There was not any hesitency of hon. members at that time to indicate their attitude and thinking on closure, but it would appear that at the moment there are some on the government benches who are captives of Trans-Canada. I should like now to refer briefly to something which has been referred to already by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). Since he comes from the city of Calgary, I was glad to have him place on the record the thinking of the press in Calgary. I think that was most important because those people do not have any stock, probably such as you and I have, in oil ventures that do not pay any dividends and probably never will. I think it is most important to know that newspapers like the Calgary Herald came out with indications of what the government had in mind apparently from the beginning. On April 27 that newspaper contained an editorial entitled "Canada Can't Control a U.S. Plan". That is all I am going to say about that editorial.

An hon. Member: What paper?

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): The Calgary Herald of April 27.

An hon. Member: They do not say that today.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I will bring the hon. member up to date. On May 2 an editorial in the same paper was headed "An Unholy Mess". Here is just a little of what they had to say. Those who are yapping away like the term that we are not supposed to use may not like this, but I want to put it on the record:

> We do not blame the Americans behind this fantastic deal. They are not philanthropists yearning to do us Canadians a favour.

When they appeared before the committee you would have thought that we were children and that they were something like manna from heaven.

> And if they can find a government as meek and amiable as the Liberal government at Ottawa seems to be, a government which will dumbly foot half the bill to enable a foreign country to derive maximum benefit from Canadian natural resources, then they would be fools indeed not to take advantage of that unbelievably juicy turn of events.
> And to put the cap on an already revolting situation, have Canadians—

Mr. Weir: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand the hon. member is rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Weir: On a point of order.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): The hon. member cannot rise on a point of order during my speech, when he is not in his seat. He can do it at the end of my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the hon. member is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): The hon. member cannot rise on a point of order when I have the floor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will hear the point of order.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): The hon. member has been government whip for the last 11 years and he must know that you cannot raise a point of order when a member is speaking. An hon. member cannot raise a point of order when I have the floor. I continue:

> And to put the cap on an already revolting situation, have Canadians stopped to consider that the future of this country's natural gas at this moment is being determined . . . not in Ottawa, which is nominally the capital of Canada . . . but in Washington, D.C., the capital of the United States of America?
> It is hard to believe that a nation and a people with any pride would tolerate such a demeaning state of affairs as this.

That comes from the people in the heart of the oil industry of this country. Here is another one a little later, on Saturday, May 5:

> Stop the Pipe-line Negotiations Now

That is what my leader and our speakers have been saying for some time. The Trans-Canada Pipe Line Company defaulted and have been in default for some considerable time. It is time, as our leader has said emphatically, that this whole mess should be referred to a standing committee. Certainly no one could find fault with that except those who are themselves captives to Trans-Canada. I shall not refer to anything more in that particular editorial.

Mr. MacDougall: That is enough.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I hear the Liberal members say "That is enough," but it takes a lot to satisfy some people, and I shall give them some more. This is from the Calgary Herald of May 8.

Mr. Richardson: I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Is it a Tory newspaper?

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the hon. gentleman is rising on a point of order. I must hear the point of order.

Mr. Richardson: On a point of order. May I refer to citation 306 in the second edition of Beauchesne?

An hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know the citation.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): The Deputy Speaker is quite well acquainted with the rules.

Mr. MacDougall: That is the first constructive thing you have said in the whole speech.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): That is good. I am glad we have satisfied the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. It is so rare that we do so. The Calgary Herald of May 8 says:

Is This "The Dominion of Howe"?

Of course, we have referred to the Dominion of Canada and the British commonwealth of nations in the one breath, but is this the dominion of Howe? it says:

Canadians can scarcely be blamed for wondering if the Right Hon. C. D. Howe regards the building of the east-west natural gas pipe line, and the exploitation of Alberta's natural gas, as purely personal projects of the Right Hon. C. D. Howe.

In view of this being the pet project of the minister, I think that editorial is also well worth reading, because no one else has had an opportunity to present the facts before parliament for a case for an alternative to the Trans-Canada pipe line. Apparently they were warned off with the big stick. Let there be no mistake about that. The people of this country certainly have that impression, from what the minister himself has said and from the attitude of the government. I think it is very important that we have material of this sort from that particular area. It means more than my speaking or anyone else's speaking, and certainly means more than the various attitudes that have been held by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is only last January when he spoke in Toronto—and how contradictory can a man be?—and said the following:

A subsidy for the line is not desirable, since gas in central Ontario and elsewhere will compete as a fuel with coal and oil. Is it desirable for governments to subsidize one fuel against competing fuels and one set of producers against another? I think not.

Now we have a project which is neither beast nor bird, which is partly public and partly private. We must not overlook the importance and the necessity of getting a fair distribution of the natural resources across our country. I think members of this house would be well advised to recall what took place in the province of Ontario under the present leader of our party here in Ottawa today when he encouraged the entry into Ontario of more than $200 million, and new towns were built in his province. He has been urging the necessity for a survey, in the same way that he approached the lumber and timber industries in Ontario, and I think it is only sane that we should have a survey. Let us get the facts now that are necessary in this befuddled situation.

I regretted to hear the leader of the Social Credit party say that they are losing $50 thousand per day because of the gas going up in flame. That has been going on for some time, and we regret it, but I wish to say that we in Ontario have lost an estimated $100 million in the agricultural production of that area. I know that every member of the house would regret that too, but those are things that we have to take in our stride. To me it is more important to have a little delay in order that, as the final outcome, the producers will know what they are going to get well ahead instead of guessing at it and that the consumer will know what he is going to have to pay. So far it is more or less guesswork.

I repeat what I said a while ago. We should not be fooled about this load factor and through-put. I am afraid some people are. I want to say here that in western Ontario the Union Central Gas Company has been supplying gas in western Ontario for many years. At the moment, as I have said, they are importing 5½ billion cubic feet a year, and they are proposing to import another 15½ billion cubic feet, with the idea of supplying the areas from London up to Hamilton. At the present time the distributor pays 35 cents a thousand cubic feet. The new proposal is that we would pay 39 cents per thousand cubic feet, and that is on the load factor, about which we have heard so much, with a full capacity for every day of the year. If the people of Ontario will have to pay 16½ per cent more than we pay today, that should be our concern. In the meantime, we may be able to develop enough gas for ourselves. I think we will get the most out of it by finding markets close to home, and I hope we shall find a considerable flow of gas in southern Ontario, because if we are going to maintain a healthy manufacturing industry we must have a low fuel cost. Gas cannot be transported for over a 1,000 miles at a satisfactory rate. In Ontario we do not know what price we are going to pay for this gas, nor do we know whether it will be competitive with oil. That is where the mistake was made. This question should be referred to a committee so that further study could be made and the people will not have to rely on conjectures. We have had conjectures in the past. Fortunately for western Canada, they are exporting now 100 million cubic feet in the Montana market and 200 million cubic feet per day through the Pacific Northwest pipe line. The figure might be increased, as I hope it will be, pending the construction of this pipe line.

Before this is closed, I hope that we in western Ontario and other places in Canada will have a better idea of how much we shall have to pay for this gas. We wish to make our contribution to the economic development of this country, but we do not want to do it by guesswork. People's minds should be disabused of the fact that, because this pipe line goes through southern Ontario, the storage fields in that part will have to be a big factor. I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce can agree with this particular part of the argument, that I do not think it will be a very big factor. If these big storage fields were on the direct route of the Trans-Canada pipe line, then it would be a big factor.

Some years ago when this company got its charter, I of course—and I am frank to admit it—was hoping that we would have the route the same as we have on the interprovincial pipe line. Then it would have come through Sarnia and these Lambton storage fields would have been of some use. But since it became a matter of policy with our party that we must have an all-Canadian route, I am for an all-Canadian route and I make no apologies to anybody. I cannot see where these storage fields are going to be of any use because, after all is said and done, if this gas comes through to western Ontario through the Hamilton gate, in order to serve the most useful purpose it would have to go back there again. That means transporting that gas 180 miles one way and 180 miles the other way. It is possible there is some way in which it can be used more ecenomically.

Incidentally, I do not think the application to which I am about to refer has been passed yet. The strange thing to me—and I think many hon. members will agree with me—is that here is an application by the Union Gas Company Limited before the federal power commission for the importation of 15½ million cubic feet a day. That decision may not be forthcoming for some months. But suppose they do get 15½ million cubic feet a day. Then they will be prepared to service that part of Ontario from Hamilton to Windsor mostly. I am wondering whether they are so enthusiastic about the final stages of this pipe line as are some members of the government, because they are laying plans at the present time to service that part of Ontario and at a price, I must say—and I repeat it—a good deal less than that which it is going to cost for gas coming from Alberta. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that we should not be in a hurry at the moment. I think that the people in western Canada and in eastern Canada who are going to be serviced are going to regret the day that this thing was done in haste. They might better suffer a little loss for the time being and have both a bigger price at the well head over 25, 50 or 100 years, and a lower price to the consumer for that period of time.

