This readjustment would be more suited to the railway communication of the province. Principal difficulty arises from Judge Walker being overworked with county court and surrogate business.

CLIFFORD SIFTON.

Now, there is no man in this House, outside the members from Manitoba, who has the local knowledge necessary to say whether this decision is a good one or not. No one challenges it. No one, except those hon. members, has the local knowledge to enable him to challenge it. The hon. member for Pictou does not challenge it. We have the intention of the Government expressed clearly as to the judicial district they propose to create, and the reason why. We have that intention backed up by Manitoba members. Not a member from Manitoba has ventured to hint in this House that the exercise of that power by the Manitoba executive would be improvident or that the judge is not required. To hear the hon. member for Pictou talk, you would think there was no evidence at all. We are not asking the House to appoint a judge to-day. We could not do it, because the judicial district to which he is to be appointed, has not yet been formally established. Therefore it is not necessary to have a Bill. It is not necessary to have a Bill, but it is necessary to be in a position when the judicial district is laid out, which may be tomorrow, to pay a judge. We do not want to get an Act to appoint a judge.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
I think you do.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I differ with the hon. gentleman. We appoint a judge by virtue of the power vested in us under the constitution.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
What commission will you give this judge?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When we know his judicial district we will give him his commission for that judicial district.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Under what authority?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under the authority vested in us by the constitution.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
And without statutory authority?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no other way.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Then his commission will not be worth the paper it is written on.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman may think so. But this Parliament does not give commissions to judges by virtue of power conferred upon it by its own statute, but by virtue of the power vested in the Government by the British North America Act. And when the judicial district is created the judge for it will be appointed by the Government. We ask for the amount of the salary to be granted to him for the year.

Mr. DAVIES.

It is not constitutionally necessary for us to pass a statute to provide salaries for the judges, but it is a proper thing for us to do. It would be an improper thing to vote that annually only because it would introduce an element of uncertainty into the question and would give the Government a power over the judges that the Government ought not to have. It is right that the salaries paid to the judges should be fixed. But, as the case is urgent, we ask the estimate to pay the judge as soon as the judicial district is laid off, as referred to in the Attorney General's letter. Now, the hon. gentleman intimates that he never would appoint a judge without some judicial inquiry—he would want to know the state of the docket, the number of remanets and so on. I submit that is not the course to take; I think that the hon. gentleman himself, on reflection, would not commit himself to that proposition. When the local legislature sets out a new judicial district and asks for the appointment of a judge and when this is endorsed by the judiciary of the province as it is in this case by Judge Walker and by the Attorney General and every member of the executive, for the hon. gentleman to say that he would refuse the exercise of the appointive power until he had investigated the state of the docket—I venture to say that that is a statement the hon. gentleman would not commit to writing and sign his name to. No lawyer would. I submit that the information which the Solicitor General spoke of and which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) entirely misunderstood him as requiring, was the information he got by his telegram of the 30th September as to the bounds of the judicial district proposed. The hon. gentleman sought to make out a case for himself in the first part of his address by referring to 'ad hoc' judges. It struck me that he had prepared that part of his speech with regard to another Bill, and, as that Bill was withdrawn and the speech was not fired off, the hon. gentleman thought—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
No; the Solicitor General referred to that, to the extent of about one whole paragraph in his speech.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I failed to see the relevancy of it, because there could be no question of an 'ad hoc' judge appointed here. The judge appointed to this judicial district, if this is legally done, must be a judge under the British North America Act.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
If the hon. gentleman will allow me, the Solicitor General said this was a temporary appointment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the hon. gentleman must have misunderstood the Solicitor General.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not at all; I read his language.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Before we pass the Act we must have the judicial district properly set off, and then we can pass an Act fixing the salary. But once the judge is appointed—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will read the language of the Solicitor General. Mr. Foster says:

He says in effect that the appointment can be made provisionally until there is more legislation.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, he says in effect that it is provisional.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. He says, in fact, it is provisional.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Solicitor General, no doubt, had in mind the fact that Parliament always has the power of refusing to pass any Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will read further:

The appointment is of necessity of a provisional character. I do not say that we cannot proceed to make the appointment after this item has been voted, but it will still remain in the close of the House, because until such time as the statute is passed the appointment is essentially provisional. Therefore, at any time, until the statute is amended, by dropping this item in the Estimates, the appointment will cease.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman and I do not differ as to the manner in which the appointment is and must be made. There is and can be no doubt about it and there ought to be no argument about it. The British North America Act, provides the tenure by which a judge shall hold his office. There can be no doubt about that. And this judge must be appointed as others are.

Mr. FOSTER. If you get this vote you issue the commission and appoint the judge.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The moment the judicial district is created you can. If the judicial district had been laid out, we would have brought in a Bill to make his salary permanent, as in the case of other judges.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for information, as I am not a lawyer. Suppose you get this passed and they lay off the district by Order in Council and the name of the candidate is sent down to you, will you appoint that judge as all others are appointed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Without an Act?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Beyond a doubt.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What do you want an Act for, then?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Act is not passed to give authority to appoint a judge.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has not answered my question.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) interrupted. He differs from the view I take—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I say that every judge in Canada to-day, whether a county judge or a superior court judge, holds his office by virtue of a statute of this Parliament.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I say the creation and organization of the courts and the number of judges to be appointed in the courts is a matter entirely and exclusively belonging to the local legislature, and when they organize a court and fix the number of judges, then we, under the British North America Act, are bound to appoint the judges unless it can be shown that there is fraud or improvidence in the passing of their Act; and we get our power from the British North America Act, and not from an Act passed here.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then you do not require an Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Act of Parliament is necessary in all cases.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because it is not decent or proper that we should be discussing year after year what salaries we shall pay to the judges. These salaries must be fixed and final. It is to give this finality and remove the judges from political pressure or the power of the Government that the statute is passed fixing their salaries—not fixing how the judges shall be appointed or what their tenure of office shall be, for that is fixed by the constitution, but fixing their salaries, and thus putting them beyond the temporary waves of passion and feeling and the influence of a partisan House of Commons. We all agree upon that. I am only saying that this case is one represented to be urgent; the hon. gentleman's friends on his own side tell him so; and we propose to act in the way we are doing, because it is urgent, to take an appropriation, and, when the judicial district is set out, to appoint a judge, as all other judges are appointed, and at the next session of Parliament bring in a statute to make his salary permanent, the same as the salaries of other judges.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to point out an error into which the hon. gentleman has fallen. The tenure of office of county court judges is regulated by statute of this Parliament only. The power of appointment vested in British Columbia relates to tenure of office by superior court judges, but the Act that makes the appointment a life one, is in the Revised Statutes of Canada, and nowhere else.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At this late hour of the session, I do not intend to detain the House, but I would like to ask my hon. friend if he cannot produce the draft contract between the Messrs. Allan and the Government of Canada. I have just run my eye over the papers laid on the Table, but I do not find the draft agreement which was prepared and submitted to the Messrs. Allan, which they accepted and were satisfied to sign. The late Government submitted a report of the Privy Council to the Governor General, asking for authority to enter into that contract, subject to the approval of the Colonial Office, and to the contribution made by the Imperial Parliament, of £75,000 per annum. That was the position in which, as I understand it, we left the question. I took it entirely for granted, and we proposed the passage of an Act, but we were unable to get it accepted, by the concurrence of hon. gentlemen then sitting on this side of the House, authorizing us to invite tenders and enter into that contract, subject to the approval of Parliament, which, we thought, would enable us, by prompt action, to carry out the idea we held when that Act was passed, practically of saving a year. I may say that, although that Order in Council was not approved, I left a memorandum, or addressed a note to the First Minister, calling his attention to the position the question was in, and expressing the hope that they would be able to save a year's time in carrying the service to completion by promptly following the course which we had suggested. The papers on the Table of the House show that the Messrs. Allan, on both sides of the water, concurred in the proposal suggested, and that, in addition to a first-class steamship service of 20-knot speed, equal to anything crossing the Atlantic, so far as provision for passengers was concerned, ample cold storage should also be provided to meet whatever demand the Government made in relation to that matter. I do not find that draft contract or the report of Council which was submitted previous to our leaving office, among those papers. I think it was very desirable to have the whole position of this question in as perfect a form as possible, as far as it had gone. I need not explain to the hon. gentleman the great importance I attach to the measure, and the great value I believe this measure would be to Canada. But I should like to have all these papers printed, and I should be very glad if this draft contract was included, in order to show the exact position in which the question was left by the late Government.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I made careful inquiry, in compliance with the request of the hon. gentleman, about that matter, along with my deputy, and my deputy informs me that he had never seen the draft contract. I think, if I remember right, I showed the hon. gentleman his letter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the draft contract was prepared by the Department of Justice.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Still, I should have thought a copy of it, or the contract, would be sent to the Department of Trade and Commerce, in the nature of things. But, of course, things were rather hurried, of necessity, and that might not have been done. I did not inquire in the Department of Justice, and it did not occur to me that it might be there. It is possible, however, that it may be there. But I inquired in the Privy Council Office, specially of Mr. McGee, and I think my hon. friend brought down this afternoon some additional papers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I saw them.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They give, I think, pretty clearly the conditions on which the Messrs. Allan propose to accept it, and the hon. gentleman will observe that they interpolated certain not unreasonable stipulations, perhaps, with respect to detentions by fog, by icebergs, or by other causes. Neither did they, as I think I pointed out especially to my hon. friend, withdraw apparently, nor through any communication we received from Mr. Dunlop, did they withdraw, the stipulation they made, that, if at the expiry of four months it did not suit them to go on with it, they might withdraw. I think I called attention to that, and the hon. gentleman will find a reference to it in a letter addressed by the Messrs. Allan to my hon. friend beside me, under date of 13th or 14th July. Of course, it is unfortunate for the purpose of this discussion, that we have not got these documents printed. The only parties, I suppose, who have seen them, are myself, and perhaps the member for York (Mr. Foster), and the hon. gentleman the leader of the Opposition himself. But I think that was the position of it, that the proposal by the Messrs. Allan imported some stipulations into it. And I think, also he will find that Mr. Chamberlain's acceptance of the proposition was guarded. But, wholly and entirely apart from the question, which I think was properly raised by Mr. Chamberlain, that a contract of that magnitude and importance should be let by the incoming Government—wholly apart from that, as I read the several telegrams which passed between the Colonial Office and the Governor General, I think that Mr. Chamberlain only declared his intention of recommending—at least, that is the construction I put upon his communication to Sir Donald Smith—that £75,000; and I think he also spoke in one or two places of the necessity, in all probability, of having fresh tenders, by reason of the stipulations which the Messrs. Allan had introduced.

I think that on these points the hon. gentleman will find that I am correct as far as the correspondence goes.

Now, it is a matter which is open to some question whether, under the circumstances, such a proposition as the Messrs. Allan made could be regarded as a full tender and acceptance of the contract. It is a question perhaps for my legal friends beside me, more than for either the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) or myself. But I think if parties make a tender in which they expressly declare that, first of all, certain conditions must be understood with reference to the 20-knot service itself; and, in the second place, that they are not to be bound if after a period of four months they choose to withdraw, we can hardly regard it as a full and complete tender. That is the position of the matter so far as I am concerned. Of course the hon. gentleman and the House will understand that this is a question of the very greatest importance and magnitude. It is not a question merely of the expenditure of $750,000 for one year, but it is entering into a contract for a term of ten years for that amount each year, and if I remember aright, a sort of supplementary contract promising to spend $500,000 for each of the next ten years. In any case, while we must fully recognize the extreme importance of the whole business, we feel that we would require to proceed with very considerable caution and deliberation before we committed ourselves to an expenditure involving many millions, and also, which is perhaps more important, we felt that if we made any mistake in this matter; if we entered into a contract for a class of vessels which did not in all respects answer the expectations of the people of Canada, we would be held, and justly held, to very serious account by the people at large for having committed ourselves to such a contract without full consideration. The matter, I may add, has been engaging not only my own attention in the capacity of Minister of Trade and Commerce, but the attention of all my colleagues in so far as they had time to take up the subject. We propose, now that the session is over, to lose no time whatever in endeavouring to obtain such full and complete information on the whole subject, as may enable us to conclude a reasonable arrangement on this subject.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to take advantage of the discussion of this matter of East Line, to offer a remark or two. Whilst many advantages may result from a fast line of steamers between the old world and this, in order that there may be rapid transit for passengers as well as freight; still I may say that there are some drawbacks, and they are of no small importance. Perhaps there is no county in the Dominion that suffers more largely in the matter that I am about to refer to than the county of Lunenburg. Scarcely a year passes that we do not lose a number of valuable fishing schooners engaged on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, together with lamentable loss of life. Only a few weeks ago we lost a very valuable schooner with a portion of her crew, and those of the crew who escaped drowning are now in the hospital in St. John, Nfld. This accident occurred through a collision in consequence of these fast steamers taking their course across the Grand Banks of Newfoundland in the very region where these vessels are prosecuting the industry of fishing. This matter has been engaging the attention of the public for a long time, but it has never been brought before Parliament, and I thought this a fitting opportunity to bring the question before this House. On my arrival in Ottawa some few weeks ago, I thought it advisable to address a letter to the Secretary of State asking him to bring the matter to the attention of the various nations that are interested in commerce and in the fishing industry. I shall read the letter which I addressed to the Secretary of State, and which I think will place the matter before the House more clearly than anything which I might say orally. I wrote as follows:—

House of Commons,
Ottawa, August 28th, 1896.

Hon. R. W. Scott,
Secretary of State, Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to direct your attention to a matter of paramount importance or interest to the people of my constituency, the county of Lunenburg particularly, and as well to the province of Nova Scotia and Canada generally.

During the months of May, June, July, August and September, hundreds of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and French vessels visit the Grand Banks of Newfoundland in the prosecution of their calling as fishermen, and each year many are lost by collision, and by being run down, and in many instances never heard from.

The matter is one worthy of the most diligent inquiry with a view to ascertaining what losses of lives and property have occurred and as to how many are supposed, attributable to sudden sinking by ocean steamers without report.

That an international regulation be promulgated relegating all classes of "ocean greyhounds," "ocean tramps," so called, and fast freighters, both sailing and steam, to certain limits during certain seasons, seems to me most reasonable and advisable, and I would respectfully ask that your honour will take careful cognizance of this apparent need and endeavour to obtain conference with the representatives of the great powers interested, such as Great Britain, France, Germany, Norway, Sweden, United States and others, in order to have such regulations brought about as will ensure a greater measure of safety to our people than they now enjoy, always keeping the necessities of the trade in view, and commerce of those countries using the great ocean highways.

That the subject has a universal significance there can be no doubt, and I hope it may so commend itself to your mind that you will give it furtherance among the powers interested, and have such facts and arguments adduced, as will show whether another or almost as acceptable a route more free from fog, may not be obtained for liners and sailing craft as will make the prescribed limits of the banks comparatively free of danger to fishermen.

As fishermen, Nova Scotia, New England and France, not forgetting Newfoundland, contribute by far the largest portion, I may say nearly the whole, and my own constituency (Lunenburg) doubtless furnishes more fishermen than any like section on the American continent.

