COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTY-SIXTH DAY OF APRIL, 1956, TO THE TWENTY-NINTH DAY OF MAY, 1956, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

EDMOND CLOUTIER, C.M.G., O.A., D.S.P.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1956

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 26, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ATOMIC ENERGY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INVITATION TO ATTEND NUCLEAR TESTS IN THE PACIFIC

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in connection with United States nuclear tests in the Pacific the house might be interested to learn that the United States department of defence is today making the following announcement:

Canadian and United Kingdom representatives have been invited to attend a nuclear detonation in the forthcoming test series at the Eniwetok proving ground.

The invitations were issued under the terms of bilateral agreements entered into on July 21, 1955, with Canada and the United Kingdom for exchange of atomic information for mutual defence purposes.

The nuclear detonation for which these invitations have been issued will be after that attended by U.S. news representatives and civil defence officials, about May 1.

I can add that Canada has accepted this invitation and a representative Canadian group will be in attendance.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF PROVISIONS TO 1958

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, today the government has decided to extend the provisions of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act for two more years, 1957 and 1958, at the same rate. A resolution and bill to implement that extension will be brought before the house at an early date.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED RESEARCH IN BRAIN-WASHING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question in connection with the experiments which have been carried on at McGill University in the field of brain-washing. In the light of the minister's earlier answer to a question on this subject on April 17 I wonder if the minister's brains have been washed so that he has forgotten he was minister in the years 1954 and 1955. However, if his brain has been set at rest on this subject I should like to ask if he has learned from his own department sufficient of what was going on to be able to clear up certain other discrepancies which appeared in that answer which he made.

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in view of certain reports which have appeared in the press I have made inquiries and I have practically no amendment to make to my statement of the other day. I may say that that statement was based on information from my officials. Notwithstanding the omniscience of certain press people, may I say that this experiment was initiated in September 1951 and was completed in the early days of 1953, and a report was issued in that year. This was all before my time as minister. There were other experiments carried on at McGill following that date, but they had nothing to do with changing the mental attitude of persons to which I referred. I notice the same gentleman accuses me in the press of having made an understatement of the case, but it occurs to me that in view of the number of overstatements we get from the other side of the house my statement may help to balance things up.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA—PURPOSE OF INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question of which I have given him notice. Can he take the house and the country into his confidence in the matter of increasing the interest rate? I am moved to ask this particularly by a statement in this morning's paper—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Macdonnell: I have asked the question. I am moved to ask it because of a statement that the premier of Ontario thought that the Canadian economy has been jeopardized because of federal government tinkering with interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Macdonnell: I will repeat my question. Will the minister take the house and the country into his confidence and explain the reasons for the increase in the interest rate?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain the reason for the increase in the interest rate very briefly. The interest rate of the Bank of Canada, commonly known as the bank rate, is of course just another interest rate. It is the interest rate at which the central bank will loan money to certain institutions, and that rate has to bear some reasonable relation to other interest rates.

It happens that the rates of all the central banks, at least that of the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries, have been raised substantially in the past 12 months. Our bank rate did not keep pace in the sense of matching the increase, but it nevertheless had to be increased from time to time for the same reasons as the other countries increased theirs. My recollection is that in the United States the bank rate has gone up four times in the past 12 months; I think ours has gone up just four times. In the United Kingdom the bank rate is already over 5 per cent, as compared with our 3 per cent.

This is all public knowledge. The reasons for it are as have been given, that we cannot maintain an artificially low interest rate for the central bank when other interest rates with which there must be competition are rising, and correspondingly the Bank of Canada does change its rates from time to time for that reason.

Mr. Macdonnell: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has not the bank rate primarily to do with our local conditions, and does that mean that the government believes there is a serious threat of inflation?

Mr. Harris: The bank rate cannot possibly be fixed solely with regard to our local conditions, unless you think in terms of our local conditions being divorced from world trade. Naturally, our affairs in Canada are affected by the affairs of other countries, and that will bring a reaction on our trade and our demand for credit. When that demand does exceed certain available supplies, the bank rate will naturally go up, and that without regard necessarily to local conditions. Nevertheless, I think the hon. member knows, and I think all the members of the house know, that there is such a demand for money in Canada at the moment that interest rates are rising and are bound to rise.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Might I ask a supplementary question? Was the increase in the central bank rate not a deliberate policy to encourage a general rise in interest rates in Canada, as is now taking place with the chartered bank rate?

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Mr. Harris: I think the hon. member for Assiniboia was trying to make a speech, and I doubt very much if he expects or really believes that any servant of the government of Canada would take an attitude such as he describes.

Mr. Argue: Is it a matter of government policy to have the central bank interest rate increased in order to generally raise interest rates in this country?

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might ask my question in a different form? Is the recent increase in the interest rate charged by chartered banks not a direct result of the move by the central bank to increase its rate?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, except for the limitation in the Bank Act with respect to the rate of interest beyond which the banks cannot lend money, the government of Canada has no control over what they do with respect to interest rates.

Mr. Argue: You forced them to increase their interest rates.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Did I understand the Minister of Finance to say that the government of Canada exercises no control over the financial system of the country? I thought the central bank was established for that purpose.

Mr. Harris: What I said was that we do not control the borrowing rate that the banks set for their customers except in so far as we put an upper limit on it in the Bank Act. That, I thought, was an answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

SUGGESTED USE OF MICROPHOTOGRAPHIC FILM AS PROOF OF RECORDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has any consideration been given to amending the Canada Evidence Act so that microphotographic film would be taken as proof of records of municipal governments?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Since my hon. friend did not give me notice of this question and since it deals with a matter of detail, I shall take his question as notice.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

STATEMENT ON RESUMPTION OF ELEVATOR SERVICE IN PEACE TOWER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Oxford asked when the elevator in the peace tower would be back in operation. The answer is that it will be in full operation tomorrow.

CIVIL DEFENCE

PARTICIPATION OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT IN EVACUATION EXERCISE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether, since a major international civil defence exercise is planned for this summer, members of this house will be called upon to co-operate in the evacuation plan if the house is still in session?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Having in mind the date of the exercise to which my hon. friend directs my attention, I do not know whether I am to construe from his question that this is an indication that we are going to be here in session as a result of his persistence. In any event, the matter which he raises is, as he would expect, fully under consideration.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE SALARIES FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN QUEBEC AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for four additional judges of the superior court of Quebec and two additional judges of the supreme court of British Columbia.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, it might, I think, shorten the discussion if the minister would just tell the committee in general terms the nature of the request and the reasons for it. I know in my own province there have been requests and I imagine the same is true of the province of Quebec, but perhaps we might have the details.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, as hon. members are all aware, in our judicial system in Canada the provincial legislatures determine by provincial legislation the number of judicial vacancies that there are from time to time upon provincial courts. Where the business of the courts increases to the point that an additional number of judges are necessary the required provincial legislation is passed to create these additional vacancies. After the additional vacancies have been created in this way we here at Ottawa take the power by an amendment to the federal Judges Act, such as is being ushered in by this resolution, to make appointments to fill these new judicial vacancies in provincial courts.

In the present case the amendment covers two additional judges to the trial division of the supreme court of British Columbia and four additional appointments to the superior court of the province of Quebec. I have satisfied myself by inquiries that there is ample reason for the provincial legislation being passed to create these vacancies and that it is necessary that we should take the power by means of the legislation to which this resolution will lead, to fill those vacancies in due course.

Mr. Fulton: With respect to the two additional appointments being provided for the province of British Columbia, when were those requested? My recollection is that last year provision was made out there for one additional judge and that a request was made for one additional judge. My recollection may be faulty but it seems to me that the request for the second judge must be somewhat more recent. Could the minister confirm that impression; or if I am wrong, can he tell me when the request was received?

Mr. Garson: So far as we are concerned, Mr. Chairman, the request does not really become too effective until the provincial legislature has actually passed the legislation. As I am sure my friend the hon. member for Kamloops himself is aware, that legislation was proclaimed within the last two or three weeks. In other words, we had been having correspondence with the attorney general of British Columbia and with the chief justice of the court in British Columbia prior to that time but we were not in a position to take too great cognizance of that until the actual vacancies had been created and the provincial act passed to that end had been proclaimed.

Mr. Fulton: That was just this spring, then.

Mr. Castleden: Can the minister give the house a breakdown of the number of supreme court cases by provinces and also the number of cases per judge over say a five-year period?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I could possibly do that. I secured from the chief justice of the trial division of the court in British Columbia a statement as to the number of cases they had been considering during the past 12 months. However, I do not feel that I have the authority to demand of those provinces which are not requiring additional judges information as to how many cases they try. In a matter of this kind my authority is pretty much related to satisfying myself that in those courts in which additional judges are being asked for there is really a need for them. Moreover, I question very much whether the comparative statistics which my friend the hon. member for Yorkton is seeking would reveal much because a great deal depends upon the nature of the cases as to how long they will take. Mere numbers in two parallel columns would not necessarily indicate that a number of cases in the one column would take up more time than the same number or even a greater number in another one.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, I believe that such a table would indicate, in a general way, the case load of the judges in the various provinces. It might turn out that there are just as many supreme court cases per judge in other provinces. From what the minister has said I take it that the request has come just from the two provinces, namely British Columbia and Quebec. In the province of Quebec at the present time, how many supreme court judges are there?

Mr. Garson: At the present time there are 44. But as an indication to my hon. friend of how lacking in comparability statistics of that sort would be, may I just say this. In the province of Quebec they do not have—as they have in my hon. friend's province—any county court judges at all. Apart from magistrates and small debt cases, all of the cases which are tried in the province of Quebec go to the one court. Hence, if one were to take a comparison such as my hon. friend indicates, it would tend to mislead unless one made allowance for the difference in circumstances. When one had done that, I am afraid the statistics would have to be so heavily qualified that they would not mean very much.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, I still submit that if we could have the statistics with regard to the number of supreme court cases for each of the provinces for say the past five-year period, that information would indicate whether there has been sufficient increase in the case load to warrant an increase such as this in the judges for each of those provinces. That is the figure I was after.

Mr. Garson: I can give my hon. friend the figure as to the number of actual court days that were spent by the judges of British Columbia, month by month, during the past 12 months. I think that is a better test. For the real question is this. Out of the total amount of time which all of the judges of the court have available, how many days do they necessarily spend in court considering these cases—not how many cases do they try. In one instance you may have a case, a jury trial in a civil action, that may last for two weeks. You may have another case that lasts for two hours. They each appear in the statistics as one case, but to say that they are comparable would be quite wrong. If my hon. friend would like me to put it on the record, I could give him this breakdown of British Columbia court room time. I think however, for the purposes of the committee, a statement which I have here from the chief justice of the court as to just what conditions are with the existing number of judges would be of greater service. If my hon. friend would like me to do so, I would not burden the record with all of the chief justice's statement, but I would be very glad to read the more relevant sections of it into the record.

Mr. Castleden: Such a statement concerning the number of days spent in court by supreme court judges would, I think, be of value. I think it would be perhaps of even more value to know how that compared with the number of days spent by each judge or the average number of days spent by judges say three years ago and thus ascertain whether there is an increase in the work which would warrant the increased number of appointments.

Mr. Garson: I think, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is right to a certain extent. Certainly we should satisfy the members of the committee that the increase we are asking is really necessary. I do not know of any better way of establishing that point than by putting before the members of the committee the conditions which were prevailing in the court at the time the request was made. I think perhaps to that end, if this meets with the approval of the members, I might quote from this report from Chief Justice Sherwood Lett. He says this:

> Members of the court are, and have been for some time, overworked. All the judges have accumulated reserve judgments which, sitting as they are from day to day, they find impossible to dispose of with the promptitude which should prevail if the interests of litigants and the convenience of members of the bar are to be taken care of properly. The situation is unhealthy for the administration of justice and embarrassing to the judges themselves. Litigants are being unreasonably delayed.

The population of the province has increased rapidly in the last 10 years and this increase has been reflected in the work of the court, not only in greater Vancouver but also in Victoria, New Westminster, Nanaimo, Prince George, Vernon, Kelowna and Penticton. The government has recognized the growth of population in centres such as these by the construction of new court houses at several of the points mentioned and at other places, such as Courtenay and Chilliwack.

The work in Vancouver has increased on both the civil and criminal sides. We have, as you know, a continuous assize in Vancouver.

Now, my hon. friend from Yorkton could contrast that with his own city where they would not dream of having a continuous assize to dispose of cases. They have an assize a few times a year to dispose of the cases, then there is a long gap before the next assize.

I continue to quote from the report:

We have, as you know, a continuous assize in Vancouver, and the criminal trial list is very much congested. Seemingly, in both civil and criminal work, there are many more long trials than a few years ago.

That is another indication that the statistics of a few years ago and the statistics now would not mean very much by comparison. It is the length of time that the members of the court have to spend which is the real criterion as to whether or not additional judges need to be appointed. I again quote:

To illustrate, in the last year we have had one civil case of more than eight weeks' duration, another of four and a third of 18 days. We have had regrettably more than the usual number of murders and every murder trial lasts for several days at least. Cases dealing with narcotics also appear to be on the increase. In Victoria, which in days gone by had little litigation, the volume had markedly increased.

Nanaimo, which formerly took only two or three days a month at most now has to be judicially serviced much more frequently. The assizes and the civil work there require a judge on an average of seven to 10 days a month.

New Westminster requires the services of a judge almost every day except Fridays. The last criminal assize extended for almost eight weeks and the current criminal spring assize is heavy, and will probably continue for some weeks more.

The work in the Yale judicial district can no longer be handled by the attendance of a judge for one or two weeks twice a year. We still have semi-annual assizes at nine points in the interior of the province, but, in addition to that, it is now necessary to allocate a judge to do civil work in the interior at least two or three times each year, which takes a judge away from Vancouver from two to four weeks on each occasion. It is impossible to keep abreast of the work in Vancouver with two or three judges away on circuit a great deal of the time.

Then, he goes on:

The number of applications in chambers in increasing, and, as many applications are lengthy, the chamber judge is not available for trial work.

Divorce actions in Vancouver and New Westminster average over 30 a week.

The trial of custody of children cases (inclusive of the perusal of reports from the superintendent of child welfare), reports to the court of appeal and reports to the remission branch of the justice department take many hours of judicial time.

The pressure of work from day to day results frequently in oral judgments with which judges themselves are not satisfied and the accumulation of reserved judgments which judges find it impossible to deal with promptly, to the dissatisfaction of litigants and the profession.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, to my satisfaction at least the case which the chief justice has put up in this memorandum from which I have quoted is a pretty unanswerable one.

Mr. Castleden: I should like to know whether a similar situation might not be true of cities like Toronto, Hamilton, Sarnia, and Edmonton, all of which are growing also? Can the minister assure the committee there has not been a similar increase? Perhaps the supreme court judges may be overloaded in those cities. That is the point I was making.

Mr. Garson: There is one point I am wondering whether my hon. friend really appreciates; and it is this. Before these matters ever get to the floor of this house at all it is necessary for the chief justice of the provincial court to convince the provincial attorney general and the provincial government that there is a state of congestion of the cases in his court. The provincial legislature has to amend its provincial laws before there is any occasion for our introducing any legislation in this chamber. Therefore I would assume that if, in relation to Hamilton and Toronto and the other places to which my hon. friend has referred the members of the Ontario legislature have not as yet seen fit to create more vacancies, they must feel they are being well served at the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact in the province of Saskatchewan I am of those who believe that there should be an increase of two judges on the Queen's Bench, but strangely enough the government of Saskatchewan, with apparently ulterior matters in view, brought in legislation within the last two years to reduce the number of Queen's bench judges there by one. If a vacancy takes place or one of the judges dies, then the number of Queen's Bench judges will be reduced by one because of the fact that the government of Saskatchewan thought that if one of the present judges were to retire or die, a certain person, now a member of this house, might be appointed as a judge. I mention that. It does indicate that the decision made by the government of Saskatchewan was not based entirely on considerations relative to the demands of justice or to the necessity of justice being attained with maximum speed.

As a member of the bar of British Columbia I do feel that the request from that province is a reasonable one and is necessary in order to do two things. One is to permit judges to catch up with the tremendous amount of work they have. For some reason or another litigation has increased there tremendously in recent years.

Secondly, to ensure that justice is done at the earliest possible date. One of the major considerations in the administration of justice, and this has been said quite often, is that not only shall justice be done but that it be done expeditiously. There has been a great piling up of cases and I know that this applies in the province of Quebec where the number of judges has been insufficient to meet the increasing demands of litigation, and there is a need to increase the number on the bench.

I suggest also to the minister that in filling these vacancies regard should always be had to assuring that the best possible members of the bar are secured to fill the vacancies. It is important that justice be done at an early date, but it is equally important that justice shall in fact be done. The best lawyers available, without regard to political affiliations, should be appointed to these positions.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, I was rather surprised that the hon. member for Prince Albert should make a charge on the floor of this house that the Saskatchewan government is allowing political considerations to enter into the appointment of additional judges in that province.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have reduced the number.

Mr. Castleden: The hon. member indicated a possibility of some member of this house being appointed to the queen's bench. I am rather surprised that such a charge should be made against the members of the Saskatchewan government and it is unfortunate that they are not here to defend themselves in this place. I can assure the hon. member and this committee, and I think the Minister of Justice will support me in my statement, that as far as the provincial government is concerned they have always endeavoured to have the highest quality of justice that could possibly be made available to the people of that province. That has always been their aim. I certainly do not like the implication that the provincial government's policy is based on some political motive.

Mr. Holowach: Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the legal profession which has as its symbol justice, and its true administration, nor is it necessary to be a member in order to appreciate that those who serve in our judiciary are filling a most important place in our complex society. I feel that as long as the Canadian people enjoy liberty and justice the profession of law will continue to be a great one and have the esteem and respect of all our people. We all know that in a free country such as ours the administration of justice is absolutely essential to our survival, especially today when we see philosophies of life and government which are not only challenging our way of life but actually denying justice to countless millions.

As I see it, parliament and a judiciary system composed of men who are honest, impartial and learned, are the true guardians of the principle of justice for the Canadian people. We should always try to strengthen our judicial system and in doing that I think we should keep two requisites in mind. First, we should make our selections from those who are of the highest calibre, impartially and irrespective of the political affiliations of the candidates. Secondly, we should constantly re-examine the needs and requirements of these people in order that there may be the maximum speed in the administration of justice.

I notice that this resolution provides for the appointment of four additional judges to the Superior Court of Quebec and two additional judges to the Supreme Court of British Columbia, as well as the fixing of their salaries. It would seem that the bringing in of this resolution was motivated by the necessity of clearing up a backlog of cases. If that is so, then the resolution is most timely. We should remember that when we delay justice we are denying justice.

As far as the salaries are concerned, I am not just sure what they will be and perhaps we should be told. I do not know what amounts are allocated for the judicial system in Canada. It may be found upon examination that in the light of recommendations from the judges themselves these salaries are inadequate. I think proper salaries in this field are most important because they would bring forth the best effort and at the same time make our judges financially independent.

I do not know what process is followed to meet the needs and the recommendations made by our judiciary, but the point I make is that somehow or other those needs and requirements and recommendations should be brought forcibly to the attention of the public and hon. members of this house. I do not think that is being done and I do not think we have enough information on it. I read a most interesting report of an address given by William P. Rogers, deputy attorney general of the United States, at a testimonial dinner for Judge James C. Connell, Cleveland, Ohio, on November 17, 1954, and he had this to say:

> I want to propose to you here tonight a plan which I believe holds great promise for the future of the judicial system. I believe that a primary need of the federal judiciary today is an effective way to speak to the congress and to the people of the United States. The judiciary needs a voice possessing strength and prestige to speak effectively. That voice is, in my opinion, the voice of the chief justice of the United States. I believe that the chief justice should be invited by concurrent resolution at the beginning of each session of congress to address a joint session of the house and senate. At such a joint session of congress the chief justice could effectively present to the congress and the people of the United States not only the needs and problems of the federal judiciary, but give a broad and comprehensive picture of the performance of the courts in their vastly important function of doing justice between man and man and between the government and its citizens.
> There should be, and I believe that there is, no partisanship in the matter of providing adequate facilities for our federal judiciary. In the past the fault has not been with congress. The fault has been, in my opinion, with the procedure whereby the needs of the courts are not fully presented to the entire congress and the people.
> The judiciary holds neither the power of the sword nor of the purse. But if, as we believe, justice is the chief concern of men, then the instrumentalities of justice—our courts—must be assigned a truly co-ordinate position in our governmental scheme. They should enjoy in greater degree than they now do the opportunity to declare and to make known their problems, needs, and plans for more effective performance of their vital functions in our society.

I do not know just how akin that problem raised by Mr. Rogers is to our own case, but I think it offers food for thought. I am pleased to say that we in this group are in full support of this resolution and at this time we should like to express esteem and best wishes to those whom this resolution will affect. We feel confident that those who are responsible for this resolution have given careful consideration to the matter of these appointments with the view that we add eminence to our judiciary.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Garson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 252, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Veterans Loans

VETERANS BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO GUARANTEED LOANS

The house resumed, from Monday, April 23, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Harris—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act to provide that a loan under the act is a guaranteed loan if the application therefor is made within the periods specified, even though the loan itself was made at a later date.

Mr. Harris: This is a quite simple amendment which has been recommended to the house because of a little difficulty we ran into in connection with the administration of the act. As I think hon. members will recall, the government said during the war years that it would provide a guarantee to banks for certain loans to be made to veterans of professional or business standing, in order to re-establish them. The loan was to be guaranteed if made within ten years from, I think, May 1 or March 1, 1945, or ten years from the date of the discharge from the armed services of the veteran.

We found last year that there were cases where the ten years was running out. The veteran had applied for a loan, but there was sufficient time lag between the application and the final determination by the bank to make the loan that in fact the ten-year limit had run out in the interval. This was no one's fault. There would be a normal time for the banks to investigate the loan and to have it certified through the Department of Veterans Affairs that the applicant was in fact a veteran and entitled to the benefit of the guarantee. So, in order to overcome the possibility—in fact, the actuality, as it turned out—that a veteran might apply in what he would consider sufficient time to obtain the advantage of the guarantee, and yet not receive it because of the lapse of the ten year period, we are suggesting to the house that we might amend the act so that the date of his application would be the date that would be used to determine the ten-year period. In other words, if a veteran applies any time up to the last day of the ten year period and the application is subsequently granted, the government will guarantee that loan to the bank.

Mr. Castleden: What is the last date?

Mr. Harris: The last date is either ten years from, I think, May 1, 1945, or ten years from the date of his discharge from the armed services, whichever is the later.

Mr. Castleden: Does that include Korean veterans?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. Brooks: We appreciate the explanation by the minister. I might say that there has been very little veterans legislation before the house; this is the first amendment to any veterans act that we have had this session. I do not think it indicates altogether that it is not necessary to have a few amendments to some of the acts; in fact, I could suggest a few myself, and probably will later on.

This act has been quite a popular one with the veterans, and perhaps there will be some disappointment that the act is now at an end. The purpose of the act, as the minister has told us, was to encourage the Canadian banks to make loans to veterans at a comparatively low rate of interest—up to five per cent, I believe—to establish themselves in business and professions.

As the minister has told us, this is a simple amendment. It simply extends the time of the loan where the application was made before the time had expired. As a matter of fact, the date of expiry was January 1, 1955, and this is almost May 1, 1956. My criticism of that would be that it has taken almost a year and a half to make this amendment to the act, and there must have been a good many applications which could have been made in that time.

I should like to ask the minister how many veterans will be affected, how many applications have been made and how many are pending. If we take the report which it is provided shall be presented each year to the house, on or after March 31, we find in the latest report that, as I say, this has been quite a popular act with veterans. There have been 7,371 applications approved, and the loans have totalled almost $15 million.

I note that in the year 1954-55 there were 218 applications. This Act provides for applications from Korean veterans as well as from others. I should also like to ask the minister how many Korean veterans are included in this number of 218. I might also ask, since this is a popular act with the veterans and is giving great assistance in establishing many of them in business and assisting them in business, why the act is not extended for a further period of time to allow more veterans to borrow money under the act in order to set themselves up in business. It has been of great benefit.

As I understand from the report the department has issued, there has been very little loss as far as the government is concerned. The veterans have been making their payments quite regularly, and it would seem that it was of great assistance to them. To show just what benefit it has been to the veterans, I should like to quote from the latest report by the Department of Veterans Affairs with respect to loans under the act to March 31, 1955. This report shows the following purposes for which loans were made and the number and total amounts thereof:

Purchase of a business	1,544	$3,564,566.51
Purchase of an interest in partnership or capital for new partnership	1,590	3,390,662.22
Purchase of machinery, tools, instruments or other equipment	1,483	2,459,221.30
Repair of machinery, tools, instruments or other equipment	12	14,675.80

Then we have construction, repair or alteration of, or making additions to buildings or structures, 693, and the amount involved is $1,406,494.48. The last item is purchase of motorized units, 1,060, and the amount involved is $1,372,641.19. The total amount is $12,208,261.50. As I stated a moment ago, there has been an increase in that amount to over $14 million. In view of the fact that there have been so many applications for benefits under the act and in view of the fact that the administration of the act will have to continue for a number of years because, I take it, the Korean veterans will have ten years in which to make their applications and in addition there will be considerable amounts to be collected over a number of years, it seems to me that the act might be amended to continue for some time, perhaps for five or ten more years.

I should like the minister to answer some of these questions. How many will be affected by the amendment? Will it mean any reduction in staff? How much has had to be written off for bad debts resulting from nonpayment by veterans? How much longer does the minister estimate the act will have to be continued in force in order to provide for the Korean veterans and the collection of debts? I do not think there is anything further I wish to say regarding the legislation, but I should like the minister to answer the questions I have asked.

Mr. Harris: On the first point I accept the hon. member's dates as being correct, that for those who were discharged before the 1st of January, 1945 the time limit of the legislation ran out some 12 or 14 months ago. The first case we learned of where there were any adverse results was in October so that I take it no one had applied prior to then who had had the ten years run out on him between the date of application and the date of granting of the loan. That was the first case, as I say, where we found that this situation obtained, and we decided in that month to recommend this amendment to parliament.

Mr. Brooks: That is October of last year.

Mr. Harris: Last year, 1955. This is intended to cover all future cases, of course. The other information that the hon. member has asked for will be given on second reading. I do not have it at the moment. With respect to the Korean veterans, the amendment of course applies to them as well, as the hon. member has said, so that at the expiration of their ten year period they will have the additional time that the amendment grants between the date of application and the granting of the loan.

Mr. Brooks: What effect will it have on the staff?

Mr. Harris: The staff can handle this without any addition. We in finance do keep our staff down. We do not think that any additional staff or expense will be required to administer the act in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Brooks: I did not contemplate there would be any addition to the staff. I wanted to know if there would be any reduction in staff. There will be less work to do.

Mr. Harris: I do not think we can reduce the staff, although I will certainly look into the matter. It is a very minor job compared with others that we do and I think it is looked after by two or three civil servants who have many other duties as well.

Mr. Brooks: There is another question I asked the minister with reference to extending the time. I do not mean for those whose applications are already in, but since this is a popular piece of legislation I should like to know if there is any disposition on the part of either the veterans affairs department or the minister's department to increase the time from five to ten years for the benefit of applicants who might like to have assistance in setting up a business.

Mr. Harris: This, of course, brings up a rather fundamental question of policy. The purpose of the act was to see that veterans were re-established, not to go further and provide some kind of assistance to them throughout their lifetime. I realize that one may argue for the latter case, but this legislation was one of the many measures which were designed to see that veterans had an opportunity very quickly to obtain assistance in order to get started in business. I must say I am only surmising but I think I can say that the number of applications had been declining steadily except for those that are coming up in respect of the Korean veterans.

Mr. Brooks: There were 218 last year.

Mr. Harris: Yes, but that would probably be because some realized that it was the last year. It would not be our intention to extend the time unless there are very good reasons for it. I would be glad to hear any argument advancing reasons but it would have to be based on a continuing advantage to a veteran whose circumstances did not require him to take advantage of the legislation in the past ten years.

Mr. Brooks: It was done, I might say, in the case of the Veterans Land Act.

Mr. Harris: I realize that.

Mr. Herridge: I want to say a few words on the resolution which provides, as the minister said, for a simple amendment to the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act. I suppose you might term this resolution as a form of legislative tiddledywinks. Anyway, I have a personal interest in the measure. I was present at the Canadian Legion convention in Vancouver in 1944 and was one of the members of the committee that helped to draft the first resolution that suggested legislation of this type to the government of Canada. I remember the discussion on the legislation in 1946 when it was introduced and in the veterans affairs committee. I also remember the debate on second reading on August 8 of that year.

At that time I think most members of the house who spoke on second reading of the bill thought that it would perform a useful service for a good number of veterans. I think experience has proven that correct, although there have been some criticisms. My experience in my constituency, and I can only speak of what I know, is that it has been of assistance to a considerable number of veterans in becoming re-established, particularly in very small businesses. I understand the department is solely concerned with qualifying the man. It issues a certificate establishing the fact that the veteran concerned is qualified to receive assistance under the act and the administration of the act is the responsibility of the officials of the banks.

While, as I said, on the whole I think it has been a most successful piece of legislation, I have found a few instances where I thought the positions of the officials of the banks were rather rigid. There was a somewhat too severe and rigid assessment of the risk. I have only a very few cases but I have some of that type. I am going to illustrate by mentioning one. There was a veteran in a small town in my constituency who had operated a small business very successfully for ten years since his return from overseas in 1946. He had a property. The land was valued at not less than $10,000 and might have been worth two or three thousand more. There was a mortgage on the property for $3,000. The man applied to the local bank manager for assistance in the form of a loan under the act. The local bank manager considered the matter, thought it was an excellent risk and recommended the granting of the loan to the veteran concerned. However, apparently loans of that size have to be endorsed by the senior officials at the district offices in Vancouver.

After some consideration the official concerned—possibly the superintendent of the bank in question—refused the application for the loan and the veteran was obliged to go without it. I went into the case thoroughly. I discussed it with other prominent business men in the constituency and with the bank manager concerned. It was a first-class risk. It was a loan to a veteran who for 10 years had proven himself to be a successful small business man who owned property—I have reference to the land alone, not the store itself—which was worth at least three times more than the amount of the loan he asked for, which was $3,000. At that time the loan would have been of great assistance to the veteran. Even the local bank manager could not tell me why the district authority had rejected the loan.

I have been informed that while the Department of Veterans Affairs is not directly involved in the administration of the act, the officials are concerned in following up in order to ascertain how the act functions. While on the whole I think the administration of the act has been satisfactory, I think the percentage of instances of a too rigid assessment of the risk involved is sufficiently high to justify some further consideration by the Department of Veterans Affairs. I therefore recommend that the senior officials of the bank and the senior officials of the department go into this question. If it is gone into carefully and if they get information from across the country, I am quite sure they will find that in some cases, as I said before, there is a too rigid assessment of the risk in connection with the loan concerned.

Second, I would certainly support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Royal to the effect that the government should give consideration to extending the life of the act. It has proved to be beneficial. It has functioned, shall I say, more smoothly as the years went along. The loss involved has been very small indeed. I do not know the figure but I understand that it is very small; I refer to loss on account of loans guaranteed by the government. The act has been performing a good service. I cannot see any reason whatever why the government should not give consideration to extending the life of this piece of legislation which has proved to be so successful and which has been of benefit to many veterans in this country.

Mr. McLeod: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this measure. We are certainly in favour of the resolution. As to the act itself, we believe that it has been beneficial and that it has been the means of assisting many veterans to become established in business. It is perhaps assisting a group that we might put on a basis comparable with that of those who are receiving assistance under the Veterans Land Act. Of course, not all our veterans wish to become farmers. If they desire it, I think they should be allowed the assistance necessary to establish themselves in any other worth-while business. But I would certainly support the two members who have just spoken, namely the hon. member for Royal and the hon. member for Kootenay West, in asking that the act be further extended. I cannot see that it is anything short of discrimination against those who do not wish to become farmers if they are to see their rights cut off whereas those who wish to apply under the Veterans Land Act are still able to get assistance. The request for this extension is, I believe, a reasonable one. I am sure the minister will give it further consideration while the act is being amended.

As to the need for this amendment, it arises out of the fact that the original act was not correctly worded and its purpose is to give the necessary protection in cases where loans have not been processed prior to the time of expiry of the period specified. Hence, outside of the fact that we are making a plea for a further extension of this act, we are in wholehearted support of the amendment and appreciate the fact that it is being brought forward at this time. However, we cannot stress too strongly the need for it to be continued. I happen to know of a young veteran who upon discharge from the services—he had several years of service—went into private employment and then, after a few short years, decided that he would like to become established in a business. He had some money of his own but not sufficient to make a complete purchase of what he had in mind, something that his training both in the army and in subsequent employment had educated him up to. He was at a loss to become established in this way. While the minister mentioned that the number of applications is steadily diminishing, I suggest that situation might be owing to the fact that so many of these veterans realize that it is hopeless to make an application. I still think there are many who would like to avail themselves of this act in order to become established in business. I should certainly like to see further serious consideration given to an extension of the period in which the act is effective.

Mr. Pearkes: Is a Korean veteran who re-enlists in the regular army still entitled to make application for this loan, no matter how many times he may re-enlist in the regular army?

Mr. Lapointe: I understand that is the present position.

Mr. Brooks: When would his time commence? Suppose he was in the army for eight or ten years. Can he make application after he is discharged from the army and then continue for another period of ten years?

Mr. Lapointe: There seems to be a conflict there. As a matter of fact, that matter is being considered at the present time. If is is necessary that changes be made, it is proposed to make them.

Mr. Pearkes: Then in reply to my question in which I referred to a man who re-enlisted, the answer is that it is not definite that he can get a loan now? Can I get an answer instead of a nod of the head?

Mr. Bennett: Mr. Chairman, the Korean veteran is entitled, as I understand it, to the benefit of this act upon his discharge because this act reads "ten years after his discharge". The fact that he is discharged makes him entitled to the benefits of this act. That seems to give him in some cases the preference over some other veterans. As the minister says, that question is being considered at the present time. The man who kept on with his service after the Korean war, as I say, by the fact that he takes his discharge later on may become entitled to the benefits of this act because this act says "ten years after the date of discharge". As the minister says, the matter is presently being considered and there may be amendments to bring them more in line with the way that other veterans were treated if that is necessary. But of course hon. members will be given notice of them.

Mr. Pearkes: It will be borne in mind that there are still troops in Korea?

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Lapointe (for Mr. Harris) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 253, to amend the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Canada Lands Surveys Act

CANADA LANDS SURVEYS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REMUNERATION OF EXAMINERS

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canada Lands Surveys Act to provide that the members of the board of examiners shall be remunerated on an annual basis; also to authorize the treasury board to fix the fees to be paid to special examiners.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, briefly the purpose of this resolution is to introduce a bill to amend the Canada Lands Surveys Act in so far as the remuneration of the members of the board of examiners for dominion land surveyors and the secretary thereof is concerned, and in so far as the fees to the special examiners who are appointed under the act are concerned. The first board of examiners was established some 81 years ago in 1875 under the authority of the Dominion Lands Act of that date. Over the years there has been a need for amendments to the act to meet changing conditions, and this resolution proposes another change to bring the method of payment of the board of examiners into line with conditions as we find them today.

In looking over the files it has been very interesting to follow the reasons for the changes that have been made from time to time. I think it would be advisable to put a statement on the record so that in future years it will be there for reference, and although this would probably be more properly made on second reading of the bill I should like to put it on the record now.

By the first amendment it is intended to remunerate the members of the board and the secretary on an annual basis rather than by a daily fee as now provided under section 7 of the act, which fee is conditional upon the attendance of the board members and of the secretary at meetings of the board called for the purpose of examining candidates, or for any other purpose, or who attends as a special examiner at an examination. A great portion of the work required from each member of the board consists of the setting and marking of examination papers, which work is done by each member individually. The members of the board hold a certificate of the highest class and, in addition to being dominion land surveyors, are also dominion topographical surveyors, which certificate requires a very wide experience in scientific surveying operations. As a matter of fact, only 32 have qualified as dominion topographical surveyors since 1875, whereas 828 have obtained their commission as dominion land surveyors since the same date.

The chairman, the members and the secretary of the board are all civil servants who have a full-time job to do, with the result that the duties imposed upon them because of their appointment to the board are over and above their normal daily duties and consequently this extra work, I am informed, has to be done outside normal working hours. The board members, because of the type of work that they have to perform—here I wish to refer particularly to the setting up of examination papers and the marking of those papers—can more conveniently and in a more satisfactory manner perform that work individually. The result of this is that the bulk of the work is not done at meetings for which the fees provided in clause 7, as it now stands, could be paid. For many years the members of the board have considered themselves as attending a meeting as contemplated by the act when performing the type of work mentioned, and were paid on an estimated number of sittings based on the average number of days during which the member has to work in setting up and marking the examination papers rather than the actual number of meetings at which they attended. I am informed that the meetings where the board may sit as such are from five to six annually. If the board members were to be compensated on the basis of these five or six meetings, the compensation would not be adequate considering the amount of work required to be done.

Because the number of candidates may vary from year to year with the result that the work may increase or decrease from year to year, it is intended by this bill to provide for a remuneration at an annual rate to be fixed by the treasury board on the recommendation of the civil service commission. Based on the experience of the past and on the volume of work to be done, this basis of remuneration seems more equitable and more logical under the circumstances.

With regard to the second amendment which deals with the fees payable to special examiners I wish, for the benefit of those who might not be familiar with the operation of the Canada Lands Surveys Act, to briefly explain how and when such special examiners are appointed. First of all, under section 8 of the act, the minister may, upon the recommendation of the board, appoint qualified persons as special examiners to examine candidates. Special examiners must be either dominion land surveyors or provincial land surveyors duly qualified under the laws of the province in which they will preside at examinations to be held therein.

Generally speaking, surveyors who are not civil servants are only appointed special examiners when surveyors of the government are not available to hold the examinations or when the cost of sending a surveyor from Ottawa to the place of examination is considered greater than the cost of the appointment of a local qualified surveyor. Special examiners as a rule are appointed when examinations are held at centres other than Ottawa.

Section 9 of the act now provides that a special examiner is entitled to receive $25 for each day's sitting of examination at which he presides, together with his actual living and travelling expenses. It is known that the prevailing tariff rate of land surveyors associations or corporations in the several provinces of Canada is not the same in every province. According to figures shown to me recently, the prevailing tariff rates vary from $25 to $50 per day. Hon. members will easily understand the difficulty encountered on certain occasions in obtaining a special examiner at the rate of $25 per day, as set out in the act, when the prevailing rate in the province may be much higher than that. The provincial tariff rates vary from time to time, with the result that a fixed fee as now established renders the operation of that part of the act extremely difficult. By this amendment it is therefore intended to have the fee payable to special examiners fixed by the treasury board in order to give the obviously required flexibility to the operation of this section.

Mr. Green: Would the minister tell the committee the number of dominion land surveyors registered at the present time, and also whether there has been an increase in numbers as a result of the opening up of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon? As I understand it, a surveyor, to undertake work in these districts in Canada, must be a dominion land surveyor, although there may be some provision by which a provincial land surveyor can do that work. Most of this surveying work in Canada naturally would be done in the provinces. For that work I take it that it is unnecessary for a surveyor to be a dominion land surveyor. When the dominion owned the natural resources in the western prairie provinces I presume there was a much bigger demand for dominion land surveyors. Will the minister give us information along these lines so that we may have some idea of just how important these amendments will be?

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, I have not the statistics of the actual number of dominion land surveyors at the present time. I have a list of the candidates for the last five years, which will give some indication of the number who are coming in. In 1951 there were 61 candidates; in 1952, 53; in 1953, 115; in 1954, 87; and in 1955, 93.

Since the resources were returned to the provinces the provinces have qualified their own surveyors under a corporation, or whatever happens to be the recognized authority in the provinces. However, we do conduct the surveys on Indian lands and on other crown lands.

Mr. Green: Even in the provinces?

Mr. Prudham: Even in the provinces, although it is not essential. We can use a provincial surveyor to do that work. In the Northwest Territories the dominion land surveyors are the recognized authority for the surveying and the registering of the surveys. For that reason, we know it is necessary to have this system of qualifying dominion land surveyors until such time as the territory might become a province or more than one province and set up its own authority.

The standard of qualifications for dominion land surveyors is very high. I believe that the various provincial corporations relate their qualifications to the standard set by the dominion land surveyor authority. At the present time we have great difficulty in maintaining a sufficiently large staff to do the work required. I am not sure of the figure; I think we have only about 18 on our staff at the present time, and they are spread out over a vast area. There is no doubt that we have a backlog of work.

During the last year we endeavoured to recruit some additional surveyors for our staff. Out of 500 letters sent out we had only one recruit. It is a problem that we face in other branches of our work, to be able to induce people to work for the rate of pay that obtains in the government when private industry is willing to pay enough money to get the people they need. Perhaps that answers my hon. friend's questions. If I have missed any I shall be glad to answer them later.

Mr. Green: I have just one further question. Can a provincial land surveyor do survey work in the Northwest Territories or in the Yukon?

Mr. Prudham: No; it is required to be done by a dominion land surveyor under the act.

Mr. Pearkes: Does the same board of examiners conduct examinations for hydrographic surveyors?

Mr. Prudham: No; they conduct examinations for the topographical surveyors. The hydrographic surveys do not come under dominion land surveyors. They have a different type of work. I am not sure that there is any association that controls their standards other than our department. We do all the hydrographic work, and the work has to be up to the high standards that have been set by tradition. We inherited that from the British navy originally and we still use some of their old charts and we endeavour to keep up the high standards; but I am not able to say whether there is any examination for hydrographers. I can get that information in about two minutes by referring to the official gallery.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I have a question more for the purpose of obtaining information than anything else. Do the engineers in the minister's department do work other than surveying in the national parks? What I have in mind is this. Do they do the surveying and the engineering for the location of bridges in the national park? Do they do soil testing and that sort of thing having to do with putting a bridge in a certain place?

Mr. Prudham: No.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That would come under the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Prudham: Public works.

Mr. Herridge: I have one question, for information, naturally. Are there many land surveyors in private practice who want to qualify as dominion land surveyors?

Mr. Prudham: Oh, yes. I think the best evidence of that is the number of candidates we have every year. While we have only 18 or 20 on our own staff, we have had over 115 trying the examinations. That does not mean they all pass. It is rather a stiff examination, but I think I can get that information if my hon. friend is really interested in the number who qualify each year. I shall get that information and send it to him.

Mr. Herridge: What is the probable advantage to a land surveyor in private practice in obtaining his dominion land surveyor's certificate?

Mr. Prudham: Well, as I understand it, there is only one university in Canada that gives a diploma in surveying.

Mr. Green: Which one is that?

Mr. Prudham: Laval. My colleague, the Minister of Public Works, disputes that. That is my information. A dominion land surveyor certificate is a high attainment in the surveying field in Canada, and many people naturally aspire to that qualification. It enables them to go into private practice. It is the highest standard they can reach in that particular line. Many people start in our surveys in the summer time and work as part-time employees to earn money to continue their courses in universities. Right on the ground they learn the elementary principles and become interested and decide to carry on and get their certificates. I think that is the main inducement.

Mr. Green: Can a dominion land surveyor practise in any of the provinces without obtaining qualification as a provincial land surveyor also?

Mr. Prudham: No; he has to take out his provincial certificate also.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Prudham thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 254, to amend the Canada Lands Surveys Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HOUSING

PROVISION FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO MUNICIPALITIES, HOME LOANS, HOUSING RESEARCH, ETC.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works) moved the second reading of Bill No. 215, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill before the House is to effect several important amendments to the National Housing Act, 1954. Before dealing with the principles of these amendments it might be helpful if I first made some remarks which would put these legislative changes into the broad perspective of the whole housing situation in Canada.

Governments at all levels are inescapably involved in housing because of its social implications and because housing is an integral part of our whole economic growth. The government of Canada has played an active part in housing affairs since the introduction of the Dominion Housing Act in 1935 and particularly since the introduction of the National Housing Act of 1944 and the establishment of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in 1946. In aiding the production of housing we have been guided by the principle that it is appropriate for the government to stimulate housebuilding and to fill certain needs that could not be met in the ordinary housing market, but that government should not assume responsibilities which could effectively be borne by private enterprise. We have also had in mind that there are certain aspects of housing affairs which are properly the concern of the national government while other matters are constitutionally the responsibility of other governments.

The aid offered by the federal government has been essentially of two kinds. Indirect aid to enlarge the housing market has been achieved by the government's sharing in mortgage loans up to 1954 and subsequently by insuring mortgage loans offered by lending institutions and banks. Direct governmental aid has taken several forms, for example housing was built for the families of veterans during the post-war emergency and, in the present period, low rental housing is constructed by the federal government in partnership with provincial governments. At the present time about half of all the housing being built in Canada is aided by the national government, either directly or indirectly.

In the last ten years Canada has accomplished a gigantic task in housing its expanding population and in reducing the pressures on our housing accommodation. This year we will celebrate the building of the millionth post-war house. From one end of the country to the other, every city and town has been transformed by the growth of new suburbs on their fringes. Nearly three million Canadians live in these new suburbs with their new shopping centres and schools and churches.

Before the war housebuilding had proceeded at the rate of about 38,000 units annually. Now more than 100,000 families are moving into new homes each year. In 1955 housing production reached the new record of 127,000 completions. This great acceleration of building has been accomplished through the enterprise of housebuilders and through the productive capacity of the industries which supply building materials. More than 300,000 workers are now employed upon the production of building materials and on the building of houses. In these past ten years more than $8 billions has been invested in housebuilding by Canadian financial institutions, our insurance companies, banks, loan and trust companies, together with the personal savings of a multitude of individual home owners.

While many different kinds of housing have been built, both for sale and for rent, the Canadian people have shown an unmistakable preference for the single detached house as a place in which to spend leisure time and to raise a family. We are fortunate that the earning power and the productive capacity of the nation have enabled so many to realize this desire to own a house and a plot of land. About 70 per cent of new housing has been in the form of home ownership.

The typical new suburban home has about 1,000 square feet of living space, usually all on one floor level, and a place for the family car. Since this normally requires a 50-foot lot, our modern suburbs now accommodate no more than four families to an acre. This demand for living space has placed a severe strain upon the whole structure of local government. The suburbs have spread far beyond the boundaries of central cities and so the task of providing streets and sanitary services and schools has been imposed upon municipalities that, in many instances, had little previous experience and few resources for this purpose. In many of these areas community planning had not been completed in advance of the tide of suburban growth. It is not surprising, therefore, that some new suburbs lack the quality of good design which might have been achieved if our cities had grown at a more leisurely pace.

Mr. Speaker, the National Housing Act is a comprehensive and flexible piece of legislation. From time to time parliament has approved new measures and amendments to meet fresh and changing situations. One of the most important changes was made in 1954 when the system of loan insurance was introduced into the act.

The most important function of the national legislation has been to encourage a steady flow of mortgage funds. Until 1954 this was largely accomplished through the joint loan system by which the federal government provided 25 per cent of the amount of each loan, the balance being provided by a lending institution. Under the 1954 act the federal government no longer contributes a share of the loan but insures the lender against loss. With this measure of protection the chartered banks and Quebec savings banks entered the mortgage loan field for the first time. By this means there were made available for investment in housing the savings of the Canadian people.

From the borrowers' point of view, the participation of the banks has had a value beyond the absolute increase in the quantity of mortgage funds. The extensive branch system of the banks has added about 4,000 new points where a borrower can seek a house loan. Many of these branches are in areas where there were previously no private sources of loans under the act.

The 1954 act also aided borrowers by extending the period of amortization and raising the amount of the loan.

The new act came into operation in March 1954. From that time to the end of 1955 nearly 90,000 National Housing Act loans were committed for the construction of more than 103,000 housing units. The total value of these loans was more than $977 million, of which the banks loaned more than $472 million for the building of more than 50,000 units. The insurance companies and other lending institutions continued to play their traditional important role and accounted for 53,000 units with loans totalling $500 millions.

In 1954 there were about 97,000 housing starts in urban areas and in 1955 the urban starts were close to 107,000. Most of this increase in numbers took place through the National Housing Act and is attributable to the mortgage investments of the banks.

Another evidence of the benefits of the 1954 act is the decline in the number of occasions on which Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been called upon to make direct loans. It has been our policy that where private lending arrangements are not available, borrowers could enjoy the benefits of the National Housing Act by direct access to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In 1953 the corporation made loans of this kind for nearly 3,400 housing units, but in the two years since the new act came into effect a total of only 1,200 units have had to be financed in this way.

The principal result of the housing activities aided by the national housing acts is to be seen in the new suburbs of our cities where so many families have been able to acquire homes. There is another aspect of our housing affairs, however, to which we should now, I believe, give greater attention. While the suburbs have been spreading into the surrounding countryside, many changes have overtaken the existing housing in the interiors of cities. In old residential districts some houses have been replaced by apartment buildings and many have been converted to boarding houses and other uses. From a whole century of house building Canadian cities have inherited a stock of housing which is caught in the relentless process of deterioration and obsolescence. The growth of cities has placed new demands upon the hearts of urban areas, with increasing traffic, growing commerce and a changed pattern of living. But during the last 10 years the prior need to build new suburbs did not permit any concerted action to conserve and replace the existing stock of the nation's housing.

There are now more than 3·8 million housing units in Canada. Two-thirds of these are more than 25 years old, more than half a million are more than 50 years old, and about 10 per cent of all our housing is more than 75 years old. This used housing which shelters the majority of our population is an important part of our national wealth. Unfortunately it is a form of wealth which does not improve with age and use. The stock of housing must inevitably decline in physical condition and usefulness unless there are effective measures of conservation and unless steps are taken to replace what is obsolete in our housing inventory. The last census showed that in our major cities alone there are as many as 100,000 housing units which are in a serious state of disrepair and which lack reasonable sanitary arrangements for healthy living. The residential districts of every city are in a process of decline. In most cities there are areas where deterioration has reached a condition that can only be rectified by complete redevelopment.

For the conservation and rehabilitation of housing, home improvement loans are available so that individual houses may be kept up to date and adapted to new uses. Where more drastic measures are required there are provisions in the National Housing Act to aid cities in the redevelopment of blighted districts. Since the legislation of 1944, grants have been offered to municipalities which acquire and clear substandard areas. To rehouse families living in those areas, loans have been available to limited dividend corporations and the federal government has been ready to go into partnership with provincial governments to build low rental housing.

The bill now before you is largely concerned with the redevelopment and conservation provisions of our legislation. The amendments to the act are designed further to encourage redevelopment and to give more strength to the renewal of the older parts of our cities, both through public action and through private enterprise.

The initial difficulty in the redevelopment of blighted areas is, of course, the high cost of land. In any city the oldest and poorest housing is mostly to be found close to the city's commercial and industrial centre where land has acquired a relatively high value. To meet this difficulty the present legislation provides that the federal government may make grants to municipalities up to 50 per cent of the estimated costs of acquisition and clearance, after taking into account any payment to be received in the disposal of the land. At present these grants are available only when the cleared land is to be used for a public purpose or for housing, either through sale to a limited dividend corporation or a life insurance company, or through the transfer of the land to a federal-provincial partnership. It is through these arrangements that the city of Toronto undertook the acquisition and clearance of land for the Regent Park North project, and now proposes to acquire land for the Regent Park South project where housing may be built by federal-provincial partnership. Also St. John's, Newfoundland, has undertaken a project of slum clearance and rehousing under the act.

The simplest and most direct action in redevelopment is to clear an area of poor housing and to build new low rental housing on the same site. No doubt there are many places where this would be quite appropriate. However, there may be more appropriate uses for these sites. In some cases the process of blight has in fact occurred because commerce and industry have already invaded a residential area or because the neighbourhood has been disturbed by the heavy flow of traffic in and out of the central district. In these instances the land might properly be devoted to commercial or industrial purposes and perhaps some part of the land could be used to aid in the solution of the city's traffic problems. If the cleared land can be replanned and sold at a reasonable price for such purposes, the present residents might be rehoused elsewhere, both more economically and in a more suitable location. We cannot assume that expensive central area land is always the most logical place to house low income families. The use of such high cost land may make it necessary to house families at a high density or without adequate open space.

On the other hand, the reverse situation may occur. There may be occasion to convert non-residential land to housing purposes. Some cities have blighted areas of underdeveloped land of miscellaneous uses, including but a small proportion of housing. The location of such land might make it eminently suitable for housing purposes.

It is proposed to amend the act in recognition that urban redevelopment should be part of the continuous process of growth and change in urban land. Cities do not grow only by additions at their outer margins; central areas must also grow in their internal proportions and land uses. This view of urban redevelopment, as a vital part of a community's growth and regrowth, has led us to the conclusion that private enterprise might in some instances appropriately join with governments in bringing new life into the older and blighted areas of our cities, helping to restore them to a sound, productive place in a city's economy. We propose, therefore, that the federal government's aid to municipalities should not be applied exclusively to the redevelopment of sites for low rental and moderate rental housing.

I need hardly add that, since we are dealing here with housing legislation, this federal aid to municipalities would be available only for urban redevelopment projects which would have the primary objective of improving housing conditions, either through the elimination of poor housing or the provision of new housing. As part of the agreement between the government and a municipality, arrangements would be made for the adequate re-housing of all families living on a redevelopment site, so that no hardship could occur. In fact there would probably be few cases in which the clearance of blighted areas would not be accompanied by the building of some low rental public housing, either on the same site or elsewhere.

There can be no simple formula for redevelopment that can be applied to all the variety of circumstances in our cities,—each unique in its history, topography and local character. Each city must make its own plans in the light of its own special problems and ambitions. The federal government's aid must be flexible in its application to a variety of situations. There are, however, two principles that may well have universal application.

First is the principle that land should generally be redeveloped for its highest and best use. If the value of blighted land can be realized through sales for commercial or industrial use, in conformity with the city's official plan and with satisfactory arrangements for rehousing the present residents, then the local and federal taxpayers should not be expected to subsidize land costs for a lesser economic use.

It may sometimes be appropriate to use blighted land near the centre of a city for private residential construction to house those who work in the city's business centre; this might well be regarded as a higher and better use than public low rental housing. Redevelopment should have the effect of converting land to its most effective function within the changing organic plan of the city.

The second principle is that redevelopment is not likely to be effective unless areas of substantial size are acquired and replanned, so as to establish a new neighbourhood character. The original lot subdivision in a blighted area is unlikely to be suitable for new residential or commercial building. Traffic considerations are likely to demand changes in the street plan. It should be the purpose of redevelopment to revitalize the city by converting interior parts to a form as up to date as the new suburbs. A municipality will usually have to exercise its powers of expropriation to acquire sufficiently large tracts of land and to round out workable sites.

The federal government would not enter into agreements with municipalities for redevelopment aids unless it was clear that the redevelopment proposal was in harmony with an official community plan. The government would be particularly encouraged to give aid to municipalities which had instituted a farsighted and systematic process for conserving the condition of residential areas and preventing the spread of blight.

The amendments to the act introduce a new form of financial aid to municipalities to assist in carrying out this more dynamic policy of urban redevelopment. At present the federal redevelopment grant is a fixed sum, calculated on the final cost of acquiring, clearing and disposing of the land. The grant represents half the expenditure that would otherwise be borne by the municipality. It is now proposed that the federal government would make contributions towards a municipality's costs of acquiring blighted areas, at the time of acquisition, on a dollar for dollar basis. Agreements with municipalities would provide that all or part of the cleared land would be sold, leased or otherwise disposed of. The federal government would share proportionately with the municipality in the proceeds of the ultimate disposition of the land. In this way the bill provides for the return of public funds where redeveloped land is turned over to private ownership. It cannot be assumed, of course, that there will be an immediate market for the sale of cleared land. In an interim period arrangements might be made for leasing, with the municipality and federal government sharing the revenue. The legislation would entitle the federal government to enter into the arrangement that would be most beneficial to itself and to the municipality.

I need hardly point out that the federal legislation can only remove some of the road blocks in the path of redevelopment. It is not in our power to take direct action. The initiative must remain with municipalities. Furthermore we would not enter into agreements with municipalities except with the approval of provincial governments. No doubt it will be necessary for provinces to grant to municipalities further discretion in the use of redeveloped land in order that they may enjoy the benefits of the proposed legislation. There is, of course, full opportunity for provinces to share with the federal and municipal governments in the costs of redevelopment.

Redevelopment is never likely to be an easy process. Local governments cannot disturb the owners of private property without careful preparations and sincere examination of the benefits which would accrue to the community. A period of intensive study is therefore required before any redevelopment actions can be taken. Already several Canadian cities have undertaken such studies, or are now making arrangements to do so. The city of Toronto is now carrying out an intensive examination of its older residential areas through an arrangement between the federal, provincial and city governments. Requests have quite recently been received from four other major cities for aid in conducting such studies. For this reason we are proposing an amendment to part V of the National Housing Act. This part contains the authority for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to provide financial assistance in studying housing conditions and the proposed change would clarify the present authority for making grants to municipalities to aid local investigations of housing conditions.

With increased interest in these activities we are also proposing that parliament should be kept more closely informed of the expenditures that are made under part V of the act for community planning and research. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is authorized to conduct, encourage and assist investigations into housing conditions and for sponsoring programs of research, education and technical development which may improve the planning and design of housing in Canada. The act now provides that for these purposes cumulative expenditures up to $5 million may be made from the consolidated revenue fund. The amendment will provide that from time to time parliament will be informed of the work that has been accomplished and will be asked to vote sums of money which will restore the corporation's authority for such expenditures.

Now I would turn for a moment to home improvement loans. While provision for such loans was in the federal legislation prior to the enactment of the 1954 act, it was not fully operative until February 1, 1955. Under this part of the act, that is, part IV, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation gives to a bank a guarantee against loss as the result of a loan made for the purpose of improving or extending a home. At present a loan may not exceed $2,500 for improvements to a single house, and $1,250 for each additional housing unit in the building. It is proposed by the new legislation to increase these amounts to $4,000 for a single house, and $1,500 for each additional housing unit in the building.

From the first of February 1955 to the end of the year, loans totalling $27 million were made by banks under this part of the act, the average loan being $1,250. Twenty-four thousand houses were involved.

Under the same part of the act, so-called "home extension" loans can be made and guaranteed. It is proposed to discontinue the provision in this part of the act; or more accurately I might say it is proposed to discontinue the terminology, because under part I of the act there is already provision made for insured loans for the purpose of effecting improvements to existing residential structures which will result in the addition of self-contained housing units. Such a loan may be for a greater amount than that allowed under part IV, secured by a mortgage and amortized over a longer period of time. We do not think it necessary or desirable that provision relating to this type of loan should be in part I as well as in part IV.

Under the revised legislation the fact that improvements result in the creation of a self-contained unit in an existing house will not make the loan ineligible as a home improvement loan. The present limitation of $2,500 for the first unit and $1,250 for each additional unit was established in 1949. The proposed increases to $4,000 and $1,500 will, I believe, permit home owners to undertake the extensive improvements required to modernize older houses and to increase space in others. This is in keeping with our policy of providing measures to assist in arresting the deterioration of older houses and improving them where feasible. The present five-year term of amortization of the loan is being extended so that, if borrower and lender agree, it may be as long as ten years.

Mr. Speaker, the bill contains a few minor amendments to the National Housing Act which are introduced to clarify the administrative procedures of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I do not think it necessary to refer to these, since no important questions of principle are involved.

In conclusion I would like to remind you that this year marks the completion of a ten-year period during which the national housing legislation has been administered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In administering the policies determined by parliament the corporation has played a great and valuable role in its relationships with the housebuilding industry and with the financial institutions which invest in housing. Allowing for the differences of opinion that must arise in the normal conduct of a business so varied and widespread in character, I think I can report that these relationships have been continually harmonious and constructive.

I wish to use this occasion to pay tribute to the splendid work of the housebuilders, in our large cities and small towns, who have made this past decade a period of tremendous progress in housing. There now lies ahead of us a period of even greater growth of Canadian cities and towns. In this growth and redevelopment our national legislation will undoubtedly be a major factor.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, three days ago at the resolution stage preceding the introduction of the present bill we had an opportunity of debating housing in general. As far as I am concerned, the debate that was held on Monday affords me an opportunity of making my remarks today rather briefer.

The minister has stated that the bill which he has submitted contains several important amendments. I think I may say at once, Mr. Speaker, that the bill contains no great surprises. While I am not going to discount the importance of any amendment in relation to a subject as important for all the people of Canada as is housing, I do not think it could be said that the changes made in the act are in any respect of a major character. Certainly they are not major when viewed in the light of the kind of changes that were made in the scheme of the act two years ago. There are some changes that come in the category of normal revision in the light of needs that arise in the administration of any measure. There are some provisions that are designed to make other existing provisions of the act more flexible and more useful, particularly in relation to such important matters as urban redevelopment. Then with respect to all of the various parts of the act there is an increase in the amounts of money made available.

Last Monday I made some comments of a general nature with regard to the type of amendment that was indicated in the minister's statement on the resolution. I said that the house has never at any time taken a penny-pinching attitude toward any measure that promised any alleviation of our housing problem or contribution to its solution. I think that will be the attitude the house will take with respect to the present bill. Moreover, any measure that will make the provisions of the act more flexible will, I think, command sympathy on the part of the house. It is not easy for the parliament of a nation that extends across a continent to make legislative provision to meet every possible situation with regard to a subject as important, intimate and varied as is housing. Consequently, the administration of any such measure plays an important role in the success or failure of the measure. We of Her Majesty's loyal opposition of course intend to support the bill. We intend to try to evaluate the bill. We shall look to those charged with the administration of the bill for the production of the kind of results that we think we are justified in expecting when we place such wide powers and such ample sums of money at their disposal.

Housing is going to continue to play a major role in the development of Canada. All of us take satisfaction in the volume of house construction last year and the year before; but it is well for us to remember the facts. While we applaud the fact that, as the minister said, this year there will be built in Canada the one millionth housing unit brought into existence since the war, let us not forget that we entered the post-war period with a substantial backlog of housing need and that with all that has been accomplished, particularly in recent times, we have on the whole just about met the new need of housing which has arisen since the war. Account must be taken of the increased population due to natural increase and to immigration. In this post-war period, with all the opportunities we have had, we have done little, if anything, more than keep abreast of the net family formation in Canada, with its resultant need of additional housing units. This is no time to be resting upon our oars or to be taking any smug attitude toward housing.

In the submission recently made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to the Gordon royal commission investigating Canada's prospects for the next 25 years, the corporation has recognized the extent of the housing needs that must be met by new construction in the period of 25 years that lies before us. In its calculations the corporation has estimated that in that period—that is to say up until 1980—there will be an increase in our population of 10,500,000 persons. According to their estimate, the population will be 26,500,000 by 1980. It is estimated by the corporation that our urban housing stock must double within that 25-year period. In other words, it will be necessary to construct 3,400,000 new houses at an estimated cost or, as it is put, a possible cost of $35 billion. Further, according to their figures, it is estimated that prospective owners will provide $15 billion of this sum and that mortgage lenders will provide the balance of $20 billion. These are gigantic figures even for a country with a developing economy like Canada. In the face of needs of that kind that will require to be met in the period that lies before us within the lifetime of many hon. members of this house, let no man content himself with the thought that this problem has been disposed of or that the records of the past two years are going to do more than point the way and emphasize the necessity of maintaining a dynamic rate of home construction in the future. Canada needs housing.

It is well that we bear in mind at all times the fact that we rely principally upon private enterprise to meet the need of housing in Canada. The role assigned to government, as far as home ownership is concerned, is not an exclusive role by any means in the legislative mechanism for the construction of houses in Canada in the total scheme with which we concern ourselves in this house. It is well, sir, that we should not depend simply upon governmental auspices for the meeting of this need. On page 7 of the most recent statistical publication of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation entitled, "Canadian Housing Statistics", for the fourth quarter of 1955, we are reminded that of the total housing starts in 1955 numbering 138,276, there were 68,593 being built without any form of government assistance. This is just about an even half of the total.

Again, in the matter of the provision of mortgages for home construction we do well to remind ourselves that we depend upon other sources than those directly associated with the National Housing Act for the provision of a very substantial amount of mortgage money to assist in home construction. On page 15 of the same statistical publication we see that in the year 1955, according to table 20, there was provided a total of mortgage loans of all kinds aggregating $1,170,712,000, and of that total loans on new non-farm residential construction aggregated $850 million. The conventional loans on other property aggregated $320 million, so there was still a very substantial volume of money going into mortgage investment to assist in financing home ownership with which N.H.A. had nothing to do.

The minister, in the very comprehensive and interesting statement which he read to the house today, has not dwelt on some of the factors which emerged in the course of our discussion during the resolution stage three days ago as factors that are impeding the results that had been hoped for as a result of the amendments introduced from time to time into our housing legislation, and particularly the amendments of 1954. I think I should say to the minister, and to the government, that we intend, so far as opportunity offers in this house, to keep these matters before the government and before the house. I believe their importance is undeniable.

For instance, the minister has not said anything today about the subject of family income and how it determines the rate and extent of lending under part I of the National Housing Act for the construction of houses for owner-occupancy. If we are to hope for a wide diffusion of the benefits of this legislation within the Canadian population there will have to be other measures taken than have yet been taken, in order to make the benefits of lending under part I of the act available to persons with modest incomes. I remind the house that the trend in the incomes of those who are qualifying for loans under part I of the act has been steadily upward. The new legislation of two years ago has not had the effect of reducing the average family income of those qualifying for these loans, or, in other words, of making the benefit of mortgage loans under part I of the act available to persons of lower average family income than those who qualified for them up until the amendments of 1954 came into effect. There is a very real problem, Mr. Speaker.

No one, I am sure, is going to advocate that people should embark upon home ownership or load themselves up with an intolerable burden of debt far beyond their means or their prospects to meet. But if the purpose assigned to part I of the National Housing Act has the validity assumed by all who supported it in this house two years ago, and that includes all parties, then we must find some more effective remedy than has yet been applied if the benefits of home ownership are going to be extended to persons of modest income. I remind the house that in 1953 the average family income of those who qualified for mortgage loans under part I of the act was $4,961. In 1954 that average had increased to $5,382. In 1955 that average had increased further to $5,447. It cannot be pretended therefore, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation, in seeking to make mortgage loans available under part I for the construction of new homes for owner occupancy, is making them available to persons of modest income. We just cannot make any such pretense.

Mr. Winters: May I ask the hon. member if he would be kind enough to tell me the first of the three figures he mentioned?

Mr. Fleming: For 1953?

Mr. Winters: There was one, 1949 was it?

Mr. Fleming: That was a figure for half of the year 1955, namely $5,447. I notice the figures are shaded down a little in the statistical publication to which I referred earlier, and which has just come out. I think they must be using a different basis of calculation than the one that was in use earlier, because the figures I have used were drawn from government sources. But whether or not there is some slight difference in the basis of calculation, the figures appearing in this most recent statistical issue of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation illustrate the same trend. In other words, the families who qualify must have larger incomes than a year ago, and they then had to be larger than the year before that. I think this must be a matter of general disappointment, and it is something that must not be overlooked by the government. It is something that, in my view, is going to require some form of redress. The bill now before us does not offer anything by way of redress to meet that particular problem.

The second matter about which no mention was made in the minister's statement today is the matter of interest. Now, the matter of interest affects government assistance of all kinds under all parts of the act. It is, I suppose, of particular concern to those individuals who are borrowing money on mortgages under part I of the act. The effect of an increase in interest rate necessarily is to make construction more expensive, to increase carrying charges, and to that extent to reduce the volume of home construction that would otherwise be attained.

Certainly the importance of the interest rate on the volume of home construction was recognized two years ago when the banking and commerce committee studied very intensively the provisions of the new act of 1954. For that very reason we questioned the numerous witnesses who appeared before us at no little length in regard to the outlook for increases or decreases in the effective rate of interest.

It is the declared hope of the government—indeed the minister reiterated it on Monday—that a high volume of house construction should be maintained; but at the very same time as it is professing that hope the government is participating in a policy of raising interest rates. Indeed, the government cannot escape its responsibility in this respect. In his reference to this subject on Monday the minister suggested that the increase in interest rates was simply the result of the interplay of the forces of supply and demand in the money market. Well, sir, it is a good deal more than that because, while last fall there may have been some slight diminution in the volume of mortgage money available for investment, there was nevertheless a very substantial volume of money available. But the Bank of Canada, which obviously does not act in these matters without regard for government policy—indeed, it acts in concert with government policy and is the fiscal agent through which government policy is implemented in such circumstances—introduced a series of increases in its discount rate. The first of those increases was introduced on August 5, when the Bank of Canada increased the bank rate from 1½ per cent to 2 per cent. On October 12 it increased it from 2 per cent to 2¼ per cent, and on November 18 from 2¼ per cent to 2¾ per cent.

There was a reference to this subject in the house this afternoon during the question period, and the Minister of Finance then sought apparently to give the impression that the part played by the Bank of Canada in bringing about an increase in the interest rates on commercial loans through the chartered banks and other loans such as mortgage loans was simply a result and not a cause. Well, if that is the view of the Minister of Finance it is high time he re-examined the facts, because the government did not wait for an increase in the interest rates on loans of all kinds to be brought about by the interplay of the forces of supply and demand in the money market. Rather, the fiscal agent of the government, acting in pursuance of government policy, chose to introduce a series of increases in its discount rate, which were followed, and were intended obviously to be followed, by increases in the interest rates charged by the chartered banks on commercial loans, and necessarily by increases in the interest on mortgage loans.

The government cannot escape responsibility. It may well be that if there had been no Bank of Canada, or if the Bank of Canada had taken no action of this kind, there would have been some increases in the rate of interest on loans. But, Mr. Speaker, let the government not pretend that it had no part in bringing about those increases in interest charges. The government had a part, and the increases initiated by the Bank of Canada were a cause. They were not the only cause, but they do not escape the quality of cause. They are not just effect, as the Minister of Finance sought to picture them today.

It is not the fault of the Minister of Public Works. I quite realize that he wishes to see a high volume of house construction maintained, but to the extent to which interest rates applicable upon loans under the various parts of the National Housing Act are increased the responsibility does rest upon the government, because to a substantial degree these increases are the result of government action taken through the Bank of Canada.

Let me be fair in saying that, sir. To the extent to which action of that kind is warranted to meet inflationary forces, then we shall want to look at it in equal scales and to weigh any measure that is taken for the professed object of restraining inflationary forces; but the government does not yet acknowledge that they have any serious problem of inflation. The Minister of Finance had amazingly little to say on that subject in his recent budget speech, and in anything that has been said since. Therefore house construction in Canada is going to feel the effects of the increases in the interest rates.

I wish to say that the government ought to be fair, frank and honest with the house and say what it is that prompts them in looking at such inflationary forces as exist today to take those measures. If inflationary forces are present let them say so, and let them relate what measures they are taking to their objectives in meeting inflationary forces; but as long as they are going to go on commending the boom and saying precious little, if anything, about inflationary forces, then we shall continue to argue that increased interest rates are going to have the effect of reducing in some measure the construction of needed houses in Canada.

Sir, the effect of this increase in interest rates is going to make itself felt in relation to house construction in more ways than just by its direct effect in increasing the rates effective under the provisions of the act. It is having that very direct effect and it is going to have an even more acute effect in its bearing upon the ability of the municipalities to participate in the role assigned to them under the scheme of the National Housing Act in relation to house construction. I shall have a word to say about that in relation to the next subject which, it seems to me, has not been adequately recognized in the remarks by the minister today. It is the financial problem of the municipalities.

It is true that today the minister at least recognized the existence of what he called a "severe strain on the structure of municipal government" which he intimated had been cast upon it in relation to housing needs. Well, sir, it is going to take more than a phrase of that kind to grapple effectively with a major bottleneck that is impeding the construction of houses in Canada today in volume adequate to meet need, particularly on the fringes of the urban areas. For bear in mind, sir, that while we are dealing with figures in the aggregate for all of Canada, we cannot average housing conditions over the whole of Canada or apply national statistics as such to local situations.

This is a problem that is very acute in its proportions in the great urban areas and on their fringes; and, sir, I say, as I affirmed in speaking on this matter on Tuesday, that we are not going to have an effective solution of the housing problem in those areas to which I have made special reference unless something is done to meet the financial problem of the municipalities concerned. That is not going to be met unless the federal government offers redress, because this is a problem beyond the revenue resources of the municipalities; this is a problem beyond the revenue resources of the provinces.

The proven inadequacy of the revenues of the local governments to meet their problems in relation to housing has been made more acute by reason of federal policy in relation to interest rates in recent times. Hon. members of the house by this time are aware of the statement made yesterday by Premier Frost of Ontario in relation to the effect upon provincial financial problems and municipal financial problems of the increase in the interest rate brought about by decision of the federal government and implemented through action taken by the Bank of Canada. The Globe and Mail of this morning, reporting his speech following a conference with representatives of metropolitan Toronto, contains the following:

> The Canadian economy is being jeopardized because of federal government tinkering with interest rates, Premier Frost charged yesterday.

And further:

> Almost all of Ontario's 1,000 municipalities, and the province itself, are in the same position, the premier declared, and the situation has only been aggravated by money becoming more difficult and expensive to borrow because of federal action.

Let no one within the federal government pretend that they can escape responsibility for the increasing gravity of the financial problems of the municipalities. While this financial problem of the municipalities has wider connotations and ramifications than those brought about in the housing field, nevertheless it is bound to be felt in very acute form in relation to the need of housing. Therefore I say that the responsibility in relation to this problem is going to be laid where it belongs, that is on the doorstep, or, if you please, on the shoulders of the federal government.

It is an unchallengeable fact that the municipal financial problem in Canada today, which affects municipalities in this country by the thousands, cannot be met without effective federal action to assist them in enlarging sources of revenue or relieving them of some burden of responsibility now cast upon them.

The fourth matter that was commented upon on Monday, and which it seems to me the minister has not adequately answered, dealt with the administrative side. The great and lamentable delays that have occurred have resulted in the loss of precious time. I urge again upon the minister with all the earnestness at my command that he put behind this housing legislation and behind Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as the agent of the government all the drive of which he is capable. We may as well save our breath and not spend time passing legislation unless there is going to be put behind the administration of such legislation such drive as we have not had hitherto.

On Monday I pointed to some of the cases in my own city of Toronto where delays, although not entirely attributable to the lack of action on the part of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, showed quite clearly that a substantial measure of responsibility does rest on Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This relates very directly to the subject which I have no doubt occupies a principal place in the thinking of hon. members in regard to the measure now under discussion. I refer to the hope of more rapid action in slum clearance in Canada.

I hope there is not an hon. member in this chamber who is going to pretend that we have no slums in Canada today. If any hon. member thinks there are no slums in Canada today he has not visited areas of our substantial urban centres. Today the minister did review some of the things that are needed in relation to the development of municipal plans and programs in regard to slum clearance. Obviously there must be on the part of municipalities a substantial measure of concern reflecting itself in municipal initiative in connection with these matters. We agree with that; but in my humble submission it is folly to talk about the initiative that rests upon the municipalities in connection with these matters if the municipalities are going to be hamstrung in the matter of revenues. What is the use of talking about municipal initiative in relation to the clearing of slums in our urban centres if the municipalities concerned are denied adequate revenues for those purposes?

The great difficulty and the great drawback about the National Housing Act in relation to slum clearance is that nothing can be done without co-operative action on the part of all three levels of government concerned. It takes only one level of government dragging its feet in these matters to thwart any hope of effective action in regard to slum clearance in any particular place. When you try to get three governments together, when you have to bring them on common ground, not only in regard to the purpose of slum clearance in an area but in agreement on the many details which enter into plans for slum clearance, then you have a problem indeed to begin with.

No one in this house is so innocent as to believe that where action on slum clearance depends upon co-operative and concomitant action on the part of three levels of government, you are going to have any great measure of speed in dealing with them. But if the federal government is going to continue to say, as the minister said today, that any attempt to grapple with the problem of slum clearance or redevelopment in our urban areas depends upon municipal initiative then it is high time the government said at the same time that it is going to make it possible for the municipalities to take the initiative by seeing that they shall have adequate sources of revenue for the purpose, which they have not today.

In the meantime, as long as these delays continue we are going to be witnessing the same things that have existed since there have been slums; that is, human decay, moral, physical and mental. Every hon. member of this house has a responsibility in relation to taking measures about slum clearance. It is not enough that we should attempt to hide behind any choice coined expression about "municipal initiative". If the present legislation is inadequate for the purpose, and I think it has shown itself to be, then something better must be devised.

We welcome the changes that are proposed to be introduced into the National Housing Act by the present bill. I commend the changes that are introduced with respect to the slum clearance provisions of the act. Anything that offers any contribution at all toward this problem on a sound basis is bound to command the sympathy and, I trust, the support of the house. Greater flexibility in these provisions is afforded by the present bill, and to this extent it is altogether commendable; but even with these changes we have not yet discharged our full responsibility in relation to slum clearance and in relation to the cost in humanity as well as in dollars and cents that characterizes the existence of slums.

I made some reference on Monday to the benefits that have been achieved through slum clearance in the Regent Park North project in Toronto. Other benefits have flowed from that project than simply improvement in housing conditions. There are those secondary benefits that have been achieved and that are noteworthy and praiseworthy; the reduction in health, police and other municipal expenses. These are net savings that are afforded as the result of slum clearance and redevelopment.

The minister struck today a note that will, I think, be echoed throughout the house, when he indicated that our plans for slum clearance ought to be viewed as part of a general municipal planning program. The areas it is sought to redevelop cannot be detached or isolated from the rest of the city; they should be seen as part of a well integrated municipal program. But I still say that we have to do much more in view of the extent to which measures of this kind await the exercise of municipal initiative.

Therefore I say in conclusion that while all members of the house will cheer the extent to which the home builders of this country have achieved records within the last couple of years, we find it necessary to warn the government that this is not the time to be smug; this is not the time to rest upon our oars; we are far from having solved the housing problems of this country. Demand is keeping up with supply, even at the increased rate of construction. In the statistical study I mentioned earlier, Canadian Housing Statistics for the fourth quarter of 1955, issued by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, we find on page 5 this statement:

> The demand for new dwellings kept pace with the supply.

That was a record supply; yet demand kept pace with it. A tremendous volume of home construction is going to be required in the years ahead of us to keep pace with the increase in the Canadian population and the development of the Canadian economy. Let us never regard this as a problem that admits of a static approach. What is required on the part of all levels of government, and not least of all on the part of the federal government, as we must make it our business to remind them, is a dynamic approach to a challenging national problem.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): In the resolution stage the problem as we see it was set forth, and it was suggested that in studying the bill we would have to judge it in the light of its ability to meet the situation in Canada in so far as housing is concerned. I must say that, whilst there are commendable features in the legislation, the government has not indicated through this bill that it is taking the type of action which present conditions warrant.

I note that when the original National Housing Act was passed it was in its broad outlines an act to promote the construction of new houses, the repair and modernization of existing houses, and the improvement of housing and living conditions. Since the time the first act was passed it has been possible for us to look at the situation in Canada and determine the effectiveness of the National Housing Act in dealing with Canada's housing problem.

First of all we have to consider that there are two aspects of the housing problem, as we might describe it. First there is the question of meeting the demand for new houses, that is, the aspect of constructing houses. Second there is the housing problem in so far as health standards are concerned, that is, the removal of obsolescent houses and houses that do not measure up to community health standards.

I think the minister on a number of occasions has taken considerable pride in the fact that there has been stepped-up activity in home construction during the past year. He referred on Monday last to the number of starts made last year, and suggested that we are now making inroads into the backlog of housing, but in making that statement he is, of course, very conveniently overlooking vast areas of Canada's housing needs which have not been touched up to the present time. I asked him a question with regard to the government policy, as to whether the government felt that the way to solve the housing needs of people of low income is to build more expensive houses and let the people on low incomes take the hand-me-down dwellings. The minister suggested that it was not government policy to provide a new house for everybody in Canada.

I believe the minister has made a number of references to demands of members in this group that we undertake a large-scale housing program in Canada. He has suggested that we are impractical, that we are being too idealistic, but I want to remind the minister that there have been many authorities in this and other countries who, upon examination of the housing problem, have made suggestions quite similar. As a matter of fact the white paper on housing in Great Britain in March of 1945—and I suggest that these people were not being too impractical—set out three objectives in their housing policy. It said:

> The government's first objective is to afford a separate dwelling for every family which desires to have one. For this purpose it is estimated that some three quarters of a million dwellings are needed.
> The second objective is to provide for the rapid completion of the slum clearance and overcrowding programs which were already in course of execution before the war. To remove houses already condemned as unfit and to abate overcrowding condemned since 1935, a further half million houses are needed.
> The long-term objective of the government is to secure a progressive improvement in the conditions of housing in respect both of standards of accommodation and of equipment, and to attain this objective by a continuous program of new building. This continuous program must include provision year by year for any increase in the number of separate families, the needs which arise out of redistribution of the population, and the replacement of obsolescent houses.

We have been urging upon the minister a policy much in line with the United Kingdom white paper on housing issued in 1945. We need not go to Britain. One need only consider remarks by members of this government at the conclusion of world war II. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) had something to say on this subject. He said:

> Adequate housing for the Canadian people is one of the major tasks before us. The utmost effort will be directed towards meeting this need and the resources of the country will be used to this end . . .

I do not feel it is necessary to read all of what he said, but there is a very pertinent sentence further on which reads as follows:

> We believe that houses should be constructed commensurate with the high standard of living at which we are aiming.

There is the Minister of Trade and Commerce suggesting the very thing in 1945 that we are saying today. There is nothing inconsistent in our desire for adequate housing in this country; and when the suggestion is made that there is a lack of reality in a policy which aims at adequate housing for Canadian citizens it seems to me that the government has come a long way downward since 1945. The Minister of Trade and Commerce went on to say:

> This will involve new houses for families with low income who cannot afford to pay economic rentals.

That is the Minister of Trade and Commerce speaking in 1945. In an article appearing in Public Affairs of October, 1947, the Minister of Trade and Commerce had this to say along the same line:

> The dominion government recognizes the need of adequate housing as Canada's most pressing social problem and one of the most serious of all public problems.

Further on he points out:

> In the absence of agreement on dominion-provincial relations made at that time, the provisions made in the National Housing Act, 1944, respecting low rent housing, subsidization of such housing and slum clearance have been allowed to stand unchanged. The hard core of the problem, low rent housing, has been barely touched.

These are the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Here was the broad objective of the government. It was to be the aim of the National Housing Act to accomplish certain purposes. Oh, what a change has taken place in the government thinking since that time. Of course it is like a lot of other things. In 1945 we had other commitments and promises made by members of the government. We were going to have a health scheme. We were going to have provisions for full employment. A great many things were promised the Canadian people at that time, but apparently housing and many of these other worth-while and forward-looking proposals made by the federal government at that time have fallen by the wayside.

They were made at a time when I believe the government were a little leery. They had lost a number of by-elections and had not fared too well at the polls. I think perhaps the political situation at the time, certainly the political climate of the country, more or less thrust upon the government the importance of at least making a stab at promising worth-while policies. The Minister of Public Works makes light of the suggestion that after all it is not beyond the realm of possibility to have a housing program that will provide homes for Canadian citizens. I say that the government has certainly changed its attitude on this matter within recent years. I suggest that the minister and the other members of the government should go back over the statements made a few years ago and reconsider their present stand on many of these matters.

The legislation now brought forward will, as the hon. member for Eglinton pointed out, accomplish some useful purpose so far as it goes, but we are faced with the same old problem. Here is a job which needs to be done. However, the government will just go so far, and judging from past performances with respect to legislation we have not here the type of legislation we should have.

At the outset I said there were two aspects to the housing problem, the question of construction and the question of the replacement of dwellings which are unfit for human habitation. What has been done? The minister boasts of the number of starts and the number of completions last year. All right; we will grant that the Canadian construction industry had a banner year and that so far as those who are in the market to buy houses are concerned a great deal was accomplished last year. But the central problem which we have to come back to time and time again has not been faced up to, the question of the provision of housing for the people in Canada—and they constitute a great mass of our population—who are on incomes which will not permit them to purchase homes under part I of the National Housing Act.

This has been brought to the attention of the government a number of times. It has been pointed out that under part I of the National Housing Act there is no chance whatever for a vast number of Canadian citizens who are working steadily, have more or less permanent employment, but whose earnings are not sufficiently high, to purchase a home under the act. I suggest that the minister owes it to members of the house to state the position of the government in this matter. Does he feel that the government has no responsibility toward people on low incomes?

Does he feel that no effort should be put forth to provide home ownership for that group?

Of course, the minister will immediately say, what about section 16, what about section 36 of the National Housing Act? He will say that provision has been made there but, as the hon. member for Eglinton has pointed out, the initiative is placed on municipalities which are already overburdened. It is like a great many other things. We had a discussion last year on the grade crossing legislation, and the same situation obtained there. It is all very well to say to a municipality, "Well, if you will come along and put up so much money we will accommodate you and put up a certain amount." If the municipality lacks the funds to do anything it means that the matter stands and nothing whatever is done. That is precisely what has happened.

I know that under section 16 a limited dividend company has built a certain number of suites in my own city, but perhaps the only reason those suites were built under that section is the fact that the limited dividend company had as a wholly-owned subsidiary a construction company. If it were not for the fact that they were also in the construction business they likely would not have built under section 16. I think the minister must agree that, admirable as he may feel the aim is, the results are far from satisfactory.

I had hoped that there would be substantial changes to enable municipalities to be better able to enter into agreements with the government for the purpose of providing low rental housing. Incidentally, I think the joint labour brief presented to the government by the two labour congresses, now the Canadian Labour Congress, pointed out the fact that the most admirable part of the National Housing Act was the one which, in their opinion, the government had played down. They said there was very little publicity given to those sections to which I have just referred, and that the government apparently was not going to be too much concerned if municipalities were not in a position to rush forward and take advantage of the provisions of the National Housing Act.

The situation simply is that the municipalities do not feel they are in a financial position to engage in the type of construction activity envisaged under those sections of the National Housing Act. I would say that we must try to sell this problem to our people. I mean that the need for new and more adequate housing is something we have to impress upon all our people, our provincial governments and our municipal governments. I want to be fair in that respect. But when you find, as you do in this country today, that the municipalities are overburdened and mill rates are skyrocketing, it is not likely under those circumstances that the municipalities will undertake the type of work which the government presumably expects they will undertake under this legislation.

It seems to me that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is quite well aware of this great lack in government policy. I should like to quote an extract from page 24 of a brief prepared by that organization. It is under the heading, "Needs of Low Income Households" and reads as follows:

> There are some kinds of housing requirements which are not satisfied through the normal operation of the housing market, either through the production of new housing or through handing down used housing. The need to provide housing for low income households, particularly large families and old people, is likely to call for special attention during the coming years.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the personnel of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are quite well aware of the problem. I think the difficulty is the unwillingness on the part of the government to permit them to do the type of job for which Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was, I presume, originally created. Rather than enlarge the scope of their activities, there seems to be a tendency on the part of the government to curtail or to clip the activities of that government agency.

It seems to me that this trickling down process that was referred to in the joint labour brief to which I made some reference in a question to the minister on Monday last certainly fails to take into account the need for the replacement of houses which for reasons of public health should be replaced. In other words, it is all very well to say that if someone earning $4,500 a year builds a new house and he moves out of a cheaper house, that will enable somebody earning $3,500 to move into that house. Eventually you will get someone living in accommodation which is unfit for human habitation. While that procedure may, in the actual provision of dwellings—if we use that term very loosely—provide some sort of accommodation, it is not the type of accommodation we should tolerate in a modern community.

On Monday last I stressed the relationship between public health and other social problems such as juvenile delinquency and so forth and Canada's lack of an adequate housing program. In taking this callous attitude, and saying that the solution of the problem with respect to the housing needs of the low income people is to allow them to take the cheaper houses which are discarded by those in slightly higher income groups, I think the government is failing to meet the health needs of this nation.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the ultimate objective of the housing program has been set forth quite adequately in a book which I referred to the other day and which is entitled "Houses for Canadians" by Humphrey Carver. I understand that to this book which resulted from studies made in the field of housing, contributions were made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, a department of the Ontario government, and the city of Toronto.

Mr. Winters: I gather the hon. member knows that Mr. Carver is an employee of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Ellis: Yes, I am quite aware of that fact. At page 123 in the chapter on "The Ultimate Housing Problem" we find this statement:

> The ultimate objective of the national housing program should be the provision of a decent dwelling for every Canadian family.

Mr. Speaker, that is what we have been saying throughout. I made that statement in the debate on the amendments to the National Housing Act in 1954. The statement was made the other day at the resolution stage. The minister seems to feel that we are being unrealistic, that we are asking for too much. We are asking for the type of policy which the minister's own advisers suggest as the ultimate objective. To continue with this statement:

> From this it follows that the crucial and ultimate test of the effectiveness of housing policy is the condition of the worst housed families in our communities.

I would pause at this moment to suggest to the minister that if he wants to apprise himself of the housing situation in Canada he should not be looking just at statistics of new housing starts, housing which ranges anywhere from $11,000 to perhaps $30,000 or $50,000 or even higher, but that he should take the advice of his advisers and judge the situation in Canada from the standpoint of the most poorly housed in this country. If he did that, I am quite sure there would not be on the part of the government the same smugness that is revealed at the present time. This statement continues:

> The task will not be completed until obsolete housing has been removed and every Canadian family has been given the opportunity to enjoy healthy and satisfying living conditions. It is a task which undoubtedly requires all the technical ingenuity and administrative skill which the Canadian people possess.

Of course the weakness in so far as government policy is concerned is this. Perhaps the Canadian people have the technical ingenuity and administrative skill, but unfortunately they have not the type of government which can channel that skill into the type of housing program that will satisfy the need.

As I suggested earlier, Mr. Speaker, the amendments in the proposed bill, as far as they go, are certainly worthy of support. But once again I say that if the government feel that this nibbling away at the problem or going as fast as they feel they will have to go in response to pressure is the answer to the housing problem, I think they are extremely shortsighted. I should like the minister to inform members of the house as to what is the ultimate policy of the government. The minister has told us that he does not believe that the provision of housing for every Canadian is a practical thing, or certainly is not government policy.

Mr. Winters: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Ellis: I should like the minister to give us an idea as to whether the government agrees with the ultimate objective as outlined in this book?

Mr. Winters: Why don't you read what I said in reply to you when the resolution was before the house?

Mr. Ellis: I have the reply at hand.

Mr. Winters: Read it.

Mr. Ellis: As recorded at page 3201 of Hansard we find this:

> Mr. Winters: I never did say that the government's policy was to provide a new house at once for every Canadian citizen.

Mr. Winters: Read the next statement.

Mr. Ellis: He continues:

> The Liberal government's policy is to provide adequate housing for everybody, and we are travelling just as rapidly as we can in that direction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ellis: We have had many indications of Liberal speed. If one were to make the statement that the Liberal government is travelling with equal speed in the provision of a national health plan, I suppose some hon. members opposite would applaud.

Mr. Winters: Tell me any other country in the world that is doing better.

An hon. Member: Half a dozen.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, one could go into this matter quite fully and point to countries like Great Britain, which lost homes through bombing during the war years, and the policy there. They had a much more serious problem than that which we face in Canada. Our problem in Canada, apart from indecision and unwillingness by the government to do anything in former years, has been complicated only by a comparatively slight increase in population. Populations have increased in many other countries which are facing housing needs.

I suggest that the minister might go back and read an article which I think was referred to in debate at the time the National Housing Act was passed in 1954. I believe it was written by Sidney Margolius. It was an article which appeared in Maclean's magazine and it gave a summary of housing activities in various countries, including Great Britain, the United States and a number of European countries. The conclusion the writer arrives at is that we have nothing to be proud about in our housing record. I cannot recall the exact heading of the article at the moment but it was quite indicative of the fact that, in his opinion, Canada was falling far behind other nations with respect to the provision of adequate housing.

Mr. Philpott: You are two or three years behind the times.

Mr. Ellis: I know the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) is the leading government apologist in these matters.

Mr. Philpott: Show me a country that is building more houses per capita than we are. We are building more houses per capita than any other country in the world.

Mr. Ellis: If the hon. member thinks that is correct, then I suggest he can get up during this debate and put on the record his attitude toward this matter. He can tell us his side of the story. I am sure he will have to go a long way before he will be able to justify the lack of decision and apathy of the government toward the provision of houses. Again I say the crux of the problem is not merely one of construction. It is a question of getting rid of a great deal of obsolescent housing in this country.

I am not going to take the time, Mr. Speaker, but I could quote from this book references to minimum standards for house construction. I see a reference to materials being non-inflammable, and so forth. I have made reference to the disastrous loss of life, particularly of children, in fires, many of which are attributable in large measure to faulty construction. I know that a short while ago a summary of the findings of a coroner's inquest appeared in one of the Ottawa newspapers, which revealed that pressed paper had been used in the partitions of one house. Such a house would go up in flames in a matter of minutes and it would be almost impossible for anyone inside to escape. That is only one aspect of the problem.

If the minister or any supporter of the government feels proud of the government's record in so far as the removal of substandard housing in this country is concerned or the provision of the decent type of housing that is envisaged in this report, and I presume the type of housing to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce referred in 1945 and 1947, then I suggest they get up in the house and tell us just what the government has done to provide low rental housing for people on low incomes, and what the government has done or proposes to do now toward the elimination of slum areas from Canada.

Mr. Winters: Many members could do that.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take too long in speaking on this matter on this occasion. I have dealt with it nearly every year since the National Housing Act has been in existence, and for many years before that. I have discussed the subject on every occasion on which it has come up in the house. I think the minister is well aware of some of the criticisms I have made.

I do want to say that since this minister has taken over these duties he has given a very attentive ear to some of the criticisms that have been levelled at him. I do say, too, he has not always been so antagonistic as some of the other ministers appear to be when suggestions are offered to him. I am sure that on many occasions he has investigated some of the complaints, and that as a result a better housing program is developing.

Certainly I can recall that when the housing program started after the war, and for a number of years following the conclusion of the war, there were undoubtedly poor types of houses built. But my purpose in speaking at this time is not to go back and review all those conditions. I do not think the government should be too complacent about the number of homes that have been started or the number that have been completed. I know the minister has told us how many starts there have been and that there were 127,000 completions. I think that is a fairly good record. I am not criticizing the government from that standpoint. I think there were 135,000 starts. I do not want to be critical of the government in any case in which it is not deserved. I only criticize them when criticism is justified.

While the 135,000 completions seem to be a very worth-while accomplishment, and as I said a moment ago it is, we should remember that even though there were that many completions last year it does not even begin to catch up with the backlog. According to the builder-contractor statement I put on the record last year, and I am speaking from memory, our backlog amounted to about 250,000 a year.

Mr. Byrne: That is not correct.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You give the right figure then. I do hate these interjections on the part of individuals who cannot give the right figure in the place of the one you give. They just interrupt for the sake of interrupting. I heard a remark a while ago, Mr. Speaker, to the effect, "show me another country that is building the houses per capita that Canada is building". Such people seem to take some satisfaction in hiding behind the fact that some country like Britain that went through all the ravages of war, is not building as many houses as we are. They say look at Britain and then see what we have done. Yes, we were sitting here smugly, protected from the ravages of war.

I do not think that gives us much comfort. Perhaps we are doing better than they are, but the important question is, are we doing as well as we should be doing? I doubt if we are doing as well as we should on a national basis, when we are not keeping up with the backlog.

In his statement the minister gave us one instance when he said that half a million houses—I am subject to correction on this—were over 50 years old. Then he went on to tell us how many were over 75 years old. I am going to say to the minister, and I doubt if he will contradict me, that when a frame house is over 50 years old it has just about completed its service. Even the income tax department says it is depreciated in 20 years. They only allow depreciation for that length of time. Certainly when a frame house has lasted for 50 years it is time it was torn down. I am going to say that when it has lasted for 75 years, it is not fit for habitation. As long as we have houses of this type in this country, then we should not be sitting back complacently and saying see what we are doing compared with some of the other countries.

I think one of the greatest things with which we have to contend, as was indicated by the hon. member for Regina City a moment ago, is the construction of houses for these people in low income groups. I never have dwelt at any length in this house in arguing whether or not Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the lending companies or the government should make money available to people to build $20,000 or $30,000 homes. I think such people are well able to take care of themselves. In fact I do not believe a fellow needs too much assistance if he is going to build a $15,000 or $20,000 home. Such assistance is convenient, yes. If a man living in the city wants to build a $20,000 house—I am not implying that is a luxury home, even at that—he does not need too much assistance and possibly the rate of interest he has to pay on the money he does borrow is not of too much consequence to him.

I am not too much concerned about such a person. The person I am concerned about is that person who is in the moderately low income group. I think the minister said the other day that before a person could be considered for a loan he should have a wage of something like $5,000. I am not just sure of the figure; I think it was $5,200 and some odd. People in those circumstances are very much concerned over the cost of a house. One of the things that aggravate and concern them is the cost of the money they will have to borrow in order to build a house.

This brings me to the question of interest rates. It might be all right for the government to say that the interest rates on those loans must correspond to the rise or fall in the interest rate on government securities. If they follow the policy of asking the Bank of Canada to change its interest rates and, as a result of that change, the chartered banks follow suit, then they must not forget that is creating a hardship for those people about whom I am speaking now, the people on $5,000 salaries and less. When we have half a million people living in frame houses that are over 50 years old it does have a serious effect on them, and we should be giving it some consideration.

When the act came into force in March, 1954, the interest rate was set at 5½ per cent. We in this group took every exception to it because we were sure the rate was too high. I say to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that no man who is getting $5,000 a year or less can afford to pay 5½ per cent interest on money borrowed to build a house, nor can he afford to pay 5½ per cent on any borrowed money. It is just out of all reason to ask him to pay that high interest rate when you consider that when he is endeavouring to build a house costing $10,000 and it is amortized over a period of 20 to 25 years it will actually cost him $20,000. The price doubles itself. What rhyme or reason is there for this House of Commons asking people to pay 5½ per cent interest, and asking a man on a salary of $5,000 or less to pay double the cost of the house in the amortized period of 20 to 25 years? This is something that has to be considered.

On February 16, 1955, the rate was reduced to 5¼ per cent. I believe it was around that time, or shortly after, that the Royal Bank suggested that they were going to make loans for 5 per cent. I do not know whether they made any loans at that rate of interest, but it was certainly advertised that that was going to be done. Nobody can say that the Royal Bank is not a good business organization. If that bank could lend money at 5 per cent a few months ago, then the mortgage companies could do it; but you never hear of a mortgage company offering to reduce the interest rate voluntarily. You always hear of them raising it as soon as they have the opportunity. At this time I will not discuss the methods used by some mortgage companies in extracting payment from clients. I have brought it up in the house before. The methods that some companies use are not commendable.

On March 22, 1956, the rate of interest was increased again to 5½ per cent. The very fact that we allow the rates to fluctuate shows that we are discriminating. Why should a man who took out a loan a year ago pay 5¼ per cent and a man taking out a loan today pay 5½ per cent? Remember, these are government-guaranteed loans. I do not believe the minister has told us yet—he can correct me if I am wrong—that the lending companies have lost money by lending money under the National Housing Act. In fact I am quite sure they have not. The government may have had to pay some losses, but I doubt that. The losses would be very small in any event, and I wish the minister would indicate what the figures are. Under the National Housing Act the mortgage companies just cannot lose. I have often wished that I had some field in which I could lend money on a guarantee like that.

Mr. Byrne: Me, too.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): My hon. friend says, "Me, too". Who would not jump at a thing like that? You cannot lose. It is not a gamble; it is no bet. Every six months or so the government says, "You can hoist the interest rate a little bit". I have always maintained, Mr. Speaker, that during the war and just after the war the national housing plan was never inaugurated to build houses. The primary purpose was to provide a field of investment for the lending companies, and they have done remarkably well ever since.

I am not going to take any more time on this occasion, Mr. Speaker. I do want to say that the minister has done pretty well in his job, but he should not be allowed to sit there too complacently and not get a few jolts once in a while to bring him to his feet. I want to commend him on the way he has looked after the job and, with a little prodding now and again, I think things may go along fairly well.

[Mr. Johnston (Bow River).]

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. R. E. Reinke (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. 215 as presented by the minister is extremely important in every one of its clauses, but there are two or three to which I wish to refer in particular. Under the existing legislation the clause dealing with the redevelopment of blighted areas in cities stipulates that the end use shall be for low rental, moderate rental or public use. The new bill removes that limitation, and the land may now be put to the use best suited to the purposes of the municipality and the federal government, as agreed between them.

I congratulate the minister upon bringing in these revisions of the National Housing Act. The policy of the Liberal government has always had as its expressed purpose the improvement of living conditions for Canadians generally. Apart from our tremendous welfare program, which is costing the Canadian people a great deal of money, I believe the housing legislation has done more to improve living conditions in this country than any other piece of legislation. This legislation provides a ways and means for Canadians to enjoy their most important stake in the country, the ownership of their own homes.

The minister told us this afternoon that this year will see the completion of the millionth house since the National Housing Act was brought into being. In Ontario during the past ten years 350,000 housing units have been completed. This program of home building has been possible because of the optimistic outlook of the Canadian people, their desire to own their own homes, their desire to invest their savings in homes and their confidence in Canada. Aside from all these factors I maintain that there is only one reason that people have been able to achieve home ownership, and that is the National Housing Act as provided by this government. That legislation assists in the lending of money and, second, guarantees loans so that money shall be available for those who wish to own their own homes, which in turn encourages the building industry.

I should like to mention this evening a project which is being contemplated in Hamilton. To my mind it is a rather tremendous project, because it involves the expenditure of $1,700,000. The plan is to provide sufficient land for the construction of a new civic centre, including a city hall. The building is to house all corporation offices now scattered throughout the city. In addition parking will be provided for those who may wish to use the facilities of the city hall and the adjoining centre.

The city has expropriated about 60 pieces of property for this civic centre, which by the way will adjoin the new federal building. Included in those properties are a hotel, a factory and a lumber yard, the remainder being dwellings. The factory and the lumber yard are probably out of place in this particular area. All in all there will be approximately 4½ acres of land once the project is completed. It is proposed to provide office accommodation to the extent of some 100,000 square feet, and the landscaping will beautify this particular section of the city.

What is more important in my opinion is that off-street parking for 500 cars will be provided for those doing business in the municipal building or in the vicinity of the federal building. There is a recognized need for off-street parking. I am afraid the Minister of Public Works will say that the federal government is not concerned with off-street parking, and I am inclined to agree with him, but I do submit that it is our responsibility to provide off-street parking in the vicinity of public buildings in towns and cities across Canada. From reports I have seen apparently that is being provided here in Ottawa.

The new federal public building in Hamilton is six storeys high and cost over $3 million. It houses the income tax, the veterans affairs and practically every other department of the federal government with the exception of the post office and customs. However, parking space for only 24 cars has been provided, which I think is a rather shocking situation. I do not blame the present Minister of Public Works, because this building was started before he took office, but someone is responsible for this condition. I am rather inclined to blame the city council of Hamilton and its planning board for not providing a by-law dealing with off-street parking. They force the owners of apartment buildings and theatres to provide parking for their tenants and customers, but there is no by-law covering this other type of off-street parking. Two wrongs of this nature do not make a right and I submit that it is our responsibility to provide this parking. Parking for civil servants is provided in Ottawa and it should not be any different in any other city in Canada. A report appearing in the Ottawa Journal of Saturday, April 21, reads:

> Parliament's joint senate-commons FDC committee is studying Ottawa's mid-town parking problem, and will file recommendations for its solution.
> Variously terming the situation "appalling", an "unholy mess", and "all but hopeless", the committee spent a lively two hours in discussing just how bad it was.
> General Howard Kennedy, chairman of the FDC, was emphatic in a statement that "the FDC has no business in the parking business".
> The committee shrugged off that disclaimer, but listened intently when he reported that the provision by the government of 7,000 free parking spaces for the civil service had contributed more than anything to the lack of parking for the public.

The article goes on:

> The parking issue was raised by Senator Tom Reid, Liberal, New Westminster.
> "When the old wartime temporary buildings on Wellington street are demolished, the land should be used for parking," he said.
> "That hasn't been considered; and anyway, the provision of parking facilities is a municipal responsibility," replied General Kennedy.
> "It's a problem on which the FDC should take the lead," argued Alexis Caron, Liberal, Hull.

Further on it reads:

> "But don't FDC or national capital plans include the construction of a two-level underground parking lot on the site of the Daly building?" asked Dr. Rudolphe Leduc, Liberal, Gatineau.
> That was so, agreed General Kennedy, going on to specify that the plan was to park 200 cars construction costs being estimated at about $3,000 per car.
> He thought it might be done within ten years.

Mr. Speaker, you may wonder why I bring this question of parking into a housing discussion, but I do so because I believe that we as a federal government are in a sense, in the parking business whether we like it or not. In dealing with this resolution on the clearance of blighted districts, I would particularly bring to the attention of hon. members that we have a new federal building in Hamilton in the vicinity of a project of this nature, which comes under this bill; the city is providing parking, and we are not.

I do not wish to stand here and criticize without offering a solution to the problem. The minister in his bill provides for 50 per cent assistance to municipalities for the clearance, replanning and modernization of blighted areas. If the intent of this bill to clear blighted areas could include off-street parking—and I see no reason why it should not, if the end use is beneficial to the community —then I think I am perfectly in order in bringing it to the attention of hon. members.

In Hamilton we are clearing land to the extent that it is going to cost us $1,700,000. If we could obtain assistance to the extent of half of that amount, it would mean that the city would receive assistance amounting to $850,000. I maintain that the city then should take action and expropriate property so as to provide parking for our federal government building in Hamilton under the provisions of this act. It may cost us another $200,000 to provide this parking, but with the federal government sharing 50-50 in the cost the city's share would then be $100,000. The end result would be that the corporation would have assistance, say, amounting to $850,000. They in turn would lay out $100,000, and we would have parking facilities for both these projects.

However, the most important problem to my mind still remains. After this land is cleared for whatever use it may be put to, the problem remains of relocating those who will be obliged to find other accommodation. Reference was made this afternoon by the hon. member for Regina City and, I think, the hon. member for Eglinton to a brief from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. To my mind the points in this brief are so important and they outline the situation so well that I feel they should be put on the record, if that has not been done already. I read from page 32 of this document, which I think has been placed on the desk of all hon. members. It says:

> Most of the housing which is ripe for withdrawal is adjacent to the commercial and industrial hearts of cities. It includes a good part of the 100,000 houses now in need of major repair in the larger urban centres. It also includes houses in adequate condition which may have to be destroyed in the process of redeveloping blighted neighbourhoods. All these houses lie in a transitional belt of mixed land uses where small businesses and industries have invaded residential blocks. The land has taken its value from its potential use for commercial purposes. The cost of acquiring blocks of blighted land in Montreal and Toronto may well exceed $250,000 an acre, this price representing the value of land and existing buildings together with payments for the disturbance of businesses. In such areas there are, of course, already streets and services some of which can be incorporated in subsequent redevelopment. In considering the re-use of the site for housing purposes the acquisition cost of $250,000 an acre may be compared with the present costs of serviced land in suburban areas, about $2,000 an acre for raw land and $8,000 for serviced . . .
> The objective of such redevelopment is both to eliminate substandard housing and to improve the housing circumstances of those living in such areas.

I maintain to those hon. members who have questioned the policy of the government with respect to housing that this is the policy of the government, to eliminate substandard housing and to improve the housing circumstances of those living in such areas.

> The act of clearance by public agencies brings with it an obligation to secure suitable accommodation for those who are displaced.

I am referring particularly to this problem which I mentioned earlier.

> Some displaced households may be able and willing to find their own accommodation. But it must be assumed that the majority will have to be rehoused by a public agency, either on the site or elsewhere, in new housing provided for this purpose. And—

This is important.

> —since the majority of households in blighted areas cannot meet the costs of new housing, public action is required to build and operate and pay subsidies on new accommodation . . .
> To what extent should central blighted areas be redeveloped to house low-income families?

It goes on to point out the various factors.

> Whatever may be the answers to these questions there remains the obligation to rehouse the present residents of blighted areas to be cleared. They must be rehoused in a manner and in a location that will make them effective contributors to the economy and life of the community and this must be done at the least possible cost to the taxpayers. Perhaps these aims may best be achieved by relocating some families on suburban sites and by releasing some central sites for other purposes.

I maintain that our most crying need today is for low-rental housing. I have discussed this very important matter with members of the board of control in my own city. They can provide a few more homes in the already existing project for 500 rental homes that we have in Roxborough Park, but this is not sufficient.

The brief from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation goes on further and expresses the needs for low-rental housing, referred to today by the hon. member for Regina City. I shall not read all of it, but it says:

> Estimates of the need for low-rental housing depend upon the criteria that are used. The greater part of the doubling-up occurs amongst low-income families and most of the dwellings in need of major repair and lacking essential sanitary facilities are occupied by low-income families.
> The need to satisfy the housing requirements of old people has begun to appear as a new problem arising from the greatly increasing proportion of elderly people in the population. With increasing age and reduced earning power many people either do not wish to maintain their family home or are unable to do so. They are not in a position to undertake mortgage payments on smaller dwellings and with increasing infirmity they require more services and special arrangements.

But here is the important point in this report, as I see it:

> Action taken to provide housing for low-income families and for old people will depend upon the climate of public opinion. Public funds cannot be used to build low-rental housing and to subsidize rents unless the public believes there is a condition that needs correcting. Furthermore, there must be resources of local administrative skill and initiative to stage such housing operations.

In Hamilton—and I refer to Hamilton because I am familiar with the picture there—we are providing, with the co-operation of the Department of Public Works, 450 low-rental homes. These homes are being provided by renovating and relocating the balance of the wartime houses that remain in the city. They are being removed and relocated in one specific part of the city called Mohawk Gardens. These four and six-room houses are going to rent for as little as $45 a month. This amount will pay all costs including mortgage interest and principal, administration charges, taxes and upkeep.

As I said before, in this type of operation the Canadian taxpayer pays nothing. I do not think the Canadian taxpayer understands that is the case with regard to low-cost housing. It costs him nothing. I hope that persons now owning their own homes will realize this fact and will not criticize those who are a little less fortunate than they are and cannot afford to acquire homes of their own. I hope they will not resent the wherewithal being provided so these people can have decent living accommodation.

As I said before, there is a crying need for low-cost housing across Canada. First of all the municipality has to determine the need. A year ago, and I trust I may use my own city as an example again, we decided to determine the need for low-cost housing. A survey was made throughout the city, which was conducted by the university there. When the report was brought down it was found that there were over 1,000 families living in substandard conditions, some of them to my mind rather shocking, some of them actually deplorable. In nearly every case these unhealthy and shocking conditions were brought about by the fact that the wage earner was in the low income category.

In the bill now before us we are asking parliament to provide $50 million for federal-provincial land assembly. Here again the federal government is paying 75 per cent of the cost of assembling land. The money is returned to the respective governments after the land is sold to the home owners, and this arrangement eliminates land speculation completely, which means that houses can be provided for possibly as much as $1,000 less.

In my own city the federal and provincial governments have taken action and have purchased hundreds of acres of land in the vicinity. They are going to provide thousands of lots under the plan whereby the federal government is paying 75 per cent and the province 25 per cent for the land. If I may refer to Ontario, I understand that in that province there are about 14,000 such lots ready for the public, and the ultimate program will amount to something like 30,000 to 35,000 serviced lots.

I say now that I believe, in fact I know, it is the responsibility of municipalities across Canada to take some action with respect to housing. We have legislation on the books to provide low-rental housing for municipalities. We even have the legislation necessary to subsidize low-rental housing. But the federal government cannot force the municipalities and the provinces to come here, and it cannot go to the municipalities and force them to allow homes to be erected on property within their confines. These people have to take action. They have to come here and ask us. In my estimation that is where the responsibility lies. First of all they have to determine their needs. I maintain that if they do not take such action they are certainly committing a breach of trust to their electors.

In Hamilton we have determined our need. We took a survey. I call upon the city, therefore, to make an application to the federal government, which will pay 75 per cent of the cost. Let us have another 500 low-rental homes in Hamilton. The same program should be carried on throughout the whole of Canada having regard to the need in the respective cities. The municipal share in this type of low-rental housing is only 7½ per cent. It is a pittance, and is repaid to the city. They do not lose the money. It is repaid to them in rentals. But we cannot build these houses unless they apply to us.

There is one other matter to which I should like to refer before I sit down. Under the National Housing Act mortgagors or borrowers have the privilege of paying back an additional amount not in excess of 10 per cent of the original amount of the mortgage after the mortgage has been in force for one year. A similar amount can be paid off after the mortgage is in effect for two years. After three years the borrower has the privilege of paying off the whole mortgage or any part thereof on any monthly instalment date, provided he pays a bonus of three months' interest on the amount paid off the mortgage. This means that after three years the mortgagor can apply any extra amount he may wish against the mortgage on his home and the mortgagee cannot refuse to accept the payment. It may be $10, $50 or $100 a month, whatever the mortgagor decides he can pay.

In this way a thrifty home owner who finds that he has a little extra money can reduce his indebtedness more quickly than he would normally. I realize that private mortgages do not come under the scope of the National Housing Act nor under this parliament. However, with the interest Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has in the business of housing in Canada, I would ask the corporation to appeal to the provincial governments to revise their legislation concerning mortgages. My understanding of the matter as it now stands is that the lending institution can refuse an extra payment of principal on a mortgage unless there is a provision for extra payment in the mortgage. I do not think that is right.

I believe the provinces should introduce legislation to prohibit the practice of refusing an extra payment on principal. If a person wishes to pay an extra $10 a month or any other amount in order to reduce his indebtedness such payment should be acceptable. I think such a practice makes for good citizenship, and such a provision should be included in all mortgages and apply any time after the first three-year period has expired, in the same way as under the National Housing Act. I hope Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will bring this matter to the attention of the provinces.

When the hon. member for Regina City spoke today he said, and I believe I have his words right, that we have not the type of government to bring up the standards of housing across Canada. The hon. member for Bow River challenged us on his side—I am not quoting his exact words—to show him how this business of providing housing has been working out. I hope I have shown him. In Hamilton we have a medium-rental project of 500 houses and another low-rental project of 450 houses. They did not come about because the federal government went to my home town and said they were going to build those houses there. Those houses were built because the council had enough foresight to come here and ask for these things; and when they come and ask for them the legislation is on the books and the help is not wanting.

We are ready to provide this help for them. I am calling on them now to provide another 500 low-rental homes. We have the land. We have the legislation. It takes very little outlay on the part of the municipality. We have been hearing a great deal today about the financial responsibilities of the municipalities and how hard they are done by. I agree that taxes are high in the municipalities and that they are having a tough struggle. Here is one piece of legislation under which they can come to the federal government. We pay 75 per cent of the costs of low-rental houses. They lay out only 7½ per cent. Let us have more low-cost housing in Canada to take care of the need I believe is here today.

[Mr. Reinke.]

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member for Hamilton South with a good deal of interest. I regret very much that he was not a participant in the debate on Monday last, because the minister might have paid some attention to the constructive suggestions he has made. In his statement this afternoon the minister used some words that sounded familiar. In the annual report of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation I read some expressions that are similar. It begins as follows:

> In the last 10 years Canada has accomplished a gigantic task in housing its expanding population. Almost a million new homes have been built.

That has been changed slightly. But listen to this:

> They are to be seen in every town from coast to coast.

That is news to me. I have five towns in my constituency. I am not going to go out on a limb and say there are no houses which have been built there, but I will be surprised if there are houses which have been built under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in all these towns. I do know a number of people who tried to get loans under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation but who were turned down. I think of one, namely the superintendent of our local school.

An hon. Member: In every province but Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nicholson: The minister did not say "in every province but Saskatchewan". Our superintendent of schools had an outstanding record with the air force. He has a salary similar to the salary he would have if he were in the city, and he was quite prepared to make the required payments, but he was turned down. I will therefore ask the page boy to take this over to the minister, and when we get into committee he can probably tell us how many houses have been built in Carrot River, Hudson Bay, Kelvington, Preeceville and Sturgis under N.H.A. The minister has the records. I have not. However, I will be surprised if he can report that there are five houses which have been built in that area. Further on this report says:

> The Canadian people have shown an unmistakable preference for the single detached house as a place in which to raise a family and to spend leisure time. The possession of a house and a piece of land has been an aspiration and a motive in life. Fortunately the earning power and the productive capacity of the nation have made it possible for a new generation of Canadians to realize this desire.

That is news also, though on examining it carefully one finds it does not suggest that all Canadians who want that sort of housing and a piece of land have been able to get it. However, it does say this:

> About 70 per cent of new housing has been in the form of home ownership.

The minister should have gone on to say that more than 70 per cent of the people in Canada will never have a chance to own a piece of land or a home of their own unless we have some drastic changes in the housing legislation which the minister is bringing forward.

In the bureau of statistics publication entitled "Distribution of non-farm incomes", I find that 17·2 per cent of Canadian families receive over $5,000. We have 15 per cent who get less than $1,500 a year, 34 per cent who get under $2,500 and 47 per cent who get under $3,000. Hence we have altogether about 83 per cent of the people in Canada who fall below the $5,000 per year which the minister will agree one should have if one is to embark on getting a piece of land at the fantastic prices being asked now and building a modern home. All across the country we find that the situation is the same. The Flin Flon Daily Miner came to my desk while I was awaiting my turn to speak. In it I find a dispatch from Cranberry Portage which reads in part as follows:

> —housing is at a premium, yet people are living in places that have at one time been condemned, or should be condemned.
> Diphtheria broke out here last fall—now it's T.B. Since school began last September, it's been one thing after another . . .
> What is worrying many is the number of places being lived in that have or should be condemned. A prominent citizen of the community told of a "shack" as he described it being condemned a few years ago by a police magistrate in the company of a health nurse. It was reoccupied three days after the order and has been ever since.

I realize that the 17 per cent of the Canadian people are able to look forward to having a piece of land and a new house. I am told by some of my colleagues that Vancouver is the finest place in the world in which to live, that housing costs are low there because lumber is so cheap and it is not necessary to insulate as it is in other parts of the country. In Tuesday's Vancouver Sun I find that you can get a new N.H.A. home there with three bedrooms for $16,500. Here is a snap. You can get this property for $9,100. Here is another one, with five rooms, at $13,500. This one is described as being spectacular. This home has everything, completely modern, five-room, and it is going for only $10,500. Here is another new N.H.A. home at $13,900; and so it goes on down the list. There are almost two pages devoted to these houses for sale in the Vancouver Sun, and which cost $12,000 or $15,000, or more. They are being occupied by the 17 per cent of the people who are getting $5,000 or more.

I find that there are other conditions in Canada. I happened to run across a copy of the Toronto Daily Star last fall. This is dated Saturday, November 19. I tore out this sheet. In it there are two good housing stories. One is by Robert Nielsen. It is headed "Real dividends of housing are happier human beings". I might say what is well known, namely that this paper is famous for supporting the present government on every possible pretext, but sometimes some things are written that are slightly embarrassing. This article reads as follows:

> Few large cities in North America have built so little public housing as Toronto, which can show only the 1,289 units of Regent Park North completed to date. In this respect Toronto is typical of Canada as a whole, for there are scarcely 4,000 units of public housing in the dominion. One major reason is ideological: Public housing is often denounced as "socialistic".

I suppose that is the minister's way out. The article continues:

> It is therefore something of a paradox that the United States, more hostile to socialism, more committed to private enterprise than perhaps any nation on earth, has a history of 18 years of federal aid to public housing, during which some 300,000 subsidized units have been built.

The minister simply cannot argue that Canada has a good record. If you multiply the 4,000 built in Canada by 15 you get 60,000, so that compared with 300,000 they have five times as many low-rental subsidized housing units in the United States, by population, as we have in Canada.

Then here is another story by Monroe Johnston on the same page. It says:

> At least 8,000 Toronto families are doomed to live in blighted or slum housing unless metro Toronto awakes to the need for more low-cost rental housing.
> These 8,000 families have signed their names to the waiting list for Regent Park North, Toronto's one and only public housing development.

Later on it points out that the Regent Park development, which was started more than 10 years ago, is a show place. Previously this was one of the most blighted areas in Toronto. The people in the area were paying $36,000 in taxes. They are now paying in taxes $240,000, and in addition to paying all operating expenses and taxes they have repaid over $200,000 toward the capital cost.

When I spoke the other night I referred to the article entitled "Fourteen Days as an Old Age Pensioner," by William MacEachern. I did not explain that he is a fine looking young chap who appears to be in his early twenties, who spent 14 days trying to find out how old age pensioners live. He budgeted $20 for two weeks. Some hon. members have asked me about this article, and I am sure the Toronto Star will be only too glad to send to anyone, as they have to me, a reprint of the articles by MacEachern. I am sure some of the older people in the constituency would appreciate the effort that was made by this young chap to find out what sort of quarters could be obtained.

I read a couple of extracts the other night, and I shall refer to a couple more. Here is one:

> Off to one side was a little cubbyhole of a kitchen where an old rusted stove leered out at me.
> The owner concentrated on the bathroom—it was a huge bathroom, almost as big as the main room—as the apartment's main selling point.
> He made passing reference to the kitchen, the view from the tiny window (the back of a used-car lot) and the quiet neighbourhood, but extolled at great length the virtues of a private bathroom for an old man like my grandfather. "Of course, he'll have to go upstairs to take a bath but he won't mind that," he said.
> Our inspection was interrupted by a great whirring noise. It shook the walls and the ash tray on the table rattled.
> "Oh, that's just a printing press in the next room," he explained. "Your grandfather won't have to worry about that; it's usually broken down."
> I asked him how much he wanted for the room. "Well," he said, "if your grandfather's willing to pay for the gas, I can give it to him for $6.50."
> I told him I'd talk it over with grandpa and come back the next day if he decided to take it. Outside again the fresh air felt good.

Here was a place on George street:

> I almost broke my leg when it crashed through a rotten step. The windows of the house were broken and it looked deserted, but I knocked anyway.
> The dirtiest and thinnest man I had ever seen came to the door. He had a ring of egg yolk around his mouth and what I could see of his flesh was so caked with filth I'm sure nothing short of a skinning could have cleaned him.
> The room was just as dirty; the floor was black and crusted, the curtains were torn and hung squint-eyed on the windows and the pattern on the wallpaper had been obscured long ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Did hon. members give unanimous consent to have this pamphlet put on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Then perhaps the hon. member could now give us his views.

Mr. Nicholson: If I had your permission I should like to finish this sentence.

Mr. Studer: It was a socialist house with a socialist in it.

Mr. Argue: That is the best noise I have heard from the cabinet benches in a long time.

Mr. Nicholson: In all seriousness I think if any member of this house would spend two weeks in any city in Canada trying to find living quarters for $20, and then have money left for food, there would not be any interruptions such as I have had this evening.

Mr. Studer: What is Saskatchewan doing about it?

Mr. Ellis: More than any other province.

Mr. Studer: They build theatres.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I realize that hon. members on the other side are rather sensitive about the shocking conditions in regard to housing that exist in every part of Canada.

Mr. Byrne: And particularly in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nicholson: I think it is not surprising when they read again—

Mr. Byrne: We will do our own reading.

Mr. Nicholson: —the Curtis report of 1944 and find the picture presented of the brave new world we were to have, the clearing of our slums and the subsidized housing we were going to provide for our heroes.

Mr. Studer: That is what Douglas said in 1944.

Mr. Nicholson: We have done very little. The minister boasted about the fact that Canada has the best record in the world—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: —so far as house construction is concerned.

Mr. Studer: Per capita.

Mr. Nicholson: Per capita. The minister is wrong, as is the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Studer).

Mr. Studer: More socialist statistics.

Mr. Ellis: Why not make a speech of your own on housing?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, before going to Germany about two years ago I was given, by the German embassy, a copy of a book entitled "Germany Reports". I am sure that anyone who has been to Germany since the war will agree with me that an amazing job has been done in rebuilding the devastated cities.

Mr. Byrne: Not a socialist government over there.

Mr. Nicholson: I have not suggested it was, but I am about to give the minister some information that he should examine before he goes out as far on a limb as he did this afternoon.

Mr. Argue: He does not like to get it sawn off.

Mr. Nicholson: I think we should not forget that more than 2,250,000 homes, or over 20 per cent of the dwellings within the area of the Federal Republic of Germany were totally destroyed by air bombardment. By the time the fighting ceased another 2·5 million houses were seriously damaged. In some cities like Cologne, 75 per cent of the dwellings were destroyed. The same was true of Essen.

As I said, anyone who has been to Germany will marvel at the ingenuity, the industry and imagination which has been displayed in that country as the people have tried to provide some place for their families and themselves to live. According to this table on page 181 of "Germany Reports", I find that on the basis of completed dwellings per 10,000 population, Australia and Norway come first with 96; the German republic is third with 91; the United States is fourth with 72; Sweden is fifth with 66; Switzerland is sixth with 57; Netherlands is seventh with 53; and Canada is in eighth place.

I agree that Canada's position is still worth while, but in the light of the fact that we have done so little with our cities we should not be proud. We have great resources of material and manpower, and when you consider the increase in our gross national product, the fact that we have only 4,000 low-rental subsidized housing units in all of Canada is something no Canadian can speak of with pride. Therefore I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the policies which were worked out during the war and which were understood to be sound should be accepted in connection with housing. Whatever is physically possible should be made financially possible.

Another book which I am not going to deal with at this time is one which hon. members might read with profit. It is entitled, "My First Seventy-six Years", and was written by Hjalmar Schacht, a former president of the reichsbank in Germany. He is not a socialist. I am not quoting him because he is a socialist, but he was asked to take over a responsible position in Germany when they were in their wildest period of inflation back in the early 1920's, when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was there. He can tell us about how difficult it was for the people in Germany at that time. Then Hitler also asked Mr. Schacht to take a similar assignment when countries all over the world were in the midst of a depression.

Schacht sold the idea to Hitler that there were two important things to do, namely provide better housing for the people and provide roads across the country. These are two responsibilities of the Minister of Public Works. It was pretty obvious that tackling the housing problem in Germany was one of the major factors that made it possible for Hitler to get the support which he later used to plunge the world into the second world war. But it was sound economically for Germany in the early 1930's to face up to the slum conditions in that country and embark on an ambitious housing program so that every family in Germany could look out of their windows and see new and better houses being built and better conditions being provided for the citizens of that country.

My time is running out. The late hon. member for York South was our expert on housing. He made a very valuable contribution to the discussion when the act was up for review some years ago. The suggestions he made then are still sound. He offered criticism of the failure of the minister to tackle this problem with a view to providing the best possible housing in all parts of Canada, apart altogether from making an attractive investment return for people who want a high return on money invested.

The problem should be attacked from the point of view of providing better housing for the people. The late Mr. Noseworthy's last suggestion was that the government should not pass the buck to the municipalities. Surely the municipalities and the provinces already have greater burdens than they can meet with their diminishing resources. In a recent analysis showing how we distribute our tax dollar the Canadian Bank of Commerce pointed out that we give only 12 cents out of every tax dollar to the municipalities; we give 14 cents to the provinces and 74 cents to the federal government. The municipalities and the provinces have not the wherewithal to embark on national programs, but the federal government has all the machinery.

If a third world war broke out the federal government would not have any difficulty whatsoever in raising unlimited sums and embarking on very ambitious programs, as was demonstrated during the second world war. It is not good enough for the minister to say that after all this responsibility must be accepted by the provinces. It must be accepted by the federal government. With the taxation and resources the federal government has, with the facilities of the Bank of Canada, with the ability to plan for full employment and to raise standards of living, the federal government must take its full responsibility in this important field.

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to some remarkable statements from across the way today, but I think the most amazing was the statement of the hon. member for Mackenzie that there had not been any building whatsoever in several of the towns in his own constituency.

Mr. Nicholson: Under the National Housing Act.

Mr. Philpott: I can remember when this new housing act was before the banking and commerce committee three or four years ago, when one C.C.F. speaker after another arose and said these were wonderful low-rental provisions and asked, "Why have you been hiding your light under a bushel? The government ought to be censured for not letting everybody know that all you had to do was to have a local tie-up, and you could have an unlimited amount of low-rental housing." Therefore I really do not know why the Saskatchewan C.C.F. government has not long since taken advantage of this low-rental housing business and built some of those much-needed houses in the constituency of the hon. member for Mackenzie.

This afternoon the hon. member for Regina City paid me the compliment of saying I was the chief government apologist. I certainly say there would not be any easier task than to be the chief government apologist for this National Housing Act, when the figures plainly show that Canada is building more new housing than any other country on the face of the earth.

Mr. Ellis: What figures?

Mr. Philpott: According to the figures given just a minute ago by the hon. member for Mackenzie, Canada stood about fourth on the list.

Mr. Nicholson: Eighth.

Mr. Philpott: The plain fact of the matter is that Canada is building many more houses this year than the highest figure given in the German paper quoted by my hon. friend. Like my hon. friend, I think I know a good deal about the new housing in Germany because I myself have been in Germany several times since the end of the Hitler war.

The first time I was there I saw the whole country all smashed down as he described it; but I will say this. While I take off my hat to the Germans for their energy in rebuilding the buildings which were destroyed in the conflict which they themselves had precipitated, I venture to say there is not an hon. member in this house who would condone the methods which were used in the rebuilding of Germany. I myself have seen people working two whole shifts in a single day, a day job and a night job. As late as 1951 I have also seen in the great city of Hanover hundreds of people sleeping every night in the public railway station because there was no housing for them to live in.

Therefore I would say, Mr. Speaker, that while I pay all tribute to the great energy of the Germans and what they have done, let us be fair to this act. Let us not be ashamed of the fact that Canada has been able to bring down a National Housing Act that in one respect is the best in the entire world. It has provided more new single dwelling houses for the people rather comfortably off than any other country in the world has been able to provide.

Mr. Ellis: What about those who are not comfortably off?

Mr. Philpott: Hon. gentlemen on the other side sometimes take unto themselves too much virtue. You would think we on this side were not eager and willing to make a good act better. We are offering amendments right now to the National Housing Act which will greatly improve the facilities for slum clearance in Canada. Some people do not like the term "slum clearance". I remember when we brought in the new act we had to change it to blighted areas. I do know that if we had had this act on the statute books last year when the civic elections in Vancouver were held the local vote would have been different, and we would now be well under way with the reconstruction of the downtown area which is needed so badly.

I am not going to stand up here tonight and say that in my opinion the National Housing Act is doing everything we had hoped it would do when we framed the act. Of course it is not. We know perfectly well that we had high hopes about the provisions of the act which were designed to facilitate the construction of unsubsidized rental housing and subsidized rental housing. As I said just a minute ago, we had speaker after speaker and we had representatives of the great trade unions in Canada ask what was the matter with us, why had we not let everyone know how easy it was to initiate the construction of these low-rental housing schemes.

In my opinion the rate of construction of rental housing since we passed the new act has been disappointingly low. I believe it will remain disappointingly low until more organizations, until more municipalities, until more trade unions, until more church groups, until more racial origin societies take the actual initiative of undertaking the construction of low-rental housing projects.

The hon. member for Mackenzie was talking about housing in foreign countries. Apart from the privilege of going to Germany again last year, I spent considerable time in the countries which in my opinion have the finest housing projects in the entire world. I refer to Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

Mr. Ellis: Socialist governments.

Mr. Philpott: Answering my loud-spoken friend the hon. member for Regina City, may I say that I went to the chief town planner of the city of Stockholm, who showed me over a period of several days some of their masterly housing projects. At the end of that time he said to me, "I will venture to say that you are thinking the reason we have these wonderful projects is that we have a socialist government." I said, "Oh." He said, "Let me disabuse your mind because in 1903, before the ordinary people of the city of Stockholm had the vote, hard-headed businessmen who then ran the city of Stockholm and who were good conservatives—not Progressive Conservatives, who are Conservatives going backward—bought all the land for many miles around the city of Stockholm." I had the privilege of seeing a model city of 30,000 or 35,000 people which is being built as a complete entity this year, and which was possible because of the foresight of those old conservatives.

I know the socialists are always ready to boast about their achievements, but let us give credit where credit is due. The credit for the great advance in housing in Sweden is due to those hard-headed businessmen who happened to be conservatives.

I must say that the Scandinavian countries are ahead of us in the construction of low-cost unsubsidized rental housing. They have more rental housing than we have. They have not so much room as we have, and they have to go in more for apartments. I saw beautiful apartments in this city I was talking about with about the same space that I have in the Tiffany in Ottawa, yet the rental was only $45 a month. I am not going to say how much I pay for fear the landlord will boost my rent again. The thing is that in Sweden the rentals are very much lower than they are here in Canada.

Mr. Nicholson: How much would that cost in Ottawa?

Mr. Philpott: I said I was not going to tell, but it would be several times what it would cost in Sweden. I think we gain nothing by denying the fact that under the housing scheme which they have been able to operate in the Scandinavian countries they have been able to provide for their people rental housing at a lower cost than we have provided it here. However, let me say for the benefit of my hon. friends opposite who are always one jump ahead of themselves that we must remember that the whole wage scale and the price scale is lower in the Scandinavian countries. When you pay a carpenter in Scandinavia one-half or less of what you pay a carpenter in Ottawa, naturally you are going to get lower-cost housing.

There is one other respect in which the Scandinavian countries are ahead of us, and that is in the provision of special apartments for their old age pensioners. I saw thousands of beautiful apartments in Sweden, I saw many in Norway and I saw thousands of beautiful units in Denmark, which for my money is the happiest and most contented country in the entire world. I went in to see an old lady of over 80 years of age who had been born in Germany but who was getting an apartment in Copenhagen for $4 per month. When her husband was still alive she and her husband paid only $6 a month. All through the Scandinavian countries I saw evidence of the admirable planning which they have used and the great care they have shown for the benefit of their older people.

Just today I had a letter from an old lady 80 years of age, and it was this letter that made me remember the old lady in Denmark. This lady came originally from Saskatchewan and she is now trying to live in British Columbia on $40 a month, as she still has three months to go before she will be eligible for the $20 supplement. She cannot go back to Saskatchewan and get the supplement there because she would have to be there a year before she would be eligible. She is paying a rental of $7.50 a week. I think the mathematics of the thing speak for themselves.

I believe it is the responsibility of every Canadian, not just those who have the honour to sit in this house, to spend more time and energy in getting local initiative lined up for the construction of low-cost rental housing projects, and above all to get local initiative going in the design of housing schemes for old age pensioners. Many of the branches of the Canadian Legion have reserves of well over $50,000, and any branch of the Canadian Legion or of any other organization having such a reserve could swing without any further ado a housing deal running into hundreds of thousands of dollars. They could supply low rental housing for veterans receiving war veterans allowance, and all that sort of thing.

I submit that is the missing link which it is the duty of every hon. member in this house on every side to try to remedy. We must have more local co-operation to get these low-rental housing schemes for old age pensioners under way.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate—

Mr. Byrne: Whatever changed your mind?

Mr. Hahn: I am pleased that you asked. The reason I changed my mind was that the last day this was discussed a number of speakers took part in the debate, such as the hon. member for Mackenzie, and raised certain problems in respect to housing for the needy and the aged particularly. Because of the policy of this particular government it was impractical for the minister to answer as to why we were unable to have the housing for which we were asking. That caused me to rise again today to see whether we could not at this time at least try to excuse the government for its inactivity in this particular field.

I do not intend to repeat any of my arguments—it is not necessary in such a broad field—but the last day I drew to the minister's attention certain difficulties that people in the Vancouver area had experienced in respect to finding housing that would make it unnecessary for them to do things that we as a society should not condone. At that time I referred to certain articles in the Vancouver Province to show their plight. I did not enlarge on it in any shape or form because I felt it was unnecessary to do so, and it is not my intention to do so now.

However, certain hon. members, such as the hon. member for Vancouver South, indicated that it was the responsibility of provinces and societies and certain of the individuals in the city of Vancouver and other areas to bring about the means of financing housing for the senior citizens and those who are in need. I was rather surprised to hear that, because I am satisfied that the old age pensioners of the city of Vancouver and the citizens of Vancouver would not agree with him that they had the means in that city to go ahead and use the facilities under the present act.

We have accepted a responsibility in British Columbia to our senior citizens and assist financially the people of that province more than any other province, because we have a greater number of aged citizens per capita in that province than any other province in Canada. Certainly the city of Vancouver, the district of Surrey Delta and the whole of the lower mainland, including New Westminster and the city of Victoria, have far more senior citizens per capita than has any other part of Canada, and for that reason the problem is accentuated in that particular area.

Let us stop to consider that our province is paying more to help those people than is any other province. I am speaking of the needy, those who get $40 a month only and are not earning over and above that, those who are actually in need of this housing more than anyone else. That province is therefore not in a financial position to go ahead and assist in the particular building envisaged in the act as it now stands.

Possibly there may be some members in the house who would suggest that the province should not necessarily assist them in this way but, the cost of living being what it is today, this is merely a cost of living bonus. Hon. members who live in British Columbia know that, and I am satisfied that this applies to every area of Canada. They must realize there is not sufficient money left, out of the paltry pension cheques these people get, to house them. There are those who have suggested—as I believe the hon. member for Hamilton South did—that the municipal districts are shirking their responsibilities.

In introducing this legislation the minister, as recorded on page 3168 of Hansard of April 23, had this to say:

> Under the proposed legislation the federal government will be authorized to contribute to a municipality half of the total cost of acquiring and clearing the area, through contributions made during the process of the acquisition and clearing.

That is the smallest portion of the cost. All the other utilities and all the other factors that a municipal district must look at are the major portion of the cost to the municipality. In regard to this matter of acquiring property, frequently the municipality has the property already and does not have to acquire it. The clearing of brush and so on in those areas is a nominal factor; it is not the expensive one. The fact remains that the cost of utilities and of providing the services required in an area such as that is the expensive item, and must be kept in mind as such. For that reason I maintain, as I did the other day, that this act does not go far enough. Basically the fact that we expect municipal districts to step in and pay their share sounds fine, but it is not the answer to the question.

The hon. member for Mackenzie drew to our attention a certain housing plan. I think Schacht was the name of the man who introduced the financing of the scheme in Germany, to which the hon. member for Vancouver South took exception. He did not tell us how this was financed. The whole thing is integrated. If we are going to carry on in this fashion and suggest that we require more housing, we must find the means of financing.

The minister has my sympathy in that respect. I know he is trying to do his level best to give everybody in this country a house. I think I indicated as much the other day when I said that 623,000 was not the true number of people in this country who actually wanted homes. I would repeat that, because of the reasons I gave the other day; but there are these people in the country today who do need homes. Whether they are communal homes of some kind, or individual homes, such as we build in New Westminster, or apartments of some sort, the senior citizens and the needy of this country require a cheaper house.

On Monday, when I spoke to the resolution, I quoted from an editorial in the Vancouver Province. I did not use the whole of the editorial because I did not think it was particularly necessary. I felt that the minister was quite familiar with the situation and would probably make some comment on the substance that was proposed, but I do wish to quote from another part of the editorial, for it bears out something I said the other day and I believe it should be taken note of. It is this:

> The solution to their problem, it seems to us, is not principally a financial one, for mortgage terms have to be realistic and these people are not asking for a subsidy from the public purse. It will be found, rather, in the encouragement of new methods of construction.

We have to find new methods of constructing homes. There must be other ways whereby we can build a home that is going to cost less than $10,000, $15,000 or $20,000. Certainly when we have a society that is capable of doing so we should be able to find responsible bodies that are willing and prepared to do so.

In the course of the discussion the other day I also raised the question of fire hazards in homes. I did not deal with that question to any great extent then, but it is my intention to spend some time on it now by reason of the fact that I should like to point out to the minister that I do not believe there is a citizen of this country who is not fully aware of the fire hazards that face us today. I have had communication with one of my constituents who first drew the question to my attention.

In order to show you how these people think and the terms in which they are thinking—and you may rest assured that this man is not alone in his views—I should like to put on record what he had to say. The letter is not too long and it is my intention to read it, because I think it is something with which every member of the house should be thoroughly familiar.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am very sorry to rise at this juncture but may I point out that I do not think a discussion of fire hazards actually is entirely relevant to the bill under discussion. I realize that several members in the course of their remarks have referred in passing to the fire hazard in connection with housing. I do not wish to be unduly harsh with the hon. member who has the floor, but he has indicated he intends to spend a certain amount of time on fire hazards, and I think if he does so he will be departing from the principle of the bill.

Mr. Hahn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your statement very much. I shall not read the letter. Instead, I will draw the attention of the minister to this fact, that the legislation does cover the renovation of houses and there are certain conditions that have to be taken care of. One of them has to do with the fire hazard. The fire hazard must be taken very careful note of.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that you find it is improper for me to read this missive, but I may refer to a graph this man has prepared as the result of certain questions he had me put on the order paper so he could get a true picture of the fire situation in Canada today. I may say that this honourable gentleman—I believe I can say he is honourable—has taken it upon himself to show how fires have increased. He has tried to analyse the statistics and has come to the only possible conclusion, that these fires have occurred as a result of the faulty construction in our homes today.

For instance, he takes each of the various provinces and his graph shows explicitly that the fire hazard in this country remained at a fairly constant level from 1926 to 1937. From 1937 on the number of fires in each province mounted. The reason for that was that people who built homes during the depression did not have sufficient finances available to put proper equipment in them, and today that equipment must be changed. The electrical equipment, outlets and other wiring, were of such a nature that they were not heavy enough to carry the load. Let me quote some of the figures I have here. We find an increase in all Canada from approximately 13 deaths per million to a maximum of 40 deaths per million in the years 1951 and 1952.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Again I am sorry to rise but I really feel, having heard the hon. member for several minutes now, that he is directing his attention to fire hazards and fire protection, whereas we should be directing our attention to the principle of the bill which, as the hon. member can readily see, deals with amendments to the National Housing Act. I hope the hon. member will co-operate with me in dwelling more particularly on the principle of the bill.

Mr. Hahn: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I know I am not supposed to refer at this stage to the clauses of the bill but

I would point out that clause 1 which repeals paragraph 16 of section 2 of the act and substitutes a new paragraph therefor reads in part as follows:

(16) "home extension loan" means a loan or a purchase of obligations representing loans or advances of money made before the first day of July, 1956, by a bank or approved instalment credit agency for the purpose of financing the alteration of, or the making of additions to, an existing home . . .

I contend, sir, that if you change the wiring in a house you are certainly making alterations to it. If I may proceed, I only have ten provinces to deal with and it will not take me long to put on the record these findings in respect of fires.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member must realize that the length of time or otherwise is not an element. I am here to attempt to enforce the rules of the house and, as I said, the remarks he has been making are directed more to fire hazards, in my opinion, than to housing. If he wants to dwell on alterations to houses or the building of houses, certainly I am not going to prevent him; but I really feel that to deal as he has been doing, with the question of fire hazards and fire prevention is not relevant to this discussion.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that you have referred to the construction of houses and the bill deals particularly with renovating houses. There is a clause which deals with that matter. I suggest there is nothing more pertinent to the construction of houses and their renovation than how the wiring is installed and the general construction of the renovation, and to discuss these matters certainly should be in order. I would think it would be far more in order than to talk about houses being built in Germany.

The hon. member for New Westminster is dealing particularly with the legislation and showing how these renovations should take place. If you bar an hon. member from speaking about the methods that are to be employed, what use is there in discussing the legislation? I would think the hon. member would be entirely in order.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, in my own province we find there are a goodly number of houses which are very inadequate. I have seen these homes when I have had the task of delivering groceries to some of them. Most of the flooring was nothing like typical flooring as you and I understand it in our homes today. It was merely—

Mr. Byrne: A wigwam.

Mr. Hahn: The hon. member for Kootenay East is quite right when he says it would possibly have been better in a wigwam. I interpret his remarks as meaning that. Many of these areas have typical tarpaper shacks which are nothing but fire traps. If we are going to provide adequate facilities so we will not continue this increase in the death rate by fire from 10 per million to 40 per million, as has happened in the past 20 years, then I say it is most necessary that the act should be changed to let these people make use of the property they already own on which to build a home, because they have a right to own a home even as you and I.

As I indicated earlier, it does not matter which of these people we speak about in this fair dominion. The fact remains that we have thousands and thousands of homes which are not habitable in the true sense of the word, or places in which we should expect ordinary Canadians to live. It does not matter whether you go to the province of Alberta, where their fire losses have increased from 10 persons per million in 1937 to 51 or so per million in 1952. These things must be taken note of by this government. These are the hovels in which these senior citizens of this country live.

Why do they live in them? Because as I indicated in an earlier debate, when I pointed out the situation through the figures of the dominion bureau of statistics, those figures showed that it required $6.94 per week for one of these individuals to live. That would be some $30 per month. That allowed them only $10 a month for habitation and clothing as well. That is quite impractical. How can we as citizens of this country expect any of them to live on in these homes or so-called homes when for all practical purposes they are nothing more than virtual hovels.

I would again urge the minister to look into the possibility of whether it is not possible to get the research departments working at finding some means whereby we can build a cheaper home suitable for these senior citizens and those who are in need.

Mr. O. L. Jones (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have this week received from my constituency two letters which have a bearing on this bill. I should like to put at least part of them on the record as I think they would be of constructive interest to the minister. They call attention to what, to my mind, is a weakness in the act which could be rectified. If this were done it would not only strengthen the act but would help these people mentioned by the last two hon. members who have spoken, namely the old age pensioners and those in the lower income groups, to get homes.

There is a group that is entirely ignored in the present act. I refer to those people who are still single, namely bachelors, spinsters, widows and widowers. There is no provision for a collective home for that group of people. I think this group should have special consideration under the act. In Oliver, British Columbia, the citizens realized the difficulty in getting proper accommodation, especially under the National Housing Act. They therefore got together and devised a scheme whereby they would provide a home for the senior citizens, and one worthy of the name. I have a letter from the Oliver and district senior citizens' society in which attention is drawn to what they think the federal government should do to assist them. They say:

> What we do ask is that the federal government should permit a grant or loan under the National Housing Act equal to one-third of the cost of building, that loan to be at a low interest rate and repayable over a long period. Three and a half or four per cent per annum could be termed a low interest rate as things stand today.

Then further down they go on to say that the community's share of this building is one-third, which is practically collected now and the provincial government is donating a third toward the building as a gift. The community feel that the federal government should at least come through with a third of the amount in the form of a loan at a low interest rate, but under the act as it stands there is no provision for that. I think this group of citizens should be taken care of, and I think the government is being let off the hook fairly easily when they have the provincial government putting up a third, the community a third, and they are only asked to lend a third. I suggest to the minister that the plight of the single people of Canada be given consideration.

Under this scheme in Oliver they will have a housekeeper. The unit cost of looking after the old age pensioner will be considerably reduced because he will be in one building, with one heating system and one system of operation—cooking and everything else—instead of about 20 separate little shacks or separate homes in which they live at the present time. Not only would their cost of living be cheaper per individual but it could be a real blessing for these people, because some medical care would be given to them. They would enjoy home comforts. More than everything else, what old people need is companionship. Such a home would provide companionship.

I listened to the hon. member for Vancouver South mention something similar that was already in operation in Sweden, where rent is $4 a month. If they can do that in that part of the world, I am satisfied that we in Canada could do something similar. But here is a start at little cost to the government; in fact it is at no cost at all. It merely means changing the act to allow a loan to be made to this co-operative community effort. It is a non-profitable organization. The profits that accrue, if any, go back into the home in the way of comforts and a better standard of living.

I think this is an ideal way for the smaller towns of Canada, whether they are in British Columbia or in Ontario, to house these people. I believe we should encourage community efforts of that type, where a community shows the initiative of getting the idea, getting the funds, and shows a real sympathy for their old people and a desire to provide them with a decent home. I know the municipalities will help, but they are hard-pressed and there is a limit to what they can do. Hence in the case of Oliver the municipality has turned the matter over to the citizens, and they are taking the part that is normally taken by the municipality. I would urge the minister to consider changing the act in order to provide that loans of that type could be made available to these communities.

The other letter to which I referred comes from the reeve of Summerland, a very prosperous little town in British Columbia and similar to several other towns in our province. We are not seriously troubled with blighted areas. Probably the towns are too new for that. We have small areas that we tabulate as blighted areas; nevertheless, there are areas that could in time develop into blighted areas if we do not prevent their growth. To this end the government could give substantial help directed toward seeing that proper town planning is carried out, and that funds are available to carry out those plans.

In the case of Summerland there is an undeveloped area that can be bought fairly cheaply and developed at a reasonable price, provided the facilities are available such as water, light and so on, which the municipality would be obliged to supply. That is the problem with respect to the municipality taking part in this scheme. They are hard pressed for money, and unless some help is given them they cannot take part in it.

I should like to read part of what the reeve has to say. They are hoping to get enough money to develop domestic water, which will be a self-liquidating project, of course. At present if they served this district with water the cost would be prohibitive and they could not afford to give the service. But if, as he points out, they were able to borrow money from the government under the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act at 2 per cent they would be able to carry on. Then he goes on to say this:

> You are most likely aware of the town planning group in Ottawa and the efforts in the various provinces. This is largely building for the future. With the abundance of space in Canada this group is endeavouring to establish less crowded cities and towns.
> However, once we spread out a residental area we increase the costs. It is useless being idealistic on one hand and not practical with money resources on the other. In other words if the federal cabinet believes in town planning they could assist the municipalities considerably if aid under the Municipal Improvement Assistance Act were made available only for improvements to new areas.

That is the message I have to give to the minister from both these organizations; that he give careful consideration to assisting the municipalities to take care of their pensionable old age people and in the development of new areas. I am satisfied we could get some action if he would take up with the cabinet the reopening of this Municipal Improvements Assistance Act to make 2 per cent money available, because about two years ago the Minister of Finance intimated that he was not against the reopening of the act if the desire was there. I can assure you that the desire is there, and the reopening of the act would help develop the areas I referred to which are now handicapped because the municipalities cannot impose upon their inhabitants the heavy penalty of costly money for developing new areas.

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): I feel that I must not let this opportunity pass without once again saying something about housing for senior citizens, which comes under section 16 of the National Housing Act. I should like to refer to the comment made a short time ago by the hon. member for Vancouver South, when he suggested that some of the sections of the act were being modified and improved. Certainly this is one section of the act which, rather than being improved, is a step backward.

I feel that we in this country, as in possibly a good many other places, have failed to accept our responsibility toward our senior citizens. I am sure that the least we can do is say to them, "If you are prepared to pay rent for decent housing we shall provide the money with which to build the decent kind of housing you deserve". That is all the senior citizens are asking from us. They say, "You provide the housing and we will pay for it through rentals each month". Surely, we can at least accept our responsibilities to these people who have given so much, who have pioneered this country over the years.

I pointed out recently, and I am not going to refer to what I said during the resolution stage, that under the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation we in Saskatchewan are going ahead at a very fast pace in erecting low-rental housing for our senior citizens. I was very much disappointed to learn that, because of the very small change in the act, the new provisions will not permit other provinces to follow the example of Saskatchewan. I think I am correct in saying that during the last year Saskatchewan has had 30 or so housing projects under way, and there are a great many other communities who want to go ahead with similar projects by forming limited dividend companies to provide housing for their senior citizens.

I am in favour of this type of housing for our senior citizens. I do not believe in taking our senior citizens away, as is done in some cases, and placing them in so-called institutions where they are cut off from friends and relatives and forced to live under circumstances which add nothing to their comfort or welfare. The type of project provided under section 16 is admirable in that respect.

When he spoke recently the minister agreed that Saskatchewan had done a very good job in this respect. The only difference is that Saskatchewan is able to provide adequate hostel accommodation for the remaining consorts. It is the degree of occupancy that means the difference between going ahead with these projects for self-contained units and not going ahead with them. I am sure there has been a great deal of interest shown throughout this country and the United States in what has been accomplished in my own province. As a matter of fact, the chairman of the subcommittee on housing of the committee on banking and commerce of the House of Representatives in the United States has been communicating with the department of social welfare in Saskatchewan asking for full details as to what we are attempting to do there in conjunction with loans from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. They are showing a great deal of interest in that. It is unfortunate that other provinces in this country are not able to go ahead on the same basis. It is equally unfortunate that after June 31 of this year even the province of Saskatchewan will not be able to continue with this type of housing.

The other evening when I questioned the minister concerning this problem he said he was satisfied that the new act was going to be fair and would meet what he believed to be the particular conditions that existed. I should like, for a moment, to tell you something about this operation in my own province. It is all very well, Mr. Speaker, to say that you are going to provide housing for senior citizens to enable two aged people, a man and his wife, to move into a house, but what are you going to do about the remaining consort? Are you going to say that person can continue living in the house or that he or she has to find other accommodation?

I suggest that person cannot remain in that self-contained unit, and for a very good reason. We estimate that two people can live in a self-contained unit for somewhere in the neighbourhood of $40 a month, and that of course is the amount of the old age pension. The experience in Saskatchewan proves fairly conclusively that the self-contained unit can be rented for $40 a month and the mortgage to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation can be paid off in 40 years. As I said a day or two ago the 90 per cent, and the long-term low interest rate that is being offered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for this type of housing, are very generous. However, when one of the partners in the marriage dies, then of course you have to still charge $40 per month for the same space, and certainly the money cannot be forthcoming if the remaining consort is to exist on his pension.

So we have been able to convince the government that if they will allow us to build, in conjunction with the self-contained units, hostel accommodation for the remaining consorts, one hostel bed for each self-contained unit, and we are able to double up in the use of half the hostel units, we can get by very nicely. We must remember also that the construction costs of the hostel unit are considerable. When you take into consideration that you have to provide cooking facilities, laundry facilities and supervision it adds up to a very considerable expense. However, if we are able to place enough people in the hostel units we believe we can rent those hostel units for something in the neighbourhood of from $55 to $60 a month, and so the proposition becomes feasible. But under the act as it now stands—and it is going to apply in the province of Saskatchewan after June 31 of this year—we find that in spite of the optimism expressed by the minister the other evening, instead of one hostel bed for one self-contained unit, we are only going to be allowed to build one hostel bed unit for every two self-contained units.

What does that mean? It simply means that eventually you are going to have two people vying for one bed in the hostel unit. On top of that, the act stipulates quite clearly that 50 per cent of the hostel units must be left vacant in the event that this 50 per cent will be needed for remaining consorts some time in the future. So you have the fantastic situation of a very elaborate and costly hostel set-up with five people in it.

For instance, you build 20 self-contained units, but under the act you can have only 10 hostel bedrooms. If you are to allow only one bed in each hostel bedroom, as the act calls for, and if you have to leave 50 per cent of the hostel bedrooms empty, you will be asking five people to pay through monthly rental the whole cost of that hostel project in order to pay off the mortgage to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The unfair part of it is this. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is not prepared to lend money to a limited dividend company for the hostel project unless the mortgage is underwritten and guaranteed by the province. When the province is asked to guarantee the mortgage for a hostel type project I fail to understand why Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should have any hesitancy whatsoever in allowing ample provision to be made for single people to go into that project.

I was very disappointed to learn that instead of carrying on on even a limited basis of one hostel unit for one self-contained unit we now find—and of course it was in the act previously—that a limited dividend company is allowed to build only one hostel unit for every two self-contained units. That, of course, makes the whole proposition completely untenable.

I hope that before we get through with this legislation the minister will give the greatest consideration to broadening the terms and making it easier for people in the communities throughout this country to make some reasonable attempt to do something for the senior citizens so that during their declining years they may be able to have some of the amenities of life which they have not been able to obtain for themselves prior to this time.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will conclude the debate.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, it will take me perhaps fewer than 10 minutes to conclude if the house is prepared to have me go on.

Mr. Fleming: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the minister unanimous consent to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winters: First of all I would like to thank all hon. members who took part in this debate today. One thing did seem clear, namely that almost everybody, if not everybody, thought the legislation had merit. The only difference was in the degree of merit they associated with this measure. I think even those who did not see much in it at least conceded it was a step in the right direction and asserted that if we kept going in that direction long enough and far enough we would achieve the goal which I said was the Liberal aim, namely to provide adequate housing for every Canadian.

Mr. Ellis: If we live long enough.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member for Eglinton as usual gave a speech for which he had done his homework very well. He raised some very good points. I do not propose to deal with them at length, but they were points that deserve an answer and I shall endeavour to say a few words on them.

He remarked about the fact that the average income of qualifiers under the National Housing Act has gone up. He quoted from Canadian Housing Statistics, fourth quarter, 1955, published by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which states on page 5 that whereas in 1954 the average income per family was $5,065, in 1955 it had gone up to $5,207. In explanation of that I will say that, as the hon. member will recall, in 1954 the statute was changed and, among other things, it provided for a lower down payment. That, too, is reflected in the same paragraph which shows that the average down payment was $2,821 in 1955 as compared with $2,993 in 1954, while on the other hand it refers to the fact that the gross debt went up in those two years from $918 to $934.

But by way of explaining the higher family income required I should say that at the same time the down payment was decreased the total amount of the loan was increased from $10,000 to $12,800 a unit, which pretty automatically means that the incomes of families qualifying for the higher loans are at higher levels. A reference to pages 21 and 22 of the same publication will clearly demonstrate what I mean.

Table No. 30 on page 21 shows that prior to 1954 there were no loans at all over $10,000, whereas in 1955 there were 26,245 loans over $10,000 which brings up, of course, the average level of loans and the average income required to qualify for those loans. If the hon. member will refer to page 22, table 32, he will see that the loans have increased all across the board. More people on low incomes qualified for loans, and, of course, more people in high income brackets qualified for loans. While in 1954 only one person with an income under $2,000 qualified, in 1955 the corresponding figure was 15; between $2,000 and $2,999 the figures for 1954 and 1955 are 252 and 475, respectively. All throughout those income groups the number of loans has increased in those two years. In the group $10,000 and over, in 1954 the total number was 633, and in 1955, 1,249. So I think mathematically it is quite easy to demonstrate that while the average family income required to qualify for a loan went up, both at the higher end and at the lower end, there was a much broader band of Canadians qualified. That in itself is one of the reasons we were able to achieve a record number of houses built in 1955.

My hon. friend again raised the question as to why the interest rate had to be increased recently from 5¼ to 5½ per cent. I think there was doubt in the hon. member's mind as to whether this was done as a deterrent to a high level of house building. Again may I assure him that that was not the case. This was simply an effort to attract to the market sufficient mortgage money to achieve a high level of house building. We could have kept the rate of interest at 5¼ per cent, but we would not have built a sufficient number of houses. I suppose you could carry that to the extreme and say that 100,000 houses with interest at 5½ per cent is better than no houses with interest at 5 per cent. We set the rate at a level which would attract money to the market.

The hon. member thought that we were relying too heavily on municipal initiative in the development of housing projects. There again I think perhaps I have more confidence in the municipal level of government than he and some other hon. members reflected this afternoon. I shall attempt to give more background on that a little later.

The hon. member questioned the administration of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and I think he had in mind again the Regent Park South development. I am bolstered in that supposition by an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail this morning which rather asserts the same position. Perhaps I could give briefly a few dates and developments in connection with the project to support my argument that there was no undue delay.

On December 15, 1953, the Toronto board of control passed a resolution requesting federal-provincial partnership participation in Regent Park South. Preliminary investigations by the province, the city welfare and treasury departments and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation local officials were completed by August 19, 1954. There were no administrative delays, but considerable information had to be gathered. In September, 1954, the province was advised of federal approval in principle, subject to certain details being further investigated. A committee consisting of 12 nominees of the province, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the city was then appointed. Families were interviewed, properties appraised and an architectural program was outlined in detail. A report was issued on March 8, 1955.

In April, 1955, the province accepted the report and agreements were immediately negotiated, both for a grant under section 23 and a federal-provincial project under section 36. The agreements were signed in July, 1955. In the meantime the city had initiated expropriation proceedings and architects were appointed. Since then action has proceeded along two parallel lines. The city has been negotiating for and acquiring title to properties. The corporation, through two firms of consulting architects, has been pushing ahead with the design of this $8 million construction project.

There certainly have been no delays in the development of a site plan and building plans. It has been necessary, of course, to consult with the provincial authorities and also with the city, particularly the city's planning board. We are now at the stage where the city may soon be expected to call for tenders for the demolition of the first group of buildings, and as soon as the land is cleared Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will be ready to call for tenders for the construction of the first housing units. The time taken to develop plans for a project of this magnitude is not out of line.

I should like to say a few words about the speech by the hon. member for Regina City, who quoted some statements made by my predecessor the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, who did such a magnificent job in housing as he does in all other fields of his activities. The hon. member argued that we had not progressed since that date, but I would remind him of the various changes we have made in the statute, all of which in one form or another have enabled us to go further with our program of public housing. The federal-provincial section 35, now section 36, was put on the statute books in 1949; slum clearance sections were further developed in 1952, and this present bill is to enable us to go further in that direction.

The hon. member also said he did not feel the municipalities could take the initiative and see these projects through. I should like to read him a list of a number of municipalities in which there have been subsidized projects for people in the low income brackets. These are:

Newfoundland—St. John's.
New Brunswick—Saint John.
Nova Scotia—Halifax.
Ontario—Amherstburg, Arnprior, Brockville, Dunnville, Fort Erie, Galt, Goderich, Midland, Owen Sound, Port Arthur, Renfrew, Sault Ste. Marie, Smith Falls, Stamford.
Saskatchewan—Moose Jaw, Prince Albert.
British Columbia—Vancouver.

There are other municipalities which have initiated federal-provincial projects, but I will not take the time now to name them. I might say, however, that we have been unsuccessful in developing a project in Regina, where we had high hopes that one would develop. It was put to the ratepayers of Regina, who turned the proposal down for reasons best known to themselves.

The hon. member for Bow River stated that he was fearful that this legislation provided not a means for obtaining loans for house building, but rather a field of investment for the lending institutions. It may be that the lending institutions regard this as a field for sound investment, but at the same time I know he is well aware that had it not been for the lending institutions and the banks who came in under the provisions of the 1954 statute we would not have achieved the high level of house building we have today.

The hon. member for Mackenzie made a rather strange speech in the course of which he stated that he had visited Germany, and advocated that I follow in the steps of Hitler.

Mr. Argue: Nonsense.

Mr. Nicholson: I know the minister wants to be fair. I said that housing was one of the methods that Schacht had recommended when he took over the presidency of the reichstag in the early thirties and the ministry in charge of housing and road construction. Those were two of the things which Hitler did in Germany, but I certainly did not suggest that the minister should in any way mimic Hitler.

Mr. Winters: It seemed to me that was the logical conclusion for one to draw when the hon. member said that much of the success achieved by Hitler in Germany was due to the high level of housing that he had been able to attain there. I am just wondering what will happen if he takes a trip to Russia.

Then the hon. member told us about activities in other countries which leads me to recall the line from Gilbert and Sullivan, which I think I quoted once before and which I think he may remember. The lines are:

> He praises with enthusiastic tone
> All centuries but this, and every country but his own.

Mr. Fleming: Sing it.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member for New Westminster suggested that we do everything we can to find ways of building better and cheaper houses. With that I am fully in accord. We have already set up committees to study that particular problem and are in the process now of establishing an advisory committee of citizens from across the whole country, who will give us the benefit of their advice based on local conditions, in an endeavour to use Canadian materials and resources to the best advantage in building cheaper houses and better houses, having in mind as well the very serious fire problem that he raised.

I wish to thank the hon. member for Hamilton South and the hon. member for Vancouver South for the very splendid and constructive contributions they made to the debate.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—"Home extension loan".

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Fourth report of standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Viau.

STORMS

NICOLET, QUE.—CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING LANDSLIDE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Lefrançois (Laurier): I should like to direct two questions to the Minister of Public Works. The first one is this: Has the Minister of Public Works had any correspondence or other communications with the government of the province of Quebec concerning the landslide which took place in the town of Nicolet in the fall of 1955?

The second one is this: If in the affirmative, would the minister consent to table such communications?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Yes, there has been an exchange of correspondence. Some of it has been on a personal basis and as such is not producible; but any other correspondence I shall be glad to produce, subject to the usual reservation that I shall first inform the government of Quebec.