I should like to comment for a moment on the financial set-up of this particular company that seems to want to build the pipe line, reluctantly apparently, without doing anything about it. Their type of financing is rather strange. Of course, it might be pipeline financing; I do not know about that matter. We know what the pipe lines have done in our country in the last few years. I may say this, however, to hon. members present, speaking of gas and oil. If any of us had been fortunate enough to have lived a few years ago when one of the pioneer oil companies was in its infancy and had put in his present indemnity—I do not mean ministers of the crown because they would have hogged it all; I am speaking of just one private member—this year's indemnity into that original development, when Imperial was operating a little refinery for petroleum, he would be receiving in dividends a good deal more than his indemnity today. In this set-up of financing, there is 12½ per cent of common stock, 75 per cent mortgage bonds and 12½ per cent debentures. It is true enough that these financial houses, insurance companies and so on will want bonds or debentures.

But the interesting part is this. Anybody who has the odd nickel in his pocket is not interested in that sort of thing. He wants common stock. We know the history of common stock of pipe lines all across the country and elsewhere. I think it would have been safer and more sound if there had been a greater amount available in common stock. As far as Canadians getting 51 per cent of the common stock is concerned, we have about as much hope of that as the proverbial snowball you-know-where.

I am going to say in conclusion—I am notified that my time is about up—that when the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) avails himself of the opportunity to rise in his place—

An hon. Member: Do you think he will?

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): —and give us his views on this important subject, I hope in the meantime he will have considered what has been said by both sides. He is a great corporation lawyer. There is no question about that. I know he will probably feel as though he should say something. I think the people down in my part of the country for whom I speak would like to know the Prime Minister's attitude with regard to this mess and whether he is going to allow it to go through.

We do not like closure, Mr. Speaker. We in our party make no apology to any government nor to any person for the attitude we have taken. I have no hesitation in saying that we have in the house today two members—and as I said a short time ago we might not continue to have one of them for a time—namely the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), who have made an exceptional contribution not only to this parliament but to their ridings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I make no apology for saying that because I am expressing the opinion which the press of this country expressed and which the people of this country will express when they get the opportunity to do so at the next election. Mr. Speaker, I am saying that we as Canadians should not provide a luscious melon to satisfy the hungry taste buds of foreign investors. I hope the time has come when the Prime Minister and others in the government will not be the Charley McCarthys of the big interests on the other side.

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this stage particularly to deal with the speeches made by three Winnipeg representatives in this house. Coming as I do from Manitoba I feel strongly that all three of them completely misrepresented the feeling of the people in the city of Winnipeg. I think it is quite clear to everybody that there is no place in Canada where the feeling on this subject is clearer than it is in the city of Winnipeg. The people there certainly do not feel that this is the time to take a second look or that this is the time to postpone the matter any further.

The premier of the province of Manitoba himself made representation to the board of transport commissioners and emphasized that point clearly. A little later the legislature of the province debated this matter and again this point was made clear not only by the Liberal members of the legislature but by all parties represented in the legislature.

Furthermore, the people as a whole in the province are very much concerned about the immediate implementation of this scheme because the company has negotiated probably a bigger purchase contract in the city of Winnipeg and surrounding area than in any other part of Canada.

So far as the province of Manitoba and the city of Winnipeg are concerned, the matter that concerns them now is to have this pipe line built at the earliest possible time. Generally speaking, they are very pleased with the situation and are grateful to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and to this government for having found a solution with respect to the early implementation of this proposition.

I can understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Stewart), who belong to the C.C.F. party and who choose to ignore the practical realities of any schemes. There is no likelihood of their party having the responsibility for putting any of these policies into operation in this country for many years. Hence over the years they have delved into the realm of fancy when it comes to great socialist theories. But when it comes to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), I must say that he is not so easily excused because he belongs to the official opposition. He belongs to one of the old parties of this country, and I regret that he did not show any more sense of responsibility than he did in the speech that he made to this house. But if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can be excused to a degree he is a socialist, I am at a loss to understand his stand on the procedure at the resolution stage.

All hon. members know that this hon. member was one of the first, and the one who put more effort than anybody in this house, in an attempt to prevent the second resolution from being dealt with by the house. He used his experience and his knowledge of the rules of the house to prevent the second resolution from being dealt with, and delayed proceedings for a considerable time. Now, what does the second resolution mean? I am going to refer now directly to the bill before us, part II of Bill No. 298. This second section, with which the hon. member tried to prevent us from dealing, embodies practically the same principle as was contained in the original resolution. It also deals with the same amount of money as was contained in the original resolution. There is no new money involved in this second part of the bill, but it does make it possible for roughly half of the money which was to be provided for the construction in Ontario to be used for the same purpose in the western provinces in order to expedite the construction of the pipe line. There is no subsidy involved in this second part.

Some hon. members from both parties have referred to this as a subsidy to western Canada. There is absolutely no subsidy involved. All that is involved is that the government allows the company to use up to $80 million for the construction of the western pipe line. There are only two things that can happen. Either the company puts in the pipe line and brings gas to Winnipeg, in which event the loan is repaid to the government at a rate of 5 per cent interest and it does not cost the taxpayers any money at all, or the company defaults and the government takes over the pipe line and also the security. In the first case the government might realize a small profit on this enterprise, and in the second place we end up with a pipe line at certainly no cost to the taxpayers. In this particular scheme Canada is in the very fortunate position that she cannot lose either way. The taxpayers of Canada have nothing to lose and the people of western Canada are assured of the pipe line going into the ground and reaching the city of Winnipeg this fall. In view of all this it is very difficult to understand why the three representatives of the city of Winnipeg are putting forth so much effort to try to prevent this from being done. Irrespective of what happens, under the present arrangement we are assured of a pipe line to Manitoba this fall. Furthermore, the pipe line goes into the ground irrespective of what is decided in Washington by the federal power commission.

Now, this second part of the bill is highly commendable and most desirable, particularly from the point of view of the western provinces. I was very much surprised to hear one of the front benchers of the Conservative party refer, in a speech on May 18, to what I take to be the attitude of the Tory party in this house. In his concluding remarks on page 4074 of Hansard for May 18, 1956, he said:

> Do you have to build this line now? Let us have another look at it;—

This is typical of the attitude taken so far.

> —let us do something for the economy of all parts of Canada rather than for the small privileged section of two or three provinces.

Here is the attitude of the Conservative party when it comes to the western provinces, a small privileged section. When the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who represents a constituency in Winnipeg, applauds that statement in the house, when he asks what is the big hurry, let us wait and delay and delay, then I am surprised.

It used to be that the Conservatives in the official opposition blamed their inefficiency and their abortive policies on the huge majority of the government. Now, they have a new line. They are turning their wrath on the United States investors in this country. They are trying to blame their difficulties on the United States investors in this country.

Mr. Fleming: How silly can you get?

Mr. Jutras: Just read your own speech.

Mr. Fleming: You will not find any such statement in those speeches.

Mr. Jutras: You made your speech before, and it is on the record.

An hon. Member: You made your speech before.

Mr. Fleming: Closure; you just do not give us any chance to speak.

Mr. Jutras: I think I have the floor. The hon. member made his speech and I think it is a typical example of the argument I am advancing.

Mr. Fleming: You were never more wrong in your life.

Mr. Jutras: As I mentioned, the member for Winnipeg South Centre followed the same line. He spoke very briefly on the pipe line itself and was very careful to speak mostly on the closure motion. He did mention the pipe line for two or three paragraphs, and frankly it would have been better if he had spoken exclusively on closure because he did not contribute very much. I am sure he will not be proud of the speech he made. He, of all people, should not be the one to turn his indignation against the United States investors in this country. I do not think there is a city anywhere in Canada that understands the United States people better than does the city of Winnipeg. There is certainly no other people who fear the United States capitalists to a less extent than the people of Winnipeg. I doubt if there is anywhere that United States investors are more welcome than in the city of Winnipeg—with the probable exception of Regina, with all due respect to our socialists in this house.

We in western Canada do welcome United States capital in our province to develop our resources.

Mr. Dufresne: Tell that to your friends from Quebec.