In the common interest of humanity this subject should receive consideration as many are the homes to-day in the countries named which are mourning the loss of dear ones "never heard from."

Science should lay out certain great courses from Moville to St. John, from Cork to Belle Isle, to the approaches of the St. Lawrence, Halifax, Boston, New York, with such divergence as will leave the Banks of Newfoundland free from danger from collision. Especially can this be done with subsidized lines, as it could be made a condition of the contract.

Or if calling at St. Johns or at any other point in Newfoundland that necessitates the crossing of the said Banks; that certain conditions be required of shipping during foggy weather, and at night, as to rate of speed, firing interval signal guns, and sounding of trumpets as to ensure greater safety to the precious lives of fishermen and property.

Fishing vessels on the Banks, or fishing grounds when engaged in actual fishing, ride at anchor and consequently are powerless to avoid danger although warned by sound of fog alarms of the approach of shipping, hence the greater reason for some action to be taken to avoid collision, loss of life and property so liable to occur.

I trust this matter may appear so worthy of consideration that an international commission of inquiry may be called to the end that the subject may receive the full attention which it deserves and demands.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

C. EDWIN KAULBACH, M.P.

Mr. Speaker, you will observe that we do not ask that any divergence from the usual course should be taken at any other season of the year, except in those months in which the fishermen are employed on the Grand Banks; that is, the months of May, June, July, August and September, the fishing season. That this request is a reasonable one can be clearly shown. If they will take the southern edge of the banks, they will avoid the fogs, have a better chance of avoiding icebergs, and certainly the terrible loss of life and property which has been entailed upon those engaged in the industry of fishing by the course they have pursued in the past. It is a serious matter of concern to the fishermen of the county I represent, if this complaint is not recognized; for there are many of those men engaged in the industry of fishing, though possessed of brave hearts, yet not possessed of hearts brave enough to prosecute that industry if this thing is going to be permitted any longer, or no recognition given to this appeal. Numbers of the fishermen have changed their base of operation or have abandoned their voyages to the Grand Banks, and have been frequenting the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Labrador shore, in consequence of the risks they have been running on these banks. Now, I do not think this is an unreasonable request to make, and I hope the Government will take it into their serious consideration when a contract is made, giving a subsidy to such boats, so that we may avoid the difficulties I have referred to. Whilst I am on my feet I may say, with regard to the subsidized lines we have had in the past, that the Board of Trade of my town and that of Bridgewater, also in my county, have met and discussed the matter very carefully, and have expressed their views that it is not in their opinion advisable on the part of the Government to expend any money in subsidies to any vessel which makes its terminal point in a foreign country. They conceive that the voyage between Great Britain and Canada should be direct, and that the Government should not subsidize any steamer that would have a terminal point in a foreign country, for the reason that they conceive that that would be subsidizing a vessel to actually transport passengers and freight to a foreign country instead of to our own; whereas, if the subsidized ships are confined strictly in this case to ports in Great Britain and Canada, we would have not only the advantage of the travel of passengers landed in Canada, but the advantage of the freight traffic as well; and the return cargoes from Canada, the natural products of Canada, as our exports to the markets of Great Britain. We would then leave no cause for friction, and no room for any one to say that we were subsidizing a line of boats to carry the traffic to a foreign country to the detriment of the trade of Canada. The Board of Trade of Lunenburg have taken action in this matter and I will read a telegram on this subject sent to me a few days ago by them, which will speak for itself:

Lunenburg, N.S., Sept. 18, 1896.

Board of Trade disapprove extending subsidy to steamers from Portland to Liverpool. Winter port should be in Canada. Bring it to notice of Government.

H. B. ROSS, Secretary,
Board of Trade.

Now, if careful thought is exercised in regard to this expenditure, we will reap the advantage of it; but if due consideration is not given to the question of the advantages or disadvantages to be derived, we shall find that we shall not get the returns from the vessels or a quid pro quo for the expenditure which we are seeking. The necessity of having this trade I readily concede, and it should be developed to as large an extent as possible. That it can be developed is shown in a variety of ways. The effort that is now made to provide cold storage accommodation will render our opportunities for shipments of farm products, such as poultry, butter, fruits, &c., from the port of Halifax greater than any we have ever yet had in the past; and I feel assured that the farmers will reap the advantage to a very great extent, should the port of Halifax, which geographically is destined to be the emporium of trade of America, display the enterprise she ought (which she unfortunately lacks), could be made a second New York in a very short time. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I dare to trespass any longer upon the indulgence of this House, for I know all are anxious to get away as quickly as they can. But I do hope that some action will be taken with regard to the very important matter to which I have referred, and that in subsidizing steamers, some measure of safety shall be provided, such as change of route with the necessary precaution when required to cross the banks, whereby dangers such as those I have alluded to, with loss of property and life, may be avoided.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I desire to say but a few words in reference to the question of the fast line. I shall certainly not take up more than a few moments on the very last day of the session, to repeat the opinion which I have already expressed, as to the great interest which the people, not only of the province of Quebec, but all over Canada, take in this great enterprise, which I believe is destined to have such an important effect upon the trade and commerce and also upon the passenger traffic of Canada. I wish especially to express my pleasure at hearing the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce admitting this question to be one of the first importance for Canada, and stating that now that the Cabinet were to be relieved from the duties of the session, they would take the very earliest opportunity of looking into the whole question, with the intention of bringing it to such a point that it can be submitted to the consideration of Parliament when it meets again, and with the view, I suppose, of carrying out the scheme as originally undertaken by the late Government. I cannot hide from this House the feeling of profound disappointment and discouragement which is produced in Quebec, more especially by the utterances of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell). That hon. gentleman notwithstanding the professions he made previous to and since his election, sounded quite a different note on the floor of Parliament; and although I did ask the hon. leader of the Government if the hon. Minister from Quebec West had expressed the views entertained by the Government upon that important question, although I was anxious to know whether the statement expressed by the hon. member for Quebec West in the telegram, now celebrated, applied to a line of 17 knots or 20 knots. I did not receive an answer. The hon. First Minister, who has represented a division of the city of Quebec for so many years and has such a strong following in the province of Quebec, must know, as I am certain he does, the wants of that province; and I hope that he and his colleagues will see that the fast line is carried out, and that it will be a line able to compete, in so far as speed is concerned, with the very best lines on the Atlantic coast between the United States and England. This is a question of such vast importance, that it ought to be viewed as outside of party strife. It ought to be viewed absolutely as one affecting the great interests of the country, and I hope that as soon as the session is over, the matter will be taken up, as the hon. Minister has promised, without the least possible delay, because any delay makes the question more difficult of solution, now that we have learned from the discussion to-day that the delay has caused difficulties which were not anticipated. I was under the impression, and am still under the impression, that the Imperial Government had undertaken to contribute the subsidy which was spoken of during the debate; but now I hear from our hon. friends on the other side that there is a doubt in their minds as to whether the project is to be submitted as an Imperial one or in a different shape. I hope sincerely that the question will be taken up just as soon as possible, and I consider, in view of the expressions of opinion which have fallen from the representative of Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) in the Cabinet, that the Cabinet should take the earliest opportunity of quieting the doubts of the people of Canada on that question and bringing it to a satisfactory solution in the interests of the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps I may be permitted to make one or two explanations with regard to these papers, because it is very desirable that the correct information should go to the House and country. In the first place, there is no question about the contribution of the Imperial Government. That matter is distinctly and definitely settled in the report that the present High Commissioner (Sir Donald Smith) has made to the Government on the subject. He said, speaking of Mr. Chamberlain:

He also disclaimed any undertaking on the part of Her Majesty's government to contribute any specific sum to the undertaking, but stated that he thought what the Government had committed themselves to was a general offer of assistance, under certain conditions, the assistance not to exceed in any case, an annual sum of £75,000 for the term of years specified in the conditions.

That was ten years, so that the only point, as I have already explained, was that when the tenders were invited it was understood that the sum granted might not be £75,000, if the tenders obtained showed that the service could be performed for a less sum than £150,000 plus £75,000. That matter having been disposed of, there is no question that the Imperial Government are committed, provided the conditions are met, to one-third the amount; and the lowest tender having been £225,000 sterling, that involves a contribution, according to the statement of Mr. Chamberlain, of £75,000 a year by the Imperial government.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The statement my hon. friend was reading just now is Sir Donald Smith's statement, and not the formal declaration of Mr. Chamberlain.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; but I say that this confirms the declaration of Mr. Chamberlain to myself, and which had already been communicated in a despatch to the Government here.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would like to understand exactly. Is the hon. gentleman now speaking of the written memorandum that were exchanged between the Colonial Office and the Governor General or of his own and Sir Donald Smith's understanding of Mr. Chamberlain's language?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of both, the whole correspondence.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman has the papers in his hands, and, as I have said, it is unfortunate there was not time to print them, but I do not remember seeing in those documents any formal communication from Mr. Chamberlain precisely in those words, although I clearly understood it was his intention to recommend the grant under certain conditions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is so. All the doubt as to what the grant might be depended on whether the service could be obtained for a less sum than £225,000. That is practically the position. With reference to another point, which is very important, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce was under the impression that this was not a specific tender because it was qualified by a condition that was not in the invitation to tender, and that condition is that the parties should have four months, without penalty, for the purpose of accepting the contract.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

That is a very important point. My hon. friend will remember that I said on a former occasion that Sir Donald Smith had informed me, during the very brief interview I had with him on his way from Montreal to Ottawa, during his last visit, that Mr. Dunlop had informed him that the Messrs. Allan were prepared to withdraw that stipulation about the four months, which withdrawal made it an absolute tender, and I may say that the points at issue between Messrs. Allan and the Government here, and which were settled between us, were also referred to the Colonial Office, and the settlement had their approval. So that the only question as to this tender, because it is slightly lower than the other one which had the same stipulation of four months—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think Mr. Huddart asked for six months.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so, and his tender was a little higher, but the only point that remained to prevent the Messrs. Allan tender from being regarded as a complete tender, in response to our invitation, was removed by that settlement. Sir Donald Smith said:

I am happy to say that Mr. Dunlop (who, my hon. friends opposite know, is an extremely able man and represents in the fullest extent the great firm of the Messrs. Allan of Glasgow)—informed me, before my interview with Mr. Chamberlain, that his firm were prepared to withdraw from the stipulation, to be given in the form of a letter, that the contract should be given to them, subject, without penalty, to their succeeding in floating a company in four months.

I communicated this statement to the Secretary of State. So that my hon. friend will see that which prevented this being an absolute tender is withdrawn by the notice given by Mr. Dunlop.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What is the date of that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The date of Sir Donald Smith's letter—July 10th.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a subsequent letter of Mr. Allan to the Premier, in which, if I am not mistaken, this stipulation as to four months, appears.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so. But the hon. gentleman will observe that the representatives of the company on the other side of the Atlantic had given the High Commissioner notice and had instructed him to notify Mr. Chamberlain that they withdrew that stipulation independently of the communication which may have taken place here, owing to that not having been communicated.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Still it involves a contradiction.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It does, certainly, but I think it was by oversight that in the subsequent letter to the Prime Minister the stating of that point was omitted. The only other point that requires a moment's attention is the statement of Mr. Mercer, Under Secretary of State in the Colonial Office, that the Imperial Government insisted upon, as a condition of their giving assistance to the enterprise, that it should be a 20-knot service. I invite careful consideration to this. I think, it is desirable that those papers should be printed, though late, in order that the Government may give this very important question the careful consideration to which it is entitled.

Mr. FOSTER. My impression was very strongly that there was no doubt whatever about the Imperial Government having undertaken, through Mr. Chamberlain, to contribute to the fast line service under certain conditions. I had not the papers themselves, but I have here a digest of the papers in the press. From the "Gazette" account it appears :

Included in the papers is a despatch from Mr. Chamberlain, dated November 21, 1895, on the subject of the Atlantic and Pacific services. He intimated that the fast Atlantic service, even if realized, did not present any advantages over the Suez route for mails between Australia and England. The main advantage of this part of the scheme would rest between Canada and Australia, to which he did not think the Imperial government should directly contribute. With reference to the Atlantic line, as it appears that the Canadian Government could not secure an improved service without assistance, Her Majesty's government were prepared to contribute to that, provided that arrangements could also be made for the acceleration of the land journey to and from Vancouver.

That carries out the impression I had formed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I wish to say a word in reply to the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron). I think that hon. gentleman has been unfair to my hon. friend from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell). If there is a man in Parliament or in the province of Quebec who has at heart the interests of the port of Quebec, it is my hon. friend from Quebec West. Commercially speaking, financially speaking, politically speaking, he has more interest in it than the hon. gentleman from Three Rivers, for the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) does not represent Quebec now, while my hon. friend and colleague (Mr. Dobell) has been elected as the representative of one of the most important divisions of the city. If there is a man who understands the commercial interests of Quebec that man is my hon. friend from Quebec West.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Quebec does not seem to think so.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) should not forget that for eight years he was a member of a Government which, year after year, made promises which have not been fulfilled. We have heard a great deal of this 20-knot line, and what did Quebec get? Did we get anything? Nothing materialized except words, and out of these words my hon. friend has got his own rewards, I am sorry, on his account, to say. He has filled the city of Quebec with his words, but Quebec, seeing that he did not fulfil one of his promises, has bidden him good-bye. Now, there is one thing I wish to say distinctly—this Government is not bound to pay the political debts of my hon. friend. I happen to know something of the negotiations which took place in Montreal previous to the last election. I happen to know that certain Orders in Council were passed, and I know the object of them. From the negotiations that took place with regard to the fast line, the hon. gentlemen opposite may have derived some little political advantage during the last campaign. If any political debt was incurred, it is not for us to pay it. This Government, I am sure, has at heart quite as much as hon. gentlemen opposite, the interests of the country in reference to this fast line question. We are working at it; we are studying the question carefully; and I say, as I have said before, we have no intention of being drawn into a trap in dealing with it. We will not go faster than is necessary, but we will go as fast as is necessary.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Seventeen knots.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And what more have we had in Quebec? What have these promises and speeches given us better than seventeen knots? The late Premier came to Quebec and made magnificent speeches, as my hon. friend from Three Rivers has made, both inside and outside of this House. But nothing ever came of them. I make this prophecy—that we will not be long in power before Canada and Quebec, to which my hon. friend attaches so much importance is in possession of a well established fast line of steamers. We will not make useless speeches. This is a business Government, and it will show itself not so much in speeches as in action.

WAYS AND MEANS—SUPPLY BILL.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved :

That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1897, the sum of $14,631,467.18 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolution reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 39) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1897, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second time, considered in committee, and reported.

ADJOURNMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier) moved that when the House adjourns this day, it stands adjourned till Monday next at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 6 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 5th October, 1896.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER communicated to the House the following letter which he had received :—

Office of the Governor General's Secretary,
Ottawa, 5th October, 1896.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Monday the 5th instant, at 3 o'clock, for the purpose of proroguing Parliament.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

JOHN SINCLAIR,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE FINES.