TRADE

CEYLON—REPORTED WITHDRAWAL FROM GATT AND RENOUNCING OF EMPIRE PREFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is now in a position to answer the question I asked him on Tuesday? It is recorded on page 3209 of Hansard and is as follows:

> May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether his attention has been called to reports from Ceylon that the government of that country is considering withdrawing from GATT and also denouncing the system of empire trade preferences. Has the department formed any opinion as to the effect this may have on Canada's trade interests?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have a reply to that question. The Associated Press item, which was in the Ottawa Journal of April 23, in which the minister of industries in Ceylon is reported as having stated that he will re-examine the GATT and preferential tariff obligations of Ceylon, has now been brought to my attention. It is likely that if the Ceylon government has any specific proposals to make in this connection they will inform us officially. In the meantime we are asking our high commissioner in Colombo to report fully on this matter. Until we have more complete information it will not be possible to assess the effect which this might have upon Canada's foreign trade.

RUSSIA—INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF LIST OF EXPORTABLE COMMODITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether the Canadian government has in mind the extension of the list of commodities that may be exported to the U.S.S.R. in view of the added commodities that were announced yesterday by the United States government and I think also by the British government?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The Canadian list will be expanded to the extent that the United States list is expanded. Our system of area export permits is somewhat different from the United States system in that we do not require a licence for every specific commodity. We issue licences for a group of commodities, none of which are strategic. The relaxations announced in Washington do not affect strategic commodities and many of the commodities on the new list were already on our list as permissible for export. However, I can assure my hon. friend that we will make such changes as will make our list as broad as the United States list.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask the minister this question? Is there not some discretion exercised by Canada as to the removal of articles from the strategic list? Have we always got to follow what the United States does?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, and it has not been our practice to follow the United States. As I have said, our present list is considerably broader than has been the United States list. The United States is really catching up to our present practice, although we may need to somewhat extend our list.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

QUEEN ELIZABETH HOTEL—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR MAISONNEUVE-ROSEMONT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the speech given by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) in Montreal yesterday, in which he called the naming of the new C.N.R. hotel in Montreal an appalling blunder of Mr. Gordon and in which he declared that his views were shared by all the other Liberal members on the island of Montreal?

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Provincial election.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think my position in this matter is already known, and I shall refrain from any comment on the speech by the hon. member in question.

POLIOMYELITIS

SALK VACCINE—INQUIRY AS TO SUFFICIENCY OF SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McBain (Elgin): In the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I wish to direct a question to his parliamentary assistant. Can he advise the house when the Salk vaccine will be available in sufficient quantities for second inoculations and also the approximate date for the booster inoculations?

Mr. F. G. Robertson (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Minister of National Health and Welfare has made many announcements on the situation regarding the production of Salk vaccine, and I feel there is nothing more I can add on this occasion to what he has already said.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

SKIM MILK POWDER AND CHEESE—INQUIRY AS TO RECONSIDERATION OF INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the government reconsidering at the moment the question of whether or not to raise the tariff on skim milk powder and cheese?

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): The Canadian Federation of Agriculture and a number of other agricultural bodies attended on me yesterday to make representations to that effect, and I will of course give consideration to what they said.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

METHOD OF PROMOTION IN PROTECTIVE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs a question. This may not come directly under his department but I think the minister will be particularly interested. My question has reference to promotions in the protective service of the House of Commons. In making promotions in the protective service is preference given in the matter of promotion to veterans with active service in the first and second world wars over members of the protective service who have had no military service? Does the time spent in military service count towards seniority in the protective service?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member pointed out, this matter does not come directly under my department. The members of the protective service of the House of Commons are employees of the House of Commons. I am not positive but my understanding is that although they are employees of the House of Commons they enjoy the same privileges as other civil servants. My understanding of the veterans preference in the civil service is that preference is given to veterans with respect to entering the public service but that so far as promotional competitions within the service are concerned the veterans preference does not apply any more. I believe that is the position with regard to the civil service.

As to the second part of the question, as to whether military service should count in determining seniority in the protective service, I shall have to inquire about this matter. But there again I should like to point out that under the Civil Service Act military service does not count in determining seniority but it can be counted for superannuation purposes, and the date of seniority depends upon the date of entry of the servant into the public service.

GRAIN

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—CANADA'S SHARE OF WORLD MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the general disappointment which is felt over the recent international wheat agreement, has the Minister of Trade and Commerce anything to report with regard to what we may expect in view of the decreased sales anticipated? What are the markets we may expect?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard of any general disapproval of the wheat agreement.

Mr. Rowe: I said "disappointment".

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The international wheat agreement was negotiated by a group of department officers with the help of six farm advisers, the latter being the presidents of the principal farm organizations of western Canada. The representatives of the farm organizations recommended the agreement. I have no reason to believe that they are disappointed. Of course, the only disappointment there can be is that the United Kingdom have decided not to join the agreement. It was hoped that they would join the new agreement. On the other hand, Argentina and Sweden, which are important exporters, have joined the agreement for the first time. To that extent its value has been enhanced.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Speaker, if I may I should like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the reports appearing in the papers, is it true that we can expect about a 30 per cent decrease in our share in the world's market for wheat?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No; that is not true. It is true that the quantities within the agreement have been decreased by 30 per cent. But in the past year we have done far more business outside the agreement than we have done inside it. The value of the agreement lies in the fact that the exporters and importers of many countries have decided that a range of values for wheat between $1.50 minimum and $2 maximum is reasonable. I think this will be a valuable agreement affecting the price of wheat.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN ROUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to give the Minister of Public Works notice of this question. Perhaps he can answer it for me next week. Has the minister received any intimation that the government of British Columbia are planning a change in the route of the trans-Canada highway to include the Oak street bridge?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Only through the columns of the press, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

SUGGESTED USE OF MICROPHOTOGRAPHIC FILM AS PROOF OF RECORDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he can answer the question I asked him yesterday.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not yet able to answer my hon. friend's question, but I think I might take advantage of his rising now in order to ask him to elucidate it to some extent. Yesterday he asked:

> Has any consideration been given to amending the Canada Evidence Act so that microphotographic film would be taken as proof of records of municipal governments?

An amendment to the Canada Evidence Act would affect only criminal proceedings, civil proceedings and other matters respecting which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction. This would not affect the general run of lawsuits in which matters coming under provincial jurisdiction are concerned. The hon. member is clear on that point?

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Yes; I am clear on that point. What I have reference to are matters coming before the exchequer court here.

Mr. Garson: Matters coming before the exchequer court and in criminal proceedings?

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): That is right; and in criminal proceedings.

Mr. Garson: We have not received any request for such consideration for some considerable time. I am having the department check back to see whether we have had any request. When that check has been made I will reply later.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): May I just say this. Because certain departments of government were microfilming their records, a couple of municipalities asked that this be done and that this government take the initial step in amending the Canada Evidence Act. Then the province might do the same.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I think the point the municipalities might well consider is whether, for the few occasions on which their records would be required in criminal proceedings or in civil proceedings in the exchequer court, they would want to go to the expense of installing a system of this sort for all their records.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Then in regard to the records of the federal government and the different departments, what is being done in case any of those records have to be brought in by way of microfilm? What is being done in regard to that?

Mr. Garson: Well, "government," under the Canada Evidence Act and within that section thereof which has to do with the use of microfilm, means "the government of Canada or any province of Canada and includes any department, commission, board or branch of the government." Where it is advantageous and where some economies can be made by having and using this type of film, there would be some sense to their doing so. But as for a municipality microfilming its records just to avoid the prospect of having some of them produced in a criminal or exchequer court case, I should not think they would want to do this; for the cost would be far greater than the savings would be.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Harbours and rivers engineering branch—

365. Branch administration, including district engineers, staffs and related expenses, $2,381,423.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, there are two problems that I have to bring to the minister's attention briefly and I am going to do it under this administration item. The reason I am doing it is that, so far as the minister and I are concerned, it is a matter of unfinished business. There are two matters upon which we have been corresponding for some time. I was rather surprised when this year's estimates were introduced to find that there was nothing for the two very important projects I had brought to the attention of the department.

Another thing upon which I should like to advise the minister is that there is a great deal of interest in Cape Breton in these two particular problems. Of course, he being the minister in the cabinet representing the province of Nova Scotia, I know he is sympathetic, and there must be other influences behind the scenes which prevent him from doing something he otherwise would very much like to do. The first item concerns the improvement of the harbour in the town of Glace Bay. The minister's files will indicate that the board of trade and other bodies in that town have been actively bringing to his attention the need for improvement in that harbour. One of the main reasons that I think something should have been included, at least in the supplementary estimates this year, is that the town was rather badly hit by the closing of several coal mines which created a lot of unemployment.

As the minister is well aware, the town of Glace Bay is as far east as you can go; it is right on the Atlantic seaboard. The coal industry has been the main upkeep of the town over the years. It is now on the wane. In order to maintain the investments in the town in the form of schools, churches, and so forth, something else is needed and something has to be done to rehabilitate and maintain the town itself. This project that I am talking about, the expansion of the wharf and the details of how it should be done, have already been given to the minister's department, because I have press reports that indicate the board of trade are alleged to have brought to the attention of the department the need to expand the pier. One of the best ways that I can see of providing something for that town at the present time is by providing better facilities in the harbour to build up the fishing industry. There are two fairly large fish plants established on the waterfront there. About 10 years ago the department did a very good job in expanding the facilities that were there and reconstructing a new pier. It appears that the pier has not been extended out far enough. Another 600 feet should be added to it.

As the minister is also well aware, the largest swordfishing industry on this continent perhaps operates out of the town of Glace Bay. The swordfishermen from the minister's end of the province, from Newfoundland and from other sections, gather there for a couple of months in the year during the swordfishing season. Probably 200 or 300 boats are in and out of that harbour. The harbour is not adequate to handle them. If the minister had included something in his estimates this year it would have been an indication that the government realized the need of doing something in that part of the country.

It is all right to talk about bringing in new industries and to do this and that, but that is all in the future. The town of Glace Bay has transportation difficulties. It is not even on the main line of the C.N.R., although there is a coal company railroad that connects with it in Sydney. I am sure the minister will agree with me that an expansion of the fishing industry is something that is badly needed. It would not require the spending of very much money to extend the pier another 600 feet. If the harbour farther up at what they call the cove were dredged it would provide anchorage. It should be about 16 feet deep. I think it is about six or seven feet now. Dredging and deepening the cove of the harbour to about 16 feet would provide anchorage for many ships. When they unload at the piers they could get out of the way, go up the cove and anchor overnight. There is no need of my labouring the point; the minister is fully aware of it.

There is another point I should like to mention for the minister's information. Over the years much dredging has been done in the harbour. If the pier were extended another 600 feet much of the dredging would be done away with. The coal company has dumps where they dump the slag and refuse from their mines over toward Table head where 1-V colliery is located. A strong tide runs through there and a lot of the dirt and refuse is carried into the channel of the harbour when the tide flows in and out. Of course, the logical thing would have been to remove the dumps years ago. If that were done a lot of the dirt and refuse would not come into the harbour, but it has not been done. If you extended the pier out another 600 feet you would prevent that waste from the dumps coming in; it would go out to sea instead of coming into the harbour. I am reasonably sure that because of the economic situation in that particular area and the recognition of the fact that it is a town in which it is going to be difficult to locate anything to take the place of coal because of the location of transportation facilities—there are good railways and that sort of thing, of course, but it is not the kind of town which could attract industry—there is a possibility of maintaining that town and its investments if the harbour improvements I am suggesting are carried out by the minister's department. Perhaps it is not too late even now to include something in the supplementary estimates.

The second point I would like to mention again concerns a project at Port Morien. I am certain that I have the wholehearted support of the Minister of Fisheries in these two projects. The one I am going to speak of now has been unfinished for about two years. As the minister knows there is a breakwater at Port Morien in the Morien basin. Now, Port Morien is a thriving little village with a population of approximately 1,600. There is a fish plant and a lobster factory at that point. The factory does some canning of lobsters on a small scale.

The breakwater there is another project that was built after the war. It did bring about a great improvement at that point but it is inadequate to handle the fishing industry around the Morien basin. For two years I have been urging that something be done and I know that the fish operator at that point has written much correspondence expressing how anxious he is to obtain some improvements there. If the breakwater were extended it would enable larger boats to fish out of that point and it would provide shelter for them after they unloaded their fish at the pier.

The two projects I have mentioned are not big projects. It amazes me when I hear discussions about more money being spent for technical aid for underdeveloped countries. I am not objecting to such expenditures but I do believe that charity should begin at home. We have here an opportunity of doing something for people who have been taxpayers over the years. These are displaced coal miners and this is an opportunity to rehabilitate them by improving the fishing industry. The difficulty in obtaining half a million dollars for a project that is going to create new wealth in Canada and maintain wealth that has already been established amazes me.

We are big-hearted; we can pick up a power plant in Ontario and ship it over to India, and rightly so, and we pat ourselves on the back and say, "What a great contribution we are making to world rehabilitation". There is great difficulty, however, in getting something done for our own people in communities such as the one I have been describing. The people in this community are going to be taxpayers and if their income is improved the Minister of National Revenue will receive more money.

I should think it would be a great source of pride to the Minister of Public Works if he were to carry out the suggestions I made with regard to Glace Bay harbour and Port Morien. If he were to go down there in a couple of years' time he would see what a difference a small expenditure would make to the two communities I have mentioned. It would assist in building up a Canadian industry which is becoming extremely important on this continent.

Without labouring the matter any further, I would like the minister to tell me definitely before we conclude this item what his department has in mind in relation to these two projects.

I have received letters from the minister. He said the matter was considered last year on the estimates and that it is going to be considered for 1957-58. I have heard that story for two years and it is rather discouraging that nothing has been done. When you get some encouragement about these two projects you inform your people that it is in the hands of a very capable minister who is very much interested in Nova Scotia and its future and you pass on the encouragement you get to the community and everybody is waiting for some improvement. When the estimates for 1956-57 come out you look carefully through the book and find that there is no mention of it. Your own people will say to you, "You did a nice job for that minister; he was a great fellow last year but he certainly forgot you when he was writing the book." I trust that the minister will take a look at these two projects. The amount of money is not great, but the benefits to that community, Mr. Minister, I can assure you, will more than pay for the slight expenditure that the government may have to make. I know that everything is earmarked, that there are always many places where money is earmarked and is not used that year. By a little juggling and a little switching, you might be able to find a little more in the estimates this year and you might be able to re-sort it and put it to use in a part of the country where it is very badly needed.

Mr. Winters: Perhaps I might say a word in reply to my hon. friend from Cape Breton South. I have exchanged a considerable amount of correspondence with him and with other citizens about both these projects. He knows, too, it is the policy of the department not to include provisions in the estimates for any one year unless we are reasonably certain we can spend the money in that year.

We have both these projects under consideration. They have not yet been planned to the point where we thought we could implement the plans this year, but I can again tell him that we are actively concerned in planning both these projects and, subject to the approval of the treasury board, next year I hope it will be possible to carry something in the estimates. I have told him that in correspondence, and so I am not telling him anything now that he has not known before.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like to say a word on the same matter to which my hon. friend from Cape Breton South referred a moment ago. I would not attempt to emulate the artistic description that he gave of the book that was written, but I can read a chapter that is exactly the same as he has said. Perhaps the minister will tell us about this before the item passes. I think there was an item in the estimates some years ago for the construction of a breakwater at Whale cove in Digby county; and that item appeared one year and then was dropped. I have had some correspondence with the minister since, and he said that there were borings to be made, and he suggested that they would be able to go ahead with the construction of this breakwater on obtaining the results of these. I have heard nothing more about it and I thought that possibly the minister could tell us what the plans were with respect to that particular item, before this item 365 passes.

I was not here the other day when the minister's estimates were being discussed. I had an opportunity this morning of glancing briefly over the discussions that took place with respect to the expenditures on the works proposed at Port aux Basques, in Newfoundland, in connection with the ferry from North Sydney to Port aux Basques. When one reads that discussion, not having been here to get inflection of the voice or the human touch in that debate itself, the reading of it leaves a sort of atmosphere of unreality about the matter, which I think should be clarified before this item finally passes. I think that what the committee wants to know and should know is when the minister expects to have these public works completed at Port aux Basques so that the William Carson can operate on the schedule that was originally planned. I realize that may involve something of a crystal ball, and I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce is the only one who professes to have one.

Mr. Winters: He said he had loaned it.

Mr. Nowlan: It is possible that the Minister of Public Works can borrow it. There are obviously two stages in the Port aux Basques development at the moment. There is the construction of a breakwater which, as I read it, the minister says is about 35 per cent completed. I should like to know when that work will be done. That is a fair answer to give.

Then the crystal ball part comes into the fact that apparently some department, or a combination of transport or public works and the C.N.R., are not satisfied that this breakwater may serve the purpose and they have constructed a working model of the harbour which will be tried out this summer to ascertain whether further expenditures will be necessary. I think the minister should be able to tell us when this ferry can operate in that harbour. That is the pertinent question. Will the breakwater be done this summer and, if it proves satisfactory, will the Carson operate there immediately afterwards? When will that be? If, as a result of the working of the model, it is found that the breakwater is not sufficient, will steps be taken immediately to go ahead and carry out such other constructions as may be necessary at Port aux Basques, or will that project be abandoned and possibly Argentia or some other port used?

I take it from reading the Hansard of the other day that all was well in Newfoundland and that everybody down there was very happy about the situation. That is not the way one reads it, in the press anyway. The reason I mention Argentia is that I noticed in the Ottawa Citizen of the the 11th of this month a report that the Newfoundland fisheries minister said in the legislature that he was going to lead his riding out of confederation if this ferry did not operate out of Port aux Basques and if it continues to operate out of Argentia. So apparently he is not too happy about the situation, and the minister would not say that he was a hostile critic of this government. There is the emphasis there.

One of the St. John's newspapers, the Daily Star, the other day commented on this whole question and this does not suggest sweetness and light. It said:

> It is a mad scheme which never had an atom of common sense applied to it.

That is a fairly stringent criticism to make of matters of expenditure which have already amounted to $21,760,000, in which you need a soothsayer with a crystal ball to tell us how much more can be spent and, even after it is spent, whether the works can be used. The other day the minister was probably trying to, shall we say, hold a cloak over other people rather than himself, in an explanation on this which, I should say, has confused the matter more than it was before.

Someone suggested—I think it was the hon. member for Broadview—that the dredging of the natural breakwater there had caused some of the difficulty. The minister indignantly repudiated that and said that that had nothing to do with it at all. Then that was qualified slightly when he told us that he was responsible for the setting up of, shall we call it, the committee of inquiry, something similar to a court martial that we would have in the army except that there was no one to shoot in this case. They set up a committee of inquiry of the Canadian National Railways and the departments of public works and transport. They retained a leading engineer from Great Britain to deal with this matter. According to the minister—though we have not the report in front of us—this engineer said the work of dredging, as I understand it, and in the words of the minister, had had no appreciable effect on the harbour. I do not know how you spell that word "appreciable". I suggest it should be in capital letters. If you take that out it changes the context, of course. I am sure the minister would not want to imply that the dredging was useless. I am sure that what the minister must have meant was that it had no appreciable damaging effect, that it did little appreciable damage to the harbour, because if you take the other interpretation the whole expenditure was wasted. When a particularly experienced engineer is retained by this government to come over and meet this committee and consider the matter, I think that is the most stringent statement one could expect.

As I said, how do you spell that word "appreciable", and what do you mean by "effect"? If you mean damage, that is an admission. Perhaps the St. John's newspaper to which I referred said, "Thank God, you have not destroyed the harbour entirely." Although it was a slightly euphemistic and perhaps apocryphal one, yet perhaps it was not too far out of the way. This is the situation, Mr. Chairman, as it currently appears today. When the hon. member for Greenwood asked the minister last Friday about this committee he said that he was responsible for setting it up. He was asked why and he said it was to get all the parties together and to find out what action should be taken to provide the further protection needed to make this harbour the sort of harbour into which Canadian National Railways would wish to operate their boat. That is what the committee was set up for, to find out what action was necessary to make this harbour the sort of harbour necessary in order that the Canadian National Railways would operate this boat into the harbour.

The minister, Mr. Chairman, comes from a thrifty province. The people in his own constituency are very thrifty, cautious folk. I am sure that down there he has heard many times the maxim about locking the door after the horse is stolen. I think that is the position in which the minister now finds himself. You set up a committee to inquire what should be done to make this harbour the sort of harbour into which the C.N.R. will want to operate the boat after spending $11,500,000 in constructing the boat—millions mean nothing in this case—and incurring total construction costs of over $21,760,000. After all that is done you set up a committee to decide what should be done to the harbour so that the C.N.R. will finally decide to operate its boat there.

If there is a more fantastic story than that I should like to hear it. The minister's explanation the other day to the hon. member for Broadview, an explanation in which, as I said, the minister was possibly trying to defend someone else, was that the dredging had nothing to do with it. Then what did cause this fiasco? Surely we are not dealing with imbeciles. Surely we know that the experts of the civil service are all trained and able men. But we are now faced with the situation that nothing which was done construction-wise created this ridiculous situation, so what did do it? Who was responsible?

Since the dredging was not responsible for the situation why is it that now, after all this money has been spent, we find that the Carson plies back and forth like a ghost ship across the water carrying no cars or passengers and a little handful of freight at an operating cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars last year and the big piers at Port aux Basques cannot be used? The minister says that it is ridiculous to suggest that the dredging has anything to do with it. I say that the government looks ridiculous, or someone for whom the minister is perhaps unfortunately responsible because if the dredging did not do it, what did? If the minister were employing a person who created a situation like that he would fire him summarily without notice and probably sue him for damages as well.

Then we are told that, in addition to having appointed a committee to study the situation and to find out what has to be done, in addition to having brought engineers from Britain and spending millions more on the breakwater, we are now going to make a working model of the harbour. We have got the machinery in the model calibrated so that the waves can play back and forth in the tank this summer, and perhaps some time they will decide what makes Port aux Basques harbour work or tick.

That is the situation, Mr. Chairman, and I think it was not helped the other day by the minister's statement. It is one which certainly requires a more definite statement than we received from the minister. The people want to know when these errors will be over and when the minister believes the harbour can be put into operation and the Carson resume its normal operations, assuming (a) that the present breakwater is all that is required and, (b), if it is not. Of course, the latter, as I said, involves using a crystal ball, but would the minister give the undertaking that if the breakwater is not sufficient we will proceed immediately to construct such other works as may be necessary to salvage this investment or else say frankly that the thing will not work and start a regular scheme of operations somewhere else.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, we have heard a speech that I think my colleague might have been justified in classifying as an emotional appeal.

Mr. Green: You give us an emotional answer.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Winters: I dealt with this matter on the basis of facts, and facts, as I understand them, are something you cannot alter. The hon. member with his legal training may try to alter the interpretation that one puts on facts but the facts remain the same and unalterable. The facts as I gave them when this item was before the house a few days ago and as I gave them last year have not changed. There is nothing I can add or take away from them because they are facts. There is nothing anybody can add or take away from them regardless of what sort of language the hon. member uses in trying to cloak the facts and give them another atmosphere. It just does not happen. The people of Nova Scotia are used to dealing in facts and I am quite willing to have them judge the situation on the basis of the facts I put before them. The hon. member can make as many statements as he likes of the kind he has made here and also throughout Nova Scotia, which I know he has done. They are always interesting and entertaining but they add nothing to the situation and fortunately they take nothing away from the situation.

I think that the advice I have received on this matter and on which we have acted is as sound as anything I have heard from the hon. member today, and I am quite satisfied that if he were in my position he would do the same thing. We are bound by the terms of confederation to operate this service into the harbour of Port aux Basques and we want to make sure that the harbour is a safe harbour under all conditions of weather so that this steamship can operate on schedule. This service is not something that may be operated only when the weather is suitable. The C.N.R. wants to operate a scheduled steamship service and to do that they must have reasonable assurance that they can get the boat into the harbour under almost any conditions of weather.

The hon. member said that I come from a seafaring part of the country. That is true. I come from a seafaring family. My father has been one who has operated into and out of Port aux Basques. I think, without going further into that aspect of the matter, the hon. member can take my word for it that the harbour has always been an exposed and difficult harbour. But it is true that we are bound by the terms of confederation to operate a service into that harbour and we are taking what steps seem to be indicated, based on the best advice available anywhere, to make the harbour the sort of harbour that will fulfil the requirements that the operators of the ferry are seeking.

We are building a breakwater. That will be completed, as I said, around July 1. I hope that statement does not add to the confusion that the hon. member said I created here last week. We are also building a scale model of the harbour. The hon. member sought to ridicule that sort of approach to the problem. Personally I do not ridicule it. I think we should do more building of scale models before we undertake capital structures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: Why did you not do it before?

Mr. Hees: Why did you not do it before?

Mr. Winters: I think there is money to be saved in that way and I think there have been lessons learned which can be applied to good advantage in the future. I do not hesitate to say that, and that is why we are taking the action that we are taking now.

Mr. Harkness: It is a little late though, is it not?

Mr. Hees: Why did you not do it in the first place?

Mr. Winters: The works that have been done will all contribute to the benefit of the harbour.

Mr. Hees: This sounds like the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Winters: It certainly does not sound like the hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Hees: No, we are straight and to the point.

Mr. Winters: I will say this to the hon. member for Broadview, that if I had made statements in the house as inaccurate as the statements he made when these estimates were before the house last Friday I would not wait to be asked to resign. I would volunteer to resign. I have stated the facts of the situation as I know them. If there are any specific questions the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings would like me to answer I would be glad to do so. He asked about the project at Whale cove on which we have had correspondence. I can tell him that is in the planning stage and we hope to bring it forward when the estimates are under consideration next year.

Mr. Nowlan: I have two specific questions. The minister told us that the breakwater will be completed some time in July. Subject to the tests of the working model, shall I say, proving that the breakwater is sufficient, is it the expectation that the boat will be put into operation shortly after July on this later schedule? My second question is this. I am not sure whether or not the minister gave us this information. What will be the estimated cost of the projects which are now being carried out in the harbour, including the breakwater and anything else there?

Mr. Winters: The cost of the breakwater will be about $186,000. The Canadian National Railways said at the time we held the meeting—it was not an established committee and I did not say it was a committee; I said that a meeting was assembled in my office to discuss this matter—that after the breakwater was built they would run the ship into Port aux Basques on an experimental basis in order to see whether the breakwater does achieve the improvements that they would like. If then it is decided on the basis of their own findings coupled with the findings on the scale model which my hon. friend seemed to ridicule—

Mr. Nowlan: No.

Mr. Winters: —to proceed further then we will set about building the other protective works that are considered to be necessary.

Mr. Nowlan: But at least on the scale model, or have you other definite works in mind now in addition to the breakwater?

Mr. Winters: We have no other definite works in mind. We will await the findings of the scale model and I presume the Canadian National Railways officials will have some views after they undertake the experimental runs following the completion of the breakwater.

Mr. Nowlan: May I say just one other word. I do not want any misunderstanding on the record with respect to this matter. I certainly was not ridiculing the idea of a scale model as such. What I was perhaps sarcastic about, and I think justifiably so, was the construction and the operation of a scale model after $21 million had been invested without such a working model. That is what strikes me—as I think it strikes all the people of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland—as something which at least should create a smile. I do not think the people take the matter quite as philosophically as the minister would seem to suggest. He speaks about his own family and seafaring people there. I think the record shows that every seafarer virtually who had experience with that harbour had warned not perhaps the Department of Public Works but one or other of these Siamese twins who twist uneasily one against the other in trying to deal with this matter—I refer to the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works—that the harbour was not fitted for this type of craft. Surely it was always an exposed harbour. A smaller craft would have worked there satisfactorily and would have been entirely satisfactory to the people of Newfoundland. But somebody creates a terrific structure first—builds an ark—and then afterwards tries to create a harbour in which it can be used. That is the plan as to which one is not only sarcastic but which one could ridicule and I think justifiably. I certainly think the minister is wise in building the scale model and I hope it is a project that he will insist will be done on every other occasion in the future so that he personally will not be responsible for another such fiasco as that one.

Mr. Winters: In reply, Mr. Chairman, I can only say that I will allow the hon. member to deal in sarcasm and I will endeavour to deal in facts. I will add this as a fact. The money that has been spent there would have been required to be spent in any event regardless of scale models or any other studies made on the harbour.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister is now indulging in prophecy and soothsaying, not in facts.

The Chairman: Order. Before the hon. member for Kootenay West introduces what I believe would be another subject, I wonder if I might say a few words at this time with regard to the conduct of this debate. We must remember that in committee we are governed by standing order 59(2) which states as follows:

> 59. (2) Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

We are discussing resolution 365 which deals with salaries in the engineering branch of the Department of Public Works. I realize that in his opening statement the minister introduced a number of subjects which come after this item and which are specifically mentioned in the estimates at a later date. This debate therefore has taken a very general turn. However, in view of the specific terms of the standing order I should not like it to be taken as a precedent for future occasions. For instance, we have been discussing Ripple Rock. Under our rules I believe that discussion would more properly take place on the specific item where that is mentioned. Similarly we have been discussing Port aux Basques. Hon. members will find an item on Port aux Basques. I believe it is under resolution 372. In view of the minister's opening statement I did not rise earlier, because the debate can take place under this item if all hon. members so agree. But because of the standing order, I thought I should rise at this time to point out its terms to hon. members and to suggest that I felt most hon. members would agree that our debate could be conducted in a more orderly manner if we attempted to deal with these matters under the specific items as they appear in the blue book. I am sorry to take up this time but I thought I should make those observations.

Mr. Herridge: In view of your remarks, Mr. Chairman, and the policy of this movement always to build an orderly society, I shall not follow the disorderly example of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings but will speak on the appropriate item.

The Chairman: Order. I did not think that I indicated in any way that the debate had been disorderly. As I take it, by agreement, we simply conducted under this item a debate which in other circumstances hon. members might have agreed to conduct under the specific item.

Mr. Hodgson: That is an example of the C.C.F.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have a question which I think is pertinent to this specific item. Can the minister explain why his staff of supervisors of office services has increased 500 per cent from 2 to 10 in these estimates despite the fact that his staff of clerks, stenographers and typists has actually decreased?

Mr. Winters: What page is the hon. member reading from?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Page 470, the one which is in question at the present time.

Mr. Winters: During the year we consolidated some of our operations and in many offices we now have the engineers and architects together. This is an upgrading of some of the personnel in order to provide a general office supervision in these consolidated offices.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I wonder whether the minister could explain that answer just a little bit? It has always been my impression that you consolidated in order to increase the efficiency of your administration, to reduce staff and, perhaps above all, to put more people under the supervision of one individual or one supervisor. After all, that is the whole basic principle of consolidation. You move people together in order that they can be supervised more adequately. But what do we find here? We suddenly find that we have consolidated and that, as a result of consolidation, we have 10 supervisors where formerly we had only two. Now, quite frankly I had expected to see the minister rise and say he had opened some additional offices across the country and therefore he needed a supervisor in each office or something like that. I did not expect to hear him say he had consolidated and therefore needed more supervisors. I wonder if he would give us perhaps a little more adequate information on this score and particularly in view of the fact that his office staff, clerks, stenographers and typists, has actually decreased in number while his supervisory staff has increased 500 per cent.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I have asked the personnel people to let me have an answer to that, and I shall have it in a few minutes.

The Chairman: Shall item 365 carry?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): No, could we stand the item until we get an answer and perhaps go on to the next item.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member for Comox-Alberni desire to speak to item 365?

Mr. Barnett: Yes. I have one or two matters I should like to bring up under this item if it would not inconvenience the minister. Probably we could deal with these while his advisers are getting an answer to the other question. As a matter of fact I have been waiting to raise one or two questions in connection with Ripple Rock, but in deference to your suggestion I shall defer that.

There is one matter that involves the general administration of this branch rather than any particular item which I should like to bring up at this time. I refer to the general plan or design which is being followed, at least in the province of British Columbia on the coastal area, for the construction of the approaches to some of the fishing floats which are being installed there from time to time. I have had this problem brought to my attention, and perhaps the minister might be able to give some information on this subject. The problem which some of the fishermen on the British Columbia coast have brought to my attention arises from the fact that some of these approaches are quite long and go out over a gently sloping beach to deep water. They are being built in a manner which makes them not quite wide enough to allow for the passage of a motor vehicle.

In none of these places would there be any heavy motor vehicle traffic, but situations do arise where fishermen wish to move heavy nets or remove the engine from their boats for major repair or transport fuel to their vessels, and it would be a great convenience to them and save a great deal of backbreaking effort if they were able to take motor vehicles out over these approaches to carry whatever they wanted to move. As the members of the committee know, I am not an engineer but from my observations it would appear that the type of construction which is being used would be quite adequate to carry the ordinary motor car or truck. Most of these approaches are being built on good piling, either driven piles or piles on concrete block bases, and the joists and timbers underneath would appear to me to be adequate for that purpose. It does seem that the increased cost involved in adding another foot or two to the width of these approaches would not be substantial.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I would be interested if the minister could give the committee some statement as to why it has been the policy of this branch to design these approaches in this particular manner, where the approaches are primarily for use in approaching fishing floats rather than a wharfhead which is designed for steamer service and where the approaches are wide enough for motor vehicle traffic.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, there has been no over-all policy that is applied to all approaches to these floats. We try to consider each one on its merits. I do recall the hon. member spoke to me about one some time ago.

Mr. Barnett: Yes, I did mention this problem to the minister. I was wondering whether he might have some information on the subject. While I did mention a specific project that was in contemplation, I also mentioned that I had observed a number which had been designed along similar lines and I had been led to assume there may be some general policy in respect to the plan or design of these approaches. I thought it might be useful if we could have some general clarification of this matter rather than a discussion of one specific project. This matter goes beyond that.

Mr. Winters: We consider each case on its individual merits, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Barnett: There is one other matter upon which I should like to say a few words. I am not sure that I necessarily expect the minister to make a statement in reply but I would be happy if he could do so. This is a matter to which I referred during the discussion of these estimates last year and I believe the year before. It arises out of the fact that, so far as my observation goes, there appears to exist an almost complete impasse in the relationship which exists between the federal Department of Public Works and the provincial department of public works in British Columbia in respect to any form of co-operative arrangement in places where some form of co-operative arrangement could very well effect substantial savings to the taxpayer.

The minister may recall an individual case in last year's discussion concerning the question of harbour protection in respect to the operation of a ferry between Hornby island and Denman island. Also this same problem has arisen in respect to the crossing between Campbell river and Quathiaski cove on Quadra island. This summer I came across an example of the same sort of thing where all that appeared to be involved, at least so far as the people in the locality were concerned, was a small piece of sheet iron. I do feel some definite attempt should be made to work out closer liaison between the engineering branch of the federal department and the provincial department. I am not attempting to assess where the main responsibility for this situation exists, but I do know it is one thing which has caused more exasperation on the part of residents of such communities as Van Anda and Blubber Bay than any other single item. They feel they are caught in a complete run-around because when they go to the federal department they are told any action is the responsibility of the provincial department, and when they go to the provincial department they get the opposite answer. As far as I am concerned most of the matters involved are straight matters of fact, of common sense, of business co-operation and of the effecting of economies through joint action.

A little earlier in the discussion the minister referred to his appreciation of the value of facts of a situation. I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that here is an area of operation which does affect the life of a good many citizens of British Columbia and a careful appraisal of the facts of the situation by the minister's department and by the corresponding department of the government of British Columbia could bring about some desirable results.

If the minister has any comment to make on the matter I would be very glad to have it from him.

Mr. Winters: I have no great profound knowledge to communicate on this business of co-operation between provincial and federal governments in this field of public works. I think the co-operation is pretty good. We each have our own spheres of activity but our relationships are quite close. There is quite a constant flow of correspondence between me and the minister of public works in British Columbia. Sometimes there are projects that one government might be reluctant to acknowledge as being within its jurisdiction and it takes a little time to resolve matters such as that but generally speaking there is pretty good co-operation.

On the question raised by the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace, who pointed out the fact that there has been an increase of eight in the number of supervisors of office services, I told him that came about as the result of consolidations, and that is true. There have been some reclassifications as a result of those consolidations. If he will look further on the same page he will find there has been a decrease of six in the number of clerks, grade IV, and a decrease of two in the number of principal clerks. That means there has been a decrease of eight. Eight people have been reclassified in those district offices where there have been consolidations with the result that there has been an increase of eight supervisors of office services but not an increase of eight bodies.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Are they doing the same work as heretofore?

Mr. Winters: No, they are not, Mr. Chairman; their work is in the nature of that of a manager of the combined office.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): We then seem to come back to the original position. We have consolidated and in the process of consolidation we have 10 managers where we used to have two; is that correct?

Mr. Winters: No, there is no increase. As I have said, it is a reclassification rather than an increase.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it might take a very careful examination of the minister's office operations which we are not in a position unfortunately—and I say "unfortunately" advisedly—to give here in this house. It seems to me it is a most peculiar situation. It was obvious from the rather lengthy time it took to answer the question which was asked in the house, which will not appear on Hansard, of course. It was obvious from the time it took to get an answer to that question that no study has been given to this particular situation at all which, on the face of it, is an unusual one. When we look at the minister's estimates, as has already been pointed out, we find that the amounts for which he estimated last year were almost invariably greater than his expenditures. If there were such careful search for economies and a reduction of expenses and careful administration which this government claims so proudly and so publicly to be doing, it seems to me that items such as this should be investigated more carefully by the government and not brought to the house in this particular form which is so inexplicit.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—

367. Maintenance and operation of plant and contract and day labour works, $3,499,100.

Mr. Green: This item covers maintenance and operation of plant and contract and day labour works in connection with the dredging done by the department. The minister will recall that two or three years ago dredging was undertaken in the first narrows, the entrance to Vancouver harbour. I believe that work was finished some time last year. In addition to that dredging, it was understood that there would be a scale model set up—another one of those models about which the minister spoke a few moments ago—I think to test the effects of this dredging on the currents in the harbour. I think it was further understood that eventually a second stage would be undertaken for further dredging of the entrance to the harbour. Can the minister tell us what progress has been made on that scale model and whether it is still the intention to do further dredging work?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, in April, 1953, an interdepartmental committee on engineering studies of Vancouver harbour and possible improvements to navigation was established by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce and financed by the national research council. The Department of Public Works, the national research council, the national harbours board, the Department of Transport and the University of British Columbia were all represented.

The studies resulted in report No. MH-52, dated December 30, 1954, "Analysis of Tides and Currents in Burrard Inlet" by Mr. W. D. Baines, division of mechanical engineering, national research council. The report is now being studied by the various government departments. No action has been taken yet toward the implementation of the recommendations in the report.

The most spectacular recommendation would be to close the second narrows and construct a lock to permit vessels to pass this point. This action could reduce the velocity to zero and at the first narrows to 1·8 knots. The present maximum velocities at these two points are 6·3 knots at first narrows and 6·8 at second narrows.

The dredging of the first narrows now being undertaken by the department is in keeping with the recommendation of the report but is not on the scale recommended. That matter is still under further study.

Mr. Green: Am I to understand there will be further dredging work done in the harbour and that the government is considering the possibility of locks being installed at the second narrows?

Mr. Winters: I certainly say it is included in the report and that the whole report is under study; but what will be done further I am not in a position to say until the studies have been completed, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Green: Is the report in such shape that it could be tabled in the house?

Mr. Winters: I am not sure that the report has not been tabled, Mr. Chairman. It may already have been tabled. It is a report to my colleague, and I shall ask him about it.

Mr. Green: I do not believe it has been tabled or I would have known about it. If it has not been tabled would there be any objection to tabling it? I ask that because our harbour is vital to the progress of the city of greater Vancouver and in fact to the whole of British Columbia. Great interest has been taken in it and I think the report should be tabled so the public would know what has been recommended.

Mr. Winters: I would think that would be all right but it is subject to the concurrence of my colleague to whom the report is submitted.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, during the past two or three years it has been my privilege to draw to the attention of the house the problem of dredging on the Fraser river. The minister is quite familiar with the problem and I do not intend to devote this period to discussing it. I would like the minister to outline for us now, if he could, exactly what is being planned in the way of dredging on the Fraser river during the ensuing year.

Mr. Winters: Annual dredging to maintain navigable channels is required: (1) for ocean shipping New Westminster to the sea; (2) for coastal tugs and log rafts, North Arm; (3) for tugs and log rafts Sumas to Hope and also in the Harrison river. During 1955-56 (1) and (2) were carried out by departmental plant and by contract dredging. Departmental dredges Nos. 303 and 305 operated at various locations between the mouth of the river and New Westminster and removed 780,183 cubic yards. Contract dredging at Annieville channel and in vicinity of Searle elevator amounted to approximately $272,000. (3) was carried out by equipment employed on a rental basis. Two outfits have been used for various periods each summer for the past several years including 1955-56.

Mr. Hahn: Is the minister satisfied that the new dredge which has been put into operation is adequate to serve the purpose for which it was designed in respect to keeping the channel free of silt?

Mr. Winters: I am satisfied on that point, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I just want to deal for a few moments with the modest dredging requirements of Kootenay West, and I can assure the minister that I shall present my argument in a most restrained manner. I do so because of changed circumstances on the Arrow lakes.

I have discussed this to some extent with some of the minister's officials but in view of the changed circumstances I am somewhat afraid that an engineer who has possibly emigrated from Ontario to British Columbia might not be fully acquainted with the past circumstances and the current needs.

This dredging on the Arrow lakes was commenced about 55 years ago by the federal government to make it possible for the passenger ships of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the stern wheelers, to go between the upper and lower lakes and it has been carried out continuously throughout the years because it was necessary.

Now, some of our people are afraid that because this passenger service has now ceased —there is no passenger service from one end of the Arrow lakes to the other; there are two services, one on the upper and one on the lower lakes but there are no passenger vessels going through the narrows—the departmental officials may come to the conclusion that dredging is not required in the narrows. As a matter of fact, it is required as much as ever. Where there is a lessening of passenger traffic there is an increase in the use of the narrows by tugs and as a matter of fact most of these tugs have a deeper draught than the former stern wheelers that were running up and down the lakes. These tugs tow logs, haul ore and barges and things of that sort.

These bars shift almost every year. Years ago the minister's officials used to conduct quite a comprehensive survey of the whole narrows and take levels and so on. I do not think there has been as much expended in that direction in recent years but because of the shifting bars and the continual washing in of the banks of the Columbia into the centre of the river in the narrows between the upper and lower lakes, annual and constant dredging is necessary.

[Mr. Winters.]

I urge the minister to make certain that there is a thorough investigation of the situation and the needs of the lumber companies, mining companies and other industries before considering the suggestion of not providing in the estimates for dredging on any portion of the Arrow lakes.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I hesitated because I thought the minister might want to make some comment on what has just been said. I rise now to ask if the minister might consider giving a very brief résumé of the planned program for dredging in Prince Edward Island for this season.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might give that information when we are on item 374, which is the harbours and rivers engineering branch detailed by provinces.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—

368. Construction or acquisition of plant and equipment, $379,150.

Mr. McBain: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister one question. I think it was back in the year 1952 when the public works dredge No. 117 sank in Port Stanley harbour resulting in the loss of the life of the captain and one of his crew. Could the minister advise me if that dredge has been replaced or if any consideration is being given to replacing the dredge which sank?

Mr. Winters: May I answer that when we are on the item under Ontario?

Item agreed to.

Graving docks—

369. Maintenance and operation, $979,200.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this item has to do with graving docks. I notice in the details on page 476 there is a notation to the effect that the appropriation for the Prince Rupert drydock is no longer required. As you know, that drydock was sold.

Has the government any plans for establishing a drydock in Prince Rupert? I mention that because I notice further down on the list of estimates provision is made for drydock subsidies, one being the Burrard drydock in North Vancouver and the other the Saint John drydock in New Brunswick. Would the government be willing to pay a subsidy for the operation of a drydock in Prince Rupert or are there any other plans in contemplation which would lead to the re-establishment of a drydock there?

There have been great developments in northern British Columbia. Prince Rupert is the terminus of the Canadian National line across central British Columbia and certainly there should be a drydock in that city. In my opinion it is a great tragedy that the former drydock was sold. Has the government any plan that would lead to the establishment of a new drydock there?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, this is something about which the present chairman knows a great deal. He has been very keenly interested in the developments there as the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite). We were very sorry to see that drydock leave Prince Rupert. It was operated under an arrangement with the Canadian National Railways, and they felt that they did not have enough use for it to merit the very heavy expenditures it was costing. There did not seem to be anybody else available who was interested in taking over the drydock, and it was thereupon sold. To the best of my knowledge, there is no action on foot now and none contemplated to replace the drydock at Prince Rupert.

Mr. Green: I am sure the chairman will endorse my remarks. Would the government give some consideration during the coming year to plans which might lead to the re-establishment of a drydock in that city?

Mr. Winters: The government is always ready to give consideration to any proposal. I do not know that there is any proposal before us by anybody. A marine railway was once discussed, but I have not seen anything of it for some considerable time now and, as I have said, I know of no proposal to replace the old drydock at Prince Rupert.

Item 370 agreed to.

Roads and bridges—

371. Maintenance and operation, $336,643.

Mr. Pearkes: With regard to item 371, I notice in the details as published on page 478 that provision is made for a bridge over a canal and a causeway connecting the city of Kingston with the village of Barriefield. I was wondering whether any representations have been made—and I feel quite certain they have been made—from the city of Victoria regarding the Point Ellis bridge. This bridge spans an arm of the Victoria harbour and connects the capital city of British Columbia with the important naval base at Esquimalt. This bridge has been a hazard to navigation for a great many years. There are now signs at both ends of the bridge that all vehicles must stop before they go on to it and they are allowed to proceed across this rather long span at only ten miles per hour. The result is that a great deal of military traffic coming from Esquimalt will have to go by other routes if it has to reach Victoria. It has to go around by the trans-Canada highway, the new highway that is being built.

Citizens of Victoria and the district of Saanich have really become exasperated at the long delays in getting anything done regarding the construction of this bridge. A vote was taken and a bylaw was passed recently as a result of the plebiscite, authorizing the city to proceed with the construction of a new bridge. I noticed that there is a substantial sum provided, $136,000, in the details under general items. I also understand that the city of Victoria and other organizations have made representations to the minister for a grant towards the completion of this bridge.

There is a very definite federal responsibility connected with this bridge because it is used very extensively by naval and military vehicles. There is no doubt that any funds which the minister could provide out of this general grant would be used this year. He has expressed some reluctance about making available money that is not going to be used in the current year. There is no doubt that a start would be made on reconstruction of this bridge during the coming year, and I hope, without making any sort of emotional appeal but making a very practical appeal, that the minister will say that there is the responsibility on the federal government, that there is the need to have this new bridge and that assistance from federal funds is essential. Could the minister tell me whether there have been representations made, as I feel certain there have been, and, if so, whether the dominion government will be prepared to assist in the construction?

Mr. Winters: There have been representations. The former mayor of Victoria saw me on one occasion with the member from Victoria, and I think he subsequently saw the Minister of National Defence. I was obliged to tell him then that the government does not consider it has a responsibility there and that the provision of an adequate bridge is a local responsibility.

I am well aware of what the hon. member has said about traffic and the navigational aspects, but they are not enough to involve the federal government in financial participation. We are quite prepared to examine the navigational aspects and give those approvals which are necessary and which we can under the authority of the Navigable Waters Protection Act give to authorize a bridge being built in an appropriate manner and in an appropriate place, but there is no obligation upon the federal government to participate financially.

Mr. Pearkes: And therefore there will be no funds forthcoming?

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I assume this is the proper place to mention the subject about which I wish to speak. It has to do with the construction of the bridge on the Kicking Horse river at approximately mile 4 in the Yoho park.

Mr. Winters: If the hon. member would not mind, we could discuss that later when we are on the estimates for the development engineering branch. It is a bridge on the route of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Would that be item 382?

Mr. Winters: Perhaps since it is a matter of particular interest it could be discussed on item 387, dealing with the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Whichever item you wish to discuss it under is satisfactory to me.

Mr. Winters: Item 387.

Mr. Green: This item has to do with bridges. The minister will remember that in former sessions we have had discussions about the Marpole bridge over the north arm of the Fraser river.

Mr. Winters: This deals with maintenance and operation of bridges.

Mr. Green: I think this is the only vote on which that could be discussed. It has been discussed on that same item in other years.

Mr. Winters: Item 382 would be more appropriate, but I do not object.

Mr. Green: I am rather surprised to find there is no vote in these estimates for at least the sum of $400,000, which I understood the dominion government was prepared to contribute towards the cost of a new bridge over the north arm of the Fraser. The minister will remember that the original plan of the dominion government was that there should be a new lift span placed in the old Marpole bridge. The provincial government was unwilling to undertake a change of that kind—and, I think, quite rightly so—and insisted on building a modern high-level bridge, to be known as the Oak street bridge. At first the dominion government took the position that no contribution would be made towards this Oak street bridge. I discussed it in the house in 1954. I refer to page 6774 of Hansard of June 25 of that year. The minister's parliamentary assistant was handling the estimates at that time, and at that page I find the following:

Mr. Bourget: I think the amount of $400,000 has been offered to the province to build the Marpole bridge, but I am informed that they want to build the bridge at Oak street.

Mr. Green: That is right.

Mr. Bourget: So far, I do not think—

Mr. Green: Does that mean then that unless the provincial government agrees to this ridiculous scheme of simply putting a lift on the old Marpole bridge, the dominion government will not make any contribution at all?

Mr. Bourget: I am told that they will probably make the same offer for the Oak street bridge.

Mr. Green: The dominion government will pay $400,000 on a new bridge on Oak street?

Mr. Bourget: That is right, Mr. Chairman.

Last year the minister made a statement on the same question to be found at page 6416 of Hansard for July 19, 1955. There I find the following:

Mr. Green: Does the minister mean the government will pay $400,000 if there is no toll only on the subsidiary bridge which will go from the main bridge to Sea island?

In other words, the new bridge has a main span and then a side span off to Sea island.

Mr. Winters: That is the bridge to which I referred last night.

Mr. Green: In other words, if the toll is only on the main bridge—

The main bridge as distinguished from the bridge over Moray channel.

—that would not prevent the $400,000 being made available to the provincial government; is that correct?

Mr. Winters: That is right, yes.

The following day the premier of British Columbia was reported as having stated that the provincial government was prepared to accept the $400,000 contribution offered by Ottawa for the new highway bridge across Moray channel between Lulu island and Sea island.

There does not appear to be any vote in these estimates and I am wondering whether that agreement still stands. In other words, is the dominion still prepared to pay the $400,000? If so, why is there no vote in the estimates? The bridge is now well under way and I do not know whether or not the provincial government has been assured that the $400,000 will be forthcoming. It would be very helpful if the minister would clarify the situation.

Mr. Winters: The situation is that when we were compiling the estimates I wrote to the minister of public works of British Columbia and told him that the $400,000 was still available on the basis we discussed but that if he did not intend to take advantage of the arrangement in the then oncoming fiscal year I would not carry the amount in the estimates. He agreed there would be no need to carry the amount in the estimates this year.

Mr. Green: Is there a definite agreement between the two governments that the $400,000 is to be paid by the dominion?

Mr. Winters: There is no definite agreement on that. The only agreement is that we have undertaken to pay $400,000 under certain conditions but they have never taken up that offer.

Mr. Green: Exactly what are the conditions today under which the dominion will pay the $400,000? This matter is of vital importance to the people of the lower mainland of British Columbia because if the dominion does not pay the $400,000 the people are going to have to pay that much more in the way of tolls.

Mr. Winters: The conditions are the same as they were last year.

Mr. Green: Can the minister tell us exactly what the conditions are under which the dominion government will now pay the $400,000?

Mr. Winters: The conditions have not changed since we reviewed the item last year. The British Columbia government undertook to build the Oak street bridge on which they said they would charge tolls. They then undertook to build another bridge —I was going to call it a secondary bridge— from Lulu island to Sea island. That bridge would cost something in the order of $1 million. It would be a low level bridge and, as I understood the situation, the British Columbia government did not intend to apply tolls. I told the minister of public works of British Columbia that if that were to be the case; if they would build the bridge, have it toll free and ask for our participation to the extent of $400,000 the money would be made available. That is the basis I outlined to the committee last year and that is still the basis.

Mr. Green: So if the provincial government is prepared to build that bridge and refrain from charging tolls on traffic using the bridge over the Moray channel the dominion will contribute $400,000?

Mr. Winters: That is a correct understanding, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Robichaud: I should like to ask a question of the minister and I think this is the proper item. On two or three different occasions I have brought to the attention of the house the unfortunate situation of the residents of Shippigan island with regard to communication with the mainland. Can the minister tell us if at any time he or his department has received an official request from the premier of New Brunswick or from the department of public works of that province for financial assistance with respect to the construction of a bridge to link Shippigan island with the mainland?

Mr. Winters: To the best of my knowledge there has been no request from the premier of New Brunswick or the department of public works of New Brunswick.

Mr. Montgomery: If such a request is made, will the department give it favourable consideration?

Mr. Winters: I think the hon. member knows the position we have to take here with regard to hypothetical questions.

Mr. Montgomery: Does this bridge fall within the jurisdiction where the dominion makes contributions or do you consider that it comes specifically within provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Winters: I have not examined the matter, Mr. Chairman, because we have had no request that I have seen. However, to give an offhand opinion I would think that it would be a matter within the scope of provincial jurisdiction since the bridge is entirely within the confines of the province.

Mr. Hahn: The minister's statement that the bridge is entirely within the confines of the province of New Brunswick causes me to rise to ask whether that is the basis upon which all bridges that are built by the Department of Public Works are built at this time.

Mr. Winters: As the hon. member well knows, there are many considerations. We have already contributed to some 40 or 50 bridges in the province of British Columbia along the route of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Hahn: I am thinking of bridges not on the trans-Canada highway. Let us take the Jacques Cartier bridge as an example. What causes the federal government to participate in the building of such a bridge within a province when it is not on the trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Winters: The Jacques Cartier bridge, the illustration used by my hon. friend, was built by the national harbours board across the river in Montreal. It is a toll bridge. There were other considerations there.

Mr. Hahn: It was built by the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Winters: No, it was built by the national harbours board.

Mr. Hahn: I have another question. It follows one I put to the minister on March 26. On that day I asked the minister a question respecting the Lulu island bridge. The question, which is to be found at page 2590 of Hansard, reads as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, notice of which I sent him earlier this day. In view of the urgent necessity of calling tenders immediately to replace the Queensboro bridge, is the minister in a position to indicate whether the department approves the plans which have been submitted by the city of New Westminster for replacing the present bridge with a new one?

At that time the minister indicated that if the city followed the proper procedure of advertising the proposed bridge in the newspapers and inserting an advertisement in the Canada Gazette for a period of one month the matter would be considered. I asked that question on March 26. I understand that on the following day the city complied with the regulations. I wish to know now whether or not the plans as submitted have met with the approval of the department and whether the city has permission to go ahead and build a new bridge to replace the Queensboro bridge?

Mr. Winters: The plans have not come before me for approval and therefore the project has not yet been approved.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

372. Newfoundland, $2,260,601.

Mr. Bell: I wonder whether I could ask a question only by way of information on the statutory item that immediately precedes item 372 with respect to Saint John Dry Dock. I understand the back history of the subsidy here and I do not wish to go into the full details of it. But could I just ask what the new plans are with respect to the payments that are going to be made until 1959? I understand that the old 35-year subsidy plan expired in 1954 and that they are under some new system under which the amounts are far less. I am just wondering how that is determined. Is it determined with respect to future works or plans and will this subsidy end in 1959 or are we to have a continuation of the subsidy as long as the drydock at Saint John maintains the requirements having regard to the other essentials that are necessary for the subsidy?

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, we have now extended the agreement to January 1, 1959, with anticipated payments over the period from now to January 1, 1959 totalling something over $95,000.

Mr. Bell: It cannot be exactly the same agreement because the amount is considerably less. The old method of subsidy gave us a payment of $247,500 each year—certainly each year in the last few years—and now that amount is reduced to $165,000. As I say, I know the old 35-year statutory agreement expired, but I am just wondering what the new arrangements are and why the amount is so much smaller.

Mr. Winters: The situation is as the hon. member says, Mr. Chairman. The old agreement expired and this is a new agreement on a reduced basis.

Mr. Bell: I take it that the new agreement is not nearly as beneficial as far as the annual subsidy is concerned. If that is the case, may I ask the reason?

Mr. Winters: I understand it is based on the moneys required and it is in relation to the amount Saint John Dry Dock itself spends there.

Mr. Bell: I appreciate the fact that certain conditions are attached to that payment but am I to take it that the reason this amount is so much smaller is that the works within the drydock itself and the works planned over a given period are far less than what has been going on under the old 35-year plan? I am only looking for information because I do not think the arrangement is as harsh as it appears to be on the surface.

The Deputy Chairman: I think I might perhaps point out to the hon. member that I think it is customary to permit, by courtesy, the odd question on the statutory items as we pass them because that is when they come to the attention of hon. members but that it is not to be expected that the minister or his officials will be prepared to answer offhand questions based on statutes which are not involved in the estimates. A debate on the merits of that statute itself, of course, could hardly come under the estimate item.

Mr. Bell: I appreciate what you have said, Mr. Chairman. I wonder whether I could just have given to me an indication of the position or place where I can obtain the information. I have looked up the public accounts and I cannot find the new details there. If you will only tell me where I can go to look for this new agreement, that will satisfy me. I am only seeking information. I am not criticizing or ridiculing anybody.

Mr. Winters: I understand that. I will be glad to give the information to the hon. member.

Mr. Hahn: I have a further question in addition to the one I asked earlier of the minister with regard to the Lulu island bridge. From his answer am I to understand that since the plans had not been drawn to his attention and since he has not been asked to give approval to them and that since the month's date of expiry has passed, the plans are definitely not approved and will not be approved because of the objections that have been raised?

The Deputy Chairman: I think perhaps I should point out to the hon. member for New Westminster that we are now on item 372 dealing with the acquisition, et cetera of works in Newfoundland. Perhaps he did not realize that we had passed the preceding item on which he raised that question, but it has been passed. However, I will undertake to tell him this. I think his question about Lulu island should have been asked under item 382 in any event. When we reach item 382 which deals with matters of policy, his question will be permitted. For orderly debate at the moment I think we should stay with item 372 which deals with items in Newfoundland.

373. Nova Scotia, $2,532,000.

Mr. Nowlan: I wish to deal with item 373 for one moment. There are two items there in dealing with Nova Scotia. One is in connection with Tiverton. I know the minister has had some correspondence with respect to it. I am glad to see the item which reads "Tiverton—towards wharf repairs". I hope that "towards" is a euphemistic expression which will result in wharf construction. It is one of tremendous importance to the fishermen in that area. I know the minister has had some correspondence and petitions with respect to it. I know he will give it very careful consideration.

The other matter having to do with the Nova Scotia item is in connection with Yarmouth bar—the bar being a sand bar—that is part of Yarmouth harbour. I wonder whether the minister could tell us just what is going on in Yarmouth harbour. I understand the Bluenose has had to interrupt its normal schedule because of some obstructions which are alleged to have been found there. I am told that surveys have been carried on. I presume they are being carried on by the minister's department rather than by the Department of Transport. I wonder whether the minister can tell us at the moment just what the situation is with respect to Yarmouth harbour.

Mr. Winters: As to the first item, namely Tiverton, I may say that I had some correspondence with my friend the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. We intended to do some work on the present breakwater. There was a petition from the fishermen asking us to seek another location. We are still investigating that matter as a result of the petition and other representations.

As to Yarmouth harbour, some question was raised as to whether the dredging that was carried out—

Mr. Nowlan: Will that be an emotional question?

Mr. Winters: —was adequate to meet the requirements of the Bluenose. She had fouled her propellers somewhere and went to the dry dock to have them looked at and checked. It is not at all clear where this ship fouled her propellers. It is not known whether she fouled them in Bar Harbor or on the Canadian side. However, in order to make abundantly sure that the dredging in Yarmouth harbour was all right we swept the entire area that was dredged. There was one small area—one that was difficult to detect—at which there had been some silting since the dredging took place. It was not of any serious consequence. The engineers of the department are satisfied, as am I, that it was not at that spot that the propellers fouled. But in any event, that particular silting has now been removed. But it was not a serious silting.

Mr. Nowlan: There is no further work that you are proposing to do as a result of this sweep?

Mr. Winters: No.

Item agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

374. Prince Edward Island, $925,000.

Mr. MacLean: On a previous item I believe the minister said he would make a brief statement concerning the dredging program for Prince Edward Island when this item was under consideration. In addition to that, since I am on my feet I should like to ask him to say something about the program planned for Wood Islands. I presume it is in connection with modification of the harbour so it will accommodate the new ferry which is being built now. Perhaps he might also say a word specifically about Point Prim and Rustico. I notice there is nothing in the details here concerning any project at Rustico harbour, but what I have in mind was the program that was under way there to make it feasible to build an ocean highway to connect the two sections of the national park.

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asked first about the program of dredging in Prince Edward Island for the forthcoming year. Listed on page 481 of the estimates book there is shown an amount of $37,000 for dredging at North lake; but in addition to that we propose to carry out dredging in Prince Edward Island at Wood Islands, to which I shall refer again; Launching (outside); Murray river; Panmore island; North Cardigan; Cardigan bridge, Rustico little harbour; Egmont bay; Skinner's pond; Launching (inside); Poplar Point and Basin Head.

At Wood Islands the situation is that the present dock is designed to accommodate a vessel with a 38-foot beam and the new ferry, which is to be in operation perhaps sometime late in 1956 or early 1957, will have a beam of 54 feet and a free board of 6 feet 5 inches as compared with 4 feet, 5 inches for the Prince Nova now in operation. The present ramp is placed to accommodate the present boats and would not be suitable for the proposed new ferry.

The traffic has developed in quite a substantial way there and during 1953 a total of 80,486 passengers, 21,072 autos and 6,816 trucks were ferried. There is, therefore, need to carry out some work to accommodate the larger volume of traffic. Construction of a span on the west side of the existing pier and three cellular steel sheet pile piers to protect the berth for the new ferry are contemplated. In addition a new loading ramp will be required as well as wharf lighting and improvements to the water supply system.

At Point Prim the amount that is shown in the main estimates on the same page to which I referred is required to construct an extension to the wharf and an isolated rubble mound breakwater to provide better berthing facilities for the fishing fleet as well as protection from storms while at anchorage in the harbour. It is proposed to construct a 240 foot extension to the existing wharf with creosoted timber cribs 20 feet by 40 feet joined by 20 foot spans; the outer 120 feet to be at a 30 degree angle east from the line of the main wharf. In addition, it is proposed to construct an isolated rubble mound breakwater 90 feet long and 30 feet wide.

At Rustico harbour our plans are not yet in a final stage and we are still planning what we are going to do; that will be given more consideration later.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. MacLean: Will the minister say when it is hoped to have the work at the islands completed? I suppose it will be completed in ample time to accommodate the new ferry.

Mr. Winters: The work is not yet under contract; it is a two year program and we expect to have it completed next year.

Mr. Nicholson: I find that Manitoba and Saskatchewan have been left out this year. I wonder if the minister could explain how it is there is nothing for Manitoba and Saskatchewan in view of the $15,000 last year?

The Chairman: The item that I called was resolution No. 374 which deals with Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Nicholson: I am sorry, I thought you were taking them all together.

Item agreed to.

375. New Brunswick, $2,125,000.

Mr. Bell: I have three questions which, as I indicated to the minister last Friday, I have been saving for this particular item. First of all, I should like to inquire about the large item of $600,000, I believe it is one of the largest items in the estimates for the maritimes, regarding Courtenay bay. What are the ultimate plans for Courtenay bay? Is it just a matter of continuing with the dredging or is there some plan the department has in mind for this large item? There has been considerable discussion in the city at various times regarding the possibility of making more wharves available in the Courtenay bay area, and plans have been drawn up by the board of trade and others in this connection. I wonder if this work is being done with that in mind or is it just routine dredging?

Mr. Winters: This is not done with any future expansion in mind; it is just to take care of the current needs.

Mr. Bell: My second question deals with the Negro point breakwater which I mentioned last Friday. I mentioned that this breakwater had been allowed to deteriorate, and my question is, are we going to just continue to pile rocks on this breakwater every time a hole appears or is there some farsighted program for this breakwater? Should it be extended to Partridge island or should it be cut off shorter than it is? What is the policy regarding this important breakwater which extends across the mouth of the whole harbour?

Mr. Winters: The program is to maintain the breakwater as required. There is no program now before us for expansion. This year we intend to place cover stone to provide repairs to the outside face and the top to a small portion of the breakwater. Tenders have been received for this work and a contract has to be awarded. We expect that will be done in the near future.

Mr. Bell: May I just ask a question with respect to the practice in public works, for example in a case where you are repairing a breakwater. There is an amount of $25,000 laid aside: would one contract be given for that and would there be a completion date? The reason I ask, Mr. Chairman, is that members are bothered all the time with telephone calls. About once a week a truck goes by with a load of gravel and everybody wonders where it is going, who the contractor is who has another bit of government patronage. I wonder if the minister could state what is done in that respect, because nobody knows what is happening. If there were a general announcement that a contract had been let and there was a date connected with it, the name of the contractor, then I am sure better relations would result and I am sure it would also save the members concerned a lot of trouble.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, the practice is to invite tenders and award a contract as a result of public tender calls. The department now publishes a list of awards of contracts every month, so it is a matter of public notice and in most, if not all, the contracts we award there is a termination date. The whole thing, therefore, is a matter of public notice.

Mr. Bell: What amount is generally considered to be the level at which there has to be a formal announcement? I appreciate the fact that a lot of small repair work is done which it is not necessary formally to announce, but would an amount of $5,000 or $10,000 be too small to announce?

Mr. Winters: Yes. We do not normally announce public contract awards because we have so many. There is a great multitude of them. I do not think the public generally is interested in them. As a matter of fact we have not found a very keen public interest in the lists we do publish from month to month. But amounts under say $25,000 are not published in the general list of contracts awarded.

Mr. Bell: My third question concerns that old bogey of the Lorneville breakwater. There has been considerable discussion of the breakwater inside and outside the house. I was down to Lorneville last year. I had to get most of my information first hand by looking over the situation. May I review for a minute what has happened, Mr. Chairman? A new breakwater at Lorneville was decided on a few years ago. Plans were inaugurated for the new breakwater and I must say they were quite extensive. The thing looked as if it was going to be most worth while. Through some error in judgment of the engineers either inside or outside the department they failed to take the advice of the local people and I suppose they failed to make all the necessary investigations. I was interested a few minutes ago to hear the minister say in connection with Port aux Basques that everybody knew the difficulties of the harbour; that is, everybody who had experience. This is another example of about the same thing. Everybody in Lorneville knew the difficulties there, the type of ledge and the type of shore that the pilings would be driven into.

In order to bring the matter up-to-date, over two years ago the breakwater caved in and it presented an almost impossible engineering task to do anything with it as it stood. After considerable time and, I suppose, some investigation it was decided —and the minister answered a question to that effect last year—that the breakwater would be built over or sidings put on it. The point I am getting at is, I went down there at Easter and I saw the side that is being put on the breakwater. It is really just a float along the breakwater. I talked to some of the fisherman down there and they feel that as far as the department has gone it is satisfactory but it is not enough. It should be extended out farther. More work needs to be done on the breakwater. I want to know whether this is the end of the work and what is to be the final outcome of the breakwater at Lorneville?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, this is a breakwater that was constructed I think some time back in 1952 or 1953. When I became minister I learned that there had been an uneven settlement. It was brought to my attention by the hon. member for Charlotte. I called together the engineers of the department and asked them for a report as to why there was an uneven settlement and they told me that although borings had been taken they did not tell the whole story of the bottom there. We then engaged the services of a consulting engineer, Mr. McCulloch, and asked him to make a report on it and tell us what he thought should be done. He did that. As a result of that we have been doing some work on the breakwater.

The report recommended that no additional weight should be put on the bed of the harbour at this place as there are layers of unstable material. In 1954 a light timber pile structure was constructed for wharfage purposes in the area protected by the damaged breakwater which still fulfils its intended role as a breakwater. That work was completed in December, 1955 and we are waiting to see what further settlement there will be before we undertake any further work.

Mr. Bell: I appreciate the difficulties and I appreciate what the minister has said. I certainly do not know who was the first actually to bring this to the attention of the minister but I can say it was common knowledge of everybody in the maritime provinces about five minutes after it caved in. Whoever was able to get to the minister first, I suppose, was the one who brought it to his attention first. This is a serious situation for the fishermen who are involved in this area. I would simply end by urging the minister to continue the work. This matter should not be treated as finished for one minute. I am not going to question the minister further. I never have been too pressing with the minister about just what ought to be done there because I realize there are a lot of difficulties and I realize that someone who is responsible erred. I am simply asking him to continue to watch the situation down there because it is not satisfactory the way it is and the fishermen are not satisfied today. Everything that went into the original breakwater has gone out the window. There is considerable criticism of everybody from the bottom right up to the minister himself. I leave that with him. I hope he will continue to give it his consideration.

Mr. Brooks: I have a question on the wharves on the Saint John river and its tributaries. The minister probably knows that about 25 years ago those wharves were taken over by the federal government. At that time there was considerable traffic of river boats up and down the river. This has more or less ceased. There is quite a tourist traffic of United States yachts, tugboats and other boats going up and down the river. Those wharves are in a very bad state of repair. As a matter of fact, many of them are practically useless. Have the engineers of the department reported on the condition of the wharves on the Saint John river and its tributaries? I know it is not possible to keep up all the wharves that were used before, but it does seem to me that certain wharves might be picked out so that boats going up and down might know that there was a certain wharf at a certain place that could be used. Possibly this matter could be looked into.

Mr. Winters: I will do so.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Winters.]

377. Ontario, $5,146,500.

Mr. Hodgson: I should like to ask a question about the dock or wharf that was promised in 1953 at Hawk lake in Haliburton county.

Mr. Winters: I was not aware that anybody had promised a wharf there, but the situation is that the necessary lots have been purchased by the Department of Public Works for the construction of a wharf. We have recommended to treasury board to authorize the construction of the wharf during this coming summer. There is not a specific item in the estimates because a large amount of money is not involved and the work can be done from the general vote for miscellaneous works.

Mr. Hodgson: It will be built this summer?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. Cardiff: Last Friday I asked the minister about some work that was being done at Bayfield and at that time he did not have the figures before him. Can he tell me what has taken place?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, at Bayfield we have a project under way in the harbour to extend a marginal wall. Mr. Cassel had two buildings on the site of this work, a shed and an old ice house. He did not hold a licence of occupation and paid no rental. Last fall Mr. Cassel removed the buildings from the site so that construction could go on. He is making application to the Department of Transport for a licence of occupation of the site where his buildings existed before. We have already stated that we would have no objection to his getting such a licence after the work is completed.

Mr. Cardiff: Do you know to what extent the work has progressed?

Mr. Winters: I am told it is somewhere in the order of 40 per cent completed.

Mr. Cardiff: During the last several years requests have been made for some repair work to be done at Port Albert. So far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned I do not think it is very important but there is a natural harbour there. In its present condition boats are unable to get into it because of the sand bar which lies across the mouth of the river, and requests have been made for a short extension of the pier. The pier is now almost covered with sand and I am told that this is an exceptionally good place for boats to run under cover in case of a storm. The fishermen fish out of that port and this work is extremely necessary as far as they are concerned. It would not cost a great deal of money but this improvement would be of great advantage to the fishermen who fish in lake Huron.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, item No. 377 which deals with Ontario also lists Manitoba and Saskatchewan following which there is a zero. I wonder if the minister could explain why the item shows over $5 million for Ontario and nothing for Manitoba and Saskatchewan this year. Could the minister say whether requests for an appropriation under this item have been received from various places in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, particularly from Churchill, Beaver lake and some of the northern lakes?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, these items are intended to provide funds for dredging that is required. The hon. member should be gratified that no dredging is required in Manitoba or Saskatchewan for which funds were necessary in this vote.

Mr. Stanton: Mr. Chairman, could the minister inform me what is the nature of the construction of the wharf at Rockport?

Mr. Winters: What is the nature of it?

Mr. Stanton: Yes.

Mr. Winters: I do not know what the hon. member means. We have no project at Brockville.

Mr. Stanton: I am sorry. I said Rockport, not Brockville. An amount of $45,000 is shown in the estimates for Rockport. The details can be found on page 484, about the middle of the page.

Mr. Winters: The amount of $45,000 for Rockport is required for the construction of a wharf. The existing wharf serves the general public and the Department of National Revenue. The congestion at the wharf is very great. The public and customs traffic must seek landing space at neighbouring private wharves. As a result of this customs officials have to leave their offices and go to the private docks concerned in order that the boats can be properly examined. It is the intention to construct a new wharf for public use and to turn over the existing wharf for the exclusive use of the customs and excise division of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Stanton: Is it the intention of the department to invite tenders for that construction?

Mr. Winters: Yes. Tenders are due on the 2nd of May.

Mr. Stanton: I understand that tenders have already been invited?

Mr. Winters: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Stanton: Mr. Chairman, could the minister inform me if there have been any further conversations between the customs at Gananoque and the department with regard to enlarging the wharf at Gananoque for the convenience of the customs?

Mr. Winters: There have been discussions but the matter has not yet come to my attention for any action.

Mr. McBain: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few observations about the harbours on the north shore of lake Erie that border along the riding of Elgin. I am very pleased that about a year ago the minister found time to make a trip to visit the harbour at Port Stanley. I am sure that he made observations of the conditions of the inner harbour there at that time. I hope that some of the work in the inner harbour, which is provided for in this vote, will take place this year. The vote last year was $502,000 and this year it is $300,000. Could the minister tell me how much of this has been carried over from last year and how it will be spent?

Mr. Winters: It is expected that when the accounts are in we will find that out of last year's vote we spent a total of $224,500.

Mr. McBain: Was that for pier improvement work entirely?

Mr. Winters: The contract was in the amount of $325,420 with the Cementation Company (Canada) Limited. Approximately 45 per cent of the work on the timber substructure and 5 per cent of the concrete super-structure have been done at a cost of $129,500.

Mr. McBain: Is it expected that they will complete that contract this year?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. McBain: Could the minister tell me if provisions had been made for improvements to the east wall of the inner harbour?

Mr. Winters: As my hon. friend has said, the total amount voted is $300,000. That will be applied to complete the contract with Russell Construction Limited for dredging, $160,000, and also toward the contract with the Cementation Company for repairs to the west breakwater, $140,000, making a total estimated requirement of $300,000.

Mr. McBain: Mr. Chairman, I was in consultation with the minister's staff a few weeks ago. I hope I was properly informed at that time that there was an item provided for the east wall breakwater in the inner harbour.

Mr. Winters: Yes. I am told that we have also provided for the construction of 150 feet of the wall inside the harbour.

Mr. Pallett: I notice that under this item there is provision for the expenditure of $800,000 for the harbour at Port Credit. It may be of interest to hon. members to know that this rounds out the transportation facilities in the county of Peel, my riding. I suggest that this riding may be unique in that regard. In the one riding we have the four modern means of transportation in considerable quantity. We have the Malton airport, which is one of Canada's better known methods of facilitating air transportation; we are crossed by the two transcontinental railways, with many lines; we are traversed in many places by the best highways in Ontario. Now this harbour is going to provide us, we hope, with a very satisfactory means of transportation by water.

In this regard, I hope the minister will be sure that this harbour, when completed, will be a model harbour. Port Credit is a model community in other regards, and it would be most fitting that the harbour take the aspect of the village of Port Credit and the rest of the county and fit in so that this will become a little jewel on the great lake of Ontario.

This is 1956, and there is a wonderful opportunity to make this harbour a showplace. It has the best natural shelf on the great lakes. It is located between those rival cities of Hamilton and Toronto. There is every opportunity to show to the people of the world what the department can do in the spending of money in this modern age. I urgently urge the minister to be sure that this harbour fits in with the general tone of the community and that it will be something to which our children will be able to point with pride as an example of modern architecture, modern construction and a modern approach to a harbour.

When the harbour is completed, there is something that might be considered by the minister. We are rather jealous of our local rights in our county, and we would like some day to have a harbour commission administering the harbour. But I shall leave that until a future time.

As far as questions are concerned, I wonder if the minister would tell me how much was actually spent last year and how much it is actually proposed to spend on the harbour in this fiscal year.

Mr. Winters: The amount spent last year was $300,000. This year we expect to spend $800,000.

Mr. Charlton: I should like to point out to my hon. friend from Peel that there is another harbour probably just as important as Port Credit, and that is Port Maitland. I wonder if the minister could give us some idea of what has been accomplished there and how much of last year's appropriation was spent.

Mr. Winters: Last year $5,000 was spent. This year we estimate that $29,000 will be spent.

Mr. Charlton: Most of the money that was provided last year was not spent, and the amount for this year is not going to be increased in compensation for the amount that was not spent last year. I am sure we appreciate even this small amount being spent in Port Maitland, because I wish to point out that it could be a very important port. The Grand river empties there. It could be an important port on the great lakes.

I know the minister has been asked to do something about the small wharf at the town of Dunnville to accommodate tourist boats and yachts from the United States and other parts coming into that little harbour and going up the Grand river. Each year they hold an annual meeting there, which probably 40 or 50 United States yachts visit, and there is practically no accommodation there for them when they wish to tie up. I wonder if the minister would give consideration to doing something, even in a small way, to make it possible for these United States boats to be tied up there in a respectable way at least.

I wish to thank him for the two shore lights that were put in at Nanticoke Creek last year to aid the fishermen.

Mr. McBain: As my colleague, the hon. member for Peel, has dealt with the possibilities of Port Credit harbour, I feel I should continue a little further and point out the possibilities of two of the finest harbours on the north shore of lake Erie, Port Burwell and Port Stanley. These harbours are served by excellent rail facilities connecting the five major railroads from Port Stanley to St. Thomas and London. I refer to the New York Central, the Chesapeake and Ohio, the Wabash, the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways. These are all main line railroads. Port Burwell is served by the C.P.R. and connects with the main lines of the C.P.R. and C.N.R. at Woodstock.

By motor transport, these ports are served by two excellent highways connecting eventually to No. 2 and No. 3 highways and also the dual highway No. 401.

In this area big industrial expansion is inevitable. I would ask the minister to give consideration to an over-all planning program so that these harbours of Port Stanley and Port Burwell will have improvements and extension work completed to meet the needs of industry that may desire to locate in these areas.

The fuel business, in both oil and coal, is expanding rapidly at Port Stanley. I would refer to one company alone that has storage capacity at the present time for 27 million gallons of oil; and an additional tank is planned this year for a capacity of five million gallons. Last year Port Stanley imported over 200,000 tons of coal. We have rapidly expanding grain transit business there. This year they expect to have, I believe, 26 silos for carrying a capacity of 200,000 bushels. The minister visited this port last year. From this port left the first boatload of soybeans ever exported from Canada to England.

We also have here a lift bridge. I am sure the late Hon. Mitchell Hepburn, who was then premier of Ontario, had foreseen the future expansion of Port Stanley, along with the federal Department of Public Works. They jointly provided a lift bridge for future expansion at Port Stanley. When a storm occurs the boats have to go up under the lift bridge and tie up to willow trees. Sometimes the harbour becomes so rough that they cannot take a chance—I am referring especially to the fishing boats—to remain in this harbour. I hope the minister will give consideration to a little improvement above the lift bridge to provide somewhat better accommodation for these boats to tie up when storms arise.

Mr. MacKenzie: Before this item passes I should like to inquire about the progress that has been made with respect to the repairs and improvements to the wharf at Sombra on the St. Clair river. This contract was awarded last year and the work was never commenced. I wonder whether the contract is to be proceeded with at an early date. I ask the question because it is quite an important harbour and the delay is causing a good deal of embarrassment.

Mr. Winters: The contract has been awarded, the work has been started and we expect it to go forward this year.

Mr. Anderson: I should like to ask the minister what the department has in mind for the harbour at Port Dover this year. Some weeks ago the engineers from London were down there. It is proposed to establish a ferry service to Erie, Pennsylvania, this year. In order to do that a certain amount of dredging work has to be carried out. I think soundings have been taken and perhaps estimates have been drawn up but I have had no inkling as to what the department has in mind.

Mr. Winters: Nothing has come forward for my consideration but I will be glad to keep in mind the remarks of the hon. member.

Mr. McBain: Is the minister in a position now to answer the question I asked this morning regarding the dredge that sank at Port Stanley?

Mr. Winters: Dredge 117 sank at the entrance to Port Stanley harbour while at work there in May, 1952. Subsequently several attempts were made to raise it. In 1954 it was partially raised and moved into an abandoned ferry slip on the west side of the west pier at Port Stanley. It is not intended to replace this dredge. Since 1953 another departmental dredge has been assigned to work in the harbour of Port Stanley and other harbours in the area. Dredge 117 has been sold through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

Item agreed to.

378. Alberta and Northwest Territories, $120,000.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to this item of $120,000. I notice on page 485 it says "item not required for 1956-57". I wonder what progress is being made there and to what extent development is taking place.

Mr. Winters: This item is required to extend the existing bank protection at Waterways approximately 160 feet upstream. We have had some problems acquiring property but we expect to go forward and spend at least $10,000 this year.

Mr. Brooks: I notice there is money being spent at Aklavik in the north. I thought that town was being moved to another site. If so, why are we spending money there?

Mr. Winters: This is for the wharf at the new site.

Item agreed to.

379. British Columbia and Yukon, $3,493,500.

Mr. Simmons: Is it proposed to proceed with the construction of the seaplane float at White Horse this spring in line with representations made by the White Horse board of trade last year?

Mr. Winters: I think that is a matter that still has to be cleared with the Department of Transport. I am not sure that they have asked us yet to build a seaplane float there.

Mr. Green: In the details to be found on page 485 there is reference to a vote for a fishing harbour in False Creek at Vancouver and also to the sea wall around Stanley park in Vancouver. Can the minister tell us whether the first vote will complete the fishing harbour? I am also somewhat concerned because the vote for the Stanley park seawall indicates that it will complete the work. My understanding is that the wall is far from finished and I am wondering why the words "to complete" appear in the vote.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, with respect to False Creek, the amount in the estimates is towards completion of the project. It will not finish the project, which it is estimated will cost somewhat more than the amount shown in the estimates.

Mr. Green: When will that harbour be completed?

Mr. Winters: We expect that it will be completed in the early summer of 1957. With respect to the other project, the sea wall at Stanley park, the words "to complete" appear here because we have notified the board of park commissioners of Stanley park that we will go forward with this work this year but that hereafter it will have to be regarded as something beyond the scope of our responsibility.

Mr. Green: Why has the department decided now to stop that vote? An amount has been voted for quite a few years and the project was undertaken in the first place to complete a sea wall around Stanley park. That work is far from finished, and I do not understand why the dominion government should now withdraw its support.

Mr. Winters: There has been no question of that. The sea wall was undertaken to prevent erosion because of navigation. This will complete the protection of that area where erosion can be considered to be attributable to navigation.

Mr. Green: What was the reply from the city to the proposal that the dominion would not pay anything more?

Mr. Winters: I do not recall that we have had a specific reply. I understand they accept the position as being a reasonable one because our job is limited to protection against erosion where the erosion is attributable to navigation or where it endangers navigation or where it is attributable to some federal government structure. When we get outside the terms of these definitions then the erosion is not a responsibility of ours within the framework of this department.

Mr. Green: There is navigation on all sides of the park that are bounded by the sea, and I would hope that the department would look into the situation again. I do not know just how they decide that, at a certain point, navigation does not cause erosion. There are boats operating on all sides of the park.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Winters: We have looked into this very carefully, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, on the departmental administration item I urged the minister to look into the situation at Arrowhead where the Columbia enters the Arrow lakes owing to the urgent necessity for the building of a breakwater and necessary dredging to turn the direction of the river. I am not going to repeat the remarks I made at that time. They are in Hansard. However, I should like the minister to tell the committee if he will have this matter thoroughly investigated. It is a most important question to the people who live along the Arrow lakes and to some people who live in the constituency of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. While I am on my feet, I want to bring to the minister's attention the fact that in 1930 there was a rock and brush mattress built near Burton in the narrows. It was built because the department built a dam and turned the direction of the river and on that account occasioned erosion of the east bank of the river thereby washing away farm land. That mattress cost several thousand dollars and it has remained in fairly good condition up to the present time. But when I was going down in the boat recently I noticed that one corner of the mattress has now been lifted. The expenditure of two or three hundred dollars will repair that mattress and save a great deal of damage that may occur in the future.

Another matter I wish to mention is this. I am going to ask the minister if he will inquire into this question of straightening the Duncan river and removing log jams. There was a practice some years ago, I understand, of turning $1,000 or $2,000 over to the game department of the provincial government and letting the matter go at that. I think that was a most unsatisfactory arrangement. I should certainly like him to have his officials look into the arrangement at the present time. In making that statement I am expressing the opinion of the long-time residents of the district. I am going to conclude by saying this, Mr. Chairman. I may say that I do not take up the time of the house at great length on the estimates. I will focus the minister's attention on the importance of our problems by telling him that the Kootenays are the Garden of Eden where there is the highest primary and industrial production per capita in Canada and the greatest possibility for expansion per capita owing to the vast wealth of natural resources. Because of these conditions I think special consideration should be given to the needs of this district.

Mr. Hahn: In the estimates at page 485, in the details I notice a reduction of some $60,000 in the cost of Fraser river dredging and in the item "Fraser river—towards improvements" a reduction from $869,000 to $324,000 this year. I wonder whether the minister will explain the reasons for the reductions.

Mr. Winters: Dealing first with the questions raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West, I may say that the Arrowhead chamber of commerce recently requested an investigation to determine the cost of construction of a diversion wall near the Canadian Pacific railway track at Arrowhead. An investigation was carried out and the work is estimated at $500,000.

Mr. Herridge: That is absurd.

Mr. Winters: The effectiveness of the wall is very doubtful as regards relieving erosion problems. On March 15, 1956 the chamber of commerce were advised by the deputy minister that this project would not be undertaken. This seems to be a natural erosion problem and is somewhat connected with the flooding of adjoining property. A further investigation is now being carried out by the district engineer as to ways and means other than the proposed diversion wall which could be effective in this case.

On the matter of snagging at the Duncan river I may say that the situation there is not quite as represented by the hon. member when he said that the Department of Public Works annually has turned money over to the provincial government to do snagging on the upper Duncan river. On the upper reaches of this river, when it has not been possible to do the snagging with our own forces and equipment, contracts have been given to do the work. There is no record of the Department of Public Works ever providing money to the provincial government to do this work. Snagging on the upper Duncan river is done by contract when our forces are fully committed elsewhere.

As to the Fraser river, we have had large votes here last year and in preceding years but we did not spend the amounts that were provided. Last year one item was $310,000. We have not been able to spend the other amount provided. This year the funds being requested are in line with the work we think we can do. We do not propose to leave anything undone there.

Mr. Hahn: How much was spent last year on the Fraser river development itself? You say you did not spend all of the $310,000 last year. How much did you actually spend last year?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I meant on the other item of $869,000. We did in fact spend the $310,000. Against the $869,000 we spent a total of $545,000.

Mr. Hahn: And you are anticipating cutting that item down to $324,000 in this ensuing year?

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Mr. Hahn: Where do you expect to bring in the special economy?

Mr. Winters: I can tell the hon. member what we have in mind there. We have four projects which total $324,000: To complete the Garry point bank protection, $192,000; Lulu island bank protection, $66,000; operation of Fraser river model, $50,000; and for our annual survey $16,000 for a total of $324,000.

Mr. Hahn: As to the river itself, I was interested to hear the minister's response to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra when he said that the only place where a sea wall is built is where the erosion is attributed to navigation. That brings me again to the question that I raised the other day with respect to the region on the Fraser river known as Canoe pass. That is a river channel and it is used today by river boats and other boats. I would ask him to have some examination made into that region in order to discover whether or not it would be possible to complete the rock work that needs to be done in that particular region. I understand there is a length of only about 1,500 feet that has to be completed. I would also ask him to have the matter examined into to see whether it could not be done.

Then I wonder whether the minister is in a position to answer the question that I raised last Friday on the estimates when I was referring to the breakwater at White Rock. At that time I indicated that the breakwater had been built in 1953, although actually it was built in 1954. He thought it was built in 1902. Would he care to elaborate at this time?

Mr. Winters: As to White Rock, a new breakwater 200 feet long was completed in 1953. This new breakwater was built to provide facilities together with floats and so on not only for existing navigation but to provide also for future needs. It has been under observation ever since. Our latest reports are that the greater local traffic which was expected has not yet fully materialized. We are holding the extension in abeyance until a better picture can be obtained as to the use to which the facilities are to be put in the future. Our officials report that there exists sufficient protected area behind the breakwater to accommodate the boats using the facilities at present.

Mr. Hahn: Just while we are on that topic, may I say that I appreciate the minister's point of view and the fact that his officials would indicate that there is sufficient breakwater there. But if he asks them to have another look at the situation, I think they will probably discover that the reason there is sufficient is that the boats which should ordinarily use that breakwater today are moored at Blaine and at the cities of New Westminster and Vancouver. I feel that the expenditure we had on that occasion of some $152,000 is one that is completely lost unless it can be of some use to the people in the area. I am satisfied that the people in the district feel otherwise about it. I do not understand the attitude of the government with respect to that particular breakwater, in view of the fact that it was built for a purpose and that it apparently is not being used for that purpose. Now, I should like the minister to have his officials examine into the reason why it is not being used. I am satisfied they will discover it is not being used because it is useless.

Mr. Herridge: I just want to say I was pleased to hear the minister's explanation and to note he is having the matter investigated further. I can see now there is a misunderstanding and that is the reason for the vast discrepancy between the figure given by the minister's engineers and the figure I suggested. They have in mind a lengthy breakwater, and I am very glad to hear the minister is going to have the matter investigated further. I think it is definitely the responsibility of the department because the breakwater and dredging are necessary to prevent the silting up of the approaches to the wharves and the silting up of the navigation channel, as well as to prevent the inflow of large ice floes in the spring which make navigation very difficult in the early part of the year.

I mentioned also that I never like to be wrong. I said that, as far as I knew, that money was turned over to the provincial government. I was not sure. I do know the provincial government employees did the work, and I am quite correct in that.

Mr. Hahn: I did not get a reply from the minister with respect to the protection that is required at Canoe pass. I was wondering if you would have the matter examined in so far as the effects upon navigation are concerned on the Fraser river between Westham island and the mainland, and ascertain whether or not that 1,500 feet of rock work could be done in the ensuing year?

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, there are a few matters, some of which I have mentioned on other occasions and not received replies, about which I should like to ask the minister now. Possibly I did not receive a reply because of the large number who were seeking information. But I have noticed the great ability of the minister's advisers today to supply even minor details, so I should like to list a number of items. I believe the minister will agree with me that the government has often advocated the decentralization of industry. I know it is only natural for the manager of any business or department of government to resist any further decentralization because the natural growth of the department always enhances the stature of the office held by the individual concerned.

In connection with this matter of harbour control and harbour management I am wondering whether the minister has ever handed out any advice to his senior engineers to see whether or not it is possible to have a little more decentralization. He have the harbours at New Westminster and Vancouver and they are developed to almost as high a degree as it is possible to develop them, yet most of the money that is being spent seems to be going into the further development of these harbours and very little into the development of any harbour facilities—this includes dredging—in the areas around those two major centres. I cannot see why the New Westminster harbour board, if it is unwilling to grant adequate representation to the surrounding municipalities like Coquitlam over whose waters it exercises authority, should not have the authority over the Fraser river east of New Westminster taken out of its hands. The section of the river west of New Westminster has already been removed from its hands and we have the north arm harbour board authority. I do not see why New Westminster, if it is unwilling to recommend the development of the Fraser river to the east of the city, should continue to exercise authority over that area.

Then, we also have the Coquitlam river which used to be used rather extensively. However, I suppose because of the conditions in the hungry thirties the cleaning out of the mouth of the Coquitlam river came to an end and its usefulness has been gradually disappearing. Now, the mouth of the river is in such a condition it is causing a flood menace to hundreds of homes which have, over the past several years, been seriously affected by the flooding of that river. I know that the municipal council has at times made representations to the government to again begin cleaning out the mouth of that river.

Then, I should like also to put in a plea for more cleaning out of Burrard inlet. A lot more dredging would serve a very useful purpose there. There is some going on I believe in connection with the loading of oil tankers there. However, the city council of Port Moody has on numerous occasions asked that something be done to restore the usefulness of its harbour. They had a long wharf, about half a mile long, and again possibly because of the need for saving money that existed in the thirties it began to be neglected. Well, once the minister's department neglects the upkeep of wharves or dredging, then the owners of vessels have to begin to ignore those places as ports of call. The usefulness of those places is then gone. Some years ago the Port Moody council put in a very reasonable request. They did not ask that the whole wharf be replaced, but asked for a wharf about half as long. They thought, for the time being, that would serve the needs of the fishermen and others in the city. Instead of that the minister's department offered to hand over the wharf to the city council, and they could do with it as they saw fit. This was a rather ill-advised offer because it would cost a lot of money to remove the wharf. I believe the department has now spent a considerable amount of money to get this danger to navigation removed. However, they are doing nothing about replacing it.

Then I believe representations have been made over the years by North Burnaby for some pleasure craft facilities on the shores of Burrard inlet. We want to develop a park there and there is a considerable number of people who would like to spend their spare time in water sports. Again, so far I have not heard of any progress towards the provision of some pleasure craft harbour facilities in the Burnaby section of Burrard inlet. If there has been any progress we have not been advised, and I know the North Burnaby board of trade would be very grateful to the minister if he could now inform us that some action there is contemplated.

I should like also to have the minister explain why last year we voted $5,227,200 for British Columbia and the Yukon under this heading and this year only $3,493,500 or $1,733,700 less in the year 1956-57 than was voted in 1955-56. In reply to the hon. member for New Westminster the minister indicated that on one single item at least this year he did not intend to ask for more money than he actually planned on using. However, that is not a new feature of the minister's department. He has been following that policy, I believe, ever since he became minister. I can only take it that the minister is actually planning a considerable reduction in expenditures in the province as a whole. I am not thinking particularly of my own riding. I feel this is very poorly timed, and that British Columbia's needs are growing by leaps and bounds. Industrially at least the needs should be made obvious to the department and the amounts for the province of British Columbia should be greater this year than last year. I would certainly like to see the department keep pace with the growing development of the province.

I raised a number of points. To repeat them, there are the wharf facilities in North Burnaby, the wharf and the dredging at Port Moody, and this matter of the New Westminster harbours board having authority over a section of the Fraser valley that is not within the city limits of New Westminster and in which they cannot possibly have any interest whatsoever except to hinder that section of the Fraser river in the interests of the commercial establishments in New Westminster itself.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond wishes to deal with some of the aspects with which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has been dealing, I would be glad to have him go ahead.

Mr. Goode: I appreciate the hon. member giving me the floor. Perhaps the minister should know something about this wharf in North Burnaby. At one time I represented that riding. It was agreed with public works, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam knows, that something would be done by public works in allotting enough money to permit the wharf to be built, but there was a catch to it—this was before the present minister's time—and that is why I have to take time to explain it. The main line of the Canadian Pacific runs right through between North Burnaby and where the wharf is proposed to go. We tried as best we could to get the board of transport commissioners to give us a by-pass from North Burnaby to the suggested wharf but the board of transport commissioners refused, and for that reason no money was appropriated at that time. I think the situation is exactly the same in 1956.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, earlier I had intended to raise one or two points in connection with the project to remove the pinnacles of Ripple Rock that were discussed earlier under the administration item, but the Chair at that time suggested it should be deferred until this point in the proceedings.

I draw to the attention of the committee the fact that at the outset of the discussion of this branch the minister did make a progress report on this project. I thought it was appropriate that on the day he did that I had received a copy of the Campbell River Courier with a rather fine aerial photo of the narrows at the point where this work is going on, showing the construction camp and also showing something of the white water over the top of the rocks with the tide going out. In view of the fact that this is a project of not only national but also of international interest I am sure some hon. members of the committee will be interested in having a look at this photo, and I shall be glad to show it to them.

While, as I say, it is primarily a project of national and even international significance, being in the main traffic artery of transportation on the west coast, nevertheless it does happen to lie somewhere in the riding of Comox-Alberni. For that reason there are one or two points in connection with it that I should like to raise at this time. I should like to point out to the Minister of Public Works that I did raise with his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, a matter which is of some concern to some local residents, particularly those of Indian extraction, in respect to the effect this explosion, when it takes place, is going to have upon the stocks of fish in the area.

If the minister is in a position to do so I should like him to give us some indication of the form of co-operation that is going on with the Department of Fisheries to ensure that there will be the least possible damage to any stocks of migratory fish, salmon in particular, at the time the explosion takes place, and as to whether there is some consultation on the effect of the explosion on the local stocks of groundfish in that area.

The other point on which I should like to have some report from the minister, if he is in a position to give it, is as to the outcome of an accident to a light plane which occurred, as I am informed, at the time the power line was being strung across Seymour narrows by the British Columbia Power Commission to supply power to the construction camp. According to the report published at the time, this light plane became entangled in the cable while it was in the process of being strung across and was catapulted into the water. Has the minister any report on the outcome, and whether the department was in any way at fault in the accident? I would appreciate having some information on these two points.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, as to the fishing aspects of the removal of Ripple Rock, there is close co-operation with the Department of Fisheries. We are working with their officials at all stages, even to the point where we shall endeavour to set off the blast in co-operation with them at a time when it will do the least harm to the fisheries.

With respect to the matter of the light plane hitting the cable, that was a cable strung by the British Columbia Power Commission. I understand the matter is under litigation between the commission and the owner of the plane.

Mr. Barnett: Apart from the matter of Ripple Rock there are one or two other matters under the British Columbia vote that I should like to comment upon. First of all, I should like to assure the minister on behalf of the citizens of Alert Bay that they will appreciate the fact that there is a vote in this year's estimate toward starting an improved small-boat harbour there. The same appreciation will be felt by the fishermen in the Deep Bay area, who will be making use of the facilities that are proposed there, as well as the extensions that are contemplated for the Comox harbour area. At this point I would bespeak the very sympathetic co-operation of the Minister of Public Works in the problem which the Comox-Courtenay-King salmon club has at this time, arising out of their long occupancy of a certain area adjacent to the Comox wharf.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest to the minister that I hope he will not forget in his planning and engineering some of the other projects which, to my way of thinking, are necessary before an adequate program of harbour facilities is provided over this large area of the British Columbia coast. I might mention particularly at this time the need which will arise before too long for facilities at Sointula on Malcolm island, and also draw to his attention the project which I know has had some investigation for providing an adequate breakwater for a small-boat harbour at Sayward-Kelsey Bay. Then on the west coast of Vancouver island where nature, rather surprisingly, has provided more and better natural harbour facilities than on the east coast of the island, there are a couple of points where I think further development would be warranted. Such development could include a project for additional docking facilities for the fishing fleet in the upper harbour at Ucluelet and also for better harbour facilities at the town of Zeballos on the west coast of Vancouver island. To my way of thinking these are projects which should be receiving serious consideration by the Department of Public Works.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate it if the minister would indicate to the committee in respect to the project at Alert Bay just what his department considers is involved in the project that is to be initiated. The current vote of $100,000 is toward a boat harbour. I think it would be appreciated if the minister could indicate to us what will be involved in this project by the time it is completed.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, the proposed work at Alert Bay consists of dredging, construction of a pile breakwater, construction of a floating breakwater, construction of 15,000 square feet of floats, construction of a wharf having an approach 100 feet long with a wharfhead 30 feet by 30 feet. Those are the general items we have in mind for Alert Bay.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, in view of the reply of the minister I would like to ask a question concerning this item. Will the minister tell us if in his opinion the needs of British Columbia are being met or is it the over-all policy of the government in view of the growing national need for capital expenditure in the coming year that almost $2 million less is going to be spent in British Columbia this year than was spent last year. Is no one asking for any development? The item for Ripple Rock takes $1 million out of the $3,500,000 allotted for this year.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member recognizes the fact that there is a reduction this year as compared with last year in every province. In large measure this is due to our policy of trying to work closer toward the full expenditure of the money we have in the estimates.

I do not think the hon. member should judge the program of work we have in mind entirely by the amount of money being requested here. If the hon. member will refer to the details on page 485 he will see that whereas for last year we requested votes to carry out 10 projects, we are seeking funds to carry out 20 projects this year. Although the amount of money shown is less, we propose to undertake twice the number of projects.

Item agreed to.

Generally—

380. Repairs and upkeep, including reconstruction and replacements for the maintenance of services; to provide for wharf repairs at Ste. Angele de Laval, Quebec, and to authorize commitments against future years in the total amount of $420,000, no new works to be undertaken, $3,185,000.

Mr. Brooks: Would the minister give us a general statement on this item, Mr. Chairman, because it seems rather ambiguous to me. For instance, in the explanation on page 486 it says:

Repairs and upkeep, including reconstruction and replacement for the maintenance of services, and to provide for wharf repairs at Ste. Angele de Laval, Quebec, no new works to be undertaken.

I do not see any mention of Ste. Angele de Laval, Quebec, in the particular items, and I notice that every province is mentioned. For instance, $500,000 will be voted for Newfoundland and there will be a commitment authority for $100,000. The same applies to every other province; there is a certain commitment and a certain vote and the amounts are exactly the same as they were last year. Would the minister give us some explanation regarding this item in general?

Mr. Winters: As my hon. friend said, the details of the item are found at page 486. In particular I think the hon. member referred to Ste. Angele de Laval, which is really a carryover of an old agreement. The moneys normally were carried in the reconstruction vote. The treasury board asked that they be specifically referred to both in the item on page 62 and in the item on page 486. They have been carried in that way for 2 years.

Mr. Brooks: Would the minister explain the commitment authority of $100,000 for Newfoundland? I take it the department has already promised to undertake some work in Newfoundland to that amount. How do you arrive at the amount of $500,000 which is to be voted? Is that just an estimate or a guess? I notice it is the same as last year.

Mr. Winters: The explanation of that point, Mr. Chairman, is that we can spend up to $500,000 in Newfoundland but we have authority to commit beyond that sum to the extent of $100,000. Of course we have to come back to parliament to get the money to discharge the commitment.

Mr. Brooks: I take it that you can spend $600,000 in Newfoundland?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. Brooks: And the same in the other provinces?

Mr. Winters: We can spend $500,000 and we can commit an expenditure of $100,000 but we cannot actually expend that amount without coming back to parliament.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the question in my mind in this connection is why the commitment authority is doubled in the province of Newfoundland in relation to that which is allowed in any of the other provinces. What is the particular reason for that?

Mr. Brooks: Would it be the Port aux Basques ferry harbour?

Mr. Winters: That is right. It is because of the fact that Newfoundland is a relatively new province under the terms of confederation and we are still learning of projects that are required to bring the scale of public services up to those obtaining in the other provinces of Canada. We expect we will need a little extra leeway there in being able to commit forward expenditure, but I say again that we have to come back to parliament to get the vote to spend the money.

Item agreed to.

Development engineering branch—
382. Branch administration, including district staffs for highways and bridges, and related expenses, $861,997.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I think this is the item under which the minister asked me to bring up my problem. I wish to refer to the bridge which was constructed at approximately mile 4 in Yoho park. Before I begin to say anything about this, let me ask the minister a question. Does the responsibility for this bridge rest with this department or with the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

Mr. Winters: The responsibility is that of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I understood from information I had that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources had something to do with this project in its beginning.

Mr. Winters: They did, that is true; but since that time the responsibility for the work on these bridges has been transferred to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What I wish to point out to the minister on this occasion is that I asked a question some time ago concerning the unsatisfactory condition of this bridge. The answer I got to the question was not very satisfactory. Then when I communicated with the department, the deputy minister was good enough to go into it in more detail and give me practically all the information that he had available.

It is rather unfortunate that such a mistake was made in this regard. When I speak of a mistake, I preface my remarks by saying that I thought probably some of the responsibility for this mistake was not entirely that of the present minister but of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources when it first started. It seems rather odd, when a department is putting in a bridge that is going to cost about $200,000, which is a rather large amount of money, that the proper engineering development was not carried out.

In part of the information I received from the department—and they do not try to belittle the facts at all—they say it was unfortunate that soil borings were not taken prior to its design, so the class of material underlying the gravel layer was not established.

[Mr. Winters.]

It is almost inconceivable to think that any construction company or any department that has to do with the building of bridges would attempt to build a bridge over a river such as the Kicking Horse without taking thorough borings to find out what the soil condition was before that bridge was started. When I asked whether there was a movement in the bridge, the answer was that a movement was noticed in the pier under the heavy construction traffic which was then required. An immediate investigation was undertaken, including complete soil borings but that was after the bridge was built.

There again I say it was rather odd that the bridge had to be completed over such a turbulent river as this before it was found that there were no proper engineering practices carried out and no soil tests made. As soon as they noticed the movement, they say—

> . . . no further work was undertaken with the exception of some riprap around the abutments as a normal maintenance procedure.

In the last paragraph they say:

> It is regrettable that preliminary soil borings were not taken prior to the design of this structure.

It was regrettable to the extent that it cost us for that mistake over $54,000. Then they go on to say:

> If these had been done, steel piling would have been included in the original construction. Doing this after the bridge construction undoubtedly increased the cost to some extent over that at which it would have been possible to do the piling during original construction.

As I say, in a construction of this type, which cost when it was completed in the neighbourhood of $200,000, the department that was originally responsible for the location of this bridge and for the engineering practice that went on, was negligent in not seeing that there was a proper soil test and certainly should be condemned. When they did take the final borings it was found there was about 100 feet of silt underneath the gravel bed, and this bridge costing $200,000 was built on that. Is it any wonder that the footing moved out? The department that was responsible for the original location of this and was responsible for the soil testing and the engineering practices should be condemned in no uncertain terms.

I am sure that now the Department of Public Works under the present minister, who has had to come in and take the responsibility for such a mistake as this, should not be required to take all the blame. I am not attempting to put all the blame on him, but I am saying that the department which was guilty of this negligence should certainly bear that responsibility. It should be looked after as far as his department is concerned, and the present minister should see to it that no more slipshod methods such as that are practised, and it does not cost us $50,000 to correct mistakes in the construction of another bridge such as this.

Mr. Hahn: Earlier today it was suggested that a question I raised regarding the Lulu island bridge, specifically named Queensborough bridge, be brought up at this time, and I should like to bring it to the attention of the minister. I should like to ask him this, in view of the statement he made this morning. As I recall it, he said he had not received the report and therefore did not recommend it. A month's time has elapsed since the report was sent to his office. I want to know whether his answer indicates that he has seen the plans or his officials have seen the plans and it has not met with their approval and therefore was not given to him for his approval, or whether it means specifically that it has not yet been drawn to his attention and that, when it is, it will be given consideration.

Mr. Winters: No, it does not mean that I have disapproved the plans. It just means that I have not yet had an opportunity of seeing them. They have been submitted, but I understand that recently we have had quite a number of protests because I understand that the plans submitted by the city of New Westminster contemplate leaving existing structures where they are. I shall have to analyse all these protests before I can pass on the project.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): May I ask the minister a question in regard to another problem that has arisen in the Banff national park in connection with road construction? That is the right of way which the highway requires going around the railway at Anthracite, where the property was expropriated. At least, I do not know whether the proceedings are still going on or have been completed. This thing has been hanging fire for one and a half or two years.

Again I am not sure, because of the complicated situation there, whether it is the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources that has dilly-dallied in getting a settlement made of this question, or whether it was the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources that was responsible for putting a road through private property without even getting permission from the owner, thereby cutting off the owner's livelihood without giving him any compensation whatever and holding him up for over one and a half years for payment. The settlement, as far as I know, has not even been made yet.

I cannot conceive that the Minister of Public Works would do such a contemptible thing, yet that was done. I am not sure whether those expropriation proceedings had to be carried out by the Department of Public Works or whether it was again the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I am sure the minister can let me know about that. If he is responsible, I should like to know what action is being taken to see that this man has proper compensation for his labour, and proper compensation for the loss of livelihood which he has had to endure for all this time. Is it the practice of the department when building highways through national parks to intrude upon a man's private property and simply say, "Well, here we are, get out", or is there a proper procedure followed whereby proper compensation is paid? Again I have my doubts as to the minister being responsible for that, but I should like to know.

Mr. Winters: In this instance the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has taken action to acquire the property by expropriation. The plan has been filed. The government now owns the property, and I understand that northern affairs has actually made some settlements and some payments.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Some what?

Mr. Winters: Payments.

Mr. Regier: The hon. member for New Westminster mentioned the Lulu island bridge. Can the minister tell us at this point exactly what is the policy of his department with regard to assuming responsibility in respect of the cost of bridge building? I understand the policy with respect to interprovincial rivers or rivers that straddle the border is well settled, and that the government does pay a large share of the cost of bridges in those cases.

We in the lower mainland of British Columbia are faced almost every week with the situation where somebody says that the federal government should pay part of the cost of this bridge, that bridge or the other bridge, and sometimes we are somewhat at a loss to explain exactly what bridges the minister's department does assume some degree of responsibility for. Is it all bridges over navigable waters or is it not? If it is not all bridges over navigable waters I should like to follow through with several other questions seeking information on specific bridges.

My second question is whether any consideration has been given to adding to the list of bridges for which the minister's department does assume responsibility bridges that would be of service in the cause of civil defence and the evacuation of our major centres of population. Has any consideration yet been given to this problem? If so, what decision has been reached?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to give a broad statement of general policy. I would far rather deal with individual cases on their merits. The fact that a bridge is required over navigable water does not in itself mean that the federal government has a responsibility to share in the cost of building the bridge. The federal government's responsibility is to protect the position of the navigable waters. Before anybody can build a structure they must conform to the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, which means that in the final analysis the Department of Public Works must authorize or otherwise the building of the structure. But it does not of itself mean that the federal government is obliged, bound or committed to contribute toward the cost of the structure.

We have a certain responsibility with respect to bridges over interprovincial and international waters, where we normally contribute as a matter of policy when a bridge is required; but apart from that most bridges are, generally speaking, for the purpose of facilitating highway traffic within the province and, once again generally speaking, in the first instance and normally they are a responsibility of the provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Regier: I should like to thank the minister for his answer. I should like to ask the minister whether his department is assuming any share of the cost of the bridge now being built to replace the present bridge over the Pitt river in British Columbia.

Mr. Winters: No, not to my knowledge. I have not been informed of any such project, so I am quite sure I am safe in saying we are not participating.

Mr. Regier: I do not know whether the minister will be able to answer this question, but in the light of the general policy statement he has just made would he explain for the benefit of the people of the lower mainland of British Columbia why his department would assume responsibility for the Lulu island bridge and not assume responsibility for the Pitt river bridge, which is not very far removed from the Lulu island bridge, which is a portion of the main highway and also crosses navigable waters.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member says we are contributing toward the Lulu island bridge. I am not aware that we are contributing toward any such structure.

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to ask a further question about the bridge at mile 4 in Yoho park. Can the minister tell us now if the bridge has been satisfactorily repaired even though it did cost us an extra $50,000, whose sole responsibility it was, and how it came about that such negligence was allowed? Was that the minister's responsibility? If not, whose responsibility was it?

Mr. Winters: The bridge has been completed. I do not think it cost an extra $54,000. If it had been designed in the first place as it should have been, I think the additional cost would have been something more in the order of $20,000. The bridge was designed by the old department of resources and development at a time when I was responsible for that department. Therefore the ministerial responsibility is mine and I accept it.

The bridge was built at a place where the substructure was not as was anticipated. There was silty soil and there was some movement. It was found that steps had to be taken to put the bridge in shape, and I think the additional cost required over what would have been the cost had the bridge been designed properly in the first place, as it was finally, would have been something of the order of $20,000.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I would not want the minister to think I was endeavouring to mislead him when I quoted the figure of $50,000. Actually the price was $54,016.45. I do not know what the 45 cents was for. It states here that the work was carried out in March and April of 1955, so it must have been all due to the mistakes made in the first place. It could not have been $20,000. It must have been $54,016.

Mr. Winters: Yes, that work did cost $54,000; but what I am saying is that if the bridge had been designed in the first place as it should have been some of the items of expense in that $54,000 would have been charged against the initial cost of the bridge.

Mr. Hahn: The minister indicated that the federal government is not contributing to the cost of replacing the Lulu island bridge. Is any consideration being given to contributing to the cost?

Mr. Winters: No, sir.

Mr. MacLean: I have a question I should like to put to the minister. I am not sure whether it is more appropriate under this item or under item 390. In any case, I should like to ask the minister what are the possibilities of his department proceeding with an engineering survey to determine the feasibility of the construction of a causeway between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

Mr. Winters: Recently I received a letter from the premier of Prince Edward Island, which is the first official communication I have had in connection with this causeway. I think that was within the past ten days or two weeks, relatively recently. The letter set forth certain information which had been acquired locally and was based in part, I believe, upon a preliminary survey by a consulting engineer. I have asked the officials of the Department of Public Works to review the information submitted by the premier and to let me have their estimate of the cost of having a full-scale engineering study made by a competent consulting engineer. I have not received that information yet from the engineers of the department. That is the way the situation stands at the present time.

Item agreed to.

Development engineering branch—

384. International bridge over the St. Croix river between St. Stephen, New Brunswick, and Calais, Maine, the state of Maine to pay a like amount, $150,000.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the minister what is the total cost of this international bridge between Calais and St. Stephen and how soon he expects the bridge to be completed?

Mr. Winters: The total cost of the bridge is $440,000, which will be shared equally between the government of Canada and the state of Maine. The target date for completion of the bridge is September, 1956.

Mr. Brooks: Will there be an official opening at that time?

Mr. Winters: I would certainly think so, Mr. Chairman. Nothing has been laid on yet, but I think we would be safe in saying there will be something.

Mr. Michener: The next three items cover an international bridge, an interprovincial bridge and a bridge which might be called an intraprovincial bridge as it is entirely within one province. What I should like to ask the minister is what becomes of these bridges when they are built. They are paid for in part by the federal government. Can he give us first the disposition of the St. Croix river bridge after it has been constructed? Does it become part of the highway system of New Brunswick and is it operated by that province and the state of Maine as a free bridge, a toll bridge or what is the prospective disposition of the St. Croix river bridge?

Mr. Winters: Which particular item are we on, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Item 384.

Mr. Winters: Then perhaps I should limit my remarks to that item.

Mr. Michener: Yes.

Mr. Winters: Arrangements for maintenance will be shared on the same basis as the cost of construction. Maine will maintain and repair its half of the bridge and the government of Canada will maintain and repair its half of the bridge on the Canadian side of the border.

Mr. Michener: Will ownership be in the same proportion?

Mr. Winters: Ownership will be in the same proportion.

Mr. Michener: I understand it is just one of the public works of Canada in so far as the Canadian half of the bridge is concerned?

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Mr. Michener: There is no special corporation to operate the bridge?

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Michener: And no tolls will be charged?

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Item agreed to.

Development engineering branch—

385. Construction of spans of bridge over the interprovincial channel of the Ottawa river between Pembroke, Ontario, and Allumette island, Quebec, $450,000.

Mr. Hodgson: I should like to ask the minister a few questions about this bridge at Allumette island. I should like to ask him when it is estimated it will be open for traffic and what the total cost of the bridge will be to the federal Department of Public Works?

Mr. Winters: As the hon. member knows, this bridge is being built in three sections. The Ontario government is building the southern third, the Quebec government is building the northern third and the government of Canada, through the Department of Public Works, is building the centre section. The total contract cost of the centre bridge is $850,000. The completion date of that centre section which is our responsibility is the latter part of this present summer. I do not know what are the target dates of completion for the other two governments, but I think they would be somewhere around that time.

The maintenance will be divided between the three governments. The provincial governments have undertaken to do running maintenance, snow removal and that sort of thing up to the interprovincial boundary. The major repairs, repairs of a construction nature, will be done by the federal government on the centre span which we are building; and the two provincial governments will be entirely responsible for all phases of maintenance on the sections they are building.

Mr. Hodgson: You think that the whole bridge will be open for traffic some time in the early fall?

Mr. Winters: I think so; yes.

Mr. Michener: Where will title rest?

Mr. Winters: Title to the centre section will rest with us and title to the other sections will rest with the respective provincial governments.

Mr. Brooks: In that connection I should like to ask the minister a question. In connection with an interprovincial bridge, where is the legal authority for the federal government to build one-third of it? I ask that question because there has been considerable controversy over the construction of a bridge between New Brunswick and the province of Quebec; I refer to a bridge from Campbellton to Cross Point. I remember that some time ago when the matter came up for discussion in the house here we were told that the federal government had no responsibility.

That idea may have changed. Here we have an interprovincial bridge where the federal government is taking responsibility for building one-third of it. I should like to ask the minister just where the authority for that is to be found. I had the idea that it was under the British North America Act. As a matter of fact the ex-premier of the province of New Brunswick, Mr. McNair, cited that authority one time but it was never agreed to by the government in connection with the Campbellton and Cross Point bridge.

Mr. Winters: I do not believe there is any doubt about the federal government's responsibility with respect to bridges over interprovincial waters. There was never any doubt in my mind on that point. The doubt is as to whether or not a bridge will be built at all. The mere fact that there is an interprovincial water does not automatically mean that it must be bridged by the federal government or by anybody else. There is also the question, I suppose, of what the ratio of participation should be because on one side of an interprovincial boundary the structure is in one province and on the other side it is in the other province.

Mr. Brooks: As in this case.

Mr. Winters: It is a matter for general agreement. With regard to the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge, we have taken the position that if the provincial governments concerned—that is the Quebec government and the government of New Brunswick—wish to build a bridge and bring forward a proposal indicating their participation, we will be prepared to give it favourable consideration. I have had discussions with the premier of Quebec and the premier of New Brunswick, and it was mutually agreed that the project would not be brought forward at this time.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask who objected to it being brought forward at this time? I am sure it was not the premier of New Brunswick.

Item agreed to.

386. Towards construction of the Burlington beach bridge, the province of Ontario to pay a like amount, $2,000,000.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, may I say a word about item 386. I should like to move—or to have somebody move—that this item be deleted. My reason is this, and I can best explain it by reading two brief letters. One is dated April 9, 1956 and is from me to Hon. J. N. Allan, minister of highways, province of Ontario, Toronto, Ontario. It reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Allan:

In the proposed estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1957, vote No. 386 asks parliamentary authority for the federal government to contribute $2,000,000 towards the construction of the Burlington Beach bridge.

I gather from conversations I have had with Premier Frost and with you that financial participation from the federal government will not be required during the present fiscal year, if indeed it would be required at all.

Under the circumstances, when the estimates of the Department of Public Works are being considered, we propose to ask parliament to drop this item. I hope this carries your judgment.

Hon. J. N. Allan replied on April 16 as follows:

I have received your letter of April 9th, and may say that we are quite agreeable to your suggestion of dropping the item of $2,000,000 toward the construction of the Burlington Beach bridge.

Yours sincerely,
Jas. N. Allan,
Minister of Highways.

The Deputy Chairman: Mr. Winters moves that item 386 be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the minister has just read a letter from the minister of highways in Ontario, I assume it to be the fact that they will not be far enough ahead with the work this year to make use of the $2 million but that it will probably be reappropriated next year. I assume that to be the case, anyway. I should like the minister to say whether or not that is so.

Mr. Winters: I believe the government of Ontario is contemplating a toll bridge at this point. In that event, they do not propose to ask for federal government participation.

Mr. Hodgson: I will second that motion, Mr. Chairman, and the minister can use part of that money in finishing the post office up in my riding this year.

Mr. Nicholson: I wonder if the minister would explain, now that we have the $500,000 which appears for last year, what is the authority for the federal government participating in provincial bridges? This appears to be a provincial bridge, and would the minister give some indication as to how far he is prepared to go with all the provinces in participating in the cost of bridges?

The Deputy Chairman: There has been a motion that this item be dropped.

Mr. Nicholson: There is an item before us here and the motion has not been carried.

The Deputy Chairman: The motion before us at the moment is that the item be dropped.

Mr. Nicholson: The motion has not been put, and I presume I am quite in order in asking the question I have asked. The minister might be expected to make a reply.

An hon. Member: The item is off.

Mr. Nicholson: No, it appears in the estimates. It has been moved that the item be dropped, but hon. members have a right to discuss it until the motion is carried. I have asked the minister if he will make some statement about the $500,000 which appears opposite this item for 1955-56. Would he also indicate if the federal government is prepared to negotiate with all the provinces in Canada in connection with the construction of bridges?

Mr. Winters: It seems rather odd that I should be asked to explain why we were participating in an item that I have just asked be dropped. The reason we did contract to participate was that the bridge is to be over the Burlington canal, which is a canal built by the federal government. The federal government felt it had some responsibility to help the province of Ontario bridge a gap that was built by it. Moreover, the traffic through that canal is so heavy that a high level bridge is required. This considerably adds to the cost of the structure.

Mr. Michener: Before the motion is agreed to, and while I do not at all question the reasons the minister has advanced, may I ask if the minister is relying entirely on the correspondence which he has read for his suggestion that this item be dropped? What is the date of the correspondence, and had the bridge involved any joint expenditure for engineering up to this time?

Mr. Winters: The project had involved no expenditures on the part of the federal government. I might say that since that letter from Mr. Allan which is relatively recent being dated April 16, 1956, I have had the matter confirmed in a telephone conversation.

Motion agreed to and item withdrawn.

387. To provide for surveys and construction of the trans-Canada highway through national parks, $11,000,000.

Mr. Harkness: This is the item dealing with the provision of funds for the construction of this highway through national parks, which is the sole responsibility of the federal government. I note that the amount spent last year was $5·5 million, and $11 million is being provided for this year. I trust that indicates a real determination on the part of the department to go ahead and get the trans-Canada highway built within these national parks. A considerable amount of concern was expressed when we were dealing with the trans-Canada highway a few days ago as to the slowness with which some of the provinces had been proceeding with the construction of that highway through their territory. The construction within the national parks has been just as slow as or slower than in many of the provinces. I would hope something much better will be done with this $11 million than has been done in the past.

I notice particularly that in the details on page 490 of the estimates book there is a breakdown of the expenditure of the $5·5 million. The actual expenditures to December 1, 1955, were $2,300,355, and it says that the estimate for the balance of the year is $3,149,645. In other words the major portion of this expenditure for last year had not been expended up to the end of 1955. Certainly the department would not be able to do any highway construction in that mountainous area in which the national parks are located between the end of December, 1955, and the end of the fiscal year. You just cannot carry on highway construction during the winter period in the mountains. Therefor I should like to have the minister tell us how much money actually was expended last year. It would appear to me, from looking at this breakdown, that considerably less than half the money voted last year had been expended.

I believe the necessity for getting the trans-Canada highway built through the parks is urgent. It is not only a matter of getting that particular link in the trans-Canada highway completed, but it is a matter of providing a highway in Banff national park which would provide a reasonable road for the thousands and thousands of tourists who use that park. So far as Banff and Jasper national parks are concerned, one of the chief complaints has been the state of the highways. There is no question but that the very poor state of the highway has been responsible for these parks losing, and Canada losing, a great deal of tourist business. Many thousands of United States tourists who have been in the parks have been loud in their claims that they would never go back and drive on such roads as these.

If we are to get the full advantage from these parks as tourist attractions, then certainly the most important thing that can be done is to provide good roads. This particular section of the road will be the most used section of the road system in the parks; therefore I would hope that with this increased appropriation the department will actually get the road constructed instead of offering the excuses we have heard in past years that this is a very difficult type of construction which requires a great deal of rock blasting and things of that sort. Everybody knows that is the case. The fact is that the money which has been appropriated at various times in the past has not been expended. In other words there has not been the drive behind getting this road constructed, and as a result it just lags along.

In addition to these general remarks I should like the minister to give us a breakdown showing how much of the trans-Canada highway has been completed in the national parks, how much is going to be constructed this year, how much will be left, and when it will be constructed.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, the first question the hon. member asked was how much was spent out of last year's vote. The answer to that is $4 million. The reason we did not spend more, I suppose, is the same as the provincial government's reason. We were held up first of all by an unusually wet season and, secondly, we were not able to get the structural steel for our bridge program. This year we are further advanced. Our contracts are already awarded.

A summary of the progress would be as follows: The survey of location is complete and the clearing and grubbing is 98 per cent complete. There is work we have been able to do in the winter time. The outstanding grubbing mileage consists of widening for high fills and deep cuts. The grading has been completed for a total of 26 miles; 11·7 miles in Banff park and 14·3 miles in Yoho park. The design for base and pavement consists of a variable depth of gravel subbase; three inches of compacted gravel base course; three inches of bituminous stabilized base course; three inches of asphaltic concrete pavement. A total of 7·4 miles of gravel base course has been completed. The work on base course up to March 31, 1956 is equivalent to 5·8 miles of completed pavement. Four bridges have been completed at the following locations: Banff park, mile 1·5 at Carrot creek; mile 7·7 at Cascade river; mile 9·6 at Forty Mile creek; Yoho park, mile 3·9 at Kicking Horse river bridge No. 1.

Contracts have been awarded and are in progress for grading and the provision of compacted gravel base course for the following mileages: Banff park, mile 0 to 31 and mile 43·3 to 51·1; Yoho park, mile 0 to 28·6. The following contracts remain to be awarded to complete grading and compacted gravel base course: Banff park, mile 31 to mile 43·3; Yoho park, a recall of a contract for mile 10 to mile 16. This contract was partially completed but terminated on December 1, 1955.

Bridges: The following contracts have been awarded for the construction of bridges: Banff park, five small reinforced concrete bridges between mile 13 and mile 40; Yoho park, C.P.R. overpass at mile 2·5. The following contracts remain to be awarded in 1956: Banff park, mile 14·3, bridge and overpass to the Bow river and C.P.R.; Yoho park, mile 16·7, bridge over the Kicking Horse river and C.P.R.; mile 21·5, bridge over the Kicking Horse river.

Paving: A contract will be awarded in 1956 for paving bituminous stabilized base course from mile 0 to 14·2 in Banff park.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Does the minister feel satisfied that the base he is talking about from mile 0 at the east gate—

Mr. Winters: That is correct.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): —up to the railroad track is sufficiently properly constructed now to carry a hard surface?

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I hope we are right and that we do not have to repair it in the short period of time within which we have had to repair the other. I wish to mention the road from Eisenhower junction to Radium Hot Springs. That gives us a good example of a road on which probably not enough precaution was taken in its construction, because after that road was built it was completely gone in about three years. I understand the whole thing has to be torn up and gone over again and a hard surface put on it. I recognize that it is not a part of the trans-Canada highway. I mention it only to show that we should be careful to see that the foundations are properly laid before we proceed to hard-surface the road. There is lots of material close at hand in the parks.

I understood the minister to say that the hard surface from mile 0 to about mile 8 in Banff national park would be completely hard-surfaced this spring. Will it be done in time to take care of the tourist traffic?

Mr. Winters: No, it will not be finished in time for the tourist traffic, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I was wondering what effect it will have both on construction of the road and the tourist traffic if the work is going on while the tourist traffic is going over it, because the traffic is exceedingly heavy at that time.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I have a note here on that particular section from mile 0 to mile 10·8. Since the hon. member raised the matter before perhaps I should give him a fuller statement. Construction was started on this section in 1952 under the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and a contract was awarded to Williams and Carruthers Limited for the construction of the subgrade and the Carrot creek bridge. This work was completed in 1953.

An additional contract was awarded to Standard Gravel and Paving in 1954 for the grading and culverts between mile 4·2 and 10·8 and gravel base course between mile 0 and 10·8. A section of the Cascade river was omitted where relocation of a portion of the C.P.R. line was involved, on which agreement was not reached until 1955. This railroad relocation is now under construction. Bituminous treatment of the gravel base course was undertaken between mile 0 and mile 5·5 in 1954 as a protection coat and a dust control measure.

The relocation of the C.P.R. line will be completed early in 1956, permitting completion of grading from mile 0 to 14·2, and it is proposed to call for tenders for completion of the gravel base course and the bituminous stabilized layer this season.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister why the road was switched from the south side of the Bow river to the north? I understand that the highway formerly ran on the south side but now there is a completely new road being made on the north side of the river.

Mr. Winters: It is just the reverse.

Mr. Green: I believe that the snow melts later on the north road that is now being used and that building a completely new road has meant a great deal of additional expense. Why was it necessary to switch to the other side of the river?

Mr. Winters: The south side of the river presented better topography for a trunk road than the north side. The north side remains, anyhow, as a local park road, a tourist road, as the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has said. Both roads will be necessary, but for a through trunk road I think the hon. member would agree that the south side of the river presents many advantages.

Mr. Green: That is not the information I am given. I understand it would be much wiser simply to improve the road which already exists instead of carving out a completely new road.

Mr. Winters: We do not think so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the minister gave us a considerable number of figures. What they all seem to mount up to is this. By the way, may I ask the minister what is the total mileage of the trans-Canada highways in the national parks?

Mr. Winters: Eighty-three miles.

Mr. Harkness: Well, if the total mileage is 83 miles it would appear that no miles are finished at the present time. None of that road is completed in spite of the fact that for years and years the work has gone on. Furthermore, only 14 miles of this will be, I presume, completed. It is going to be paved, at any rate, during this coming summer. So by the end of the construction year 1956 only 14 of those 83 miles will be finished. Then there are various things that are going on as far as the rest of it is concerned, grading in some places and bridges being put up in others, and so on. Can the minister tell us when the entire road is going to be completed through the national parks?

Mr. Winters: Roughly, Mr. Chairman, we are planning to have the grading completed and the structures built in 1957, the bituminous stabilized base course completed in 1958, and the final paving completed in 1960.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I should like to know whether the minister in his last statement has referred to Banff national park or to all highways within the national parks?

Mr. Winters: Banff and Yoho.

Mr. Barnett: The reason I raise the point is that I was wondering whether his remarks include the trans-Canada highway in the national park in Newfoundland?

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Barnett: Can the minister give us some indication as to what activity will be undertaken in connection with the Newfoundland trans-Canada highway in that park?

Mr. Winters: Yes. That area has not finally been established as a national park, Mr. Chairman; therefore it does not come under the provision for the national parks nor is the trans-Canada highway being approached on that same basis now. But we have told the Newfoundland government that if they proceed with that part of the highway through the area that is set aside for a national park, and if it then becomes part of the national park, and the road is built to trans-Canada highway standards, we will pay half the cost; but so far the initiative for the programming of the work is the responsibility of the provincial government.

Mr. Barnett: Did I understand the minister to say the proposal was that we were to pay only half the cost of what might eventually come within the national park?

Mr. Winters: Perhaps I did give the wrong impression. We do pay half the cost as part of the trans-Canada highway, but when it is in a national park we will pay the other half of the cost.

Mr. MacLean: I am under the impression, Mr. Chairman, that after the trans-Canada highway in the parks is completed the Department of Public Works will have no more responsibility, and the maintenance of those sections of the trans-Canada highway will be the responsibility of the parks branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Will the trans-Canada highway, which is only one of many roads in the national parks, continue to be the responsibility of the Department of Public Works as far as maintenance is concerned?

Mr. Winters: It will be the property of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and ordinary maintenance will be done by that department. Capital expenditures will be carried out by the Department of Public Works.

Item agreed to.

388. Payment to the province of Manitoba, being 50 per cent of the province's contribution to the city of Winnipeg for reconstruction of Broadway avenue, as part of the trans-Canada highway, $36,633.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would like to ask the minister if the principle enunciated in item 388 applies generally to sections of the trans-Canada highway passing through urban communities? What is the principle behind this vote?

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Chairman, this principle does apply. The principle is that the federal government will pay half of the cost incurred by a provincial government in carrying out its normal practice in respect to municipalities. As a matter of fact I do not believe this amount will be required because I understand, although we have not been officially informed, that the government of Manitoba intends to reroute the trans-Canada highway in order to by-pass the centre of Winnipeg to the south, and this expenditure therefore would not be required.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have one further question. Would the same principle apply if the construction of a bridge on the trans-Canada highway were necessary? Would the federal government share on a similar proportionate basis if the construction of a bridge on the trans-Canada highway were necessary?

Mr. Winters: Does the hon. member mean if a bridge were constructed within a municipality?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

Mr. Winters: If it were built within a municipality and at the same time on the route of the trans-Canada highway, the federal government under the terms of the agreement would pay half of the cost incurred by the provincial government, if it has been the normal established practice of the provincial government to contribute toward municipal roads.

Mr. MacLean: What policy has been carried out with regard to avoiding cities where possible on the trans-Canada highway? That sentence may seem a little strange, but where people have had experience with through highways it has been customary to by-pass cities and have connecting roads into them so the motorist can either carry on straight through without having the interference of city traffic to cope with or he can take the by-pass into the city if that happens to be his destination. The most outstanding example of that is the autobahn in Germany; the facility with which one can travel for long distances on that road is well known.

I was wondering if a conscious attempt has been made to avoid having the trans-Canada highway pass through congested areas where speed limits are necessary.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I doubt whether we are in order in discussing general policy on this specific item, but as the hon. member knows the determination of the route is the prior responsibility of the provincial governments. It is up to them to say whether the road shall go through or by-pass. For our part we have been endeavouring to encourage the provincial governments to by-pass centres of population.

Mr. Goode: Mr. Chairman, I know there will be some doubt as to whether I am in order, but I am very interested in what the minister has just said. Would the minister take note of the statement made by the premier of British Columbia as reported in the papers yesterday that they are going to ask the minister to change the route of the trans-Canada highway, and could we expect a favourable reaction from the minister?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I have not read the statement to which the hon. member referred nor have I received any communication from the government of British Columbia.

Item agreed to.

General—

389. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for: a maximum of $15,000 may be expended in respect of any one work and, with the approval of the treasury board, that maximum may be increased to $25,000 in the case of any one building construction project, $800,000.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I have one question on this item the wording of which rather intrigues me. This item provides for miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for. A maximum of $15,000 may be expended in respect of any one work, and with the approval of treasury board that maximum may be increased to $25,000 in the case of any one building construction project.

I am wondering if there is a deliberate choice of words here. There is a difference between "any one work" and "any one building construction project". I assume for a wharf, for instance, you could spend a maximum of $15,000 because that is a small project, whereas for a post office building or something of that nature you could spend a maximum of $25,000 because that is a building construction project. I should like to know the theory behind the wording of this item. If it is deliberate, all well and good, but if it is not deliberate the wording should be changed to reconcile one with the other.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member is substantially correct in what he said. We get a lot of miscellaneous small items that are not specifically referred to in the printed items and unless we have some authority of this kind we cannot undertake any project which is not specifically mentioned. Under this vote we can undertake works up to $15,000 which are not specifically referred to in the estimates, and we can go as high as $25,000 on small projects of the nature of small postal buildings with the approval of treasury board. That is quite right.

Mr. Michener: Is this a duplication of item 364, "Unforeseen improvements" on which we spent some time?

Mr. Winters: No, that covered improvements and alterations; these are generally new works.

Item agreed to.

390. To provide for advance planning of projects including acquisition of sites, $1,500,000.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I have had some difficulty with the department in the past in obtaining sites. For instance, I have not found any one who knows who owns the 66 feet around a lake shore. I claim that the man who owns the land behind it owns that strip, but a stipulation in the provincial law makes it public ground. I think the department should frame some legislation to enable it to take possession of that land. The department should not have to go through the provincial and municipal governments. I do not know whether it is an excuse, but I have known projects to be held up for three years before the dominion government could acquire ownership of the land or the right to build a dock or wharf on the lake shore.

The Chairman: Shall item 390 carry?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, if this were the last item I would not say a word in view of the time, and if the minister were trying to get through before five o'clock I would not speak on this item. I do not think the minister is sufficiently optimistic to expect to conclude before five o'clock. I would like to say a word concerning this item; if it is not five o'clock I shall, but if it is five o'clock I shall not.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to spend a little more time on these estimates?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: I shall just take a minute of the time of the committee, though I would prefer to spend ten minutes discussing this. I notice that this is a very general item referring to advanced planning. Advanced planning is a euphemistic expression which includes everyone and everybody. I recall reading in the press that the minister's plans required the tearing down of the old supreme court building at the foot of the hill here and making a parking lot of it. One could spend ten minutes discussing that, but I am going to spend only one minute on it and say that

I think the minister in his planning should look further ahead than the necessity of providing a parking lot for perhaps 15 or 20 cars.

Mr. Winters: That is a temporary arrangement. What we are doing will ultimately conform with the national capital plan.

Mr. Nowlan: If it is in conformity with the national capital plan, I happen to be a member of the joint committee of the house and the Senate and I do not think the national capital plan is completed as yet. There will be many meetings and many recommendations. All I would like to say is that here we have one of the old historic buildings of the city, and one that means a great deal to this country. It is true that it was a stone carving shop at one time. Perhaps Sir John A. Macdonald's coachman went in there to warm his hands over the stove when he was waiting to drive home the boss. Afterwards it evolved into the supreme court building. Now, of course, we have a magnificent structure further down the street.

If this country grows as we hope and believe it will grow, perhaps in another 50 years there will be another Supreme Court of Canada building in some other place. Then everyone is going to be lamenting the fact that we did not have the foresight to preserve some of these earlier buildings and monuments.

If you want amplification of this argument, I am not a shareholder in the Royal Bank of Canada so I do not mind advertising one of their products, the monthly letter, and I would refer you to the latest issue which is just off the press. It deals with the necessity for preserving the historic sites of this country. Our failure to have done so warrants the attention of every hon. member. I would urge the minister not to move too quickly in the demolition of that building.

Perhaps it has some significance. At one time horsemen stayed there, and now we are going to park automobiles there. I suppose one might say that there are philosophical attachments to the question, but a building that housed the Supreme Court of Canada for 30 or 40 years should be preserved if at all possible. It could be done while still maintaining the integrity of the national capital planning scheme, which we have not yet finally evolved. Until we do, we should not destroy any historic sites.

Mr. Knight: I rise on a point of order. I think it is important that we should preserve the rights of private members. Goodness knows, they are limited enough. The minister has already taken up, on government business, time designated for the consideration of private bills. I would be quite willing, if there is time left after private members' bills are discussed, that we revert to the minister's business before six o'clock. I suppose that would happen anyway. But I am just pointing this out to you, Mr. Chairman, and I am not making an issue of it.

The Chairman: The hon. member is quite right. Does item 390 carry?

An hon. Member: No.

The Chairman: Item 389 is carried.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PENALTIES, PROCEDURES, ETC.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River) moved the second reading of Bill No. 150, to amend the National Parks Act.

He said: I am sure I am not the only one in this house who has a national park in his constituency, and I feel that everyone in this house who has a national park in his constituency will be vitally concerned with the changes suggested in Bill No. 150 to amend the National Parks Act. This act needs a complete and thorough overhaul. As it stands at present, it lends itself to most unfair treatment of the citizens who have residences in national parks and also those who come there as tourists. It can be and is used as a means of intimidation, and this sort of thing should not be allowed to continue.

Under its present regulations, intimidation is exercised against those who desire to establish themselves in a competitive enterprise, and in favour of those who are at present established in a national park. No act or its regulations should be drawn in such a manner or used to favour any particular individual or group of individuals.

The penalties under this act have been a cause of contention and irritation for many years. The minister has promised to revise the act, but so far nothing has been done. Whilst the act needs a complete and thorough overhaul, I am now asking only for an amendment to change the unduly severe penalties and also to offer some protection for the privacy of a man's home. The act as it now stands is most unsatisfactory. There are regulations in the act pertaining to very minor offences and, according to the act as it stands, anyone who is convicted of those minor offences is subject to most severe penalties. Those are some of the things with which I am concerned.

In order to enlighten members of the house as to what I have reference to, I should like to read one or two of the existing regulations. Some of them are petty and should be removed. Some of them are indeed more serious. I want to refer to one regulation made under the act which deals with one of these trivial things. Here is one of the general regulations having to do with national parks:

> No person shall pick wild flowers or remove any shrubs or plants from park lands, but the director may issue permits for the taking of flowers, shrubs and plants for scientific purposes.

That means that if any person picks a flower on park lands he is subject to the penalties laid down in the act. Let me give one more trivial example which is annoying and can lead to serious difficulties. On page 4 I find the following:

> No person shall remove or displace any rock, mineral, fossil or other object of natural curiosity or interest in a park without permission in writing from the director.

I venture to say that regulation is broken a thousand times every day when the tourist season is in progress. It is so useless that it should not be allowed to remain there. Here is another one on page 9 of the regulations, dealing with snow removal:

> The lessee of any lot in a townsite in which residence or the operation of a business is permitted during the winter months shall remove the snow from the sidewalk in front of such lot. Such snow shall be removed within a period of 12 hours following any snowfall.

If any person fails to comply with that regulation he leaves himself open to a fine of $500 or six months in jail at hard labour. There is no other place in Canada where we find such things. Certainly in the city of Calgary where I live we are required to remove the snow from in front of our premises, and if you do not remove it there is a penalty. The city authorities send around a crew to remove the snow, the cost is charged to your taxes, and that is it. There is no such idiotic thing as we find in the National Parks Act.

Mr. Lesage: There are no taxes in Banff.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): There is one other example I want to mention. These are some of the more trivial things that need a little attention. Listen to this regulation:

> No person shall drop or throw down in a park any burning match, lighted cigar, cigarette, or other burning substance.

Literally that means that if anybody walks down the main street of Banff and throws away a lighted cigar or cigarette he is breaking one of the regulations. There are also regulations which deal with the sale of goods on Sunday. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a Sunday, particularly during the tourist season, when goods are not sold publicly in stores. Let me give one example, radium hot springs, a government establishment where the concession is leased to private individuals. At the same time, if individuals with stores in the town of Banff sell goods on Sunday they are jumped on with both feet and upon conviction are liable to a fine of $500 or six months in jail at hard labour.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that such a condition should not be permitted to continue. Then I should like to refer to part 11, regulation 3 (f) which reads as follows:

> No person shall touch or feed the bears or entice them to approach by setting out sweets or other foodstuffs.

If people break that regulation they are subject to a fine of $500 or six months at hard labour. As you pass through the park you will see signs along the road saying you must not feed the bears, and I think they state on them that there is a $500 fine. To my knowledge they do not say that you are liable to a penalty of six months in jail at hard labour. There again, every day in the week during the tourist season that regulation is broken. You only have to go to where the garbage from the hotels is dumped. Thousands of tourists go there to see the bears because that is where they come. On every occasion I have been there I have seen people feeding the bears. I know the danger attached to such a practice, because some people have been mauled by the bears, and there should be proper regulations to control that practice. But the act is so full of these minor offences that should be removed that it is in need of a complete and thorough overhaul.

Then there are some offences that are of more concern to the people there than others. I am not confining myself particularly on this occasion to the question of a complete overhaul of the regulations. I think there are some respects in which the act can be violated where the penalties are out of all line with proper procedure, and these should be taken care of. I am only asking first of all that the fines be reduced, and also the penalty if the fine is not paid. Let me read the provision in the act with respect to penalties. It is section 8 (1) and reads as follows:

> Any person violating any provision of this act or any regulation—

It does not make any difference what it is.

> —in addition to any civil liability thereby incurred, is liable on summary conviction to a penalty of not more than five hundred dollars, and in default of immediate payment of such penalty and of the costs of prosecution, such person may be imprisoned with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding six months.

The minister will probably say, "Oh, well, that is never done". But it is not a case of whether it has been done or will be done. The act is there. The law is stated clearly, and those penalties are there and can be made use of. This is something that concerns the people of Banff a great deal, and I am sure it concerns the people in other national parks or will concern them when those parks reach the prominence that Banff has reached.

I want to refer to something that happened a year ago in connection with the application of the provisions of the Alberta hospital act. As hon. members know who were here during the debate in the house last year, a hospital act was passed which permitted the people of Banff to enjoy the benefit of the provisions of the provincial hospital act. They were allowed to come under the dollar a day hospitalization plan. The remaining part of the cost is contributed on a fifty-fifty basis by the province and the municipality. The act was changed so the people of Banff can now enjoy that service, but it is this point I want to deal with particularly.

While the people of Banff wanted hospitalization in the park, they did not want to come under the regulations under this act, and they appealed to have it changed. When we debated this question the minister referred to the health and welfare act, and I want to read something in that regard to be found in part 20 of the regulations under the National Parks Act governing the levying of tax upon the residents of national parks in Alberta for health and welfare services.

If any persons fail to comply with the regulations under this act after having been given 30 days' notice and they fail to pay their tax levy, then they are violating the regulations of this act and they leave themselves open to a fine of $500 and six months imprisonment. The people there most decidedly object to this provision. When we look up the regulation we find that provision is made for the collection of this tax. It reads:

> Where a person refuses or neglects to pay a tax within 30 days following demand, the superintendent may levy the amount of the tax by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person in default, together with the costs of the distress and sale.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this regulation deals with the disposal of those chattels, but the penalty is clear. As stated in the act under "Penalties and Procedure" at page 5, the penalty is that any person violating any provision of this act or any regulation is subject to a $500 fine and in default to six months in jail with hard labour. That was in connection with the health and welfare act Mr. Speaker. When the hospital act was introduced the people of Banff took strong objection to this, and it has been brought to the minister's attention in this house on more than one occasion by myself and by the hon. member for Acadia and considerable correspondence took place in an appeal to the minister to do away with these severe penalties, particularly as they applied to the health and welfare act and to the hospital act. You will see what the promises were as we go along.

I want to read part of a letter which I received from the Banff advisory council in connection with this very matter. The secretary of that council is referring here to a previous letter written by myself. This letter is dated March 24, 1955. In it he says this:

> This is quite right as far as it goes, but there is another section of the regulations which states that non-compliance with any park regulations is liable to a penalty of a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment for not more than six months, and as the welfare tax is part of the park regulations the section quoted becomes applicable.

I want you to notice this, Mr. Speaker. In my first remarks I spoke about discrimination and unfair practice in regard to this matter. I would ask you to listen to this:

> In cases where a resident has become delinquent in the payment of the welfare tax it has been the practice of the department to summon him in the police court with the result that he is fined both for non-compliance with a regulation and also the amount of the tax. The section dealing with distraint of goods is not invoked—

That is the one which was in the welfare tax act and it is also the one which is in the hospital tax act.

> —but the delinquent is really treated as if he were a criminal and in addition he is actually punished twice, which is certainly unjust. He is compelled to pay his tax and is also punished for infraction of the regulations. The council considers this most unjust and we feel sure that if the hospital plan is made part of the park regulations and becomes subject to the penalties mentioned it will be defeated by a plebiscite.

You might ask me the question, was it defeated? In reply I would say no, it was not defeated because certain promises were given by the minister. I shall refer to them in a moment. On May 5 the council again wrote to me with regard to this matter. I shall read only that section of the letter which pertains to it:

> There is no objection to the tax being collected by the park superintendent, provided that such collection does not entail the scheme being brought under the park regulations.

I quote this to you, Mr. Speaker, so you will readily see that the people of Banff are very much concerned with having this regulation removed. Then I took this matter up with the minister and pointed out to him the difficulties the people of the park were facing. On July 5 I wrote to him in this strain:

> Now, it is the view of the hospital board—and I must say that I concur in their belief—that definite assurance should be given to the people of Banff that penalty as outlined in part 1, section 8 of the act, shall not under any circumstance be applied when a person is in default of a regulation under the new hospital plan, but rather that the penalty as outlined in part 20 of the regulations, section 7, shall apply only.
> Would you be good enough to inform me that such shall be the case? I am perfectly aware of the fact that any assurance does not override the act, but I am quite positive too that your assurance will be most satisfying to the people of Banff and the municipal hospital board, and I would further ask your assurance that when we again meet here in Ottawa for the 1956 session of parliament, that an amendment will be introduced to the parks act so as to eliminate the possibility of part 1, section 8, applying to the dollar a day hospitalization plan in Banff national park.

The minister answered that letter and said in part:

> The whole question of the hospital plan is, as you know, receiving active study at the present time. In connection with it, the views expressed in your letter will be kept in mind.

Then, Mr. Speaker, when the question was introduced into parliament and the act was passed, here is what we found. I should say that just prior to that the minister wrote to the Banff advisory council and they sent me a letter which referred to it. They say here:

> Mr. Lesage says—"In order to waive the penalties incurred in section 8 of the National Parks Act, a further amendment to the act would be required. A bill to amend the National Parks Act to provide authority for the introduction of the hospital plan has been passed by the House of Commons and is now before the Senate. However, when the bill becomes law and if the hospital plan is implemented, no doubt regulations for the administration of the plan will be established . . ."

And notice this, because I referred to his promises:

> "In these regulations provision will be made for the method of collecting the tax—

And I emphasize this part:

> —together with proper penalties for non-payment."

Let us now refer to the act. When the hospital act was passed the regulations were drawn up and this was what was put in, as found in part 27, page 2:

> Where a person refuses or neglects to pay a tax within 30 days following the demand, therefor, the superintendent may levy the amount of the tax by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person in default, together with the costs of the distress and sale.

That is the method of collecting it, but it does not refer in any instance to the penalty, and that is the thing the people were very much concerned about. I just indicated what the penalty was. Let me read it again so the members of this house will see what position the people of Banff are in if they fail to pay that tax after 30 days' notice. Not only can they have their goods seized and sold but it is stated quite clearly in the act:

> Any person violating any provision of this act or any regulation, in addition to any civil liability thereby incurred, is liable on summary conviction to a penalty of not more than five hundred dollars, and in default of immediate payment—

And I emphasize those words "immediate payment".

> —of such penalty and of the costs of prosecution, such person may be imprisoned with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding six months.

I am definitely sure, Mr. Speaker, that you would not for a moment condone such penalties being included in the act under these circumstances. I would hope the members of this house would give this every consideration in fairness to the people who are obliged to live under these conditions, and see that this section of the act is revised. All I am asking in the bill is that there be a change, and that $50 be substituted for $500. It seems to me that $50 would be a sufficiently severe penalty for an infringement of the hospital tax. Then, too, I am asking that the word "immediate" before the word "payment" should be left out.

In order that the minister could not in any way refuse to accept such a proposition as this, we have said that any such person may be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one month. Surely that is sufficient. Why we should ever have hard labour attached to it is beyond my comprehension. I say that any reasonable member of this house would agree that we should not have such penalties attached to this legislation.

There is one other section to which I want to refer, and I do not want to take too much time on this occasion. I refer to the right of individuals appointed under the authority of the act to enter a man's house without a search warrant. The regulations dealing with this are very numerous. Supposing, for instance, you caught a fish in Banff park that was under size, you would be breaking the regulations. Now, if a constable empowered to carry out this search so desires, he can enter a man's house without a warrant and search it from top to bottom. He can break open any trunk or any box he desires. In addition, he can leave the park area and go into the city of Calgary. If I happened to be an offender he could come to my house without a search warrant and go through it, whether or not I was there. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think such a regulation as that is just idiotic.

Mr. Fulton: What would he find there?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am asked what he would find. He does not have to state what he would find. If he is suspicious that a man has used any equipment illegally for catching fish, he does not have to state any reason. He can search those premises. The minister may say we need these regulations to search without a warrant particularly in those cases that have to do with liquor. We need to immediately enter a man's premises. I contend, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lesage: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would say that the section of the act to which my hon. friend refers deals only with the search without a warrant in the case of game and fish, not in the case of liquor.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am not saying that. I said the minister may say—

Mr. Lesage: I will not.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Then the minister will be talking differently from the way he talked when I spoke to him privately.

Mr. Lesage: This deals only with fish and game.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): We were talking about searching a house without a warrant, and I was just saying that the minister may say—I may say he did say to me when I mentioned the case to him—that they needed the power of this legislation to search without a warrant in the case of a man with liquor. So hon. members will be under no illusion in that respect let me read this—

Mr. Lesage: Since the hon. member is referring to what I said in a private conversation I will tell hon. members what I said. I made a comparison with the various provincial acts and mentioned the fact that all the liquor acts of the provinces have a similar provision for obvious reasons, and the reasons were the same. That is quite different from what he says now.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Let me say to you, Mr. Speaker, in any event, just to disabuse anyone's mind of such a thing, that we have a reference to it I believe on page 9, and I shall read it so it will not be brought up as an excuse for continuing permission to allow a man's house to be searched without a warrant. The regulations are clear.

> The laws of the province in which a park is situate respecting the sale of intoxicating beverages apply in a park, but no person shall be granted permission to sell any intoxicating beverage in a park unless the application therefor has been approved by the minister and the applicant has secured a licence therefor under the national parks business regulations.

In any event, I want to point out to the members that it is not necessary to have such a condition outlined in the act, where an official can enter a man's house without a warrant, even though he may have liquor in it. This comes under the jurisdiction of the province. I have the provincial legislation here, and I think all provinces take care of that item very well. This, therefore, can be no excuse for the minister to permit these unduly severe penalties to exist under this act, and it should not permit him to continue to authorize a person's home being ransacked by an official without having the proper legal authority to do so. I contend such an official should have a warrant and do it in the proper way.

You will notice that in the bill we say:

> —with warrant or other legal process enter and search any building, premises, structure or residence and without warrant or other legal process at any time enter and search any camp—

There may be circumstances when a person living in a camp has violated regulations and he may escape immediately or within hours so that is taken care of in the bill. Then mention is made of a vessel. A person could have illegally caught fish or illegal equipment in a boat, and that too, is taken care of. He may be in possession of liquor in his car, and that car can be searched without a warrant. We are only trying to protect a man's private property. We say that under no condition should these places be entered without a warrant. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the things I have told you show you the desire of the people of Banff to have these regulations changed in so far as the fine and imprisonment are concerned and in so far as not permitting an officer to enter a man's house without a search warrant. The minister cannot say that has not happened in Banff, because it has.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to talk this bill out. I want the minister to have an opportunity to reply, and certainly I want to give other hon. members here who have parks in their ridings an opportunity to say what they think about this legislation.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): This bill deals with two separate things. The first is a provision to reduce the maximum fine and the maximum length of time for which a man may be sent to prison in lieu of paying a fine. The fine is to be reduced from $500 to $50 and the jail term from six months to one month.

The hon. member for Bow River has pointed out a considerable number of instances in which a fine of $500 would not be applicable. I do not think there is any question but that the regulations under the National Parks Act and probably the act itself need revision. Certainly a good many of the regulations should be revised and the whole thing put in better shape. There are undoubtedly a considerable number of anomalies either in the act or in the regulations. I do not know where they come as between one and the other.

However, I am in some doubts as to whether the way to correct this situation is the way that is set out in the first section of this bill, by making a general reduction in the amount of the penalty from a $500 fine to a $50 fine. There are some regulations under which probably a $500 fine is required. I might just cite one example where it would be a mistake to reduce the amount of the fine. Take the case of a man who is extremely anxious, we will say, to shoot bighorn sheep, and they are very difficult to shoot. He has perhaps tried for some considerable time, it may be days or weeks, outside the confines of the park and has not managed to shoot one. He is coming back home through the park. He sees one on the side of the road, as very frequently happens, and he is extremely anxious to have a trophy or to make that particular type of kill. If he is assessed only a $50 fine he might think it is quite cheap. It is much less than he would pay for the time he has spent in trying to hunt one before, so he might well shoot the sheep and say, "If I am caught and have to pay the fine, that is all right; I do not mind paying the $50".

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): How about six months' hard labour?

Mr. Harkness: I think there are cases of that sort, in which the provision of a $500 fine or six months in jail might be justified, and I think this method of trying to change a situation which is bad and which needs to be changed should be looked into. I fully agree with the hon. member for Bow River that a considerable amount of change is necessary, a considerable amount of improvement is long overdue.

What I am expressing doubt about is whether this particular means of doing it is the way it should be done. I do not think it is. Perhaps the maximum of $500 should remain. What should be done is an amendment of the act requiring that the various types of offences should be put in categories. The offence of picking flowers, for example, would be a category which might carry a maximum $10 fine, or something along that line; whereas the matter of killing game perhaps should call for a $1,000 fine. In other words, instead of having just a blanket coverage, as it is, of $500 today and of $50 if this amendment should carry, the offences should be in a series of categories. I believe that would make for a much better situation, and one which would cover the general running of the park much more adequately than at the present time.

What I would suggest to the sponsor of this bill to begin with is that the first clause be amended to provide for something along that line.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I say to the hon. member that I should like to have the whole act revised in order to give some relief.

Mr. Harkness: Yes. I would suggest to the minister that he take this matter up with his officers and bring in an amendment in place of section 1 of this bill which would cover the matter along the line that I have suggested. We would then get away from the situation where we have so many anomalies as exist at the present time.

The second part of the bill deals with the matter of the right to search a man's house without a warrant. I think practically everyone will agree that a man's home should be pretty well inviolate. It should not be entered by officers of the crown or by officers of the national parks branch or by anybody else without a search warrant. The excuse which is put up for this, as the minister has already indicated, is that it applies only to game or offences in connection with game; but included in that is the possession of firearms, fishing rods or other equipment of that sort.

Under these circumstances it is extremely easy for an official of the national parks branch to enter anybody's house in the national parks without a warrant and make a search. As it definitely states in the act as it stands, he may examine any trunk, box, barrel, parcel or other package or receptacle, and so on. In other words he is pretty well free to do what he wants under the act as it stands, and all he has to plead in justification for going into a man's house, whether he is actually there or not, breaking into the house if he wishes to do so, and turning everything inside out, is that he thought this man might have some illegal game there or that he might have a weapon or a fishing rod or something else with which he chose to take game illegally. In other words, it provides too much opportunity for abuse. I think the minister should agree to accept that provision and do away with this right of search without a warrant as far as the national parks are concerned under the provision as it stands.

It seems to me that this bill is designed to improve the situation generally in the national parks. It has been brought forward with that idea in view. I hope the minister will accept the second provision particularly, and agree to bring in a changed form of the first provision so the penalties for various types of offences may be adequately dealt with.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am really sorry that I cannot accept the suggestions of the hon. member for Calgary North, for reasons I shall give in detail. I am not in a position to accept the principle of the bill.

The bill itself deals with two matters. It contains two amendments. First of all let us deal with the section of the bill which suggests that the maximum fine to be imposed in case of an offence be reduced from $500 to $50 and the maximum imprisonment from six months to one month. I agree that there are a variety of matters covered in the regulations under the National Parks Act. I agree that some of the offences that can be committed against these regulations are trifling; but this is a general penalty clause in the act which covers all the offences.

It seems to me that both hon. members who have spoken tend to forget that the judges in Canada are pretty reasonable men, and also that the officers in the parks, before a prosecution is launched, think twice and in most instances refer to head office here in Ottawa. I can assure the hon. members that the officers of the department are pretty reasonable. I have not heard of any case where there has been a prosecution because a stone was turned or because a flower was cut. There has to be some regulation over matters which seem trivial if we want to preserve the natural beauty of our parks, and these regulations simply must exist. If they are broken in good faith it is understood that it is the practice not to prosecute, and in fact this has been the practice.

There are both minor and important matters; that is why the penalty clause provides for a maximum fine but no minimum is provided for. The judge who hears the case of a person who is accused on summary conviction of an offence against park regulations will deal with the offence according to its gravity.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The decision depends on the judge.

Mr. Lesage: I have great confidence in the judges of my country. They have proven in the past that they are worthy of the greatest confidence.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): There was an example in Quebec just a little time ago.

Mr. Lesage: There may be accidents, sir, but we have courts of appeal and means are provided by law to correct errors of judgment on the part of judges. In practically all cases we can have confidence in our judges. The judiciary is above reproach. I have the utmost confidence in our judges.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would not want my comment interpreted as being critical of the judiciary. We are not discussing the judges but the law, and I was speaking about the law.

Mr. Lesage: When the hon. member made his speech he spoke as if the law were so written that there was a fine of $500 imposed automatically for the most trivial offence which, of course, is not the case.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): No, no.

Mr. Lesage: First of all there has to be a decision as to whether or not there will be a prosecution, and these decisions are made by reasonable people. Second, when it is decided to proceed with a prosecution the case is heard by a justice. I say that the judges in Canada are reasonable people and they are there to render justice. That is why in all our acts you provide—and I say you because parliament has so provided—for maximum fines and maximum terms of imprisonment and in most instances there is no minimum provided.

The general penalty clause on summary conviction under the Criminal Code adopted by parliament only two years ago provides in section 694 for a maximum fine of $500 and six months' imprisonment. May I read section 694, section 1:

> Except where otherwise expressly provided by law, every one who is convicted of an offence punishable on summary conviction is liable to a fine of not more than five hundred dollars or to imprisonment for six months or to both.

That is the general law in Canada. I say that the penalty section of the parks act is in accordance with the general law of Canada.

There are other federal acts which have penalty clauses; for instance, the Meat Inspection Act, which is chapter 36 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1955, in its penalty clause provides for a maximum fine of $500 or six months' imprisonment or both. The Unemployment Insurance Act provides for a maximum fine of $500 or six months' imprisonment or both. The Immigration Act provides for a maximum fine of $1,000 or one year's imprisonment or both. The Northwest Territories Act provides for a fine of $1,000, maximum, or one year's imprisonment, maximum, or both. The Yukon Act has a similar provision.

We also have provincial acts which have similar penalty clauses. The game and fisheries acts of the various provinces indicate similar penalties. The game act of the province of British Columbia, where there is a Social Credit government in power, provides for a penalty not exceeding $1,000 and imprisonment for not more than 90 days.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Lesage: The game act of Alberta, the province of my hon. friend, provides penalties—

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Hahn: I would like to ask the minister at what point in these proceedings any one from British Columbia has indicated that the Social Credit governments were endorsing this legislation.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to hear a Social Credit member from British Columbia dissociate himself from the proposal of the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I did not dissociate myself. I asked the minister a question and the question was this. At what point in the proceedings did any member of the Social Credit party from British Columbia indicate that his party was endorsing this type of legislation?

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, the game act of Alberta provides penalties up to $1,000 and imprisonment for terms not exceeding six months for one section and not exceeding $200 and imprisonment for terms not exceeding three months in other sections. The game and fisheries act of Ontario provides for penalties of not more than $500 for each animal.

Sir, it is six o'clock.

On motion of Mr. Lesage the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: As it is six o'clock this house stands adjourned until Monday at 2.30 p.m., daylight saving time.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

WAR MEMORIALS

STATEMENT ON NATIONAL CENOTAPH AND WORLD WAR II BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce the policy of the government regarding the selection of a repository for the world war II Book of Remembrance and a site for the national cenotaph to honour Canada's youth who have given their lives in the cause of freedom. In my statement, which appears on page 2122 of Hansard of March 14, 1956, I informed hon. members that an advisory committee had been established to consider these matters and that the committee's report was receiving the attention of the government.

The government has accepted the unanimous recommendation of that committee and has decided that a national memorial, to honour our fallen of all conflicts and to house the world war II Book of Remembrance, shall be constructed on Nepean point in the city of Ottawa where an area shall also be provided for the erection of a national cenotaph and for the holding of national commemorative services. This memorial will take the form of a structure of a design appropriate to keep alive the remembrance of all those who have given their lives for Canada. The focal point within the memorial will be the Altar of Remembrance. The matter is now in the hands of my colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters), who is proceeding with the preliminary arrangements and planning for the construction of the memorial and the cenotaph.

Besides serving as a repository for the world war II Book of Remembrance, it is intended that the memorial shall also house a copy of the world war I book. It is not the intention to move the world war I Book of Remembrance from the memorial chamber in this building which, as hon. members know, in its decorative treatment, refers specifically to that conflict. However, relatives of the fallen and citizens at large who visit the national memorial in the future may wish also to see the world war I Book of Remembrance and it is thought appropriate that a copy should repose there.

The committee in its report considered the possibility of the preparation of books of remembrance for those who lost their lives in other conflicts such as Korea and those previous to world war I.