Mr. Jutras: Nowhere have provincial governments made more overtures to United States capital than possibly Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. We have vast resources which we are just beginning to develop, so we welcome United States and other capital that will help us to explore these resources and take advantage of the real wealth we have in our provinces. I for one certainly cannot understand why anybody in this country, and particularly anybody in this house, should abuse those people who have faith enough in this country to come in and use their resources in the development of this country as a whole. They come here at our invitation; they invest in this country under our terms. It is up to us to lay down the rules; it is up to us to state under which law or what law they will operate. As I say, we invite them to come here. Surely, once they are here under our terms we should be the last ones to abuse and criticize them and particularly to call them buccaneers and pirates and so on after they have come into the country. If we do not want them to come into the country there is a very easy way to stop them. If they come, as I say, it is because we invite them. I want to make it clear that I certainly am not one of those who criticize them when they come to this country.

Why is United States capital flowing into this country at the rate it is? It is because they have faith in the sound fiscal policies of this government. Will the hon. member hold his peace for a little while? After I have finished with this matter I shall come to his speech and paradoxes and I shall add a few more. One needs only to read the sound publications in the United States, in Great Britain and in other countries of the world to know that the one factor that encouraged United States capital to come to this country was above all else the sound fiscal policies of this government over the last several years. Another factor that encouraged them to come here was the stability of the government of this country. Then, there is the fact that they see the vast resources of this country. They have faith in Canada. They have faith in Canada not 50 years from now, not 100 years from now but now. That is the big difference between them and our friends of the official opposition. They think only in terms of years to come. As I say, since we have invited them to come here, they have come to help us develop our resources. We know where the western provinces would be if it had not been for the outside capital that came in. They have made possible whatever development we have.

I want to make it clear that I am not the only one who thinks in this way. We are very grateful, and we hope they will continue to come. It is very unfortunate that all this criticism should come at this time because United States capital is on the downgrade at the moment. It is getting less and not more. Why this campaign should be waged at this time is even harder to understand.

I come now to the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Stewart). The hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) referred to it this afternoon. I do not think I would have to refer to this matter if it had not been dealt with at some length by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Nickle) last Friday. The hon. member for Winnipeg North was up to the same trick as his leader used several months ago, the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Ellis) and a great many others. Hon. members will recall that at the very beginning of this discussion the leader of the C.C.F. party went on the air and charged that the rate at Sudbury would be 60 cents as against 34 cents in the United States. Taking that as his assumption, he tried to prove that this was a subsidy to the United States consumer. That was corrected the next day. It was proved that his reliable information was most unreliable. But, then, several hon. members came back to the same point. The hon. member for Winnipeg North, who is an accountant, purported to cite figures to show that the rates in the United States would be much lower than the rates in Canada. I admit it is not a simple matter to try to compare rates when they are on a different basis. This afternoon the hon. member for Lambton West said: "Oh, well, let us forget about that; we need not worry about the conditions." He insisted on making comparisons with two different things. There is nothing really mysterious about these various conditions of rates. The same principle applies to electric power, to the communication lines, to the telephones. What the hon. member is saying is that you should take the rate of a telephone call in the United States on Sunday and compare it with a Canadian rate of a telephone call on Monday or another day of the week during office hours.

We all know that the telephone rate is cheaper on holidays and Sundays than it is during business hours. It is even cheaper after six o'clock. To compare one rate with the other without taking these various factors into consideration is just plain ridiculous. And yet the hon. member for Lambton West rose in his place this afternoon and said we should not worry about the different factors; we should just take two rates and compare them. The point is, there are different factors and different rates, and there are a great many that have to be taken into consideration. I do not propose to go into all these factors at the moment, but in the case of the Winnipeg Central, which is the largest utility company in Winnipeg, they have already negotiated a contract so that we are not dealing with possibilities, we are dealing with facts as they are. They negotiated their contract on a 50 per cent load factor. The other company, the Midwestern, which is the company which will take the gas into the United States, negotiated their contract for 200 million cubic feet on a 95 per cent load factor basis; consequently, you cannot compare the two just on that basis. It is easy to break them down to a common denominator. By taking the 75 per cent load factor and by equalizing pressure, which is also another factor to take into consideration, it is found that over a 20-year period Winnipeg Central will pay an average price of 28·3 cents per thousand cubic feet. Over the same period the average price that would be paid by Midwestern would be 29·3 cents. In other words, the export price to the United States works out at an average of slightly more than one cent per thousand cubic feet higher than the price to Winnipeg.

There should not be too much question of that because, as has been pointed out by previous speakers, we have an act called the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act, which is on the statute books of this country. Regulation 9 of this act states in very clear language that no company can take gas and sell it cheaper in the United States than it sells it in Canada under similar conditions. This is clearly set out in regulation 9 of our Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. That act has to be complied with. So far, none of the contracts negotiated in Canada has been higher than in the United States. It should be pointed out, as it was previously, that in the case of the United States company, Winnipeg is on an escalator clause basis; whereas the other one is on a constant rate basis, which means that for the first year the Winnipeg company will pay roughly 2 cents more; but in the second year both will be the same; and in the third year the Winnipeg price will be exactly one cent lower; and the fourth year it will be 3 cents lower, and so on.

Taking the period of 20 years as a basis, the Trans-Canada company over that period of time will receive an average of an additional $2,000 or more per day on its exports to the United States than would be the case had the American company been able to buy it at the lesser price charged to the Winnipeg utility. This amounts to an annual increased revenue to Trans-Canada of $759,200 or, viewed in terms of the 20-year sale, Trans-Canada benefits to the amount of $15,184,000 more than if it had taken the Canadian rate. One can see the charge that this is a subsidy to United States consumers is definitely incorrect.

Before I close I want to deal briefly with the charge that the Trans-Canada company is the chosen instrument of the government. We have heard that statement over and over again. We all know if anybody was chosen by anybody that one had to be chosen by those who had the gas. One fact which seems to have been overlooked in the discussion is that this government has no gas to export. It can deal only with those companies which have licences to export gas from the province of Alberta. This was not brought about at the last minute, it has been going on for years.

The first real activity in the export of gas goes back to 1948, at the time of the discovery. Interest was created in the possibilities for gas export at that time and several applications were made to the conservation board of Alberta. In 1949 a natural gas export hearing took place and an application was made by Northwest Natural Gas Company and Alberta Natural Gas Company, both predominantly United States companies. Their application was to take gas to the Pacific northwest of the United States.

In October of the same year the Westcoast Transmission Company applied to take gas from Peace river to Vancouver and on to United States markets. They received their permit from the Alberta board in March, 1952, but they received their permit from the United States to take gas into that country only a few months ago. Let me point out that Mr. McMahon, the president, was not able to complete the financing of this enterprise until the licence was granted by the federal power commission in Washington.

Then we go to February, 1950. At this time Western Pipe Lines Limited, predominantly Canadian, applied for a permit to take gas from Winnipeg to Minnesota. In April of the same year Prairie Transmission Lines Limited, headed by a Canadian, also applied to take gas directly south to Minnesota; however, they withdrew their application and applied for one which would permit them to take gas to the Pacific coast.

In August, 1950, McColl-Frontenac and Union Oil applied to take gas to Montana, as was referred to this afternoon. In September, 1950, Canadian Delhi Oils Limited applied to export to eastern Canada over an all-Canadian route. At this stage, in September, 1950, two companies, Western Pipe Lines and Canadian Delhi had applications, and these hearings were not completed until November, 1950. The board announced its decision in 1951. The decision was that the province did not have sufficient gas for export in excess of their requirements. Mark you, this was in 1951.

In March of the same year Trans-Canada, now under its own name applied, as did Western Pipe Lines. The decision of the Alberta board in November, 1953, was that neither of these two companies could meet the financial requirements to carry the project through, so they were both turned down. I would like to point out that the Canadian government and the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not enter the picture until that late stage, after 1953. It was only then that Mr. Manning wrote the Prime Minister to the effect that they would consider granting a licence to a merger of these two companies to take care of both United States and eastern Canadian requirements.

I think the record is quite clear that nobody was debarred. There was ample opportunity for everybody. Several applications were made and all were dealt with by the Alberta conservation board. Their first consideration was to take care of the interests of the province of Alberta before allowing any export out of that province. It was in 1953 that this government, through the Minister of Trade and Commerce, announced the same policy and made it clear that the interests of the Canadian people had to be taken care of first before there could be any export to the United States. The only possible solution was to merge the last two companies I mentioned which had passed the various tests of the province, in order to try to bring this great natural resource to all parts of Canada for the benefit of Canadians and for a greater Canada. It was intended to treat eastern Canada and all parts of Canada on an equal basis, which is completely in line with the philosophy and experience of this government which builds for a greater and more prosperous country.