Mr. OLIVER asked :

What amount of money was collected by fines from members of the North-west Mounted Police
Mr. FIELDING.

Force during the year ending June 30th, 1896 ? How was this money distributed ?—giving details.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). The amount of fines was $1,646.35 ; the distribution was as follows :—

$100 to each of the eight Divisions into which the Force is divided, for recreation and amusement.....	$ 800 00
For newspapers .....	409 00
Balance, for illustrated papers and magazines for the recreation rooms.....	437 35
	<hr/>
	$1,646 35

THE COLLECTOR OF INLAND REVENUE, BRANTFORD.

Mr. BAIN asked :

Has any request from J. Spence, Collector of Inland Revenue, Brantford, to be superannuated, been received at the department ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir H. Joly de Lotbinière). There is nothing on record within the department in the way of a request by Mr. Spence to be superannuated further than a copy of a submission to His Excellency in Council, made by the then acting Controller, which document in recommending such superannuation incidentally states that the course proposed is in accordance with Mr. Spence's request.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask, did the hon. Controller say that that was signed by me ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes ; so the answer reads.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I desire to say that I did not propose any superannuations that were not asked for.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I merely gave the answer as it was prepared by the officers of the department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I made the statement in order to set myself right.

THE BINDER TWINE CONTRACT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called. I desire to draw the attention of the House to a necessary correction, one of a number that have been found necessary in consequence of the unfortunate statement by one of the members of this House purporting to come from the Department of Justice. It will be remembered that the hon. member for Ligar (Mr. Richardson) read a list of pretended debtors in connection with the sales of binder twine. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) felt called upon to explain that the name of his firm was improperly included, as they had paid the amount. One other member has made a correction in regard to a private party doing business with the Government. It now becomes my duty to make a similar statement with regard to Messrs. James & Reid, of Perth, Ont., who appear in the list as indebted to the Government to the amount of $201.70. These gentlemen have their name improperly included in that list, as they have paid the amount. In proof of that I have sent to me the cheque marked paid for the amount of $201.70.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). Dated when ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Dated 23rd March last. The Solicitor General has already expressed regret that this sheet should have been submitted to the House ; and on a subsequent occasion when similar information was asked, I understand, he has wisely adopted the plan I adopted of not bringing down a statement of the accounts running with the department unless under pressure from the House ; because, as the House will easily understand, even if certain items appear there as debts due, it does not necessarily follow that the parties are in any difficulties or that there is any irregularity ; as firms such as that of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood), of the very highest credit in the credit of the country, are often for a while on the books of people with whom they are doing business—it is a mere matter of the course of trade. But if their names are included in the list of names of debts due, it creates a wrong impression.

The PRIME MINISTER. To whom was the payment made ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. To the warden of the Kingston Penitentiary. A letter to me states that this amount was paid by draft in March last, payable to the order of the warden of Kingston Penitentiary.

The PRIME MINISTER. Somebody is at fault then.

MR. GEORGE R. SMITH, OF DUNNVILLE.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to mention that I was unable to find in the record of the proceedings, the answer which the Premier said he had given with regard to Mr. George R. Smith, as to whom an Order in Council was passed before the late Government went out of office.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). I gave the answer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I could not find it. Would the hon. Minister kindly tell me what the answer was ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The question related, I think, to Mr. C. R. Smith ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No ; I thought the hon. Minister was making a mistake. Mr. C. R. Smith belongs to Hamilton, but the Order in Council I speak of referred to Mr. George R. Smith, of Dunnville. Would the hon. Minister look the matter up, and let me know privately concerning the case ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It seems I made a mistake as between the two Smiths.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And I dropped the question of which I had given notice, because the hon. Minister said he had answered it. Will the hon. gentleman kindly drop me a note with regard to the matter ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

SUPPLY—ATLANTIC MAIL SERVICE AND PORTLAND.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved third reading of Bill (No. 39) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1897, and other purposes relating to the public service.

Mr. FOSTER. I have one or two matters that were left over from the committee without being discussed. For convenience sake, we passed the items and got them into the Supply Bill, but with the understanding that they were to be discussed as in committee this morning. The first is with reference to the present mail service between Canada and Great Britain. Although we have seen certain statements in the newspapers as to the policy of the present Government for this and succeeding years, we have had no definite statement made in the House, and I would like to ask the leader of the Government, or whatever member of the Cabinet is responsible, if he would kindly state what the policy of the Government is with reference to that, as far as the present mail service is concerned, as going from Portland in the state of Maine, or from St. John or Halifax.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That relates to the Allan contract ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Reference has been made in the course of the discussion to the Order in Council passed by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, with regard to the abolition of the subsidy to steamers making their terminus at a foreign port, which was understood to be at Portland ; and the impression has been conveyed in some quarters that it was the intention of my hon. friends opposite to have brought that contract to a summary close. We find, however, that while there was an Order in Council apparently contemplating such a policy, it contained in it the words, "subject to existing contracts." Now, while in a technical sense there was, perhaps, no existing contract, inasmuch as the Allan contract had expired some years before, that contract had been, by mutual agreement, extended and continued from year to year in a less formal way. It was the opinion of the present Government that in view of the many years during which that contract, possibly in that informal way, had continued, and in view of the very long time during which the Allan Company had been performing that service, it was not a reasonable proposal that it should be summarily disposed of in the way in which it had been said was the intention of hon. gentlemen opposite to do—whether they actually did intend to terminate the contract in that way, may be open to debate. However, it seemed to us only reasonable, after the many years during which that service had been performed by the Allan Company, that if they were no longer to have the contract, they should have at all events one season's notice. Therefore, instead of undertaking to terminate that contract at present, we have caused the Allan Company to understand that the service will be continued for the coming year; and then the Government will be at liberty to terminate, and will probably, I suppose, terminate that contract. For the present, therefore, we think it fair that the contract of the Allan Company for the conveyance of mails, with the knowledge that their vessels go to Portland,—though of course that is not a matter with which we are directly connected, because it is a mail contract and not a freight subsidy—but with the knowledge that they make their terminus at Portland, we think it only fair and reasonable that they should have notice before that contract is summarily terminated. Therefore the contract continues for the present season, and will continue to the end of the season of navigation in 1897.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has notice been given?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know that we have actually notified them, but the Allans have been made aware of the fact, and, I presume, notice will be given in a more formal shape.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any Order in Council been passed to that effect?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think any Order in Council has actually passed, but it is an understanding which will have to be confirmed by Order in Council.

Mr. ELLIS. Have you the date of the Order in Council to which you refer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 21st February is the date of the Order.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has the papers, Mr. FIELDING.

but he is not in his seat. It was during the early spring, I think.

Mr. FOSTER. The statement which has been made by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, renders it necessary that I should make, both in the interest of the late Government and in the interest, I think, of the people of St. John and the maritime provinces, and for that matter, of the whole of Canada, a very short, and I hope, very comprehensive, statement as to the facts of the case, and the policy of the late Government; and in doing so I shall take up some of the points of fact which have been stated by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. I do not wish to make this long, and I do not wish to make it contentious. In the first place, I may state that for the last ten years there has been a gradually growing sentiment in this country that the time was approaching, or had, in all those years approached, in the opinion of many, when the money of Canada should not be given for a service which proceeded from a United States port, that is from any foreign port on this side, and merely calling at a Canadian port, going and coming, to take the mails and what freight what might happen to be collected there. Year by year that feeling continued to grow stronger, and the feeling of the country was represented in Parliament, until I think, in the year 1889, when we were discussing the fast Atlantic service which was proposed, it was stated by myself, in bringing down a Bill, or in debate upon the Bill, that it was the intention of the Government to adopt as their line of policy the entire cessation of subsidies granted in that way, and that in the contract which it was supposed was then about to be made, and for which authority was taken from Parliament, there should be a proviso that the vessels of the fast line should make a Canadian port their ultimate terminus on this side, that is, they should not go to a United States port, or to any other port on this continent other than a Canadian port. As is well known, the provisional contract which was made in the matter of the fast line with the Andersons, fell through; and the Government thereafter, as is also well known, attempted, by calls for tenders and by pushing this programme, which had been laid out and to which the adhesion of the House had been given—the Government endeavoured to bring about the ultimate accomplishment of the fast line, always, as was stated over and over, with the view that that fast line should be one which should run entirely from Canadian ports. Well, matters went on until sometime later, when the contract with the Allans at last entirely terminated, but was taken up again in the yearly way of which my hon. friend has spoken. I do not need to go into the history of that, I think it is well known. However, last year, the House knows, a proposition was made by an old and reliable steamship company to undertake a winter service from the port of St. John direct to Liverpool, with an idea firmly held by them that it could be made successful, and that they could demonstrate, if a small subsidy were given to them, the fact that Canadian ports were sufficient to do, and economically could do, the winter freight business for Canada, and for whatever freight might offer, even from the United States. The proposition of the Beaver Line was taken up by the Government, and a contract was made for an experimental winter service, for which a subsidy of $25,000 was given. Without going into the history of that largely, suffice it to say that on all sides it is thoroughly admitted that the experiment was an unqualified success, that in the matter of speed, in the matter of quick transit to the ports of Toronto, Montreal and the distributing interior ports, and in the matter of cargo carried, the Beaver Line of steamers, and the attendant steamers which were attracted to the port of St. John in the line of traffic which had been developed—that these were the peers of the Allan Line trading with Portland, and calling at Halifax, in all these respects. In fact, as was stated in the House last year, and shown from the records, freights were delivered more quickly to Montreal and Toronto through the maritime province ports than they were when taken to Portland by the Allan Line in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway. In that debate, the matter of the making of a maritime province port, the final port of call for the future in both freight and mails, was discussed, and discussed upon the memorial from the Board of Trade, I think, of the maritime provinces, which prayed for that; and in response to it, the Government, after having considered it, passed an Order in Council, and it is as well that that Order in Council should be placed upon the records:

On a report dated 29th January, 1896, from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, stating that he has had under consideration a memorial from the Board of Trade of the Maritime Provinces composed of the several boards of the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, to His Excellency the Governor General, calling attention to the fact that for some years past after the close of navigation on the St. Lawrence through Canadian freight, carried on steamers subsidized by the Canadian Government, after mails have been landed at a through port, has been landed and shipped at a foreign port to the detriment of the Maritime Provinces and asking that this matter be taken into serious consideration, and that in future subsidies be granted to steamers sailing between port or ports in the United Kingdom and port or ports in Canada only.

The Minister submits that he is of opinion that the view taken by the Board of Trade is the correct one, and that the time has arrived when there are sufficient freights to and from Canadian ports to fully warrant the Government to withhold subsidies to vessels sailing from or landing at any foreign port on this continent, and that it would be for the interests of Canada were subsidized steamers required to sail to and from Canadian ports direct, not to affect existing contracts.

The Minister recommends that a copy of this Minute, if approved, be communicated in the usual manner to the Secretary of the Board of Trade in the Maritime Provinces.

The Committee submit the above for Your Excellency's approval.

This was passed on the 21st of February, 1896. In the debate that took place upon the Beaver Line subsidy, the then member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) went into the question quite elaborately, and spread upon the "Hansard" the history of the negotiations and the actual results of the shipments that had been made up to that time. But what I want to impress more clearly upon the House is, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives), speaking at that time, emphasized the policy and the action of the then Government. He said:

In answer to a petition from the Maritime Board of Trade of the Maritime Provinces, the Government have just laid down as its policy, that after the termination of existing contracts, no subsidy will be given to any line of steamers that touches at any other than a Canadian port on this side of the ocean. That is the settled policy of the Government, and we trust that that declared policy, coupled with the proof of what has been done by the city of St. John, will lead to, practically, a very large increase of business from Canadian ports during the winter season.

Thus, then, we have the history complete as to the policy of the Government, and the Order in Council which I have just read, simply made—as an Order in Council should and as is perfectly just—it simply made an exception of any existing contracts. So much with reference to that.

Now, we will come to the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who said, in the first place, that there really was no contract, but that there had been an understood arrangement by which the contract which had been made in 1891 was continued from year to year. The real facts of the case are these: The last contract that was made with the Allan Line was made on the 14th December, 1891, and was to expire on the 24th December, 1892, and one of the clauses of the contract provided that.—

At that date the contract shall absolutely cease and determine.

Therefore, the last contract made with the Allans absolutely ceased and determined under the terms of that contract on the 24th day of December, 1892—that is, at the close of the navigation season. Now, as to there being any contract after that; the fact is, that this contract remained, and was by Order in Council—which is an official and an efficient authorization—extended from year to year. On the 12th September, 1892, it was renewed for one year. On the 17th of May, 1893, it was renewed for one year from the 24th December, 1893. On the 12th June, 1894, it was renewed to the close of navigation on the St. Lawrence in 1895; and on the 7th of September, 1895, it was renewed for one year from the close of navigation in 1895, or until the 25th November, 1896. On the 25th November, 1896, the last contract by Order in Council extended, absolutely closes and determines. That is within a month or so of the present date. There is no clause in the contract of 1891 which makes it necessary for the Government to give notice. In fact, the contract was so drawn up that there is a particular clause to preclude the company from asking for notice, because the contract of 1891 very emphatically and distinctly says:

The contract shall then (that is, on the 24th December, 1892) absolutely cease and determine.

And, it is only kept in force by these successive Orders in Council. Now, Sir, when the Order in Council of the 21st of February of last year, renewing and extending this contract to the close of navigation for the present season—that is until the 25th November, 1896—when that Order in Council of the 21st of February was passed, that became then the existing contract, and that was the existing contract with which the Government, by its Orders in Council, declared it did not intend to interfere. The interference would cease entirely with the ending of the contract, and the contract would end unless renewed again on the 25th November, 1896. It was the expressed policy of the late Government as declared by its Order in Council, and as declared afterwards in the House by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that they would not renew any of these existing contracts which gave the money of Canada for a subsidy to steamers sailing from a United States port and merely calling at one of our own ports. So much with reference to that. It is as clear as it can be. I take issue with the statement of facts made by the Finance Minister: that their difficulty was when they came into power in finding an existing contract which had not been cancelled, and which, as they say now, must go on until the last of the season of navigation, in 1897. I want to call the attention of the Government to the disparity in authorities which exists. I have here an authorized interview, given by the Minister of Railways and Canals to the correspondent of the St John "Telegraph," in which he states the facts, as these:

The Allans were then performing a service the terms of which have been continued from year to year and which the previous government had not terminated when they resigned. The current year for which the service is being rendered not being terminated by any action of the last Administration, must continue until the end of the year, which will be to the 30th June next. It must be clear to any thoughtful person, who considers for a moment, that June next will be the earliest date at which existing arrangements could be terminated. By that time, he said, the Ministry will have had ample opportunity to mature its policy respecting the so-called fast line service, and necessarily forming part of that policy will be the question of subsidies for freight lines from the maritime ports.