The world war II Book of Remembrance will be completed in the autumn of 1956, and it was therefore necessary for the committee to consider a temporary repository for the book until such time as a permanent repository could be constructed. The government has accepted the committee's recommendation that the book be placed in the houses of parliament, and it has now been decided that a temporary base, on which the book will rest, shall be placed in the memorial chamber. This will have the advantage of having both books of remembrance in the same location until the national memorial is ready.

In its annual brief to the cabinet last November, the Canadian Legion recommended that a national cenotaph be erected and suggested that it be situated in the grounds in front of the peace tower. However, after much consideration, the advisory committee concluded that the most suitable location would be found in the area near the proposed national memorial where there would be ample space for national commemorative services, with parades of service personnel and veterans, and a large gathering of the public. I might say that it is not the intention to move the world war I national memorial from its position in Confederation square where it is perhaps the most conspicuous monument to meet the eye of the visitor approaching this capital city by the driveway from the south.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs consequent upon the statement he made a few minutes ago. I understand from that statement that the new veterans' memorial is to take the form of an altar. Is that altar to be of the same nature as the altars found in the war graves areas maintained by the imperial war graves commission? If I may, I should like to say that I am very glad to hear that this memorial is to be constructed, as I am sure the veterans of Canada will be.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my preliminary statement, the plans of this memorial are being prepared by the Department of Public Works. I am afraid I cannot give a specific answer to my hon. friend's question with regard to the details of the altar.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the first reading of Bill No. 256 (from the Senate), to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to make capital expenditures in the year 1956 not exceeding $233,564,000 and to make certain capital expenditures and enter into certain contracts prior to July 1, 1957; to authorize the national company to issue securities to provide amounts required for the authorized expenditures; to provide that, except as expressly provided, the aggregate principal amount of securities outstanding at any time shall not exceed $203,994,000; to authorize the governor in council to guarantee the principal and interest of securities issued by the company for the purpose aforesaid; to authorize the Minister of Finance to make loans to the said company secured by such securities and not exceeding $203,994,000 in principal amount to enable the said company to meet such expenditures and with authority to give financial aid and assistance to other companies of the national system.

Motion agreed to.

TARIFF BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE MEMBERSHIP OF BOARD FROM THREE TO FIVE

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Tariff Board Act to increase the membership of the board from three to five members and to provide for the salaries of the new members.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

MOTION FOR PAPERS

AIRPORTS—EXPROPRIATION OF PROPERTY, VIRDEN, MAN.

Motion No. 72—Mr. Dinsdale:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda and other documents, in possession of any department of the government, relating to the expropriation of the farm of August Fontana, of Virden, Manitoba, by the federal government, in 1940, for the purpose of establishing an airfield.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to the adoption of this motion on the understanding that it does not extend to include interdepartmental correspondence or other privileged communications of that kind.

Mr. Speaker: Motion carried, subject to the reservations made by the Minister of Transport.

FLOODS

MANITOBA—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ALLEVIATE DANGER—COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the very serious damage already caused in rural Manitoba as a result of the flooding of the Assiniboine river, will the government consider having steps taken to have the public works department do such dredging or other construction as may be necessary to prevent a recurrence of this condition, and also might I ask if the government has given any consideration to taking steps to see that those farmers and others who have suffered damage by reason of this flood will be compensated?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I do not think we should take the initiative in seeking out claims for damages to be paid by the taxpayers of Canada generally to those who suffer from floods. There are some disasters that are of such magnitude that the public opinion of the nation is moved and it is felt that there should be some assistance given. But I think it would be quite a wrong attitude to take that the taxpayers of the nation generally are the insurers of each other against damages that do happen every year in very many places throughout the nation.

I have been receiving communications that would imply that there is a responsibility for any flooding from a stream that at any time was regarded as a navigable stream. Of course, where there are really navigable streams there are efforts made to keep them as free from obstructions as possible and to do that which will minimize the possibility of floods. Now, with respect to the first part of the hon. gentleman's question he will remember that after the flood of 1950 there was a joint commission set up to examine the measures that might be taken to minimize the dangers of these floods, and a very intensive study was made of the situation. The costs of the measures suggested were indicated and some time ago the premier of Manitoba, to whose government the report had been submitted, wrote suggesting that we should take the initiative in setting up another commission to determine whether the economic value of the diminution of the danger would be anything like the cost of providing these works. We wrote back suggesting that our personnel was always ready to co-operate with them, but that was something the initiative for which should be taken by the government of Manitoba itself. I can assure the hon. gentleman that if there was any thought that by some dredging of the Assiniboine river these dangers could be overcome, that would be done at once.

I am not an engineer, but I understand that it would require very extensive engineering work to have any effect upon that area because there are floods that come from not only the Assiniboine but the tributaries to the Assiniboine, the Red river and also from the lakes into which these rivers flow. The whole matter is one of very serious concern to the people of that area and I am sure that the hon. gentleman was delighted, as we all were, to hear these reports that the weather we have been having over the last few days has diminished very substantially the fears that were entertained about the flood possibilities this year.

There have been some floods from the Assiniboine and from the LaSalle and I know that everything that can be done at this time is being done. As to the ultimate solution, it will require further studies before any conclusion can be reached because I understand that the Assiniboine now flows through dikes that are much higher than the level of the surrounding plains. These are matters of great concern, but there are these cycles. It is not so very long ago that there was concern expressed about the sufficiency of water, and now the concern is about the possibility of providing ways through which these abundant waters can reach the northern seas. The subject will have to receive further study. We cannot take the position that it is the responsibility of the federal government to take the initiative for these problems which arise in all of the ten Canadian provinces.

The hon. gentleman realizes, as I do, that there are still Canadian provinces and that they have jurisdiction over their local affairs, but there are matters which require the co-operative efforts of the federal government representing the taxpayers of the whole nation. The problems have to be studied and examined and recommended upon by the local authorities. Up to the present time I think the federal government has, whenever there has been a major disaster that was looked upon as such by the Canadian public generally, recommended to parliament such measures as were acceptable to the Canadian public generally.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, merely to clarify one point, I of course would emphasize as well as accept the proposition that there are provinces, whose rights must be very carefully recognized in a matter of this kind; but my question was premised on the proposition that the Assiniboine river is a navigable river and therefore under the jurisdiction of the federal government to that extent. My question was related to that. I would simply express the hope that as a result of what has taken place consideration will be given to the possibility of dredging and of other work from the point of view of control over a navigable stream.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question? Despite the reports of good weather to which he referred, is he not aware of the fact that the floods from the Assiniboine already constitute a major disaster for many of the farmers in Manitoba? Has this government not already received a request from Premier Campbell for assistance from the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act authorities of the federal government?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There have been requests for assistance in work that might be done to minimize the effects of the floods but no request from Premier Campbell for damages resulting from the floods—

Mr. Knowles: He is always slow.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): —has yet been received. The hon. gentleman will remember that when those floods are raging they look much worse than fortunately they turn out to be when the season has advanced.

That has been the experience in the past with these floods that affect farm lands although I do know that floods are affecting the very valuable farm land which is part of the portage plains. Consideration will have to be given to the construction of permanent work that will perhaps require co-operation between the federal government and the government of the province of Manitoba. To effectively control floods, reservoirs would have to be provided. Attention has been given to the question as to whether the benefits would be sufficiently larger than the damage caused by taking what are now agricultural lands for the construction of the reservoir beds. That question is being studied.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask another supplementary question? When this present disaster is over may we expect more effective action on this question in the future than we have had in the interval since the flood of 1950 from the federal and provincial governments and the international joint commission?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I am not sure what the international joint commission could do about it. As the hon. member knows, a detailed report was prepared as much as three years ago which has been receiving consideration since that time. It was only within the last few weeks that there was this request for a commission to seek to make an appraisal of the economic benefits as compared with the costs of the work suggested in any of the alternatives reported upon by this joint commission.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to the Winnipeg floods. Can the Prime Minister say what happened to the surplus money that was turned back after the relief funds were collected in 1950? Could that be used for any relief at this time?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Well, Mr. Speaker, I would have to make inquiries. There was a body incorporated by parliament to receive in trust what was left from that fund. I have not had notice of this question and I am not in a position to say exactly what is the state of the fund at the present time.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question or add to the previous question. I have just come back from that area and people who have had no crops for two years are likely to have no crops this year. I hope when they are looking over the Assiniboine valley they will do something for the interlake country where they have had no crops for two years.

[Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East).]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RAILWAYS AND NON-OPERATING UNIONS —CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister inform the house if he has yet received word from the railway companies with reference to their decision in the dispute which is now being conciliated? Is it true that the railway companies have refused to accept the recommendations of the conciliation board?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, a letter written on behalf of the railway companies arrived at my office on Saturday afternoon and came to my desk this morning. It is a rather long letter and, after setting out quite strong disagreement with some phases of the majority report and also pointing out the difficulties with regard to financing, the letter concludes—and I can do no better than to paraphrase the last paragraph of the report:

> However, the acceptance by the unions of the majority report based on a contract term in excess of one year creates a new situation in which the railways are prepared to do everything possible consistent with their responsibility to the public to reach an equitable settlement of this dispute. They will be glad therefore to meet the unions for negotiation looking to the development of such a satisfactory basis of settlement.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

AGRICULTURE—REPRESENTATION AT RECENT MARKETING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister give the names of the representatives of the farm organizations who took part in the agricultural marketing conference held in Ottawa on April 16, 17 and 18 and as referred to on page 2774 of Hansard of April 10, 1956?

Mr. Speaker: Should not this question be placed upon the order paper? The hon. member would get an answer, I am sure, with no delay.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: If the question is such that the country might collapse if an answer was not given I suppose I should not be so severe, but the question should be one of great urgency.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is rather urgent to the parties concerned.

An hon. Member: To know whether they were there?

Mr. Dinsdale: Organizations were not aware that they were at the conference.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take the question as notice because there were at least 19 representatives there, or entitled to be there. I was not there all the time myself and am not certain whether they all attended. I shall have to get the record to find out who was there and answer later.

Mr. Argue: Why did you not invite the farmers?

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

SUGGESTED USE OF MICROPHOTOGRAPHIC FILM AS PROOF OF RECORDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser) asked me this question:

> Has any consideration been given to amending the Canada Evidence Act so that microphotographic film would be taken as proof of records of municipal governments?

I do not think there is any great urgency to this question, so as the answer is rather lengthy I suggest that I be permitted to place it on the record.

Our files indicate that this question has been considered on at least three occasions upon the basis of representations by or on behalf of municipalities in Ontario. On each occasion we have refused the requests of the municipalities upon, amongst others, the following grounds:

1. As I have already indicated, the Canada Evidence Act applies only to criminal prosecutions and proceedings in the Exchequer Court of Canada. It would therefore seem that an amendment along the lines proposed, to the Canada Evidence Act only, would be of little assistance to municipalities. For them, amendment of the provincial evidence act would seem to be more appropriate.

2. Whether under such a provincial amendment municipalities should be permitted to destroy documents and rely for evidence on photographic copies thereof is a decision which we think should be made by the provincial authorities which created the municipalities and clothed them with their present powers and responsibilities.

3. If provision were made in the provincial law of evidence for proof of municipal records by production of photographic copies, such provision would apply to criminal proceedings and proceedings in the exchequer court by virtue of section 36 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1952, chapter 307, which provides that in all proceedings over which the parliament of Canada has legislative authority the laws of evidence in force in the province in which such proceedings are taken apply.

TAXATION—REQUEST FOR RELIEF FOR MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the custom that has been established upon the presentation of this motion I am availing myself of this opportunity to bring up a subject which has assumed increasing importance throughout the whole of Canada. It has been discussed here before, it has been dealt with by many public bodies, but it assumes today a sense of urgency which calls for consideration here and in every part of this country. I am referring to the plight of the municipalities, caught as they are by the withdrawal of taxing powers and with the enormous increase in expenditures with which they are confronted.

We read constantly about the crisis in education. We read a great deal about the demands in the field of health. We read a great deal about the need for improvement in the general structure of our highway system throughout the country. We read a great deal about the need for modernization of our facilities for handling the highway traffic of this country. All these and other similar problems must be faced in varying degrees to an extent never before contemplated by the municipal governments of Canada.

Those municipal councils, whether they be urban councils or rural councils, must deal with the wholly basic requirements of the daily life of our people. Through the school boards which are associated with the municipal councils in the local activities, they must deal with problems of education as well as public works, public investment, streets, sewers, water supplies, light, unemployment relief, housing, health, welfare, their portion of the main provincial and county highways and many other services which are more intimately associated with the daily needs of each one of us than many of the very important things that we are called upon to deal with here.

Proposed Tax Relief for Municipalities

The costs and responsibilities of local governments have soared beyond belief and they show every sign of increasing enormously within these next few years. The resources available for municipal governments are neither adequate nor flexible enough to produce the revenue which they need. As we think of this problem and as we consider the ways in which it does fall within the possible action of this parliament to do something about it, we should project our minds forward to what is going to happen in the years very soon ahead of us in order to contemplate what may happen unless something is done and done very soon. By 1975 or quite soon after that date there are reasonable prospects that this country will have a population of 30 million people. We see evidence of an increasing movement of population to the urban or suburban areas. We see the increased need for internal transport facilities within municipal areas that are expanding rapidly into the suburban areas as well as part of an integrated plan of development.

In addition, there are many new needs which will arise. Already it has been necessary for some of the provinces to consider the need for special supplies of water to meet the domestic requirements because of the enormous demands on the ordinary water supply which is not adequate to meet the greater size of the urban communities. It is simply beyond the ability of municipal governments to meet these responsibilities within the limits of their present revenue resources.

Some new methods must be found. There must be some adjustments to ease the burden. There must be some adjustments to facilitate their work. As the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) mentioned before, repeating what I had occasion to say not long ago elsewhere, we must remember at all times that there are the provinces and we must remember that the municipalities, to use the classic expression, are the legal creatures of the provinces. We must recognize that under our federal system the laws governing the provinces in relation to their municipal activities are provincial laws. Nevertheless there are ways in which things can be done by this parliament at the instance of the government of Canada which would assist them greatly at this time.

We have been told publicly as well as in presentations to the federal government that the government must take a more realistic view of the present situation and the new situation with which the municipalities will be confronted. The offers that have already been made for financial adjustment between the Canadian government and the governments of the provinces have been described as unrealistic. They have been described in other terms in different parts of Canada. One of the things that is certainly clear, and clear beyond all question, is that the present proposals which have been made in that field will not meet this urgent need of the municipalities.

One of the places where the parliament of Canada can do something effective is with regard to sales taxes and other excise taxes on purchases by municipal governments. There is something that is the direct and exclusive responsibility of this government and of parliament. Having regard to the fact that it involves a money problem, any move to solve this question must come from the government. They must be prepared to indicate their willingness to deal with it if it is to be dealt with at all.

Then there is another matter that comes entirely under the jurisdiction of this parliament and of the government. That is the situation created by the increasing area of land that is held by the government in the various municipalities and which is therefore exempt from taxation. There is a long history in regard to this situation which need not be repeated at this time. Naturally the municipalities welcome the services which are given by many of these crown corporations or other crown bodies. The fact remains, however, that as the land area taken over in this way increases, it does also accentuate the problem and the difficulties faced by the municipalities themselves. One of the things which most strongly emphasizes the unreasonable nature of this tax is the fact that where the very same things are bought by the provincial government they are exempt from taxation. I know there are certain exemptions. I know that there are exemptions under certain conditions in the case of road-making machinery and equipment of that kind. But generally and with very few exceptions the municipalities are taxed for all the equipment they buy which is needed for the people of Canada.

After all, nearly all the people of Canada live within the boundaries of some municipal body. Nearly all the people of Canada are greatly concerned at the present time with the rapid increase in the level of taxation. Nearly all Canadians are therefore directly affected by taxes on things which they need for their own daily use and which are not in any way part of ordinary daily trade or in any way luxuries or things that any of these people can do without. The municipalities require them for the actual needs of the people themselves.

I believe it is contrary to the whole principle underlying the imposition of sales tax and of excise taxes that they should be imposed upon equipment, machinery and things of that kind or supplies of any kind bought by the municipalities for the use of the people themselves. Unless this were contrary to the underlying principle which guides governments in the imposition of taxes of this kind, there surely would have been no reason for exempting the provincial governments from the application of these provisions. The very fact that provincial governments were exempted emphasizes the acceptance by this government of the proposition that these taxes would not normally apply to things of this kind. Why should municipalities and the school boards within municipalities be called upon to pay sales tax and excise taxes on school equipment used exclusively for education as well as on equipment which is required for the service of these schools?

Certainly the government of Canada and the parliament of Canada must not invade the field of provincial jurisdiction where it is exclusively conferred upon any province under our basic constitution. This, however, is something very different. The government is constantly asked to help in education. Here is one way in which it can do so without any question of jurisdiction arising at all. By exempting school equipment, school supplies and the things that are needed for our schools there is given a direct and immediate assistance in the field of education and entirely within the realm of federal jurisdiction. When the provincial governments are exempted from these taxes, it seems strange that you should come to the boundary of the municipality and find that, just outside, exactly the same activity can be carried on with equipment or machinery that pays no tax of this nature whereas right inside the boundary the same machinery or equipment must pay this tax. All these people live within the provinces and they all live under provincial laws, whether they be laws applying to the activities of the province as a provincial body or to the activities of the municipalities as bodies set up in law by the provincial legislatures. Surely here is one case where we may well ask why this unfair tax is imposed.

There has been much discussion here about the cost of health. This government has been discussing ways in which it can assist in the field of health. Surely there can be no reason of any kind for medical supplies used by the health services in the municipalities being called upon to carry sales tax and excise taxes. It is imposing a senseless and onerous burden upon the municipalities in their carrying out of an essential and necessary responsibility.

Then let us examine the case of crown properties. These have been expanding constantly. With new types of construction, and with new development of the activities of the Canadian government, the area occupied by the Canadian government in many fields has expanded enormously. Whatever method may be devised, there should be adopted some method which will make available to all municipalities the equivalent of the local taxes on the property taken over in this way by the government of Canada on behalf of the people. It is no answer to say that these services are for the general welfare of Canadians. They are. But this is a type of tax that was intended for some entirely different purpose. This is a type of tax that was intended to apply to things that people themselves as individuals buy and sell. I can only repeat my argument that had that not been the case there would have been no reason whatever to have exempted the provincial governments from the application of these taxes.

It is quite true that if the government should give favourable consideration to this proposal—and I would strongly urge the favourable consideration of a proposal which has been put forward on a number of occasions and which I put forward very earnestly today—that action still would not meet the immense needs of the municipalities at this time. Nevertheless, it would be a positive start. It would be evidence of the intention of the government of Canada and the parliament of Canada to recognize within the field of its own jurisdiction the needs of the municipalities and what should be done.

This is not a subject which we raise here for the first time, Mr. Speaker. This is not a subject which we alone have raised from time to time. It is a subject that is being discussed in every part of Canada. It is particularly a subject that is being discussed by the municipalities right across Canada. This year there was presented to the government of Canada by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities a brief which sets forward the needs of the municipalities in a comprehensive, understandable, reasonable and very moderate manner. One of the points raised in this brief suggests another place where the government of Canada might give a lead in dealing with these problems. It asks that consideration be given to making operative again the Municipal Assistance Act of 1938. I am not going to argue whether that act, in detail, should be made fully operative today. I mention merely that the very responsible body which is described as the Canadian

Federation of Mayors and Municipalities had this to say on page 9 of the brief:

> Another resolution of the federation's 1955 conference calls upon the federal government to again make operative the provisions of the Municipal Assistance Act, 1938, in order that funds may be made more available to municipalities at low rates of interest for the construction of self-liquidating projects.

This act, Mr. Speaker, provided for finances from the government of Canada to municipalities for self-liquidating projects such as water works, sewage disposal systems and things of that kind. The act called for the co-operation of provincial governments, and under that act certain sums of money were advanced in different parts of Canada prior to the outbreak of the second world war. Under that act money was made available at 2 per cent interest for these self-liquidating projects. I am not going to argue today what the interest rate could be or should be in such an act.

I point out that here again is an example of the way in which the government of Canada can take steps to assist the municipalities within their constitutional jurisdiction in matters of this kind. Certainly it would greatly help municipalities at this time if funds were available at substantially reduced interest rates for public development.

In any event, whether or not that particular act be considered, the very fact that this recommendation is made by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities is in itself evidence of the urgent demand they are making for assistance and co-operation at this time. As I have said before, exemption from the sales tax and other excise taxes, payment of the equivalent of municipal taxation on crown property, and the introduction of legislation such as that to which I have referred, would not in itself solve this tremendous problem. It would, however, greatly help. It would end the plundering of the municipalities, and it is nothing less than that, under a tax which was meant for an entirely different purpose from that which is under consideration here. I think it is of immense importance at this time that we devote our attention in every way we can, within the limits of our fullest jurisdiction, to the needs of the municipalities.

I think it is also vitally important that in the arrangements that may be made with the provincial governments consideration should be given to the position of the municipalities and the need for opening wider areas of taxation for municipal councils than are now available to them. There is certainly nothing imaginary about this problem. It is being discussed right across Canada; it is being considered, and it is causing very great concern. We have had reason, in these last few days, to think a great deal about the strength of our own free system of government. We have seen emphasized in different ways the distinction between our democratic system and a system which is entirely contrary to that under which we live. One of the things, it seems to me, that could well be borne in mind in considering this tremendously important subject is that the municipalities are, in fact, the places where democracy finds its greatest strength. The municipal body is, in fact, the cradle of democracy. Municipal government existed before national governments. Municipal government is closest to the people. Municipal government should be free in every way that is possible from any restraint upon the exercise of the judgment and good common sense of those who are elected to deal with municipal affairs in the various municipal councils. The strength of our democracy in Canada will be measured to a great extent by the extent to which we preserve the flexibility, independence and financial strength of these municipal organizations.

It was with that thought in mind, as well as the urgent and compelling needs that have been expressed by representatives of the municipalities, that I brought this subject before the house. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe):

> That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "this house is of the opinion that immediate consideration should be given to measures to assist the municipalities of Canada to meet their mounting financial problems, and in particular the immediate introduction of legislation which will provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax, and which will further provide for payment to municipalities of the equivalent of full municipal taxes."

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): There are many members of this house, Mr. Speaker, who have been members of municipal councils and I think, therefore, that many of us will have complete sympathy with the representations made by the mayors and municipalities to the Gordon commission and elsewhere, and indeed with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and the suggestions he has made for the relief of the municipalities. It is incongruous that the central government of Canada should tax the junior governments for supplies they need to carry on their activities in the municipal and provincial fields. The suggestion contained in the proposal of the Leader of the Opposition as outlined in the amendment to relieve them of such imposts, is one which should command the attention of the Minister of Finance and the support of all hon. members; therefore, I am very glad indeed to support it.

The other proposal that the federal government should pay to the cities amounts equivalent to the tax-free buildings and properties in the various cities is also one which we can consider favourably. I would suggest, however, that in many instances the municipalities themselves should reconsider their own position regarding the tax-free properties in their own areas. Many of the municipalities, in order to entice business and sometimes to compete with other municipalities in the acquisition of new industries in their areas, have made very substantial exemptions. If the federal government is asked to review its position regarding tax-free properties now owned by the federal authority, the municipalities should be expected also to consider their own position regarding the tax-free properties in their areas. Not only have they tax-free property, but in some areas municipalities have given very favourable rates, renewable from time to time, in electric power, in water supply and in other respects. All these grants which they have made in order to obtain industries have complicated the question of municipal financing. The whole problem of tax exemption of industrial properties, of federal properties and of the concessions that have been made from time to time by the municipalities themselves should be very carefully reviewed. To the extent that the review relieves the local taxpayer in the municipalities of the heavy burden which he now carries, to that extent will the municipal finances be strengthened.

As a matter of fact, in recent years the municipalities have been called upon to carry tremendous burdens of expenditures. Thirty, forty or fifty years ago there was no heavy trucking, for example, and the cities did not need to maintain the kind of streets they now have to maintain, nor did the provinces have to maintain the kind of highway systems they now have to maintain in order to carry the heavy loads and so on. Our cities have grown and so have the problems of water, the problems of sewage and the problems of health. When we think of the problems of sanitation—I am not going to say very much about that this afternoon—we think of the Ontario rivers and the way in which they are polluted. More particularly in my mind at the moment is the pollution of the great river which flows right beside where we are this afternoon in this parliament building, where the sewage from 230,000 people on this side and about 50,000 on the other side of the river empties in a raw state along this river all within four or five miles of this parliament building site. Many cities have tackled this problem; this city has not. Others have sewage disposal works. All of this has increased the burden of taxation. I suppose the capital city of Ottawa is waiting for this parliament to dispose of its sewage for it, but that is by the way. The suggestion is made that if the sewage gets very much stronger it might dispose of parliament. There is more truth than fiction in that because one of the embassies here has to keep its windows closed on hot summer afternoons now because of the stench arising from the river. It is an impossible situation and one which I hope that the city of Ottawa itself will be inclined to tackle.

But what I was going to say is this. When we think of the expenditures that the municipalities have to make for sanitation, for roads, and so on, not forgetting of course the tremendous expenditures that have to be made for education we begin to appreciate their problem. We realize that the provinces have increased their grants very substantially to the municipal councils in the field of education; but the provincial governments are strained to the very limit in that respect and the municipalities are finding it almost impossible to provide all the facilities that should be provided in modern communities and to meet adequately the costs of education.

When we think of the various federal, provincial and municipal authorities' expenditures, exclusive of defence and veterans' expenditures, which can be placed in a separate category, we find that the municipalities collected only 17 per cent of the taxes—and I am using the 1951 figure taken from Dr. LaZerte's report on educational costs in Canada. Included among their expenditures were 65 per cent of the local education costs; 88 per cent of the gross expenditures for public welfare, which came out of the municipal pot; and 72 per cent of the cost of roads, highways, bridges at the local level. When one thinks of that one can see how these necessary services to the people of the municipality and indeed to the people of the country inflict a tremendous burden upon the local taxpayers. Then, we have to remember also that most of these municipal taxes are collected on real property, with the result that taxes on real property, on homes and the lots on which the homes stand, have reached a very high level indeed; so much so that the taxes alone today are equivalent to what was a fair rent for a house say 30 or 40 years ago, when some hon. members like myself set up a home in this country.

Taxes on real property have increased by leaps and bounds. The limit of taxes on real property has not only been reached, it has been passed. The municipalities have nowhere to look for increased revenues. In some of the cities and in some of the provinces sales taxes have been introduced. The sales tax is a most unfair sort of tax even when it is earmarked for a specific purpose, we will say, for education or for health; but the provinces have been driven to it; they could find no alternative. In some of the provinces of course the sales tax now reaches 5 per cent or more on a long range of articles to supplement provincial and, as I have said, in some cities even municipal taxes. For example, in the city of Montreal there is a city sales tax, with the result that when you add it to the provincial sales tax you have a very high sales tax indeed. That sort of tax, of course, hits the family man very hard indeed because, with his larger family, he must buy more of the things the family will need in the way of clothing, and so on. Therefore, the discussion now before the house is one that is very worth while.

I would hope that within a measurable period more of the burden of health and of education would be assumed by this parliament. When I say education I know I am going to be immediately accused by some people of wanting to exercise federal control over our educational system. I see nothing incompatible with making grants for educational purposes to the provinces and through the provinces to the municipalities and provincial control of the curriculum, teachers' qualifications, complete control of education facilities, and the courses of studies and so on used in the schools in the various provinces.

As the days pass I think local authorities will expect us to assist in the field of health and education to a greater extent than before because after all health and education are not matters purely of local concern. I think the health of the nation is a national concern. A healthy population means that we have young men and women and people in middle life who are able to produce efficiently and continuously. Ill health not only means that we have to carry a heavy burden of hospitals and sanatoria but it also means that we have thousands of men and women who are out of production in what should be the prime of life and the economic loss to the country is very great indeed. The municipalities that are now bearing a considerable proportion of the cost of health services will properly, I think, seek relief through the provinces and the provinces will seek relief through the federal parliament of Canada in order to meet the heavy but vitally necessary burden of health services. The same is true regarding education. Education is no longer a matter of local concern. I suppose that 40, 50 or 60 years ago a young lad going to school probably thought of settling down in his home community and spending the rest of his life there; very large numbers of them did just that. Today, however, it is different. Communications enable people to travel. Opportunities occur for the abilities of people outside of their old community and they tend to move in that direction. Education becomes not a matter of local concern but a matter of national concern.

We are told that we are faced with the competition of new nations that are promoting education and perhaps particularly scientific education. May I say immediately that I am not one of those who believe that scientific education should be the sole aim of our schools and universities. I think scientists should have a good grounding in the humanities if they are going to be good citizens and indeed if they are going to be successful scientists. When we think of the competition we are going to face in future years we realize that we have to provide more and better educational facilities. The municipalities and the provinces have a right to look to the central government of Canada for assistance in carrying this load and I hope that ere long the nations of the world will agree to measures of progressive disarmament.

When we have progressive disarmament and less expenditure in that particular field, I hope we shall be able to continue our level of revenue to the federal authority. I hope also that our increased output, our increased gross national product, the application of automation in our industries and the further increased output in that respect will mean that we may have larger revenues available to all levels of government. These will be largely available to the federal authority because of the manner in which the field of taxation is allotted in this country so that greater revenues will accrue to the parliament of Canada. Consequently ways and means should be found in which to assist both the provinces and municipalities in carrying the tremendous load which is imposed upon them because of the nature of our society at the present time and the nature of the activities in which our society is engaged.

Without taking more time I wish to say that as far as I am concerned I support the idea behind this amendment. I am not sure that it is as comprehensive as I would like to see it and I am not sure whether it is feasible in all respects. Articles that are necessary for the municipalities, educational institutions and the provinces should be tax free. We should not have excise tax, sales tax or tariffs on goods that are going to be used by our public bodies and public institutions. As I said earlier, I think the municipalities as well as the federal authority and the provinces should consider the effect of the tax exemption policy that the municipalities and provinces have followed and the parliament of Canada has demanded.

We have tremendous tax exempt properties, some of which are railway properties. The Canadian Pacific Railway, for instance, is the beneficiary of tremendous tax exemptions in this country and they are in perpetuity. I do not say whether or not as time elapses the recognition of something given in perpetuity under entirely different financial and economic circumstances should be reviewed by the authority which first granted those exemptions. After all, a life sentence imposed upon a criminal does not always mean a life sentence; often it can mean less than 20 years with good behaviour. Perpetuity should also have some determination as the society in which it was granted under different circumstances develops and grows and the burden becomes a heavy one; therefore, I am supporting the amendment.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in raising this question the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) has done a service. We feel that it is a timely question, one which should be given every consideration by the hon. members of this house.

I believe, as was expressed by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), that the amendment is perhaps not as comprehensive as it could have been but it is in terms which we can support and I rise at the moment to place our position on the question before hon. members in the hope that we might be able to obtain some sympathetic consideration of the problems of the municipalities and the provinces by this government at a time when it is giving careful consideration to the whole field of taxation and the division of taxation powers as between the federal government and the provinces.

I am not going to repeat the things which were said by the two previous speakers, but I do agree with them when they say that one of the great problems facing every province today is the deteriorating condition of the municipalities. Taxes levied against property by the municipalities have reached the point where they have become expropriatory, and I do not think I can describe them in any other way. As the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has said, we are away beyond the point where property in a country like Canada should be expected to pay. It simply means that in most municipalities taxes are so high that one must consider handing over to the municipal authorities the whole of his property every 20 years, and oftentimes more than that. That is a rather serious condition. Property cannot continue to bear the weight of taxation which it is now bearing in many provinces. Provincial governments have become increasingly aware of the seriousness of the situation and some of them are trying to do something about it. There are various things which the federal government could do to help this whole situation. I am not overlooking the fact that already something has been done, but in my judgment it does not go far enough to relieve the situation to the extent to which the federal government could do so.

May I outline about six or seven things which in my opinion could be done. When I mention these things I am fully aware of my responsibility in this house. Further I want it known that we are not simply talking about things when we mention these, for we have done something about this in my province. In my province we are trying to practise what we preach. As I go along I shall illustrate the things which I think the federal government can do by showing what we have done in my own province to relieve the terrible burden of taxation and debt which is now upon the municipalities.

First, it seems that many years ago the federal government put through legislation known as the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act under which municipalities were enabled to borrow under what were called successive guarantees granted by the provincial and federal governments at the rate of 2 per cent. Those loans were mainly for self-liquidating projects and were made for a period of several years. The act worked well and there are still some outstanding accounts, but I believe they are up to date. Every one is current and the government has not lost a penny through the operations of this act. I believe it has proved itself to be an effective piece of legislation in every way. I can recall my experience as provincial treasurer in the province of Alberta in dealing with loans under that act. I know the great good that we were able to do with the assistance of the act.

With the onset of world war II the act was suspended and no further loans were made. I submit that there is no reason in the world why that act could not be revived and operations under it continued. If there ever was a time when it was needed it is today. Municipalities are hard pressed to get money to carry on the vital services of the municipalities as well as money with which to finance the expansion of services occasioned by the large increase in population which many of them have experienced over the past few years. Consequently it would seem to be only logical that where they are forced into the field of borrowing we should do something about reviving the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act and grant the municipalities the right to borrow with provincial-federal assistance at a lower rate of interest.

I do not say that it would be possible to lend money to them at 2 per cent as we did prior to world war II, but certainly we should lend them money at a much lower rate of interest than they are having to pay when they go into the money markets of the world and compete against one another for the sale of their debentures. There is no sense or rhyme or reason in forcing municipalities to pay 5½, 6 or 6½ per cent on money that they must borrow. Normally they cannot sell their debentures at a figure less than 6 or 6½ per cent. I would certainly urge the federal government to consider reviving that act.

There is another thing I would mention. Much has been said here about federal assistance in the building of roads. I did not speak when the trans-Canada highway bill was being considered, but I had in my mind some things that could have been said but were not said. One thing I should like to draw to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) is that his department and other departments of the government are taking large sums of money in the form of taxes from the automobile industry of this country. If the figures which I have been able to gather for 1954 are correct, and I think they are, in that year the federal government collected $257 million from the automobile industry in the form of excise, sales and other taxes.

It then becomes a question of considering how much was spent in the building of roads. If the minister will go into the record he will find that less than $20 million was spent in the building of roads in Canada in that year. That seems to me to be a pitifully small percentage of the income derived from the automobile industry which wears out the roads. It seems to me that the responsibilities borne by the municipalities of this country are so great that the federal government could well afford to turn back in some way through the building of roads or a network of highways, or in the form of assistance to the provinces in the building of highways other than the trans-Canada, a larger proportion of the income from the automobile industry. That seems to me to be the only logical thing to be done.

I think a tremendous weight of evidence has been presented here in the past week or two since I came back to my work to bolster up the contention that the responsibility of the federal government in this field of highway building is very great. I would suggest that here is one field that could be explored to good advantage. Perhaps the minister and his colleagues could get their heads together and find out how they could return to the municipalities a greater portion than the $20 million as compared with $257 million of the taxes taken out of the automobile industry. So much for that.

May I say just a word about the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition which asks for the removal of the sales and excise taxes applied against the things purchased by municipalities and school divisions. I can recall years gone by when members of all parties on this side of the house urged the government to do just that. We presented arguments which it seemed to me were logical in favour of the removal of these taxes. I stand today where I stood when I first mentioned this seven or eight years ago. I believe the time is long past due for the removal of these foolish taxes.

For example, take a school van operated by a school division for the purpose of carrying children to school. When a school division buys such a van they must pay a fairly substantial amount of money in the form of excise and sales taxes. When a municipality buys a bulldozer or a caterpillar tractor for the purpose of building roads—

Mr. Harris: They do not pay any tax.

Mr. Low: They do not now? How long is it since that was removed? It must have escaped me.

Mr. Harris: About three or four years ago.

Mr. Low: That was one of the onerous items for a long time. Then we have building supplies. There is one example with respect to which there is, of course, no question that they do pay. These municipalities and school divisions are having to spend huge sums of money to provide buildings for the increasing population of the country. I see no logical rhyme or reason why these people should have to pay sales and excise taxes on building materials. It seems to me that a 10 per cent sales tax in the case of that sort of thing is like exacting from one of your children a 25 cent fee to enable him to come to the dinner table or the breakfast table. I think it is quite comparable, and it seems to me the tax should be removed entirely so as to give these people a chance. At least that is one item that the federal government can consider with some sympathy, and if they would see fit to remove these taxes it would certainly be a great help to the municipalities. It would help them to avoid any further onerous taxation against property or the imposition of sales taxes.

There is one other thing I think the government can do. One could talk for the whole of one's allotted time in a debate like this on the decentralization of industry. Over the years we have watched a centralization of industrial activity in the larger cities. These industries pay taxes there and, of course, they create problems, including the problem of the fouling of water and all that sort of thing. But there are many municipalities where you find no industry at all.

If the government were to follow the advice of General Worthington, who is in charge of civil defence, it would take the lead and would assist the provincial governments in trying to work out some systematic pattern of industrial development so that there would not be this dangerous centralization. If that could be done it would help the municipalities of the provinces to a very remarkable degree. This government can take the lead. There are many ways in which it can take the lead. By wise direction from here I am certain that a movement towards the decentralization of industry could be worked out which would benefit the municipalities to a tremendous degree.

Let me say a word about education. I support what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said. In spite of the fact that there are those who feel that when anyone here mentions federal aid for education they are trying to interfere with provincial autonomy, I still think that there are ways by which the government can advance substantial aid to education that would assist the municipalities in no mean degree. I think the time is long past when that should be done.

I was taking a look a few minutes ago at the terrific cost of education in the provinces, and I want to say that when one contemplates not only what the school divisions in the provinces are having to pay today to educate children but also what they are going to have to pay in the next few years when the full force of the post-war population begins to have its impact upon the schools, believe me, they are going to face an almost overwhelming problem. It seems to me, without going into a dissertation on federal aid to education, that there is another field in which the federal government can help to relieve the terrible burden upon the provinces and municipalities, particularly the municipalities. They are the ones I am thinking of at the moment because they are the ones who have to carry the great burden of costs for education.

Taking a look at the seven fiscal years ending March 31, 1951, through to March 31, 1957, I notice that in my own province the provincial government over those seven years has made operational grants to the schools totalling $104,641,791, construction grants to schools totalling $22,871,929, and grants to the teachers' retirement fund amounting to $4,333,739. That is just in seven years. But that does not, of course, account for the full cost of education by any means. As I have already said, with the tremendous number of boys and girls who are now just about ready to enter our schools following the post-war upsurge in population, the municipalities and school divisions are going to have a pretty tough time.

Mr. Coldwell: What about our universities in future years?

Mr. Low: Yes, in another ten or twelve years the universities are going to be in exactly the same position. In fact, they are feeling the impact right now. Certainly we should be forward looking and make provision ahead of time for these heavy burdens that will have to be carried.

May I say a word about another way in which the federal government can certainly be helpful to the municipalities. The other day my hon. friend, the usually forthright Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris), was asked a question concerning the rediscount rate, and I was surprised that he did not give us more information than he did. I thought he evaded the question and I was sorry because, as I say, he is usually a pretty forthright fellow. There must be some reason behind the increase in the rediscount rate to 3 per cent. If there is not, bless my soul, why let it take place then? Surely this is the sovereign body and the Bank of Canada is not our sovereign master. At least, I do not look upon it as such and we ought to be laying down the policy for the Bank of Canada and not the Bank of Canada for this house and the country.

It is all very well to get the advice and counsel of the Bank of Canada. That is fine. But let me show you what they have done. By increasing the rediscount rate to 3 per cent they have put an almost impossible burden upon the municipalities and school districts that have to borrow. They are forcing these people to have to go out in the debenture market and sell their debentures at a great discount and at an effective interest rate that will run to 6, 6½ or 7 per cent. If, Mr. Speaker, the government really wants to do something to help the municipalities it will take hold of that rediscount rate and see that it is not used as a means to bolster up the interest rates charged by the banks in this country for the simple reason that the municipalities cannot pay it.

The municipalities have to finance in some way. In order to help to relieve that situation in my own province, the provincial government decided we would have to get into the field of lending and so we set up just last year a new corporation which is called a municipal financial corporation. It is a co-operative composed of membership from the cities, towns, the rural municipalities and the government. They each buy shares. The corporation then manages pretty well the distribution of financial assistance to the municipalities in the province. Whenever any municipality requires to borrow, an application is made to the corporation. The corporation does the investigating, decides on the terms and that sort of thing, and eventually out of a reserve fund set up by the province loans are made to these municipalities and school divisions with government backing at no higher than 3½ per cent.

We have successfully obviated the necessity of our municipalities going into the money markets of the world and selling debentures there during the past few years because of the fact that they could not possibly pay the rate of taxes they have been bearing and at the same time carry the interest rate that would be charged for such debentures in the money market. We have saved them many thousands of dollars by that means. So, Mr. Speaker, as I said to begin with, I am not just talking one way and watching my own people in the province of Alberta act in another way. We are practising what we preach. I suggest that the Minister of Finance take under very serious advisement the whole question of the bank discount rate and do something to make it possible for our municipalities to borrow their needs at a rate of interest that will certainly not be 6 or 6½ per cent.

The final point is this. Quite a number of years ago we recognized that if we were to be of any help to our municipalities in the province, one of the things we would be obliged to do would be to agree to pay taxes in full on provincial property in the towns and cities of that province; and that is what we have been doing. We have been making a grant that was not only equal to but in excess of the full amount of taxes which those municipalities would have charged against the provincial property at the usual assessment rate. I think the minister could take that as a good example. When he contemplates all of the things that have been said here today with respect to help to the municipalities, I think he would be well advised to resolve to bring in a change to his act under which he would pay full taxes to every municipality in this country where there is federal property established. By doing so, he would be doing something worth while.

Mr. Macdonnell: He will probably say he is not as fabulously rich as you are.

Mr. Low: Maybe not. But it seems to me that he has plenty. I do not think he is in rags and tatters, by any means.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that this amendment is timely. It would direct attention to the terrible condition in which many of our municipalities labour today. I certainly suggest that all the minister needs to do is to ride up and down some of the streets of Ottawa—

Mr. Knowles: "Up and down" is right.

Mr. Low: That is what I mean, up and down; more up than down.

Mr. Coldwell: More in than out.

Mr. Low: If he would do that, he would see something of the need. I pay taxes in this municipality. I am obliged to contemplate handing over the full value of my property to the city every 20 years and then to start all over again trying to accumulate something with which to comfort my old age. I think I have said enough, Mr. Speaker, to draw attention to at least six or seven things that the federal government could do.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by expressing my gratitude to the hon. member for Peace River for his kindly suggestion that, under normal circumstances, I have been fairly forthright in dealing with the House of Commons. May I also advise him that I was not conscious of any effort to avoid any answers the other day with respect to the discount rate of the Bank of Canada. I made it clear the week previous, when I was questioned on this point, that I did not think —and this is still my opinion—that in answer to a simple question on the orders of the day one could do justice to an answer on monetary policy of the Bank of Canada or of the government of Canada, for that matter. I am quite prepared to debate the matter at whatever length hon. members may feel would be suitable on an occasion when it would be desirable to do so. I rather fancy that the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) is waiting for that opportunity, when the time comes.

Mr. Blackmore: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harris: I will just repeat what I have said. I gave a short answer to a question which I thought was directed solely to that short answer on the occasion, being under the impression that I was not expected to state at any length whatever the present monetary policy, particularly having in mind that—as I have said already three times, I think, Mr. Speaker—as before parliament opened we knew there would be questions about this matter, we made suitable arrangements and gave suitable notice that we would discuss this matter in the banking and commerce committee. I regret that that discussion has not yet taken place but that situation has been brought about owing to the fact that I personally desired that some of the legislation which had been sent to that committee should come back here to be passed on to the Senate for further consideration before we went into a subject which did not require their consent at a later date. As a matter of fact, some of the legislation is already out of date and is not renewed unless the legislation we have before the committee and before the house is passed.

On the main point at issue in this amendment, there are of course a number of features that ought to be discussed. First I will touch on the suggestions that have been made by all three of the hon. members who have spoken previously, namely that we ought to bring the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act into use at the present time. The Municipal Improvements Assistance Act was passed in 1938 as an unemployment measure designed to stimulate employment in Canada. It was intended as a bonus, if you will, to municipalities in order that they might undertake self-liquidating projects at that time, but always having in mind unemployment. I do not think anyone in this debate will suggest that 1956 is a year in which we need bonus the putting of people to work in Canada.

An hon. Member: We hope not.

Mr. Harris: Up to the present time there are no signs that that is so. In any event, it would be quite impossible at the moment to find many municipal corporations which would use the act even in its present form. I make that statement for this reason. On both occasions when the provincial premiers were here last year and once again when they were here this year this question arose. On each occasion I told them that if they had any instances of municipal corporations not being able to borrow money for needed municipal purposes, I should be glad to investigate the reference they would make. To this date I have not been given the name of a single municipality in this country that has not been able to borrow money for its purposes. It may well be that there are some municipalities which are obliged to pay more interest than they think they should pay on money borrowed for local improvements. I have no doubt that all of us would like to borrow money at a lower rate than that which we think we are going to be obliged to pay when we set out to borrow. The higher the rate, the more likely it is that the municipal corporation will give serious consideration to priorities in the municipality with respect to expenditures of the taxpayer's money. I would not want to express any opinion about that matter, however, because I do not think it is our duty—nor is it a privilege of ours—to express opinions about municipal expenditures. I merely urge again that unless municipal corporations find it impossible to borrow money or find it possible only on extremely difficult terms, there is no point in reviving the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act at least until another occasion when we may desire to stimulate employment by having public works at all levels.

The hon. member for Peace River described in some detail the arrangements that are being made in the province of Alberta with regard to the municipalities. I share the view that I thought the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) expressed by interjection, although I am not sure that I heard him correctly, namely that perhaps the province of Alberta was better off than I am. If that is what it was, may I say that I am inclined to think maybe that is so.

Mr. Macdonnell: I said I thought you would perhaps say that.

Mr. Harris: Then I have done so.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member is not disappointed.

Mr. Harris: The province of Alberta is now in a position to make with its municipalities almost any arrangements that it might desire to make. They have the money in the bank and may do so. But the problem that faces the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) here at the moment is this, and it is always the same one that is presented by all opposition members. It would be utterly impossible to raise, by the present tax rate, sufficient revenue to carry out the proposals that they bring forward in the house.

Mr. Low: We will have something to say here about that matter later.

Mr. Harris: I will come to that. It may well be that the whole suggestion here might not amount to $20 million. I do not know. I have not the figures available.

Mr. Coldwell: It would amount to more than that.

Mr. Harris: That may be so, if you include the sales tax. I have not the figures at hand. But let us suppose the figure is $30 million or $40 million. It may be said that there is a surplus this year of $115 million and therefore one could do this. But the fact of the matter is that at every session of parliament hon. members opposite present proposals which run into the hundreds of millions of dollars rather than the tens of millions and the Minister of Finance is always in the position of having to say that it is not possible to implement them without an increase in the tax rate. At the same time hon. members opposite deplore the high tax rate and leave the minister in a position where his general approach to this problem is, I think, that he would rather not spend the money and reduce the tax rate instead of spending the money and maintaining the rate at its present high level. There are some exceptions and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has drawn my attention to the fact he has always indicated, and he is quite correct, that he believes this parliament could make greater expenditures and find the money available through the good offices of the Minister of Finance.

The hon. member for Peace River spoke of the wise direction by this government in decentralizing, I take it, the functions of government. Coupled with that, I might point out that the Leader of the Opposition said that the municipal corporations were the cradle of democracy and existed long before national government. I think perhaps on second thought he would agree that it was just the reverse in Canada. We had national governments of one kind or another and municipal corporations grew up afterwards as a result of various statutory enactments. It is true that municipal corporations, in any matter whatever affecting municipal corporations, are entitled to make representations to us. They are entitled to make representations to us to remove the tax burden on them, as they have done in the brief of the mayors and reeves, and we should give consideration to that. However, in the direction of their affairs or in anything whatever connected with them, I think every provincial government of this country would expect this parliament to adopt a hands off attitude.

Mr. Knowles: And hands out of their pockets, too.

Mr. Harris: The leader of the Social Credit party also spoke of a figure of $250 million received from the motor car trade of Canada by way of taxes. My recollection of the figure with respect to the special excise tax only would be something of the order of $80 million or $90 million. I am not sure what the balance is, unless it happens to be the corporation income tax.

Mr. Low: The 10 per cent sales tax.

Mr. Harris: Ten per cent sales tax is about the same as the special excise tax, but for the moment I will accept this figure.

Mr. Low: There would be the corporation tax in addition, of course.

Mr. Harris: I might point out that we seem to be considering taxes by the source rather than the purpose. This government, if it did not need the money for its general purposes, would no doubt be doing away with a great many taxes about which it could be said, as my friend has said, you should use them for purposes connected with the base of the tax. We are not taxing motor cars in order to build highways; that was not the purpose of the tax in the first place. The purpose of the tax was to pay for the war effort and subsequently to pay for the additional cost of defence and such matters as have been imposed upon us.

Mr. Low: The municipalities have to pay for roads, and they wear out.

Mr. Harris: The municipal corporations have to pay for roads, and so do the provincial governments. I am not even going to suggest that they ought to spend the precise amount of money they collect from motor cars, by licence fees, the gasoline tax or anything like that—

Mr. Low: The Liberal opposition in the province says they should.

Mr. Harris: That may be, and that is their business in the provincial field. I am not going to argue here whether or not the proceeds of the tax ought to be spent precisely on the subject matter from which one gets the tax. Indeed, if that were so we would have a lot fewer taxes than we have.

Now, the leader of the C.C.F. party made a statement with which I think we can all agree, namely that health and education are not solely of local concern. Stated in that manner it only means that all of us are desirous of having a higher standard of health and education throughout Canada. Nothing that I would say at any time would indicate dissent from that view. But once again, sir, and especially with respect to education, there is no point in repeating what has been said so many times by this government. It is not our view that we should raise money in parliament here for the purpose of paying it out for education in the provinces or in the municipalities. We do spend money for the education of Indians, and we do make grants to higher learning. We have not taken the view that we should impose taxes to make grants in this field, with the exception of the two items I have mentioned and vocational training.

The real purpose, I take it, of the motion is covered by the complaint that municipal corporations are losing money by reason of the operations of this government in the various municipalities, in that the municipalities have to provide services, lose the assessment and do not get grants in lieu thereof. Now, there are two problems to be borne in mind here. Once again the general problem, sir, is that if we were to pay out a greater sum of money we should have to take in a greater sum of money through the tax rate. It is a matter of opinion whether all the municipal corporations or the individuals comprising those corporations would prefer to have a lower federal tax rate or whether they would prefer to have the grants. I believe that is a matter on which there would be perhaps 200 different opinions in the house.

Let me point out what is done in another field. So far as I have been able to determine there are only two provinces which make anything like the type of payment it has been suggested this afternoon we ought to make. If the provincial governments, in their relations with the municipalities, their own creatures, do not feel justified in paying the municipal corporations it seems to me that there are some arguments why such payments are either unnecessary or undesirable. I would not suggest, however, that our own views here would be coloured particularly by what the provincial governments might do because they would have perhaps different reasons for doing that from what we could advance to parliament.

But may I point out that Ontario, while it does pay the general rate on its property, does not pay the school rate. The Ontario hydro does pay the general and school rates, but not on buildings for operational purposes. The provincial government does not make a payment on behalf of the educational institutions. In Manitoba the provincial utilities pay the equivalent of both taxes on land and buildings, and the province pays full taxes on land but not on buildings. In Saskatchewan the provincial government pays full taxes, including business tax, on all the properties of crown corporations except the Saskatchewan power corporation and the Saskatchewan government telephones. In Alberta the province pays the full tax equivalent for properties of the liquor control board and of Marketing Services Limited or on properties occupied by any person or crown agency who pays the rent to the province. In British Columbia, the power commission pays 3 per cent of its gross revenue and the provincial liquor board pays what it believes its actual taxes might be. There is a provincial grant to the city of Victoria. In Quebec the provincial government pays the water rates and certain maintenance charges on certain crown properties.

In New Brunswick there is quite a complicated system of payments, but that is not to suggest that it is not fair in any way. They pay half the cost of snow plowing or a dollar a head, and they reimburse the municipalities by paying about two-thirds of the cost of renewing the main trunk highways through municipal corporations. They contribute to certain bridges, to the repair of main highways and they pay certain costs for local improvements in local improvement districts which I suppose have no municipal governments. Nova Scotia pays to the municipalities containing land under timber lease 5 per cent of their dues, and the liquor commission pays tax equivalents. In Prince Edward Island no payments are made in lieu of taxes. This would indicate that the payments by a senior body to a municipal corporation are not by any means regular or uniform except in so far as it would appear that the provincial governments do not make payments themselves on the general rate except, as I have said, in the case of Ontario.

It was suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, perhaps unintentionally, that municipal corporations are losing a great deal of income by reason of the crown agencies of this government. It might be that in some cases that is true, but most of them make their own arrangements with the municipal corporation in which the property is situated. For example, defence production, central mortgage and atomic energy pay full or very close to full taxes to the municipal corporations in which the property is situated. The Polymer corporation gives a grant of approximately full taxes. In every case these arrangements are negotiated with the different municipal corporations concerned. In the case of Canadian Arsenals, the board of grain commissioners and the national harbours board, they pay less than full taxes, probably in the neighbourhood of one-half. Therefore, the chief complaint, I am sure, is that this government pays taxes only in those municipal corporations where the Municipal Grants Act applies.

May I point out, sir, that this history of payment by the federal government is now only six years old and that it was this government and this party which began paying to municipal corporations in 1950, and for a particular reason. That reason may not be valid at the moment. It is a matter of opinion which I know will be argued later on in this debate; but it was advanced as an argument at that time that because of the great concentration of federal property in certain municipalities it was unfair that they should bear a burden that ought to be borne by the general taxpayer of Canada. The formula of making a grant in lieu of taxes, where the assessment of the federal government in any municipality exceeded 4 per cent of the total, was devised. That was clearly understood for the reasons I have given, namely, that because of national purposes we had to place certain federal property in that municipality and that, for national purposes, the general taxpayer might be expected to contribute some of the cost rather than have the local municipal taxpayer pay the whole cost of the services and the assessment of that property.

You may recall, sir, last year we introduced an amendment to the act which reduced the 4 per cent to 2 per cent, during the course of which we would extend the payment of taxes from something like 50 municipalities to almost 150 municipalities in Canada in which we have federal property. We have had less than a year's experience with the act and I would suggest, sir, that on that basis we ought not to extend its provisions further at this time.

I doubt whether I have covered all the points that have been raised by hon. members opposite, but there is one point made by the Leader of the Opposition which requires an answer, namely, that it is not by any means surprising or unusual that a local purchase by a provincial government should not bear a tax when the same local purchase by a municipal corporation should. It has been a principle of our constitution for as long as I can remember that one does not tax the crown in the right of the province, but that principle never extended to a municipal corporation or indeed to any other form of corporation. The distinction is there and has been recognized since confederation.

Perhaps I should add one word further about the sales tax on purchases by municipal corporations to remind hon. members that we also require a good deal of experience in this field. We have been collecting taxes for some time, sir, and on the basis of the experience which we had up to that time my predecessor introduced an amendment to the act three years ago in which he provided that there would be exemption for certain road machinery and the like over $1,000 in value. It must be evident that one of the reasons why we were able to make that amendment was that items of this kind were clearly defined and could be clearly recognized as such. But I do not think, sir, that we should extend exemptions to all purchases made by municipal corporations for the quite obvious reason, which may not commend itself to hon. members but does commend itself to a minister of finance, that exemptions generally are undesirable.

The best form of taxation is a tax which requires no exemptions, not because one receives more revenue that way, but because in fact with exemptions you always have the argument that the exemption is discriminatory against someone else in a like position who ought to have the exemption as well. The whole basis of taxation is to find one in which you are not subject to any of these arguments. Because you gave an exemption to A, logically you must give it to B, and if you go on in that way long enough you find there is no basis whatever for the tax in the first place and you have to start all over again.

I am not trying to magnify the difficulties of the Minister of Finance because I suggest, Mr. Speaker, our tax system is reasonably good and does not create too many difficulties.

However, sir, I would like to conclude by saying that, as I promised the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) and other hon. members a year ago when we were discussing the Municipal Grants Act and the amendments I brought forward at that time, this subject is under constant review and will be considered not only at the moment but throughout the coming year. However, it is not the intention of this government to introduce any amendments to the Municipal Grants Act at this session.

May I just make this final point? These motions to go into supply do give an opportunity to all hon. members to debate a good many subjects and do give and are intended to give the opposition an opportunity to present an argument in most cases against the shortcomings—that is the omissions rather than the commissions—of the government; but at the same time it should not be overlooked that these motions are in themselves a statement by the opposition that this government has failed and ought to be dismissed from office, because that would be the result of the motion carrying. For that reason I feel just as firmly as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) does that this government ought to remain in office and for that reason I am going to vote against the amendment.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the issue that is before the house is, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) has said, a very timely one. It has been the concern of many people from coast to coast in this dominion. It has been moved again today by the Leader of the Opposition, who has had a wide experience on different levels of government. He has had experience as an alderman and mayor and also in local council work and realizes the tremendous burden that is being carried by the municipalities of this dominion. The mayors, school boards, reeves, aldermen, controllers and councils have had a most difficult time, and their future looks very alarming to them from day to day.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and the hon. member for Peace River, and I was not surprised but glad to hear that they intended to support the amendment. As the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said, many of us in this house have had experience in other levels of government, provincial and dominion. As I recalled the years that I spent in municipal affairs I could not help but think of the vast changes that have taken place during those years.

I have also listened with keen interest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris). I noticed that he searched the provinces, the hydro commissions, the liquor commissions and every other level of authority he could think of to find an anaemic excuse for not accepting the motion; however, he finally concluded by saying the chief reason for not doing so was to keep this government in power. Before he said that I knew that neither he nor his colleagues want to lose power, though if they were not jolted occasionally they would ride along in their smug complacency and do nothing for anybody other than themselves. They are the world's greatest optimists; one can imagine that they do not care what happens so long as it does not happen to them.

The federation of mayors, reeves and councillors throughout the country have been pleading with every hon. member of this house for many years, and I am sure they have not missed government members. I will venture to say that the Minister of Finance's wastepaper basket is full of petitions from coast to coast pleading with him for some assistance.

Mr. Harris: No, I keep them; I do not throw them away in the waste basket.

Mr. Rowe: Well then, that old pigeonhole must be chock full of dust and petitions, because you certainly have not done anything about them.

This is a problem which is common to all, Mr. Speaker. The changing times have placed tremendous burdens on the municipalities, burdens that were not thought of 25 or 40 years ago, as hon. members have already pointed out. I can remember years ago when I was in the county council. It is because of these increased burdens that the municipalities are in their present plight.

Even farmers buy new automobiles occasionally. A farmer buys a similar licence to that purchased by a city dweller, but the man who lives on a provincial highway has to pull his car with his tractor through a foot and a half of mud down the side road to get it on to the highway. He has to keep his hogs until they are too fat and no longer select because he cannot get a truck in to get them out. At various times he cannot get his cattle to market. These are problems which exist in many places; the municipalities cannot keep pace with the times. This is a real problem in rural municipalities, and it involves not only the standard of living but many marketing dollars.

Despite all these things we are given excuses concerning what can and cannot be done. We hear the constitution referred to, and we are told that it is the responsibility of the provinces or the municipalities. It is not entirely a case of jurisdiction, and I think an over-all revision of our revenue system and a new look at responsibility in view of the rapid growth and expansion of this country are long overdue. The provinces and the dominion should sit down together with the municipalities and attempt to work out an over-all agreement.

We realize that the municipalities are the creatures of the provinces and the provinces are the creatures of the dominion. The Leader of the Opposition said the municipalities are the real cradle of democratic freedom, because a great many people have gone from the municipal level of government to other fields of government.

Mr. Harris: I graduated after you did.

Mr. Rowe: Yes, I was looking at you. I noticed you too, and I recall that you graduated from a neighbouring county. I am amazed that you have so little regard for the municipalities after having been a county councillor, because any one who has spent some years on a county council usually develops an affection for it, not only for the duties performed by councils but for the pleasant social occasions which form a part of their activities.

Never before have the municipalities faced greater responsibilities, and never before have they received a smaller portion of the national revenue with which to meet them than is the case today. The Minister of Finance says they were given a little bonus in 1938 because of unemployment, but he is optimistic now and says there is not going to be any unemployment, and apparently he thinks that is ample excuse for not giving the municipalities any help today. He said it would not amount to very much if the sales tax were taken off and they paid the tax they should pay on their federal property.

Mr. Harris: I excluded the sales tax from that. I was thinking of municipal councils.

Mr. Rowe: In fairness to the minister I could agree with him, but this government has always said, "What is a million?" and now it says, "What is 20 million?" The government sits quietly by and does not even attempt to offer the relief that could be given under our present jurisdiction. The minister has pointed out that the liquor commissions and the hydro commissions pay the municipalities only a certain amount, but in most cases his government pays them nothing. It levies a sales tax on much of the equipment they buy and they are even taxed on municipal printing. The government takes all the tax it can from the municipalities and gives as little back as possible.

The government does not seem to take into account the growth and expansion of this country. With respect to all this national expansion and industrial development we must keep in mind that it is this forgotten level of government, the municipal level, which has such tremendous responsibilities at the present time. The development of industrial expansion, the building of industries in different places, the standards of services in the municipalities, all have a great bearing on the attraction of foreign capital and the location of industries in the respective districts. More and more the municipalities are becoming the cradle of our whole national industrial development.

As has already been pointed out, the municipalities must provide services for housing developments, educational institutions, must provide roads and so forth. Many other matters enter into this field including traffic congestion, the safety of children and so on. When you drive along the highway in this country you can always tell when you are at the edge of a municipality because you are likely to break a spring on your old Ford car or blow out a tire in the municipal pot holes. The municipalities are more or less curtailed in their ability to collect revenues.

I can well recall that when I belonged to the government that was in power many of the hon. members who are absentees today used to chide us for not being fair to the municipalities. They said the municipalities were having a hard time. I can recall that the circumstances were difficult in those days because there was a world-wide depression, but at that time the government of Canada took only 40·5 per cent of the total revenue of the dominion. In 1951, 20 years later, the dominion's take had increased from 40·5 per cent to almost 71 per cent. At that time the provinces took 20·2 per cent, today they take only 17·2 per cent. In 1930 the municipalities had 39·3 of the total tax revenue, today they have only 11·9 per cent. Never has their responsibility been so great and never has their portion of the total revenue been so small. Yet this government sits smugly by and quietly and complacently takes a greater share of the revenue while at the same time enlarging its share of power.

We had a conference, a dominion-provincial conference. All these have been very nice parties. Everybody talks about a new approach and then they call a conference. It takes them a long time to decide to call it and it takes them a long time to assemble. Not long ago the federation of mayors were greatly encouraged when they were told that while they would not have much authority at the conference, they could come to it. They attended with a watching brief and were greatly encouraged as they thought something was going to happen, that the provinces and the dominion would make over-all federal-provincial agreements by which some relief would be given to the struggling municipalities, and a broad national policy might be inaugurated to provide some uniform assistance to them.

The federation of mayors may have had only a watching brief, but they certainly looked and listened and watched. They watched the slow assembly and they heard the quick adjournment. Nobody made anything or got anything. Nobody gave anything away. They were told quietly to go back home. Seldom in history had so many come so far for so little. There was no real effort, no new agreement; it was a mere mockery. No wonder municipal officers in places like Toronto were disappointed. They had wanted to have a conference a few months ago, and asked the Prime Minister to hold such a conference, but the answer they got was that even the Minister of Finance was too busy. Later on the Minister of Finance did send for them and brought them down.

Mr. Harris: On the contrary, I went to see them.

Mr. Rowe: For all the good it did, it did not make any difference whether you went to them or they came here. That illustrates the whole attitude of the government. It is not the letter of the constitution, it is the spirit of the government. This tired old government is just the same on everything; it is just smug and complacent about everything. They are the greatest optimists in the world. They think it does not matter what happens as long as it does not happen to them. It is not a matter of this resolution, it is simply a matter of this government being so complacent. They fail to grasp the problems that confront us.

I do not mean to say that anyone who has any knowledge of all levels of government would say that the constitution could not be considered at all. We know there are the provinces and we know there are the municipalities. This present government seem to be interested in the provinces and apparently that is the reason only about half the government are here today. It must be because they are interested in provincial as well as dominion affairs.

I think there are ways under their present constitution that something could be done. As I say, the letter killeth but the spirit giveth. There are ways under their present jurisdiction that would permit them to do a great deal. This government taxes even municipal printing. They have been asked to relieve the municipalities of that tax. This government imposes the sales tax. They have been asked to relieve the municipalities of that tax. This government does not pay taxes on most of its properties. They have been asked to do so. The sales tax paid by some municipalities amounts to as much as $800,000. That may not seem much to the government here but it is something to the municipality, especially when the government pays nothing on its principal government buildings.

There are certain inequities in the grants that have been given in lieu of taxes under the Municipal Grants Act, which has been amended. I believe that about 100 municipalities receive a total of about $6 million. I notice the minister is strong about no exemptions, fair play and equal rights for all, special privileges to none and so forth, but if he wants to put those principles into practice may I suggest that there are about 750 other municipalities which would get about $12 million if he treated them as he treats the other 100.

Then there is the unemployment problem, which has been mentioned before. This is not a tremendous problem at the present time, but for the man who has exhausted his coupons or who cannot qualify for relief unemployment presents a real problem. I suggest that unemployment should be considered as a national responsibility, and the dominion government should pay 100 per cent of the cost. We must not forget the benefits this government derives from our industrial development, for which services must be provided by the municipalities.

This government is taking almost double the percentage of total taxes paid in Canada that was taken when this party was in power in 1930, while the municipalities take only 11·9 per cent today as compared with 39·3 per cent at that time. In other words in 1930 the provinces got almost 40 per cent of the total tax revenue in order to provide these services, while today this government takes over 70 per cent—

An hon. Member: Nearly 80 per cent.

Mr. Rowe: No, it is nearly 71 per cent, 70·9 per cent to be exact. They have gone from almost 40 per cent up to 70 per cent, almost double, whereas the municipalities are taking less than one-third of what they took of the take at that time. Who must bear the brunt of this? It is the home owner, the man who has a mortgaged house in the municipality. It is the head of the household who is trying to get his house paid for in order to have a home for his family. It is the working man. Those are the people who are doing it.

There is a limit to the amount of taxes that can be paid. A tremendous portion of our national production is being paid in taxation. I know it is argued by many economists, and sometimes just as vigorously by politicians who think they are economists, that still more can be taken because everything is sound. However, the problem of the municipalities is a growing one, it is a real one, it is a difficult one, it is one which must be solved for the health and prosperity of this dominion. The municipality may not be the cradle of democracy in the sense of being the cradle of parliamentary practice, but it is the cradle of industrial development. It is the cradle of the homes of this country, and the happiness and the family life of this country depend on the standard of living, to which reference has been made this afternoon.

Many more services are required. Streets in many municipalities are unsafe. You see children on their bicycles bumping over the holes in municipal streets and automobiles going by within inches of them. You see automobile tires blown out because of the condition of municipal streets. As has been mentioned this afternoon, right in this capital city we can see the evidence within an eighth of a mile of this building. I notice that the way is fairly smooth from here to the Chateau Laurier, so that none of the government will be hurt. I am glad of that, because I walk that way quite a bit myself. But you do not need to go much farther down Rideau street before you find that you might as well walk as drive an automobile.

These are problems that concern the lives, the happiness and the homes of the people of Canada, and the municipal officers are confronted with these burdens. They are only receiving about one-third of the share of the national revenue they received 20 years ago, yet they are asked to provide many more services. This afternoon the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar emphasized the growing numbers of school children and what is required for educational services in the public and technical schools, indeed every branch of education from the kindergarten right through the university. We find that in rural municipalities the farmers are taxed almost double for the building of high schools and colleges that are being enlarged almost every year. Small municipalities within a few hundred miles of this city with a population of around 3,000 have spent as high as $1 million on educational services.

We are approaching 1958, 1959 and 1960 when, with the present rate of immigration and taking into account the birth rate and the increasing population, the requirement for educational services will be still greater. There is not one hon. member in the house who has not talked to municipal officers and been told about the ever-growing problem and the services that are going to be required. In view of the fact that the government's own revenues, their own taxes, depend to no small extent on the services provided by the municipalities and the condition of the municipalities, the government should reconsider its policy.

There is the question of the municipalities being able to attract new industries, and in that regard we should examine what the municipalities in the United States have done. We need policies in Canada to encourage the development of our resources and to enable our municipalities to attract industries. When these people from the United States come here to look at a municipality they are not encouraged to build in it if they see that it is short of schoolrooms for children, if they have to bump up and down the main street and pretty nearly break their Cadillac cars in which they drive over here to carry on their inspection. The revenue received by the Minister of Finance is affected accordingly.

Therefore I urge the government, and especially the Prime Minister, whether or not his luck has been bad, to try to get back to the days when his party talked about the great happy family of provinces. I remember the billboards in years gone by: "Vote Liberal, one happy family, nine happy provinces."

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): That is still so.

Mr. Rowe: They are pretty unhappy children now in many respects. The hon. member says they are still as happy.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You cannot see it.

Mr. Rowe: I have heard some speeches in his province that did not indicate they were very happy. However, I urge the government in all sincerity, even if they have had a conference that has not accomplished anything, to sit down again with the provinces and discuss the matter. There may still be hope. If you cannot change the letter of the constitution you can change the spirit of your attitude and see the problem that is almost screaming at you so far as the municipalities are concerned. The municipalities are in distress. They are in a state where their progress is going to be hampered. The municipalities are asked to do more with less.

I have pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in seconding the amendment and supporting it. I am glad we have had the support of those to my left. I am sorry that so many to your right, Mr. Speaker, who would like to vote for this measure to help the municipalities are going to be forced to vote to save a tired old government from retirement.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the last words of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), namely that we are forced to vote for the government.

Mr. Hodgson: You know you are.

Mr. McIvor: If that is the type of speech he is going to make, then I can tell him that he is far from being right.

Mr. Hodgson: Sure you are. Toe the party line.

Mr. McIvor: I want to get down to earth, and I have two questions that I would ask the Minister of Finance to answer. Before I put them, may I say that I listened very attentively to the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe and his description of the time when the party in power took 40 per cent of the nation's revenues, compared with the 70 per cent that we now take. Boy, Mr. Speaker, those were the golden days! Those were the prosperous days, were they not? I can tell you that I happen to know that, so far as our cities and municipalities are concerned, they do not compare with today.

At that time I could go to our schools, see how the children there were dressed and tell the brand of flour that was used in their homes. We have better times today in our cities and all over Canada than we had in 1930 or later. I have two questions to ask the minister. If this amendment passes, you will have less money to spend, will you not? Therefore I ask the ministers, where are you going to get the money to replace the money you lose? What other taxes are you going to levy? If you do not levy new taxes, where are you going to cut down? I can tell you that you dare not cut down on veterans' pensions. Will you cut down on family allowances? Will you cut down on old age pensions? Will you cut down on unemployment insurance? Where are you going to cut? That is the question that bothers me.

I know that the mill rate has something to do with the taxes we pay in Fort William, but a whole lot of the success of the cities in which we live depends upon the city council. We have a city council in Fort William that watches finances closely. They watch spending. I do not know whether that is because there are three ladies on the council, but we have a council that watches spending closely. The amount of taxes I pay in Fort William depends on the mill rate, and if the mill rate goes up I pay more.

As far as the amendment is concerned, I just want to have these questions answered. Where are you going to levy any new taxes? Where are you going to make cuts? I do not want to see family allowances or old age pensions reduced, and certainly you cannot cut the veterans. As far as our veterans are concerned, there are some increases they should get and we are going to fight for them to the limit.

That is all I have to say. As far as my vote is concerned, nobody has told me how I am going to vote and nobody ever did. Perhaps they did that in former days, but they do not do it today.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I am going to be brief and explicit in what I have to say. I think the amendment is very important, and deals with a very important question. I do not think it has anything to do with cutting any of our social service expenditures and I do not think it has much to do with dominion-provincial relations. I think it is a straight matter of proving to ourselves or some of the people to whom it still has to be proven that under the present scheme of things municipalities across the country are not able to carry the responsibilities fixed on them by the constitution.

In my judgment, if the amendment that has been proposed passes it will give very little relief to the majority of municipalities throughout Canada. For a start, the resolution asks for the elimination of the excise tax and the sales tax on equipment and so forth purchased by municipalities. Most of the heavy equipment purchased by municipalities is now tax exempt. With regard to the other materials which they purchase, if the figures were worked out I do not think it would be found that the suggestion would give the majority of municipalities much tax relief. At the conclusion of the resolution we find these words:

> . . . and which will further provide for payment to municipalities of the equivalent of full municipal taxes.

I assume what is meant by that wording is that in any municipality where the federal government has property, the full tax rate shall be paid. The wording is also subject to many other interpretations, but I think that is what is meant. If so, I want to say that 89 per cent of the municipalities across Canada would not receive any relief whatsoever, although some relief would be received by the larger centres where there is a concentration of federal property. I do not think the resolution offers much, Mr. Speaker. Before I sit down I intend to tell you what I think should be done instead of adopting the suggestions contained in the resolution.

I think we all must agree that the burden which cripples the average municipality across this country is the cost of education. That is the main problem. I know it exists in my own community to a great extent. For the first time in the history of the country, about three years ago we had a teachers' strike that spread fairly well over that whole community. Things are getting rather bad when people like teachers, with the qualities they have, find it necessary to strike in order to bring to the people who should know the situation a realization of the inadequacy of salaries. Right at the present time in that same area the teachers are demanding a commission to sit down with a school board in one municipality and try to work out more adequate salaries.

Being on the outside and not on the inside doing the fighting, one can see both sides of the argument. I recognize the problem faced by the municipality of which I am speaking in connection with meeting the demand for more adequate salaries. In that particular community a total of about 60 cents of every dollar collected in taxes goes into the schools, with the resultant crippling of other services. However, the municipality tries to carry that educational burden. Having 60 per cent of their total revenue going into schools is a terrific problem. Right at the present time they are in an extremely bad spot. Education is the crux of the problem as far as the municipalities are concerned and tax relief as suggested in the resolution will not help a great deal, except in the larger centres where there is a concentration of federal government property. The answer to the question of relief for the municipality in the field of education is federal aid to education.

I do not think it is necessary to sell that idea to any of the members of this house, regardless of the side on which they sit. However, the idea must be sold to the provinces. There are in Canada provinces which jealously guard their right to have complete supervision in the field of education. Unless you can get unanimity in the provinces I realize that the federal government is in an awkward position with respect to granting relief. If we do not give relief in the field of education, in my judgment any other gesture we may make will be only a palliative and will certainly not touch the crux of the problem.

Another way in which the federal government could help would be by accepting full responsibility for the employable unemployed. The 89 per cent of the municipalities that will not benefit under the formula proposed in the resolution are not in a position to carry the employable unemployed. I know that most of us who represent ridings away from Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and the larger centres find that when we are at home most of our time is occupied in trying to find employment for people who are unemployed and whose insurance has run out. There is no employment in the community and you spend day after day talking to them and listening to the sad stories; and they are sad ones.

There is nothing the town can do. The municipality has not the necessary finances and, as I said before, it is already staggering under the burden of trying to pay the bills for education. By accepting full responsibility for the employable unemployed the federal government would be making a gesture to the parts of the country in which revenues are the smallest; I refer to the municipalities. Of course in 1945 that offer was made by the federal government at a dominion-provincial conference that did not finalize any of the suggestions or offers made in the green book proposals at that time. The federal government, without changing the constitution, can help in that field of the employable unemployed.

The municipalities also have another burden, and it has to do with the field of health. That burden arises in connection with the indigent people of the community who cannot afford hospitalization or medical attention of any kind. Most of the municipalities I have in mind have their own social service set-up in which people are paid to investigate and write little orders, which run into a great deal of money, without having complete responsibility for the indigent poor. They run into large hospital bills. Many of these people must be sent to other parts of the province. Then there is the matter of transportation, ward costs, nursing services and doctor bills. All that runs into a staggering figure in a municipality that has a population of 40,000, 50,000 or 60,000.

I have reference to the maintenance of the social service centre, the hospital ward costs, doctor bills and transportation for the indigent poor of the community. These are spots where neither the provincial government nor the federal government give any help. It is considered to be the burden of the municipality. The great majority of them, at least 89 per cent, are not in a position to meet those bills. That, of course, is something that should be taken care of through the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Most of the provinces are in this position; at least it is the position of the one in the end of the country from which I come. There is money available in the Department of National Health and Welfare provided they can match the grants, but it is the matter of matching the grants that deprives them of the opportunity of getting anything from the federal government. They have not the money with which to match the grants. I believe some formula should be worked out by the Department of National Health and Welfare with provincial governments to at least help in that field of providing social services and taking care of the indigent poor. That is another way in which the federal government could help by making use of the machinery that is already set up; and it would be some considerable help.

In that field of education also you run into the whole question of vocational training. That is something that is badly needed today. The press indicates a shortage of engineers, technicians and trained workers, that there is great need for them and all that kind of thing. There are in existence between the federal government and the provinces agreements that are very good, and a good job is being done where they can be applied. But in the end of the country about which I am thinking the difficulty is this. In order to get a vocational school started, a great deal of work and money is necessary. The federal government will pay 50 per cent of the capital cost of starting a vocational high school, but the province and the municipality between them must raise the other 50 per cent.

There are many municipalities that would have a vocational high school doing that kind of academic and vocational training if they were in a position to make their contribution; but many of them are not able to do so. I know centres in which they have studied the problem over the last 15 years and in which they have been willing and anxious to have these vocational schools. What has stopped them from getting them? The province is willing, the federal government is willing, but the municipality has not the money to pay their share of either the capital cost or the maintenance after the school is set up. They admit that quite frankly. I think, in time, the minister's department should sit down and take a square look at the equality of opportunity that exists in the field of education across this country, including these vocational training schools.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has already indicated that we intend to vote for this resolution. Personally I go along with him, and I will vote for it. However, I do not think it means very much. I am convinced that if the resolution were adopted it would mean very little to 80 per cent of the municipalities across the country, because in asking for tax relief mention is made of the sales tax and taxes of that kind. These things have been taken care of fairly well. We threshed that out for a number of years. The heavy equipment, like fire engines and bulldozers, purchased by municipalities is exempt from sales tax.

As I said before, wherever there is a concentration of federal property the municipality benefits considerably. Such municipalities are not the ones who need to benefit. The communities that need to benefit are those that are staggering under the load of education costs. Then there is the question of matching grants that are available providing the community has some money. The terms of this resolution would mean very little to those municipalities. However, in consideration of the little it does mean, I will go along and vote for it.

I would suggest the three things I have mentioned; federal aid to education; the federal government taking responsibility for the employable unemployed; and a square look at the whole field of matching grants by the Department of National Health and Welfare to see if something cannot be worked out under the present system to assist municipalities with their heavy load in connection with indigent people and social services.

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I, too, shall be brief this afternoon. I do feel that the amendment which the Leader of the Opposition has put forward today is the best of the four which have been advanced so far this session by the Conservative party. I think this particular amendment is timely. I think it is fair and I think it is reasonable. Perhaps, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South suggests, it has not gone as far as some might like, but it is a motion which I think would be of tangible assistance to the municipalities.

In recent years, as every hon. member knows, most Canadian cities and towns have had ever greater difficulty in balancing their budgets. Since the war municipal taxes have been increased year after year. They have become so high in many localities that they are almost unbearable, yet the costs of municipal government continue to outstrip the revenues which municipalities are able to collect.

I must say that this afternoon I was not very satisfied with the reply the Minister of Finance made to the Leader of the Opposition and other members who have spoken. I feel that, in very polite language, he has given the municipalities the brush-off for another year. As I say, his language was courteous but it was a very firm brush-off nevertheless. I say the minister is once again refusing to recognize this very real problem, at least to the extent of giving tangible assistance.

I think this is to be regretted, because part of the difficulties under which municipalities are labouring has been caused by the fact that the federal government is taking such a huge proportion of the over-all tax dollar. Most of the new taxes which have been imposed since the war by municipalities have been on real property. As a result, in many areas of Canada today the burden is becoming so intolerable that the wisdom of even owning a house is becoming questionable. There are many people who say, in effect, "Taxes are so high we might as well rent."

A number of factors have been responsible for high municipal taxes since the war. There has been the inflationary period which has made the purchasing power of the municipal dollar dwindle. There has been the huge increase in population in our cities and towns, which has meant new streets, sewers, sidewalks, traffic lights, hospitals and so on. Moreover the increased population has meant that every city has needed more policemen, firemen, garbage collectors and so on. Most civic employees have demanded, and rightly so, fairly substantial wage increases in the past 10 years.

As has been already pointed out, the municipalities have been expected more and more to absorb certain welfare expenditures, such as costs for the employable unemployed, the costs of taking care of the aged, the costs of taking care of neglected children. All these costs have been increasing. Hon. members will have noted that since 1945 municipalities have frequently been called upon, in co-operation with the provinces and the federal government, to pay part of the cost of providing low-cost housing. It seems to me that these really are not expenditures for which municipalities should be responsible. Surely the senior governments should bear the full costs of these items. In any event these factors have stretched the credit of many municipalities in Canada to the very limit. In many localities they have pushed real estate taxes beyond reasonable limits.

What can be done? We have heard a good many suggestions this afternoon. Personally I think it is reasonable to ask the federal government to take the initiative in calling a dominion-provincial conference to discuss this whole financial problem of the municipalities. We could then see what could be done. I am absolutely convinced today that sooner or later the senior governments must explore the possibility of giving the municipalities a wider tax base.

In the second place, I think such a conference could consider relieving the municipalities of certain obligations which they have now, which are not particularly related to property ownership. Why for instance should the municipalities today be paying the costs of relief for the employable unemployed? Nor can I see why they should be forced to look after sick people, the aged and the like. As I said a moment ago, I feel these are responsibilities of the senior governments. Can anyone tell me why municipalities should have to look after civil defence? Surely that is an item which would fall within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

In the third place, and this has been mentioned already, I feel very strongly that the federal government should pay a normal taxation on all federal property in municipalities. The government has gone a long way in recognizing such a principle in the last few years, but many of the provinces still shirk their responsibilities. I think the provincial governments, as well as the federal government, should pay fair taxes on all their properties in municipalities.

The point has been made this afternoon that the government should exempt the municipalities from the payment of the 10 per cent sales tax on purchases they make. I certainly sympathize with such a proposition. It does seem ridiculous, as has been emphasized, that school boards and municipalities should have to pay a 10 per cent federal sales tax.

This afternoon the minister said that if he made one exception for municipalities probably he would have to make another for other groups. I suggest he has already made an exception to the rule, on behalf of the provincial governments, to hospitals and the like. All he would be doing now would be extending the same principle.

Finally, I do think if any such conference should be called it should give serious considerations to methods whereby municipalities could raise money for capital purposes at an economical interest rate. Some people believe that the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act of 1938 should be revised. There is a lot of merit in that proposal. Today the municipalities are paying rates of 5, 5½ and 6 per cent on borrowed money. These rates are too high. They are too high needlessly, because there is action which the federal government could take to alleviate the problem.

Personally I like the way they do it in the United States. Many of the municipalities issue bonds which the federal government makes exempt from income tax. It seems to me that if the Minister of Finance would consider permitting tax-free municipal bonds a lot of our municipalities would have some of their problems eased very quickly. They would be able to raise money at much lower rates and it would not cost the taxpayer an excessive amount of money. The problem of financing Canadian municipalities is a very important one today. I do not think this amendment will do everything to alleviate it, but it is a sound proposal and for that reason I am going to support it.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in this debate because this amendment deals not merely with $10 million, $20 million or $30 million but goes beyond that and suggests that consideration should be given to measures to assist the municipalities of Canada to meet their mounting financial problems. That to me is the real question and, like the hon. member who has just taken his seat, I feel it is a question which the minister has brushed off.

I noted some of the answers the minister gave, particularly to the hon. member for Peace River. In answer to something the hon. member for Peace River had said the minister expressed his view that the municipalities could still borrow. Well, I am not arguing against that, but to me that is not an answer to the question at all. To me it is not enough to say that the municipalities can borrow. What I am interested in is that the municipalities should be put in a position to pay their own way. Borrowing just seems to me to be a palliative; it is just putting it off.

Mr. Harris: I was discussing that part of his speech with reference to the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act.

Mr. Macdonnell: I realize that, but I still think my comment is fair.

Second, the minister said—and I would agree with him—that there would be a great deal of questioning raised if the federal government stepped in to give directions to municipalities. I would agree with that, but that does not seem to me to enter into the matter at all. I agree that the municipalities are the creatures of the provinces, but I still feel the government is faced with a problem which is not met entirely by just holding back and taking a negative attitude.

My third point is that the minister answered the suggestion that the federal government should pay their taxes by pointing out that in some of the provinces that was not done; in some others it was only partially done. I have no doubt he was right, but I find that very unsatisfactory for two reasons. First of all, those other legislative bodies have limits as to their taxing powers. Second, I do not think this small and to me rather niggling excuse dealt with the main problem.

It is a long time, Mr. Speaker, since W. S. Gilbert wrote this little verse; it is close to 75 years ago:

> Every boy and every gal,
> That's born into this world alive,
> Is either a little Liberal,
> Or else a little Conservative.

I suppose some of us feel the political world would be a simpler place if that were still true; but it still is true that every boy and every gal born into Canada alive has the privilege of three forms of government to live under. Nominally, of course, all these forms of government are his servants. They are supposed to serve him, the taxpayer. Nevertheless it is a fact that they do not always get on too well together. They do spend a good deal of the taxpayer's money in legal battles with each other, though not as much as previously. It would be interesting if we could find out just how much of the taxpayer's money has been spent by the various forms of government which he has set up in carrying out contests with each other. There was a period in the 1870's and the 1880's when one of the great industries of Canada apparently was litigation between the provinces, particularly Ontario and the dominion. Sir Oliver Mowat and Sir John A. Macdonald carried on continual controversy in those days, and of course we all remember occasions when there was not always the fullest co-operation between the dominion and the provinces. We all remember that in the year 1930 the late prime minister of this country, in his famous five-cent speech, said, as reported at page 1227 of Hansard of 1930:

> With respect to giving moneys out of the federal treasury to any Tory government in this country for these alleged unemployment purposes, with these governments situated as they are today, with policies diametrically opposed to those of this government, I would not give them a five-cent piece.

Those were some of the difficulties that we had, and it seems to me that we are dealing with this situation in what I find is a very disappointing way. We are not really looking at the matter with a broad enough view.

Let us agree that the municipalities are the children of the provinces. Sometimes they may feel like stepchildren; nevertheless the provinces have had to do and have done a great deal to recognize their needs and to support them. I find it difficult to describe actually the attitude of the federal government toward the municipalities. Perhaps one might say that they look on them as poor relations. My colleague the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) quoted from Charles Lamb a while ago to describe poor relations. I shall read one or two extracts from his remarks, as quoted at page 2871 of Hansard:

> A poor relation is . . . a drawback upon success—a stain in your blood—a blot on your escutcheon—a death's head at your banquet.

I do suggest very seriously that there should be and needs to be an entirely different approach to this matter. As I see it, plenty of evidence has been given in this debate this afternoon to show that the municipalities are really in a kind of impasse; and to say that it is to be left entirely to the provinces I find very unrealistic. The Prime Minister in his opening speech of the session said, and I quote from page 49 of Hansard:

> In general, we did not see any need to share in the normal costs of growth of provinces and municipalities.

The word "normal", of course, is a word that could be debated a good deal; nevertheless I find that a very disappointing statement. I continue to quote from the Prime Minister:

> The financing of this growth presented problems, but they did not seem to us to require a federal solution.

I shall try to argue later on that they do very much require a solution where all three forms of government come in, because if we have reached, as I suggest we have reached, an impasse so far as the municipalities are concerned, then what other course is there? Surely we are not going to regard the present situation of the municipalities as a normal feature of growth. Surely it is abnormal. Surely we do not believe we are in a constitutional straitjacket; surely we do not believe that it is impossible, if the need arises, to make some change whereby the municipalities will be able to live.

I suggest again that the attitude taken by the Minister of Finance this afternoon, following what the Prime Minister had said earlier in the session, is practically saying, "Now, there is a problem here but we are not going to have any part of it". I do not believe that can be the final word. I just cannot believe it and that is the reason I want to make whatever contribution I can to this discussion.

Here we have a taxpayer who is paying taxes to the municipality and to the federal government, leaving the province out for the moment. As the Leader of the Opposition outlined earlier, the taxpayer receives from the municipality a great many things including streets, education, sanitation, street lighting and police protection. I could go on and add to that. The federal government pays huge sums for defence, in which the taxpayer is concerned. It also provides family allowances when his children are young and an old age pension when he is old. Through the Minister of National Health and Welfare it provides circulars telling him what to take when he goes on a picnic and how to deal with baby talk and other things contained in various publications.

If the taxpayer is going to be put in the position where he finds that notwithstanding that he has to pay so much money to his federal tax collector there is not going to be enough coming to his municipality which is so close to him to enable it to do the things which are necessary, then he will very properly think we have reached a constitutional impasse.

I do not intend to dwell on the figures which have been given as to the extraordinary change which has come about in the last few years, but I shall just mention those figures briefly. In 1930 the municipalities collected $306 million and the provinces collected $157 million. It is difficult for us to realize that the provinces collected so much less then. The federal government collected $315 million in 1930; provincial governments, $157 million and the municipalities, $306 million. In 1951 the figures were: federal $3,791 million; provinces, $918 million; municipal, $636 million.

That is before the transfer of funds. Those figures represent the actual collections made by the three bodies. The result is that from 1930 to 1951 the municipal revenue had doubled, the provincial revenue had multiplied about six times and the federal revenue had multiplied about 12 times, increasing from $315 million in 1930 to $3,791 million in 1951.

I think we must all agree that this leaves the municipalities in a very difficult situation. The municipal burdens have multiplied and, as has been pointed out, we have the irony that by reason of exceptional activity and tremendous industrial growth the various municipalities which are experiencing this activity in its most extreme form and which are providing huge amounts of taxes for the federal government and are also providing in large measure the gross national product from which the federal government derives buoyant taxes, are having great difficulties in providing their necessary services. If some of the calculations now being made prove to be correct I gather that the federal taxes this year may be so buoyant that the minister's estimate of his surplus may look like small potatoes next December; however, that is in the future, and it is just a matter of gossip.

I suggest that this municipal situation is an urgent problem and that nothing is being done to grapple with it. We are really pretending that it does not exist. I agree with what the minister and someone else said, that even if this resolution were adopted the amounts involved would not go a very great way toward solving the problem; that is why I took great pains to read the broader words which I think are most important:

> . . . immediate consideration should be given to measures to assist the municipalities of Canada to meet their mounting financial problems.

I am not fooling myself that those sums will actually make a tremendous difference. What I am interested in is this broad problem of taxing power, to create a situation where those who spend the money shall as far as possible be able to raise it.

I have already tried to say that the things which come from the municipalities are the things of every day importance, things we need and which enter into our lives more closely than anything else. The dominion takes enough money to get along. I can imagine the Minister of Finance saying to a hard-pressed treasurer of a municipality, "How are you getting along? I am all right. I have a nice big surplus." And I can imagine the treasurer of almost any of the thousands of municipalities across Canada saying, "How I envy you; that is not my position." Then he might go on and remind the minister that the reason the minister has this surplus is because he is taking so much from the citizens of that municipality who usually contribute to him vastly more than they do to their own treasurer.

Mr. Rowe: They might get some back next year.

Mr. Macdonnell: My colleague has suggested that there might be a method in the minister's attitude. We have already mentioned that, and of course next year is next year with its various possibilities which have not yet been finally declared but upon which we are all reflecting.

I am not going to spend much time in talking about the actual plight of the municipalities. Ottawa has already been referred to, and anyone who drives along the streets of Ottawa must get a terrific object lesson as to what is happening here.

I would like to quote one or two short passages from the remarks made by the premier of Ontario and also the metro chairman. In quoting the premier of Ontario I would like to remind hon. members that he has been a man of moderate statements. I do not think anyone can suggest that moderation is not his characteristic, and when he speaks as strongly as he does I for one feel he is entitled to be taken very seriously indeed. It is not as if someone who has been in the habit of indulging in wild and extreme statements were saying these things; it is quite the contrary.

The other day Mr. Frost felt it necessary to warn the municipalities, and these were his words:

> The provinces and its municipalities face the immediate prospect of financial belt-tightening and doing without the roads, sewers and schools and other services which make this province so attractive to industry.

I find that a very disturbing statement. I think we have quite enough knowledge to know it is not an exaggerated statement. I know that two or three years ago the then superintendent of education, Mr. J. G. Althouse, made a comment with regard to the next three years which he described as crucial years. That took place in 1953, and he was right. He was apprehensive of a situation wherein we might not be able to give adequate payment to school teachers. He felt we would have to pay so much for physical things needed in education that we would have to pinch in teachers' salaries which I submit, and I know the minister would agree, is the last place in the world in which we should have to pinch.

At the same time, in speaking of the difficulty of this ironic but real situation, Mr. Gardiner, the metro chairman said:

> We have to finance too much expansion in too short a time.

Proposed Tax Relief for Municipalities

Then he went on to explain that the municipalities are poor because of their sudden prosperity. I quote again from Mr. Frost, who in speaking of Ontario's needs said:

> They were not imaginary needs and we would not be victims of our own prosperity if we had a realistic share of the tax revenue the producing of which is causing our troubles.

I have taken the people in Ontario to begin with. We are in the midst of great industrial activity which is stimulating a business boom and providing, incidentally a large amount of taxes. I want to refer briefly to Winnipeg, too. An article appeared in the Free Press the other day pointing out the problems the people there are facing. They are looking forward, as is everyone else, to an increase in population. The Free Press had this to say:

> Acre upon acre of now undeveloped ground will have to be subdivided, sidewalks and roads will have to be planned, water and sewer lines laid. These lines will have to be serviced. A heavier suburban population will complicate traffic to and from the downtown area. This will require new bridges, arterial highways and perimeter roads. There will be many other problems—shopping and industrial districts—parks and schools.

I repeat that I do not believe that anybody looking at the situation as it is thinks the municipalities unaided can take care of this situation for the next few years, and indeed indefinitely into the future. I come back again to what I have said more than once; what I think should happen and what I think is necessary above all things is a frank realization of this and an utter abandonment of the attitude of the Prime Minister, as indicated by the words I quoted a little while ago, when he said he did not see any need to share in the normal cost of the growth of the provinces and the municipalities.

I want to say a word about what has happened elsewhere. In the United States they have roughly the same kind of situation that we have except that there the residue of power is in the state and not with the federal government as in our case. I have here a report which I think is worth putting on the record, although I do dislike reading anything. This is a recommendation to the president's commission on intergovernmental relations in the United States, and I am quoting from section O, page 13 of the brief submitted to the Gordon commission by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities:

> The committee recognizes that intergovernmental fiscal relations in a federal system have never been, nor can remain static. A neat allocation of functions to be performed exclusively by each level, a complete separation of revenue sources by levels of government, and a dedication of particular revenue sources to the financing of particular governmental activities—these are no longer workable approaches, even though logically appealing. In their stead must be adopted a new theory of parallel interests, a parallelism in both revenue sources used and in functions performed. Some governmental activities, once local, are now tinged with a strong state and federal interest; and some revenue sources, or the proceeds therefrom, which were once the property of only one level have now become common property. This more flexible approach permits collection of revenues by those governments better able to collect certain revenues, and transmission of portions of the receipts to governments better able to carry out the governmental activities, but with changing concepts of which governments are "better able" in both areas.

There has been certain progress made here in Canada, and of course I am not overlooking that. I am not suggesting that what has been done in the United States could or should be done here in any detail. All I am saying is that there is a problem and that the attitude which the Prime Minister and the minister have taken to date seems to me to brush it aside and to give no effect to its reality.

Let me interject one thing before I forget. The action of the federal government has vastly increased this municipal problem. The buildings erected under the National Housing Act and the activities of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have laid tremendous burdens upon the municipalities. Payments have been made from time to time—I can recall a small payment made to Toronto in connection with slum clearance—but by and large I believe the approach to this problem has been largely on the basis of allowing the municipalities to carry on as best they can on the principle, "Root, hog, or die".

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I had been discussing the question raised by the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition. I had confined myself in the main to urging that the broad problem of the mounting costs of municipal administration should be considered, and had said a good deal less about the actual taxes mentioned in the amendment. But the more I think about it the more it seems to me that there is something almost preposterous when one thinks of the situation. Here is the federal government taxing in a good robust way the individuals who are comprised in the municipality. Then when the federal taxpayer has digested the amount of his tax and borne it with as good a grace as possible, he finds he is attacked from a different direction; that is to say, he is going to be taxed through the municipality to which he belongs. I suggest, as I said a moment ago, that there is something almost preposterous in that.

He pays huge sums to the dominion and then he finds that the municipality to which he has paid his taxes, by reason, as I say, of a situation which I think has reached the impossible, is not able to carry out what he expects it to carry out. I gave an illustration this afternoon, a quotation from Mr. Frost of the restrictions, the drawing in, the retreat which is going to have to be made in the Toronto area, and that is only one of many hundreds of cases across the dominion where no doubt there will be exactly the same kind of difficulty. I suggest that there is bitter irony in it, and that this is something that should be taken seriously.

I am not prepared to offer any facile offhand suggestions as to exactly how the matter should be dealt with. I think it is very difficult. I think it demands great study. But of course the first prerequisite of all is that the government should admit that there is a problem; and as I read twice from the Prime Minister's speech on the address this afternoon the government has clearly announced to us that it apparently does not think there is a problem with which the government should concern itself so far as the municipalities in what is called their "normal" operations are concerned.

Though I am not going to attempt to lay down the detail as to how it should be done, I am going to refer very briefly to a document which contains some very interesting suggestions and which I am sure the minister has seen. It is a document entitled, "Urban Growth and Municipal Finance" prepared by Professor D. C. Corbett of McGill University. I propose to refer very briefly to certain suggestions he makes in the section he has entitled, "The Problem Today", that is, the problem I have been endeavouring to discuss. He says:

> What can be done about it? There seem to be two courses open. Either municipalities must be relieved of some of their present responsibilities, and these be taken over by senior governments; or the municipalities must find more funds.
> There are some who advocate the first approach. They point out that education, health and welfare are national problems, not local ones, and they argue that senior governments should pay for them.

Then he goes on to point out what I think we all recognize, that there are serious dangers in turning over municipal functions to senior governments. It means increased centralization. It means the lessening of a sense of individual responsibility at the stage where it ought to be strongest, where individual supervision can be most effective. He goes on to say:

> The fewer important functions local governments have to perform, the less vital will local democracy be, and the more apathetic will be its electorate and representatives. Strong local governments, doing significant work, are worth preserving . . .

Then he goes on to the second alternative and says:

> The second alternative before our municipal governments is finding more revenues. How is this to be done? Some advocate increased provincial grants or even federal grants . . . The scheme is very attractive, has much to recommend it, and under certain conditions may be the proper solution.

But then he raises the objection to that. He says:

> A relationship of financial dependency between local and senior governments will inevitably result in increased power for the senior governments.

Much more is said on that but I do not propose to quote it. What I have read raises the points very clearly, and I think we all recognize their importance. Then he goes on to make comments which are especially relevant to what we are considering in this resolution. He says:

> . . . there is one form of senior government payment to municipalities which is free from these objections.

That is the objections of centralization and so on. Then he goes on to refer to the payment by senior governments of their municipal taxes on crown property. Later he goes on again to say:

> Another way in which the federal and provincial governments could come to the assistance of local governments would be to relieve them from payment of federal or provincially imposed taxes.

He says that a case in point is the federal sales tax. Again I skip. Finally he comes to a point which should not be ignored, and which in itself demands a great deal of study. He says:

> The one remaining way to increase municipal revenues is to raise local taxes.

Under that heading he goes on to speak about the real property tax and he says what I think we will all agree with:

> But there is no escaping the conclusion that the real property tax has, in general, failed to keep pace with cost rises and urban growth.

I am not going further into that, Mr. Speaker. I commend this memorandum to the study of everyone who is interested in the problem. I say again that I hope with all my heart the government will abandon the attitude it is taking now, because I believe that here is a very important matter. I believe the analysis of the problem contained in this memorandum goes to the very root of the matter, and I feel very deeply that if this situation is allowed to go on without being firmly grappled with, without a recognition of its importance, without a real attempt to bring all levels together and to find a solution which will carry the judgment of sensible and sincere men, if that is neglected then we may come to realize before very long that the grave words which the premier of Ontario used were none too strong and were only too true.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested today to hear the reply given to the opposition by the Minister of Finance. I realize he did his utmost to find arguments as to why the amendment should not be adopted by the house. After analysing them I have come to the conclusion that of all the arguments he presented the only one that had any substance to it was that a vote in favour of the amendment was a vote to unseat the Liberal government now in office. When a minister of the crown has to resort to an argument as weak as that he is, in my opinion, on very poor ground indeed.

Mr. Harris: That was an argument on my own behalf, as to why I was going to vote against it.

Mr. Knowles: That makes it weaker still.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I heard the minister's interjection. I also know full well enough the workings of the Liberal party to know that it takes only a statement such as that on his part to make all the rest of the boys fall in line.

Mr. Ellis: Toe the line.

Mr. Regier: The only hon. member on the government side of the house who has seen fit to come to the defence of the government in opposition to this resolution is the hon. member for Fort William. The hon. member said in effect what a wage earner receiving about $500 a month would say to his family if they asked him to buy some milk for the family from the milkman. This man receiving $500 a month would say to his family, "Boys and girls, I love you all very dearly. However, if I must buy milk for you, you will understand that I can no longer afford to pay the rent and you will be compelled to live out on the street".

For the hon. member for Fort William even to indicate that if the modest request of the resolution were met it would mean that we would be obliged to reduce any of our welfare measures is simply too ridiculous for any of the intelligent people of Canada who know anything of the resources available to the government here in Ottawa. The minister himself admitted that it might cost $20 million or possibly $40 million to implement this resolution; yet only a few weeks ago in the budget debate he prophesied a surplus of over $100 million. Hence the argument that if this resolution passes we shall be obliged to reduce veterans' pensions or any other pensions is just too silly for the people of Canada to consider at all seriously.

I feel that the minister was also rather ill advised when he informed this house that municipal government came after the senior forms of government. I am sure the minister did not really think of what he was saying, because I know that he knows enough of the history of the democratic world to know that municipal government preceded national government by hundreds if not by thousands of years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not in Canada.

Mr. Regier: I am sure the minister has heard of the city states that were in existence long before such things as provinces or nations were heard of. The root or the heart of democracy is in our local forms of government at the present time. I believe even the minister himself, when he was a municipal councillor or discharging his duties in whatever local office he held, at that time rendered as great a service to the nation in the long run of things as he is now rendering as Minister of Finance for the Dominion of Canada.

I have an extremely high regard for our local school trustees, our local aldermen and our local municipal councillors. Those people receive practically no remuneration. Let me assure you that they are engaged in the wear and tear of practical democracy such as we, sitting up in our wonderful offices in Ottawa, have little appreciation of. If these people fail in their task, then our pretence to be living in a democratic country means nothing whatever.

As usual, in the minister's reply I noticed once again the efforts of the Liberal party to hide behind the skirts of the British North America Act. May I say to the minister that the people of Canada have taken to heart the intention and the real meaning of the British North America Act. The Liberal party have never yet taken to heart what the fathers of confederation really meant when they founded this nation. Ever since that time the Liberal party have used the British North America Act as an excuse to cover their inability to face a problem squarely when they met it.

I should like to say that all the means we have advocated in this house whereby this government might help the lower levels of government, including municipal government, have already been adopted by this Liberal government, and in adopting those measures they have never said that they were violating the spirit of the British North America Act. By the minister's own admission the federal government make funds available for education. They give grants to the universities of Canada. In essence, Mr. Speaker, there is not a particle of difference between giving grants to universities and giving grants to the elementary schools of the nation. Since this government has adopted the principle of some responsibility in some matters in Canada, all we are asking is that they assume sufficient responsibility to enable our lower levels of government to do a job.

In the field of civil defence this government have assumed some responsibility, yet they insist on unloading the major portion of the burden on the lower levels of government. I am not one who for one moment will advocate that this government should assume the entire cost of those functions that are assigned, and wisely so, to the lower levels of government. I think one of the fundamental elements of democracy is that those who administer should also be responsible. In all these measures, therefore, I am advocating only that a larger measure of responsibility for the cost be carried by this government. If we want responsible government, I maintain that those who administer government should be responsible for some share of the cost. However, I feel that at the present time our local governments are asked to assume an undue responsibility when it comes to sharing the cost.

After all in 1867, at the time the fathers of confederation formed Canada, we had an entirely different situation throughout the nation. The major source of revenue to any government at that time was taxation of real estate or taxation of property. At the present time the major sources of revenue are such things as income tax, sales tax, tariffs, duties and so forth. The revenue resources now available were not even visualized or imagined at that time.

In the field of health this government have assumed responsibility. They have never yet said they were violating our constitution when they agreed to pay, in effect, $1,000 per bed as a federal grant for the construction of hospitals. What we complain about is that the lower levels of government which have not had these additional sources of revenue are being asked to pay the remaining $19,000 of the cost of these hospital beds. It simply breaks my heart when I see these kind, willing and loyal citizens, these ladies of Canada, standing out on the street corners in Canada with their tin cups pleading with you please to buy a tag, or to donate 25 cents to the cancer fund, the heart fund, the Victorian Order of Nurses or what have you.

Here we have this federal government paying just a minute share of the cost of health. They are willing to assume credit and win elections on the basis of having assumed responsibility. Yet when it comes to paying a reasonable share in relation to their income, to their share of the national tax dollar, they hide behind the cloak of the British North America Act and say that after all health is a matter for the provincial and municipal governments.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Regier: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. I wonder how the hon. gentleman relates this interesting constitutional discourse to the very limited and restricted motion of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Regier: I am not in the fortunate position of having the exact wording of the amendment before me, but as I recall it it calls for greater federal aid to municipal governments. I feel, therefore, that the financial relationship of these senior governments to the municipal governments are very much at issue before the house at the moment.

In the field of welfare this federal government has assumed responsibility, and makes no bones about the matter. I should like to compliment them on having gone as far as they have gone. However, they still leave a great deal of the onus on the local municipal government. In the matter of unemployment they were unable to see their way clear to assuming the major share of that responsibility, and even yet the major share is left on the shoulders of the municipal government. In the matter of slum clearance, even today the onus is left on the shoulders of the municipal government, though this government in more ways than one has admitted responsibility. This admission of responsibility, Mr. Speaker, is only for election purposes and does not mean too many dollars and cents to the taxpayers back home. Even in such a relatively minor matter as law enforcement, in my municipality at least that is carried out by the R.C.M.P. They do a magnificent job. We realize that this force is subsidized, but the major portion of the cost is once again put upon the municipal taxpayer.

In the matter of sales taxes, this government have already made a concession. They have exempted some municipal purchases from the sales tax. If they have adopted the principle, may I ask what is there in the British North America Act to prevent this government from going the whole hog and exempting all municipal purchases from the sales tax? There is no constitutional argument. I came to only one conclusion from the minister's reply and that was that the only valid reason the minister had for voting against the amendment was that he looked upon it as a vote of want of confidence in the government. I presume he was hoping that his followers would adopt the same course.

Since we have a Department of National Defence it is only natural that civil defence should always be thought of as a national responsibility, but the federal government is unwilling to assume the major share of that responsibility. The Minister of National Health and Welfare goes about the country bragging about the arrangements that have been made for civil defence. Everybody who knows anything about civil defence knows they are a farce. If the minister or the government would call it a civil disaster program they might win some public support. As it is they call it civil defence, which puts the responsibility on the shoulders of this government, yet this government fails to meet that financial responsibility. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance how he can expect municipal governments to provide bridges out of our major cities for civil defence purposes if civil defence is the responsibility of the federal government. They have admitted it is, because they assume responsibility for at least a portion of the cost.

In the field of education, our municipalities do not know where to turn. When I see that the average home owner in some Canadian cities has to pay a municipal tax levy of about $400 per year I am simply flabbergasted. If my people back home would realize that unless some remedy is found the average home owner in Burnaby will be faced with a tax levy of $400 by his municipality, I can assure the minister that not one Liberal would be returned from British Columbia at the next election. There are Canadian cities now where the average home owner has to meet a levy of that sort. How is the man on a fixed income supposed to manage that type of levy?

I believe it was the Rowell-Sirois commission report which many years ago had this comment to make, in effect; that if the federal government had exercised the same prudence in the expenditure of money that the municipal governments have for years been forced to exercise, things would be quite different in Canada. A million dollars here means nothing, as has been expressly stated by one of the cabinet ministers, yet a couple of thousand dollars means a lot back home. In the matter of highways, once again the government cannot hide behind the British North America Act because they have already assumed responsibility for a national highway. They are unwilling to assume enough responsibility, however, to relieve the lower levels of government. In the field of town planning this government has assumed responsibility, yet it is unwilling to institute some form of national town planning whereby the municipal governments might get relief. In the matter of slum clearance this government would be able to do a great deal in relieving some of the burden of the local governments.

I have read several articles by the hon. member for Vancouver South, who is quite a columnist, in which he blames the local municipal governments for failure to take the initiative in connection with slum clearance in Canada. We cannot expect municipal taxpayers to agree to the sale of debentures for slum clearance purposes. Obviously this is a problem that is of greater significance than the local municipality in which a ratepayer lives. I understand that some time last year the Prime Minister made a public statement to the effect that he was opposed to the federal government subsidizing the rate of interest at which municipal governments might borrow money.

I would be all for the federal government subsidizing the interest rate, but I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he would at least agree to make funds available for self-liquidating projects in municipalities at a rate of interest that will not involve subsidization. Will he agree to make this money available to the municipalities at the same rate of interest at which his government is able to borrow money? This might mean 3·5 per cent instead of 2·5 per cent, but even that would be going a long way toward meeting the problem.

I think the Prime Minister is interested only in turning back the clock in Canada, and in using the British North America Act to retrace some of the progress the Canadian people have made since the days of William Lyon Mackenzie King. I am convinced of that, and the more of his too few speeches I read the more firmly I am convinced that this is his determination, that this is his policy. I therefore plead for the reopening of the operations of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act. According to the Minister of Finance, the government used it as a means of relieving unemployment in the hungry 1930's. I would recommend to him that he reopen and greatly expand the operations of that act in the matter of capitalization in order to relieve the growing burden of taxes on the homes of the people of Canada. He has it within his power to do so if he but will.

I am afraid he is more interested in seeing available capital in Canada being freed for H. R. MacMillan, the Bell Telephone Company and all the other monopolistic enterprises in Canada that are forever seeking the loose investment money that happens to be floating around. This government is not interested in laying its hands on some of that investment money that is available and making it available for the social needs of the Canadian people as a whole.

In the matter of the sales tax the minister says if we grant further exemptions it will be too difficult to administer. I have heard other members of the government, or supporters of the government, give other reasons throughout the country as to why the government did not allow a 3-ton gravel dump truck to be exempt from the sales tax. After all, you cannot trust these municipal councils and aldermen, they argue. They might buy this 3-ton dump truck for purposes of gravelling their roads, and for all we know the next minute they might turn around and sell it to some pal of theirs. They have not the confidence in these thousands of men and women across Canada who are the bulwark of democracy in the country. They think some municipal officer might do the federal treasury out of some revenue by turning around and using his municipal office as a bootlegging place. I resent the insinuation very much. I know the minister did not use that argument. He simply said that the technicalities involved would make it more difficult to implement the act.

With respect to taxation of federal property, only this morning I replied to a letter received from a ratepayers' organization. This letter asked me to do what I could to influence the federal government to pay its full share of local taxation on any and all property it might own within the municipality. The minister cannot again use the British North America Act, because already the government is granting recognition to some municipalities to a limited extent for purposes of making allowances or grants on any real estate or property that is owned within a municipality. We are asking the minister to go the whole hog in this respect; we are asking him to pay the full amount of taxation on any property the federal government owns in any municipality of Canada.

I would also like to put in a word on behalf of decentralization. Surrounding the major municipalities there are the suburban municipalities, yet practically every department of this government is concentrated in the larger cities, and every civil servant who is responsible for the administration of a department of government within the larger city resists any decentralization of his department within the province. This is only natural. The more the province grows and his department grows with it the higher is his rating in the civil service, the higher is his prestige and influence and the higher is his own personal salary. I feel this government should set an example to industry and should decentralize its own departments in the suburban municipalities. In that way many of the suburban municipalities would be entitled to some tax relief or grant, call it that, from the federal government.

Another little thing I would like the minister to do to help the local governments is to rid the municipalities of the substandard homes owned by this government in the municipalities of Canada, or homes privately owned that exist on land or water under the jurisdiction of the federal government. We have them in Burnaby; we have had them for years. Those people live on the water; they live on the flats, on land owned by this federal government. The taxpayers must pay for the education of the children of those families; the taxpayers must pay for the social needs of those families, and those social needs are usually greatest among those families. Yet for years the municipalities have endeavoured to have the federal government assume its proper responsibility in this regard, but it does absolutely nothing.

These people live there. Call them squatters, if you like. I do not wish to. I wish them only well. However, this government has it within its powers to at least relieve the municipal governments of the financial responsibilities, especially in regard to education and welfare, in connection with the people who live on federal property and in many instances in houses owned by the federal government.

I realize, and I hope some day this government will realize, that in 1867 the major share of revenue was available to local forms of government, and the major share of responsibility was laid on local governments. In 1956, almost 100 years later, the major share of revenue, the lion's share in fact, is in the hands of the federal government, yet the lion's share of the burden has been left on the shoulders of the municipal governments and responsibility has been assumed by this Liberal federal government only to the degree they thought it necessary to assume it for the purpose of winning elections.

Mr. R. W. Mitchell (London): Mr. Speaker, I have heard an expression used on more than one occasion which struck a chord in my mind. That expression consisted of the words "brushed off". They were used with reference to the attitude of the Minister of Finance toward the pleas which have been made to him by officers of the municipal governments over the years. I attempted to find out where I had heard those words before. I found that those exact words had not been used, but words which might equally apply came out of the minister's own mouth in his reference to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On March 20 I heard him say—he was talking about the well-known quality of optimism of the Minister of Trade and Commerce—as reported at page 2325 of Hansard:

> I would be happy if other qualities of the Minister of Trade and Commerce were also to rub off on me.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that some of the observations made during the course of the debate today, and some of the representations that have been made over the past few years would also rub off on the Minister of Finance. I prefer to use another expression in so far as the minister's attitude toward the municipalities is concerned. I would prefer to say that he has enjoyed kicking that ball around more than any other thing since his tenure of office as Minister of Finance commenced.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that one has only to read any newspaper on almost any given day in almost any town, city or village in this country to realize there is a crisis at hand. In recent weeks and months municipalities from one end of this country to the other have been giving urgent and serious consideration to their budgets. They have been striking tax rates, and in each and every case I submit they are having a hold the line battle which this government in many ways has failed to win itself. They are having to cut where they should expand; they are having to cut down on essential works, many of which have been mentioned this afternoon, simply because there is not enough of the tax dollar left to provide them with the means of producing the services which each and every municipality needs.

I amongst many others, Mr. Speaker, have welcomed this debate for the purpose of pointing up the problems which municipalities have attempted to meet, with apparent lack of interest on the part of the government, and of pointing out certain remedies many of which have already been suggested this afternoon.

I have heard it said that municipalities have to buckle down and start being careful about their dollars. It has been said they have to start cutting out the frills; they have to cut their sail to fit their cloth. I agree that in some cases frills have crept in. The minister himself is well aware of many demands which he considers to be of the frill nature. I must agree with him in respect of some of them, but I wish to state most emphatically that the average municipal government is doing its utmost to provide essential services. The great majority of municipal governments find themselves completely unable to do so with the share of the tax dollar which is left to them.

Just a year ago we had introduced in this house an amendment to the Municipal Grants Act. That amendment was supposed to be the cure-all of municipal troubles. I had occasion, Mr. Speaker, to refer to this nibbling government not more than two weeks ago, and the amendment which was introduced to the Municipal Grants Act last year was nothing more than a nibble. It was typical of the approach which this government has taken to almost any problem with which it has been confronted. It was nothing more than a half measure. I suggest there is only one conclusion to which we can come, and that is this government has become so old that it has lost its teeth and can no longer take a good healthy bite at anything.

An hon. Member: Fluoridation.

Mr. Mitchell (London): It continues in its toothless, gum-filled fashion to attempt to meet the problems of the day in what I can only describe in parliamentary language as half-way measures.

The minister this afternoon brushed this problem off or kicked it about, whichever expression you may want to use. As evidence of the fact that there is a problem I could refer to a resolution passed by a municipality which I must confess is not conspicuous for following the Conservative party. The municipality to which I refer is represented by the Minister of National Health and Welfare—there is no greater protagonist of the art of the grant—and the hon. member for Essex West, who is an able student of the minister.

That municipal council represented that there is a problem. The Minister of Finance referred to it today I thought in rather a sneering vein. I am only sorry that the Minister of National Health and Welfare did not hear the minister's reaction to what his own municipal council had produced. That council passed a resolution this year which I propose to read. It refers to the question of borrowing money which the minister frowned upon this afternoon by saying, "Well, all they want is to get cheaper money". Nevertheless it points up the problem which all these municipalities face. The resolution reads as follows:

> That whereas many municipalities in the early 1920's were compelled by post-war expansion to finance their improvement program by the sale of debentures at an interest rate of approximately 5½ to 6½ per cent;
> And whereas during the 1930's most municipalities faced bankruptcy by reason of the depression years, a condition which was greatly aggravated by the high interest charges in outstanding debentures, with the ultimate result that many municipalities were unable to carry out an orderly program in the repayment of their debenture debts;
> And whereas during the last war, municipal improvement programs were abandoned in favour of exhaustive efforts aimed at the production of war materials for our fighting forces abroad resulting in an accumulation of works to be undertaken at the conclusion of the war;
> And whereas the credit of many municipalities is presently heavily taxed and in order to provide for these needed improvements, an increase in the debenture debt is inevitable;
> Therefore be it resolved that the federal government and the Bank of Canada be requested to consider establishing a fund from which municipalities may borrow on debentures to finance urgently needed essential works, at an interest rate not to exceed 3½ per cent.

This resolution came from the city of Windsor, and may I say it was also endorsed by the municipal council of the city of London and many other municipalities across this country. I do not necessarily approve of this particular remedy, if it is a remedy. I simply bring this out as a means of establishing that there is a problem which must be faced realistically.

I wish to refer particularly to the question of the cost of the federal government taking on the payment of grants in lieu of taxes on all federally-owned property. Last year at the sittings of the banking and commerce committee when we were considering the Municipal Grants Act the figure given as necessary to carry out that bill was $12 to $14 million, and the figure to be authorized by the particular amendment was $6 million. We were told by the minister that there were constitutional difficulties in the way. We were told that in some cases the federal government buildings provided their own services. But we still keep getting away from what is the basic problem, and that is to put the municipalities in a position where as a spending authority they may spend the money which they themselves have raised. That is the problem.

I should like to refer specifically and by way of example only to my own constituency of London, which is one of a group of larger cities which has a substantial percentage of its total assessed property owned by the federal government. Prior to the amendment last year it did not benefit under the Municipal Grants Act, but as a result of that amendment it did. The problem may be briefly stated, as it has been stated already. The limit of taxation on real estate has been reached, in fact in many cases it is already over the top. For a city which is confined within certain limits, which is growing and in which federal services are continually being added and increased, the share of federal government holdings of total assessable property is constantly increasing.

These municipalities still have to come here as nothing better than beggars, with their hats in their hands. The government finds itself in the happy position, which it apparently is determined to maintain, of being able to make hand-outs on any given occasion rather than put itself in the position where as a matter of right, according to a formula which has been previously agreed upon, certain payments shall be made.

The minister made much of his statement this afternoon concerning payments by various provincial governments of allowances in lieu of taxes. I would point out to him that in most of the municipalities which were listed last year in the proceedings of the banking and commerce committee there are few if any provincial buildings. In fact I challenge the minister to produce evidence of anything in the city of London in the nature of provincial buildings to the extent that there is in the way of federal buildings.

Mr. Harris: I did not suggest that every municipality in Ontario had provincial buildings.

Mr. Mitchell (London): The minister was making the point that the provinces did not make any specific allowances in lieu of taxes, and therefore why should the federal government do so.

Mr. Harris: No; I made the point that provincial governments, with the exceptions I mentioned, were not making payments on the basis of the general tax rate. I suggested that there must be reasons for that, but I did not draw any conclusion that we should not do so.

Mr. Mitchell (London): I still make the point that the problem of provincial buildings, for example in London, does not by any stretch of the imagination compare with the problems created by the assessed value of federal buildings in the same locality. So we find ourselves with the government in the happy position where it is handing out this largesse as and when it sees fit to do so, when in fact it is doing nothing more than return to the municipalities money which it has raised from those municipalities.

I do not propose to comment on the constitutional problem which the minister loves to raise, that the payment must be as a matter of grace and not as a matter of right. I submit that this government should be in the same position money-wise vis-à-vis the municipality as any other taxpayer who is carrying on business or living in that municipality.

So we go on with no solution. The Minister of Finance is doing his best to perpetuate a position which he obviously enjoys with relish. In the meantime the municipalities are suffering. We have heard that $12 million to $14 million is involved. We have heard that there was some $6 million involved in the amendment brought forward last year. We have also heard the figure of the surplus which has been "guesstimated" from time to time during this fiscal year.

I suggest that the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe put their fingers on the very heart of the matter when they pointed out the percentage of the tax dollar now being received by the three levels of government. I suggest that the federal government is doing nothing more than compounding a felony by accepting a greater percentage of the tax dollar and then refusing to take its full part in the payment of taxes within the municipalities.

There is another benefit which I suggest would arise under prudent management, as a result of the federal government taking on its full tax responsibility in the municipalities. As time goes on we find that more and more of the most valuable downtown properties in our cities are being held by the federal government in order to provide service in one way or another to the public of the city and district served by those particular buildings. I suggest to the minister that prudence would dictate that many of those buildings be removed to less valuable sites. If the dominion government were paying full taxes such as business and industry would normally pay, they would move to less valuable sites. Such a move would not only assist the municipality but would enable it to obtain full taxation from business or industry which might occupy that building, which at present may be more valuable than is required by the federal government to carry on its operations.

I commend the government for one move it made last year, when naval headquarters in London was moved from one of the most valuable pieces of property in the very heart of the city to a site which, while not unanimously agreed upon, is at least suitable for the operations of a naval establishment. Thus valuable property has been released for business and industrial purposes.

Another matter which has been brought forward in the amendment is the sales and excise taxes. The manner in which these are levied provides certain queer anomalies. Some have been referred to already, and I will be the first to admit that others have been extinguished. But it is not so long ago that a fire engine purchased by the city of London bore full sales and excise taxes; yet its first duty was to fight a fire at Wolseley barracks, upon which the federal government pays no real estate tax to the city.

In so far as these sales and excise taxes are concerned, once again I take the city of London as an example. I am informed that the amount paid, and I would assume this was in the year 1955, was $150,000. There again, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that the members of the city council of the city of London are not conspicuous by their conservatism, but on the 24th of May, 1955, they passed a resolution which I propose to read:

That, whereas this municipality contributes in sales tax, annually, an amount totalling approximately $150,000, which is equivalent to one mill in the municipal tax rate;

And whereas it is considered inequitable that the municipality should be required to raise moneys through taxation in order to pay them out again to a senior government in the form of sales tax;

And whereas this problem has been drawn to the attention of the dominion government on many occasions and, notwithstanding assurances that the submissions of this and other municipalities would be studied during the preparation of the annual budget of the dominion government, no action has been taken to afford relief to the municipalities of Canada by way of exemption from sales tax;

Therefore be it resolved that the city of London again place itself firmly on record in favour of early action by the dominion government to exempt municipal purchases from sales tax; and that the major cities of Canada, together with the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities and the local members of parliament be requested to support this resolution.

We have now heard, Mr. Speaker, from the federation of mayors and we have heard from the local levels. Surely it is time the minister took this problem to heart and stopped brushing it off. The minister among others has said that the municipalities are the creatures of the provincial governments. I may say, and I think with fairness, that the minister has been hiding behind that cliche for much too long, and at the same time has been increasing taxes and putting a squeeze in a two-way fashion on the municipalities. I suggest to him that it is time we tackled the problem realistically and put an end to it before the expansion which is going on so rapidly now makes the situation much worse.

The minister said this afternoon that it had been a principle ever since confederation not to tax the crown. In that statement he admits that the crown may be in the right of the dominion or in the right of the province.

[Mr. Mitchell (London).]

I simply point out to the minister, and with apologies to some of our smaller provinces for whom I have every sympathy, that today many of our municipal governments are bigger operations than some of the provincial governments. If it is true that sales and excise taxes should not be levied against the provinces, it is equally true that they should not be levied against municipalities which at the present moment are undertaking the local government of considerably more people than the smaller provinces.

So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the government had better consider getting out of this tax field. Despite the minister's statement to the contrary, I suggest that they are getting further into the tax field because by their methods of taxation they have rendered the municipalities impotent as far as raising the required amount of money in the normal course by real estate taxation is concerned. The amount of the grants which they love to make—and, as I mentioned before, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is one of the prime exponents—plus the economies which could be made by permitting the spender to be the taxer, would go a long way to make up to the federal government the loss in revenue which would result from withdrawal from the sales and excise tax field so far as municipalities are concerned, and through payment of the full taxation equivalent on real estate.

Mr. O. L. Jones (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I was both surprised and pleased in listening to the Leader of the Opposition speak on the need of help for the municipalities. I was surprised and pleased because on April 12, as found at page 2865 of Hansard, you will find certain remarks of mine which are practically word for word the same as the Leader of the Opposition had to say today. They follow the same theme and the same arguments pretty well. Naturally I was pleased to find that someone else had taken up the cudgels.

I do not intend to repeat what I said on that occasion. As I have just mentioned, my remarks were substantially the same as those of the Leader of the Opposition today. Therefore it naturally gives me a great deal of pleasure to support the amendment.

Mr. Fulton: We all know a good thing when we see it.

Mr. Jones: Thanks. It deals with the most pressing and difficult problem facing the municipalities, the junior members of our governing bodies, that of raising revenue without further direct imposition on the hard-pressed municipal taxpayer. That is the problem.

As the Leader of the Opposition pointed out, the cost of education is a most onerous burden. As I pointed out in my previous speech, this could be relieved by a per capita grant to the various school districts. I do not think aid in this way should offend the provincial governments, who are very jealous of their provincial rights. I would simply point out that the municipalities also have certain rights, one of them being a return of part of the taxes collected by the federal government within municipal limits for municipal use to assist in meeting the cost of education, which I can frankly say is getting worse and worse each year in Canada. Before we have perfection in the field of education the problem will be still more intense. Therefore the federal government should step in now before we are in too deep and it is too late.

I would also remind the minister that I mentioned the sales tax in my previous talk. I am convinced that this tax is very unfair. It puts a heavy burden on the municipalities, and their purchases should immediately be placed on the same basis as purchases made by provincial governments. Municipalities should be treated as another form of government, because in fact they are. Therefore they should receive the same treatment as the second level of government, the provincial. I hope the minister will give consideration to this matter because I know he has been appealed to by different municipalities and organizations representing the regional municipalities.

Another thing I bring up again, and I have raised the question every year for the last eight years, is the reopening of the municipal assistance act with its provision for 2 per cent money. I know that pressure has been brought to bear on the minister by different groups and by provincial governments. As I understand it, there are two pressure groups. One represents the taxpayers in demanding the reopening of the act and access to 2 per cent money. The other pressure group represents those who are presumably interested in government bonds, the banks and financial houses, who are not anxious to see the act reopened because it enters into a field in which they claim the sole right to operate.

I would disregard those views entirely. I think it is time the government had a policy of its own regarding financing, and not a policy dictated by the Canadian banks. Under this legislation the government did have a policy of lending money at 2 per cent for self-liquidating projects. That was an excellent financial scheme. It was excellent in the results it obtained and excellent in the investment it turned out to be, because every penny was paid back to the government including the interest. With such a fine record of operation I cannot understand the hesitation of the Minister of Finance in reopening this excellent means of assisting the municipalities in their present plight.

I would also remind him that the high record under that act was made during a time when we had a depression in Canada. All the municipalities that borrowed money, or practically all of them, were in a depressed state. They were poor risks. They could not borrow from the orthodox financial houses. But, poor risks as some of them were —and I know some of them—they were able to borrow at 2 per cent; and even those poor risks, the very poorest of risks, have all paid back in full. They were able to do that because the burden of 2 per cent did not cripple them entirely.

I think the new town planning proposed by the government and the health schemes to clear up slum areas and all that call for a great deal more in the way of expenditures by the municipalities for new facilities. I find that most of them are experiencing difficulty in raising the money at a rate that will allow them to give the services at a price the people can pay. The other day I referred to Summerland which had this very problem.

Many cities are in the some unfortunate position, even Ottawa. When they are obliged to run services miles outside their limits into new areas, it is far more costly than it is to extend them within the tightly-packed limits of the town. Those are problems facing every municipality in Canada. The municipalities should be assisted by getting 2 per cent money for these very things, namely to extend sewerage, water services, sidewalks and roads to these areas that the government itself is helping to build up through assistance under the National Housing Act. Hence they have a responsibility if they are to succeed in getting what they hope to get, namely a better form of homes for the people of Canada, in better conditions and better surroundings.

I would also again urge the government to pay taxes on all federal properties and just to forget the formula. It is time it was forgotten. I would urge the government to pay taxes to the 89 per cent of the municipalities now getting nothing in the form of taxes on federal property. I refer particularly to post offices. Every one of them in my riding shows a profit. They are a very profitable undertaking. There are some businesses in my riding that do not show a profit, but they pay licence fees to the municipalities in order to carry on business. However, the post office does not pay for a licence. It does not give a hoot. It does not pay tax. It does not pay anything. It just takes the profits and sends them to Ottawa. I think it is time some of these profits were paid out either in the form of taxes or licence fees or both; probably the foremost would be the fairest way to do it.

Another federal building is the armoury. I am not saying it should not be there; I am all for it; we have them in every town in Canada, where reserve army men are trained within city limits. They usually have several lots on which no taxes at all are paid. The presence of those armouries in a city causes a hardship on the city. In Kelowna, Vernon and Penticton the troops have not sufficient grounds belonging to the federal government on which to train, so they are trained on the municipal streets. They take up the sidewalks and they take up the roads, and traffic must be governed accordingly. But the government pay nothing for it. They never ask the city whether they can make use of the streets. They just take possession of them as though they belonged to them.

This unit to which I refer happens to be a unit with tanks, jeeps, heavy trucks and guns. All these are dragged over the city's paved streets without a by your leave, or without rectifying any damage done to the streets. Throughout the whole of British Columbia that has been the general complaint during the war years, namely the damage done by army vehicles. They do not object to it provided the government pay a fair share of the costs of rectifying the damage done by these vehicles to municipal streets, or pay their fair share of taxes as they should on the armouries.

I am not quite sure of the exact figure, but I believe that during the last 10 years the revenue of the federal government derived from municipal limits—that is, from the taxpayers and from industries, in duties collected and taxes paid—have risen by about 1,000 per cent. That is a tremendous increase. One would think the government would feel some responsibility to return some of that revenue. But while the revenue of the federal government obtained from the municipalities increased 1,000 per cent, the contribution of the federal government to the municipalities remains the same now as it was 10 years ago, namely nothing at all. I think that is a shame.

Mr. Harris: I hope my hon. friend will permit me to ask him this question. Surely he is not suggesting that the revenue derived from taxes on municipal corporations has increased 1,000 per cent in 10 years?

Mr. Jones: No. I am referring to the total amount of money collected from corporations, from industry, from individuals and all who live within the municipal limits.

Mr. Harris: The income of the government of Canada in 1946, as I recall it, would not be much more than 10 per cent or 15 per cent less than it is now; perhaps 20 per cent or 25 per cent.

Mr. Jones: I do not think the minister understood me correctly. I mean that the total income of the government is now coming more from the organized units of the municipalities than it ever did before. It is concentrated through industry.

Mr. Harris: Our tax base now is practically the same as it was 10 years ago.

Mr. Jones: But your revenue is not the same. It is your revenue that is different.

Mr. Harris: Our revenue now is about $4 billion. I will not interrupt my hon. friend again, but I am sure it was not much less than that in 1945 and 1946.

Mr. Macdonnell: On a question of privilege may I make an interruption? I am confident that the minister's predecessor in 1945, 1946 or thereabouts referred to his take or income as $2,400 million.

Mr. Jones: The tax is not ten times as much. Probably the minister misunderstood me.

Mr. Harris: That is all right.

Mr. Jones: But the collection of moneys by the federal government from municipal limits is ten times as much. That is the figure I tried to give. I am sorry if I misled the minister. In return the contribution of the government to the municipalities is the same as it ever was, namely nil.

If we are to have a progressive and beautiful city as the town planners predict and as the citizens would welcome, I think the federal government must face their responsibility in a practical way, shoulder their rightful burden of taxation, contribute their share toward the cost of services, and abolish the present formula. In order to find an illustration of the difficulties faced by municipalities I think you have only to go to your own town of Ottawa, where they apparently have not sufficient money to build decent roads. I have not travelled over such bad roads in many years as those you find today in Ottawa. I feel that some assistance should be given to the city in order that it may provide decent roads for its citizens.

I also think we are afraid of suggesting anything by means of which the municipalities could break new ground by way of getting revenue. I am going to make one suggestion, however. I made it many years ago to the municipalities of British Columbia, and I make it again. It seems to me that the municipalities have a right—and these are personal views, not party views—to at least 10 per cent of all fire insurance premiums. Municipalities are called upon to provide expensive fire protection and to perform duties in connection with the elimination of fire hazards and all that kind of thing, at tremendous cost. The only people to benefit are the insurance companies, whose premiums are thereby strengthened. It seems to me that every insurance company should return to the municipality at least 10 per cent of the premium on every policy for this service. I do not know whether or not that is feasible, but it has always appeared to me to be unfair to ask the people in the municipalities to pay a high rate on fire insurance premiums and then have these companies demand that the municipalities provide the fire protection.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I was interested, Mr. Speaker, in the opening observations of the previous speaker, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. He suggested that the amendment we have before us was very much the same as material he had presented to the house on an earlier occasion. I believe that only tends to underline the fact that we are facing a real problem, one of the basic problems in Canada, in this matter of municipal tax resources and municipal services.

Ever since I came to this chamber one of the subjects that has been aired repeatedly has been the increasing difficulties that municipalities have in facing their responsibilites in the changing Canadian economy. The problem can be stated very simply, but while the problem can be stated simply unfortunately there is no easy solution. I do feel, however, that it is a difficulty that demands the immediate and earnest attention of government at the federal level. Municipal governments, of course, are very much smaller in their geographic areas and very much restricted when compared with provincial and federal governments. It is for this reason I think we sometimes fail to appreciate the relative importance of the three levels of government.

While it is true that municipal governments seem to be restricted in their authority and the number of people concerned is not too great, I should like to suggest that they are dealing with issues that are of the greatest importance to this country. While as individual units they are small, we must remember that in terms of the over-all national picture we have some 4,000 municipalities and municipal councils; and again thinking of that other important local government body, the school board, I suppose we have three times as many school boards as we have municipal councils.

We must not be twisted in our thinking regarding the importance of municipal governments. It has been said today, as it has been many times, that a nation is only as strong as the local level of government. I think it was de Toqueville who said that a nation may establish a system of free government, but without municipal institutions it cannot have the spirit of liberty. It has become a truism to conclude that the real source of democratic government, the real source of liberty, arises on the level of local government. Unless we have a thriving, vital, active local government, we are not going to have a vital democratic government either at provincial or federal levels.

One of the problems of local government today is the great apathy toward responsibility at this level on the part of the individual citizen. Year after year when we come to the time of local elections we are faced with a situation in which it is very difficult to inspire any enthusiasm for the issues at stake. This lack of enthusiasm, this apathy, is indicated by the reluctance of citizens to allow their names to stand for local office. While we sometimes decry the lack of interest in federal elections as represented by the relatively small turnout of voters, certainly the record for both federal and provincial elections is away ahead of the record for local elections. It is not the exception to discover that in municipal elections we have as small a percentage as 35 per cent of the electorate turning out to support a panel of candidates.

This apathy on the local level, I suggest, does not augur very well for the continuing survival of a vital democracy at the higher levels of government. I would further suggest that one of the reasons—there are several reasons—for this failure on the part of citizens to present themselves for service on the local level is the difficult situation confronting municipalities in the changing economic circumstances of the country. The municipality is burdened with services far beyond its capacity to cope with adequately. Anyone who has had any service on the local level of government will realize that life can be one series of problems that are unsolvable; of irate taxpayers waiting on the doorstep and constantly trying to get action; of the local councillor or mayor being only too willing to act but prevented from doing so because of inadequate financial resources. It is a problem that has to be faced. It is a problem that, while the solution is not easy, certainly a nation such as Canada should endeavour to deal with directly and as quickly as possible.

As these discussions have illustrated, the federal government attempts to cast off responsibility for the difficulties by referring back to the responsibilities of the provincial government. Unfortunately, in most of the difficulties facing Canada at the moment this tendency for buck-passing has become the chief technique of dealing with problems. The dominion government refers back to the provincial government. If you go to the provincial government they, in turn, say, "Sorry, it is not our responsibility. The federal government will have to deal with this matter." Somebody has to take responsibility for the tax situation that has developed in Canada, particularly since world war II. Certainly the federal government has to take the major responsibility in this regard.

The federal government has moved into the available tax areas to a rapidly expanding extent in recent years. For example, the statistics for 1952 show that the federal government collected $3,792 million; the provincial governments collected $918 million; and the municipal governments, $636 million. The tendency toward centralization of responsibility, largely resulting from the demands of war, is the reason for the pattern indicated by those statistics. Yet notwithstanding those trends the service responsibilities of municipalities have remained largely unchanged; in fact, they have expanded very rapidly in recent years.

It is a well-known fact that those service responsibilities involve the types of government service that have become most expensive in our modern twentieth century civilization; education, health and welfare matters, roads and similar responsibilities. Here again the federal government hides behind the constitutional problem. Admittedly the control of these matters of education, health and welfare and roads has to remain largely in the hands of the local levels of government. That is particularly true of the matter of education, because local control must rest with the municipal governments. The federal government hides behind those constitutional difficulties and professes that nothing can be done by way of sharing responsibility for the increasing financial load.

We have before us an amendment which does not profess to solve the whole difficulty, but it certainly is a gesture in the right direction. Perhaps that is the way we have to move; perhaps this difficulty cannot be solved in one magic wave of the wand. It is a matter of gradual adjustment, a matter of changing circumstances. We have the suggestion that the privileges of exemption from excise and sales taxes might be passed along to the municipal governments, the same privilege that is also extended to the other level of government, and also the other solution that has been placed before the house.

A few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that the demands in the service areas of education, health and welfare and roads had to remain within the control of local governments, and also that these service demands were expanding very rapidly. The irony of the situation is that the principal reason for the rapid expansion in those service areas has resulted from the actions of the top levels of government provincially, but especially the federal level of government. As Canada moves toward nationhood, as we move into the industrial revolution of the twentieth century, as we move toward a more complex kind of life, the educational facilities, the health and welfare program have to be expanded far beyond the wildest imagination of the founding fathers.

These pressures, as I have indicated, come from the highest level of government, namely the federal government. Today education is a national responsibility. At the time of confederation the financial responsibility for education could be left safely to local levels because it was a matter of reading, writing and arithmetic so the citizenry of a democracy might be able to meet the ordinary demands of communication; but today education has become a terrifically complex and expensive proposition. The matter of national survival is intimately tied up with the kind of educational program we carry on in Canada today. The servicemen serving in the defence of Canada require a relatively high level of general education as well as technical education if Canada is to meet the challenges from any potential aggressor.

In recent days we have heard rather ominous observations to the effect that other nations are away ahead of us in the development of technical skills that would prepare the youth of those nations to play their adequate role in a technological civilization. That is a national responsibility. Certainly it has not very much to do with the local responsibilities which were envisaged at the time education was originally placed in the hands of local government. Then there is the matter of providing education for our new citizens, the immigrants to Canada, which in the post-war years has presented quite a problem to certain communities in which the new Canadians have tended to concentrate. Again this lies within the area of federal responsibility. We are faced with this problem, and maybe there is no absolute solution of it. Education has today moved toward a national perspective, while at the same time we have to preserve the local responsibilities and the provincial responsibilities under the British North America Act.

I could go on and deal in detail with certain other areas of service responsibilities that fall upon the local levels of government. For example, there is this matter of flooding that we hear about these days, particularly in reference to the perennial difficulties that we have in the province of Manitoba. I attended a meeting of farmers just a couple of weeks ago, a group of farmers and representatives of local municipalities, who have banded themselves together in a voluntary association of municipalities to see whether they cannot come to grips with the question of who is responsible for the control of flood conditions and for looking after the compensation when floods occur.

There the problem was to try to pinpoint where the financial responsibility lay. Provincial authorities say it is with the federal government. Federal authorities say they cannot do anything unless provincial authorities take the initiative. We had another interpretation at this rally, to the effect that if action is required by way of flood control it will be necessary for the local municipalities to approach the authorities and present their case in clear-cut terms. Well, that was a new interpretation, but at least it tended to pinpoint the situation so that some concrete action might be taken.

I listened to the Prime Minister's remarks on this matter when the house opened today, and it seemed to me he was suggesting that this problem of control had become an annual difficulty and that some over-all conservation measures, flood control measures, were urgently required. If we need an over-all conservation program I think it is obvious that the municipal and provincial governments cannot be made responsible for it. It seems to me that the federal government must take the initiative for the general well-being of Canada, and must deal with matters pertaining to water and soil conservation and the growing problem of flooding which arises from those two difficulties.

Since the depression years of the thirties there has been an attempt to shift the rather heavy financial responsibility concerning health and welfare matters to the higher levels of government. For example, the local municipalities no longer have any financial responsibility for providing old age pensions. There is a movement in a more reasonable direction in the light of prevailing conditions in regard to welfare matters. Despite this fact, with the growing pressure from the senior levels of government the municipalities have found themselves confronted with an increasing load for casual or transient relief, a financial burden which cannot be handled today with the limited resources of the municipal governments.

A concrete example of the increasing demand for services that has largely arisen from the growing intervention by the federal level of government in health and welfare matters is the disability pension that was approved by this house only two years ago. As you examine the statistics the picture becomes clear. I do not have the figures across the country at my fingertips, unfortunately, but in the province of Manitoba approximately 200 disability pensions have been approved since the bill was first passed. The passing of the legislation has drawn attention to the fact that such a pension is available and people who formerly got along financially as best they could following disability have applied to the local welfare authorities by the dozens, only to discover that the definition of disability is so narrow that very few can actually qualify. You have to be totally and permanently disabled in order to qualify for the pension, and the words "totally and permanently" are rigidly interpreted by the examining board.

When the local welfare service becomes aware of the problems of people who are living in extremely difficult circumstances they are forced to take some financial responsibility for them. It has been especially difficult in the case of mentally retarded people; people under the mental age of seven, for example, who have been sheltered within the family unit, and have reached maturity without achieving a mental capacity which permits them to cope with the problems of life. I do not think anyone can deny that an adult with a mental age under seven is totally and permanently disabled so far as being an adequately functioning social individual is concerned. When these problems come to the attention of the municipalities they have to assume responsibility, and the pressure has come from action on the part of the senior levels of government.

These matters are well known to all municipal officials, and of course they have been presented in this house on a great many occasions in the past. There is no need to re-emphasize them at great length tonight.

In winding up this particular part of my observations I would like to suggest that one of the curses on municipal finances has been this technique of matching grants, under which the federal government says, "We will give you such and such a service if you will agree to equal the amount, or accept a sizeable portion of the financial responsibility." Most of the measures arising at the federal level now are presented to both the provinces and the municipalities on the basis of this matching grant technique until the municipalities are not in a position to do any more matching. They have exhausted all their financial resources and have overextended themselves. Sometimes the federal government is surprised when the municipalities appear to look a gift horse in the mouth and will not accept the prizes in the form of the various services which are dangled at the end of the federal government's fish pole.

The matching grant system is certainly not an unmixed blessing. I think that technique lost its usefulness long ago. The municipalities have reached the end of their financial resources and some other solution will have to be found. The most obvious solution, of course, is to have a comprehensive transferring of service responsibility, but we come back to the inevitable conclusion that constitutionally much of this transferring of services is prohibited under our British North America Act. As I said earlier in my remarks tonight, this certainly applies to education.

There are two specific areas in municipal finances that provide some leeway for shifting financial responsibility. The authorities on municipal financing point this out in all the briefs they prepare on the subject. They point out there are services to persons and services to property, and inasmuch as the local tax revenue derives largely from property on real taxes by definition—

Mr. Knowles: Taxes on real property.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, I guess that is a real tax. Inasmuch as the municipalities derive their tax revenues from that source, they should only be responsible for property services if we are going to be consistent. Such services would include police and fire protection, sidewalks, roads and so forth. If their service responsibilities were limited to that relatively narrow field no doubt the municipalities could cope with the situation. It is when they get into the matter of services for persons that they spill over into the national level of responsibility, and I refer to education, recreation, welfare and so forth. They then find themselves in difficulty. Either we have to have a transfer of services, which will require a great deal of thought and consideration and deliberation on the part of all concerned, or some other solution will have to be found.

We certainly have enough evidence before us in the briefs which have been filed. Most provincial governments right across the country have made exhaustive analyses of this difficulty. The evidence is there; it is just a question of the federal government taking responsibility for initiating some positive action to meet this important problem.

Other solutions have been put forward in limited terms in the resolution we have before us, and I refer to the finding of some new tax resources or some new tax techniques which will ease the burden of the local levels of government. Here the possibilities are limited, but we have two simple solutions which have been presented to the house and I am quite happy to support them.

I should like to relate one personal experience in regard to the excise and sales tax situation. Like all municipalities the city of Brandon in recent years has been engaged in extensive public works in the form of the paving of roads, the building of sidewalks and so forth. They had to invest rather heavily in the necessary equipment to carry out this particular work. They obtained the latest type of equipment for the construction of sidewalks and curbs, and were under the impression that as the expenditure was more than $1,000 it would be free from excise and sales taxes. However, they were told that the $1,000 must be considered on a unit basis. The equipment necessary for this particular job did not contain any one unit which involved an expenditure of $1,000. We argued backward and forward with the revenue department for some time, but finally lost because of a regulation which seemed fairly difficult to understand.

The problem which the municipalities are facing may not seem large when measured against the abundant wealth in taxes possessed by the federal government, but when it is measured against the limited revenue of the local government it is large indeed. The total budget for the current year for the city of Brandon is slightly over $1 million. We have the famous phrase, "What is a million dollars?" but the fact is that that is a lot of money to a local municipality. We ran into the same problem in the construction and equipping of a home for senior citizens. There was some technicality which ruled out the remission of the sales and excise taxes because the application had not been made before a particular date.

These may be small things when compared with the total problem represented by the amendment we have before us. As I have indicated, perhaps we will have to move toward the main solution by a series of short steps rather than one panacea which will solve all our difficulties in one stroke.

To bring my remarks to a conclusion, let me say that this problem is felt particularly severely by the rural municipalities. I do not think anyone has spoken today on behalf of those municipalities. We think of great metropolitan areas like Toronto and Montreal having financial restrictions because of their broad service responsibilities, but in some respects they are better off than the local rural municipalities. The local rural municipality has absolutely no other tax revenue than the tax on real property.

I do not have to draw a diagram in order to point out that our rural municipalities, particularly in western Canada, are not in a very healthy condition. They are financially unsound; they are socially unsound; they are economically unsound. The continuing drift from rural to urban areas has deprived the rural community, which carries an important responsibility in keeping culture and liberty alive, of considerable financial resources. These difficulties represent one of the major problems facing Canada at the present time. I urge the federal government, which does have responsibility in these matters, to give attention to this one.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A short time ago while the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary was speaking I referred to the budgetary expenses of some ten years ago. As a result of remarks made by the hon. member for Greenwood I looked them up, and I find that the actual income of ten years ago was between $2,700,000,000 and $2,800,000,000. Even with the most generous use of my statement that they could not be more than 25 per cent less than they are now, I find I am out by about $300,000,000.

On motion of Mr. Van Horne the debate was adjourned.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STATEMENT ON REPORT OF FAUTEUX COMMISSION

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I should like to revert to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. minister the consent of the house to revert to motions at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Garson: This is the first opportunity I have had since 4.30 this afternoon to announce that at that time in my office in the building here Mr. Justice Fauteux delivered to me in person one copy in English of the report of the committee appointed on December 11, 1953, to inquire into the principles and procedures followed in the remission service of the Department of Justice. The translation of this report into French and its printing is already in hand, and the report will be tabled in parliament as soon as that printing and translation are completed.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

WHEAT BOARD—INSTRUCTIONS TO ELEVATORS

Question No. 395—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has the wheat board given instructions to elevator companies on the prairies that their agents are not to buy wheat produced in the year 1954 or prior thereto?
2. If so, why were such instructions given?
3. Do private elevator companies refuse to accept deliveries of wheat produced in the above-mentioned year, or prior thereto?
4. If so, on what authority?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

1. No.
2. See answer to No. 1 above.
3. The receipt of grain into country elevators is subject to the provisions of the Canada Grain Act, which does not distinguish between grain produced in one year and that produced in any other year. Producers' deliveries are, of course, subject to delivery quotas as established from time to time by the Canadian wheat board.
4. See answer to No. 3 above.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 1, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FLOODS

MANITOBA—SURPLUS MONEY COLLECTED FOR RELIEF PURPOSES IN 1950

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser) asked what had happened to the surplus money which had been collected for relief purposes following the heavy floods in Manitoba in 1950. We all, of course, recall that a corporation had been set up by our parliament in 1953. The hon. member also wanted to know if this surplus could be used for relief purposes at this time.

In 1953, when the Canadian Disaster Relief Fund Corporation was set up by act of parliament, the surplus amounted to approximately a little less than $1½ million. The legislation setting up the fund expressly provided that:

> The corporation may make payments out of the fund for the purpose of meeting emergencies and needs arising in Canada from flood, fire, tempest, earthquake, pestilence or other disaster, mitigating loss and suffering caused thereby assisting in repairing damages resulting therefrom, and rehabilitating persons who have suffered injury or loss by reason thereof, when in the opinion of the corporation the implementing of such purposes is beyond the reasonable capacity of the area affected.

As of December 31, 1955, the balance of the fund was $1,337,310.83.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

METHOD OF PROMOTION IN PROTECTIVE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): On Friday last the hon. member for Royal asked me certain questions concerning promotions and seniority in the protective staff of the House of Commons. I have ascertained since through inquiries I made that the information I gave the house at that time was correct.

IMMIGRATION

PROCEDURE TO BE ADOPTED FOLLOWING COURT DECISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether the department has concluded its consideration of the situation which arose as a result of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Brent case? If so, is the minister in a position to say whether any legislative changes will be introduced or whether it will be confined to administrative changes?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The department is still giving consideration to the effect of the decision of the supreme court in the Brent case on the state of the law. As soon as any conclusion is reached that may be embodied in any regulations, a copy of the regulations will be tabled immediately.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

GUIDED MISSILES—INQUIRY AS TO ELECTRONICS CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Defence Production. In view of the article which appeared in the current issue of the Financial Post with reference to guided missile contracts, can the minister make any statement to this house with reference to any decision, if one has been reached, or give any other information concerning the electronics contract in connection with this missile?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, no final decision has been reached by the defence department as yet as to the particular guided missile that will be manufactured. Certain exploratory efforts have been undertaken in connection with two different missiles, but no decision can be made about any component of either missile until a final decision is received from the Department of National Defence.

Mrs. Fairclough: Can the minister give the assurance that no commitment has been made to the Bendix-Eclipse Company?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I should like to correct a suggestion contained in the Financial Post article that I was pressing for a contract with the Bendix company. The opposite is the case. It happens that the Bendix company is the developing contractor for a particular electronics component of one particular missile, and my efforts have been directed toward getting a clean right to manufacture that particular component in any way that Canada might decide. I am happy to say that has now been arranged.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO RENEWAL OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): In view of the fact that the agreement between the government and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines ceased to be effective yesterday, would the Prime Minister tell the house if a new agreement has been made and, if so, what it is?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There was an agreement extending the date from May 1, 1956, to November 1, 1956, and I understand that was tabled the other day. There has been no other agreement but that one.

Mr. Green: Is that agreement between the government and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Yes, sir.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to ask a question supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. Will the Prime Minister say whether or not there is any basis for the allegation in the press that the government is to advance or lend to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines some $70 million or more; and, second, upon what constitutional basis can such an arrangement be made without legislative authority of parliament?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No such arrangement could be made without legislative authority of parliament, and when there is anything of substance it will be communicated to parliament instead of parliament being apprized of it through the press.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a welcome announcement. May I ask the Prime Minister this. Is there any foundation for the statement which emanated from an authority in the government, according to the Canadian Press?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, the government will welcome as much as the hon. gentleman or any member of parliament the freedom to make its own announcements to parliament instead of having them made in that speculative way.

Mr. Rowe: This is a supplementary question. The report in the paper is not true, or is it?

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I am not going to say anything one way or the other to encourage such speculation in the newspapers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the usual report to parliament.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. If the government is going as far as is suggested in the Canadian Press dispatch, why not go a step farther and build the line under public ownership?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): These hypothetical questions are based on newspaper speculation. When there is anything firmer for them to be based upon, answers will be given to the questions asked in parliament.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I intervene at this moment just to say that we have had about four questions on this newspaper report, and there are 264 members besides myself.

Mr. Green: Your Honour, my question has nothing to do with the newspaper report. Arising out of the first answer the Prime Minister gave concerning an agreement extending the time, may I ask whether there has been any agreement between the dominion government and the government of Ontario with regard to that extension or, if no agreement, has there been any undertaking given between the two governments?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I have had no communication with any of the members of the Ontario government, but I have been informed that there have been communications between the Minister of Trade and Commerce and members of the Ontario government.

Mr. Fulton: To what effect?

Mr. Green: Has the Ontario government also granted an extension?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to make commitments in the House of Commons as to the future conduct of the government of Ontario.

Mr. Green: I asked the Prime Minister whether there had been any agreement reached or any undertaking given; not what was to be done in the future but whether or not it has already been done?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I told the hon. gentleman that I have had no communication from any member of the Ontario government.

Mr. Green: The Prime Minister said the Minister of Trade and Commerce had had communication. Perhaps the minister can answer the question?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I discussed the matter with both Mr. Frost and Mr. Porter. Mr. Porter made a public statement which was quoted over the radio this morning and which I took to be his view. My view is that when we have something definite to suggest to the province of Ontario we will write to them. That has been agreed. They will reply and as soon as the reply is received the correspondence will be tabled here in the House of Commons.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

UNIVERSITY ARMOURIES, TORONTO—NEGOTIATIONS FOR SALE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it correct that tenders have been called for a 20-year bonded roof for the university armouries in Toronto and, if so, does that mean the government has put aside any consideration of the possible sale of that property to the city or the metropolitan municipality?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have an opportunity to answer this question, the substance of which I noticed was the subject of some misrepresentation editorially in one of the Toronto newspapers.

The facts are that negotiations are still in progress with respect to the possibility of the armoury site being acquired by the metropolitan commission. The fact also is that for a number of years past we have been repairing each year a portion of the roof of the armouries, because we must keep the building watertight. The contract called for this year covers the last part of this rejuvenation. Incidentally, it is a small contract.

If our negotiations with the metropolitan commission lead to a deal being made with regard to the site it will still be necessary for us to retain the armouries for probably two years until we get other facilities, so I can assure the house that the money that will be spent to complete this roofing job will be spent in accordance with the needs of the situation.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON APRIL 30

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is either a request for a correction in Hansard or a question of privilege. On page 3406 of yesterday's Hansard, at the foot of column 2, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) is quoted as saying:

> For that reason I feel as firmly as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) does that this government ought to remain in office—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles:

> —and for that reason I am going to vote against the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I had said, "Hear, hear" to the minister's previous sentence, but that "hear, hear" is not included in the Hansard record. I can say to the Minister of Finance that if he is only as firm as I am in the opinion that the present government should remain in office, he had better get out of the Liberal party.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did make a statement, that was not read, to the effect that this was a want of confidence motion and would mean the downfall of the government, at which time I heard a "hear, hear" from the hon. member and I drew the proper conclusion myself.

Mr. Knowles: Wrong again.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

AGRICULTURE—REPRESENTATION AT RECENT MARKETING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) asked me a question yesterday which I took as notice and to which I now wish to give the answer. This is the question, Mr. Speaker:

> Can the minister give the names of the representatives of the farm organizations who took part in the agricultural marketing conference held in Ottawa on April 16, 17 and 18 and as referred to on page 2774 of Hansard of April 10, 1956?

I have the names of the members of that group, but I would like to make a correction in the question. The meeting was not a marketing conference meeting. The meeting on those three dates was a meeting of the advisory committee. The marketing conference met the following day, April 19. This committee is advisory to the minister and the agricultural prices support board. The chairman of the committee is Mr. H. H. Hannam, president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. In addition to Mr. Hannam there are as members the deputy ministers of agriculture of the ten provinces. I think all of them were present.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In addition to Mr. Hannam there are representatives of farm organizations who have been recommended by the farm organizations as members of that committee. The recommendation is made to me as minister and they are appointed by order in council. Most of them have been members of the committee for some time, and as one withdraws from the committee a new member is appointed in his place.

The first member of that group is Erle Kitchen, Ontario, secretary of the Dairy Farmers of Canada. The second member is W. J. Parker, Manitoba, president of the Manitoba wheat pool. Mr. Parker was not present during the three days of this meeting but he is usually present. Then there is Mr. H. B. Crandlemire, the maritimes, New Brunswick potato growers; Karl Kapler, Alberta, farmers' union of Alberta; R. B. Warnica, Ontario, Ontario beef cattle producers' association; George Wright, Saskatchewan, Saskatchewan federation of agriculture. Mr. Wright was not present this year. At the time he was recommended the farmers' union operated as a member of the Saskatchewan federation of agriculture and he was satisfactory to and recommended by both organizations as their representative on the committee. Then there is J. B. Lemoine, Quebec, Catholic farmers' union, and V. E. Ellison, British Columbia, British Columbia federation of agriculture.

That makes a committee of 19 members which we think is representative of the farm organizations right across Canada, even if there is not a representative on the committee from each of the many farm organizations. As a rule there are two or three recommended by the different organizations and the selections were made to cover as nearly as possible the livestock, agricultural, dairying and fruit growers' organizations.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA—RESULT OF INCREASE IN DISCOUNT RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, and ask him whether or not the recent increase directed by the Bank of Canada to the chartered banks, a one-half per cent increase in interest, will apply to loans already made in connection with guaranteed loans on farm-stored wheat?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I think, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend misapprehends the situation. The only change in the interest rate the Bank of Canada has effected lately has been an increase in the discount rate to their banks, the banks that do business with them. It had nothing to do with the interest being charged by the banks to borrowers.

Mr. Lennard: Oh, yes, it did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not correct.

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Does not the minister know that the chartered banks have advised their borrowers of an increase in interest rates?

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That was discussed in the house last week.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question arising out of the answer given to the hon. member for Prince Albert. Does the minister's answer mean that the discount rate charged by the Bank of Canada has no bearing or influence upon the interest rates charged by the banks to their borrowers?

Mr. Harris: I did not make that answer. My answer was that the Bank of Canada increased its rate. I think the question asked of me was what the Bank of Canada had done with respect to certain other rates over which they have no influence, except the results which might occur from an independent decision made by another body.

Mr. Fulton: And were intended to occur.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, April 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew.

TAXATION—REQUEST FOR RELIEF FOR MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this occasion in support of my leader's amendment demanding financial assistance for our municipalities. As this government pursues its wayward and merry and sinister course of greater and greater centralization of power, our municipalities have become more and more forgotten governing bodies in Canada. Yet their historic and traditional functions, honoured over the years, are well defined and have been well established in the history of this country. The duties of our municipal governing bodies increase from year to year, but as these duties increase steadily and continually, bringing in their train ever-increasing financial burdens, the necessary finances to meet these burdens become harder and harder to obtain.

It is apparent for all to see, and we all know, that our municipal bodies—our counties, our cities, our towns, our villages, our local improvement districts, our school commissions—fulfil functions and duties of government which at the local level overshadow in importance many of the needs of those foreign nations which Canada has been anxious to gratify. In saying this I hasten to add, lest my Liberal friendly enemies on the other side of the hall should twist and turn my remarks, that I am in favour of proper foreign aid commensurate with Canada's responsibilities as a nation of the free world; but I believe the horse should go before the cart, and that charity begins at home, in one's own kitchen.

Our municipalities care for fundamental and basic needs; education, police, water, streets, sewerage, electric power, recreation, slum clearance and charity—a very important function of municipal governments today—to mention only a few. To my mind these needs and these functions must be fulfilled and met first, not last. These are basic, primary, fundamental needs which to an ever-increasing degree, the federal government is denying to our people because of its policy of refusing to assist adequately our municipal bodies.

I was astonished to note the figures tabled in the house recently by the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding financial assistance for various projects which this government is giving outright to foreign countries; while it is in the same breath denying the very same kind of projects to our own people in New Brunswick, for instance; and to the people who live within the confines of our municipal governments. In the past very few years, Canada has given or lent—mostly given—$4,044,200,000 to foreign countries. Of this amount reconstruction loans totalled $1,767,200,000, and most of these loans are still outstanding. Military relief took up $105,200,000. United Nations agencies received $215,100,000. The Colombo plan got $162,300,000 outright, much of which was for the development of hydroelectric power. And this at a time when Canada's government refused a loan of $46 million to develop hydroelectric power at Beechwood, New Brunswick, a loan which my province would have fully repaid, for our people pay their way, with interest, with certainty and on the due dates. To international organizations outside the United Nations went $367,900,000 and to Canada's friends in NATO went $1,417,900,000.

Mr. Nesbitt: Don't forget the Prince of Liechtenstein.

Mr. Van Horne: Most of this money was in outright gifts. In the face of these facts, can there be a legitimate excuse by this government for its de facto policy of no help and no assistance to our municipal bodies? I was delighted to hear the Prime Minister the other day agree with me and all the other members on this side of the house in his admission that the government had, in effect, permitted the maritime provinces to become economically speaking and development-wise, the forgotten provinces of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the government's confession should have included as well its neglect of our municipal bodies. I admire the spirit of contrition on the part of the government in their admission of guilt, for by logical implication the Prime Minister's statement was precisely an admission or confession of guilt for so misgoverning the affairs of this country that our Atlantic provinces flounder in the sea of Liberal indifference and neglect while the government sits, and has been sitting idly by on the fence, twiddling its thumbs.

The Prime Minister now asks for proposals and suggestions. I ask what happened to the proposals we made for Beechwood. I ask what assurance we have that our future proposals will not meet the same sorry fate that has been met by the proposals we have been making to this house and to this government for the past 20 years. Let us not lose sight of the forest for the trees. If the Prime Minister thinks he can sway a few stray votes in the coming election in New Brunswick by suggesting that proposals be made to the government, he and his government are mistaken. Since 1952 New Brunswick and the four Atlantic provinces have been making proposals, demands and suggestions—lifesaving proposals—basically required for the progress of New Brunswick and therefore of Canada as a whole, proposals backed by facts and figures, sound and solid.