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in accordance with your instructions last week to wait until the conclusion of a speech before indicating to the hon. member who has spoken that he was incorrect in some of his statements. I do so now to assist the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) who I am sure, if he had heard my speech last week or read it at page 3939 of Hansard, would have discovered that contrary to his statements I did not advocate delay in building the pipe line but suggested that the pipe line could be started last week and these are my very words:

> The pipe line could be started this week if the company had any initiative and was prepared to substitute deeds for words.

I went on to say further that all of us who live in Manitoba are anxious that gas shall be delivered there this year.

An hon. Member: Is this a speech? You made that one.

Mr. Churchill: I pointed out:

> . . . Manitoba has been sold down the river . . . three years ago.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the same point of order may I point out to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) that far from advocating delay I advocated—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles: —I advocated that the line be built this year under the direction of that past master of public ownership, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe).

Mr. Reinke: Watch him squirm.

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to correct some of the other errors committed by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) in his remarks—

Mr. Harris: He did not make any.

Mr. Brooks: But I might say the two corrections which have been made are merely a sample of the many that are needed as far as his speech is concerned, because it was largely composed of fabrications and misrepresentations.

I am one of those who perhaps can look at this matter a little differently from other hon. members who have spoken in this house because, like the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Pearkes), I am from outside the area it is proposed this pipe line will serve. I rather wish I had a little of the eloquent indignation of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich in order to express my opinion concerning the fact that this is called a trans-Canada pipe line. I shall deal with that later.

I want to say that as far as we who live in the eastern provinces of Canada are concerned, while we will receive absolutely no benefit from the gas in Alberta we look upon that natural resource as we would upon any other natural resource of this country. We want to see it developed in the best manner for the people of the Dominion of Canada.

While we expect no benefit from it, we do not want to see this asset wasted nor do we want to see it cost the people of Canada more than it should.

In past years we have often heard it said that Canadians were the most wasteful people in the world as far as their great natural resources were concerned. Possibly that may have been true because we were a new country, but we have had considerable experience and there should be no recurrence of any great waste nor should there be any great misuse of our natural resources.

There are certain basic principles which I think should govern the development of our natural resources. Perhaps the first is that we as Canadians who are proud of these great assets should control their development. I think that is a great fundamental principle that should apply. The second might be that we should conserve and use our natural resources for the benefit of all the people in so far as that can be done. The third is that these great natural resources are not only for the people now living but should be conserved, developed and preserved for the people who will come after us.

As I said a moment ago, we may have been wasteful in the past in the development of our resources because we have had so many good things given to us. I do not suppose there is a country in the world with such a small population which has been so richly endowed as has the Dominion of Canada. In recent years many of these riches have been discovered in the form of great oil fields, great gas fields, base metal discoveries, uranium and other minerals. Having such a small population it may be that we have not been able to digest these riches as well as we possibly would if we had been a great, rich and heavily populated country.

The matter of closure was brought up again this afternoon. It is not my intention to debate closure except to say that I am sorry indeed that this government, after initiating closure on the first reading of this bill, has decided to initiate it again. Every hon. member, no matter what his constituency, has some interest in this pipe line. It has been called one of the great national developments of Canada, and has been compared with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Why should not hon. members representing constituencies from one end of Canada to the other, whether or not those constituencies are in areas to be served by the pipe line, have an opportunity to express their opinions in this House of Commons?

It is not my intention to develop that argument any further, but I think it is an interesting fact to note that members are sent to the House of Commons to express their opinions on matters and events which come before this house. This is not something having to do with war; this is not something in the form of a great national calamity; this is something which has to do with the future and a few weeks or even months would not make much difference. I submit that the government is unfair to the members of this House of Commons and to the people whom they represent when they do not give hon. members an opportunity to express their views on a question of this kind.

There are bound to be many views. I hope I will be excused if I attempt to indicate briefly this afternoon the views of the people of eastern Canada. We remember when the question of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines was brought before the house in 1951, and we remember the sessions of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. We remember the decisions that were made at that time.

I told my constituents over the radio and individually what were the results of the decisions arrived at in the committee. Although my people would get no benefit they were pleased to know that this was to be an all-Canadian pipe line and would not go through the United States. We were guaranteed by the people who were asking for incorporation that it would be an all-Canadian pipe line. The people of the eastern provinces agreed 100 per cent. There was no doubt that it was to be an all-Canadian pipe line.

The matter of finances was also discussed in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. What were we guaranteed then? We were guaranteed that the pipe line company would pay 100 per cent of the cost of this line. This also appealed to the people of the eastern Canadian provinces, as I am sure it did also to people in other parts of Canada who would not be able to receive gas from this line. There was no objection to it because it was to be an all-Canadian pipe line to be paid for, not by Canada, not by the people of the eastern provinces, but by this company. That also was satisfactory to our people in 1951.

We were told at that time that it would be under the control of Canadians. Later on we found out that a company known as the Hudson Bay Oil and Gas Company would own 327,000 shares; that another United States-controlled company, Canadian Gulf Oil company, would own 327,000 shares; that Tennessee Gas Transmission Company would own 327,000 shares; that other United States companies would own more shares; that in all about 83 per cent of the shares of this company would be controlled in the United States. Our people did not think so much of that as long as the company was to be under the control of a Canadian directorate or the Canadian people. Mr. F. A. Schultz, vice president of Canadian Delhi Oil Limited of Calgary, one of the prime backers of the proposed company, stated before the committee:

> The third consideration was that the project had to be economically feasible. We are satisfied at this stage that the line is entirely feasible.

We were told at that time that it was entirely feasible. As I said a moment ago, representing the people of eastern Canada, we were satisfied with the report of Mr. Shultz, the vice president of this company, that it was feasible. Again we heard nothing about the federal government or the people of Canada having to put up money to pay for the pipe line crossing the terrain of northern Ontario. Whilst the remarks of Mr. Tolmie, the parliamentary agent for the proposed company, and some of his engineers have been put on the record before, I would like just to quote again the statements that were made at that time as to the responsibility of the Canadian government in connection with building across the rugged terrain through northern Ontario.

I might say that at that time this company was applying for incorporation. They were willing and ready to promise anything, and they did promise anything and everything to the members of this House of Commons and the people of Canada. Very few of the things that they promised to the parliament of Canada or to the people have been carried out by them. Mr. Tolmie said:

> The relative ruggedness of the terrain between Kenora and Sudbury has given some people the idea that this project is a little bit difficult or even impossible and for that reason we have today the engineer who made the survey on behalf of this company. I think he will be able to give you some enlightening comments on the type of country that these pipe-line builders have met in other countries and that the shield country of Canada is not as formidable as we have been led to believe, largely because of going over it by train and plane.

Then he introduced Mr. Floyd Waterfield of the Pipe Line Engineering Company and the Oklahoma Contracting Corporation. Mr. Waterfield gave the following evidence before the committee:

> "So, everything being considered," he told the committee, "that so-called south route as I have referred to it along the (great) lakes provided some quite difficult construction problems—but I have seen worse in our country. In Pennsylvania there are certain sections of that country which are difficult particularly across the Tuscarora mountains and in West Virginia. That is a pipeliner's hell there. So there is nothing in this pipe-line construction that is insurmountable. It is just big. Some of it is going to be difficult construction but the average over-all cost comes to a very reasonable and reconcilable figure."

They did not want the Canadian people to pay for it. They themselves were prepared to pay for it at that time. They appealed to the people of this country who will get no benefit, to the people in the far-reaching provinces and other parts of Canada which would get no benefit. We had no objections on the evidence and on the report of this company which came here and sought to obtain incorporation.

So what do we have? First, in 1951 we had the promise that it would be an all-Canadian line. Second, there was no financial difficulty; that this company was willing and prepared —not only willing and prepared but they told us of the finances they could get. They told us in the committee that there was some firm in New York, I think, where they could obtain $250 million for the purpose of financing it. We were told they could get all the finance that was needed. We were told that the northern route, which we all agreed here in this House of Commons was a route we would like to see followed, was not a difficult route and that they would build it across there. They would serve Canada and ask no one to help them. But that was in 1951. After they obtained their incorporation, we began to see just what this company had in its mind.