That interview, given by the Minister of Railways and Canals, sets out with the statement that there is an existing contract which does not expire, and ought not to be terminated until notice has been given by the Government, but that would expire on the 30th June. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) now has taken heart of hope, and makes the term for which it ought to extend, six months longer, that is, until the end of navigation for that year. But neither of these statements is correct in fact. The contract expires on the 25th November, 1896. Let us come now to the point of notice. The statement has been made that no notice was given, but, beyond that, the statement is true that no notice was required, that the contract of 1891 and the Order in Council afterwards made it imperative on the face of them that there was to be no notice given, and that there was, therefore, to be no claim on the part of the company that the contract was not to be terminated unless notice were given. But I want to go a little further than that. I want to say that the Government are estopped from using that argument on the line of necessity, even though these statements were true, that notice was required by the decision of their own Minister of Justice, in the case of the clothing contracts, that no contract is valid and binding on the Government unless there is an appropriation to bind the contract. When these gentlemen came into power in July, 1896, there was no appropriation; there was, therefore, in the opinion of the Minister of Justice, nothing binding. So much with reference to these facts. I thought it was right that they should be put upon the records of the House, and should be given the utmost publicity. The policy of the late Government was clear and explicit. With reference to notice, it was more clear and explicit than appears upon the records. Suppose notice had been necessary, I say that sufficient notice was given—first, in the publication of an Order in Council, which was published in the newspaper press, and went everywhere; and secondly, by a statement after that Order in Council, made by the Minister of Commerce in the House, which was published in the press, and went everywhere—and that was early in the month of March. But there is additional evidence. When have applications been made by the Allan Company in these preceding years when their contract had to be renewed by Order in Council? They have always been made early in the preceding year—on the 12th September, 1892, on the 17th May, 1893, on the 12th June, 1894, and on the 7th September, 1895, for the succeeding year. Why was not application made by the company in the last year, if there was no opposition to their carrying on the contract? Because they knew, from the Minister of Trade and Commerce personally, because they knew from his statement in the House, because they knew from the Order in Council, that the policy had been changed; and I am in a position to state that the steamship companies in the city of Montreal, through their principal men, had talked the whole matter over with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and that steamships belonging to their different lines were to go to St. John and Halifax during the coming winter and participate in the trips or mileage proportion of the $126,000 subsidy, which was to be distributed in the way that the Minister of Trade and Commerce explained. Then, the policy of the Government is straight enough. There was no contract requiring notice. The contract expires absolutely on the 25th November; there was nothing that called for notice. Anyway, if there had been repeated, notice was given; and these very steamship companies, through their representatives, had talked the whole matter over with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and knew the policy that was going to be pursued. Now, with reference to the policy of the Government during the present session. They have evidently, through some means or other, determined to go against the well-understood policy of Parliament and of the late Government, and they will continue for one whole year longer the subsidy to the Allan Line. But neither the Minister of Finance in his statement to-day, nor the Minister of Railways and Canals in his public interview, nor any member of the Government, so far as I have seen or heard, has stated that at the end of 1897 these contracts and subsidies will absolutely expire, and not be again renewed, and that the policy of paying no subsidy to vessels going from American ports will be carried out. They may make that statement; but I call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that up to the present time not one of them has made it.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. member permit me to ask him a question? Did the hon. gentleman hear, or, if he did not hear, did he see the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the questions which were put with regard to the termination of that contract?

Mr. FOSTER. I was in the House when the answers were read, and, so far as my recollection of them goes, the answer in this case was that the Government thought the subsidy ought to be continued during the next season; but I recollect no statement to the effect that the policy of the Government was that no other subsidies of that kind would be given. Now, the position taken by the present Government has caused a great deal of disappointment in many ways—locally, in the city of St. John; to a wider locality in the maritime provinces; and to a wider constituency still, which has followed with interest, and I believe with the strongest appreciation, the gradual approach of the Government of the country to the time when its fully-declared policy would be not to give money longer for vessels taking freight and mails from an American port. All this disappointment has been caused by the action of the Government. The Government may have had a reason for it. The only reason the Government has given was that there was an existing contract which must be carried out. I have analysed that, and I leave it with the House and the country to say which of the two positions is the correct position. But in order, if possible, to allay the dissatisfaction which exists with the negative which they have given to the policy of the late Government, certainly a national policy, they have undertaken to give some additional subsidies, as they appear in the Estimates; but, when analysed, it will be found that the subsidies are really not additional subsidies. The policy of the Government was shortly and explicitly stated by myself in the city of St. John during the last election, and by a telegram or letter, I forget which, from Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the Government, endorsing my statement of the policy, as one which not only received the approval of himself at that time, but which had been duly considered in Council, and had been adopted as the definite policy of the Government. The statement made was this:

The proposed new freight service from St. John to English ports direct is to be an adequate service in every particular, to be weekly in winter and monthly or fortnightly in summer as the requirements of the service demand. The term for which tenders will be called for is the usual one of five years, and the line is to succeed the temporary service to be provided for the season of 1896-97.

I may say that this policy was very keenly and closely discussed in the New Brunswick elections, and especially in the St. John elections, and it will not be out of place for me to read a part of the electoral address signed by my hon. friends, the two members of the city of St. John, as published to their electors:—

The Liberal party will deal generously and faithfully with the matters which affect particularly the interests of St. John. As a national party it recognizes the importance of developing trade and of building up seaports within our own country capable of doing the winter as well as the summer business of Canada. Too long has this been neglected by the present Administration, which is only just beginning to realize the mistake of fostering trade by large subsidies given to steamers running in winter to ports on this side of the Atlantic not in Canadian territory. Sympathizing with the ambitions and aspirations of the people of this city, we pledge ourselves to stand up for fair-play and equal justice to St. John, and in this we are confident that we shall have the full support and the steady assistance of the Liberal party.

The advantages of St. John west as the receiving and forwarding point for ocean freight, so effectively shown in the past winter, proves that it is clearly to the advantage of the country to extend and increase that business in the most practical way. The subsidies heretofore paid for a steamship service to ports outside of Canada should now be available for ports in this country, and with a Government disposed to treat St. John fairly there is no doubt at all that this business can be greatly developed, extended and increased here.

That shows that, so far as the declarations made before the constituencies went, the two parties, through their candidates, were in favour of the very same line of policy and the same principle of action. But the Government of the past had gone so far as to determine its policy, to announce it, and to take the necessary steps for carrying its policy into effect. The present Government has gone back upon that, certainly to the extent of one year's extension of subsidy, and so far as any promise is concerned that I remember up to the present time. The answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to which my attention was called by the Minister of Railways, is this, and that is the only answer given in the House. To the first question, asking the date of the contract, he gave the date. To the second question, he replied that there was no clause in the contract requiring the Government to give notice to the company of the expiry of the same. To the third question, he replied that the renewals had since been made by Order in Council. To the fourth question :

For what period were the renewals made by the Orders in Council ?

He replied :

17th May, 1893, authorizing renewal for one year from the 24th December, 1893 ; 12th June, 1894, authorizing a further extension until the close of navigation on the St. Lawrence in 1895—7th September, 1895.

Then, to the fifth question :

For what period was the renewal made by the last Order in Council ?

He replied :

For one year from the close of navigation in 1895, or say, until the 25th day of November, 1896.

So that my statement and the statement of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, in answer to my questions, are exactly similar.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). There was another statement made at another time. I am looking for it, but cannot lay my hands on it just now. It was from the Minister, apart from the categorical answer to the question. My hon. friend put a question across the floor, and thereupon the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a remark which is referred to by the Minister of Railways. I am looking for it now, but cannot find it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I have a very distinct recollection of the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It was to the effect that it was the intention of the Government to continue the existing contract until the end of navigation, for next year, but no longer.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What date was that reply made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot state the date.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was it previous to or after this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not at all sure. Therefore, I said that that was embodied in the answer he gave to the question of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). The words "and no longer" were clearly stated, and there are many reasons why my hon. friend and myself know that that was said.

Mr. FOSTER. That, I am afraid, cannot be found in the "Hansard." My recollection does not carry beyond the question which I put to the Minister. Whenever this item came up, it was shoved off, from time to time, for future discussion, and this is the first time we have attempted to discuss it. What I have said is this, that this dissatisfaction was caused, and in order to allay that, a show has been made of giving some additional subsidies to the trade from the city of St. John ; but it will be found without going into details, that this will happen. It will be found that the additional subsidies given of $7,500 to Dublin, and $7,500 to Glasgow, besides being very small, at the rate of $2,500 per trip, would simply represent three trips each, and taking into account the fact that last year the steamers of the Donaldson Line made three or five trips of their own accord, and without subsidy, we are gaining nothing more in that respect. When I questioned the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to whether there had been any agreement made concerning the Glasgow and Dublin service, he said there had not been, but he hoped to be able to get these vessels to enter into the arrangement. Suppose he did, then a sum would be expended, in new service, over and above what was expended last year, but it would not give more than one or two trips in excess of those given last year by occasional steamers without subsidy. Now, as to the $15,000 extra to the Furness Line. That gives a direct service from St. John in the winter months, and also a direct service from Halifax, cutting them up into two direct services in the winter time and a common service in the summer time. The advantage will be gained by each of these cities, that they will not be called upon to take account of freight offered by each other, or make calls on one city or the other. So far as that advantage is given, it is a matter that can fairly be considered. But I call attention to this, that the policy of the late Government was to stop the payment of subsidies from Portland and to take that $126,000 and divide it among the steamships leaving Canadian ports, so that five-twelfths would go to the maritime winter ports.

Mr. ELLIS. You speak of taking $125,000 and dividing it up, but a large portion of that naturally goes to Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that I would give it all to the maritime ports. What I said was that the winter service was about five-twelfths of the whole service, and that five-twelfths would go to the winter service from the maritime ports, which would be a little over $50,000, so that there would have been, under the late Government's policy, $50,000 available for the winter ports of St. John and Halifax. Taking into account what was given to the Furness and the Beaver lines, you would have a far larger amount of money encouraging the trade from those ports than is found in the Estimates of this Government. But, under the present Government's policy, you pull back with one hand what you advance with the other, and you would not have been doing this under the policy of the late Government. What was the Beaver Line subsidy given for? It was given to experiment as to whether winter freight could be attracted to the port of St. John for shipment to Liverpool, and it was given to overcome the disadvantage in land mileage from which St. John suffers as compared with Portland; so that if we had taken away the Portland subsidy and given it to St. John and Halifax, there would have been that much additional encouragement to those two ports. But the policy of the present Government amounts to this, that while they give a smaller amount for the encouragement of trade direct from St. John, with the other hand they are giving more to the trade from Portland, which is the competitor of St. John. Consequently, the subsidy to St. John is almost practically being wasted. What encouragement you give with the one hand to St. John by a subsidy, you take away with the other hand by the subsidy to Portland, because you thereby make it impossible for the subsidy to St. John or Halifax to overcome the advantage which the Portland route possesses, inasmuch as that route is still subsidized. That, then, is the statement of the case. I am sorry that the Government have not adhered to the policy of the late Government. I think that the sentiment of this country is that if we give the money of the people to develop trade or carry mails, we should give it to steamers which go from our own ports and come back to our own ports. As to the reason given by the present Government that there was an existing contract, that I have analysed, and I think I have shown the fallacy of that reasoning.

Now, Sir, this is a plain and, I think, a fair statement that I have made. I wished to make a fair and plain statement in deference to the sentiment of the country and for the sake of justice and truth; and I did want to place the position of the Government with reference to there being anything binding in the contract to make them carry it out for another whole season, as opposed to the view of the late Government and which we on this side at present hold. The only case in which we discussed the question at all, outside of my query to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) was on the 17th September, and certainly at the time of that discussion, there had been no answer indicating an intention to ultimately do away with subsidies to United States ports. But the Government in a moment can solve that part of the question. They cannot alter the fact that they have ignored the late Government's policy and have agreed to give this amount of money for another whole year, that is, they have extended the contract for a year. But they can make it plain by a simple statement from the leader of the Government whether they propose after the fall of 1897 to give a subsidy to vessels going from a United States port to Europe and calling at our ports. That will be good as far as it goes; but it will not overtake the error of this year. In connection with that I wish to bring another very important fact to the attention of the Government. This year Portland is putting forth an extraordinary effort to settle the channels of trade in her favour. She is building immense facilities, interesting the railway corporations of the country to a very large extent, and is doing everything that a lavish expenditure of money can do to draw trade in her direction and to make the channels of trade tend to the port of Portland. The subsidy that the Canadian Government is giving to that line from Portland this year helps Portland in that respect; and the retardation of the results that we thought we were finally gaining by the experiment of last year is made certain by the fact that that subsidy is still continued to Portland and that our own maritime province ports do not have the full advantage that they ought to have in this crucial year when Portland is doing so much to secure the trade not only now but for the future, for her own port.

Mr. ELLIS. It is, perhaps, too late to take up a great deal of time upon this question, but there are one or two observations I would like to make, as this matter affects the city of St. John which I represent and the part of the country in which I live. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) is quite right in what he says with regard to the public sentiment which exists in all parts of the maritime provinces upon this question. There is a very strong feeling, which has found expression at meetings of the boards of trade and at all gatherings of a political kind and which, no doubt, had much effect in the last election, that the time has come when these subsidies to a line of vessels having a terminus at a foreign port should cease. Both political parties, I think, were agreed upon that. It is just possible that in the last election the people of the city of St. John had more confidence that the party represented by the hon. the Premier would carry out its promises in that direction than the Government of which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was so prominent a figure. For, while the hon. gentleman has expatiated at considerable length to-day upon the importance and necessity and value to the country of a policy which would cut off foreign ports from any direct interest in the public moneys of Canada, yet it must be remembered that his party was a long time in power and no step was taken by them in this direction, notwithstanding the influence that was brought to bear upon them; and that it was only on the eve of a general election that this Order in Council was issued and that the hon. gentleman came to St. John and used—with considerable vigour and strength, I admit—the position that the Government had taken. There is no doubt, also, that there may be some little feeling of regret in the maritime provinces that the Government did not carry this idea into effect for the present year. But, on the other hand, one can readily understand the difficulties which may arise in putting an end to a plan which had been carried on so long. While the hon. gentleman himself states that certain things had been done, the Order in Council had been published, that negotiations, and so on, had been carried on, he did not state—I followed him closely—that any official notice had been given by the Government to the Allan people, or the Dominion people, that this subsidy would be discontinued for the future. The whole question was discussed in the Maritime Board of Trade which held its meeting at St. John the other day, and that board passed a resolution expressing itself fully with regard to the actions of the Government and regretting that the service had not been terminated this year, but expressing a confident belief that they will terminate it a year hence. So, looking at the fact that even with the opportunities the hon. gentleman had, holding so influential a position as that of Finance Minister, he did not adopt this policy, it is a satisfaction now to believe that the men who are in power in Canada to-day will carry out that policy immediately. So far as the subsidies to St. John are concerned, I think that on the whole, they will be very beneficial. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has minimized their value, but it does not follow that because a line of steamers came to St. John last year and made three trips carrying freights without subsidy, they will only come three times this year when the service is getting a subsidy; and it is unnecessary for the Government to make arrangements with a line of steamers that will not do more than this. On the whole, the people of the maritime provinces, I think, are perfectly satisfied with the arrangements which had been made, and they fully believe that the declared policy of the Government will be carried into effect. I am fully satisfied that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce made a statement to the House, which, however, does not appear upon the record, but I understood him to make a statement to the House in which he declared that for the present, and no longer than the present year, Portland subsidy would be continued. That being the declared policy of the Government, I think it makes comparatively little difference as between one year and another, provided it is eventually carried out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not intend to add anything to the very clear and emphatic statement made by the hon. ex-Finance Minister upon this important question. But I wish for a moment to draw attention to the fact that before confederation, one of the great wants that old Canada experienced was that of access to the ocean during the winter season, from one of our own ports. That, my hon. friend, the First Minister will find, was a matter that had great influence in the old province of Canada in determining the very general consensus of opinion in favour of confederation; it was one of the matters to which great importance was then attached. We thought in the past that by the creation of the Intercolonial Railway we would not only furnish a local port all the year round to every portion of Canada, but that we would be able to compete, from the greater proximity of Halifax to the mother country, with the means of communication on which old Canada was forced to depend before confederation. But it was found that the distance was too great, it was found that the advantage which Portland had in point of distance over St. John and Halifax—or rather from Halifax, because St. John was not intersected by the Intercolonial Railway in the first instance—and the greater distance involved was one with which practically we could not compete. In consequence, the Government of the day determined, when that fact was made apparent to them—What is that my hon. friend says?

