The Hybrid Committee of the House of Commons is now engaged on the Derry Improvement Bill, which the Catholics are opposing until they are granted representation.

Mr. Vosey Knox asked him: You do not dispute the accuracy of the figures given in the Parliamentary petition showing that there is a Protestant majority of 168 in one ward, of 291 in another, and of 168 in a third.

Mr. Knox—If it is the fact that under the six wards plan the two parties would be half and half, would not that be a fair arrangement?

Mr. Knox.—And the Catholic males have a majority? I don't know.

At a comparatively early age, the Rev. Bernard Walker, P.P., Burket port County Donegal died last week. He was a priest of great independence of mind.

A very interesting licensing case has been decided in the Court of the Queen's Bench appealed from the Donegal Petty Sessions.

The Daily Telegraph publishes, on the question of the preaching in Hyde Park, the following observations. Our London parks are supposed to be places intended for the enjoyment and recreation of the citizens, but it is difficult to see how any amusement can be obtained out of Sunday lectures on religion which culminate in free fights among the audience.

The graduation ceremony in honour of the jubilee of Lord Kelvin took place at Glasgow University, Lord Kelvin was capped by Professor Gardner. Professor Stewart, clerk to the Senate, read the following letter from the secretary to the Prince of Wales:—

"DEAR LORD KELVIN.—The Prince of Wales desires me to send you his warmest congratulations on your having attained the fiftieth year of your tenure of your professorship in the University of Glasgow. His Royal Highness is in most cordial sympathy with the eminent reputation of the Universities, learned as well as other public bodies in different parts of the country and of foreign countries, who have assembled to do you honour in a city which has for a long series of years been the scene of your most successful and eventful life.

as another alleged disturber, and on the first hearing the magistrate declared these stump lectures on religion to be a crying nuisance, and added that it is "lamentable that such things should be allowed in Hyde Park. With this opinion every sensible person will heartily agree. There does not seem to be the slightest reason why any human being, without the special permission of the police, should have the right to gather a crowd round him in a park by actually airing his cronelets, to the annoyance of all those who wish to use the place for a quiet stroll and for getting a breath of fresh air into their lungs.

Probate has now been granted of the will, of which some particulars were published in anticipation of probate, of Dame Isabel Burton, widow of Captain Sir Richard Francis Burton K.C.M.G. Lady Burton, who belonged to a family residing in North Lancashire and Ireland, left personal estate of the value of £11,766 13s 1d.

The coffin of herself and husband might be lowered into the vault. She desired that immediately after her death a telegram which she had prepared should be sent to the Cardinal Achille Ratti in Paris, who is to receive £120 or 3,000 francs for 3,000 Masses, to be said at once, or 100 sets of Gregorian Masses. The testatrix also provides an annuity to provide for a daily Mass to be said in Paris perpetually at one franc for each Mass. She provided that a sum of £60 should be paid to the Bishop of Southwark for five anniversary Masses perpetually on the day of her wedding, on her own and her husband's birthdays, and on the day of her husband's death and of her death.

The Advantages of College Residence.

The following speech was delivered at the commencement exercises on Tuesday, 23, at St. Michael's College, to J. S. Savage, '96:

GRAC, REVEREND FATHERS: AND GENTLEMEN—One exercises 'readily assumed considerable and expect you are fatigued anxious to hear the strains of Paul Anthem than anything I may say about the advantages of College residence. However, trusting that the large stock of kindly forebearance you always bring with you on occasions of this character has not yet been exhausted, and relying upon the deep interest the people of Toronto feel in all subjects pertaining to education I venture to trespass upon your good nature for a few moments longer.

In this age and country, especially in the Province of Ontario, and still more especially in the city of Toronto, all questions relating to the mental and moral development of the children and young have received the most careful and universal attention of the people. Ministers of religion speak upon them from their pulpits; editors almost daily devote long and learned articles to them; business men discuss them in their offices and at their firesides; and even the children on their streets will be heard arguing over educational matters. Such a general and lively discussion of these questions, though the views advanced are often erroneous, and sometimes pernicious, is bound to be advantageous to the cause of education.