I am sure that in 1951 they must have appeared before the government with their tongues in their cheeks, and that they also gave evidence before this committee with their tongues in their cheeks, because they no sooner got the incorporation than they began to point out the great difficulties in the construction of a Canadian pipe line. First, they told us that the pipe line would not pay unless some 200 million cubic feet of gas were exported daily to the United States.

As has been said here many times they joined with another company, and a new company was formed in 1954. Then they began to point out the great difficulties of the northern route. They said their company coud not build this route; that unless there was assistance from the Canadian government and from the Ontario government it could not be completed. That was in 1954. Then from 1951 to 1956 we have heard this company complaining that they could not do this and could not do that, and they come back again to the government today. They not only ask them to build over the rough terrain in northern Ontario, but now they tell them they cannot even build from the border of Alberta to the city of Winnipeg.

Has there ever been such a change in the promises of such a corporation in the whole history of this country? They have climbed today on the backs of the Canadian government; and not only are they on their backs but believe me they have their hands very close to the throats of the Canadian government and Canadian people.

The other day the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Pearkes), said they had blackmailed the Canadian government into giving them conditions for which they had never asked before. I believe the people of Canada will feel that we have been blackmailed; that this company has taken advantage of the position which it has been allowed to attain, and today they are blackmailing the government and the Canadian people to assist them into doing something that they promised some years ago they could do without any assistance.

I can follow some hon. members in their arguments here when they speak entirely from local and personal points of view. For instance, the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hosking), in speaking this afternoon, in his argument for the pipe line said that in the city of Guelph their old coal apparatus was outworn and out of date and they had to have a new one. He wanted to see the pipe line put through for this reason. That is a good reason for the city of Guelph, a very fine city for which we all have a high regard because it gave us our hon. leader. But it is not reason enough for the people of Canada, it is not reason enough for the people in my part of the country.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras), discussing the city of Winnipeg—and he made so many mistakes that he had to be corrected by other hon. members—said it was a great advantage to the city of Winnipeg. Of course it will be a great advantage to the city of Winnipeg; but we are told that if the pipe line is built through the city of Winnipeg and we do not get the 200 million cubic feet per day of gas going into the United States, the amount of money received from the gas sold in the city of Winnipeg will be only a trickle and that no company could afford to ship gas to the city of Winnipeg unless arrangements were made for the gas to be shipped to the United States.

For over a year, since February, 1955, we have waited for the federal power commission in the United States to grant permission to export gas to the United States. We seem to be no further ahead today than we were then. As a matter of fact, with the antagonistic feelings there are against this Trans-Canada Pipe Line company in the United States, it seems as though that permission may not be granted. So we are in a very poor position as far as this development of our gas pipe line is concerned.

As I said, I can understand some of the arguments. I can follow to a certain extent the hon. members of the Social Credit party. They have this great and valuable resource in their own province, and they want to sell it. Naturally any person or organization which has a good article wants to sell it. They think that they are going to sell it more quickly if this matter is hurried through at this time without proper organization or without proper study. I do not think that result follows at all. I am much surprised to see the great confidence which some of their members place in this government, and the great applause they sometimes give in this connection when this pipe line is mentioned. I should like to read what the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Thomas) said the other day. As reported at page 3961 of Hansard the hon. member, speaking of the delay, said this:

> It is as a result of their fumbling, bumbling and lack of decision that the present step was made necessary.

He was speaking of the federal government, the federal cabinet, at that time. Then he went on to say this:

> We have to realize that because of this fumbling and indecision the government have taken the only action they could have taken under the circumstances. I would not be surprised but what one of the greatest causes of indecision within the government was the attitude of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I say that because he has attempted all through the years to squash anything that would bring any credit to the Social Credit government of Alberta. It is quite possible that by his arguments he led some of the junior members of the cabinet to go along with him.
> We also know that over the years it has been the expressed policy of the Liberal party in the province of Alberta that there will be no export of natural resources. They have opposed the export of coal, the export of oil, the export of gas. Now the whole thing has come down to the present situation. The government has made a mess of things.

Still, with that verdict by the members of the Social Credit party as to a government which they themselves have said has made a mess of this pipe line, they will stand up today and defend the action of that government which, in my opinion, is going to make a bigger mess of it than before.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low), as a reason why he wanted to see this pipe line built immediately, said the government or the people of Alberta were losing $50,000 a day. I think that is probably a great exaggeration, but I am not sure. However, I should like to ask him this question. If the Alberta government are losing $50,000 a day, who is responsible for their loss?

Mr. Blackmore: Failure to sell the gas.

Mr. Brooks: It has been the failure of this government—as they said, by their fumbling and their bumbling—to do what they should have done in the last five or six years. Those are the people who are responsible. Yet those are the people whom they are supporting today to do more fumbling and bumbling as far as this pipe line is concerned.

Mr. Blackmore: The failure to sell gas.

Mr. Brooks: Then again, do they think for one minute that as soon as this bill goes through the house this $50,000 a day they speak of will roll into the treasury of the government of Alberta?

Mr. Blackmore: There will be a great deal more.

Mr. Brooks: It will depend upon what the United States does. My hon. friend knows this. It will depend on whether the federal power commission of the United States grants the permit to sell 200 million cubic feet of gas to the United States. Consideration may go on for a year or it may go on for years. It may never happen. Alberta will still be losing that $50,000 a day, and they can blame their friends across the way for that loss.

I can also understand some individuals—and I am speaking of no particular individual; many of them have been mentioned—connected with this gas industry in Alberta. I know a good many of them myself. I can understand these people being extremely anxious to get this thing pushed forward. They have a personal interest. They have an axe to grind.

Mr. Blackmore: They have a national interest.

Mr. Brooks: They want to gain something, probably, on the investments they have. They know that if this company fails—as it very well could—this thing is going to be saddled on the government and the people of Canada. They know that, and they do not think they are taking any great risk as far as that is concerned. I have nothing to say about Ontario. They are interested. Our provinces are not. Ontario is an interested party. They want gas no doubt for northern Ontario. They have already been sucked into this thing. Perhaps they were unwilling, but they had to come in. Now that they are in, it looks to me as though it might be more or less a Hobson's choice for them to carry on.

An hon. Member: Who are the suckers now.

Mr. Brooks: The people of Canada. An attempt is being made to make them the suckers.

This all leads me to say that I agree with the amendment which was moved the other day by my friend the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and which suggested that first this matter should go to a committee. A few days or a few weeks more spent in discussion of such a great undertaking for the development of this country of ours is not going to make much difference. Years were taken to build the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir John A. Macdonald had all sorts of trouble—

Mr. MacDougall: We have heard all that a thousand times.

Mr. Brooks: It will not hurt you to hear it again. We have heard you a thousand times, too, and it has not been to much advantage. As I was saying, I agree with the hon. member for Prince Albert. We should know what people are going to be supplied. We do not yet know whether the gas is going to go into the United States. That matter could be discussed. We do not know the people who are going to take it in Fort William and Port Arthur.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You worry about New Brunswick.

Mr. Brooks: There is talk about Algoma Steel going to take gas. Algoma Steel is going to pay nearly twice as much for their gas as will companies down in the United States. If the federal power commission allow gas to be exported to the United States, Algoma Steel will still pay almost twice as much as do the people down in the United States. We have not heard from Montreal, the great city of Canada. We do not know how much of this gas is going to be sold in Montreal, which is 2,200 miles from the gas fields of Alberta. It is going to cost the city of Montreal about twice as much for their gas as is paid in Winnipeg or in Saskatchewan. Have we any reason to believe that these people in that city of Montreal are going to rush in with open arms to take this gas from the Trans-Canada company? How about the city of Ottawa? We all live here part of the time. I have not heard nor have I seen it reported in the press of Ottawa that the people, business or anyone else are rushing in and asking that this gas be brought into the city of Ottawa in the immediate future.

These are things which I say should be considered by a committee. These are things which should be known by the people before they go ahead. These are the questions which are being asked and which I feel should be answered. What about the cost of construction? In 1951 an estimate was given. Since then we have heard other estimates. However, the cost of construction is going up all the time.

Mr. MacDougall: That is why we should not wait.

Mr. Brooks: We should know just what it is going to cost. There is another thing we ought to know. We have been told many things which we have found out have not been altogether facts. We ought to know whether there are any other companies which are willing to take on the construction of this pipe line. We ought to know whether there is other pipe available as far as these other companies are concerned. There are many other things that should be considered. The opinion of the eastern provinces, of the province of British Columbia and of the province of Quebec should be known.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is not a trans-Canada or a Canadian pipe-line bill. The province of British Columbia will derive no benefit from it. The province of Quebec will derive very little, if any, benefit from it. They are not clamouring for the gas from this pipe line. The maritime provinces will receive absolutely no benefit from it. These are the things which should be taken into consideration by any committee examining this matter.