The PRIME MINISTER. We were discussing between ourselves the new point of eastern geography, that St. John was not tapped by the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. By a direct line. St. John had communication, not by a direct line, but from Moncton, from which point the original line from St. John and Shediac brought you in connection with St. John, but by a circuitous route. At all events, the fact remains, that the distance either to St. John or to Halifax, by the Intercolonial Railway, was too great to enable it to compete with Portland. In consequence of that, the Government determined upon the very serious matter of asking this Parliament for a large subsidy for the purpose of obtaining a more rapid and direct communication than any that existed, by the construction of what is called the Short Line from Montreal through the state of Maine down to the port of St. John. Now, I draw attention to that, because, under the circumstances, nothing would have justified, in my judgment, so great an expenditure of money except the determination to secure, if possible, a winter port within the Dominion of Canada, and one that would compete with any port in the United States of America. Under these circumstances, efforts were constantly being made, from the time that object was undertaken, for the purpose of endeavouring to bring it to a successful conclusion; and it was only a little more than a year ago that the Government were able to obtain a proposal from the Beaver Line to establish a freight line from the city of St. John during the winter season. I was delighted on my return to Canada to find from communication with Sir William Van Horne, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that by the combination effected between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Beaver Line, the question had been at last satisfactorily solved; and it was found that under the circumstances as they existed, it was perfectly practicable to compete with the city of Portland as a winter port for Canada. I regarded this matter as of the greatest possible moment, not merely to the city of St. John and the maritime provinces, but to the whole of Canada, as it was accomplishing what was considered a matter of prime importance from the inception of confederation, and which we had been steadily endeavouring to work up to. Now, I regret that the policy of the late Government, as was clearly pointed out by my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Foster) has been departed from, because not only a year has been lost, and unnecessarily lost, but the great efforts made by the city of Portland to maintain its position in antagonism with a winter freight port in Canada, render the matter more difficult for us than before; and I am quite certain, in fact I think I may say that I know, that had the Government maintained the policy of the late Government, the Allan Company would have been quite prepared to adopt the city of St. John as a winter freight port, and would have been quite ready to transfer their valuable line of steam communication to that port from Portland. I do not intend, at this stage of the session, to prolong this debate further than to express my great regret that what we have aimed at so long, the policy of securing a winter port within the Dominion that could compete with any port on this continent, has not been followed up as earnestly and as vigorously as I think it ought to have been by the present Administration, and brought into immediate operation, not only to the advantage of the city of St. John and the maritime provinces, but to every portion of Canada.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know what degree of interest may attach in the city of St. John to the observations made to-day by the hon. gentleman opposite, but as respects the city of Halifax, which I know pretty well, I will venture to say that any professions from hon. gentlemen on that side of a deep and abiding interest in what is called the winter port question, will be received with the broadest smiles. It is an old question with us down in the maritime provinces. Much has been said, from year to year, about the winter port, and the great things that were to be done for our maritime province cities in that respect; but there is one fact clearly known to the people of Halifax, and that is that the only winter port business they ever received, they received under the Mackenzie Government, and as a result of arrangements made by that Government. It was the Mackenzie Government which made arrangements whereby the mail service to Portland ceased, and Halifax was made the port of call for taking mails to Europe. And so, summarizing the question, I repeat what I said a moment ago, that the only winter port business which ever came to the port of Halifax came under the Mackenzie Government, who made very small professions in the matter, while out of all the professions of hon. gentlemen opposite, who talked of the question year after year, and held it before the people of Halifax as a great bait, substantially nothing came. I remember that in the election campaign of 1878 my hon. friend who now leads the Opposition, went to Halifax, and was very earnest and very eloquent, as he can always be, in his advocacy of the interests of that port. I well remember a notable letter which he wrote to a merchant in that city on the question. The Mackenzie Government, as I say, had made Halifax the winter port so far as the mail service was concerned, but the hon. gentleman opposite thought that that was not enough, and our Halifax people naturally desired more. My hon. friend, in his anxiety to make favour with the people of Halifax, did not hesitate to say that it was the duty of the Government to do more, much more; they should not be content, he said, with merely taking the mails from Halifax, but Halifax should be made the great winter port of Canada for freights as well as for mails. I remember, we had some rather historical words which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) used.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will do me the credit to say that I stated that it was after having exhausted every effort in that direction, that we were forced to fall back upon the short line.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At the time to which I refer there was no short line.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Precisely, but, as I say, every effort to accomplish what we had then believed would be accomplished by the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, not having been successful, then the Government followed it up by the adoption of the short line, which shortened the distance materially.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall have a word or two to say on the short line later. At that time it was not a question of doubt. It was a question of the assurance of the people of Halifax that if they would put the Conservative Government in power, if they would support this great national policy, which we heard so much about at that time, then Halifax would become, without any question at all, the winter port of Canada. There was no question of short line, there was no question of short or long distance. I remember well that in the letter to which I refer, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) described in eloquent terms, as he well can, the greatness of the Dominion, and the vast volume of traffic which was to come from the Pacific. He said :

In dealing with a great question of that kind as to the port of shipment, why chaffer about a few pence ?

For eighteen long years these hon. gentlemen were in power, and at the end of eighteen years we find them chaffering about a few pence, just as they had done at the beginning of their term. Yet they ask the maritime province people, and the people of Halifax, to believe that they had a deep and abiding interest in that winter port question, and that the present Government had departed from their policy. Well, Mr. Speaker, if there were to be a departure from their policy, I venture to say that the people of the maritime provinces would welcome that change, because their policy was eighteen long years of promises and nothing substantially done in the matter of a winter port. And, suppose that the hon. member (Mr. Foster) is correct : suppose we accept now as a statement of fact, that at the last moment of their existence, his Government were adopting a new policy ; it is but a death-bed repentance, and repentances of that character are proverbially received with a great deal of suspicion. I, therefore, say that hon. gentlemen opposite are not in a position to boast that they have taken up this great national question of a winter port and that we on this side have changed that policy of theirs. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) said that after exhausting every effort they came to a conclusion for the short line. Ah, there is an interesting story in the city of Halifax about the short line. The hon. gentleman went to Halifax and he stated that a contract had been signed with the Canadian Pacific Railway to build that short line, which would make its terminus at the city of Halifax. He stated that it was the intention of the Government to continue the short line, not merely down to St. John, but to build that section of the line which extended from Harvey to Salisbury or Moncton, and thus make a genuine short line to Halifax. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) made that statement before a large audience in the city of Halifax. He said that, before he left London, the last thing he had done was to sign the bonds which guaranteed to the people of Halifax the construction and the completion of that short line railway. Sir, since that time not a shovel of earth has ever been raised on what I might call the Halifax section of the short line.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I am unable to speak again in this debate, I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) to allow me to interrupt him to say that there was a distinct understanding with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when provision was made by Parliament for the short line it was covered by that understanding. If I am not mistaken, a measure providing for that extension was rejected by the Senate afterwards.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Considering, Sir, the vast preponderance of the friends of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) in the Senate, the rejection of any measure proposed by his Government to carry out a promise of that nature might well be looked upon with the gravest possible suspicion. The fact remained, Sir, that my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) went down to the maritime provinces, and with that readiness of promise which is so characteristic of him, he told the people that all doubts and difficulties had passed away, that we were to have the short line, and that we were to have pouring into Halifax this vast stream of traffic which was to come across the continent. Well, we have not it to-day, and it seems, if we are to accept the hon. gentleman's statement, we are less likely to have it now than ever ; for his statements to-day lead altogether in the direction of the traffic going to the city of St. John. I have nothing but the kindest feeling towards our friends in St. John, and if we in Halifax cannot receive that traffic, I want it to go to St. John or at all events to some port in Canada. I say that the maritime provinces have had much to complain of in the past in this respect, and that above all the port of Halifax, for which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) professes so much zeal and interest to-day, has had good reason to complain of the manner in which promises have been made to that port, promises which have never materialized.

Now, as to the main question on which this debate arose, namely the Allan contract. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) says that in the contract of 1891 there were words inserted declaring that that contract should absolutely cease and determine in 1892. Well, Sir, these words cannot have meant a great deal, because four years afterwards, we find that that contract had not absolutely ceased and determined, but had been renewed and continued from year to year. The insertion of these words "absolutely cease and determine" would probably be found in most contracts that are made. But, we know that whatever the late Government put in the contract, their intention evidently was that it should not cease and determine, and so they have renewed it from year to year. I say, Sir, that though there is no binding obligation on the Government in a technical sense to continue that contract beyond the close of navigation of the present year, yet I say there is a moral obligation which the Government are bound to acknowledge, and which we do unhesitatingly acknowledge. Was it reasonable that a great steamship line which had been doing the service of the country for forty years or more, which had continuously been aided by the Government of Canada, was it fair and reasonable that they should be summarily turned out of that business without a moment's warning? I claim that they had no warning. I claim that these words "absolutely cease and determine" in the contract were of no value, because time had shown to that company that the Government did not mean these words when they put them in; but that they continued their contract from year to year. I claim that these hon. gentlemen opposite are debarred from asserting that these words had any weight, when they themselves never enforced them. Now, as to the particular date when we can terminate that contract. Whether that date be the 1st of July next year, or at the end of navigation, perhaps is a fair matter of debate. Inasmuch as the subsidies voted by Parliament are from the 1st of July to the 30th of June, it would seem at first blush that the termination of the contract should be at the same date as the termination of the appropriation. But, on the other hand, we find that these contracts have always been made for the season of navigation. They have always terminated in the month of November or December, and inasmuch as that was the case in the past, and as we did not feel that we were at liberty to determine the contract in the month of November, now close upon us, we felt it was only fair and reasonable that we should recognize that contract as one which might properly extend until the close of navigation of the next season. One point more, Sir, and I am done. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was anxious to make it appear that the Government had not declared any policy for the future in regard to that contract. We were under the impression on this side of the House that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), in answer to a question put to him at an earlier stage of the session, had declared, that for reasons substantially the same as those which I have now given, the Government were disposed to recognize the moral contract with the Allans extending into the next year, and that they would be notified that at the end of that time that contract should cease. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) said there was no evidence of that, and he read from "Hansard" what seemed to be a justification of his views. I knew there was something wrong in the matter. I knew the Minister of Trade and Commerce had made a further statement. I find that the "Revised Hansard" is not available, but I have here an authority which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) ought to be willing to accept. I have here the Montreal "Gazette" of September 29th, 1896, containing a report of the proceedings in Parliament, and I shall read from the "Gazette's" report what I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will receive as disposing of that point:

Replying to a question from Mr. Foster, Sir Richard Cartwright said that the last contract with the Allan Steamship Company for carrying mails between Canada and Great Britain was given on December 16th, 1891. It extended until December 21st, 1892, with a proviso that the Government should have the right to continue the operation of the contract for a further period not exceeding one year. There was no clause in the contract requiring the Government to give notice to the company of the expiry of the service. But in view of the fact that the contract had been continued from year to year for many years, the Government were of the opinion that notice to terminate the arrangement should have been given, and that under all the circumstances the company was entitled to the contract for carrying the mails to the close of the season of 1897 and no longer.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is only one observation I desire to make, and that is called out by the indignation displayed by the Minister of Finance that friendship should be professed for Halifax, and then abandoned or reduced in the slightest degree. On behalf of Halifax, as I do not see either of the representatives of that city present, I want to remind the hon. gentleman of a declaration of love on his part towards the city of Halifax made not long ago, so that when dealing with these important subjects he may bear it in mind. He is reported in the Halifax "Chronicle" of November 30, 1895, to have said:

Halifax should look with pleasure on the accomplishment of the fast Atlantic service. Both passenger and mail service by water and land Canada wants the fastest, and that is through the port of Halifax. We cannot make a success of it by sending it up the St. Lawrence. It is clear that for a summer and winter service some point of the maritime provinces must be selected.