Education, as I understand it, is intellectual proficiency and moral perfection; it is the best and making what is best of them. To educate is to develop, to strengthen, and to perfect the intellectual and moral faculties of man. As the body requires physical exercise so the mind requires intellectual exercise; and as the body demands many and various kinds of exercise, so also does the mind. We become regular attendants at the gymnasium, are taught and practice many different kinds of games, that we may develop our muscles, grow and small in the whole body; we go through a trapeze performance, and practice on horizontal bars, we fence and box and jump; and all this for what purpose? That we may become pugilists or Japanese fencers to delight an audience at a circus? Surely not. We do it that we may have a strong, healthy body that will serve us faithfully and enable us to discharge the various duties of life to the best advantage. As we do not take exercise in the body for the sake of proficiency in the matter, moral movements that we practice, neither do we puzzle over the theorems of Euclid and the problems of Trigonometry, and burn midnight oil in mastering Latin roots and Greek particles, and merely for the sake of the particular knowledge we may gain from the study of these subjects; but that we may have a strong, vigorous and enlightened intellect, capable of grasping other subjects in turn to the best and most courteous account whatever knowledge we may possess.

giving the preference to the former that required residence and nothing more over the latter which exacted of its members an acquaintance with every science under the sun. Such are the words of the most distinguished educator of the nineteenth century, and relying on their weight I submit my contention to your consideration.

The next and final reason I advance as a plea for requiring residence is that associating with other students is a sure and most effectual means of moral development. Why study any art, First because it studies residing in college is to a great extent removed from the temptations of the world; his mind is not dissipated by the thoughtless frivolities of the society news column, the noise and chatter of the busy world is shut from his ears and he dwells in a quiet and soothing intellectual atmosphere. Again, a student in a college residence lives with men, not merely with books. Doubtless you have all heard that the greatest misfortune that can befall a man is to be reared an only child; such a boy grows up willful, potent and impatient of restraint. So also the greatest misfortune that can befall a student is that he should live alone among his books. Such a student may know all that is to be known in the world without being able to do any one of them. He becomes narrow-minded, irritable, intolerant, self-sufficient. In the silence of his study errors and mistakes stalk in from all quarters and distort and distorted mind as infallible truths. The lesson he needed most he has failed to learn, namely: how to live with men. On the other hand the student in residence is open-hearted, cheerful and magnanimous ready to respect the opinions and rights of others, and to acknowledge that others may reason as correctly and think as wisely as himself. In short, he has learned to see himself as others see him, and to appreciate what an insignificant atom he is in the world which glides on over him if he were to drop from its existence altogether. And lastly there is the power of good example. In college residence each feels that he is in a measure entering the life of his neighbors, each feels that all the rest look to him, to a certain extent, for moral support. Then every man is under the constant surveillance of his tutors and the entire student body, and nearly every one has his eyes upon him. He is obliged to do nothing higher or lower than what is right, and he is obliged to give good example to his neighbors, each feels that all the rest look to him, to a certain extent, for moral support. Then every man is under the constant surveillance of his tutors and the entire student body, and nearly every one has his eyes upon him.

And now if you will grant that my conception of education is correct, I contend that a College requiring residence of its students is bound to be far more successful in educating young men than one that dispenses with this condition. And why? Because constant association and intercourse of students in the highest and most effectual means of intellectual development. And last in my statement I will briefly explain why I believe it to be true. I believe it because when hundreds of young men, keen, inquisitive and sympathetic, are sure to learn one another; they are sure to see false notions, gain for themselves new ideas, find fresh matter for thought and argument, and settle upon fixed principles for judging and acting day by day. In their hours of relaxation in the halls, the conversation of each is a series of lectures to all. Moreover, the students are brought together from various parts of the country, often from foreign countries; they are widely in their habits of life and their interests; from their prejudices and local manners, thus enabling each to see the world on a small field with little trouble. In such a mixed assemblage of intelligent beings there is much to be learned from each other. In their contact with one another, conventionalities are discarded, in doing which the entire body is moulded together, and gain one tone and one character. Were a college of such a kind to refrain from giving a single lecture, or from furnishing a single professor, but were content itself with bringing students together for mutual intercourse and conversation, I believe there would be a strong, healthy intellectual development. In support of this statement permit me to quote from a man of the very highest authority in English-speaking countries on all matters relating to education, from a man that spent nearly half a century in the foremost of English universities, from a man that was thoroughly conversant with all phases of intellectual development; I quote for you no less authority than the learned Cardinal Newman. In contrasting the university that required residence of its students and nothing more with one that dispensed with residence and made examinations the sole test of proficiency, he makes use of these words: "If I must determine which of the two courses was the more successful in training, moulding, enlarging the mind, which sent out men more suited for their secular duties which produced better public men, men of the world, men whose names would descend to posterity, I would have no hesitation in