I want to speak for a moment about the situation in the maritime provinces. In 1951 the maritimes had no criticism of this project, but were pleased and anxious to see that this pipe line was being constructed. Today, when they realize that the government of Canada is willing and ready to lend money to a United States concern to construct a pipe line from Alberta to Winnipeg, and then to help construct the portion in Ontario at a cost of some $160 million, the people of the maritimes want to know why this government could not guarantee the bonds of the province of New Brunswick to permit hydro development in that province when it was so badly needed. That is one question which I think, in fairness to the people of New Brunswick and the people of the maritime provinces, the Prime Minister or someone else should answer in this house.

Not so long ago the Prime Minister referred to the maritime provinces when speaking to the Canadian Labour Congress in the city of Toronto. At that time he pointed out that the rest of Canada felt that there had been certain neglect of the eastern provinces, and he felt that something should be done about it. There should be economic redevelopment in the eastern provinces, and special measures should be taken. He also went on to say, and it sounded very logical and reasonable, that the people of the eastern provinces should state just what they wanted and that would be given careful consideration by the federal government.

I have sat in this house for 20 years, and I have heard repeatedly from members from the maritime provinces. Time and time again they have told this government what they felt was needed for the development of the maritime provinces. The Prime Minister must know. The Prime Minister has taken part in federal-provincial conferences, and there has not been one provincial government from the maritimes that has not had a long list of things it felt the federal government could do to greatly benefit the people in that area.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a lot the federal government can do to help our people. Those things are well known. In the face of what is happening in this parliament today there is no excuse whatever for this federal government not giving assistance to these little provinces down by the sea which are having such a hard struggle to build up their economy. As I said a moment ago, the government is helping a great United States company which promised the people of Canada and the government that they, without any financial assistance, would build this pipe line. This company must have hundreds of millions of dollars at its disposal today which could be used to build this pipe line without federal government aid. This same government refused aid to the little province of New Brunswick, which is trying to develop hydro facilities in order to process the great natural resources being found there at the present time. I say it is unfair to the people of our province, and that is one angle which should be considered and discussed by this government.

There is another matter which I should like to discuss, but I have not much time. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras), in what I call a speech full of cheap political claptrap, said we were opposed to United States capital. We welcome United States capital into this country, and we have said so time and time again. What we object to is this. We object to United States capital coming in here, buying up all our natural resources and siphoning them out of the country, because it is a well known fact that when your natural resources are taken out of the country your people leave. What we want is more United States capital. In New Brunswick we do not want our minerals to be shipped out of the country. We want United States capital to come in and build smelters and refineries in that area. That is what we want, and that is what we want for this Dominion of Canada.

I can give you an example of United States capital. They own the great Knob mine in Labrador and have built a railroad, which should have been built by the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian people, because that is going to be one of the richest parts of the Dominion of Canada. But they own the mines, the railways and the ships at Seven Islands which take the ore from Canada to the United States to be smelted. Those are the things to which we object, Mr. Speaker, not United States capital coming into this country but United States capital taking most of our natural resources out of this country for the employment of their own people and not for the employment of the people here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my time is up. This bill should be sent to a committee to be studied; there is no question about that. If there ever was a case of "heads you win, tails I lose"—which the minister mentioned in reverse the other day—we in the maritimes feel that this is such a case. We want this matter thoroughly discussed in a committee so that every angle can be studied, and so that the people of Canada will know where they are going with relation to this bill.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) invited me to take part in this debate and I gladly do so. I would have done so anyway, but I should like to read the invitation he extended to me. I quote from page 3869 of Hansard:

> I should like to hear from the Minister of Finance just how enthusiastic he is about this proposal. I should like to hear from him how well he likes the idea of Canadian taxpayers' money being put up to assure the control of one of our greatest resources by investors in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, there never has been a more inaccurate statement put in the form of a question than that which has been made by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Drew: It is accurate.

Mr. Harris: The hon. member for Provencher delivered an excellent speech this afternoon, and I shall have to repeat a little of what he said.

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Harris: But in any event I want to make it clear that this mouthful phrase about the great natural resources of this country being sold has been adopted by most of the opposition speakers when they do not know what it means. The bill before the house has to do with the construction of a pipe line. The pipe line, of course, will transport natural gas, and in so far as there is any natural resource concerned in this debate it is with respect to the gas itself, and not the pipe line.

Now, sir, this government and this parliament do not own one cubic inch of natural gas. We are not dealing with the natural resources when we discuss this bill. That belongs, sir, to the province of Alberta, or rather to those persons in Alberta who have discovered the gas and want to sell it.

Let us consider what we in this parliament are called upon to do; let us go back to the discovery of gas. And may I point out that every hon. member could read with profit the comments made by my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Prudham), and what was said by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) with respect to this natural resource of Alberta. Both these hon. gentlemen placed before the house the facts with respect to natural gas and what it would mean to the economy of this country if that natural gas is turned into money.

The other day in his speech the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) tried to suggest that he was rather opposed to this whole business. If I understand the tenor of his remarks, they were to the effect that there was no rush in this; that we could go slowly; that we could leave the gas in the ground for the time being if we wanted to and perhaps it could be dug up by a later generation. In his speech the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich took much the same view, and I was a little surprised because the hon. gentleman is not the kind of man to say, "Now that we have gas in British Columbia we do not care what happens to the rest of the country".

Let me go back to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. May I point out to him that in his party there are some gentlemen who could give him a certain instruction with respect to some of the parables in the Bible. May I draw his attention to the fact that in one particular parable the master did not give the reward to the servant who buried his talents in the ground and left them there. The reward given by the master, Mr. Speaker, was to him who had taken his talents and wisely and prudently used them and returned them to the master with interest.

Mr. Macdonnell: Used them prudently.

Mr. Harris: In the province of Alberta a great many people and a great many companies have spent a great deal of money to find natural gas and oil. They have been desiring to sell that in the markets of Canada and the United States. This government became involved in this argument, as the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) said, only something over two years ago. It is true that we incorporated pipe-line companies before that but in fact, until the Alberta conservation board decided there was gas within Alberta for the purposes of export, we were not in a position to do anything about it. But having made that decision through the conservation board, the government of Alberta quite rightly would expect this parliament to take some action in some form to carry out their wishes.

At that point, sir, this government was faced with the decision, are we going to uphold the whole policy of every successive government in Canada since 1907, namely not to permit the export of any energy until Canadian demand had been adequately covered? This government made a decision which every hon. member approved, namely that we would not grant a permit until we had decided that Canadian need and Canadian uses would be adequately protected.

I want it clearly understood that the conservation board of the province of Alberta had given that decision as well. I am not suggesting that because we made that decision they had not also taken the same view. But they said, in the Pincher Creek area, or in that particular area, we shall dedicate for export out of Alberta so many hundred million cubic feet of gas a day, I think something between 500 million and 600 million. At that point the federal government came into the picture for the first time. We have made the decision that we will not permit the export out of Canada of more than 200 million cubic feet a day, and that by way of Emerson down to the midwest states. I have not heard anyone in this house in this debate or in a previous debate say that decision was the wrong one to take. What does it mean, sir?

Mr. Macdonnell: That is one of the things we want to find out about.

Mr. Harris: Oh, yes. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that no one in this debate has quarrelled with our decision that if there are somewhere between 500 million and 600 million cubic feet a day of natural gas available for export out of Alberta the proper proportion to export to the United States at the moment at any rate is 200 million cubic feet. Since we made that decision, sir, it followed that we should also require that the remainder of that amount should be transported to eastern Canada for use along the route and in eastern Canada.

It has always been understood, sir, that we should have an all-Canadian pipe line in the sense that the pipe line would run through Canada. No hon. member of this house, as far as I have been able to find out, except the hon. member for Calgary South, has ever advocated any other course. Well, sir, the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company is a federal incorporation; it has a federal charter because it has to have the right to transport gas across international or, at least, across provincial boundaries.

In case anybody feels that he has got himself confused on this issue, I repeat that our position arises only because of the fact that someone wants to transport gas across provincial or international boundaries. We do not own the gas; we have no control over it except that which I have described. Trans-Canada Pipe Lines then made certain engagements to buy and sell gas; to buy it in the west, transport it and sell it in the east. In the course of doing so they asked permission, or at any rate they made a contract, with a company which had to apply to the federal power commission in Washington to import that 200 million cubic feet a day at Emerson.

