Beloved childern, big and small, I'm greatly pleased to meet you all On this your festive day; Away to Mr. Bartlett's farm Which always does posses a charm For children at their play.

Carry your cups, carry your cakes; And flowers, flags, and banners take, And look both bright and gay; In military order walk And let no idle thing or talk Be done, or said to-day.

Be like a little christian band. A credit to your native land; The pride of parents dear; And list to what your teachers say, Respect and love them, and obey, And only evil fear.

Be always pleasant, chearful, good; With loving hearts and merry mood, Keep up your little games; And see who can the kindest be, With frank and open honesty; Quite worthy of your names.

Learn to be gentle, and po'ite, And always have a sense of right, And never do the wrong; Be wise as Sages in your youtn; And guided by the Book of l'ruth Your virtues shall be strong.

As by a happy coincidence the Pic-Nic was held on the birth-day of Mr. Abraz ham Bartlett, the following supplement ary lines were added by the same. On this the twenty-fourth day Of August month I wish to say Concerning one we know; That we will give him three times three. For worthy of our praise is he;

To whose estate we go. Now this is Mr. B's birth-day; And surely all of you will say "We wish him many more" May he enjoy both grace and health Prosperity increasing wearth; And blessings great in store.

May he and Mrs. Burtlett too, A lady always kind and true; Receive our thanks and praise; May they and their loved family Long live God's goodness here to see And flourish all their days.

And when their days shall terminate, May they pass through the Heavenly gate To zious rest above; And crowned with glory ever true The Kingdom of our Lord shall share, In ever lasting love.

This is our wish and earnest prayer, That God his servant will prepare For joys that never end, And thus we all unite to say god bless our friend on his birth-day, Bless Abraham, Gods friend.'

LINES ADDRESSED TO A LADY ON THE DEATH OF HER BABY.

In the grave thy Stanley sleepeth By the willow and the rose; Christ his ransom'd spirit keepeth Given his body sweet repose.

As the dawn of day returneth, Dost thou still for baby weep; For, for him thy heart still burneth Whom the lord had given sleep.

Murmer not that he is taker. To thy dear Redeemer's breast Never let thy faith be shaken God, our father knoweth best.

Weep not, though thy heart repineth; Grieve not at the chastening rod; As a jewel bright, he shineth In the diadem of God.

Though thou see'st him here no longer In the vale of tears below, May thy faith an I hope grow stronger And thy heart with love o'er flow,

Loving God thy Saviour ever, Who in heaven will give thee rest; Death shall not invade nor sever In the mansions of the blest.

Says the poor old man, And I'm longing for the day, When in the grave I'll lay, There's nothing there to pay, Says the poor old man,

Some neighbours they are good, Says the poor old man, They'd help me if they could, Says the poor old man, While others by the score, Would drive me from their door; Alas; for days of yore. Says the poor old man,

When plenty had we all, Says the poor old man, How smoothly rolled the ball, Says the provold man, No schemers had we then, We all were honest men, There was no "upper ten,"

Says the poor old man, But a Railway round the Bay, Says the poor old man. We'll have without delay, Says he poor old man,

The work may be begun, But will not be half done, Before my glass is run. Says the poor old man.

Let the Docter be extolled, Says the poor old man, While others are appalled, Says the poor old man, For patiently he bore. And fought the battle o'er. For fifteen years and more,

Says the poor old man, Some money will be made Says the poor o'd man, With shovel and with spade, Says the poor old man,

And gratified you'll be, When the Iron Horse you'll see, Then do remember me. Said the poor old man.

The afternoon of the next day spent with Willie in one of our favour ite haunts of the sea. There was hardly a breath of air stirring, and th water lapped idly upon the sand Appropos to something that had been spoken of, he trolled out in a careles. voice the commencement of the fine old ballad of "Hunting Tower." Prompted by the same impulse, I took up my part, and my voice rang ou: clear and still upon the still air. What was my astonishment to hear the next verse taken up by the most melodiou manly voice I had ever heard. I turned to see from whence the sounds proceeded, and saw coming towards us from behind a rock, a tall, handsome

"Pardon my intrusion," he said, "and believe me it was unintentional. I had no idea you were here until I heard this young lady's charming voice. Have I the honor to address Mr. Calmer's niece?"

"Beware of him, Willie?" said I, 'Yes,' said he; 'I am sure no good will come to you through your acquaintances with him."

"Jealous Willie?" said I, laughing 'No, Hester,' he replied gravely. 'I could not be jealous of you; I believe you are faith itself, but again I say, beware of him!'

I tried to laugh off his fears, but he was grave when Affred Lee was present, and looked very sad when I told notice. him that the great man had consented to give me lessons. He was rusticatal ing for two months, he said, and I was to profit by it until he went back on his Winter engagements.

It was a long voyage that Willie was going on; two years would most likely elapse before I should see him again and then we were to be married.

The day of parting drew near, and in the meantime my singing lessons went on; my master hestowed very little praise on me, and it was hard work. He was a man as old as my uncle, and seemed, as the time went on, harsh and stern, at least to my gi lish ideas though there was a strange expression in his black eyes as he looked at me, WARBOR GRACE STOVE DEPOT. which frightened me.