We are asked by Mr. Joseph P. Ryan, secretary of the Irish National Federation of America, to call attention to the appeal to the supporters of Home Rule in the United States which appears on our front page.

Spreading Catholic Truth.

Elaborating a thought recently expressed by Cardinal Vaughan, in a different sense altogether, the editor of the New York Catholic Review compares Catholics of the present day to the Jews in the time of St. Paul.

where, without even so much as a city of public protest thirteen families, tenants, were evicted for the debt of one of them to his landlord. The Irish man of America, Canada and Australia, if any act of theirs can help to restore the potency of Irish public opinion, upon which depends not alone the fate of Home Rule but the homes and lives of the tenants, will not spare either their time or their means.

That West Toronto Circular.

We are called upon to settle a little question of inspiration with The Globe. It is not often our contemporary loses its temper; but it allows its indignation to get the better of it over the circular distributed to the Catholic electors of West Toronto on the afternoon before the election.

England and Her Catholic Blue-jackets.

Because Pope Leo honored the Catholic sailors of Queen Victoria's Mediterranean squadron the other day, England is threatened with another "no Popery" agitation. That seems an extraordinary consequence of marked courtesy to her Britannic Majesty; but it is affirmed by the well-informed London correspondent of The New York Times, Mr. Harold Frederic.

Probable Surrender of Derry.

Our Irish news columns to-day contain some particulars of the evidence given before the hybrid committee of the House of Commons in connection with the Londonderry Improvement Bill.

that they may be saved? Those proud, self-satisfied Jews reckoned themselves as the chosen people of God. They constituted the true Church and did not care to extend the blessings which they enjoyed to the Gentiles who were outside the pale.

The vanity of wealth may have rendered some Catholics open to the comparison made; but, we think, that no far as the great body of our people is concerned it has no weight whatever.

The Review goes on to express confidence in the great work undertaken in the United States by the Paulist Fathers, and mentions Father Elliott with especial praise. The Paulists in their western tour found their meetings crowded with "persons of all faiths and of no faith; Protestant ministers and laymen, skeptics and agnostics."

was that in a city where Catholics and Home Rulers had previously been denied any representation or part in administrative affairs they now have a certain representation in the Council of eight members, and in addition whatever influence their numbers may give them in the Protestant wards of the city.

The situation in Derry differs from the evils brought to light in Belfast only insofar as it is more desperate for the Catholics. The science of minority rule in Derry must really amaze anyone who has the opportunity of studying it for the first time. The Catholics have a majority of 4,000 in the population, and a majority of 840 in the number of householders.

the Anglican Church has been spreading swiftly. One hour of Protestant parties organizing in various parts of England for the purpose of imposing an anti-Romish pledge upon Parliamentary candidates in the future, and all sorts of rumors are circulating about a secret understanding between Rome and a large section of the Anglican clergy.

According to the foregoing if England does not now possess a political party corresponding to the American A.P.A. she may wake up one morning to find herself no way behind the United States in that respect. We doubt, however, that it will amount to anything in England.

John Boyle O'Reilly Memorial.

The Boston Pilot contains an extended account of the unveiling of the noble memorial at the gateway of Boston's parks to John Boyle O'Reilly, on June 20th. The leading men of the city and state were there, and no yarring note of creed, or race, or class disturbed the impressive character of the ceremonies.