If Halifax has the advantages which we think she has, then Halifax should be selected.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My interest in the city of Halifax will not be found lacking, but the hon. gentleman will fail to find any promise made by me on behalf of the Government. When I promise a thing as a Minister, it will be because I feel that I am in a position to carry it out, or else I shall not make the promise.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I hope the promises made by the hon. gentleman are just as sacred when he is out of the Cabinet as when he is in it. I refer to his promise as a man, not as a Minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope I shall not be less mindful of my promises as a man than of promises as a Minister, and I am not quite sure that I shall regard the hon. gentleman as the best judge whether those promises have been carried out or not. Whenever I promise anything in any capacity, I shall hope to use my best efforts to carry out the promise.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It is very difficult for me, I confess, to take a serious view of the debate which the hon. gentleman has opened, because I can hardly think that he can feel the deep and profound interest he has evinced here to-day in the subject of the winter port of Canada, and yet not to have endeavoured, when he had the power, to give effect to some fraction at least of that interest. I would think there is, perhaps, just the slightest, but at least some ground for suspicion that the hon. member's present zeal is the outcome rather of a political sentiment than a very deep interest in the welfare of St. John. I think the hon. member must have in his mind the possibility of a contested election occurring in that constituency, and perhaps in one or two others in New Brunswick before very long, which has fed the hon. gentleman's zeal in regard to this question. Now, there is no doubt that the feeling in the city of St. John, and in the whole province, with respect to this question is very deep and strong. There has, no doubt, been for many years a feeling that the Government of Canada has not evinced the interest in the national welfare of the country which it had professed, otherwise it would not have permitted this state of things to continue. But while that feeling does exist, I think there is at the present moment an equally strong feeling throughout that province, and nowhere greater than in the city of St. John, that the interests of the province and the interests of that port are safer in the hands of the present party and the present Administration than they were in the hands of their predecessors. I cannot imagine for one moment that the hon. gentleman, having such power as he had in the last Cabinet, could have cared one straw whether the whole winter trade of Canada was taken through a Canadian port or through Canadian ports, or whether it was shared with a port of a foreign country; otherwise he would have been enabled to accomplish something, which he certainly did not do. The hon. leader of the Opposition has told us how deeply his party have been concerned in this question from the early days of confederation, and how anxiously they were seeking for some opportunity in which to secure the winter trade for a Canadian port, and he has told us that notwithstanding the careful search and the anxious inquiry which they directed to the subject, that desideratum was never attained until last winter, when they were able to prevail on the Beaver Line Steamship Company to take up the business at St. John. Now, I think I am correct in saying, that the late Government were not by any means instrumental in inducing the Beaver Line Company to seek a port at St. John in the first instance. I am well informed, I think, when I say that a good deal of pressure and influence had to be brought to bear on the Government before they consented to give the subsidy which they believed was necessary to induce the Beaver Line Company to make St. John their port of shipment last year. Instead of the Government looking round for a steamship company that would take up that service, the steamship company had to come looking for them. I think that the initiative had to be taken in the city of St. John, that the corporation of St. John was the first to move in the matter, that they had to send a delegation to Ottawa to urge the matter upon the Government, and that it was only after considerable urging that the Government consented to give this subsidy; and I think it will be a surprise to many friends of the late Government to learn from the hon. leader of the Opposition that they found this Beaver Line as a result of a very careful study and of very anxious inquiry on their part, as to how this winter port service could be established. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) has endeavoured to minimize the value of what this Government has done in the direction of further aiding the winter service at the ports of St. John and Halifax. He has told us what it was the late Government had determined upon—how much more liberal they proposed to be in their future grants to establish these lines. What is it the hon. gentleman says? He says they proposed to withdraw in the first place the $126,000 from the Allan Line, or prevent them going to Portland. I do not so understand. I cannot think the hon. gentlemen intended to make any very radical change in the existing system until their fast line service, which they had in contemplation, should get into full and complete operation. But if they did have it in view to make that change, I do not see that they had it in mind at all to give any more liberal grant than the present Government have given in aid of this service. How does the hon. gentleman figure it out? He says the grant to the Allan Line was $126,000; that five-twelfths of that grant, which I suppose was on the basis of five months out of twelve during which the winter service would continue, would amount to $50,000; and that this $50,000 would be divided between the two maritime province ports, Halifax and St. John. How much better would that be than what is now proposed? We have given a subsidy for the whole, distributed over these different vessels, of precisely the same sum of $50,000 to St. John alone. We give $20,000 for the Beaver Line, $15,000 for the direct Furness Line, and $15,000 divided between the other two companies, making $50,000 in all. I do not know by what process of calculation the hon. gentleman reaches the conclusion that $50,000 given by us would not be equal in amount to $50,000 if given by them, and there is this further important difference that the hon. gentleman's statement rested altogether upon promises of what they were going to do, but which they did not happen to accomplish, whereas, we have carried the arrangement out which we proposed, and have actually procured authority for this amount of subsidy. One other observation the hon. gentleman made which I do not think I should let go without reply. He said that the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not say that the steamers would accept the small subsidies he offered. This sum of $50,000, in aggregate, the hon. gentleman now considers very small. It would have been a very large amount if the late Government had been giving it, but it becomes a very trifling sum when the present Government gives it. But the hon. gentleman said that we had no assurance that these several lines, which are embraced in these subsidies, will accept the same, and will perform the service. Well, I happened to be present when the Minister of Trade and Commerce answered the question which the hon. gentleman put him, and I did not gather that he left the slightest doubt in any one's mind as to the acceptance of the several subsidies by these lines. The hon. member asked whether or not the Minister of Trade and Commerce would say whether he intended to impose any conditions and whether the conditions had been agreed upon or would be satisfactory to the steamship lines—

Mr. FOSTER. The only lines with reference to which I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he had any knowledge that they would accept the subsidies, were the Donaldson and Head lines. With reference to the others, I did not raise a question, but simply asked with regard to those two, and he said he was not certain, but proposed to try and get them to accept and give as good a service as possible.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My recollection does not quite agree with the hon. gentleman's, but I am not at all certain that I am right. I do know, however, that the agents of both the Head Line and the Donaldson Line say they will agree, or are willing to accept, the subsidies and comply with the conditions, so that the hon. member need have no anxiety on that score.

I think I may say to my hon. friend that so far as he hopes to realize political advantage from the raising of this question and the throwing of doubts upon the liberal purposes of this Government towards the maritime provinces, or its desire to secure for Canadian ports, as far as possible, the winter trade of Canada, he will find, before many months go by, that his expectations will not be realized. He will find that it will be a very difficult matter to make capital for himself or party out of the present action of the Government in giving a subsidy, or their inaction in not having terminated the existing arrangement with the Allan Line any earlier than they proposed to do it. As much as I desire—and I do desire as much as the hon. gentleman does—to see the trade of Canada done from our own ports in winter as well as in summer, I fully sympathize with the feeling that we would not be justified in terminating the existing arrangement without giving the parties concerned all reasonable notice.

But, beyond that, there is another consideration. Coming into power, as this Government did, right on the eve of a session of Parliament, with its time fully engrossed in the preparations for and in carrying on the business of the session, it would be quite impossible for us to make any arrangements to secure a new line or to enter upon a new contract for the coming winter before the fall so as to justify our termination of the existing contract. Those things cannot be done properly unless done in good season. If done hurriedly, they are likely to be done very inefficiently, and therefore if there was no reason for waiting, if there was no claim which the Allan Company could fairly make to a reasonable notice of the termination of the present contract, the interest of the service itself would demand at our hands that we should take time before terminating the present contract and making a new arrangement for the carriage of mails across the water. Therefore, from every point of view, it seems to me that a person disposed to be reasonable at all, will think the Government are acting wisely by taking the course they have taken. We have now supplied, by the assurance which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has given this session, in answer to the question of the hon. gentleman, the most conclusive evidence that it is the determination of the Government to terminate the arrangement which now exists with the Allans at the end of the coming year.

Mr. FOSTER. To show that I was right with reference to the conversation with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I find, on reference to pages 2557 and 2558, that when I asked the hon. Minister what line would receive the $7,500 subsidy for the service with Dublin and Belfast, he replied that it was the Head Line, and it went on to say :

However, these are tentative propositions, and it remains to be seen whether the lines will acquiesce in them.

I desire to bring another and not less important matter, which I shall deal with as shortly as possible. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Finance and the Government generally to the financial situation, as shown in the Estimates brought down, and to the probable amount of revenue for the past year and the year now current. In the first place, I wish to give a very brief comparison of Estimates as brought down by the late Government and the present Government. For 1895-96, on consolidated revenue, the Estimates amounted to $37,832,353. For the present year, 1896-97, the Estimates, as declared upon the paper, amounted to $39,763,259. When you add to them, for the purpose of comparison, what was included in 1895-96, and what must be absolutely spent in 1896-97 for the parliamentary session, namely, the $400,000 which is the least sum that will do it, it makes their additional estimate—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How do you make that amount ?

Mr. FOSTER. I gave the explanation of that the other day—the total includes indemnities, mileage, "Hansard," extra expenses for clerks, sergeant-at-arms' expenses, and so on. Adding that sum, which is quite fair for the purposes of comparison, it makes the whole estimate for 1896-97 thus far brought down, on consolidated fund account, $40,163,259, as against $37,832,353, for last year, or an excess in the Estimates already brought down for the current year over the total Estimates brought down for the past year, of $2,330,906 on consolidated revenue alone. When we come to capital account, we find that, inclusive of redemption of debt—which we will leave out for purposes of fair comparison, inasmuch as the redemption of debt simply means that we are borrowing on one hand to redeem on the other, so that the operation does not affect actual debt—the Estimates brought down on capital account for 1895-96 amounted to $3,936,220. The amount so far brought down for 1896-97 on capital account is $4,498,091, an excess of $561,871. Thus we find that the total estimated expenditure of last year, exclusive of redemption of debt, was $41,768,573. This year, it amounts to $44,661,350, an excess of $2,892,777. The consolidated revenue fund Estimates as brought down this year are made up of the following:—The main Estimates, brought down on the 27th August, amounting to $38,225,787; the first Supplementary Estimates, brought down September 26th, amounting to $1,215,841; the second Supplementary Estimates, brought down 1st October, amounting to $351,631, less $30,000 since dropped or reduced when we were going over the Estimates; and $400,000 for parliamentary sessional expenses omitted, but absolutely and admittedly necessary. These make up the total estimate I have given on consolidated fund. Now, it is to be borne in mind that while the total estimated expenditure both on consolidated revenue and capital funds for 1895-96 was $41,768,573, and the total for the current year is $44,661,350, the latter is not the total estimated expenditure for the current year. There is still the larger part of this year to run, and there is another session to come in the course of the year, and Supplementary Estimates are certain to be brought down during that session. Already, we have several items referred to, inside and outside of this House which have been absolutely promised, making it necessary that further Supplementary Estimates should be brought down. The above figures may be summarized as follows:—

Mr. FOSTER.

ESTIMATES.

	1895-6.	1896-7.	Excess over 1895-6.
On Consolidated Fund Account	$37,832,353	$40,163,259	$2,330,906
On Capital Account, exclusive of redemption of debt...	3,936,220	4,498,091	561,871
Total	$41,768,573	$44,661,350	$2,892,777

Going from that let me take up the individual heads of expenditure. I find that the decreases are very few and far between, while the increases are very many and not far between. The following will show the increases and decreases:—

This shows that in all the principal controllable items, although I have read two or three that are uncontrollable, like the interest on the public debt, there is either a very large increase, or, in the few cases in which there is a decrease, that decrease is infinitesimal. Now, Sir, if we come to the actual expenditure on consolidated fund, as shown by the Public Accounts, what do we find? Commencing at 1877-78, the actual expenditure for the several years was as follows:—

Total Expenditure on Consolidated Fund Account.

1887-88 .....	$36,718,494
1888-89 .....	36,917,834
1889-90 .....	35,994,031
1890-91 .....	36,343,567
1891-92 .....	36,765,894
1892-93 .....	36,814,052
1893-94 .....	37,585,025
1894-95 .....	38,132,005
1895-96 .....	37,500,000
Average 1887-1896 .....	36,985,644

The total for 1895-96 is made up from the returns latest brought down, with what may be estimated as still to be expended. The average expenditure under the late Government for these ten years was $36,985,644. The estimated expenditure, as in the Estimates already brought down, not taking into account further supplementaries, is $40,163,259, or a little more than three millions over the actual expenditure of last year. Now, it is fair to say that if all the Estimates for the current year 1896-97 were down, we could calculate on $1,000,000 or more to be left unexpended. But the Government has nothing of that kind to look forward to. It must bring down further Supplementary Estimates which will increase the total of these Estimates, and consequently we can take little off this amount for probable lapsed balances. The probability is, then, that the first year of the Reform Government, starting, as it does, with an Estimate of $2,892,777 greater than the preceding year, and as against an average expenditure of the late Government from 1887-88 to last year, of $36,985,644, will show an expenditure of $40,000,000. Now, Sir, with reference to the deficiency, I find that the income for the past year will be very close up $36,700,000. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) can rely upon a larger income to any considerable amount for the current year. Suppose that the income is $36,700,000, and taking his estimate as being $44,661,350 on consolidated fund and capital account, as it is at the present time, there is a possible deficit as between his probable income and his total estimated expenditure of $8,000,000 in round numbers.

Now, Sir, the figures that I read as the yearly expenditure, did not take into account the capital expenditure, although the summation that I have given, does. The capital expenditure from 1890-91 upwards, has run from one to three million dollars; and I cannot tell from the returns brought down, what it will be for 1895-96; but as against an average of about three millions, we may say, during the past five years, the estimate at present for capital expenditure is $4,498,000. Now, what I want to call my hon. friend's attention to is this: He has come before this Parliament and the country with Estimates of $44,661,350, and he cannot lay his finger upon a revenue which will exceed $36,700,000 or $37,000,000. He has the financial affairs of this country, by his over-estimates, in this position, that with a purse which will not provide him with more than $37,000,000 at the outside, he proposes to expend on current and capital account, $44,600,000. I do not think in the annals of parliamentary government, a Finance Minister, in normal times, has ever faced Parliament and the country with a proposition of that kind. The hon. gentleman has not condescended to give this House or the country one single iota of information as to how he expects to raise that money, he has not asked the House to go into consideration of ways and means. The very first axiom of steady finance is that the expenditure shall be kept within income on consolidated revenue account and for current purposes. There may be occasions which will cause a Finance Minister to take a different view of the situation. Provided he is cutting down taxation, and provided that some depression in business gives him, in his forward look, the impression that for a year or so the revenue will be small; it may become a matter for him to decide whether, in these depressing times, he will put on the extra taxation, if he cannot cut down expense, or whether he will provide it out of capital. Such a time occurred two years ago, when the depression commenced, and when a very large amount of tax revenue had been left off on the article of sugar in this country, and for the succeeding year, a large deficit was faced, but a deficit not greater than the capital expenditure, to any considerable amount, which was a better alternative than, in that time of depression, putting on again the taxation which had been taken off the year or two before. But there is no such condition now. Things are fairly normal. The Finance Minister looks out upon a future in as normal a condition as it well can be, and he deliberately asks this House, with a revenue of less than $37,000,000, to sanction an expenditure of $44,600,000, with Supplementary Estimates yet to come down. That is not the whole of the expenditure; my hon. friend knows that there are sums not in his Estimates that have to be met. For the current year he will have to pay the bounty on pig-iron, he will have to make his refunds, he will have to pay the bounty on beet-root sugar, he will have to overtake the bounty on the silver and lead production in the mines of British Columbia, and certain other expenses, all of which will add to the actual expenditure. I think it would have been far better that the hon. gentleman should have commenced the first year of his administration by keeping his Estimated expenditure, and his estimated, nay his almost certain, income of what he will be able to get in the shape of revenue, somewhere near on a par. He has not done it. What happens? That my hon. friend before this year is out, must borrow at least $10,000,000 on the market in order to make things square, for he has already a current loan of $2,000,000, and if his Estimates propose to be anything like honest Estimates, which we know they are, as to what he will expend the money that he has to borrow will in the main go, not for capital expenditure, but actually to meet daily needs, the hand to mouth existence, and the expenses of the country from the beginning to the end of the year. This is a grave matter. When the hon. gentleman goes to the money market, he will go not under the best conditions. No man wishes to make a loan upon the London market with a showing upon his books which indicates a certain and large deficit for the year in which he is making a loan. My hon. friend would have been better advised if he had restrained the demands that were made upon him, and particularly his estimates on consolidated revenue fund, and brought it down to the amount of possible revenue. Now, Sir, what answer may my hon. friend make? The answer which he has indicated two or three times during this session, and that other hon. gentlemen have indicated, is that the Estimates that were brought down last year do not at all show the Estimates we were proposing to bring down; that is, that they hold in their hands, they say, papers proving that we proposed to bring down four millions and odd more. Now, I have emphasized my contradiction to that statement as strongly as it can be emphasized, but I propose to do it again. The papers that hon. gentlemen have shown and quoted from, are not Estimates that it was proposed to put before this House as Supplementary Estimates; they were the aggregate demands that were made by the different departments, printed by the Queen's Printer for distribution and discussion in Council. The greater mass of them were never even discussed in Council; and it is not fair, it is not honest dealing to say that the demands that are made upon the Government are just exactly the measure of the Estimates that they bring down. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works knows that he has not this year brought down as Estimates submitted to this Parliament, all that was asked for from him by the different sections of the country for public works. Always that is the case in every department, and until you can form an idea of the Government expenditure in the actual estimate that it brings to Parliament, you cannot draw any conclusion from the demands that are made upon the Government as to what will be the amount it brings down. Now, I wish to end this exposition of the matter by calling the attention of this House, small as it is, and of the country, which is just as large as ever, to three quotations. One is a plank in the Liberal platform, which was adopted in 1893, which sums up seventeen years of earnest preaching and earnest canvass by the Liberal party, and which was the large card relied upon in their canvass in the elections which took place in June last. It was with reference to public debt and expenditure:

We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion, and the consequent undue taxation of the people, under the Governments that have been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand strict economy in the administration of the government of the country.