What happened? Nothing happened. What happened to the proposals, suggestions and demands on behalf of our municipalities made by the premier of my province at the last interprovincial conference? What happened to the proposal for Beechwood? What happened to the proposal and demand to build the Chignecto canal? What happened to our proposal and demand that you quit killing us in the maritimes with your choking freight rates? What happened to our proposal and demand for the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge?

Mr. Robichaud: Where were you last Friday?

Mr. Van Horne: What happened to our proposal that you pay the cost of the trans-Canada highway in New Brunswick? I ask this question: Whom is the government trying to fool when it asks for proposals? Since 1952 the government of my province has been making proposals; and scarcely a month goes by but that a proposal is made. But every time a proposal is made it meets the same sorry fate of indifference and neglect. Never have so many proposals been turned down so consistently by the same tired crew that runs this country.

I mention these facts to provide a background for my proposals in connection with financial assistance to our municipalities. Let no one ever try to tell this house that this government did not receive our proposals and suggestions. The government should tell the truth and say that it has been, is and will continue to be too lazy to put our proposals and suggestions into operation and to grant our legitimate rights and requests.

At the time of confederation the sources of taxation were limited almost entirely to taxes on real property. The municipalities obtained their fair share for the functions they had to accomplish and perform at that time. But today, nearly a century later, the real sources of taxation have been gathered unto the federal government, which has not given to the municipalities their fair share commensurate with their duties.

Municipalities are prevented, prohibited and stopped from fulfilling their functions and duties. Let me give you an example. Three hospitals in my riding of Restigouche-Madawaska are unable to collect 40 per cent of their accounts receivable. Forty per cent of all hospital accounts in my riding come from charity cases, and the legal responsibility for these bills must fall on the municipality. They readily admit and are willing to accept their legal responsibility, but in Restigouche county alone it would require the entire annual budget to take care of the charity cases connected with our hospital. Our municipalities simply cannot pay for these cases. So what happens? Our hospitals are faced with the problem and are obliged to shoulder the crushing burden of subsidizing the municipalities by hundreds of thousands of dollars per year, precisely because the federal government will not give adequate assistance to the municipalities.

Another proposal voiced from every corner of this house is that federal property located in the municipalities—the counties, cities, towns, villages, local improvement districts or, where these do not exist, within the borders of school districts—should be assessed and taxed. In the city of Edmundston and the town of Campbellton the tax rate and the tax burden are to a large extent determined and necessitated by the services required because of government property located within those two localities. In Campbellton the Canadian National Railways makes up a full third of the total valuation of the town, but not a cent in taxes is received to compensate for the services that are required because of this federal government property. Yet the services must be provided, including streets, police, water, sewers and education. Who pays? It is the hard-working small property owner who pays. Thus we are obliged to pay $700 in annual town taxes for an ordinary new house. Let the government property in the municipalities be taxed, and let the government pay its share.

Another proposal is this. Let this government make loans available to all municipalities at low interest rates. Interest rates in every municipality in the Atlantic provinces are high and represent an enormous factor in the taxes which property owners must pay. It is always the struggling property owner who gets it in the neck when it comes to municipal taxes. Let these loans be made available by adopting standard minimum requirements and by making them available for specific purposes in all municipalities.

Another proposal is to exempt municipalities from federal taxation. It is contrary to all the rules of law for any kind of government to be taxed. Remove this burden from our municipalities, and that alone would ease their difficulties and allow them to purchase their machinery and equipment without sales tax or other taxes.

Another proposal is to set up a system of effective grants for our municipalities. We merely demand that whatever, in the opinion of our municipalities, is materially desirable and possible should be made financially possible by the federal government so that the needs of our municipal bodies at all levels may be met. It is the sacred responsibility of the federal government to take the necessary steps to attain these ends. Good government is nothing more than the means to an end, and that end is fulfilling the needs and wants of our people. Today the means must be provided our municipal bodies to permit them to fulfil the functions which have been bestowed upon them by law and tradition over the years.

My counties of Madawaska and Restigouche represent a large section of the total area of New Brunswick. At the moment in New Brunswick we have 6,000 people who should be getting invalids' pensions, yet only about 600 have succeeded in qualifying for them. This results from the fact that the government's definition of "invalid" is a person who is so close to death he cannot move. In our municipalities we have seen cases in which people with both legs off at the hips or with both arms severed have been unable to get an invalid's pension because they could still talk or because they could still see. I ask you, what do you want in order to qualify for invalid's pension? What happens is this. These people who cannot qualify for invalids' pension have to rely upon the municipalities for aid. The municipalities simply do not have the means to provide that aid. Here again we have an example of the federal government coming in, appropriating the credit for establishing invalids' pensions, yet doing almost nothing except creating chaos within the confines of our municipalities.

Mr. Martin: Why not talk about something you know something about?

Mr. Van Horne: This two-bit publicity seeker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Van Horne: —would do well to wipe this chipmunk smile from his photoflash-tanned face and sit down rather than talk about invalids' pensions. Look at the poor people in my riding who have to depend upon the municipalities, without any help at all from the federal government.

I should like to speak for a moment about schools. Don't let the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell us we do not know anything about invalids' pensions. If he only took the time to come down to my riding and look at some of the cases his regulations have forced officials to turn down; he would change his tune and his ideas.

Mr. Martin: May I ask my hon. friend a question? Is he not aware that the disabilities pension act is administered in every province by the provincial government in respect of regulations drawn up by all the provincial governments as well as the federal government? Has my hon. friend addressed himself in the same respectful way to the government of the province of New Brunswick?

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, yes, I have; and the answer I was given was that the Minister of National Health and Welfare held the whip and the provinces had to agree.

Mr. Pearkes: Not another speech.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Martin: May I ask the hon. member who in the government of New Brunswick gave him that information, so I can check on its accuracy?

Mr. Nowlan: A confidential communication and not for publication.

Mr. Van Horne: I shall be very happy to do so. I should like to deal with schools for a few moments. We have been approached time and again by people from other provinces who point to the inability of our municipalities, and especially our school commissions, to deal adequately with the problem of education. What happens throughout the whole province of New Brunswick is this. We maintain an excellent system of education, but the minute our people are educated they are forced to leave our province to find a living elsewhere. The burden of education becomes heavier and heavier upon those who are left. Our municipalities have received the utmost in help from the governments both Liberal and Conservative, in the four Atlantic provinces to assist them in maintaining high standards of education and excellent buildings. However, the problem is beyond the capabilities of the municipalities even with the help they are receiving from the provinces. Tremendous strides have been made in the past few years in New Brunswick in connection with education, but the work that remains to be done falls, to a large extent, upon the shoulders of the municipalities who are unable to pay their share.

Let us remember that when it comes to poverty, disease, unemployment, those conditions do not ask to what party you belong before they strike. I can assure you that we in New Brunswick have known nothing but a state of full depression or semi-depression. Our municipalities have to bear the cost of unemployment as the result of a silly regulation in our unemployment insurance system by which people who have been out of work during the winter months are unable to obtain benefits. The Minister of Labour knows quite well that the last changes in the law worked to the detriment of the worker. Before the change a man could work 180 days in two years to qualify, and if he had days left over from the previous year he would be entitled to those days.

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Van Horne: Under the new regulations he can—

Mr. Gregg: May I interrupt my hon. friend? He called me as a witness in the course of his speech, and I just had to bear witness to this. It is completely untrue that all sections of New Brunswick could be classified as depressed areas or as having depressed centres. I should like also to point out to my hon. friend that during the depression of the thirties the provincial government of New Brunswick did not, as did so many provinces, have to issue relief moneys to those who lived therein.

Mr. Van Horne: Don't forget that in the 1930's we had a good Conservative government. Quite apart from these jokes we make with each other, the Minister of Labour knows, I know, and we all know that there was real hardship in the 1930's in New Brunswick as in every other province in Canada.

Mr. Gregg: I agree.

Mr. Van Horne: There was no area where prosperity ran. There is more poverty today in northern New Brunswick than in any other part of Canada, and these facts can be well-established.

Mr. Robichaud: Flemming would not say that. Point that out to Flemming.

Mr. Van Horne: This puffed-up member for Gloucester can interject a few things in anybody else's speech, sit back there and laugh and ape. He should recognize that his duty here is to bring about better conditions for the people he is paid to represent.

Mr. Robichaud: That is what this government is doing.

Mr. Van Horne: When I think of the sabotage efforts the hon. member for Gloucester is carrying on because the people of his county are trying to get a bridge across to Shippigan island I feel sorry for the poor people of Gloucester county who are saddled with such an utterly worthless gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska will have to revise his sentence.

Mr. Van Horne: It is not completed.

Mr. Speaker: The words that have been used are quite complete. Perhaps he could eliminate that sentence or revise it.

Mr. Van Horne: I am very glad to withdraw it; everyone knows it is true.

Mr. Robichaud: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just said—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Van Horne: In closing my remarks—

[Mr. Gregg.]

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska remain seated while the hon. member for Gloucester states his question of privilege?

Mr. Robichaud: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who had the floor said, after your remarks, "Everyone knows it is true". I wish he would withdraw those words.

Mr. Van Horne: All right; I will withdraw them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member said that. It is not an unconditional withdrawal. That is what the rule calls for.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw; I am very happy to do that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member withdraws but should not add, "Everyone knows it is true". As long as we understand that it is an unconditional withdrawal everybody is happy.

Mr. Van Horne: In closing I wish to mention one other proposal. We have a problem in regard to the children of unknown parents. I have been approached by hospital staffs and hospitals in the province of Quebec and elsewhere to the effect that they are not getting for these children family allowances or help of any kind. This problem is a very serious one, because these are mostly religious institutions that have to depend for a livelihood on donations received through charity. These children get no help of any kind. You would think that at least family allowances would be paid to the institutions caring for those children. This is a problem that does not lead to any suggestion of frivolity that some hon. members are prompt to take advantage of. This is a problem that demands action by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Before closing I wish to praise the work of all those who are connected so intimately with the governments of our municipal bodies. Our county councils demand from their members long hours of assiduous work to stretch a dollar bill, making it do the job of a $10 bill. They do not have the advantage, which hon. members across the way have, of turning the crank and putting the squeeze a little harder on the poor taxpayers of Canada. In many instances they have to do with next to nothing. Local improvement districts have to undertake the building of schools and, once those schools are built, they have to provide for the management and servicing of those buildings. They are unable to do so from their ordinary sources of taxation.

We have problems which are concrete and real which the federal government should take time to study. You should come down from your high horse and look at what goes on in this country. I suggest that steps be taken and that these proposals that we have been making over the years should not be set aside. In one breath we are asked to make these proposals but in the next breath we are slapped in the face by the indifference and neglect of this government.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to a good portion of this debate so far. Knowing that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska was to speak today, of course I had to sit here to hear what he had to say. I do feel that he has a job to do, and he should get about doing his job right away. I can assure him that the report we get from the premier of our province with reference to conditions there and the report he has given us here today contrast greatly.

The premier of our province informs us that we were never so fortunate since we have been the province of New Brunswick. We have just passed through the greatest era in our history and the future is bright indeed. I can assure the hon. member who has just resumed his seat that the report we have heard from him today does not coincide with the one that is being given by the premier of our province. I do feel they should get together and do something about this.

The hon. member made one remark with reference to one of my colleagues from New Brunswick. He said he believed that the hon. member for Gloucester is paid to represent his county. I want to say I believe that the hon. member for Gloucester is doing a much better job than the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska is doing, for at least he is here in Ottawa and this is the first time I have seen the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska for several days.

Mr. Van Horne: He was here yesterday.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): There is an advantage in being at home. He has had several days to sit down and write the speech which he read so well today.

Mr. Van Horne: That is another lie.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It provides time to get together the few remarks which he comes to the house and delivers and then goes back home again.

He made one remark today about requests of our provincial government to build the Chignecto canal. I have been here 11 years and I have seen requests from organizations of different kinds to build the Chignecto canal, but in my memory there has never been at any time a request that has come from the provincial government to build the Chignecto canal. If I am wrong I stand to be corrected. In my memory the provincial government has never suggested the building of the Chignecto canal.

Mr. Van Horne: I never said it did.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The hon. member's remarks are on Hansard. I think I took them down very carefully. Another thing most noticeable in the hon. member's remarks was this. He was most generous with federal funds.

Mr. Van Horne: What is that again?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): A great many in the maritime provinces and in other parts of Canada have come to the conclusion that the federal members who sit here and the federal government which we have here at the present time are nothing more nor less than a tax-collecting agency for the provinces. That is the idea that they hold out, and it is growing very rapidly. I can assure the hon. member who has just resumed his seat that never in his time or mine and never since confederation has any federal government been more generous to the maritime provinces than the one of which I am a supporter.

When the provincial government took over in 1952 in New Brunswick the federal payment under the tax rental agreements was between twelve and thirteen million dollars. This year they are going to receive nearly $20 million. Why does not some of that go to the municipalities?

They are going to discard the sales tax, so they still have that to give to the municipalities. Why all this generosity on the part of the federal government? Why do they not loosen up the provincial purse strings and help the municipalities as they should help them? When the next election takes place and the change has occurred you will have a more generous group to deal with the people of New Brunswick than you have right now.

The hon. member also strongly recommended that public buildings which belong to the federal government and everything in which it is interested should be taxed in the towns, villages or wherever they may be located. I just want to give my hon. friend a little tip. If he will drop a line to our premier and suggest that the provincial government do exactly the same thing in connection with our liquor store it will be appreciated in the town of St. Andrews from where I come. The liquor store there does the biggest business of any organization in town, and they have never paid a single dollar by way of tax since they were established there. This generosity must work both ways. The hon. member should not suggest to us what we as federal members should do and neglect his duty as a provincial member—

Mr. Nesbitt: We are not provincial members.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte):—because you cannot have it work only one way, it must work both ways.

The hon. member was very critical of loans and gifts which this country has made to countries which are less fortunate than we are. Since we came here in January I have heard several of his group rise in this house and suggest that if there is any possible way in which we can increase the amount of our contribution to the Colombo plan we should do so. I quite agree with that. Surely the hon. member's own colleagues cannot agree with him when he gets up and criticizes what we are doing today under the Colombo plan and other plans to assist underdeveloped countries.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am not criticizing that at all; I merely say the horse should go before the cart.

An hon. Member: You did.

Mr. McCann: Where else would you put the horse?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member certainly said what I said he said. It is only a few weeks ago that he bitterly criticized the gift we made to Britain—

Mr. Van Horne: That is not true.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): —and in the same statement he said they were foreigners.

Mr. Van Horne: That is another falsehood.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It is on the record and I can find it within five minutes if he wants to read it. Those certainly were his words.

The hon. member today in his generous mood has suggested that the federal government should pay the complete cost of the trans-Canada highway. He suggested on other occasions and I think again today that we should increase if not double the family allowance and old age pension. His last remark was particularly interesting. He said in reference to the government that it wants to squeeze the poor taxpayers of Canada. If there was ever a squeezer of the poor taxpayers of Canada he sits in that seat over there. If all the suggestions the hon. member has made in the short time he has been here were put into effect, income tax, sales tax and every other tax that we collect would have to be doubled to take care of it. Then he talks about the government squeezing the poor taxpayers. Since I have been here I have never heard anyone who has criticized the government for not spending money to the extent my hon. friend has criticized it.

I do not know if the hon. member realizes that to double the family allowance would cost the taxpayers of this country, if I remember correctly, between $350 million and $400 million and to double the old age pensions would cost about the same. You could soon pile them up and have a billion dollars. There is only one place from which that money can come, and that is from the taxpayers of this country of ours. The hon. member said we are squeezing the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Van Horne: Are you against increasing family allowances?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am not against any increase for any purpose which the taxpayers of this country can afford to pay.

Mr. Van Horne: Do you not think that better management could bring those things about?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): You will never produce that management if you carry on in the way in which you have been carrying on.

Mr. Van Horne: Wait until the next election and you will see who produces it.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The better management you are looking for will never come from the source you suggest, I can assure you of that.

Mr. Robichaud: He is thinking of his other leader.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The hon. member mentioned the Campbellton bridge. It is to be regretted that he was absent the other day when the minister made a statement concerning that bridge. Perhaps the hon. member has not had time since his return to read the statement but I would suggest that he should read it, because the minister spoke in some detail concerning that particular question.

The hon. member made one other statement with which I must deal for a moment before resuming my seat. He suggested today that the Minister of Labour knew that the regulation in connection with unemployment insurance would be harmful at the time the act was amended last year.

Mr. Van Horne: No.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Those were the words you used. Before it became law that bill was before a committee of this house on which were labour experts of the Progressive Conservative party, and they were provided an opportunity to go into it as far and for as long a time as they liked. We have been given to understand that there are labour experts in the Tory party. I fail to understand how this ever slipped by all the experts they had on this committee. I would say it is an acknowledgment of neglect on their part. At the same time I can assure the hon. member that the Minister of Labour had no idea that the amendment would be harmful in any way to any Canadian. I am sure the citizens of Canada will agree with that statement.

Before resuming my seat I am going to suggest that the hon. member get in touch with the premier of our own province and suggest to him that he put into effect some of the generous ideas which the hon. member would like to turn over to the federal government. I would ask him again to go over the records carefully to see if he can convince himself that the generosity extended to the provinces of Canada by this government is beyond reproach. There has never been a time since confederation when such an effort has been made to distribute the wealth of this country fairly and honestly, and any fair-minded Canadian will acknowledge the truth of that statement.

I would remind the hon. member of all the social services that have been provided and the tax rental agreements without which we could not get by in the province of New Brunswick. The man who fought for that was Hon. J. B. McNair, premier of our province at that time, but the hon. member gives no credit where credit is due. The only thing we hear is criticism which is always aimed at the federal government. I cannot sit here as a federal member and take that kind of stuff from the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska, and I do not intend to. I would suggest to him that he direct some of his criticism where it belongs, and that is to the provincial government in the province from which he comes.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have read with some interest the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition, which I think is a bit vague. I agree with it as far as it goes, but before I sit down I hope to move an amendment which will aim at one particular phase of assistance to the municipalities by the federal government and which will, I think, put some teeth in the original motion.

I have listened with interest to the speakers who have preceded me, and I have noticed that the first utterance of at least several to whom I have listened has been an expression of concern with the expense of education to the municipalities in this country. I believe at the moment that is the form of assistance from the federal government which the municipalities most need. I am not going to make a full speech upon federal aid to education, as I perhaps will have an opportunity at another session to do that, but I do want to relate what I have to say to the need of the municipalities.

In 1951 the school boards had 2,500,000 children to look after. Since that date the school population has been increasing at the rate of 150,000 per year. Since that date the population of Canada has increased by 1,750,000. If the present educational programs are to be maintained, not to speak of an increase or betterment in them, something will have to be done. If these services are maintained it may be that other services will have to be lessened. In time of want or in time of war education is usually the first casualty. If any services have to be lessened I am afraid that once more it will be education that will have to be either reduced or remain stationary.

Do we want to maintain our educational standards in the provinces and in Canada as a whole? I know that education is a sacred cow in Canada and we will be told, as we have been told in the past by cabinet ministers when I have moved my resolution on education, that this is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, and I agree completely with that view so far as administration and curricula are concerned.

To get back to the municipalities, if we are going to maintain our present standards or if, as I urge, we are going to increase them, then somehow or other we must broaden the base of taxation for the purposes of education. I think every hon. member of this house knows from his own particular area that municipalities are now at their wits' end for a solution of this problem. At the moment municipal taxes for education are raised from real property. The municipalities are now paying 65 per cent of this cost with the provinces paying the other 35 per cent, according to the average figure. Of course some provincial governments are doing better than others.

I submit that there are two main problems with which the municipalities are confronted. The first is the capital cost of erecting educational buildings, and the second is the cost of maintaining a staff of capable and well-trained teachers, and let me emphasize the words "capable and well-trained". The situation as it exists today in Canada is rather disgraceful and does not compare very well—I say this with regret—with that existing in many other countries which I could mention.

What is the present situation? The latest statistics I have for 1952 and 1953 show that with our small population we had 5,142 substitutes in our schools, people without any professional training at all. I ask the individual members of this house if you would like to have your child sitting on a bench in front of one of those so-called teachers. There were 5,142 substitutes without any professional training and 3,744 with only partial or substandard training.

Those two problems, the building of schools and the maintenance of proper staff, are major problems. If teachers are paid sufficiently no doubt they will be trained. The result of the situation I have described is widespread irregularities or inequality of educational opportunities for children throughout different parts of the country. This problem has been solved by many provinces on a provincial basis by increasing the size of the unit of administration. There may be districts, particularly farm areas, where there is a high assessment and where the people can contribute to the education of the children of their less fortunate brethren. As far as I am concerned and as far as this group is concerned that is the ideal at which we should aim.

I maintain that some remedy should be forthcoming in the federal field. As I said before, I grant that under our constitution education is a matter for the provinces, but I submit that the federal government has a duty to see that education be not allowed to fall below a certain acceptable standard in any province. I submit that is within the competence of the federal government without any interference with the administration of education by the provincial departments.

It is well known that in certain provinces a classroom can be maintained at the expenditure of $5,000 yearly, but in certain other districts or in certain other provinces to maintain a classroom at an expenditure of $5,000 a year would require twice the sacrifice and twice the financial effort.

I should like to deal now with the importance of education to Canada, which after all is simply made up of a group of municipalities. Our position in world affairs, our position in the world depends upon the education of our people. Our scientific progress, the maintenance of social and cultural levels in Canadian life, the ability of our armed services to function, the standing of our diplomatic corps, all depend upon education. When a Canadian goes out into the world he is not thought of as being the product of the educational system of Prince Edward Island, of British Columbia or of Saskatchewan; he goes out bearing the insignia of the maple leaf. It is as Canadians that we must face the world, not as provincial people.

What about the cold war? We have had a lot to say about the cold war. There are some startling comparisons that could be made, but I have not the time to make them today. We have all been reading articles and documented reports and statements dealing with world affairs. If we think of Russia, for example—I am not advancing this as an argument that we should do the same thing—we must face the fact that in that country there is a higher percentage of people attending the universities than there is in Canada or for that matter in the United States. If you will read the statistics dealing with the number of people engaged in engineering—

Mr. Harris: Percentage or numbers?

Mr. Knight: I have forgotten what I was talking about.

Mr. Harris: The hon. member said there was a larger percentage attending universities.

Mr. Knight: There are larger numbers of people attending universities in Russia than there are in the United States. That must mean something. Many people are worried about the progress of communism across the world, and sometimes I am inclined to think that the very same people who are worrying most about the progress of communism are those who are standing in the way of progressive education in this and in other countries, progress which would enable us to compete with those people behind the iron curtain in the economic and cultural fields.

So much for the need for education. I turn now to the constitutional question. I have already said that I am all for the control of education, so far as administration and curricula are concerned, by the provincial governments. But the fathers of confederation in 1867 certainly could not foresee the crisis with regard to education that we are in today. They could not foresee that through shifts in taxation it would become increasingly difficult for the municipalities to meet their bills in regard to education. Sometimes I think the constitutional question is a little overdone.

Now I must—mildly at least—attack this government in this regard. We have a situation in which the left hand does not know what the right hand is doing, and vice versa. We have a good deal of pussyfooting and a good deal of rationalization. When the Leader of the Opposition mentioned yesterday that the first need was for some federal assistance to the municipalities for education, the Minister of Finance was very careful to remind him, and the Leader of the Opposition was very careful to admit, that of course provincial autonomy was one of the sacred things.

I have thought about this left hand and right hand. That was the left hand speaking, but the Minister of Finance with his right hand is giving educational grants to a dozen parts of this country, and pouring money into them. I could read you lists of them. What about the great D.V.A. scheme; what about scholarships to university students, university grants, technical aid and vocational aid? What about the field of health? Surely in 1867 health was one of those sacred things that was within the prerogative of provincial jurisdiction. My hon. friend who is not here, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) is boasting all across this country that he is paying half the cost of building hospitals in the various provinces and giving direct grants to the provinces for the purposes of health.

Look up the British North America Act about that one thing. Nobody seems to be too much worried about that. They have their left hand out for the money while they are disowning it with the right hand. I am a little fed up with that pussyfooting, that criticizing with one hand and taking the money with the other. "Rationalization", I think, is the correct word for it. That is a type of rationalization to which we have become accustomed in this house ever since I have been here.

Then there is this matter of the left hand and the right hand in reverse. What about UNESCO? We signed the treaty, but what do we ever do about it? This time it was the left hand that came into operation. They said, "We must not do anything about that. We are all for it; it is a fine educational thing; but we had better pussyfoot a little on that. Don't touch that."

What about the Canada Council? One of the finest speeches—probably because I agreed with it—I have heard the Prime Minister make was the speech he made on the humanities at the Chateau Laurier hotel. We were a group interested in the humanities and interested in the Canada Council, and we met there after a two-day session at a banquet. After the banquet the Prime Minister made his speech. Was it the left hand or the right hand? It was the hand of bounty this time that was in operation. That speech was as close to a commitment that any man could go without making a definite commitment, that there would be, in the next speech from the throne, notice that this would form the subject of legislation at the following session. Afterwards one of my friends, a professor from Saskatoon, clapped me on the back and said "It's in the bag." I said, "Yes, I would think it is."

Was there a word about it in the speech from the throne? No. Somewhere there was a little something that stopped that. When the next session came along a few months later I asked the Prime Minister if it was his intention this session to initiate the Canada Council as recommended in the famous Massey report. He said "No." "No" is one of his favourite words. Then he modified it, as always, by saying, "Not at this time."

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of Finance is holding the bag.

Mr. Knight: I can assure you that this "no" will some day be changed to "yes" and "not at this time" will be changed to "now". That is what I mean by pussyfooting. I do not know whether I have made myself clear. I think the Minister of Finance understands fairly well what I am talking about.

Mr. Harris: I certainly do.

Mr. Knight: It is wonderful what you can do under the constitution if you want to do it. These hospital grants are fundamentally opposed to the idea of the constitution. It is disgraceful, taking away from the province their sacred jurisdiction in the matter of hospitals, but that is what is being done. I see no reason why the system that is being applied to the capital expenditure in building hospitals could not be applied to the building of educational institutions without interfering one iota with provincial jurisdiction over education.

I have not heard one criticism from any province that the federal government or any of its departments is in any way interfering with, say, technical training, vocational training, or any of the other things I have mentioned. With regard to education, the federal government, if not up to its neck is at least up to its waist, and I should like to have it up to its neck. But I have not heard that one of these things has been anything but beneficial to the people of this country. That is my case for the municipalities.

Some time ago the members of the Canadian School Trustees' Association—and surely they are men who are interested in the municipalities of this country—got together and instituted a research project. The head of that research project was Dr. LaZerte, formerly of the university of the province of Alberta. They obtained all the facts and figures necessary to implement the machinery that would do what I want the government to do. But it seems strange to me, when these municipal men, these trustees from all over Canada, came to a certain conclusion on a certain thing and then appointed a delegation to interview the Prime Minister on this matter, that they received from the Prime Minister presumably—I do not know, but I suppose it was—a letter refusing any such interview. Why? I have in my hand a letter on the letterhead of the Canadian School Trustees' Association, signed by the secretary treasurer. He is speaking about this lengthy report on school finance which they had prepared. He says this:

> This year a delegation proposed to present a brief to the cabinet based on that report. Unfortunately the Prime Minister has declined to receive the delegation—

He declined to receive a delegation composed of respected men from all over the country. Why? The sacred cow; the old left hand. The Prime Minister, just like the Minister of Finance yesterday, did not—and he dare not—advocate this thing. They both know it. The writer of this letter says that unfortunately the Prime Minister has declined to receive a delegation as he contends that education is a provincial matter. Sir, I could have told those people before they attempted to send their delegation that they would get no welcome at Ottawa on the basis upon which they wished to come.

Mr. Speaker, I think that is the finish of my argument. Now what I have to do, as I said I would a moment or two ago, is move the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny):

> That the amendment be amended by inserting therein immediately after the words "introduction of legislation which will provide for" the following words:
> "federal aid to education, without interfering with provincial control thereof, and for".

The amendment as amended would then read as follows:

> This house is of the opinion that immediate consideration should be given to measures to assist the municipalities of Canada to meet their mounting financial problems, and in particular the immediate introduction of legislation which will provide for federal aid to education, without interfering with provincial control thereof, and for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax, and which will further provide for payment to municipalities of the equivalent of full municipal taxes.

Mr. A. H. Hollingworth (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saskatoon was talking so much about right hand and left hand that it reminded me that tomorrow is the day of the opening of the baseball season in Toronto. I guess my thoughts were wandering, in view of the beautiful weather and so on, and I was thinking of left-handed catchers in left field in Maple Leaf stadium.

I am not going to get into any discussion with my hon. friend about education. He knows how strongly I feel about education. However, I will say this with all deference, Mr. Speaker. I do not think he really appreciates the fact that the prerogative of education is so strongly held by people in the provinces in this country that I do not think any government has even suggested that grants be made for education to those governments. I do not think my hon. friend would go that far.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? Does he not know that both Hon. T. C. Douglas, premier of Saskatchewan, and Mr. Campbell, premier of Manitoba, and certainly the premier of one of the maritime provinces—I can get his name without any difficulty—have directly asked for federal aid to education and have suggested that the matter be discussed at the dominion-provincial conference here?

Mr. Hollingworth: To me that is extremely interesting information, Mr. Speaker. I certainly know that the province of Ontario would be most reluctant to participate in any scheme whereby it would get a direct grant from the federal government for primary education.

Mr. Knowles: Tell us where you stand.

Mr. Hollingworth: I think it should be pointed out, and I know it has been pointed out in this house ad nauseam, that in the matter of municipal affairs the responsibility of the provinces is paramount. Naturally we in North York are interested in this whole problem of municipal taxation. I need only quote a few figures to show why it is a matter of such great importance in my riding. For example, the building permits in 1955 amounted to $78,504,000. Permits this year from January 1 to March 31 are up from $10,965,000 to $13,760,000. Furthermore, 3,940 houses were erected in North York in 1955 and the rate has been going up every year so that for the seventh year in a row more houses have been built in North York than have been built in any other part of Canada.

That fact, of course, points up one thing and one thing only, Mr. Speaker. If there is any municipality in this country which needs some assistance from senior governments it is the township of North York. But, as I say, it is primarily something that comes within the ambit or under the jurisdiction of the provinces concerned.

I am going to take advantage for a few minutes this afternoon of the opportunity of pointing out where I think both the federal government and the provincial governments can assist, keeping in mind all the time that it is primarily the province of Ontario to which the municipalities in Ontario should look.

The township of North York municipal council has requested me to point out in this house that they are of opinion that this grant on the 2 per cent assessment should be revised, and that the municipality should receive grants on crown lands notwithstanding the fact that they do not have crown lands comprising 2 per cent of their assessment. From the opinions I have received this restriction would seem to be anachronistic and illogical. It is a hangover from the days when the crown could do no wrong. I think it would be desirable at an early date, if possible, to have this restriction abolished.

I have only one other thing to say about the federal government in connection with municipal affairs and that is that it is the feeling of the township of North York, and I suppose that of other municipalities, that they are not consulted sufficiently in the whole area of planning. For example, when Downsview airport was extended and one of the streets was cut off, no notice was given to the township of this action until one of the councillors—actually he was the reeve at the time—tried to go along the street and was prevented from doing so by the Department of National Defence. If the federal government could consult with the municipalities in the whole general area of planning—for example, in the extensions of airports which are so important in my riding—it would certainly be desirable.

I now come to this matter of the provincial governments and municipal taxation. It is my submission that the present government in Ontario can deal with the matter in two ways. One way is to distribute some of its surplus to the municipalities in the form of grants. The second way is to revise the whole basis of municipal taxation.

I shall deal with the first matter first. As I understand it, the Ontario government last year had a surplus of $50 million. It is my further understanding that of this $50 million surplus, $30 million was put into a highway reserve fund. If those moneys had been paid to the municipalities in the form of educational grants I do not think we would hear this continued cry from Queen's Park that they are not getting enough money from the federal government.

A select committee of the Ontario legislature decided that toll roads would have to be instituted, and so on. For example, on No. 401 highway the daily increase in traffic was from 1,500 cars in 1954 to more than double that in 1955. I think this committee has finally come around to the point of view that we certainly need toll roads in Ontario. In view of the prodigious amounts of money being expended on roads throughout Ontario, it would seem to me that toll roads might be the answer. I would think that if the government of Ontario would look into the matter of toll roads and implement some legislation in that connection, then they could turn over some of these badly needed moneys to education instead of to highways. Last year the Ontario government spent more money on highways and public works than on education. It is, therefore, a moot point as to whether or not the provincial government has to increase taxes. It would seem to me that if they were to distribute moneys as they should, the people of Ontario would have education paid for by means of grants from the provincial government.

My second point, Mr. Speaker, is this. I submit that if the grants for educational purposes are not sufficiently great, then the whole basis of municipal taxation should be changed. The municipal act in Ontario was originally passed in 1837, I believe, under the Baldwin-Lafontaine administration, which of course preceded confederation. I am informed that the last revision of any importance was made in the year 1911. The municipalities in Ontario have very restricted rights of taxation. For example, they can levy a tax on realty; they can levy a poll tax and they have certain licensing powers. They have practically no other taxing powers.

Now of course, Mr. Speaker, with the tremendous growth in housing and the consequent development of schools, the realty tax payer in Ontario has been burdened tremendously. In my municipality of North York 55 per cent of the tax dollar goes to education and 45 per cent covers all the other municipal services. It would appear to me that the whole basic concept of taxation must be changed to meet the real problems that exist at this time. It would seem to me that, from the municipal point of view, taxes might well be considered on the basis of ability to pay, like the income tax. For example, consider the position of a gentleman who lives in a lavish apartment, and compare that with the position of a man raising five children. The man living in the apartment may be a millionaire but he pays only a small part of the realty tax in his rent, whereas the man who has five or six children has to pay an abnormally high tax proportionately. If it were based on ability to pay, then the whole basic concept would be changed.

Proposed Tax Relief for Municipalities

Of course, there is also another field which has not been tapped adequately I think by the province of Ontario, and that is the field of direct taxation. I believe Ontario has the constitutional right to tax directly. It could levy a sales tax or an income tax. Quebec has levied an income tax and the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia have levied sales taxes.

Mr. Blackmore: We have no sales tax.

Mr. Hollingworth: I thought you did.

Mr. Low: No, we abolished that many years ago.

Mr. Hollingworth: The province of British Columbia has a sales tax, then. In other words, other provinces have sales taxes and income taxes. I think Ontario should also explore that matter. I am not saying, Mr. Speaker, that there should not be a tax on property. I think it is fitting that the realty tax should cover such things as local improvements, sewers, roads and things like that. It seems to me that the realty taxpayer should not have to bear the disproportionately high educational costs which are facing the people of Ontario. I think we have come to the point where the Ontario government has to face up to this matter of municipal taxation. Last week I saw a headline in the Toronto evening Telegram to the effect that somebody advocated a march on Ottawa because of municipal taxation. I feel that is typical of the distorted thinking which is taking place now, and the propaganda being put out by the government of Ontario. The province of Ontario has to face up to this fact; it has to be realistic. The people of Canada, the people of Ontario, the people of North York and the other municipalities of metropolitan Toronto, should know that it is the Ontario government which has the first responsibility. It is my respectful submission that Ontario has failed, and is failing, to live up to its primary obligation to its citizens.

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): This problem which we are discussing today, Mr. Speaker, is an old one. I suppose it is true of all democratic processes that we involve ourselves in long discussion over many years before finally coming to a decision. Certainly, there has been enough discussion on this matter. There have been resolutions galore from every organization in the country, municipal and otherwise; there have been submissions made to royal commissions. I suggest that the time has come now when action should, and in fact must be taken.

The municipalities, as has been pointed out by others, and I am not going to repeat the arguments which others have advanced, have pretty well reached a dead end street in the matter of taxation and some action must be taken. That is not to say for one moment, of course, that this government has not done some things in connection with municipalities. We have had the Municipal Grants Act, to which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) paid tribute yesterday afternoon. We can appreciate everything he said in that connection. There have been, too, certain adjustments, as he pointed out, in connection with the sales tax on goods sold to municipalities. But actually, Mr. Speaker, these are only palliatives and do not deal with the situation as it confronts many municipalities today, particularly the rural ones. Although the Municipal Grants Act has helped certain municipalities, particularly those with a large concentration of government buildings, it only applies to a limited number of communities. It does not help some communities at all. In any event the increasing burden placed upon municipalities is such that even with the assistance of that act they still cannot carry on in these modern times.

The municipality is the creature of the horse and buggy age. It was evolved at the time of confederation. Under the British North America Act the provinces were given the power of direct taxation and also the power to create municipal institutions. Time has gone by and today we are long past the horse and buggy age, yet the municipality is still acting with a tax base which was envisaged in those old days. The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Hollingworth) who just preceded me spoke for his own province—far be it from me to discuss matters affecting provinces other than my own—and suggested perhaps Ontario could amend its Municipal Act so as to give the municipalities a wider basis of taxation. I presume it is possible for a province to do that but I would be rather surprised if any provincial legislature would want to impose a sales tax if that could be avoided, or would want to impose an income tax in addition to the federal income tax.

I was rather intrigued by the suggestion that a province should impose an income tax when the government of which he is a supporter has urged that there should be an avoidance of double taxation and that taxes of that nature should be imposed only by the federal government. I cannot envisage a provincial government adopting such a measure unless it were a matter of absolute desperation.

I think the amendment which we are urging here this afternoon, and which was moved yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), is a much more practical approach to the problem than any involved legislation such as that suggested by the hon. member for York Centre. As I have said, this government has stuck its finger in the dike and kept the water from running in, like the little boy in the story which we read many years ago but in that case there were no other holes appearing in the dike. But in this case the dike is being punctured on all sides and the municipalities are going to be submerged unless some action is taken. When the municipalities were created, as I said a moment ago, they were the creatures of the horse and buggy age. I think that is an apt description. What were the responsibilities envisaged for the municipalities at that time? They had to look after the little red country school house; they had to provide dirt roads for the horse and buggy, literally and physically; and they had some responsibility in so far as poor relief was concerned. Other than that there were very few responsibilities for the municipalities. Certainly the fathers of confederation thought and believed—and they were right, in view of the situation prevailing at that time—that that source of taxation would be enough to enable the municipalities to carry on. But today the situation has changed so rapidly that real estate is being burdened with a crushing load of taxation.

I noticed that yesterday afternoon the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) said that once every 20 years the farmlands in his constituency were virtually sold to the government. In other words, as I take it, the taxation over a period of 20 years would be equivalent to the value of the farm properties, and that is a terrific price to pay, Mr. Speaker. We realize that these problems are increasing from day to day. There is the problem of education, for instance, on which the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) made such an eloquent speech a while ago. We all know that, according to the bureau of statistics the school population of this country will increase 100 per cent between 1955 and 1960, thereby imposing a terrific burden on the municipalities. My own small town recently had to spend $200,000 in building additions to the schools, and we are now told that before 1960 they will have to expand those schools still further. It is true that we get some assistance from the provincial government, but primarily and fundamentally that burden is carried on the real estate property and on taxes on real estate. It is true that the municipality can impose licence fees and poll taxes, and some municipalities have imposed a sales tax. But they certainly are taxes which are difficult to administer and in many instances, certainly in a small municipality, they would not return anything like enough to solve the problems they are supposed to meet. Therefore, we bring this amendment before the house at this time because we think, as I said, the time has come when some concrete action must be taken.

In opening the debate at the beginning of this session the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 49 of Hansard:

> We did not see any need to share in the normal costs of growth of provinces and municipalities.

He was speaking for the government. The trouble, Mr. Speaker, is with the word "normal". What is normal? As I said, what was envisaged by the fathers of confederation as normal is absolutely abnormal today. The cost of streets, sidewalk maintenance, the cost of police and all these other costs which are incidental to our modern twentieth century were never foreseen at all. The government says, we did not see our way clear, or did not think that we should share in the normal costs of growth. I say when they say that they are shutting their eyes to the progress which has taken place and are refusing to face the realities of this problem.

When the Minister of Finance dealt with this matter yesterday afternoon he said, well, of course, this is a vote of confidence and I believe the government should be maintained and therefore I am going to vote against the amendment. Of course, that implied that all hon. members on the other side of the house would vote against it also. I think it is possible for the government to announce that an amendment of this kind need not be taken as a vote of confidence. They could recognize the principle of this if they believe the situation is as serious as I believe it is. I think the minister would be surprised to find how many of the members on his own side of the house also recognize the seriousness of this problem, because it is a most difficult one, and particularly, as I said, those who come from rural constituencies can appreciate it much more than others. The Minister of Finance came originally from a rural community in Ontario. Certainly he must realize the seriousness of it. As with so many other problems which are confronting the government today, the minister has pulled down the blinds, put out the cat and gone to bed to sleep on it. There are some problems he can sleep on, but this one is of such a pressing nature that I do not think he can afford to do that any longer.

I do not think I would have intervened in this debate today if it were not for the fact that it is of special interest to those of us from the maritime provinces. We have had the anomalous situation of an hon. member coming from one of the wealthiest municipalities of Canada, the hon. member for York Centre, suggesting that something should be done, followed by me, coming from one of the "have not" provinces of Canada. This amendment is of particular importance to us.

In looking over the briefs submitted by the organization of municipalities some time ago I was surprised to note that the three maritime provinces are the only provinces in Canada which are 100 per cent organized on a municipal basis. We were, of course, among the older provinces. Our municipalities were organized in some instances even before the provincial governments were organized. Take Ontario for instance. The brief says that slightly more than one-tenth of the area of Ontario is municipally organized and about one-tenth in Quebec, and so on and so forth with respect to the other provinces of the country. I am not sure of the basis on which those local governments are carried on in those areas which are not organized municipally. I presume there would be some basis of local taxation imposed, through the provincial government, by a local authority. The fact is that in every one of those other provinces the provincial government exercises direct responsibility all the way from 50 per cent to nine-tenths of the provinces. Certainly, so far as we are concerned, those other provinces are in a slightly different position from most of us in the maritimes. Every square foot or square mile of our province is organized within an existing municipal organization, and the municipal government is responsible for carrying on much of the expenditure.

The second reason, of course, is an obvious one. In the maritime provinces we have not had the tremendous influx of population and the great increase in values of real property which has taken place in some parts of Canada. I realize, of course, that an increase in population also brings an increase in expenditure. Municipalities are complaining of the great degree of prosperity with which they are confronted. Because of the increase in population they have had to provide serviced land. In a few years' time they may be over the hump, so to speak, but at the moment those municipalities have these pressing and urgent financial problems because of this prosperity. Nevertheless, when you do get a continually expanding population and a continual increase in real estate values and an influx of industry and all those other factors which have been attendant upon at least so many parts of Canada, it does, I suggest, make the problem of municipal taxation an easier one than it does in other provinces which have not had that situation prevailing, or at least have had it to a very limited degree. I am not suggesting we have not had an increase in values; I am not suggesting we have not had some increase in population, but it has not been at all in keeping with the tremendously rising scale of municipal costs and therefore our municipalities are probably in a worse position than those in other parts of Canada.

In the third place, as the municipal government is the creature of the provincial government and is a legal creation by statute, dependent upon the provincial government to a certain extent for revenues, the provincial governments in the maritime provinces, as they admit themselves in their briefs, are not in a position to make the contribution to the municipal organizations which other provinces might do.

The hon. member for York Centre said a few moments ago that Ontario, out of its surplus this year—he did not say they should have, but they could have, given $50 million to the municipalities of Ontario. Certainly, no maritime province could give $50 million or one-tenth of that or any proportion of it whatsoever. It is true that they have a small surplus, yet it is because they had to starve practically their own provincial services, and they had no money left for the assistance of the municipalities on the basis which should be recognized today. As a result, in those provinces and elsewhere too, the tax on real property is increasing and increasing. The tax on the farmer is particularly onerous. The farmer's revenue has been falling during the past several years and in many cases farm values have been falling. There are many places in my own province where if it were not for the building on the farm which constitutes the home the farm could not be given away. Farm values are down and will continue to depreciate still further before we get out of the present agricultural problem with which we are confronted, and yet it is the farmer in the rural community who is carrying the burden of increasing taxation.

In my own province we have had a new act brought into effect this year which has imposed a terrific burden of taxation for education. I am not discussing the merits of it but I do know it is causing the farmers in my constituency a terrific problem. In fact it was a shock to them when they realized the increased burden of taxation they would have to meet in order to equalize the educational system throughout the province of Nova Scotia. Of course the farmers are carrying the burden in more ways than one.

I said originally that the municipality is a creature of the horse and buggy days. What is the situation? We have young men working in the city today who are establishing their homes in the country, perhaps building or renting. They are young married couples for the most part and they have two, three or four children. Those families are living in the rural municipalities which must provide schools and other services for them, and yet the revenues derived from the new homes they build are not at all in keeping with the increased costs which are confronting scores and hundreds of municipalities alongside towns and industrial areas in various parts of this country. As I say, the burden is a heavy one on the rural municipalities.

What do you do about it? The shift in taxation has been an amazing one in the last few years. There was a time when the moneys derived from the municipalities were sufficient to look after their services. Some of these figures have already been put on the record but I would like to repeat one or two of the figures to show the situation today as compared with a few years ago.

In 1930 the municipalities collected $306 million, the provinces collected only $157 million and the federal government collected $315 million, just a little more than the figure collected by the municipalities. In 1951 the revenue of the federal government had increased to $3,791 million, the revenue of the provinces increased to $918 million and the revenue of the municipalities increased to only $636 million.

In other words, the municipal revenue over the last 20 years has doubled, the provincial revenue has increased six times and the federal revenue has increased 12 times. I suggest that a substantial part of the doubling of the municipal revenue has been at the expense of the real property owners.

An argument could be made, and has been made, concerning the centralization of taxes by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) and others and I am not debating the philosophy of that at the moment. I do say, however, that to centralize the collection through the federal treasury also envisages an increased responsibility on the federal treasury for various responsibilities of government that were formerly looked after by local taxing authorities.

I said that I thought the time had come, and I know it has come, when if this government does not make a fresh approach to this problem some other government will do so because it has gone just about as far as it can possibly go.

Proposed Tax Relief for Municipalities

Various suggestions have been made. The resolution which was moved by my leader yesterday suggested the abolition of the sales tax on all purchases by municipalities. The Minister of Finance said, "Well, that is going to involve tremendous administrative difficulties and if you repeal it for one person then you have to repeal it for another." He said it was a difficult task to accomplish. He shrugged his shoulders and regretted its difficulty and implied that it just could not be done.

I point out to the minister that by his own admission he has made alterations in that tax and the imposition of it. He told us yesterday that road machinery amounting to over $1,000 in value purchased by municipalities would not bear a sales tax. If it is possible to remove the sales tax on road machinery it is also possible to remove the sales tax on any machine which is bought by a municipal government.

The anomaly of the situation was pointed out by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) last night when he said that a municipality might buy a large number of machines under $1,000 in value and not receive the removal of the sales tax but if the unit purchase had been over $1,000 in value there would have been an absolute forgiveness of the sales tax.

Mr. Harris: There are not very many of them under $1,000 in value.

Mr. Nowlan: There would not be today with rising costs, that is true, but it is all the more reason that the municipality which is faced with expenditures should be given some assistance, and this is one field in which it could be given assistance.

The minister realizes the problem and smiles benignly at the suggestion. He says: After all, the municipality is the creature of the province. We have always recognized the fact that the crown should not tax the crown and therefore you do not tax the provincial government but it is all right to tax the municipal government. I would point out that the municipality is also a creature of the crown. Whatever the legal situation might be, I say that for all practical purposes the municipality is a creature of the provincial government. The provincial government delegates certain responsibilities to the municipality.

As far as principles of taxation are concerned I would remind the minister that several years ago—I imagine the minister was a practising barrister at that time—it was a recognized principle of taxation from the year 1867 forward that judges were sacrosanct and it was impossible to impose income tax on judges because their independence must be preserved. It was constitutionally impossible to tax judges.

Well, what happened? The government of the day rightly or wrongly, and I think rightly, decided that taxation should be imposed on the judges. It was felt that the independence and integrity of the judiciary could be maintained despite the imposition of taxation. That was a fundamental principle but it was overcome at the time. I suggest to the minister that there is no fundamental principle involved here which he cannot overcome by simply bringing in an amendment to the sales tax system during the present session, and abolishing entirely the sales tax charged on all goods sold to municipalities.

It is true that this is not going to cure the problem but at least, instead of a little boy holding a little finger in the hole in the dike, we would have a bigger boy holding a big finger in the dike and he would therefore be able to keep out a little more water.

We had an interesting situation in my own town last year. We have a post office there which was built in 1911. Two years ago the Department of Public Works decided to renovate the building and they did a remarkably good job. As a matter of fact, they did so much renovating that they spent almost $200,000 as a result of the repairs which they effected on the building. The town in which I live was able to come within the provisions of the Municipal Grants Act and we received a fairly substantial contribution from the federal treasury on that score. It would be a lot cheaper for the government if they would allow taxes to be paid on every building in a municipality rather than spending $200,000 on repairs before the town could secure any tax on it. That was the situation in our town.

There is no reason why the principle of not taxing crown property, which we recognize as a valid constitutional argument, should apply if the value of that property is less than 2 per cent of the assessment but should not apply if the valuation is less than 2 per cent.

Then there is the suggestion made in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) and also by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) yesterday in connection with education, which constitutes probably the most vital problem confronting our municipalities today. Something will have to be done about this in the near future. It is not for me this afternoon to make concrete suggestions as to how this problem should be met, but I do say that if it is not met there will be many municipalities in this country faced with bankruptcy.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

In the past we have urged that the government should assist with education, but I doubt if that will go far enough. If we are going to centralize more and more money in the federal treasury then the time is rapidly approaching when through the medium of dominion-provincial conferences with the municipalities sitting in and consulted, some mechanism should be evolved whereby more of that money shall be made available to the provinces for direct municipal purposes. I do not see any other way in which that problem can be met.

We have carried on for more than three-quarters of a century under the old constitutional tax basis, but we have outgrown that. We have reached an absolute stalemate with respect to this problem and a solution cannot be deferred any longer. I urge the government to take this matter into consideration and to see that steps are taken whereby this fundamental section of our economy, the local governments, be given the financial means to maintain a decent standard of government which they find impossible to do today.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to hear the reaction of the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Hollingworth) to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight), especially when it urges federal aid to education without interference with provincial control thereof. I am satisfied that what this means is that grants would be paid by the federal authority to the provincial governments to be used as they saw fit for educational purposes. My reaction to a question such as this is to wholeheartedly support it.

This is only one of the many factors which have been brought into this discussion from time to time which indicate the plight in which municipalities find themselves today. On examining certain resolutions moved in the past having to do with education, and amendments asking for federal assistance, my analysis of the situation is that frequently financial governments or institutions have indicated that they do not desire such assistance because they fear the motive behind the proposal on the part of any federal government to assist in a particular field of education. Possibly that is why some of the educational grants which are in existence today are not used to the optimum as we would like to see them used.

I have noticed that the field of discussion has been quite broad. Reference has been made to aid to the municipalities in connection with hospitals. That in itself is an indication of the federal government's inability to recognize that there has been a change since the time the provincial governments and the federal government reached an agreement under which the federal authority would donate $1,000 per bed toward the cost of construction of hospitals. Since that time the cost of building hospitals has increased from $5,000 to $11,000 per bed, and that in itself is indicative of the fact that the federal government in recognizing that there was such a need before is not carrying its proper proportion of responsibility at the present time.

One or two speakers have referred to civil defence, and the fact that this government has a certain responsibility in respect to assistance in the building of bridges so that the population of our cities may be evacuated. On examination I would definitely accuse this government of using the prerogative given under section 92, subsection 10, paragraph (c) of the British North America Act. The government is always ready to take advantage of that section and call certain works as being in the interests of Canada whenever it suits its convenience, but when it comes to the responsibility of financing some of these things they contend that they are not to the general advantage of Canada and therefore they should have no share in them. That in itself is indicative of the general thought in the minds of the government today. The expenditure of money is an entirely different matter and therefore the government insists that it must protect provincial rights, that it must not help them in any way because by so doing they would be invading that field. I feel as did the hon. member for Saskatoon that such assistance could be given, as it has been given in the past, without actually injuring the rights of the provinces. Certainly the amendment moved by the hon. member is quite in order and therefore I feel that we should support it.

There is one problem in my own riding which specifically illustrates how simple it is for this government to decide that it has a responsibility in some instances and not in others. I am pleased to see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in the chamber because I should like to refer specifically to the application of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. I am quite aware that this act is applicable at the present time only to the Palliser triangle, but it has been the contention of many hon. members of this house that its application should be dominion-wide. A special committee was set up to deal with this matter and it recommended that the provisions of the act be extended to all provinces. However, the Minister of Agriculture and the government decided that they would review their responsibility in respect to this particular matter and then they said that the rights of the provinces and the municipalities under the constitution must be respected.

I must say that I am rather at a loss to understand that attitude. We have had the proposal made from time to time that this is not just a provincial responsibility, and it is recognized as such in certain sections of the country. It is contended that the provisions of the act should be applicable to all Canada, but the government still insists upon keeping its application local.

By way of an example I have here a brief submitted by the Surrey diking district, Colebrook diking district and Mud bay diking district to the Minister of Agriculture and setting out a problem which exists in that region. Many years ago these people diked the river to the extent of their financial capabilities to rectify that particular condition. However, the population on the upper reaches has grown and the slopes have been denuded of trees and today it is found that the facilities which were built some years ago are not adequate. They made representations to the provincial government which in turn made representations to the federal government asking that the engineers and officers operating under P.F.R.A. examine into and report upon what works are necessary in order to make this district safe. These people realize that in a period of ten years they are going to be in exactly the same position as they were in 30 years ago. However, the easy way out is to say, as the Minister of Agriculture wrote to the secretary of the Surrey diking district, that this is completely under the jurisdiction of the provincial and municipal governments and the diking authorities.

This suggestion of passing the buck, but not the one that the farmers want or the people need, is not the proper way to carry on business. We feel that it is wrong for our governments to continue telling each other, "This is your responsibility. If you check that in the British North America Act, you will find your responsibility is there."

My observations in this house up to this time and the conclusions I have drawn from them would indicate that it is the responsibility of the governments to get together to establish once and for all where their responsibilities begin and where they end and where they must co-operate to the greatest extent in order to give the people of this country the answer to the problem that they have the right to expect. It is completely wrong for us to have to read articles in our press to the effect that the farmers blame the higher-ups, while actually the people that are to blame are the government of this country or the provincial government as the case may be. Or we ourselves, because we are not ready to face the task of establishing whose right it is and whose it is not. If it is the responsibility of the federal authorities to help municipalities and to help districts within this country as such, such as in the Palliser area, that same responsibility is with us today in so far as the rest of Canada is concerned.

The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. McLeod), some time ago, called for a national farm rehabilitation act instead of a Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. I would strongly urge this government to go into the need for an extension of that particular act.

We get all kinds of criticisms from the Liberals about what our government is doing or is pretending to do, that is, the government in British Columbia. I must say it is mostly criticism that they try to heap on it, but that government is trying to be realistic in this particular matter. They have a diking problem before them, and so they make representations, as we would naturally expect them to do, to this government. When they find it is denied them, they realize that in a period of ten years something very drastic is going to happen in that area. The fact is it will all be a lake unless something is done very soon. The responsibility rests with the province, they are told, and they have to try to find means of rectifying it. Then, when they do it, they are accused of playing politics. That has not happened in just one instance. It happens in the case of the building of bridges. Just the other day we were discussing in this house the building of bridges. We tried to find exactly what responsibility the federal government has in the building of bridges. It was quite impossible to find out exactly where this responsibility ends and where it begins in the building of bridges. I tried to ascertain from the Minister of Public Works when it was federal responsibility to do certain rock work in the Canoe pass. There again I found it was quite impossible to discover that, because certain degree of navigation entered into the question. Even though it was a navigable stream, even though these things are true, we run again into the same question of responsibility. It becomes too convenient too often to pass along the responsibility to the federal government to the provincial governments and to the municipalities themselves.

The hon. member for York Centre, in speaking, suggested that we had not exploited every means of taxation in certain provinces today, and he pointed with some glee to the fact that the province of British Columbia had a five per cent sales tax. Certainly it has a five per cent sales tax, but it has to have that because there is no means whereby it can get the wherewithal in order to operate its government as efficiently as we expect it to, and to carry on without that at the present time. Undoubtedly it will dispose of it within a very few years, but the fact nevertheless remains that we have to recognize a specific factor here. As the hon. member for York Centre suggests, certain provinces have not dipped deep enough into the bottom of the tax barrel as yet, and so we should force them to do that so that they become practically bankrupt.

The Minister of Finance himself, discussing this particular question, in reply to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low), with regard to municipalities that might have been refused moneys by banks, had this to say, as recorded on page 3403 of Hansard. He was referring to the two federal-provincial conferences:

> On both occasions when the provincial premiers were here last year and once again when they were here this year this question arose. On each occasion I told them that if they had any instances of municipal corporations not being able to borrow money for needed municipal purposes, I should be glad to investigate the reference they would make. To this date I have not been given the name of a single municipality in this country that has not been able to borrow money for its purposes. It may well be that there are some municipalities which are obliged to pay more interest than they think they should pay on money borrowed for local improvements.

I should say that the latter part of that statement is possibly the understatement of the year for the Minister of Finance to make. Certainly every municipality feels it is being charged too high a rate of interest, for obvious reasons, because we have instituted a Bank of Canada which through discount gives to the other banks money at a charge of three per cent. This money is made available to them; why not make it available at the same rate to the provincial governments, keep it out of the hands of the banks and let it work its way back into their hands, and make them quadruple it or issue 12 times or 15 times the amount of currency they would ordinarily distribute? The suggestion that the provincial government should be given the right to get this money for municipal purposes and pass it on to the municipalities, is, I think, quite sound. There would be no more currency in the country than there would be ordinarily except that, instead of the banks being used for that purpose, the municipal government would have the money at a nominal rate.

Certain provincial governments recognize their responsibilities with respect to the municipalities. I am satisfied with what the hon. member for Peace River, my leader, had to say in respect to what they were doing in his province. I am just as satisfied that the province of British Columbia is also doing something to help its particular municipalities. Before I deal specifically with that, however, I think that we should recognize certain fundamental facts in respect to the increase of expenditure by federal, municipal and provincial governments. I find on examining the statistics that in 1945 the federal government's expenditure was some $4,527 million. In 1955 the expenditure was $4,773 million. That represents an increase of approximately 5·5 per cent in expenditures in that 10-year period. In 1945 the provincial government expended $384 million but that figure showed a tremendous increase to $1,505 million in 1955. In other words, the provinces increased their expenditures by 292 per cent while at the same time the federal government increased its only by 5·5 per cent. The municipalities increased their expenditures from $334 million in 1945 to $1,293 million in 1955. That represents an increase of 276 per cent in the expenditures made by municipalities in the 10-year period from 1945 to 1955. That is a tremendous increase. According to my computation, if the municipalities of this country could get money for 1 per cent less than the rate they are paying today, they would save $12,930,000; on 2 per cent the saving would amount to well over $25 million. If instead of paying, let us say, 5 per cent, they could borrow money for 3 per cent, we could save the municipalities some $25 million a year in this country.

Yesterday, in reply to some of the questions asked, I believe the minister stated that the sum total of the savings proposed by the amendment of the Conservatives would amount to something like $25 million. Later he was corrected and someone suggested $40 million. If the municipalities could have their interest rate cut by a matter of 3 per cent,—if the average rate is 6 per cent; I do not believe it is that high, but if it were 6 per cent and it were reduced to 3 per cent—they could save that $40 million by utilizing the Bank of Canada to make funds available to the provincial governments and then passing them on to the municipalities. It would be a guaranteed loan by the provincial governments themselves. The minister would still be privileged to collect his taxes on these other two items, although I would personally favour the Conservative amendment that the sales tax and the excise tax be eliminated, for that in itself would amount to only some $40 million or so.

In my discussion I said that the province of British Columbia recognized the need for cheaper money for its municipalities and so had gone out of its way to guarantee school district debentures. In the budget speech for 1956 of the Premier of British Columbia, who was at the same time the acting minister of finance, I find the following at page 11:

> School Districts Debentures
> On May 6, 1955, $7,500,000 of 3¼ per cent debentures—maturing annually over a period of 20 years—were sold to a syndicate headed by A. E. Ames and Co. Limited (syndicate managers) who submitted the highest bid of $100·277 for each $100 representing a cost to the seller of 3·215 per cent.

Possibly this would have been the answer as to provinces helping municipalities out in respect of costs of education, namely that they should guarantee the loans of municipalities. But I find that later in that same year the province again tried to interest financiers in taking bonds for the same purpose and guaranteed by the provincial government but they could not find any takers at that rate of interest. Therefore the government did what I think every self-respecting government should do. It used the pension funds that had accumulated and invested those savings in the purchase of bonds at that rate of interest. That action in itself helped to a marked degree the school districts in that area. That is to say, a provision was made whereby these school districts could borrow the money and make certain savings. Later in the same budget address, at pages 22 and 23, I find certain other recognition that the provincial government had given in respect of municipal grants. They were proposing to increase the rate of payment—and these proposals are now instituted—on a per capita basis to cities and towns and various municipal areas as follows:

> . . . from $14 to $16 per capita to a municipality with a population up to and including 3,500 persons > from $9 to $12 per capita for the number of persons in excess of 3,500 up to 8,000 inclusive
> from $5 to $8 per capita for the number of persons in excess of 8,000 but not in excess of 50,000
> from $4.25 to $6.50 per capita for the number of persons in excess of 50,000

That automatically meant a large increase of some $5 million to the municipalities over and above what they had in the previous years. Comparing that with the year 1943-44, this is what we find from the figures at page 23 of this report. In 1943-44 the actual figure of the amount expended was $3,526,000. In 1956-57 it is estimated that the government will be giving to the municipalities $43,829,000. That is $40 million more than they received just 10 years ago or thereabouts.

bility to the municipalities. But in many instances because of the present tax agreement and for other reasons—such as the fact that during the war years all the services that the government and the municipalities had to maintain had fallen off badly and that they are being built up today—the fact that the federal government does not seem to want to recognize its responsibility makes it most difficult for some of these municipalities to continue operating. The provincial government in British Columbia, through the premier, just the other day recognized that further assistance was required. Hon. members might recall that many of the speeches in the housing debate had to do with aged citizens in these communities and those on a low income requiring help. On April 24 of 1956—that is this year—a proposal was made by the premier of that province whereby the provincial government plans to pay a municipal tax on the first $1,000 or $2,000 assessment of residential property for every home owner in British Columbia. That proposal in itself will certainly lighten the load of the owner of a small property. If it amounts to $1,000 a home—that is, if the assessment is $1,000—it will automatically mean that a city such as Vancouver will receive a net return of some $3,200,000 in lieu of tax collections that they would have been forced to make themselves. I think that every government in this country, be it federal, provincial or municipal, must recognize the need and must recognize what its responsibility is. Then, it should do something about it.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the Conservative amendment with respect to financial assistance to municipalities is a step in the right direction but it does not go nearly far enough. The hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) has taken one particular phase and accentuated it. I would agree with him that it is an important one, and I would go along with him. I would suggest, too, that the Bank of Canada be used to make funds available to the provinces at its discount rate, on the understanding those funds must be passed on to the municipalities. I did not deal with this specifically, but I would take issue with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) with respect to the fact that the purpose of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act was to create employment. I just cannot understand any government suggesting that the purpose of an act is to give people work. My land, I cannot think of anything in the world more horrible than to say we are going to pass an act to make it possible to give work in any municipal district. The purpose of this particular act should have been rather to create public works, to build the things the people in the area require. This reminds me of the thirties when the late prime minister, Mr. Bennett, suggested we should build a trans-Canada highway and give people a wheelbarrow and a teaspoon or something like that to keep them working. In my opinion the objective is wrong. The objective should be to build works by using the machinery that is available for that purpose.

Then, I would propose in all seriousness that a common-sense body of civic minded men and women study the whole field of municipal, provincial and federal responsibility in respect to the division of the taxation fields as they apply in Canada today.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): This amendment, Mr. Speaker, both before and after the subamendment, calls attention to one of the most important and best recognized problems in the field of government financing today, namely the mounting financial problem of Canadian municipalities. It condemns the government for its failure to do any of the several things which are open to the government, and within its competence, to assist the municipalities. Two particular measures are mentioned in the amendment. The first one is to exempt municipalities and school boards from the payment of excise taxes and the 10 per cent sales tax. This aspect has been discussed sufficiently. The government recognized its duty in that respect as recently as the last session, and went a little farther towards doing complete justice to the municipalities with respect to this item.

In his remarks yesterday the minister sought to differentiate between the position of the municipality and that of the province by saying that in one case the crown was carrying on the government and in the other case it was not. He endeavoured, I think, to hide behind that legal fiction or technical objection in his approach to the relief of municipalities from sales tax. It is well known that under the federal system we have two major ranks of government. It is true that in this sphere government is carried on in the name of the crown, and in the provincial sphere as well. However, we have a third rank of government, which is the municipal range, and as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), their responsibility emanates from the provincial government. The municipalities are sovereign in some respects, although their powers can be withdrawn. They have the right to tax, and the responsibility to tax, in exactly the same way as the other two ranks of government have. It seems to me that any effort to dodge this issue by such a fiction, that is that we have only two ranks of government under the federal system, is not very realistic or very worthy of the minister.

Now, the other suggestion which has been discussed also to some extent in the course of this debate is that a payment equivalent to full taxes on crown property should be made to the municipalities. In Toronto, and hon. members will understand I am speaking of the municipality in which my riding lies as I am sure we all relate this matter to our own localities, there are some 25 departments of government represented by offices and buildings of greater or less extent. If one looks at the Toronto telephone directory under the government of Canada, one will find that, beginning with agriculture, which has several offices, there is the board of transport commissioners; civil service commission; customs and excise as well as income tax division; defence production; finance department; labour department and so on down to veterans affairs. All of the major departments of this government are represented and necessarily have their local offices.

It is with respect to these properties of the federal government in the cities and municipalities that these grants equivalent to proper taxes should be made. As has been very clearly demonstrated in the course of this debate, the government has recognized this responsibility with some timidity and, as one hon. member properly expressed it, in a nibbling way. I have no doubt that in due course the government will go the full way. In fact, supporters of the government today have been advocating that the government recognize this problem. I hope that when the time comes for a vote the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Hollingworth) will cast his vote in accordance with the sentiments which he expressed because he clearly admitted that the government did have a responsibility to compensate the municipalities for services received in common with other taxpayers.

Those two are not the only measures which could be taken. This amendment is in general terms, with two particular measures specified, but there are many other measures I am sure which hon. members will be able to specify. They will be able to enumerate ways in which the federal government, within its competence and jurisdiction, could properly help the municipalities with their very serious and mounting financial responsibilities.

One that I call to the minister's attention as a possibility deserving very serious attention is that of exempting the residents of municipalities from payment of income tax on the money which they pay in the form of taxes to their own municipalities. The property owner and the tenant have to pay taxes to the municipality, and that tax which is a tax, as I say, to a government with jurisdiction in its own field, is not allowed as a deduction when that same person computes his taxable income, and the effect is that he pays income tax on the money which he has earned with which to pay his property tax so that he pays a tax on a tax. That seems to me to be a very inequitable principle of public finance wherever it occurs.

We have good precedents in other jurisdictions for the allowance of exemption from taxable income of all taxes paid to other governments in the United States, and I should like to refer briefly to their method of dealing with this situation. The taxes paid to state and local governments are generally allowed as deductions from income which is taxed by the federal government. I quote briefly from the Canadian tax foundation tax memo of March of this year. While I am using their material I should like to commend this tax foundation, which is entirely non-partisan in its operation, which studies tax laws and their effect on a community from a scientific point of view with the idea that they shall be just and equitable and bear as lightly as possible. They say with respect to these taxes which are exempt:

> This by Canadian standards is perhaps the most unusual of the deductions available to individual taxpayers in the United States.
> Approximately two-thirds of the states as well as a number of major cities levy personal income taxes and the taxpayer is entitled to deduct these taxes in calculating net income.
> Other taxes levied by state and local governments are generally deductible only by the person upon whom they are imposed by the taxing statute but where such taxes are passed on to the consumer, the latter is usually permitted to deduct the tax. As a result state and local gasoline taxes, sales taxes, user taxes, property taxes—

And that is what I am speaking about.

> —property taxes whether levied by a state or by a local government, are regarded as deductible.

It is true that would cost the federal treasury some money. Earlier in this session I endeavoured to get an estimate from the minister as to the amount which would be lost by the federal treasury if real property taxes were allowed as a deduction from taxable income. As I recall it, I also tried to get an estimate of the amount which would be lost if school taxes only were allowed as a deduction from taxable income; but the minister did not see fit to estimate or to hazard a guess. Perhaps it is just as well, because, as I read the debate of last night, at one stage the minister was attempting to minimize the increase in the last 10 years of the federal government's take from the people of Canada in the form of taxes, and he allowed himself a margin of from 10 per cent to 25 per cent, and later had to admit that he was $300 million on the short side. In any event, all of this money which is taken from the municipal taxpayer and which is taxable in the hands of the municipal taxpayer has been paid by him to the municipal government by way of property taxes and then he has to find additional money to pay the tax on that tax. The effect is that since most city and municipal taxpayers are also income taxpayers, from 16 per cent to the upper bracket of our income taxation, which is between 80 per cent and 95 per cent—I am not just sure where it stands now because it is not a consideration for most of us—is paid twice to different governments, and yet it is not earned twice. If that is too costly a deduction, it seems to me that, in line with what has been said here about education today, the federal government might very properly consider allowing the school tax at least as a deduction from taxable income in the federal income tax field. That undoubtedly would cost some money. It would have the effect of leaving in the hands of the city taxpayers money which they do not retain now, and it would make it much easier for them to bear the burden of mounting city taxes, and there is no question that city taxes and municipal taxes generally are mounting.

This problem is one part of a broader problem which I do not propose to discuss at this time, namely, the fiscal relationships between the federal government and the provinces and, through the provinces, of course, the municipalities are affected. However, to keep the matter in perspective, I would like to state the problem as I see it; it is very neatly stated in a recent publication of the Canadian tax foundation in better words than I can pick at random. Therefore, I take the opportunity of quoting from the federal-provincial tax negotiations, an interim report, published by the Canadian Tax Foundation.

> In the background are the inequalities of government financial resources which reflect the imbalances of the Canadian economy and terrain.

After dealing with these inequalities these words are said about this particular problem:

> Important as are these regional disabilities a far more universal problem arises from the seam-stretching strains on all provincial and municipal governments caused by a snowballing population and a booming economy. Provincial and municipal politicians, trapped between mounting requirements for essential facilities and services on one side and the impenetrable wall of federal taxation on the other,—

And I think these words are particularly apt.

> —have been howling in frustrated wrath. And well they might, too, for theirs is a serious predicament. It is amply evident even to the casual observer that the stagnation of the depression and the immobility of the war period left the junior governments in poor shape to cope with the volcanic eruption of the postwar years. A decade of striving since 1945 seems only to have revealed the magnitude of the job yet to be done. Given peace and prosperity the provinces and municipalities will henceforth bear the brunt of the cost of providing expanded government services and facilities for a rapidly growing country, whereas their revenue sources, being less elastic, will rise more slowly than those of the federal government.

That is the problem which is the subject of negotiations not yet terminated, negotiations which have been renewed every five years since the war and are a perennial problem of our federal system. This resolution suggests there is something the government can and probably should do until an interim solution to that problem is reached.

I want to add a few figures to those which have been given here. Several sets of figures have been given to show how the taxation of the federal government has risen during the past 15 or 20 years in comparison with expenditures of provincial and municipal governments. I should like to relate the tax receipts of these governments to the gross national product because, after all, that is the important thing. How much of the gross national product, the sum total of goods and services available in the country, is being taken by the respective governments? I will give figures for two periods, 1929 and 1954.

In 1929 the government of Canada took 6·4 per cent of the gross national product and the provincial and municipal governments together took 8·7 per cent, slightly more than what was taken by the government of Canada. Now, the figures for 1954 are quite different. In 1954 the government of Canada took 19 per cent of the gross national product and the municipal and provincial governments jointly took 8·5 per cent, less than half as much as was taken by the federal government.

It is true that these figures do not take into account federal transfers and the minister can properly correct them to the extent of the transfer payments which are made under our present system. The figures do illustrate very graphically and emphatically, I think, the change which the years have brought.

It has been suggested that the responsibility and need is swinging the other way apart from depression or war and perhaps the governments concerned will find a means of revising our fiscal arrangements to give effect to that when these negotiations are concluded; but in the meantime the problem remains and it is an immediate and pressing problem, one which this resolution suggests should be given attention today and not when the fiscal relations between the governments have been settled.

If any emphasis were needed to bring this matter home it is to be found in a good many places. The Ontario government a few weeks ago in its submission to the royal commission investigating the economic future of Canada has two very emphatic paragraphs which relate the concentration of industry and population in the province to the costs of the province in carrying out its operations. The first paragraph reads as follows:

> Because of the concentration of our industry and population, it costs us as a province a great deal of money to operate. There are times, with the present distribution of tax revenues, when the province is obliged to make a substantial outlay for services which earn a large federal revenue but yield a very small return to the province. Often we are faced with deciding on an expenditure to stimulate expansion and development, when in fact it does not pay us as a province to spend the money, owing to our small return from corporation and personal income taxes.
> This is not a satisfactory situation. It is one of the anomalies of our tax system that the federal government derives by far the larger proportion of tax revenue from our natural resource industries though these resources are vested in the province, which is committed to very large expenditures for their conservation and development.

The premier of Ontario in the legislature on March 12, 1956, expressed the same idea a little more emphatically in these words:

> I tell this house today that the federal government has deplorably failed to assess the needs of the provinces and their municipalities which are the right arm of peacetime development and expansion. They are as wrong in this as they were in the attitude of 1945 and 1950. The unfortunate part is that this matter is urgent, that our taxpayers are being overwhelmed because they are being deprived of their fair share of the revenues which come from the very production which causes our problems. That the federal government will be proved wrong again I have no doubt, but it is my hope that it will not be too late, before they find they are wrong, unfair and unjust to the provinces.

Now, making due allowances, that is a very clear and emphatic statement from the provincial point of view.

The solution of this particular problem is a pressing responsibility. Perhaps the problem of the provinces may be left to another time but I submit that this house is not justified in any such complacency.

The scale of assistance which is given by Ontario to its municipalities, for example, is perhaps worth noting. Again I say that I use my own province and city to illustrate these points and I am sure hon. members will have equally useful examples in their own experience and from their own localities.

The assistance to municipalities, school boards and other local agencies will be $185 million, which is $21·5 million or 13 per cent more than in 1955-56. This is from the budget recently presented in the Ontario legislature which calls for an expenditure of $420 million. Of that amount $185 million is to be paid to municipalities, school boards and other local agencies. This gives point to the adjective "mounting" financial problems which appears in the resolution.

The hon. member for York Centre criticized the provincial government in its dealing with the problem of municipalities. He does not suggest any means by which it can do better than that amount. He criticizes the division of the provincial grants as between roads and education but it is apparent that the limits of taxation of the province are very nearly reached if duplication is not to occur.

I have just one other illustration of this problem. My illustration is drawn from the metropolitan budget for this year. It requires a levy of $44 million on taxpayers of which almost 68 per cent will be devoted to education and social services. In addition there are other sources of revenue amounting to approximately $30 million making up the total of metropolitan Toronto's expenditures. I shall now read an extract from an article which appeared in the press recently:

> Finance commissioner G. Arthur Lascelles described the amounts for education and social services as inequitable and burdensome. The need for increased provincial financial aid in these fields is apparent, he contended.

That is the situation confronting the metropolitan council in Toronto. We have a fourth range of government, the city of Toronto council, and their problem is very similar. In their budget this year they are faced with the necessity of increasing taxes and it is due to what has been so well described here as the insufficiency of their tax resources as compared to their mounting responsibilities.

The inaction of the government in the face of these facts is the subject of this resolution. For some years the government has been developing a centralism—or an "ego-centralism" if I may coin a word—in its general approach to the local governments, and that attitude is a sufficient basis for this motion of criticism and censure. It is only one of many bases which make us question and which destroy our confidence in the government's efforts to solve the problem.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, a good deal has been said on this motion and I am going to be quite brief in my remarks in support of the amendment and the subamendment. We in this group intend to support the amendment as indicating interest and concern over this pressing problem, but in our opinion its proposals are not definitive enough. That is one reason why the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) moved a subamendment, to at least pinpoint one of the major issues surrounding this problem. In other words, we support the spirit and purpose of the amendment and welcome the opportunity to discuss this problem which is of such growing importance to municipalities across this country.

Before going on with my few brief remarks may I say that I enjoyed the speech of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis). I think he made a solid contribution to the debate. He did particularly well in focussing attention on the hard core of this question, which in the opinion of this group is the increasing cost of education, of maintaining the unemployed employables and of health and welfare services.

I think all of us in this group agree with him when he says that it is a thoroughly unsound principle for governments to be taxing one another. In our opinion the elimination of the excise and sales taxes would not provide any substantial or worth-while relief to municipalities, nor would the payment by the federal government of full municipal taxes on federal properties be much of a contribution to the exchequers of the municipalities. It must be remembered that a great majority of the municipalities in this dominion would not receive any extra assistance in that way. While we support the proposals as offering some minor relief to the municipalities, we in this group think they are totally inadequate in providing a solution to the problem.

We support the representations made by hon. members in support of reviving the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act. I cannot understand why the government does not revive this legislation which would permit municipalities to borrow at low interest the money necessary to undertake self-liquidating projects.

I know in some of the municipalities in the constituency which I have the honour to represent there are a number of projects which could be undertaken if money could be borrowed under the terms of that legislation. In Trail there is a necessity for the lengthening and extension of the river wall for protection against floods. An undertaking of that sort would be most expensive and could be financed by the city only under such arrangement as this act. Then there are necessary improvements to streets and the provision of required drainage in the main part of the city. I know the city of Nelson has certain public works and improvements in the form of roads and things of that sort under consideration which could be undertaken if this act were re-introduced.

My ebullient and effervescent and effusive friend—I think I am safe in terming him that—the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) suggested that our constitution and our present financial arrangements were brought about in the horse and buggy days. I think it is the extension of communications, particularly the automobile, which has created many new problems for our municipalities. As the hon. member mentioned, there are many people living in one municipality but who are creating costs in another municipality because of the attendance of their children in school there.

I might say that I have always had a lot of trouble with my false teeth since I left the Liberal party. They seem as if they always want to fall out when I get on certain subjects. I am having difficulty just now and I apologize for the trouble I am having in speaking.

Other costs borne by the municipality have increased substantially because the increase in educational standards, health and welfare standards and the wider acceptance of social responsibility for the maintenance of the unemployed. But the main problem of the municipality, as stated by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, is that created by educational costs, increased health and welfare costs and the increased cost of maintaining the unemployed employables. We believe that that is the core of the situation. Those are important services which must be maintained but which cannot be maintained on an adequate basis by the municipalities if they do not receive some additional assistance from the federal and provincial governments.

I believe in orderly democratic procedure. We hear some hon. members speaking as though this government should make direct grants to the municipalities. I do not believe in that sort of thing. I believe in the continued acceptance of the established chain of responsibility from the federal government to the provincial government and from the provincial government to the municipality. In my opinion if the federal government started to tinker around with plans which meant dealing directly with the municipalities without the co-operation of the provincial governments or through the provincial governments the whole financial situation could become chaotic. I believe further in the administration of government at the lowest level of government capable of undertaking the task. I think that is how a sound democracy is maintained.

If we believe in these principles, and knowing what the problem is today, I think we will realize that it is only a financial problem. I do not mean that it is a problem which is going to be solved by crackpots or jackpots; it will have to be solved as the result of sound procedures on the part of the governments concerned. I think the members of all governments, whether federal or provincial, should continually bring to the attention of the public the fact that no government gives anyone anything without first taking it away from the people.

It is simply a question of the scientific redistribution of the taxes collected from the people as a whole. In my opinion grants that are earmarked for educational purposes, health and welfare purposes and the maintenance of unemployed employables should be made to the municipalities through the provincial governments. To me it is simply a question of federal-provincial-municipal co-operation and agreement in the allocating of financial responsibility for the various services performed by the several levels of government.

I want to make this point because I believe that success in solving the problems of the municipalities depends upon the honesty of approach by all the governments concerned. It should be a strictly non-partisan approach. If the problem is not faced in that way by the provincial and federal governments then the municipalities are not going to be rescued from their present financial difficulties for a long time to come. I strongly urge all governments associated in dealing with this problem to face it on a strictly non-partisan basis in the interests of the people we are all trying to serve.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member for Kootenay West would forgive me for making a personal remark about himself, since he did so. He spoke of the difficulty that he has when he comes to speak about the Liberal party, in that his false teeth tend to fall out at that particular moment. It may well be that the false teeth are pure gold and know what they are doing and that they object to my hon. friend speaking against the Liberal party.

There seems to be a misapprehension as to the real purpose of the amendment and the subamendment. I take it that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), in his speech yesterday, tried to bring the discussion back whence it had gone, even in my speech, pointing out that the real kernel of the resolution is in the opening words rather than the final words, and that this is a request that we should do something to assist the municipalities of Canada to meet the mounting financial problems. That is a generalization, and the point was made that this is a much broader problem than merely a question of whether the government should pay taxes on property held in municipalities or whether we should tax them for sales tax on their purchases and so on.

Yet the final speaker, the hon. member for Kootenay West, said he believed in the chain of command, that he did not believe in the federal government intervening with the municipalities except through the provinces. Under those conditions he would probably agree that he should not support this motion, because it does request this government to do something other than what is being done at the present time in the chain of command.

Mr. Nowlan: Could that not be done through the chain of command in the provinces?

Mr. Harris: As I had occasion in my budget speech to say, more conferences with the provinces were held in the past 12 months than in almost as many years before that.

Mr. Pallett: At whose instance?

Mr. Harris: At the instance of this government, because we knew that we had to hold these conferences in order to make suitable financial arrangements for the coming period of five years. During that time it had not occurred to us that we ought to ask the provinces to rearrange their financial arrangements with the municipalities. After all, the chain of command does not work, if I might use the words of my hon. friend. I repeat what I said yesterday. While it is true that the provincial governments brought with them during these last two conferences representatives of the mayors and reeves of the various municipalities, it was for the purpose of observing the proceedings and learning from the proceedings the financial arrangements that are now being made between the federal government and the provinces. It was not for the purpose of joining into the conference to participate in it and to advance their particular point of view.

In those conferences, it should not be forgotten, we ultimately offered to the provinces terms which, with a certain amount of uncertainty, in our estimate will yield them over $100 million to $130 million more next year than they would have received without that offer. It seems to me that this opens up quite a field of assistance to the municipalities, should the provinces desire to use the money in that way.

I recognize the point made by my hon. friend from St. Paul's (Mr. Michener) that the revenues of provincial governments, while mounting, may not be mounting any faster than their expenditures, but let me point out that the growth of population, which has the effect on municipal corporations of requiring them to borrow money in order to build schools and to extend public services, nevertheless has a direct result on this government as well. Our costs go up with every baby born in this country and our costs continue to go up because of the lengthening age, fortunately, of our people. This government has assumed responsibilities which are commensurate with and are the direct result of the growth of population, and we need money for that purpose too.

The point has been made this afternoon, about the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, that this should not be allowed to lapse. I thought I had given some reasons yesterday for its existence in 1938, and I am sure that, if the purposes of that occasion were correctly stated, we do not need it at the present time. On the other hand, it has been argued that this government ought to provide, in any event, a subsidy on municipal financing; in other words, that some municipalities who are in a position to borrow money on our guarantee along with the province should be subsidized by someone, presumably the federal treasury, for whatever rate of interest the money would cost over and above the two per cent.

I am not proposing to draw a comparison between the interest rate of 1938 and the present rate but I do suppose that, if I did, the two per cent would be somewhat unrealistic. It would, at any rate, mean that, if we brought this act into being and if the act cost us money, again we would be providing the municipal corporations with money at two per cent which now would cost them otherwise probably 3⅜ per cent to 4½ per cent, perhaps even higher than that, and that we would be expected to pay the difference. Under these circumstances would it not appear that we would be subsidizing only those municipalities which could conform to the purposes of the statute, namely, to provide certain self-liquidating projects for the purposes of employment, whereas perhaps hundreds, if not a great many of the 4,000 municipalities in Canada, would not be able to participate and we would be in the position of granting, as I said, a subsidy to particular municipalities? I think that would be unsound.

It should not be forgotten either that there is a certain lack of logic in the argument that we should pay full taxes on municipal corporations and yet we should exempt them from taxation. If I merely stated it in that manner, it might indicate that I ought to make a choice of one or the other, but the purpose of the—

Mr. Knowles: Is it not possible to do both?

Mr. Harris: The purpose of the Municipal Grants Act surely has been gone into at sufficient length to indicate that the intention was to share the burden in those municipalities where there was a great concentration of federal properties, so much so that it would be unfair in those municipalities to have the local taxpayer pay the full cost of federal services.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I have the great pleasure of addressing two of the hon. members in the opposition at least and you as well. At six o'clock I was referring briefly to the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act. I want to make only one more reference to it. In the cost of all projects, whether they be part of a municipal, provincial or federal spending, there should be an item of relative need having regard to other items before the taxing bodies. Municipal corporations, if subsidized in this manner, would perhaps engage in activities which they would feel they ought in fact to carry out at that time rather than later, to make sure that the subsidy limit was available. Indeed, some of our provincial premiers—and I think what they have said has been repeated in the house by opposition members—have complained of features of our offers to the provincial government as being conditional and that these imposed upon them the choice of rejecting much-desired projects or of accepting them at a time when they really otherwise would not carry them out because of their financial position. For these reasons, and bearing in mind the fact that if one subsidizes a municipality I presume one should subsidize a provincial government,—at any rate, there is no logic in doing the one and not the other—I think we ought to go back to the first principle of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act which was to stimulate employment at a time when public works was the recognized method of doing that. That was the reason at that time and it would still be the reason for the use of this particular statute.

The hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Michener), as I recall it—although I was not able to listen too directly to what he said—made some passing reference to the possibility of deduction of municipal taxes from federal taxes. This, I take it, was an argument that property taxes ought to be a credit on federal income tax or something of that kind. This proposal has not been brought forward in this session previously, as I recall it, although we have had it at other sessions. I have often wondered why it has been recommended because obviously it must be to the great advantage of those of our citizens who have substantial incomes. Surely the tax deduction for income tax purposes of a person whose municipal taxes would run to $1,000 because he lived in an expensive home is of greater advantage as compared to the deduction which would be available to the modest householder whose tax would be $100, $200 or perhaps $300.

I think the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) probably made the speech that I might have made, although he came to a different conclusion than I would have come to. His criticism of the main amendment was that the real advantage to the municipal corporations is not by reason of tax exemption with regard to sales tax nor by reason of this government paying full taxes on its property but rather because of the relative advantage to be gained by municipal corporations by welfare services which are being provided by this government. If one thinks of the period we are talking about and the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938, and recalls that the amount paid by the federal government at that time to a municipal corporation was I think $20 for old age pensions and that today it is $40;—

Mr. Macdonnell: Its income was then one-tenth as much as it is today.

Mr. Harris: —and if you recall as well that we now pay family allowances; and if you recall as well that we offer—and the provincial governments accept—certain grants to hospitals and the like which are a great aid to municipal corporations; and if you recall as well that on the order paper, in the name of my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) there is a motion which would provide for even greater assistance to the provinces in certain needy cases which would undoubtedly remove some of the cost of providing these services which is borne by the municipal corporation, it must be evident that this government is doing a great deal to aid municipalities.

There is little that I can add, Mr. Speaker, except to say that the question of sales tax is always being considered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) in order to see that, first, the tax is properly based; and second, that if there are exemptions, those exemptions extend within the proper area. We shall continue to consider the sales tax from time to time.

I should also say what I said last year with respect to the Municipal Grants Act. The experience we gained as the result of paying in to these municipal corporations where the assessment was over 4 per cent of the total, was useful in deciding that we could reduce that percentage to 2 per cent. At the time I said that I should like to have experience at the 2 per cent level before deciding what other step might be taken. Since I cannot go any further than that, I shall content myself by saying that it seems to me that the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) and I might have been a little bit unfortunate in our use of the phrase "chain of command". There is no chain of command from Ottawa through the provincial governments down to the municipal corporations. On the contrary, I rejected the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) that there ought to be direction from this house to the municipal corporations. What we have in Canada, Mr. Speaker, is a constitution which wisely divides the taxing powers between the federal government and the provincial government. I think we would all get along a good deal better if we did our utmost to observe those rules as best we possibly can.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Before his time runs out will the minister tell us where the government stands on the subamendment having to do with federal aid to education?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, the question of federal aid to education has been discussed in the house almost every session since the war. I think we have made it clear that we make substantial contributions in the direct field of Indian education as we are obliged to do. In that connection I may say that my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) is making great strides in making arrangements with provincial governments for the teaching of Indian children in the provincial schools of the provinces. I think we ought to encourage that procedure. The hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) raised the subject. I point out that we make grants to vocational training. We make grants of scholarships, bursaries and the like. We vote some $7 million to higher education. Those are all grants which I think the house has supported; indeed I think it has perhaps criticized them for their not being sufficient.

Mr. Speaker: Order. As it is ten minutes after eight,—

Mr. Knowles: Saved by the clock.

Mr. Macdonnell: Saved by the bell.

Mr. Speaker: —under the provisions of standing order 56, I must forthwith put the question on the following amendments.

Proposed Tax Relief for Municipalities

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR NEW THREE-YEAR POOL, MAXIMUM GUARANTEE OF LOANS, ETC.

The house in committee on Bill No. 208, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act—Mr. Harris—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Charlton: Is the minister suggesting any change in this clause?

Mr. Harris: I understand that the clause extends the time in which applications can be made for three years. It was not my intention to suggest an amendment to the bill.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—False statement in application for loan or misuse of loan.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Charlton: This clause provides a penalty of $500 upon conviction for the giving of false information with regard to a loan. This seems to me to be rather severe. Can the minister state whether there have been convictions under this clause?

Mr. Harris: I was not a member of the banking and commerce committee, as I believe my friend was, but my recollection is that there have been no convictions although I would not be sure as to that. I would point out that the penalty clause states "not more than five hundred dollars" and I doubt if a magistrate would impose the maximum penalty.

Mr. Pallett: This clause reads:

Any person who makes a statement in an application for a guaranteed farm improvement loan that is false in any material respect—

My understanding is that in order to obtain a conviction in criminal proceedings intention must be shown, but under this section it would be possible for a person to be convicted for a mere inadvertence in making a statement. I suggest that it should be necessary that intention be proved.

Mr. Harris: Intent to deceive is always part of any crime of this kind. If the magistrate found that in fact there was no such intent I doubt if there would be a conviction.

Mr. Pallett: The magistrate might not have any option under this legislation. This is not the Criminal Code where there would be the benefit of such protection; this is a separate act and if the prosecution insisted the magistrate would not have any alternative. I think this clause should be reconsidered before it is allowed to pass in its present form.

Mr. Harris: With the exception of the underlined words this is the form in which the clause has been for some time and I have not heard of any complaints in the house about prosecutions under it.

Mr. Fulton: Why is the time for prosecution extended? Has there been any experience which indicates that the government or the minister with all the resources at their command have not been able to prosecute within the time now provided?

Mr. Harris: I do not understand.

Mr. Fulton: If the minister will read the explanatory note he will see that one purpose is to extend the time for prosecution; it provides that prosecution may be brought within a year.

Mr. Harris: We are extending the act for three years and we are extending the time for prosecutions under the act for the same period of time.

Mr. Fulton: You are extending the time within which a prosecution may be brought to one year. You are not extending it to three years. I wonder if the minister has read the act any better than his colleagues who are shouting "Carried, carried," before they have even brought it out from under their desks. Has the minister any explanation of the reason why the time within which the prosecution shall be brought shall be extended to one year?

Mr. Harris: As I understand it, the proceedings must be brought within 12 months of the alleged offence. The 12-month limit dates from the time the offence is committed.

Mr. Fulton: What is the reason for the extension?

[Mr. Pallett.]

Mr. Harris: The reason is that we are extending the act for a three-year period of time and we want a penalty clause for that three-year period of time, and we have a 12-month period after the time of the alleged offence.

Mr. Fulton: That is the extension of time, surely, because there is no other extension of time provided for in that section, but you are saying that the whole section with regard to the time limit is amended, and it is now provided that the proceedings for the offence may be commenced at any time within 12 months from the day on which the evidence comes to the knowledge of the minister. It is stated in the explanatory note that it is an extension of the time in which prosecutions may be brought. I am asking the reason for that extension. Is it the experience that some lesser period was not sufficient to enable some prosecutions to be brought?

Mr. Harris: Perhaps I have not understood my hon. friend's objections. The act would come to an end on March 31, 1959, and we should have a period in which to prosecute after that. There should also be in the act, I should think—and I think my hon. friend will agree with me—a period of time beyond which the minister is not in a position to prosecute. That is fixed by the act, being 12 months after the minister becomes aware of the alleged infraction of the regulation.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I should like to refer to that point which the minister seemed to pass over very quickly here, and that is that the time limit provided is not 12 months after the commission of the offence. It is provided here that it is 12 months from the time that the evidence comes to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Harris: That is right.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): In this case there could be no limitation whatsoever on the time within which a prosecution might be launched. In addition, the act further provides that a secondary type of evidence will be satisfactory to prove that date. I think this is a very serious matter. If it is the intention to allow an unspecified time, which in fact is being done, for launching this prosecution, then surely the court should require, or this regulation should provide, that the court should give primary evidence as to the time when the evidence was available to the department to launch the prosecution. I do not think it should be done on a simple signature of the minister as saying at which time it was brought to his attention. It seems to me that evidence of this kind snould be available in a department for several years before it might come to the attention of the minister. It might be available to senior officials in his department, and nothing might be done about it. If there is to be a blanket period allowed, then in the best principles of justice primary evidence should be required that someone in the department should be available in court to indicate when that evidence first became available to the department to launch the prosecution.

Mr. Nowlan: I would support what the hon. member for Peel said a few moments ago. It is true, as the minister points out, that the section is relatively in the same wording as heretofore, to the effect that any person who makes a statement that is false in any material respect is guilty of an offence, and so on. But I suggest that the mere fact that we have been wrong, or this parliament has been wrong, in passing legislation before is no reason why we should be wrong again. I should think the Minister of Justice, with his experience in dealing with the Criminal Code and the administration of justice generally, whatever he may be constrained to say or not to say when this particularly is before the house, would feel it should be a matter of knowingly making a false statement. What is meant by a false statement? Is it an incorrect statement? There is no definition. If it means that there is something maliciously or misleadingly wrong, that is one thing, but it states here:

> Any person who makes a statement . . . that is false in any material respect . . .

I suggest that that is going much further than the law should go in dealing with an offence such as this. I am sure the Minister of Justice has read the statement made by the attorney general of Nova Scotia in the legislature two weeks ago in which he deplored the action of this parliament in reversing the old doctrine. He said that in dealing with matters of that kind the common law and the old principles on which our law is based have been largely abrogated, and he suggested that this House of Commons had been more delinquent than any other parliament in that respect. Although the Nova Scotia legislature was responsible for some of the legislation, he also inferred, and I do not know how he justified it, that it was wrong in principle and something should be done about it. It is still in this section. If a man makes a loan of $500 and he uses $15 for something else, is he going to be liable to prosecution or liable to a fine of $500 a year or ten years after the loan was made? I think this section is going much further. It is part of a trend in statutory law to shift the burden of proof so that it is possible to convict on less substantial evidence. I want to register my protest. I think the minister should reconsider it and take it up with the Department of Justice to see if some amendment, without interfering with the principle, could be incorporated in the section that would safeguard the rights of the individual for fair trial, and one which does not abrogate all the principles of criminal law and quasi-criminal law on which our courts have operated in the past.

Mr. Fulton: I wanted to discuss further the point I had raised with the minister, because apparently he and I are not talking about the same point. I appreciate that, if the operation of the act is to be extended in time, then obviously all the provisions of the act have to be extended; but, if I understand the explanatory note correctly, this is not merely a provision of that nature. This is a change of law. It is a change the effect of which is to provide that a prosecution may be launched at any time within 12 months after the evidence upon which that prosecution is based has come to the attention of the minister.

According to the notes to the bill, it is an entirely new provision, not merely extending the time, which already exists; but it is adding a new provision to the act. I do not know the purpose of it. The minister has not yet been able to satisfy us that there is any purpose for it because, as I say, he has not been discussing it on the basis which I now suggest is the basis upon which it rests, and which I question.

Further, it is provided by a new proposed subsection that a document purporting to have been issued by the minister or by any person on his behalf shall be received in evidence without proof of the signature or of the official status of the person purporting to have been acting under the minister—again, a very considerable extension of the law, and a new one in so far as this act, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, is concerned. What is the reason? Is it that the government has cause to believe that there have been numbers of frauds in connection with this act in the past which they have not been able to prosecute effectively? Or have they just dreamed up some idea in accordance with some theory of their own that they are going to strike terror into the hearts of all potential wrongdoers and incidentally to discharge people from making applications for loans under this act because of the extremely stringent provisions that are now being included in the act for the first time? What is the purpose of these two new sections which are proposed to be added by this section 5? We have had absolutely no explanation of that matter.

Mr. Harris: My friend the hon. member for Kamloops seems to suffer from nightmares more than most of us.

Mr. Fulton: I am obliged to look at what is opposite me. You can hardly blame me.

Mr. Harris: He can imagine every form of discreditable thought that I have heard expressed in this house with regard to the intentions of the government in what, after all, is advantageous legislation for the farmers of this country. The purpose of these sections is self-evident to anyone even without legal training such as that which my hon. friend has. They provide that the minister in charge of this act may certify, and that the certificate may be received in evidence, that knowledge of the offence, namely wrongful expenditures of the proceeds of the taxpayers' money used for this purpose or a declaration made falsely—and not anything short of falsely, may I point out—in a material point has come to hand at a particular date; and the minister then has 12 months from that date in which to launch a prosecution. I cannot paraphrase the words any more plainly than that. So far as I know,—and as I said, I am not certain of this—we have not had prosecutions under the act; certainly we have not had any that have been brought to my attention.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the minister comment on how that affects the statute of limitations so far as ordinary prosecutions are concerned? Does this not extend it much beyond the limit?

Mr. Harris: I think I will ask the Minister of Justice to answer that question. But the 12 months' restriction on the minister concerned is surely a restriction in favour of the applicant and not something in favour of the minister.

Mr. Nowlan: It is 12 months from the time he gets the information. That might be two or three years.

Mr. Harris: That is quite correct. I can assure hon. members opposite that in all of the representations that I had on behalf of this bill, there was expressed the most earnest desire that we should make additional benefits available to the farm community. I do not recall anyone's saying that the administration of the act had been harsh, repressive or anything like that. Indeed, I received a good many compliments with regard to it.

Mr. Fulton: That is exactly why we want to know why these new and unusual provisions are added. The minister has not explained that point. He has not said a word about it. He and I may spar and duel. I will try not to be too provocative in what I have to say. If I have been provocative previously, I shall try to change my tactics. I am at a loss to understand why it is considered desirable to add these sections. Surely the government must have some purpose in mind or must have had some experience on the basis of which it thinks that these sections are desirable. They are new, they are unusual and they are different. They are entirely out of keeping, as I understand it, with the previous provisions of the act which is now being amended. What experience has given rise to these sections or what purpose is intended to be accomplished by these sections? Why are they necessary?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I will try once again. In every statute in which there must be penalties, I suggest that good draftsmanship would require a limitation of time on prosecutions under the act. We have here a statement that the minister cannot, after he comes into possession of information which would lead him to suppose that there has been a violation of the act, allow time to run indefinitely. He must launch his prosecution within 12 months. That provision I think is advantageous to the borrower. I cannot see why it is not. It should be pointed out that the new sections that we are talking about are just two in number, namely the 12-month period and the question of certificate of proof. In this kind of statute it is not uncommon to provide that the certificate of a minister will be taken for what, after all, is a relatively minor point and one on which the prosecution would fall from the point of view of the time limit but for no other reason. I cannot suggest to my hon. friend—and I think he perhaps expects that I should—that some minister in the past has launched a prosecution after a period of five or six years and has been criticized by the courts for doing so, because I have no knowledge that such a thing has occurred. Neither have I any knowledge that we have lost a prosecution because a certificate of a minister has not been present. I regret that this is so because I am sure it would help my hon. friend in concluding that these provisions were required and desirable. If my hon. friend will seriously consider the fact that one always tries to make a bill as complete as it should be, I think he will agree that provisions of this kind ought to be imported if they were not imported previously.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we should follow the minister's argument in this respect. I say that with all due respect to him. The minister said it is possible that some time somebody has lost a prosecution.

Mr. Harris: I did not say that. I do not know that.

Mr. Nowlan: I understood that he suggested the possibility that it might have happened and that was the reason why this amendment was being introduced at this time. If a prosecution was lost under circumstances such as those suggested, I suggest that it should have been lost. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister if this is not the situation now with respect to ordinary criminal prosecutions. I see that we have sitting on the front bench four lawyers who have had a great deal of experience in administration of the law in this country. Let us consider the situation with regard to our Criminal Code and criminal cases. I refer to actual criminal cases, not quasi-criminal cases. I have not the code in front of me and I have been away from it for so long that with the advent of the new code, I am not as familiar with it as I might be. I am not trying to suggest that it does not contain time limits. But I know, for instance, that there is in the limitation act a section which says that prosecutions must be commenced within six months. That is with reference to a certain type of criminal offence. In other cases it is within a year and in others within two years. In other words, there you are dealing with specific criminal offences under the Criminal Code. Yet you have a specific time within which the prosecution must be launched. If it is not launched within that time, it is not started; and if it is started, naturally it fails.

The unique thing about this section, as I read it, is that it provides that prosecutions may be launched within 12 months after the information came to the attention of the minister, or after the minister was satisfied that there was evidence upon which he could launch a prosecution. It might be 10 years after the commission of the offence before something comes to the attention of the minister. Then all he is required to do is to certify under his hand in writing that he obtained this information at such and such a date and, forsooth, we have a prosecution launched although perhaps except for murder and some of the most serious offences under the Criminal Code it would be impossible to do it in connection with any known criminal offence such as those we have defined today.

I make this suggestion seriously to the minister. I know he is dealing with this thing and is trying as best he can to explain the situation. I think possibly he himself is finding some difficulty in rationalizing it. I think there is altogether too much of a tendency to enlarge the law and to make prosecutions easier. Without meaning to cast any reflections on anyone, I think possibly there are in certain government departments those who have responsibility for draftsmanship who feel that it is their bounden duty to do everything they can to make it easier for the prosecution and that, having done that, they have fulfilled their duty to their Queen and country and have earned their salaries. Personally I do not agree with that point of view and I do not think the country generally agrees with it. I am asking that the minister hold up this section to consult with the Minister of Justice to see if this section should not be deleted or at least whether some safeguarding amendment should not be brought into it so that we would be within the framework of the provisions for crimes under the Criminal Code.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Pallett: I think we have a responsibility for the final passing of this section of this act. I believe there are enough of us here who know how to read the wording of the act to insert into it the proper words so there cannot be any misunderstanding as to the meaning if the time ever does come when it is before the courts for interpretation. With that in view I am going to suggest the following amendment. I move:

> That subsection 1 of section 8 of the act be amended by inserting after the word "who" in the third line thereof, the words "with intent to defraud".

The section will then read:

> Any person who makes a statement in an application for a guaranteed farm improvement loan that is false in any material respect or who, with intent to defraud—

And so on. This would obviate the necessity for any interpretation being put on the matter by any magistrate.

Amendment (Mr. Pallett) negatived: Yeas, 38; nays 58.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Fulton: I regret that there are so many in the committee who are prepared to provide in legislation of this kind, which is not even criminal legislation, that the ordinary safeguards afforded under the criminal law shall be removed. I hope that my hon. friends opposite will reconsider their position, especially with respect to subclause 2 of clause 5 of the bill now before us. In spite of what the minister has said I suggest, with the utmost earnestness, that in this bill to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act we are introducing a new quasi-criminal principle which extends far beyond anything which now exists in the Criminal Code for a similar offence punishable on summary proceedings. We are introducing this principle into a bill in which it has no place, and on a basis which has so far been entirely unjustified.

I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that we should not enact legislation of this far-reaching effect unless it has been amply justified. I refer to legislation which changes principles which have been established in the criminal law for a long time, protections and safeguards which have existed for many years. We are asked to set these aside by introducing a principle which not only runs counter to the safeguards that existed before but also asserts such a diametrically opposed principle it should not be adopted except after the most careful consideration and ample explanation. We have had no such justification. I appreciate that the Minister of Finance is considerably embarrassed because, in fact, there is no justification in practice or in experience for this proposal. There is nothing to support it except the idea of some draftsmen in the department that it might be a good idea to write it into the law. I submit, in fact I state positively, it is not a good idea in the absence of some basis of experience which shows it should be put in there.

If the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Justice could come before us and say: We have had experience with cases under the Farm Improvement Loans Act where loans have been applied for on the basis of the most fraudulent statements, but because of the complicated nature of the transaction the fraud has not come to light until long after the transaction has been closed; after all that time we find that this fraud has been perpetrated on the government and the people of Canada but because of the passage of time we have been unable to secure a conviction; in fact, we have been unable to even launch a prosecution; if they could tell us that, or anything approaching that, then they would have made a good case for the inclusion of a section such as this.

But without such a case, let us look at what we are asked to do. I think that for the record, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the new subclause should be read out:

> Section 8 of the said act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsections:
> "(3) Proceedings for an offence under this section may be commenced at any time within 12 months from the day on which evidence, sufficient in the opinion of the minister to justify prosecution for the offence, comes to his knowledge."

So, Mr. Chairman, it is not going to be just 12 months after the offence. The offence could have been committed many years ago. It is 12 months after knowledge of the alleged offence comes to light, which extends beyond the bounds of all reason the time within which prosecutions must be brought under the ordinary provisions of the Criminal Code.

Subsection 4 is even more far-reaching. It would read as follows:

> "For the purposes of subsection (3), a document purporting to have been issued by the minister or by any person purporting to be acting on his behalf, certifying as to the day on which the evidence referred to in that section came to the knowledge of the minister, shall be received in evidence as conclusive proof of such fact without proof of the signature or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the document and without further proof."

So that you have a provision which allows some departmental official, far removed from ultimate responsibility in the matter, to launch a prosecution long after the alleged offence has taken place, long after the facts in the possession of the accused have faded from memory, long after the evidence which would otherwise have been available to the accused has been lost, long after the persons who would otherwise have been available to give evidence have moved away: in other words, long after any opportunity to the accused to defend himself has gone by. This prosecution may be launched on the basis of a document signed by such an official who, as I say, is far-removed from ultimate responsibility in the matter itself. The document purporting to be signed on behalf of the minister requires neither proof of the signature nor of the official character; that is to say the appointment of the person who is purported to sign it on behalf of the minister. Well, nothing could be more radical in the context of the ordinary safeguards of the criminal law which, after all, is designed to secure conviction of criminals but also to provide proper safeguards. Nothing could be more radical than this amendment to the criminal law in the disguise of an amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

After all, there are reasons why it is provided in the criminal law that prosecutions must be launched within a certain time, because evidence does have a habit of disappearing and accused persons are prejudiced thereby to an equal if not to a greater extent than the crown. The crown has tremendous facilities at its disposal to gather in evidence, to seek out persons who have moved away and to bring them back, facilities out of all proportion compared with those available to an accused person, a person accused 12 years perhaps after the event. It could be possible for that to happen under the provisions that we are now asked to enact. Perhaps I should emphasize that. It might be 20 years after the offence. The 12 months apply only to the time within which the prosecution must be brought after the evidence of the alleged offence has come to the attention of the minister. That is the reason for those safeguards of those time limits in the criminal law within which prosecution must be brought. An offence of this nature under the Criminal Code, triable under the summary prosecutions section part of the code, must be brought within six months of the date of the offence. I speak subject to correction by those who are more versed in the criminal law than I; but certainly it is a time far more limited than the time which would be available here.

Here we are, sir, in this house, asked by the government to accept legislation of this nature for which not one shadow of justification has been presented to us. We are asking, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings pointed out, four experienced lawyers sitting on the front bench. We admit that this matter has come up somewhat by surprise for the government. Perhaps the Minister of Finance has been shocked to the same extent that we were because of the circumstances under which this matter has come before us, but he has three illustrious colleagues there who are not demanding that he himself give us the answer. There is the Minister of National Defence, who was solicitor general for a time; there is the Prime Minister one seat away from him whose record as a lawyer in Canada requires no illumination or elaboration by me; there is the Minister of Justice sitting a little farther down the row. I am not allowed to impute motives, but if I were, sir, I would suggest that the Minister of Justice wishes he were somewhere else even farther removed from the Minister of Finance. But here are all these lawyers plus others, such as the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance, sitting beside him pretending—

The Chairman: Order. Before the hon. member proceeds to flatter all the lawyers in the house I wonder whether he might return to the principle of the clause?

Mr. Fulton: Well, sir, we laugh. Perhaps it is a good thing that we can laugh sometimes, but actually it is a serious matter because we are asked now without a shadow of justification to enact this clause. That is what I was attempting to emphasize by my reference to the illustrious lawyers and learned gentlemen who sit opposite, not one of whom can volunteer an explanation or a justification for this radical departure that we are asked to write, in effect, into the criminal law of this country under the guise of a simple amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I therefore move that section 5 be amended by striking out subsection 2 thereof.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I am sure you are as surprised as I am myself to find me undertaking to speak about a matter of the criminal law, but I have always been told by those who know more about it than I do that it is supposed to be a matter of common sense and also that it is supposed to embody high principles of conduct. I believe that one does not need to be a skilled lawyer to be shocked, as I am shocked, by reading this and I propose to read it now and then I propose to ask the Prime Minister whether he will tell me if he thinks it is justice. I will read it now.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): If it is only for the purpose of asking me that question the hon. gentleman can dispense with reading the section.

Mr. Macdonnell: I shall read it, anyway. It was not only for that purpose but I shall read it and I shall ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The Prime Minister will not answer the question.

Mr. Macdonnell: I cannot force the Prime Minister to answer. We have regretted in this house for months that we have heard so little from the Prime Minister and this will only be an additional occasion; but I do propose to read this because I think there may be many members within earshot who have not read it.

Mr. Fulton: We thought today we had an undertaking from the Prime Minister to break his self-imposed silence.

Mr. Harris: Every time he does talk you wish he had not.

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Harris: Oh, yes.

Mr. Fulton: No, we are very glad.

An hon. Member: Amen.

An hon. Member: Do you want me to read it for you?

Mr. Macdonnell: I propose to read this now:

(4) For the purposes of subsection (3), a document purporting to have been issued by the minister or by any person purporting to be acting on his behalf—

That broadens it out a bit.

—certifying as to the day on which the evidence referred to in that section came to the knowledge of the minister, shall be received in evidence as conclusive proof of such fact without proof of the signature or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the document and without further proof.

In other words, it does not need the minister; it simply needs somebody purporting to be acting on his behalf. It does not necessarily mean that the person should actually be acting on his behalf but merely purporting to be acting on the minister's behalf and apparently even though it should be done without proper authority the wording of this section is such as to give validity to the act.

Mr. Harris: Only with respect to the one thing, the date.

Mr. Macdonnell: That may be a very important matter, I submit, Mr. Chairman. Nobody who reads this who has any common sense will feel that that is justice; and again, although without expectation of reply, I ask the Prime Minister if he considers it is justice.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Greenwood had risen before I received the amendment of the hon. member for Kamloops which I think I should now read and with his permission I will change the word section to the word clause:

I move that clause 5 be amended by striking out subsection 2 thereof.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, before the question is put I would just like to emphasize again for the information of those hon. members who perhaps have not been following this section exactly what is involved in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kamloops. Subsection 1 says:

Any person who makes a statement in an application . . . is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine of not more than five hundred dollars.

Therefore we have brought into this prosecution, by the enactment of subsection 1, the provisions of the Summary Convictions Act. I think everyone will agree to that. By adopting this amendment we are not doing away with any possibility of a prosecution nor are we abrogating any criminal machinery. One is brought, as one should be brought, under the provisions of the Summary Convictions Act, which is the general act governing all prosecutions in Canada.

What the hon. member for Kamloops has done by his amendment is to suggest that in this prosecution as in virtually all others we should be confined to the provisions of the Summary Convictions Act and not be brought under this startling—and I use that word advisedly—subsection which he is suggesting should be struck out.

If this means anything, Mr. Chairman, I think it means this. If I should make an application today under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and by some strange misfortune the present Minister of Finance should still be in office 20 years from now—

Mr. Harris: Heaven forbid.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Mr. Nowlan: That would be a horrible misfortune, almost in keeping with the enactment of legislation such as this—

Mr. Harris: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: —but if that were the case and he found out about it he would then have 12 months after that in which to certify in writing that I was guilty of this particular offence on such and such a date in 1956.

Mr. Harris: No, no, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend is surely wrong.

Mr. Nowlan: If I am wrong this section does not mean what it says.

Mr. Harris: The certificate has to do with the certificate of the date on which I find it out and not with the date of the offence.

Mr. Macdonnell: The whole thing hangs on the date.

Mr. Nowlan: It says:

. . . at any time within twelve months from the day on which evidence, sufficient in the opinion of the minister to justify prosecution for the offence, comes to his knowledge.

And that may come 20 years from now.

Mr. Harris: But the certificate I grant is the certificate as to the date on which it came to my attention.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, and then he has 12 months after that in which to issue a certificate. I suggest to the minister that if he can find a comparable piece of legislation which has been enacted by any parliament in the British commonwealth or elsewhere I would like to know where it is because I do not think there have been very many of this nature where there is such an unlimited time in which to institute a prosecution particularly in view of the fact that we have the summary convictions provision which is the general statute of Canada.

I would hope that the committee and the minister would be prepared to accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kamloops and that in the future we will operate as we should operate under the Summary Convictions Act rather than under this strange section.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, before the question is put I would like to express my thanks to the lawyers in the committee. They have demonstrated to me that they not only perform a valuable service when you are in trouble but they can also help you to keep out of trouble.

I do not believe we had any lawyers on the committee which examined this bill and certainly the points brought up tonight were not brought to the attention of the committee.

In view of the fact that this legislation has been in effect now for quite a number of years without any wide attempt on the part of the farmers to abuse it and without the government or the banks having to resort to legislation of this sort, I think it is unfortunate that we are asked to incorporate this section.

As has been pointed out, the wording is:

> Proceedings for an offence under this section may be commenced at any time within twelve months from the day on which evidence, sufficient in the opinion of the minister to justify prosecution for the offence, comes to his knowledge.

It appears to me that this is a very vicious clause. As was pointed out, if information is brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance 20 years from now and if he happens to be the minister at that time it will still be possible to go back all those years.

As the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings pointed out, section 1 appears to give the crown very complete protection. In view of the fact that this legislation has been so well received I think the penalties imposed in the first clause are quite adequate. I believe the motion which is before us now should be supported.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, prosecutions which go back into the past have usually been laid at the door of the Department of National Revenue, but if this section were allowed to go through without the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kamloops the board would be able to go far beyond anything ever envisaged by the Department of National Revenue in the income tax business.

In fact, it would seem to me that whoever drafted this legislation must have been reading the very famous novel by Victor Hugo, "Les Misérables", the night before. Hon. members will recall that the hero of that novel, Jean Valjean, who had stolen a loaf of bread, was chased around and hunted by the police years and years later when he had become a respectable citizen, and that is exactly the sort of thing that would take place under this section as it stands at the moment. I cannot really understand what possible objection the hon. members of the government could have to the amendment of my colleague the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, this certainly has become a field day for the lawyers—

An hon. Member: God help the country.

Mr. McIvor: They are mixing it up.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): —but I would like to say that I do not wish to disillusion anyone who has spoken about this type of legislation. It so happens that I have defended people under legislation of a very similar or an almost identical character. The thing which worries me here tonight is that we seem to have slipped up in the past. This type of legislation has become almost commonplace.

As I listened to the minister's speech I thought that this was the dangerous point in his little talk. It occurred to me that here was something that was ordinarily found in the draftsmanship of legislation of this type designed to cover situations of this kind. It seems to me it is time we did something about this kind of legislation. If secondary evidence of this kind is going to be admitted in our courts then we will be going back to an autocratic system which is entirely false to the ideals of British justice as we understand them. I might say that it is a fairly frightening experience in a court room to have the prosecutor produce many papers with various seals. I think at this time we should strike a blow and place back in the hands where it belongs the administration of justice.

If this amendment is not acceptable to the committee then I feel that we will be going one further step down the line in connection with the administration of law. If the minister is to be considered a satisfactory person to stand in and complete documents which may in fact convict a person after many years, then I think we will be going beyond the ordinary principles which we should follow in this house. This is not the first time that legislation of this type has been passed by this house, so let us put a stop to it now.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I cannot claim the wide experience in our courts which some of my legal friends have mentioned tonight, but it is easy to see where an error has crept into this particular bill. Someone with a frightfully tidy mind has attempted to bring this bill into line with others of perhaps a similar nature. My understanding is that amendments to statutes are made when there is need to correct something that is wrong, but in regard to this Farm Improvement Loans Act we have not had one bit of evidence that there has been anything seriously wrong in the functioning of the act. Is the implication being made that people who have benefited from this act in the past have taken advantage of it? Have there been a number of loan defaulters? Have there been a number of people who have made false statements on the application forms? That would seem to be implied in the type of amendment which is introduced and which provides such a stringent penalty. Unless the government is prepared to produce evidence to that effect I do not think the committee should be asked to pass legislation of this character.

If in the past legislation of this nature has been placed on our statute books, this is a good time to call a halt. I certainly would support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kamloops that this section be stricken out. Obviously this calls for second thought. The act has been on the statute books for a considerable length of time and as far as I know the section has proved equal to the problem it is supposed to meet.

Now suddenly an enlargement is placed before us in order to make it easier for the prosecution as opposed to defaulters under the act. We feel that there is no need to do that as it leaves a loophole for bad action on the part of someone who might have an evil intent some time in the future. I would not expect the Minister of Finance to misuse this particular power, but why place temptation in the way of anyone, particularly when it provides that someone may act on behalf of the minister and sign a document which would be accepted in court as evidence of the transaction. There would be no supervision on the part of the minister with regard to that. In the course of his multifarious duties he might not have time to delve into the matter and all he would know would be that there was an alleged infringement of the provisions of the act and some documents were being forwarded to the proper authorities.

Let us not make the mistake of making it too easy for someone to get someone into trouble. As the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings pointed out, this might go on for a number of years and evidence be held in abeyance as far as being complete was concerned and then revised at some time in the future in order to embarrass someone who had perhaps made an innocent mistake at some earlier time. As the hon. member for Peel pointed out, intent to defraud may not be present at the time the application was made. In view of the discussion we have had tonight it would appear that this is unwise and unnecessary legislation and this section should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. Hees: I think the clearest indication of the unsoundness of the government's position on this measure is the fact that the Minister of Justice has taken the opportunity to quietly slip out of the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: On a point of order, the hon. member has no right to impute motives to any other private member.

Mr. Hees: I just pointed out a fact.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Hees: I believe it is also indicative—

The Chairman: The hon. member apparently rose to discuss clause 5 of this bill and the absence or presence of hon. members in the chamber at the time in my opinion has no relevancy whatever to this clause. I would ask the hon. member to confine his discussion to the clause.

Mr. Hees: As a layman, having listened to this discussion, there seems to be no justification for the government's stand on this matter. It is also rather hard to understand why the former minister of justice, the present Prime Minister, has refused to answer a very straight question which was put to him by the hon. member for Greenwood as to whether he thought it a proper stand for the government to take on this matter.

Mr. Harris: May I point out that the hon. member for Broadview did in fact impute motives. I am just wondering what he would have said if anyone on this side had said this afternoon that both the mover and the seconder of the amendment had quietly left the house before the vote.

An hon. Member: You asked for it.

Mr. Macdonnell: I do not think the Minister of Finance would willingly be unfair to the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Harris: I am not being unfair, I am just pointing out that unfairness is not expected on this side.

Mr. Macdonnell: The Leader of the Opposition—

The Chairman: Will the hon. member for Greenwood kindly resume his seat. The hon. member for Broadview had an opportunity to comment about the presence or absence in the chamber of the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Finance has had the similar privilege. I think we might consider the incident closed.

Mr. Macdonnell: Do you rule that I am not allowed to explain the absence of the Leader of the Opposition who is in Toronto fulfilling a speaking engagement?

The Chairman: I rule that we are presently discussing clause 5 of this bill and that we should limit our discussion to clause 5 of this bill.

Mr. Macdonnell: I now have a question to ask on clause 5.

Mr. Garson: Before my hon. friend puts his question I should like as a question of privilege to inform you, Mr. Chairman, that in relation to the comments that were made about my absence, I was out of the chamber for a very temporary and private reason.

Mr. Macdonnell: I think it would be relevant to ask the Minister of Finance if he could tell us in how many cases false statements were made and in how many cases proceeds of loans were used for purposes other than that stated in the application.

Mr. Harris: No, I am not in a position to give that information. I regret it, but I cannot.

Mr. Macdonnell: Has the minister no idea at all?

Mr. Harris: No, I have not.

Mr. Macdonnell: Does the minister know whether there were any false statements, or any moneys used for wrong purposes?

Mr. Harris: I explained some time ago in answer to a similar question that I did not have that information. I shall be glad to supply it, but I do not have it yet.

Mr. Macdonnell: Does the minister think we should vote on this section before we have that information?

Mr. Fulton: Whatever may have been the reasons for anybody's absence, I am delighted that the Minister of Justice is in his seat, because there are certain facts I should like to bring to his attention and also to the attention of the Minister of Finance. As the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has pointed out, by subsection 1 of the new section 8, it is provided that if there is an offence under the act the proceedings shall be heard under the summary conviction section of the Criminal Code. Section 693 of the Criminal Code provides as follows:

> (1) Except where otherwise provided by law, this part applies to proceedings as defined in this part.
> (2) No proceedings shall be instituted more than six months after the time when the subject matter of the proceedings arose.

So, by the ordinary provisions of the criminal law, proceedings cannot be brought for an offence more than six months after the offence was committed. The minister has just told the hon. member for Greenwood that he has no knowledge of whether there have been serious offences under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. If we were to be told that there had been such serious offences and that the greatest of difficulty had been found in launching prosecutions because of the time limit of six months that would ordinarily prevail, then we might be disposed to consider whether we could extend this time; but without any such information we are asked to extend the time, almost without limit. Now it may be alleged at any time after the loan has been granted that the minister has found evidence of an offence; and then he has 12 months after that, himself or through any subordinate official in his department, to bring in prosecution.

So it must be surely a very serious matter that would warrant the departure from the ordinary six-months rule and the extension of time without limit. How serious can it be? Is an offence against the Farm Improvement Loans Act so serious, does it involve the safety and welfare of the state, that this unlimited time should be extended? May I ask the Minister of Justice, are such offences as serious as the offence of treason, for instance? The minister smiles. Of course, he would agree. That suggestion does not hold water that an offence against the Farm Improvement Loans Act would be comparable to the offence of treason. I take it the minister agrees with me, and I am sure the Minister of Finance would agree with me.

Mr. Harris: Very seldom do I agree with you.

Mr. Fulton: Now let me point out that under the criminal law, for the most serious offence known to the law in so far as the safety and welfare of the state is concerned, that is, the offence of treason, the time limit in which prosecutions must be brought is three years, under section 48 of the Criminal Code, which states:

> No proceedings for an offence of treason as defined by paragraph (d) of subsection (1) of section 46 shall be commenced more than three years after the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed.

It is three years in the case of treason. But by this section, not only the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Agriculture but anyone in his department, without proof of the responsibility or the authority of that person, is given the right to commence prosecution for an offence at any time, provided only that he brings the proceedings within 12 months after he says he has discovered the evidence. That time may be any time up to 20 years or even longer. So we are in the ridiculous position that without a shadow of justification we are asked to enact with all solemnity—with all this battery of legal experts opposite, not one of whom can give any justification for it—a provision in a little innocent bill to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, which has all the implications that an offence against that act is regarded as more serious than the crime of treason. We have been asked to swallow many ridiculous things by this government, but I really do not think they will expect this house to swallow such a mockery as that.

I am confident, therefore, that the committee will vote for the deletion of that section.

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

STARRED QUESTIONS

BANK HOLD-UP, COQUITLAM, B.C.

Question No. 47—Mr. Goode:

Have steps been taken by the government to give official recognition to R.C.M.P. Corporal Johnstone and the officers and men of the Burnaby, Maillardville and Coquitlam detachments of the R.C.M.P., in British Columbia, for their bravery and attention to duty in thwarting an attempted hold-up at the Royal Bank of Canada, Coquitlam, British Columbia?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. gentleman's question is as follows: By general order No. 2900 issued by the commissioner for the week ending April 1, 1956, regimental No. 15347, Constable Johnstone, H.M.C., of "E" division, was promoted to the rank of corporal on and from April 1, 1956, in recognition of the energy, skill and bravery he displayed in foiling the hold-up of the Royal Bank of Canada at Maillardville, B.C., on the morning of April 3, 1956.

I should like to take this opportunity also of commending the efficiency and bravery of the N.C.O.'s and men of the Burnaby, Maillardville and Coquitlam detachments of the R.C.M.P. in British Columbia who were colleagues of Corporal Johnstone on this occasion.

PENITENTIARY SITE, JOYCEVILLE, ONT.

Question No. 48—Mr. Knowles:

1. Has the government purchased, or agreed to purchase, a property at Joyceville, Ontario, on which a federal penitentiary is to be built?
2. If so, from whom?
3. What price was paid, or is to be paid, for this property?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes. The answer to the second is, partly from Benjamin W. Franklin, the balance to be expropriated. The answer to question No. 3 is that the total cost has not yet been determined pending result of the expropriation.

LANDSLIDE, NICOLET, QUE.

Question No. 50—Mr. Boisvert:

Have steps been taken by the federal government to study the causes of the landslide of November 9, 1955, at Nicolet, in order to determine if there is any way, within the jurisdiction of the federal government, to prevent similar occurrences in the future?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Yes, a channel for exchanging technical information has been established between the federal government and the Quebec government as the result of conversations and correspondence between the premier and me. We have already provided data from studies made by the national research council and expect to derive information particularly from studies of borings made by the Quebec government. All available information will be studied to determine what further data will be required before definite conclusions can be reached.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Motion No. 73—Mr. Herridge:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of the province of British Columbia, or any ministers thereof, since January 1, 1955, with respect to the trans-Canada highway.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this motion passing subject to the usual reservation about first communicating with the government of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Motion agreed to, subject to the reservation of the minister.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO PRESENT STATUS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister now inform the house whether a decision has been reached as to the nature of the additional assistance to be given to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines and, if so, what are the terms of that assistance?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No decision has yet been reached, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): May I ask a supplementary question? Will the Prime Minister table the offer of Frank McMahon and his associates? If the offer is confidential, will he ask McMahon to release the confidentiality so the terms of the offer may be brought before the house?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I have seen no offer from Mr. Frank McMahon. I will have to inquire from my colleagues if they individually have received a confidential offer. No offer has been brought to the attention of the cabinet.

Mr. Drew: Then may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce received a letter from Mr. Frank McMahon in regard to the proposed pipe line?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have received no letter that I am free to table in this house.

Mr. Drew: That was not the question. I asked whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce has received a letter from Mr. Frank McMahon in regard to the proposed pipe line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I have not been aware that our private correspondence is subject to examination in the House of Commons. Perhaps I am wrong about that.

Mr. Drew: Then, Mr. Speaker, we are to assume that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has received a letter which he is not prepared to table. Is that correct?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, if I have received a letter it is marked personal and confidential and that being the case I am not prepared to say anything about it.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, then are we to understand that pipe-line developments in this country are the private prerogative of the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is the only man in Canada who would take that conclusion from the remarks I have made.

Mr. Drew: No sensible person could take any other conclusion.

Mr. Hees: Has the government given consideration to a proposition put forward by Mr. Frank McMahon? If so, will the Minister of Trade and Commerce say whether the government thinks it is a sensible proposition or not?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): What a finesse.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I have already said I do not think I am required to discuss private correspondence.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Do we now understand that the government takes the position that discussions in regard to pipeline developments in Canada are private matters of ministers of the crown?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The government does not take that position, but the government cannot prevent any Canadian citizen from addressing a confidential communication to any member of the government or to anybody else.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Will he tell the house what was the offer from McMahon that he referred to in his speech in Alberta two weeks ago when speaking on the occasion of his recent visit there regarding the offer of the McMahon interests?

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, while speaking in Alberta I referred to a news dispatch which I read in the Calgary Herald.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister know the nature of the letter that Mr. Frank McMahon wrote to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not. I have not seen it.

Mr. Rowe: They do not even trust each other.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Do I understand from his answer that the only information he has about pipe lines is what he gets from the newspapers?

Mr. Rowe: They do not trust each other, let alone us. They had better get together in another cabinet meeting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are you all on a sit-down strike?

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is giving consideration to the advance of a sum of between $50 million and $80 million, as reported by the press, to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines or a guarantee of bonds for a similar amount?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that members of the privy council are not permitted to disclose publicly, otherwise than through orders or decisions that have been approved, the discussions that take place in their meetings.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware of the fact that the authorities of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines reported that proposal had been agreed to by the government?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, Mr. Speaker; I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. Knowles: Better ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RAILWAYS AND NON-OPERATING UNIONS—ACTION TAKEN TO AVOID STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement made this morning with respect to the negotiations between the railway unions and the railways, is the Prime Minister in a position to state what steps are being taken by his government to avert a railway strike?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the last step that has been taken has been a communication addressed by the Minister of Labour to the railways and to the representatives of the employees asking them to meet to discuss settlement on Tuesday morning at 10.30.

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF FARM LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Owing to the fact that few if any immigrants are coming forward to Canada to help on farms, and owing to the extra shortage of farm labour in Ontario, is the minister in a position to tell the house if anything is being done to relieve this situation?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with the Department of Citizenship and Immigration activities are being carried out based upon the needs on the farms as expressed at the farm labour conference held late last year at which the representatives of the provincial departments of agriculture were present and at which as close an estimate as possible was made of the needs this year. An effort is being made to fulfil those needs.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN BEFORE ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is he prepared to comment to the house on the statement made this morning to the committee investigating the C.B.C. and television in which Mr. Dunton said that in order to curtail the $15 million cost increase in C.B.C.'s operations in the past year it will be necessary to severely dismantle organization and drop plans in a very drastic way?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make as long as the matter is before the board of inquiry. One inquiry at a time is plenty.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

BANK HOLD-UP, COQUITLAM, B.C.—PROMOTION OF CORPORAL JOHNSTONE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will he not agree that Constable Johnstone was in line for promotion to the rank of corporal and would have received that promotion in any event, and therefore in effect has not received any award for his outstanding service?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CF-105 PLANE—EFFECT OF STRIKE AT ORENDA ENGINE PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Could the minister advise the house as to whether the strike at the Orenda engine plant at Malton will have any immediate effect on the production schedule of the CF-105?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that a wildcat strike occurred at the Orenda engine plant yesterday; whether it is continuing today, I have not heard. I have no reason to believe that it will affect the CF-105 program but I will be glad to make inquiries.

[Mr. Gregg.]

PRIVILEGE

MR. REGIER—REQUEST FOR SUPPLEMENTARY REPLY TO QUESTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on a question of privilege. In question No. 418 I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) what payments were made to each of the directors of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the calendar year 1955 by way of salary or other remuneration and in payment of expenses. The answer I received is:

> No remuneration or emolument was paid to the directors of Trans-Canada Air Lines. However, they were paid their proper out of pocket travelling expenses incurred in connection with business performed on behalf of the company, when these were applied for.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the answer to the question I asked and I hope the minister will order a supplementary reply.

PUBLIC SERVICE

WINNIPEG—RATES OF PAY OF WOMEN CLEANERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has there been an increase in the rates of pay of women cleaners at Winnipeg and other cities comparable to the increase announced yesterday for those in the Ottawa area?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, that matter is being looked into. I will take the question as notice.

AIR TRANSPORT

OTTAWA—INQUIRY AS TO PRIVATE PLANE STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister give the house any information as to what steps are being taken to alleviate the critical storage situation for private plane operators in the Ottawa area?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take my hon. friend's question as notice and make some inquiries.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

AMENDMENTS TO AUTHORIZE OPERATION OF BRIDGES, ESTABLISHMENT OF TOLLS, ETC.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 216, to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when we had the opportunity of discussing the resolution which is preliminary to the present bill I endeavoured to give a full explanation of the purposes which the government had in mind in introducing these amendments to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act. I do not think I can usefully add anything to the somewhat comprehensive explanation which I gave last week.

I think I might merely repeat that the principal need for the amendments to the act arises from the fact that the bridge carrying rail and road traffic over the south channel between Cornwall island and the mainland of the United States will have to be demolished in order to enable the passage of ships when the seaway is opened and that nearly all of the amendments that are contemplated by this bill are necessitated by measures that will have to be taken in consequence of the prospective removal of that bridge. I think the only one that is not directly related to that particular aspect of the matter is one concerning the disposition to be made of the proceeds realized from the disposition of property held in the name of the authority. That is a matter which was the subject of some comment in this house when the supplementary estimates were considered and I think hon. members are familiar with the reason for the proposed change. I do not think that any other words of explanation are necessary, Mr. Speaker; but I shall be happy, when we come to the committee stage, to give any other explanation that hon. members may wish to have.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): In regard to this particular bill, as the minister has already indicated, there were quite a number of questions discussed in the resolution stage. However, I have a few questions I should like to ask when we get to the committee stage of the bill.

There is one thing, however, I am a little at a loss to understand, and possibly the minister can clear it up at this stage. It is this. If in the future any other international bridges are to be built in the area under the jurisdiction of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, are these bridges going to be built by the seaway authority or by some other private or public authority?

The reason I inquire in this regard has to do with certain remarks made by the minister, at the bottom of the first column on page 3217 of Hansard. The minister said:

> I would not like the committee to think for a moment that this is a departure from the main purpose of the St. Lawrence seaway authority which, as hon. members know, is to build a deep waterway from Montreal to lake Erie and not to go into the building of a series of bridges across the river, either in the international rapids section or anywhere else. If it had not been for this particular situation and the fact that the replacement of the bridge across the south channel necessitates an international bridge I do not think it would have been necessary to bring in this legislation.

I gather from those remarks of the minister that, apart from a particularized situation in the Cornwall area, where there is a big dam being built, the other reason the St. Lawrence seaway authority was going into this matter of constructing a bridge was that an international bridge was necessitated.

In 1952 a private bill went through this house to incorporate the Ogdensburg Bridge Company. Until July 2 of next year, this particular company, which was incorporated for the purpose of constructing an international bridge across the St. Lawrence river in the neighbourhood of Prescott, it would seem to me, might with the consent of the governor in council build this bridge. It might ask permission any time up to next July. If that is the case, I wish the minister would clarify the position if the Ogdensburg Bridge Company, which I point out is a private company, asked for permission to build such a bridge, whether or not, in the opinion of the minister, such permission would be granted or whether, since it is an international bridge—as the minister has pointed out—required to go across the St. Lawrence, it would probably be the seaway authority itself that would construct any such international bridge in this area, which at present is under the jurisdiction of the seaway authority.

I believe I have mentioned this matter on an earlier occasion in the resolution stage but, in view of the minister's remarks, I would be much obliged—and I am sure other members interested in this would be too—if the minister could tell us whether or not all international bridges in the area under the jurisdiction of the St. Lawrence seaway authority are going to be built by the authority or whether private or other public authorities will be building bridges in this area.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I shall attempt to reply directly to the hon. member for Oxford. I should like to make it perfectly clear that the proposed bill deals in two ways with the subject of international bridges. First, it gives the seaway authority the legal capacity to build international bridges when they are specifically authorized by the act. Second, the bill specifically authorizes the authority to build an international bridge over Pollys Gut. I should like to make it perfectly clear that it is not contemplated that the seaway authority will build other international bridges and I think it is most unlikely that the legal capacity to which I have just referred will be exercised for that purpose. In any event, I think I made it perfectly clear during the discussion at the resolution stage that if it were decided, which I think is unlikely, that the seaway authority would build some other international bridge it would be necessary to have a further amendment or a further act of parliament in order to authorize the authority to do so. I hope I have made that perfectly clear to the hon. gentleman because, as I have endeavoured to point out, the only international bridge with which we are now concerned and which is in our minds and intentions is that over Pollys Gut and nowhere else.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Nesbitt: It would appear to me that there is possibly a slight error in the drafting of this clause and I should like to ask the minister to clarify the matter. Clause 1 reads as follows:

> Section 10 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act is amended by deleting the word "and" at the end of paragraph (a) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraphs—

Paragraphs (c) and (d) then follow. What I am curious about is what happens to paragraph (b).

Mr. Marler: I think it is perfectly clear from the language of the amendment that all that is done by the preliminary words of this clause is to delete the word "and" which appears at the end of paragraph (b) and to add two additional paragraphs, (c) and (d).

Some hon. Members: At the end of paragraph (a).

Mr. Marler: Yes. I have read the language very carefully and I must admit that I find it difficult to come to any other conclusion.

Mr. Nesbitt: It may be that the minister has a different copy of the bill than I have but my copy distinctly says that at the end of paragraph (a) paragraphs (c) and (d) will be added, which leaves (b) out in the cold, out on a limb or whatever you want to call it.

Mr. Marler: I think if the hon. gentleman will read the clause more carefully he will see that it does not bear that construction. The first part says that section 10, and it is of course section 10 that we are talking about, is amended by deleting the word "and", at the end of paragraph (a) thereof. "Thereof" obviously refers to section 10. Then it goes on to say, "and by adding thereto"—and I take it the word "thereto" refers to section 10 because that is what we are talking about—"the following paragraphs". We add at the end of section 10, from which the word "and" has been struck out at the end of paragraph (a), paragraphs (c) and (d). Paragraph (a) remains but we take out the word "and" at the end. Paragraph (b) remains because there is nothing to say it is to be deleted. Then paragraphs (c) and (d) are added because that is what this clause says.

Mr. Nesbitt: It seems a little confusing to me. I am glad that the minister finds it plain because a number of other hon. members in addition to me have found it anything but plain. However, if the minister assures us that paragraph (b) remains, well and good.

Mr. Michener: I fell into the same error and as I believe in clarity in legislation I should like to move that the word "thereto" be struck out and that the words "to the said section" be inserted in place of "thereto". Then it will read, "and by adding to the said section the following paragraphs". Then there will be no doubt about it at all.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Michener: Is my amendment not to be considered?

The Chairman: I have not got an amendment.

Mr. Michener: Perhaps the minister would say whether or not he would accept it.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, I must say that I think what the hon. gentleman has just said is exactly what the present clause says. I cannot see how the word "thereto", particularly just following the wording "thereof", and particularly when it is obvious that section 10 is the object of the clause itself, adds force to the amendment. I know it is easy to say it makes it abundantly clear, but I think it is abundantly clear already.

Mr. Nesbitt: It may be abundantly clear to the minister in his wisdom, but to some of us less brilliant mortals it is not quite so clear.

I suggest the amendment of the hon. member for St. Paul's does not change anything in essence except to make the matter more clear. In view of the fact that some of us would find it easier to understand if that amendment were put in, I think the minister might acquiesce.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): This clause, amongst other things, gives the authority the power to acquire the shares and property of any bridge company for the purposes of the act. I am wondering whether the minister would inform us if the New York Central Railway has yet made any application to the board of transport commissioners for the abandonment of its existing line between Cornwall and Ottawa, because that is conected with this bill.

Mr. Marler: This morning someone directed an inquiry to me on exactly the same point, and I took the pains to make inquiries to see whether any such application had been brought before the board of transport commissioners. I was informed that no such application had been made. I should like to say this in reply to what the hon. gentleman has just said. If anyone considers the physical conditions which exist on Cornwall island, which as I explained the other day is crossed both by the New York Central Railway and by a highway, and realizes that on the United States side a considerable amount of work in the relocation of the right of way must be carried out and a new bridge must be built by the United States authorities, quite apart from the bridge over Pollys Gut, I think I would say to the hon. gentleman it is clear that consideration must be given to the desirability of replacing the railway facilities or suggesting perhaps it might be more convenient to abandon them. The matter is under consideration, but beyond that I cannot make any more positive statement at this time.

Mr. Nesbitt: I asked the minister a question during second reading on this particular section and when the minister replied he said he hoped he had answered the question. I am afraid he had not.

Referring again to the remarks made by the minister at page 3217 of Hansard for April 24, 1956, at the top of the second column he stated:

> If it had not been for this particular situation and the fact that the replacement of the bridge across the south channel necessitates an international bridge I do not think it would have been necessary to bring in this legislation.

In view of those remarks I am afraid I cannot draw any other conclusion but that because this area is under the jurisdiction of the seaway authority and an international bridge is concerned, the seaway authorities feel that any such international bridge should come under their authority. It is for that reason this particular legislation is requested, the particular circumstances at Pollys Gut plus the fact that it is an international bridge. It may be the minister did not mean it that way, and that is why I asked him whether, if any more bridges of an international character were contemplated in the area, those bridges would be constructed by the seaway authority or some other public or private company.

Mr. Marler: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not know how often it must be said, but it seems to me quite clear from what I said at the committee stage, from the paragraph which follows that which the hon. gentleman has just read, and from my statement on second reading, that were it not that we are dealing with an international bridge in connection with the seaway works around Cornwall island it would not be necessary to amend the seaway authority act. I thought I had made it abundantly clear, Mr. Chairman, that there was no intention in the mind of the government or of the seaway authority to build other international bridges or to extend the authority's jurisdiction to other international bridges that there may be in some other parts of the waterway. I had hoped to make it quite clear that the prime function of the St. Lawrence seaway authority is to build the seaway and it is only because in the course of building the seaway it is necessary to remove the bridge over the south channel at Cornwall island that it is necessary to build a new bridge over the south channel, which is an international bridge, because as I explained before it is more or less bisected by the international boundary, and the bridge over Pollys Gut, which is considered the most desirable replacement for the south channel bridge, is likewise straddling the international boundary which makes it an international bridge, that it is necessary for the seaway authority to have the specific authority to build it.

Now, no other international bridges are contemplated at this time. I will repeat, Mr. Chairman, that this particular clause with which we are dealing gives the seaway authority the legal capacity to build international bridges, in the plural, but that no other bridge is being authorized by this amendment and no other bridge is in contemplation or intended at this time that would be an international bridge. The hon. gentleman appears to be very much interested in the bridge at Ogdensburg. I assure him this has nothing whatever to do with the seaway authority. If other people are going to provide bridges all I can say is that the seaway authority will be delighted if they do so.

The Chairman: I have now received from the hon. member for St. Paul's the amendment which he mentioned a short time ago. He moves:

The word "thereto" in the third line of clause 1 be struck out and replaced by the words "to section 10".

Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Green: May I suggest to the minister that there is some ambiguity in the present wording, and if the change were made as proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's it would clarify the wording of the clause. For the sake of saving time, and at the same time making the section absolutely clear, I think the minister could accept that amendment. It is not put forward for the purpose of making trouble or anything of that nature. It is simply to make the section clearer. I do think the present clause could be read either one way or the other, and the change would have the effect of making the meaning absolutely clear.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has been very persuasive about this very difficult question. So far as I am concerned whether we say "thereto" or whether we say "to section 10", I think it means exactly the same thing. If the hon. gentleman insists upon this amendment I shall accept it.

On clause 3—Authority may construct bridge over Pollys Gut.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, on clause 3, which refers specifically to the Pollys Gut bridge, the minister told us a little while ago that the New York Central Railway were considering the abandonment of this bridge.

Mr. Marler: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Or that some consideration was being given to it.

Mr. Marler: That is better.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, I think that is in line with the amendment just accepted, that some consideration is being given to the abandonment of the existing railway line. I wonder whether the minister can give us some indication as to what discussions have taken place on the apportionment of the costs of this particular Pollys Gut bridge and the incidental works thereto as between the New York Central and the authority? What I have in mind there, Mr. Chairman, is the possibility that perhaps it has been suggested the railroad bear what it considers to be an unfair portion of any costs in connection with this work either now or in the future by means of tariffs.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, I can dispose of that question immediately by saying that at no time has it been contemplated that the railway would contribute to the cost of the bridge over Pollys Gut. The reason why it has not been asked to make any contribution is very clear. It already has facilities not apparently very aesthetically beautiful, if I remember what the hon. gentleman said at the resolution stage; but which nevertheless carry its trains across the St. Lawrence river and over both the north channel and south channel. As far as the New York Central is concerned, it does not, as I understand it, desire to have the bridges removed but it will be necessary, despite the age of the bridge over the south channel, to remove it and it will be necessary therefore to relocate the railway facilities to enable the New York Central to pass over the new bridge without its having to contribute to the cost. If you ask it to contribute to the cost you will be merely asking it to raise its claim for damages accordingly. What is being contemplated, as the hon. gentleman may see from the plans of the seaway, is the relocation of the railway facilities and the building of the Pollys Gut bridge as a replacement of the present railway bridge over the south channel.

The hon. gentleman also spoke about the question of the sharing of the costs of the Pollys Gut bridge. My understanding is that there have been conversations and discussions between the seaway authority and the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation concerning the sharing of the costs of building the bridge. As I said the other day, it is possible that one of the two bodies may build the substructure and the other may build the superstructure. If that were done it would mean an approximately equal sharing of the cost; or conceivably it might be done as a single operation with the cost being shared equally by the two authorities; but, as I said the other day, the matter is under discussion at this time and no decision has yet been reached as to what is to be done.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a brief question on subsection 2 of section 3, Mr. Chairman, which reads:

Construction of the bridge mentioned in this section shall not be commenced until the governor in council has approved the plans and site thereof and the plans and site so approved shall not be altered except with the consent of the governor in council.

As I understood the minister's remarks earlier, the authority to build and operate the bridge will be a subsidiary of the St. Lawrence seaway authority itself. Just as a matter of curiosity, I wonder why it is necessary to have the plans and alterations approved by the governor in council rather than by the St. Lawrence seaway authority itself?

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, the assumption from which the hon. member proceeded will not necessarily come to pass. He spoke about the possibility of this bridge being built by a subsidiary of the seaway authority. It will not necessarily be built by a subsidiary, but it may be. It depends on how the rearrangement of facilities, both road and rail, is carried out in the Cornwall island area. Consequently, I must point out right away it is not necessarily a subsidiary, but it might be the authority itself jointly with the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation.

So far as the approval of the plans is concerned, I understand that this is language that is always used in connection with bridges crossing the St. Lawrence river, and I can see no reason whatever, particularly as this is not the activity exclusively of a Canadian entity but a joint activity of both, why we should depart from the rule that the governor in council should approve the plans.

Clauses 4 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 7—Incorporation of subsidiaries.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, I want to tell the minister that this project of building a bridge is one that commends itself to me and I am sure to the committee. As I understand the minister's description of the actual problem, there is the Cornwall bridge and the proposed bridge which will be over Pollys Gut and which is some distance removed from the present bridge. I am not sure whether the minister gave us the distance from the present bridge to the place where the new bridge will be constructed and I am not sure either whether the minister gave particulars of the sort of corporation which now operates the Cornwall bridge. I have endeavoured to find some reference to it, but I do not see it described in any corporation manual. I understand there are two corporations, one of which owns the bridge and another which leases it. They are both private companies. Before the matter is finally disposed of will the minister give us some information about those companies? I would appreciate it if he would do that and give us some information as well about the location of the Pollys Gut bridge.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, I thought that I had the plan of the Cornwall area with me. The hon. gentleman raised the question the other day and I looked at the map. I think the Pollys Gut bridge is approximately one mile from the present south channel. Now, that item of information would be most misleading if one did not realize that the relocation of the highway and of the railway itself will add quite substantially to the present mileage because it is necessary to make quite a substantial detour for both the railway and the highway. However, I shall send the hon. gentleman a copy of the plans so that he can see just about where the location is and I think that he will realize there was no other location that could be chosen for the facilities that would be suitable both for rail and road which I am sure the hon. gentleman will appreciate must fit into the location of the locks which are to be constructed from near the point we are talking about.

So far as the ownership of the bridges is concerned and the other rights that are related to them, the bridges are owned either by the New York Central Railway or by one of its subsidiaries, I think called the Ottawa-New York Railway, and they are very old bridges, as I said the other day. They have been under lease for a long time to first the predecessor—perhaps I should say the predecessor of the Cornwall International Bridge Corporation—and now, of course, the bridge corporation itself. As I said the other day, the current lease actually ends on December 31, 1957, but in 1950 at a time when the bridge company was considering making some substantial expenditures on the property it had leased it arranged for a 25-year additional lease to run from December 31, 1957, so the expiry date is now December 31, 1982. This is one of these percentage leases and the New York Central or one of its subsidiaries receives rental based on the amount of revenues collected by the bridge company.

I am afraid I cannot tell my hon. friend very much about the bridge company itself. The shares are not listed and I believe they are privately held. It is hoped that it will be possible to work out with the bridge company an arrangement for the purchase of its shares or the purchase of its relevant assets so as to avoid both the cost and delay involved in a long examination of the amount of damages that would be suffered by the corporation itself.

If you expropriated only the south channel bridge or if you expropriated the south channel bridge and gave the company rights over Pollys Gut bridge, the question arises as to what are you to do with the existing highway over Cornwall island. Generally speaking, you must consider whether it would be desirable to have the authority buy the shares or the assets.

In any event I think the hon. member for St. Paul's realizes there are a great many possibilities. The seaway authority wishes to have the freedom of action that will enable it to acquire the facilities at the least possible cost to the authority itself. In using the expression the least possible cost I do not mean that we wish to rob the bridge company, but I mean paying a fair price for the privileges, the franchise and rights that the bridge company now has.

Mr. Michener: I take it, Mr. Chairman, from what the minister says, that these are negotiations which will be carried on by the authority; they are prospective and have not been concluded?

Mr. Marler: I think I should say that there have been conversations.

Mr. Michener: But they have not been carried to the point where the minister could say what course will be followed?

Mr. Marler: Quite honestly, Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position at this time to suggest that a final arrangement has been made, even on the assumption that legislation would be passed. Conversations have taken place but as often happens those who have something to sell have an idea that it is worth more than those who wish to buy it.

Mr. Michener: Can the minister say whether the owners of this Cornwall International Bridge Company, that is the principal shareholders, are Canadian or non-Canadian?

Mr. Marler: My understanding is that they are principally if not all Canadians.

Mr. Nesbitt: Could the minister give us an idea of approximately how many shareholders there might be?

Mr. Marler: I am afraid I do not know, Mr. Chairman. I do not think that the question of the number is material. The matter which interests me most is what the authority will have to pay to get all the shares.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, under clause 7 there is a question of principle which disturbs me considerably. I am quite sure that the minister is not going to be prepared to do anything about it because he may be able to find some precedent for it in the past, but I think it is something to which we here in the house might very well take strong exception. I am referring to the matter of giving the St. Lawrence seaway authority the power, with the approval of the governor in council, to procure the incorporation of other corporations for the purpose of carrying out its work. The renumbered clause which covers that will be 24 (a) (1).

I have always felt, and I think many hon. members in this house have also felt, that the further removed government bureaucracy and government administrative processes become from this house the more difficult they are to control, the more difficult they are to know anything about and the more opportunity there is for evasion of the proper authority and supervision by this house.

We have crown corporations at the present time which were set up in war time, and perhaps at that time they served a very necessary purpose; but carried on into peace time, we never see or hear and we never have a genuine chance to get at the details of the administration of these individual corporations. The one exception I can think of offhand, and it does not fall into quite the same class as the others, is the Canadian National Railways. The examination which its accounts receive in the committee on government-owned railways and shipping each year is, I think, beneficial to the company and it is illuminating to this house and to the representatives of this house who sit on the committee.

We have here a seaway authority which will be perhaps somewhat the same as the national harbours board. There is an opportunity in the estimates each year to have a look at the national harbours board and to comment on its operation. I would assume that there will be a similar opportunity in connection with the St. Lawrence seaway. But when the St. Lawrence seaway authority begins to incorporate subsidiary corporations to carry out its activities we reach the point at which this house will then be quite incapable of controlling its activities and it will be difficult for the house to know anything about it.

As I have said, I do not expect that as a result of these words or as a result of my pointing out this particular situation I am going to be able to shake the government in its present course, but I do think that legislation of this kind should not be allowed to pass without having it pointed out again and again and again that the government by means of legislation such as this and by means of other activities is taking the genuine power of examination and the power of control further and further away from the hands of this house year by year.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote a paragraph from Hansard relating to this discussion. The paragraph is found on page 3216 of Hansard of April 24, 1956 and it reads as follows:

> This raises a question as to whether or not the tolls which would be charged for the use of this bridge would be kept entirely separate from the seaway tolls. It seems to me they have no relationship to the tolls which would be charged for the use of the canal. In one case the users of the bridge would pay their tolls and pay the cost of maintenance and ultimately the cost of building the bridge, and separate accounts should be kept. In the other case the users of the canal, or the shippers would pay their toll for shipping facilities. I am just pointing this out; doubtless these things have received consideration not only by the minister but by the seaway authority.

Those words were not mine. They were the words of the hon. member for St. Paul's. I think they were very sensible words and I am surprised that his colleague the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace does not share his opinion. Because I have been in opposition for a large part of my life, I suggest that one of the first things that is good for an opposition is to have them all speaking with the same voice. However, I am not trying to give the hon. member for St. Paul's any lesson. What he has said here in what I have just quoted makes sense. It is merely because it is the sound, common-sense approach to separating seaway tolls and seaway revenues from the possible revenues that may accrue from the operation of a highway bridge that the desirability of having the power to create a subsidiary is so manifest.

The hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace fears that by this process the facts will be lost sight of. Mr. Chairman, I hope the facts will not be lost sight of. So far as the seaway corporation is concerned, I feel perfectly sure that when the seaway is completed, when it is in operation, all of the facts will be given to parliament because there will be nothing to hide and nothing that anybody will want to hide. I think that if one will consider these questions in a purely objective fashion, in the way in which the hon. member for St. Paul's considered them, we would all agree that it was desirable to have a subsidiary so as to maintain a desirable separation between the greatly differing activities.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, I would not want the remarks of the minister to go without an adequate reply because I think that, baldly stated as they were, they give quite a wrong impression. The minister, who has previous experience in opposition in other parts of this country and who also has extensive experience as a lawyer or a notary, must also know that there are many ways of keeping money separate and distinct, and of keeping funds separate besides the necessity of making a special incorporation or incorporating a special company for the purpose. We need only to turn to the accounts of the federal government itself where we find that it is possible to have accounts for receipts and expenditures in a department, on a departmental basis, without the necessity of incorporating a special corporation. In a company with a number of varying operations one often finds that it will prepare separate financial statements and accounts for its returns without setting up one corporation per department.

I can see where the minister might like that. Just consider what would happen. The lawyers and the notaries of this country would be worked to death if you had to set up a separate corporation every time you wanted to make a separate accounting of your receipts. It seems to me that that is the basis of the argument that he has advanced. The only reason he has given us in this case was that, quite properly, it was necessary to keep the financial operations, the accounting for this bridge, separate from the other operations of the seaway. I do not see for a moment where that puts the hon. member for St. Paul's, who has the same fundamental idea, and me at odds, because we agree—in fact, surprisingly enough all three of us seem to agree—that the accounting for the operation of this bridge should be on a separate basis. Where I part company primarily with the minister is on the question of whether or not he needs to have the power to set up separate incorporations in order to deal with these particular problems. In that respect, it is my contention that he does not need that power.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister to what extent it is planned to use this power contained in what will be section 24A of the act? As I understand it, that section gives the St. Lawrence seaway authority the power not only to set up a subsidiary company for the purpose of building bridges but also to carry out any other function that can be carried out by the authority itself. In other words, this section 24A is general. I can see the minister's argument for having a subsidiary company to build the bridge or to operate that bridge. But why is it necessary to give the St. Lawrence seaway authority this much broader power to set up a subsidiary company to carry out any of the purposes that the authority itself has power to carry out? That seems to me to be going very far. I should like the minister to explain why that wide power is taken and to what extent and in what way it is proposed to use the power.

Mr. Marler: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I should merely like to reply to what the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace said. In the first place may I say that he has a conception which I find rather widely shared upon the part of people who are not lawyers, namely that lawyers suggest ways and means of doing things only in order to provide more business for the legal profession.

An hon. Member: How true.

Mr. Fulton: That is not too far out.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): That is what the minister himself says.

Mr. Marler: What I said was that when we got to the point where we did not need lawyers to interpret the laws passed by parliament, the millenium would be reached and everybody would be happy.

Mr. Fulton: Except the lawyers.

Mr. Marler: I think they would be very unhappy if we made things so clear that even the members of the opposition could understand them. In reply to the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace I want to say that I hope I did not say anything which suggested that I believed the only way in which one could keep accounts for, let us say, the operation of bridges separate from the operations of the St. Lawrence seaway itself was by means of a subsidiary corporation. I have no such idea. I hope nothing I said would give that impression to the committee. What I say is that it provides a convenient way of keeping the operations separate and distinct.

I shall reply to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra by saying that at the moment no other subsidiary corporation is contemplated than that in connection with Cornwall island to which I have just referred. At this moment I am not even in a position to say that we shall definitely need to have a subsidiary corporation in connection with Cornwall island because that will depend upon what are the developments in connection with the highway and railway facilities. The text of clause 7 follows other legislation adopted by this parliament under what can be regarded as similar circumstances. I know of no other purpose at this time for requiring the incorporation of a subsidiary than that which we have already discussed this afternoon. But having regard to the magnitude of the operations in connection with the seaway and having regard to the great variety of problems that the seaway has to deal with during the course of its negotiations with interests of all kinds from one end of the seaway to the other, I think it desirable that it should have a broad power and that it should not be confined merely to the one subsidiary that we contemplate as perhaps being necessary in connection with Cornwall island.

Clause agreed to.

On the title:

Mr. Knowles: Before the title carries, Mr. Chairman, may I make one suggestion. It seems to me that the minister is to be congratulated on accepting a suggestion that was made by the opposition. However, it seems to me that in his hurry to be a fine fellow, something has been overlooked and that we have agreed to rather sloppy wording in what will be clause 1. In effect, we will be saying that section 10 is amended by adding to section 10 certain words. It seems to me that in the spirit of harmony that obtained with regard to clause 1 we might be able to achieve better wording. I suggest two alternatives. One would be to put in the words "the said section 10"; or an even better one would be to make it read "after paragraph (b) thereof". I am not going to raise a procedural problem as to how we are going to make the change, but it seems to me that if we put it through in the way in which the minister agreed to it, whilst the motive was commendable, we are left with drafting that is hardly the kind of drafting that good lawyers would produce.

Mr. Marler: I think we have come to a sorry state when somebody who is not a lawyer can tell us how we can do our job better than we can do it ourselves, but I must say I agree with the hon. gentleman. I think the suggestion he has made is an improvement on what the hon. member for St. Paul's suggested a little earlier. While it is embarrassing for a member of the legal profession to have to receive advice from outside, I accept it gratefully.

The Chairman: Is it the unanimous wish of the committee that we revert to clause 1?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: It is moved by Mr. Knowles:

That clause 1 of Bill No. 216 be amended by deleting the word "thereto" from line 6 and by substituting therefor the words "after paragraph (b) thereof".

Mr. Michener: Line 3.

Mr. Knowles: Line 3 of the clause or line 6 of the bill.

Mr. Michener: I agree with the minister that is a further improvement.

The Chairman: May I as a lawyer enter into this discussion? The amendment of Mr. Knowles reads as follows:

That clause 1 of Bill 216 be amended by deleting the word "thereto" from line 6—

I shall say "line 3".

—and by substituting therefor the words "after paragraph (b) thereof".

The word "thereto" has already been deleted from clause 1, and the words "to section 10" have been included. May I therefore suggest that the amendment can only read in these terms:

That clause 1 of Bill 216 as amended be amended by deleting the words "to section 10" from line 3 and by substituting therefor the words "after paragraph (b) thereof".

Mr. Marler: The law has re-established its position.

Amendment (Mr. Michener) withdrawn and amendment (Mr. Knowles) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Bill as amended read the second time, reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE FROM BARTIBOG TO TOMOGONOPS RIVER, NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 248, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of New Brunswick by Canadian National Railway Company from a point at or near Bartibog in a westerly direction to the Tomogonops river in the vicinity of Little River lakes.

He said: I explained the other day when the resolution was before the committee that the proposed branch line would commence at a point at or near Bartibog on the main line of the Canadian National Railways between Newcastle and Bathurst, in the province of New Brunswick, and would run in a westerly direction to the Tomogonops river in the vicinity of Little River lakes, a distance of approximately 22 miles. I also said that the estimate cost of the construction of the proposed line is $127,270 per mile or a total of about $2,800,000.

I also explained that Heath Steele Mines Limited, a subsidiary of American Metals Company, has expended large sums in proving up a substantial body of lead, zinc and copper ore and is at present actively engaged in readying the mine for production, including the installation of a concentrate mill at a capacity of 1,500 tons of ore daily. This company has requested the Canadian National Railways to construct the said branch line.

I gave some information with regard to the prospective volume of traffic and I told the members of the committee that it was contemplated that a traffic agreement would be entered into between Heath Steele Mines Limited and the railway company which would guarantee adequate traffic. I think the figure I mentioned was 75,000 tons in any year. Under the contemplated traffic agreement there would be a penalty if in any year the volume of tonnage delivered to the railway by the company were less than 75,000 tons. I also explained that this was to be on a cumulative basis and, if the penalties were paid in one year but there were excess tonnage carried in a following year, the company would be entitled to be rebated the amount of any such penalties, the over-all intention being that during the six-year period an aggregate of 450,000 tons of concentrates could be carried by the railways.

I also pointed out that it was expected that this would enable the cutting of approximately 12,000 cords of pulpwood annually, and it was believed that with the freight in prospect, which I have already mentioned, and the other freight that would naturally develop, the branch line would be self-sustaining and would actually contribute something to the finances of the system as a whole.

The other day, several hon. members spoke on the resolution and commended its purpose. I hope that the bill itself will be received in the same spirit by the members of the house and that we may have it adopted and go ahead with the work as soon as possible. I should like to add just this further word, that the Canadian National Railways itself is most anxious to make a start with the work at as early a date as possible because, as will appear from the bill itself, the work is to be completed prior to November 1, 1958, and I understand they are anxious to get on with it so as to meet the date I have just mentioned.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the members of the official opposition are very glad to support this bill. In recent years several similar bills have been brought before the house and we have supported them all in the belief that in each case the construction of the branch line then under consideration would be of benefit not only to the railway company but also to the nation as a whole. I remind hon. members that some of these branch lines included the line from Terrace to Kitimat in British Columbia, another from Sherridon to Lynn Lake in Manitoba, another in the country fairly near the constituency represented by my good friend, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor), namely, the branch line to lake Manitouwadge, and also the line into the Chibougamau area in Quebec. In addition, there was one constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the vicinity of Madoc. I do not remember the actual towns involved in connection with that branch line.

Mr. Marler: Which one is the hon. member referring to?

Mr. Green: I just referred to the branch line built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. All the others to which I have referred were branch lines of the Canadian National.