BOOK REVIEW.

THE SOLIDITY VADO MECUM. A manual, prayer book and hymnal compiled for solidities of the Blessed Virgin Mary. By a priest of the Archdiocese of Chicago. New York: Benziger Bros. Cloth, 50c; half-bound, $1.00.

The particular matter embraced in the contents of this beautifully bound book to which attention need be called includes: An account of the origin of the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, the spiritual advantages derived from her patronage, the indulgences granted by the Popes, common and special rules and constitutions of solidities, a collection of special prayers and the complete and admirable sodality hymnal. Considering the value of this book is indeed, accurately described, by the title, "Sodality Vado Mecum." The paper and type used are superior and we have seldom seen a finer binding than the edition before us at the higher price.

THE LITTLE MANUAL OF ST. ANTHONY. A complete collection of prayers and devotions in honor of the great saint. New York: Benziger Bros. 60c.

No publication could be more desirable in the popular sense at this time when his brethren are undertaking the erection of a shrine to his memory, than a manual of the great medieval saint, Fernando de Bouillon. The author, Gedroff de Bouillon, of the great Gedroff de Bouillon of the First Crusades. Veneration to St. Anthony increases every day in the Catholic world, and although it is coming on eight hundred years since the living force of his influence in the Christian world his influence is as much a reality to tens of thousands to-day as if the saint were still in the flesh. In the present book we have an account of St. Anthony's life, of the origin of the shrine of the Our Lady of Loretto, in his honor, the prayers thereto, various devotions to the saint, the origin of the charity known as "St. Anthony's Bread," and for the rest the book is filled up with the necessary contents of an ordinary prayer book of which it corresponds in size. The binding is particularly strong and there are many interesting illustrations.

OUR LADY OF LORETTO. By Sylvester Joseph Hunter, of the Society of Jesus. Vol. III. New York: Benziger Bros. $1.50.

Father Hunter's manuals of Catholic Theology are admirable for the thoroughness with which they cover the whole field of dogma, and for the simplicity with which they present the various divisions of the system as presented as a coherent whole. He very frankly admits in his preface to the present volume: "Catholics know that no part of the defined doctrines of the Church can be shown to be open to fatal objection, we are sure that the fault is in the mode of statement and not in the doctrine itself." Taking this as an indication of his sense of responsibility as a writer, those who happen to be unacquainted with Father Hunter are apt to form a higher opinion of his judgment upon open questions by reason of his modesty.

The subjects treated in this third volume are: Grace, Justification, the Sacraments, and the Catholic doctrine concerning particular sacraments, and a treatise on the Last Things—death and judgment, hell and heaven, the end of the world, the communion of saints. "Theologians will find the most interesting pages the author has written. In regard to the former subject he handles the jarring interpretations of St. Augustine in masterly style. Embracing the entire scope of that great Doctor of the Church, the author's writer shows why the Pelagian and Calvinistic representations of Grace are rejected, and why Catholic teaching holds that without this special aid man would not merely fail to obtain salvation, and that fact would yield to the temptations to evil which come in his way; but that no man is left without the assistance to avoid evil and do good, and so reach heaven. Again, in regard to Justification, he conclusively presents the Catholic doctrine as the teaching of Scripture. The author deals briefly in his treatise on the sacrament of Order with the immense controversy of Anglican Orders. He states the case with characteristic clearness, as all Catholics understand it, viz.: that if Parker was under a bishop then there is no priesthood in the Anglican and kindred communions. He alludes to the many side issues that have been raised, but merely notices that one concerning Catholic bishops having apostatized and taken part in Anglican consecrations. It is no case did these men act as consecrators; they were merely assistants, and no one has ever suggested that the action of an assistant bishop could convey consecration. It is to be noted that the author does not truly a bishop. As this volume

MAGAZINES.

The Catholic World.