At that point hon. members of the Conservative party opposite began to point out and suggest, directly and indirectly, that this government was having its decisions made for it by an agency of a foreign government, and I quote from the Leader of the Opposition on another occasion. He said at page 2171 of Hansard:

> This proposal is going to delay the delivery of gas by adopting a method that makes us dependent upon the whims of the federal power commission in Washington.
> This government has placed itself in the humiliating and improper position where it is bound to wait until an agency of the government of the United States reaches a decision.

We heard those arguments—

Mr. Drew: What was the date of the statement?

Mr. Harris: That statement was made on March 15, 1956.

Mr. Drew: Before you brought in your new measure.

Mr. Harris: And since this debate has begun we have heard the same suggestions made by hon. members opposite in criticism of the policy which we now put forward, which would mean that we would not wait for the federal power commission at all.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta conservation board has complete control of the sale of natural gas outside Alberta in the sense that unless they allow the export of it there is no export. My hon. friends of the C.C.F. party have talked at some length and in glowing terms about public ownership and about the Ontario hydro commission as an outstanding example of its success. No one in Ontario will disagree with them. The Ontario hydro commission is an excellent institution which discharges its duties quite well; but there is no comparison at all in this case with the Ontario hydro commission. If my hon. friends were to go out to the province of Alberta and say to that government,

"You should produce this natural gas and you should market it within the confines of the province of Alberta," they would be talking about the same thing they are talking about when they mention the Ontario hydro, which develops power in the province of Ontario and sells it within the province.

Instead of that, they are discussing now this government running a pipe line at public expense through at least four provinces and perhaps even five, making contracts for the sale of gas throughout all those provinces with municipal corporations and provincial governments when in fact, Mr. Speaker, the premier of the province of Ontario, in the debates in the legislature just recently, said that after the fullest consideration they unanimously rejected the idea that Ontario hydro would distribute natural gas in Ontario.

Mr. Knowles: You run a railway transporting goods you do not own.

Mr. Harris: Yes, and I have often heard hon. members say in this house it is regrettable that we are in that position.

An hon. Member: What do you think about it?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company found last year that this government and indeed the government of Ontario as well were insisting that the pipe line go through not the shortest northern Ontario route but a northern Ontario route which is longer than they normally would survey, and the result was they expected the government of Ontario and Canada to contribute in some way to the construction of that line which would be at an extra cost because of its length and direction. We have not subsidized that line, and we are making no subsidy at all in the bill before the house. Let any hon. member opposite who uses the word subsidy correct himself and speak of a loan.

The province of Ontario, desiring to have natural gas in Ontario and desiring to assist this government in providing it in the reasonably near future, entered into an agreement with us that they would help finance that northern Ontario section of the trans-Canada pipe line. That is part of the bill before the house. We are advancing money. We are creating a crown corporation for the purpose of constructing a line and leasing it and perhaps ultimately selling it to the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company. Now I understand, Mr. Speaker, that even this part of our proposal does not meet with the approval of hon. members opposite but let me remind them that the premier of the province of Ontario and his government felt that this was wise and desirable in the interests of the people of the province of Ontario.

May I just now, sir, by way of interjection, answer what the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) has said. This government and any government of Canada would be hopelessly unable to say on all occasions and on every occasion, "We shall do something for every part of Canada at this particular moment". This government has stayed in office for many reasons, but one of them is that we have given full consideration to the sectional requirements of this country.

Mr. Brooks: You have not a very good idea of the meaning of requirements.

Mr. Harris: It may be, Mr. Speaker, that at any given time there will not be something we can do for a particular part of Canada, but we are in office because when the opportunity arises we have always seized it and we shall do so in the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company made its contract with the United States company which wanted to import gas into the United States, that company made an application to the federal power commission for the purpose of obtaining an import permit. I think that consideration began in December—certainly the hearing began in early February—and the hearings are not yet completed but are expected to be completed some time before the summer holidays. This spring, sir, we were faced with a decision to be taken. That decision was, shall we await further a decision of the federal power commission which appears to be necessary before financing can be made available to Trans-Canada, and if we wait what will be the damage, if any, to the Canadian economy in waiting one more year?

Ordinarily a minister of finance is not inclined to loan anyone $80 million, and when this proposal was considered in this department I must say I gave it a certain amount of critical examination. But let us consider the advantages and disadvantages of the proposal to do what this bill now provides for.

This bill provides for the construction of the western leg of this pipe line this year. By the way, sir, something which may be interesting to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is this. I believe he made up the minds of some government supporters when his party two weeks ago today moved the adjournment of this house on a matter of urgent public business, namely the method of financing the western leg. In the course of speaking to that motion and before Your Honour disallowed it the hon. member said this urgency "relates to getting something done without further delay in western Canada". He said further:

> Your Honour realizes that the urgency that confronts us today is that unless some action is taken before long the western leg of the across-Canada pipe line cannot be built this year.

He also went on to say that it would be desirable to give parliament the views of his party "as to what they feel should be done to get this project under way without further delay".

Mr. Speaker, in April this year it became evident that if the federal power commission were not to complete its work immediately this government would be faced with the decision, as I said before, as to whether to delay this project one year or to take some action. At that point it would have been easy to say, "We shall not intervene at all; we shall await the decision of the federal power commission, and if it is successful no doubt this company will be able to finance itself by next season". However, Mr. Speaker, there was another factor that had to be considered.

This company ordered 34-inch pipe last year. That pipe is now partly rolled, and the remainder will be rolled and ready within a matter of days or weeks. But, Mr. Speaker, that involves an investment of between $30 and $40 million and it was highly unlikely, that those who had ordered that pipe would be content to carry the pipe for another season.

Now, if it happened perchance that the federal power commission did not give a decision until late this year it was extremely unlikely—indeed, the odds were very much against it—that we would be able to acquire pipe after that in time for the construction period of 1957, and that the first pipe would be laid for the western leg in July, 1958. Well, sir, that was our choice. We could risk that or we could take the action we are taking here.

I come back, then, to what the hon. member for Lethbridge and my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys have said, that in Alberta there are millions of dollars worth of natural gas capped and blanketed down, of no use whatever to the economy of Canada at the moment. The Minister of Finance is entitled to consider the condition of the economy and the revenues which will come into his coffers should business continue at a high level.

This project; the building of the pipe line itself; the installations in the consumer homes; the installations in industry and the installations in municipal institutions, we thought would run to a cost of something over $1 billion spent in the Canadian economy over the next five years. But more than that, sir, if all this wealth is to be tapped and used, may I point out that this government at the present rate, if these companies are successful in selling their gas at a profit, will take 45 per cent of that profit by way of corporation income tax.

When my friend the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich—and perhaps also the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, but particularly the former—appeals to the Minister of Finance to go out to Vancouver island and explain to his constituents why a municipal corporation has to go without taxes from us, or why the local hospital should not have a wing on it, all I can say is, "Bless your soul, if this project gets going we will have enough money for all the things you have asked for".

Mr. Knowles: Is that a promise?

Mr. Fulton: You had better take that off Hansard.

Mr. Harris: No, that is not a promise.

Mr. Fulton: It is a careless exaggeration.

Mr. Harris: I shall enter my little caveat to say I was quite right; literally, we would have enough money for all the projects, but we would use our usual good sense in deciding which ones should be proceeded with.

Mr. Knowles: The leopard has not changed its spots.

Mr. Harris: There is another factor in the economic situation of Canada which ought to be considered, and that is the needs of the province of Ontario. In Ontario we have about one-half the industrial production of Canada and about one-third of the population. When I speak now I am speaking as Minister of Finance, but at the same time I cannot help thinking that I represent a portion of that province. The premier of that province has said on more than one occasion that it is extremely difficult for his government to finance the growing expansion of the province. Indeed, some of his criticisms directed at this government with respect to our tax-sharing agreements are simply that the expansion of Ontario has been so great he has not been able to keep pace with it, because every expansion has required some capital outlay.

Let us consider for a moment what that expansion has meant in Ontario. It has meant something to the rural members in this house. When my hon. friends across the way who represent rural ridings speak about lower prices which they claim the farmer is obtaining, let them consider for a moment what would have happened in the past five years if the province of Ontario had not expanded at the rate it has. Everyone from rural Ontario knows that the reason the economy in the rural parts of Ontario is reasonably good at the moment is the growth of the cities and the growth in the number of mouths to be fed in those cities. If we did not have that progress the picture might well be different in rural Ontario, because for one reason or another we are becoming more dependent upon our own consumption of goods than we formerly were.