This line in New Brunswick is particularly encouraging because New Brunswick does not have any part of the great mining shield of Canada and none of us suspected that large and valuable ore deposits would be found in that province. Now, by what would almost appear to be a miracle, large and promising ore deposits have been found in that old province of New Brunswick which has done so much for the other parts of Canada. Many of the leading men in my own province of British Columbia have come from New Brunswick. In fact, we sometimes say that British Columbia has been run by New Brunswickers. So we are very happy to see this development in that province and are very glad to support it. We hope that in the very near future a smelter will be established in New Brunswick so that they can smelt their own ores rather than having to ship them out in the raw state.

There is one suggestion I should like to make to the minister in connection with the bill. I suggest it should be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines which is presided over so ably by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McCulloch). The bills dealing with the other branch lines to which I have referred were all sent to that committee for consideration, and I suggest to the minister that is a very wise course to follow. The committee is able to hear evidence from officials of the railway company concerned, which in this case would of course be the Canadian National, and it has been very much in the interests of good legislation to have that course followed.

I remember Mr. Fairweather appearing before the committee a year or two ago and giving us a very enlightening picture of just what the railway had in mind for the district to be developed by the branch line then under consideration. I hope the minister will follow that precedent in the case of this bill. There need be no delay if that is done. The committee has already been set up and has dealt with other matters. It could probably deal with this bill in one morning's sitting, and in view of the fact that the bill cannot become law in any event until it has gone through the other house and has received the royal assent I submit there would be no time lost. I think it would be a great mistake not to follow that practice in the case of this bill.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, before the bill receives second reading I want to express my appreciation of the decision of the government to seek authorization for the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of this branch line from Bartibog to the vicinity of Little River lakes. I am sure this measure is being carried out in conjunction with the vast growing mining developments in northern New Brunswick. The expenditure of $2,800,000, part of which will be in my constituency of Gloucester, together with the anticipated annual cut of 12,000 cords of pulpwood per year, will provide additional employment in the area and will add to the federal government's contribution towards the development of New Brunswick's natural resources.

The mineral discoveries in the northern regions of New Brunswick will provide millions of tons of ore which will have to be extracted and transported to shipping points. We cannot disregard the advantages offered by the proximity of these mines to deep water harbours where shipping can take place twelve months in the year. Right in the vicinity of Bathurst, within a distance of 20 or 30 miles from the mineral deposits, we have a deep water harbour and a sufficient source of fresh water supply to permit the construction and operation of a smelter in order to refine within the province our rich deposits of zinc, lead, copper and silver. Forty miles farther away we also have at Pokesudi one of the best natural harbours on the Atlantic coast. There shipping can also take place 12 months in the year in sheltered water with a depth running from 27 to 30 feet within a few hundred feet from the shore.

With the discovery and development of these extensive base metal deposits, co-operation and even financial assistance for the procurement of a large and steady source of power will likely be required from the federal government. In addition to the provision of transportation facilities, these new and growing industrial centres will also require a constant supply of electrical energy for the electrochemical processing of their minerals. I am confident that the matter will receive favourable consideration if and when a definite request and proposal is presented to the government in this regard. When in the very near future other mining interests such as Brunswick Mining and Smelting, Anacon and others apply for additional spur lines to connect their mines and operations with the main line of the Canadian National, I am confident that similar favourable consideration will be given by the government and by Canadian National Railways.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am going to direct my remarks only to supporting the request of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green). This legislation involves an amount over $3 million and I understand also that under the bill a 15 per cent spread is allowed in connection with tenders to be obtained for this work. Before the work is proceeded with I believe we should have the opportunity of having representatives of the company appear before the committee so that we may discuss their estimates of costs with them and satisfy ourselves that the amount of money being provided is going to do the job properly. I do not think we should be asked to say in a blanket way that the bill is satisfactory and let the matter go at that. After all the money is to be advanced, on a temporary basis, out of the consolidated revenue fund and I think more information is required.

I might say just a few words about the extension of the line. It is a long way to New Brunswick from York West, but certainly if all of this country is going to prosper we are going to have to do our best to provide for the decentralization of industry and to make use of all the natural resources we have wherever they may be found. I am quite sure all of us feel that if that can be accomplished by opening up these areas, and if we can place at the disposal of the people in those areas the opportunity to locate industry there and improve their standard of living, then we should all be in favour of this type of development. No matter where development of this type may take place, it is going to redound to the general benefit of the country as a whole.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all members of the house welcome the introduction of this legislation. I should like to say that the people of our generation have not been able to participate directly in the construction of branch lines. I think the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) has made a useful suggestion. I am sure there was no intention on his part to block the legislation by having it referred to a committee. Those of us who have been on committees in which these problems have been discussed have received quite a valuable education from the officials of both railways who have appeared.

I recall when Mr. Crump, the new president of the Canadian Pacific, appeared before the committee two or three years ago he presented a very interesting case to the committee. When the resolution was before us I asked the minister about plans for branch lines in Saskatchewan. While this subject might not be strictly in order, if the officials were before the committee, their comments on the requests for branch lines and the problems that are being encountered before the large investment in capital costs could be made would be of interest to the public. I hope the minister will agree to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra that this matter be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to briefly mention the fact that the recent branch line which Canadian National Railways have built, and those which come particularly to my mind, all relate to the development of our natural resources. Hon. members who have been members of this house longer than I have probably remember the legislation in connection with the Sherridon-Lynn Lake branch line, and after that the legislation which authorized the building of the line to lake Manitouwadge and the line in the Chibougamau territory. I should like to say I am very happy that this particular bill relates to the development of natural resources in the province of New Brunswick. I think we have all felt a sense of satisfaction that it has been possible to bring to that point approaching production, the deposits which are able to sustain the costs of a branch line. In other words, that they are able to guarantee sufficient traffic so that the line will be self-sustaining and will not constitute a drain on the finances of the system as a whole. I feel sure, and a number of members from New Brunswick have spoken to me about it, that we feel this is most promising for New Brunswick. I think we all feel a sense of satisfaction that here is a base metal deposit which is going to be developed and brought into production.

Now, with regard to the suggestion by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) that we should refer this bill to a standing committee, I want to say that I had rather thought, from the unanimity of opinion expressed at the resolution stage and in view of the fact also that this is a very short line traversing unsettled territory, that sending it to a committee would not offer any particular advantages. But if it is the general feeling, as it seems to be from what has been said by one or two hon. members, that it would be advantageous for a committee to examine the details of this project more fully, I shall have no objection. I shall be glad to move, after the adoption of second reading of the bill, that the measure be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines where it may be examined more closely by the members of that committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

TRANSPORT

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY TO MAKE REGULATIONS AND APPOINT CONTROLLERS

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 249, to amend the Department of Transport Act.

He said: As hon. members will notice from the bill it has no other purpose than to change the date on which section 6A of the Department of Transport Act is to expire. As I pointed out the other day, it is now provided in subsection 3 of section 6A that the section will expire on May 31, 1956. The purpose of the bill now before the house is to extend that time to May 31, 1958.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have no desire to traverse the ground that was covered during the resolution stage, but there are one or two observations I intend to make. I preface them by saying that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler) is one who has a very agreeable manner in presenting his legislation and in giving answers to questions which might be emulated by some of the other members of the cabinet who, again this afternoon, showed that from the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) down they appear to be on a sitdown strike when it comes to furnishing information. The Minister of Transport, on his part, does present the measures coming before this house in a way that invites the co-operation and the objective criticism of the opposition, which is also in keeping with parliamentary government and the responsibility of members of the house to do their part in the solution of questions that come before the house.

Having said that, and without any desire to recapitulate what was said on an earlier occasion, I do wish to point out just one or two matters connected with the regulations which, in consequence of this amendment, will be continued in effect until May 31, 1958.

The regulations provide for a transport controller having authority to order any person dealing in various bulk commodities to fix minimum quotas, to fix proportions and the like and also to order any person dealing in bulk transport facilities, which include railways, steamships and the like, to extend, furnish, supply or make use of any bulk transport facilities for transporting any bulk commodities. These powers are very wide. The transport controller becomes almost, if not completely, omnipotent. His authority is above the law; his discretion is unchallengeable. I mention those powers because the results in the western provinces in so far as wheat transport is concerned have been ineffectual. Regulations, while artistic as window dressing, are ineffectual when they are not carried out. The enforcement of the regulations, the implementation of the powers has all the innocuity of eyewash. The powers are there. They have not been used. I make no personal criticism of Mr. Roy Milner. There are some who criticize him because of the fact that in an earlier day he held the presidency of the Winnipeg grain exchange, according to the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden), and was also one of the executive officials of one of the line grain companies. Those suggestions do nothing to meet the problem we face.

Sometimes I wonder whether the transport controller was set up for the purpose of acting as a scapegoat for the failure of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, first to provide markets for western wheat, and, second, to endeavour to delude the western farmer into believing that the reason that 97 per cent of western marketing points are on a 2-bushel or less quota is that there is a shortage of box cars. That would leave the inference that the responsibility for failure to maintain markets is not the government's but the transport controller's because of his failure to supply cars. The transport controller said as recently as February 17:

> There is no shortage of box cars which have the effect of holding up prairie grain shipments.

Well, sir, if there was no shortage of box cars, then it is difficult to understand why some 90 million to 100 million bushels of available storage space remained vacant and unoccupied during the fall of last year when the western farmer found himself so short of money because of his inability to market at the 2,000 or more marketing places in the western provinces.

This was the position of the farmer. He had the wheat. It was not climatic conditions. That alibi is totally ineffectual. It was the fact that there were no markets available at the various marketing points, which denied the farmers of western Canada the opportunity to use at least 75 per cent of the 100 million bushels of available space.

Mr. Marler: What does the hon. member mean when he says there were no markets in the marketing places?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Simply because those places were filled. The various line elevators were filled, and that is what I mean when I say there was no market. General storage may be available at the head of the lakes or elsewhere, but when the farmer goes to the local marketing point and finds there is no space there and there are no cars available to make space available he is in the position of having no market because the government is the sole marketing agency.

The record is as follows. The transport controller says there was no shortage of cars. The record shows that every other type of commodity industry in Canada of major importance received two or three times the number of freight cars that it had in 1954. One question I asked still remains unanswered by the minister, and I know unintentionally unanswered, because he answered the various questions very fairly as I saw it, but my one question is this. Is it a fact that the reason that cars were not available—there being no shortage of cars according to the transport controller—is that the railway companies found it so much less profitable to haul wheat than to haul the other bulk commodities under the control of the transport controller? Here is the record. From the beginning of the present crop year on August 1 up to January 31, 1955 there were 203 freight cars fewer each day throughout the entire period, as compared with the number available for marketing the year before; 203 cars fewer in the first six months at a time when farmers could have marketed—

Mr. Marler: The hon. member is talking about car loadings as opposed to the number of cars?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes; there were 203 fewer car loadings per day in the first six months of the crop year 1955 than there were in the preceding year. There was some increase in the number of daily cars available in the latter days of January, and I am referring again to loadings. The cars available for loadings increased to 867. Since then approximately 900 a day have been available. Nine hundred cars a day will not remove the wheat that is available to be sold on the prairies by the end of the present season if the amount that the farmer is going to be able to sell is to equal that sold a year ago.

Mr. Marler: Will the hon. member permit me to interrupt for just a moment? He speaks about 900 cars a day. The latest report I have is that in the month of April we had 1,905 cars loaded on April 17, 1,810 loaded on April 18, and 1,610 loaded on April 19. Therefore, I do not think we should talk about 900 a day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister is now talking about April. I dealt with the situation of the first six months up to January 31.

Mr. Marler: I see; all right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There has been an increase since the latter part of January. I have the figures day by day. I had to get them because the Minister of Trade and Commerce challenged me earlier in January when I said that insufficient cars were available. I secured the information—not from the minister or from any department of government, because I realized that with the propensity which this government has for concealing information, I would not have been able to procure it there—from an original source. What is the situation now? There has been an increase in the number of cars. The minister mentioned certain days in April. I have not the exact figure but those are approximately correct.

Having regard to the extra cars that have been made available the situation is such that unless in the months that lie ahead a further increase in the numbers he has already referred to is made the situation will still be a serious one.

The other day Mr. Chris. Hansen, president of the Saskatchewan farmers' union, dealt with what he stated was inaction in this regard. I propose to read from an article which appeared in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix:

> If the transport controller, Roy W. Milner, received an extension of his appointment for another two years, western farmers would want action in getting sufficient box cars to country elevators, Chris. Hansen, president of the Saskatchewan Farmers' Union, declared. Last winter there was inaction in this regard. The extension of another two years was debated in the House of Commons Tuesday.
> Mr. Hansen said there had been conflicting statements by authorities regarding an alleged shortage of box cars. Whatever the truth, farmers had not been getting sufficient cars in the current crop year. The powers conferred on Mr. Milner were wide enough, but had never been used to provide the number of cars to enable western farmers to deliver sufficient grain.
> Car loadings had recently increased to about 900 per day in the west, but more than 1,400 daily were needed to equal the loadings in the preceding crop year, Mr. Hansen said. Compared to the previous crop year there was a deficiency of 18,000 box cars from August 1, 1955 to April 11, 1956. There was no shortage of box cars according to Mr. Milner, so he could not have exercised his powers to allow such a deficiency, Mr. Hansen said.

I make this appeal to the minister; statistics are not helping the western farmer to market his wheat.

Mr. Hansen enjoys the trust of this government. He returned only recently from the meeting of the international wheat agreement conference which he attended as one of the representatives of Canada and as recently as April 25, in the interview to which I have made reference, he set out the seriousness of the situation.

Again I repeat that when only 2 per cent of the western marketing points are on a 5-bushel quota something is very wrong or the 5-bushel quota would have been increased if there had been available cars to empty the various elevators in the local marketing places.

However one wishes to look at this matter, and however repetitious the claims on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) have been that all is well, the fact remains that the situation is a serious one. Mr. Milner says it is not his responsibility. He has had the cars. I then ask, whose responsibility is it for what has had all the appearances of being energetic somnolence in the face of a serious situation amongst the western farmers?

There are three points, sir, that I wish to bring to the minister's attention. One is the need of removing the discriminatory shortages of box cars in certain marketing points. There has been gross ineffectiveness in the allocation and authorization of cars to the various marketing points. Equalize them. To equalize them I suggest that the rule that has heretofore existed that wheat grown on Canadian Pacific Railway lines shall not be diverted or stored in the Hudson bay facilities at Churchill be done away with, and that in so far as northern Saskatchewan and Manitoba are concerned, adjacent as these areas are to the Hudson bay storage facilities, those storage facilities should be made available to wheat grown on Canadian Pacific Railway lines.

Second, there should be a conference convened of representatives of organized agriculture, including two or three representatives of the various farm organizations, to meet with the railways to the end that the unfairnesses and discriminatory practices against certain marketing places be removed.

Third, in providing freight cars for the transport of wheat, those areas which have the low quotas of one or two bushels to the acre should be given an immediate preference.

How anyone can argue that somebody has not slipped up is quite beyond me when I point out the fact, which I now repeat, that at only 2 per cent of all the marketing points in western Canada has the farmer a 5-bushel quota.

What does that mean? A 5-bushel quota will not pay his expenses. Yet in only 2 per cent of the cases do the farmers have that quota. In approximately 7 per cent of the marketing places the farmer has a quota of only one or two bushels per acre. In other words, he receives about $2.50 per acre. That is all he has been able to realize. That in itself explains the reason that in recent months the manufacturers and bulk producers in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are finding a reduced demand on the prairies for the things which they produce.

Let me tell you this, and it is not anything novel, that whenever depression has come it has originated first in agriculture. When the western farmer finds himself in the position of not being able to market enough to pay his ordinary costs, and when he is unable to pay the credit he has received from his local dealer, then indeed the repercussions are not immediate but within a matter of a short time they begin to affect production in the eastern provinces and when production is affected unemployment takes place.

I make no apology for asking that the powers contained in these regulations, these all-embracing, all-comprehensive, omnipotent and uncontrollable powers in the courts, be used to the end that cars be made available. Unless they are, this legislation would simply be a reproduction of the legislation as it has been, legislation that has teeth but whose teeth have never been used.

I would remind hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that there have been no directives issued by the controller. What is the use of giving the power to do these things if the power is not used? The minister said that if the powers had not been there, things might have been worse. That, in effect, is what he said the other day in answer to me.

Mr. Marler: That is your interpretation of what I said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I could look it up. It was on April 25, as I remember it. Interpretations have become of the first importance and magnitude today, Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions. I shall just read what the minister said, if I can locate it without holding up the committee. I know the minister dealt with it specifically and gave his opinion on it, and that he referred specifically to myself in connection with the question I had asked.

I am unable to turn up the page at the moment. I will not hold up the house now in an effort to locate it, but will return to it a little later in order to support the point I have just made. The minister, if my interpretation is correct, certainly left that impression with me in the words he used. When we come to the committee stage I will produce the text, and I will ask the minister with that all-pervasive power of interpretation to interpret what he meant when he referred to my criticism that powers, however ample they may be, if unused are not effectual.

I think what I have said in general represents my submissions with respect to this measure. With all the power I can put into my words I say this to the minister. Do give us in the western provinces something of the same consideration that iron and other materials are receiving in the allocation of freight cars, to the end that the western farmer will have available to him sufficient to pay his costs of production last year, and that immediately.

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, when the resolution dealing with this subject was introduced my colleagues and I had ample opportunity to present suggestions to the house. The hon. member for Prince Albert has taken the opportunity to review many of the things we said at that time.

The basis of our suggestions was that the Minister of Transport take it upon himself to give consideration to the circumstances which have developed in western Canada over the past few years in connection with the inequitable distribution of box cars. We have suggested that in the present glut condition in western Canada the minister would be well advised to give this house an assurance that the many wide powers which the transport controller has at his command by virtue of section 6A of the Department of Transport Act will be utilized to effect the fulfilment of the purpose of the section. The words of the statute are as follows:

> . . . the governor in council may make regulations for the purpose of ensuring the prompt, efficient and orderly transport . . . of goods in bulk . . . .

That legislation is quite in keeping with the philosophy of the party I represent, because we have always believed that government planning for the benefit of the majority of the people is desirable.

I was rather interested in the stand just taken by the hon. member for Prince Albert, because he pleaded with the minister to use the wide power he had at his disposal. My thoughts took me back to the debate on the defence production bill of last year when the Conservative party were greatly concerned lest the government might use some of the wide powers which it had at its disposal. I do not want to misconstrue what was said by the hon. member or to impute motives to him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure my hon. friend would not do that.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): He has stated that the transport controller should use these regulations for the benefit of the people of western Canada. That was the purpose for which they were originally intended. The one thing that still concerns me is that when the bill is brought in by the minister, we find that it is just as simple as he would have us believe the duties of the transport controller are. At the resolution stage we find at page 3261 of Hansard that the minister in debate stated this:

> The duties of the transport controller are to see that when export sales are made by the Canadian wheat board or other exporters the grain sold will be at the ports required when ocean vessels prepare to load.

Then two paragraphs farther on he stated:

> I know and the transport controller knows that there were five or six vessels in demurrage in Vancouver in the early part of this year. I understand that the difficulty arose not from any action of the transport controller or the railways but owing to the fact that the grades required were not in position at the appropriate time and this is not the responsibility of the transport controller.

I would suggest that the minister take a careful look at the functions which he believes the transport controller should perform. Certainly these statements he has made are most incompatible. In the one case he has stated that the function of the transport controller is to ensure that grain will be in position to load on the vessels, and in the second case he makes an excuse for the fact that there were five ships paying demurrage because, after all, that was not the function of the transport controller.

If we were to analyse the situation I think we would find that the functions of the transport controller go much further than the minister would have us believe. Let us assume that tomorrow the Canadian wheat board got an order for a cargo of No. 6 wheat. They would then be obliged to allocate the shipping orders to localities where No. 6 wheat is in present supply. The supply of No. 6 grain has been fairly well used up, so we are informed. Hence there might be a limited number of areas in which there was a supply of the type and quality of grain which was required to fill this order. The duties of the transport controller are to ensure the prompt, efficient and orderly transport of goods in bulk which, of course, includes wheat. The Canadian wheat board would give their orders in this area. I claim that the function of the transport controller then proves itself, because he must be in a position to get enough box cars into that area—and have them allocated to the elevators in that area—to allow the grain that the farmers have to be delivered and taken to position to be loaded into the ship.

It might well be that the grain was in an extremely limited area. Let us suppose that it was at one marketing point for this type and class of grain. The transport controller's function would then take us down to the allocating of box cars among individual elevators. I think that is the basis on which we should like to see him operate. It need not necessarily be the allocation of box cars among individual elevators, although we have been impressing upon the government the necessity for some formula to allow the farmers to deliver to the elevator of their choice. But we think the functions of the transport controller should be extended to ensure the orderly marketing of grain from the time of delivery to the elevator to the loading on board ship.

If that is done we shall get away from the inequalities; we shall get away from the situation where we have one marketing point with a one-bushel quota and others with a five-bushel quota. We shall give the farmers in the west an equal opportunity to deliver their grain. As that is done, of course, the whole of the economy will benefit.

In closing I would plead with the Minister of Transport to give this matter further review, and I hope he will be able to see his way clear to give us an assurance that the transport controller will be in a position to fulfil the functions as outlined in section 6A of the Department of Transport Act to allow for the efficient and orderly transport of goods in bulk.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): We in this group have always supported the principle that box cars should be allocated on the basis of the farmer's choice. Today, however, box cars are allocated on a basis of the wheat board orders that are distributed amongst the elevators. It may be argued that Mr. Milner has that power and should exercise it. On the other hand, I doubt very much whether it would be wise to try to take that responsibility away from the wheat board. I believe it is a good thing that the responsibility does rest with the wheat board.

So far the wheat board has refused to allocate box cars on the basis of the farmer's choice, or allocate orders on the basis of the farmer's choice. Consequently, of course, the box cars are not allocated on that basis. We discussed this at some length in the agriculture committee. A number of us urged upon Mr. McIvor that orders should be allocated on the basis of the farmer's choice, but he explained—and I think with reason—that it was not always possible to do that, because they had to put the orders where the type of wheat that was wanted lay. If the wheat was not available at certain points or elevators, they had to give the orders to other points and other elevators.

On the other hand, perhaps the railways can be criticized for not making more cars available. I know there is a feeling prevalent in the west that perhaps there is some connection between the shortage of box cars and the Crowsnest rates. They feel that perhaps the railways are not really doing everything they can to make more box cars available, that they are constantly urging a change in the Crowsnest pass agreement, and that as a consequence they are not doing their utmost to make all the cars available for moving wheat that could be made available.

We feel that the point that really needs stressing, and the only solution to this problem, is an expansion of markets. If we can expand the markets to take care of our wheat I believe this whole difficulty that we are having today will gradually clear up. As a matter of fact the markets are increasing this year already, and it looks as though the situation will improve; in fact it is improving.

If only we can keep adequate markets so there can be a steady movement of wheat the year round, I believe the situation we have gone through will be greatly alleviated. I do not feel prepared to try to place the blame for this situation upon Mr. Milner, because I do not think he is the individual who is responsible for the situation from which the farmers have been suffering in the past.

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher): I rise only to say a word particularly on the argument that there has been discrimination as between areas and as between provinces. As a matter of fact that has been the basis of most of the arguments made by the C.C.F. members, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and others, and particularly the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I see he is in his seat, and I hope he still has the Wheat Review from which he quoted extensively the other day when we were at the resolution stage on this measure. These figures were used also by the hon. member for Mackenzie, the hon. member for Prince Albert and a great many other members, who tried to prove that there was great discrimination as between provinces.

I am very sorry they had to raise that point and try in effect to create a division among the provinces. There was the absolute inference that it was for political reasons that Saskatchewan was not getting its share. Of course the whole argument is just ridiculous, and is not borne out by the facts. If you will go to the same review that was quoted extensively—March, 1956—you will note that the emphasis was placed on the summary of elevator shipping points in each quota group. In other words the emphasis was all placed on the quota.

Everybody knows that the quota in itself does not mean too much. You may have a four-bushel or five-bushel quota, but if you do not get any cars you just do not sell any more grain. The only thing that really amounts to anything is the amount of grain delivered. That is what counts. When you put it on a provincial basis, if you just turn the page in the same review, you have there listed by weeks from the beginning of the crop year the actual marketings of wheat in the prairie provinces. It goes up to the week ending March 14.

Mr. Argue: On what page is that?

Mr. Jutras: The part quoted by the hon. member was on page 6. Now turn to page 8, and you will see there that the total amount for Saskatchewan is 79 million bushels, for Manitoba 15 million bushels, and for Alberta 40 million bushels. If you figure it out, you will see that Saskatchewan actually marketed 59 or 60 per cent of the total amount of grain marketed in the western provinces.

Right under that line you will see the average similar period for the ten-year period from the crop year 1944-45 to 1953-54. The over-all average for that period was 32 million bushels for Manitoba, 147 million for Saskatchewan and 76 million for Alberta. If you reduce it to percentages, Alberta has delivered exactly the same percentage it delivered on the average over the period of the last ten years. Saskatchewan delivered more than the average of the last ten years —not very much, but 1½ per cent more; and apparently they delivered it at the expense of Manitoba, because Manitoba is down by 1½ per cent.

This is quite contrary to the argument that Saskatchewan is being discriminated against. If there is any discrimination it is against Manitoba. If we are discriminated against, to use the same term, it is to the advantage of Saskatchewan.

Of course I am not making that statement, because it would be ridiculous to make such a statement on such a small difference, knowing the conditions as they are and the difficulty the wheat board had moving grain last fall and even yet, nobody can actually work it down to a decimal point. There can be no doubt that all this talk about great discrimination against Saskatchewan and other provinces is just plain, unadulterated bunk. I hope we will not hear any more about that, because it always comes back to us that Manitoba for some reason or other is apparently always getting some great advantages over Saskatchewan. Our socialist friends have been crying blue ruin for so long that apparently they cannot say anything else.

The question of the demurrage charge at Vancouver has been bandied about a great deal in the country and in this house. The other day the minister set out the position quite clearly, I thought. It just so happened that when the orders came in, the type of grain required was not in storage in Vancouver, so naturally they had to bring it in by box cars. If anybody here has had any experience in loading a ship directly from box cars coming from the prairies, he knows it is quite a job. No doubt the transport controller had a great deal to do in trying to arrange to load such ships in a reasonable time, but it would be absolutely out of the question to expect that you could load a ship that way without paying some demurrage charge. It just stands to reason. It is one of those cases where it was unexpected, probably unavoidable, and in my opinion nobody in particular is to blame. It is just one of those unforeseen things that happen once in a while.

A great many have been taking the loadings of cars and trying to prove from the fact that there were less cars loaded or more cars loaded that the transport controller was at fault. Actually there is no relation whatsoever between the actual box car situation and the loadings. Just because there is no loading does not mean there are no cars. Everybody knows that last fall there were plenty of cars but there was no loading. Every terminal space was full to more than capacity. All bins were rounded. There was a very negligible amount of space available. The only grain that moved was grain going to local mills; consequently there was no point in loading more cars.

I think I am right in saying that there were 3,000 to 4,000 cars loaded and standing on the sidings waiting to be unloaded, with no prospect of any unloading in the immediate future. Consequently the controller, quite properly I think, let box cars go to other uses until the grain could be moved out of a terminal position. During that time there was practically no loading; but to conclude that there was a terrific shortage of box cars because there was no loading is of course entirely beside the point. In my opinion the whole basis of taking car loadings to attempt to prove whether or not there is a car shortage is not valid, and does not prove anything at all with the possible exception of the fact that sales were down at that particular time.

The other argument put forward has to do with the available space in elevators throughout the country. I have yet to find anybody who can tell me exactly what is normal empty space in elevators throughout the country. Some experts have placed this figure at a very high level, but I doubt very much whether at this moment the empty space in elevators is unusually high or above normal. It is not desirable at any time to have the space completely plugged up as it was last July. I think we all realized last July and August that it was a mistake to use all the available space possible and then find ourselves in difficulty in trying to move grades that were not in that particular storage. I know that even in spite of strong protests certain of the terminals last year kept some space available after the end of the crop year, and this proved to be of very great advantage to the producers connected with the particular organization because they were able to market particular grades of grains that were in demand at that time.

The thing to remember, and a lot of people have forgotten it in this discussion, is that the wheat board does not handle wheat alone. If it were just a matter of wheat, period, it would simplify the matter a great deal; but wheat, oats, barley, rye and flax are involved and in each case there are a great variety of grades. There are so many bins and you just cannot mix them all together. Therefore there is bound to be a substantial amount of space unused at one time or another throughout the year. To simply take a figure and say that there is space for 56 million bushels available and consequently that should be taken up tomorrow is not practical and it could not be done. At no time will all the available space be used entirely, because there are so many factors that enter into the picture.

I regret that throughout this debate there has been a great deal of unfair criticism of the transport controller. I think he has done a pretty fair job under the circumstances. He has been blamed for a lot of things over which he has no control. He has been blamed for doing certain things that some say he should not have done, and he has been blamed for not doing other things that certain people think he should have done. But when you look at the picture generally, when you look at the amount of grain that is being moved at the moment and the allocation of cars, I think the picture is just as fair as one could humanly expect it to be in the circumstances that prevailed last fall, during the winter and that prevail now.

To say there is discrimination between provinces is most unfortunate and certainly is not borne out by the facts. There is no point in comparing areas that are not comparable. Agricultural conditions in Manitoba and Alberta are quite different from those in Saskatchewan. In Manitoba we are not exclusively in the business of producing grain to the extent that Saskatchewan is. A one-bushel quota in our province does not mean the same thing as a one-bushel quota in Saskatchewan, because our agriculture is diversified. All these factors enter into the picture. It is said that comparisons are odious, and that is particularly so when it comes to making such comparisons between provinces.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Jutras: I always do.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): The hon. member is not arguing that the basis of agriculture in the various provinces should determine the quota that would be applied to them, is he?

Mr. Jutras: I am not arguing that at all. All I am saying is that conditions in Manitoba are entirely different from what they are in Saskatchewan. What you consider a small farm in Saskatchewan is a big farm in Manitoba. That is all I am saying. I say that the quota itself does not mean anything. What matters is the actual delivery of grain, and when Saskatchewan has delivered a greater percentage of grain than the average for the last ten years members from that province should not come here and complain they have been discriminated against at the expense of another province that has delivered less than its average over the same period.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member for Provencher right at the outset that I do not intend to get into this Manitoba versus Saskatchewan controversy. I say this mainly because I feel that to do so avoids the real problem. What we are dealing with in the legislation before us this afternoon has a much deeper basis than the particular point that has been raised.

Last week when we discussed the resolution that preceded the bill we now have before us I more or less approached the problem with an open mind. In listening to the discussion I noticed that a good many members were asking questions and presenting queries to the Minister of Transport in an attempt to get more concrete answers with respect to a situation that had become confused as a result of conflicting answers from ministers during recent months.

Now that we have the report of the debate on the resolution before us I find that the two questions I asked have been answered in more or less definite terms. First of all I asked, is there a real shortage of box cars? Second I asked, if there is not a real shortage of box cars, is the problem one of equitable distribution or allocation of the available box cars? As a result of the answers given I have come to the conclusion that there is no shortage of box cars. The real difficulty seems to be the problem of allocation of box cars as among certain areas of the country and various bulk products.

Unfortunately it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in the legislation before us nothing is going to be done to resolve this difficulty of unfair allocation because the minister has emphasized today, as he did before, that no change is contemplated in the approach to the duties of the transport controller or in the powers he has been assuming under the regulations derived from this act. It would appear to me that the difficulties which arose last fall, and which have given rise to so much discussion and so much confusion in this house, can be expected to continue in the future.

Just so we might have it on the record that there was a difference of opinion and there was confusion concerning the difficulties that arose in connection with grain marketing last fall, I am going to summarize some of the divergent opinions that were expressed during the earlier stages of this session of parliament. The Minister of Transport has indicated in his observations that he agrees with the transport controller that there is no shortage of box cars. On the other hand, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has the responsibility for the marketing of wheat, has suggested that there is a shortage of box cars and that this was the main cause of the difficulties that arose last fall. On January 16, for example, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in reference to this problem, stated on page 119 of Hansard for that date:

> Mr. Speaker, the movement of box cars in the west has improved very considerably in the last two weeks, largely as a result of improved weather conditions.

On January 27 the same minister said that our big problem now is not selling but transportation, and if deliveries of wheat by producers in this crop year did happen to fall behind last year it will be because rail transportation is not adequate.

Then on February 3 the hon. member for Prince Albert indicated that this year 31,000 fewer cars of wheat have been unloaded since the beginning of the crop year than a year ago. The Minister of Trade and Commerce replied, "Is my hon. friend just now analysing the situation and discovering that Canada is short of box cars? I announced that three months ago." On February 16 the transport controller, Mr. Milner, was quoted by the Canadian Press as saying that there was no shortage of box cars holding up prairie grain shipments.

On and on it went, with these conflicting opinions coming from the three men responsible for dealing with this problem. The Minister of Justice entered the discussion on February 19 in a radio broadcast in Winnipeg in which he said:

> Our great problem is box cars. Of these there is a great shortage both in the United States and in Canada.

As I said in my opening remarks, the Minister of Transport has assured us that there is no shortage of box cars, and he pointed particularly to the experience of the year 1952-53, when 400 million bushels of grain were moved from the west. The difficulty seems to lie in the distribution rather than in a shortage of box cars. It is an allocation problem. Certainly last fall there were plenty of box cars available for such things as newsprint. I am informed that last year we moved more than four times the quantity of iron that we moved in the previous year. This would seem to tie in with the administration policy of sending our raw materials in bulk to the United States in order to be fabricated there. These box cars were needed in large quantities for that particular task.

Mr. Marler: Is the hon. gentleman suggesting that iron ore is shipped in box cars?

Mr. Dinsdale: It is shipped in some sort of cars.

Mr. Marler: Yes, but not box cars.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister would say, then, that the supplying of newsprint to the United States was the main cause for the large number of box cars being in the United States?

Mr. Marler: No; I was really finding fault with the hon. gentleman for mixing iron ore with grain.

Mr. Dinsdale: I believe the minister said in his observations last week that the movement of newsprint was the main cause of the relative shortage of cars for the transportation of grain.

Mr. Marler: I referred to the newsprint situation as being a drain on the supply of box cars because, as I pointed out, there was a tendency for box cars to be used in shipping newsprint to the United States. I said that when they got down there it was very hard to get them back.

Mr. Dinsdale: It would seem to me if that is the case, Mr. Speaker, it should be the function of the transport controller to assure that a sufficient supply of box cars is kept in this country in order to move our important grain crop. It is important nationally, but it is particularly important to western Canada.

The conclusion I come to after looking at this subject objectively is that unfortunately, while the transport controller has the power under an act which provides penalties of up to $5,000 for attempts to escape authority of the regulations administered by the transport controller, he does not use this power. He has been placed in the very awkward position of being the scapegoat or whipping boy for the conflicting opinions of the various ministers concerned. The brief review I read into the record a moment ago indicates that the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have opposing viewpoints, and this situation would tend to suggest that the transport controller has been placed in this embarrassing position to get the ministers of the crown off the hook.

In reference to the confusion and the difficulties that arose in connection with the movement of our prairie grain last fall—

Mr. Knowles: Off and on the hook.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes; off and on the hook, says the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Certainly nothing that has been said in this discussion so far, and nothing we have before us in the bill, suggests that the basic difficulty of box car allocation is going to be dealt with by this legislation.

The main complaint that comes from the farmers is to the effect that box cars are not being supplied according to the number of shipping orders held at each of the elevator points. That is the issue that has come up repeatedly in this house, and it has been discussed on the past three occasions when the agriculture committee has met. We are going to continue the present policy of placing the main responsibility for the allocation of box cars with the Canadian wheat board, and it would appear that on that basis much time is going to be consumed in this house trying to grapple with the fundamental problem of permitting the grain producer to deliver his grain to the elevator of his choice.

Unless the transport controller exercises the powers that have been entrusted to him under the act and regulations this basic problem cannot be resolved. Of course the whole subject suggests that the administration has failed to grapple with the fundamental changes that have taken place in western agriculture. The other day I was impressed with the contribution made by the hon. member for Dauphin regarding this subject. He emphasized the point that production techniques have changed rapidly; that we are going to be faced from now on with the rapid movement of large quantities of grain to market during the fall period; and he suggested that if we are to cope with this recurring transportation difficulty adequately it is necessary to deal with the matter of providing terminal storage as well as inland terminal storage or, as he expressed it, off-terminal storage.

Right across the prairies during recent years the country elevators have been busily engaged in raising annexes to increase available storage space. This is an attempt to resolve this condition resulting from the changed marketing methods largely emerging from mechanization and the trend toward factory farming on the prairies, but it is not an adequate solution. Country elevators were not designed to provide comprehensive inland storage; they were designed to handle the crop on a temporary basis as it moves toward terminal facilities. Country elevators just cannot meet the storage problem as it confronts them at the present time.

The government has partly recognized this storage difficulty in the legislation that was passed in this house a few weeks ago providing for the payment of storage on a certain portion of our annual prairie wheat crop. Therefore I must come to the conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that notwithstanding all the discussion and all the points that have been raised, the government is moving in entirely the same direction as we did before. The minister has emphasized that no change is contemplated. Unfortunately the controller is going to play a secondary role in the handling of the movement of bulk goods in the country. He is primarily a member of the board of grain commissioners; he is a man experienced in the grain problems, and were he allowed to carry out his functions as contemplated in the act and in the regulations no doubt he could cope successfully with this recurring difficulty.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the house and to the minister concerned that unless the transport controller is allowed to exercise the powers and functions that are his under this act we can expect to hear regularly from members from the west concerning this problem of box car allocation and the general movement of grain.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, when we were in committee the minister expressed a good deal of sympathy for the transport controller who had to listen to criticisms which were not always fair. I hope these remarks have been drawn to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. A good deal of the criticism that has been directed toward the transport controller with respect to his control has resulted from the failure of the government to make decisions which should have been made, and to have made it clear to the transport controller that the legislation and the orders which have been passed did give him certain responsibilities which are his and which he should discharge. But so long as the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have conflicting views regarding some of the problems which arise I am sure the transport controller must accept some of the abuse from the country.

I, too, want to express my thanks to the hon. member for Dauphin for the very constructive suggestion he made last week. I think that for some considerable time a transport controller is going to be necessary, and he is going to be up against the very difficult position of satisfying thousands of farmers who have produced grain and must sell it if they are to meet their commitments. It is very costly for individuals to try to provide storage for two or three crops on their farms and then wait for an indefinite period before they are able to sell them.

The suggestion that additional storage should be provided in the interior should receive consideration. I might mention that all the grain going to Churchill must travel through my constituency. There are several points in the area where the local people are sure they have all the facilities necessary to provide ideal storage. In the long run it would be better to have extensive storage provided on the way to the ocean ports so that some of the screenings could be used for feeding purposes and grain would be available at interior terminals when the ships reached the port of Churchill.

I do not think the transport controller should be held responsible for the fact that farmers living adjacent to the Canadian Pacific Railway are unable to move grain to Churchill. When the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway was before the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee in connection with one of the branch lines I inquired whether or not the Canadian Pacific was interested in extending the branch line from Nipawin to The Pas to connect with the Hudson bay road. His reply was in the negative.

That position can be understood. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a long rail haul from Saskatchewan points either to the west coast or to the head of the lakes, and the longer the haul and the more grain that moves over the lines to Fort William or to the west coast the more profitable the operation is, in spite of the fact that we hear some criticism about the Crowsnest pass rates. Therefore there apparently is no interest on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway in securing running rights over the Canadian National Railways into Churchill, and the farmers along the Canadian Pacific Railway points have to live under that disadvantage. In the meantime, those of us who live in areas where there is a favourable freight rate to Churchill are able to see a good deal of our grain move there during the shipping season.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would not be taking the time of the house at this point if it had not been for the provocative remarks made by the hon. member for Provencher. Since he has spoken I have again studied the Wheat Review for March, 1956. I think the hon. member might have gone on to explain that while we have shipped from Saskatchewan points 79 million bushels of wheat since the beginning of the year compared with 15 million shipped from the province of Manitoba, it happens that we have almost seven acres in wheat in the province of Saskatchewan for every one acre in wheat in the province of Manitoba. To say that we have shipped twice as many bushels of wheat from our province as were shipped from Manitoba without recognizing the fact that our acreage seeded to wheat in Saskatchewan last year was 15,148,000 compared with 1,950,000 in Manitoba is to do queer things to statistics.

Mr. Jutras: I am sure the hon. member wants to be fair. I did not refer to that at all. All I did was to carry it a little further. I read the other line which appears under that one and gives the long-range average for the last ten years.

Mr. Nicholson: I was coming to that, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Provencher first of all gave the total amounts which have been shipped from Saskatchewan from the first week of August until March 14. He pointed out that twice as many bushels were shipped from Saskatchewan points as had been shipped from Manitoba points. The hon. member will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. Jutras: It was 79 million bushels as against 15 million bushels.

Mr. Nicholson: That is right. The hon. member failed to make any mention of the fact that for the same year we had almost seven acres seeded to wheat in Saskatchewan for every one acre seeded to wheat in Manitoba. How does he expect us to be satisfied with shipping two bushels from Saskatchewan for every one bushel from Manitoba?

Mr. Jutras: That has been the case for the last ten years.

Mr. Nicholson: It certainly is not a situation that is being accepted with any degree of satisfaction.

Coming to the other figures, I think the hon. member also ignored the fact that our shipments for the period from August 1 to the middle of March were just about one-half the shipments for the 10-year period. He glossed over that very quickly. He did say that last year we shipped 79 million bushels from Saskatchewan compared with 15 million bushels from Manitoba. In the 10-year period Manitoba shipped about 32 million bushels of wheat and Saskatchewan shipped 147 million bushels, but for both provinces the shipment for the first part of the current year represented about one-half of the amount shipped for the 10-year period from 1944-45 to 1953-54.

The hon. member for Provencher might say that it really does not make any difference whether your quota is one bushel or five bushels if you cannot get the cars, but I want to tell him that the situation is very different. If you have been able to deliver and get rid of only a 1-bushel quota while others have been able to deliver a 5-bushel quota it does make a difference. I still stand by the statistics which appeared in the March, 1956, Wheat Review. On page 6 it is pointed out that in the province of Saskatchewan 20 per cent of our shipping points operated on a 1-bushel quota compared with one-quarter of 1 per cent in the province of Manitoba.

Anyone who has engaged in the business of growing and selling wheat to make a living certainly finds that he is in a very different position if he operates on a 1-bushel quota and his neighbours in the province of Manitoba are in a position where only one-quarter of 1 per cent have been limited to such a small quota.

I think it should be one of the duties of the transport controller to do something about the situation. The province of Manitoba has had a distribution of box cars which has meant that only one point in the province is on a 1-bushel quota and 85 points are on a 2-bushel quota, while in Saskatchewan 205 points are on a 1-bushel quota and 481 points are on a 2-bushel quota.

The transport controller has at his disposal machinery by which box cars can be allocated to Saskatchewan to give us a ratio that is better than 20 per cent on the 1-bushel quota compared with one-quarter of 1 per cent in Manitoba and 3 per cent in Alberta.

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, it is now conventional in this house to say, "I would not have intervened in this debate but—", and so I would not have intervened in this debate but I had a feeling of sympathy for the minister, because I thought he had become lopsided with all the criticism coming from one section of Canada and I thought it would help to round it out and bring his attention to some other parts of Canada as well.

I just want to suggest briefly that all the complaints and difficulties with respect to bulk shipments do not lie within western Canada, because there has been a situation in the maritimes concerning freight cars which I know has been brought to the minister's attention and I want to emphasize it again for two or three minutes this afternoon. I think one should do so because despite the proper emphasis which has been placed on wheat, there are also other industries in this country and in Nova Scotia we are dependent on the shipment of coal in the wintertime.

I realize that coal does not usually go in box cars, but it is a bulk shipment and we had a situation where over 500 cars were tied up in the Truro yard because there was no locomotive power with which to move them. When I was home the other day I was told by a local coal dealer that he waited 14 days for the delivery of a car of coal from Cape Breton to Wolfville, a distance of 200 miles. The fault there does not necessarily rest with the traffic controller; possibly it lies with the general manager of the railway.

The hon. members for Perth (Mr. Monteith) and Victoria, Ont. (Mr. Hodgson) and other hon. members on this side of the house complained early last winter about the lay-offs in the Canadian National Railways shops. We had a situation arise where apparently locomotives were not available. In reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Purdy) the minister said the extreme winter conditions had tied up the railways. Some one checked the records and the number of times the snowplows went out in January and February was very small indeed. The actual situation was that there were no locomotives with which to move the shipments.

I think it was on March 6 of this year that an order was issued to have the men work six days a week, although 500 were laid off last summer. Finally we had a situation wherein 14 trains were en route at one time between Truro and Moncton. There were no yards available in Moncton, so they stood in the sidings and the crews were out for 30 or 40 hours before they could get in the Moncton yards.

As I said, I bring this matter to the attention of the minister in order that he may have a well rounded attitude towards this problem. I want to emphasize particularly that in Nova Scotia we are dependent upon the shipment of coal for the winter markets of Canada. If a car is going to take over 14 days to travel the short distance from Cape Breton to Wolfville—I do not know whether or not it ever got there; it may still be travelling over the myriad lines of the Canadian National Railways—then something is wrong with the whole system of bulk goods shipments in the maritimes as well as in western Canada.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) provoked my rising.

An hon. Member: A chain reaction.

Mr. Gillis: I may say that when the committee on railways and shipping was in session I raised this matter with Mr. Gordon. The minister was present at that time. It was suggested that since the establishment of the Canso causeway, the delivery of steel and coal from Cape Breton has been speeded up to the extent that it has created a bottleneck in Truro. The Truro yards are too small. The organization at that point is not capable of handling the speeded-up traffic from Cape Breton since the establishment of that Canso causeway.

Mr. Gordon himself admitted that fact. He said the situation was troublesome to them, that it was under examination and that he hoped that in time—and it would take time, he said—they would be able to effect a reorganization at that point and cure that situation. I had complaints similar to those mentioned by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. They came not only from the Wolfville area but from New Glasgow and right along the line. But according to Mr. Gordon, who appeared before the committee, the difficulty was in Truro, owing to the fact that they were not able to handle the traffic at that point. Maybe the minister has had an opportunity of checking the matter further and will be able to give us more information on it at this time before this debate is brought to a conclusion.

Mr. Purdy: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Gillis: Yes.

Mr. Purdy: When he spoke of the organization at Truro, was he reflecting on the railway employees at Truro or was he reflecting on the management?

Mr. Gillis: I was not reflecting on anyone. I was merely stating a fact that was handed on to us by the president of the Canadian National Railways. He asserted that the difficulty which was outlined by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and by myself was created because the organization at that point—the yards, the whole thing—was not designed to accommodate the increased traffic there is at the present time. He said they were going to do things to enlarge that centre so that a better flow of traffic would go through there.

Mr. Purdy: Naturally they should do that, because it is the most important railway centre in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Gillis: But it was designed a long time ago, when traffic was much lighter than it is at the present time. If anyone was reflecting on anyone, it was the president of the Canadian National Railways. I am merely passing on his message at this time.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) referred to some remarks I made when the resolution was under discussion. Those remarks had to do with the very unfair allocation and distribution of delivery quotas as between provinces. I again repeat that the delivery quotas that are in effect—those to which I referred—as set forth at page 6 of the Wheat Review for March, 1956, show great discrimination in the distribution of these quotas. I referred to certain discrimination between provinces. I also referred—and this is something the hon. member did not mention—to discrimination within provinces.

I do not like to see within a province discrimination as to marketing quotas any more than I like to see discrimination as between provinces. I therefore advocated at that time, and I repeat, that steps should be taken by the transport controller to allocate box cars so as to more nearly equalize the quotas at the various marketing points. I have never said the quotas should be equalized, because I know that is an impossibility. However, I believe that a much better job could be done than is indicated in the quotas set forth in the document to which I have referred.

On April 4 Saskatchewan had 205 1-bushel quotas, 481 2-bushel quotas, 290 3-bushel quotas, 103 4-bushel quotas and 26 5-bushel quotas. Manitoba at the same time had only one 1-bushel quota, 85 2-bushel quotas, 118 3-bushel quotas, 85 4-bushel quotas and 86

5-bushel quotas. As of that date 61 per cent of the marketing points in Saskatchewan were on a marketing quota of 2 bushels or less. On the same date in Manitoba—although I have not worked out the figure exactly I can make a rough approximation—about 30 per cent of the marketing quotas were 2 bushels or less. In Saskatchewan 60 per cent of the marketing points were on quotas of 2 bushels or less and approximately 30 per cent in Manitoba were on 2 bushels or less.

Mr. Jutras: Take the marketings.

Mr. Argue: I am coming to that matter. Then the hon. member went on to give statistics to show, as I suggest, not that there was not discrimination in the last year but rather that any discrimination that existed in the last year was no worse than the discrimination that had existed in the previous ten years.

Mr. Jutras: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: That is what the hon. member was referring to. He was referring to the various quotas or the various marketings that had taken place over the last ten years as compared with the marketings in the period under discussion. If he referred to the percentage of marketings that had taken place in Manitoba during the crop year to date as compared with the total marketings for last year, he would have found that 60 per cent of all the wheat in Manitoba, on that comparison, had been marketed by the date to which he referred and that only some 43 per cent had been marketed in Saskatchewan. I hasten to point out that the total marketings this year may not be the same as those of last year; but as a percentage of the marketings last year as compared with the total for the last crop year, I repeat that some 60 per cent of the wheat was out in Manitoba and that only 43 per cent of the wheat was out in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Jutras: Put your percentage on the basis of the current year.

Mr. Argue: I am not a mind reader, so I do not know what the marketings will be by the end of July. If the hon. member for Provencher wishes to speculate as to what those marketings will be, he may do so. However, we have no statistics as to what quantity of wheat the farmers will deliver this month or in June or in July. I therefore cannot compare the figures on that basis because those figures do not exist.

Mr. Jutras: You have them for March.

Mr. Argue: Statements have been made to the effect that the wheat board is allocating box cars. May I say that the wheat board is not allocating box cars. The wheat board allocates shipping orders and the railway companies then allocate box cars. I have Mr. Milner's statement to the effect that it is the railway companies that allocate box cars as among shipping points and as among elevators at shipping points. There is discrimination in the allocation of box cars. The bulk of the discrimination stems from the fact that the railways spot box cars in a discriminatory manner. They cannot spot box cars where there are no orders. But within the orders that are sent forth by the Canadian wheat board, the railways go on their merry way dumping off box cars wherever they please, with the resultant discrimination of which we are aware.

When we met in session a few months ago and discussed the grain marketing situation, we pointed out at that time that a smaller proportion of wheat had been delivered up to that date having regard to the proportion delivered in the previous year. The minister was able—and we were glad of it—to make contracts for the sale of wheat to certain iron curtain countries. Because Canada has been able to get into that market we see the export of Canadian wheat at the present time on the increase.

Let us not get too optimistic too soon as to what its total effect this year may be. The latest marketing report came in the mail today, for the date April 25. In the current crop year to April 25, wheat was exported to the extent of 153·6 million bushels, almost identical with the amount of wheat exported to that date a year ago, 154·1 million bushels. So even if there is a very substantial movement of grain it will have to be more than substantial in order that we may market this year what everyone considers the minimum quantity of wheat necessary for us to market if we are ever to get rid of the current glut of grain.

An outstanding effort will have to be made by everyone in the grain business if exports this year are to reach the figure of 300 million bushels. Last year we exported some 261 million bushels, 4 million to 5 million bushels under the previous crop year. Three years ago we exported 385 million bushels. So a great effort will have to be made by the transport controller, by the wheat board, by the elevator companies and everyone concerned with the marketing of grain if Canada is to export this year the minimum quantity required of 300 million bushels to which I have referred.

If we have exported so far this year a quantity of wheat almost identical with the quantity we exported last year, our exports of oats are down and our exports of barley are down. I have not heard it said by anyone that our exports of oats or barley this year are likely to exceed or even to reach the export figures for last year. We have been talking about quotas; we have been talking about markets. The fact is that the farmers of the west this year have marketed substantially less grain to date than they marketed a year ago. The figures show that the total marketings to date in the three prairie provinces are 276·7 million bushels. In the same period a year ago they were 322·2 million bushels, or a drop of some 45 million bushels.

Mr. Marler: At what date?

Mr. Argue: For the period ending April 25. Country elevator receipts are somewhat comparable. The figure to the present date amounts to 271·7 million bushels of grain as compared with 316·7 million bushels a year ago, or a drop of approximately 45 million bushels. I am hopeful that farm level marketings will exceed last year. I think that is necessary if farm income is to be improved in any way, but the statistics we have available at the present time show that an enormous shipment of grain will have to be forthcoming to marketing positions if we are in fact to market at the country level even that quantity of grain that we marketed last year.

I ask the government and the minister again to consider adopting a formula for the allocation of box cars among elevator companies so the farmers may have the right to deliver grain to the elevators of their choice. I point out again also that the present distribution of marketing quotas is very inequitable, and I express the hope that the differences may be reduced at an early date.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now, he will conclude the debate.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): One should not forget, despite what has been said during the course of this afternoon, that the real question before the house is whether or not the term of this legislation should be extended for two years. It is not a matter of a quota system, and it is not a matter of export sales or many of the other matters to which the hon. gentlemen opposite have just referred. The simple question is whether or not the term of the statute governing the duties of the transport controller should be extended for two years.

It seems to me, when one gets down to the root of the observations made on the other side, that hon. members essentially are in favour of continuing transport control.

I should like to deal as briefly as possible with two or three points that were raised during the course of the discussion. The hon. member for Prince Albert, in speaking about the regulations, said in effect that they were ineffectual when they were not carried into effect. He was kind enough to draw my attention to the remarks I made the other day at the resolution stage on this point. It seems to me that the point the hon. member does not appreciate is that it is necessary that the regulations should have teeth so that when the transport controller requests something orally, as he does, of the railroad companies, they will realize that the requests can be backed up by a formal directive if it becomes necessary to issue it.

The hon. member said that no formal directive had ever been issued. There was one case in which such use was made in the past, where, because there was an existing contract, a formal written directive had to be issued so the carrier in question would carry out the orders of the transport controller instead of carrying out the terms of a written contract. That is the only case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On what date?

Mr. Marler: I am sorry I have not the date. I shall be happy to send it to the hon. gentleman if he is interested. There has been only one case in which a formal written directive has been issued. I think the fact that only one has been issued during the time the transport controller has been in office is a demonstration of the proposition that the fact that the transport controller has the powers makes it unnecessary for him to exercise them with force.

Now I should like to deal very briefly with the question of the shortage of box cars. I have endeavoured to look at this question and appraise it in the light of what has taken place in the past. I referred to the crop figures for the year 1952-53 which, as we all know, are substantially higher than those for the current year. I point to the fact that the number of box cars then in the inventory of the railways was sufficient to accomplish that movement.

I should like to give the latest figures in connection with loadings, which will demonstrate, despite all that has been said on the subject of the number of box cars, that the loadings up to date compare not too unfavourably with those of last year. These figures are as of April 27, 1956. From the beginning of the crop year, since August to that date, loadings at country points amounted to 182,160. Now I should like to break that down between the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National Railways and say that the Canadian Pacific Railway total was 93,586 and the Canadian National Railways 88,574.

For the same period last year the total was 190,251, of which the Canadian Pacific Railway had 102,699 and the Canadian National Railways 87,552.

If one takes the trouble to examine and compare the two figures, one sees that the loadings this year are approximately 8,000 cars less than they were for the corresponding period in the previous crop year. When one examines the situation as between the railways, one finds there is an increase of approximately 1,000 in the case of the Canadian National Railways and a decrease of approximately 9,000 in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

It has been suggested that the railroads would much prefer to use box cars for other purposes. While I think it is true that it would probably bring them in more money, I should like merely to quote a few words from Mr. Gordon's evidence before the committee on railways and shipping. The passage will be found at page 223 and reads as follows:

> Now, to indicate how serious that problem is to us, we have been under the obligation by reason of our desire to service the requests for grain of moving thousands and thousands of cars from eastern Canada empty. We have moved during this crop year a total of nearly 27,000 empty box cars into western Canada. So extreme did it get that we were taking brand new box cars fresh out of the factory. They had never carried a load and we sent them right to western Canada. Now, that cost us money, I do not mind telling you. It hurts our earnings terrifically. We have done that in an all-out effort to meet what we have regarded as a national emergency.

I could go on but I think that is sufficient to indicate good will on the part of the Canadian National Railways.

The only other point to which I should like to refer is the remarks made by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings when he spoke about the situation in the maritimes. The hon. member for Cape Breton South was present in the committee when the subject was discussed very fully, and I shall merely summarize the situation by saying that this year we have moved a record volume of grain through the Atlantic ports. I think the total is slightly in excess of 45 million bushels, and those who are familiar with the experience in the past know that represents a substantial increase over the total of last year and of other years. That was accomplished only by a very great effort on the part of the railways in the face of exceedingly adverse weather conditions in the maritimes.

I know that the hon. member for Cape Breton South knows the situation at Truro, to which there has been some reference already this afternoon. Although Truro is not a modern yard by any means, he also knows that the climatic conditions we have had to meet during the past winter, particularly in February, March and even in April, have been unusually bad and have complicated the task of not only the Canadian National but also the Canadian Pacific in moving traffic of all kinds to the Atlantic ports. In the case of the Canadian National we have been handicapped by the fact that we were unable to get new diesel locomotives because of the General Motors strike, and that was another difficulty for the railroads to overcome.

These are in effect matters incidental to the question of whether traffic control should be continued for a further period of two years. I would suggest that while there may not be unanimity about the powers and there may not be unanimity about how they have been exercised, I think we can agree that the bill should be adopted and that the term of the legislation should be extended.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Duration.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I have one question I should like to ask the Minister of Transport. Who has the final authority for distributing cars? I have a telegram from Flaxcombe, and the individual who sent it is wondering what is the matter. He says they still have a 2-bushel quota and it is not filled owing to the car shortage. Then he points out that at Marengo, the next station along the line, and at Laporte they are on a 4-bushel quota. Who has that responsibility?

Mr. Marler: The hon. gentleman asked first of all who had the power and then he asked who had the responsibility. I think there are two answers to the two different questions. I believe there is no doubt that under the statute and the regulations the transport controller has the most sweeping powers with regard to the movement of all goods in bulk, and I do not think anybody who has read either the regulations or the statute would quarrel with the assertion that under the regulations the transport controller has the power to allocate box cars in any way he wishes.

But when we come to the question of whether it is his responsibility to do so, I will say that I do not believe the power ought to be exercised by the transport controller but should be exercised by the Canadian wheat board in collaboration with the transport controller and the railways so that no one will be working at cross purposes. It seems to me it is evident that there cannot be a transport controller operating independently of the Canadian wheat board so far as the movement of wheat is concerned; and although it is perfectly clear that the transport controller has the power under the act and the regulations it seems to me that we should continue with the allocation of box cars in the way it is being done at the present time.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): The minister means, then, that once the wheat board has allocated the shipping orders the wheat board has fulfilled its responsibility, and if there is failure on the part of the railways to supply cars it then becomes the responsibility of the transport controller?

Mr. Marler: I do not want to answer the question quite in the way in which the hon. member has put it. I merely say that I think the transport controller in these circumstances has all the powers that are required, which in collaboration with the Canadian wheat board can be exercised to remedy the situation.

Mr. Argue: Does the minister agree that it is the railway companies themselves that decide at any given moment how many box cars will be spotted at a given elevator? I think I am correct in the assumption that the wheat board does not in fact direct that a certain number of box cars be sent to a certain elevator. They merely allocate the shipping orders, and after that the railway companies then allocate the box cars to the companies that have shipping orders.

Mr. Marler: In the hon. member's remarks on second reading I think he outlined the situation quite correctly when he implied that in effect once the orders have been given by the wheat board the cars follow the orders.

Mr. Castleden: What would happen in a case where the wheat board gives a shipping order and the railway company does not allocate cars to the elevator at the particular point to which the shipping order has been given? If the railway fails to do that, would it be the responsibility of the transport controller to see that the cars are properly allocated or would he not interfere at all?

Mr. Marler: That question, of course, is purely hypothetical. I take it that if it were a chronic condition that was developing the transport controller, in collaboration with the wheat board, would find a remedy for it.

Mr. Castleden: I can assure the minister that the case is not hypothetical. It is something that is happening every day. Orders are sent forward by the wheat board to particular elevators at certain delivery points. However, when the railway company sends cars to that point they are not allocated to the elevators to which the orders are directed. The result is that certain elevators are getting a preference and certain other elevators are being discriminated against. I should like to know from the minister whether or not the transport controller would undertake to enforce the delivery of cars to elevators to which shipping orders have been given by the wheat board.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Castleden: There has been no reply to my question.

Mr. Marler: I thought what I had said before amply covered the question the hon. member has just repeated, and I cannot see that I can say anything more useful than the general reply that the transport controller has certain powers under the act and the regulations and I think they should be exercised in collaboration with the Canadian wheat board. I cannot conceive of a situation in which you have transport control operating in one direction and the Canadian wheat board operating in the other. I do not believe that is the situation.

Mr. Castleden: I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, it is our hope the transport controller will be able to work in collaboration with the wheat board and with the railway companies. The problem, as we see it, is that there appears to be no direction or no instruction, and certainly no enforcement of any regulations, to see that box cars are following shipping orders. There seems to be nothing to rectify what is quite evidently the basis of discrimination. I should like to know from the minister whether, if that discrimination is pointed out to him or his transport controller, he will take steps to see that it is corrected.

Mr. Marler: I suggest that if the hon. member has a specific case he bring it to my attention and I shall investigate it.

Mr. Castleden: I shall be pleased to do that. Shall I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): I should like to point out to the minister that I have in my hand a letter written on February 22 and signed by the transport controller in which he makes this statement:

> The allocation of cars to stations or to elevator companies at a station is entirely under the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board.

I have other correspondence here, Mr. Chairman, which points out that certain elevator agents did have shipping orders from the wheat board but were unable to obtain cars. The transport controller tells us it is not his business and the minister says it is his business.

Mr. Marler: I said he had the power to do it, but I did not say it was his responsibility.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Then, Mr. Chairman, I call it six o'clock.

The Chairman: Shall I rise and report progress?

Mr. Harris: No.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent to proceed?

An hon. Member: No; six o'clock.

The Chairman: I hear some hon. members saying it is six o'clock. Shall I rise and report progress?

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we shall take the estimates of agriculture and public works.

Mr. Green: In that order?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

It being five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Fifth report of standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Hunter.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO MCMAHON OFFER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government has received assurance from Mr. Frank McMahon that he has $50 million of equity capital now available to proceed with the pipe line to Montreal and that he is prepared to deposit an adequate bond to guarantee the completion of the pipe line as far as Montreal by 1958?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I have no knowledge of any such communication. Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce might give a further reply.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have received no communication of the type indicated but I have been in touch with Mr. McMahon within the last few minutes, and he has agreed to allow me to remove the "private and confidential" from his letters. As soon as the necessary copies can be made I propose to table the correspondence I have had with him during this year.

[Later:]

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION IN COST

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister if he will inform the house whether the government has approached Premier Manning of Alberta, Premier Douglas of Saskatchewan and Premier Campbell of Manitoba in regard to the possibility of their sharing in part of the additional financing that the government is considering in extending the pipe line through western Canada?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The answer is no.

GRAIN

FINAL PAYMENT FOR 1954-55 WHEAT—INITIAL PAYMENT ON GRAIN FOR 1956-57

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Irvin Studer (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, of which I have given him previous notice, hoping he could, if possible, answer it today.

Is the minister in a position to announce the final payment on wheat through the wheat board for the 1954-55 crop year? Can he also inform us what the initial payment on grain will be during the new 1956-57 crop year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, having received notice of the question I have been able to get certain information and can make a statement to the house concerning three aspects of the western grain marketing situation: one, the final payment on the 1954-55 wheat pool account; two, the policy of the wheat board with respect to delivery quotas during the remainder of the present crop year; three, initial prices for wheat, oats and barley during the crop year which begins August 1 next.

Dealing first with the final payment covering the 1954-55 pool account wheat, I am pleased to be able to advise the house that the Canadian wheat board propose making a cut-off as at May 4, tomorrow, and are recommending to the government a transfer of the unsold stocks, approximately 50 million bushels in amount, to the 1955-56 pool account as at that date. This action will enable the board to close out the 1954-55 pool account.

Total receipts of wheat from producers in this pool amounted to 318,439,061 bushels plus 615,839 bushels purchased from other than producers and 164,055,511 bushels transferred from 1953-54 pool account, a total of 483,110,411 bushels.

As soon as the board's accounts have been completed, I shall be in a position to announce to the house the exact amount of the final payment and the rate per bushel for each grade of grain delivered to the pool. I expect to be in a position to make this announcement about the middle of this month. According to present plans, the wheat board will begin issuing cheques to producers on or about May 22 or 23 and will have completed this final payment about the end of this month of May.

I turn now to policy with respect to delivery quotas at country points. A very heavy movement of wheat and other grain into and out of country elevators is now under way. Deliveries by farmers will increase as road conditions improve and will continue at a high level during the balance of the current crop year. The movement of grain to seaboard is also very heavy. Our export clearances are now reflecting heavy sales commitments entered into in recent months, about which I have previously informed the house. I am not yet in a position to put a firm estimate on export clearances for the whole of the crop year but I can assure hon. members that wheat and flour export clearances will substantially exceed last year's figure of about 252 million bushels.

As a result of this heavy outward movement, the wheat board has been able to increase its grain delivery quotas very substantially in recent weeks. As at May 1 only 14 stations remained on a quota of 1 bushel per specified acre. A 2-bushel quota is in effect at 478 stations. Some 572 stations have a 3-bushel quota, 602 stations a 4-bushel quota and 400 stations a 5-bushel quota. In addition to these basic quotas, supplementary quotas are in effect covering delivery of malting barley, high grade oats, rye and various classes of seed grain. Since the beginning of the season an open quota has been in effect covering the delivery of Durum wheat and flaxseed.

Total grain deliveries since August 1 are now about 300 million bushels and the Canadian wheat board expects that space will be provided at country elevators to enable total farm deliveries of about 500 million bushels during the crop year. It is expected that wheat deliveries for the whole of the present crop year will exceed 1954-55 but that deliveries of oats and barley will fall somewhat short of last year's figure.

I have been advised by the board that although they expect that they will be in a position to accept delivery from producers of as much grain as in 1954-55, it may not be possible for them to arrange to equalize deliveries by individual farmers to the extent that this was arranged for during the past two crop years. Hon. members may remember that during last crop year the board endeavoured to provide delivery opportunities to enable all producers to deliver a minimum quota of eight bushels per specified acre. This looked like a feasible target. However, estimates of potential deliveries at many delivery stations proved to be wide of the mark, and it was not possible for the board to accept all the eight-bushel deliveries prior to July 31. It therefore became necessary for the board to issue special 1955-56 quota delivery permits to enable producers who had not delivered their eight-bushel quota prior to July 31 to complete these deliveries along with new quota deliveries during the current season.

It is always the aim of the board to equalize delivery opportunities in so far as this is possible. The board has advised me, however, that last year the attempt to reach a uniform target did have an adverse effect upon the marketing of Canadian grain in export markets. Much of the grain delivered last fall against the previous year's quota and moved to terminal positions was made up of varieties and grades not needed for immediate marketing requirements. This grain added to the congestion in storage facilities and utilized scarce transportation, thus creating difficulties for the board in moving to seaboard position for immediate clearance those varieties and grades of new crop grain for which there was an immediate and urgent demand.

In the light of this experience the Canadian wheat board have advised me that, if they are to meet market requirements and their forward sales commitments, it may not be possible to attain a uniform quota at all delivery stations during the present crop year.

The primary objective of the board will be to bring forward grain to cover sales commitments or for which there appears to be a ready demand. The board will, however, working with the transport controller, the elevator companies and the railways, continue to endeavour to achieve as high a degree of equality of delivery opportunity as is possible without interfering with the sales objective. The board will increase delivery quotas at individual stations as space is created, but will restrict shipments of grain from higher quota stations to the movement of grain required to meet commitments. In order to avoid the serious situation that arose last year, the wheat board has decided that all quotas in effect as at July 31, 1956, will expire as at that date and deliveries after August 1 will apply against the 1956-57 crop year quotas which will be made effective on August 1.

Although this wheat quota policy may result in some producers in western Canada, at the end of the current crop year, having delivered more grain per specified acre than others, there should be general agreement that, at a time of intense international competition, the Canadian wheat board must have freedom to give preference to deliveries of the varieties and grades of grain for which there is an immediate demand and that the board cannot afford to pass up market opportunities in an endeavour to equalize farm deliveries between producers.

At this time, I also wish to announce to the house that the government has approved initial prices to be paid by the Canadian wheat board on the basic grades of wheat, oats and barley for the crop year beginning August 1, 1956, at the same level as during the present crop year. These initial prices are as follows:

Wheat—$1.40 per bushel basis No. 1 Manitoba Northern in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver.

Oats—65 cents per bushel No. 2 Canada Western in store Fort William/Port Arthur.

Barley—96 cents per bushel basis No. 3 Canada Western six-row in store Fort William/Port Arthur.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder if I might ask the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is in position to say whether the storage payments the government is now making will result in total payments for wheat for 1954 being as high as in the previous year. In other words, will the final payments be as high as last year?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I shall be able to announce that to the house in about two weeks.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce another question. Could the minister say how high the minimum delivery quotas will be made by the end of July and whether the government will consider declaring delivery points open so that the grave discrimination that will flow from unequal delivery quotas may be kept to a minimum?

An hon. Member: You are never satisfied.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I ventured to predict deliveries under quota last year and, because we could not attain my forecast within the crop period, I have heard about it at least eight times from my hon. friend. So I shall make no further predictions.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO MORE DIRECT FEDERAL LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the press report by Gerald Waring that loans by the chartered banks for new housing are down by about 30 per cent this year compared to what they were at this time last year, is the government considering expanding its activities in the field of direct loans for housing construction?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): I have not seen the report by Mr. Waring but, as the hon. member knows, these are matters of policy, and decisions are communicated to the house only after they are taken.

Mr. Knowles: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance? Is he aware of the report that the decline in lending by chartered banks for housing construction arises from the advice of the central bank to the chartered banks to reduce their lending?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

WINNIPEG—RATES OF PAY OF WOMEN CLEANERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): I should like to answer another question raised by the hon. member yesterday in regard to the rates of pay for women cleaners in Winnipeg. The rates for women cleaners are established by the treasury board on the basis of local surveys conducted by the Department of Labour in various localities.

The Department of Public Works requested a review of the rate for women cleaners in Winnipeg in September, 1955, and the report in November following completion of an extensive survey indicated that no change was warranted at that time. The rates are under constant study and would normally be reviewed again in June.

AIR TRANSPORT

OTTAWA—STATEMENT AS TO PRIVATE PLANE STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Yesterday the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) asked whether I could give the house any information as to what steps had been taken to alleviate the storage situation for private plane operators in the Ottawa area. I would reply by saying that the matter has been discussed with aircraft owners and operators in the Ottawa area, including the Ottawa flying club, but no decision in the matter has been reached.

Supply—Agriculture

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration service—

1. Departmental administration (including advisory committee on agricultural services), $670,015.

Mr. Stanton: In taking part in the debate on the agriculture estimates, it is not my intention to take up too much time, and I do not believe I shall take my full allotted time of 30 minutes. Nor shall I give what might be termed a statistical address, offering a multitude of figures that I know few people care to listen to and even fewer people care to read. I shall leave that to the Minister of Agriculture, who is a past master in the art of conglomerating and twisting figures and statistics to suit the immediate occasion. Nobody knows what they are all about; perhaps not even the minister. It all simmers down to a little bit of addition here and a little bit of subtraction there with even some multiplication and division thrown in, and I am sure that in order to make the farmers appear better off than they ever have been he must have used much more addition than subtraction. We have been told of meetings held across western Canada in protest against the government's wheat policy. On reviewing the proceedings and statements made by different members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at their meeting in Hamilton one sees that the same thing could very easily happen in eastern Canada. I should like to quote a few extracts from what was said at that meeting. In the Rural Co-operator of January 31, 1956 I find the following:

> The federal minister of agriculture is trying to "make fools out of the farmers of this country", D. E. Stauffer, a past president of United Co-operatives of Ontario, told the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in Hamilton on January 25. Mr. Stauffer urged the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to protest strongly the misleading impressions of farm prosperity given by published reports of a January 23 speech of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture.

Again I quote:

> The C.F.A. annual meeting on January 26 approved a statement noting "with regret" that the minister's comparison of cash and net farm income for the most recent five year periods "while technically correct tends to leave an erroneous impression with the public."

I quote further:

> "How long is Mr. Gardiner going to be allowed to get away with this kind of thing", Mr. Stauffer asked. "A whole year's work is thrown away when the minister gives statements like that to the press. He does it every year before the C.F.A. meeting, and it's got to stop."

[Mr. Marler.]

Eastern members have listened very attentively and, I may say, with a great deal of interest and sympathy to the debate with relation to the difficulties of the prairie farmers which has taken up much of the time of the house since January 10. After listening to the debate yesterday on the distribution of box cars I am beginning to wonder whether there has not been a word spoken in the house for every grain of surplus wheat there is in the western provinces.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether we could have a little order.

The Chairman: Order. It is very difficult to hear the hon. member. At the same time, if he did not refer so extensively to his notes perhaps he might himself command a little better order in the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: That is a fine bunch to be applauding.

Mr. Stanton: I am referring to notes and I have noticed that many hon. members on the other side of the house, especially the cabinet ministers on the front bench, refer to notes all the time.

An hon. Member: They read their entire speeches.

Mr. Stanton: We fully appreciate the fact that many hundreds of farmers in the three prairie provinces are experiencing very difficult times. It is no secret, it is a known fact to everyone that the whole economy of the west depends on the prosperity of those living in the rural districts and their ability to dispose of their wheat or at least to deliver a sizeable quantity of their crop to the elevator.

From listening to different members and looking over reports concerning the prairies we know that there are many millions of bushels of wheat still on the farm and that many hundreds of farmers have received very little and in some cases no cash for their crop for a year or more. Is it any wonder that the farmers are not only asking for but demanding, although in vain, cash advances on farm stored grain? I admit that guaranteed bank loans will be of some help. That is why we the official opposition supported the resolution; but it will not solve the financial difficulty and stress that many producers find themselves in at the present time. The wheat they have in storage on their farms is in fact equivalent to their hard-earned dollars of the past year, and in some instances for a longer period. No wonder they object to paying interest on their own money. I have been in communication with many western wheat growers and they seem to be all of the same opinion, regardless of their political affiliations, namely that the wheat board should advance them cash on the grain stored on their farms.

While western agriculturists at the present time are subjected to all this difficulty, that is not saying that everything in eastern Canada is rosy; not by any means. The farmer in eastern Canada—and I have in mind now the dairy farmer—has his many problems owing to reduced revenue and rising cost. The dairy farmers in eastern Canada would and could feed many millions of bushels of western grain if they could get for their milk products a remuneration comparable to the cost of grain they buy. Every farmer is well aware of the fact that if he purchases feed grain at $3 per hundred, which is the price in the east at present, and has been for quite some time, he must receive the same price per hundred for his milk in order to make it profitable for him to purchase. Today the farmer who is producing milk for butter, evaporated or powdered milk or cheese receives from $2 to $2.40 per hundred net. Hence it is utterly impossible for him to buy grain at $3 per hundred and receive an average of approximately $2.25 for his products.

At this time I should like to give some statistics with regard to the price paid in one of the three concentrated milk plants in my own county in order to show the committee the difference in price of milk at the present time as compared with that in 1951. In 1951 the top price in this one particular milk plant was $3.25 per hundred with a low price of $3.15. I am taking the lowest price paid that year. In 1952 the price dropped to $2.75 or a drop of 40 cents per hundred. In 1953 the price dropped again to $2.33 per hundred or a net drop of 82 cents from 1951. In 1954 the price dropped to $2.34 per hundred or a net drop of 81 cents from 1951. In 1955 the price was $2.43 or a drop of 72 cents from 1951.

Taking into consideration the total number of pounds of milk shipped to this milk plant in those four years, the net loss to the shippers to that plant was $1,322,653 or a net loss per year of an average of $330,000.

In my county we have three milk plants of practically comparable size. Therefore the loss to the dairy farmer in Leeds county, or its borders, in the three milk plants is $1 million per year. Cheese also is an important product in my county, as well as in other parts of eastern Canada—as you know, eastern Ontario has the banner cheese-producing county in Canada. Things are not altogether rosy for the cheese producer either. In 1951 the average price for cheese milk was $2.74 per hundred. In 1952 it was $2.16; in 1953, $2.14; and in 1954, $2.20. When you take into consideration the amount of milk that is purchased in Ontario to make cheese you will see that the loss in those four years was $3,625,200 annually. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, that proves conclusively to me that there has been a reduction in the purchasing power of the dairy farmers of Ontario, particularly of eastern Ontario.

I say to my western friends, if we in the east were to receive a fair and comparable price for our produce we could take care of many, many millions of your western grain surplus. In fact, we would have to increase the grain rations to our herds of cattle by an average of only three or four bushels a day for each farm to take care of a least 50 million bushels of your surplus. I have heard many farmers make the statement that they would like to feed their cattle, especially the dairy cows, more grain but they could not afford to purchase it.

Few people who have not had the experience can visualize the overhead cost of a dairy farmer. He must provide storage for his hay, grain and silage and stables for his cattle. The cost is terrific and now that farm labour is so scarce he must have his farm well-equipped with machinery, not only seeding and harvesting equipment but very expensive machinery for his forage crops such as hay and corn. This runs into many thousands of dollars.

If a young professional man, or a man working in industry at a fair salary or wage, wants to build or purchase himself a house he can get a loan from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation up to 90 per cent of the value, but if a young man wants to purchase a farm he can get a loan of only 60 per cent of the value from the farm loan board. Why is this? Why the discrimination? It must be that the government thinks the earning power of the man in business, or the man who works in industrial plants, is greater and more secure than that of the man on the farm. If this is so, it is about time they gave some consideration to the needs of agriculture so that the earning power of the farmer will be equal to that of people in other walks of life.

A young man may buy a farm now with the ordinary down payment, and by the time he gets it stocked with cattle and equipped with the necessary implements and before the mortgage is discharged, he has paid the equivalent of the amount of the mortgage two or three times in interest and, in many instances, at his death he is compelled to leave a portion of the mortgage for his son to finish paying. That has happened quite often. Is it any wonder that the farmers' sons are not staying at home to carry on where their fathers leave off? I hope the time will not come when it will be the survival of the largest. Surely there is a place in our rural districts for small-sized family farms; but I am afraid they are fast disappearing. Why? Because the farmer and his son or help, whichever it may be, on the ordinary farm cannot make his revenue meet his expenses.

Farmers to the number of 205,000 filed income tax returns for 1953 showing an average net income of $2,125. Of this number, 135,000 with an average income of only $1,244 were not taxable. Those who do file income tax returns are the largest and most successful farmers, and yet they earn only an average income of $2,125. But that is not all. We must realize that it is not the farmer or the head of the house, who earns this income; it is the earnings of the whole family, his wife and family combined. I think it is high time that the farmer's wife, who works long hours on the farm and helps her husband and looks after the family, should be allowed $250 as an exemption in income tax as are other wives who work in offices, shops or factories.

Then, there is the smaller farmer, his wife and family, who are earning an average of only $1,244 or less. A man who is slightly handy can go down town and buy himself a hammer, a saw and an old rusty square and earn far more as a carpenter's helper, working only eight hours a day, five days a week, than he can on the farm at the present time.

Whenever the Minister of Agriculture speaks he always averages the years 1951, 1952, 1953, 1954 and 1955. He is very careful not to present the economic picture of the last three years when the net farm income declined around 60 per cent. I have a machine price list in my hand. In 1941 a binder could be purchased for $253.50. At the present time anybody who has had anything to do with farming and with farm machinery knows that the price has more than doubled. At the present time we pay $550 for a binder. There has been an increase from $253.50 in 1941 to $550 at the present time. That goes for all kinds of machinery that the farmer must buy to carry on his farming activities. It is not so much the number of dollars a farmer owns, it is the purchasing power of those dollars that count.

In 1901 the farm population was 45 per cent of the total population. In 1951 it was only 19 per cent. But the lamentable part of the story is that 19 per cent of our population today is receiving only 6·8 per cent of our gross national income, which is out of all proportion. In fact, from 1951 to 1954 the farmer's share of the gross national income has dropped from 13·6 per cent to 6·8 per cent, and still the minister has the audacity to tell the house and every public meeting that he addresses that there is nothing wrong with agriculture.

There were more unpaid taxes in the rural municipalities of eastern Ontario in 1955 than there had been for many years, and I presume that is true of all farming districts of Canada. Also, many grocery and hardware stores in the rural villages are going on a cash basis, which is a very good criterion of the diminishing purchasing power of the farmers.

It has been so long since eastern Canada has had a minister of agriculture that we in the east are beginning to wonder whether the minister is of the opinion that there are no farmers in the east at all. I believe we have not had a minister of agriculture in eastern Canada since 1911. If the Conservative party does not appoint one from eastern Canada after the next election—surely we are entitled to one in every 50 years—they will certainly hear from me.

The heads of the different agricultural associations have been doing a wonderful job in creating better public relations between the urban and rural districts. They have gone a long way in dispelling the suspicion that the farmer was getting too much for his products. Now the minister runs around telling how well off the farmers are, how much better off they are now than they were years ago. He does more harm in one of his speeches that is broadcast on the radio and printed in the press than the public relations association can rectify in a whole year.

Mr. Knowles: And he does it just about once a week.

Mr. Stanton: Mr. Chairman, in my constituency we have a very large turkey industry at the present time although I would not say it is thriving because we do not have ample protection for poultry, especially turkeys. If the duty were sufficient to protect the turkey growers in Canada, it would expand into one of the great industries of this country, consuming much of the surplus grain that the prairies have at the present time.

In 1954, Canada imported over 5 million pounds of turkey from the United States; in 1955 she imported double that, or 10 million pounds. Now, what do we have in 1956? Up until February 11, the market report shows imports of 422,000 pounds, and for the same period in 1955 it was 96,000 pounds.

The official prediction from the United States department of agriculture is for an increase of 6 per cent in turkeys raised this year. With the Canadian tariff as it is, at 12½ per cent ad valorem, if there were a break in the United States market owing to the tremendous amount of turkeys being raised this year the duty might well drop to three or four cents per pound.

I think that the turkey growers, of whom there are now a considerable number in Leeds county—and there will be more if they are adequately protected—are not asking for too much when they suggest that the tariff should be 12½ per cent ad valorem, but not less than five cents per pound.

Under the present tariff, turkeys may come into Canada at a very low tariff when the price is lowest in the United States, and this may have a very damaging effect on our market here. The farmers are reasonable when they ask for protection only comparable to other industries in Canada. This they must have, if they are going to survive and play their part in expanding this country in the next fifty years, making it the great nation that we all visualize.

It is time the government woke up to the fact and admitted that all is not well with our basic industry. It is time it realized that there should be more equality in the distribution of our gross national income. Surely the government must realize that much of our present industrial prosperity can be attributed to credit buying. Without a very strong agricultural economy, I hesitate to imagine where this whole Canadian economy may drift.

Mr. Hosking: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make on item No. 1 of the agriculture estimates and though I think my remarks will primarily be of interest to hon. members from the province of Ontario some of the topics which I discuss will no doubt be of interest to all the farmers in Canada.

The first suggestion I would like to make to the Minister of Agriculture would be that he broaden the broadcasts which occur at the luncheon and dinner hours regarding the marketing of livestock on the Toronto stock exchange. The reason for this is that the beef producers of Wellington county have sent a resolution to me asking not only that the price be given but that the number of beasts which are sold at that price be recorded. This would give the farmers some idea of the quantity of stock that is being handled and at what price that stock is being sold.

I feel there is great merit in this recommendation. I realize that these broadcasts are not paid for by our government but are handled as a news item, but I believe that the department does furnish the various radio stations with this information.

The second point I have been asked to bring to the attention of the minister is that truckers are presently required to have their trucks disinfected after delivering stock to the stockyards. This requires that the trucks be washed. Many of the truckers buy cattle at the stockyards and on the return trip transport them back to the various farmers who require feeders. After they have been washed, the bottoms of the trucks are very slippery. Although I realize it is not the responsibility of the dominion government to look after the stockyards it might recommend to the provincial government that some sand be made available to the farmers which they could throw into the bottom of the trucks in order that they would not be slippery after the disinfecting process. Again this seems like a reasonable request to me, and I submit both problems to the minister.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, I wonder if Your Honour will consider the effect of a situation in which there is no minister of the crown in a position to speak on behalf of the government. I understand that our system calls for a minister of the crown to be present in the house and to be able to speak on behalf of the government at any time during a debate in this house, and there is no minister present at this time.

Mr. Hosking: Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure that a minister will be here in a minute or two and if I may I shall carry on.

Mr. Nicholson: I think it would be a courtesy if Your Honour would give a ruling on the question that has been raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

The Chairman: I am unaware of any rule or citation which requires the presence of any particular members in the house at any particular time so long as there is a quorum in the house. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition will be kind enough to direct my attention to the rule or citation which he had in mind when he raised this alleged question of privilege.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I would point out that it is part of the tradition of parliament that there shall be someone in a position to speak on behalf of the government at any time in the house. Under our system of collective government responsibility any minister of the crown can speak on behalf of the government and does so on behalf of the whole government.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that no rule or reference is necessary to emphasize the fact that our parliamentary system cannot function effectively and properly unless there is a minister of the crown present.

Since I raised the point one minister of the crown has entered the house; therefore the point does not need to be dealt with of necessity. But I would ask Your Honour to consider the point I have raised and express your opinion at an appropriate time as to whether it is proper under our system of responsible government, in which the government is responsible through some minister for what may arise at any time, to be conducting a debate when no minister of the crown is present.

The Chairman: I shall be very glad to consider the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. I might immediately point out to him, however, that in the appointment of parliamentary assistants I understand that the assistant to a minister is so appointed to assist the minister of the crown in such manner and to such extent as the minister may determine, and to represent his department in the House of Commons in the absence of the minister. I make that comment immediately, but I shall be glad to take the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition under advisement.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, since you are taking it under advisement and have raised a question with regard to parliamentary assistants, I would point out that the presence of a parliamentary assistant has nothing to do with the point raised. Our system of the responsibility of the government implies the joint responsibility of all ministers and the capacity of a minister of the crown who is under a special oath in relation to that office to be able to speak on behalf of the whole government. That is where our system of government is clearly distinguished from that of the United States or from similar systems. Our system calls for the possibility of an answer by some minister capable of speaking on behalf of the government collectively.

The parliamentary assistant has certain duties and can speak in connection with certain limited matters on behalf of the minister to whom he has been appointed as assistant, but he is not sworn to the privy council and certainly is not in a position under any circumstances where he can speak with responsibility and authority on behalf of the government.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, I was in my office for a little while getting some information in case someone would ask some questions that had to do with what is before the committee at the present time. When I went out the hon. member who was speaking was not dealing with my estimates at all and under the rules of this house he really should not have been allowed to continue.

There is nothing before the house at the moment as the house is in committee. I quite agree with the Leader of the Opposition when he says that when the house is sitting there should always be a minister present, and there should be a minister here while the house is in committee but not for the reason mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition.

There is only one thing under consideration, the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. The only questions which can be asked properly while the house is in committee on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture are questions related to those estimates. My assistant who is sitting beside me is quite capable of answering any question which any member of the opposition may be asking in the same manner as I would answer it, or perhaps in many respects much more effectively than I could do it.

Mr. Drew: I think there would be agreement on that.

Mr. Gardiner: There would be agreement that probably my hon. friend has more difficulty in putting up with the answers he gets from me than he would with the answers from most people, but that is the answer which the opposition is called upon to put up with. When the members of the opposition ask questions, they get answers which sometimes suit them and which sometimes do not. I want to assure the Leader of the Opposition that if he or any member of the official opposition has any question to ask about anything my assistant is quite capable of answering it.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, since the matter is under consideration and under advisement I would point out that the remarks of the right hon. minister have no bearing whatever on the point raised. I am quite sure that there would be many who would agree that there are a number of hon. members who are not sworn to the privy council who would be infinitely better in the position of Minister of Agriculture. But that is not the point. The point is that our system provides for the possibility of a question being asked at any time which may call for an answer from the government. Whoever the minister may be, I submit that while the house is sitting with the Speaker in the chair, or in committee, a minister should be present and be in a position to speak on behalf of the government. I merely raised the point that no minister was present. We welcome the return of the Minister of Agriculture but that does not in any way change the point that I have raised.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, just in reply to what the Leader of the Opposition has just said, I can assure my hon. friend that there are other members in this house, particularly on this side, who would do just as well in the position I am occupying, and I can assure my hon. friend that there are many members of his own group, although that group is not very large, who could fill his position much better than he fills it.

Mr. Drew: That is the type of cheap and tawdry remark we might expect from you.

Mr. Gardiner: Just as cheap as yours.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, since you are going to study the point may I ask you to give consideration to a couple of citations which may have a bearing on the matter. It seems to me that the Leader of the Opposition was perfectly right when he said that by custom at any rate there should always be a minister of the crown in the house. I think it is always accepted, as well as being laid down by the rules, that a committee of the house is an extension of the house and is governed by the same rules. The Minister of Agriculture cannot evade this question by saying that we are in committee rather than in the house.

It seems to me that the point made by the Leader of the Opposition is particularly true and carries particular force at the present time because we are dealing with the estimates. We have before us a resolution dealing with the expenditure of money. I would ask you to pay attention to section 54 of the British North America Act which has to do with the voting of money and which makes it clear that that can be done only at the instance of someone who can indicate to the house the recommendation of the Governor General. I would also draw your attention to citation 479 which reads:

> Supply resolutions are submitted in the following terms: "Resolved that a sum not exceeding . . . be granted to His Majesty for . . . for the year ending 31st March, 194 ." Each resolution is moved by the minister for whose department the amount is to be voted.

Obviously under that citation we can only be discussing the estimate now before us if it is moved by a minister. It seems to me that it would follow that that minister should be here for the discussion on that estimate.

The Chairman: The Leader of the Opposition interrupted the hon. member for Wellington South on a question of privilege. When I asked him to give me the rule or citation covering his question of privilege he was unable to do so, but he referred to what he called the tradition. I said previously that I would take his remarks under advisement, but I think hon. members will agree that there is no compulsion to interrupt the proceedings of the committee except for the lack of a quorum. I do not think we need labour the point at greater length and I will see the hon. member for Wellington South.

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member or Winnipeg North Centre has raised a question, and in order to keep the record straight may I say that I was in the house when the resolution was moved on February 10 last, when I spoke to it, and I was in the house when it was moved today. There certainly is not any rule, regulation or anything else which prevents a minister who is before the committee leaving the chamber and allowing his assistant to take charge for the time being. It may be essential or advisable that some other minister should be here, as was suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, but it certainly is customary in this house for the assistant to a minister to take charge of estimates while the minister is out of the chamber on other business.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, may I express the hope, notwithstanding the fact the right hon. gentleman has just laid down the rule to be followed, that you will pursue your inquiry and let us know the results.

Mr. Hosking: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the Leader of the Opposition, who has a home in my riding and whom I rather fancy I represent in the house, for causing a delay so the right hon. Minister of Agriculture could go to his office and be able to return to hear my remarks. However, I cannot allow the Leader of the Opposition to suggest that there is anyone in this house on either side who can do more for the farmers or who has done more for the farmers than the present Minister of Agriculture. The people of the whole of Canada know what a good fighter Jimmy Gardiner is. They admire him for it. They do not always agree with him, but no one can say that he has not fought for the farmer down through the years, in a way which has been a credit to those that he represents in agriculture.

If I might return to my discussion of a few points that I think are interesting to the farmers in our country, I should like to speak for just a moment about some observations that I made while I was in Europe. I took a trip abroad last summer during the recess to see and to learn about some of the conditions that exist in other countries, and I should like to pass on a comment or two on these, comparing them with the conditions in our own country.

The first I should like to mention has something to do with the fall fairs that our Department of Agriculture does a great deal to promote. There are larger fairs like the Royal Winter fair, and I was pleased to hear the address made by the Minister of Finance at the last Royal Winter fair, where he was prepared to listen to the requests of the governing body of that fair that they need a new addition to their coliseum. People who attend that fair know very well that the coliseum is inadequate, and it was very gratifying to listen to him take the lead in letting the people know that our Department of Agriculture appreciated this need and that it might, if conditions were right, be prepared to assist in seeing that an enlargement was carried out.

Turning to the use of this fair, I should like to discuss for a moment or two what I have seen abroad and how it compares with what we do here. I spent a week in Denmark and, thanks to our minister there, I was permitted to visit some of the hog feeding stations and to discuss how they have managed to raise those beautiful Landrace hogs. I was informed that the farmers themselves felt that, if they were going to market their product, they had to produce a hog they could sell. One advantage that Denmark has over us is that it has a good market for sow belly, the type of meat that we find difficult to handle and get rid of in this country. The German market is close to Denmark, and is a very good market for what is more or less a waste part of the pig in Canada.

They had to do two things. They had to capture the British market, and therefore they had to produce good bacon. There came a time when they had to get United States dollars, and the only source of United States dollars that they had in that country was for hams, and so they had to produce a pig that had good hams as well as good bacon in order to get United States dollars. The farmers of that country decided that they would set up stations that would feed test hogs so that they would produce the best type of hog for bacon and ham. Three or four years ago, before they needed the United States dollars, they produced a hog with a Wiltshire side of some 36 inches in length. For the benefit of hon. members I might say that we produce in Canada a grade A hog, one that has a side of 29 inches. A good hog in Canada has a side 32 inches long.

They have been encouraged to breed this type of hog because fairs and shows in that country will give prizes to hogs only on their performance. They do not give prizes to hogs on appearance. Let me ask the minister to speak to the judges, if he thinks it is wise, in regard to changing the method of judging hogs in Canada. In Denmark a hog to get first prize, has to be the type of beast that will cut up and make good Wiltshire sides with good hams.

Let me quote a few figures. At the Toronto show we had some hogs exhibited by Prince Edward Island, in the Todd trophy class. Prince Edward Island had 16 exhibits and won 13 prizes. This class is judged on the carcasses, so that the judges can view the ham and the bacon side. With regard to the Brethour trophy we had a similar situation where the hogs from Prince Edward Island entered in some 15 classes won, I believe, 12 prizes. Yet in the live classes similar pigs from the island did not get one first-class award. So I would ask the minister, considering the donations we make to these fairs, whether it would not be wise to ask the judges whether it would not be better to give prizes to live hogs for the type of hog that when killed will give us good bacon and good ham.

I also learned some other things when I was in Denmark. The Danish farmers told me that they had to buy our feed grain, ship it from Canada to Denmark, feed it and then send the dead carcasses back to England in competition with our pork. I asked them how they managed to do this. They said, "Well, there are two or three things that we do a little differently from you people. One is that we must feed carefully. We cannot feed our hogs in a wasteful manner. We have learned that it takes two pounds of feed to put a pound of pork on a pig that weighs 50 pounds. It takes five pounds of feed to put a pound of pork on a pig that weighs 200 pounds." So, if we are going to be efficient, we must ship out lighter weight grade A hogs.

At this point I should like to commend the minister for the stand that he has always taken in supporting our farmers when they produce grade A hogs. It is very important that we continue this bonus even when other governments have seen fit to withdraw their donations for grade A hogs. I should like to recommend that we double our payment to $4 on grade A hogs—that would give an extra $2—in order to encourage the farmers to proceed along the route on which they have now started in Canada. They realize, and with good sense, that we have to produce a type of bacon which the Americans like. We are able to sell our hogs now in the United States market and get 4 to 5 cents more than the Americans can get for their fat-fed hogs. Our farmers have done a good job at working to produce grade A hogs, and this would be a tremendous encouragement for them to continue to do that. I would not want to take credit for suggesting this for the first time, because four years ago Mr. Arnold Darroch, the member at that time for Wellington North, recommended this program.

Since I have been abroad and have seen what can be done with careful feeding, and with fairs that are judged on producing a product which when killed is what is desired rather than for it's good looks when it is alive, and by seeing the type of Danish pig that has taken away from Canada our market in Great Britain, I think it is well that we make moves to assist our farmers to produce a similar pig here. I believe that next year the method of buying by the British government will end and that the private buyers of Great Britain will be coming to Canada and looking for their own goods. Farm products will not be bought by the government any more. If we have the type of pork the British want, and I am now referring to side bacon, we will have a chance to recapture the market that has been lost to us for the past three years. At least we will be competitive, and we will be able to be proud of what we have done.

When I was in the United States a year ago I discovered that the Americans were selling a Canadian type of bacon there, a product which they were advertising very strongly. This suggests the Americans envy the program of producing leaner bacon which your department has encouraged and to which the farmers have co-operated so well. If we encourage our farmers to be a little more efficient in feeding their pigs and to sell them before they get too heavy so that they do not eat too much and put on that last few pounds, we will not have hogs with 30 to 40 pounds of fat. A grade A hog generally turns out to have about 20 pounds of fat on the carcass which cannot be sold as pork. A grade B hog has about 30 pounds of fat and a grade C hog about 45 pounds of fat. It is generally in the last stage of feeding pigs, in what might be termed the inefficient stage, that the fat is put on. All of these suggestions that I make hinge on the production of more grade A hogs in the hogs that are raised.

Coming back again to the question of the fairs or shows that we have, in Scotland and northern England a wonderful market has been created for show cattle. I think most people agree that the British Isles have brought about a wonderful market for show cattle. They have gone to great pains to create that market, but I do not think many people in Canada feel that this type of show beasts we buy from these markets are good cattle to put in our barns and pens and feed to be killed for beef. There are not many people who want to buy the beef that comes from these show beasts and use it in their homes. There is a perfectly good reason for that. It is much too fat.

However, Great Britain is a small country and they have produced this type of beast because it catches the fancy of the wealthy American and Canadian show buyer, and we have followed suit in judging our show beasts. I do not think there is anything that has been more harmful with respect to the type of cattle we wish to market than the type of show beast that we have raised in this country. Exactly the same thing is true of hogs. We have not paid enough attention to the carcasses of these show beasts and what we get out of them when they are killed.

There is one more thing we do that I should like the minister to look into. When we kill a grade A pig we measure three fingers from the H bone at the hip, cut it off there, and that is considered the ham. We go to the third rib from the front shoulder, we cut it off at the centre of the third rib, we then have a side and a shoulder. If we follow that plan in cutting the shoulders with regard to the long Danish hogs that are 36 inches in length we have a front shoulder weighing somewhere about 44 pounds. The reason for that is that the Danish pig has been bred in such a way that each vertebra takes up more room and by cutting at the third rib on a long pig you have added a lot of extra shoulder.

The Danes have got away from that. They measure three fingers from the first rib and cut it off there in the same way as is done in the case of the rear quarter. On a long-vertebrae pig, that may mean cutting it at the second rib. So they get about four pounds extra of good side bacon. We should look into that situation. I think a committee could well be set up to look into the matter of supplying information to the farmers with regard to producing the best beasts and the actual amount of profitable meat they get out of them.

I would hope that these matters would receive some consideration during the next year. I should like to mention one other thing that is troublesome to our farmers, the price of butter, the price of cheese and the price of powdered milk. I would ask the minister to look very carefully at the situation with respect to cheese and powdered milk: I believe that in the opinion of most people the minister has done an excellent job with his butter program, but I would not want anyone to think I was recommending the same treatment for cheese and powdered milk. There might be some other way that this problem could be handled.

An hon. Member: Tariff.

Mr. Hosking: I would ask the minister to look at that matter carefully and see what he can do.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the minister's estimates I propose to deal with one specific problem which is related to agriculture in all Canada. My colleagues have dealt and will deal with other aspects of agriculture in our Canadian economy outlining the decline in our share of the national income and making suggestions which we would like to see adopted to improve the welfare of agriculture. I am pleased to note that the hon. member for Wellington South has been listening to some of the speeches made by members of this group and that he too advocates an increase in the premium on grade A hogs. That is a view that has been voiced by members of this group.

The hon. member said that he had had the opportunity of visiting Denmark but I wish that he had travelled a little more throughout the countryside of Ontario so that he would have a better appreciation of agriculture. I noticed that, particularly when he used terms such as "dead carcass". Personally I have never seen a live carcass. I was wondering where he got his terminology.

He also took the opportunity to express his congratulations to the Minister of Agriculture and I noticed that the hon. member for Leeds was quite envious of the fact that the minister represents western Canada. If a poll were to be conducted among the farmers of western Canada I think you would find they would be only too pleased to give the hon. member the present Minister of Agriculture so that the people of Ontario could have him.

The problem I wish to deal with specifically is a very important one and it can only be brought up at this stage because it concerns several items of the minister's estimates. It is related to the present congested condition we have on western farms and perhaps that is one reason why the government has not been too active in trying to solve the problem. I wish to deal more specifically with the tremendous inroads that weeds have made on the agricultural economy. This is particularly important now because of the decline of agriculture's share of the country's income. The farmers do not have the finances with which to carry out proper cultural practices to eradicate the weeds that are making such inroads. The matter is of direct concern to farmers in all parts of Canada because many of the cultivating operations that they perform are directly aimed at eradicating weeds so that the crops they plant will be able to benefit from the available moisture. The municipalities in all parts of Canada—including your counties in Ontario—are familiar with the problem of weeds along country roads and in the fields. I think we should make a brief survey of the magnitude of this problem in relation to the Canadian economy. Mr. H. E. Wood, chairman of the Manitoba weeds commission in 1953 pointed out this, and I will quote from the Manitoba Co-operator of June 30, 1955:

> Mr. Wood said he had undertaken an estimate of the toll weeds extracted from prairie agriculture. On the basis of the 1953 crop, the cost of weeds amounted to $255 million, or for the 248,000 farms, an average of $1,028 per farm.

That is one of the factors which is certainly drawing down the agriculturalist's share of the national income. It has been estimated that wild oats are a direct cost of over $500 per farm. I think the minister is aware of conditions which exist in his own area and which are prevalent in my area where farmers are forced to go out and cut out acres of badly infested sloughs in order to prevent the reseeding of the wild oats. There are areas which have been virtually taken out of cultivation because of infestation by this weed.

Mr. A. H. Martin, director of the crops, seeds and weeds branch in Ontario, has estimated that weed losses in that province are $4.65 an acre or approximately 14 per cent of the field crop value.

It has been estimated that the over-all cost of weeds far exceeds the combined losses due to insects and disease. I think we can appreciate the magnitude of that problem when statements such as that are made by people in responsible positions. The individual farmer, of course, is very much aware of the impact of weeds on his agricultural production. When chemical weed controls were first introduced we found the farmers receptive to their use. In the early years of chemical weed control we were advised not to use 2,4-D on flax. The farmers were so far ahead of scientific research that they found that, by reducing the application, 2,4-D was extremely effective for use on flax.

The municipalities are closely associated with this problem. I have a letter from Tramping Lake, Saskatchewan, written by Mr. Ralph Fluney, councillor for division 2 of rural municipality No. 380. He writes as follows:

> This municipality 380 spends about $2,000 each year trying to kill this weed. Other R.M.'s adjoining ours spend more and in and around Marsden they have gone broke trying to kill this weed. I have some patches on my own land and know what I am talking about.

The debate which we had in the early part of this week ties in closely with this problem that the councillor for the rural municipality of Tramping Lake points out, namely that the final responsibility is apparently resting on the shoulders of the municipal authorities. They have the responsibility for appointing weed inspectors and for acquiring and utilizing chemical weed controls through high-pressure sprayers so that these weeds which are showing up in the municipality and which are a threat to the welfare of the individual farmers in that municipality can be controlled. It also is the responsibility of rural municipalities—and they are accepting it—to build municipal seed cleaning plants, something which of course puts another direct cost on the farmers, and hence on the municipal authorities.

I think we should make a study into the infestation of noxious weeds in the various parts of Canada so that we would be in a position to suggest to the science service and to the experimental farm service what action they can take to deal with these problems. The worst weeds that we have in Saskatchewan at the moment are toadflax, Russian knapweed, hoary cress and leafy spurge. Toadflax is one that is very prevalent in certain areas of the province. Toadflax called linaria vulgaris was found in North America as early as 1758. The first specimen was collected in the University of Saskatchewan herbarium in 1918. The weed survey in 1955 states:

> This species was found to infest 134,602 acres in 4,583 quarter-sections in 78 municipalities within the surveyed area.

It has established itself since 1918 to cover nearly 150,000 acres. A resurvey was made in 1955 and the results of that resurvey are frightening:

> In R.M. No. 372 the number of acres infested increased from 114 to 311 from 1952 to 1954, while the number of infested quarters increased from 83 to 108 . . .
> In R.M. No. 440 the number of patches increased from 2,650 to 9,869 from 1949 to 1953, while the number of infested quarter-sections increased from 607 to 729.

That gives us some idea of the inroads that this weed is making in the agricultural economy, because once your land becomes infested with toadflax, virtually nothing can be done about it with the present knowledge we have. The agricultural representative service in the province of Saskatchewan is providing an invaluable service in organizing a front-line attack against these weeds. They are working closely with the agricultural committees of the rural municipalities to discover and to control patches. In fact, the agricultural committee of my own municipality, R.M. No. 290, informed me that Macedonian toadflax was being advertised for sale in an eastern seed house. I recall asking a question of the Minister of Agriculture on February 22, 1955. I asked the minister whether he had taken action to control the sale of Macedonian toadflax by this seed house. The minister replied in part:

> In reply I wish to state that the control of weeds is a provincial and municipal responsibility.

Farther on he stated:

> There is no legislation that forbids a seed house selling a plant such as Macedonian toadflax. It is an ornamental flower.

That answer, Mr. Chairman, showed that the Minister of Agriculture was still farming with horses, that he was miles behind the times because the regulations concerning seeds were changed to allow better control of linaria vulgaris, linaria dalmatica and linaria macedonica. In fact, the Canada Gazette of November 10, 1954, lists all the species of toadflax as being a primary noxious weed. The minister knows that if it is a primary noxious weed, no seeds are allowed in registered certified or No. 1 seed. I think we must broaden our thinking on this whole approach to weeds. The horse-farming technique is not good enough when you are dealing with a problem that is moving so rapidly. The weed survey in 1955 had this to say on broad-leaved toadflax. It is interesting enough to quote:

> Within the past decade a broad-leaved species of toadflax, linaria dalmatica, has become troublesome as a persistent perennial weed in parts of Washington and Idaho. This species is the same as one which is spreading in Saskatchewan. Seventy-nine small infestations of this species have been found within the surveyed area. Many of these occur in gardens and cemeteries. Undoubtedly many more infestations occur, since the field men were not asked to note these infestations until the 1953 survey.

The minister may argue that linaria dalmatica and linaria macedonica are two different varieties when in fact they are, according to the authorities whom I have consulted in the University of Saskatchewan, a strain of the same species. I was most disappointed with the attitude that the minister took on this problem. Nevertheless, even though the minister did make that mistake at that time, he might be prepared to admit it and to follow some of the suggestions I am going to make now so that the matter of weeds can be more effectively controlled in the future.

On many occasions the Liberal party has hidden under the skirts of the British North America Act. In this case they cannot evade their responsibility because agricultural research is explicitly outlined as a federal responsibility. What is being done in connection with research on this whole matter of weed control? Last year I put a question on the order paper and received as an order for return sessional paper No. 213 which gave information as to what was spent on weed control as opposed to another important aspect of agriculture, namely, entomology. I found that in 1954 there were eight full-time weed control specialists in the whole dominion of Canada. Six of them were located at headquarters at Ottawa, one in Ontario and one in Alberta. The total amount of money spent in salaries of these individuals was $37,055. When you compare that with entomology you find that there were 256 employed as full-time entomologists at an expense of $1,176,977. I am not saying that we should reduce the amount of money that is spent on entomological research but I am saying we should certainly pay more attention to the agricultural research that should be done in connection with weeds.

Dr. R. O. Ripley, chairman of the national weed committee, has estimated that in 1953 the total cost of weed investigation at the dominion and university level was $110,658. We find that outside of the Ottawa headquarters science service and experimental farm services there are no botanists working on this problem of weed control. We should take immediate steps to establish a chain of laboratories to investigate the problem. We should establish a D.E.W. line against weeds. This same suggestion might involve another change that I feel should be made in departmental administration. For some time now I have felt that there is a duplication of services in the science service and in the experimental farm service. I feel that in many instances the headquarters are located in identical stations. For example, there is a science service and an experimental station at Lethbridge. The same thing is true at Kentville, Nova Scotia. There would certainly be increased efficiency if the experimental farm service and the science service were amalgamated so that the professional men working in entomology and the field men working in experimental farm service could correlate their activities.

In connection with this same weed problem, we find that an investigation was carried on at the Belleville parasite laboratories where, incidentally, they employ 40 entomologists who are trying to find parasites which control weeds. One of them found a parasite on the toadflax samples which were sent down from Saskatchewan which seemed to do considerable damage to the reproductive mechanism of the toadflax. They found two insects on toadflax samples in Ontario where toadflax is not a serious weed. I would suppose that with the seriousness of this weed in western Canada the authorities in the science service would have immediately established a regional laboratory in the Marsden area where this insect could be controlled to see if it would effectively control toadflax, but nothing was done. In fact, one part-time man at the Scott experimental station has been moved to Lethbridge so that there is no one there except those who are on loan from the field husbandry department.

I do not think it is a matter of pleading with the minister to take action on this particular problem; I do not think he ever thought of it before. But if we are to be serious in our approach to weeds which are, as I mentioned, so expensive to farmers in all parts of Canada, something must be done immediately to stem the tide because it is far better to do it now than even five years from now when there might be from 500,000 to 1 million acres seriously infected. The onus of responsibility is on the federal government. The farmers in all parts of Canada feel that it is the responsibility of the federal government to perform this useful function, and although it might be contrary to Liberal policy, they might increase the surplus of wheat which we have for future generations to benefit thereby.

Mr. Thatcher: I would like to take six or seven minutes this afternoon to discuss one specific subject, namely, the lack of adequate long-term credit in agriculture throughout the country. As a matter of fact, I think hon. members on both sides of the house would agree that many of the difficulties which farmers have today can be traced to the lack of such facilities. At the present time, almost every branch of agriculture is suffering because they are starved for working capital.

The reason for this undesirable situation is not difficult to find. Apparently, private capital is failing to meet the problem posed by the lack of farm credit. Today private lenders, whether they are banks, investment houses or mortgage companies, can find more lucrative fields in which to invest their money, and fields which are less risky. As a result, in latter years these companies have been placing an ever smaller amount of their investment funds in farm mortgages.

I think the Bank of Canada regulations curtailing credit, which we have recently seen, will make this situation worse. The squeeze on farmers is bound to become even more serious. I can understand the lack of enthusiasm, which lending companies have; yet, I would like to tell them that their neglect of the long-term farm credit field could have serious consequences, not only to the nation but also to themselves. If the private lending companies do not devise methods whereby farmers can get adequate long-term credit, the government will have to come into the field in an ever more extensive way.

I am going to suggest today that these lending companies, if they are to take the advantages of the free enterprise system, should also assume some of the responsibilities. One of the responsibilities should be the granting of better long-term credit to farmers.

The lack of adequate credit today is having serious effects on our farming communities. In the first place, many young farmers who would like to go into farming are moving into the towns and cities, because they cannot get sufficient money to go into farming. After all, the price of land has skyrocketed and the price of machinery is very high. Moreover it is difficult for young farmers to find sufficient money to purchase a basic herd. Thus many young farmers who cannot obtain adequate credit are leaving the rural areas.

In the second place I suggest that a lack of adequate farm credit today is causing a concentration of farms in the hands of fewer and fewer farmers, because such credit as is available invariably goes to the wealthier farmers. This means inevitably that the number of marginal farmers tends to decrease while the number of tenant farmers tends to increase. I suggest that adequate farm credit could reverse such a trend.

I would like to point out in the third place that adequate farm credit today is lowering the productivity of many Canadian farmers. Farming is like most other businesses, in that the old adage that "it takes money to make money" is just as true as elsewhere. If our farmers could get better credit today, I think they would go into extensive irrigation projects, reclamation works, regrassing, etc. They would purchase better livestock and so on.

The farm credit problem is resulting in a lower productivity on farms than is necessary. Thus I suggest that parliament should give the problem attention without delay.

The government has recognized the problem this session with two amendments, one to the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the other to the Canadian Farm Loan Act. Both of these amendments are welcome; yet I think most hon. members would agree that all they can do is nibble at an over-all solution. As in the past, I am still convinced that farmers who go to make loans under the provisions of those acts will find that the down payments required are too high, the security requirements are too severe, or the actual amount which can be borrowed is too small.

I point these facts out because under those acts only about 15 per cent of all farm loans are made. We have to take additional action if the situation is to be solved.

It seems to me that the real answer to this long-term farm credit problem is not to be found in direct government loans. I think a method must be found to encourage private Canadian lending institutions to re-enter and greatly expand their activities in the farm mortgage business. I have a suggestion as to how this could be accomplished.

As I said a moment ago, many of our lending institutions feel—and I must admit perhaps with some justification—that marginal farmers are too great a risk because of climatic conditions, because of the uncertainties of markets and prices, et cetera to be given 20 year loans. As a result the farmers who really need money today very frequently cannot get it.

I remind hon. members of this house that the banks and lending institutions took the same attitude a few years ago toward urban dwellers who wanted to borrow money for a 20 or 30-year period to build a house. Parliament rectified that situation very successfully about three years ago, when it introduced legislation which guaranteed the banks against losses on 20 or 30 year loans made to urban dwellers to build homes.

I suggest that it would be feasible today to give the banks a similar guarantee on losses which they might incur by making 20 or 25 year loans to farmers to buy new farms or to buy equipment. In other words, I think parliament should consider having a national farm credit act along the lines of the National Housing Act.

As I see it, the principle would be precisely the same in both cases. Under that legislation the farmers would be able to get long-term farm credit without an unbearable burden being put on the taxpayers. Since the banks are making long-term loans under the National Housing Act, I think they might also be prepared to give the farmers long-term credit if suitable guarantees against losses were given by parliament.

I repeat that the time has come for the house to come to grips with this problem. Canadian agriculture must have better long-term credit facilities. In a booming economy we cannot permit agriculture to lag so far behind other industries.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chairman, the house will recall that on July 22 last year I spoke on the estimates for agriculture and made a request for a dominion experimental station in Norfolk. I do not intend to make the same speech all over again but there are a few points I would like to re-emphasize.

First of all, farm income has not risen with other lines of endeavour and in some cases it has declined. This would be bad in any event, but to make matters worse our operating costs have risen sharply and farmers are now in a squeeze that could be disastrous if nothing is done about it.

One way for government assistance to work to the advantage of our farmers would be for us to have this experimental farm located in Norfolk so that farmers could, under direction, work out some of our problems. I think perhaps our needs are greater now than they were in 1955 and I am renewing the request for this station.

Our temperature in Norfolk is about five degrees lower than at Harrow and Vineland, the other two government stations, and varieties that do well there would not give us the same production under our different growing conditions and temperatures.

My request of last year has won universal support in Norfolk and it has particularly won the support of the county council which sent four of its members here on April 24 to support the request for a station.

Bruce Wallace, who is a large apple and cherry grower and manager of Norfolk Fruit Growers and Norfolk Berry Growers, met the minister with us. We were favourably received by the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance and the deputy minister of agriculture.

The press in Norfolk has also supported the request both editorially and in news items. The London Free Press and the Brantford Expositor have also given the request much support.

I think perhaps the committee will bear with me if I quote some of the production figures I gave last year. I regret that these figures are for the year 1954 and perhaps are not quite relevant to the year which has passed.

First of all, we had 2,000 acres of apples in Norfolk and 400,000 bushels were produced in 1954. Last year we had relatively the same acreage but we produced many more apples and experienced some difficulty in selling them. There were 30 acres of sweet cherries and we produced 640 bushels. There were 142 acres of sour cherries and we produced 16,730 bushels. That was in 1954, Mr. Chairman. In 1955 sour cherries were about double and again we experienced some trouble in disposing of them.

There were 500 acres of peaches which produced over 60,000 bushels. There were 66 acres of Bartlett pears which produced 20,000 bushels. There were 103 acres of Keifer pears which produced 16,000 bushels.

Now I would like to deal with strawberries.

Mr. Blackmore: Would the hon. member speak up a little more.

[Mr. Anderson.]

Mr. Anderson: We had 1,100 acres of strawberries in 1954 which produced 3,300,000 quarts and in 1955 this production was well over 4 millions quarts. Our production has increased a little in the two years. We expect we will have a very heavy crop in 1956 because they weathered the winter well.

I wish now to deal with fresh market vegetables. We had a production of 15,000 bushels of tomatoes and 175,000 bushels of potatoes in 1954 and last year it was about the same.

Mr. Blackmore: Would my hon. friend tell us what section he is speaking about when he says "we"? I am sorry but I did not hear his introductory remarks.

Mr. Anderson: I am speaking mainly for the people of the county of Norfolk and the counties surrounding Norfolk.

In the area between Simcoe and Port Dover there was produced in 1954 a total of 450,000 crates of sweet corn. Some of that was exported after being precooled. More of this crop could be grown.

Something else that is new in Norfolk is irrigation. The tobacco men have miles and miles of irrigation pipe. They use the creeks as a water supply and also any low-lying areas which fill up in the winter with water which can be used when needed. This provides a problem because we are not too sure yet as to what we are doing. Sometimes too much irrigation will ruin a crop and it must be applied at the right time. There is an old saying that every farmer has a stiff neck because he is always watching the sun and the clouds. Weather determines what we are going to do from day to day.

We need new varieties, especially in strawberries. Twenty years ago we had a variety called the Parson Beauty that produced quite well for years. Lately the Premier variety has predominated but we are always looking for a new variety which will produce well and remain firm in shipping.

There is an experimental tobacco station at Delhi, but the soil there is not representative of the county. It will grow tobacco but not all kinds of fruits and vegetables. Perhaps the minister could see his way clear to allowing the office there to be used so that any directions could go out from that point. I would respectfully request that the minister give careful consideration to this matter in the light of the support that has been forthcoming from every part of the farm population of Norfolk and in view of our increasing need.

I should like also to support the hon. member for Wellington South in his request that the premium on grade A hogs be increased and that the premium on grade B hogs remain the same. This would tend to add quality to our bacon and assist in our exports.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Chairman, it gives me great pleasure to take part in this debate, particularly when we are discussing the estimates of the one department which is of great concern to a large majority of my constituents.

During my trip home at the Easter recess it was my privilege to attend the graduation exercises at the Vermilion school of agriculture. I know that the Department of Agriculture does not make any grants toward the operation of schools of agriculture in Alberta, but another department does make grants to the three schools we have. The total grants from the federal treasury to the province of Alberta in this connection I believe is in the neighbourhood of $47,700. There are three such schools in the province, one at Olds, another at Fairview and another at Vermilion in my constituency.

These schools give a very practical type of education to the young farmers and homemakers of the province. However, there is one disturbing factor about the operation of these schools, in that attendance is gradually decreasing. Does that mean that the young people of western Canada have lost faith in the future of the agricultural industry? It may just happen that that is the case. If it is the case, then I feel that all governments should view the situation with alarm.

It has been pointed out time and time again during this session that net farm income has been steadily decreasing during the last number of years. For example, in 1952 it was down 3·13 per cent of what it was the previous year; in 1953 it was down 21·6 per cent; and in 1954 it was down 66·64 per cent. This disastrous trend must be halted if we are going to maintain any semblance of development in Canada's major industry. I submit that Canadian citizens are justified in looking to the senior government for some direction and action in this regard.

During the graduation exercises which I attended at the Vermilion school they held what is known as the Little Royal, which is fashioned after the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto. I was interested in following their program. They put on a splendid stock show where the young students were able to demonstrate their training in such things as the judging of stock and showmanship. As I went through the plant I saw displayed the work of the carpentry shop, the welding shop and the meat-cutting department. I was quite interested in a remark made this afternoon by an hon. member who was telling how it was possible to get a larger sized side of bacon from a dead carcass. I have yet to see a living carcass.

Continuing through the school we saw the dairying plant and then we went into the portion of the school used by the homemakers where cooking, dressmaking and so on were taught. This is good practical training as far as the young people of our province are concerned. We should be encouraging young people to take greater advantage of this type of training. Agriculture in our province as in other parts of Canada indicates that the average age of farmers actively engaged is rapidly going up.

I feel that in order to be successful a farmer must be trained, that the proper training is more important than perhaps even a healthy body. The day of the strong back and the farmer going together in order to make a success is long past.

I should like to congratulate the federal government upon the grants being made for this type of education. I would ask the federal government to take immediate steps to do something toward stabilizing the agricultural industry. If that were done I do not think any other incentive would be needed to get our young people to stay on the farm.

During the present session we have discussed at some length resolutions extending the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Canadian Farm Loan Act. These acts are good as far as they go and the machinery which is to be provided is better than before. However, I would point out that the machinery will be no good unless the policy of the government expressed through these boards is changed and the conservative elements found on the boards during the past few years removed so that these two acts may serve the purpose which we as members of parliament trust they will.

There is another matter I should like to bring briefly to the attention of the minister, and that is the ever-increasing cost of commercial fertilizers to the farmers of the west. This morning I was reading a report issued by the Department of Agriculture which stated that the cost of commercial fertilizers had not gone up last year, and that it was hoped the upward trend had been halted. However, I should like to submit that the rise in the cost of fertilizers over the past years has been far too great. I hold in my hand some delivery slips given to farmers at the time they purchased fertilizers throughout the years. All these will deal with the cost of ammonium phosphate 11-48-0.

On June 21, 1946, you could buy a ton of this fertilizer for $58.50. By April 2, 1949, the same type of fertilizer had gone up to $74.40 per ton. By November 8, 1950, the farmer was forced to pay $85.35 per ton. By April 15, 1952, it was $97.70 per ton. On May 29, 1952, the farmer was charged $100.15 per ton. In the fall of that year it was $105.60. Last summer, on May 10, 1955, the price was up to $107.

I have tried to get some information as to why these prices have risen so sharply over the years. I am given to understand there are only two large plants producing commercial fertilizers in Canada, and I am wondering whether those two plants are not exercising some sort of monopolistic control over prices. If that is the case, I submit the Minister of Agriculture would be well advised to take a very close look at the situation and try to do something about it. I just want to point out that in the course of a few years fertilizers which we wish the farmers of western Canada to use, and which they must use if they are to retain the fertility of their soil, have more than doubled in price.

Now I should like to spend a few moments discussing the hog industry as it affects the province of Alberta, and particularly as it affects the producers of hogs in my area. During the first half of 1954 hogs were sold at $33.33 per hundredweight. During the second half of that year they were sold at $24.92 per hundredweight. During the first half of 1955 they were $23.52 per hundredweight, and in the second half of 1955 $23.17 per hundredweight. I have taken these statistics from the Livestock Marketing Review. They point out that hog prices have dropped 33⅓ per cent in the last two years. This is serious, because in our province we produce nearly one and a half million hogs a year.

I should like to point out that the livestock report in the Edmonton Journal of April 14, 1956, has this to say concerning hogs:

> Hog prices dropped 50 cents at Winnipeg to 20-23 and Montreal was unchanged at 23-23·50. Toronto hog prices declined 50 cents to 23 and most Saskatchewan markets were down the same at 19. Prices remained steady at Vancouver at 22·15 for top grade hogs.

In my constituency I have several large hog producers, and one of these producers has had extensive correspondence with the Minister of Agriculture in the past few months. This gentleman is a young man who is interested in the hog industry, has been in it for years and is hoping to make it his lifework, but if the present trend continues he will likely have to do what it has been suggested that he do, quit raising hogs. However, he wrote the Minister of Agriculture in December, 1955. I shall just take one paragraph of his letter. The minister has the letter and knows it is true:

> I can't make enough money out of hogs after paying expenses and raising my family to pay my debts. The only reason I continue on is to live in hopes that your government will do something that will give we farmers parity prices. Our prices have dropped but the prices we pay haven't come down.

I think he has summarized the situation fairly well as far as the hog producers are concerned. Perhaps it may be argued that, after all, hogs are only a sideline as far as the majority of the farmers in the west are concerned, though I do not accept that argument. I say that the hog industry in Alberta is one of the major branches of agriculture in our province. Last year, for example, we produced 1,691,193 hogs in the province of Alberta. That is not a small-time business.

For that reason I should like to put on the record this afternoon a few figures I have been fortunate enough to secure. These figures are based on an actual 42-sow unit operated for the purpose of producing weaner pigs, and follow the project right from the time the pigs are born to the time they are marketed. It is pointed out that the following figures represent the cost to produce a hog:

> Assuming that feed mixture consists of one-third oats and two-thirds barley, with 200 pounds of concentrate in one ton of feed, the cost per cwt. is . . . $2.15.

That is the cost of feed for pigs. I do not wish to burden the committee with a lot of figures. Perhaps I shall put the others on record another time, but I want to point out that the cost of a 30-pound weaner pig has been estimated at $9.17. They give the cost of raising this 30-pound pig to 200 pounds. The cost of feed is $16.45. The cost of straw for bedding is 78 cents. The cost of incidentals and overhead, etc., is $1. Labour costs and weaning to market cost $3.50 per head. Marketing cost is $1. The total cost per pig, according to this survey, is $31.90 for this group of hogs. That is what it actually costs the producers to raise these hogs.

Assuming that 40 per cent of these hogs are graded A, 54 per cent B-1 and 6 per cent C, and also assuming that the prices received for grade A hogs on the markets of the west are $20 per hundredweight—and that is very generous now, by the way—grade B-1 $19 per hundredweight and grade C $16.50 per hundredweight, what happens? There would be sold 254 grade A hogs from this 42-sow unit; there would be 343 hogs grade B-1 and 38 hogs grade C. The average sale price of this group of hogs which started out in the weaner stage would be $30.60. To the producer the net loss per hog would be $1.30.

[Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose).]

Surely the minister will agree with me that a hog raiser who is going into it in a scientific manner cannot continue too long when he is losing $1.30 per hog. The minister will perhaps be able to advance other figures as to how much it costs to raise a hog. If he has them I would certainly appreciate it if he would put them on the record so we can look at them.

I have already pointed out that according to the figures of the federal government, during the course of 1955 there were 1,691,193 hogs raised in Alberta exclusive of domestic slaughterings and so on. What happened to those hogs? One-third were consumed right in the province of Alberta, and I am given to understand that 90 per cent of the remainder were shipped live weight or dressed to the Vancouver market. That being the case, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture how he can justify a support price for hogs of $18.50 on the Edmonton market and $23 on the Toronto and Montreal markets. When we consider the fact that the actual selling price of hogs on the Edmonton market is not much above the support price of $18.50 and that it costs $1 per hundredweight to ship those that are sent to the Vancouver markets, making $19.50, surely the farmers of Alberta are being given a bad time by a deal like this.

Somebody is making a huge profit out of the hogs that are raised in the province of Alberta, and I have already pointed out that it is not the producer. Somewhere along the line somebody is making money which rightfully belongs to the farmers of the province of Alberta. I submit to the minister that he should give very serious consideration to the establishment of a uniform floor price on hogs across Canada. I can see no reason that would justify the minister in establishing a floor price of $23 in Toronto and Montreal and $18.50 in Edmonton. It is nothing but straight discrimination against the hog producers of the province of Alberta. I will undoubtedly have the privilege of receiving a reply from the minister in this regard, and I am sure there will be many interesting discussions with respect to the hog industry.

I should like to say one thing more. I got into a little trouble the other day when I congratulated a civil servant. I do not wish to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture, but I should like to say to him that I have enjoyed the courtesy which members of his department have extended to me during my time here.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, when the Minister of Agriculture opened the discussion on his estimates a couple of months ago now I listened with a great deal of interest and since then I have read what he had to say in Hansard. I must say that much of his speech was very interesting but that parts of it reminded me of a story that is told about a clergyman who on one occasion lost the notes for his sermon. They were picked up by a very curious member of his flock, who looked at the notes and was amazed to see a notation on the side which said, "Argument weak here; shout." I do not suggest that the minister shouts but on reading his speech I came to the conclusion that it would be very apt if one were to put the notation beside certain portions of his speech, "Argument weak here; use some statistics."

Of course I am not criticizing the minister for doing that because it is quite a legitimate practice; nevertheless those who are on the receiving end of speeches that quote statistics at considerable length should be on their guard. In that connection I came across an interesting passage regarding statistics in a very famous book, "Mathematics for the Millions". This book was written by a Mr. Hogben and he has this to say:

> Today the lives and happiness of people depend more than most of us realize upon the correct interpretation of public statistics which are kept by government offices. When a committee of experts announce that the average man can live on his unemployment allowance, or the average child is getting sufficient milk, the mere mention of an average or the citation of a list of figures is enough to paralyse intelligent criticism. In reality half or more than half the population may not be getting enough to live on when the average man or child has enough. The majority of people living today in civilized countries cannot read and write freely in statistics. The modern man has got to learn the language of statistics in self-defence, because no society is safe in the hands of its clever people.

In that regard I should like to make a few brief observations on some of the statistics the minister gave. He put tables on the record indicating farm cash income over a period of years and also farm net income for a number of years. These are very interesting figures. They show that, although generally speaking gross farm income is rising, over the last few years there has been a fairly rapid decline in net income. I refer only to the maritime provinces. In 1951 net farm income for the maritimes was, in round figures, $81 million, in 1952, $77 million, in 1953, $62 million and $62 million again in 1954.

Then there is another element in these income figures which should be realized, namely that they are not measured in constant dollars. Therefore although the farmer's net income may remain stationary or even increase, his purchasing power may be going down. That has been the case over the last few years. For example, in 1954 the percentage of the gross national product which was credited to farm net income was 6·8, whereas the average for 1946 to 1950 inclusive was 12·7 per cent. The percentage of 6·8 for 1954 is the lowest percentage since 1931.

I think the minister is perfectly sincere. After all, it is his job to try to examine objectively, if possible, the true situation as far as the agricultural industry of our country is concerned. But I am rather disappointed by the fact that due to misinterpretation of statistics certain people, especially in the cities, who have not an accurate picture of the situation, have got the idea that the farmers are not too badly off after all and that their situation compares favourably with the rest of the economy. Many of these people pose as agricultural experts. I contend that they are doing the agricultural industry and farmers generally a disservice if they try to picture the industry as being prosperous or as sharing in anything like an equitable manner in the gross national product.

It was probably that sort of agriculturalist that inspired an American called Eugene Ware to say that the farmer works the soil and the agriculturist works the farmer. I should also like to point out briefly the situation as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture sees it. I shall quote a short extract from their brief entitled "Farmers meet the Cabinet". They start out by saying that generally the economy is in a healthy condition, but then they say:

> On the other hand, we find that, apparently, the notable exception in this picture of record prosperity is that of the farmer and his family. We do not claim that Canadian agriculture is in a depression such as we have known in the past. We do say that the farming industry is not sharing in Canada's new high level of prosperity.

Then they go on to say this:

> Farmers from coast to coast feel keenly that on the average their returns have become badly out of balance with those of other major groups in the nation. It is important to emphasize purchasing power in this connection because the farmer's difficulties are to be found as much in high prices of the things he buys as in a decline in the number of dollars he receives.

They are pointing out what I was saying just a few moments ago about the decline in the purchasing power of the dollar. That matter is extremely important. Out of the farmer's net income he must provide for his family and he must provide for a great many charges which are practically standard if he is to support on an adequate basis the community in which he lives. In that connection I should like to point out that owing to economic pressures, farm units are becoming larger. This means that in a rural community there are fewer people to carry the load of community charges which are fixed or nearly fixed for an area. There are still churches, schools, medical assistance and many other things that must be provided for the rural area whether there are many people to pay for them or just a few.

The purchasing power of the dollar which the farmer receives is away down. City people may wonder at this statement because they have not noticed any great decline in the cost of food. As a matter of fact the cost of food to the consumer is still going up. City people generally speaking perhaps have the idea—and one should not blame them if they have—that surely the amount the farmer is receiving for what they buy is increasing also. But that is not the case, owing to the fact that the cost of distribution has risen sharply in the last few years.

For this rise in cost there are two reasons. The first is that the actual cost of distribution has gone up, and the second is the fact that consumers are demanding food in a more advanced stage of preparation as time goes by. The consumer cannot expect the farmer to be as well off when he pays for a quick-frozen T.V. meal—which one sees advertised, with a bit of chicken, some potatoes and so on, on a platter—as he would be if the same price were being paid for the ingredients of that meal. The cost of distribution and preparation is taking a larger and larger percentage of the consumer's dollar.

In that connection I note this:

> Based on 15 food items, which account for about 75 per cent of consumers' expenditure on Canadian farm foods, 1955 retail prices were almost 11 per cent above 1949; for the farm equivalents of the same 15 commodities, farm prices were about 3 per cent below 1949. Marketing costs increased almost 25 per cent between these two periods while the farm share was lower by almost 9 per cent.

Farmers everywhere recognize the fact that agriculture is in an extremely trying time in its history. There have recently been great changes in production methods, and it is anticipated by many that there will be even more spectacular changes in the future in connection with methods of production and so on if agriculture is to survive. One fact, of course, is that as time goes by there are fewer and fewer farmers producing the food of the nation. This situation is brought about to a great extent by greater efficiency, larger units, mechanization and food produced in various forms from feeds that were formerly fed to horses in order to provide farm power. There are many other factors. Agriculture finds itself in an extremely difficult position.

In this economic climate there are fewer and fewer young men taking up agriculture as a career. Certainly in the agricultural districts with which I am familiar the average age of farmers engaged in agriculture is becoming greater and greater; and as these farmers retire or die off, fewer and fewer of them are being replaced. The result is that you have large numbers of farms completely abandoned, used as pasture or cultivated to a minor extent by some farmer who lives in the vicinity. This situation puts a great load on the community because there are fewer people to support the normal community enterprises.

Of course there are some cynical people who say "So what? What difference does it make?" They say that perhaps this is a necessary thing; that it is just following the inevitable economic laws; that if that is what is happening, it is just too bad but it is an inevitable thing to which those engaged in agriculture and those who live in the country generally must face up; that they must face up to the fact that by far the greatest number of them will be exterminated in the next few years if this trend continues. I should like to warn people who have that point of view that we cannot abandon, sabotage or neglect our agricultural industry, because before too many years are past we shall need it badly and we shall need it on an efficient, high level of production. Otherwise there will be food and clothing shortages even here in North America.

The United States department of agriculture put out an extremely interesting illustrated booklet, a copy of which I have in my hand, entitled "The 5th Plate". In it they point out that, in the United States, for every four plates that were set for dinner in 1950, there will be five in 1975. Therefore there must be 25 per cent more food available for consumption in 1975 as compared with 1950. To meet this need they point out it would require all the arable land now existing in the states of Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan.

They also point out that there is another way of partially meeting this need and that is to make farms, the present arable land, more productive. That can only be done, of course, if we have an economic climate in which the farmer is not forced to mine his soil to eke out a livelihood. We must have an economic climate in which he can safeguard his soil which, to the farmer, is his working capital and which is very difficult to replace.

This same booklet points out that in the United States in 1920 there were 3·62 acres of crop land for every individual in the country. By 1950 this per capita acreage had fallen to 2·25. I know these are just statistics and the city person probably does not worry too much about them because they are not realities to him; they do not convey anything very real. But if you put them in terms of farming it makes the farmer realize that he has to grow food and a lot of clothing for one individual on a little over two acres of land.

That is a very difficult thing to do if you think of it in terms of sheep, cattle and horses; but when you think of it in terms of human beings it is quite a problem. We have to get away from the idea that we have an endless amount of fertile land and that there will never come a day when we cannot exploit new, fresh, virgin areas and provide an abundance of food and clothing for our inhabitants. We are getting to the point where we can no longer mine our soil in one area and then move on to fresh, fertile, virgin land when we have eroded and exploited beyond recovery the agricultural soil in a given area.

Of course, some people adopt the attitude that the answer is bigger units. That view has been put forward by at least one of our chief financial publications in this country in recent weeks. It is also the kind of thinking that induced the men in the Kremlin to set out on their program of collective farms. They took the attitude that if they had bigness, the factory type of thing, mass production, they could solve the problem. I doubt that very much. Even if it would solve the problem from a purely economic point of view, I doubt whether it is the solution we want.

I hold in my hand a full-page story that appeared in the Financial Post of April 21 this year. It contains a streamer headline which says:

Factory Farming Can Cure Our Barnyard Blues

The article reads in part:

In southwestern Saskatchewan, a dusty village squats amid rumpled hills at a point where a yellow gravel highway bumps across a single line of railroad track.

Three grain elevators—two red, one silver—tower over a rail siding. The burnt-out shell of another, never rebuilt, points blackened timbers at the sky.

A church which lost its roof to a windstorm has been abandoned. So have at least 20 houses, paint gone and yards weed-grown. Twenty years ago 306 people lived here. Now: Only 177.

Slowly but certainly a farming community is dying.

In its own way this is a picture of agricultural progress.

This is an amazing conclusion for the writer to come to, Mr. Chairman. This is not my idea of agricultural progress.

I have another editorial which I will not bother to read, but it points out that politicians are foolish to worry about the farm bloc any more. They say that farmers are being exterminated and too much attention is being given to them; that they are a dying race and that we shall soon have huge factory-like farms with only a few people operating them. They say this will be a good thing and the sooner it comes the sooner we shall have relief from this recurrent annoyance of the farm bloc demanding this or that from parliament.

I have a strong feeling that even if this is sound from the purely economic point of view, it is not sound from the sociological point of view, and that there are other things that should be taken into consideration. I feel strongly that if our nation is to remain strong and healthy and if we are to have a large group of independent people who believe in free enterprise, and who believe in themselves, and that the world does not owe them a living but that they must earn it, we must retain the family farm.

A fine editorial on this point appeared in the Charlottetown Guardian of April 7. I do not intend to read it, but it points out, and rightly so, that this is a great problem and if our nation is to remain strong and stable the family farm must be retained, and an economic environment must be created which will permit it to remain. This is especially important in the maritimes. They also point out that in the United States something is being done about it. They say:

> The same problem exists in the United States where, according to a congressional committee, more than 600,000 family farms have disappeared since 1950. There, however, steps are being taken to do something about it before it is too late. The committee which made an on the spot investigation in several farm belt states calls the family farm "the backbone of agriculture and of free enterprise in general" and warns that if it should disappear completely from the scene the strength of the nation's economy would be very seriously undermined.

I agree with that point of view most heartily. Some people take the attitude that the reason income per farm is not high is that farmers are inefficient, and they say, "You must be efficient". I point out, Mr. Chairman, there has been a great increase in the efficiency of agriculture over the years. The productiveness of the individual farmer is probably as high as that of any other member of the labouring force.

In pioneer days 90 per cent of the labour force was in agriculture. It took nine men in agriculture to provide enough to support one man in industry. At the present time the figures are reversed. Today only about one-tenth of our labour force is in agriculture, yet they still provide good food and considerable clothing for the population.

If the impression is created that agriculture is well off there is a danger that nothing will be done about it. In that connection I would like to point out that the great civilizations of the past collapsed not because of an economic collapse in the cities but because the fertility of the soil degenerated and finally disappeared. That has inevitably been the case in the past.

I think it is extremely important, Mr. Chairman, that the family farm be preserved for the reasons I have already given. In order to ensure this there are some things which I think the government should consider doing. For instance, there is the question of the customs tariff. In Canada we import a tremendous amount of fruit and vegetables from south of the border, and our balance of trade in that connection is not improving. I would like to quote briefly from a recent issue of The Grower, a trade journal, which says:

> In the first nine months of 1955 Canada imported fresh fruits and vegetables to a value of $86,973,273, a gain of $5,518,023 over the same period in 1954. In the same nine months Canada exported fresh fruits and vegetables to a value of $10,621,457, a decline of $1,739,099 over the same period in 1954. The gain in the adverse balance was therefore $7,257,122.
> Further examination of the records show that imports of fresh fruits declined $740,360 whilst the imports of vegetables increased $6,258,383 for a net increase, as given, of—

That is $5 million in round figures.

There are other things, too, which I believe the government should consider doing. One is to put on the free list some additional things which are used exclusively in agriculture as recommended by the farm organizations, such as steel posts and numerous other articles which I will not detail here. In certain areas of the country encouragement should be given to the processing of food in those areas so it will be consumed there. I was shocked to read recently that of the food consumed in the four Atlantic provinces less than 30 per cent is produced there. Of course there are some exports to partly balance that, but the exports do not begin to completely balance it.

I think my time is just about up, Mr. Chairman, but I have just one more thing to say. We in the maritimes do not expect a very high rate of income, and we would go along with seeing some other sections of the country enjoying a higher income, because I think the average farmer in the maritimes realizes that farming is a way of life and is interested in preserving the family farm. If he had a choice between prairie income and scenery and maritime income and the maritime way of life he would take the latter, because he realizes that as a work of art there are few things more pleasing to the eye, or more capable of affording scope and gratification to a taste for the beautiful, than a well-situated, well-cultivated farm.

Mr. Huffman: Mr. Chairman, I was extremely interested in the remarks which have just been made by the hon. member for Queens, especially when he referred to the federation of agriculture brief in which they stated that the agricultural economy is not sharing in the high level of prosperity of the country.

Although the debate on the speech from the throne has concluded I would call to the hon. member's attention that this fact was recognized by the government when it said that some sectors of the economy have not fully participated in the country's increased well-being. Our government has recognized the position of agriculture, and it has done many things over the years which have been helpful to the producers. One has only to recall at the time of the foot-and-mouth disease how readily and quickly the government came to the support of the people concerned. In addition to that we have floor prices on many commodities which are produced.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Huron the other day when he asked the Minister of Labour about the possibility of getting more immigrants in this country because there is a need at this time to assist in the production on our farms.

I was rather surprised when the hon. member for Leeds got up to make his speech this afternoon and immediately started to criticize the Minister of Agriculture, indicating that he had not fully recognized the problems of agriculture in this country. He also expressed the hope that at some time they would have the opportunity of naming a minister of agriculture from eastern Ontario. May I say to him, as the Minister of Agriculture said this afternoon, we are very pleased in Ontario and throughout eastern Canada because we have the assistant to the minister who is fully conversant with all the farm problems in Ontario, in eastern Canada and in every part of Canada.

I feel a little out of character in saying what I am about to say at this time. When the Leader of the Opposition raised the point this afternoon about the Minister of Agriculture and the other ministers being absent, the Minister of Agriculture upon his return made the statement that he was out to get some facts and figures so he would be able to answer certain questions which might arise. I feel that the only reason the question of privilege was raised this afternoon was because when the Minister of Finance was replying to the amendment moved by the leader of the official opposition, and seconded by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, at eight o'clock on Tuesday night, there was not a single member of the official opposition in the house—

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): At eight o'clock?

Mr. Huffman: At eight o'clock nobody was here of the official opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Huffman: The minister was speaking at that time.

Mr. Macdonnell: It must have been unauthorized and illegal.

Mr. Huffman: The house had been called to order, Mr. Speaker was in the chair, and if you want to press it further I might point out that neither the Leader of the Opposition nor the hon. member who seconded his amendment was here to cast his vote when the vote was taken.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, if we are going to get into this sort of thing—

An hon. Member: It is the other way around now.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, if we are going to become involved in this sort of question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonnell: —I think it is only fair to point out to the committee that the Leader of the Opposition was in Toronto fulfilling a speaking engagement.

An hon. Member: He should have been here.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think it is only fair to point out to the committee at this time that it is not my responsibility to determine who started this argument and who was or was not present. It is my responsibility to try to keep the committee discussing item No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. I think the honours are about even in so far as the introducing of extraneous matter is concerned, and I ask the committee to please consider the incident closed.

Mr. Pallett: May I ask the hon. member a question. Was he referring to the federal government's refusal to make any grants to the municipalities?

The Deputy Chairman: I thought I had tried to make it clear to the committee that we are not discussing that incident or any other incident which may have taken place. We are discussing item No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Huffman: Mr. Chairman, speaking more directly to the problem of agriculture I should like first to refer to an article which appeared in the Windsor Star of June 25, 1955. Speaking about the vast investment in agriculture it had this to say:

> Due to the rapid industrial development of Canada there is occasional talk about the decline in importance of agriculture. This should be taken with a few grains of salt. Increases in other activities do not diminish the importance of agriculture.
> It is wise to know the exact position, so there may be no misunderstanding about this. Agriculture still is far and away the principal industry in Canada. Indeed, there is more money invested in agriculture than in all manufacturing industries combined.
>
> Most recent figures show the vast sum of $9,593,000,000 in capital investments in farm land, buildings, equipment and livestock in Canada. This compares with $8,470,000,000 in all manufacturing industries.
> Even in the highly industrialized United States an authority avers there is a greater capital investment in agriculture than in all other industries combined. And it is estimated the incomes of 50 per cent of the people in the United States are derived directly or indirectly from agriculture.
>
> These include not only farmers. Also involved are all in the canning, packing and other food processing plants. Also all in the farm implement business—manufacturing and distribution. And many in the chemical industry (suppliers of fertilizers and insecticides); in the railway and trucking industries; in the automobile and rubber factories, and in all the retail and wholesale trades handling foods.
>
> The same would be true in Canada, possibly even more so in proportion. We produce large quantities of food for export.
> It is well to put these facts in proper perspective, so that other industries—each of importance in the Canadian economy—will realize their positions.

In my opinion the problems facing agriculture in Canada are similar to the problems faced by agriculture in other countries. An article which appeared in the New York Times was headed "Has any country licked the agricultural problem?" The article goes on to deal with the $7 billion surplus which has been created by the policies followed in the United States. They mention that this was at the time the Russian agriculturists were visiting the United States—they later came to Canada—and continued:

> I don't know whether the Russian agricultural experts who saw the farmers' homes had it made clear to them that some of the great farms of this country are mortgaged to the government for as high as a million dollars that the government hasn't the slightest idea of ever collecting on "loans" covered by unsalable crops. And that 43 per cent of American farmers still have net incomes of less than a thousand dollars per year—and are, in fact, paying the rich and subsidized farmers in enhanced feed prices.

It is understandable that there is a problem in the United States. An article in the Financial Times had this to say:

> Moreover, under that system, the American farmer has lost all control over his major operations. Like the Russian, the American farmer is told exactly what, when and how much he is to grow. There is no incentive to develop new markets nor to reduce costs.

Referring to Europe the New York Times had this to say under an article headed "Farm surpluses face west Europe nations", and reading:

> Efforts to get freer trade in food products within Europe have been unsuccessful.

All of us realize that the severe weather on the continent during the past winter changed that picture almost overnight and from a surplus position they soon got into a position of need. We all recall the great increase in the prices of practically every item of foodstuff which occurred. I recall the Indian delegate to the United Nations telling us last fall how they had been able to increase the production of foodstuffs in that country by the use of new cultural practices over what it had been a short time ago.

Returning to our own province, I should like to pay a compliment to the farm organizations which met in Toronto not so long ago and advocated that self-help was the best solution for any farm problem. I am proud to be associated with such people who are ready to work out a solution to a problem that may face them and try the best possible plan to bring the best possible result. They are not asking the government to pile up surpluses worth millions of dollars as has been done in the United States, to the point where they do not know how they are going to dispose of them. These surpluses have created a block to the distribution of foodstuffs in a free society such as the one in which we like to operate.

I realize that as individuals we cannot always maintain the position we would like to maintain, but our position is ever so much stronger when we act collectively. I should like to pay a compliment to the farm organizations in my own county of Kent (Ont.). We grow many specialized products in that county, and the production of many of them is organized. The production of other products is in the process of being organized. Where there is an organization you will find there is little or no problem as far as the return from that crop is concerned, but where the production is unorganized or, if you like, disorganized there is a problem because we are not always able to get the best price consistent with the cost of production.

I should like to pay a compliment to the government for the action that has been taken in connection with resolutions which have been passed from time to time by organizations in my county. These resolutions were forwarded to the ministers concerned, and while they were not always accepted, at times the government saw fit to accept particular resolutions which had been passed. Those turned out to be favourable and to the benefit of the industry in my district or in whatever area they applied.

I would recommend to the farm organizations that they make an effort to use the established agencies for handling their products. This can be done, as has been ably demonstrated. I feel that there is a place for those people who know the selling business, because that is the important part. There is no doubt that we are able to produce to meet the needs, but we must have further organization to dispose of the products we grow.

I was very much interested this afternoon when I heard the hon. member for Queens speak about the fruits and vegetables that are imported into this country and the vegetables that we export to the United States. Certain it is that we cannot balance one type of commodity with a similar type of commodity, but if we did we would be denying the Canadian people the right to make the choice they would like to make as far as fruits and vegetables are concerned. But we do attempt as best we can to meet the problems that face us.

I should like now to offer a suggestion to the government that I feel will be helpful to an industry in my district. I refer to the corn industry. In looking over the figures I note that at one time the production of corn in this country was very minor in extent. I have figures only for the province of Ontario, but I believe the greater proportion of the corn grown in Canada for commercial purposes is grown within this province.

In 1940 we had a production of nearly 7 million bushels of shelled corn. In 1955 that production had increased to the point where we were growing nearly 32 million bushels. I take a great deal of satisfaction in knowing that the county from which I come and which I have the honour to represent has extended its production from 2 million bushels in 1940 to nearly 11 million bushels in 1955. We have increased our average yield on a provincial basis from 37·4 to 62·6 bushels per acre. That is an increase of 70 per cent for the province. The figures for the county of Kent (Ont.) show an increase in the same period of over 80 per cent.

I heard the hon. member for Queens read an article stating the concern of some people about the arable land being used up, and expressing some concern as to whether we shall be able to meet the needs of our people in the foreseeable future. I for one do not believe that situation will ever occur, because at this moment our provincial average production of corn is 62·6 bushels per acre. During 1955 a 4-H club member produced 304·38 bushels per acre. I feel that in the future we shall continue to improve as we have done in the past.

One of the ways in which I think we might be able to help this industry in my district is this. Corn coming in from the United States bears an 8 cents tariff. If we were to ship corn into the United States it would have a tariff of 25 cents a bushel. The tariff was established at a time when we were not self-sufficient in the production of corn. Today Canadians produce the amount of corn needed by our people, and we are exporting some corn as well. Some time ago I made representations, along with the hybrid seed corn producers of our district. On that occasion, on a presidential prerogative, the tariff against seed corn going into the United States was reduced by one-half, and there are further representations being made that the executive exercise its right of reducing it at the rate of 5 per cent for three consecutive years if it so chooses. That would be helpful.

I should like to recite a specific case. At a given point in my district, 76 miles from London, where the great Kellogg plant is located, corn going over the railroad bears a tariff of 25¼ cents. But corn can come from Chicago, a distance of 376 miles, and cost only 5 cents more to haul, and it is being hauled under arrangements that were made quite some years ago. I would suggest to the minister, and also to the Minister of Transport that they give consideration to looking into the rates that apply on this commodity. We have the Crowsnest pass and the maritime rates and we have the bridge over northern Ontario. If our railroads are to be used in the national interest, I suggest that it would be in the national interest if something were done for this industry, which plays a very important part in the Canadian economy.

There is another item to which I should like to refer, and that is the item of soybeans. We are not self-sufficient in that commodity. We started to grow them only in 1942. In my own county we produced 308,000 bushels in 1942, and in 1955 we produced 2,034,300 bushels. Our total production in Canada for 1955 was 5·65 million bushels. Along with that, Canada has the highest yield of any country. The average United States yield is 20·2 bushels per acre. In Ontario it is 26 bushels per acre, and the county I have the privilege of representing has an average of 29·7 bushels per acre.

Soybeans come into this country free, but if we want to export them to the United States they cost $1.20 a bushel. When that tariff was established that was perfectly all right, because we needed the soybeans from the United States if our crushing plants in this country were to be established. Today we have them established and, though we are net yet self-sufficient, I am sure the time is rapidly approaching when we can produce all that is necessary. Again we have the rail problem, and it is almost identical with that connected with corn except that it has one more feature. It has a different classification. It is classified under oil seeds and bears a higher freight tariff than corn. So, in addition to possibly reclassification which is necessary, this product should be put on a basis that would enable us to meet the competition from abroad.

The reason I bring up the question of rail rates is this. In Toledo, which is just across the lake from our crushing plants, the soybeans can be loaded into lake boats or barges and taken across the lake. They go across at a rate of 6 to 7 cents a bushel. In our case, to ship soybeans from Chatham, from where I come, costs 25 cents a bushel. Therefore our people are at a disadvantage of 18 to 19 cents a bushel. If we can overcome this disadvantage we will be in a very favourable position to increase our production and meet our competitors, the producers in the United States. For that reason I trust that the government will pay some attention to this aspect of the problem.

There is one other matter, and this one really brings tears to my eyes because I wish to speak about onions. Last year we had an exceptionally good crop of onions in my district but the farmers of New York state lost their onions because of severe floods. The growers of my district generously offered eight carloads of onions to the producers in New York state. The only requirement was that they would sell the onions and distribute the funds among the people of New York state. However, the government of the United States would not waive the regulations that applied, and consequently the gift could not be accepted. I hope that in the representations made to Washington from time to time these problems will be taken care of so that we can meet any competition there may be.

There is another problem with regard to onions. There is a duty of 37½ cents on onions coming into Canada from the United States, and during certain periods of the year they come in free. On Canadian onions going into the United States the duty is 75 cents. Our people feel they can produce equally as well as any other country, and all they are asking is that the United States put their tariff in line with our tariff and allow us an equal opportunity to compete wherever the market may be. Our people will be satisfied if that is done. I think that is a compliment to the ability of our people to produce, and that is what they would like to see the government do.

I should like to refer to an article that appeared in the London Free Press reporting an address by Frank E. Wolff, chairman of the agriculture committee of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, in the course of which he said that food was the greatest weapon. I agree that is the case. I should like to pay a particular compliment to our plant breeders and cerealists who over the years have introduced types of plants and grains that have increased production and have given people in many parts of the world the opportunity to eat better than they ever did before. I would say that our plant breeders, cerealists, agronomists and others connected with such work have rendered a greater service to mankind than the physicists and other scientists.

We all know what happens when an atom or hydrogen bomb is exploded over an atoll. A chain reaction starts in Moscow. They say they have a bigger and better bomb, and that they exploded it first. I should like to tell you what has been done in my district by our plant breeders and cerealists. They have produced a hybrid seed corn which has increased production from the figure of around 40 bushels an acre that I mentioned a while ago to a maximum of 304 bushels an acre. When the Russian delegation were here they purchased hybrid seed corn from my district. It is going to their country and possibly it will have an effect so far as the Russian people are concerned. There is one thing of which I am sure. I am confident that a Canadian kernel is much better than a Russian kernel.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Robertson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on this occasion to support a resolution passed unanimously at the twelfth annual convention of the Ontario canning crop growers at Hamilton, Ontario, on December 1, 1955. The purpose of the resolution was to recommend to the government that a pilot processing plant be established at the Smithfield horticultural substation. As Smithfield is in the riding of Northumberland which I have the pleasure to represent I think I can point out many reasons why Smithfield is the logical place for the establishment of such a pilot processing plant. The association represents some 10,000 growers of vegetable canning crops in the province of Ontario. The resolution is worded as follows:

> Be it resolved that this convention request the Canada Department of Agriculture to establish a pilot processing plant at the Smithfield horticultural substation of the Canada Department of Agriculture for the purpose of further studying the relationship of raw product grades to those in the finished product grades of processing crops and that sufficient commercial acreage be grown at the above station to supply the pilot plant with the raw product of the crops being studied.

The resolution was supported by a brief which was presented to the deputy minister of agriculture on February 15 of this year. I should like to express the appreciation of all members of this organization for the courtesy of the deputy minister of agriculture and the sympathetic hearing he gave to the delegation. In supporting the brief I feel I can do no better than to quote very briefly from the brief itself in order to demonstrate the requirement for and purpose and need of such a pilot processing plant. The brief as presented to the deputy minister reads in part as follows under the heading "The Need":

By reason of its location, weather conditions at the central experimental farm at Ottawa are not ideal for the growing of many of the major canning crops. In recognition of this fact, the Canada Department of Agriculture some years ago established a horticultural substation at Smithfield, Ontario, to permit the study of problems encountered by growers of fruits and vegetables under actual conditions existing in one of Canada's important areas of production of these crops, particularly for the food processing industry. . . .

To be of practical value to agriculture and the food processing industry, fruit and vegetable varieties must possess qualities that enable both producers and processors to market food products that meet with consumer acceptance. The grower has to produce a crop of high quality and yield which he can produce and market at a reasonable profit. The objective of the food processor in respect to the finished product is identical. At the same time, consumers demand, in this era of keen competition both in price and variety of food products, processed food products of good flavour, colour, texture, odour and generally attractive appearance.

I go on further in the brief, and under the heading, "The Purpose" there is the following:

A food products laboratory should be established at Smithfield, Ontario, in order to help the plant breeder, the grower, the processor and the consumer. . . . Such a laboratory would provide the facilities for objective testing and evaluation of various varieties of fruits and vegetables produced on the substation acreage.

Later, results could be discussed with plant breeders and ultimately, when a variety is considered ready for commercial introduction, results and performance could be discussed with producers and processors in order to assure industry acceptance of the results of research in a minimum of time.

. . . For optimum quality of the finished product, a promising variety must be harvested at a definite maturity and processed by a definite procedure that can be carefully controlled. A food processing laboratory at Smithfield would provide the means of determining the desirable maturity and establishing a definite processing procedure for a given variety.

In addition, the laboratory could conduct research to determine the reasons for: flavour loss in processing, loss of colour intensity, undesirable odour development and texture characteristics of processed food products. As a further practical contribution to the industry and the economy, such a laboratory would enable research authorities to develop new types of processed foods that would channel commodities which might at any time in the future be in surplus supply into the consumer market.

Finally, under the heading of "Requirements" of such a plan the following has been suggested:

In order to provide the facilities for such research, it is respectfully suggested that the laboratory at Smithfield consist of:

(1) a pilot plant.
(2) a laboratory for evaluation.
(3) cold storage and freezer facilities.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to support this brief wholeheartedly because I am sure that in Smithfield we have all the requirements for the establishment of a successful pilot processing plant. I also know that the Ontario food processors' association feel the need for such a pilot plant so they may carry on extensive research on food products in this industry. They also feel that Smithfield is an ideal location for such a plant because technical personnel from Ottawa could avail themselves of the opportunity of conducting on the spot research in a major canning area in Canada, thus eliminating the necessity for recruiting additional technical staff which would be necessary if such a pilot processing plant were established in another area in Canada.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, among both growers and processors there is a feeling that since Ontario is the major centre of canning crop production, the province of Ontario is the logical place for the establishment of such a pilot processing plant. If the Department of Agriculture can give sympathetic consideration to this suggestion I am sure we shall be providing an extremely valuable service which will be of benefit not only to the growers of fruits and vegetables in Canada but also to the processing industry and ultimately to the consuming public itself.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I believe this is something of a notable day in the House of Commons, in that members of all political parties have risen in their places and said to the government that all was not well with the agricultural industry. I am most happy to see members on the government side of the house—Liberal members, in this case Liberal members from Ontario—rising and pointing out to the government that substantial improvements are necessary in its agricultural policy.

As everyone knows, in this nation today we are witnessing an increase in our wealth production. In recent years we have had an almost uninterrupted increase in the general production of this country. But anyone viewing the important segment of the Canadian economy cannot help but come to the conclusion that agriculture is the one important segment that is not sharing in any way in this general rise in prosperity. As a matter of fact instead of improving its position agriculture is going down, and it has been going down for some years. Moreover, the position of agriculture is not falling at a small, imperceptible rate; it is falling at a most alarming rate.

I have here figures obtained from the dominion bureau of statistics. They show that the gross cash income for agriculture was $2,811 million in 1951 and that it has been falling steadily until in 1955 it is estimated that gross cash incomes for agriculture will be some $2,323 million. The net income position is much worse. There is a drop from $2,150 million in 1951 to $1,125 million in 1954. That is a drop of some 48 per cent within that three-year period.

I do not believe our so-called prosperous economy can be secure as long as we have this important segment with inadequate purchasing power and with falling standards of living. During this period to which I have referred the gross national product has increased from $21·4 billion in 1951 to $26·4 billion in 1955. Some may think that, as consumers, they stand to gain if prices of food products fall. In its brief to the Gordon commission the Canadian Federation of Agriculture points out that in many years when agricultural prices are falling the cost of food products to the consumer is increasing. It does not follow at all that because farm prices are falling to the producer, the consumer is gaining in any way. I am afraid the consumer will stand to lose by any further deterioration in the position of agriculture.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I was pointing out that while most sections of our economy were relatively prosperous, agriculture was in no way sharing in that prosperity. Not only have farm cash income and farm net income been going down, but probably of greater significance is the fact that the prices of agricultural products in relation to the farmer's costs of production have been continually getting worse.

[Mr. Argue.]

Shortly after the Minister of Agriculture took office back in 1935 there was established an index for the farm costs of production and for farm prices. The base of that index was taken as 1935-39. That period was taken as 100 for the farmer's cost of production and for the prices of agricultural products. The latest index based on that period as set out in the Economic Annalist for April, 1956, shows that the prices of farm products have increased to 218. But the cost of production index has gone up until it has not only reached 218 but has gone even higher until it stands at 235. According to the Economic Annalist, the prices of agricultural products today in relation to the farmer's cost of production are even lower than they were in the depressed years from 1935 to 1939. That is why we in this group say it is time the government adopted a price support policy based on parity, that is prices for agricultural products that bear a fair relationship to the farmer's cost of production.

An important announcement was made today by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that will affect agriculture on the prairies and indirectly all parts of Canada. We welcome that part of the announcement concerning the 1956-57 initial prices for grain. We also welcome the statement that within about two weeks' time an announcement will be made as to the final payment on the 1954 wheat crop. But there was a third announcement that was highly disturbing to me, namely the announcement that at the end of the current crop year delivery quotas for grain to various points would not be equalized, that no steps would be taken by the Canadian wheat board or by the government to bring about an equalization of quotas.

That statement will not sit very well on the western prairies. I am afraid there will be a tremendous amount of criticism. I am afraid that in the natural course of events people who support the Winnipeg grain exchange will use this new policy as a weapon against the Canadian wheat board. I express the hope that between now and the end of the crop year the government will give serious reconsideration to the statement that was made this afternoon and change it so that quotas are equalized among producers at various marketing points. If it is impossible to equalize them on July 31, whatever quotas some farmers may be short of at that time should be extended into the new crop year.

I am for parity prices; I am for a price level that would give agriculture a fair share of the national income. But within a system of parity prices for agricultural prices I also believe that steps should be taken to bring about the greatest practicable equalization of income amongst the farmers themselves. That is why I am so disturbed over the announcement this afternoon that even on an acreage basis there will be unequal quotas during the crop year and nothing will be done at the end of the crop year to see that those quotas are equalized. I repeat, I hope the government will reconsider its policy and will bring about an equalization of grain delivery quotas.

A few years ago when one stood up in the house and advocated a system of parity prices one perhaps did not get too much vocal support from farm organizations; but every single farm organization of any importance, and every farm organization in Canada with which I am acquainted, is advocating some system of guaranteed support prices or some system of parity prices. The great Canadian Federation of Agriculture has brought before the government a policy advocating fair relationship prices, advocating that the government implement a system of support prices that will guarantee to the farmer not less than from 65 per cent to 85 per cent of a parity price. The interprovincial farm union council, in making their submission to the government every year and in making their submission to the agriculture committee of the house, has emphasized its position that the farmers should have parity prices. The government has done very little or nothing about those submissions.