This was moved by Mr. George C. Gibbons, Q.C., of London, and the paper remarks:

He made an excellent speech for the convention with his witty references.

Then, Sir, I find that the leader of the Government (Mr. Laurier), when in Brantford, on the 20th August, 1894, after this was brought down, after this had been made a plank of the party platform, declared:

Do you imagine there is any justification for this increase in expenditure? The Conservatives tell us that there is a justification. The population has increased, they say. Oh, yes; it has increased 9 per cent; but the expenditure has increased 100 per cent. There can be no justification for such an expenditure (the increased debt) when, as has been stated, the great bulk is a corrupt expenditure. Moreover, they tell us that if we were in power we could not retrench and economize. But I do not believe that it will be a very difficult task. (Hear, hear.) It would not be a very difficult task to retrench to the extent of one, two, three, and Mr. Mills told his constituents a few days ago that it was possible to retrench to the extent of four millions a year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the reason they left Mr. Mills out.

Mr. FOSTER. In Toronto, in 1894, the same gentleman, the present leader of the Government was speaking, and he says:

Has the expenditure gone down? No, it has gone up. It went up two, three, five, ten millions and more, until it is now $38,000,000. And the Conservatives do not shrink from it, but swallow it all. If we come into power, we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie, and I say that although we may not be able to bring the expenditures back to what they were under him, we can reduce the amount two, yes, three, million dollars a year. (Applause.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who said that?

Mr. FOSTER. The present leader of the Government in his speech on the 23rd of August, 1894, said that. These statements of economy, these expressions of decreased expenditure, these professions for the relief of the taxpayers were prime articles of faith of the Liberal party in their canvass for the last eighteen years. The Liberals came into power. Their leader's word is that they can reduce the expenditure $3,000,000, but the facts are that their leader now sitting in the House as Prime Minister, sanctions estimated expenditures which are over $3,000,000 greater than—I was going to say the estimated expenditure for 1895-96, but I will put it still more strongly—the estimated expenditure is over four millions of dollars greater than the actual expenditure of 1895-96. The actual expenditure for 1895-96 was, in round figures, $37,500,000 on consolidated fund account, and the proposal of the present Government is to expend $40,163,259—the difference being $2,500,000 odd greater on consolidated fund account. The proposal on capital account is to expend about $1,500,000 more than was actually expended in 1894-95; the figures for 1895-96 not yet being brought down. Add the two together, and the total expenditure on consolidated fund account and on capital account which it is proposed to make, viz., $41,600,000 will be nearly $8,000,000 more than the total revenue that can be expected during the present fiscal year. Thus, Mr. Speaker, do the professions and the practices of the Liberal party not agree.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has some good purpose in deferring until the last hours, nay until the last moments, almost of the session, this somewhat involved statistical argument, which, I regret to say, I have not been able to follow as closely as I should like to follow anything coming from the hon. gentleman in relation to the finances of the country, because, as ex-Finance Minister, we are bound to believe that anything he may say on that subject is entitled to consideration. In view of the most extraordinary speech that he has just made, we shall not be able to devote to his addresses on that subject as much respect as we ought to devote to anything coming from such a source. It is rather an extraordinary thing for the hon. gentleman, especially at this stage of the session, to present the marvellous statement which he has given to the House to-day. Perhaps, Sir, it is because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has the high honour of having within three successive years rolled up deficits to the amount of $6,000,000, or very near it, that he thinks he ought to commence to prophesy what the deficit of his successor may be. I do not think the country is going to be very much alarmed by comparisons between estimates. It may be necessary to compare estimates from time to time, but the practical, common-sense people of this country are much more concerned in comparing actual expenditures than they are in comparing estimates. They know well that the estimates which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has presented in the past have not always conveyed a clear indication of the actual expenditures of the country. Certainly, if we take the Estimates presented by him for the current fiscal year, we are forced to conclude that they were not intended to show the real necessities of the country. I believe the people will compare the expenditures of the two years. I believe the people will be content to wait until the end of this current fiscal year before they will be disposed to make comparisons between the present Government and the extravagant Government of the past. When a discussion similar to this was up at an earlier stage of the session, I had to say that I thought we ought to make our comparisons at the end of the year and not at the beginning, and even then we might justly claim that to a very considerable extent the expenditures of the present year will be chargeable upon hon. gentlemen opposite, because those expenditures will be influenced in a large degree by their own policy, and because in a certain degree these Estimates are necessary to carry out engagements entered into by them. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) swells the Estimates to a degree that might be alarming to people who do not understand the question. He swells them to, I do not know how many millions. He asks the people of Canada to believe that there must necessarily be an enormous deficit. He says we only have a revenue of thirty-six and a half millions. As he himself placed on the Table of the House at the close of the last session Estimates for $38,300,000 chargeable to consolidated fund account, he certainly started out with the resolve of having a heavy deficit. Assuming his calculation to be correct, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself started out with the resolve that we should have a deficit representing the difference between that amount and $38,308,514, the total of his main Estimates. But do these main Estimates of the hon. gentleman represent correctly the public expenditures that he anticipated? It is true that the hon. gentleman, at an early stage of the session, rather conveyed the impression—I will not say that he stated—that he did not intend to have any Supplementary Estimates. He said that if I followed his good example, I would have no Supplementary Estimates at all. Well, Sir, we know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did intend to have Supplementary Estimates, and we know that these Supplementary Estimates amounted to an enormous sum. I will accept the statement that in some respects these Supplementary Estimates had not passed Council, but I am compelled to say that estimates for large public works either passed Council, or were made by the Ministers and the representatives of the Conservative party throughout the Dominion, to do work in the election, and these hon. gentlemen said they were led to expect that they would have them. Throughout the length and breadth of Canada we had Conservative candidates declaring again and again with respect to any public work in which the people were interested, that they had provided for these works, and that the Government would provide the money for them in the Supplementary Estimates. Then they had this form of argument: That they would have got the money were it not for the obstruction pursued by the Liberal party in the House last session. And so, when hon. gentlemen opposite convey the impression that they had never passed in Council or elsewhere in any authoritative way, the Estimates for the public works and the railways of the country, we are compelled to look upon that as a statement which does not represent the whole facts. If we are to accept that statement as the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, then it is a statement which reflects most seriously on the Conservative candidates throughout the Dominion of Canada, because they made statements which must have been untrue and unfounded. Now, I am forced to ask the question, to whom shall we look for the truth of the matter? Is it the late Minister of Finance, who seeks to convey the impression that there have never been such Estimates, or the two hundred and odd Conservatives throughout the Dominion of Canada who told the people everywhere that grants for these particular public works were included in those Estimates, and that they would have been brought down to Parliament but for the obstruction which they said took place? I am told that in some cases the printed sheets of the Estimates were exhibited. My hon. friend may laugh, but it is a fact which they cannot get over, that all over the country these promises were made. They did not say: We expect to get these grants, we are going to ask for so much money, and we hope to get it. They said: This thing has been provided for in the Estimates. Therefore, I am bound to assume that those Estimates, which the hon. gentleman is so anxious to get rid of to-day, were Estimates which he had intended to use. What do we find? We find that the hon. gentleman had Estimates chargeable to consolidated revenue, amounting to $38,308,548, and also large Supplementary Estimates for the various departments, chargeable both to revenue and to capital account. Taking the Estimates which we found in the various departments—not requests, but actual Estimates, approved by the Ministers of the Crown—the hon. gentlemen, in order to carry out their engagements, would have been bound to bring down to this House, Estimates, capital and revenue united, amounting to over $47,500,000. And when these hon. gentlemen tell us that they never intended to bring down those Estimates, they can only make that statement by discrediting their own friends throughout the length and breadth of the country—and I am told Ministers, too. Now, the Estimates brought down to Parliament this session are of three classes. First, there is this blue-book, containing the main Estimates. These are substantially the Estimates of hon. gentlemen opposite. Where they differ at all, they differ in the interest of economy, because the gross amount is sensibly less than the amount to which the late Finance Minister committed himself. Clearly, then, in a comparison between parties, he is as much responsible for these Estimates as we are. Then, we have the first Supplementary Estimates. What are they? They amount to a considerable sum, and the final Estimates were small; but if you examine them, you will find that there is hardly a dollar in them that is not put there to carry out the engagements of hon. gentlemen opposite. These Estimates, with scarcely an exception, are to pay the debts of hon. gentlemen opposite, or to cover public works to which they had committed themselves, according to the records to be found in the departments. Why, Sir, look at one item in these very Supplementary Estimates. What can be said of the hon. gentleman attempting to hold us responsible for Estimates which he implies are not necessary, when there is one sum of $1,165,000 for militia alone, to pay the debts of hon. gentlemen opposite—to pay the bills for goods which they ordered. And yet we find the hon. gentleman to-day trying to convey the impression to the public that these Estimates are brought down by us for some sinister purpose, and not for the end of good government. I venture to say that in all history of criticism in this Parliament, it will not be possible to find such an exhibition—the hon. gentleman called it an exhibition, which I think may be translated exhibition—as that afforded by the hon. gentleman when he complains of these large obligations that we are going to assume, when he knows that the greater part of these appropriations are simply to carry out his own undertakings. We had to say in the beginning that we accepted the Estimates of hon. gentlemen opposite, with a full and clear understanding that we had not an opportunity of inquiring elaborately into the details of the organization of public affairs; but that our hope and expectation was that we would be able to make some reductions in the expenditure. I have a strong hope that before the end of the fiscal year we may be able to effect some changes in fulfilment of our promises in that direction to show the public that we are able to effect economies which have been spoken of by hon. gentlemen opposite. But it will not be till this first year is completed, and until we have paid the debts of hon. gentlemen opposite and entered upon a new year, for which we shall prepare the Estimates ourselves, and have full and complete control of them, that we shall be in a position to make comparisons. I have not the slightest doubt that when that time comes, a comparison of the records of the Liberal party and the Conservative party will show that the Liberal party is one of economy, understanding by economy not parsimony or niggardliness, but a policy which will enable us to spend money on the useful public works of the country—a policy on which we can safely challenge the criticism of Parliament and the verdict of the country.