Lightness and diversity are the characteristics of the July number of The Catholic World Magazine. Father Walker Elliott leads off with a cheery paper on our duty toward "Half-Confederates." An interesting biographical sketch of "The Daughter of Madame Roland," detailing some curious mental struggles and their results, is given by A. Buchanan. "The Old Chinese Holy Island," with illustrations, by T. H. Houston, reveals a curious phase of the cryptic life of the Flower Kingdom. Professor James H. Gore, of the Columbian University, contributes a valuable social paper entitled "The Old Men of Mariemont, Belgium." Dorothy Gresham furnishes a breezy bit of fiction entitled "The Delinquent."

Ladies' Home Journal.

The Ladies' Home Journal for July—an especially attractive and interesting issue, opens with a sumptuously illustrated article on Joan of Arc and her home, by Emma Asbrand Hopkins, who entertainingly writes of the childhood and religious life of the Maid. Apropos of the approaching centenary of Burns Arthur Munroe contributes "The Old Side of Robert Burns," revealing the better side of the poet. Hezekiah Butterworth tells, in his engaging way, a Brook Farm story, "The Wife of Ben Bow," and Alice Wellington Rollins humorously romances of "A Town humored by the Poems of the Field," framed in a drawing by W. Hamilton Gibson, and a musical composition—"The Lyndon Polka"—by Mrs. Frances J. Moore, are page features. Edward W. L. writes editorially of the girl between sixteen and twenty, and offers a plea for people who go to the country in the summer time to live as near to Nature as possible.

The Atlantic for July, which begins a new volume with the July number, secured our attention at once as the most of our periodicals in its literary quality, and it shows also a firm and ready grasp on the important topics of the time. Hon. E. J. Phelps, ex-Minister to England, discusses Arbitration and our Relations to England, showing what arbitration may do and what it cannot do, and what diplomacy ought to accomplish, and the best methods of advancing international amity and the progress of mankind. In an article that goes much further than any other which we have seen on the subject, Prof. George B. Adams of Yale argues that the key to the Anglo-Saxon future which is the key to the world-supremacy, is held not by England, but by the United States.

Along with these papers international interest is an article by Mr. E. L. Godkin, Editor of The Nation, on "The Real Problems of Democracy," apropos of Mr. Lecky's new book on "Democracy and Liberty."

St. Nicholas.

The frontispiece of the July St. Nicholas is one of Dolph's paintings, "Held by the Enemy," an attack of four mischievous kittens upon a bowl of milk. The number opens with a romance of the American Revolution, "Maurice and his Father," by Sara King Wiley. It is the story of an English boy who fell into the hands of Marion's troops. It will be remembered that the famous Albany post office dog, Onwey, recently made a trip around the world. Charles Frederick Holder gives the first connected account of this remarkable journey, and relates amusing incidents of Onwey's reception by Oriental postmen. Meanwhile, Smith, the remarkable adventures that befell him in his nineteenth voyage. "Toby Hinkle, Patriot," in Pauline Wesley's story, is a little unavert boy who made a trip for the town in which he lived. "The Story of Marco Polo," the great serial by Noah Brooks, gives the account of Venetian traveler's account of Armenia and Bagdad and the death of the Old Man of the Mountain, Mr. Stoddard, in "The Shardsmink's Son," tells the story of the slaughter of the Galileans by Pontius Pilate's soldiery.

So rapidly does lung irritation spread and deepen, that often in a few weeks a simple cough culminates in tubercular consumption. Give heed to a cough, the first sign of lung trouble, get a bottle of Bickel's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and cure yourself. It is medicine unparpassed for all throat and lung troubles. It is compounded from several herbs, each one of which stands at the head of the list as exerting a wonderful influence in curing consumption and all lung diseases.

LATEST MARKETS.

Toronto, June 29, 1896.

Wheat—The offerings are small owing to the doings of the buyers, and the farmers a coat of two less for their wheat. The demand is small, the inquiry for flour being as slow now as it has been any time the past few weeks. Canada wheat is quoted at 90c to 91c, and white at 88c to 87c, north and west. Manitoba wheat is quoted at 88c for No. 1 hard, about 87c for No. 2 hard, and 86c for No. 3 hard; No. 1 hard is quoted at 85c in Ontario.