We have a reasonably good support price for butter, but after you have said that there is little more to say. We have something of a support price on hogs and eggs; but as I have seen those support prices operate, or fail to operate, in the past I am afraid they have been pretty much window dressing.

Little has been done by the government to provide support prices for agricultural products. I would think that the Prime Minister, who comes from a province in Canada where agriculture and rural life are considered to be a very important aspect of the life of that province, would implement policies that would prevent the deterioration of the agricultural industry and the position of farmers in his province and in other provinces of Canada. The position is becoming very serious. It is not a matter of a member rising in his place and talking blue ruin and depressed agricultural prices. He does not have to do that himself; he merely has to quote the record of what other authorities have said. I hold in my hand the Ottawa Journal of Thursday, April 26. On the front page it has a heading:

> Farmers Broke in Boom Times

The report has this to say in part:

> The federal and provincial governments have been accused of "complete lack of long-range planning" to solve the problems of the Canadian farmer, particularly those in eastern Ontario, some of whom "are going broke while the over-all economy is booming".

And that is true in every agricultural area of Canada. The report goes on to say:

> In a report presented to the Ottawa diocese synod meeting by Rev. H. Clayton Vaughan of Navan, chairman of the rural community committee, the plight of the farmer is vigorously presented.
> "It is difficult to realize the feeling of discouragement and uncertainty that is sweeping our rural communities".

What an indictment of the agricultural policy of this government, when such an important meeting of a church organization makes a public statement saying that because of the policies of the government agriculture is being allowed to go broke in times of boom.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is highly respected in this nation. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture each year presents a carefully prepared, well thought out, agricultural policy to the government. One of the chief persons connected with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, their economist, Dr. E. C. Hope, appeared before the banking and commerce committee the other day in connection with amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act. When Dr. E. C. Hope was discussing agricultural policies generally and what his organization wished the government to do, I asked him this question, as recorded at page 114 of the proceedings of the committee:

> In your study of agricultural policy in other nations of the world, do you know of any advanced nations which do less in the way of support prices and other policies for agriculture than is done by our country?

To that question Dr. Hope, the witness, replied:

> No, I do not know of any country that does less.

According to Dr. Hope, chief economist of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, this government does less for the farmers than is done by the government of any other advanced country in the world. It is small wonder, then, that farmers from one end of this nation to the other are highly dissatisfied with the policy of the government and the deal they are receiving.

What are the farmers going to do about it? They are going to have to obtain a new policy; this one is not good enough. They are endeavouring to bring pressure to bear on members of the government. They are also bringing their case to the attention of members of the opposition. They are coming to Ottawa time and time again to present to the government the things which they think should be done. They have obtained some results, but very few.

While they may get something from the government from time to time their general position is almost continually worsening. When the government brings in policies that are of some help, such as the payment of storage on certain quantities of grain or perhaps by way of extending the provision of agricultural credit, what do we see? We see some of the most important newspapers in this country making editorial comments to this effect: Why should the government bother about agriculture at all? After all, it is an industry of dwindling importance; after all, it is losing its political power and effect in the nation. When it comes to a policy the government may bring in which will help the farmers they go one step further and say that the farmers are losing representation in parliament, so why should the government or the country bother about giving agriculture and the farmer a square deal?

Some of the things they say are true. The farmer is losing some of his political weight in this country, and if he is to get a square deal he is going to need strong and powerful allies. He is going to have to enlist other groups to support his position when he asks the government to do certain things. I believe there is a growing hope that the farmers are going to get adequate support from other organizations. I have in my hand the resolutions presented to the recent merger convention founding the new Canadian Labour Congress, and I am pleased to note that those resolutions deal not just with labour problems but also with agricultural problems. While all these resolutions could not be considered individually, there were composite resolutions passed by the convention embodying the principles to which I am going to refer. Here is one resolution which reads:

> Be it further resolved that our new congress strives, through the recently-created Canadian farm-labour economic council, to unite the forces of farmers and labour in Canada, for the welfare of both sections of the population and the country as a whole.

Another resolution reads:

> Whereas this convention views with alarm the ruinous drop in agricultural income . . . and
> Whereas we believe that all producers, whether they work in the office, in the factory, in the mines, or on the farm, are entitled to a fair and adequate return for their work; and
> Whereas we join with organized farmers in their farm unions, co-operatives, and with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in their fight to obtain parity for the agricultural producer:
> Be it resolved that, to this end, efforts be made to regain the overseas markets that have been lost to Canadian farmers since the end of world war II; an immediate campaign to eliminate malnutrition in Canada be launched; a generous program of economic assistance be undertaken to help fight world poverty and hunger, and a generous program of support prices be established, so that both producers and consumers will be protected from violent fluctuations in price and supply.

We have frequently heard it said that the interests of labour and agriculture are separate, apart and quite opposed one to the other. We have been told that the government finds it difficult to bring in adequate support prices for farm products because the consumer will rebel but here we have the largest labour organization in Canada advocating that farmers be given parity prices for their products.

Mr. J. L. Phelps, president of the farm-labour economic council, addressed that huge convention and when he concluded his remarks he was given a standing ovation. In Canada the privilege of receiving a standing ovation seldom occurs, and the standing ovation Mr. Phelps received at the labour convention is indicative of growing farm-labour co-operation which will inevitably result in better legislation for labour and a program of parity prices for farm products in the future. We are told—

The Chairman: Order. I wonder if I might interject at this moment. In some instances the hon. member has mentioned parity prices and in other parts of his remarks he has mentioned support prices. I have listened to the hon. member now at some length and it seems to me that in the main his argument is with regard to parity prices. Now, if that is the case, may I point out to the hon. member that we had a resolution with regard to parity prices negatived in the house on March 12. I must point out to the hon. member that a discussion purely of parity prices at this time on that account would not be in order. For those reasons I must ask the hon. member to refrain from a discussion of parity prices.

Mr. Argue: I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that we read from time to time of a farm bloc in the United States, and that farmers have so much power in the United States congress that at times they are able to push through a program for high support prices that is detrimental to the economy of that country. We are told that but it is not true. There is no farm bloc in the United States congress which is able to command a majority, but there is in the United States congress a working farm-labour bloc that can command a majority when it comes to legislation they jointly support. The reason the United States congress adopted a program of so-called high support prices for agricultural products, which even then did not mean a measure of full justice or parity for the agricultural industry in that country, was because of that farm-labour co-operation. When we get that kind of co-operation in Canada the farmer with the help of labour will obtain from the government in power the legislative program to which he is entitled.

I think there are a number of things the government should do to provide a better deal for agriculture at this time. The first thing I have referred to is the system of support or parity prices. The second thing I would like to impress on the government is the need for a continuation of the Crowsnest pass rates on grain. I am afraid there is growing evidence of an attack by the railway companies on the Crowsnest pass rates. Just last year the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in his annual speech to the shareholders dealing with railway policy—

The Chairman: Would not these remarks, perhaps, be better made on the first item of the Department of Transport?

Mr. Argue: I thought of that one, too. Naturally I shall bow to any ruling you make, but I want to point out that if the change in the Crowsnest pass rates which the C.P.R. are endeavouring to obtain should be brought about it will reduce the price of wheat to the producer by not less than 12 cents a bushel. I point out further that any such substantial reduction in the price of wheat is bound to see an increase in the production of livestock on the prairie provinces, which would have an adverse effect upon the whole agricultural economy.

The third point I have listed is the need to establish national marketing boards to provide, at the request of producers, stability in the assembly, processing and marketing of main agricultural products. Fourth, to establish a board of livestock commissioners to provide scientific grading standards. Fifth, to expand the sale of agricultural products through international commodity agreements and through bilateral contract sales. We have seen evidence recently that such a program is feasible, that bilateral contract sales offer a method by which the sale of farm products can effectively be made on the international markets. I suggest that if this policy is to be used to its fullest extent the government should be prepared to sign contract agreements for the purchase of products produced in countries which buy our grain. We cannot continue to hope to sell to these countries unless we are also prepared to buy the goods they produce.

Sixth, support for an international food pool to dispose of surplus agricultural products. Seventh, double the payment under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and extend the act to provide income protection in time of crop failure for farmers in all parts of Canada. The Prairie Farm Assistance Act was first brought into existence in 1939 and provided a maximum of $2.50 per acre on half the cultivated acreage. That payment has not been increased, even though the cost of production has more than doubled since that time. I suggest that the payment should be doubled and the provisions of the act should be extended to agricultural producers in all parts of Canada in the case of crop failure.

Eighth, extension of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act to all parts of Canada, making it into a comprehensive program of soil and water conservation. Ninth, immediate construction of the South Saskatchewan dam. It used to be that the Prime Minister would discuss in this house the benefits or otherwise, depending upon his point of view, which would flow from the construction of the South Saskatchewan dam, but now when he is asked a question he just says no. There is no argument, there is no consideration; the government says no. It might cost a little over $60 million from the federal treasury to build this dam, but apparently there is no hesitation in providing $80 million to pull a pipe-line company out of a very bad situation into which it is getting and in which it apparently wants to involve the country as well. There is lots of money to help a pipe-line company, but the government cannot find any money to build the South Saskatchewan dam, the cost of which would be spread over a period of ten years.

My tenth and final point is the extension of the Canada Grain Act to all parts of Canada so that feeders may obtain the benefits of the excellent grading system for grain which prevails on the prairies.

If the government does not want to consider all these, I suggest that there are three main items the government should consider. First of all they should provide a system of adequate support prices for farm products. Second, they should provide a system of crop failure protection or crop insurance for the farmer when he loses his crop through no fault of his own. Third, the government should provide adequate markets for the full quantity of food products which agriculture is able to produce.

I suggest to the Prime Minister that there are many tens of thousands of Canadians who have a most inadequate diet tonight, who are close to suffering from malnutrition. I need mention no others than the old age pensioners in this country, who in many instances have to live on a mere $40 a month, a large part of which must be paid for rent when they reside in our cities. I suggest that the type of agricultural program that I have proposed is necessary, not only for the welfare of our agricultural industry but for the welfare of Canadians generally.

(Translation):

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words tonight on a matter which is particularly dear to me. However, I should not like to dwell on it at too great length.

In May of last year, I rose in this house to urge the government to continue its subsidy to maple sugar producers, so that they may continue, and to complete if possible, the change-over from tin sap pails they have been using to aluminum pails. Here is what I said then, as taken from page 3343 of Hansard of May 2:

> There is a provision embodied in the—

I was thus stating the main reason for this change-over.

> There is a provision embodied in the Food and Drugs Act of Canada to ban lead in any kind of food. To obtain that regulations have been adopted to do away with welded tins as containers of all kinds of canned food; hooked tins are now being used. For the same reason, tea, chocolate and cigarettes are wrapped in waxed or aluminum foil; no more lead paper is used to wrap them.

And I added:

> The history of this subsidy to maple sugar producers is that lead was found in maple sugar products and all shipments were stopped at once, not only shipments to the United States, but all exports outside the province of Quebec. The maple sap itself does not contain lead but the oxide of lead found in maple sugar came from the buckets made with tin plate.

I think that was reason enough to bring this matter to the attention not only of the government but of all members of this house, who, I thought, would be glad to support that subsidy to maple sugar producers. Unfortunately some hon. members thought fit to oppose the subsidy, as they had done in previous sessions. So for some reason I do not wish to discuss here, the federal government decided not to renew the subsidy this year. If I bring up this subject again, it is because I believe we should keep protecting that very special maple product, not only in Canada but especially in countries which import it.

According to the 1951 census, 22,443,061 pails were used for that purpose; out of that number, 17,308,823 pails have been changed, and the shares of the federal government and the provincial government have been one-third respectively, with the other third being paid by the farmers. There are 13,382 maple sugar producers who have taken advantage of that opportunity to change their pails, out of a possible total of 21,700, always according to the 1951 census.

Thus, there are about 5,135,000 sap pails which have not been replaced. So, I urge the federal government to continue this subsidy to maple sugar producers at least for a year or two, in order that they may replace these 5 million odd pails. They could thus increase their income and, consequently, improve the situation of their families. It would also enable them to share more fully in the economy of the country and, especially, to continue exporting to other countries this maple product whose purity is its main quality.

I remember that, some years ago, Queen Victoria was presented with a jar of maple toffee, and Her Majesty, having tasted it, said to those who were sampling it with her: "This is the most delicious sweetmeat I have ever tasted."

So I am asking the federal government to help the producers, because I would like our maple products to keep their high quality.

This year, only about 250 thousand sap pails will be replaced, which will mean an expense of about $50,000 for the provincial as well as for the federal government, and for the farmers.

Last year, I put on record a table showing the production and value of maple products in the province of Quebec, from 1937 to 1954, as can be seen on pages 3343-44.

I also put on the record a second table referring to the production and value of maple sugar for the years 1953 and 1954; a third table showed the production and value of maple sugar for the years 1953 and 1954, while a fourth table showed the classification of maple syrup commercial production in the province of Quebec from 1949 to 1954.

Those interested in the situation of the maple industry in the province of Quebec will kindly refer to those tables which, as I said, are given on pages 3344 and 3345 of Hansard.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief. However, I renew my request, and ask the central government to continue, at least for another year or two, to grant a certain amount to allow the change over of sap pails to be completed. The farmer will then lead a better life because, with the syrup and sugar industry paying him more, he will get an added revenue to the production of his land. I submit that our farmers are a rather important group in our country and have made enough sacrifices and enough efforts to be entitled to federal as well as provincial assistance.

(Text):

Mr. White (Middlesex East): There were quite a number of very good speeches this afternoon, all of them Conservative. The minister's estimates provide not only the members who come from agricultural ridings but many other members an opportunity to understand and take part in the unending problems of agriculture.

I wish to compliment the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) on his speech this afternoon. I am just going to review two or three of the things he had to say. In his introduction he mentioned that in the throne speech there occurred these words:

> Canada has enjoyed, on the whole, a high level of prosperity. Some sectors of the economy have not fully participated in this increased well-being.

He said then the government was quite aware of the plight the farmers were in. It is one thing to be aware of the plight they are in and another thing to do something about it, which has not been done. That is the trouble. Being aware of it is just not good enough. He dealt with the discrepancies in the marketing of corn, pointing out that he was hopeful that the United States would reduce its duty so as to bring about equality of tariffs. What a hope. I do not think there is a chance in the world that the United States will change its tariff policy just because we are producing more corn and might want to send some into the United States.

The hon. member for Kent (Ont.) comes from a cash crop area. I was very much interested in some of the other items produced there, with which he dealt. He talked about onions. The duty on onions coming into Canada is 37½ cents a bag, while on onions going to the United States it is just double that, 75 cents. He failed to say also that 22 carloads of Egyptian onions were unloaded at Montreal at the very time growers in Kent and Essex and the other onion-growing areas were harvesting a crop, and that played a disastrous part in reducing the price to the Canadian grower. At the same time those products were held in the warehouses of the trade. The consumer got very little benefit, if any, from the disaster that was caused the producer.

There are many farm products imported into this country that are produced—and more of them could be produced—in Canada. As I have said many times, there are many agricultural products that we, a northern country, are not able to produce and that we are glad to import from the United States. However, when we can produce corn, soybeans, sugar beets, apples, potatoes and many other things, it looks a little foolish that we cannot, either through a tariff or a quota system, assist our Canadian farmers. Here we are building up surpluses of certain farm products that we cannot sell—more acres of wheat than we know what to do with—and at the same time importing millions of dollars worth of farm products which Canadian farms could well grow.

The hon. member for Kent (Ont.) had something to say about soybeans. Soybeans come in from the United States duty free, but if Canadian soybeans are exported to the United States they are charged $1.20 a bushel duty. Yet the government does nothing about it. At the same time there is the importation of soybean and other vegetable oils with no duty or quotas. The hon. member talked like a Conservative, but he votes the other way.

I am amazed at the number of government supporters who have taken part in the debate on the speech from the throne, the budget debate, the debate on parity prices for agricultural products and today the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. I have reviewed what those members from western Ontario in particular have had to say, and I think it is rather interesting. It looks to me as if they are running for cover and holding up an umbrella. They want to be able to say, "This is the speech I made in the House of Commons for the agricultural industry in my constituency." When the next election rolls around they will have that to rely upon, and they will say: "This is what I had to say."

That is not the question. What did you do about it? Not a thing. For example, the hon. member for Waterloo North made a speech that is to be found at page 449 of Hansard. I have read his speech very carefully, and if I ever read or heard a Conservative speech that is one. He talks and thinks like a Conservative but he votes the other way. The junior member for Queens made a speech to be found at page 493 of Hansard in which he had this to say:

> While Canada as a whole is prosperous—

The Chairman: Order. I take it from the page number in Hansard, without checking more particularly, that the hon. member is referring to another debate in the same session.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Yes. I failed to remember, Mr. Chairman, that I could not quote from a speech made in another debate in the same session, so I will more or less paraphrase what his ideas were.

The Chairman: Order. Without referring particularly to the wording of the rule, my recollection is that it covers referring to a debate in the same session, so that paraphrasing is equally out of order.

An hon. Member: He said the same thing last year.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): This is not going to curtail in any way what I have to say, Mr. Chairman. I will just put it in another way. I would point out that Prince Edward Island is noted for its production of potatoes. I would also point out how one-sided the tariffs and quotas are so far as Canadian and United States potatoes are concerned, and that 7,000 carloads of potatoes were imported into Canada last year. No wonder members from the maritimes who are interested in the production and sale of potatoes have something to say about these problems.

In the past some speakers have said that if an imported article can be bought more cheaply than a home-produced article Canadians, being no different from anybody else, will buy the imported article. Consequently we find cheap products coming into Canada not only from the United States but from other places and the Canadian public are buying them, for which I do not blame them one bit. The textile industry, particularly those firms engaged in processing wool, has had a very difficult time for some years now, and if I remember correctly 22 concerns have ceased operations in the last five or six years. In one year the number of employees in the wool processing industry dropped from 10,500 to 6,000. That will give some idea of the impact of the policies of this government as they are reflected not only on agriculture but on labour in many of the cities of this country.

I was also interested to note that the hon. member for Northumberland and the hon. member for Grey North went out of their way to say how difficult times were for the farmers, but offered as a solution the setting up of producer marketing boards. This is amazing to me, because I can look back over the years when times were good and farm products were scarce and the government was quite prepared to be the marketing agency for farm products. But when the going got tough the government told the farmers to form their own marketing boards and solve their own problems. They were quite prepared to turn these matters over to the farmers once they found that they had failed.

But what is the use of turning them over to the farmers? The farmers cannot solve the problems involved in the importation of the very same products they are producing. The farmers have nothing to do with the importation of vast quantities of farm products, particularly from the United States, that compete with the production of Canadian farmers.

Mention was also made last year and the year before of fruits and the canning factory industry. The farmers are finding right down the line that the many farm products imported only aggravate the surpluses with which we find ourselves confronted.

Mr. Cardiff: Cheese, for instance.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I have referred to a few hon. members from western Ontario and one from the maritimes who have emphasized the serious situation. I have done so to emphasize the inconsistency of their arguments, because when they talk they talk one way but when they vote they vote the other way.

About a week ago I spoke on the bill of the hon. member for Kamloops respecting income tax, and at that time I failed to complete what I wanted to say. I do not expect to complete what I have to say about it at this time, but I want to finish my remarks with respect to one particular case involving the tobacco farmer and his daughter who was charged almost $2,000 because her father was her banker over a period of ten years.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member again but I recall his former speech and if he intends to pursue the same line of thought I fail to see how that can be related to the first item of the agriculture estimates.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): The impact of income taxes on agriculture is very serious. It is decreasing production and driving young people away from the farms. What is worse, the worst of the situation is not over yet. My friends across the way shake their heads, but it is the fellow who wags the pencil next time who will be the deciding factor. I want to complete what I intended to say about this one particular case.

The Chairman: Order. I have already indicated in as kindly terms as possible that it will be impossible to complete that case under these estimates, and I hope the hon. member will co-operate with me in that regard.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I will as far as I possibly can, Mr. Chairman. Just give me a moment to get the matter wrapped up here. There are many new Canadians who have come to Canada and purchased farms. Right in my own neighbourhood I see the mother and the father working the farm and there are one, two or three young people who are employed in the city. They bring home their monthly or weekly pay cheques and help the father to pay for the farm. The chances are that ten years from now the income tax department will probably say that when he bought the farm ten years ago he only had $500 or $1,500 to pay down and now he is worth $20,000. Consequently, as he paid us only so much income tax, he owes us so much more.

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member will agree that remarks of this kind have no place in a discussion of the first item of the Department of Agriculture. Further than that, the hon. member said, "I want to complete a speech which I failed to complete on a former occasion". That statement causes me immediately to come to the conclusion that the hon. member himself must realize that he is not in order in attempting to discuss this matter at this time. I have listened with interest to his speech, but in fairness to other hon. members I must ask him to devote his remarks to a discussion of this item.

Mr. Cardiff: I rise on a question of privilege. Surely to goodness an hon. member speaking on farm problems has a right to refer to income tax as far as the farm is concerned. It has a great deal to do with the matter of profit or loss on a farm. If the income tax department is going to assess the farmer for income tax, surely to goodness we may have something to say about that matter.

Mr. Fulton: Speaking to the point of order, may I say that I was going to raise somewhat the same point as that raised by the hon. member who has just spoken. I can recall speeches made by the Minister of Agriculture on the first item of the estimates that have strayed much further, according to the strict interpretation you are trying to give, than has the speech of the hon. member for Middlesex East. On the first item of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, when we are discussing the economic position of the Canadian farmer, surely it is in order to mention the factors that militate for or against his economic position. That is all the hon. member is doing. In agricultural speeches I have heard the Minister of Agriculture talk about the wheat board regulations. Surely the hon. member for Middlesex East can talk about the income tax regulations as they affect farmers.

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. member for Kamloops, who is a lawyer, would not care to pursue that argument too far. A farmer uses our national parks—

Mr. Fulton: Not on his farm, I hope.

The Chairman: —but questions pertaining to national parks would be much better discussed, perhaps, on the first item of the estimates of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Our rules are designed to allow us to debate matters at the most appropriate time. We are now discussing agriculture. By custom, on the first item of a department we discuss departmental policy. Surely the hon. member for Kamloops is not going to argue that, on this item, we should discuss a matter which certainly more directly relates to income tax and which might much more appropriately be discussed under the estimates of the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I would be prepared to argue most certainly that the position of the farmer and the position of the agricultural industry generally are affected by the things which the hon. member is seeking to introduce into the debate here. On the first item, when you are discussing the position of the farmer, one of the things you are discussing is the level of farm income. I submit that it is perfectly in order to relate the facts which make for a healthy farm income to the first item of the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture. I come back again to what I said earlier. The Minister of Agriculture in his speeches embraces all these matters. If he can do so on the first item, I can see no reason why the hon. member for Middlesex East cannot do so in reply.

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member for Kamloops has failed to read the speech of the minister on this particular item.

Mr. Fulton: I was here when he made it.

The Chairman: However, I have heard the arguments of the two hon. members who spoke to the point of order and, persuasive as they are, I fail to fall in line with their reasoning. I am afraid I must rule that a discussion of this income tax problem is not in order at this time.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Chairman, I shall leave discussion of the question of income tax for some future date, and it shall be the fiercer for the delay.

There is some misunderstanding with regard to subsidies. Many people, especially those in the cities, think all the subsidies that are paid by the government are paid to one industry, namely agriculture. They are the only ones we hear about. I have in my hand a set of figures taken from the dominion bureau of statistics reference paper No. 39. I just want to point out the number of subsidies that are paid, to whom they are paid and what they amount to.

Back in 1940 agricultural subsidies amounted to $41 million and non-agricultural subsidies amounted to $11 million. Agricultural subsidies back in 1940 were 79 per cent of the total. But when we come from 1940 to 1954 we find that agricultural subsidies amounted to $34 million and non-agricultural subsidies to $51 million. Hence the whole situation has been reversed. Today industries other than agriculture are enjoying greater subsidies than is agriculture. The percentage in 1954 was about 40 per cent; I refer to agricultural subsidies.

These subsidies do not take into consideration any of the tariffs. After all tariffs, regardless of what they are, are really a subsidy to manufacturers, which the consumer pays. Not only the industry that enjoys the subsidy but the labourer who works in that industry is benefited by that tariff. I want to point out that fact because so many other hon. members who have preceded me in speaking have more or less been asking that the whole tariff situation be reviewed. As I mentioned before, the total agricultural subsidies in 1954 were $34 million. But for the same year the gold mining industry received $15 million—one industry alone—more than half as much as all agriculture received. I should like the people to realize that the agricultural industry is not the only one that is being subsidized in this country.

Just while I am dealing with tariffs, may I say that I hold in my hand a statement concerning the turkey industry. The poultry industry has grown by leaps and bounds in this country. Now we find the importation of dressed turkeys and other poultry products from the United States making inroads into the trade of the Canadian farmer. Right down here on Sparks street you will see Vermont turkey advertised. In 1954 Canada imported 5 million pounds of turkey from the United States. In 1955 the figure jumped to 10,351,000 pounds. So far this year, or up to February 25, the imports have amounted to 470,000 pounds as against 95,000 pounds in the same time last year. In other words the importation of United States poultry into Canada is making terrific inroads. Here is a market for Canadian grain. Canadian poultry producers would be buying more grain to feed their poultry if it were not for those importations, and it would help to reduce the surplus of grain in the western provinces. This is a product that Canadians can produce.

What about the duty? The poultry people asked for a duty of 12½ per cent, as now, but with a minimum of 5 cents a pound. This is identical with the United States tariff on eviscerated turkeys. However, on dressed turkeys the United States rate is 10 cents a pound; hence the Canadian proposal is a moderate one. I suggest that the government give further consideration to the problem.

I hold in my hand an editorial from the Montreal Gazette of today. The editorial is based on a pamphlet issued by the Canadian institute of international affairs. It is entitled, "What is Happening to Wheat?" I have been critical at times of the length of time and the number of speeches that have been devoted to wheat in this house, but the western economy and in fact the Canadian economy are tied up with it. This is one of the things the Canadian institute of international affairs had to say:

> But the conclusion remains inconclusive. "Looking into the tunnel of the future of wheat sales," the writers admit, "it must be conceded that no light is visible".

In other words, there does not seem to be any answer to this problem of recurring wheat surpluses. For some time we have been a wheat exporting country, but many of the countries to whom we exported wheat are now exporters themselves. Instead of being importers they are now exporters and that aggravates the situation. Agriculture in Canada needs more to be diversified than at any time in its history. Some guidance and some assurances are required from the government before the farmers in large numbers are going to switch from one type of agriculture to another. There must be some guidance, some continuity of markets before they make the switch.

I also hold in my hand an editorial from the Sarnia Observer which is entitled, "The Sad Sugar Beet Story". There are many acres in Manitoba and Alberta that are suitable for the production of sugar beets. In southwestern Ontario we have been growing sugar beets for many years. There are two sugar beet factories in southwestern Ontario, one at Chatham and the other at Wallaceburg. I understand that one of these plants will not operate this year. Yet we have acres of land that could be devoted to the production of sugar, an article we import. The use of those acres for this purpose would take wheat off the market and put sugar on the market. The farmers who have been engaged in sugar beet growing in the past have done fairly well. Yet we drift and lose the sugar beet industry that we have built up. The sugar beet plants in southwestern Ontario require at least 30,000 or 40,000 acres of sugar beets to operate economically and well. So far this year only 19,000 acres of sugar beets are contracted for in southwestern Ontario.

We as a people are prepared to delegate authority to groups without giving the matter sufficient consideration. If there is one agricultural product produced in this country that I know anything about it is honey. It has had its ups and downs so far as production and prices are concerned during the last few years. For many years Canada has been an exporting nation, but now she has drifted into the column of the importing nations so far as honey is concerned. Our importations are now running around 5 million pounds a year, but we used to export a great deal more than that each year.

In many of the provinces co-operative companies are set up by the honey producers to process and market the honey of their producer members. One of the astounding things to me is this. The Canadian beekeepers' council, in co-operation with the managers of those co-operatives, has brought enough pressure to bear on the dominion Department of Agriculture to have the words that designate the country of origin of the honey removed from the containers. It is no longer necessary for a Canadian packer of honey to put on the container how much, if any, foreign honey is in the container. That is working against the Canadian producers of honey. Those very co-operatives that were supposed to serve the interests of the producer are among the importers of this foreign honey.

As I say, they have brought pressure to bear on the dominion department to have that grading and marketing regulation changed. I hold in my hand copies of the letters that have to do with it. I notice that the province of Quebec particularly protested very strongly against changing the regulations. According to the regulations as they now exist all that has to be put on a carton of honey that holds 12 or 24 pails is the country of origin; but when it reaches the grocer's shelves it is marked as Canadian honey, and even the word "Canadian" can be removed. As I say, we delegate too much authority to certain people and do not follow it up to see what they are doing.

There is another thing the Department of Agriculture should look into. Some time ago I asked that the tenders for milk for the veterans' hospital at London, Ontario, be tabled. One of the dairies tendered a rather low price. That is all right, but this is what happened. Immediately the district purchasing agent at Kingston had this to say, and I quote from a letter from the Department of Defence Production signed by Frank Power, district purchasing agent, 953 Somerset street west, Ottawa. He wrote to Mr. Fred Burnette, secretary of the milk distributors at Kingston, Ontario.

> Our headquarters have been checking the milk prices paid in this area and in view of the fact that the dairies in Ottawa and Picton are supplying the army with fresh milk at $0.57 per gallon, they have instructed us to write you and request that you give serious and immediate consideration to the high price you are charging for fresh milk in Kingston.

As soon as this one dairy tendered at a low price to get into the market in London, Ontario, the effect was going to be siphoned back to the suppliers of fresh milk in every area in the country, apparently, because this took place very shortly after the tender was received in London.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, with relation to the discussion we had earlier I would like to point out to you, sir, that although as the hon. member from Middlesex East has said he could deal with the point elsewhere, when it comes to the matter of discussing the impact of income tax on farmers and on agriculture generally, in fact, the matter has been alluded to on more than one occasion in the course of the discussion of certain estimates, and in the house in a speech made by the minister himself.

I would refer Your Honour to page 1061 of Hansard of this session, where there was some question of income tax figures; to page 1062, where the minister made reference to figures of real income versus cash income and discussed cash income and net income; to page 1063, where the minister and the hon. member for Dauphin indulged in some discussion of the question of net worth as against some other basis of calculating income, the position of farmers, and where mention was made of the figures produced by the income tax branch; and also to page 1064 where figures of net income against cash income were used.

I suggest to you, sir, that the subject has been introduced and made a matter of some considerable importance in the course of the speech made by the minister in introducing his estimates.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member is making a case with which I cannot entirely agree. For instance, I have in front of me one portion of the minister's speech reported at page 1061 of Hansard, which reads as follows:

> Good farmers in Saskatchewan, since we have had income taxes to pay, carry their wheat along knowing that they can average their income over the years——and so on. I do not think the hon. member would wish to argue that a passing reference to income taxes is in the same category as attempting to discuss a particular case at some length, as the hon. member for Middlesex East indicated he wished to do. However, I will look at the other references the hon. member for Kamloops has given me and will be very glad to consider them.

Mr. Yuill: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to take up the time of the house by quoting a lot of statistics that have already been quoted. I believe my colleague the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose and many other hon. members have given statistics that prove conclusively that the plight of agriculture is not a happy one.

Statistics are always extremely interesting, particularly when they relate to the part of agriculture that is closest to one's heart. Being associated with the livestock industry for a number of years it is always interesting for me to find out what is going on. Generally speaking the statistics to which I refer relate to the number of livestock produced and their gross sales value, broken down as to various types and grades and of course the unit prices that relate thereto.

Generally speaking, many of the people who are engaged in the livestock industry seem to accept these statistics as inevitable. They appear to take it for granted that it is an act of fate that we have substandard grades. I believe this is partly due to the unrealistic thinking of some of those engaged in the agricultural business. I cannot bring my reasoning to coincide with those who feel that they can forever produce substandard foundation stock and expect to get top grades. I think that is one of the common faults of many livestock producers today. In that respect I believe we contribute considerably to our own plight, and if that is so I think another thing must be taken into consideration.

Many people today, particularly those who are not established in agriculture or livestock producing, feel that it is beyond the financial ability of the livestock producers to go out and buy No. 1 breeding stock. This is reflected in many ways. First of all it is reflected in the grade the producer receives, and it is also reflected in the over-all standard of the dominion as a whole.

I believe it would be worth while for the government to make available to those in that position certain sums of money in order that they may provide a proper foundation stock. It may be argued, of course, that such money is already available through farm loans. I do not know how it applies, but my experience with farm loans is that by the time they take care of the other apparently more urgent needs there is nothing left to apply to proper foundation stock. I do not know exactly what attitude the government would take, but I believe that charity begins at home, and I think that would be one way whereby the government could greatly assist with a minimum of expense.

There are other things which contribute to the plight of the livestock grower. When he takes his stock to market he receives top grades in some cases but in many cases he receives substandard grade. Another matter which is worthy of consideration is the ill-advised practice followed by those charged with processing, particularly pork. It is a well known fact that after these products are processed and marketed many inferior grades masquerade under a first-grade banner or brand. I think I can say with safety that you can go into nine out of ten meat stores in this city and discover that this is the case. If the government would be a little more careful in its inspections it would be of benefit to the over-all economy of the country.

I think we took a step in the right direction last session when we ruled out of the picture striped wrapping for bacon. That was something which was very necessary at that time, but I think we left as a substitute for it something which is perhaps even more vicious. It has been my experience since coming here this session to find, masquerading as No. 1 back bacon, meat which is nothing but No. 4 sow back bacon. True, it had the fat trimmed off and looked rather good to the unsuspecting public, but in reality it was still sow bacon. I have bought bacon myself wrapped as No. 1 which proved to be at least No. 2. Then you will find hams which by no stretch of the imagination could be qualified as No. 1. They may be split into perhaps three pieces, but are wrapped in attractive packages and sold at No. 1 prices.

These are some of the things that could be done to help the consuming public and at the same time allow the farmer, the ultimate consumer, to buy back his own products at a fair price. These things may not appear to be important, but I think they are. It is the easy things of this kind that we can do in order to get back to a more realistic sense of duty and responsibility. So long as we permit these unfair business tactics to prevail we will be falling short of our responsibility as members of parliament.

Then so far as the beef industry is concerned there are many merchants—this is more characteristic of the big merchants—who are ready to charge a price without having any sense of the true value. It may be that I am more critical than some, but I always try to keep my eyes open to see what the other fellow is doing in my own business. I have found many cases where the true grade is not represented. The article is put into an attractive package and a price charged which is far beyond the true value. To me that is nothing less than racketeering, and I think it is high time we did something about it.

There are many who feel that the government must take full responsibility for everything in connection with agriculture, but I think we should be realistic enough to know that there are contributing factors. The price of meat is regulated by many factors, the weather being one. If the roads are bad and the supply is short inevitably the price goes up, or the reverse can happen. I believe that if we would try to deal with these simple things which are within the realm of possibility we would do a lot. It is simply a matter of carrying out regulations which exist already. There is a body of inspectors who are supposed to check these things. Someone must be falling down on the job, because it is quite obvious what is happening. You do not have to go very far before you find these things which are anything but right and fair.

So far as assistance in the purchasing of proper foundation stock is concerned, that to me would seem to be one of the easiest things to do. As far as the actual dollars and cents are concerned, it would cost the government next to nothing and I am sure it would pay huge dividends.

Mr. James: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take just a few minutes to express some of my thoughts on agriculture and to do something which I have not done since about 1950 or 1951; that is, to express the pride which I have in agriculture as it is practised in Durham county, from which I come. I have been most interested in listening this afternoon and this evening, as well as the other times we have been dealing with these estimates, to the extremely well-prepared and well-presented addresses dealing with agricultural problems as well as the many suggestions that have been made.

I should like to pay a real and sincere tribute to my good friend and colleague the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture, who has been handling the estimates for part of this afternoon and this evening. In my opinion he is as well qualified to deal with these matters as any hon. member on the opposition side, if not better. Over the years he has done a terrific job for agriculture in Ontario and throughout Canada, as has his minister. We are proud of him and we congratulate him.

I want to congratulate the Department of Agriculture and the government upon their agricultural policies over the years. I have no apologies to make, either to my own people back home or to anyone in Canada, for the agricultural policies which have been pursued by this government for a period of some 20 years. A tremendous job has been done for agriculture.

Undoubtedly everyone, and this would include the Minister of Agriculture and his cabinet colleagues, will admit that at the present time there are soft spots in agriculture. I would be the first to admit that. I have a letter which I received today from a good friend in Durham county who is engaged in agriculture. The main point he brings up is that hon. members of this house, and especially the member for Durham, should continue to put forward the agricultural position so the urban people may understand the difficulties which agriculture must face. I was interested in hearing the hon. member for Assiniboia suggest that the neswpapers across Canada do not present a fair picture of agriculture and its problems to their readers. I wish he had qualified that statement by referring only to urban newspapers.

Mr. Argue: I said most of the big city dailies.

Mr. James: It so happens that I have some connection with a weekly newspaper, of which there are some 900 in Canada. I can assure the hon. members of this house that the weekly newspapers are most conscious of the problems facing the agricultural people of this country. Over the years they have done a great deal to support them in their activities. I repeat that I wish the hon. member had qualified his statement. I do not want to condemn all daily newspapers, as I know there are some which appreciate and understand the problems of agriculture, but others seem more inclined to think of the high prices the city people might have to pay if agriculture received the prices it is entitled to receive.

To deal just for a moment with agriculture in Durham county, we are very proud of our agriculturists, as I have said. There may be objection to this from some quarters, but we feel that without any doubt we have the finest apples there are in Canada.

Mr. Bennett: Pardon?

Mr. James: I am glad to see that the hon. member for Grey North is taking exception to that, because he made some disparaging remarks when talking about his own county's apples some time ago, and I am just handing it back to him.

An hon. Member: What about some samples?

Mr. James: You had samples a few years ago, and I know everyone enjoyed them to the full. One of the finest proofs, if you like, that the apples we have in Durham county are of a superlative type was given at the last Royal Winter Fair, when an excellent farmer and apple grower, Wilfred Carruthers, and his son, from Bowmanville, practically swept all the top prizes at that fair in apple growing.

An hon. Member: Conservatives.

Mr. James: I hesitate to say anything in response to someone who is injecting "Conservatives", because I am quite well aware that, in this case especially, there are good Conservative apple growers in Durham county as well.

Mr. Studer: The socialist apple would have a worm in it.

Mr. James: But the prize ones happen to have been grown this year by a family of good Liberals.

An hon. Member: You mean there are good ones?

Mr. James: I wish to pay tribute to Mr. Carruthers, and his wife and son for the excellent job they did. There is another field in which Durham county has excelled for many years. It comes under the heading of the agricultural representative. Our agricultural representative is a man by the name of Ed Summers, who has been there for some 26 years now. He has done one of the most remarkable jobs I have seen or anybody else has seen. His judging teams of young farmers have swept practically all the prizes throughout Ontario and, indeed, he and his teams, especially his seed grain judging team, established a record of 26 consecutive victories in the district competition, which I believe has never been equalled, nor will it be equalled in your lifetime or mine.

I also wish to pay tribute to the many other fine farmers we have in Durham county. Some of them are doing remarkably well. Some of them are following the trend that is outlined in the Financial Post, of gradually obtaining more and more land and, in this industrialization of farming, converting their small acreage into large operations. I believe those people are doing remarkably well and will continue to do so.

Some of the small farmers are not doing as well as one would like them to be doing. Undoubtedly there are many marginal farmers who are working hard but not getting the results from their efforts that they should. We are in a rather unique part of Canada in that we have an excellent farming community and right alongside we have the great plants of General Motors, Goodyear and so on, down through to Port Hope, where we have the Mathews Conveyer Company Limited, Nicholson File Company, Port Hope Sanitary Manufacturing Company Limited, and many other plants. Those plants have employees who are receiving excellent wages, almost top wages within Canada. It is very difficult for the farmers of my area to resist the temptation to leave their farms, being lured to the towns where those industries are paying, as I have said, top wages throughout Canada. But many of them are staying on the farms and continuing the lives their fathers and grandfathers led before them, in the hope that farming will continue to provide their livelihood for the remainder of their lives. I have one friend who went through college, came to work in Ottawa for a while in one of the departments, then returned to his father's farm and took it over. He appears to be sincerely enjoying that type of life. It is a type of living that one cannot get from the factories or in the urban communities.

As I have said, I have no apologies to make for this government's farm policy. I have seen it progress throughout the years. I have seen the great demands—what I would almost call the irresponsible demands—from the opposition benches. According to their words, those members would quite willingly give pie in the sky to everyone in Canada. They have no responsibility for carrying it out. I dare say if they were on the government benches they would not carry out one-eighth of what they have said in this house.

Fortunately in this country we have a government which is most interested in agriculture and in every other part of the economy. We have a responsible government, a government which is responsible not only to the city-dwelling taxpayers but also to the rural taxpayers, a government which is carrying out that responsibility to the best of its ability and upon the advice of the many farm organizations across Canada. We have seen from the many briefs we have received that in the main the agricultural organizations back this government's policy to the full. Certainly they want more than this government is able to do at the present time or feels it should do at the present time.

I believe that holds true for practically every member who has rural constituents and who is interested in farm policies. We too are constantly urging the government to do more, and we have the same sense of responsibility some of the opposition speakers seem to have. We would probably be on our feet screaming our heads off about how dreadful conditions are on our farms and how poor those farmers are, and screaming to high heaven for parity prices—120 per cent parity prices, if you like—

Mr. Argue: That would not be parity.

Mr. James: You would not take 120? I am glad to hear that. They have had 90 and 75, and it is very difficult to know just where they end. However, as I have said, we Liberals too are most interested in the farm policies of Canada. We are most interested in farmers and in their welfare—

Mr. Fleming: And their votes.

Mr. James:—and we are constantly urging the government to take further steps along these lines. We have seen at least two improvements this session, with the extension of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the extension in the general farm loan legislation. I feel quite certain that this improvement is going to continue until we have agriculture at the level where the government thinks it should be and the farmers throughout this country feel it should be.

I was most interested again in the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia, who has a very peculiar concept of what should be done in Canada. He seems to feel, as indeed some farm organizations and some farmers throughout Canada seem to feel, that there is only one way to lick the problem of farm surpluses and other problems of the farm economy, and that is for farmers throughout Canada to join with labour and form a great pressure group which could automatically elect a complete government of labour and farm people which would automatically do everything for labour and the farmers. If you follow his thinking far enough, it would do nothing for anybody else.

I cannot quite see the day coming when that kind of pressure politics would be accepted as a normal thing in our Canadian political system, and I hope it never happens. We represent the people of our areas here as best we know how and we shall continue to do so. I am quite confident that the government will remain in office on the strength of the votes of farmers who will support the policies that have been enacted over the years and that will be enacted for their benefit on a responsible basis in future years.

I was most interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia when he quoted Dr. Hope, the economist of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, as saying that this government was doing less than any other government in the world for its farmers. Peculiarly enough I had read an article by Dr. Hope some time earlier, at one of the federation of agriculture meetings I have attended over the years. The article is to be found in the January issue of The Country Guide. This well known economist made a very good survey of the problem of the squeeze on farmers. I should like to read a part of what he said, which shows quite definitely that Dr. Hope, as an economist with considerable knowledge of this problem and with no political bias, shall we say, did not blame the situation of the farmers on the federal government of Canada as so many speakers have done tonight. Dr. Hope, who should and I believe does know his subject, and who is also more interested in the farmers than possibly most people here, had this to say:

> International trade in farm products, which rose steadily from 1946 to 1951, has now levelled off and is not increasing. Countries which, a few years ago, needed to import large quantities of food products, are now requiring less or, in some cases, have even become large exporters of some products. Examples of the latter are France and Turkey, which are now net exporters of wheat. This drying up of export demand from countries outside of North America has seriously affected the export trade in farm products for Canada and the United States . . .

In this article, Dr. Hope goes on to say that one of the main reasons for the decline in farm income from 1951 onward is the very point made in the quotation I have read, the surplus of agricultural products throughout the world, including Canada and the United States. If you accept Dr. Hope's opinion on the one score, surely you will be willing to accept his opinion on the other.

May I say again to hon. members and to my constituents back home that I shall continue my efforts while in the house to have done for the farm economy of Canada everything I feel can responsibly be done. I will also bring every effort to bear on the cabinet if I feel they are not doing enough, and will bring that same effort to bear in encouraging them to continue the policies—

Mr. Fulton: Which policy?

Mr. James: —they have followed for many years and to improve—

Mr. Fulton: Which policy?

Mr. James: —as we go on the policies of this government and the Liberal party throughout Canada. I am sure that in the end the farmers will fare far better than they would if they entrusted their luck to the peculiar sense of responsibility evidenced by the Conservative, C.C.F., or Social Credit parties in this house.

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Durham. He spoke of the great apple growing industry in his constituency and I am sure it is every bit as good as he says it is. I do not know whether he is an apple grower himself, but he surely qualifies as an apple polisher. He did a splendid job tonight.

I was rather intrigued with his argument that agriculture is well off under present Liberal policy, but I think a cold, unemotional look at the statistics is perhaps more indicative than the kind of speech we have just heard. When we look at the statistics and find that the almost 20 per cent of the Canadian population engaged in agriculture last year received less than 7 per cent of the national income, then I am afraid my hon. friend will have to revise some of his opinions with regard to the prosperity of agriculture generally.

However, it is not my intention to follow the line he has taken. I want to refer this evening to a few matters that come under the administration of the Department of Agriculture and try to get answers to some of the questions we have been asking for a number of sessions. I wish to begin with one of the acts administered by the department, the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. My colleague the hon. member for Selkirk has on many occasions brought up in the house the problem of the application of that act as it affects his constituency, and there are many other areas in the province of Manitoba which are similarly affected.

At this time I should like to make a plea to the parliamentary assistant, who is piloting these estimates through, and to the government generally to have a second look at the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. In the speech from the throne at the beginning of the session we were advised that amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act would be coming forward this session. Later in the session, in reply to a question from this side of the house, the Minister of Agriculture stated that the government had changed their minds and that there would be no amendments to the act during this session. I am hoping they will change their minds again, because if we have crop losses in the prairie provinces on the same scale or anything approaching the scale of 1955 we are going to find that the act will again be a most inadequate instrument to compensate the farmers for the losses they will suffer.

There are a number of things wrong with the act, and I should like to point out three of them. First of all there is the question of picking out eligible blocks. We know it has been difficult enough to qualify under the act at any time. A few years ago an amendment was passed by parliament making an eligible block an irregular block, that is making it permissible to attach parts of townships to an eligible block regardless of whether they were rectangular or any other shape. That went a long way toward ironing out some of the injustices which had occurred under the act in previous years.

Later, I believe it was two years ago, the government saw fit to amend the act to do away with the irregular block and return to the rectangular block again. Since that time we have again had the experience of some farmers in a township who have had a total crop loss not being able to qualify because there were farmers living near them who had had a fair crop of wheat; and because it is not possible now to attach blocks of sections to the rectangular block they find themselves left out of the act entirely. That is something that must be changed if we are to bring about any kind of justice under that act, particularly in the province of Manitoba.

There is another matter, and that is the part of the act which now denies the benefits of the act to any person who is farming land which he purchased from the provincial government after January 1, 1940, with the exception, of course, of V.L.A. land. There are many farmers in the province of Manitoba, particularly in the northern parts of it which developed rapidly after 1940, who purchased land from the government of Manitoba. This land is quite suitable for growing grain.

These farmers are obliged to pay a levy of 1 per cent on every bushel of grain they market. It is deducted from their grain ticket when they deliver to the elevator; it is not a matter of choice. It is a tax which they are obliged to pay. That money goes into the prairie farm assistance fund. Then after a number of years, after having paid perhaps $2,000 into the fund, when these farmers suffer a crop loss and make application for prairie farm assistance, they are told that under the act, since their land was purchased after January 1, 1940 and it is not V.L.A. land, they are not eligible for prairie farm assistance.

That is a distinct injustice. It is a distinct discrimination. Under any form of crop insurance scheme a thing like that simply could not occur. We know that under any crop insurance scheme, if a person pays his premium he becomes eligible for compensation in case of loss. That is a fundamental principle of insurance. But under this legislation the government has taken unto itself the right to levy a tax of 1 per cent on every bushel of grain the farmer sells and then to tell him, after he has paid this levy for five, six or ten years, that he is not eligible to collect anything from this fund. It is a one-way street as far as they are concerned. That is another injustice which must be ironed out. It is becoming a major problem in many parts of Manitoba, and many farmers feel strongly on that point.

Those are two of the items that need straightening out under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. We would have expected that some action would be taken during the present session of parliament. However, we have been informed by the minister that he has changed his mind and no amendments will be brought down. I hope he will take a second look.

While I am dealing with the Prairie Farm Assistance Act I also want to say this. In the prairie provinces, particularly in the province of Manitoba, which under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act has had the experience of having paid into the fund almost three times as much as it has received from it, there is a growing feeling that some other form of insurance is required. But even in the other provinces which we have, percentagewise, fared a little bit better under this act there is growing up a strong demand for some form of crop insurance.

Only two years ago in Manitoba, and earlier than that in the province of Saskatchewan investigations were made into the feasibility of setting up a crop insurance scheme on a provincial basis. The reports of the commissions in both provinces have raised some doubts whether it would be financially possible for a province to underwrite a crop insurance scheme on its own. I think the time is going to come—and it may have to be very soon—when the federal government will have to sit down with the representatives of the three prairie provinces and work out a sound, feasible financial arrangement under which a crop insurance scheme covering the three prairie provinces could be set up in order that every farmer who pays his premium under such a scheme would become eligible for compensation in case of crop loss. That is something with regard to which the federal government should take some initiative.

I also want to refer to another act which comes under the Department of Agriculture. I refer to the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. At the beginning of this session I had placed on the order paper a resolution calling for the expansion of the present Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act into a sort of Canadian rehabilitation act which would cover all agricultural areas in Canada. We on the prairies are conscious of the fact that there are many other parts of Canada outside the prairie provinces that have problems of reclamation, conservation and drainage, and that there should be something under which these projects could be undertaken.

I want to deal particularly with what are referred to in the estimates as the special projects. These are the projects which are carried out by prairie farm rehabilitation personnel and management but which do not come directly under the terms of the act. They are carried out under a special vote of this parliament. We have had a number of these special projects in the province of Manitoba, and a good part of the work was done in the constituency of Dauphin.

This spring we were greatly disappointed to find that the federal government is backing down or backing away from even the inadequate position it had taken some years ago with regard to these special projects. Until recently the arrangement that had been made was that the federal government would pay 50 per cent of the cost of these special projects having to do with flood control and that the province would share the other 50 per cent with the municipalities. In practice it worked out that, at the beginning, the federal government paid 50 per cent of the cost plus the costs of surveying and engineering, which were carried out by P.F.R.A. personnel and the province paid approximately two-thirds of the other 50 per cent. That left about one-sixth of the cost for the municipalities concerned. Even under that system, and even though a great deal of valuable work was done, it was a heavy burden on the municipalities. In most cases the municipalities which needed these special flood control projects most were least able to pay their part of the cost.

Mr. Chairman, I note that it is ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall take the estimates of the Department of Public Works and the Department of Justice.

Mr. Green: I did not hear the second one.

Mr. Harris: Justice.

Mr. Green: You are not taking transport tomorrow?

Mr. Harris: No.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister in a position to tell us the program for the first part of next week?

Mr. Harris: On Monday I think we will start with the bill to amend the Judges Act, which is on the order paper, but I am not sure what follows after that.

Mr. Drew: No decision yet.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

ASSINIBOINE RIVER—FLOOD CONTROL

Question No. 344—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How much has been expended by the federal government each year since 1950, on flood control measures on the Assiniboine river?
2. What has been the nature of these flood control measures in each year since 1950?
3. Have any expenditures been made by way of implementation of (a) the Russell reservoir; (b) the Portage cut-off, as recommended in the P.F.R.A. report of December, 1952?

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture):

1. 1951-52 ..... $ 68,410.01
   1952-53 ..... 49,991.32
   1953-54 ..... 99,989.43
   1954-55 ..... 69,154.05
   1955-56 at March 1 .. 140,839.23

2. Diking and cut-offs.

3. No. The P.F.R.A. report of December, 1952, merely sets out the findings of the investigations made with respect to possible conservation and flood control measures which might be undertaken along the Assiniboine river, and is a part of the over-all investigations made for flood control in the Red river basin with particular reference to the greater Winnipeg area.

Answer by: Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Yes. A number of the department's films have won high awards, mostly of an international nature. The awards were made by panels of recognized experts in the film making, medical and educational fields.

2. "Drug Addict"—First, non-theatrical class—First Canadian film awards, 1949.

"Challenge: Science Against Cancer" (French version)—First, international film festival, Venice, 1950.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 4, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—REFERENCE TO STATEMENTS BY MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege arising out of the tabling last evening by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) of a letter from Frank McMahon dated April 4, 1956. My question of privilege has to do with the fact that commencing on April 13 the Minister of Trade and Commerce denied in this house the possession of any documents from Frank McMahon. At no time did the minister raise the question that he had documents or that the documents were privileged; he denied that there were any such documents in his possession.

The first reference is to be found in Hansard of April 13, at page 2895, and the question asked is as follows:

> Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask him whether he would place before the house the offer reported to have been made by Gairdner and Company Limited as an alternative to the trans-Canada pipe line proposition now before the house? Would the minister also table any offer received from the company, and also the one from the McMahon interests relative to this matter?
>
> Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall be glad to table any documents I have. I have two documents from Gairdner and Company which I shall table; I have no documents from the McMahon interests.

And then on April 16 at page 2940 there was a motion—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I interrupt the hon. member for Prince Albert to clarify one point. Have the documents he is now referring to been tabled as the result of a motion or have they been tabled voluntarily?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The motion was for production and Your Honour will see at page 2940 the motion was for the production—> —of all letters and other documents received by the government or any minister or official from Mr. Frank McMahon or his agent or representative, and from Gairdner and Company Limited, since March 1, 1956, in which plans or offers have been made or suggested regarding the construction of a gas pipe line from Alberta to eastern Canada.

Then the minister said that he had filed the documents and my next remark was:

> The McMahon documents were not filed.
> Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There were no McMahon documents.

Again I point out that there was no question raised by the minister that he had in his possession any document that was confidential because it was so marked. He said that he had no document. Then at page 3258 of Hansard of April 25 there was a motion by myself as follows:

> For a copy of any memoranda taken or made since March 25, 1956, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, or any official of either of their departments, or by anyone on their respective behalf, of any discussion or discussions with Mr. Frank McMahon, connected with or relative to any offer by him and his associates to build or construct a gas pipe line between the Alberta-Saskatchewan boundary and eastern Canada.

The minister took strong objection to having to keep a record of telephone conversations, and following that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) had this to say:

> Mr. Speaker, before the question is put and since there is a Hansard record it might be well to point out that there is no mention here of telephone conversations.

The motion was put to the house and was defeated. Here is my question of privilege. I am not concerned and it is not any concern of the House of Commons as to whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce on his own received an alternative offer to the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines offer and concealed it from his colleagues, as apparently he did because the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said yesterday he had never heard of this.

As far as parliament is concerned my submission is that the answers given, to say the least, indicate that no reliance was placed on the fact, as was raised the day before yesterday for the first time, that the letters from McMahon were private and confidential. The answers given by the minister constituted a cavalier and flagrant contempt of parliament and certainly we are entitled to have the information we asked for unless the minister is able to say, "I cannot produce these because of their confidentiality." He said that there were no documents. That statement was completely incorrect. I ask the minister through you, sir, to explain why it was that this alternative offer, which until the day before yesterday he said he had never received, as there were no documents, was not produced to parliament and why he persisted in his stand that at no time had he received any letter. Yet on April 4 he had received a letter setting out in detail an offer and criticizing as well the Trans-Canada proposition.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the question is: When is an offer an offer? An offer is not made to me personally as I am not building the pipe line. I am interested in having the government build the pipe line. The letter was marked "Private" and when a letter is marked in that way, if you are going to respect a document at all it must be private to you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why did not you say that?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Why did not I say that? I get letters from my sister. I suppose I should announce in parliament when I receive a personal letter from my sister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: About the pipe line?

Mr. Drew: Is she advising you in regard to the pipe line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): When a letter is marked "confidential" I believe it is supposed to be confidential. I may be wrong, and I notice that my hon. friends doubt that such things have any significance at all, but to me they do have. I have never double-crossed anybody in my life knowingly. Therefore I respect a private and confidential letter and I keep it private and I keep it confidential.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why did you not tell parliament?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is a fine way to keep a letter private and confidential, to tell parliament about it. The front bench of the Conservative party amazes me.

Their idea of morality is most extraordinary. Just because another Conservative horse will not run, they are trying to say that I should disclose a private and confidential letter.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): The statement just made in no way deals with the point that was raised. That was the positive statement by the minister that there were no documents. If anybody was double-crossed, parliament was double-crossed by the minister.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that the confidential nature changed between early in April and May 2. On May 2 the minister said:

> I have received no letter that I am free to table in this house.
> [Mr. Diefenbaker.]

That was a correct statement. That preserves the confidentiality, but why on May 2 he should tell us this and why he could not tell us earlier in the month is something nobody could possibly explain.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I call your attention to the fact that a letter addressed to me that I am not free to table is not a document for parliament. I was asked for documents.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you tell the Prime Minister?

Mr. Macdonnell: Are we to understand that this answer is based on the theory that a letter is not a document? Is that the view we are now asked to accept?

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I state—

Mr. Green: I would—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has overlooked the fact that I was standing and asking for order. We have not yet embarked upon our routine proceedings. The hon. member for Prince Albert has raised a question of privilege. It was one between himself and the minister. The minister has given his explanation. I think now we ought to proceed with the routine proceedings.

Mr. Green: Your Honour, my question had to do with the minister's explanation.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member contend that a question of privilege is one that facilitates a debate? Is a question of privilege debatable?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Green: I was proposing to ask—

Mr. Speaker: The answer is no. Let us go into routine proceedings.

Mr. Green: I was preparing to ask the minister to clarify the statement he has just made—

Mr. Speaker: He has given the answer to a question of privilege that was raised by the hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. As a member of this house, I want to question your statement that the matter raised by the hon. member for Prince Albert concerned only him and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As a member of this house I maintain that it concerns me when the question is the correctness of a minister's answer.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry if I have aroused the indignation of the hon. member and perhaps of others. The word "procedure" comes from the Latin word "procedere", which means "go forward". I am here to keep things going. The point of privilege was raised by the hon. member for Prince Albert. He was listened to in silence, and I include myself among those who listened to him very reverently. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, in accordance with our rules, gave an explanation regarding the point of privilege which the hon. member for Prince Albert had raised. Hon. members have heard his answer. The debate that was pursued after that by the Leader of the Opposition and by the hon. member for Greenwood had to do with whether or not a document which is marked private is to be considered a document as far as this house is concerned. It is obvious that the Minister of Trade and Commerce held the view that a document marked private or confidential is not a document in the sense of documents that this house may require. To me this is absolutely right because at page 258 of May, fifteenth edition, I find the following:

> However ample the power of each house to enforce the production of papers may be, a sufficient cause must be shown for the exercise of that power; and if considerations of public policy can be urged against a motion for papers, it is either withdrawn, or otherwise dealt with according to the judgment of the house.

I read this because it shows that there are documents that this house, however ample its power may be, is not entitled to have. How long am I going to allow a debate to go on? Even if the hon. member for Nanaimo is interested as I may be in having a debate on the question as to what is a document as far as this house is concerned, we are dealing here with what constitutes a private or confidential document and we could go on all day with such a debate. But we have an order paper and a question of privilege is not debatable. If the hon member can show me a reference indicating that a question of privilege is debatable I should like to see it.

Mr. Ellis: It can still be made.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, what was before Your Honour was not a debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no!

Mr. Drew: What was before Your Honour was very clear evidence of the fact that a misstatement had been made to this house.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Drew: That was what was being placed before Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has his own view as to what was placed before him or what was placed before me. I suppose the Minister of Trade and Commerce also has his own view and I have mine. As far as I am concerned, I take it that a question of privilege was raised and an explanation was made by the person concerned. I have allowed a few questions because I felt that the house was prepared to have a few questions asked, but I think that now the house is willing to go ahead with the order of procedure.

BANK OF CANADA

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORT TO COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND COMMERCE

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, by consent I should like to move:

> That the annual report of the Bank of Canada be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Motion agreed to.

PIPE LINES

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, under standing order 26 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the effect that there were no documents in the possession of the government from Frank McMahon, which was contrary to the fact, and the extent to which such incorrect statement made by the minister misled the house as well as his colleagues in the government with regard to the existence of a possible alternative pipe-line proposal for carrying gas from Alberta to eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Leader of the Opposition, anyone in his party, or anyone in the house be kind enough to give me the reference in the authorities whereby a matter raised as a question of privilege can be the subject of a debate under standing order 26 instead of being pursued as a question of privilege in accordance with the procedure laid down for that type of matter? When a question of privilege is raised it may be the subject of a motion. It is then treated as such and takes precedence over all other matters, even motions by virtue of standing order 26. It seems to me that if the hon. member for Prince Albert was not satisfied with the explanation given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce it was up to him to make a motion immediately which was one of privilege. The hon. member does not recall that such incidents have taken place in the house?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Your Honour stated that no debate was allowed and I adhered to your ruling and took my seat. No discussion was permitted.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that no debate can take place except, of course, if a motion is placed before the house. I have noted that in the last few years members who have raised questions of privilege have never pursued their points far enough in order to make them debatable. Once a question of privilege is raised it may be ended by a motion. Such motion may not be taken up immediately but a day may be appointed when it will be taken up. That, to me, should have been the course followed.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, this is not by way of continuance of a question of privilege. The statement was made by the hon. member on a question of privilege with regard to an answer he had received on different occasions. I am now raising this as a matter of procedure in this house, the position of the government in relation to parliament and the responsibility of ministers to answer correctly when questions are asked. I am putting forward a motion on that basis as a matter of urgent public importance in view of the fact that it has been announced that we may be debating the whole question of this pipe-line problem within a matter of a few days. I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a motion correctly before the house at this time and that it is urgent because it is the one opportunity that will present itself for debate to determine whether or not there are other undisclosed offers which we have not been told about and which would provide us with a means of obtaining information that we should have before we proceed with a debate on this extremely important subject.

Mr. Speaker: If the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) himself were the subject of this motion, I am sure that he would have the right to insist upon having the house decide whether or not he himself had made a statement which was not correct. This motion, if it were allowed, would be debated all day and what would be the effect of it? At six o'clock tonight the house adjourns. The motion is predicated on the assumption that the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to the effect that there were no documents is incorrect. There is a point in dispute there. The minister says there were no documents that he could table. That was the sense of his explanation a moment ago but he said that there was a document or that there were documents marked private and confidential. Whether there was one document or more than one I do not know.

Arising out of that discussion that took place on the question of privilege, I think the matter should be the subject of a motion arising out of privilege and should be treated as such. I think that the one who is accused of a misstatement is entitled either to have that accusation confirmed by the house or to have his own stand that there was no misstatement vindicated by the house. As the matter stands now, this motion provides only for a debate but no chance for the house to express its views as to whether or not the statement made by the minister was a misstatement. I ask hon. members—any one of them—whether it is not true that if they were the subject of a motion of this kind, they would put forward the point that they are entitled to have their stand either condemned or vindicated by the house. By this motion such a thing could not take place. It is merely a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on the point of order that you have raised. In the first place, you suggested that a motion related directly to the question of privilege could be placed upon the order paper and a day appointed for debate. May I remind you—

Mr. Speaker: No, no.

An hon. Member: Wrong again.

Mr. Speaker: What happens is this. I admit that it has been a long time since a question of privilege was pursued to its ultimate end. Perhaps it would be nice to have one again so that we would establish the procedure and everyone would know it and then the matter would not be so difficult. As the matter stands, many perhaps will say that I am laying down a new procedure that they have never heard of. However, it is there in the book. I do not bring my black notebooks into the house with me any more but later on I can get them and I will show hon. members precedents to the effect that when a question of privilege is raised, the member who is supposed to be concerned in it is entitled to explain. That is his right. Then the hon. member who raised the question may pursue the matter with a motion. He makes a motion. That motion normally should be taken up immediately, be dealt with and decided upon; or someone may suggest, "We will take this up tomorrow". But these motions are not on the notice paper. They take place without notice. I would correct the hon. member when he says that you place a motion on the order paper. A motion with regard to privilege is one that must be taken up immediately.

Mr. Fleming: I was only taking up your own expression in saying what I did on that point, because I understood you were saying that if a motion directly arising out of a question of privilege were put forward a day would be appointed for it. I only point out that if that were the position it would not be possible to get any such motion on now and have it introduced by a private member unless the government undertook to sponsor it.

Now, you commenced your remarks this morning on this point of order by asking hon. members to point out to you where the procedure under standing order No. 26 had been used in relation to a matter that had been the subject of a question of privilege. With respect, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put before you this view that it is quite erroneous to assume that the procedure offered by standing order No. 26 cannot be used for this purpose. Why should it not be? I speak subject to correction, but I am not aware of any occasion upon which there has been a positive ruling that the procedure under standing order No. 26 cannot be used in relation to a motion of this kind. Therefore, I say to you I think it is quite erroneous to assume, in the absence of any such decision, that this procedure under standing order No. 26 is not available in cases of this kind.

I ask you further to consider this point, Mr. Speaker. You say this is simply a question of privilege. It certainly arises out of what has been said this morning in relation to the question of privilege, but here is a matter that has implications in it that go beyond what has passed back and forth this morning, having been uttered on one part on the question of privilege and on the other part by the minister in attempting an explanation. This motion introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) is a motion that goes right to the vitals of our parliamentary system. It is for that reason it is a matter of urgent public importance. Holding the views we do, nothing could be of greater public importance. In the situation which exists within the context in which this motion is brought forward, and in the context of the question of privilege brought forward today, nothing could be more urgent. Therefore I am submitting to you, on the point of order on which you are proceeding now to base a ruling on the motion, that it is a very proper motion under the procedure available here under standing order No. 26 and that there is no other available procedure to deal with this situation.

Mr. Speaker: I was very glad to hear the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) speak about procedure so enthusiastically and with great warmth. Evidently he likes procedure as much as I do, so I shall put him in my club.

Mr. Fleming: Do not put your club on me.

Mr. Speaker: No, that would be a different club. It has been a long time since the club of the Speaker was ornamented and put on the table where it has become known as the mace.

Has the hon. member looked at standing order 26, subsection 6, paragraph (e):

> The right to move the adjournment of the house for the above purposes is subject to the following restrictions:
> (e) The motion must not raise a question of privilege.

That is where the whole issue lies between hon. members and myself. It is a question of privilege. I think the hon. member so indicated a moment ago when he said that this matter was so important it went deep down into the roots of our parliamentary system. That is my reason for not accepting the amendment.

Mr. Fleming: May I make my point clearer. You say you are proposing to regard this as a motion raising a question of privilege. My point was that it is not just a question of privilege. It is true it arises out of a discussion here this morning that began with a question of privilege, but it is something that goes far beyond any question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: It may go far beyond, but there is in it a question of privilege. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), in that motion which is one for the adjournment of the house, is accused of having made a misstatement. If the hon. member for Eglinton were accused, as the minister is, and if someone were to ask me that this matter be made one of privilege and a motion were brought by which he could either be condemned or vindicated by the house, I would say by all means let us have the motion. This motion under standing order 26 may be debated all day until the adjournment at six o'clock.

What is the position with respect to the accusation against the minister? So far as the house is concerned, when we adjourn at six o'clock, there will still be the accusation that he made a misstatement. The minister is entitled to have the house decide on the statement made by the hon. member for Prince Albert or concerning any other speeches accusing him of a misstatement, and on his own explanation and any other speeches made on his behalf taking his point of view, to have the house decide whether or not he has made a misstatement.

There is a point at issue here; you are raising a question of privilege and to do so you say, "Let us move the adjournment of the house," and the result of the debate will be that we adjourn the house at six o'clock and the accusation still confronts the minister. The same thing would obtain if the hon. member or indeed if any other hon. member were concerned. It is a question of privilege and you have to deal with it as such.

The hon. member for Prince Albert should have pursued his point by moving a motion which might have been in the sense of this motion here. It would perhaps have been taken up immediately. Now we are into the routine proceedings and we must carry on.

Mr. Fleming: May I have one final word, Mr. Speaker? You heard this morning, Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Prince Albert. You heard the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in attempted explanation. And then when other hon. members sought to have something to say or sought to ask questions you ruled that the question of privilege had been disposed of and was not a debatable matter. I now submit to you that the question of privilege was then disposed of—

Mr. Speaker: I would be very happy to assist hon. members if they were to consult me before they made a move but while they are making a point in the house I cannot very well leave the throne and go and tell them what to do. They were not moving a motion; they were just debating. No matter how many hon. members think it was their question, the fact remains that the question of privilege was raised by the hon. member for Prince Albert, and it was up to him to move a motion. It was up to him to continue this matter to its proper conclusion. But I say that by virtue of section 26, 6 (e) and also because of the fact that this matter —a serious matter amounting to an accusation that the minister misinformed the house —is one of those matters which you cannot raise, save upon a substantive motion, an adjournment motion under standing order 26 cannot be accepted.

If the hon. member had continued with it as a matter of privilege, all well and good. Not having done that I have no other recourse but to cite citation No. 225 of Beauchesne's third edition which says:

Certain matters cannot be debated save upon a substantive motion—

And a matter of this kind is one of them.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: A moment ago when the hon. member rose to speak he said, "May I add one final word?"

Mr. Fleming: And you interrupted right in the middle of what I was saying.

Mr. Speaker: I took it that we were both finalizing the argument.

Mr. Fleming: No, Mr. Speaker, with respect, you cut me off right in the middle of what I was trying to say. I will be brief. All I was trying to say—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: There is no help from these raucous interruptions, but probably the adults could listen at any rate.

The question of privilege had been disposed of, as I understood what you said at that time; therefore section 26, 6 (e) does not apply to what is now before you because it refers to the question of privilege. The question of privilege had been disposed of and what is raised now is not a question of privilege. It is true it relates to the matters that were involved and it arises out of the attempted explanation of the minister, but in my respectful submission this was not a case within 26, 6 (e). It is the kind of case that is debatable; by 26, 6 (e) is meant one that is initiated by the question of privilege. The question of privilege had been disposed of and this is another motion and in my submission it clearly is not within 26, 6 (e).

Mr. Speaker: If what was raised by the hon. member for Prince Albert had not been raised this morning and if the Leader of the Opposition had moved the motion he has, there is privilege in that motion. It was an accusation against an hon. member of this house that he has made a misstatement and this is a matter which should be raised on a motion which will give the house a chance to say it is true or it is wrong. That is the whole idea.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, is your ruling that this is not debatable?

Mr. Speaker: Of course.

Mr. Drew: Then I appeal from your ruling, with respect.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Drew has appealed from the ruling I have just given. Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is there an appeal from the ruling of the Speaker under the standing orders of the house? I am not trying to block it but I just raise it because this is very important. If this is a precedent then some of the rest of us from time to time will use this as a precedent. I think we should understand what the rule is before we are called upon to vote on it.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, it has always been my understanding that there is no appeal from your ruling in this particular matter.

Mr. Fleming: We have had them before.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members know the story of this. I am sorry that we have spent so much time because of a point of procedure and it is now 20 minutes to 12. I do not like to have to talk about procedure any more than is necessary but hon. members remember the story of this kind of appeal.

Mr. Speaker Black was the first one who made the ruling that there was no appeal of his decisions that motions should not be accepted because he was given the discretion under the old standing order No. 31, now standing order 26, to decide whether or not in his view a motion should be accepted.

Mr. Ralston, who was then an hon. member of the opposition, appealed the Speaker's ruling that there was no appeal. Mr. Speaker Black on other similar decisions later on ruled in the same way and no appeal was made of his ruling. The matter was tried again in Mr. Speaker Fauteux's time and again in my time. When I made the ruling that there was no appeal the Leader of the Opposition made a similar appeal basing his action on the action of Mr. Ralston in 1932.

Hon. members will recall that at that time I said as far as I am concerned there will be no further appeal of my rulings that there is no appeal on this standing order.

Although I was perhaps convinced at the beginning of my term that hon. members would want to support the Chair with respect to this rule that rulings are not debatable, I have tried—hon. members know that—but I have come to the conclusion that it is almost an illusion for any Speaker to think that when he makes his rulings the rulings are not debatable, because hon. members choose to debate them.

The authority of the Canadian Speaker is such that it is entirely in the hands of the house. Notwithstanding what I said at that time, if I were to say here that there is no appeal of my ruling some hon. members might say, "Well, he is being autocratic; he does not want to have his rulings appealed", so I have taken the view, because I feel it is the wish of the house to keep the Speaker in their hands and to have that sort of check on him, that they want to have an appeal so I did not make any objection. As a matter of fact I offered an hon. member an opportunity to appeal my ruling not very long ago. That is my position now. It is true that there are more decisions sustaining the Speaker's ruling that there is no appeal of his decision under standing order 26 than that his decision is appealable. It is true that the weight of opinion is on that side. I might clear the position by allowing the house to decide. If there is another decision by the house sustaining the ruling I made last time it will give more weight to the position that there is no appeal from the Speaker's ruling, according to this standing order 26, when he decides that there is no appeal.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if upon reflection and based on the experience you have had already you feel that it would be desirable that there should be an appeal from your decision I would appreciate it if you would put the question again to the house because I am sure some hon. members did not understand what it was.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, before you do that may I say that if that is done on this occasion I would vote with the opposition on the ground that on another occasion we would be entitled to have exactly the same ruling made. The rule is clear and if it is going to be set aside today by a ruling of Your Honour then I must feel free to follow that precedent on another occasion when I or some other hon. member might be interested.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, you have referred already to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Black in connection with a motion made by Mr. Ralston. I would refer to Beauchesne's third edition, page 747, which indicates quite clearly that an appeal was allowed, instead of the contrary. On February 19, 1932, Hon. George Black, Speaker, refused to permit an appeal from his decision that it was not urgent to adjourn the house for the purpose of discussing an urgent matter of public importance. That ruling being appealed from, it was confirmed by the house. Mr. Ralston had made a motion to the house and the Speaker said that it could not be debated. I quote from page 748 as follows:

> Mr. Speaker ruled that the statement was not in order and that the matter was not one of urgent public importance and moreover that there was no appeal from his decision.
>
> Mr. Ralston appealed from the Speaker's refusal to permit an appeal from his decision.
>
> And the question being put by Mr. Speaker: Shall the ruling of the chair be sustained? it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. Harris: That is different.

Mr. Drew: The Minister of Finance interjects "That is different," but it is not different at all. I was placing the matter forward and had your ruling been that a vote could not be taken I intended then to follow precisely the same procedure as was followed in the case that I have just read from Beauchesne's third edition, as reported at page 747. Whether a vote is taken at this time or at the second stage on an appeal against the decision that there cannot be a vote I submit that this shows quite clearly that a vote can be taken in a case of this kind.

Mr. Harris: That was the point of my interjection. It has always been understood in the house that the decision by the Speaker that a motion was not a matter of urgent public business was not subject to appeal, but that your decision that there was no appeal was in fact subject to appeal. That is the point. This matter has been argued out several times in the last ten years and if Your Honour chooses to follow that procedure, of course there will ultimately be a vote of the house as to whether this second decision of yours is appealable.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I just want to say one word. I am inclined to believe that since we have rules we should stand by those rules. If a vote comes I propose to take my position in accordance with that view.

Mr. Speaker: I just want to finalize the statement I made when the matter was raised the last time. There is a distinction. I am very much impressed by the attitude taken by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. Standing order 26 reads:

> (1) Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance—
> (2) The member desiring to make such a motion rises in his place, asks leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, and states the matter . . .
> (3) He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order—

These are the words:

> —and of urgent public importance—

[Mr. Drew.]

By that standing order the Speaker has been given the discretion to decide whether it is in order and of urgent public importance. If in his view it is not in order or of urgent public importance he does not accept it. In 1932 Mr. Speaker Black, on a point of order raised by Mr. Ralston, gave a decision which appears at page 748 of Beauchesne's third edition, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker ruled that the statement was not in order and that the matter was not one of urgent public importance and moreover that there was no appeal from his decision.
> Mr. Ralston appealed from the Speaker's refusal to permit an appeal from his decision.

I think there are three rulings to the effect that an appeal can take place, and if I recall correctly there are four or five to the contrary. On page 855 of the Journals for Tuesday, July 5, 1955, I find this:

> Now, there were several occasions when standing order 31 was moved.

That is now standing order 26.

> And the Leader of the Opposition will find that only on one other occasion, when Mr. Speaker Fauteux was Speaker, an appeal in similar circumstances to a decision of the Speaker that there was no appeal was granted. On all other occasions the house has always accepted the decision made by the Speaker, and also has always accepted the view that in those circumstances there was no appeal from the Speaker's ruling.

Of course I must decide on the spur of the moment, but if I had time I could give the exact references for the rulings. I quote from page 858 of the Journals of the same year:

> In the future, whenever I make a ruling to the effect that the motion should not be accepted because it is not in order or is not of urgent public importance—that is that there is no urgency of debate—I will not grant an appeal from my decision that there is no appeal.

At that time the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar sustained the ruling I made, and so did the hon. member for Peace River. I should like very much to have this decided because I feel convinced that this is the right one. There are many people who seem to be interested in what is said from this chair, perhaps sometimes not for purely academic reasons, and I do not want any accusation made that I have not allowed an appeal although standing order 12 provides an appeal. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar will say, "If you are convinced you are doing the wrong thing, why do you do it?" After what he has said and after what the hon. member for Peace River has said and after I have had a chance to indicate why I had a moment of weakness, I shall stick to my guns and rule that there is no appeal.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the ruling which I have just read I appeal from your decision that there is no appeal.

Mr. Speaker: My decision is that there is no appeal from my ruling that there is no appeal. The Leader of the Opposition has one recourse, that is to put a substantive motion on the order paper after notice asking that my conduct be either condemned or vindicated by the house. See Debates, volume I, 1932, pages 360-6; Journals, volume 70, 1932, pages 62-3; Debates, volume II, 1939, pages 1748-50; Journals, volume 77, 1939, page 178; Debates, volume IV, 1946, pages 3440-3; Debates, volume II, 1947, pages 1828-30; Debates, volume I, 1948, pages 122-3; Debates, volume III, 1941, pages 2298-9; Debates, volume I, 1944, pages 417-20; Debates, volume III, 1944, pages 2381-2; Debates, volume III, 1944, pages 2425-7; Debates, volume I, 1945, pages 736-41.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be well to remember that there is a Hansard record. I do not believe it is appropriate that that should be left on the order paper.

There is no condemnation of the Speaker in seeking to obtain decisions in this house. The reference I made indicated quite freely an earlier case, clearly on all fours with this, where the house, for the purpose of obtaining an indication of how members thought on this subject, made an appeal, and there was no suggestion that that represented condemnation of the Speaker. I wish no suggestion left on this occasion of anything of that kind.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Leader of the Opposition for having given this explanation. I would tell him that I had not in mind that there was a condemnation nor an acceptance of my position. I merely wanted to inform the house as to what was the next step if one wanted to go any further.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO PRESENT STATUS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister made inquiries as to the nature of the telephone message yesterday from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to Mr. Frank J. McMahon, which led to the sudden and surprising withdrawal of his firm offer to build a gas pipe line from Alberta to Montreal?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, I have made no such inquiries.

Mr. Drew: Then may I ask if the Prime Minister will make such inquiries so that we may know the nature of the communication, which is not on record and which did produce such surprising results so speedily?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? In view of the minister's statement this morning that he is interested in having the government build the pipe line, may I ask if that means that we may soon expect an announcement that the trans-Canada pipe line will be built under government ownership?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not recall the statement to which reference is made.

Mr. Knowles: The minister made it this morning in reply to the question of privilege. He said that he was interested in having the government build the pipe line.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I said that this morning?

Mr. Knowles: Now that the minister knows what he said this morning, will he tell us whether that means that that is his recommendation to the government?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, I am very anxious to see the pipe line built. I had not been conscious of the fact that this morning I said anything to indicate the method.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): May I ask the minister whether the McMahon offer was ever placed before the cabinet?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. McMahon made his offer to me privately and confidentially, and I do not disclose the subject matter of private and confidential letters to anyone.

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): In view of all the discussion this morning I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fiasco that has been perpetrated on the Canadian people in these pipe-line negotiations, is the minister considering his resignation?

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The pipe-line resolution is on the order paper. I assume we shall reach it one day, and at that time I am willing to discuss any matter having to do with pipe-line negotiations. I am ready at any time to discuss any public document bearing on the subject but I am not prepared to discuss with anyone a letter that is sent to me marked private and confidential, unless I have the permission of the writer to do so. I asked the permission of the writer to make the letters public and I got that permission, so that letter is no longer private and confidential. When the pipe-line debate is resumed, I shall be glad to discuss the contents of that letter.

Mr. Green: May I ask, then, is it a fact that the first time the cabinet knew anything about the McMahon offer was when these papers were tabled yesterday?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I would be very glad to discuss cabinet secrets some time when I am no longer a privy councillor. A privy councillor is appointed for life, and so the discussion will have to take place in the next world. I have taken an oath, and so has the Leader of the Opposition, that we will not reveal matters discussed in cabinet, and I propose to stand by the oath.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Might I ask a question of the Prime Minister? When did the Prime Minister first become aware of this letter, and was that portion of the letter about faults of the Trans-Canada pipe line brought to his attention?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, the faults of the Trans-Canada pipe line were not brought to my attention as being matters reflected upon in any correspondence that had reached any of my colleagues. I did hear some time ago—I cannot say just when—that a confidential letter had been sent to the Minister of Trade and Commerce but, as it was a confidential letter, I did not consider under those conditions that it was a proposal to the government. If anyone writes a confidential letter to a minister he must know it is going to be treated as confidential, and if he wants to make a communication to the government he has to make it in another form than that.

Mr. Drew: Will the Prime Minister not agree that it would be a matter of some importance for the cabinet to know that there had been a firm offer to a member of the government to finance a pipe line across Canada without government commitment and that an individual who has already financed one pipe line in Canada was prepared to put up a $500,000 cash bond for the fulfilment of his undertaking?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I would not consider that anything addressed confidentially to any member of the government was a firm offer to the government to do anything at all or that a bond of $500,000 to meet an expenditure of $375 million was anything that had very great significance in proportion to the magnitude of the undertaking.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask—

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether the hon. member for Yorkton wants to continue the subject.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): I do, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Then I think he should be given the chance to proceed.

Mr. Castleden: Since the McMahon interests are apparently out of the picture, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, is it the intention of the government to make money available to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited for the building of the western portion of the line and, if so, will permission so to do be obtained from this house by legislation?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Whenever there is a firm decision reached as to the kind of recommendation to be made to parliament, it will be announced to parliament. Nothing of this kind can be implemented without the approval of parliament.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the Prime Minister who disclosed to him that a confidential letter had been received from the McMahon interests on this subject and when this disclosure was made to the Prime Minister?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I cannot say. I have no note of that, because I did not attach any importance to a letter that was not a proposal to the government.

Mr. Fleming: I presume that applies to the time. I asked the Prime Minister who made the disclosure.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I am not in a position to tell the hon. gentleman who first made that disclosure. It may be something that I gathered from newspaper reports. I am not sure about that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what the ministers have to depend upon.

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): May I ask a question of the Prime Minister? Could the Prime Minister advise the house whether the government is sufficiently united on the question of the pipe line to allow this very important question to be brought before the house early next week for debate?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): As soon as there is a final decision made, it will be announced to the house, and I can assure the hon. gentleman and all hon. gentlemen that I shall be very glad to be able to make a definite announcement to the house as soon as that is possible. I can assure you that I do not enjoy as much as you do these questions that are constantly being thrown at us, and I should be very happy to reach a position where they will be no longer looked upon as desirable by those who are asking them now.

Mr. Drew: In view of the fact that the Prime Minister learned from the press about the contents of this letter—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Drew: —may I ask him if he will make inquiries whether there are any other undisclosed offers in the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce at this time?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, Mr. Speaker, because I do not consider that any communications made as private and confidential are matters of concern to the government of Canada.

Mr. Drew: Will the Prime Minister not agree that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has shown some facility in obtaining the release of any limitations of that kind as well as other results apparently at the same time?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is something the hon. gentleman will feel he should have said when he sees it in print in Hansard. I think that is a reflection upon one whom the hon. gentleman and I both respect.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing whatever on Hansard that I have any reason to question with respect to whether I should have said it. I would indicate to the Prime Minister that if he has read today's paper and found out what has happened in the last 24 hours he will have learned there were other results as well as the decision that the confidential nature of these documents would be withdrawn.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF GENERAL PROBLEMS BY STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. T. Purdy (Colchester-Hants): Now that the opposition have got rid of some of their gas, may I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture? Has a decision been reached on my request of last year that the committee on agriculture and colonization be given the opportunity of studying the problems of agriculture generally as well as those of the western grain growers?

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): That was just gas too.

Mr. Purdy: Stronger gas than you have.

Mr. Hodgson: That is gas 12 months old.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): I will have to take my hon. friend's question as notice and I will give him an answer later.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RAILWAYS AND NON-OPERATING UNIONS—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING ON MAY 8

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. With reference to the meeting to be held on Tuesday morning between the railway companies and the union representatives may I ask what is to be the basis of this meeting? Is it for the purpose of discussing acceptance of the conciliation board's report or are the railway companies attending with any reservations?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): That will be for the parties themselves to decide if they have not already done so.

FISHERIES

SEIZURE OF CANADIAN VESSELS ON LAKE ERIE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister give the house any information regarding the seizure of certain Canadian fishing vessels on lake Erie which I understand from a radio broadcast involved some shooting?

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): My department has had no direct word on the matter because the administration of fisheries in Ontario is under the jurisdiction of the provincial government. However, this type of arrest is quite common on both coasts where fishermen, by accident or by design, cross the boundary line in territorial waters into the other nation's fishing grounds. The usual procedure is for the fisherman to come before the court of the country and have his case heard.

As far as shooting is concerned, all our Canadian patrol boats carry a gun in the bow and occasionally fire a shot by way of a warning across the bow of a fishing vessel they intend to arrest. I understand that was the nature of the shot fired in this case.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. SPEAKER—CONGRATULATIONS ON BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I am sure the house will agree with me that it is too bad this is not tomorrow instead of today. I know of no better way in which to celebrate the 5th of May than by a display of interest in procedure such as we have had this morning. In any event, I am sure I have the unanimous endorsation of the house at this moment in wishing Your Honour a very happy birthday tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member says, no doubt it was to celebrate my birthday that hon. members made me go through an exercise in procedure this morning. I want to tell him that I appreciate the whole incident very much, together with his wishes, and I want to thank all hon. members.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

General—
390. To provide for advance planning of projects including acquisition of sites, $1,500,000.

The Chairman: We have reached resolution No. 390. Hon. members will find this vote on page 64 of the blue book of estimates and the details on page 492.

Mr. Hosking: Mr. Chairman, I believe I can probably comment on this item about the purchase of a site in the city of Guelph. I understand the government has decided that we need further accommodation for the federal building in Guelph and that plans were made to enlarge the post office building. This would mean that the officials of the customs branch, the Department of Veterans Affairs and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation would be congregated in the present post office or the new addition.

At the rear of the post office there is a considerable parking lot on which, during the seasons when the mail is not too heavy, some 30 to 40 automobiles of the employees are parked. Should there be an extension to the present building making use of the parking lot it would result in great inconvenience to people who shop in the city of Guelph. I should like to take this opportunity to convey to the minister the appreciation of the mayor, the board of trade, the planning commission and the parking authority for having his officials go to Guelph to meet the officials of the city and discuss the problem that would arise if it were decided to extend the present post office. They appreciated very much the opportunity of explaining to the minister's officials that they are planning to spend some $165,000 in the city of Guelph to remove existing buildings very close to the government parking lot in order to create a parking area. They have asked me to thank the minister for meeting with them and for arriving at a decision which has given them reasonable assurance that the parking space will not be used for a building site. When the new federal building is built I hope that a suitable location will be found which will be satisfactory for the job the building has to do.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to follow the suggestion made by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings on the last occasion these estimates were before the committee. I had hoped that the Prime Minister would be here but I realize that he cannot be here on all occasions. However, this is one matter during the discussion of which I should have liked to see him present.

Mr. Winters: I will tell him about it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In any event, the matter can be brought to his attention. I feel that in what I am about to say some support might be expected to be forthcoming from the Prime Minister. I refer to the plans that have been made, as reported in the press, to remove and destroy the old Supreme Court of Canada building.

Mr. Winters: You are out of order.

The Chairman: Order. Surely this discussion would not come under this particular item of the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I stayed around here the other day and it came up under this item. I hope that I am not transgressing. I waited here for three hours for a chance to deal with this matter and I walked out momentarily. This is a matter that affects all the lawyers within our country and is one that I think deserves to be discussed. But, Mr. Chairman, if you say that it cannot be discussed, that is final. However, I point out that I was here the other day and that the matter came up only at ten minutes to six. I am asking the consideration of the committee in order that I may deal with it for a few minutes.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I would think the hon. member would have to have the unanimous consent of the committee because this discussion is clearly out of order on this item.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to deal with this matter?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that two or three other members wanted to revert to preceding items in the previous discussion of these estimates and unanimous consent was not given to them. On the basis of fairness, I object to unanimous consent being given.

Mr. Byrne: So do I.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I disagree with the hon. member's statement. I have been here during every minute of the discussion of the estimates and my recollection is that two hon. members reverted to certain questions and it was agreed that they should do so. No one was refused.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): What items were they?

Mr. Campbell: The minister has not his officials before him but I wonder whether he could give me any information as to what progress is being made on the advance planning of a new post office building in North Battleford and whether there is any possibility of a start being made on the building this year? The minister can answer that question later if he so desires.

Mr. Winters: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, —and all I could say if the officials were here—is that the matter is in the planning stage. Until we get votes of parliament I am not in a position to go farther than that. This is a planning vote and that is one of the projects we have in the planning stage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, are we on item 390?

The Chairman: We are on item 390.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I ask you to look at the wording of item 390 which is as follows:

> To provide for advance planning of projects including acquisition of sites.

If the question of where the supreme court building should be placed in advance planning does not come within that item, then I am very much surprised.

Mr. Winters: There is a supreme court building now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I raise this question, Mr. Chairman. If you hold against me, then I ask the usual consideration.

The Chairman: I am, of course, in some difficulty in that I have before me a resolution in the following terms: Resolved that a sum not exceeding $1,500,000, less amounts voted in interim supply, be granted to Her Majesty for public works, general, to provide for advance planning of projects including acquisition of sites. In the details in the blue book at page 492 there is little, if any, additional information. The minister has indicated that an expenditure for the supreme court building is not included in this vote. I therefore do not see how the hon. member for Prince Albert could discuss that matter under this vote. I presume that there were other occasions on which the matter could have been discussed. For instance, I am quite certain that it could have been discussed, perhaps, under the first item of the departmental estimates. I regret very much if, by reason of our rules, the hon. member is prevented from discussing this question at this time. For that reason I transmitted to the committee a request for unanimous consent, but that consent was refused. I therefore feel that my hands are tied.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to ask a question of the minister under this item which is to provide for advance planning of projects including acquisition of sites. Can the minister tell the committee what advance planning has been considered in connection with the new civic centre in Banff and also what has been considered in the matter of choosing a site? I know representations have been made to the government, probably by political parties. But I should like the minister to state what planning has been done, what type of structure is proposed and whether any consideration has been given to the choosing of a site.

Mr. Winters: No; not under the estimates of this department. Planning for a project of that nature, if it is to be done, would more appropriately come under the jurisdiction of my colleague who is responsible for the administration of national parks. We have done no planning under this vote.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): If further discussions take place with regard to the consideration of a civic centre and if as a result the Department of Public Works will be required to go ahead and carry out the construction, may I ask whether the Minister of Public Works would be advised before the final decision is made, so that he could use his good judgment in making decisions?

Mr. Winters: I presume so, Mr. Chairman; yes.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You say you presume so. I think the matter is of a little bit more importance than that. I think it is of sufficient importance that the minister should not just pass on a presumption on it. Maybe the minister can assure the committee that that would be so.

Mr. Winters: No; I cannot do that. That matter is within the jurisdiction of my colleague. If he wants my advice, I should be glad to give it to him. But it is perfectly and entirely within his competence to make a decision if he chooses to do so.

Mr. Wylie: I have one question that I should like to ask the minister. It is not in connection with the national parks, so I am sure he will be able to answer it without referring it to another minister. The city of Medicine Hat has grown so much within the last eight years that the public building we have there—I refer to the post office—is entirely inadequate to handle the mail situation today. I am wondering whether the minister has given consideration to the acquisition of a new site for the post office and just what is being done in advance planning for a project of that kind.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Medicine Hat will recall that I interrupted another hon. member a few moments ago. Under these specific votes, I feel that we must deal with specific matters. Although this particular item reads, "to provide for advance planning", I do not think it opens to the members of the committee the opportunity to discuss their particular pet projects in all parts of Canada. If that were the case, it would lead to a debate which would be far more extensive than should take place under an item of this kind. Under this item, I really feel that we should deal with the particular subjects covered. I would ask the hon. member if he would co-operate with me in that respect.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): May I ask you to define what is meant by advance planning of projects including the acquisition of sites? Now, certainly, advance planning—

The Chairman: Order. It is, of course, not for me to interpret or try to interpret these votes in advance. But I might perhaps suggest this to the hon. member, that it is within his competence to ask the minister what is covered by this vote.

Mr. Wylie: Perhaps I could have brought up this question under item 360. However, there was no provision made for a post office in Medicine Hat, and I feel that some consideration should be given to a building there. I think that calls for advance planning. What I want to know now is whether or not the Minister of Public Works or the government is giving consideration to a building in Medicine Hat. I consider that advance planning, and I think that is what the item is for.

Mr. Winters: I will be glad to keep in mind what the hon. member has said. This vote, as hon. members will recall, was introduced into the Department of Public Works about three years ago when I became responsible for this department. Formerly we could not consider the preparation of plans or the acquisition of sites unless we had a specific item in the estimates, and that meant that each year we carried over sums of money that we were not able to spend, and we had revote after revote. We, therefore, asked parliament to give us an amount of money, which in this case is a million and a half dollars, to enable us to do some preliminary planning and incur some expenditures against planning and acquiring sites, so that when we did get to the stage of coming forward with a project and putting an item in the estimates we would be in a better position to spend it. It seemed to me this was an opportunity to do some orderly planning.

Mr. Quelch: Can the minister tell us any sites he has in view at the present time?

Mr. Winters: No, I cannot say that.

Mr. Wylie: That was my point; in the city of Medicine Hat we have to have a new site and a new public building, and I was wondering what was being done by the minister in that respect. It was for that reason I asked the minister the question, which I think is a fair one under item 390.

The Chairman: I have no wish, of course, to limit debate but hon. members will realize that if, under wording such as we find in this item, hon. members had the privilege of mentioning a project or several projects in every riding in Canada, we would arrive at an impossible result. It seems to me that these general remarks, and remarks to the effect that members are disappointed that a particular project is not proceeding, are the type of remarks that might be made on the first item in connection with policy. I think most hon. members agree that would contribute to more orderly debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, now that we have this item I may say that I am opposed to these general items unless we have particulars. I wanted to deal with the subject of planning and expenditure in connection with a parking space and the destruction of the old supreme court. Now that the minister has blocked it we shall start to try to find out where these projects are.

Mr. Winters: On a question of privilege; the minister did not block it, the committee blocked it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes he did. We will get along well if that is the minister's attitude.

Mr. Winters: Let us have a clear understanding on this. Is the hon. member threatening us or doing something of that nature?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am just saying we are going to get information for a change.

Mr. Winters: If we are going to be threatened and bulldozed, parliament is not going to do the business of the country very well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is hard to get information from ministers.

Mr. Winters: Not from me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Where is the million and a half going to be spent? What are the projects in mind? Handing the minister a million and a half to play around with, without anything to justify it—

Mr. Winters: Well, express your views. You have had two years to do it. This is the third year this item has been in the estimates.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let us have the particulars, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Before too much heat is generated, may I suggest to the hon. member that he should address the chair rather than speak directly across the chamber to the minister. I am sure we would have a more orderly debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister should let us hear about some of these projects that he has in mind for the million and a half dollars. There was no objection raised, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Wellington South dealt with one of these projects. What are these projects the minister has in mind? Has he made any projections of them? Let us have some of the particulars as to how this is to be made up and why the amount has been fixed at one and a half million?

Mr. Knowles: Pursuing the particular point and pursuing the same desire to get information, can the minister tell us how last year's vote was spent? According to the details, $317,452 was actually spent up to December 1, 1955; surely he could tell us how that money was spent. Then, he will note that the estimated amount for the balance of the year was $932,548. I realize that at the time the blue-book was printed that money had not been spent, but could he tell us now whether that $932,548 was spent in whole or in part and how it was spent? He could tell us, in the usual forthright manner in which he likes to hand out information, how this money was spent last year and then that would give us some guide as to the kind of expenditure this money is for and perhaps then we could get some intelligent answers to our questions as to what this year's vote is to be spent upon.

Mr. Winters: I cannot, of course, tell what this year's vote will be spent upon because I do not know. I am asking parliament to vote a million and a half dollars to enable me to plan projects as they come up for consideration. If I were in a position to know exactly where it was going to be spent, I could put specific votes in the estimates and I would not need to ask for this pool arrangement. But it may be that a project will come forward in any community across Canada upon which we would like to do some advance planning and perhaps acquire sites so that when the plans are prepared we will be ready to develop the structure.

I am not, therefore, in a position to detail what it is for, and the very nature of the vote indicates that it is planning as required. It has always met with the approval of parliament. As a matter of fact, I recall the first time it was put in the estimates it was rather welcomed as being a step in the direction of orderly estimating, and I think it has helped us to do that. If hon. members are in disagreement with that, then of course they are at liberty to express their views. I would be glad to get a breakdown of how the amount was spent last year.

Mr. Quelch: It was suggested a few moments ago by the previous chairman that it would be quite in order to ask the minister what projects he had in view or what sites. I asked him that question and he said he had not any sites in view. That being the case, surely it must be in order for members to suggest to the minister what projects might be carried out under this item.

Mr. Winters: They are quite in order to suggest what they think should come under this item by way of planning and the acquisition of sites.

Mr. Quelch: The minister would not object to that.

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Cardiff: I do not want to take the minister off the hook, particularly, but we had a certain amount of work done in Bayfield last year for which there was no item in the estimates. I think that is perhaps where some of this money goes, is it not?

Mr. Winters: If it is a matter of planning and acquiring a site, if we acquired a site under that vote, then that is the case. It gives us the opportunity of doing this so we can deal more expeditiously with the actual carrying out of the work. I hope this commends itself to hon. members as a good approach to the matter of estimating and doing work, because I personally think it is.

Mr. Cardiff: I think that the work that was done in Bayfield certainly was not in the estimates and it had to be paid out of the same fund. I just suggest to the minister that we have another project at Port Albert which needs some attention. The project is at the mouth of the natural harbour at Port Albert which is a fine place for boats to slip into out of the storms that often occur on lake Huron. All that is needed is a little dredging at the mouth of the river, at the natural harbour there. At the present time I do not think boats can get in and out of there because of a sandbar.

Mr. Pearkes: May I ask the minister if this vote merely covers the planning of design and the acquisition of land or whether it includes any form of economic planning? It seems to me that many decisions are made by this department based purely upon the engineering requirements or the engineering benefits whereas decisions frequently have to be made as between two suggested projects based very largely upon the economic value of those two places.

I would like to refer to an instance where I understand the department is carrying out an investigation which I presume comes under this amount. My example refers to the relative value of a structure in two points. I have raised the question and the boards of trade on the south coast of Vancouver island have asked for greater facilities in connection with harbours. The last report I had from the department was that they were investigating the advisability of constructing additional harbour facilities either at San Juan or at Sooke. It was not a question of both of these places being developed; it was a question of one or the other being developed. No doubt that is an investigation which is being carried out under this item.

I would like the minister to tell us how far he has progressed with that investigation. I would particularly like to know whether the economic side of these problems is investigated by his department under this item.

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Chairman, this item just covers the architectural or engineering planning, the actual preparation of plans and specifications on an advanced basis and the acquisition of sites.

Mr. Pearkes: In a case such as I have raised, is the decision made as between the relative values of the two harbours or is it based solely upon the engineering advantages? Where is the economic side discussed? Has the department any economics branch? Could the minister explain where that is covered?

Mr. Winters: We have a small economic branch in the department, Mr. Chairman, and the vote is through the general administrative item. These things are not determined solely on the basis of the engineering merits but are considered in the light of economic circumstances as well.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked how much of last year's vote was actually spent. The answer is that on building construction projects we spent $234,738.07; on engineering projects we spent $233,413.31, or a total of $468,151.38.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, on that same question, could the minister not give a greater breakdown than that?

Mr. Winters: Yes, how much do you want?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is almost as good as the pipe line answers.

Mr. Winters: I could give it to you by provinces under the two headings, building construction and engineering.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, could the minister give it by projects? We would like to have some idea as to what kind of thing this money is spent on.

Mr. Winters: It is quite a long list, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the hon. member would care to have it made a return, in which case I could table it?

Mr. Knowles: Give us some examples and perhaps when we get the picture we can decide on that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let us have the details so we can find out.

Mr. Knowles: I am making two suggestions. The first suggestion is that the minister give us some examples so that we can get the picture. I also suggest that he table the document the next time we are in the house.

Mr. Winters: I shall be very glad to do so, Mr. Chairman. We did some work at Burin, Newfoundland; Curling, Newfoundland; Change Islands, Newfoundland; Deer Lake, Newfoundland; and at Joe Batts Arm, Newfoundland. There are several others in Newfoundland and perhaps I could move on. In Quebec, at St. Joseph d'Alma, St. Jovite, Seven Islands, Shawinigan Falls and so forth, and there were a number in Ottawa. There was one at Batawa, Ontario; Brampton, Ontario; Don Mills, Ontario; Fort William, Ontario; and Grimsby, Ontario. There is a long list for Ontario.

In Manitoba we have a survey at Churchill, and we have done some work at Winnipeg; also at Broadview, Saskatchewan; Davidson, Saskatchewan; Estevan, Saskatchewan, and so on.

Mr. Knowles: Just so we can get a picture of the situation, could the minister tell us what work was done at one of the last places he mentioned, Davidson, Saskatchewan?

Mr. Winters: We acquired a site for a post office building from the Monarch Lumbering Company in the amount of $3,000.

Mr. Brooks: Very interesting.

Mr. Winters: I think it is interesting.

Mr. Knowles: I am trying to get this thing sorted out, Mr. Chairman. How did it happen that you did that under this vote rather than under one of the specific votes? I am not complaining about it but I think we should have a picture as to how the vote operates.

Mr. Winters: Quite right. It developed during the course of the year. There was no specific vote in the estimates under Davidson, Saskatchewan. The Post Office Department wrote to us that they needed accommodation at Davidson, Saskatchewan. We looked into the project and found out that in our opinion accommodation was required and that to build a project we would need a site. So we acquired the site, and now when we are ready with our plans we will have the site and will be able to proceed with our building at Davidson, Saskatchewan.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the minister wants to go on but I wonder if he would permit me to ask a question.

Mr. Winters: As you wish.

Mr. Knowles: Could you tell us by looking over the list what are the largest single items on it?

Mr. Winters: I have one at Estevan, Saskatchewan, for $12,000; one at North Battleford, $15,000; and then usually small amounts. There is one at Stephenville Crossing, Newfoundland, $5,000. At Fort William, Ontario, there is a site for improved building facilities, $50,000, but normally they are relatively small amounts. This is an accumulation of small amounts.

Mr. Wylie: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions which I should like to ask the minister and the first one is this. Is any part of this vote being used this year for the advance planning and the acquisition of a new site for the new post office or public building we should have in Medicine Hat? My second question is this. Was any part of the vote last year used for that purpose?

Mr. Winters: The answer to the last question is no, and the answer to the first part of the question, whether it will be, is that I cannot tell as we have no projects before us at the moment.

Mr. Pearkes: What money was spent on Vancouver island last year? There were a lot of promises made and I should like to know how they have been fulfilled.

Mr. Knowles: There will be a lot more next year.

Mr. Winters: The only planning we did last year under this vote was survey work for a site for a post office at Campbell River, British Columbia.

Mr. Pearkes: The minister paid a visit to Vancouver island and carried out a personal investigation of certain wharves at Sidney. He made definite promises in my hearing as to how that harbour might be developed. Has any action been taken?

Mr. Winters: Action is being taken under another vote.

Mr. Jones: I think the question I have to put to the minister comes under this vote. Over a year ago the Minister of National Revenue announced that an income tax office would be opened at Penticton. I asked the Department of Public Works why this office had not been opened as yet and they advise that they are unable to get suitable premises on a rental basis, it being intended to build a public building in about four years. The income tax office has not yet been opened and neither have they acquired suitable premises. I was wondering if the minister could not advance the building of the public building and perhaps take out of this vote sufficient to purchase the land immediately.

Mr. Winters: The project at Penticton is one on which we are endeavouring to do some planning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister has not tabled or put on Hansard the list of projects in which we were interested. Before the item passes could he say what the Ottawa items are?

Mr. Winters: What the items were for last year?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, and for the future.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member heard my explanation about the future. I cannot tell what the projects will be until they come before us for planning.

Last year in Ottawa there were architects' fees for the construction of a new public works testing laboratory on the Bowesville road, $10,000. Architects' fees for the construction of an addition to the science service laboratory, $38,525. Appraisal fees for a site for a new postal station in the west end, $282. Survey work re site for national gallery, $125.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister state who the architects were?

Mr. Winters: In the case of the public works testing laboratory they were Messrs. Noffke and Ingram, and in the case of the science service laboratory, Messrs. Gilleland and Strutt.

Mr. Hodgson: Would the building for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police not come under that?

Mr. Winters: No, the planning for that was done before this vote was established.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Can the minister tell whether any money was spent from last year's appropriation in connection with the planning of the penitentiaries to be built in western Canada and has consideration been given to the possibility of erecting one at a most favourable site in Drumheller?

Mr. Winters: Penitentiaries have not to date been under the Department of Public Works. That would come under the penitentiaries branch of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): May I ask the minister whether in the process of planning for these projects a considerable amount of work must be undertaken by other departments before a matter would come to public works? If that is so, probably some of these matters which the minister has in mind would have been developed quite substantially before he knew anything about them. Surely if there is a project such as the construction of a penitentiary in western Canada, it would be before another department, the Department of Justice or some other department, and be quite far advanced before they would consult the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Could the minister give us the breakdown of this current item under the headings of advance planning and the acquisition of sites?

Mr. Winters: No, I have no breakdown of that. This is a pool item and we try to make the best use we can.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I thought the minister used the term "fool". At times it seems almost like a fool item and I was not quite sure whether the minister had used that word.

Mr. Winters: You may be quite sure I used the other one.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): If the minister cannot give that breakdown perhaps he could give us the distribution of amounts according to provinces for last year.

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Winters: The distribution under the two headings was as follows:

	Building Construction	Engineering
Newfoundland	$ 9,054.20	$ 11,429.48
Nova Scotia	—	18,885.95
Prince Edward Island	—	7,199.94
New Brunswick	—	9,891.70
Quebec	7,469.64	26,269.16
Ottawa	48,970.83	—
Ontario	113,495.50	28,424.71
Manitoba	2,809.00	315.00
Saskatchewan	32,113.60	—
Alberta and Northwest Territories	20,625.30	112,762.42
British Columbia and Yukon	200.00	18,234.95
	$234.738.07	$233,413.31

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I thank the minister for that information with respect to last year. Would he give us some indication of the proposed or expected distribution of this provincially in the current amount of $1,500,000?

Mr. Winters: No, this is an as-required vote, and I should think that generally speaking it would be broken down on much the same basis as the populations between provinces.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): If the minister can inform the house, in what manner are the actual expenditures out of this fund authorized? Are they authorized by order of the governor in council and passed as a minute, and examined by the cabinet?

Mr. Winters: That is subject to the Financial Administration Act and the government contract regulations. If it is in the amount that requires to go before the treasury board and the governor in council, of course, it does. The same regulations apply to expenditure here as in any other vote of parliament.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): That is the point I had in mind. The same regulations apply here as to any other vote of parliament. We have spent the better part of one hour attempting to get some detailed information from the minister regarding a gross amount of $1,500,000. The complete, total and absolute amount of information we have been able to procure is that $1,500,000 is to be voted. There has been no indication that the minister has any idea as to the distribution of this between advance planning and acquisition of sites, which are the two specific reasons given for it. There is no indication, nor has the minister any information, as to the provincial distribution of this amount. By the minister's own statements and admissions it is absolutely clear that this amount is completely and entirely available and unencumbered in every sense of the word.

Now let us turn to the control held by parliament or by the cabinet over the expenditure of this amount. Since it is being dealt with in exactly the same way as other government expenditures are dealt with, and we know it is not necessary for every government expenditure, or even the majority of government expenditures, to have the personal examination of the cabinet, we can only come to the conclusion that we have given the Minister of Public Works a nice little pot of $1,500,000 to do with as he wills as regards its allocation to various points in Canada or the nature of the expenditures, provided that they come within the classification of advance planning and acquisition of sites.

Mr. Fleming: The year before the election.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): As one of my colleagues points out, perhaps in advance of the conclusion I was going to come to, and I quote his words, "The year before an election."

Mr. Winters: It has been in every year. You know that.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Yes, for the three years before the election. The going is getting rougher for this government all the time.

Mr. Winters: You will see.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Perhaps it is necessary to have some advance planning for the elections.

Mr. Winters: Apparently you do not do enough advance planning for yours.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I think it has been the experience of all of us who have followed an operation of the magnitude of this government, or even the operation of a municipal council, to know that on occasion—and the minister will agree with me on this—sites may be acquired and eventually, for whatever reason, not used, and perhaps even resold. Planning may be done which eventually becomes a futility because it is decided not to go ahead with the project. Of course, you may have other things too, such as a rather famous harbour in Canada where the planning is done after rather than before the event, and we pay for it rather dearly. However, just think for a moment—

An hon. Member: Why don't you?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): To answer the interjection, I have been thinking for a moment, which is why I am making these remarks. The trouble is that too many of the gentlemen on the other side are not doing their thinking. The Minister of Trade and Commerce made a reference this morning about a Conservative horse that did not run. I was just thinking I would rather be a Conservative horse than a Liberal donkey.

Mr. Winters: That one did not get a laugh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I am not attempting to speak in terms of getting a laugh. I am attempting to bring some intelligence to bear on a problem that the minister does not seem—

Mr. Winters: Then let us get started.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Be that as it may, just think how convenient it is for a public works department to have this nice round figure of $1½ million that can be spent anywhere in Canada on any one of a tremendous range of projects with any one of the 15 million people in this country, at the discretion of the Minister of Public Works and those he directs. This is not an expenditure which parliament is in a position to control, except voting the total amount of $1½ million. It is not an expenditure in regard to which we are in any position to see how it is being expended, but I think we can be reasonably certain that it could be used—and this is the point I am making—it could be used for blatantly political purposes, and the only defence we have against that—and let us admit that it is a poor defence—is the trust and confidence, which may be held by some people and may not be held by others, in the discretion of the minister himself.

May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, to summarize what I was saying at one o'clock in case it may not be fresh in the minister's memory, we have here an amount of $1,500,000 for which no accounting has been made and no adequate explanation of the details given to the committee. In any one case an amount up to $15,000 may be spent at the discretion of the minister. We are approaching a year which by many is considered to be an election year. Some people would consider an item of this sort which can be spent where the government is having a little trouble, where they want to sweeten up certain localities, where they want to make a show to the people of the so-called munificence of the government, as little more than a political slush fund. I for one object strenuously to the government including in the estimates for this year anything that might be a political slush fund under the guise of a proper expenditure by the government.

Mr. Holowach: Mr. Chairman, I know the minister is anxious to utter the sigh of relief that will come when his estimates are completed and I wish to accommodate him by being very brief in my remarks. I cannot let this item go by without once again drawing the attention of the minister and his officials to the urgent need of buildings in Edmonton East, particularly in the town of Beverly in order to accommodate a post office. I believe that part of this appropriation would be justly spent for the acquisition of a site and the planning of such a project in that area. I do not know of any other place of comparable size or importance that has had as little public investment by the government as Edmonton, and particularly Edmonton East. It is true that a new federal building is being constructed which is coming along very nicely and we are grateful for that, but we should remember that this project has come about after some 15 years of making strong representations to get it.

On several occasions in the past I have endeavoured to draw the attention of the minister to the urgency for a public building in the town of Beverly and on each occasion I have not been very successful. At the present time the post office in that town is nothing more than a small wooden shack which is disgracefully inadequate. I would appreciate it very much if the minister and his officials would investigate the possibility of erecting a suitable public building in that town. I have communicated with the Post Office Department and they of course give the explanation that the decision has to be made by the Department of Public Works. The minister will probably answer me by saying that the recommendation has to come from the Post Office Department. It seems to me that is classic buckpassing and is not fair at all to the people in that region.

There is another point I wish to make. In the city of Edmonton real estate values are rising constantly. I think it would be good business and good economics for us to invest in sites and make plans in order to provide for the needs of the community. Recently I received a submission from the Edmonton businessmen's association which drew my attention to the fact that in Edmonton East particularly most of the post office services are located in grocery stores and other retail shops. In a country such as Canada I think that also is disgraceful, especially in urban areas. All I ask at this time is that the minister assure me that he will investigate and examine the conditions there with a view to using some of this money in order to acquire sites for such projects.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I was accused this morning of holding up these estimates. That is a misstatement. I think the minister will agree with me that last Friday we would have completed the estimates of this department in two or three minutes if it had not been for a member of his own party, the hon. member for Wellington South, who objected to anything of that nature being done. All he had to say was what he said this morning which was nothing more than a travelogue of Wellington county in order to get his name on Hansard.

Mr. Harris: That is not unusual.

Mr. Hodgson: As far as this item is concerned, I hope it will cover post office sites in my riding.

Mr. Churchill: When discussing this item this morning I think the minister said that when it was first put in the estimates three years ago there was general approval. That may have been so. We were interested in seeing that some advance planning was going to be undertaken by the Department of Public Works. But I was disappointed today to find that the minister was so obviously reluctant to disclose what had been done even last year with regard to the money expended under this item and was also not prepared to give us any indication as to how the money would be used in the coming year. That being so, some doubt arises as to the purpose of the item. In other sections of his estimates there are large items which are not specifically pinned down to one particular matter. I hope the minister is not going to get into the habit of the Department of National Defence and set up his estimates in the form of a revolving fund which will not be changed from year to year.

With regard to this particular item the minister said—he can correct me if I have made an incorrect note—in response to a question as to what would happen in the coming year with respect to the distribution of the $1,500,000 available, that he supposed that the division of the money would bear some relation to the population of the various provinces. May I point out that there was no such disposition of the money last year because, according to the figures that the minister read, the province of Manitoba seems to have been relegated to a position almost off his list. We were blacklisted, having an expenditure of only $2,000 for public buildings and $315 for engineering. Can the minister inform us just what was done in Manitoba last year and why it was placed in such an inferior position compared with the rest of Canada? Second, in this planning activity and acquisition of sites what does the department do when it acquires sites that are not subsequently used for the original purpose for which they were procured? Some of the sites that the department obtains possession of are secured by means of expropriation of property; but if the site is not used for the purpose originally intended, is that expropriated property returned to the original owner? I put those two questions before the minister.

Mr. Winters: I will answer those two questions, Mr. Chairman, and I will deal with the second one first, as to what we do with property if we expropriate it and then do not subsequently use it. That is something that happens very seldom, indeed, but it happened in one instance in Winnipeg. I am sure that is the instance that my hon. friend has in mind. We have declared the property to be surplus and have turned it over to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. That crown company reports to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and it is his responsibility to dispose of the property. He has that matter in hand now.

With regard to the other question, namely as to why Manitoba was discriminated against, may I say I do not think there is any question of that. The results are the best answer. It is not how much planning we do that determines always what results will be obtained. It is the actual structures that are the pay-off, if I may use that word. I know he realizes that Manitoba has been far from discriminated against.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Before discussion on the minister's estimates is concluded, I should like to point out that in my riding we will soon have the pleasure of having a lovely public building in the city of Camrose. Since this particular item deals with planning I should like to suggest to the minister that he direct the members of his department to do something in terms of the actual planning and construction of a recommended post office building in the town of Vermilion. I believe this matter has been before the Post Office Department for a number of years. I do not know whether or not it has reached the minister's own particular department. I sincerely hope that those folks around the town of Vermilion will, within the next few years, be able to have the privilege of enjoying the use of a modern post office.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pallett: Earlier today the chairman indicated that it was perhaps not quite proper to discuss the old supreme court building for which many people in the legal profession have a liking almost similar to that of those in other professions for the things that are important to them. You might almost compare it with the liking that some people have for a little piece of metal they wear which is supposed to have come from a bridge that has been sold three or four times.

Mr. Winters: I did not hear that last sentence. I should like to hear it.

Mr. Pallett: I said that the liking that people in the legal profession have for that old supreme court building might be almost compared with that which another profession has for a ring made from a little piece of metal that is supposed to have come from a bridge that has been sold three or four times. I wonder whether the minister might indicate to the committee under which of the estimates that are before us—and some have been passed—provision has been made for any discussion of this matter.

Mr. Winters: It could have been discussed under the general administration item 344, or under the general item of the building construction branch which is item 350; or it might have been discussed under Ottawa buildings, which is item 356. There are three items there under which this particular matter could have been discussed.

Mr. Pallett: I have examined the particulars of those items and I see nothing with particular reference to this matter. That is why I raised the point at this time.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member is aware of the fact that we had on the first item of these estimates broad and general discussion in which we covered the field fairly completely.

Mr. Pallett: I am fully aware of that fact. But I thought it was in the interests of good debate sometimes to withhold your comments until you came to a particular item. In many instances I believe it was for that reason that some matters were not discussed earlier. In addition to that, I might suggest that too much was not indicated that this action was going to be taken when the first item was actually before us. The information came to hand after that time.

Mr. Winters: What is that?

Mr. Pallett: There was not too much general knowledge that this action was going to be taken about the supreme court building when we were at the first item.

Mr. Winters: That is not correct.

Mr. Pallett: It may have been within the minister's knowledge.

Mr. Winters: There were several public statements made on it some considerable time ago.

The Deputy Chairman: At this point perhaps I might interpose the observation that there seems to be on the part of some hon. members a desire to discuss the possible demolition of an existing building in Ottawa, namely the old supreme court building. Personally, I cannot see how the demolition of an existing building could come under item 390 which is "to provide for advance planning of projects including acquisition of sites". Unless the minister or somebody with factual knowledge stated to the committee that it was proposed to use moneys under this vote for the purpose of demolition of the old supreme court building,—and I say this with some regret—I am afraid that the committee would agree with me when I say that discussion could not come under item 390.

Mr. Churchill: Would it be fair to ask the minister whether, under this planning section, he is planning to acquire a site for a parking lot on the area on which the supreme court building now stands?

Mr. Winters: No, sir; we are not.

Mr. Regier: On April 20 last I asked the minister why item No. 364 could not be left until the time of the supplementary estimates with which we are annually faced at the close of the fiscal year. His reply at that time was that the supplementary estimates were in the course of preparation now. I do not think he quite understood the point I was after at the time. I realize full well that the supplementary estimates with which we shall be faced before we go home from this session are in the course of preparation and possibly are almost completed now. However, in each and every year before the close of the fiscal year—almost within hours of it—I understand that this House of Commons is faced with another or second list of supplementary estimates. Some doubt has been raised as to the advisability of granting to the minister a blank cheque for $1,500,000 with which to do as he may deem necessary during the course of the coming year. However, I should like to point out that item 364 was of a similar nature and asked for $900,000. Item 389 was of a similar nature again, and asked for the sum of $800,000. We have item 390 which is now before us and which asks for $1,500,000. Item 391 is another similar item calling for $750,000 and item 392 calls for $650,000. That is a grand total of some $4,600,000. I do not for a moment wish to have the minister's hands tied so that during the year he is unable to do what it is necessary for him to do in order to protect the public interest. However, last year at the end of March in supplementary estimates he asked for an amount in excess of $4 million. I hope the minister can give a further reply in addition to what he gave me the other day with regard to why not more of these items could be left until the last week in March when the house has, I believe, always been most reasonable and, upon satisfactory explanation, has never yet failed to vote the money in emergency funds that he found it necessary to ask for at that time. I am sure the minister misunderstood me last time, and therefore I am unwilling to let this item pass before I receive an answer as to why more of these items could not well be left to the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Winters: I presume the hon. member is referring to what are known as the further supplementary estimates. That is a clean-up operation at the end of the fiscal year to take care of expenditures in the year behind rather than the year ahead. This item seeks parliamentary authority to spend money in the current fiscal year rather than a cleanup in respect to the past fiscal year. That is why we are asking this amount now to enable us to plan in this present fiscal year for projects we will wish to undertake in some future year.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I do not feel very happy about that explanation. After all, it is only reasonable, when a daughter of mine goes out for the evening and says, "Daddy, I will need $3.65", that I give her $5 saying, "Here is a little bit extra; after all, you never know what emergency you may run into as you may have to hire a taxi to get home." However, when the minister is asking us for a sum, and I believe we will have to agree that his figures are right, which amounts to a cheque for $4,600,000, I feel that is a rather high proportion of the amount of money his department spends in a year. I feel the minister is showing a lack of confidence in the house, and in the good intentions of the members of this house, because he is afraid that in the last week of March they might not grant him the money that he has found he needed for emergencies during the course of the year. If they are not emergencies then he should not be asking for this money under these headings. The items should be listed in the estimates along with all the other projects. I cannot see how, in a country such as Canada, emergencies are known to exist that will total $4,600,000. I think it is a little unreasonable to ask the house to grant this large amount.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, we have had no explanation from the minister at all as to why this year he is asking for an increase in this item of $250,000. We all know that the coming year may be a year of a national event, and that another quarter of a million dollars to play around with—I notice two or three of these items here—would naturally enable the minister to establish his popularity in those areas to which he advanced this extra amount. There is another strange thing and that is the tremendous desire on the part of the Minister of Finance for economy and yet an item like this is passed by the treasury board with an increase from $1,250,000 to $1,500,000. The minister in charge of the department says, I have no plans that I can place before the committee; I do not know what expenditures I am going to make. I am unable to advise what advance planning of projects is going to be done. All I ask for is an additional quarter of a million dollars.

Now, I know that there is nothing more attractive for the minister's millennium than a melon like this to be distributed without giving to parliament even a rough outline of the need for the increase. I feel that with this item there should be a protest made against this type of financing. In the United States the Hoover commission went very carefully over the items that had been budgeted for and that had been in the accounts for years. One thing that they found that was a dangerous item was an item such as this. It is an encouragement to over-expenditure. One million and a half dollars is given by parliament without strings attached, without even a suggestion by the minister as to why the additional quarter of a million dollars is needed, without even a general outline as to how it is going to be expended. This is the type of item that encourages departmental officials to spend, spend and spend.

In view of the lack of any explanation by the minister, in view of the fact that his department has no general outline of how this money is going to be spent and the government has gone no farther than to say this department needs its money, I move:

That item 390 be reduced to $1.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have listened to the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Public Works, and I have noted some of the statements that have been made within the last few minutes. The hon. member who has just taken his seat stated that this is the type of financing which encourages over-expenditure. I can assure him that if encouragement for over-expenditure is looked for, all the minister has to do is to follow the speeches that have been made by the opposition during the perusal of his estimates. He will find many suggestions there that would cost the taxpayers of this country hundreds of millions of dollars. I would take it for granted that it would be rather difficult to estimate exactly how much the minister would want after the discussion that has taken place on his estimates. I am sure there are few members who have taken any part in the discussion of these estimates who have not suggested that a new public building or something of that nature be constructed in their constituency. I feel that the minister, regardless of the amount which might be provided for his department, will spend wisely and for that reason I will reject the amendment which has been moved.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, let me say just a word on this. I think the hon. member for Prince Albert has a great misunderstanding of how departments operate, in fact I believe of how parliament operates. There is one further thing I should say, and that is that he is displaying a tremendous lack of confidence in his colleagues in the Progressive Conservative party. I say that for this reason. When this item was first put in the estimates in 1953-54, when the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra was the official critic of the Department of Public Works—he did the job very well—he discussed the vote. Two other hon. members participated in the discussion. It passed very quickly with less than two columns of discussion in Hansard. I reviewed that at noon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have had the experience since.

Mr. Winters: Last year the same item passed without a word of comment or criticism from any hon. member of the official opposition.

The hon. member said that this was an opportunity to cut a lemon. I think that demonstrates a clear lack of understanding of the purpose of the vote.

Mr. Knowles: You have your fruits mixed up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was a melon.

Mr. Nowlan: We hope it will be a lemon.

Mr. Winters: Perhaps it is too good an opportunity to miss the association of ideas there.

Mr. Pearkes: It is a citrus fruit, anyway.

Mr. Winters: No melon is being cut here nor is any lemon being cut that anybody can participate in. This is an opportunity to plan for future construction and quite the reverse is the case from what the hon. member said, that this is an opportunity to inflate the estimates. What the Minister of Finance is quite rightly trying to do is to economize and he is doing it successfully.

This is an attempt to avoid large amounts in the estimates that we do not spend. The old technique meant that in order to plan and acquire sites we had to include specific items in the estimates with amounts that often remained unspent. By consolidating the opportunity to plan and acquire sites in this vote we can reduce the number of individual items and thereby keep down the total amount of the estimates in line with the program the Minister of Finance is so ably following.

On that basis I see nothing in the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Prince Albert to warrant the amendment he has submitted and I must therefore inform the committee that I will vote against it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, would the minister just go back and answer one question. Why is the minister asking us for a quarter of a million dollars more this year than last year? These estimates must have been made up four, five or six months ago and it must have been known that the amount required in 1956-57 would be a million and a half dollars.

Does the minister say that no portion of the million and a half in the last six months has in any way been proceeded with by way of planning of any project? Have none been planned within that period? If that be so and the minister is unable to give us any record of any new projects, it indicates that there is going to be a lot of money ready just before the election.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Diefenbaker) negatived: Yeas, 19; nays, 62.

General—

391. To supplement, on approval of treasury board except where less than $1,000 is required, any of the appropriations of the Department of Public Works, $750,000.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this is a general item to supplement, on approval of treasury board, any of the appropriations of the Department of Public Works and the amount is $750,000, which is almost double the vote for last year which was only $400,000. There is no information given in the details as to how much was actually spent during the last fiscal year. I would ask the minister to explain why it is necessary to have this very large increase in this vote.

Perhaps at the same time the minister could deal with the question I asked him a week ago today when one of the dredging items was under discussion, as to whether or not he would table a report entitled, "Analysis of Tides and Currents in Burrard Inlet". That report was the result of a study of the effect of dredging on the first narrows in Vancouver and it should be of great interest to various bodies in greater Vancouver. I hope that the minister will be able to table the report today so that it can be studied by the public generally.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me, I will have copies of the report sent to the table now.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not want to become unnecessarily technical but if the minister would revert to motions at five o'clock with Mr. Speaker in the chair I think it would be the proper time for the tabling of the document so that it can be entered into the records of the house.

Mr. Winters: I will do that, thank you. The answer to the question is that out of the total amount of $400,000 the sum of $393,410 was spent.

Mr. Green: I asked the minister why it is necessary for this present fiscal year to have an increase of $350,000 which is almost double the amount spent last year? This amount is not an item having to do with one particular project; it is another of these general items, a sort of catch basin item, from which the department can draw for any one of its many votes. Why is it necessary to double this vote?

Mr. Winters: It was considered necessary, Mr. Chairman, because last year we did encounter some trouble with one or two appropriations in which we overspent and had to rearrange through transfers and otherwise. This is an attempt to include an amount which we think will be more realistic and cover the possible over-runs on any of the large number of projects we have in hand at the present time.

Item agreed to.

General—

392. To provide for balances required to complete any projects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1956-57, $650,000.

Mr. Montgomery: This is an item which, as I understand it, covers unpaid balances similar to item No. 391. Could we not have some information as to where this will be spent? I presume the minister should have some idea where this amount of $650,000 is going to be used.

Mr. Winters: This is a different item from No. 391. Item No. 391 is intended to provide for over-runs, as indicated, of any moneys in the estimates for the previous fiscal year.

Item No. 392 is to provide for an instance where a project is in hand but for which no money was requested in the estimates in the immediately preceding fiscal year but for which some funds are now required to clean up and finish the operation. This is the traditional item which has been carried for years. The hon. member will note that we are asking for the same amount of money this year as we did last year.

Mr. Montgomery: Do I understand that the minister is unable to tell us where this money was spent?

Mr. Winters: I am unable to say where it will be spent this year, but I can say where it was spent in past years. That is all a matter of record and detail.

Mr. Montgomery: In other words we will not know until next year where this money has been spent?

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Item agreed to.

393. Statue of the late Sir Robert L. Borden, $20,000.

Mr. Nowlan: Last year the minister said that the location had been selected and borings made at the west corner of the parliamentary grounds. Can he tell us whether that site has been definitely decided upon? I notice there is a reduction in the amount. Last year we voted $45,000 and this year we are being asked to vote $20,000. Is that to be a final payment? When is it expected that the monument will be erected and unveiled?

Mr. Winters: This amount is required to complete the project, as far as the sculptress is concerned. There were some delays, and when I had a discussion with the sculptress Miss Loring just a few days ago when she visited my office I asked how the project was developing. She has now completed a half-sized figure which she proposes to have reproduced in bronze in full size. She told me it was expected the figure would be ready for mounting in November of this year. I told her that I would not hold her to any specific date because of the uncertainties that are sometimes encountered in producing a statue of this kind. In the meantime we propose to erect the pedestal on the site west of the west block and have it ready to mount the statue when it is completed.

Mr. Regier: How much is it expected that the whole thing will cost?

Mr. Winters: Fifty-three thousand dollars.

Mr. Regier: I do not intend to oppose this vote or to move that it be reduced, but I do feel that we have reached the stage in our history when we might consider that we have enough of these things on the grounds surrounding the parliament buildings.

I have another little problem in mind, that faced by students of political science at the Canadian universities. I feel that if Sir Robert Borden had been asked when he was living whether he would like to have a statue erected in his memory or have a trust fund set up which would return about $2,120 per year to be used as scholarships for outstanding students of political science attending Canadian universities, he would have said that he was not particularly anxious to have copper go green with age, moss set in, birds roost on his head and ears and so forth. I think he would have preferred to have had his memory perpetuated by means of scholarships for students who are studying the particular field in which he spent so many of his years. The opportunities available to students of political science in our universities in the form of scholarships are few and far between.

After the completion of this project I think serious study should be given to a more moderate means of commemorating the services of those who have played a great part in our public welfare. The next in line will most likely be the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King. Since the late William Lyon Mackenzie King was a great believer in things spiritual, I think he would have been the first to agree that he would not want erected to his memory a monument made of stone or copper, that he would prefer something along the lines of the proposal I am now putting forward. I mention these things now because I do not want to be placed in the embarrassing position, when the next case comes before this house, of being wrongly accused of not wanting to pay a proper tribute to those men who have so well served their dominion in years gone by.

Mr. Small: Following the statement by the minister that this project will be completed about November, may I suggest that that will be rather late in the year and probably it would be more appropriate to leave it until next year when there will be a change in government and the new government could carry this through.

Item agreed to.

395. To provide for the expenses incurred by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in constructing and supervising construction of married quarters, rental housing, schools and related services on behalf of the Department of National Defence, $1,000,000.

Mr. Pearkes: Could the minister explain this item a little more fully, as practically no details are given. Where is this money to be spent and on what type of building?

Mr. Winters: This is in connection with housing, schools and ground facilities that may be installed for housing for the Department of National Defence. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation acts on an agency basis for the Department of Defence Production in the building of these facilities for the Department of National Defence. This vote is to cover the expenses of the corporation in carrying out that agency arrangement.

Mr. Pearkes: The vote last year was $1,450,000. Could the minister state whether that full amount was spent? In view of the amount of housing going on, that amount would seem to be totally inadequate. I cannot apply it to realities.

Mr. Winters: The amount was spent last year. That was not the total cost of construction; it was money paid to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for carrying out the total volume of construction. This year that total will be in the neighbourhood of $22 million.

Mr. Pearkes: Does that mean that this is simply an administrative item to cover draftsmen and clerks that may be employed for the purpose? Apparently it has nothing to do with the actual construction and therefore the minister is unable to tell me where this money is to be spent, or will it be spent only in Ottawa?

Mr. Winters: That is correct. This is an administrative item for inspection, drafting and engineering services, as well as the other items which enter into the general administration of a construction program.

Mr. Pearkes: I know the answer which the minister will make to my next question is obvious; I know he will say it is because of the efficiency of his department that he has been able to reduce this vote.

Mr. Winters: The construction program has been slightly reduced and the administrative expenses are related to that program.

[Mr. Small.]

Mr. Pearkes: This would include the construction of camps such as Gagetown?

Mr. Winters: Yes, sir.

Mr. Nicholson: It seems to me that this is quite a large item to have in such little detail as the minister has so far given us. I wonder whether he could not give us a better breakdown as to exactly how the $1 million is to be spent next year.

Mr. Winters: It is to be spent for the general administration needed for the construction program required for the armed forces. For example, at camp Gagetown there is a very large project for which the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is building the houses, and their costs of administration of that operation come out of this vote. Across the country there are housing projects for the Department of National Defence, schools are being built on locations and ground services provided. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been given the job of supervising that construction program, and this is their cost in that regard.

Mr. Nicholson: Could the minister indicate whether any of the operations are carried on in Europe, that is, does his department supervise any of the construction there?

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Knowles: Was it this item or the one under loans and investments that the minister said would be the appropriate place to ask general questions on housing administration? I believe it was this item.

Mr. Winters: I do not mind. I do not think that either item actually is too appropriate for a general discussion on housing, but I think the loans and investments item would be the more appropriate of the two.

Mr. Knowles: I believe that this matter was raised on item 1 of the minister's estimates and he indicated he would prefer to have the housing discussion on one or the other of these items. I am in the minister's hands. Which does he prefer?

Mr. Winters: This is a specific item to cover construction for the armed forces. The other one is perhaps more general. If he would not mind discussing it on item 530, I think that would be a little better.

The Deputy Chairman: Just before this item is completed, in view of the interchange that has just gone forward between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the Minister of Public Works, I might say that I have both items before me. One deals specifically with rental housing, and so on, on behalf of the Department of National Defence. The other deals specifically with housing projects for veterans and two named projects, one at Gander and one at Pembroke.

I do not wish to assume the responsibility for curtailing the debate too much, but perhaps I should state to the minister and the hon. member that I do not think it would be fulfilling my duty if I permitted either item to branch out into a full-scale debate on the administration or the accounts of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Having said that, I shall try not to be any tougher than I think I should.

Mr. Knowles: I realize you do not wish to be tough, and neither do you wish to be too lenient. I think this point was dealt with when we were on the first item of the minister's estimates. He indicated then he would prefer any discussion of housing to be delayed until we came to this item, rather than taking it under general administration. I think that conforms with the practice in the last few years, and I think that is what the committee would expect to take place today.

Item agreed to.

Loans, investments and advances—

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

530. To provide for advances to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the purposes of subsection (1) of section 37 of the National Housing Act, 1954, in respect of housing projects for veterans and for housing projects at Gander, Newfoundland, and at Pembroke, Ontario, for sale or rental, $1,462,000.

Mr. Knowles: Under this item, I should like to ask the minister whether he can say anything further with respect to the matter to which I drew his attention yesterday on the orders of the day. I asked him then whether he had yet seen the press report by Gerald Waring concerning the extent to which the chartered banks have reduced their lending for the construction of new homes. The minister indicated that he had not yet seen that report and he also suggested that, if the government had any thought of going more directly into the field of lending by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that would be a matter of government policy, to be announced in due course.

It seems to me that a report such as that which Gerald Waring gave in his column, which was published in a number of newspapers yesterday, does call for some comment by the minister. As I interpret this report, it seems that, as a result of the advice given by the Bank of Canada to the chartered banks to put certain brakes on credit, the banks have carried out that advice with respect to housing. I understand that the advice given by the Bank of Canada was that housing was the one field where credit should not be curtailed; yet Mr. Waring's report is that this is the very field in which it has happened. His report indicates that loans by the banks for new housing so far in 1956 are 30 per cent below what they were at the same time last year. In the light of that, it seems to me that the question I put to the minister yesterday is more than appropriate, when I asked him if the government would consider expanding its activities in the field of direct loans for housing construction.

It should be pointed out to the minister that the suggestion contained in my question of yesterday, the suggestion contained in Gerald Waring's report, could not have come as any surprise to the minister. Indeed, on January 18 of this year, my colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, as recorded on page 249 of Hansard, asked the following question of the minister:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of yesterday's announcement by the banks indicating a decline in money being available for housing, would the government consider again supplying a portion of N.H.A. funds as it did before the first session of this parliament?

The minister asked permission to take the question as notice. He answered it the next day in what we must take as a considered fashion, and this in part is what he said, as recorded on page 281 of Hansard:

> There has been no indication by prospective borrowers that there is a general shortage of mortgage money under the National Housing Act. As the hon. member knows, the act contains authority by which Central Mortgage may make loans directly to borrowers if loans are not being made available by approved lenders. If a shortage of mortgage money did occur it would be a matter of government policy, in light of the circumstances at that time, to determine to what extent the corporation's power to make direct loans should be used. At the present time this authority is being used in the smaller communities. It is the government's intention to insure that a high level of house building continues.

That was the declared position of the minister on January 19, but we are now led to believe that there has been a considerable reduction in the lending of money by the banks for the construction of new homes. In the light of that, it seems to me that the time has come for the government to implement its indication, as set out on January 19, by expanding its activities in the field of direct loans for housing construction. I think it would be appropriate that the minister make some statement on this matter at this time.

Mr. Winters: This is rather far afield when one relates it to the wording of the item but, since the hon. member did have the impression he could discuss some general items on housing, I shall comment. But at the same time I hope that we will not widen this discussion to a general debate on housing, particularly having in mind that we have just had two full-scale debates on housing, one on the resolution stage and the other on the second reading stage of the amendments to the National Housing Act. The situation, as the hon. member knows, is that money has tightened up and the flow of funds available for mortgages has tightened correspondingly. It was for that reason that we gave very serious consideration to this matter recently and took the step of raising the ceiling for mortgage money under the National Housing Act from 5¼ to 5½ per cent, which restored it to the level at which it was established in 1954 when the act was amended to enable the chartered banks to make loans against the security of residential mortgages. That has stimulated a flow of mortgage money. It is still below last year's level.

But on the other hand we came into this present year with a carry-over of some 80,000 units under construction and to date starts have been above the level even of last year which was a record level in itself. A great deal of that is because of forward commitments by lenders but the fact is we are still getting a very high level of house building activity. What the future monetary trends will be it is hard to tell at this moment, but we are in the fortunate position of having a heavy carry-over coming into this year and having a high level of house building activity that has prevailed up to this time and shows healthy signs of continuing. Basically those are the factors that confront us now. As I have said, the government wishes to see a continuing high level of housing activity and we are studying the situation at all times, as my hon. friend can well imagine.

Mr. Knowles: I have one or two other questions. Since I have referred two or three times to Gerald Waring's report and since the minister has now repeated the information he gave on another occasion about the greater number of starts this year, perhaps I might indicate that Gerald Waring included in his report these two sentences:

> Housing starts have remained high on the strength of bank commitments made before credit was tightened. But housing officials expect the dollar downhold will show up markedly in a month or two, at a time of year when home construction normally would be approaching peak activity.

It seems to me that the time to face a crisis such as that is in advance rather than after it has come upon us. I wonder whether the Minister of Public Works has had a heart to heart discussion with his colleague, the Minister of Finance, about this matter. It seems to me that it was a logical and commendable bit of advice to give the banks that in curtailing credit they should not apply the brakes on credit for the construction of homes. Banks are in business for the purpose of making money and one cannot blame them if they have a particular interest in their better customers, if we may call them that. But surely if advice is going to be given to the banks with respect to lending for home construction the government should pursue the matter and see that that advice is acted upon.

I am glad to note that the minister is studying the matter but I suggest that it requires pretty active consideration right now rather than after the slow-down has become evident, which in turn involves another delay before anything is done. May I ask one other question. Has the minister any comment to make on the rumour that the government might try to meet the situation by buying such mortgage paper as the banks hold so as to increase to that extent the credit they might have available for housing?

Mr. Winters: There is provision made for that operation under the statute now. I do not think I should comment beyond that on the government's intentions.

Mr. Knowles: Then can the minister indicate to the committee the extent to which direct loans by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing are in operation?

Mr. Winters: The policy is that direct loans by C.M.H.C. are made where the lending operations of other lending institutions are not the normal practice. As I said when discussing the amendments on second reading, two years ago before the banks came into the picture there was quite a high level of direct activity on the part of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, but the need for that has dropped because the 4,000 odd branches of the chartered banks have in effect been lending agencies in many communities that were not previously served by mortgage money under the National Housing Act. To date there has been no decided trend one way or the other in that feature of operations under the act.

But all these things are matters which we are studying and, as I said, the situation is that so far we have a high level of housing activity. We have been observing the trends and studying every feature of the situation. The hon. member advocates that we keep as close to it as we can. I can assure him that we are doing that.

Mr. Pearkes: A portion of this amount is allocated to housing projects to aid veterans.

Under the veterans legislation there is the Veterans Land Act which, under the small holding section, takes care of the general housing of veterans. I know that a certain size of lot is required, approximately 1·6 acres, but there are many veterans who are asking for housing assistance with respect to much smaller lots in cities or their suburbs and I understand that they apply through the Department of Veterans Affairs to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and from there they obtain assistance. I have had recommendations made to me by veterans, members of the Legion and officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs in widely scattered places throughout this country that it would be far more satisfactory to the veterans if they could process the whole business of acquiring the land and building the house under the Veterans Land Act rather than having to deal with this other organization which is concerned with loans under this item.

It seems to me there is undoubtedly duplication in so far as the Veterans Land Act and loans made under this item are concerned. Would the minister explain exactly how loans for housing projects are made under this item? I should like to have his comments and I hope I will be able to obtain the comments of the Minister of Veterans Affairs when his estimates are being considered because there seems to be a widespread opinion among veterans that they would prefer to complete the processing of the loans through the Veterans Land Act administration.

Mr. Winters: That particular operation is not covered under this vote which is required to finance the housing projects that the government owns and operates and which are available for rental to veterans. I know my hon. friend is aware of them because we have several very good ones in Vancouver. What he referred to is housing under the Veterans Land Act which is administered by my colleague. There is one provision whereby the Department of Veterans Affairs has facilities for helping veterans to build their own homes. The arrangement has been for Central Mortgage and Housing then to go in, take over the mortgage and administer it. The Canadian Legion, when they presented their last brief, brought to our attention the fact that they thought there was some duplication between the branch of the Veterans Land Act administration and Central Mortgage and Housing, and expressed the preference to process their loan through the Veterans Land Act. That arrangement has now been made. That apparent duplication has now been removed and the loans are being processed through the Veterans Land Act administration.

Mr. Pearkes: I take it that this does not apply to individual veterans' loans?

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Mr. Pearkes: This applies only to the larger projects which are handled by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Winters: This vote applies only to that; yes.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I also will have to crave the indulgence of the minister, hoping that he will not remind you of what may be your responsibility too severely. I had intended to speak on the subject of housing under item 1 of his estimates. I had not very much to say but I had a few points that I wished to make. I was advised rather officially—I do not know whether Hansard would have a record of it—that the minister did not wish at that time to have a general discussion on housing but that we were to wait until the item of housing appeared in the estimates. I should like first of all once again to repeat to the minister the plea of those who are engaged, in British Columbia at least, in building homes for senior citizens. In these homes and notably the ones built—

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps I should disabuse the hon. member's mind immediately. I have no recollection of any such arrangement. We are here dealing with a particular item, and I hope the hon. member will confine his remarks to discussion of the particular item.

Mr. Regier: In that case, Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege I should like to ask the minister categorically to deny that he asked us to withhold our comments on item 1.

The Chairman: Order. I have no right to establish any arrangement between the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, the minister or any other individual members of the committee. I must owe my duty to the members of the committee as a whole and I must apply the rules, as they are applicable, to all.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, in that connection may I say just a few words. Perhaps this will help to clarify the matter. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni telephoned my office when these estimates were about to come up for consideration and asked on which item housing could be discussed. I assumed, perhaps wrongly, that what they wished to discuss was related to the items set forth in the estimates under housing, and I said it would be more appropriate to discuss housing under those items than to discuss it under the general administration item of the Department of Public Works. That was the understanding I had at that time.

Mr. Barnett: If I may, I should like to say a few words on the point of order. May I just point out that when another Chairman was in the chair when this item first came forward, there was a little bit of discussion on this point. At that time I understood the minister to say that he hoped there would not be any prolonged discussion on the question of housing but that if there was general agreement in the committee perhaps some discussion would be allowed to take place. As I recall the conversation to which the minister has referred, I pointed out that the items in the estimates on housing were rather specific in their reference and that, in view of that fact, I thought it might be desirable to have some understanding as to whether those wishing to make general reference to housing questions should do so under the first item or general administration item of the department if it was not going to be possible for a fairly broad interpretation to be given and for the discussion to take place on the particular items under housing. I suggested that if it was the general understanding that such discussion could take place on the particular items in the interests of orderly discussion we would be willing to co-operate on the first item of the minister's estimates on this point. I know that it was on that same understanding that my colleague the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam had with me that he deferred his remarks at that time, with the intention to bring them up when we came to the housing discussion.

Mr. Nicholson: May I make one further remark on the point raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. The minister explained that the experts from Central Mortgage and Housing would be present later on but that they would not be on the floor when the first item was under discussion. Our understanding certainly was that an appropriate time would arise later on when the officials from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation would be here in an advisory capacity and when it would be in order to raise problems which normally could and would be raised on the first item.

The Chairman: Perhaps I should clarify the position with regard to these estimates. It seems to me that considerations relating to departmental policy should be discussed on the first item of the departmental estimates. That procedure, I suppose, is not strictly in accordance with standing order 59, paragraph 2 which reads as follows:

> 59. (2) Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

By custom we have commenced to discuss departmental policy under the first item of the department which, after all, deals merely with departmental salaries. I must frankly admit that I erred a week or so ago when I allowed the minister to discuss under a supplementary item—I think it was administration of one of his branches—a number of subjects which to my mind might much more appropriately have been discussed under the particular items involved. I assure hon. members—and merely in fairness to other hon. members—that I will try my best not to make such a mistake in the future.

I feel that we must adhere more strictly to the rule of relevancy. I cannot from the chair recognize private conversations or any other arrangements which are entered into by ministers of the crown or by any other members of the house unless by unanimous consent of the committee of the whole. I think hon. members will realize that. I merely wish to say this. I am not going to do any injustice to any hon. member under this item. It is quite obvious that several hon. members have felt, as a result of conversations or commitments made to them elsewhere, that they would have an opportunity of speaking under this item. I therefore am not going to stop the hon. member. However, I feel that I should perhaps give notice at this time that I am here to attempt to enforce the rules which this house has adopted for the benefit of all hon. members. From now on, perhaps hon. members would wish me to enforce those rules strictly, especially when we have in these resolutions particular subjects to deal with.

Mr. Regier: Thank you very much for your consideration, Mr. Chairman. I was saying that for some time it has been of some concern to us that when we build homes for our senior citizens with the assistance of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, we do manage to obtain a grant from the provincial government towards the cost of these homes of roughly one-third. I am referring specifically now to such organizations as the Burnaby New Vista Society. A large share of the money had to be raised by voluntary effort and that, to some degree, may be desirable and wholesome.

However, I never was particularly proud of the role played by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, because their assistance consists only of a loan which has to be repaid. If the minister were able to persuade his colleagues in the government to aid the cost of housing for our senior citizens, at least to the extent of the provincial aid in this respect, we would be able to reduce the rental to these people on low incomes by a considerable degree. By the time these 40 and 50 year mortgages are repaid, in effect we have repaid twice the amount borrowed. If there is any way, therefore, in which the minister could clear himself with his colleagues and use the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation not for the purpose of granting mortgages on these homes but for the purpose of making grants towards the construction of these homes, I think it would be greatly appreciated throughout the country.

The other little thing I intended to say was on the subject of the insurance that now prevails on all N.H.A. loans. I should like to see this insurance feature extended to include insurance for the borrower as well as for the lender. I feel that, in the first place, we should have thought of insurance for the borrower. However, the government in its wisdom at the time decided that the welfare of the lender was more important and therefore the insurance feature was introduced. Everyone buying a house under N.H.A. is forced now to pay an insurance premium so that if he cannot meet his payments the lender receives full protection. I feel that the minister could, with very little administrative difficulty, extend the insurance feature to provide insurance for the borrower. I am sure that by now the minister must be well aware of the fact that when homes are financed by life insurance companies an insurance salesman shows up at the door shortly after the family occupies the home. He does his utmost to persuade the family to buy term life insurance or mortgage insurance as it is sometimes called, so that if the head of the family passes away the balance of the mortgage will be paid. There are other catastrophes besides the death of the breadwinner of the family, and I think at very little inconvenience to his department this insurance feature could be introduced and the government would not then be on record as being only interested in the welfare of the lender but would also have shown some concern for the welfare of the borrower.

There is one other minor detail I wish to mention, although in Burnaby it is now a major detail, and that is the apparent arbitrary ruling that now applies to some of the suburban areas that no N.H.A. loan shall be granted where septic tanks are planned. Our municipal council back home has attempted to get Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to modify this policy somewhat and they are asking that where the municipal engineering department can prove that plans actually are in existence for the sewer, the loan under N.H.A. be approved. However, the departmental officials have not yet seen their way clear to grant what I consider to be a very modest request. We almost get back to the old conundrum of which came first, the chicken or the egg. Unless the prospective house builder knows that he will be able to get an N.H.A. loan he is unwilling to buy the subdivision or the set of lots offered for sale, yet Central Mortgage and Housing say that until the sewer is in we are unwilling to approve these lots. The minister well knows that councils in suburban areas are not in a position to instal sewers through undeveloped areas. Things have, therefore, reached a sort of stalemate and a problem has arisen that will have to be resolved. While I should like to see sewers along every alley in these suburban municipalities, I think the minister will agree it is a financial and physical impossibility. I think a bit more leniency mght be extended and some agreement reached with these municipalities whereby if they express willingness to instal sewers, if and when the subdivision takes place, then the N.H.A. financing will be made possible.

I should like to close with a reiteration of the statement the minister made to me on January 19 when he said it is the government's intention to ensure that a high level of housebuilding continue. Today he said something to the effect that what future concerns will be no one seems to know at the moment. I hope the minister will not lock the stable door after the horse has run away. I hope he will keep the situation well in mind and also keep the situation six months or a year from now well in mind. I think he will agree that bank lending has been greatly reduced and that it is the intention of the banks to hold their percentage of investment in housing at approximately the level that now exists. Other sources of mortgage money, therefore, will have to be found. I should like to seriously urge upon him that he ask his colleagues to again consider having the governments supply a portion of N.H.A. funds.

Mr. Herridge: I rise to make a very few brief comments and I trust that, as usual, I am strictly in order. I believe my remarks are directly related to the item under discussion. I have some further remarks to make on housing, but we have some legislation before the house which will provide an opportunity for that.

I refer particularly to the veterans housing project at Sunningdale in Trail. I rise for two purposes, to make a brief plea on behalf of these veterans and to say that I take a somewhat unholy delight in proving the minister wrong when I have the opportunity. About a year ago these houses were put up for sale by the corporation. The veterans concerned, the city council of Trail, the legion and people generally in the district thought the price was too high. I made representations on their behalf and also suggested that, in view of this general dissatisfaction with the price established by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, there should be an impartial appraiser appointed to go into the situation.

The minister did not agree with that. In fact, in reply to my suggestion on the estimates, he wrote me on July 20 the following letter:

> We are unable to accede to the request that an impartial appraiser be appointed for the purpose of establishing a sale value on the houses in question. We believe that a fair price has been established for the houses in Trail and that it is below the market value of comparable houses in the municipality. We therefore do not think any purpose would be served by following the proposal to which you refer.

In addition, during the debate the minister gave some figures to indicate how well these houses that were being put up for sale were selling generally across Canada. I do not think his figures referred to the Sunningdale project, because that has not been the fact in Sunningdale. As a matter of fact, according to information I received just a few days ago, out of 175 houses put up for sale in the Sunningdale project to date, only seven have been sold. That is an indication of the attitude of the tenants and others generally toward the prices established for these houses.

What is the result? A great number of the veteran tenants, owing to the fact that they see little opportunity of purchasing houses at a reasonable figure, are vacating, going into other districts and building their own homes, which they claim they can do to better advantage. Those who are staying and the new tenants are definitely not taking the same care of the property; the maintenance is not being carried on as well, so the project as a whole is deteriorating at a much greater rate than it did prior to the government's announcement of the prices for the purchase of these houses.

It has been proven by experience that the minister's optimism in this respect was unjustified, with the sale of seven houses out of 175 in something under 12 months and the veterans concerned, or the majority of them, and those remaining there not maintaining the houses as well as formerly. In view of the attitude of the city council, of the Legion of the area and of the veterans' committee representing the veteran tenants, it does justify a reappraisal of the situation to see if the minister's officials have unwisely advised him. I urge that upon the minister, Mr. Chairman, and I would like to hear what he has to say in response to my suggestion on behalf of these very worthy veterans.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing new to add to what has already been said. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation hopes to recover only its costs from these houses. The hon. member indicates that they are not selling too well on the particular project he referred to. That, I might say, does not disturb us. There has been no sales effort put into this program. We have simply offered the houses for sale, if the veterans wish to acquire them, but there is no obligation and no compulsion.

The houses are 100 per cent occupied, and presumably there is no urge on the part of the occupants who are veterans to purchase them. That situation is perhaps the way all the veterans wish it, and we are certainly not going to push the sale of houses at them if they do not wish to purchase them; but if they wish to acquire the houses they may do so at prices which we think are fair and reasonable, particularly with regard to the fact that we aim at doing no more than recovering our costs out of the project.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if he has available the number of houses which have been sold in the project at Courtenay on Vancouver island.

Mr. Winters: Out of a project of 40 houses, six have been sold.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

166. Departmental administration including annual contribution of $200 to the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada, $513,658.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if the minister has any statement or general review of his department to make.

Mr. Garson: No, Mr. Chairman, I have not, but I would be very glad to answer questions if there are any.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, there are a few matters which I think should be referred to in a general way in considering the estimates of this department. Some of them could be related, of course, to specific items; but what I shall have to say at this stage at any rate will be by way of fairly generalized comments, so I think it is appropriate to make them at this stage on the administration item.

There are three matters I should like to discuss which arise out of recent cases, or in one instance out of recent discussions in the house of a general nature.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if it would meet with the convenience of hon. members if we were to take the estimates of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police first. The commissioner may be called out of the city shortly to confer with the provinces on some of these police agreements; and it would be of considerable convenience to the department if we could get the police estimates disposed of as the first item of our work this afternoon, if that will not discommode any of the hon. members in any way.

Mr. Knowles: I have no objection provided we can have one point understood; and I think you, Mr. Chairman, in view of your recent pronounciamento, will realize that we have to have this very clear. At least one of our members who is in committee this afternoon—in fact I am surprised that the minister is not there too—would want to have something to say regarding the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

I have no objection to our taking the Royal Canadian Mounted Police items now provided it does not preclude hon. members from speaking on mounted police matters when we get back on the first item of the minister's department.

Mr. Garson: I have no objection to that course at all. It is not our intention to preclude anyone from discussing it. We might leave one item under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for any further observation to be made.

Mr. Fulton: That would be satisfactory, then, if it is understood that by agreeing to this course we are not giving any undertaking that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police items will be concluded this afternoon; I do not know whether or not they will be. We are also in the position of having some of our hon. members absent from the chamber at the moment who would, I know, want to be here, but subject to those reservations it is quite agreeable to us to proceed with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police item.

The Chairman: In view of the remarks I made earlier, may I make it clear that it is impossible for us from the chair to recognize these understandings or other commitments which may be made either by ministers of the crown or by any other hon. members of this house. We are sitting as a committee, and we must recognize the interests of all members of the committee as the committee is constituted at the time.

We have now called the first item of the Department of Justice and, as the rules require, I intend to allow by custom the discussion which would ordinarily take place on the first item of the Department of Justice. If the committee by unanimous consent decides to take an item which particularly relates to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, then I am in the hands of the committee; otherwise we are dealing with this item in the ordinary way and we cannot recognize any commitments which are made at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, is there not a difference between commitments between individuals such as those that were made outside the house in relation to public works and understandings agreed to unanimously by the committee here on the floor of the house? Surely if there is unanimous agreement now as to what course we will follow that should be sufficient for the Chair.

The Chairman: I cannot agree with that principle. We have now a committee composed of certain personnel, but that personnel, as we all know, may vary in the course of 15 minutes. Last evening the leader of the house announced a certain order of business for today. We were to take the estimates of the Department of Public Works as the first order, and then the estimates of the Department of Justice. I take it that hon. members would have arranged their attendance accordingly and that certain hon. members might wish to discuss the first item of the Department of Justice. Unless the committee at this moment unanimously agrees to deal with a particular item, I feel I am bound to say that we will deal with the first item of the Department of Justice. I do not see how I can do otherwise. If the committee by unanimous consent directs me to call another item, of course the committee at this moment is master of its own destiny.

Mr. Nicholson: I wonder if we could discuss item 397 and leave 396, the administration item, for some future date? Would it be satisfactory if there were unanimous consent to go on with item 397 and discuss all the other items of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police except that dealing with administration? That item could be held open for those hon. members who are not here but who normally would have been here if it had been announced last night.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent that we should deal with item No. 397 at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

397. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $976,592.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, first of all may I say that while we are glad enough to extend the accommodation it must be appreciated that it takes us somewhat by surprise. I am not saying this to you, Mr. Chairman; I am saying it to the minister, as we might have rather more particular questions to ask later on when we are dealing with the administration item than would normally be the case. What is the position with regard to the headquarters of the R.C.M.P.? There was a building acquired under a lease arrangement from the Catholic diocese, and my understanding was that was to be the main barracks and headquarters for the district.

Mr. Garson: Yes, that is the case.

Mr. Fulton: This item would cover the construction or acquisition of buildings in the headquarters district?

Mr. Garson: The headquarters in Ottawa and the two training establishments.

Mr. Fulton: In the main, to what does this item relate?

Mr. Garson: The operation and maintenance of the headquarters here, of the training establishment here, and of the training establishment at western headquarters in Regina.

Mr. Macdonnell: May we have a general statement as to this item?

Mr. Garson: The particulars start at page 494, and my hon. friend will find there a breakdown of these items.

Mr. Simmons: Is it proposed to proceed with the construction of the new jail at Whitehorse this year?

Mr. Garson: That would come under the estimates covering the administration of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Item agreed to.

Land and air services—

398. Operation and maintenance of divisions, $24,677,749.

Mr. Pearkes: Could the minister state what additional pay is granted to those members of the force who are serving in northern divisions, and where the line is drawn with reference to that northern pay? I raise this question because there is a very acute problem facing not only the mounted police but a number of other civil servants who are working in the northern parts of Canada alongside personnel employed on construction work who are drawing fabulous rates of pay. As far as the members of the force are concerned, their cost of living, their families and their general morale are affected by a comparison of the rates of pay which civilians are obtaining with those obtained by members of the force.

There has been a large influx of people into the north, with a corresponding increase in the responsibilities placed upon members of the force in the north, and I was wondering whether consideration has been given to increasing the rates of pay of the divisions of the R.C.M.P. located in the northern parts of Canada.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, the problem to which my hon. friend has referred is an important and difficult one and is encountered by civil servants everywhere when comparison is made of their salaries and allowances with those of the more highly paid echelons of business and industry. I am sure my hon. friend is aware that a problem of this kind receives continuous study by the treasury board and the civil service commission; for those in the north who are affected very naturally and properly voice their sentiments in regard to this disparity to which my hon. friend refers.

The two governmental boards to which I have referred do the best they can to bridge the gap between the emoluments of civil servants, and members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on the one hand and employees of private concerns, on the other. To balance completely the amounts paid to civil servants with the allowances paid by private industry and contractors to employees working in the northern sections of Canada, I do not think could be justified to the taxpayer.

Mr. Pearkes: I realize there is a problem, and it was that problem I raised. But how are you trying to effect a balance? What are the northern rates of pay and where are they applicable? I understand that an additional allowance is granted to R.C.M.P. personnel serving in certain parts of northern Canada.

Mr. Garson: The special northern subsistence allowance is $1.50 a day. The special northern allowance is $3 per day in some cases and $2 per day in others. The special northern subsistence allowance provides for $1.50 per day for Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel serving in detachments which by their remoteness are designated as isolated. It is paid in lieu of meals or rations in kind.

The special northern allowance is as follows. The privy council recently approved of an amendment to Royal Canadian Mounted Police regulations granting the commissioner authority to pay a cash allowance in lieu of rations to members of the force stationed at points within the Northwest Territories, the Yukon, that part of the province of Quebec lying north of the 55th parallel of latitude, and Labrador, at which it is convenient to purchase food. The cash allowance approved is $3 per diem for married members not in receipt of rations in kind, and $2 per diem for single members not in receipt of rations in kind.

Prior to the approval of the northern allowances, members of the force in the areas defined above and not in receipt of rations, received the special northern subsistence allowance of $1.50 per diem.

Mr. Pearkes: What was the date of that order in council? Was it this year, or ten years ago?

Mr. Garson: It was some months ago, not years ago. I can get the exact date for my hon. friend, but I do not have it at the moment. It was some months ago.

Mr. Pearkes: That would really be before the tremendous development that has taken place in the north?

Mr. Garson: No, I would not say that.

Mr. Pearkes: If it was some months ago it might well have been before the development of the construction of the D.E.W. line, for instance, had taken place. However, let that be. I should like, if I may, to make this observation. I think the members of the force who are stationed in the north are certainly to be very highly commended for the standard of discipline and morale they have maintained in spite of the very wide difference in pay rates between the members of the force and the civilians working in that area. I feel that it is most commendable, and I suggest to the government that I hardly think the special allowances the minister has mentioned are adequate in view of present conditions.

Mr. Simmons: I do not know why they are not entitled to the same consideration as civil servants in the northern part of our country. Single civil servants receive $900 and married civil servants $1,500 per year. I was wondering whether any consideration has been given to that problem.

Mr. Garson: I can certainly say without any question at all that very great consideration has been given to these matters, because they are considered by the treasury board and the civil service commission from time to time. But it is difficult to draw comparisons under this heading without taking into account other circumstances of, say, civil servants in the north, in the matter of housing, for example, and practices in the departments concerned.

My information is that the allowances are not necessarily uniform as among other departments of the government, and there are reasons for that. In the case of Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel, for example, they receive housing for which they pay a rent not greater than that in the more settled parts of Canada, in spite of the fact that, as my hon. friend from the Yukon knows, it costs the federal government a very great deal more to provide that housing.

In that respect the government would not be getting an economic rent for the investment that would be represented by that house, though it would be high enough for the member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to pay in relation to his salary. The only way in which a balanced view can be obtained of any one of these items is to consider it in relation to them all, and that is rather a difficult comparison to make in the type of discussion we are carrying on this afternoon.