Mr. FIELDING.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my regret that the Minister of Finance had not placed in his hands some more formal notice in regard to this interesting statement by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), because we would then have been favoured, no doubt, with the best answer that was available at the hands of the Minister of Finance in regard to a matter of considerable importance, outside altogether of the interests of the two political parties in this country. I rise now only to make this observation in regard to the excuse which the Minister of Finance puts forward, and behind which he endeavours to shelter the Government, in connection with the claim of irresponsibility as regards the Estimates which have been laid before the House, and the Supply Bill, which now stands for its third reading. I could understand and sympathize with that excuse and with the argument of the Minister of Finance, if the Government had been consistent—if they had come to this House and said: Here are the Estimates of our predecessors; we have not had the time to look into these questions and to assume responsibility where we think the responsibility ought to be assumed, and to discard from the Estimates items for which we are not prepared to take the responsibility, and we ask for the indulgence of the House and the country. That would have been a consistent and intelligible position. But the hon. gentleman cannot deny that we have evidence that they are very much alive to these Estimates and have attempted to discriminate in regard to them; and for that discrimination and on every other ground they are as fully and completely responsible for these Estimates as if they had proposed them. They have dropped out Estimates here and there that were in those tentative Estimates prepared under the late Government, which they found in the different departments. They are aware of that; and they have exercised, with regard to many items, such as those for harbours and rivers, perhaps a wise political and party discretion, but purely a party discretion; and gentlemen supporting them over whose heads petitions are hanging, having the pleasure in finding in these Estimates their counties provided for, while others against whom there are no petitions and gentlemen on this side of the House are not so fortunate. When hon. gentlemen exercise a discrimination of that kind, and make a selection from Estimates prepared by their predecessors in office, it is a very lame excuse which the hon. Minister of Finance has put forward to-day for such an extraordinary estimate at such a time as this.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is unnecessary that I should intervene at all, at this stage of the debate, after the very slight notice which the hon. Minister of Finance has given to the very able and distinct statement made with reference to the financial position of this country. The hon. gentleman failed altogether to meet the case put by my hon. friend, that the professions of economy to which hon. gentlemen opposite were pledged, and by no person more emphatically than by the First Minister, have been utterly ignored by their conduct since they have been in office. It is not for the purpose of touching that part of the discussion at all that I rise, but to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Minister of Finance has failed to meet the gravamen of the charge made by my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster). My hon. friend's charge was that in no place where parliamentary government was carried on, has any Finance Minister ever brought down to Parliament an appropriation for the expenditure of a large sum of money, over and above any means with which he has to meet it, without providing the necessary means.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Did the hon. gentleman hear the Finance Minister read a statement of proposed revenue which the ex-Finance Minister hoped to get, and the estimates he had already brought down, the latter exceeding the former by nearly $2,000,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But the hon. gentleman must not forget that the late Government were not in a position to go into the question of ways and means. He knows that was not the fault of the late Government, but that he himself and the gentlemen around him are responsible for the late Government not having been in a position to submit their estimates to Parliament in a constitutional manner, and to ask Parliament to provide the ways and means necessary to meet that expenditure. I am not now dealing with the question of promises of economy, met by a proposal to swell the expenses of the country to a point that it has never reached in its previous history; I am not simply calling the attention of the House to the position hon. gentlemen opposite occupy, in having obtained the support of the people, upon declarations of economy to which they have given the most emphatic contradiction by bringing down estimates greater than they ever were before, but I am pointing to the further fact that the Minister of Finance took his seat, after having attempted in vain to draw aside attention from the grave position of the financial affairs of the country, without attempting to explain where this money which he proposes to expend was to be obtained. We have, for the first time in our history, a Finance Minister putting before Parliament a statement involving the expenditure of millions of money more than he can show any expectation of obtaining. A more striking exhibition of impotency on the part of a Finance Minister has never been witnessed on the floor of any Parliament in the world. If the hon. gentleman desired to utterly discredit himself, if he desired to show his utter inability to deal with the financial affairs of the country, he could not have done so more completely than he has by taking his seat without making the faintest attempt to meet the statement of my hon. friend from York, or offer to the House the slightest apology for the course he has taken. The country will therefore understand what the promises and the pledges and the declarations of hon. gentlemen opposite mean. The people will understand with what contempt these hon. gentlemen, when in office, are prepared to treat the pledges they made when out of office. They will know more, they will know that the hon. Minister of Finance, when challenged by my hon. friend with the statement that he was about to spend something like $10,000,000 more than he has any reason to expect to receive, he did not attempt, for a moment, to question the soundness of the position taken by my hon. friend or make the slightest attempt at reply. When my hon. friend said that no more fatal act could be done by a Finance Minister, no act more calculated to destroy the credit of this country, than to provide for an expenditure exceeding by $10,000,000 the revenue anticipated, the hon. gentleman had nothing to say. He has no resource but to borrow the money, and he must know that there is no means by which he can place Canada in a more unfortunate position than to go to the money market of the world in order to borrow money to meet the ordinary expenditure of the public service. He knows that a Finance Minister could commit no more injurious act to the interest of the country than to go to the market of the world and borrow money, not for the purpose of carrying on capital expenditure or great public undertakings, but for the purpose of meeting the ordinary expenses that are chargeable to consolidated revenue. If the hon. gentleman wishes to discredit himself and make it impossible to obtain a loan upon fair and beneficial terms, he could not have taken any means more calculated to bring about such a disaster. This is a serious matter, aside altogether from party questions. It touches the public credit of the country. The First Minister smiles, but I ask him who would have thought, when the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce went, year after year, to put our securities on the market at a ruinous discount, that a Liberal-Conservative Government would be able to raise the credit of this country to such a pitch that our 3 per cent would touch a premium of 6 per cent above par. Why, such a statement would have been received with perfect derision by hon. gentlemen opposite. But that high position for the credit of Canada would not have been attained—that of placing the credit of Canada next to that of the mother country, higher, I think, I am safe in saying, than that of any other country in the world, except the United Kingdom—had the Finance Minister of the late Government dealt with the matters in their charge in the way the present Minister of Finance does. For the hon. gentleman sits down as he has done to-day under this declaration, virtually admitting that he is going to borrow millions in the money market of the world to pay the ordinary expenditure chargeable to consolidated revenue which he has asked this House to vote. He has not offered the slightest explanation as to how he hopes, under these circumstances, to get upon fair and advantageous terms to Canada the means to provide for the expenditure. Any tyro in finance can see the consequences of the hon. gentleman rushing madly into the most extravagant expenditure to which this country has ever been committed, not only without any means provided but with the fact patent that there are no means except to borrow money for the purpose. I hold that the hon. gentleman was not only wanting in self-respect but he was wanting in respect to this House and to the country when he allowed a statement of that kind, made upon so high authority as that of the ex-Minister of Finance of this country to go without a single word of remark or explanation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, for one to maintain either his temper or his equanimity in the face of such an exhibition as we have had. The wild, reckless and reprehensible statements the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has made are not calculated to enhance his reputation in this country. We have before us facts which both the hon. gentleman and his colleague (Mr. Foster) should regard with shame, facts for which they are more directly responsible than any other two men in this country. But not only do they not admit their responsibility, but they seek to throw that responsibility upon their opponents. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) talks about the "most extravagant expenditure to which this country has ever been committed" in the face of the fact that he has not and dare not contradict the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) that, with the exception of three or four hundred thousand dollars, every single dollar of this reckless and extravagant expenditure was either absolutely incurred by him and is to-day a debt we have to provide for, or represents expenditure which he pledged the country to make. How dare the hon. gentleman talk to this House and the country about extravagant expenditure when he and his colleague alongside of him either actually placed these debts upon the country or left obligations which we, their successors are bound to discharge. The hon. gentleman is playing to-day the role which he successfully played in 1873. In 1873 when the hon. gentleman and his colleagues were on the eve of an election they came down and pledged this country to the expenditure of many millions of money, expenditure for which he had no provision whatever to meet. He knew that there must of necessity be an enormous deficit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will excuse me—the year closed with a surplus.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman cannot understand what I am referring to. I am referring to the budget speech brought down by Sir Leonard Tilley just before the election of 1873, when he pledged the country to many millions of expenditure beyond what the revenue could meet. And the hon. gentleman knew that; and he played the same trick this time, for he not only pledged this country to the expenditure of many millions, beyond what the budget of his Finance Minister could meet, but he went beyond that and burdened the country with reckless promises made by himself, some by telegrams and letters signed by himself, for which he made no provision. He talks about the necessity, the dire, the terrible necessity of our being pledged to go into the money markets of the world to borrow ten millions. Let me ask, Sir, what possible responsibility rests upon my hon. friend the Finance Minister for that? Did we incur the debts or liabilities which compel us to borrow this $10,000,000? Why, the hon. gentleman knows—the thing will not bear argument for a second—that he and his party and Government incurred all these liabilities. And if we are obliged, as they say we will be, to go into the money market for these funds, upon their shoulders lies not merely a portion but the entire responsibility. And yet the hon. gentleman rises in this House and talks as if we were in some sense or way responsible for this terrible state of public affairs. Then he makes another point—that we did not go into Committee of Ways and Means and provide for that contemplated deficit. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) came down with a budget speech last year showing an estimated revenue of about thirty-six and a half millions.

Mr. FOSTER. Thirty-seven millions.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It did not reach thirty-seven millions. He said that he hoped there would be some better times, and a portion of his estimate of revenue was based upon that. At the same time the hon. gentleman brought down an estimated expenditure of very nearly two millions more than that. And he knew he was incurring an obligation of one million dollars for the purchase of arms in England, making an estimated deficit of nearly three millions altogether; and he did not pretend to make the slightest provision for a dollar of it. Did the hon. gentleman, in his budget speech, propose to lay additional taxes upon the country to raise that three millions of dollars? No, Sir. Will he dare to rise now and say that he intended to levy three millions of extra taxation in order to meet that deficit? He will not. He had incurred a deficit of nearly six millions in the previous three years besides this three millions of an estimated deficit. And yet he rises now and prates about the incompetence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). That the facts are serious, disgraceful, I acknowledge; but every atom of responsibility is chargeable upon the hon. gentlemen for the reckless manner in which they managed the finances. They scattered their promises broadcast with the idea of buying the representation of the people from British Columbia to Prince Edward Island. In addition to the million of dollars of obligation for arms of which I have spoken, there were obligations of nearly a million more which the hon. gentleman had either actually incurred, for which the debts were actually existing, or to which he had pledged the honour of the country. And, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has shown in the Supplementary Estimates of about two millions of dollars, there is hardly a dollar for which these hon. gentlemen had not actually incurred the obligation or had not pledged the faith of the country. What did we do? We brought down a paltry three or four hundred thousand dollars of Estimates for public wharfs and public works which they allowed to go into disrepair, and which would have been carried out to sea if we had not done something to repair them. We are spending a few hundred thousand dollars to save the expenditure of millions next year, and these hon. gentlemen, having let the public works of the country, unprovided for, having squandered its resources, and pledged its credit, condemn us because we have the business-like capacity to meet this state of things in which they have involved the country. Why, Sir, we told the country beforehand, my hon. friend repeated it time and again, that it was not the intention of this Government to alter the tariff at the present session. Every one knew that; and I say it was a wise and statesman-like policy. I say more than that, that the facts which exist to-day in Canada, the contentment and the satisfaction which prevail in every commercial centre in Canada, with the conduct of the Government, are the best testimony in the world to the fact that the policy we propose to pursue is a statesman-like one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What about the last election in Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman talks about a three-cornered fight which took place in Prince Edward Island between a Patron, a Liberal and a Conservative, in which the Conservative came out some twenty-nine votes ahead. Why, Sir, if the Patron, who polled some 129 votes, had not been induced to run, as other gentlemen were induced to run in that county the last time my hon. friend attempted to steal the seat from the Liberals—if that had not been done, the Liberal candidate would have been returned by his old-time majority.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say the Government are where they are in consequence of exactly the same course pursued all over this country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are where we are because of the well-grounded and deep-seated dissatisfaction with the extravagant Government of the hon. gentleman, and because the people had lost confidence in his promises; because from British Columbia to Prince Edward Island there was not a single class of the people but were delighted beyond measure when they found that the Conservative party had passed out of power, and a new regime had taken its place. I repeat what I said before, that for the existing expenditure, every dollar of it, the hon. gentlemen are responsible. They are trying to play the same trick to-day they played in 1873. But they will find that the people have learned a lesson, and understand them now, and that all this fine talk and extravagant predictions which the hon. gentleman indulges in, will not have the weight of a feather upon the public mind. The people are willing to wait for the development of my hon. friend's policy, which will take place next session, and they will judge the Minister of Finance by the policy which he then propounds, and its results, and not by the explanation of his policy by his predecessors in office.

Mr. WALLACE. Before the motion is adopted, I wish to make a statement with reference to what has fallen from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I have always noticed that when the hon. gentleman gets a little extravagant in his language, his case is generally a weak one. In this case I do not think that the Government, even on the assumption made by the Minister of Finance, will be able to hide behind the acts of the late Government. The Government of to-day came into power within a week or ten days of the beginning of the fiscal year, and there were no Estimates made for this fiscal year, there were no expenditures allowed to be undertaken, excepting during those eight or ten days that the normal expenses of the Government were going on, such as the payment of the Government officials; but there were no expenditures being made for public works; and I think the people of this country will very properly hold the Government to account for the expenditures of the present fiscal year. There may be some works in progress on which a great loss would have been incurred if they were not continued; but these items, I think, when examined, will be found to be very few. But the general principle still remains, that the present Government must be held responsible for the expenditures they are proposing during the present fiscal year. Now, when the Minister of Finance makes a statement that there was hardly a dollar but that was put there to carry out the engagements of the late Government—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Which they had agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. The present Government may agree to it, or may not agree to it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But the hon. gentleman must understand me. If we come into power, and find that the ex-Premier, for instance, had written letters pledging himself to a certain expenditure, and on which letters expenditure had been incurred by those people, assuming that the hon. gentleman was honest and intended to carry it out—as I have no doubt he was—would not there be, in some sense, a moral obligation, if not a legal one, binding us to implement that promise?

Mr. WALLACE. No; that is not the way that our public works are done. The public works are let by public contract. Now, if a contract were let, then I would say that the present Government would have to carry out the obligations of the former one. But I cannot imagine a single dollar's worth of expenditure that would come under the description given by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, excepting in one case, and that, I think, was in the town of Collingwood, or in some place where an expenditure was to be made by the Dominion Government, and another expenditure by the town council; it was to be a joint expenditure, and the town council expended their money, and a little more, perhaps. But as a general principle, there are no expenditures made except in a regular and legally formal way. For all those expenditures where a contract had been entered into, the former Government must accept full responsibility—I will say that; but for all those others, I say the present Government should accept full responsibility. Well, we are met face to face with the fact that the estimated revenue during the present fiscal year is, in all, $37,000,000, and we are told that the late Government had brought in an estimate of two million dollars, or more, exceeding that. But it does not exceed it by two millions or more, it is not a million and a half more, it is about a million and three hundred thousand dollars greater than the estimated revenue.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What did you put the estimated revenue at?

Mr. FOSTER. When I made my Budget speech I estimated the revenue at thirty-seven million, and I brought down $38,200,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but my recollection of it was that it was $36,500,000, with a vague hope that it would reach $37,000,000.

Mr. WALLACE. The estimated expenditure was $38,700,000, or a little over a million and a quarter dollars more than revenue. But the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says there was another million more than that for military equipment. If I remember rightly, military equipments were to be paid out of capital account.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, only some; not these.

Mr. FOSTER. All the cost of equipment was on capital account.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But this million was not on capital account.

Mr. WALLACE. This million was capital account expenditure, and I think very properly, too. The Government undertook this extraordinary expenditure in one year, and they undertook it very properly, and it has met with the approval of both sides of the House. I think, under the circumstances, it is a fair charge to be made to capital account. But without taking capital account into consideration at all, there is a difference between the $37,500,000 of revenue, and the $40,500,000 on expenditure which the Minister of Finance now proposes, and which will be further increased by Supplementary Estimates. But I call the attention of the House to another very important element in this discussion. We have been told for many years that the tariff is too high, that the burden of taxation on the people is too heavy, and that the general expectation is that when this Government meets Parliament at the next session, they will propose a large reduction in the tariff, and, consequently, a corresponding reduction in the revenue. Therefore, the $37,000,000 that was estimated by the late Finance Minister (Mr. Foster)—our present Finance Minister may find it necessary to reduce very considerably because if he carries out promises of himself and his friends, his revenue may be millions of dollars less than the $37,000,000, and consequently the deficit may be correspondingly greater. These are serious matters that the present Government has to face. It will create a feeling, if not of alarm, of very great dissatisfaction, because the expenditures of the last Government were felt to be perhaps too liberal in view of the stringency throughout the country, and the necessity for retrenchment everywhere. If the present Government is going to carry out its pledges to reduce the expenditure by three or four millions of dollars, they have a very serious financial question before them. It will be a great disappointment to the people of this country, regardless of politics, who are looking forward to decreased expenditures, when they find that the Estimates placed before the House are increased to a large extent, rather than decreased.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

PROROGATION.

A message from His Excellency the Governor General by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:

Mr. SPEAKER:

His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate presence of this House in the Senate Chamber.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate Chamber.

IN THE SENATE CHAMBER.

His Excellency was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:—

An Act to revive and amend the Acts respecting the St. Clair and Erie Ship Canal Company.

An Act to incorporate the Hudson's Bay and Pacific Railway Company.

An Act to confirm an agreement between the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Hamilton Powder Company.

An Act for the relief of Albert Nordheimer.

An Act amalgamating the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway Company and the Parry Sound Colonization Railway Company under the name of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway Company.

An Act respecting the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company.

An Act to revive and amend the Act incorporating the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.

An Act to incorporate the Columbia Telephone and Telegraph Company.

An Act to incorporate the Mather Bridge and Power Company.

An Act respecting the South Shore Railway Company.

An Act to amend the North-west Territories Representation Act by dispensing with the preparation of new voters' lists in certain cases.

An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows :—

May it please Your Excellency :

The Commons of Canada have voted certain Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :—

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1897, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words :—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thinks Her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the First Session of the Eighth Parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I am glad to be able to relieve you from further attendance in Parliament.

I am happy to repeat the assurance already given, that I have every expectation that an amicable settlement of the Manitoba School question will shortly be arrived at.

In conformity with the statement made to you at the commencement of the session it was not considered advisable to submit any important measures of legislation for your consideration.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I have to thank you for the liberal provision you have made for the service of the current year.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said :—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Saturday, the seventh day of November next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until the seventh day of November next.