Mr. Nicholson: I notice that this item has increased by $1,205,000. I gather that, since the Minister of Finance announced the recent increases, it is necessary to make a further adjustment. I wonder whether in due course the minister could say how much the adjustment will be?

While I am on my feet I should like to say that the minister maintains very high standards for this service, and I think that is desirable; but I have a feeling the compensation provided for members of the R.C.M.P. is not adequate. I wonder whether the minister could give some comparison of prevailing rates paid in cities like Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver to their police forces, if he has that available.

I have known a number of men who have given a lifetime to the service. I am sure they did not enter the service with a view to making a fortune, but I think they should not be expected to remain in the position where they will have to worry the rest of their lives and try to qualify after retiring age for jobs that are not too easy to find. I wonder whether the minister could also make some comment upon the medieval custom, that has existed for too long a time, that men should be denied the rights of married life for extended periods.

Mr. Garson: Would my hon. friend permit me to reply to his first question. Then I would be very glad to deal with the question of marriage afterward.

On the floor of this house I do not like to make comparisons with, say, the Montreal police force or the Winnipeg police force or any of the other police forces in Canada. But I think the general statement can be made that the salaries of the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force compare very favourably with those of most of the police forces in Canada. It is very proper that they should, because in the selection of our personnel we maintain, upon the average, somewhat higher standards than those which prevail in many of these other police forces.

I have not the pay schedule of any of these other police forces here, but I have that of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force. The present annual salary of a third-class constable is $2,436. The revised annual salary that went into effect with the last increases as of April 1 this year is $2,640. For second-class constable the rates are $2,760 and $3,000. For first-class constable the salary in effect now is as follows:

First year	$3,240
Second year	3,420
Third year	3,600
Fourth year	3,780
Fifth year	4,020

Then we have corporal, from $4,320 to $4,500; sergeant, from $4,740 to $4,980; staff sergeant, from $5,220 to $5,460; corps sergeant-major, $5,640; sub-inspector, $6,660; inspector, ranging from $6,960 to $7,620; superintendent, from $7,920 to $8,580; assistant commissioner, $9,780, and deputy commissioner, $12,720. If my hon. friend has been taking these figures down I think he will find that they compare very favourably indeed with those of most police forces.

Mr. Nicholson: Can the minister tell me how many years men have to be with the service before they are permitted to marry? What are the latest regulations?

Mr. Garson: The general rule is five years. There are some limited exceptions at three years.

Mr. Nicholson: At this stage in the history of our country, Mr. Chairman, when married life is taken to be the normal way of life, and in view of the fact that the wife of the member of the R.C.M.P. invariably makes a useful contribution to the life of the community, I would think we should not argue that the economy of Canada cannot stand supporting an adequate R.C.M.P. force if the members of the force marry when they wish and whom they wish.

I recall that last year the minister said we accept about one out of 14 applicants. When we have such rigid tests I think it should be left to the good judgment of those who are selected to decide when they have found a suitable girl to marry, and that the economy of Canada should be able to stand the provision of married quarters and an income that is adequate to enable members of the R.C.M.P. to assume the responsibilities of married life without waiting for five years or even for three years in the very exceptional cases that the minister referred to.

What study has been made of the matter, and what hope is there for a revision of the regulations in order to offer those who are accepted into the service the same privileges that other citizens of the country expect and demand?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I think there are some in Canada who seem to be of the opinion that the rule of the force against marriage for the first five years is, as my hon. friend has indicated, a survival of medieval discipline that is imposed without relation to the normal needs and administration of the force. But I can assure my hon. friend that that is by no means the case.

In the normal course of events about one year is required to train a new recruit to be a member of the force. During the next two years and to a lesser extent the two years following, in order for him to gain the experience he will require to discharge his duties as a member of the force—because, as I am sure the hon. member with his knowledge of Saskatchewan is aware, members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are in small groups in places where they have quite a heavy responsibility—he will be moved an average of eight to ten times.

I do not need to tell the members of the committee that with the large number of isolated posts we have in the Arctic, and to an increasing extent since we have been building the D.E.W. line and so on, many of these places to which the younger men are posted are not places where they could take a wife and family with any degree of convenience at all. As a matter of fact it is quite a substantial problem just to see that the members of the forces are properly housed and fed. Therefore the purpose of the rule is to enable us to operate a force of the type of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the kind of country in which we do operate, and to train the men properly during the first five-year period so they can have that degree of responsibility which we expect of them. Everyone who enters the force knows perfectly well when he does so that these are the rules of the game, and he is not in the force for any length of time before he becomes aware of the very good and substantial reasons that there are for these rules.

It is only in the exceptional case that the all too human failing comes into play, a failing that I am sure we all share, and a member of the force happens to meet with some lady of such great charm that he cannot reconcile his undertaking to the force with the beauty of his fair one; and he gets married. He knows when he does that, he knows at every stage of the game, just what the consequences of his step will be.

It might be argued that we should not have this period of training. I do not know how we can expect to have trained people unless we train them; and unless we put them through that training. I do not know how we can expect to maintain the morale and the quality of the force so that the individual constable, wherever he may be, even if he is by himself, is a credit to the force. I certainly do not know how we could ever expect to provide facilities for women and babies in these northerly posts where, as I have said, it is an extremely difficult thing for us even to provide accommodation for the members of the force themselves.

This is by no means confined to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The same problem is encountered by the northern contractors to whom reference was made earlier. If we are going to operate in that kind of country it is pretty difficult to operate in the same way that you would among the apartment houses of Ottawa.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, there are some questions on this item relating to discipline and similar matters that I think would properly be in order, but I do not want to anticipate a discussion that might well arise in connection with the legislation concerning the police which is to come before us later this session. I wanted to ask some questions and make some comments on disciplinary matters, but I will not do that now if I am correct in understanding that the legislation to come before us later will be bound to occasion a discussion of the code of discipline of the police force. May I have the minister's assurance on that point?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I want to be fair with my hon. friend. I do not think it will come in the amendments of this session. It will come in the general revision of the act when we get to it. If my hon. friend wishes to discuss that subject matter, I think perhaps it would be better for him to raise it at the present time.

Mr. Fulton: Very well. I thank the minister for that explanation. Looking at the details on page 497 I notice that there has been an increase of virtually 320 in the strength of the force, land and air services, this year compared with last year. Preliminary to some comments and questions on discipline, I should like to ask the minister if he will tell us what the situation is with regard to recruitment and whether the situation with respect to the urgent requirement for personnel—there was a considerable shortage—is now approaching the break-even point or whether there is still some urgency with respect to further recruiting.

Mr. Garson: I think the general statement could be made that the present situation with regard to recruiting is not only very good but is also quite promising, and that we are working now toward providing the increased strength for which this item provides.

Mr. Fulton: I guess I do not quite understand the minister. I understand there will be a strength of 3,995 regular members of the force and 455 special constables and employed civilians. I do not take it that that is an establishment. I take it that those are the actual numbers for whom it is necessary to provide pay for the fiscal year now under review. Would the minister say whether I am correct there, or is this an establishment which we have still to recruit in order to fill?

Mr. Garson: This particular estimate, like all of these estimates here, is the amount we think we shall need to spend in order to carry out the program which we have planned for ourselves in the ensuing fiscal year. In that sense it is an establishment within the meaning that my hon. friend I think is giving to the word. But it does not necessarily follow that we have at this instant the number that is outlined in this estimate.

Mr. Fulton: There would always be variations from time to time within the year. If I can do so, I shall try to put it very shortly and simply. Are the 3,995 regular members of the force and 455 special constables and employed civilians the number which is deemed to be sufficient and adequate to meet the policing requirements of the force, or the duties of the force, during the fiscal year or do you still want more recruits to meet your present obligations?

Mr. Garson: The answer to that question is yes.

Mr. Fulton: What is estimated now to be the approximate shortage in personnel?

Mr. Garson: You mean as of the present date?

Mr. Fulton: All right; what is it as of the present date, or even when they have met what the minister says is what they anticipate they will require during the year? You just told me that is not enough, that it is not as many as you would like to have. By how much does it fall short of what you would like to have?

Mr. Garson: No. What I said is that we have not now as many as we would like to have, but that the present experience in recruiting is not only satisfactory but promising; and that we think we shall be able to recruit sufficient additional members to those we now have to meet the requirements for which we are seeking authority.

Mr. Fulton: In other words, the numbers which I have already read out, and which I shall not repeat, it is anticipated will be filled this year?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: Now what I am asking is this. Is that number going to be sufficient? Are you going to be able to say, "We have now got what we need"? Or does this number represent only what you think you will be able to get and would it in fact be desirable if we had more police personnel on strength?

Mr. Garson: I am sure my hon. friend realizes that neither the amount we have in fact nor the number we need is a static figure.

Mr. Fulton: Exactly.

Mr. Garson: I am sure he realizes that many of our needs we can foresee. Some of our needs we know we cannot foresee. Therefore as a practical matter we must review these figures from time to time; and some time this summer we will be reviewing these very figures that we are discussing. I do not know how I can make any more definite statement than I made when I said that we are in fairly good shape now; that the prospects are quite good; that we think we can recruit the additional numbers we require within what we can foresee at the present time; and that this summer we shall have to examine our position again in the usual manner in which we always do that.

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry we cannot get closer together than that, but I will leave the matter. At any rate, there is to be an increase during this year over last year of some 400 members of the force, regular and special.

That raises the problem of discipline. The minister has mentioned the training which recruits are required to undergo. I know it is dangerous and unfair to draw general conclusions from individual cases, and I shall not do so. But one cannot help being concerned about the type of case I have in mind, namely the case which occurred in Prince George during 1955, which was a great discredit certainly to the individual members of the force who took part in it and which I know was viewed with great seriousness by the senior officers of the force themselves. But even in the spirit of what I have said, namely that it is unfair to make too much of any one particular case, this was to such an extent the sort of thing we have always felt that the R.C.M.P. was above that by that very fact and, if you like, by the excellence of the record of the force over the years, it sticks out like a sore thumb.

I refer to the case of the two constables—fortunately it can be said that they were relatively junior—who beat a prisoner and extorted a confession from him, and who were found guilty of having done so. They were fined. They were reduced in rank. They were sentenced to imprisonment. One was sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour and recommended for dismissal, and the other was sentenced to four months' imprisonment with hard labour and recommended for dismissal.

Both appealed as to sentence only, with the result that their fines were remitted. I do not suppose there is any point in imposing a fine which there is no opportunity to collect. It becomes senseless and only involves administrative red tape and does not produce any result. But I am surprised that this punishment—which I must say I find to be not by any means excessive in the light of the seriousness of the offence—was in any sense reduced on appeal.

I should like an explanation of that matter, because I personally was surprised. I was surprised because I felt the feeling would probably have been to make an example of these men. I do not think a fine—though it is admittedly only part of the sentence and there are other and perhaps more serious parts—in one case of $100 and in another of $60 is in any way excessive even though, as I said before, it is only part of a sentence.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure none of the remarks which my hon. friend from Kamloops made with regard to the great embarrassment this incident caused the force, which has had a record from which this sort of thing is not ever expected, were in any way exaggerated. I am in complete agreement with him that this was a most regrettable episode in the history of the force.

As I understand my hon. friend's remarks with regard to the disposition of the cases of these two men, he does not disagree with the reduction in rank, with the imprisonment or with the dishonourable dismissal from the force, though he does think the remission of the fines was unwarranted. Well, that was ordered by the commissioner on the appeals which both these constables made to him. My information is that the reason for the remission of the fines was that they were a relatively insignificant part of the total penalty. When a man is reduced in rank, imprisoned and kicked out of the force, it does not seem to me to make a great deal of difference whether or not he is fined a small amount such as $60.

Now, it may be that my hon. friend does not agree with that judgment, but it was one which the commissioner had the authority to make and which he did make, I am sure, with the same conscientious attitude toward his responsibilities that he shows on all occasions.

Mr. Fulton: I do not believe we are going to quarrel over what would perhaps be properly regarded as an administrative detail in the exercise of the commissioner's discretion, except that I have just regretted, and we will leave it there, that the punishment was in any way lessened.

This occurs to me. While I am not sure that it would be in any sense a legal responsibility of the force, and in fact I am not quite clear how the matter would be handled, there does arise the question of making some measure of restitution to the individual who was wronged as a result of this offence. Is there anything that can be done along those lines, or was there any request made? If so, how was it made?

Mr. Garson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I understand that the man who was prejudiced by this conduct has made a claim for compensation which is under negotiation at the present time. When the negotiation is completed, I presume the matter will be taken care of by an ex gratia payment.

Mr. Fulton: It was in that respect that it struck me that, small in total amount though the fines may be, nevertheless as a gesture or something that might be meaningful the fines might have been allowed to stand. However, I will not press it any further.

May I ask this. Everyone must recognize that an organization such as this, confronted with the twin difficulties of a quite rapid expansion and the necessity to maintain a high standard, has a very real problem. In asking this question I am not trying to cavil or overlook the fact that when you take on a large number of new men you do have these difficulties, but I should like to know whether any statistics are available, and if so what is their general effect, concerning the number of cases in which disciplinary action has had to be taken. Do the statistics show any trend which should be regarded seriously, or do they indicate an increase in that type of offence as a result of or accompanying the rapid expansion of the force? How is the problem being dealt with?

Mr. Garson: I suppose what my hon. friend means is, is there any increase in the percentage of the total force represented by those who have committed offences of that type?

Mr. Fulton: I do not mean small offences, but offences which would be regarded within the force itself as serious.

Mr. Garson: The commissioner tells me that he has looked into this and that while he has no actual figures he has not been able to discern any noticeable or appreciable increase in offences of that character.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, on the point my hon. friend from Kamloops raised a moment ago about this fine and its remission, I quite agree with the minister that perhaps it was an insignificant part of the total penalty, and with the hon. member for Kamloops that there is no point in enlarging on it at this moment. However, I do think, as the minister said, it is something which is rather regrettable as far as the force is concerned. I think it is rather regrettable that there should have been any suggestion that it could be inferred that possibly this was condoned in some way. I know that was not the intention of the commissioner. I presume you are faced with constables who are in poor financial circumstances, and practically the same result was reached.

I know we are now approaching the hour of five o'clock, but when the item is up again —I presume it is not going to carry in the next few minutes—I should like the minister to be able to give us, for instance, the comparative figures on the strength of the force. We have the estimated strength for this year. What was the strength of the force say 10 years ago. I am somewhat concerned, because I have had something to do with this force in various ways, with the rapid increase and the fact that the junior men feel that perhaps they have to do things today to achieve a reputation and thereby obtain promotion which would be somewhat foreign to the officers and men of 10 or 20 years ago.

One does not want to be critical, but I just throw this out to the minister as a last word at this stage. I was talking to one of the superior court judges the other day, one whom I think the minister knows, and in speaking of the reputation of this force he said that if a senior officer came before him and gave evidence he would not have to be sworn; he would take his word. But if some of these junior fellows come before him and are sworn he still did not believe them because they were too anxious to get a conviction.

Now, with these men coming into the force and belonging to something that is part of the fabric of Canadian tradition, I wonder if it is emphasized that although they have a responsibility for the enforcement of law, they have also a responsibility for maintaining the tradition of this force. If you have 10,000 where once you had 2,000, your chance of promotion may be lessened. There may be a tendency to think that if you get a lot of convictions, get enough scalps hanging from your belt, you will get promotion quicker. I think that is the view of some of the juniors with whom I have spoken. They seemed to express that view.

Mr. Garson: In order that the question which my hon. friend has raised might have the reply right next to it in Hansard, might I say that on March 31, 1946, the 10 years ago to which my hon. friend referred, the force had in uniform 2,526 men; special constables, 460; civilians, 212; civil servants, 441, or a total of 3,639. On April 28, 1956, the force had in uniform 4,604; special constables, 347; civilians, 495; civil servants, 912, or a total of 6,358. As my hon. friend knows, the ambit of the responsibilities of the force during that 10-year period has been greatly widened. We have a number of new contracts with provinces; we have a special division, and we have a heavier problem of security. Unless these differences in responsibility are taken into account it would not be fair to base any kind of judgment upon the difference between the 3,639 figure in 1946 and the 6,358 figure for 1956.

Mr. Nowlan: I was not criticizing the increase in the force. I was just suggesting the difficulty in obtaining promotion because there was so much competition.

PUBLIC WORKS

VANCOUVER—TABLING OF REPORT ON DREDGING IN FIRST NARROWS

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I have leave to revert to motions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is it agreed that the minister has unanimous consent to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winters: According to the previous undertaking I would like to lay on the table of the house a report entitled "Analysis of Tides and Currents in Burrard Inlet" by W. D. Baines, division of mechanical engineering, national research council.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister also tabling the document having to do with the breakdown of the $1,500,000 discussed earlier today.

Mr. Winters: I shall do that later, Mr. Speaker. It is only in longhand form at the moment and I wish to have it prepared in better form.

PRIVATE BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): There is a large number of divorce bills on the order paper today for consideration in the committee of the whole. Under the new standing orders they can all be referred to the committee by one motion. Is that agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I have some questions to ask of the chairman of the committee on Bill No. 192; therefore I would ask you to exempt that one from the general motion.

The Deputy Chairman: Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, we have a batch of over 40 cases here. I do not propose to discuss them all but there are just a few comments I should like to make on a few of them. On Bill No. 221—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. If I just call clause 1 on these bills the hon. member will be in order.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Nicholson: In Bill No. 221 I find that both the petitioner and the respondent appeared in person. It would appear that the husband walked out after they had been living together for some two years and proceeded to live with another woman. He appeared before the committee, and it was recommended that their divorce be granted.

I realize that in situations like this it is hopeless to repair the damage that has occurred but I consider it unfortunate that we do not have some recourse other than to simply grant the divorce.

Bill No. 228 was heard under the chairmanship of Senator Gershaw. I must congratulate Senator Gershaw again for the very careful work he has done in this committee and in respect to all the cases, the evidence of which I have read. I have a great deal of sympathy for Their Honours the senators as they hear these unfortunate cases. The man involved in this particular case came to Canada in 1948, after the war. After being married for eight months he walked out and left his wife. In her evidence she spoke about the treatment she received at his hands. She was asked the following question:

> Could you tell us how he treated you in those eight months?

She replied:

> Yes. He started beating me very severely with his fists; and after I got pregnant the beating became more frequent—such things as being pushed down cellar stairs and knives thrown at me, and he threatened my life. I had to seek refuge at friends, and I became fearful for my life and the life of the child.

Apparently the husband is now contributing $30 a month toward the upkeep of their daughter who is now four years old. He started living with another woman and is raising a family with her. He appeared before the committee and admitted that everything his wife said was true. I am sure Their Honours the senators had no alternative but to recommend that the divorce be granted.

It would appear to me that where such an injustice is done to the wife and the little child somebody should take the responsibility for further action to see that justice is done for the unfortunate woman and child.

Bill No. 230 is a rather unusual case. The petitioner in this instance comes from British Columbia. She reported that she had been married some 24 years ago, in 1932. This woman was a particularly good witness. She was asked the following question:

> Will you tell the committee what you think broke up this marriage? You seemed to get along all right until the forties.

Her answer was:

> I think it was just bad luck, and the war separated us. Six years of separation is a long time. That is just about as near as I can make any comment on it.

The conclusion was, of course, that this was another war tragedy. The witness was given very sympathetic consideration by Their Honours the senators. Senator Smith asked:

> Why is it that you come to us with this petition? Why have you not gone through this proceeding in the ordinary course down in British Columbia?

The answer was:

> I cannot get a divorce out there, with my husband domiciled in Montreal.

This brings me to one point, Mr. Chairman. I think equality of the sexes should be established as far as granting divorce is concerned. These people were married in British Columbia; they spent none of their married life in the province of Quebec. As I recall the evidence they were both in Great Britain and Europe for part of their married life; but because the husband now happens to be living in the province of Quebec this unfortunate woman is placed in the position where she must come all the way from British Columbia to Ottawa to have her case presented and the divorce granted. It would seem to me that because this woman was domiciled in British Columbia with her husband for most of their married life, because she married, lived and made a living there, she should not now be obliged to come to Ottawa to place her grievance before us.

In Bill No. 233 we have a development which is occurring more frequently and which is going to eliminate the expense in connection with detectives to a large extent. In this case both the petitioner and the respondent appeared. In Bill No. 234 the respondent and the co-respondent came along. In Bill No. 240 the people concerned managed without any paid detectives.

In the case of Bill No. 243 I find that the evidence was supplied by two members of the Quebec provincial police. If members of the provincial police are available for the securing of information of that kind perhaps that is something people seeking divorces should consider. In the case of Bill No. 244 the respondent appeared. It would seem that if the respondent is ready to admit the charges which are made, that evidence is accepted. It takes a great deal less time than to hear evidence given by paid detectives.

CANADIAN PROVINCIAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean) moved the second reading of Bill No. 255, to incorporate the Canadian Provincial Insurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is to incorporate an insurance company, and application is being made by three respected citizens. The capital stock is to be $1,000,000 with $500,000 to be subscribed before they organize. It is intended to carry on a general insurance business, and the bill sets out the classifications of insurance that will be written. They are asking for the right to make application at some time or other to assume the obligations and liabilities within Canada of Monument Insurance Company Limited, having its head office at Stramongate, Kendal, England. Of course that would be done only after acceptance by the Canadian and British insurance companies.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member is closing the debate will he state whether this company is in any way a subsidiary of the Provincial—it is either insurance or assurance—company of England which operates in Canada? Will this company to be incorporated have any relation to that company?

Mr. Bourque: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): If the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Bourque: This will be a new company and there is no connection with any other company except as stated in the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): There are on the order paper divorce bills Nos. 257 to 289 inclusive. Is it agreed unanimously that second readings will be taken under the one motion?

Mr. Knowles: Would you except from the wholesale operation Bill No. 266, as I should like to say a few words on the second reading of that bill.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we received the evidence in connection with these bills only a day ago, or at the most two days ago, and I would appeal to the house to allow these bills to stand. The sponsor of the bills is not here, and I am sure no hon. member has had time to read any more than half this evidence.

Mr. Harris: That is quite all right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Perhaps I could put the question on Bill No. 257 and the hon. member could move the adjournment of the debate.

ISLAY ISOBEL CAMPBELL JONES

Mr. H. B. McCulloch (for Mr. Henderson) moved the second reading of Bill No. 257, for the relief of Islay Isobel Campbell Jones.

On motion of Mr. Regier the debate was adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is it unanimously agreed that the other divorce bills on the order paper shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORT ACT

AMENDMENT TO BRING BRITISH COLUMBIA PUBLIC CARRIERS BY WATER UNDER JURISDICTION OF TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni) moved the second reading of Bill No. 107, to amend the Transport Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the house that the subject matter of this bill is not new as far as discussion by myself is concerned. When the first item of the estimates of the Minister of Transport was under discussion last year I spoke at some length and outlined the problem that exists, in my view, in respect to coastal transportation by water in British Columbia. I pointed out that it appeared to me that this particular form of transportation was almost the only type of transportation in Canada without any proper form of regulation by a public authority.

I do not intend to repeat the remarks I made last year, or for that matter the year before, when the transport estimates were under discussion because they are to be found in Hansard of July 20, 1955, at page 6474 and the pages following. However, I should like simply to point out that on that occasion I did mention several examples of the situation in which people had been finding themselves on the coast of British Columbia because in respect to services that are maintained or not maintained, in respect to the rates that are charged or the changes that are made from time to time in those rates. I mentioned as one example how one of the transportation companies had without any prior notice to its patrons increased its rates by 33⅓ per cent. They had discovered it only through invoices which they received later from the firms from which they had purchased goods.

So I thought the time had come when this particular problem should be brought to the attention of the house in the form of a bill to amend the Transport Act to meet, in some measure at least, the situation that exists. The bill itself is a very simple one. It simply removes from the act a part which deletes from the general provisions that are in the act for the regulation of transportation by water, ports or places in the province of British Columbia.

The situation I described last year continues, and the problem affects not only areas I mentioned last year but areas I did not mention at that time. As a further example of the need for some proper action to bring coastal transportation under regulation, I wish to draw your attention in particular at this time to the situation on the west coast of Vancouver island. There a service is in operation by the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company, and has been in operation by that company for a long period of time. In years gone by the service was carried on by a very well known vessel, the S.S. Princess Maquinna, which had become quite a tradition on the coast of British Columbia. Over quite a number of years that service was in receipt of a subsidy from the federal government. But at the present time the service is carried on by quite a small vessel known as the Princess of Alberni, and no subsidy is being paid.

I might interpolate here that at the present time the only segment of the coastal transport system in British Columbia that does come under any form of government regulation, as far as I am aware, is one of the services operated by Union Steamships, which does receive a subvention from the federal government for the operation of that service and, therefore, is subject to some jurisdiction by the Canadian maritime commission.

In my considered opinion the service being operated at this time on the west coast of Vancouver island is a disgrace to the name of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In fact I would go so far as to suggest that if the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has any doubts as to the correctness of the statements I have made, he might very well try going out to the Pacific coast incognito and spending two or three months in one of the west coast logging camps. There I am sure he would come to realize, if he had to live in an isolated community depending entirely, as far as supplies were concerned, on the service which is being operated under the banner of his company, that something should be done about that situation.

I have a communication here that is in the form of a petition from one of these west coast communities to which I have referred. I am going to read a short excerpt from their remarks to illustrate my point. This was signed by practically everyone in this community. I shall not read the entire petition, but it says:

> At present we rely solely on the C.P.R. for delivery of groceries, mail and bulk supplies. To say the least, this service is not adequate, e.g. "on December 9 the C.P.R. failed to deliver 11 bags of mail and when asked for this mail the crew replied that it wasn't on board. Later at Zeballos, on this same trip, the Gold River mail was discovered and was then carried back to Vancouver and then to Gold River on December 19, thus making it impossible for residents to send out Christmas parcels on time.
> In addition, there are numerous instances of essential supplies not being delivered.

That is merely one example. I am sure that if only 10 per cent of the complaints that have come to my ears in respect to the kind of service presently being offered by the C.P.R. are well founded, the statement contained in this petition is more than borne out. I have heard of a situation arising when people were expecting a new chesterfield, and it happened for some reason or other to be dropped into the salt water and that was the end of it as far as the people were concerned. I have heard of shipments having been made and receipts having been given for them by the sender, but they were never received by the consignee. Apparently there is no recourse whatever in respect to this kind of situation.

Quite frankly I have not found the attitude taken by the officials of this company on the west coast to have been very co-operative. I have had the experience of approaching them and getting the impression that as far as I was concerned as the member representing the people of that constituency in this house, the kind of service that was given was just none of my business. I like to feel that I am prepared to listen to both sides of a question, but certainly my experience in this instance, when I was willing to hear the side of the company, was that I was simply given a rather quick brush-off.

Together with previous statements I have made, Mr. Speaker, that is an outline of some of the reasons why I feel that I should bring this question to the attention of the house at this time in the form of a bill calling for an amendment to the Transport Act to provide some form of court of appeal for the people who are dependent upon coastal transportation services for all their supplies and transportation.

During the course of looking into the matter I took it upon myself to try to find out something of the background of the present Transport Act, and I discovered that the original act was introduced in the Senate in the year 1937 and was discussed by a committee of that house at that time, but that no action was taken on it in this house that year. However, in the year 1938 a rather modified bill was introduced in this house by the then minister of transport, now Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). I find that some of the remarks he made on moving second reading of the bill are to me at least of considerable interest today. As found on page 1554 of Hansard for March 21, 1938, he had this to say in introducing the bill:

> Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to promote the stabilization of the transport industry in Canada, in the public interest as well as in the interests of all those engaged in transportation.

Later, as found on the same page, he said:

> It is a matter of public interest that transportation rates be reasonably stable, and applied without discrimination. Experience has shown that publicity is essential to prevent discrimination. Therefore the publicity of rates is a fundamental requirement in this bill.
>
> We also appreciate that our transportation rate structure may break down completely unless some relation is maintained between transportation charges and the abilities of various commodities to stand those charges. There is also the problem of conditions of employment in transportation industries. It will not be a question that it is the duty and interest of all employers to endeavour to maintain reasonable standards of conditions and rewards of employment. The absence of regulation and the resulting uneconomical competition must inevitably bear heavily on the workers, since labour costs comprise such a large proportion of operating expenses. The wide difference in working conditions, as between regulated transportation and unregulated transportation, must be apparent to all. Apart from the effect on labour, the interest of public safety is also involved.
> Objections to this bill have taken the form, not that regulation is undesirable, but rather that the means provided by the bill may work hardship in certain specific instances. Many have objected on the ground that the bill will have the effect of increasing rates. I see nothing in the bill which can reasonably lead to that conclusion. The fact is that Canadian railway rates, as established under regulation, are among the lowest in the world, and this has been accomplished notwithstanding the fact that Canada is a sparsely populated country. Regulation should have the effect of lowering rather than raising rates, by tending to eliminate wasteful and destructive competition among the various forms of transportation.

I think some of the statements made in 1938 by the then minister of transport hold equally good today and are applicable to the situation prevailing at the present time in the coastal areas of British Columbia. In looking at the debates of that time, Mr. Speaker, I was also interested to discover that the then member for Comox-Alberni, Mr. A. W. Neill, who represented that constituency in the house from 1921 to 1945, was also very much concerned with this problem. I may say I was also very much interested to discover that the conclusion Mr. Neill came to in 1938, after having had a good many years of experience in the house, was identical with the conclusion I have come to after having given some attention to the problem since I have been the member for that constituency.

Mr. Neill's remarks when speaking on second reading of the bill can be found at page 1560 of Hansard for March 21, 1938. He had been referring to some other sections of the bill, and then had this to say:

. . . but the part that I have more interest in is the next:

"5. The provisions of this part shall not apply in the case of ships engaged in the transport of goods or passengers

(a) between ports or places in British Columbia."

As far as we in British Columbia are concerned, that of course entirely annihilates the whole purpose of the bill.

In fact, Mr. Neill was so convinced of the correctness of that position that when the bill was being considered in committee he moved for the deletion of the particular section of the bill which my bill now proposes to delete from the act, that is, the exempting provision in respect of ports or places in British Columbia. Even at that time this was not a new matter as far as Mr. Neill was concerned, and although he was not a member of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines he took the trouble to appear as a witness before the committee when it was considering the bill. In his statement, as recorded on page 113 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines of 1938, Mr. Neill had this to say:

Bill B of the Senate of last year, on which the present bill is largely founded, when first introduced contained no such provision excluding the coastal waters, but it was amended to that effect, apparently, by the standing committee of the Senate . . .

A little later he had this to say:

I submit that it is highly desirable that such control should be exercised. The need for it is so apparent, in British Columbia at least, that in 1935 I introduced a bill to amend the Railway Act to that effect, which bill was defeated in the House of Commons. The debate will be found in Hansard of February 12, 1935, and later on in Hansard of February 22. There is a precedent of long standing for this provision because some 30 years ago the then section 7 of the Railway Act provided that the Railway Act should apply to traffic carried by sea or inland waters between any ports or places in Canada. There was, however, a provision attached to it that it only applied to boats owned or chartered by a railway company.

I was interested in looking back in the record to discover just what that bill which Mr. Neill introduced at that time—that is in 1935—was all about. I discovered that in the course of debate on his bill, in which Mr. Manion, the then minister of railways, participated, it was brought out that while even at that time there had been in the Railway Act for 30 years a section calling for some exercise of control by the board of railway commissioners over water transportation carried on by a railway company, that section had never been put into effect.

As I understand it, that section is still to be found in the Railway Act and is section 363 of the present act. In order to be sure on this point I had a question on the order paper earlier this year which was answered on February 23. I asked whether this section had ever been applied. The answer I received was no. It is therefore apparent that neither as to ships operated by railway companies nor as to ships operated by independent shipping companies is there any form of public control over their operations, as to whether or not they maintain schedules, whether or not they stop giving service to the communities, or as to the question of the rates they may charge from time to time.

The purpose of Mr. Neill's bill back in 1935 was to broaden the application of that section of the Railway Act to include ships which were operated by companies other than railway companies. It was in the course of that debate that it was brought out that the section had never come into operation.

I realize that this whole question of transportation is an extremely complicated matter. I am putting this proposition forward in this amending bill in the hope that the situation which I have attempted to describe may be corrected. In a matter as complicated as this I realize that there may be aspects of the matter which have not occurred to me. To me this is the kind of bill which should be considered in a committee of the house where those concerned, such as transport companies and others, would have the opportunity of making representations. I say this in order to make it perfectly clear that if this bill is successful in passing second reading, as far as I am concerned I should be happy to have it considered by a committee of the house.

Transport Act

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house feels indebted to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) for having raised this important subject. It is one of considerable complexity, and any change will affect the economy of all those people who live in the scattered communities of the west coast. When I say that we are indebted to the hon. member for having raised the problem, I do not want it to be construed that I am in favour of this bill. I refer only to the importance of the problem. The problem is so important that the royal commission on shipping was given special instructions to inquire into conditions on the west coast of British Columbia.

It is well to get a picture of the types of communities involved and the conditions under which many of them live. Of course we have the great metropolitan area of Vancouver on the mainland. Then there are other cities such as Victoria and Prince Rupert. But along that very indented coastline there are innumerable villages and logging and mining camps, the vast majority of which are dependent upon sea communication for the bringing in of the supplies they need. At least they have been dependent upon sea communications until very recent years. I submit that considerable changes have taken place since this matter was previously discussed in the house in Mr. Neill's time.

In order to give some idea of the kind of shipping and the variety of types of vessels which serve these communities, I should like to give some statistics. From such research as I have been able to carry out I find that there are 54 passenger and freight vessels of a gross tonnage of over 80 tons operating on regular schedules on this coast. That is only one form of shipping. In addition to that, there are some 29 special purpose covered barges of 23,250 deadweight tons and some 310 open scows of 163,200 deadweight tons. They range from 350 tons to 2,000 tons per vessel. There are also some 781 open barges, and 52 towboat companies whose fleet numbers 315 towboats ranging from 100 horsepower to 2,600 horsepower.

That information gives you some idea of the vast amount of shipping there is on the west coast. It also gives you an idea of the range of types of vessels, from tugboats and scows to big steamships, carrying a great quantity of cargo. During 1954—that is the last year for which I obtained any figures—1,209 deep sea vessels entered British Columbia ports. These vessels brought into British Columbia 1,697,168 tons of cargo and exported over 6 million tons. To give some idea of the passenger traffic that is going on, I would point out that during last year in the harbours of Sidney and Victoria combined, 89,398 cars were handled through customs and the number of passengers handled by the customs in Sidney and Victoria combined amounted to 265,915. I think those figures will give some idea of the volume of shipping and the amount of cargo that must be moved.

There is a considerable difference in the way the steamship companies estimate their charges and the way in which the tugboats estimate their charges and rates for carrying freight. The tugboats sometimes have a flat rate from point to point; sometimes a flat rate within a certain zone, but more usually they quote a daily rate and that depends very largely on the length of the tow and the weather conditions.

Now, the towboat industry has developed greatly during the last five years. The steamship companies are facing very serious competition from these towboat companies. Actually some of the runs which previously were profitable for the steamship companies through the gulf islands and up the west coast of Vancouver island are no longer profitable and the companies are faced with the choice of either reducing their services or operating at a loss.

From the steamship point of view, therefore, the officials of these companies feel that they must have freedom of action in making quotations if they are to maintain the traffic level which exists now. They must also be able to make competitive quotations at very short notice, and any attempt to regulate those quotations made by steamship companies in order to compete with towboat companies would present almost insurmountable difficulties.

Then, in addition to the freight and passenger traffic carried by water a new element has entered into the problem, and that is the large number of passengers and freight now carried by the air lines. A lot of freight is carried not only by T.C.A. but the other air line companies operating on the west coast. There is a continual stream of passengers being carried by the air lines. In considering the whole situation, it would be unfair to regulate the rates being charged for freight and passengers on vessels and not impose similar regulations to affect the movement of passengers and freight by air.

It seems to me that if this bill to amend the Transport Act carries, we have to go very much further than is indicated by the bill at the present time. Even if it applied to goods and passengers moving between ports and places on the west coast the smaller vessels would be excluded, and that would mean that many of the towboats, scows, barges, etc. would be able to operate without any limitation. It should, therefore, not only apply to vessels which are over 100 tons but must be made applicable to this great fleet of smaller craft. If it were made applicable to the smaller craft, then I think it would be impractical to enforce. It must also be applied to passengers and freight being carried by air.

In addition we must remember that Canadian lines and Canadian merchants are in very active competition with the steamship lines and tugboat services from United States ports such as Seattle and elsewhere along the Washington and Oregon coasts. We have vessels from the United States plying between United States ports through Canadian waters to Alaska, and in some cases stopping off at various points along the Canadian coast. I am inclined to think that the competition at present is sufficient to assure equality without introducing further regulations.

I have endeavoured to find out what some of the organizations in my own constituency felt about this matter. I communicated with a number of organizations, some interested and some not biased in any way. I shall not quote what the steamship and tugboat companies have to say, but I think it is interesting to hear the opinion of the chambers of commerce of a couple of small communities.

> We are most emphatically opposed to the amendment. We believe that to bring the public carriers by water under the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners would greatly hamper our commerce and progress.

That is a letter I received from the Sidney and North Saanich chamber of commerce, and is signed by the president. I have another expression of opinion from the Sooke-Jordan River chamber of commerce, and I am particularly mentioning the small places. This is what the secretary writes in answer to my inquiry as to how that chamber felt:

> They feel opposed to the proposed legislation outlined as they think it would be detrimental to free enterprise.

Under these circumstances I would suggest that the mover of this bill consider the advisability of allowing it to stand until the report is received from the royal commission on shipping.

May I call it six o'clock?

On motion of Mr. Pearkes the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: On Monday we shall take second reading of the amendment to the Judges Act; then the house in committee on the Department of Transport Act; then the Canadian Farm Loan Act; then the Industrial Development Bank Act. If they are carried they may be followed, and of this I am not certain, sir, by the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of National Defence.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—CONGRATULATIONS ON BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Speaker: Today is one of those happy days when it is quite cheerfully that I say, "Let the doors be opened." I am sure that we all want to feel that although it is against the rules to bring exhibits into the house we are responsible for the one which is now standing on the desk of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) whose birthday anniversary it is. On behalf of hon. members and for myself I wish to extend to him and to Mrs. Drew our best wishes for continued health and happiness and many happy returns of the day.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity earlier in the day of expressing my personal congratulations and good wishes to the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), but it is a great pleasure to have the privilege of repeating them publicly and assuring him that speaking, I am convinced, for every hon. member of the house we join enthusiastically in the good wishes expressed for us by Your Honour.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you very much and I wish to express my appreciation to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) for the good wishes extended to me on this occasion. I do feel that evidence of friendship extended in this way is a happy expression of the real and deep friendships which do exist in this house and which are in no way affected by the sometimes strenuous differences of opinion which are expressed in regard to public affairs. That neither diminishes our convictions in relation to the subjects we are discussing nor does it diminish the effectiveness of our contribution. On the contrary, I think it is a happy thing that all of us with different political opinions may meet here and respect those differences and yet build warm friendships which I hope will last for all of us through the rest of our lives.

APPROVAL OF REPORT RESPECTING COMPENSATION OF PERMANENT STAFF

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the report of the civil service commission, respecting the staff of the House of Commons, laid upon the table of the house Thursday, May 3, 1956, be now approved.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if this would be an appropriate time, before the minister sits down, to make an announcement regarding what may be done with respect to employees of the House of Commons other than those covered by the general civil service increases and those covered by the increases before us in this motion.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the hon. member that if he looks at Hansard of April 9 he will find that I announced then that the board of internal economy had decided that increases in line with those granted to civil service employees will be granted to our sessional and temporary employees.

Mr. Knowles: I appreciated that, as did the entire house. What I am wondering is whether any announcement could now be made as to the amount of those increases.

Mr. Harris: Not at the moment, but we shall make the announcement in due course when it has been arranged.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Since the question has been raised, and without in any way questioning the fairness or the appropriateness by which these have been made, is there any way in which this could be placed before a committee that would consider the various adjustments and the effect of those adjustments in regard to the staff?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, if I may have permission to speak for a second time, the procedure for setting the wage levels of the employees of the House of Commons is set out in the Civil Service Act and it comes before the house by way of recommendation from the civil service commission, to be adopted or otherwise as the house may deem desirable. If there is any question, after the new schedule is published, that is, of the additional employees who are not covered by this schedule, I am sure that we could arrange that suitable consideration be given to it, but until the schedule is made available I suggest we might suspend judgment on it and consider it at that time.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

APPROVAL OF REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the report of the civil service commission, respecting the staff of the library of parliament, laid upon the table of the house Thursday, May 3, 1956, be now approved.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Fifth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. McCulloch (Pictou).

PIPE LINES

FINANCING—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I beg leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis):

The adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the advisability of this house expressing its opinion on the method to be employed in the financing of the western portion of an across-Canada gas pipe line.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has just moved the adjournment of the house under standing order 26. The matter that he wishes to bring to the attention of the house is:

The method to be employed in the financing of the western portion of an across-Canada gas pipe line.

A matter to be dealt with on a motion of this kind has to be a definite matter. I wonder how definite it is to discuss the method of financing of the western portion of an across-Canada gas pipe line. Furthermore, as hon. members know, there is on the order paper a resolution which has already been taken up in committee of the whole and it certainly deals with the financing of a portion of a pipe line, called the trans-Canada pipe line, in the northern section of the province of Ontario. Of course, if there is to be further financing for another portion of the line another resolution will have to be introduced.

[Mr. Harris.]

At this moment I am asking myself if the purpose of this motion today is not to ask the house to give its opinion on a matter which is usually introduced in the house after notice. A question of financing is one that must be introduced by a resolution recommended by the governor general.

I have no doubt that before the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar decided to make this move today he looked at the authorities and felt assured that the move was in order. In the circumstances he would certainly be of great assistance to me if he would tell me whether it is his contention, after having looked at the authorities, that whatever I have said so far is, as far as he is concerned, of no value whatever.

Mr. Coldwell: I am very glad to do that. First of all, I will take your point that this matter is already on the order paper. I would draw your attention to the fact that it is not covered by the resolution on the order paper nor by any discussion we have had in the house up to the present time. As for the urgency of the situation, I think that even a casual reader of the press will realize that this matter has some urgency, and because of the apparent internal situation within the government itself it seems to me that the time has arrived when the members of the house should give some consideration to the matter. The urgency is, I may say, also due to the fact that the agreement regarding the trans-Canada pipe line as such has, as far as the province of Ontario is concerned, already lapsed. It is true that there has been an extension by the federal authority but there has been no extension by the government of the province of Ontario.

Since this matter has been under advisement for five years and apparently no conclusion has been reached and because of the state of public opinion regarding it in the country and as shown by the press, I think the time has arrived when, if the government cannot come to a conclusion, this house should take a hand in this very important and serious matter from the point of view of the people of Canada.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): On the point of order, it seems to me that we are doing by indirection what cannot be done by direction. The leader of the C.C.F. party is seeking to have an expression of opinion in favour of an expenditure of money for a particular purpose which can only be recommended by the government to the house.

Mr. Coldwell: That is not in the motion.

An hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Harris: Then I am not just sure what else could be in the motion except that. If my hon. friend makes the point that he does not propose to seek to have the house declare itself in favour of a public ownership system, then I am not aware of what the point of the motion is. In the resolution before the house we are proposing a certain limited form of financing for a part of the line. It has already been indicated by the group for which my hon. friend speaks that they intend to oppose that plan on the ground that they think it ought to be publicly financed throughout. If that is a defence and objection to the resolution on the order paper, then I do not think the rules permit a second debate by having a motion to adjourn the house to discuss that very point.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the urgency which in our opinion now faces the house and the country relates not to the matter covered by the government motion on the order paper, namely the line through northern Ontario, but rather to getting something done without further delay in western Canada. This motion merely suggests that the house should without further delay discuss the method to be employed in financing a line in western Canada, the purpose being so that the government might have the benefit of the discussion here in the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Hon. members laugh; but the very members who are laughing realize that the government needs the benefit of some advice. Your Honour realizes that the urgency that confronts us today is that unless some action is taken before long the western leg of the across-Canada pipe line cannot be built this year. Because of that urgency we feel that the house should have a chance today to express its opinion in debate on the matter. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) raises the question as to the authority of the house on a private member's motion in the matter of an expenditure of money. It is perfectly correct that a private member could not move a motion involving the expenditure of money. That is the reason we ask not for a decision on a motion but for a chance to discuss this matter so that hon. members may lay before parliament their views on the rumours as to what the government has in mind or their views as to what they feel should be done to get this project under way without further delay.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) said that this motion apparently intended to do by indirection that which could not be done by direction, if I understood him correctly. As a matter of fact, I think it is the other way around. This motion intends to give the government the benefit of the direction of the House of Commons in order to avoid the results of the indirection that has characterized the government for so long. Hence it is indeed a matter of urgent importance, for we find ourselves today in a position in which every hour, on the hour, the press of this country—and it has been singularly correct in its assumptions and conclusions—is informing parliament as to what has taken place with regard to this matter. I feel that this is a matter of urgent importance in order to clarify the atmosphere and to ascertain the degree to which there has indeed been withheld from parliament information that parliament had a right to receive.

Mr. Harris: Just in order to clear up the final point, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. It seems to me that when the present resolution on the order paper with respect to Trans-Canada is called for discussion, every avenue of discussion with respect to the building, the financing or the like is open to opposition members. It may be true—although I do not think in this house we accept these statements at face value—that it is the case that the western section will not be built this summer unless certain action is taken immediately. But in any event that is not a reason for urgency. The urgency is on the matter of debate and the urgency of debate is only in case there cannot be another occasion for a debate. On the Trans-Canada resolution all these things can be said.

Mr. Regier: You are embarrassed.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, following on the remarks of the Minister of Finance, I would refer you to the actual wording of the resolution on the order paper. You will find that it is a resolution apparently for the introduction of a measure to provide for the constitution of the corporation to be known as the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. Mr. Speaker, I would be greatly surprised if, when the matter is being debated, the Minister of Finance were not on his feet quickly if some hon. member attempts to debate something beyond the purview of that resolution.

Mr. Harris: It has already been done and I did not object.

Mr. Quelch: I think this motion is a very timely one because it is certainly a matter of urgent importance that work be started on the western end of this pipe line at the very earliest date possible.

Pipe Lines—Financing

Mr. Speaker: May I thank hon. members for the consideration that they have given to this matter. I come back to the point I raised earlier about the word "definite". I am reading the motion now, not because I accept it, but I am reading it to myself in order to analyse the terms—"...adjournment of the house be moved under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance." According to standing order 26 the word "definite" means that the matter must be one that is specific and well defined.

In this case we have as the definite matter a reference to a method of financing. Now, how many methods of financing are there, and upon which one is the house going to express an opinion? In debate, it is true, there will be many methods of financing mentioned but I think that the method of financing should have been defined in the motion. Then, the motion refers to an across-Canada pipe line; it presupposes there will be an across-Canada pipe line.

Then, there is the reference to a matter of urgent public importance and I stress the word "urgent". Hon. members have referred to the urgency of having a pipe line built across western Canada. Hon. members know that here the word "urgent" does not apply to the project itself but it applies to the debate. Is there urgency of debate? The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) said this matter has been under consideration for five years, and between now and the end of the session there will be other opportunities for debate.

I would ask hon. members to look at citation 176 of Beauchesne's third edition, page 77, which reads:

> The "definite matter of urgent public importance", for the discussion of which the adjournment of the house may be moved under standing order 31,—

That is now standing order 26.

> —must be so pressing that public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention.

I ask hon. members, is the method of financing a matter that is so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention today?

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member and I may feel that way, that whatever is on the order paper today appointed for discussion should be put aside in order to discuss this matter. The urgency of this motion applies to the debate, and I am inclined to think there will be opportunities shortly for the discussion of this matter. Of course, it is of public importance and it is urgent in the sense that all Canadians wish to keep things moving. We are a progressive, expanding country, and we all want to do things as soon as possible. But is there urgency of debate in connection with this motion? I am inclined to think there is not.

[Mr. Quelch.]

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question—

Mr. Speaker: I have heard comments from several hon. members, and when I rose I took it that all those who had something to offer had expressed their views. I believe hon. members will have to bear with me when I say that I think if they do not want to be too harsh on their Speaker they will have to consider whether or not, every time he makes a ruling, they have to argue every point he puts forward. I am making a ruling now and it is not debatable nor appealable. Let us stop having that traditional rule that Speaker's rulings are not debatable be an illusion.

The other point I wish to make is that the matter must be one of recent occurrence. This is a matter that has been dealt with everywhere, in the press and in this house for many, many months now. I come to the conclusion that in my humble view this is not a matter of urgent public importance in the sense which is traditionally the one known to be the sense in standing order 26 and therefore I do not accept the motion.

Mr. Coldwell: Did you say that your ruling would be appealed, Mr. Speaker? That is not my understanding. If it is your opinion it can be appealed—

Mr. Speaker: No. We settled that on Friday. I want to say that precisely because of the strength the hon. member gave me I feel fortified and I can assure him that as far as I am concerned any decision that I make under standing order 26 will not be appealable as long as I am Speaker. That is quite definite.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PASSAMAQUODDY PROJECT—ECONOMIC FEASIBILITY SURVEY

Motion No. 70—Mr. Brooks:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged during the past three years between any department or officials of the federal government and the international joint commission, the government of the United States of America, and any other government or organization or individuals, relating to a survey or surveys of the economic feasibility of the development of the Passamaquoddy tidal power project.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This correspondence will be produced subject, of course, to the usual rules of privilege regarding international communications.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the minister what he means by "international communications"? Does he mean that as long as the consent of the United States is given their correspondence can be produced but the correspondence of the international joint commission cannot be produced? Is that what the minister means?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the correspondence with the United States government is concerned, naturally the consent of that government will have to be obtained. In so far as international joint commission correspondence is concerned, it has been customary to regard correspondence of this international agency as privileged in this house.

Mr. Brooks: I would like to ask—

Mr. Speaker: This motion is not debatable. Does the hon. member wish me to call the yeas and nays?

Mr. Brooks: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: It will be a fraudulent question of privilege. However, I will allow the hon. member to make his point.

Mr. Brooks: My point is this. If the United States gives permission to produce their correspondence I do not see why correspondence of an international body composed of members from the United States and Canada cannot be produced. I do not see why United States permission cannot be obtained to produce correspondence of the international joint commission. It is very important.

Mr. Speaker: This will have to be explored on other occasions. When the hon. member wishes to have his motion debatable he will put it on the order paper without an asterisk. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the remarks made by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BURLINGTON CANAL BRIDGE

Motion No. 74—Mr. Reinke:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged, from January 1, 1950 to date, between the Minister of Public Works and the minister of highways of the province of Ontario, regarding the high level bridge over the Burlington ship canal.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): I have no objection to this motion carrying subject to the usual reservation about first communicating with the government of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Motion agreed to, subject to the reservation of the minister.

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE, N.B.

Motion No. 75—Mr. Stuart (Charlotte):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged during the past year between any department or official of the provincial government of New Brunswick and the Department of National Health and Welfare, relating to the proposed federal plan for national health insurance.

Mr. Robertson: We are prepared to accept this motion subject to the usual reservation of communicating with the government of the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker: Motion agreed to, subject to the reservation of the parliamentary assistant.

PENITENTIARY RIOT, SASKATCHEWAN

Motion No. 76—Mr. Diefenbaker:

For a copy of any report furnished to the Department of Justice in connection with the causes of the riot which took place in the Saskatchewan penitentiary at Prince Albert in July, 1955.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, following the riot in question charges were laid against 30 persons who were implicated. Of those, 18 have been convicted, 8 have been acquitted and 4 still remain to be tried. We would prefer not to publish this report at the present time for fear that it would prejudice the trial of these other cases. For that reason I would ask my hon. friend who has moved this motion if he would agree to our not complying with it for the time being. I have no hesitation in saying that I shall be glad to show it to him personally if he would like to see it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the fact that the publication of this report might be prejudicial to the trial of the cases still outstanding I accept the minister's suggestion and would ask that the motion be dropped subject to the right to reinstate it later on.

Motion dropped.

GRAND PRE PARK, NOVA SCOTIA

Motion No. 78—Mr. Nowlan:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged, during the past three years between the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, or any other minister or official of the government of Canada, and any person or persons, corporations or organizations whatsoever, respecting the acquisition and/or use and occupancy by the government of Canada, or any agency thereof, of the park at Grand Pré, in the province of Nova Scotia, heretofore operated by the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I have had some correspondence with the premier of Nova Scotia in connection with this matter. I would agree to the motion subject to the usual reservations in that regard.

Motion agreed to.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—REFERENCE TO COMMUNICATION FROM MR. MCMAHON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has informed himself regarding the message from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to Mr. Frank J. McMahon and, if so, will he inform the house what the details of that communication were?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, I cannot inform the house what the details of the communication were. I understand that there was a telephone communication in which the Minister of Trade and Commerce asked Mr. Frank McMahon if he would allow the removal of the notation "private and confidential" which had been placed on the communications he had addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In reply to that telephone communication there was a telegram which was tabled in the house.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I have now seen the correspondence and I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he replied to those letters in any way. They were not replied to in writing.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No.

Mr. Coldwell: No correspondence?

Mr. Knowles: Careful now.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I may have acknowledged them, I am not sure.

Mr. Coldwell: That is the point I have in mind. There is no acknowledgment included in the file and I know the minister's usual courtesy is to reply.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I shall see if I can release myself from the "private and confidential" seal; if there are any I will see that they are tabled. I asked the department to table the McMahon correspondence and as they did not table anything from me, if there is anything I will be glad to table it.

Mr. Coldwell: If there is an acknowledgment I think the minister would be wise from his own point of view to file that.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): In the telephone conversation referred to on May 3 did the minister make it clear whether he was calling in his capacity as a minister of the government or in his private capacity as "good old C. D."?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There is nothing very secret about my telephone conversation. I called him and I said, "This private and confidential correspondence with me seems to be no longer private and confidential." I asked him if he could explain that and he said that he had given out two other copies of the private and confidential letters. That was my first knowledge of that. I said, "I hope you realize the 'private and confidential' can no longer stand and that you have now put in an official offer to the government." He said, "Is that the case?" I said, "Yes." He said, "I am being driven nearly frantic here with telephone calls; what do I do?" I said, "That is up to you to decide; all I am asking you now is that the 'private and confidential' be withdrawn." He said it was and that ended the conversation.

Mr. Fulton: In which capacity was it carried on, by the minister as minister or by the minister personally?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Fulton: I think that is something we are entitled to know in view of what was said last Friday that this was not regarded as an offer to the government.

Mr. Drew: May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if at that time Mr. McMahon indicated to him that he had learned that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines were in a privileged position and was there any discussion about the fact that it might embarrass the operation if the McMahon offer was not withdrawn?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, Mr. Speaker, nothing whatever was said of that. I can assure my hon. friend of that. I simply referred to the question that I asked. I asked him if he would permit me to disregard the "private and confidential". I may say that I had previously explained to Mr. McMahon that it was hopeless to have letters of that kind marked "private and confidential". He wanted it kept that way until he could formulate a more definite proposal. That was his original reason for writing me a private and confidential letter.

Mr. Coldwell: When was that?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I do not know the date, but it was the date of the second interview I had with him. I had two interviews with him, both in the presence of my assistant deputy minister. It was at the second interview that he brought along the letter marked "private and confidential" which I tabled. It was the first letter. I said, just to have no doubt about it, "You want this private and confidential, will you please initial the 'private and confidential'?" which he did.

Mr. Coldwell: Did he think when he was discussing the matter with you in the presence of your assistant deputy minister that he was discussing it with you personally in a confidential manner or as a member of the government?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That letter was addressed "Dear C.D.".

Mr. Coldwell: It was addressed "Right Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Trade and Commerce." That is the thing that puzzled me. The minister says the assistant deputy minister was there, so it would not be a personal and confidential interview with Mr. McMahon as the letter indicated.

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): During the conversation with Mr. McMahon was there any indication to Mr. McMahon that he should disengage himself from his offer or did he indicate his disengagement from his offer? Was the telegram which arrived very shortly after the conversation a complete surprise to the minister?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, the contents were a surprise.

Mr. Hees: Was there no mention of his disengagement from his offer during the telephone conversation?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The conversation was very short, as I indicated. He did say he was very unhappy about his position.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether an agreement has been entered into between the government, represented by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines whereby at the end of nine months, unless Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has put its line through to Winnipeg, the government will take over? Was that decided on Saturday last and was such an agreement drafted?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): I would assume that my hon. friend, as a distinguished lawyer, is aware that in the absence of authority from this parliament no such contract as he relates would be possible.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is Blair Fraser of Maclean's magazine correct in his statement that if Trans-Canada Pipe Lines do not start building the pipe line soon the government will do it under public ownership? If so, how soon will this begin? May I have an answer from good old C.D.?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Why not get the answer from Blair Fraser? He must know the source of his information. Why not ask him?

Mr. Hees: I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Was there sufficient agreement in the meeting held by the cabinet Saturday morning to make possible the bringing forward of the debate on the pipe line early this week?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There was no meeting of cabinet Saturday morning. I did have a conversation Saturday morning with certain of my colleagues, as I frequently have even on Saturday and sometimes on Sunday, when we discuss matters about which each one of us has to make up his own mind; and that is what took place Saturday morning.

Mr. Hees: Could the Prime Minister indicate to the house if it will be possible to bring this debate forward early this week?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I hope it will be possible to bring this debate forward and to have all such information disclosed as will satisfy the natural curiosity that is promoted by what has been published in the newspapers and broadcast over the radio.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And found to be correct.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I shall be very happy to have this done just as soon as we can reach that point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Did he on Saturday communicate with any gas companies with a view to ascertaining whether or not these gas companies in the far middle west in the United States would be prepared to purchase amounts less than 400 million cubic feet of gas per day from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines at the same price as they are willing to pay to the McMahon interests?

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): On Saturday more than one member of the cabinet had a telephone call from a certain gentleman representing a gas company in the mid-west, and as yet I have not had the opportunity to report my conversation to my colleagues. I do not care to make any comment until I have had that opportunity.

Mr. Macdonnell: It was not private and confidential?

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Did the minister obtain from Mr. Frank McMahon an explanation as to why the minister was bound by a private and confidential commitment on the letters addressed to him by Mr. McMahon when, concurrently with the sending of those letters to the minister, copies of those confidential letters were submitted by Mr. McMahon to other parties, through whom the information reached the press and public?

An hon. Member: Who are the other parties?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is a very good question. I could have become quite indignant about that, but I was too disgusted to pursue the subject.

Mr. Drew: May I ask a question of the Prime Minister? At any time that the extension of the agreement with the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines was under consideration prior to April 30, was the Prime Minister aware of the fact that there was a firm offer by Mr. Frank McMahon in regard to the construction of the pipe line?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No. As I said the other day, I did not consider that there had been a firm offer from Mr. Frank McMahon at any time. It was not to my knowledge that there had been or that there has been any firm offer made by him at any time.

Mr. Drew: Does the Prime Minister not think it was a matter of importance that the government should know that there was an offer at the time it was dealing with the extension of a contract which was then terminating on April 30?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): If there had been any responsible Canadian who had wished to make an offer to the government at that time, it would have been of interest to the government to have that offer.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Why did the minister not answer any of the letters, of April 4, April 16 or April 24, from Mr. Frank McMahon?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The reason was that I understood they were preliminary to a formal proposal. As the formal proposal did not arrive, I saw no necessity to write to him. As a matter of fact, one of the letters, the first one, was presented by Mr. McMahon in person, and it did not seem that an acknowledgment of that letter was necessary. The other two were simply follow-ups, and it seemed to me that no acknowledgment was necessary.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance? Did the Minister of Finance receive a telegram from Mr. Jack St. John, Liberal M.L.A. for Winnipeg Centre, asking for a reply indicating what is happening with regard to the western leg of the pipe line? Can he say what reply he gave to Mr. St. John?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Yes, I received a telegram, I think, on Thursday. I regret to say that, because of having to sit in the house listening to questions, I have not been able to answer it yet.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the Prime Minister if he will inform the house, and indeed the country, how it is possible to make an offer to the government otherwise than through the responsible minister?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): By addressing an offer to a responsible minister and not marking it "private and confidential".

Mr. Fulton: Then does the Prime Minister take the position that any correspondence marked "private and confidential" cannot contain a firm offer?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): If it is expressed in the letter that though the letter itself is marked "private and confidential" the offer that it contains is intended to be made public, that procedure could be followed.

Mr. Fulton: Then the Prime Minister will admit that the mere marking of the letter "private and confidential" does not detract from the firmness of the offer?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The Prime Minister has no admissions to make to the hon. gentleman. I am trying to state to him my appreciation of the questions he has asked me, but I am not accused of anything and I am not pleading guilty or not guilty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Except lack of knowledge.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Furthermore, I do not think the terms used by the hon. gentleman are appropriate to the obtaining of information through the medium of questions and answers on the orders of the day.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the Prime Minister, when he has thought the matter over at his leisure—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fulton: —might himself decide what terms would be appropriate to give the information sought in answer to the question—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fulton: —how one makes an offer to the government except through a responsible minister and whether the marking of a letter "private and confidential" detracts from the firmness of the offer.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I think it does, Mr. Speaker, if the notation "private and confidential" is placed in such a manner as to cover the whole contents of the letter. That is all.

Mr. Speaker: I think all hon. members will agree that the through-put of questions on pipe lines has been pretty considerable. Does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wish to pursue the "private and confidential" matter?

Mr. Knowles: No, but I have one other question.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose because I am asking hon. members to change to other subjects they will think that I am pretty severe. I think they ought to consider the sort of free-for-all we have had up to this time.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a question—

Mr. Speaker: Not on that subject.

Mr. Knowles: Not on the "private and confidential" subject, no. This is quite out in the open. I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister receive a telegram from Mr. Jack St. John—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles: —of Winnipeg, similar to the one received by the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we have had enough of that.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The matter is bound to come before the house at a time when a motion will be under discussion and there will be a full debate. Hon. members will have full rights to speak, each in his turn, for 40 minutes. Then if an amendment is proposed they will be able to speak, each in his turn, for another 40 minutes. Then if that amendment is disposed of and another amendment is moved they may speak, each in his turn, for another 40 minutes. They will have plenty of opportunity to speak, so let us wait for that time. The hon. member for Lambton West.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, may I suggest that I am not seeking to pursue—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Knowles: —any aspect of the question that has been before the house to date. I am asking something that is entirely different, whether the Prime Minister received a telegram from a certain public individual, a Liberal M.L.A. in Winnipeg, and if the Prime Minister received that telegram what reply he made to it. I submit this is of public interest and that I have a right to expect a reply from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member, who has asked a similar question of the Minister of Finance, think that this special period set aside for oral questions without notice and answers thereto is for the purpose of ascertaining whether a certain telegram, of which he has knowledge, has been received and what reply has been made to the sender? He could telephone the Prime Minister's office and find out.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the knowledge to which Your Honour refers is knowledge obtained from the press. Precisely because the Minister of Finance did not reply to the telegram he received I think we should know whether the Prime Minister replied to the one addressed to him.

Mr. Speaker: This reminds me of a statement I made not very long ago on the matter of asking questions based on reports appearing in the press. Beauchesne says that if a member bases a question on a report that has appeared in the press he must make himself responsible for its accuracy. I said at that time that as there was no penalty for irresponsibility I did not think the rule meant very much and that the citation was meaningless. It so happens that I was told that it was not meaningless. I received private and confidential advice from a very high authority to the effect that when a member uses a press report he must make himself absolutely responsible for its accuracy and if it turns out that the report on which he bases himself in putting his question to the house is not accurate he is abusing the rules of the house. Now that I have had that advice, which is contrary to what I had thought was the correct interpretation of the citation, I should like hon. members to think that one over because it seems to me that the practice is wrong.

Any newspaperman who is not a member of the house may write anything in the newspapers that he feels like writing. If hon. members are to take for granted that because a certain statement has appeared in the press it is right and they do not make themselves responsible for whatever questions they base on such articles and ask such questions in the house, we are going to lose a tremendous amount of time. See citation 303, Beauchesne's third edition.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, my first question was asked without any reference to the press. That came in later. My original question was a very simple one to the Prime Minister, and I should like his answer.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Yes, I did receive a telegram from the gentleman the hon. member has referred to in which he said that he was making the telegram available to the press. As I did not remember that I knew the gentleman personally—

Mr. Knowles: He is just a Liberal M.L.A.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There are Liberal M.L.A.'s and many other Liberals throughout the country whom I admire but whom I do not know personally. I gathered from the tone of the telegram that he wished an answer that would also be delivered to the press and as I did not have an answer that I wished to be published at that time I was, in the face of that telegram, in the same position that I am in in the face of several of the questions that have been asked me in the house. I have not a reply yet.

Mr. Fulton: Do you admire the particular Liberal M.L.A. referred to?

Mr. Knowles: The confusion is still confounded.

TRADE

REPORTED INCREASE IN OVER-ALL TRADE DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question on a totally different subject. Would he care to comment to the house on the trade figures published over the week end by the dominion bureau of statistics showing that in Canada exports were $21,700,000 less in March than they were in March 1955, and imports were $89,700,000 greater than in March 1955, giving an over-all trade deficit six times greater than in March a year ago?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have made inquiries. The figures were certainly unexpected. I am told, that, as these are only preliminary figures, it is very likely due to delays in reporting of exports and imports at the end of the fiscal year. I do not know just what effect the timing had, but I am finding out, and if there is anything unusual I shall be glad to report it. I may say that it looks as though there was something wrong, because the fall in dollar balances was very small indeed and not at all consistent with the apparent difference in the trade figures.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR TODAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): May I say that on Friday night I announced certain business for today. I suggested that the Minister of National Defence might go on with his resolution. That has not been possible to arrange. After those items have been disposed of that I mentioned, we shall take the National Housing Act, the Canadian Citizenship Act and the resolution with respect to the Canadian National Railways.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs? I think he will allow me to congratulate him on having been chosen one of the "three wise men". Having done that, I should like to ask the minister whether he would give to the house a general report on the activities of the council; and, if unable to do that today, would he say whether or not the progress made towards the implementation of article 2 was disappointing in that no final or tentative conclusion was arrived at by the member nations.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I hope I may be excused from giving a considered report on the council meeting, which ended only yesterday morning at 1.30 o'clock in Paris. I would be glad to do that at the very first opportunity. I may say at once, however, that, in regard to the discussion of non-military co-operation in the NATO council, I think we were all encouraged rather than otherwise by the results of that discussion.

WATER RESOURCES

REFERENCE TO DIVERSION FROM ALBANY RIVER BASIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps he could take it as notice. Have any representations been made to him by anyone respecting the diversion of water from the Albany river drainage basin, which drains into Hudson bay, into the great lakes? If so, what answer has he made?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not know of any such representations. I will be glad to look into the matter.

AIR TRANSPORT

D.E.W. LINE—AIRWORTHINESS OF AIRCRAFT EMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? Has he received a copy of the rather serious report issued by the Canadian Association of Pilots regarding the manner in which supplies have been taken to the D.E.W. line and commenting on the loss of life incurred by airplanes that were not airworthy? Has the minister received such report and, if so, could he tell the house whether further inquiries will be made into the somewhat serious charges contained in that report?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I should like to say that I received the report only this morning, though it appears to have been already rather widely circulated in the press.

Mr. Coldwell: Will the minister comment on the report later when he has read it?

Mr. Marler: When I have had an opportunity of ascertaining the truth of the statements made in the report and of having them examined, I shall be glad to make a statement.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FEDERAL GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement by the University of Toronto that they are raising their student fees, would the minister recommend to his colleagues an increase in federal grants to universities?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): This is the usual question as to my intentions with respect to expenditures, which will only be made known when they occur.

FISHERIES

SEIZURE OF CANADIAN VESSELS ON LAKE ERIE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister say whether a Canadian fishing vessel on lake Erie was fired upon and hit three times by a United States patrol? Also can the minister say whether the Ontario fishermen's association lodged a protest with the federal government over what the manager has termed an unprovoked and unnecessary attack on a Canadian craft?

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member refers to Friday's Hansard he will find that I answered the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) with regard to that matter.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, is it still the minister's opinion that the shot that was fired went over the bow, as he suggested last Friday, and did not in fact hit any vessel?

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member from the prairies may I say that shots are not fired over the bow; they are fired across the bow. As I reminded the house on Friday, this is the accepted way of halting a ship in order to put it under arrest. Our own ships on both coasts do it with regard to our Canadian nationals and also with regard to American nationals who occasionally drift across our boundaries. Just as the police, in order to stop motor vehicles, sound their sirens, in the case of vessels a shot is fired across the bow.

Mr. Argue: May I ask the minister whether the T.V. report and picture of a Canadian ship alleged to have been hit three times is in fact incorrect?

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker, I recall that a week or two ago my colleague the Minister of National Defence spoke about a television broadcast on that United States aircraft which was forced down. That broadcast was arranged long after the occurrence. I suspect that the T.V. broadcast of this shot was also arranged long after the occurrence. It is quite obvious that no T.V. cameras were out at the time of the arrest.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE SALARIES FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN QUEBEC AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 252, to amend the Judges Act.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Before this motion is carried, Mr. Speaker, I just wish to refer to a statement which was made on Thursday last during the debates. At that time I took exception to the remarks made by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who inferred that probably the action of the provincial government in reducing the number of their judges was not motivated entirely out of consideration for the relative demands of justice nor for the necessity that justice be obtained with all possible speed. I made objection at that time. Since that time I have been in contact with the attorney general of the province. He issued a statement to the effect that the hon. member for Prince Albert was wrong on a number of points. First, it was not within two years that the legislation was passed but that it was passed in 1951—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right. It was in 1951.

Mr. Castleden: —and not in 1953 which would be two years ago. The second point on which he was wrong was in the inference that the Saskatchewan government, in reducing the number of judges of Queen's Bench was in some way taking action to prevent the appointment of a judge who was a member of this house. The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) was at that time the leader of the Liberal opposition in the province of Saskatchewan. I do not think he had any intention of trying to become a member of the bench or to be appointed to the bench. At that time he was doing his best to become premier of the province of Saskatchewan. He fought very hard and I think he probably put up a good fight. But we cannot take the charge that the government of Saskatchewan was moving in any way to hurt the administration of justice in that province. As a matter of fact, while the hon. member for Prince Albert states that he might be desiring to become a member of the bench or to be appointed thereto, I think it should be pointed out that at that time when the hon. member for Rosthern was sitting in the house in the province of Saskatchewan and when this legislation was brought down, he supported it as every member of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan at that time supported it. It should also be pointed out that the attorney general in the province of Saskatchewan and the government of that province were acting entirely in the best interests of the province. As the attorney general stated in his press release:

> We felt in the public interest and in fairness to the taxpayers, as each judge costs nearly $20,000 annually, that the number of judges should be kept in line with the judicial work to be done. Apparently Mr. Tucker agreed because as house leader of the Liberal opposition he voted for the legislation as did all Liberals in the house.

I think the hon. member for Prince Albert would perhaps like to get to his feet and state that it was not his intention to cast any reflections on the province of Saskatchewan and their motives in having the number of judges reduced in that province at that time.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On the title:

Mr. Fulton: Just before the title carries, Mr. Chairman, will you just give me one moment? May I ask the minister when this amendment will come into effect? Will it be effective immediately on passing?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Castleden: I have one question I should like to direct to the minister. I can hardly be charged with having ulterior motives in asking this question since I belong to neither the Liberal nor Conservative party. I wonder whether the minister is aware of any case in which a Liberal government ever appointed a Conservative lawyer to the bench or in which a Conservative government ever appointed a Liberal lawyer to the bench? If so, in how many cases?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That must be a witticism.

Mr. Garson: If the hon. member will refer to a rather lengthy speech which I made in this house about four years ago—I can give him personally the Hansard reference—he will see quite a long statement there by me in which I outlined all of the Conservative lawyers who had been appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada and to the courts of the various provinces. If it is not invidious, I may say that one of the points I then made was that Liberal governments had appointed more Conservatives than Conservative governments had appointed Liberals.

Mr. Castleden: How many more?

Mr. Garson: About three times as many.

Mr. Knowles: How did they pan out?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to enter into that controversy because that was one of the witticisms of the minister. I do not want to enter into any discussion of it. I want to ask him one question, though. Has he at any time in the last six years asked any provincial government to reduce the number of superior court judges in any province in this dominion?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, the answer is no. The reason for that is that under the British North America Act the province's power to administer justice, to create and to set up provincial courts in the provinces, and to name the number of the judges who are to be in those courts is one which this federal government, I think, has always respected and which it will always respect as long as I am Minister of Justice.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): When shall this bill be read a third time, now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. McCann (for Mr. Garson) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

TRANSPORT

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY TO MAKE REGULATIONS AND APPOINT CONTROLLERS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, May 2, consideration in committee of Bill No. 249, to amend the Department of Transport Act—Mr. Marler—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Duration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to pursue this matter any further as far as going into the detail is concerned. I do, however, want to ask the minister whether or not, on the basis of the experience of some years in the operation of the transport controller's office, it is the intention of his department to amplify, expand or extend the purview of any of the regulations that were passed in order to make this legislation effectual. I do so because of the circumstances brought to the minister's attention when this matter was up for debate, that there had not been that enforcement of the regulations which their amplitude would permit. I am wondering, in view of the experience that has taken place in connection with the allotments that have brought a measure of serious injustice to various marketing points in Saskatchewan and the other prairie provinces, whether there is any intention to alter, amend or otherwise change any of the provisions of the regulations?

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, there is no intention to make any change in the regulations at this time.

Mr. Nicholson: Since this matter was before us last week, the Minister of Trade and Commerce made an important announcement in connection with the policy on deliveries. It so happens that my constituency is in a favourable freight rate region with reference to the port of Churchill. In the past it has been the policy to hold a considerable volume of grain in the area of my constituency to have it accessible to Churchill when the ships arrive. It was possible, in the past, to make some adjustment after the new crop was begun so that the people in that area could send some wheat to Churchill. According to the new policy—

Mr. Marler: I should like to raise a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I know that during the resolution stage of this bill we had a very full discussion of a number of matters which were more or less related to the question of transport control. Then, on second reading of the bill we went through exactly the same process. It seemed to me that was quite in order because at that particular time the house was considering the principle which was at issue in this bill, should transport control be extended for two years.

The house has passed second reading unanimously, which I take it meant there was a unanimous decision that transport control should be continued for two years. It seems to me, therefore, that although the situation at Churchill may be interesting and although it may have been relevant at an earlier stage, in view of the decision of the house that control should be extended for two years my contention is that we are now considering how it should be extended for two years and whether the bill does or does not do that. The house has already decided that control should be continued for two years, so it is my contention that a discussion of the situation in Churchill is not relevant to the bill before the committee.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask whether it is possible to make a distinction between what was in order on second reading and what is in order in committee of the whole on the bill, in view of the fact the bill means the same thing at the two points, namely whether it is in order to continue the powers of the transport controller. Surely, if it were in order to discuss the powers of the controller on second reading of the bill, the same thing should be in order now.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the committee as a whole appreciates the point the minister was endeavouring to make that there is a difference—I think there is a difference—between the general discussion of principle which is always allowed on second reading and the very specific discussion we are supposed to have under standing order 59 (2) which says that speeches in committee of the whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

At the same time I have to realize that while the only change being made in this section is the change from the words 1956 to 1958, it does have the effect of extending the life of section 6A of the Department of Transport Act. I cannot really rule that a discussion of the activities of an official appointed under that section would be out of order. At the same time I think I would be justified, and perhaps I should endeavour to hold the discussion more practically to its effect on transport than to its secondary effect on the marketing and storage of wheat. I feel confident that members of the house, having thoroughly discussed the bill, are anxious that discussion now should be orderly and practical. I think perhaps from there we can go on without too much difficulty.

Mr. Nicholson: I am very glad, Mr. Chairman, that you did not rule me out of order. I submit the argument I am about to make is valid and it is related to a new situation which was not before us either in the resolution stage or the debate on second reading of the bill.

I was pointing out that 20 per cent of the points in Saskatchewan were on a one-bushel quota, and in Manitoba one quarter of 1 per cent were on a one-bushel quota; in Alberta, 3 per cent were on a one-bushel quota. The Minister of Trade and Commerce announced that the year 1956-57 is to be unlike any previous year when the transport controller was permitted to try his best to see that the allocation was fair all across the prairie provinces. It so happens my constituency is an area where we have a very low quota, partly because the grain is being held there to have it available for Churchill when shipping opens out of that northern port.

In previous years, as a result of having the period extended, it was possible in August and even September to have grain accepted in that area and handled on the previous year's quota. A real hardship is being experienced in that area where they have this very low quota now, and if something is not done between now and the end of the present crop year to give them a chance to get grain out that hardship will be even worse. I submit this regulation is also going to work an injustice at Churchill. It is going to make it very difficult to hold sufficient grain in that area to supply the ships with their cargoes, since the shipping season opens later in Hudson bay than it does in Vancouver and in the eastern ports. I submit that the minister must give directions to the transport controller to take into consideration the new factors which were announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce last week, which have been partly ignored in the past, and make it possible for the people in all sections of the prairie provinces to be able to look forward to getting their fair quota out some time before the end of the crop year.

Mr. Quelch: I also think that the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce the other day shows that it is necessary that an altogether new type of policy regarding the allocation of box cars be introduced. The minister said that there were 14 stations on the 1-bushel quota, 478 on a 2-bushel quota, 572 on a 3-bushel quota, 602 on a 4-bushel quota and 400 on a 5-bushel quota. It is very hard to understand how it is that some of those points were allowed to have a 4 and 5-bushel quota while other points had only a 1-bushel quota.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce told the house that it may not be possible to attain a uniform quota before the end of the crop year 1955-56. He said that all quotas in effect on July 31, 1956, would expire on that date. Therefore, I think the minister will agree it is very essential from now on that no more cars should be allocated to those points that have a 4 and 5-bushel quota until such time as the points with a quota of one or two bushels have been brought up to the 4 and 5-bushel level. The whole trouble arises from the fact that we have this peculiar situation. The wheat board has the responsibility for allocating orders but it has no authority. The transport controller has the authority to allocate cars but it has no responsibility to give the orders which will move the cars to those points. It seems to me we must have a man somewhere with not only the responsibility but also the authority to carry out that responsibility. So long as we have two different people, one with the responsibility and the other with the authority, we are bound to have just the same kind of confusion and chaos that we have at the present time. Therefore, I am hoping the minister will be able to instruct the transport controller that in future cars will have to be allocated in such a way that those points that are still on the 1 and 2-bushel quota shall receive cars until such time as they are brought up on a level with the points that have a 4 and 5-bushel quota.

Mr. Castleden: Has the minister discovered many instances where the transport controller has found that his directives to railway companies have not been fulfilled? The condition which has resulted in several points in the province with which I am particularly familiar is that on main line points, particularly on the C.N.R., there appears to be a sufficient number of box cars available, but on branch line points—and this is true in my own area—of the C.P.R. the farmers find it very difficult to get cars and when they do get the cars they find it difficult to get a proper allocation. If there appear to be cars required at certain points it has been reported to me that a certain elevator had shipping orders and another elevator belonging to a line company had no shipping orders. The line company got the cars without the shipping orders and the wheat pool elevator with shipping orders could not get cars. The cars were allocated on the basis of one to one. I do not think that condition should occur. I was wondering whether or not it was the result of the railways failing to carry out a directive of the transport controller? What action could the transport controller take if he found that his directives to a railway company were not being carried out? Suppose he asked them to direct cars to certain shipping points on a branch line because of the congestion of wheat there, because there was a backlog of shipping orders or shipments out from that point, what would happen?

Mr. Marler: All I can say is that so far as I am aware only one directive has been issued by the transport controller. Information was given, I think last year, in reply to a question asked in the house, but I know of only one which was issued, and I do not know whether that was issued under section 6A of the Department of Transport Act or whether it was issued under the regulations that existed previously. However, I do not think there is any doubt that the regulations provide adequate penalties for the failure to carry out directives. I am quite sure the hon. member will understand that legally one should make a distinction between an order which is given by the transport controller over the telephone, and which the railway promises to carry out and does carry out, and a formal order. I do not think anybody looks on that as qualifying as being a directive. When it is reduced to writing and put in a formal way to the railway, then it becomes a directive. As I say, only one of those has been issued. I am sure all hon. gentlemen will realize that the facility with which a telephone call can be converted into a formal directive makes a telephone call very effective.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Can the minister give us some assurance that he will instruct the present transport controller to take his responsibilities more seriously than he has in the past to see that box cars are moved into those points where wheat board orders are now available? It does seem to me that if this situation is allowed to continue the Canadian wheat board will be taking the blame for the failure to move the grain from the west when, as far as I can see it, it is not the body that is responsible for seeing that box cars are spotted after orders have been given. I do know this. There are certain powers in the west and throughout Canada generally who would like to see the Canadian wheat board discredited. I have the feeling that unless this government does something to clarify this matter and to say, for example, to the transport controller, "Now, you see that box cars are moved into those points that have shipping orders from the wheat board and at the time they are given", the wheat board will get the blame. If that is done the Canadian wheat board will not be subject to the rough time they are experiencing through no fault of their own.

Is the minister prepared to give this committee some assurance that he will instruct the present transport controller to exercise the power which this act gives him to a greater degree than he has in the past? As the minister pointed out, he did not have the responsibility to do it. The minister should tell us right now that he is going to instruct the transport controller to take it as his responsibility.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, I shall merely answer by saying that in order to carry out a proper and efficient job in moving wheat to export points we must have the closest degree of collaboration between the Canadian wheat board and the transport controller himself. I would be unwilling to give the assurance in the terms which the hon. member has just suggested. I think that so long as marketing is the responsibility of the Canadian wheat board wheat can be moved most efficiently when the transport controller cooperates closely with the Canadian wheat board and sees jointly with the board and with the railway companies that the cars are put in the right place at the right time. I do not think I can go farther than that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): I know of cases where the wheat board has given shipping orders to certain points. I have in mind one particular place where there were 42 orders for shipment. I took this matter up with the transport controller away back in February and he told me that was not part of his duty but that he would watch this particular subdivision. Over the weekend I received a statement of the various quotas established in my particular part of the province and I find that there are four points still on a two-bushel quota. Those four points lie along the branch line which the transport controller assured me he would look after.

It is not a case of the grain not being there, it is not a case of wheat board orders not being there, it is simply that the C.P.R. has failed to move in the box cars. It is situations like that that I would like to have straightened out. The minister should instruct the transport controller to keep a close watch on what is going on throughout western Canada.

Before closing, I should like to substantiate the remarks made by the hon. member for Acadia. The announcement that was made last Thursday makes the movement of wheat from western points of urgent importance. I hope that something will be done before July to see that all points in the west are able to market their fair quotas and certainly that we do not again get into a mess such as the one we saw last winter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, arising out of the minister's statement and now that this subject is being discussed at some length—I thought it was going to be restricted—may I ask the minister, having regard to the statement he made a litttle while ago that the achievement of the best possible allocation of cars in a just and perfect way would come about through close co-operation between the transport controller and the wheat board, if there has not been that co-operation and if that is the explanation for the diversity of distribution of cars and the fact that adjoining towns find themselves in a position where there is no degree of justice and where fair distribution has not been attained. I do not belong to those who believe in making attacks upon individuals who cannot defend themselves. I do not believe in taking advantage of my position in the House of Commons to refer to individuals outside the house who cannot answer in their own defence. I ask the minister whether there has been that co-operation which he advised us was of the essence of a good and proper distribution, or whether in his opinion much could be done to improve that spirit of co-operation to which he referred so warmly?

Mr. Marler: I do not think it could be implied from anything I said that there is not the fullest co-operation between the transport controller and the Canadian wheat board. In fact I feel perfectly convinced that if there had not been that kind of collaboration the transport controller and the railroads would not have been able to have done as successfully as they have in these last winter months the job of transport that has been accomplished. I was not referring particularly to relations in the past between Mr. Milner and the wheat board; I merely was endeavouring to reply to the hon. gentleman opposite by indicating that I did not believe that a literal adherence by the transport controller to the regulations would procure the best results. I believe the best results will be procured, as I said a moment ago, when there is a high degree of collaboration between the transport controller and the wheat board which could be translated into procuring from the railroads the necessary box cars to carry our wheat to points for export.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A reading between the lines of what the minister has said may offer an explanation for the incongruous position that has arisen in the distribution of box cars, beginning with the first of last August and continuing until January 18 or 20, at which time there was some improvement. I am not going to pursue this matter further except to say that the minister might give a little fatherly advice as to the needs of the western farmer with the laudable desire in mind of seeing that a similar iniquitous situation shall not again arise this coming fall when the farmers in certain areas might find themselves to all intents and purposes discriminated against or certainly denied their fair and equitable share of the distribution of box cars.

Mr. McIvor: I think if somebody would give fatherly advice to the opposition and tell them not to ask questions which have been asked before it would be most timely at the present time.

Mr. Knight: It is rather hard to find who is responsible as among these three bodies. Even in the railway committee we had the greatest difficulty in finding out who was responsible. In connection with directives, we were informed that there had been no directives issued to the railway companies by the controller. Then Mr. Gordon said that he would admit no responsibility. He said that they had nothing to do with this, that they just did what they were told. I have a picture of Mr. Gordon doing what he is told, but that is by the by.

Then when we inquired into the situation as between the railroads and the transport controller we were given a description of a sort of loose liaison such as that which the minister has described. Somebody would pick up a telephone and talk to somebody at the other end and they apparently would come to some sort of amicable agreement.

As the hon. member behind me has said, there should be some definite responsibility so that we would know where public criticism should be directed. When I say that, I do not mean virulent attacks such as those referred to by the hon. member for Prince Albert. There should be some final responsibility.

I have heard the situation described as a dodging of responsibility or, in the vernacular, a passing of the buck. There should be some definite way of fixing responsibility in connection with this undeniably dangerous and uneconomic situation which existed in certain places last winter and which still exists in many points on the prairies.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I was glad to hear the minister state that there was going to be a degree of collaboration between the transport controller and the Canadian wheat board, but I would have preferred to have had him use the word "co-operation". I have two specific questions which I should like to ask. Seeing that there is this collaboration between the wheat board and the transport controller, to whom would individuals, say members of wheat pool committees or interested farmers, address their grievances? For example, if there is a shortage of shipping orders at a marketing point, do they draw it to the attention of the Canadian wheat board? Further, if there are adequate shipping orders at a marketing point but insufficient box cars, is that then drawn to the attention of the transport controller?

I think we must define this collaboration, and I would ask the minister to answer those two questions and indicate to me that, if there is a shortage of shipping orders, then that is the responsibility of the Canadian wheat board, but, if there is a shortage of box cars, then that is the responsibility of the transport controller.

Last Wednesday I brought a case to the attention of the minister and pointed out that a marketing point was only on a three-bushel quota. I followed his advice and took it up with the Canadian wheat board, who informed me there were 26 outstanding shipping orders. I presume that that becomes the aspect of the collaboration that concerns the transport controller. I hope I am right in my assumption that individuals in the country will make their appeals to the transport controller or to the wheat board, depending on whether there is a shortage of box cars or a shortage of shipping orders.

Mr. Marler: I think the hon. member has answered his own questions.

Mr. Argue: Someone says that the hon. member for Kindersley might be able to get a better answer that way. It seems to be generally agreed that there has been some real difficulty in moving the grain in recent months, and it is being said that there was an improvement about last January. If we could look forward to continued improvement, if we could look forward to these anomalies of which we have been speaking being removed, if we could look forward to equitable quotas being forthcoming, then there would not be any need for us to take part in this discussion. But it seems to me that right at this moment there is very gross discrimination in the allocation of box cars and that the efforts of the wheat board and the efforts, perhaps to a considerable extent, of the transport controller himself are being thwarted and being set aside by the failure of the railway companies to co-operate and to supply the box cars and to allocate them in a fair and equitable manner.

I am afraid that the railway companies are doing a very grave disservice at this time in their handling of box-car allocation and distribution to the Canadian wheat board itself, because it is a fact that there is not a fair allocation of box cars, either among shipping points or among the producers at shipping points. We had only last Thursday the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to the distribution of wheat delivery quotas at this time. Those figures have been put on the record. Fourteen points were on a one-bushel quota; 478 points on a two-bushel quota; 572 points on a three-bushel quota; 602 points on a four-bushel quota; 400 points on a five-bushel quota. That is a very unfair distribution of quotas at this moment. I trust that steps will be taken to bring these quotas together within a few months. But what bothers me is the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce last Thursday, in which he took a very large part of the time used in delivering a rather comprehensive statement to the house on the grain situation to inform us that there would not be, at the end of July, any steps taken to equalize quotas among producers and that there would in fact be an unequal distribution of quotas at that time.

Mr. Marler: Does the hon. member not think he is an awfully long way from the question of transport?

Mr. Argue: No, I think I am right on the point, because it is impossible for a farmer to deliver a load of grain to an elevator unless there is space in the elevator, and it is impossible to get space unless the elevator gets box cars. It is just as simple as that.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Argue: Surely.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have read the bill since I have been listening to him, and I wonder how he relates his remarks to a section of the bill that merely extends the operation of this act for two more years. Some of us from other parts of the country who have listened to the same observations over and over again feel that perhaps there must be an end even to this road, and I am asking the hon. member in a kindly way.

Mr. Argue: Speaking about an end to something, there must have been an end a little while ago to the minister's presence in this house. I say that with great deference, because I know he is busy and cannot stay here all the time, but that point of order was in fact raised and a ruling was made.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was not raising a point of order.

Mr. Argue: I say that a point of order has already been raised. It has already been dealt with by the chairman, and his ruling was, as I understood it, that we could ask those questions and raise those things at this time that we were able to do on second reading. I come back to the point that I was making—

An hon. Member: You have made it several times.

Mr. Argue: —that because of the grossly unfair allocation of box cars at this moment we have among producers in Canada great discrimination in the allocation of quotas. I would be the first to say that this widespread difference has been brought about because of the distribution of box cars. It cannot be brought about by anything else. What bothers me is the statement made in this house last Thursday by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that, no matter what may be done between now and the end of July, there will be at that moment a discrimination, a difference in quotas affecting various marketing points, and no effort will be made at that time to extend the quotas so that that unfairness and that discrimination may be removed in time.

The Minister of Transport talks about co-operation between the wheat board and the transport controller, and that co-operation is certainly necessary, but I am suggesting to him that the railway companies must not have co-operated with the transport controller, because we are not getting distribution and allocation of box cars in a way that would equalize these quotas.

Words of commendation have been used in this house, referring to the work of the transport controller, and I have had some experience in that way myself. Very often, if a member brings to the attention of Mr. Milner the fact that at a given point or a given number of points the quota is very low and that at those points there is a great shortage of box cars, at times almost within hours box cars are spotted at those marketing points after Mr. Milner had taken it up with the railway. That shows me at any rate that action can be taken when Mr. Milner gets after the railway companies on a specific point or a specific number of points. I am suggesting now that the railway companies are not co-operating, that the railway companies are not providing a fair allocation of box cars. I ask the minister whether any new policies or any new consideration will be given to this very knotty problem between now and the end of the crop year so that we may have in fact a greater equalization of the grain delivery quotas than we now have.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Argue: No, I want to repeat to the minister the question I have asked him, namely, if any further consideration will be made between now and the end of July to an improved distribution of box cars or allocation of box cars so that there may be an improvement in the quotas and an equalization of the quotas so far as may be possible between now and the end of July.

Mr. Marler: All I shall say in reply to the hon. gentleman is that I think that not only has there been very close co-operation between the transport controller and the Canadian wheat board but there has also been the same kind of co-operation with both of these bodies by the Canadian railways. The hon. gentleman seemed to imply that recently there had not been that co-operation on the part of the Canadian railways. I should merely like to tell the committee that, according to my information, the railways are expected, during the period from April 16 to May 31, to load a total of 54,715 cars to the lakehead, the west coast and western domestic points. In other words, over the space of a period of approximately six weeks they are expected to load a total of some 54,715 cars.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In what period?

Mr. Marler: April 16 to May 31. That means that they will have to load an average total of 1,368 per day. On the 17th of April the total was 1,905 cars, on the 18th it was 1,810 cars and on the 19th it was 1,615 cars. I could go on and give the figures day by day since the 16th of April, but I shall merely summarize by saying that at no time have they fallen below 1,490 and they have actually reached a total of 2,340 in a single day's loading.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that those figures dispose effectively of the criticism that there is no co-operation on the part of the railway companies. I am not able to talk about individual points because I do not know about individual points. I have got to take an overall view of the situation just as I think hon. members of the house ought to take an overall view of the situation. I should also like to add that in contrast to last year the total number of cars moved up to the 3rd of May was only 6,103 less than the corresponding period of last year and that there was an actual increase of some 2,371 cars loaded by Canadian National Railways.

I think if hon. gentlemen would examine this subject a little bit more objectively than some of them have done they would reach the conclusion that the loading of box cars is related directly to shipment for export purposes. I think that if they would examine the export shipments in relation to loadings they would find that there was a parallel between the two which explains this condition about which hon. gentlemen opposite have been complaining. I think that is the answer. If you go back to the early part of the crop year you will find that exports at that time were substantially less than usual but that they are now proceeding at a rate that imposes great burdens on the transportation system which must also meet other demands.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the statement of the minister as to the total number of carloadings of grain that are moving to forward positions. Apart altogether from the minister's remarks, it has been apparent to me for a long time that there has to be a very real correlation between exports of grain and box car loadings and shipments of grain. These two cannot get out of line for any great length of time. You either run out of grain or you run out of space for grain so that there has to be a real correlation. But I come back to my previous statement—

An hon. Member: Again?

Mr. Argue: —that the railway companies in fact have not been making a reasonable or fair allocation of box cars amongst shipping points. It is common knowledge among people intimately connected with the grain business on the prairies that in actual fact the railway companies often almost overlook entirely one elevator marketing point or even two elevator marketing points and drop off their box cars at the larger points. It has become so bad at certain marketing points that producers have threatened, and in some cases have already carried it out, to transfer their permit books from a small marketing point to a larger marketing point because of the discrimination in the allocation of box cars as between marketing points.

I express the hope that the transport controller will use his clearly defined authority to so allocate box cars in conjunction with wheat board shipping orders, and as the wheat board lays down its shipping orders, as to provide farmers at every marketing point in western Canada with a reasonable opportunity to market their grain, and I suggest that has not been done yet.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

AMENDMENTS TO REORGANIZE CAPITAL STRUCTURE, INCREASE AMOUNT OF LOANS, ETC.

The house in committee on Bill No. 84, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act—Mr. Harris—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: May I mention to hon. members that this bill comes to us after consideration and report by the banking and commerce committee, which has reported it with an amendment.

On clause 1—Repeal.

Mr. Macdonnell: Does the parliamentary assistant intend to make any statement?

Mr. Benidickson: I was not going to make a statement again in connection with the bill. The general purposes of the legislation were outlined at the resolution stage, and I refer to Hansard of March 8, page 1948. As the chairman has stated, the bill has been before the banking and commerce committee and that committee has amended it in one respect. It has lengthened the maximum term of the loan from 25 years to 30 years. For the convenience of hon. members I merely point out that the report of the committee is referred to on page 449 of Votes and Proceedings of April 27.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, as the parliamentary assistant has said, this bill has been before the banking and commerce committee and there is not a great deal that one can or should say about it. I should like to make one or two general observations to remind us that in our glorious boom that gives us such immense satisfaction there are some people who are not sharing, notably the farming industry. I do not propose to weary the committee with a lot of figures. We have been over that ground a good deal. This bill is an attempt to deal in a rather inadequate way, I suggest, with the problem. I often wonder whether we take it seriously enough. My own feeling is that no prosperity that does not include the farmers can be durable or satisfactory although of course the day is past when nobody can be a success unless he has been born in the country and walked four miles every day to school. We have got to the stage now when such a large percentage of the population is non-agricultural that the farm dwellers no longer provide the percentage of leaders in the community that they used to. Nevertheless I should like to correct any feeling we may have that the farm industry is not important by saying that I myself think it is of great importance and also—and much more significantly—by quoting to you two or three things which have been said by well-known people about the farming industry. The great French writer Rousseau says "The first and most respectable of all the arts"—you will notice, Mr. Chairman, that he calls it an art—"is agriculture". The well-known American Daniel Webster says this:

> Let us never forget that the cultivation of the earth is the most important labour of man.

But the quotation I should like to impress upon hon. members is one which I am sure will interest them, because it refers to the calling of those of us who are at present seated in this chamber. It comes from the sharp tongue of Swift and is taken from "Gulliver's Travels":

> And he gave it for his opinion, that whoever could make two ears of corn, or two blades of grass, to grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind, and do more essential service to his country, than the whole race of politicians put together.

I have quoted that excerpt just so it may reduce us to a proper state of humility, Mr. Chairman, and also as a preface to dealing with the efforts of the politicians to help with regard to the farm problem. I think we can say—and I repeat it—that agriculture is lagging behind in prosperity. We have discussed in this chamber the problems with regard to wheat, cheese and butter, and I need not dwell upon them. So far as this board is concerned, my criticism is not that the work has not been well done. I think the board has done the work well. They have done it, at any rate, carefully and prudently. If a criticism could be made, perhaps it is that they have been too prudent.

My criticism is that I think the basic purpose of the board has rather been lost sight of. My feeling is that this board should regard itself as a public service board whereas, so far as I can make out, it seems to have regarded itself—and to have been allowed to do so—primarily as a profit-making institution. When I say "primarily" what I mean is that I think those running the board have had it much in their minds that they were obliged to show a substantial margin on the right side.

That perhaps is partly because of the circumstances of its organization. At that time they talked about profit and dividends whereas, when the housing act was before this house, I suggest that what was being considered was service to those who needed service with, of course, a proper regard for the safeguarding of public investment. There, much more than with regard to the operation of this farm loan board, I think was the feeling that the legislation was primarily a matter of public service.

Again I am not going to give a large number of figures. However, if we turn to the statement of the board we find that in the year 1955 the board had net earnings of $162,000 and that they paid income tax of $73,000. I think there is a certain irony in that fact. When we come to crown corporations that are in the business of making money and selling goods, that are in the business of competing in the open market with others such as, let us say, the Polymer Corporation, it seems to me that there, when you are in ordinary business—I was going to say "competitive business" but I suppose Polymer is largely a monopoly; but at any rate it is competing with other products if with nothing else—I suggest that considerations arise which do not and should not arise in the case of what I suggest should be an organization serving the public. I am not going to pursue that point.

Let me say again that I think the chairman of the farm loan board has been carrying on the operations of the board as he was intended to carry them on, namely to make a profit. He has done that, and I have no doubt he felt that he was entitled to feel that that was his job. Having said that I do not propose to dwell at length on the matter. There were certain main points of discussion which arose and which will no doubt be discussed further this afternoon.

The three points of change in the bill were mainly the valuation, which under the bill is increased to 65 per cent; that is to say, loans may be made up to 65 per cent of value. Amendments suggesting that the percentage should be higher than that were moved in the committee and were defeated. The second matter was the total amount of loans. There again there was a question in the committee and an amendment raising the amount was moved and defeated. In the third place there was the question of the duration of the loan. As to that matter, the government accepted an amendment raising it from 25 years to 30 years. I think perhaps it would be more sensible to discuss the other two points—that is to say the raising of the valuation figure and the ceiling on the loan—when we come to the relevant clauses. I shall therefore defer my comments until then.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, it is essential to the agricultural industry that we have a type of long-term mortgage credit at reasonable rates of interest. The whole question of financing the purchase and sale of farms is different from the financing generally of other businesses in the nation. It is different, first of all, because you have a rather fixed amount of land which may be bought and sold. It is different because over the years, in almost every single year the farmer on the land has received a lower income than have other Canadians generally. On the basis of net income agriculture has long been a depressed industry. If you do not provide some form of long-term credit to this underpaid industry you are going to see the growth of corporation farms, and you are going to see a great many farmers pushed off the land.

I want to agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood when he said that apparently the board had been conducting its policy over the years generally from a profit standpoint, and that its business was being carried out more from the standpoint of making at least some profit for the corporation than from a public service standpoint. Before the bill was taken to the committee we heard in the house the criticism that the board and its appraisers had generally been too cautious in making appraisals, and that the length of time taken to process an application was much too long. I do not know whether the parliamentary assistant will agree when I say that it seems to me that ample evidence was brought forward in the committee to substantiate those statements to the effect that the board was too cautious in its lending policy and that its appraisals took an undue length of time.

It is essential that farmers have access to long-term mortgage credit at reasonable rates of interest. It is essential not only from the standpoint of maintaining family farm units as distinct from corporation farms, but it is also necessary if we are to save prospective purchasers of land from paying exceedingly high rates of interest. I take it that by this act we want to provide money to prospective purchasers at 5 per cent interest rather than force them to seek loans at what are bound to be much higher rates of interest. We have had ample evidence before the committee, in discussing another measure, to show that even persons who operate businesses with a very high net worth sometimes must pay mortgage rates of interest of from 8 per cent to 15 per cent. Unless we provide mortgage money to prospective land purchasers at a reasonable rate of interest we are going to turn over the purchase of farms and the credit entailed therein to loan sharks and persons charging phenomenal rates of interest.

I suggest that the future attitude of the board should be one of seeking business, looking to do a job for agriculture, and not being so overly cautious as it has been in the past and not taking nearly so long in processing applications for loans. There have been a number of suggestions by members of this group as to how the present legislation should be improved.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I wonder if perhaps at this time I had not better give voice to something I have been thinking ever since the committee started discussing this bill. There are two points I think I should make clear to the committee, and perhaps they will not be accepted too happily in all quarters. One is that we are not discussing the principle of this bill. We discussed that at the resolution stage and we discussed it again in the debate on second reading. We are now discussing actually—I am not going to hold the committee too closely to this as I will explain in a minute—according to the rules of the house, whether or not we should drop from the Canadian Farm Loan Act the definition of "farm loan bond". This is clause 1 of the bill.

There has been growing up the general impression, and I think it is my duty to warn that I feel it is a false impression, that when we get into committee of the whole on any bill we can then discuss anything remotely related to the subject on clause 1. May I break one of the standing rules of the house and refer to another debate in the same session. I permitted that line of action on the bill we just finished because there was only one clause in that bill and that clause relegislated the whole principle. I considered, therefore, that under the last bill anything dealing with the transport controller was in order because we were relegislating the whole provisions dealing with the transport controller. In this bill we are not relegislating the provisions dealing with the Canadian farm loan board. We are not in a position now where we can discuss the shortcomings or methods of operation of the farm loan board, except in so far as they are referred to in some of the specific clauses.

If the matter of interest is included in one of the sections which we are going to discuss, then of course the matter of interest may be discussed at that time. If no change is made in the rate of interest, then I am afraid this committee is not in a position to discuss the matter of interest rates.

May I point out one other thing at the same time, because I think it is lost sight of sometimes. Even if we were discussing the principle of this bill No. 84, we would not be discussing the principle of the Canadian Farm Loan Act. We would be discussing the principle of the amendments which are now before the committee. A famous case, reductio ad absurdum, of course, is the Criminal Code. If a bill were introduced to amend the Criminal Code with respect to the pollution of rivers, the committee certainly could not discuss the principle of the Criminal Code in connection with perjury or murder. I have a very similar case before me in connection with the game laws, in which there was a bill to revise part of the game laws but the principle of the game laws as such could not be discussed on that particular bill.

I do believe, on the other side of the picture because most pictures have two sides, that as a matter of courtesy it has been the practice in committee of the whole to permit at least one spokesman from each of the different political groups to outline in general the attitude which that group is going to take to the bill before the committee. I think, therefore, it would not be out of the way or a breach of the rules if the hon. member for Greenwood, the hon. member for Assiniboia or whoever follows the hon. member for Assiniboia from the Social Credit group, were to say in a general outline that it is the intention of his group to follow such and such a line in connection with this bill. But I must advise the committee, while I hope not to be unfair by permitting one member to go farther afield than another, that at the moment we are not in a position where we can discuss all the ramifications and the activities, the shortcomings or the merits of the Canadian farm loan board. We must restrict ourselves to a discussion of these amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act which are included in Bill No. 84. I think the hon. member for Assiniboia, having listened patiently to what I have had to say, will be able to wind up the general part of his remarks in short order.

Mr. Argue: I think I have always endeavoured to follow any ruling that you might make, and I shall certainly endeavour to do so at this time. It is true that some of the remarks I have been making might have been made more properly on certain clauses of the bill because they had to do with certain clauses. Any other remarks of a general character I might make I shall endeavour to keep as brief as possible.

I have said we were in favour of the passage of this bill because there was a need for keeping interest rates as low as possible. I would even suggest that the rate of 5 per cent should be further reduced, as was suggested in the committee, to 3·5 per cent, by the government agreeing to pay the administration costs. However, Mr. Chairman, I will not pursue that particular suggestion.

At this time I want, if I may, to pay tribute to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture for the brief they presented to the committee, and more particularly to their economist, Dr. E. C. Hope, who appeared as a witness on their behalf. I have had the advantage, as compared to at least some other members of the committee, of being rather close to the farm problem for some years. I felt I at least had some knowledge of the general agriculture credit situation. I want to say that the brief presented to the committee by Dr. Hope, and the discussion that followed, improved my knowledge immensely. I believe the discussion was very helpful to all members of the committee.

I think the evidence taken by the banking and commerce committee in dealing with this bill, which makes changes in the Canadian Farm Loan Act, will stand as an important and valuable reference in the future to students dealing with the very complicated problem of agriculture credit.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, having noted what you have just said I shall be very brief in my comments at this time. At the outset

I would also like to pay tribute to Dr. Hope for the help he gave the committee in its consideration of this bill. He gave us a great deal of valuable information, and did not hesitate to give us the time we required of him. The evidence we received from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and from the briefs of other farm organizations showed quite clearly that the farm loan board perhaps have been overconservative in the appraisals they have made, and also perhaps have been taking a little too long in executing the loans. When we had the chairman of the farm loan board under examination we felt that, as a result of the answers he gave us, the charges that had been made by those organizations were well-founded.

I want to make it clear that we in this group are not at all keen in trying to get the farmers farther into debt; far from it. We would be quite happy if the farmers could continue without having to borrow from any farm loan board or from any other organization but unfortunately, owing to the government's present farm policy or perhaps I should say lack of farm policy, the majority of the farmers are being driven into debt whether they like it or not. However, they have to go into debt or quit farming. Since we have the position where, in order to continue, the farmers have to go into debt, then I think we have a duty to see to it that they have the best kind of credit available to them as far as the type of payment and cost are concerned.

Apparently the three main reasons why farmers today are pleading for loans under the farm loan board legislation is that first of all many of them are trying to expand their land holdings. Some may ask, "Is that wise?" Farmers have not very much choice. They are in a cost-price squeeze, and no matter how much they may try to reduce their costs there is a certain overhead that they cannot reduce. Therefore the only way they can reduce the impact of their overhead is to expand the size of their operation so that the cost per bushel or unit will be that much less.

We have had evidence in the past to show that the economic unit for a grain farm is around two sections of general land or one section of really good land. We have many farmers who are trying to operate on a half section or a three-quarter section basis. A farm of that size cannot support the cost of a full line of machinery. Therefore the farmer appeals to the farm loan board to get a mortgage in order to try to add to his land holdings and in that way reduce the impact of the overhead.

Then today we have many sons wishing to take over the farms of their fathers. The fathers need cash for their farms in order to retire, so the sons endeavour to get mortgages from the farm loan board to buy the farms from the fathers. Another rather unfortunate reason is that some of the farmers have obtained loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and are not able to meet their payments today. Because of that they try to get a loan from the farm loan board in order to amortize the amount of the payment to the farm loan people over a long period of time, because loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act are made for machinery and only for a 3-year period. That means that in many instances the size of the payment is far beyond their ability to pay today. Therefore we feel that the farm loan board can perform a useful service. It has performed a useful service for many farmers, but we feel those services are probably going to be required, unfortunately, to a far greater extent in the future than they have been required in the past. Since this bill will undoubtedly bring about a number of improvements we intend to support it.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5—Capital stock.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Perhaps the parliamentary assistant will explain the recapitalization. Do I understand that from now on it will consist entirely of what we might describe as common shares, and no longer will there be an investment by way of bonds?

Mr. Benidickson: The bond provisions are being eliminated, Mr. Chairman. As a result the capital structure is being considerably simplified. The capital will consist simply of common shares of a par value of $3 million. From then on the needs of the board will be met by borrowing from the government. Then the matter of the reserve funds themselves is simplified because, as my hon. friend will see, in subsequent sections they have a direct relationship proportionately to the amount of the capital.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Do I understand the situation to have been this previously? There was a fixed amount of interest which had to be paid to the government annually under the previous capital structure, and that has now been changed and the only amount that will be repaid, since this is a common stock set-up, will be the difference set up here as provided later on in connection with the reserve fund.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend will recall the evidence in the committee that the board had never paid interest on the small amount of original capital that was provided. The amount of that, I think, was roughly $2,200,000. It was indicated that the board had been able to accumulate reserves. In fact it was obligated under the statute to establish reserves in proportion to its profit, and the reserve funds were retained by the board. Now, the board had the use of that capital money and reserves for the purpose of relending without the necessity of borrowing. From now on there will simply be the $3 million share capital. What needs the board has for further finances will be met by applications to the government for direct loans, and they will pay the going government rate of interest at the time the requirement originates.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Then, Mr. Chairman, I understand in fact there has been no change created here and that the board previously did not pay interest on the bonds which were provided and now will be in much the same position under the continuing legislation?

Mr. Benidickson: No; the board always paid interest on its bonds and it paid on its notes. The 1952 legislation enabled the government to loan on notes. Except for the item of $2,200,000 the board has always paid the cost to the government of obtaining those funds for them.

Mr. Argue: Can the parliamentary assistant give some indication of the general cost of funds to the board at the present time?

Mr. Benidickson: The obligations of the board are set out in the annual report. I am referring to the last annual report for the year ended March 31, 1955. In the balance sheet on page 6 the liabilities of the board are indicated. The hon. member for Assiniboia will note that there are advances by the government which have rates of from 3¼ per cent to 3¾ per cent, depending upon the money cost at the time the application was made to the government for those funds. Then the old bond structure is referred to after that, and it will be noted that $20 million of the funds of the board were provided by bonds which had a flat rate of 3 per cent. Then there is reference to the initial capital, which is shown also on the liability side.

I did have a little summary of that when we were in committee, but I think my hon. friend can do the mathematics of dividing the various liabilities and establishing that the rates have been from 3 per cent to 3¾ per cent. From now on the board will be obligated to pay the government what the government's cost is of borrowing money for this purpose.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Argue: The balance sheet to which the parliamentary assistant has been referring indicates that the farm loan board have been operating on a relatively narrow margin. They have been paying their way and have made a small net earning in addition.

Mr. Benidickson: Moderate.

Mr. Argue: I asked a question of the chairman of the board in the banking and commerce committee, and at this time I should like to ask a similar question of the parliamentary assistant. The parliamentary assistant will realize that the farm loan board's cost of administration, wages, depreciation and the things that have been mentioned are on the way up, and it will be increasingly more difficult for the board to operate on even a modest margin if there should be any further increases in the cost of funds to the board. The parliamentary assistant knows that about a month ago there was an increase in the cost of funds to the board from 3⅛ per cent, I believe to 3⅜ per cent. I am wondering if the parliamentary assistant can assure us that no matter what changes there may be in the cost of funds to the board the current rate to be charged by the board on the business it does will be maintained, at least for the coming year.

Mr. Benidickson: I certainly would not make the firm commitment that there would not be a change in the rate of interest with respect to farm loans. My hon. friend will remember that the chairman of the board said that based on the normal amount of applications he had been receiving in past years and the thought that in the current year the applications would be similar, he felt that probably for a few months hence he could see no likelihood of a change in the interest rate. That is assuming that it is the intention of parliament that this board should continue to operate without a subsidy.

Some reference has been made to whether or not this is a service organization. It was indicated in committee that if the board had paid interest on certain funds that could be considered as funds of the government, as the shareholders of the board, in recent years it would scarcely have broken even. Its surplus is a most modest one of around $161,000. If it had paid interest on the capital a large portion of that surplus would have been eliminated, even in last year's operations.

Some suggestion was made in the committee that the board should actually go out and do more supervising in connection with loans, which would increase its expenses. We do know that at the present time the board's costs of operation are about 1·39 per cent of the funds it has out on loan. The present cost of money borrowed by the government is about 3·3 per cent, and if you add that to the 1·39 per cent you can see that there is not much of a margin. As my hon. friend says, certain costs are rising, particularly the cost of money, and I would not care to make a very long-forward commitment.

Mr. Argue: I had hoped the parliamentary assistant would have gone a little further in assuring the committee that there would not likely be an upward adjustment in the interest rate charged by the board. I speak from memory, but in answering the question put to him the chairman of the board was a little more positive than was the parliamentary assistant. If I remember correctly, his answer was to the effect that if there was no further change in the cost of money—and he expressed the opinion that he did not know of any change that might be forthcoming—they could hold the interest rate for the next six months.

It is true that suggestions were made in the committee that the supervising of certain loans might be done, but I think it is fair to add that this suggestion, which would add to the cost, was made in conjunction with the suggestion that the government should bear the administration costs of the board. Whether or not you would have got an affirmative answer if the witness had been asked whether he wanted this additional cost undertaken without any further acceptance of cost by the treasury, is something that is rather doubtful.

I want to express the hope that there will be no further increase in the interest rates charged by the board. In recent months and weeks we have seen many instances of the increased cost of money. There has been an increase in the Bank of Canada rate, and generally speaking there have been increased interest rates. I trust that the policy of the government in connection with increasing interest rates generally will not interfere with much of the effective work that can be done by the board, work that can be done only if the interest rate of the board is placed at a reasonable figure. In my submission anything over 5 per cent should be resisted, should not be tolerated.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for York West has pointed out, you have a situation here where income or net earnings of $162,000 are possible because the government investment is in the form of shares and not in the form of a money advance on which interest might be charged. Without dwelling on that point may I suggest to the parliamentary assistant that the regarding of this board as a profit-making institution is in my view unsound. It should not be considered in the same light as, let us say, Polymer and other corporations of the crown which are actually in business. There would also seem to be a certain anomaly in paying income tax on income in this case, which arises largely because much of the government advance is in stock and gets no return. To me it is something almost like Alice in Wonderland financing. I am going to ask the parliamentary assistant to consider that at the present time.

Dealing with what the hon. member for Assiniboia said about the interest rate, I think if we weighed the caution of the chairman of the farm loan board when before the committee with the caution of the parliamentary assistant it would be a dead heat.

Mr. Quelch: I should like to echo the hope of the hon. member for Assiniboia that the interest rate will not be raised. It is interesting to note that a short time ago the interest rate on money provided to the board did not rise beyond 3¾ per cent. Even then they were able to maintain a 5 per cent rate by, if I remember rightly, making a small service charge or a charge of some kind. According to this, it was 3¾ per cent. There was some charge.

Mr. Benidickson: The only charge is the $10 appraisal fee. I think we have evidence that if the volume of lending went up the cost of administration would go up considerably due to the costs of appraisal. The average cost of appraisal was about $30, and the applicant paid only $10, but that is the closest reference I can recall.

Mr. Quelch: I do not have the record, but I remember the chairman saying that they have been able to maintain the 5 per cent rate by some means. I understood it was some kind of service charge. But the point is that though their cost went to 3¾ per cent they maintained the 5 per cent rate. So far there is no reason to believe that the cost of money will be over 3¾ per cent, so I am hoping that the 5 per cent rate will be maintained.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—R.S. c. 309, s. 6.

Mr. White (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant a few brief questions on this clause. First, does he know whether it is the intention of the board to attempt to simplify the application? Second, can he give the committee any idea as to the approximate period from the time the application is made until the property is appraised; after the appraisal what is the average time before the application comes before the board; and, after the board has approved the loan, what is the approximate time before the loan is completed and the money is actually paid?

Mr. Benidickson: I do not think I can answer my hon. friend in detail. I would point out to him the difficulty with averages. The chairman of the board, in concluding his evidence, did say that he felt he too had profited very much by the opportunity of hearing the views of members of parliament throughout the sittings. I have no doubt that, as he has been doing in the past, he will continue to make every effort to reduce the time lag, but I think all members of the committee were aware that the routine procedures connected with the making of a loan are not entirely in the hands of the board.

First of all, loans can be made only within a certain portion of the year; I think it was roughly seven months. In the opinion of the board, except perhaps in one province it is not possible to appraise farms when snow is on the ground. Then the chairman of the board said that even though frequently they were able to process their side very expeditiously, they had encountered difficulties that were not of their making, such as delays, on the part sometimes of the applicant, in providing the necessary information as to his liabilities. Sometimes checking those items with the bank or other creditors involved delays. It was indicated that sometimes a search of title by the solicitor in the area in which the farm is registered is responsible for a fair amount of delay. The difficulty of getting assignments of insurance policies, and so on, all takes time. We, of course, have no evidence that these procedures were any slower than in the normal lending business on farm property.

Mr. White (Hastings-Frontenac): Could the parliamentary assistant say how many evaluators there would be in what is called eastern Ontario, that is east of Toronto, and about how many applications could be handled after May 1 to the closing period for inspection?

Mr. Benidickson: That evidence was given. I think it was broken down by provinces. No, the detail in the appendix refers only to one province, the province of Saskatchewan. I could obtain that information for my hon. friend and send it on.

Mr. White (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to ask one other question of the parliamentary assistant. Would he like to give us his opinion, as a member of the bar, as to whether these matters could be speeded up in every detail? The time of the inspection and the whole of the processing is not a matter of a lawyer's time. They always try to put the blame on the lawyer, but the parliamentary assistant knows there is nothing to that. The delay is in the making of the evaluation and all the endless government red tape after the application is made. Can the parliamentary assistant not get out of his dual role as parliamentary assistant and speak as a lawyer and say that there is no reason why this whole procedure could not be speeded up?

Mr. Benidickson: I would certainly not say that one party to the transaction is chiefly to blame for any delay, particularly my own profession, but several factors have contributed to delays in particular applications. I certainly think that as a result of the discussions before the members of the banking and commerce committee there will be another look to see whether procedures cannot be shortened and streamlined.

Mr. White (Hastings-Frontenac): The parliamentary assistant knows that the trust companies that loan money in fact in practically the same way would never tolerate a system like this that takes months and months, and they are just as cautious as the farm loan board. If they can process a loan in a matter of two weeks, there is no reason why the Canadian farm loan board cannot do the same thing.

Mr. Macdonnell: I should like to make a comment on that. I think the parliamentary assistant will agree that this matter was discussed at length and very earnestly in the committee. My recollection was that we were given 50 days as the average, which of course means that many were much longer. I think the chairman of the board was impressed. Certainly every effort was made to make him feel that, particularly with the five months' dead period due to snow, there should be a great shortening of that loan period. I think he had in mind the possibility of perhaps some more staff. I believe the question of staff was important. I shall be very disappointed if there is not a substantial shortening.

Whether we can ask the parliamentary assistant if there is some way to keep track of that, whether it would be reasonable for us to be allowed to pursue that and get a report made by the board from time to time, I am not clear, but I feel it is a very important matter. The committee certainly felt that, and I have considerable confidence that the chairman of the board, who I am sure wants to do a good job, will realize that delay is one of the complaints that registered most deeply.

Mr. Benidickson: I agree with my hon. friend, and I can tell all hon. members, having served on that committee and become better acquainted with the work of this board, that if any hon. member has an individual case where he feels there has been undue delay I would be very happy to extend my co-operation by acting as liaison between the board and the member to examine that particular file; because there is, as I say, a great danger in speaking about averages. You have to look at the individual case and see what caused any special delay in that particular instance.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I just want to follow up what the parliamentary assistant said on that. The parliamentary assistant said that if a member had an individual case he would take it up, but what about the farmers who do not go to their members? They are absolutely stuck.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I had intended to make a few general remarks on the first clause but you ruled against that. It has always been considered to be the practice in committee that general remarks could be made on the first clause and I still wonder whether that matter should not be cleared up once and for all so we may know whether it is a matter of right or simply a privilege.

Mr. Lennard: When would you do it if you did not do it on the first clause?

Mr. Charlton: Clause 6, however, is quite broad; therefore I feel that any remarks I might have made on the first clause can be made here. I want to express my personal appreciation to all those who presented briefs before the banking and commerce committee. These briefs were most helpful, especially the brief presented by Mr. Brodrick of the federation of agriculture. Later we had Dr. Hope as a witness before the committee and he was very helpful indeed. We appreciate the fact that the government has brought in one or two amendments to the act. There was also one amendment made by the standing committee. However, we believe there are many changes that could be made so far as the administration of the act is concerned.

One very important thing, and it has been mentioned before, is the speeding up of appraisals and the processing of applications. In its brief the federation of agriculture suggested that there should be an advisory committee in each county. During the hearings of the committee I suggested that it would often be possible to use the services of some retired farmer in the district who knew the county very well and could be paid so much for each appraisal he was called upon to make. It would not be necessary for him to go into all the details in getting information that a stranger coming to the area would require to obtain, and these local people would be invaluable in speeding up the processing of loans.

From questioning the chairman of the board it was learned that apparently some such individuals are used, but there are still a great number of permanent employees going around the country making appraisals. I suggest sincerely that the board give the most serious consideration to trying to get a good local farmer, retired or otherwise, in those districts where no local man is being used to do appraising at the present time. These men know the local situation and would be of very great help to the board in valuation and appraisal work.

It has been mentioned by the hon. member for Peterborough that there are hundreds of these applications that members of parliament do not see because they are personal matters. A person making such an application does not always like to come to his member about it unless he has trouble. If he has trouble then he probably will go to his member of parliament and in that case we do hear about these cases. I know that so far as any cases I have had to do with are concerned, the appraisal value has in most instances been very low compared with the actual value of the farm. The chairman of the board said they appraise a farm on the basis of its earning capacity.

Mr. Benidickson: Productive capacity.

Mr. Charlton: That is probably a good idea, but if that is the case then they are actually making loans on the basis of the person rather than the farm, because if a poor farmer was operating the best farm in the world the earning capacity of that farm would be very low. Therefore what they are doing in effect is lending money on the basis of the owner of the farm instead of on the farm. At the present time the situation is, as has been said, that farmers are in a low category so far as earnings are concerned. Their earnings are the lowest they have been for years. Ordinarily I suppose a farm would be remortgaged about every 20 or 25 years. Many farmers want to obtain one of these loans to consolidate their debts. They are probably paying off debts to the implement company or the bank and they want to consolidate them in one place where they will have a reasonable interest rate.

I always understood that the farm loan board was supposed to be a service organization for the farmers, and that its purpose was to take up the slack in mortgage money when trust companies and private individuals who would ordinarily lend money were making fewer and fewer loans. It was my understanding that the purpose of the board was to be of service to people who found it difficult to get loans from any other source. But we find that the board had a profit of practically $163,000 last year and paid income tax amounting to $73,341. While it is to be hoped that the board will be able to pay expenses and make some profit, it seems to me to be a little out of the ordinary that the board should make that much profit on its operations.

Take the case of the young man who wants to start farming. It is very odd that when he goes to the farm loan board and tries to get a loan he cannot get sufficient money in order to start farming unless he has a considerable amount of his own or unless his father turns the farm over to him free of cost. Ordinarily the farmer depends on the money he gets from his farm in order to retire, but the present situation means that he cannot retire. He must remain on the farm and either hire his son as a labourer or else operate on a share basis with him. It seems to me that if the young man wants to make farming his life work it should be a little easier for him to do so. The board should make it possible for him to start farming on a reasonable amount of capital and at the same time allow the father to retire, move off the farm and leave it to the son to run.

We all know that father-son arrangements sometimes create difficulty. The young man has new ideas and wants to carry on in a little different way than his father did. The father of course is sometimes just a little reluctant to do that. Such a situation often means that the boy leaves the farm because he does not have the amount of capital required.

The strange thing is that the same boy can go to the city, get a job and, through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, have a new home built for him in the city for 10 per cent of the cost of the house. But if he goes into farming he has to have 60 per cent to 75 per cent of the value of the operation; that is, machinery, livestock, the value of the farm. He would probably have to have 60 per cent to 70 per cent of the amount of money he would require to start farming. He certainly cannot get credit on livestock. He cannot get very much credit on implements. Up to now you have only allowed him a loan of 60 per cent of the appraised value, and under the amendment it will be 65 per cent.

I suugest most sincerely that the appraised value is low, and that a loan of 65 per cent of the appraised value is a pretty poor show so far as the young man is concerned who is starting in the business of farming. As I said at the outset, I think most people appreciate the amendments that have been brought forward, but they do not go far enough. In the committee we tried to get 75 per cent of the appraised value established as the basis for a loan. That was turned down by the majority of the committee, but I suggest that it has to be either the one thing or the other. There either has to be an easing so far as appraisals are concerned or the percentage of the present appraisals should be increased.

If the farm loan board appraisers will ease up on their appraisals and appraise farms closer to their actual value at the present time, then 65 per cent might be sufficient. But it is either one thing or the other. If they are going to maintain the inadequate appraisal values they are using now, then I say the percentage should be increased.

It was suggested that the maximum loan be raised from $15,000 to $20,000. Even $20,000 on a large operation would not set a young farmer up in business. The maximum loans as originally provided was $10,000 on the first mortgage and $3,000 on the second. This amount has been increased to $15,000. That is a step in the right direction. But with values increasing in the way they are increasing at the present time, I personally feel—as do our party—that $15,000 is not enough for the maximum.

We are glad the government saw fit to increase the number of years from 25 to 30. I am sure that is a good move. As I said at the outset, ordinarily farmers remortgage, generally speaking, every 20 or 25 years. It naturally follows that the farm must be remortgaged when a son takes over, unless the farmer is wealthy enough so that he can turn over the farm to his son without compensation. As I say, it naturally follows that it must be remortgaged. Ordinarily a farmer wants to retire at somewhere about the age of 55 or 60, if he can do so. I suggest it is almost necessary that he retire at that age unless he wants to hold his son on the farm until he is 35 or 40 years of age before he is able to take that farm over. I think that is rather bad policy, as a rule, if it can be arranged in any other way. I think 30 years is a very good limit. Certainly the maximum should be increased under present conditions. I hope there is some way in which the government can see fit to do that.

As to the percentage, I hope the farm loan board will take into consideration getting a good local farmer in each county to help them with the appraisal of these farms, and to give them the information which they would necessarily be obliged to go out and dig for if they did not have a local man. The suggestion made by the federation of agriculture is perfectly all right; I refer to the suggestion with regard to having an advisory committee. Under that suggestion you would have three when, in my opinion, one would probably be sufficient. As I said before, this legislation is acceptable. We intend to support the bill. However, we should like to see these various changes made.

Mr. Jones: I am interested in clause 6, especially subsection (i) with reference to loans of up to 65 per cent on the actual value of such lands and buildings. I am interested because the provision does not mean a thing as far as my part of the country is concerned, where the average farmer makes his living from fruit trees. I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant later on to define the policy the department has in valuing mature fruit trees.

I get from my riding constant evidence that the present system of valuation is entirely wrong, that it has no relation to actual value. If future loans are to be made on the basis of 65 per cent of the actual value, I think it is time the government had in the interior someone competent to value fruit trees. I am satisfied that at the present time they are not properly valued, and that they are definitely valued at only a fraction of the value of such fruit lands on the open market.

Actually, some time ago I had instances of two fruit farmers who were turned down by the farm loan board on the basis of the valuation of their fruit trees, but in both cases they were able to go, with the same security, to an orthodox chartered bank and arrange a loan, at probably the same rates of interest. I do not know the rates of interest, but they were able to satisfy the orthodox bank that they were capable of meeting the payments on the loan. There is something wrong when this happens with a board which is supposed to assist in getting out of a bad spot those who normally cannot get their assistance from the banks; that is, if they are a fairly good risk otherwise.

As far as we in British Columbia are concerned, I think having the operations of the farm loan board concentrated in New Westminster is wrong. That is on the coast, where the climate is totally different and where growing conditions are different. They have nothing to speak of in the way of fruit trees. We should have one of these people situated in the interior—in the Okanagan valley or the Kootenay valley—in order to become acquainted with fruit growing conditions and with the value of growing fruit trees in order that a fair assessment can be made. Even with the 65 per cent provision I am satisfied that on these appraisals the average fruit grower could get only half that on the market value of his 10 acres or maybe 15 acres of fruit land.

These are the questions I should like to pose to the parliamentary assistant. What definitely is the policy of the government in valuing fruit trees? How do they arrive at the low valuation that is now in existence as far as the board is concerned? I should like to know whether fruit trees could be included in this bill as well as farm buildings. It is far more important to have the farmer prosperous and have him getting a loan on his trees rather than on his house, to my mind. Hence it is just as important to include fruit trees in this clause as it is to include the house and the land itself.

Mr. Herridge: I just want to support what has been said by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary because we have similar experience particularly in connection with the fruit industry. I represent a number of fruit farmers and small mixed farmers, the great majority of them with a long record of successful operation of small acreages compared to the giant farms looked after by my colleagues around me.

They have managed with remarkably few mortgages. I mention that fact to indicate the soundness of their small farming operations. They have few mortgages indeed. For some years I have not seen a single farm in my constituency advertised as delinquent with regard to taxes. I mention that fact to indicate that these are good farmers and that they are engaged in good, sound farming propositions. They run their farms mostly with family labour. They have not much equipment. They are more acquainted with the cross-cut saw, the axe, the walking plow and the mattock than they are with large machinery requiring large investment. Their operations are modest. You will not find them in California, in Arizona or at the Empress hotel in Victoria. They are obliged to stay home all winter in order to attend to their pruning and things of that sort.

As I say, there is a tendency to underestimate the production value of these small orchards. Like the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, I should like the parliamentary assistant to explain to the committee on what formula they operate with respect to the valuation of fruit farms particularly.

As I mentioned at the resolution stage, I believe it was, I am of the opinion that the activities of the board should be diversified. At present they are centralized in New Westminster, and as far as I can see they are hypnotized by Fraser valley conditions. They know little from experience of Okanagan and Kootenay conditions. There should be at least a representative in central British Columbia and in the interior of British Columbia representing the Okanagan and the Kootenays.

I would seriously suggest again that the officials of the board would be well advised to get in touch with the farmers' organizations, to visit the fruit growers' organizations and to get an abstract from the books in order to see what has been the production of some of these people. I know of instances where $6,000 or $7,000 worth of cherries have been produced a year on five acres and with very little overhead on account of family labour in the pruning, spraying, picking and even in the packing house and things of that sort. A very small percentage of these people require loans from the Canadian farm loan board.

Like the hon. member who has just spoken, I have on a few occasions run into instances where I could not understand why good, hard-working people with a long record of successful operation on what is to us good soil and good properties should be refused the modest loans they required at the time. I do suggest that officials of the organization would be well advised to visit the district and get in touch with farmer organizations; then they will have some understanding of the capacity of the land and the people on it to produce.

Mr. Hahn: What the hon. members for Kootenay West and Okanagan Boundary have said concerning the appraised value of property is possibly quite true. I am not sure that it is intended as an affront to the individual in New Westminster. As the hon. member for Kootenay West suggested, he is not familiar with farm conditions in the interior of British Columbia, and therefore possibly should not be the appraiser. I should like the parliamentary assistant to indicate to us just exactly who does the appraising of these farms in British Columbia and whether there is any connection with the appraiser under the Veterans' Land Act, and possibly whether or not there is any method of appeal by which a reappraisal might be made of property which has not been appraised at the value at which the farmers felt it should have been appraised.

In the lower mainland area of British Columbia we find that the appraisers under the Veterans' Land Act are very thorough and are quite familiar with property values in that area. Possibly for that reason some examination should be made into whether or not the appraisals made under the farm loan board are quite as fair as the appraisals made under the Veterans' Land Act on the same piece of property.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, it is not often one can do anything in this chamber that carries the approval of the government, but I think if I moved an amendment to subsection 2, paragraph (f), it might carry the approval of the government. I would move:

That the word "twenty-five" be stricken out and be replaced by the word "thirty".

The Deputy Chairman: I think I might point out to the committee that the bill, as reported from the banking and commerce committee, contains that amendment according to the copy I have before me. The section now reads:

Every loan under this section shall be repayable upon such terms and within such periods not in excess of thirty years as the board shall prescribe;

Mr. Macdonnell: That change does not appear in my copy. I have another amendment I should like to move. I move:

That clause 6, subparagraph (ii) be amended by striking out the word "fifteen" and replacing it by the word "twenty".

That is the ceiling on the loan. I am not able to see any objection to that. I understand that when the deceased wife's sister bill was being passed in England there was one member who was vehemently opposed to it, and somebody pointed out to him that it was not a compulsory measure. In the same way I should like to point out that if we raised the ceiling from $15,000 to $20,000 it is not forcing anyone's hand. It is merely permissive. It gives the right to the board, if they find a loan which they think otherwise satisfactory, for an amount above $15,000, to make that loan.

When we have regard to the very substantial increase in prices over the years, in many cases running to twice what they were, and having regard to what I said a moment ago that we are not forcing anybody's hand but merely enabling the board to make a loan between $15,000 and $20,000 if they want to do so, it seems to me there is no danger in it. The board are experienced; they have had experience over the years. As I said earlier in the afternoon, if there is any question to be raised about their operation I think it would be that they have been too prudent, too careful, too unwilling to be a little progressive. I feel, therefore, that in moving that this $15,000 be raised to $20,000 I am not asking the board to take any additional risk. I am merely creating a situation where they will have a little more elbow room.

Mr. Argue: We are quite prepared in this group—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I have not received the amendment. Having received the amendment now, I have before me the resolution which received His Excellency's recommendation and was passed by this house. The appropriate part of it reads:

—to allow loans to be made up to sixty-five per cent of the value of the lands with a maximum loan of fifteen thousand dollars—

When I heard the hon. member speaking I was inclined to come immediately to the conclusion that he was raising the amount of public funds which would be expended, but I was not too sure I was right. There may be an over-all ceiling in the bill which would meet that question. However, there is no question in my mind at all that the resolution preceding the bill was very specific. We have the following quotation taken from the booklet of the Journal of the Society of Clerks-at-the-Table in Commonwealth Parliaments, to be found at page 167, where apparently a similar motion was made:

In asking the chairman to explain the reason for his ruling, Mr. Shackleton quoted the following passage from May (fifteenth edition, page 748):

"The approval or the reduction of the expenditure under consideration, or an increase in the stringency of the terms and conditions of the charge thereby created, are the matters specially entrusted to such a committee—

I insert "this committee".

—and to these objects amendments are directed.

If it was in order for the committee to interfere with the Queen's recommendation to the extent even of striking out all the money proposed to be voted, he could not see why it should not be in order merely to say that it should be repaid.

The chairman said:—

And this is the point:

"If the hon. member will look at the next page of Erskine May, he will find that this amendment would alter the conditions under which the Queen's recommendation was given, and therefore it is out of order. It is correct that the amount of money may be reduced, but we cannot alter the conditions."

In this case the resolution which came before the committee of the whole preceding this bill was very specific. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood would not only materially alter the resolution but would alter it upward, so that the effect, if any, would be to increase the financial drain upon the resources of the crown. Therefore I am afraid I must rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. Macdonnell: Might I submit one consideration which you yourself have raised, Mr. Chairman, namely that this would not necessarily affect the over-all expenditure? Second, the suggestion which you just made is that this may not be regarded as an expenditure but a loan.

The Deputy Chairman: I think we can meet the hon. member's second point very easily. It would become an expenditure if the loan were not paid. I myself said it was possible there was an over-all limit and, therefore, the purely financial consideration might not be binding. It does most definitely alter the conditions under which the Queen's—in this case His Excellency's—recommendation was made to parliament. The conditions were: "That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act". Then it goes on, and one of the conditions is that the loan shall be made up to 65 per cent of the value and that there shall be a maximum loan of $15,000, and so forth. It is my opinion that the proposed amendment does materially alter the conditions under which His Excellency's recommendation was made to parliament, and therefore is not in order.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, had you allowed the amendment we in this group certainly should have supported it. Even though the amendment is not before the committee, since we have a provision in the clause to increase the amount of the loan to $15,000, I make this suggestion. Like the hon. member for Greenwood I think it would have been desirable to have the $15,000 increased to $20,000. I might say this is in conformity with the recommendations made to the committee by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

I am not too sure what form the amendment to the present bill takes. In the banking and commerce committee the hon. member for Greenwood was successful in moving a motion that may have been seconded by the parliamentary assistant. He certainly expressed his willingness to second the motion at that time; but since an amendment at that stage may not require a seconder there may not have been a seconder listed. The motion of the hon. member for Greenwood in the banking and commerce committee, heartily supported by members of this group, I might say, and members of all political parties, it was approved.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if the period of the mortgage is to be extended from 25 years to 30 years, you have the same general effect that would result from changing the $15,000 to $20,000. I am not attempting to raise a point of order at all; I am merely saying that the amount of money that is made available to the board and the conditions under which it is made available have already been set forth. Therefore any change as to the length of period in which it will be repaid, the amount of the loan, the percentage of the appraised value, and so forth, are merely apportionments of the total amount of money that is controlled in another way. Certainly we are in favour of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Greenwood.

The Deputy Chairman: In view of the remarks that have just been made by the hon. member I should point out that certain specific conditions, including the $15,000 maximum and the 65 per cent figure, were included in the resolution which was adopted by this house. There was no inclusion in the recommendations of His Excellency dealing with the length of the amortization period. If there is a maximum gross amount in the bill, then the larger you make the individual loan the fewer the number of individuals who can partake and, therefore, it is in my opinion a material alteration.

Shall clause 6 as amended by the committee carry?

Mr. Hahn: Before the clause carries will the parliamentary assistant indicate whether or not the Veterans' Land Act appraisers are ever used on appraisals of these properties and whether there is provision to appeal an appraised value?

Mr. Benidickson: I am informed that the Veterans' Land Act appraisers are occasionally used to supplement the appraisal organization of the Canadian farm loan board. In the British Columbia area there is a full-time appraiser and then a seasonal appraiser is employed, and sometimes, as a matter of convenience but not often, a Veterans' Land Act appraiser is used. But the board relies on both its permanent appraisers and on its seasonal or part-time appraisers.

Mr. Hahn: Is there a provision to appeal an appraised value?

Mr. Benidickson: Other than the complaint of the applicant in correspondence? He would have every right to address a complaint to the head office of the board if he was not satisfied with the decisions made either in his regional office or by the appraiser.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, this clause proved to be the most contentious one before the banking and commerce committee. It deals with the basis upon which loans are made. There seems to be a considerable variation in the policies followed by the appraisers of the Canadian farm loan board. Experience has been that anyone attempting to get a loan from the board finds that the value put upon his property by the appraiser is significantly less than the current resale value of his farm.

Another aspect of the problem was discussed under an earlier clause. The Canadian farm loan board operates upon the difference between the cost for which they can borrow money and the interest rate they charge the farmer. One way they can make certain that no risk will be involved is to be very conservative in their appraisal policy. Section 6 (1) (a) reads in part:

—the principal amount of which shall not exceed sixty-five per cent of the actual value of such land—

The term "actual value" is very vague indeed. It has been claimed that it is based upon the productivity of the land, but in order to have a valuation based upon productivity you must give consideration to the market prices of the products which are produced. I think in the final analysis the actual value should be based on the long-term productivity of the land.

It is evident from the experience of many farmers that the actual value placed on a piece of land by the appraisers of the Canadian farm loan board is significantly less than the appraisal of the actual value of a piece of land by the Department of National Revenue for succession duty purposes. There should be some consistency in the policies. In one case we have the Department of National Revenue putting the highest possible valuation on a piece of land for succession duty purposes, and then we have the farm loan board apparently determined to put a very low value on a piece of land so a smaller loan may be made and the risk thereby reduced.

Considering the experience of other countries I do not think we need be as niggardly as the government has shown a desire to be in the percentage of the appraised value. The farmers' home administration and the farmers' credit administration in the United States grant loans on the basis of 100 per cent of the appraised value, and the losses have been small. There is a slight variation in the administration of those boards as compared with the Canadian administration, but I think our officials would do well to study those credit agencies in the United States.

It is generally thought that the government is increasing the percentage of the actual value by this new bill. Previously the percentage of the actual value was 60 per cent and it has been raised to 65 per cent, but I submit that percentage is deceptive. Prior to this amendment the board was taking 60 per cent on the first mortgage and then there was an additional $2,000 for the second mortgage. Under the present bill it is 65 per cent of the actual value, so that when the two are correlated it will be seen that the percentage of the actual value has not been increased.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is aware of this problem and has advocated that the percentage of the actual value be increased to 80 per cent for loans up to $8,000. It is significant to note that the largest proportion of the loans made by the board are well under $8,000. In an effort to keep the legislation in line with the desires of the farm organizations in Canada who have made a complete appraisal of the situation, who have made a study of it and who have realized that the percentage of the actual value of the land upon which a loan is made is much too low, I take advantage of this opportunity to correct that situation by moving.

That clause 6 be amended by deleting the word "sixty-five" in line 19 and substituting the word "eighty" therefor.

If this amendment is adopted it will broaden the whole scope of the Canadian farm loan board so it may be able to fulfil more adequately its role as the primary credit agency in Canada, without being limited to the small loans which have been made in the past. By having a larger percentage of the appraised value upon which a loan can be made we will be in position to establish young farmers on economic units, since we will be allowing them sufficient money to permit them to become thoroughly established.

It will also give us an opportunity to keep the procedure of the Canadian farm loan board in pace with the continuing depreciation of the Canadian dollar. It must be recognized that as our dollar depreciates, land values increase. Land which sold for $30 an acre some years ago is now selling for $60 an acre. Unless the percentage of the appraised value is increased it will be virtually impossible for young farmers to get the money required to establish themselves on farm units.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sure the hon. member will not be surprised when I rule this amendment out of order for exactly the same reasons I gave just before the dinner recess when ruling out of order another amendment to the same clause. I do not intend to repeat all that I said before dinner, but I would point out that I am ruling this amendment out of order on the ground that it alters materially the conditions in the resolution which had His Excellency's recommendation. The resolution stated:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act . . . to allow loans to be made up to sixty-five per cent of the value of the lands.

For the same reasons I gave in connection with the previous amendment I rule that this amendment is out of order.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make some comments on clause 6. I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Greenwood when he more or less philosophized on farming in general. He quoted some very fine words from equally quotable people. I quite agree with the sentiments he expressed.

I feel that what we should do is strike at the hard core of what this bill is proposing. The members of this group feel that we should be thankful for small mercies from this government, but we submit that the present bill as it is constituted, with the amendments that have been made thereto, does not meet the farm financing problem in this country. It falls far short of providing the kind of farm credit administration we need for farming generally in Canada.

I want to support the hon. member for Kindersley and other hon. members in what they have said. I think a new perspective is needed in Canada with respect to farm credit. It has been indicated that this clause which provides for a loan on the basis of 65 per cent of the appraised value of the land is not satisfactory. Anyone who is familiar with agriculture today will agree with that statement. I certainly agree with those who say today that a great extension of farm credit under conditions where farmers, particularly those in western Canada, are operating under a great disparity between their prices and costs and the returns they receive, could be a dangerous thing to the farm economy. However, when one recognizes that the farmer finds himself in a price-cost squeeze and that we have had increases in farm machinery costs and increases all along the line, it is readily recognized that something more adequate should be provided for the Canadian farmers if we are going to maintain and promote the family farm.

There are four objectives we should have in mind when we are thinking of farm credit. The first is the achievement of security of the family farm. Second, attention should be given to the extension of credit which will provide an economic farm unit. Third, the tenant farmer who is presently farming rented land, and who has in mind the final ownership of that land, also needs credit with which he can operate that farm as an economic unit, with the final hope of owning it. Then there is a fourth objective we should have in mind, and that is the father-son relationship, where the father perhaps has been farming over the years and wishes to turn over his farm to his son and have his farm become the property of that son. If the older farmer wants to retire and turn it over to his son, we need adequate credit so the son may readily get it and carry on in the footsteps of his father.

When we consider that the best this government has to offer in the way of farm credit on a 5 per cent long-term basis, one can readily see that under present conditions, when we have had already this bill to extend farm credit, it could be very dangerous to the farm economy, because everyone recognizes that farming is a hazardous occupation and that the farmer has his economic ups and downs.

I am suggesting, while at the same time we should have long-term credit, that the first problem, of course, is to guarantee fair prices to the farmer. I am not going to enlarge upon that, but I should like to bring to the attention of this committee what is done in the United States, the great capitalist country to the south. Whilst I seldom recommend any of the economic policies of that country for this country, I think this government should at least look across the border and see what is being done in many ways to help the farmer there.

The agricultural attaché here was kind enough to send me certain information in respect to broad policies undertaken with regard to farm credit in the United States. I should like to draw to the committee's attention one important aspect of assisting and financing agriculture in the United States. I have reference to the rural electrification program of the United States, under which over 4,468,000 farms have been electrified. Their interest under that program, which is repayable over a 35-year period, is not 5 per cent or 3½ per cent, such as we have under V.L.A. in this country. The interest rate is 2 per cent; but this government is bringing in legislation, when farmers from one end of the country to the other are in the worst financial difficulties they have ever been in, to offer us nothing better than a 5 per cent long-term program for farm credit.

So I say this bill is completely inadequate. I am suggesting, first, along with the hon. member for Kindersley and others, that the term of credit should be extended from 25 years to 40 years. As was pointed out in the committee of the house which made an investigation into farm credit, if the extension of credit were amortized over a period of 40 years instead of 25 years it would reduce the interest rate payable on an amortized basis so the farmer would in effect be paying less interest than he does under the short-term amortization period. So I am suggesting, if we pass this bill this year, that next year this government take a good hard look at farm credit in this country.

I feel that farming today is in great jeopardy. It is once again hitting the kind of depression we had in the 1930's; and it seems hard, for those of us in close touch with the agricultural picture in this country, to place before this government enough information so it will take seriously the problem facing the farmer today. So I just want to point out that this bill today, as amended, falls far short of the kind of farm credit we should have in this country. The farmers' union, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and all the great farm bodies have indicated to the government that something more far-reaching than this bill should have been presented to the house at this time. It seems to me that this bill, which was framed many years ago, has been overhauled from time to time, but there has been very little indication that the government has any knowledge of the kind of credit we need for farmers today.

Before sitting down I wish to re-emphasize that the picture I have obtained by surveying the financial situation throughout my constituency—and I think it is comparable to many, particularly on the prairies—is that this is not going to meet the problem. This is nothing more than putting a millstone around the necks of many farmers. Today they cannot sell their grain, and they cannot meet the price-cost squeeze. They will be forced to get bank credit at 5 per cent amortized over 20 years. In effect this will be a millstone around their necks for many years. Rather than having something adequate given to this house, a bill that would play fair with the farmer, one by which the farmer would be able to liquidate his debts, become the full owner of his farm and be able to farm an economic unit on a family basis, we may go back to the corporation farm and more and more see the family unit farm go off the Canadian scene.

In closing I may say that I think the government has been remiss in its duties when it cannot see any way of extending, through the Bank of Canada or otherwise, low interest rates to our farmers. Sometimes we hear it said that the farmers are subsidized. The reason the farmer today needs the kind of credit I am suggesting is the very fact that the farmer, in paying the high prices for farm machinery and other costs, is in effect subsidizing General Motors and the farm machinery companies because he is paying their profits. For example, when General Motors can make over a billion dollars profit this year, when Canada Packers are able to rebuild complete plants in four years, I say the farmer is subsidizing many industries in this country, and it is not the farmer who is being subsidized.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I have just a few questions to ask the parliamentary assistant. I notice that in subclause (f) a change has been made so that what would appear to be blended payments of principal and interest are provided on a monthly basis. I wonder if the parliamentary assistant would tell me how that interest is calculated. Is it calculated on a monthly basis as well? The reason for my asking is that if I recall correctly, under the mortgages act of Ontario interest cannot be calculated monthly. I wonder if this ties in with the original part of the legislation.

Mr. Benidickson: This act has not had this provision since its inception. As my hon. friend knows, the blending of principal and interest payments by a monthly method of payment is becoming very common. This bill provides a monthly payment option which has not hitherto been provided. The farmer might have a fairly steady income by the month. Suppose he was in the dairy business; he might prefer to meet his mortgage obligation in this way. The actual calculation of interest and method of blending would be similar to that found in the case of payments under the National Housing Act, with which my hon. friend will be familiar.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I understand that under those circumstances they are calculated quarterly although payments are made monthly. Is it the same provision here?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Argue: No, Mr. Chairman. The bill as it was sent to the banking and commerce committee provided for a maximum loan period of 25 years. Members who were on that committee will recall that an amendment was moved and accepted by the committee changing the period from 25 to 30 years. At that time some of us expressed the hope that the committee would go one step farther and provide a maximum amortization period of 40 years. If that had been done we would have followed the recommendation made to the committee by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

I believe there are good reasons why the committee of the whole should consider extending the maximum period for farm mortgages. A 25-year period with an interest rate of 5 per cent establishes a repayment rate of 7·25 per cent. That rate, with farm income as it usually is established, is a relatively high rate. Extending the period to 30 years will reduce the 7·25 per cent to something under 7 per cent. But if we extended the maximum period to 40 years, even assuming the maximum interest rate were left at 5 per cent, the repayment rate would be reduced to 5·83 per cent. I suggest that a repayment rate of 5·83 per cent is more in keeping with the actual rate that agriculture can bear than the rate of over 7 per cent brought about by the bill.

I was very interested in the committee to hear Dr. Hope relate to us on this point the results of a survey made of the length of term of farm mortgages in Ontario. He gave us this breakdown. Eight per cent of the farms in Ontario were mortgaged for a period in excess of 50 years. Fourteen per cent of the farms were mortgaged for a period of 41 to 48 years. Fourteen per cent of the farms were mortgaged for a period of 33 to 40 years. Seventeen per cent were mortgaged for a period of 25 to 32 years, 16 per cent for a period of 17 to 24 years, 13 per cent for a period of 9 to 16 years, 12 per cent for a period of 1 to 8 years, and 6 per cent had no mortgage at all.

Therefore, according to his sample survey a majority of the farms in Ontario were mortgaged for a period of 25 years or more; to be exact, 53 per cent. We were given this further information by way of breaking down mortgage capital and its source. Fifty per cent of the mortgages were held by individuals other than the seller. Thirty-three per cent of the mortgages were held by the seller. Nine per cent were held by loan companies, 4 per cent were family mortgages and only 3 per cent were mortgages from government agencies, with 1 per cent listed as being under the Veterans' Land Act. Therefore the total mortgage business done in Ontario by government institutions, of which the Canadian farm loan board is certainly the main one, is approximately 3 per cent.

That fact, Mr. Chairman, together with the fact brought out in the survey that 53 per cent of the farms in Ontario carry mortgages for periods in excess of 25 years, suggests to me that the burden of mortgages that must be paid for and serviced by agriculture is indeed high and that the committee should give sympathetic consideration to any improvement that can be made in the bill before us. Therefore I suggest that the maximum period of repayment should be increased from 30 years, as provided in the amendment, to a period of 40 years. I do so with the full support of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and with the full support of authorities who have looked into the field of farm mortgage credit very carefully. As far as I know, no authority has recommended a maximum period of less than 30 years, and some authorities have recommended periods even in excess of 40 years. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move:

That clause 6 be amended by deleting the word "thirty" in line 35 and substituting the word "forty" therefor.

Mr. Benidickson: I should like to advise the committee that this proposal was presented to the banking and commerce committee. A motion was made in that committee that the term be increased from 25 to 30 years. The motion was then subject to an amendment suggesting that the term be 40 years instead of 30. The vote in the committee on the 40-year term was 6 for and 21 against. When the vote was taken on the 30-year term the vote was 26 for and no one opposed to the term of 30 years.

At that time I for one indicated that I felt there was some evidence that should be taken into account that there was a need of lengthening the term. Some evidence was given as to the term of mortgages in other countries, but I pointed out that having in mind our general practice and mortgage terms in Canada—and I made reference to the National Housing Act—I felt that 30 years was generally considered to be a fairly lengthy mortgage term in this country. As I say, this does not come before us as something new. It is a matter that was dealt with in the banking and commerce committee, where the official opposition and the government supporters opposed a 40-year term but voted for a 30-year term.

Mr. Macdonnell: Those who were in the house earlier will perhaps remember that I favoured an increase in the ceiling of the loan and would have voted for an increase in the valuation percentage, but we did vote in committee against increasing the term from 30 years to 40 years. While you cannot prove that 30 years is the right figure, nevertheless there was an increase from 25 to 30 and it seems to me that 30 years is a pretty long loan. After all, there is such a thing as renewal, and I see no reason to change the vote I gave in the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a very good reason why a term of 40 years should be provided in the law rather than 30 years. That is the fact, and it is a fact, that it is impossible for farmers generally to meet a high rate of interest on mortgages. The history of mortgage repayments bears that out. Dr. Hope's evidence has been referred to in a very favourable way by members of all parties, and in my opinion he showed conclusively that a long repayment period is necessary.

Some of us have endeavoured to get the mortgage rate of interest reduced by getting the government to accept the carrying and administrative costs of the board. We have not done that because we believe the government should subsidize everything but because we believe a total interest rate of 5 per cent is probably all that agriculture can bear over a long period of time. Even if we provide a mortgage period of 40 years, the effective repayment rate will still remain at 5·83 per cent. A 30-year mortgage is a long mortgage, perhaps, for a private business; I do not know. It may be a long mortgage for a corporation. It may be a long mortgage for individuals other than farmers. But I suggest that in the history of agricultural credit a mortgage term of 40 years over which repayment is to be made is not too long when you consider that any shorter period will increase the repayment rate.

To support my contention that a 5 per cent rate over a 40-year period is the maximum that agriculture generally can support, I should like to refer to the evidence given by Dr. Hope showing the return to the farm operator and for farm family labour over a period of 29 years, from 1926 to 1954, in Canada. Those figures show that the average return to the operator for his labour and management over this 29-year period is less than $1,000 a year; in fact it is just $967, and you may add to that the return to the farm operator for his management and the wages of his unpaid family help, namely another $219, bringing an average total net income to the farm operator and his family of $1,186 a year over a period of 29 years.

With that history of agriculture before us, I think it is fair to say that a rate of 5·83 per cent is the very maximum rate that agriculture generally can bear. I therefore believe the suggestion that the maximum amortization period should be 40 years deserves support by the committee. I would point out to the hon. member for Greenwood something that is obvious, namely that anybody who can repay in 30 years or a shorter period of time has that right. But I am making this plea for a longer period so that many farm operators who must have a longer period in which to repay and a smaller rate of repayment may have this further assistance.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be of interest to the committee to have some information as to the experience of the board in their 25 years of operation in so far as the actual need for longer terms is concerned. I am informed that while most contracts are entered into for the maximum term, which has been 25 years and now will be 30 years, the rate of prepayment of loans is such that the average term over the 25-year period is only 14 years.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take any part in this debate, but as time has gone on the spirit has moved me to do so. We hear talk about a 40-year term for a mortgage. My friends have mortgages which run for 10-year or 12-year periods. Forty years is the working life of any farmer. A fellow goes on a farm at 25 years of age. That is about as soon as he will get on a farm of his own. With this suggested provision it is going to bring him to the age of 65 or 70 before the mortgage is paid off, or he may die with the mortgage still hanging over the farm. That is like the fellow who lives on the farm all his life and leaves it to his son with a greater mortgage against it than it is worth.

I agree with the hon. member who said that probably the interest rate could be reduced to 4 per cent or 4½ per cent. I think everybody would be pleased about that, even the fellow who is buying the mortgage. As to the 40-year period, I cannot agree with the suggestion at all. If a man cannot see some daylight, or if he does not see some time ahead when he is going to have the mortgage paid off within his lifetime, I think it would be poor business for the farmer who is borrowing the money and also for the government that is lending it.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I am interested to hear our friends in the Conservative party disagreeing with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture so pointedly. One of the specific recommendations of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is that the amortization period be 40 years. In presenting evidence before the committee they indicated that this was necessary in order—as the hon. member for Assiniboia has pointed out—to reduce the annual payment that must be made. I think anyone who is really concerned about the welfare of agriculture will support the amendment he has moved because, as was pointed out, there are no flexible terms of repayment in the present act—something which the federation is also advocating—so the amount you would repay annually would have some relationship to the productivity to the farm in that particular area. Correspondingly, if there were an extremely low return from the farm, the repayment would be lessened.

By increasing the period of repayment we give to the farmer a greater opportunity to repay the money he has borrowed. He will therefore have a greater amount of capital with which to keep his farm operating. I think we cannot assume that a farmer must be any different to those in a great many other businesses. I believe you will find many businessmen who are 40 years of age or 50 years of age who might happen to borrow $20,000 or $30,000. I do not believe we expect them to have that loan fully repaid in their lifetime, and I do not think it is a terrific burden on them. But in the case of agricultural land which has a significant mortgage-holding capacity, the better the terms of repayment we can give, the better chance agriculture will have to equate itself with the other occupations in Canada.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I might say that we intend to support the amendment, because by increasing the period to 40 years we shall, of course, reduce the amount of the annual payment. The parliamentary assistant referred to the fact that during the past 25 years there has been prepayment, bringing that term down to 14 years.

Mr. Benidickson: On the average.

Mr. Quelch: But the parliamentary assistant must remember that during that period we had a war, which was an inflationary period, followed by another inflationary period; and it is always far easier to pay off debts during a period of inflation than it is during a period of deflation. At the present time we have a situation where net farm income has dropped by 40 per cent in the past five years. If the situation we have today continues I would say that the farmers will not be able to pay their mortgage off in 40 years, let alone in 25 years. I think probably the best thing we can do is to support the amendment to increase the period to 40 years, in order to get the annual payment down to as low a figure as possible.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be few. It seems to me that we very easily could have gone along with a new type of valuation program which would have placed the farmer in a position to make a purchase with a smaller down payment. In that respect I think we might have brought this legislation more in line with the National Housing Act. In providing monthly payments I believe we have set up a program here that will bring within the reach of more people the orderly payment of their indebtedness. But no matter what type of business is involved, if we are going along with the system as we have it now it seems to me that we have to leave some pride in ownership and the acquisition of ownership. If there is not a sense of responsibility left in connection with those things which we attempt to acquire, we might as well have the government buy all the property and lease it out on a 40-year basis to whomever wants to work it. If ownership means anything, therefore, you have to put something into it. If we are going to provide a period of time so long that in the ordinary course of events many of the people who will be living on these properties will not have paid for them by the time they die, then I think that sense of responsibility will disappear and the country will be the worse for it.

Mr. Montgomery: I did not intend to say anything about this, but since the amendment has come up I wish to say a few words. I have had the opportunity of living in a rural community in which the farmers need loans and apply for them. I think we should be consistent. In requesting the 40-year term I believe the federation of agriculture also had in mind increasing the amount of the loan to $20,000 and the amount of the appraised value from 75 per cent to 80 per cent.

Since we are not going to get an increase in the valuation of the property beyond 65 per cent—I am sorry about that because I feel the government could very well have brought that up to 75 per cent—and since the total amount of the loan is not to go beyond $15,000, I think we must be consistent and say that a 30-year term is a fair term on which to make that loan. A good many of the people to whom I have had the opportunity of speaking thought a term of 30 years or even 25 years would be quite satisfactory, provided they could get an increase in the appraised value. They would rather have had an increase in the appraised value. For these reasons I cannot support the amendment.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): What is the payment per month on a $10,000 loan for 30 years as compared to the payment on the same loan for 40 years? Has the parliamentary assistant the figures there?

Mr. Benidickson: I have a figure here. Assuming an interest rate of 5 per cent, per $100 of loan the annual payment would be $6.51 on a 30-year term and it goes down to $5.83 for a 40-year term.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): That is less than a dollar, about 70 cents difference per $100 for 10 years. This does not amount to very much on a $10,000 loan; therefore I am not going to vote for the amendment.

Mr. Michener: I wonder if the figure could be given of the total amount that would be repaid if the loan were for 30 years and 40 years, per $100?

[Mr. Hamilton (York West).]

Mr. Benidickson: It is just a matter of mathematics. You multiply $6.51 by 30 and $5.83 by 40.

Mr. Castleden: I should like to point out, Mr. Chairman, in support of the argument that has been advanced for the 40-year period, that it amounts to about this. In the case of the 40 years the payments are less. If agricultural conditions are good, the farmer will be able to repay his loan and be clear of it. If agricultural conditions are bad, then what is going to happen if he does not pay within the 30 years? He is put off the farm. If hon. members to the right look at their argument they will find they are really jeopardizing the farmer, because the whole thing depends upon the agricultural conditions which exist during that period.

The parliamentary assistant has already pointed out that experience shows that even if the period of repayment is 25 years, when farmers are in a position to pay they prepay and get rid of the debt. By extending the period of time you are reducing the likelihood of a foreclosure. It gives the farmer an extra 10 years of grace. As we know from experience in Canada, agricultural conditions change rapidly and on numerous occasions the period of bad times in agriculture has extended over a long period of time. This extra 10 years merely affords these farmers a safeguard and lessens the likelihood of a foreclosure because of inability to pay.

Mr. Michener: I have taken the opportunity of making the calculation and perhaps the parliamentary assistant would verify the figures. It is not a one-way street. If a man borrows $100 for 40 years instead of 30 years, in the 40 years he pays back $233.20 for the $100 he borrowed as against $195.30 that he would pay back in 30 years. In other words there is a difference of $37.90.

Mr. Benidickson: Those are the figures I arrived at.

Mr. Argue: I am amazed at the position of the official opposition in this regard. I can understand the government, which has control of the public purse, feeling that it should look at this matter cautiously, carefully and in a conservative manner before agreeing to further extend the period when they have already extended the 25 years to 30 years.

Mr. Macdonnell: Don't you do that?

Mr. Argue: If the Conservatives are announcing tonight that they are going to be across the way after the next election, as the hon. member for Kamloops is suggesting, then I suggest that by their statements they are saying that so far as policy is concerned they are going to do exactly the same as the government now in office. In this discussion the parliamentary assistant has been able to sit back rather contently and allow the members of the official opposition to advance arguments against the position taken by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Perhaps the 30 years, as the period of the loan under the Liberal government, would not be any different from 30 years under a Conservative government. The Conservatives say you should not extend the 30 years to 40 because it would cost the farmer too much. Why then do they want to extend the 25 years to 30 years? Why did the hon. member for Greenwood try so hard—and I admired him for that—to be the person who would extend the 25 to 30, and hold his position for 10 minutes by beating down government members on an amendment which had been agreed to by the government? If the hon. member for St. Paul's had been coaching him, he could have pointed out that the farmer would save a lot more if the period had been 25 years instead of 30. As a matter of fact the farmer would save a lot if he did not have to get a loan at all. If the Conservatives followed their argument to its logical conclusion they would want to reduce the period even further.

Then the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton said the federation of agriculture had three proposals. One was to increase the percentage of the appraised value; the second was to set the maximum loan above the 65 per cent and then he said they wanted the maximum loan to go beyond $15,000. The third proposal was to increase the 25 years to 40, and he said that depended on getting the other two, and that unless they got all three they were not going to support one of them. I suggest that even if the government has said no to an increase in the 65 per cent, as it has; even if the government has said no to an increase in the maximum amount of the loan, that is no reason why we should not at this time attempt to get an increase in the period of repayment.

The rate of repayment, as has been pointed out, for a 30-year period is $6.51. The rate of repayment for a 40-year period is $5.83. Someone may say there is not too much difference between these figures, a difference of some three-quarters of 1 per cent; but I suggest to the members of the committee that in a period like the present, when farm income is so low, there is a great deal of difference between $5.83 and $6.51, and that farmers will have real difficulty in meeting even $5.83 and, of course, even more difficulty in paying $6.51. All of us would like to see farm mortgages kept in practice to as short a period as possible; all of us would like to see farmers in the position where they would be able to pay their mortgages in a short time. But we should not penalize the farmer by keeping the period at 30 years if there is any possible chance of getting the maximum period extended to 40 years.

Someone has said we would be keeping the mortgage on the farm until the farmer is 70 years of age. Well, that is nothing new; and any change we make in this legislation is not likely to change the position in Ontario, the statistics of which I referred to a moment ago.

I do not think it is necessarily a question of a given farmer taking out a mortgage and himself repaying it. That is desirable, but I do not think it is essential. We have a National Housing Act. Some of the mortgages are a very high percentage of the sale value. I have never had the privilege of buying a house, but I am told by those people who buy houses and by people who sell them from time to time that you have a much better chance to sell a city house at a reasonable price if there is a substantial mortgage against it and therefore the cash payment is low.

I suggest that a farmer is more likely to sell his farm with ease at a fair market price if the down payment is not too high. If a man on reaching the age of 70 has a farm with a Canadian farm loan board mortgage on it which has not reached the period of 40 years and he decides to sell the farm, I suggest that he will dispose of his property more easily if there is a mortgage on it at a reasonable rate of interest and the cash payment to obtain the farm is therefore lower than if there were no mortgage against it and the farmer had to demand full cash when he sold the farm. Therefore I suggest we should not compare the 40-year term with the normal productivity of a farm. That is not too material. I think it is good business that agricultural mortgages generally should carry a low rate of repayment.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything about this bill at all, but I think our friends to the left are being very pessimistic. If they were in power would farm conditions be so poor that they would require 40 years to pay back a mortgage. I suggest that by saying what he has just said the hon. member for Assiniboia is being so pessimistic that he thinks farming is not going to be any better in the next several years. I suggest to him that our policy would make farming so much better that we would not need any legislation like this.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment. Will those in favour of the amendment please rise, and will hon. members please remain standing until requested to take their seats.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 83.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

AMENDMENTS TO ENLARGE CLASSES OF LOANS, ETC.

The house in committee on Bill No. 165, to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act—Mr. Harris—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Industrial enterprise.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Chairman, the minister when introducing this legislation, gave quite a lengthy outline of its purposes, which is contained in Hansard of March 8, commencing at page 1921, and I do not think any further explanation is required in a general way.

This bill now comes to the house after having been considered by the banking and commerce committee, which had the benefit of hearing, among other witnesses, the president and also the general manager of the bank. I think an attempt was made there to try to eliminate discussions that did not have particular reference to this bill and might go a little further afield on to general monetary and banking policy. The reason was that it was known in the banking and commerce committee that the president of the bank in his capacity as governor of the Bank of Canada would, within a few days, be again appearing before the banking and commerce committee to discuss the Bank of Canada report. I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that on the same basis, difficult sometimes as it may be, it would appeal to the judgment of the committee similarly to try to keep the discussion to the industrial development bank amending bill rather than have a general discussion of monetary policy.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, as the parliamentary assistant has said, this bill was discussed at length by the committee and I shall be very brief in the remarks I shall make. But I think it might perhaps be of some use to those here present who were not on the committee if I were to make one or two general observations as to the purport of this amending bill.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

In the main the amending bill does two things. It extends the scope of "industrial enterprise" or "industrial business" and it alters the proportion of the lending funds of the bank which may be used for loans of $200,000 and over. It does not increase the total amount the bank may lend, which depends upon the capital and reserve of the bank.

I would remind hon. members that the industrial development bank was designed really to fill a gap in our financial structure. A loan may be required for a longer term than a bank may be prepared to give it, yet it may not be large enough to warrant a bond issue in the ordinary course. You have thus an in-between situation which is filled by the industrial development bank, I think to the satisfaction of virtually all concerned. Although there was some misgiving on one point which I shall come to later, the banks have found that the industrial development bank fitted into the pattern of the financial structure of the country. One satisfactory aspect of the operations of the industrial development bank is that it has kept in close touch, and I think in useful touch, with the chartered banks.

I would point out the safeguards that exist. The bank is given the power to deal only with certain things. Those of us who had the advantage of hearing the governor of the bank I am sure will feel that it has remained in the area it was intended to cover. The impression we got from him was that he was content and did not wish to step outside. The governor put aside certain suggestions for expanding the operations of the bank, saying they were organized and equipped to scrutinize and deal with industrial enterprises, that that was really the scope of their operations and they should not extend it.

One of the questions he was asked was in connection with the provision that a loan may not be granted by the industrial development bank unless evidence is given that it has not been possible to obtain it elsewhere on reasonable terms. We asked him if that provision was taken seriously or treated in a routine manner, and he said it was far from routine. He told us that in a great many cases the industrial development bank would be in actual touch with other institutions from which loans had been requested, such as the chartered banks, and therefore the borrower had the advantage of having discussed the matter with both agencies.

The important point of this bill is to raise the amount which may be lent out in loans of $200,000 or more. Originally that was put at $25 million, it was raised to $50 million and it is now proposed to raise it to $75 million. The actual amount now outstanding in loans of $200,000 or over is substantially less than $50 million. When we asked the governor why he wanted this substantial extention he said that they were doing a job and they might as well do an adequate job. He said it seemed worth while to get a substantial further authorization.

Having regard to the fact that the bank was established originally to fill a gap, to do what the chartered banks were not completely organized to do, I was reassured to find that while the bank has played a useful part there has been no wild attempt to rush out for business. Indeed I would say that the bank has pursued the even tenor of its way. As far as I am concerned I think that is what it was intended to do. I think anyone who needs a loan of this kind can easily get in touch with the bank and get whatever accommodation he is entitled to.

There was one answer made by the governor of the bank I was interested in. When speaking about large loans he said that the largest loan made was for $4 million, which was much larger than any other loan. He said that there had been only three or four other loans as high as $1 million. The $4 million loan was made in special circumstances to a defence industry because of the type of work it was called upon to do.

Mr. Benidickson: That was some years ago, close to the Korean war outbreak.

Mr. Macdonnell: I mention that because there may be others who like myself did not want to feel that this organization was trying to rock the boat by entering into competition with the chartered banks and other financial institutions.

Another point I had in my mind when this bill was announced was that it might be in effect going contrary to the restrictive credit measures we have been told about, that to some extent this would be going in the opposite direction. The question was whether this implied in effect a substantial creation of new money. Was it going contrary to the other things that were being done? I think the governor replied to the questions in that connection quite satisfactorily. When we asked if money loaned in this way would mean the creation of new money, while in a sense he said yes it could be, in the same breath he said that the bank by marketing methods could prevent a situation from actually resulting in the creation of new money.

But even more impressive than that, the feeling I got was that they were not going to be rushing out to make a number of large loans, that there was no intention of trying to change the bank from what it had been into an organization which would try to spread itself all over the landscape. To sum up, I think one can fairly say that up to the present the bank has gone along the lines it was intended to follow, that it has been well run and has worked in harmony with the other agencies in the financial structure of this country. The main thing is that the new bill is not intended to increase the total amount which the bank will have available for lending but merely to increase the amount which may be lent in loans of $200,000 and more.

As I listened to the governor of the bank I felt that it had been conducted in a sensible fashion and that this was not going to be taken as an occasion to rush out and try to change the present character of the bank.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, we in this group, unlike the hon. member for Greenwood, would like to see the industrial development bank expand. We would like to see it stretch out. We would like to see it act aggressively in going after new business. We would like to see it do these things mainly because we would like to see new industries developed, and further because we would like to see new industries developed by Canadian capital.

We hear much about the desirability and the necessity of increasing the proportion of Canadian industries being developed by Canadian capital. Here is a bank, here is a Canadian enterprise in the business of promoting new Canadian industry with Canadian capital. I do not think the members of the official opposition are being completely consistent when they express the hope that the industrial development bank will not become aggressive, will not stretch out, will not expand at a rapid rate.

I repeat that I would like to see the industrial development bank use its authority and the money which is being made available to it by parliament in an aggressive way to establish new Canadian industries. I would like to see the industrial development bank come back to parliament in the near future for more funds, for the reason that it has in a short period of time successfully invested the funds it now has in new Canadian enterprises for the benefit of Canadians generally.

Looking over the annual report of the industrial development bank and the amount of business it has done in various provinces, I cannot help being struck by the overwhelming preponderance of business that is done in the two central provinces as compared with the little amount of business being done, generally speaking, in the maritime and the prairie regions. I express the hope here that the industrial development bank will be successful in promoting new industries, not only all across Canada but to a greater extent, particularly, in the maritimes and on the prairies. I like to see Canada industrialized, but I like to see all parts of Canada share in that industrialization. To the extent that the industrial development bank can use its policies to allow Canadians in all provinces to share in that industrial development, I wish it great success.

Mr. Benidickson: The president does not disagree with that policy.

Mr. Argue: No, I do not think he does. I do not know that he agreed with that policy, but I think, all other things being equal, he would agree with it. I pointed out to him in the committee that the trend seemed to be adverse, as far as industries on the prairies are concerned, as compared to industries in central Canada. The trend seemed to be downward instead of upward; that the prairies seemed to be getting a relatively smaller portion of business generally. When I asked the president those questions, he said to me that there was no thought at all of discrimination, that it was a matter of applying the same set of rules to a given number of applications, and that these just happened to be the results.

Mr. Benidickson: And your test period was relatively short.

Mr. Argue: The test period I used was the test period in the annual report. The report points out the authorization for the full ten-year period, the full period the bank has been in operation, and then gives the gross authorizations for the fiscal year 1955. If I might refer to those figures at the present time, the figures for authorizations to September 30, 1955, show that Ontario got some $29 million in authorizations, Manitoba just under $4 million, Saskatchewan just over $4 million, and Alberta somewhat under $7 million. However, the gross authorizations for the fiscal year 1955 were $5½ million for Ontario; three quarters of a million for Manitoba; $150,000 in round figures for Saskatchewan; and $450,000 in round figures for Alberta.

If you add up the authorizations for the full period to September 30, 1955, for Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta combined, you arrive at a figure of about $14 million, or approximately half the amount made available for industries in the province of Ontario. If you take the single year 1955 and add up the figures for the three prairie provinces, you get some $1·4 million as compared with $5·5 million, or about one-quarter of the amount that was disbursed in Ontario. In other words, for the full period the three prairie provinces combined obtained about half as much money as Ontario alone.

For the latest year, the three prairie provinces combined obtained approximately one-quarter of the amount obtained by Ontario. Then, as I am from Saskatchewan, the figure that naturally comes to my attention is the extremely low figure of $153,000 for that one-year period for Saskatchewan as compared with most of the other provinces.

An hon. Member: What are the figures for the maritimes?

Mr. Argue: The maritime figures for the one year are, for Nova Scotia, approximately $255,000; for New Brunswick, $210,000; Prince Edward Island, none; and Newfoundland, none. So there was less than half a million dollars for the four maritime provinces, if I may call them that, as compared to $5½ million for the province of Ontario alone.

I think the industrial development bank should continue its policy of opening new branch offices, and those branch offices should be dispersed across the nation. I was glad to note that a new office is being opened in Calgary. I expressed the opinion in the committee, and I express it here again, that another office should be opened, namely in the province of Saskatchewan. I would further suggest that much more attention might be paid to industrial development in the maritime provinces.

We wish to use this bank because we want to see more industrialization, and we like to see industry develop through the use of Canadian funds. I would like to see the work of the bank extended so that industries may be developed more uniformly all across the nation, and so that Canadians in each and every province may to a greater extent share in the benefits of industrialization.

Whilst we support clause 1, which extends the interpretation of "industrial enterprise", we would like to see the government give some further consideration to an even wider interpretation of those words. The interpretation of "industrial enterprise" at this time is confined to manufacturing, processing, distribution, electricity, and so forth. I think a good case can be made for including in the general field of industrial enterprise the enterprise that some of us, for lack of a better term, might call "service enterprise".

We had before the banking and commerce committee a man who showed undoubted ability as a witness, no matter what we may have thought of the case he made. I refer to Mr. Caswell, head of the Ontario hotel association, who asked the committee to consider extending the interpretation of clause 1 to include loans to hotel operators and hotel proprietors. Mr. Caswell went on to point out that the hotel industry was very essential to this nation; that hotel facilities in many, if not all, cities in Canada left much to be desired, and that adequate hotel accommodation would in fact improve the wealth of the nation by improving our tourist traffic.

Though I cannot refer to this at any length, we have just concluded the discussion of a loan policy for agriculture, and particularly a policy of making credit available for agriculture. The government has a policy, as defined in the Industrial Development Bank Act, to promote industries and new industrial development, and we are now discussing that policy. But there is an important section of our nation that is completely overlooked, I am afraid, as far as government policy is concerned. I refer to the ordinary independent businessman of this country. I refer to the hotelkeepers, the general merchants, the independent merchants whose services have meant so much to the country.

I suggest to the parliamentary assistant that the government should consider the extension of this act, and if that is not appropriate then the introduction of new legislation to provide for long-term credit at reasonable rates of interest to the ordinary independent merchant and businessman, the small businessman if you like, whose services are important to the nation and who at the moment, through no fault of his own, is unable to stand up against the ruthless competition of the big monopolies in these fields.

I do not know what other members may think, but I was certainly amazed to hear Mr. Caswell make the statement that the vast majority of hotel proprietors who wish to obtain new long-term mortgage capital to extend their businesses or for major renovations have in fact to pay a very substantial bonus on the capital they obtain. He told us of a personal experience he had when, in asking for a certain loan of $90,000 on a hotel, he was offered a mortgage with a face value of $117,000, in other words with a bonus attached of $27,000, together with an interest rate of 8 per cent. He did not have to take it because he was able to get his money elsewhere, but he was offered mortgage money at a rate of approximately 15 per cent a year. If that had been an isolated case one would not need to mention it, but Mr. Caswell told the banking and commerce committee that the majority of hotel proprietors in this country who want to obtain new capital to expand their businesses must pay a very heavy bonus when they obtain a mortgage, and that the final rate they pay is anywhere from 10 to 15 per cent per year.

I suggest that gives further impetus to the need for a new credit policy in this field in order to give the ordinary businessman something of a break and provide him with long-term credit at an interest rate that will more closely approach the interest rate at which the big chain stores and monopolies in the nation are able to obtain their credit. We in this group are pleased to support the measure. We hope the industrial development bank will be used to a much greater extent in the future.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, the members of the Social Credit group have studied this legislation both in the committee and outside the committee and we are in favour of it. We feel that it is only a small beginning in the direction of a much greater development which must take place in Canada if industry is to develop as we all desire to see it develop. We are living in an age of great combines and mergers and powerful monopolies that are able to compete more than successfully with their less fortunate smaller neighbours. Unless, therefore, government assistance is made available to the struggling smaller concerns they will simply have to succumb to the greater power of the competition they face.

In the United States this problem was met years ago by the establishment of the reconstruction finance corporation. The time is long overdue for Canada to have an extensive reconstruction finance corporation. When we stop to consider the experience we Albertans have had in trying to develop the oil industry in Alberta and now a gas industry, just to use those two as examples; when we remember that our men who began to develop the oil industry went to every concern in Canada and Great Britain in an endeavour to find capital with which to develop these oil resources and found that it was impossible to obtain capital from either one of these sources and finally had to go to the United States in order to get the necessary capital to drill the wells and develop these resources, these things alone should impress upon us the fact that it is utterly impossible for Canada to develop her industries and resources as she should unless she has the assistance of powerful government aid backed by no less a concern than the Bank of Canada itself.

What has already been said by the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Greenwood is sufficient; it is not necessary for me to repeat what they have said. I will simply say that the Social Credit group is heartily in favour of the act and wishes it to be extended with all possible speed and at just as great a scope of growth as is possible under the conditions that confront us.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, I should not like to let this occasion pass without saying a few words in connection with the industrial development bank, and I shall try to avoid any repetition of what I might otherwise have said. I happen to have seen the bank in action at close range, and there is no doubt about the very useful function it performs as part of our general financing set-up. I believe it fills very ably the gap between the legislation which enables our chartered banks to carry on certain phases of business and the system that exists in the United States which enables their local banking houses to take such security as mortgages on real property and to lend money on chattels and articles of that kind.

I think too the bank has filled a very useful function with respect to the financing of air companies. As a matter of fact, I might say that for a period of time it was most difficult for that type of company to obtain the necessary financing to cover the expansion of their services. There was a period in which the ordinary type of financing available through finance houses with respect to the acquisition of planes ceased to exist, and until this type of loan came along it was most difficult for such companies to add to their roster of planes.

I said once before and I should like to repeat that certainly if the bank is going to fulfil its true role it must be expanded. I might be sorry that some of this financing is not being carried out by the chartered institutions, but if this is the vehicle to provide this type of financing then very definitely, as has been suggested, it should be expanded from coast to coast. I am delighted to see that in a small way at least there is a beginning along that line. As a matter of fact, I am more delighted to know that the very loyal employees of the bank, who had a definite ceiling put on their future, now have the opportunity to have their services made much more use of in the expanding affairs of the bank.

If I may say one other thing, and I perhaps will refer to it when we come to one of the specific sections, I think there should be a considerable increase in the discretionary power of the local managers in this type of institution. I do not think it is something that should be carried on by a manager at Vancouver with a low discretionary limit of $5,000 or some type of limit of that kind, anything exceeding that amount having to be forwarded to the head office of the bank for approval. It seems to me that there should be greater manoeuvrability in the various offices of the bank in order to see that the servicing of the customers is done in a quicker manner so that in the long run they will be much better satisfied with the services.

Generally speaking there is no doubt about the usefulness of the really essential function this bank is performing in our economy. I believe we welcome strongly the indication that this influence is to be spread on a much broader basis.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I feel that I would be remiss in my duties if I did not say a few words on this item. As most hon. members of the house know, industrial development is badly needed in the maritime provinces, and it has been badly needed for some considerable time. I was in the house when this bank legislation was introduced, and I visualized that the bank was to be an instrument by means of which capital could be secured at lower rates of interest and on longer terms of repayment than could be obtained from the regular chartered banks. The name itself suggests that the intention of the legislation was to assist in industrial development and expansion.

However, it seems to me that the figures that are contained in this report and which were put on the record by the hon. member for Assiniboia confirm the old adage, "To him that hath shall be given", because in the central provinces where capital is available and where industrial expansion has gone on apace since the end of the war, it seems that is where the greatest amount of money has been lent by the industrial development bank for industrial expansion, I would assume in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

The reason I am interested at this time is to inform the house that in speaking recently to the Canadian Labour Congress in Toronto and commenting on resolutions that were before that convention setting out the difficulties and disabilities of the maritimes, the Prime Minister issued a challenge and said that the initiative for the solution of these problems rested with the maritimes themselves, and that when they laid the proper ground work and had recommendations to make, the federal government would be glad to help.

I should just like to say that a great deal of ground work has been done in the maritimes over the years. The Nova Scotia government have a department of industry. I notice they are running to the United States looking for money largely to help in developing some industry in that area.

Mr. Studer: Saskatchewan does, too.

Mr. Gillis: They must go somewhere. Apparently there is not any risk capital in this country. When dealing with things all the way from a pulp mill to a pipe line you must go outside for the money or come with your hat in hand to the government and say, "You can establish the thing for us, but you do not have any say in the operation of it." However, we have tried in that end of the country. The government has set up a department of industry. In addition to that we have seen the formation of the Atlantic provinces economic council that is doing the economic surveys as to the possibility of the location of industry, as to marketing and what can be done. All that material is being assembled. In many communities there are industrial development boards. They are trying to raise some local money. But any project that is worth while is too big to be financed in the community.

I always understood that the industrial development bank was an instrument that should be available to the provincial governments, and that if they wanted to establish a project funds should be made available to the provincial government through this medium. The department of industry in Nova Scotia at least will make loans—they are not very substantial—to projects that are economically sound in the community; and when companies are formed and the legal formalities have been gone through, they can raise some money, but it is not adequate in most cases. I am wondering why under this legislation this bank could not be used as a public investment body for the purpose of assisting in areas where it is not so easy to raise capital.

During the years 1953, 1954 and 1955 the maritime provinces have been doing a great deal in regard to bringing about their own rehabilitation. But on looking at the report I notice that there is not even an office in the maritimes. The report lists the officers and supervisors. It sets out Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver; but for the Atlantic provinces it lists 901 Victoria Square, Montreal, Quebec. That is a long way from the maritimes.

In any case, this legislation is little known. Not much is done to advertise it. During the years it has been operating my conception has been that anyone who can qualify for a loan under the legislation setting up the industrial development bank can get that money at the chartered banks, because your collateral must be fairly substantial and fairly secure. Anyone whom I have seen apply and who did get his loan, could have got it from the chartered banks. I know quite a few people who were turned down and who told me that, as far as they were concerned, if they could have met the requirements of the industrial development bank they could have obtained the money at the regular chartered banks, but they just did not have that kind of credit.

There is another consideration. I do not think this bank is serving the purpose it should serve. The municipalities across this country are floating bond issues for school projects. They put their bonds on the market and in many instances they are sold in the United States, and they are losing 5 per cent to 8 per cent on the dollar.

Mr. Pickersgill: How could they do that?

Mr. Gillis: By them giving you 90 cents on your dollar for your bonds; that is how they do it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The dollar is at par.

Mr. Gillis: Not when you are floating bonds. If the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration were going to invest $100,000 in a community, I am sure he would not take bonds for $100,000 with no interest. He would naturally expect to make 4 per cent or 5 per cent or 6 per cent. Even the industrial development bank want 6 per cent on their dollar. Hence if you borrow $100,000 and you pay back that $100,000 plus interest, that is the same thing the small communities that are floating bonds are doing. Why could not the bond issues of municipalities be financed through an instrument like the industrial development bank?

I know that in the end of the country from which I come there were communities in which credit unions, out of the earnings of the workers, had to buy up bond issues to finance school projects. Of course over the long pull they will make money out of that, and that money is staying in the community. It is a thing I advocate; but the finances of credit unions are not adequate to handle such projects.

So far as I am concerned I go along with the hon. member for Assiniboia. It seems to me that most of our legislation in this country today is not national legislation. When you have offices across the country starting in Vancouver and ending in Montreal, you have not a national organization. The same thing could be said of most of the projects in which the federal government is engaged. It is true of the pipe line. Somebody says it is an across-Canada proposal, but it is not. It is coming from Alberta and ending in Montreal, yet everybody in this country will be expected to finance some of it out of taxation. That is true of the industrial development bank. If this bank is to serve the purposes I heard outlined when the legislation was introduced, then there should be offices in at least all the major cities across Canada.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend will be glad to know that an office is soon to be opened in Halifax.

Mr. Gillis: I am glad to hear that. It has taken us a long time to get around to it. If that office had been in Halifax during the last three years when there has been an upsurge in that end of the country, when they have been trying to pull themselves up by their bootstraps, people would have been able to go in and talk over their problems. They might have been able to get some help, or at least ascertain the defects in the legislation and try to get them cured.

I am disappointed in the report. I am sure the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will be quite pleased to know that for the year 1955 Newfoundland is zero, and so is Prince Edward Island. I qualify that by saying that the premier of Newfoundland is doing an excellent job in financing his own industries and keeping them out of the hands of other people. He is not farming out the resources over which he has control to capital outside the country, and possibly that is the reason the figure is zero. Prince Edward Island is a rural province, and perhaps there would not be too much demand for loans.

Mr. Benidickson: There would have to be an application.

Mr. Gillis: The figures for New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are deplorable. I believe this legislation was passed in 1943, and I am glad to hear that in 1956 we have come to the point of realizing we should have at least one office in the maritimes. That is progress. I hope when this matter is under discussion again in the Department of Finance the parliamentary assistant will try to broaden the scope of the legislation to the extent that provincial governments, like Newfoundland, who set up their own projects will be able to borrow from this bank for industrial purposes. They should be able to go there and talk over their money problems with the expectation of getting something rather than having to run all over the country or to the United States. After the trial period the bank has had, I am disappointed. I do not think it has done very much in so far as my end of the country is concerned.

Mr. Barnett: I have one or two questions I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant while we are on clause 1. Is it the opinion of the government that the word "goods" in paragraph (d), subparagraph (i) of the definition section would include ships and vessels?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, under British law "goods" would include ships and vessels.

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. Barnett: The reason for asking this question is that in the former definition section ships and vessels are specifically referred to, whereas in the new definition section there is no reference to them.

Mr. Benidickson: That question was specifically raised with the president, and according to his advice vessels and ships are covered by this definition.

Mr. Barnett: Perhaps I may pursue that matter further. Would it be the understanding of the government that the warehousing of goods would include the warehousing of ships and vessels? In other words, would an enterprise which was designed to provide facilities for the docking and storing of vessels be classified as an industrial enterprise?

Mr. Benidickson: Well, "goods" continues to have the same definition. The warehousing of goods—goods includes ships and vessels.

Mr. Barnett: So that a private dock or warehouse could conceivably qualify if it met the other terms and conditions under the act?

Mr. Herridge: Will the parliamentary assistant say whether the industrial development bank has been in the habit of lending money to companies operating in Canada but completely owned and controlled in the United States.

Mr. Benidickson: I think that question was asked of the president. As I recall, he said the bank did not particularly look at the nationality of the shareholders of a company borrowing from the bank and conceivably in the many hundreds of loans made it was possible a loan had been made to the subsidiary of a United States company. He felt it was a rather rare situation.

Mr. Herridge: In other words, yes; and not too rare, either.

Mr. Benidickson: He said "likely rare".

Mr. Zaplitny: I should like to ask under clause 1, which defines an industrial enterprise, whether a co-operative association is eligible for consideration?

Mr. Benidickson: I do not think so, Mr. Chairman, any more than it is anticipated that this section would cover refinancing for a commercial bank.

Mr. Zaplitny: I missed the last part of the parliamentary assistant's answer where he referred to the refinancing of some type of bank. Would he repeat it?

Mr. Benidickson: I may have thought my hon. friend was asking about a co-operative lending institution, and if that is not so then the mere fact an enterprise was on a co-operative basis would not prevent consideration. I was thinking of a credit union.

Mr. Zaplitny: Perhaps I should make my question a little more specific. There are a number of co-operatives which are in the business of either manufacturing or assembling, like the co-operative implement industry. Let us say they wanted to build an addition to the plant they now own, would they be considered an industrial enterprise within the meaning of this act?

Mr. Benidickson: I recall specifically that the president illustrated a loan of a similar nature to a co-operative warehouse organization, a cold storage organization.

Mr. Zaplitny: Then I take it a co-operative association, provided it is engaged in one of the enterprises described in clause 1, would be eligible for a loan in the same manner as any other enterprise?

Mr. Benidickson: I think so.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I wonder whether the parliamentary assistant would look at the wording of paragraph (d) (iii). It seems to me that there may be a surplus of language in this section starting at line 15. If we go back to the definition section we find that it says:

"industrial enterprise" means an enterprise in which is carried on a business of (i) . . . transporting or warehousing of goods.

If we carry the same wording through we get:

—in which is carried on the business of (iii) . . . the transportation of persons.

That is line 16 of subparagraph (iii). Mixed in there are these words:

. . . or operating a commercial air service.

A previous reference to commercial air service was in section 15 (a). It seems to me there was no necessity of taking the actual words out of that section and adding them to the definition section, because the transportation of goods and the transportation of persons would appear to cover the situation. The only other thing I might be able to guess from this wording is that perhaps it was meant to cover "or operating a commercial service for the transportation of persons". Perhaps the parliamentary assistant might be able to throw some light on the wording of the section.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend will recall that when the act was opened up the last time and the definition of "industrial enterprise" was widened, one of the major classes of industries that a loan was provided for was a commercial air service. Because of that and its relative importance I think air services has been given an additional specific mention here.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Does it not leave some confusion here, though? Is it necessary for these words to be in? I thought the parliamentary assistant might say well, there was some type of commercial air service which was involved in doing something other than transporting persons and goods. I can think of some type of aerial magnetic survey, but at the same time it is covered by the words "transportation of persons or goods". I would think that the words "or operating a commercial air service" in this case are surplus words which might lead to confusion, and they should be deleted. I give you that suggestion, sir. Whether I should move an amendment to have these three or four words deleted I do not know, but I should like to have your comments on it.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend would be about the last person to take any chance by eliminating the words "commercial air service", because I know that in his riding the air industry is of great importance. I am sure these words are put in here by the draftsman of the bank after very careful consideration. As I say, I certainly think he would be the last one to suggest removing them when they certainly might include a class of air business that might not specifically involve the transportation of goods or persons. I think he gave an illustration when he mentioned hiring planes for some scientific purpose.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, this clause apparently deletes the reference to the assistant deputy governor, who apparently was an additional party when referred to along with the board of directors in various clauses of the act. Has there been someone else appointed who carries out the functions of that particular person, or have his duties been eliminated pretty well completely?

Mr. Benidickson: This amendment to the Industrial Development Bank Act is consequent upon an amendment that was made two years ago to the Bank of Canada Act. This particular title was eliminated in the Bank of Canada. Under the Industrial Development Bank Act that official, when the office existed, did have specifically a place on the board of this bank.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Loans, investments and guarantees.

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman, clause 5 describes the conditions under which the board can consider making those loans. The first part of the section says:

> Subject to section 14, where in the opinion of the board or of an officer authorized for that purpose by the board.
> (c) the amount invested or to be invested in the industrial enterprise by persons other than the bank and the character of that investment are such as to afford the bank reasonable protection.

I would like the parliamentary assistant to tell us, on the basis of experience so far, what has been considered as a reasonable protection to this bank so far as security is concerned. What is the ratio? If I may use the example that was used half an hour ago, it was defined that the amount of the loan should be in relation to a certain appraisal of the property concerned. This does not specify any particular ratio. What is said to be reasonable protection?

Mr. Benidickson: The president, in giving evidence on this question, indicated that there was no hard and fast rule as to the equity that should be in the business by the borrower. The reason is that the type of investment varies, particularly in a complicated corporate structure. You would have several types of securities, one junior to another, and it requires an analysis of the exact position and equity of the borrower. There is no hard and fast rule. I think the officers of the bank indicated they would normally like about a 50 per cent equity on the part of the borrower.

Mr. Zaplitny: I have just one more question on that. I notice in the paragraph they refer to the amount of the investment and also to the character of the investment. Can the parliamentary assistant tell us where the distinction lies as between the amount of the investment to be considered and the character of the investment? What is the distinction between those two terms?

Mr. Benidickson: The character is the type of security in which the bank is going to make its investment or take as security. Now, it could be real estate, the fixed asset of the business. Under this amendment we are giving the bank rather wider powers, and now they can not only make a loan, they can purchase debentures of the borrowing company, and that is the character. The security could very well be a bond or a preferred stock or it might be equity capital or assets in real property.

Clause stands.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue this debate and then take the Canadian Citizenship Act; then the resolution in my name with respect to the Tariff Board Act and then the budgetary resolutions with respect to income tax and the Customs Tariff.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

WHEAT—FREIGHT CAR DISTRIBUTION

Question No. 399—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Who is responsible for freight car distribution for the transport of wheat from line elevators?
2. On what basis are such cars distributed or allocated among marketing centres?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

1 and 2.

The Canadian wheat board, the railways, the grain elevator companies and the transport controller are jointly responsible to a varying degree for the distribution of box cars for the transport of grain from line elevators.

The grain elevator companies receive authority from the Canadian wheat board to ship grain either against specific shipping instructions issued by the board or against open shipping orders for specified grades or classes of grain which are authorized by the board from time to time.

On receipt of the board's authorizations, the grain elevator companies advise their agents at the individual points who, in turn, place orders for cars with the local railway agent. It then becomes the responsibility of the railway to supply the cars.

In this connection, the railway companies are instructed by the transport controller to spot cars at elevators at each shipping point in proportion to the outstanding orders approved for that point.

The Canadian wheat board keeps the railway companies continuously advised of the space, marketing, quota and car requirement position at each and every shipping station in western Canada so that the railway companies, to the extent that railroading operations will permit, will be in a position when supplying cars to preference such cars to the lower quota delivery stations.

LIME ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS, N.S.

Question No. 445—Mr. Buchanan:

1. Did the federal government pay for lime assistance for farmers in Nova Scotia in the last fiscal year?

2. If so, how much?

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture):

COAL SUBVENTION PAYMENTS, N.S.

Question No. 454—Mr. McCulloch (Pictou):

1. What is the rate of subvention per ton applying at the present time in respect of coal produced in Nova Scotia?

2. How much did the federal government pay in subventions in the past fiscal year for coal produced in Nova Scotia?

Answer by: Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys):

1. The rates of subvention applying at the present time in respect of movement of coal produced in Nova Scotia are set out in the Nova Scotia coal subvention regulations, being part of order in council P.C. 1956-382 of March 8, 1956. In some cases, the actual rate of subvention being set by the order as the difference in laid-down cost between Nova Scotia and imported coal will not be finally determined until the audit of these costs has been completed later in the year.

2. The amount of money paid by the federal government in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956 in subventions on movement of coal produced in Nova Scotia was $8,393,952.52.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF WESTERN SECTION

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short statement regarding plans for the building of an all-Canadian natural gas pipe line.

In the government's opinion it is of the utmost urgency that the all-Canadian pipe line should get under way at once, and that the section between the Alberta-Saskatchewan border and Winnipeg be completed during the 1956 season. I believe that this opinion is shared by all parties in the house.

The resolution now before the house proposes that the government, in co-operation with the province of Alberta, build the northern Ontario section—with the province of Ontario. Did I say Alberta?

Mr. Knowles: Wrong again.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): —in co-operation with the province of Ontario, build the northern Ontario section of the all-Canadian line and lease it to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited. Both the federal and Ontario governments continue to support this proposal. It has always been understood, however, that the construction of this section will not begin until Trans-Canada is in a position to finance and build the remainder of the line between Alberta and Montreal.

During recent weeks the government has urged upon Trans-Canada the desirability of a start on the construction of the western section in 1956. The Trans-Canada company replied that they are ready to start as soon as they can arrange the necessary financing. They have all the necessary permits from Alberta and from Canada; they have gas purchase contracts with gas producers in Alberta; they have contracted for the sale of gas to consumers in Canada and the United States; and they have an option on pipe of the required 34-inch diameter, which is presently being stacked outside the pipe mills in the United States.

In spite of their best endeavours, however, they have not been able to obtain guarantees that the money necessary to finance either the whole of the line, apart from the northern Ontario section, or the western section, would be forthcoming in advance of approval by the federal power commission of their contract for the sale of gas into the United States.

What was to be done?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Should the government in effect abandon Trans-Canada by failing to extend the contract to construct and lease the northern Ontario section? In the first place this would have been unfair to the Trans-Canada company, which had just satisfied both the Alberta conservation board and the board of transport commissioners that its permits should be renewed for a further six months. In the second place, such action would have added to the delays in obtaining approval of the export of gas to the United States, which is apparently essential to the economic operation of the proposed pipe line, at least in its early stages.

Apart altogether from these important considerations, it became evident to the government that to abandon Trans-Canada now was to give up any hope of starting the western section this year and perhaps next year. The most important reason for this is that Trans-Canada has an option on the only adequate supply of 34-inch pipe available for delivery in time for laying during the 1956 construction season. My officers inform me also that the earliest delivery date for orders for 34-inch pipe placed now would be not earlier than the fourth quarter of 1957. Therefore, to abandon Trans-Canada in favour of any other private group was to abandon any hope of a start on the western section of the pipe line in 1956 and perhaps in 1957.

On the other hand, it seemed equally clear that even the government itself, if it chose to build and obtained parliamentary authority, could not get under way this year or perhaps next year unless it could reach some sort of agreement to take over Trans-Canada as a going concern, compensate the shareholders and agree to continue in effect the contracts for the sale of gas into the United States, which are related to the option on the 34-inch pipe.

After careful and prolonged consideration the government therefore asked Trans-Canada whether it would be prepared to construct the western section in 1956 if the government would advance a substantial portion, not to exceed 90 per cent, of the cost of construction, at an interest rate of 5 per cent per annum for a short period. I emphasize that the approach came from the government, not Trans-Canada. Trans-Canada was not in default. It was prepared to wait another year, if necessary, although it was anxious to get started in 1956 if that was possible. The company was unable to proceed with the construction simply because of the fact that the federal power commission had not yet approved the importation of Canadian gas into the United States, and consequently the company was unable to prove to the financial institutions that it had a financeable project.

As security the government asked the Trans-Canada company to mortgage and pledge all its properties, assets and undertakings. It also asked the shareholders of the company to give the government an option on all their shares at a price representing paid-in value less the amounts provided by Trans-Canada for the construction of the western section and interest on the government advance. In the event of foreclosure the government would have the option of taking over Trans-Canada as a going concern or of returning the shares and the assets not related to the western section or the northern Ontario section and proceeding independently of Trans-Canada.

I am pleased to be able to report that the company has agreed to this proposal and that the shareholders, all of whom have agreed in principle, are now in the process of signing the necessary documents. This proposal, if ratified by parliament within a reasonable time, means:

(1) that the western section of the all-Canadian pipe line will be built in 1956;

(2) that, if Trans-Canada is successful in financing the whole line by the date of repayment, namely March 31, 1957, the advance will be repaid and the construction of the remainder of the line will proceed as originally planned;

(3) if, on the other hand, the advance is not repaid by the due date or there is any other default, the government can take over the line and be in a position to take whatever other steps are necessary and approved by parliament to ensure speedy completion.

By this action we will free ourselves not from the assistance of United States capital and know-how, which are valuable ingredients in the building of a natural gas pipe line, but from having to await the decisions of the United States federal power commission.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

This proposal offers an opportunity for an immediate start on construction. It gives the Trans-Canada company an adequate opportunity to demonstrate that it can finance the whole of the line. It ensures that the completion of the all-Canadian pipe line will not be further delayed by uncertainties about the decision of the federal power commission. It does not commit us to public ownership, but it recognizes that if there are too many handicaps in the way of private enterprise, the government may have to take over and construct the whole of the line as a national enterprise.

Mr. Coldwell: Do it now.

Mr. Fulton: You are the biggest handicap.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Is the young man from Kamloops being very funny?

Mr. Fulton: Here he is.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am trying to make a serious statement here. It is a pity that I am not given the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Fulton: You are not succeeding very well.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): In my view the prospect of public ownership of a natural gas pipe line is not one that should arouse enthusiasm. On the other hand, if public ownership is the only way in which this great national enterprise can proceed, we should not refuse to grasp the nettle. In a country like Canada it is of the greatest importance, however, that private enterprise should be given an adequate opportunity and every reasonable facility to do the job.

Mr. Ellis: With government money.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There is still a good chance that the obstacles in the way of private financing will be cleared away before the proposed advance falls due. I believe, in particular, that the United States authority understands the importance to Canada of an early decision with respect to the application now before it for the import of gas from Canada.

I have therefore tabled a resolution in somewhat broader terms than the resolution already on the order paper, although within the same over-all financial limits. As soon as they have been signed, I shall also table the relevant agreements with the Trans-Canada company and its shareholders.

The building of the trans-Canada pipe line is a great national project, comparable in importance and in magnitude to the building of the St. Lawrence seaway. Hon. members will recall that Canada waited for many years for action by the United States that would permit the seaway project to go forward as a joint undertaking. It was only when Canada announced that this country would build the seaway independently of the United States that the project took definite form. The action proposed today is another declaration of independence by Canada, affecting the building of an all-Canadian pipe line.

Mr. Fulton: It is a treaty of surrender.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The resolution now being introduced is notice to all concerned that the all-Canadian pipe line will proceed without awaiting the action of any agency of another government.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my first comment in regard to this truly fantastic announcement is to urge the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) to reconsider now, immediately, the proposal made at the beginning of this session that this whole subject be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, or in the alternative to a select committee so this subject may be examined at once.

Mr. Bennett: Another delay.

Mr. Drew: Talk about delay comes strangely from anyone sitting on the other side behind a government which has had this chosen instrument under its control for over five years and has warned off private investors who would have undertaken, and were prepared to undertake, the development of this pipe line.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: Now, Mr. Speaker, the proposal before us is one which I submit should call for consideration because this certainly, so far as the recipient is concerned, is a case of "heads I win, tails you lose". The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) tells us that the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company has been prepared to graciously accept an offer to receive 90 per cent of the cost of construction of the easiest portion of this pipe line. The reason I am making this request in all earnestness to the Prime Minister at this point is that I do not think there is an hon. member in this house, including the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is not quite certain that there were Canadians who would have been ready to go ahead on the same basis. In fact we have before us now, belatedly, the evidence that there were at least two responsible Canadian groups ready to proceed without any such encouragement as 90 per cent of the actual cost of construction.

What is being proposed today is that this government arrange the majority financing of this venture. We have been told, without any evidence from Trans-Canada, that Canadians could not finance this. We are now told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that Canadians are going to finance it through the channel of the government, but it is Canadian money just the same. If Canadians are able to finance it this way, they could finance it the other way if they had half a chance under this government. I therefore do submit that the Prime Minister should immediately take steps either to refer this to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, which is a standing committee and could act immediately, or that a select committee be set up so that amongst others Mr. McMahon and Mr. Gairdner could be brought before that committee to explain their proposals, and also offer the opportunity to others to come forward and see what could be done.

We have the statement, which has not been satisfactorily challenged, that there are others ready to proceed without government intervention, and now the Canadian taxpayers are told that, to the extent of 90 per cent of the cost of the easiest portion of this whole line, Canadian taxpayers' money is going to do the financing. And that, of course, is going to be done to build a pipe line which will be under an organization which is 83 per cent owned by investors in the United States.

An hon. Member: What about the C.P.R.?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I heard the question asked, "What about the C.P.R.?" The C.P.R. was financed by money from outside of Canada; it was financed by money mainly from Britain. May I make it clear, in spite of the misrepresentation which has been made by certain hon. members sitting opposite, that we have at no time objected to investment from the United States.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, the anvil chorus is following instructions; the trained seals have now learned to make a sound in unison.

One of the provisions in connection with the financing of the Canadian Pacific was that the majority of the directors and the president at all times must be British subjects. That was incorporated in the statute. At that time there was no separate Canadian citizenship, and it was clearly understood that that related to Canadian citizenship. That has always been observed, and the hon. member who interjected the question about the C.P.R. might well point out to his colleagues that if any similar method of financing is to be employed by private investment in this way it would be well for the government to introduce into the legislation a similar provision that the president and a majority of the board of directors must at all times be citizens of Canada. That certainly will be particularly true if the taxpayers' money is to be used to finance this venture, as is now suggested.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, with that facility that he has in offering promises which are not subsequently fulfilled, has said, "We free ourselves from the necessity of having to wait for the permission of the federal power commission." They free themselves from no such necessity whatever. He has made it clear again today that the eastern part of this line carrying the gas into Ontario and Quebec is dependent upon the permission of the federal power commission. They free themselves in no way from that permission. In fact they make it much more likely that the decision will be delayed and that it will be very strenuously fought, because one of the arguments that has been put up is that this is a government-subsidized venture which they do not want to have competing with their lines in the United States. Here certainly will be subsidy on a grand scale, 90 per cent of the cost.

When the Minister of Trade and Commerce says, "What were we to do?" I say, "Well, months ago they could have invited, as we suggested in this house, the proposals by others, or even by the Trans-Canada itself, under an appropriate organization, to do this job as a Canadian job and with the assurance that the president and a majority of the directors at all times would be Canadians."

Do not let anyone pretend for a moment that the fact that a majority of the directors at this time are Canadians has anything whatever to do with the control of this company. Those directors hold one share each. The real holdings in this case are in the hands of large organizations which undoubtedly are perfectly legitimate organizations in their own field. Make no mistake about it, however. We have the anomaly here that we have been told that Canadians cannot finance this, and now the government says, whether you like it or not, you Canadians are going to finance it, but you are going to finance it in the way that the government deems best.

Mr. Diefenbaker: By bailing them out.

Mr. Drew: What this really amounts to is that the government, and now the caucus of the Liberal party, as indicated by their trained applause, have agreed to bail out the Minister of Trade and Commerce from the confusion into which he got himself by the course he has followed. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce can be too expensive a luxury for Canada under circumstances of that kind.

The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that all those who have so roundly applauded this strange and unique proposal for making Canadians finance a United States-controlled venture did not know about it until late this morning. It is wonderful that they were able to come to a decision so much more quickly than the government as to the correctness of this proposal.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this proposal is one which calls for examination. It is not going to delay the building of this pipe line. This can be done speedily. There is a standing committee which could be set up tomorrow to start this inquiry. Let us have the facts; we have not the facts now.

Mr. Bennett: I'll say you haven't.

Mr. Rowe: You got them only this morning.

Mr. Drew: The hon. member for Grey North very wisely says, "You haven't got the facts". He did not have them until this morning, either.

Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I did not say that. The Leader of the Opposition said, "We haven't got the facts", and I said that was obvious.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, the remark stands exactly as it was put on the record. The hon. member for Grey North who now suggests that others should have had this information is one of those who came to such a speedy decision when the whip was cracked this morning in the Liberal caucus.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that he was trying to make a serious statement. It is a serious statement, one of the most serious that has been made in this house. What this amounts to is an invitation—

An hon. Member: Why don't you try one some time?

Mr. Drew: —to investors in the United States to come to Canada and be financed to the extent of 90 cents of every dollar, and still retain control over the investment under terms that would be entirely satisfactory to them. Now, let us by all means have investment from the United States—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: It was not so loud this time.

Mr. Rowe: They are quietening down; they are beginning to learn.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a little different kind of applause this time.

Mr. Drew: —but let us have that investment under terms which assure effective supervision and control for Canadians in relation to one of the most important of our resources, and by all means let us have this investment on a basis that represents real investment from the United States. Let us not be told that we are gaining some advantage when the government announces that Canadians are going to finance this through the channel of the government and then, if the company can go ahead, get control of the whole venture after the pipe line has been completed with Canadian public money; a strange way indeed of financing a venture of this kind. This is surely very attractive to everyone but Canadian investors. Where is there a single group of Canadian inyestors who have been offered such attractive terms as these?

I am making a serious statement, just exactly as the Minister of Trade and Commerce did, and I am saying that in relation to such a unique and fantastic proposal it is the obligation of the Prime Minister to avail himself of the machinery already set up by parliament and refer this for immediate consideration to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines so the facts may be obtained from Mr. McMahon, from Mr. Gairdner and from others, and that we may learn what actually lies behind this strange proposal.

It would, I submit, be a strange thing, after more than five years' delay, if we were called upon to deal with this matter without referring it to the committee set up for that purpose in the usual way.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): The Minister of Trade and Commerce, in introducing this proposal into the house this afternoon, has called this a great national undertaking—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Disaster.

Mr. Coldwell: —and as such I and many others in this house and in the country regard it. As a great national undertaking it is being undertaken today, if this proposal is approved by the House of Commons, by corporations which to the extent of 83·5 per cent are under the control of powerful United States gas and oil companies. How can that be a great national undertaking? As such I want to regard it.

The minister also said that private enterprise should be given an adequate chance to carry out this great proposal. Private enterprise? When we agree that the government of Canada and the government of Ontario, if the government of Ontario still agrees, will finance the undertaking of the unproductive area of the line from Ontario to Manitoba? Now we have this strange proposition of the government coming before this house and telling us that not only shall we finance with Ontario the whole of that pipe line through that region, but we are also going to finance, indirectly or directly, 90 per cent of the western portion of this line.

Mr. Knowles: Private enterprise!

Mr. Coldwell: Private enterprise? Abracadabra! What do we find? I shall take a rough average. At the moment we find that 95 or 96 per cent of the construction of this Canada gas pipe line is to be undertaken, one way or the other, by the public of Canada. How ridiculous can this House of Commons become? How great a sell-out can the government make of the people of Canada? I am convinced that if they placed this proposition before the people of Canada, either by plebiscite or in a general election, it would be turned down completely.

I have been in this house for 20 years. I have read the history of Canada from confederation. I remember the great attempts that were made by the predecessors of this government to retain the integrity of this country economically, socially and politically, and I want to say to my hon. friends that never in the history of this country has there been a proposal before this house which would tend to defeat the independence and economic integrity of this country as this one does.

I say to the government and to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, let them go before the people of Canada at this time to see what will happen to them. I am convinced, from correspondence and from people with whom I am in contact, that there was never a more unpopular proposition put before the people of Canada than this.

Ladies and gentlemen, I want to say that the opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Coldwell: Very fortunately for this parliament, I can say "ladies and gentlemen." I wish we had more ladies in this house. But, hon. gentlemen, if this were placed before the people of Canada I am certain that the people of Canada would return a verdict of no confidence in the government.

Pipe Lines

The Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated very clearly that under certain circumstances it might be essential to take this over as a public undertaking. If we are going to finance, through the province of Ontario and through this parliament of Canada, some 95 or 96 per cent of the cost of this undertaking at the present time, why not do it as a completely public undertaking? Why not go back to the original proposal of the premier of Ontario that the government of Canada and the governments of the provinces concerned should together build this pipe line, and that each province should distribute the gas under an organization which it cares to set up?

In Ontario we have the power commission of this province, of which every Ontario member of parliament or of the legislature is very proud indeed, distributing electric power. In my province of Saskatchewan we have a similar power commission distributing electric power, and the province of Saskatchewan already has taken up the option granted by the Manyberries field owners of gas in Alberta and of gas within the province of Saskatchewan, so they are going to build their own pipe line and distribute gas in that province to their own people under their own authority, the provincial power commission. So I say to my hon. friends that we have in Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and in Ontario the machinery ready to distribute the gas.

My hon. friends on the other side of the house say this government does not wish to be involved in negotiations with various municipalities, and with various cities and towns in the distribution of gas. The federal government does not have to be involved in that respect. Already the machinery has been set up in several of our provinces. Instead of providing the finances for United States corporations controlling 83·5 per cent of this particular project, why not do this as a Canadian undertaking, under Canadian auspices, with Canadian ownership, with Canadian guidance, and serve the Canadian people without building enormous profits for private United States economic buccaneers?

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that the members of this group are glad the decision has finally been made to make an immediate start on the western leg of the pipe line. We reserve any further comments until such time as the measure comes before the house.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

HAMILTON AND DISTRICT TRADES AND LABOUR COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): May I address a question to the Postmaster General? Can the Postmaster General tell me when the motion that was adopted as an order for the production of papers on April 16 will be tabled? That was No. 58.

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): I shall look into the matter. I thought it had been tabled. I know it was prepared.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RAILWAYS AND NON-OPERATING UNIONS—REPORTED BREAKDOWN OF MEETING OF MAY 8

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the breakdown of this morning's discussions between the railway companies and the union representatives, will the government hold a conference with the railway companies so as to impress upon them the desirability of accepting the majority report of the conciliation board?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that the meeting in Montreal this morning was discontinued. I have also been informed that I shall be hearing from the two parties concerned later. Until then I have no comment to make.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister supplementary to the question I asked of the Minister of Labour. In view of the compulsion imposed upon railway workers in 1950 and threatened by the government once or twice since, just what attitude does the government take toward the railway companies in the light of their refusal to go along with the report of the conciliation board? Does responsibility not now rest with the government itself?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The responsibility does not rest with the government itself, legally or technically, but the government does feel that this parliament has a responsibility to the Canadian people in respect of the operation of transportation services.

Mr. Knowles: Will the Prime Minister look into the desirability of impressing upon the railways the importance of accepting the report of the conciliation board?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Well, Mr. Speaker, no decision has been reached on that point, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that we have been giving earnest consideration to the problem and we still hope there will be no interruption in transportation services.

STATEMENT REGARDING IMPENDING SEAMEN'S STRIKE ON GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. D. Weaver (Churchill): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the importance to western Canada of the movement of grain at this time, would the Minister of Labour make a statement regarding the reported shipping strike on the great lakes?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Churchill for sending me notice of his question. As this dispute has reached an interesting stage in its development, I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to give the house a fairly full account of the background of the dispute.

On December 14, 1955, the association of lake carriers representing Canada Steamship Lines Limited, Colonial Steamships Limited, N. M. Paterson and Sons Limited, Upper Lakes and St. Lawrence Transportation Company Limited, Hall Corporation of Canada, Mohawk Navigation Company Limited and Beaconsfield Steamships Limited, served notice on the seafarers' international union of North America, Canadian district, requesting the union to commence collective bargaining.

On January 12, 1956, the seafarers' international union of North America, Canadian district, requested the services of a conciliation officer and listed the issues in dispute which were: (1) A change-over from the traditional system of payment by the month to payment by the hour and also an increase in wages. The union asked for a schedule of hourly rates ranging from $1.50 per hour to $2.03 per hour, depending on classifications. (2) Fourteen days annual vacation with basic pay to be computed on a daily basis, vacation pay to commence on the first day for which wages are paid and conclude on the last day for which wages are paid. (3) Eight statutory holidays to be paid for at the rates established for work performed on Saturdays and Sundays. (4) Normal work week shall be the five week days of eight hours per day, Monday through Friday. (5) There shall be paid to those whose work exceeds 40 hours payment of double the basic hourly rate. (6) A company contribution of 20 cents per day per man to the welfare plan.

Inquiries of the Ministry

On January 16, 1956, I appointed a conciliation officer. On January 27, 1956, the conciliation officer reported to me that he was not able to bring the parties to a settlement, and he recommended that a conciliation board be established. On January 31, 1956, a conciliation board was established. The board was under the chairmanship of His Honour Judge Walter Little of Parry Sound, Ontario. The other two members were J. Clifford Adams, Q.C., and John Raymond, nominees of the companies and union respectively.

The board met in Toronto on March 14 and in Montreal on March 28 and 29 and submitted its report on April 17, 1956. The report of the board stated that there were three issues between the parties which offered difficulty of settlement, these being:

(a) The schedule of hourly rates involving a shift from a monthly basis of payment to an hourly basis of payment, and calling for substantial increases in rates of remuneration.

(b) Limitation on hours of work.

(c) Increased payment for overtime work.

The board attempted to persuade the parties to enter into negotiations with respect to these major items with the following results:

(a) The union representative insisted that the companies concede the hourly method of payment instead of the monthly method before negotiations could commence.

(b) Counsel for the companies stated that they were prepared to offer a reasonable increase and suggested that consideration of the hourly or monthly method of remuneration should be deferred without prejudice pending determination of the amount of wage increase acceptable. The wage increase would be tabled before the board if the union would admit that some substantial reduction in the total increase demanded would be acceptable.

(c) The union would not agree to defer consideration of the method of payment, and would not, the board said, indicate even privately to the board what modifications, if any, in its original proposal it was prepared to accept.

The board in its report said in part:

The union appeared to be under the impression that it would seriously prejudice its position if it were to discuss the amount of total increase without first having obtained the agreement of the companies to an hourly basis of payment. Without such prior commitment the union did not appear to be interested in finding out what amount of increase the companies thought was reasonable.

Under these circumstances the board could not make any progress towards conciliating the dispute and, therefore, feel obliged to conclude the proceedings by making this report.

With respect to most of the issues, as indicated above, we do not believe that the parties would have any difficulty in resolving them, and probably any comments from this board would not assist the parties. With respect to the three major items referred to above, the material filed with us does not establish any basis upon which we could make specific or positive recommendations.

These parties have been in contractual relationships for several years and the present remuneration, working conditions and methods of computing pay are all the result of previous collective bargaining between these parties. It would require the most cogent and compelling evidence to justify changes in these arrangements which would amount to approximately 98 per cent of the present labour costs of the companies involved. We are unable to find such evidence in the material presented to us. On the other hand, the companies appear disposed to make a reasonable increase. Under the circumstances we do not think it proper to press the companies to disclose the amount of increase which they consider reasonable.

It is obvious to us that these parties must resume direct negotiations at some time in the near future, and that it is probably better for all concerned if any offer of increase which the companies might wish to make should be withheld until such time as there is reasonable prospect of direct negotiations being resumed on a normal and usual basis.

On May 7, which was yesterday—

Mr. Speaker: Is there not some other way to get this information on the record? I see there are two more pages. Perhaps the minister could summarize, or perhaps he could ask for the unanimous consent of the house to place the material on the record.

Mr. Rowe: Take the brief as read.

Mr. Gregg: I should like to have this statement complete because I do not think the information is within the knowledge of most hon. members. However, if it is the will of the house I would be quite willing to have the three telegrams I was proposing to quote, and which are dated yesterday, placed on the record.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that hon. members would like to have the information. I am sorry I interrupted. The minister may go ahead and complete the statement. I take it that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would like to see the end of the statement.

Mr. Rowe: Everybody would.

Mr. Brooks: We all would.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege, I think that might be misunderstood. I should like to hear the whole of the statement.

Mr. Rowe: Answer the question fully.

Mr. Gregg: Yesterday, May 7, I received the following telegram from Mr. Hal C. Banks of the union.

Regret to inform you that the unlicensed personnel employed by N. M. Paterson and Sons Limited and Upper Lakes and St. Lawrence Transportation Company Limited have voted on a referendum ballot by a majority of 98 per cent to withdraw from the service and call a legal strike on the above companies to commence noon Thursday May 10th, 1956. The above companies are the only lakes companies that will be affected at this point in so far as this union is concerned. Respectfully offer our wholehearted support and assistance in any efforts that you may deem necessary to avoid this very serious development.

On the same day—that is yesterday, May 7—I received from Mr. T. R. McLagan for the employers the following telegram:

The negotiating committee of the Association of Lake Carriers met with the bargaining committee of the Seafarers International Union at Montreal today as arranged. During the course of the meeting the association made an offer of settlement of the dispute which the union rejected. The union maintains its original position and informs the association that the unlicensed personnel employed by N. M. Paterson and Sons and Upper Lakes and St. Lawrence Transportation Company Limited would strike at noon on tenth of May. This association through its bargaining committee stands ready to continue negotiation with a view to effecting a settlement of the dispute and avoiding a major transportation crisis.

Late yesterday, May 7, to the telegram received from the representative of the union I replied as follows:

I have your wire of this date advising of the union's intention to have the unlicensed personnel represented by your union employed by N. M. Paterson and Sons and Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Transportation Company Limited embark upon a strike effective at noon tenth May. I appreciate your offer to co-operate in an effort to effect settlement of the dispute. This dispute is one between your union and the Association of Lake Carriers comprising seven great lakes shipping companies including the two companies upon whom strike notices have been served. In circumstances there is serious danger that the result of action you are proposing to take would be the tie-up of all shipping operated by the companies comprising the Lake Carriers Association. This development would bring serious economic loss to many Canadian industries and to their employees as well as to western farmers in preventing the movement of grain from western Canada to eastern Canadian ports. I am advised that the bargaining committee representing the association at its meeting with your union today made a definite proposal for a settlement which your union has rejected while not moving from its original demands. In my view this dispute should be capable of peaceful settlement and to this end I am prepared to provide mediation service to your union and the association but the strike deadline which you have set does not permit sufficient time for adequate mediation. In the circumstances I would appreciate your agreement to postpone strike action pending mediation which I am prepared to arrange forthwith.

To that wire I have had no reply.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—DECISION OF FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that he has been let in on the secret by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), is he in a position to say whether or not the canonized promoters of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines have advised the government that they cannot complete that portion of the line from Winnipeg to Ontario and Quebec unless they have the consent of the federal power commission of the United States to the exportation of gas to the United States? If so, is he in a position to say when it may be expected that the power commission in the United States is going to give Canada permission to do with its own resources what should be done?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman's question is framed in such language that I cannot make an adequate reply on the orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if I have not made my question clear, I shall restate it. I asked the Prime Minister this question. Have the promoters of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines advised the government that they cannot proceed from Winnipeg on unless they have the permission of the federal power commission of the United States? That is a question to which the people of Canada have a right to know the answer. I also asked when it might be expected that that decision will be made.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, the promoters of Trans-Canada have given no such information to the government. I am not in a position to say when the decision of the federal power commission will be made. It is because of that uncertainty that the arrangement announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce today was made, in order to ensure the start of construction this year and to provide for that start no matter when or what kind of decision the federal power commission gives.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have another question. Has Trans-Canada Pipe Lines given to the government the assurance that, regardless of the decision of the United States federal power commission, it will not only start the 180 miles for which it has ordered the necessary pipe but will go ahead to Winnipeg and on?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Trans-Canada Pipe Lines could not give any other assurance to the government than by demonstrating to the government that it had completed the financial arrangements that would provide for the construction of the whole pipe line.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What are those arrangements?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The arrangements that they can obtain the finances required to pay for a line that is estimated to cost something like $375 million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: From whom? From whom will they get it? From the government of Canada?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I do not know. They are not going to get it from me.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: I see there are now on their feet four hon. members who rose at the same time. I presume they all wish to ask supplementary questions. I merely want to ask hon. members to consider the fact that in the last few days we have had several questions asked on the measure about which a statement was made today. A statement was made today and a spokeman for each party spoke in reply to the statement, commenting upon it. That statement was an announcement that in Votes and Proceedings there is to be placed a new resolution. On that resolution we shall, as hon. members know, go into committee of the whole where hon. members may stand up and ask questions, may speak for 30 minutes at a time, and may speak as often as they wish. Do they wish me to leave the chair now on the resolution that is on the order paper?

An hon. Member: Surely.

Mr. Speaker: Yes; that is what they would like to do. Can they not wait until that resolution is before us in committee of the whole? What are they going to do when they are in committee of the whole? They will not have any more questions to ask.

Mr. Knowles: What a hope!

Mr. Fulton: Yes, they will.

An hon. Member: They will have plenty of questions.

Mr. Speaker: Having said that, I will allow the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar to proceed but I will just say this. Let us not abuse the rules. There are many other subjects about which we may ask questions. Why duplicate the work? Why not wait until the house is in committee of the whole on the resolution? Then all hon. members will have every opportunity to ask questions.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): My question is a simple one. I was going to ask the Prime Minister whether, the government having approved of the initial step to build the trans-Canada pipe line by agreeing to the financing of the western end, there is any time limit placed on Trans-Canada Pipe Lines as to the conclusion of the entire project? I think that is an extremely important matter.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): At the present time the only extension they have obtained is to November 1. Under the resolution that has now been placed before the Clerk to be printed in Votes and Proceedings the amounts advanced for the construction of the western section would have to be repaid by March 31, 1957.

Mr. Coldwell: What I am interested in is this. When will the entire project be completed if this is the initial step?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The other agreement which was tabled in the house on January 11, I think it was—

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): —is not changed otherwise than as expressly provided in the new agreement which will be tabled as soon as it has been signed. There is no arrangement for any further extension. But as the hon. gentleman knows, the pipe situation is an extremely tight one. It was felt that if we did not make arrangements that would allow advantage to be taken of the provisions that have been made for obtaining pipe this season, it might not be until the fourth quarter of next year or early in 1958 that this kind of pipe could be obtained.

Mr. Diefenbaker: From uncertainty to uncertainty.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, if he will accept a question from the young man from Kamloops.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The comedian from Kamloops.

Mr. Fulton: In view of the terms of the statement the minister has made, and in view of the stand taken by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Fulton: —is not the fulfilment of the government's scheme for a trans-Canada pipe line owned by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited made entirely dependent on approval of Washington of the application now before the federal power commission?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Not at all. The possibility of an all-Canadian pipe line owned by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited depends wholly upon the ability of the Trans-Canada company to refund the government's advance prior to March 31 next year; otherwise Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited will have no further association with the project.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the loan about which we have been informed this afternoon is repayable by March 31 next, can the minister suggest any other way in which it can be repaid except by the completion of the whole financing by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, it could be repaid by the financing of the western portion if that were possible.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FEDERAL GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of a question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam yesterday. In view of the fact that within less than 24 hours five additional Canadian universities have announced an increase in student fees, will the Prime Minister assure the house that the government will give immediate consideration to an increase in university grants?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The government is always prepared to give consideration to anything that is of public interest, but I cannot give any more specific assurance than what I have just said.

SHORTAGE OF ENGINEERS AND SCIENTISTS —REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the shortage of scientists, engineers and technicians in Canada which was revealed when the estimates of the Department of Labour and the Department of External Affairs were under consideration, can the Prime Minister advise the house what steps are being taken by the government to ascertain how great this shortage is? What is being planned by the government in order to increase the output of these qualified people in Canada?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There is nothing being planned at this moment in order to have a greater output from our Canadian institutions of learning, which institutions, of course, are under provincial jurisdiction.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN BUILDING DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the government is prepared to subsidize foreigners in building pipe lines—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): —is the government prepared to subsidize Canadians to build the Saskatchewan river dam project?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I am sorry; I was not able to hear the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I am happy to repeat it. The question I asked was this. Since the government is prepared to subsidize foreigners to build pipe lines, is the government prepared to subsidize Canadians to build the Saskatchewan river dam project?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The government has no knowledge of any proposal by Canadians to build the South Saskatchewan dam project.

Mr. Argue: The people who live in Saskatchewan are Canadians.

Mr. Coldwell: The Saskatchewan government is a Canadian government.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The Saskatchewan government is a Canadian government, but the government of Saskatchewan would like the government of Canada to build the South Saskatchewan dam. I am not prepared to admit that the government is ready to subsidize foreigners to build pipe lines.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PIPE LINES—PROCEDURE RESPECTING RESOLUTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the Minister of Finance, in his capacity as leader of the house, whether the placing on the order paper, and particularly proceeding with the debate thereafter, of the resolution to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce referred today will necessitate withdrawal of the resolution on pipe lines now on the order paper.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): My understanding is that the present resolution may be proceeded with despite the fact there is another resolution on the order paper having to do with part of the matter covered by the new resolution. It is perhaps a matter of opinion whether or not the former resolution ought to be disposed of at the same time, but in my own opinion it is not necessary as long as you call the one and deal with it.

Mr. Hees: Could the minister indicate to the house when one of the pipe-line resolutions will be brought forward for debate?

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we intend to bring it forward at the earliest possible moment. I am not sure yet whether that will be Thursday or Friday.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister which of the two resolutions it will be the intention of the government to proceed with first in relation to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines?

Mr. Harris: The one that was tabled today, sir.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—REPORTED SALE OF SABRE AIRCRAFT BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like him to say whether there is any foundation for the report in the New York Post that the Canadian government has agreed to the shipment to Israel of 24 Sabre aircraft for which the sale price is said to be $11 million.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no foundation for that report.

FLOODS

MANITOBA—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): May I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture? Has the minister's attention been drawn to a recent press dispatch referring to a statement by the premier of Manitoba to the effect that most of the cost of repairing the dikes along the Assiniboine river will be paid by the federal government? If this report is correct, will the same consideration be given to other areas in Manitoba where flood damages have occurred this year?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question my attention has been drawn to a news item which appeared in the Winnipeg Tribune on May 2, 1956, that was somewhat along the lines of the suggestion made in the question. The P.F.R.A. has been rebuilding dikes originally built by the Department of Public Works along the Assiniboine river near Portage la Prairie. The work is not yet completed. I instructed the P.F.R.A. to be on hand when floods were possible to protect the work already done and prevent, so far as possible, any extension of any break which already may have developed in the dike. The necessary work is being charged up to the Assiniboine river vote No. 43.

With regard to the second part of the question, I do not know of any similar circumstances in other areas in Manitoba. We do protect work undertaken under P.F.R.A. until that work is completed.

POWER

BEECHWOOD PROJECT, NEW BRUNSWICK—
REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF FEDERAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): In view of the fact that the federal government intends to lend money for the building of this trans-Canada pipe line, which I am sure will be of no help to the maritime provinces, would the government reconsider its refusal to guarantee the bonds of the province of New Brunswick for the development of the Beechwood project on the Saint John river, which would be of great benefit to that province? I was directing the question to the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The Beechwood project has been financed on the credit of the province of New Brunswick, which I think both the hon. gentleman and I are happy to see is as solid as it proved to be when that loan was undertaken.

Mr. Brooks: It was done after the refusal of the federal government to assist.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There seemed to be no need of financial assistance. There was co-operation between the provincial government and the experts, I think, of the Department of Finance as to the way in which the financing of that project could be most conveniently arranged. I think there are other projects now that will have to be considered, and if there are projects that seem to be really sound and helpful they will be given very sympathetic consideration.

Mr. Fulton: And the reason there was not any need for financial assistance was that in this case they were Canadians.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Probably they were such Canadians as enjoyed the credit that enabled them to obtain on the financial markets the amounts that were required for the enterprise they had in view.

Mr. Knowles: Unlike the trans-Canada pipe line promoters.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. Brooks: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Did not the province of New Brunswick ask the federal government for assistance in constructing the Beechwood project, and at that time did they not feel they needed assistance in the matter of backing their bonds, and it was only when this was refused—

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I saw a very voluminous report that was sent to this government by the government of the province of New Brunswick, but it did not to my lay mind seem to contain any project that it would be proper to recommend to the house to make appropriations for. It was a preliminary survey, but there was nothing concrete that could be dealt with at that time. I have had several interviews with the premier of New Brunswick and I understood that the Beechwood project was proceeding in a satisfactory way, but it was the hope of the government of New Brunswick that much more power than would be available from the Beechwood project could be economically developed in some part of the Saint John river basin.

Mr. Brooks: There is another question I should like to ask. I do not want a false impression to be left in this house. The reason the province of New Brunswick asked for assistance was that they could get cheaper money if the federal government backed their bonds.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I ask hon. members to give the hon. member for Royal a chance to be heard.

Mr. Brooks: My question to the Prime Minister is this. Was not the reason for asking the federal government to assist that the province could not borrow money as cheaply as could the federal government. If they borrowed it from the federal government it would mean cheaper power for the province of New Brunswick. The reason was not that it was not possible for them to raise the money.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Well, I frankly would not want to deny the implications of the hon. gentleman's question, but from memory I would not want to confirm them because I have no recollection that there was the suggestion made by the government of the province of New Brunswick that they would thereby obtain money at a cheaper rate. There have been suggestions that there should be money provided by the federal government for all kinds of provincial undertakings at low rates of interest, not just the rates at which the money could be obtained by the federal government itself but such rates as were in force, for instance, when the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act was in force.

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Did the government of New Brunswick not specifically ask the federal government to back its Beechwood project bonds so it could obtain money considerably cheaper than otherwise?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I do not think that is so, Mr. Speaker. I would not want to be positive, because there have been so many different forms of requests for assistance that from memory I would not want to be absolutely positive; but I have no recollection that there was any suggestion at any time that the federal government, to use the expression of the hon. gentleman, back the bonds of the province of New Brunswick.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

AMENDMENTS TO ENLARGE CLASSES OF LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, May 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 165, to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act—Mr. Harris—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 5—Loans, investments and guarantees.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister, or the parliamentary assistant, could inform the committee if it is the intention under this amendment, which reads—> —where in the opinion of the board or of an officer authorized for that purpose by the board . . .

—that such an officer would be designated at each of the offices of the company in Canada.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): My hon. friend knows that under the present legislation each and every loan must be approved by the board of directors. It is thought that, as is the custom in the making of commercial bank loans, local offices should now be able to make the complete applications up to certain limits. Now, this legislation will permit the board to send down to its district offices directions as to the limits of their local lending authority. After they have completed a loan it will, of course, be passed on from the district office to the general manager and in turn to the board of directors.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Does this mean that each local office manager will have a certain amount of discretionary power to approve a loan application at his level without submitting it to the head office?

Mr. Benidickson: That is correct, within certain limitations to be fixed.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Can the parliamentary assistant give us any idea as to the limits which are allotted to the sub-offices of the bank? It seems to me that this amendment might be to no purpose whatsoever if in fact the discretionary limit of the bank branch manager were so low that there would be very few loans that he could actually make himself?

Mr. Benidickson: No. The act provides that this will be left to the discretion of the board of directors. My information is that they have not yet drafted their instructions in this respect. Naturally, they are awaiting the decision of this house as to their right to delegate.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I should like to leave this thought with the parliamentary assistant, Mr. Chairman. Unless an adequate limit is allotted to the branch manager then we are going to be right back in the same position that existed before, and very little benefit will be obtained from this section. Certainly, if some of the limits that I have heard about, $5,000 or something like that, are to be continued in the future, then obviously we shall get no benefit out of this part of the section whatsoever.

Mr. Macdonnell: Will the parliamentary assistant not agree that the tenor of the conversation which took place in the committee was that it was recognized that there should be real delegation and that it was thought we may expect it will be done in such a way as to give real power, not just a trivial delegation to the local representatives.

Mr. Benidickson: Would my hon. friend care to give us his own judgment as to the amount of delegation that he thinks would be appropriate in the circumstances? We have, of course, available to us the report of the bank. We know that 240 loans were authorized under the amount of $25,000. That gives us a bit of a guide. In the loan area of $5,000 and under only eleven credits have been authorized to date, so that an authorization limited to $5,000 is not very important. Authorization in the area from $1 to $25,000, as I say, would have involved about 240 loans.

Mr. Macdonnell: I will give my opinion in general terms. I would have thought it should be substantially more than $5,000; I would have thought that $25,000 would have been not unreasonable. I do not know if that will please my colleague the hon. member for York West.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I do believe that the larger branches of the chartered banks, that is the main branches in the large cities, have provided discriminatory powers up to $25,000. My contact with the personnel of the I.D.B. indicates that these men are of the highest calibre. I do not think there should be any doubt about an authority granted to them up to $25,000. I think it would be a source of a great deal of satisfaction knowing they are going through under the direction of efficient men.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not think any member of the banking and commerce committee was quite so specific and I am sure the board of directors will be grateful for the comments of the hon. members for Greenwood and York West on this point.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, these figures may have been given in the committee but since I am not a member of that committee perhaps the parliamentary assistant would say how many loans are presently operative under sub-section 2 in excess of $200,000 each?

Mr. Benidickson: As I recall it, the total authorization was approximately $35 million or $38 million and of course since the authorization some have been paid. I think the present outstanding for loans above $200,000 would be in the neighbourhood of $25 million.

Mrs. Fairclough: Well, Mr. Chairman, that is not precisely my question. My question was how many individual loans are there. It would be quite conceivable that the whole amount could be one loan. How many loans are there under that section?

Mr. Benidickson: At the end of the fiscal year 1955, which is the last official report, there were 62 loans over $200,000 had been authorized.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Chairman, during the hearing before the banking and commerce committee I asked the president of the bank about this increase in the total of loans over $200,000 which were to be permitted and asked him if he expected that the bulk of the increase in their activities would take place within that scope. He was not able to give me a very conclusive answer in that regard but it occurred to me at the time that the reason the limit has been raised to $75 million must surely be because there is an anticipation of more demands for loans of $200,000 or more.

That brings me to the point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, and it is this. It seems to me regrettable that this section did not include either an increase in the bank's power to loan in relation to its capital stock and its reserves or an increase in the capitalization of the bank. I was disappointed that that was not done particularly in light of the statements the president has been making in various places where he has regretted the hesitation of Canadian investors to get into productive enterprise.

When I read those statements it occurred to me that this was the logical instrument by which to accomplish that. I had hoped that when the bill came before us there would be some amendment which would increase the total lending capacity of the bank.

I noted in answers to questions that Mr. Coyne told us to this date none of the bank's debentures have been sold on the public market; they have all been sold to the Bank of Canada. While the operations of the bank are sufficiently confined in size, that procedure makes very little monetary effect on the economy, of course, but if the industrial development bank were to be enlarged to perhaps fulfil what Mr. Coyne apparently considers—in speeches outside the house and not in speaking in the capacity of president of the industrial development bank—would be a rechannelling of Canadian investment, it would seem to me that the bank would have to follow another policy which it is empowered to do but which it has never done and that is to place its securities on the market, in order to be effective. It seems to me to need a much larger scope.

We have had a lot of discussion and this afternoon reference was made to the desirability or otherwise of United States investment in connection with the industrial development bank and the role it plays in our economy. It might be worth while to point out the nature of much of this United States investment about which there has been so much talk.

It has often been argued, of course, that we should welcome United States investment on the analogy of the development of the United States in which British capital invested in very large quantities in the early days of that country when it was developing its economy, but there has been a very different type of investment taking place in Canada.

The volume of United States investment that is equity investment is far in excess of the volume of British capital in the early days in the United States that was equity investment. The vast bulk of British investment was in the form of portfolio investment and as a consequence United States financiers as their economy expanded were able to assume control of the enterprises that had been started by British investment. That is not the case so far as we are concerned.

In 1926, of the total of United States investment in Canada 44 per cent was direct investment carrying control and 56 per cent was portfolio investment carrying no control. At the end of 1954 the position was reversed and we had 60 per cent of all United States investment in Canada direct and involving control and only 40 per cent consisting of non-control, portfolio investment.

On the basis of that, I do not think we should attack our United States neighbours for having been a little more enterprising and courageous than those who are in control of the Canadian pools of investment capital. I would suggest, sir, that the government has the opportunity in this development bank to cope with that situation and to cater, if you like, to the cautious nature of Canadian investors by presenting them with debentures backed by the government of Canada and to channel those funds into the sort of industrial development we require here and in the form of the equity investment which will leave control in the hands of Canadian nationals.

By the time the next session rolls around I hope the government will give some consideration to this. I deplore the undiscriminating attacks on United States investments unless we are offering some constructive proposal to offset the obvious danger. I think we all recognize that there are dangers; we may feel they are exaggerated sometimes but there are dangers there and we should have some constructive policy.

The appeals of such people as Mr. Coyne and various bankers in Canada to Canadian investors do not seem to have been very effective. They are still determined to confine the major part of their operations to the safer type of portfolio investment so I think we have to face that situation and seek some other means to channel investment into productive enterprises that will be owned by Canadian nationals and will be in the control of the nationals of this country.

I do not know whether there is any plan in the minds of the bank's management to use the larger powers they have for placing investments in different fields to accomplish that purpose on a small scale, but I would point out that no matter what they decide under the present legislation their power to do anything very effective is severely limited. I can think of no better way in which the government of Canada could cope with this problem of United States equity investment. One could, of course, this afternoon draw some rather striking contrasts between the manner in which government agencies finance one type of proposition and are prepared to finance other types of proposition but I shall forbear from doing that and conclude by saying that I hope that the possibilities of the industrial development bank will be realized by the government before we meet in the next session of parliament.

Mr. Holowach: There is one comment I should like to make on this item, and I should like to stress its importance to the minister. Can the minister assure us that in future, whenever a question of priorities or preference arises with respect to applications for loans, it is the small businessman who will get the credit? The reason why I say that is this. When we consider the large amounts that are made available and the increase in the amount of loans over $200,000 that are to be made, I am afraid we are drifting away from the initial intent for which this industrial development bank was created.

I have no beef against the large corporations being allowed to use the bank for loans, but it seems to me that we are moving away from the initial intent as set out in the preamble to the act when we allow big business to use the services of the industrial development bank to become bigger yet and at the same time we ignore the problem of the small businessmen who face a staggering credit problem at the present time. I should like to stress that point and bring it to the minister's attention, because it seems to me that the small businessman today has no other place to turn, with the tightening money policy of the government, except to the industrial development bank.

Mrs. Fairclough: Further to the question I asked previously, I wonder whether the parliamentary assistant would have a record of the amount of the largest single loan presently outstanding.

Mr. Benidickson: No, I cannot give information as to the largest amount presently outstanding. I can say from memory of the testimony of the president before the committee that the largest loan ever made was $4 million, which was made at the time of the outbreak of the Korean war and was for a particular defence promotion object. My recollection is that, apart from that, we had evidence that there were probably only five or six loans that had ever been made over $1 million, but I do not have the figure of what is outstanding at the present moment.

Mrs. Fairclough: I would point out that the total amount under subsection 2 is presently some $38 million, I believe the parliamentary assistant said. If this covers 62 loans, then the average is over $600,000, and certainly a great many of those must be in the $200,000 to $500,000 category. It would look as though there must be some very substantial loans, certainly hovering around the $1 million mark. As a matter of interest, I wonder if the parliamentary assistant could supply that information.

Mr. Benidickson: No, I have not that information, but I think I could get the statistics for my hon. friend.

Mrs. Fairclough: As a matter of interest, I would appreciate that.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I have one further question on this clause. I know it was referred to in the committee. It is with regard to the amendment to "or from a shareholder of the corporation." I understand it is not good banking practice to take as security shares from a shareholder of a company to whom the credit is going to be advanced. Is this going to be restricted solely to a situation where there has been default of some kind and the necessity arises for the bank taking over control of a company, or is it the intention to use the shares of an individual in the company as collateral to loan to the company?

Mr. Benidickson: I think the most likely use of this new provision would be under circumstances where there were not treasury shares to be sold. As you know, the bank has the right to participate in equity holdings. It might be in the best interests of a company, if desirable, that an individual should retire, who probably had got beyond the best productive stage, and it would be in the interests of reorganization of the company that the person be financed to withdraw from the company, and his shares could be taken as security. There might not be treasury shares to make reorganization possible otherwise.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): This is a method then, in the illustration you have given, of actually buying the shares and retiring the person from active management in the company. Is that the position?

Mr. Benidickson: It might be necessary in order to have the proper security to attain the purposes. It might be necessary for the bank actually to have a transfer of the shares. The president said that it was not in the business of permanently owning securities but it felt that, when they provided a substantial amount of the necessary capital to enable the business to function properly the bank should not be debarred on occasion from probably participating in the equity capital and the profits that result from equity ownership.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): The only thing I would like to say in that connection is that the illustration given, of course, does not put any more money at the disposal of the company. If it was an issuance of treasury stock, naturally the funds would go into the company operation. I can see that perhaps this could be used if along with it a collateral agreement of some kind were provided between the shareholder and the bank whereby the shareholder agreed to re-loan the money immediately to the company treasury. If that is the purpose for which this amendment is designed, I can see that it will serve a very useful purpose.

Mrs. Fairclough: Did the parliamentary assistant intend to give the impression that a loan would be advanced for the purpose really of purchasing the interest of a principal who wished to retire or whose associates wished him to retire? In other words, would the money be put up for the purpose of financing the remaining directors or executives of the company to buy him out?

Mr. Benidickson: I should not think that would be the original purpose of the application for loan, but I would think that, either because a company had got into difficulty, and the difficulties might be due to management, or where it was necessary for reorganization to take place, in order to make the investment of the bank more secure, something of this kind should be possible. Under the previous legislation the only shares that could be bought were treasury shares from the company. This gives the bank more freedom in certain circumstances to buy also shares that are in the hands of a shareholder, already issued.

Mrs. Fairclough: It would seem to me that, unless the company was in such bad straits that it was almost bankrupt, the shares of that company would themselves constitute good collateral for the ordinary lending institutions.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COURTS, APPLICATIONS, CERTIFICATES, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the second reading of Bill No. 256, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think I should make a few very brief observations about this bill on the second reading. It in no way purports to change anything fundamental in the Canadian Citizenship Act because the government does not feel that anything fundamental needs to be changed in that act. In fact, we feel that the act as it was conceived in 1946 and placed on the statute books by a previous parliament has worked extraordinarily well. But from time to time it has been necessary to make what I would describe as housekeeping amendments, amendments that are required because of certain special circumstances that arise.

The bill contains two types of such amendments. There are three sections dealing with matters of substance, but I intend to ask one of my colleagues to have one section stricken out because I have changed my mind about the advisability of proceeding with it as a result of the deliberations in another place.

Mr. Fulton: Would you tell us which one?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is section 2. The first of the other two sections has to do with a very limited number of Indians and Eskimos who many years ago moved from Alaska into the adjacent parts of the Arctic coast of Canada and have been residing there ever since but who, because there were no immigration officers, were never landed and therefore have never properly become Canadian citizens. This sad state of affairs came to the notice of the department recently and we came to the conclusion that everyone in the house would feel that something ought to be done about it.

The other section has to do primarily with Canadians who, living outside the country and being in the service of the country, either in the armed forces, in the federal public service or in the service of the provinces, contract marriages and have children, one or both, and whose status we feel should be recognized somewhat differently from the way in which it is recognized at the present time.

There are five other sections of the bill which are procedural and have to do with the providing of somewhat more convenient facilities for the acquiring in Canada, and in one case abroad, of Canadian citizenship. We have found as a result of the experience of the last two or three years, since there have been a considerable number of immigrants who have been in the country long enough to have acquired domicile to qualify for that citizenship, that many people living in remote parts of the country have found it very difficult to make three separate visits to the courts that are appointed under the present act, and the purpose of these procedural changes is primarily to deal with that situation. There are some further details in the bill that I can explain very much better, if they need any explanation, in committee, sir.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us was discussed quite fully in the other place earlier this session, the report of their proceedings being contained in the Senate Hansard for Wednesday, April 18. After the bill received second reading in that house it was referred to their standing committee on immigration and colonization and, as the minister has pointed out, it was as a result of the deliberations both in their house and in their committee that the minister was led to recommend the deletion of section 2 of the bill.

As he himself has said, the bill is more by way of a tidying up process than by way of introducing any change in principle, so that we feel there is really nothing that requires to be said on second reading as to the merits of the bill itself. There are one or two comments we wish to make in committee and a consideration we shall be advancing as to a suggested change and the reason therefore in one of the sections, but we will deal with that when we are in committee.

The only general observation I should like to make now is that we are glad to note that progress is being made in providing a satisfactory and speedy method. When I say "speedy" I mean a satisfactory and efficient method of dealing with applications for citizenship, one which produces the result without undue delay but not one which de-emphasizes the solemnity of the occasion. The most outstanding examples, of course, are the recently constituted special courts in Toronto and Montreal. Having said that, however, I would make the general observation that, as one never achieves perfection, we believe there is still room for more to be done in connection with emphasizing the solemnity of the occasion, the desirability of obtaining Canadian citizenship and the advantages and duties which follow from that process. I recognize that the occasions when these ceremonies take place are by and large under jurisdictions other than the immediate jurisdiction of the federal government, but I still think that something can be done and no effort should be overlooked in trying to impress upon local communities and the courts, which are the agents of the government in that respect, the desirability of a solemn and suitable ceremony when citizenship is granted.

Anything that we on this side can do to assist in this effort by our speeches in the house and out of it or in any other way, by making suggestions to the government and to local organizations, I can assure the minister and the house we will be glad to do because I think this should be a co-operating effort, not a competitive one. In that spirit we are glad to see these further housekeeping improvements which will better facilitate the application for and the granting of citizenship.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to corroborate what has just been said by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). In our city we have been fortunate in having one or two of these ceremonies which I think have had a considerable amount of success. We have an active citizenship council in that city. That reminds me that this very month—I think on the 18th—we are to have another one of these ceremonies to which I was pleased to be invited but which I cannot attend. One of the features of these ceremonies is that people are invited in a spirit of friendliness. They are brought to the attention of the community and the community feels some responsibility for their treatment. On that basis I am sorry that I am obliged to raise a grievance in connection with this particular matter. I have found the minister himself to be extremely co-operative when I have drawn to his attention one or two cases of what I have called injustice and he has remedied it. But I think this one is important enough that it should have some public notice and discussion. I am referring now to a proposal that I would have by which there should be some amendment of or some addition to one of the clauses of the Citizenship Act. I have noted here subsection 6 of section 110. I should like to state this case briefly and to suggest to the minister that something might be done.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did the hon. gentlemen mention section 110?

Mr. Knight: I have it noted as subsection 6 of section 110.

Mr. Pickersgill: There appear to be only 44 sections in the act.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Knight: I may have been mistaken in the number. In any case we can easily identify the section. I could do it here in a minute if I had time to look at these notes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. For my benefit might I ask the hon. member to identify the clause to which he intends to refer as one which is now being amended because, as he well realizes, it is the principle of the amending bill with which we are dealing.

Mr. Knight: Yes. It is subsection 6 of section 10. I was in error. It is subsection 6 of section 10 of the act. I think it could be related to a clause in this particular bill.

Mr. Knowles: Section 10 of the act is being amended by this bill.

Mr. Knight: Yes. The question is this. This is the case of a British subject who came to this country. As a matter of fact, he is a Scot. He came to this country and after five years he would automatically be qualified for Canadian citizenship. He was here for five years and then he made his application. He sent in his fee, whatever that may be,—I think it is $10—and obtained a receipt for it. I am not sure what he said in that first letter, but at any rate he was informed by the department that his citizenship could not be granted because he had been out of the country for some seven months. He wrote back and explained why he was out of the country. He had been out of the country because he had been in the employment of the government of Canada, or of one of the provincial governments. He had also been directly under the sponsorship of the dominion government which had shared in the giving of a scholarship to this man in order that he might improve himself in his profession, which has something to do with the medical profession. At any rate he was informed that he could not have his citizenship.

The point that I want to make and the point that I made as I rose is this. It is important that these people should be made welcome in the country, that there should be a feeling of cordiality,—and I am sure the minister would agree with me—a feeling that we are glad to get these people into the country, that we are glad to welcome them here and to make it easy for them. I do not know what the disposition of this man is, but at any rate he certainly felt a sense of injustice having regard to the way in which he had been treated.

His main complaint was this. In the first place, his citizenship was not granted to him when he made the application. The department contended that he had not thoroughly explained the reason for his temporary absence from this country. I shall say this.

When that absence was explained and was certified by the department of the provincial government in question, this citizenship certificate was forthcoming. Then there was the problem of his wife, and that is where I think this particular section of the act should have some amendment. This gentleman—

Mr. Pickersgill: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker? In the bill, as the hon. gentleman will find if he has considered it carefully, we are making provision for that very thing. Perhaps if the hon. gentleman could defer this matter until we reach the clause in the bill, it could then be explained.

Mr. Knight: Now that I have gone so far, Mr. Speaker, and have only another minute or two to go, I think I had probably better state my case. Then the whole case can be replied to by the minister, if he sees fit to do so, when we are in committee. The thing that bothered my acquaintance so greatly was this. This is the type of person who attaches some value to a certificate of Canadian citizenship. I think the very fact that he applied for it is a proof of that statement. He is a family man with a wife and two little children. Let it be right or let it be wrong, and let anyone who likes to do so sneer at it as a piece of sentimentality, but he wanted the date of his citizenship to coincide with the date of citizenship of his wife and his children.

Mr. Pickersgill: We always do our best to oblige.

Mr. Knight: Whether it be sentimentality or not, that is the way he wanted it; and he saw no reason why the department should apply red tape to the extent that he would not be able to get it that way. It was not as though there was anything against the man. Nevertheless he felt that he had been treated like someone, as it were, outside the pale, someone who had to be watched, about whom one had to take care, and that sort of thing. For a man who has been a British subject all his life and who has spent five years in Canada, it is not a pleasant feeling to have around his new home.

He applied for citizenship for his wife and he reasonably thought that it might be granted at the same time as his own citizenship but from the minister's department he had a blunt refusal on the ground, forsooth, that he had gone to Britain to do some studying; that he had taken his wife and his little family with him. While he comes under this clause which allows a man to be out of the country in the service of the country, that clause did not apply to his wife because she accompanied her husband. I understand that is not the sort of thing we want to do. What do we want to do? If this man had forced the department and said that he was going to insist that his wife get her citizenship at the same time as he did, what would it involve? It would involve leaving his wife and family here in this country. I think that is a perfectly stupid regulation. I think it is a regulation which would be more honoured in the breach than in the observance. In that particular case surely the department could have said: It is perfectly natural that this man leaving the country for seven months should take his wife and family with him. I do not see what reason in the world the department could give for not granting that woman's certification of Canadian citizenship so that the two of them could have gone up there together on the 18th day of this month before the public at Saskatoon where there is going to be constituted a court where citizenship could have been granted. They should have gone up there together and received their citizenship on that date. Is there any reason in common sense why that could not have been done? There may be in the regulations. I understand the difficulties that civil servants have. "There is the regulation", they say; "We must interpret the law". But if that is the law, in a case like that the law should be changed.

I think that is the main part of my argument. I could go on and be indignant about it. I may say the gentleman in question was indignant. As a matter of fact, he requested the department to take back his citizenship certificate and withhold it so that those two certificates could be issued on the same day and they would have them together. Sentiment—all right, but a lot of us are sentimental and that is the way the man felt about it. That is the plea I am putting before the minister, that to cover that particular section of the act a change should be made so that when a man takes his wife with him on these government jobs which entitles him to a certificate even if he is absent from his country, his wife could share his fate, shall I say, in that as well as other respects.

I have not mentioned the man's name. I do not think it is necessary for me to do so. If the minister, out of the kindness of his heart, wants to take this up as an individual case and look into it, even at this late date, I would suggest that would be a good course to adopt. I have made my protest to the minister, without wearying the house about the details and reading various letters, the tone of some of which is not too cordial or too friendly. The attitude is: here are the regulations, you take them or leave them. They have to take them. They do not like to take them. I would not have liked to take them myself. I am not blaming the minister and I am not actually blaming the department because if they have got to follow the regulation, then they have got to follow the regulation. But my suggestion is that the regulation should never be in there. It is a stupid regulation if it is there. As a matter of fact, it is not there at all. The positive thing is there, but there is no provision made for the wife of an immigrant such as I have described.

Mr. Michael Starr (Ontario): I had no intention of saying anything about the amendments to this bill, but since the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) and the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) have made a reference to the necessity for proper procedure in the issuance of naturalization certificates, I felt motivated to say a few words on this subject. A few weeks ago I had the privilege of being present in the county court of the county of Ontario when some 74 citizens of this country received their citizenship certificates. They appeared before His Honour Judge Pritchard of the county of Ontario in an atmosphere that I felt was a model to indicate to those people the value and dignity of Canadian citizenship.

His Honour Judge Pritchard gave a very well thought out address in which he pointed out to them the advantages that would be theirs on becoming citizens of this country. This was followed by the participation of one of the chapters of the I.O.D.E. in Whitby who presented certificates of their own to each of the applicants and also presented, on behalf of the Canadian Bible Society, a bible to each one of these people. Then the applicants were entertained at tea by two chapters of the I.O.D.E. from the city of Oshawa. All in all, I felt satisfied that this was the sort of procedure that should be followed in the courts of Canada and was a model for others to follow. In my own estimation it would certainly leave an impression upon these people of the value of their citizenship in this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I did not intend to say anything until I heard the remarks of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr). I know I would be completely out of order if I attempted to say what I want to say in committee. I agree with what the hon. member has said, and I want to say how much I appreciate and how deeply the members of the government appreciate what is being done to make these ceremonies more appropriate. It is not really within our jurisdiction, but we certainly do our best to give them every encouragement.

I should like to say a word about what the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) has said. I do not say this in a carping way at all. He talked about the regulations, but it is not the regulation, it is the law. It is not a law I had any share in making. It was made before I became minister. It is a law that I am proposing, in this very bill, to have changed, as I attempted to point out to the hon. gentleman when I raised my objection a moment ago. I think the case will be met by the amendment. Until it is met, the minister has no discretion, and judging from the suggestions that are so often made by members opposite about ministers taking unto themselves powers they do not have, I am sure the opposition will be pleased to hear that this is one case where there are no powers to be taken. The minister is completely bound by the law.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Finance to move that this clause be stricken out and that the following clauses be renumbered accordingly.

Mr. Harris: I move:

That clause 2 be deleted and the succeeding clauses be renumbered accordingly.

Mr. Fulton: Would the minister say a word about the reason for this. Unfortunately, the other place does not keep a record of the proceedings of all committees. I have read the record of the discussion in the house, and while there was some question as to the advisability of including the clause it seemed to me that the question was resolved rather in favour of its retention. So far as we are concerned, no great importance attaches one way or the other but we would like to be satisfied that it should be taken out and the reason for doing so, before agreeing.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think when I have given my explanation the hon. gentleman will agree with me it is one of those cases where you could toss a coin and decide one way or the other. As the section as it now reads, if you just look at the capital (A), (B) and (C) parts of it, you will find that (A) and (B) are the present law. All that is being suggested in part (C) is that if a Canadian citizen who is abroad has an illegitimate child and subsequently marries the mother of that child, then that child becomes a Canadian baby.

Mr. Fulton: That is an unfortunate phrase.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since it is the case that if a Canadian citizen who is a woman goes abroad and has an illegitimate child that child is a Canadian born citizen, it was felt that perhaps this was a case for equal or almost equal rights for men. It did seem to me on further consideration that this amendment might have the effect—it would have some good effects I am sure—of creating a lot—no, I should not disparage the Canadian people—a small number of Canadian born citizens who had never been in Canada in their lives and who never would be in Canada in their lives and ultimately perhaps in the year 2050 might create a Don Pacifico incident such as the hon. member for Kamloops no doubt remembers caused Lord Palmerston some pain in the year 1850.

After considering the pros and cons of this matter very carefully—I must say I was never terribly enthusiastic about the amendment—I came to the conclusion that the cons were stronger than the pros, particularly as it was pointed out to me by one of the lawyers that the courts might not interpret subparagraph (c) in the way in which it was intended to be interpreted. An amendment was made in the Senate committee which seemed to make it clearer, and one of the legal advisers of the government said he still had some doubts as to whether it was really clear. I came to the conclusion that it was a dubious thing to do at best, that it seemed to be exceedingly difficult to do and that we had better give it up.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate the minister's explanation. Since the reference to Canadian babies at home has caused the minister some embarrassment, if this is going to save him some embarrassment by avoiding the possibility of having Canadian babies overseas, then we are glad indeed to accept the amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: The embarrassment would have been the embarrassment of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have nothing to do with Canadian babies abroad.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: It may be more convenient to hon. members if I read the numbers of the succeeding paragraphs as they appear in the bill itself to avoid confusion, although they will be renumbered in accordance with the amendment.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Certificate for minor children.

Mr. Fulton: We are glad to note that there has been an amendment now which must have been effected in the other place subsequent to the introduction of the bill, because there was originally a proposal in this clause that after 1961 a person who could not speak adequately either English or French but had been in Canada for 20 years might be granted his citizenship certificate notwithstanding his inability to speak the language. That provision has been removed, I presume on the motion of the hon. senators in their committee. I think it is a sensible thing because there are bound always to be a few elderly people who while their hearts and souls are in Canada and their lives are here are not able to acquire an adequate knowledge of the language. I think they should always be able to acquire citizenship notwithstanding that. My main purpose in rising in connection with this clause, however, is to ask the minister a question with regard to subsection 3 thereof. The effect of this subsection—

Mr. Pickersgill: If we are going to take up the subsections separately, would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask the Minister of Finance first to move an amendment to subsection 1 and clear it out of the way. This amendment to subsection 1 is simply for the purpose of making clear what paragraph (d) beyond peradventure really means. It now reads:

A British subject under the Naturalization Act . . .

What I am asking to have substituted for the word "under" is—

by virtue of a certificate of naturalization as defined in . . .

I will send the hon. gentleman a copy of the amendment.

Mr. Harris: I so move.

The Chairman: Mr. Harris moves:

That the word "under" in paragraph (d) of subsection (1) of section 4 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"by virtue of a certificate of naturalization as defined in . . . "

Does the committee agree to this amendment?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Fulton: I should now like to ask the minister a question about subsection 3. As I understand it, the effect of this subsection is to take care of people who have been admitted to Canada, with the acceptance of the country generally and under the authority of the government, but in fact have no regular status. They are not here as landed immigrants, nor are they here on visitor's visa, as students, or any of the recognized categories, because of an amendment made in 1953. Now, when they come to apply for citizenship, they are under a disability which this amendment is designed to remove. But, sir, you will observe that the amendment reads in part—perhaps I had better read the whole thing. Subsection 1, paragraph (c) reads:

> Subparagraph (i) of paragraph (c) of subsection (1) does not apply to a person who has resided continuously in Canada for a period of one year immediately preceding the 1st day of June, 1956, and had been admitted to Canada for permanent residence prior to that date . . .

It is those last words that I am concerned about. They mean that the status of a person first having been admitted to Canada for permanent residence must be established prior to that date; that is, prior to the 1st day of June, 1956. I understand that the majority of these cases are already known because most of those people have made application for citizenship, and it is as a result of that application that the difficulty has been revealed. Therefore, in nearly every case it will be possible to say, or it may indeed already have been said: you are now granted the status of having been admitted to Canada for permanent residence prior to June 1, 1956. But there may be a residue of cases where either the circumstances have not come to light or the person has not brought his own case to the attention of the department by making application, and therefore those cases are not as yet dealt with.

You will appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that the 1st day of June, 1956, being the deadline, is only a matter of three weeks from now and that seems to me to be crowding it a little bit. If I have stated the case correctly, I want to ask the minister whether he does not think it would be advisable to extend the deadline by a few months, say to December 31, 1956. I am not referring to the place where it is first mentioned but where the words "that date" occur. Would it not be advisable to substitute for those words such words as "December 31"?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman is anticipating what I was proposing to do, anyway. Perhaps it could be done a little more neatly and meet the point if we simply struck out the word "immediately" in line 20, and also changed "1956" to "1957" in the following line. I think that gives a little longer period than the hon. gentleman asked for. That would postpone the time to 1957. If I made the one change I would want to have the other.

When this bill was drafted I did not anticipate—perhaps I was mistaken—that hon. gentlemen would be so loquacious, and I expected we would have reached it early in March. I would ask the Minister of Finance to move these two amendments.

Mr. Fulton: Just before the minister does so, may I ask the hon. gentleman whether his remarks are not a reflection upon the hon. gentleman of the other place whose loquacity I have not heard criticized before?

Mr. Pickersgill: I withdraw any such reflection.

Mr. Fulton: However, this bill was passed by the Senate and we have not had it, to my knowledge, for more than a week.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I did not think that the fact that one was loquacious could be counted as the subject of reflection in this house where, as I understand our duty, we should be permitted to take all the time that we require to deal with a subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not suggest that for a minute.

Mr. Knight: I shall now deal with my specific case. I take it—it is under subsection 3 to which the minister has referred—that when this becomes law the lady in question, the one to whom I referred, will immediately be granted her certification. In other words the small period of time, the six or seven months that she spent in England with her husband, will not be counted against her, and she will be assumed to have been a resident of Canada for the purposes of this act.

I have a second question. What about the minor children? Is there something in this act which covers their situation?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minor children would be covered automatically, sir. That is within the discretion of the minister and they can be added; if the parents qualify they can be added to the certificate.

Mr. Knight: How soon after this act has been proclaimed, if that is the word, would it go into effect?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe there is any provision for proclamation. I understand this bill goes into effect as soon as it receives the royal assent.

Mr. Fulton: Before the minister moves his motion would he permit me to suggest with deference that perhaps his amendment is not quite as good as mine. I say that with deference and for this reason: If he takes out the word "immediately" and then changes "first of June 1956" to "first of June 1957" will it not automatically mean that the section can have no effect until the first of June 1957? This would in effect delay making the adjustment it is desired to make.

Mr. Pickersgill: I sought advice on that point, sir, because it seemed to me that if the word "immediately" was left in that would be the fact, but that the words "one year preceding the first of June 1957" can terminate at any time before the first of June.

Mr. Fulton: Provided that there is a year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, provided that there has been a year.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question? Could that year run concurrently with the four years in the six-year term?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman suggesting that I am doing more than I intended to do?

Mr. Pearkes: I am rather wondering if you are not reducing the total period from five to four years?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, it is just possible.

Mr. Pearkes: Do you want to do that?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I do not.

Mr. Pearkes: Then I have a feeling that the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Kamloops is perhaps a little tidier than your own.

Mr. Fulton: I am not trying to get myself into the position where my amendment is accepted rather than the minister's—

Mr. Pickersgill: No, no.

Mr. Fulton: —but my suggestion is simply to take out the words "that date" in line 22 and substitute the words "31st of December, 1956". I realize that that would postpone its effect until December 31st next, but I wonder if that is not ample time rather than postponing its effect until June?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think there is much in that; it will be quite well known by that time. If that commends itself to my colleague the Minister of Finance I would be prepared to ask him to move that instead of the amendment I suggested.

The Chairman: Order. May I point out that I have not yet received any amendment whatsoever.

Mr. Harris: We have not been able to agree on it yet, sir.

Mr. Fulton: I have it drafted and will send it over so that you can sign it.

The Chairman: Order. Mr. Harris moves:

That sub-clause 3 of clause 4 of this bill be amended by deleting the words, "prior to that date" at line 22 thereof and substituting therefor the following words, "the 31st day of December, 1956".

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am terribly sorry. This is my draftsmanship. Instead of deleting the words, "prior to that date" delete only the words "that date" and substitute "the 31st day of December, 1956". I apologize to the minister.

Mr. Rowe: We will get it yet.

The Chairman: Is that agreeable?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is quite agreeable.

Mr. Knowles: Does everybody know what we are doing? I mean does anybody know what we are doing?

Mr. Harris: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, you might read over the paragraph as amended by this motion.

The Chairman: Perhaps I had better read the amendment once more. Mr. Harris moves:

That sub-paragraph 3 of clause 4—

That is old clause 4.

—of the bill be amended by deleting the words, "that date" at line 22 thereof and substituting therefor the following words, "the 31st day of December, 1956".

ARTHUR TELFORD BATES

Mr. John Hunter (for Mr. Henderson) moved the second reading of Bill No. 266, for the relief of Arthur Telford Bates.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words with regard to Bill No. 266. Hon. members should be aware of the kind of job that we are sometimes called upon to undertake in view of the way in which these divorces come before parliament. As I understand it from first noting this case when it was listed in the Canada Gazette some time ago, the petitioner was listed as having his residence in San Francisco, California. His wife from whom he is seeking a divorce was listed as having her residence in Jacksonville, Florida. I must say that it struck me as rather strange that the parliament of Canada was being called upon to divorce people living in San Francisco, California, and Jacksonville, Florida.

I find also that they were married in Washington, D.C. They lived while they were together in various countries throughout the world, and more recently the wife has obtained a divorce in the state of Florida and has remarried and is living in that state.

I understand that the reason why this divorce comes before us is that, by one of those fine processes that only the lawyers can weave, the domicile of this petitioner is in the city of Montreal in the province of Quebec. It appears that this gentleman, though he has already been divorced by his wife according to the law of the state of Florida, wishes a Canadian divorce. It puzzles me a bit since in fact, he was married in the United States, but at any rate these are the facts of the case as set out in the evidence that has been communicated to us by the other place.

I must say in all fairness that Their Honours in the committee in the other place went into these angles to which I have referred and satisfied themselves that on a legal basis the domicile of the petitioner is Montreal and that therefore it was in order for the case to be dealt with by the parliament of Canada. However, I did feel that we should be aware of this rather strange case that we here are being called upon to deal with, and hon. members know what I think is the logical conclusion to which parliament should come.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 192, for the relief of Mary Valerie Dorothy Johnston Bromwich.—Mr. Henderson.

ISLAY ISOBEL CAMPBELL JONES

The house resumed, from Friday, May 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Henderson for the second reading of Bill No. 257, for the relief of Islay Isobel Campbell Jones.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

AMENDMENT TO GIVE PREFERENCE TO BILINGUAL CANDIDATES

Mr. Fernand Girard (Lapointe) moved the second reading of Bill No. 159, to amend the Civil Service Act.

He said: It is a recognized fact that bilingualism is the chief factor which ensures understanding and protects true national unity between the two great peoples who share the noble task of developing our country and making it prosperous.

To have a true appreciation of the great cultural and social contribution made to Canada by our English-speaking compatriots, one must understand their mentality, one must be familiar with their literature and one must have exchanged ideas with them. The best way in which French Canadians may achieve these ends is to learn their language.

The same rule applies in the case of our English-speaking compatriots. If they wish to understand us and appreciate the value of our mentality and of our French culture, they must recognize that they too must practise bilingualism. True bilingualism is the straightest road to understanding, and it cannot be a one-way road.

Bilingualism in Canada is not a conciliatory gesture to ensure understanding; it is not even a question open to discussion. It is our historical vocation; it is a constitutional fact, the principle at the base of confederation. It is not a matter of choice but a constitutional duty to fulfil.

The bill which I am now submitting for the approval of the house does not require that all Canadians be bilingual; it only tends to grant a preference to bilingual applicants in civil service examinations. It would, moreover, fill a need, that bilingual qualifications would henceforth be established by means of examinations. This bill is an invitation to those who enter the Canadian civil service to better adapt themselves to the bicultural character of our Canadian mentality. Such a preference would in no way interfere with the veterans preference now granted by the act but would take second place to it and add a national unity factor to our civil service which is the lifeblood of the nation.

To vote against this bill would be to deny the existence of the two official languages of Canada. To vote against this bill would be to give official approval to the unfortunate slogan: Be bilingual in Quebec and unilingual in the rest of Canada. To vote against this bill would be to strike a hard blow against national unity and force Quebec into isolationism. To vote against this bill would be tantamount to saying to French Canadians that they have made a mistake in learning English and that their group is merely tolerated within confederation.

The growth of true bilingualism among the two main racial groups of Canada has been impeded by the habit of considering these groups on a provincial basis and of wrongly repeating that there are nine English provinces and one French province. This has all too often prevented many of our English speaking compatriots who are well disposed from admitting the necessity of learning French. Such an idea is contradicted by the facts. French-speaking Canadians are distributed in all provinces and in the country as a whole in almost equal number to English speaking Canadians.

According to the most recent government statistics, racial groups in Canada are distributed thus: Canadians of English origin, 47·9 per cent, Canadians of French origin, 30·8 per cent, and Canadians of various other races having emigrated to Canada account for the rest. Canadian unity will be a fact when there are no longer French Canadians or English Canadians but Canadians, period. But this can only be attained when the word "Canadian" encompasses the aspirations of each of the two racial groups which form our country. To act otherwise and to relegate bilingualism to Quebec only is to divide the two great races historically united in the foundation of the great Canadian family.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, if it be granted that bilingualism is the main instrument of good understanding and if, on the other hand, we look into the government's attitude and behaviour towards the two racial groups which make up our country, and more particularly into the attention it has given to those who have made an effort to achieve bilingualism, we are faced with a genuine national scandal.

In a speech I made on this matter last year, using figures taken from the public accounts, I compiled a comparative table showing how the two racial groups have shared in the appointments to the higher positions in the federal civil service, namely those over $5,000 per year. I shall not repeat those figures, but I would like to repeat the final result. French Canadians who are bilingual in a proportion of 77 per cent hold but 13 per cent of the higher positions. Even if they had never made their generous effort to become bilingual, in proportion to their numbers, they should have been entitled to at least 30 per cent of the higher positions. Although I sincerely wish to avoid using harsh words, faced with such figures I feel compelled to say that we have been shamefully victimized and that, unless a drastic change comes to pass, we shall have to check this one-way trend towards bilingualism, which can only lead to assimilation.

On one occasion during the last session, before the orders of the day I asked the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill), who was then secretary of state, to give figures showing the racial representation of the Canadians in the civil service, according to whether or not they were bilingual. The hon. minister replied that it was not possible for the civil service commission to determine whether an employee was bilingual or not. I was astounded by this reply. In a bilingual country, so proficient in the matter of statistics, it was not possible to determine who was bilingual and who was not! I took the matter up again this year and put to the new Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard) the following question, which appears on page 1881 of Hansard:

1. Has the civil service commission ever asked for a report on the bilingualism of civil servants of the various departments of the government?
2. If so, on what date?
3. What departments have answered?
4. What is the result of this inquiry?

The hon. minister replied that an inquiry had been made, that certain departments had been unable to give complete answers but that he had obtained them at a later date. As for his reply on the result of the inquiry here it is:

> A number of departments indicated that information of a reasonably accurate nature was not available; others based their reports upon unverified claims as to language qualifications. It should be pointed out that it is not easy to know whether or not an employee is bilingual. In a number of cases, it is impossible to answer such a question by an unqualified "yes" or "no" because it is a matter of degree requiring a qualitative evaluation. In the light of the information obtained, the commission concluded that it would not be possible to arrive at any reasonably accurate figure as to the proportion of bilingual civil servants.

But, Mr. Speaker, if it was impossible to arrive at exact figures, we would surely have liked to obtain at least the figures which had been given to the hon. minister.

The hon. minister assures me that he has requested that such an inquiry be made, but we are still waiting for the figures. If the delay is due to the fact that the French-speaking ministers have been too generous towards their own compatriots, I understand why the hon. Secretary of State hesitates to supply the figures. However, on the basis of the minister's statement, one thing stands out clearly, and it is this: the civil service commission has no accurate way of determining what civil servants are bilingual.

Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the house would correct that serious anomaly, since it will permit, in the future, to determine who is bilingual. In fact, subparagraph (c) of the bill states that those who will be entitled to benefit from the privilege provided in the bill are:

> . . . those who have qualified, by examination, in the knowledge and use of the two official languages of Canada, being the English and the French languages.

Has the minister considered that his reply to my question is not only a serious admission, but confirmation of the fact that the French-Canadians are victims of gross discrimination. In fact, the civil service commission which, by two ministers' own admission, does not know who is bilingual has nonetheless prescribed bilingualism as a prerequisite to employment in the province of Quebec, except in a few rare instances.

I shall mention only the case of the stenographers and typists who must be bilingual if they are French-speaking, but who receive the same salary as their English-speaking fellow workers who are not bilingual. The bill would recognize the merit of our English-speaking fellow citizens who have learned French, and would do away with such discrimination.

I could quote innumerable instances of injustices done our compatriots, who have been told and repeatedly that they should learn English to be promoted.

Hundreds and hundreds of instances show with a pitiable truthfulness that the French language is treated as a poor relation, not only in business but more particularly here in the government, which was set up by the constitution as the guardian of the indefeasible rights of the two racial groups.

Even in this house, the French language is looked upon as a poor relation, for even though according to the letter of the law it enjoys the same privilege as the other language, in practice it is but rarely spoken and those who use it are sure not to be understood by the majority of the representatives of our bilingual country.

Those who are primarily responsible for that anomaly, although I do not wish to accuse anyone, are the French-speaking Canadians themselves, because they seldom speak French in the house during the debates.

An English-speaking colleague recently told me that he took exception to French-speaking members always speaking English, thus depriving the English-speaking members of the opportunity of learning our language.

I particularly blame the French-speaking ministers who, except for the Speaker, speak French only when they reply to a question from a Quebec member, but never do so in their official statements. They will perhaps reply to that serious accusation that they do so because it is the only way to be understood.

Every time our French-speaking ministers use that good excuse for not speaking their own tongue, our English-speaking colleagues will surely contend that they do not need to learn our language.

In all governmental agencies, and more particularly the Canadian National, with the possible exception perhaps of the St. Lawrence seaway authority as far as its cheques are concerned, the French language is treated as a poor relation.

My hon. colleague, the member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin), embodied in a bill the magnificent principle he has upheld for years in order to obtain bilingual cheques. We have here another proof that French is treated as a poor relation in a manner which cannot be explained. We have come to the point where we must submit bills to have our most elementary rights respected. And this happens in a country which boasts of promoting unity, peace and concord among foreign nations.

Every time the French-speaking people ask that some of their prerogatives be respected, they are told, as was done for the flag and other similar matters, that they should proceed step by step, that we must not wound the feelings of others, that something has been gained here or there and so forth. By acting thus we again admit that the French people are really treated as poor relations, that their rights have never been truly recognized throughout the nation, but are granted small parcels of those rights with a measuring cup, by the side door, and as a result of persistent struggles.

If the confederation pact had intended to give to the French language the status of a poor relation, the fathers of confederation would never have agreed to it; besides, if that were the case, the constitution would have been drafted otherwise. There is one section only of the British North America Act which mentions languages, and it is section 133, which reads as follows:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of Parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the Legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those houses.

A list is then given of the official records which must be bilingual.

Therefore, both languages are on equal footing. If the intention had been to rank the French language below the English language, instead of saying "Either the English or the French language may be used", it would have been stated that "French may be used". On the contrary, the text is clear: "Either the English or the French language ....".

The remainder of that section deals with compulsory bilingualism in official documents. Commenting on a speech I made last year on bilingualism, the Star Weekly, in its edition of February 19, 1955, contended that there is nothing in the constitution to indicate that both languages are on an equal footing. According to the writer, one of the two languages enjoys a privileged status. Under what section of the constitution? I should like to know, since the only reference to languages which may be employed applies equally to French and English.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that a real and commendable movement is under way and gaining momentum among our English-speaking fellow citizens in favour of exchanges between the two racial groups; this necessary effort is more commendable than that of the government, since it is not made compulsory by the constitution.

In the name of national unity, which they must bring about by deeds and not by words, the government is bound to approve this bill and thus show their good faith. They have no reason to reject it since, by this bill, the preference already given to veterans is widened and the inalienable rights of five million Canadian citizens are confirmed. So far, it must be confessed, we have been treated as a conquered race, but if one goes back to the establishment of our government it must be admitted that two-way bilingualism has become the indispensable confirmation of an honourable compromise between two great ethnical forces which, until then, had been facing each other.

Hon. Roch Pinard (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made first in English and then in French by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Girard) in connection with the bill he has introduced in the house today.

In the course of his remarks, he referred to an answer given to him by my colleague, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and by myself this year about the number of bilingual employees in the civil service. While dealing with this subject, he charged me and my colleague and, in fact, the government we are representing in these matters, with failure to give an adequate reply to his question. In his view, we failed to give an adequate answer because we had found it impossible to supply the figures requested in his question. Yet, in the answer we did give, we pointed out why it had proved impossible for the civil service commission, to whom I had referred the question, to give a complete answer to the question. It is because the civil service commission, this being a matter of degree and requiring a detailed analysis, is unable to tell whether an employee does or does not speak both languages. I felt that the hon. member would not be satisfied with information dealing merely with civil service positions requiring a knowledge of both languages. I am confident he will agree that very many people in this country speak both languages. He will also admit that there are a great many civil servants who, while they speak rather fluently both languages, did not have to qualify as bilingual when they entered the civil service. Therefore, an answer dealing only with those employees who had to qualify as bilingual would have been inadequate.

He then pointed out that the French-speaking ministers in particular did not avail themselves often enough of the opportunities they may have to speak French in this house. Yet he himself behaved no differently, finding it convenient and useful, if not indispensable, to speak English at the beginning of his remarks. He thus answered his own question.

In fact, I do believe that, in spite of the good will shown by the hon. members generally, there are many whose knowledge of a second language is not sufficient to allow them to understand the remarks made by members of the government; when, for instance, an English-speaking member who does not speak French and understands it but imperfectly puts a question to a member of the cabinet, I do not believe it is logical to answer him in a language which is not his own, which is not his mother tongue.

Mr. Speaker, I think I should add—and I feel sure I am expressing a wish which is shared by the hon. member—that, as long as the majority in this house do not speak both languages and understand them adequately, it will be quite difficult—the hon. member will agree with me if he is sincere, and I believe he is—it will be extremely difficult to suggest to the members of the government that they should answer in French in such circumstances.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, both as the minister responsible to parliament for the civil service commission and as a French-speaking Canadian representing a constituency mostly composed of Canadians of French extraction, I feel it is my duty to express this government's opinion as well as my own views on this proposed legislation which would have the effect, if enacted, of bringing about a very substantial change in our Civil Service Act.

I wish, first of all, to commend the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Girard) for his remarks. After hearing them I feel that he has done his job in all sincerity and that his intentions are to see to it that the principle of bilingualism, which I share with him, be applied as generally as possible in the federal administration. Although the immediate objective sought through this measure is to grant preference to bilingual competitors in civil service examinations, this legislation presents at the same time another very important feature. The provisions of the amendment tend to reaffirm the principle of bilingualism and have it recognized in the federal administration everywhere in Canada. Even if I intend to oppose the measure for reasons which I will explain later in my remarks, I wish to emphasize immediately that I am in full agreement with the principle of bilingualism this measure contains. In other words, the principle as laid down is undoubtedly sound, but the method of its implementation as suggested in this bill, at least in my opinion, is wrong.

The proposition which I have just stated is twofold and I intend to deal with each part separately. In the first place, I have just affirmed my belief in complete bilingualism and in the use of the two official languages of Canada which I believe must be recognized as the normal method to be used in our relations together. It must be accepted as an historical and constitutional reality, and it is also essential to our peaceful and orderly growth as a nation.

Without claiming to be an expert on constitutional matters or on the interpretation of our laws, customs and practices as they now exist, I should like the house to bear with me for a few moments while I try to analyse, as objectively as possible, our position and status as a bilingual country.

Although there are a number of countries where more than one language is officially spoken, it is difficult to determine in each case the extent to which actual constitutional or legal dispositions have given recognition to the use of different languages. In more than one country a spirit of understanding and a growing practice have gone further than precise legal and constitutional definition in establishing the rules of application of this principle. In Switzerland, for instance, where a multiplicity of languages prevails, the constitution itself recognizes four languages as national languages and three as official. But the constitution does not go further than that and leaves it to practice itself to lay down the rules of application of this government policy of equality of languages. As a Swiss jurist recently wrote about the problem of languages in this great united country:

> This small neutral country has proved that, given good will, understanding, welfare and loyalty are not only possible among people speaking different languages, but that those languages themselves mean an enrichment of life.

In another country, Belgium, two languages are recognized. But again in so far as languages are concerned in that country, the constitution is very brief and simple. Section 23 of the Belgian code reads as follows:

> Use of the languages current in Belgium is optional; it can be regulated only by law, and only for public documents and judicial matters.

That is all the constitution of Belgium says on that matter. In that country also experience has demonstrated that this great people, although speaking two different languages, has always been inspired in peace as well as in war by only one purpose, that of upholding its fine, generous traditions of courage, industry and determination.

I think in Canada the situation is the same. I think that the mere mention of section 133 of the constitution is not enough to determine whether or not this country of ours is a bilingual country. Here also the nature of our constitutional pronouncements, which have been more numerous because of more frequent changes in the constitution itself, is not sufficient to determine the degree of bilingualism which Canadians have accepted and recognized. Here also there has been, and there is, besides such legal and constitutional dispositions, the unwritten law based on usage and practice which has served us in the implementation of that principal of bilingualism which today has become more than ever one of the important governing factors in our development and progress as a nation.

As I have indicated before, the constitutional position in Canada has often been modified with respect to languages; indeed, the constitution itself had to be modified with changing conditions. The situation has changed with the constant demographic, political and economic variations which this country has known in her yet short but dynamic history. In a little more than two centuries Canada, from the status of a French colony and later that of a British possession, has grown gradually and step by step to the full stature of a free and sovereign nation and member of the commonwealth. With these gradual changes in its political status, our country has also experienced, as a result of its great development, very serious changes in both the demographic and economic fields. Our system of government, in order to adapt itself to such important variations and trends, has seen its constitution modified often to meet the challenge of such ever changing conditions.

It is interesting to follow the effect of each of these political changes on the progressive recognition of the principle of bilingualism as it is being accepted now in Canada. At the beginning, under the royal proclamation in 1763 which had to serve as the new colony's constitution, no reference was made to the use of the two languages, French and English, by the new government of Quebec which was created by the crown. Three other similar governments were created under the same proclamation for these other new British possessions covering a vast territory in all of North America which France had ceded to Great Britain. This was, of course, as indicated in the proclamation itself, a temporary arrangement to be applied only until a local system of government could be properly organized and functioning in each of these new British possessions.

Under the Quebec Act, religious privileges and others were officially recognized but no direct reference was made yet to the use of the French language in the administration of the country. Of course, it is not necessary for me to say that obviously ever since 1759 the French language continued to be used in practice and also both in the legislative council and the assembly. But later in 1791, at a time when there was still a large majority of Canadians of French origin, Canada obtained from the new mother country her first real constitution, which was in fact the original authority to organize a responsible government.

The principle of bilingualism is to be found in the terms of that first constitution under which both the people and those whom they chose to elect as their representatives in the legislative council and assembly were given the privilege of taking the oath in the English or French languages as the case required. In 1840, when it was considered advisable to unite into one the two provinces of upper and lower Canada, this privilege of bilingualism was denied. It was then enacted that the English language alone was to be used. This is not the occasion to comment on the wisdom of the change made at that time but it will be recalled that Louis Hippolyte Lafontaine, in a declaration full of dignity and pride, at that time expressed his disagreement with the new provision of the union act.

Our country, which had already known and lived through difficult times, was again put to the test and again tolerance and understanding were to prevail over hatred and prejudice. If such a process may appear at times to be much slower, it does achieve much more efficient and durable results.

Finally, in 1867, when confederation was established as the system of government which was to endure and become the charter of our rights, the principle of bilingualism was again reaffirmed by the four provinces which decided to unite themselves into that dominion to be known as Canada.

As the hon. member indicated, section 133 defines in very clear terms the nature of such bilingualism by proclaiming the French and English languages as the official languages of the parliament of Canada.

Although the section is quite clear, the provision could lend itself to different interpretations which would have the effect of either restricting or extending its terms. But again I say that, in Canada, bilingualism is a matter where legislation alone is not sufficient to determine what the legislature at that time had in mind and what in the country is the position of bilingualism.

Many other factors have to be analysed if one wishes clearly to ascertain whether Canada can rightly claim to be a bilingual country. This again is a matter of degree, as is bilingualism itself. There is bilingualism in theory, of course, as there is bilingualism in practice. If by bilingualism we mean that everyone in Canada must speak both languages, then, of course, Canada, no more than Belgium or Switzerland, is a bilingual or a multi-language country. But if the two languages may be spoken in every province, although the practice may not have been considered necessary in all the legislatures, if the two languages are generally used by a great number of people in all spheres of activity, if it is the overwhelming wish of all Canadians to consider the other language as their second language, these facts must of course be taken as convincing evidence of bilingualism as it exists today in Canada.

I could add a number of other instances which would substantiate such a contention. Let me read, for instance, a few remarks made by the Prime Minister in 1943 when he was then the Minister of Justice and was dealing in the house with a proposed amendment to our constitution:

> Section 133 of the constitutional act deals with the matter of languages. It provides for bilingualism in this house, in this parliament, in its journals, in its records and acts, and in the pleadings and processes of the courts of Canada established under the act, to the same extent and just as fully as it provides for bilingualism in the proceedings of the Quebec legislature and the Quebec courts.
> I am satisfied that the day will come when, if not all those who sit in this house, at least its leaders and those who grace the treasury benches and those who sit immediately opposite, will find it to their advantage to be bilingual. I do not suggest that we from the province of Quebec are going to try to impose our language upon anybody, but I do suggest that the time will come when those whom I have indicated will find it to their advantage to learn and to understand and to use the French language as we from Quebec have found it to our advantage to learn and to understand and to use the language in which I am speaking at this moment.

These were remarks made by the Prime Minister at the time and I think that I expressed those sentiments when a few moments ago I said that it is not always possible and I should think advisable to answer questions that are being put to the ministers by the members of this house in one language that will not be the language that the hon. member putting the question will understand; and it is to be hoped, as I said earlier, that the day will come when the majority at least of the members of this house will be able to speak fluently both languages, the result being that at that time it will be possible for each minister to answer in either of the two languages.

If the principle of bilingualism has been recognized, as I said, in our British North America Act, if it has also been recognized by custom and practice, if it has been recognized by a greater number of people using both languages in business as well as in other kinds of transactions, I say that it has also received the support of constant action by the government and also by definite corroborative legislation.

The terms of section 133 of the British North America Act have been extended to a great number of administrative measures by the successive governments: two of the most striking examples have been the adoption of bilingual postage stamps and paper currency. When these two decisions were taken by parliament they were not to be termed as concessions by the English-speaking majority to the French-speaking element of our country. It was simply the result of good faith on the part of all the different ethnic groups in Canada, and of parliament's understanding and harmony between the races of the country; it was simply, in effect, the recognition of bilingualism as an essential right of the Canadian citizen.

This right of bilingualism was recognized in that way by parliament in the two precedents to which I have just referred; that is, in the use of postage stamps as well as in paper currency, but it was also strongly supported, I believe, by a growing practice both in the House of Commons and outside of a greater number of people accepting the use of the two languages on an increasing number of occasions.

This growing tendency, this definite trend, is to me stronger evidence than words of law of the bilingualism of the land at the moment. But if I have decided to oppose this bill I must say that I do so with some regret. If the proposed measure was only another way of reaffirming my belief in this principle of bilingualism, with which I have already expressed my agreement and with which I believe everyone in this house is in agreement also, I would gladly support it, but I think we are concerned with something quite different when we accept the change of policy contemplated by this proposal.

What is involved in the amending legislation is the granting of a preference to bilingual competitors who wish to enter the civil service of Canada. It may not be necessary to underline as a preliminary remark the very great importance of our civil service in the administration of a country such as ours. Under our democratic system it forms part as an essential entity of one of the most important branches of the government. What the legislature chooses to enact for the good functioning of our democracy, the civil servants must put into application. What parliament decides, the civil service must apply, in other words.

It follows as a result that if we are to have a healthy nation, we must have a competent civil service. I think it can safely be said that parliament could not properly discharge its obligations to the people without the benefit of a competent body of civil servants. Democracy could not operate without the assistance of those who are called upon to apply the measures which the elected representatives of the people have decided to adopt.

Canada prides herself, and should be allowed to continue always to do so, on one of the most efficient of civil service organizations. This is more important today than ever with the ever-increasing commitments which our country must face to keep its place in the forefront. But I believe that what we are concerned with today is something different from what the principle of bilingualism implies. What we are concerned with is to decide whether or not competence should give place to bilingual qualifications in the civil service. I am in favour of as many bilingual civil servants as possible, and I believe I may have the right to say that I have had some humble share in that respect, but I cannot accept that bilingualism should take the place of competence in the choice to be made of our civil servants anywhere in Canada.

Under the act as it now stands, preference is given to war veterans, and the hon. member has made an allusion to that preference which is given to war veterans. The principle in that case is not to be compared, I believe, with that of a preference to be granted to bilinguals.

More than one reason justifies such a policy of preference to apply with regard to those who have served their country in war.

In the first place it is only just and fair to give to those who have been away from the country during a certain period of time and who, in order to accomplish their duties on the battlefields, had to leave their civilian occupations, a treatment similar to that which is afforded to those who have remained in civilian life. The experience of which they have been deprived due to their absence should not, in this case, be a reason for their failure to integrate themselves in the community after their return.

I should say also, and this in my opinion is the real underlying motive for this preference to overseas veterans, that the least a country can do to honour those who have risked their lives to protect and defend it is to assure them of an even chance to re-establish themselves in civil society.

There are no similar considerations, I believe, of national interest involved in the present case which are strong enough to prevail, in my opinion, over the requirement of competence to which I have already referred.

If the provision as advocated under this amending bill was enacted, it would in practice mean that any bilingual candidate although less competent would qualify over other applicants for any position within the civil service.

To illustrate this, it would mean that even where bilingualism will not be needed by a civil servant in the performance of his duties to the public, a bilingual applicant would be preferred to others who would be more competent but would not enjoy the privilege of being bilingual.

(Translation):

Mr. Girard: Will the hon. Secretary of State allow me a question?

Mr. Pinard: Certainly.

Mr. Girard: Is the hon. Secretary of State suggesting that when a veteran lacking proper qualifications applies for a job, it is the minister's duty to give it to him?

Mr. Pinard: No. I think I have made my position clear enough on that point. The thing that justifies the preference given to veterans before all else is the fact that, since they had to give up their civil occupation and were thus deprived of the experience which otherwise they would have acquired, they have lost all contact with civil life. When the veteran comes back after one or several years, he is in a position where, in order to re-establish himself in civil life, he has lost the experience which otherwise he would have acquired if he had stayed here.

[Mr. Pinard.]

That is what I tried to explain. I believe it is only fair that the government should make up for that period of time when the civil servant went and fought for his country, and during which those who joined the armed forces lose the benefit of the time they were away. I added that one of the reasons which, I think, justify the preference granted veterans, and it may be the main reason, is that they had to go away for a certain time, and it is therefore necessary to make up for their years of absence, so that they can re-establish themselves in civil life and be on an equal footing with others.

It is my belief that this principle does not likewise apply to preference with respect to bilingual people; that is what I attempted to demonstrate.

I believe that, in the civil service, what should count first and foremost, is ability. In my opinion, if, only because he is bilingual, a candidate should obtain preference over someone else who is not, for any position, whether the two languages are needed or not, that would be a danger. I don't think it could be said, for instance—and the problem must be considered in two different lights—to a competitor in a constituency where the great majority of the population is French-speaking that whoever speaks both the languages, though he might have got only 70 per cent of the marks in the examination, will obtain preference over a competitor whose sole language is French, even though the latter might have got almost one hundred per cent of the marks. The same kind of reasoning could be resorted to in the case of a competitor in a constituency overwhelmingly English-speaking.

I think that we would thus agree to and confirm the principle of bilingualism, but we would at the same time very seriously affect the competence of our civil servants. I wonder whether my hon. friend has clearly understood the remarks I just made.

There is no doubt that the fact of bilingualism must be stressed and that the knowledge of both languages is an advantage. Besides, I trust it is admitted and applied by the civil service commission when establishing a competitor's marks. However, I believe, we must not, by adopting the provisions of this bill, recognize the principle that a bilingual candidate would eliminate another who, knowing but one language, would have obtained higher marks at a civil service examination. I think this would be the main danger to which the bill would expose the government and the civil service commission. And that is the main reason why I cannot agree with the proposed legislation, and why I shall vote against it.

Mr. Adrien Meunier (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Girard) on bilingualism. I share some of the opinions he expressed, which tend to summon the idea of a heaven on earth, but I must say that the principles he outlined and his bill could hardly be accepted, as the Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard) just pointed out.

If we were to employ bilingual civil servants exclusively, it could happen that a bilingual candidate obtaining only 70 per cent of the marks on some examination would be preferred to a unilingual candidate who might have obtained most of the marks and would deprive the latter of the position he was seeking. My hon. friend should know that such principles are inapplicable to a certain extent. I might point out to him that bilingualism did progress in the past 25 years. Today a greater number of Canadians speak both languages. Greater insistence on bilingualism would be detrimental to many officers and employees of the civil service commission in the province of Quebec.

On motion of Mr. Meunier the debate was adjourned.

TARIFF BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE MEMBERSHIP OF BOARD FROM THREE TO FIVE

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Tariff Board Act to increase the membership of the board from three to five members and to provide for the salaries of the new members.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The Chairman: Shall this resolution carry?

Mr. Macdonnell: Is the minister not going to say something about it?

Mr. Harris: The resolution, I think, explains itself. However, I think I ought to add that the purpose of the resolution, that is, increasing the membership of the tariff board, is brought about by the increased work that the board is doing and has to do under the appeals with respect to both the Excise Tax Act and the Customs Tariff, and also because of the present government policy of referring more items for consideration to the tariff board so that it might report to us.

We have found that the present membership is not sufficient to discharge these duties as quickly as we would prefer to have them done. As I think there will continue to be an increasing load upon them to deal with the appeals that are being made from the decisions of the deputy minister of customs, and since I think that is the proper thing to happen in our taxing law, I am suggesting to the house that we should increase the membership to five and break down the board, if necessary, into two groups to deal with these things. I am not suggesting that we are dividing the jurisdiction between two parts of the whole but that there may be two committees which could work on different things at the same time.

Mr. Macdonnell: I was rather hoping that the minister might go into the matter at somewhat greater length. I might perhaps be allowed to make a personal reference at the outset, to express the regard I have for the present chairman of the board and also to recall that I knew very well the Hon. George Sedgewick, who was, I think, the first chairman and who also was a very highly regarded chairman.

The minister has told us in a general way about the increased work and, in particular, about the number of appeals which come to the board and which, I suppose, are a special aspect of this work. I should like him to give a little further indication as to just how the work will be divided. He spoke about working in more than one group. I wish he would also say something in more detail about the nature of the inquiries that are now being made. Perhaps, if there is nothing confidential about it, he will give us a list of the examinations that are being made.

I should also like to know how they are initiated. Are they initiated by the minister or do they arise from the initiative of the members of various industries? I would like the minister to go into that at some length because, after all, I think the tariff is becoming more and more a matter of importance. We had about 15 blessed years when we seemed to be able to live without tariff questions being projected at us constantly, but it looks now as if perhaps that time was over.

I read with considerable concern in the New York Times of Sunday, April 22, of the large number of appeals for increased tariff assistance that are being made in the United States. Some of them affect us very closely. I read that the wool manufacturers are planning a drive to get the tariff raised. The same applies to fish products, of which we have heard before, to wood products and others. I mention this because, as I say, these questions are urgent. We know that, in spite of the general over-all prosperity, in spite of the large gross national product, we have areas of distress. I should be glad if the minister would say something at more length than he has on the problem as he sees it and as to the way in which he means to deal with it.

I have in my hands a copy of Foreign Affairs for October 1955, with an article by the principal of Queen's University, Dr. Mackintosh, who worked here as a special member of the finance department for years. I should think that, if there is anyone who by nature is not only in favour of multilateral trade but would look with great aversion on tariffs as a kind of natural enemy, it is he. Nevertheless, I read here in this article statements of concern and of anxiety by him as to the situation, not merely caused by the actual United States tariff but perhaps even more by the customs regulations, which of course we have heard referred to very often here. In particular, he raises the question of the difficulty in which the United States administration finds itself, whereby it is often not able to carry out its contracts. He says, on page 123 of this article:

> There are signs that we are entering a period when other countries may press American representatives to produce evidence that the United States is able to make a dependable agreement. To say this is not to discount the ingenious and sincere efforts which have been made by two administrations in Washington to further the aim of larger and more competitive trade in the western world. In future, however, if agreements are to be subject to the heavy discount of escape clauses and modifying legislation, a much greater consideration may be required.

I have made these two references merely to suggest to the minister that these matters are acquiring an importance which probably he and I both deprecate. This party has made perfectly clear its disposition in the matter of trade by the way we have gone along with the various agreements under GATT, but on the other hand we have to face the fact, as Dr. Mackintosh says, that the professions and desires of the United States government are not always backed up by the performance of the officials who administer the law. Having said that, I wish the minister would speak to us and give us a picture of the situation as he sees it, of what the tariff board is doing now and what plans he has, and in general take us a little more into his confidence.

Mr. Knowles: There are one or two questions I wish to ask, but they are on a different matter. Perhaps the minister would rather reply to the hon. member for Greenwood at this time.

Mr. Harris: The tariff board is presently almost fully engaged in the consideration of the tariff items with respect to primary iron and steel. That was a reference which was made to them some months ago, and I must say it is a long and quite cumbersome procedure to cover all the ground that has to be covered, having in mind that the particular tariff schedules had not been dealt with in any general sense since 1907. This in itself would be sufficient work for a board of three at the present time. In addition, however, I was hoping to have the board, as I said we proposed to do in the budget address a year ago, consider the tariff schedules on chemicals, and I think perhaps that has been done recently. If not, it is going to be done at any time now. In the budget address of this year I also referred to the possibility of asking the board to report to us on the radio and television business. It would seem, in my view at least, that there will be considerable work of this kind which will require lengthy and full-time consideration for at least a period of time. But in between all this the tariff board has to deal with appeals from decisions of the deputy minister of customs with respect to various interpretations placed upon the customs tariff and the Excise Act.

While I would not like to use the word "law", because as a matter of fact it is usually fact, nevertheless the results of the decisions of the board in these matters are either accepted by the government as being the interpretation of the appropriate customs tariff item or possibly legislation is brought forward to change it if in the view of the government the decision does not reflect the policy of the government in this particular regard. Many persons who are subject to these imposts are using the appeal system, and I look forward to the work increasing from time to time. Indeed, as I said a moment ago, I think it is the best way in which law can be made. Parliament should do its best to pass law which is understandable and under which traders can conduct their business with confidence, but if there is any doubt in their mind or if in accordance with well established practice they feel they can escape an impost or tax there ought to be a body to which they can go and seek to obtain the interpretation they place upon the particular statute that is causing them difficulty.

For these reasons I am sure that hon. members will agree that at least at the moment, and as long as the government follows the practice of referring questions for report under the Tariff Board Act, it would seem likely that the board would not be able to keep abreast of its work. I must say that they are doing very well, but at the same time in this particular field no one wants delay in knowing what the law or tax may be. As I personally feel that this work will grow and, indeed, I hope it will grow for the reasons I have given, that we want an established law in this field, I think we ought to increase the number of members in order that no one will be delayed in his ordinary business transactions.

In the very general sense that my hon. friend asked me, may I point out that these inquiries are directed by the minister under section 4 (2), I believe, of the act by virtue of which the minister may ask for information or a report on any given subject. In the course of the period of time that I have been Minister of Finance we have had two reports, one on the textile trade and one on potatoes. I have also indicated the other items that are being considered at the moment.

If the hon. member for Greenwood will forgive me, I would prefer not to say very much about the general world trade and tariff situation because I think he may have seen in the papers there is a report, which the government has not confirmed but which I will confirm now, that certain negotiations have been going on and have been completed at Geneva. I fancy that the results of those negotiations will be made known to the house by my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, probably in the course of two or three weeks, and it may be that on that occasion or on his estimates or at some other time we might choose to have a debate on GATT and allied subjects. I would be glad to say something then because personally I disapprove of the use of escape clauses except under the most urgent need. But I do not think that our neighbours to the south have perhaps been accurately dealt with when some people say that they have used the escape clauses to a greater extent than they might. I think there is a case to be made for our trade relations with the United States and the results under GATT with respect to that country have been reasonably good over the last six or seven years. I would be glad to make that case if it is not made by someone else.

At the same time I am quite satisfied that the longer we continue the present policy of having frequent meetings, having understandings on frequent occasions and having bindings of our tariff schedules for a period of time—in this case I think it has been two years—the better it will be for everyone concerned. I am quite satisfied that as time goes by this process will be accepted by the nations of the world and there will be a greater opportunity for a firmer view that trade after all should not have very many restrictions against it. I need not make the qualification that all of us do have tariffs of one kind or another. Presumably every country will always have a tariff of some kind or another, but I do feel that GATT was a great step forward and I do feel that this government is quite proper in its support of it. Indeed, I think all members of the house have supported it at one time or another and in fact, I do not recall that very many exceptions have been stated at any time.

If the hon. member for Greenwood will permit me I will leave the matter that way because I do think there is this other opportunity to discuss it and it would be a better opportunity because under the Tariff Board Act hardly any of the activities of the board have to do with tariff matters in the sense of external relations except those reports I call for. It may be that a tariff board decision would render the admission of an item free of duty whereas the government may have thought that it was subject to an impost. There may also be the opposite case where the government thought that an item was free of duty and a decision was made that it was dutiable. But the number of occasions on which there would be any great variation would not be so great that the activities of the board itself would be a matter which in this manner would affect our trade relations with another country.

Mr. Macdonnell: If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will allow me to ask a supplementary question, I do not imagine there will be much difficulty agreeing with the minister that it is desirable to extend the membership of the board. Indeed, my query is really almost in the opposite direction. I inferred from what the minister said that the inquiry into the chemical industry which he forecast a year ago has not been made. I assume, therefore, that the board has had too much other work and I raise the question whether, in view of the appeals which I gather are increasing in number, the minister is going to be able to have these inquiries completed fast enough for his purposes. That is a matter on which he will have to reach his own conclusion, but it would be a pity if important information was not available to the minister in time. After all, I take it that the making of tariffs depends primarily on knowing your case thoroughly, and I raise the question whether the government is keeping a close watch to see that this information is coming forward fast enough and, if not, taking steps to that end.

I suppose it is conceivable that they might farm out some of these inquiries as they have done in other cases, but I am making the point merely because I gathered when the minister was speaking that the board has not been able to proceed with the inquiry into the chemical industry and I was struck by that fact. I think it would be a pity if the government found itself in a position where it was not able to act without substantial delay by reason of the necessary research material not being available.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two questions I should like to ask. I suppose the answers to some of them are obvious but it is always good to get them on the record. First of all, can the minister tell us what will be the amount of the salaries of the two additional members? I believe there are three different salaries for the three present members of the board, including one salary for the chairman, another for the vice-chairman and another for the third member of the board. What would be the salaries of the two additional members? Also, can he say whether the other conditions that obtain, such as the ten-year tenure of office, the age of retirement and so on, will apply to the two new members?

My other question relates to the statement the minister made that it was his thought that the board would divide into two parts so that two investigations or two inquiries could be under way at the same time. In that connection I should like to ask him whether any change is to be made in subsection 2 of section 5 of the act which already gives two members of the board power to conduct an inquiry under certain subsections of section 4. It does not include subsection 2 which is the subsection under which the minister makes references to the board. In this connection there are one or two points that strike me. It seems perfectly proper that, when you have a board of three, two of them—who after all constitute a majority of the board—should be given the powers of the board. But when you have a board of five is it appropriate that two—who would constitute only a minority of the board—should be given the powers of the board? Will there be some arrangement whereby a decision or a report arrived at by two members of the board will be submitted to a meeting of the full board? It is fairly obvious that it would not seem to be a report of a board of five if that report is made by only two of its members.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Mr. Harris: To answer the first question first, may I say that there is no change in the salaries. We shall have three salary levels, namely that of the chairman at $16,500; the vice-chairman at $14,500 and ordinary members at $13,500. However, we shall have two vice-chairmen. At that rate we shall have two paid at $14,500.

With respect to the other question, I suppose one ought to answer—and the time was not so long ago when at this stage on a bill this was the answer made—"wait until you see the bill", but we seem to have grown out of that practice.

Mr. Knowles: I think my question was more germane than were some of the others that have been answered.

Mr. Harris: I am not disputing that statement. As a matter of fact, we are contemplating a situation where we may have two vice-chairmen and appropriate members of the board working on different things at the same time, either completing a report while another investigation is beginning or having hearings going on at the same time on different subjects. That is the purpose of having two vice-chairmen. The appropriate amendments which would give power to a certain number to have a hearing and make a report are included in the bill.

Mr. Knowles: I am not sure whether or not I heard the minister correctly, but I thought he said the chairman's salary was $16,500. According to the estimates I believe it is $16,900.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Harris thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 290, to amend the Tariff Board Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide, among other things:

1. That for the 1956 and subsequent taxation years in the taxation of employees who are beneficiaries under an employees profit sharing plan, (a) gains and losses of the trustee under the plan in connection with investment transactions shall not be taken into account in calculating the income of the employee; (b) such part of any amount received by the trustee as a dividend from a taxable corporation as is taken into account in calculating the income of the employee shall be deemed to have been received by the employee as such a dividend for tax credit purposes; and (c) there shall be excluded in calculating the income of an employee for the period of his first three years as a beneficiary under the plan any amount contingently allocated to him if, within that period, the employee does not become entitled to receive that amount upon his withdrawal from the plan.

2. That for the 1955 and subsequent taxation years a deduction shall be allowed for expenses of attending in Canada not more than two conventions annually relating to the business of the taxpayer.

3. That for the 1956 and subsequent taxation years uncertainty regarding the applicability of outstanding regulations respecting depletion allowances be removed.

The Chairman: The house again in committee of ways and means on a certain proposed resolution respecting the Income Tax Act. Shall this resolution carry?

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to make a great story about the changes in the Income Tax Act this year. We said we found little in the budget and this is a small fraction of even that budget. With respect to the employee's profit-sharing plan, I wonder whether we might ask for some explanation with regard to the kind of transaction which would be involved in this legislation? In particular will the minister go through (a), (b) and (c) and just expound the situation?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the special provisions with respect to profit-sharing plans are set out in section 79 of the Income Tax Act. As hon. members know, under this section if a trustee is appointed to receive profits set aside for the benefit of an employee, regardless of whether or not he receives those profits for probably a considerable number of years, they are considered to be income within the year in which they are allocated. However, representations have been made that even though the employee does not receive the benefit of the income and has to pay a tax on it, which in itself is sometimes objected to but is considered to be a benefit and therefore taxable, there are other factors that do permit income tax concessions that have not been utilized when the income is paid to the trustee of a profit-sharing plan. One, of course, is the matter of capital gain or losses. If there was a capital gain in the hands of an individual, as hon. members know, there is no capital gains tax. With respect to gains or losses on the funds that are handled by the trustee, these will not be taken into account in calculating the taxable income of the employee. What he will pay income tax on will be simply the amount that has been allocated to him in that year by the employer. Then under (b) the complaint that has been received that the trustee is not entitled to take advantage of the dividend tax credit provision is corrected. This would be available for an individual receiver of a dividend from a corporation that has paid Canadian taxes. The trustee will be able to deduct the usual dividend tax credit and the income will not as formerly be fully charged to the employee as taxable income. Then, under clause (c) it has been found that sometimes income has been allocated to an employee, but under the terms of the plan he has no vested interest in this allocation unless he stays in the employment of that particular employer for a certain period of years. Now, this provides that if the employee leaves that employer's employment within three years before he has received the vesting of his interests, a refund of taxes that have been charged to him will be arranged.

Those are the three features that are involved. They are all relieving sections, even in so far as participation in a profit-sharing plan is concerned, and they all have counterparts in income tax privileges on income if it went directly to the individual.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask what loss or gain to the treasury is expected to accrue from these changes?

Mr. Benidickson: It is a very difficult thing to estimate, Mr. Chairman. Profit-sharing is a practice that is growing. There are not too many of these plans, but they are becoming more common. We have no real statistics as to the actual amount of taxes represented by (a) (b) or (c); I think my hon. friend can realize that it is difficult to have statistical information as to what income tax we have placed, say on capital gains that have developed upon funds that were in the hands of the trustees of a profit-sharing scheme.

Mr. Harkness: As I understand these provisions I am sort of agreeable to them. I think they will probably be to the advantage of the taxpayer. The general purport of my question was to find out how much they were to the advantage of the taxpayer, if my assumption they were to his advantage was correct.

Mr. Benidickson: They are all relieving features.

Mr. Harkness: The parliamentary assistant apparently cannot give any figures, but can he assure me all these features accrue to the benefit of the taxpayer?

Mr. Benidickson: That is right.

Mr. Harkness: There is one other question I would like to ask which arises out of the preamble:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide, among other things—

What is the significance of the "among other things"? Are there some other income tax amendments which are not included in this particular paper we have before us and which will be subsequently introduced?

Mr. Benidickson: The introduction of these budget resolutions is always followed, after they are passed, by the introduction to the house of a fairly substantial bill amending the basic Income Tax Act. A majority of the changes in this rather bulky amending bill are always of the technical type, administrative changes and interpretations, matters of that kind, and that is largely what is referred to in the "among other things".

Mr. Harkness: Do I understand from that remark that the income tax bill which will be brought in will have a considerable number of other changes, some of which, so far as the regulations are concerned, might constitute more important changes than the three provisions which we have in this resolution before us?

Mr. Benidickson: Regulations, of course, are usually made by executive action and not by parliamentary action. I can assure the hon. member that it is expected that the amendments to the Income Tax Act this year will certainly be considerably less than the rather, as I said, large amending bill that was presented last year.

Mr. Knowles: There is one point I should like to make, but before I do so I might perhaps remind the parliamentary assistant that, although regulations are made by executive authority, they are made only by such authority as the executive receives from parliament. The regulations cannot go beyond whatever basis is laid down in a statute.

But, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Calgary North, is it not true that any changes in the bill to amend the Income Tax Act which involve any change in the balance of ways and means would have to be referred to in this resolution? Is it not true that though there may be other changes they could be only of an administrative character and could not involve an upset in the balance of ways and means?

Mr. Benidickson: I think that is an interpretation that could be used.

Mr. Knowles: Can there be any other?

Mr. Benidickson: Well, over-all upset of balance of ways and means, I think my hon. friend is referring to. Administrative changes that involve leniency or the opposite in interpretation and so on, I suppose, have degrees of effect upon tax collections, but so far as the general basis of income tax resolutions are concerned, any substantial effect upon ways and means is referred to in the resolutions that follow the budget.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Knowles: Can we not have it clear? Has the government anything up its sleeve in the bill?

Mr. Harris: No.

Mr. Knowles: You could have said that the first time.

Mr. Harris: You should not have thought we did.

Mr. Knowles: Oh?

Mr. Pearkes: There is one small group of taxpayers upon whose behalf I should like to make a plea and ask whether they will receive benefits under these provisions. I refer to those who make their sole income or augment their income by painting and who may be generally described as artists. Very frequently this group of men have to spend a long time in preparing their particular pictures. Frequently they have to take photographs of the area they want to paint and they may have to visit the area a couple of times. Then, quite often, they have to wait for two or three years until they have accumulated enough paintings to hold an exhibition.

At the time the exhibition is held they may have a considerable sale of their canvases. This means that although they have accumulated expenses over a number of years, their income is restricted to one particular year, the year in which they have the exhibition. I understand that some benefits are granted to authors who take some considerable time in assimilating the material for their book. I should like to ask the minister or the parliamentary assistant whether any consideration should be given to this other group of professional men who are in a position not unlike the position of the author.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend and I had a conversation on this point either just before the night of the budget or very shortly afterwards, and I explained to him that requests of this kind, when submitted either by letter or other forms of representation, are carefully considered by quite a large committee of officials of the government and then the ministers chiefly concerned, prior to the bringing down of the budget. He did compare the situation of the artists with the authors. I made inquiries and found that no such request had come to the attention of the government either this year or could we find one in previous years. I invited my hon. friend to continue his argument and further elaborate on the analogy and assured him that it would be considered by the budget committee in another year.

Mr. Pearkes: Will you take this as further representation and give it consideration for the future.

Mr. Nicholson: I would like to ask a question based on what is in this particular clause. I wonder whether the minister's parliamentary assistant has given consideration to the revenue that might be available on capital gains items? For example, there was an item in the paper the other day to the effect that former Premier Henry of Ontario sold his farm for $2 million. I understand this farm came into the family for about $200 originally. It seems to me that because of the policy of building up our cities people are making fantastic profits on capital gains in land and they should pay some return back to the treasury.

Mr. Nesbitt: Succession duty gets it.

Mr. Nicholson: Not in the form of income tax. It seems to me that here is a field where a lot of revenue would be available. From time to time members of the opposition make requests as to expenditures, and this evening the minister or the parliamentary assistant might indicate what consideration has been given to this important sector of the Canadian economy that certainly in the last 10 years could have provided substantial revenue for the country. The gains which have come to individuals as a result of government policy, but not as a result of any improvements they have made upon the lands, have been fantastic. For example, in the city of Ottawa if you want to get a decent piece of land on which to put a very small house you have to pay a very high price for it. Twenty years ago this parcel of land was worth very little. As a result of the people of Canada participating in building up this capital city those who sold lots have made fantastic returns. Can either the minister or the parliamentary assistant indicate what amount of revenue may be tapped from this field?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman,—

The Chairman: Before the parliamentary assistant replies, may I say it seems to me we are wandering rather far afield from this resolution, which, to my reading, is very much confined. Perhaps this might be dealt with on other occasions. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, I have a question but it is not along the line of the questioning of the hon. member for Mackenzie because his intention is to remove all types of incentive in this system of ours. My question has to do with paragraph 1(a). Does this paragraph mean that all transactions carried out by a trustee are going to be ruled as capital gains or capital losses transactions?

Mr. Benidickson: The proposed amendments refer only to the taxation that might apply to the individual to whom is allocated a share of the fund. It simply says that the gains and losses of the trustee operating the plan will be ignored in so far as the individual is concerned.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Is the trustee himself to be taxed on any of those transactions?

Mr. Benidickson: No.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): So, in effect, the parliamentary assistant is answering my question in this way—

Mr. Benidickson: The trustee does not pay tax because of the special provisions of section 79 which provide that the employee will pay on the allocations credited to him in the fund.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): In effect, the parliamentary assistant is answering my question in this way. No matter what the transaction may be that the trustee carries out, there will be no income tax payable or passed through to the employee. I should like an answer to the question.

Mr. Benidickson: The trustee does not pay the tax. The trustee would pay tax if it were not for the special provisions of the profit sharing section, section 79 of the act. This now is a tax relieving provision for the employee. Previously, employees did have to pay on their portion of a capital gain that might have been made in connection with the investments made by the trustee in operating the fund. From now on he will not be taxable for his individual share of a capital gain in the fund in the hands of the trustee.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): May I proceed with the question? There may be two types of transactions carried on here by a trustee, and I would like to have this cleared up. A trustee might have a transaction as an individual transaction which would be considered very definitely as a capital gains transaction; but if he were engaging in certain types of investments regularly I am sure the Minister of National Revenue would probably say that he had engaged in that and was doing it for a specific purpose, and he would be looked upon as earning income because of those activities. Do I understand from this section that no matter what his activities may be there will be no taxation from the income point of view either of the trustee or passed on to the employee who gets the benefit of it?

Mr. McCann: No matter what his activities as a trustee may be?

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend must remember that these trustees of profit sharing funds do carry on as trustees. They are not traders and they are not operating especially to do trading. They are investing the funds that are put in their hands, and they carry on under the normal rules that are consciously in the minds of trustees of all kinds of trust funds of this nature.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Do I understand we have not passed on to No. 2? Is that right?

Mr. Harkness: No; we are on No. 1.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What is it, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Order. We are considering this resolution with regard to the Income Tax Act. There has been no agreement that we should discuss one paragraph or another.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to ask a question—

Mr. Fleming: We had better do it in that way. There will be confusion otherwise.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I should like—

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I understand my hon. friend's question is on the second paragraph. I am suggesting that since the discussion was not completed on paragraph one we should remain with that paragraph until it is completed; otherwise we are going to be very confused in our discussion.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I would have thought that was in the discretion of the chairman. He has said we are discussing no particular paragraph.

Mr. Macdonnell: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): How many chairmen have we?

Mr. Macdonnell: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): There is no question of privilege.

The Chairman: The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Macdonnell: I wish the privilege of having you rule, sir, as to whether it would not be sensible and avoid a great deal of confusion to take this seriatim. I believe my hon. friend will agree with that and everyone will agree if we would just take the time to consider the convenience which it would give us.

[Mr. Hamilton (York West).]

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am not the chairman, and neither are a few others. The chairman has just told us we were—

The Chairman: Order. I have no authority to rule that we should deal with any part of this resolution in a particular order. However, if the committee by unanimous consent agrees to discuss paragraph one first it is quite within the powers of the committee to do so. Does the committee wish, for purposes of discussion, to deal with paragraph one first?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, we have been through this every year that I have been around here and we always seem to have the same difficulty. Surely, hon. members opposite had completed their questioning on the first paragraph.

Mr. Fleming: No.

Mr. Harris: I did not see anyone rise.

Mr. Rowe: No, they had not completed their questions.

Mr. Harris: Just a moment; will you tell me who rose?

Mr. Harkness: I attempted to rise and the Chairman gave the floor to the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Harris: I beg your pardon. I am afraid my eyesight must be leaving me. I saw the hon. member for York West remain in his seat and I did not see anyone rise. Let us get on with it.

Mr. Fleming: He is not through.

Mr. Harris: Now let us get on with it, because as I understand the questioning of the hon. member for York West we are trying to do here what he wants us to and he is holding us up.

Mr. Fleming: That remark should be resented.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, I think that is very unwarranted. I think I am entitled to an explanation here, and as far as I am concerned, to date I have not received it.

Mr. Harris: Let us get it clear; my hon. friend wants to know whether the transactions of a trustee with respect to the trust fund are going to be taxable and by any plain reading of the resolution before you it is an effort to remove from taxation the gains and losses in that fund.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Well, Mr. Chairman, I believe that for the first time I have received a straight answer to that particular question.

An hon. Member: For the sixth time.

Mr. Harris: The parliamentary assistant made that answer three times.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I was told that the trustee had certain types of transactions and therefore he was not going to be taxed but certainly a profit can come in different ways. He might be in the business of investments and in the ordinary course of events his activities might be interpreted as such and might be taxed. Now the minister has definitely answered and said that under no circumstances will he be taxed and that is the answer we want.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman—are you on the next point?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. Harkness: I am still on this point.

The Chairman: Order. I invited the committee to give unanimous consent to dealing with paragraph 1 first for the purpose of discussion. So far as I know the committee did not extend such unanimous consent. I had recognized the hon. member for Bow River and as I see it he has the floor.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the committee gave unanimous consent in order that we might have an orderly discussion in the interests of all concerned; there was no dissent.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to dealing with paragraph 1 of this resolution for the purpose of discussion in priority to paragraph 2?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harkness: From what the minister has said, Mr. Chairman, I understand that a trustee can invest money in any way which is allowed by the law and in any way he sees fit. Any profits he might make from that are not going to be taxable. That brings up the general question then of the position of the ordinary individual.

I am all in favour of putting the trustee in that position but I would like to see the ordinary individual put in that position also.

Apparently under the change which will be made by this resolution we are going to have the trustee in the position where if he buys three or four pieces of real estate in the course of a year and makes a reasonable amount of profit or even a big profit it is not going to be taxable, but if I as an individual do the same thing the profit in my hands will be taxable according to the interpretation of the Income Tax Act which the Minister of National Revenue's officials put on the matter and I will be assessed for it.

After we have passed this the trustee will be in a certain position and the ordinary individual will be in a different position so far as taxation is concerned or as far as capital gains are concerned.

In other words, it comes back to the general matter that the Department of National Revenue will in effect be taxing capital gains although the law does not provide for the taxation of capital gains.

We now have one particular type of person, a trustee, exempted from that and I think it is a good thing but could we not have the law applicable in the same way to all individuals so there will be no taxation of capital gains more or less at the discrimination of the officials of the Department of National Revenue?

The Chairman: Have we concluded the discussion on paragraph 1?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Macdonnell: I want to ask the parliamentary assistant if he will read subsection (c) with a view to seeing whether there is a possible conflict by reason of the last two lines. Let me read them:

> (c) there shall be excluded in calculating the income of an employee for the period of his first three years as a beneficiary under the plan any amount contingently allocated to him if, within that period, the employee does not become entitled to receive that amount upon his withdrawal from the plan.

Is there any possible inconsistency in the event of any withdrawal?

Mr. Benidickson: No, Mr. Chairman, it is quite a common thing in these plans that while there is an allocation under present law in the eyes of the taxation authorities, no benefit is paid when any employee leaves his employment within a certain fixed number of years because according to the arrangements under the plan, in that particular industry there has been no vesting.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I would like an answer from the minister with regard to the general question of the taxation in effect on capital gains although it is not permitted by the taxation law of this country.

Mr. Harris: Well, Mr. Chairman, in this resolution capital gains refers only to capital gains made in one of these employee-employer funds.

On the general subject of capital gains I have said every time I have been called upon to say it that there is no taxation of capital gains in our income tax law.

Mr. Harkness: That is my very point, Mr. Chairman. There is no provision for taxation of capital gains but in effect they are being taxed.

To my knowledge at the present time there are before the officials of the Minister of National Revenue a large number of cases of assessment of people who put in their income tax returns completely convinced that the money they made on a particular transaction was a capital gain. Two or three, five or six or even ten years afterward the thing is assessed as income although the taxpayer was perfectly clear in his own mind that it was a capital gain and should not be taxed and then the man is taxed on it as income and is also assessed interest on the amount he should have paid. In effect, as I say, we have a tax on capital gains which in my opinion is contrary to the law.

My essential question to the Minister of Finance is this. Is he prepared to have anything done in order to put an end to this anomalous situation?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, the trouble is that the income tax appeal board holds that these are not capital gains. This is a question of whether parliament ought to legislate that they are not and ought not to be taxed or whether we ought to leave it with the income tax appeal board.

I have heard my hon. friend and other hon. members of the opposition suggest—and I am sure if I were there I would argue the same—that if you have an income tax appeal board you ought to leave it to their jurisdiction to determine the cases which come before it. If, however, they make a decision which is contrary to government policy, the government will bring back before parliament and seek to have passed an amendment to the law. But so long as we do not have a tax on capital gains, and so far as the appeal board is concerned, it says it is not taxing a capital gain but is taxing income, I do not see that my hon. friend can expect any other result than what he gets.

Mr. Harkness: This has produced a very inequitable situation. A man is assessed on one of these things which he thinks is a capital gain if it is a large amount involved—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, how is this discussion in order if the discussion my colleague the hon. member for Mackenzie sought to raise was ruled out of order?

Mr. Harris: It is not in order at all.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, if I may speak to the point of order I would say I think it is in order because this resolution concerns the taxation or non-taxation of capital gains and therefore it is in order.

The Chairman: I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is quite right in rising to his point of order. I interrupted the hon. member for Mackenzie when he was speaking of a similar matter a short time ago. The hon. member for Calgary North commenced to speak of capital gains in relation to trustees, under paragraph 1 of this resolution, and by almost imperceptible degrees commenced to speak of capital gains—

Mr. Knowles: Quite perceptible.