There was a most interesting debate in the Ontario legislature with respect to this, and I should like to quote the provincial treasurer who spoke as follows on February 21:

> The day will soon be upon us when with a continuing growth at the present rate, a shortage of energy resources will set in and progress will accordingly be limited and cut down. It is not only desirable, but is an absolute necessity, that every possible provision be made for access to the people of this province to an abundant supply of natural gas.

I am not going to enter into an argument as to whether prices are adequate or desirable or what they are, because that is a matter of detail with which I am not concerned at the moment. What I am concerned with is that the province of Ontario is, as the provincial treasurer has said, fast coming to the point where sources of energy are becoming fewer and fewer and may possibly dry up. Every member of this house representing an Ontario constituency knows that the Ontario hydro is finding it difficult to look forward and make plans for power for those who need it. Indeed the St. Lawrence waterway, which was expected to provide this additional power, is still a matter of a year and a half or two years from being completed. While I am not prepared to give a precise figure, reading statements made by the provincial people I have come to the conclusion that long before that power is delivered every single part of it will have been spoken for.

If that is so, and even if by making do the province could increase its energy sources somewhat, nevertheless that is not good enough because today there are people in the province of Ontario asking the provincial government when they can have power so they may plan ahead. It is no longer a case of saying, "Well, we think you can have power next week or next month or six months from today." They must know, yet they are being told that their power will not be available until one, two or three years hence.

That is why the premier of Ontario and his government have come to the conclusion that they are ready to put up $35 million with respect to the northern Ontario leg of this pipe line, and are willing to extend the time under which that arrangement was made so as to provide for the passage of this bill in the house. We can then make a partnership agreement on that basis.

What was the alternative to saying that we would provide this? The alternative was to say that we would not. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, and has repeated it more than once in this house, that he believes the pipe line ought to be begun this year, of course under public ownership. I do not know of an hon. member, except the hon. member for Royal and perhaps one or two others like the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, who does not agree that it is desirable that this pipe line be begun this year.

What are the alternatives offered by the opposition groups in this house? The Leader of the Opposition, speaking on behalf of his party, has said in effect, "Let us send this to a standing committee, we can do that without interfering with the time element of having the pipe line this year." I must say there is no possibility whatever of this bill going to a standing committee and having the examination he has in mind and coming out in time to have this job done by Christmas in western Canada.

Mr. Fleming: Why not?

Mr. Harris: It has been most interesting to see how the debate has been developed by other members of his party. I had thought all of us felt that as much of this natural gas as could be should be retained in Canada. Indeed it was with some searching of hearts that we decided to grant a permit for the export of 200 million cubic feet. But, as I said before, there has been no criticism on that score because it is recognized that that is absolutely proper under the circumstances. But in this debate we have had the official opposition advocating in this house a plan which calls for the exportation of 400 million cubic feet a day. Now, if we were recommending that—

Mr. Fleming: That is not true.

An hon. Member: Distortion.

Mr. Drew: The plan the Prime Minister did not even know about.

Mr. Harris: I shall be glad to quote it. Before I do so, let me say that if we had been recommending that course, how much would they have talked about the opposition being pro-Canada and the government being anti-Canada. The other day the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hees), the former president of the Progressive Conservative Association of Canada, was speaking and was interrupted by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Dickey). Let me quote from page 4090 of Hansard of May 18:

Mr. Dickey: Do you support the McMahon proposals?

Mr. Hees: The McMahon proposal looks like an excellent one. Yes, I certainly do.

If hon. members opposite do not agree with their colleague, and I am not surprised that they do not, what is the situation at the moment? They have no plan as an alternative to that which is being put forward. They agree with the necessity of this job being started this summer. What they are saying in effect is that the government of Canada should not risk $80 million to do it. Let me point out, however, that this government is not risking very much.

Mr. Drew: It is not risking anything; it is risking the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Harris: If this bill passes we will advance 90 per cent of the cost of the western leg. For what reason? In order to be able to deliver gas before winter to the city of Winnipeg, among other things; and to get in one of the two construction years that we always thought would be required for this job. If the house passes the bill the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation will be set up and will be authorized to go forward with its plans in conjunction with the province of Ontario for the purpose of continuing the line down as far as Kapuskasing. The completion of the line from Kapuskasing to Toronto and from Toronto to Montreal may very well be done in the next construction season.

Bear in mind what I have said. If the western leg were started in the summer of 1958 there would be no certainty that the eastern section would be completed by the fall of 1959. What I want to say as a representative from the province of Ontario is that I agree heartily with the premier and government of that province when they say that this would be almost fatal to the progress of this province.

The proposal is that we should advance $80 million to the crown corporation, which in turn will lend it to Trans-Canada for the purpose of getting that pipe laid this summer. When the pipe is laid this summer and the gas comes through to the city of Winnipeg, we shall then have before us the possibility of completing this project next summer. I do not know that this will necessarily occur, but at least it is a possibility.

Why should we do this? My hon. friend from Royal makes the point that we might think this thing over and that there is no great rush; yet he admits that the people in the province of Alberta want to sell their gas now, and not two or three years from now.

We have not heard anything about the people from the province of Saskatchewan, because they have been rather quiet over there, but they will take the gas any time it comes along. The people of the province of Manitoba, and particularly the people of the city of Winnipeg, not only want the gas but they need it. It should be delivered to them at the earliest possible moment.

The people throughout the northern part of the province of Ontario are going to have a fuel substitute for a fuel they now import from Pennsylvania, and at a low cost; and we shall have a greater mining development, which will mean a greater income to this country.

What about the people of the rest of the province of Ontario? There is not a municipality in Ontario on this route which is not waiting for the gas pipe line to come in order to provide gas for them, and that goes for the route from Kapuskasing to Toronto and from Toronto to Montreal. Of course you can make do, but that is not the way in which the Canadian government and the Canadian people want to conduct their economy. One of the reasons this government, as the hon. member for Provencher has said, is so well thought of abroad is that it is stable and you can count on it. What is more, it goes forward instead of standing still.

Mr. Bell: What about the maritimes?

Mr. Harris: I am coming to the maritimes.

Mr. Bell: O.K., let's go.

Mr. Harris: My hon. friend represents a city in which there has been a great deal of the Canadian taxpayers' money properly spent on buildings and harbour installations, and he cannot complain. If it happens, according to the hon. member for Royal, that the only people who are going to benefit by this transaction are the people of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and possibly Quebec, may I say to him that he is taking a very short view of what the people of this country think they ought to do.

What we have left are the Atlantic provinces and British Columbia. The Atlantic provinces and British Columbia will inevitably receive that careful attention to their needs that this government always gives to them—

Mr. Bell: Shame.

Mr. Harris: —but to say that we ought to hold up a benefit which is going to redound to the credit of all these people because at the moment it is not possible to do something in some other part of the country seems to me like the very smallest Canadianism we have ever heard of.

Mr. Bell: How about Beechwood?

Mr. Harris: In the course of this debate a great many members on this side have inquired of the official opposition why they seem to be disregarding and not speaking of the position taken by the government of the province of Ontario. I do not intend to be offensive when I say what I am about to say. It would be difficult, sir, under the circumstances, for a Conservative government of the province of Ontario to take any position which might embarrass the Conservative party in this house. It would be most difficult, and I can understand the premier and the provincial treasurer of that province thinking at great length and looking at their words very carefully before either using them or writing them. I can only say that after the fullest consideration those words have been used, and it must have been for one reason. It must have been because they thought it was not only in the interests of the people of Ontario but in the interests of the whole of the people of Canada. May I just quote one sentence from Mr. Porter's letter to Mr. Howe of May 14:

> Every day's delay invites the most serious consequences to the development of Ontario, and to the national economy. In these circumstances, it would appear essential that the western section of the line be completed—

Sir, as Minister of Finance I repeat what I said a moment ago when it was suggested to me that the solution to this problem was a loan to a private corporation of $80 million, or approximately that sum. You would understand, and the house would understand, that the Minister of Finance would have to be very careful of what his position ought to be under those circumstances. Yet when I thought it over, when I heard some of the arguments made in the house earlier and when I considered the position the premier and the government of the province of Ontario were taking, I felt that I could not take less than a national interest in this and that I would have to agree in the interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Ellis: May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Bell.]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock we had just heard one of the better efforts from the government benches. To give credit where credit is due, I think that we shall be quite free in admitting that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) to a great extent neatly pulled the rug from under the feet of the members of the Progressive Conservative opposition. However, during the course of his remarks I thought it was quite significant that he made no valid case against the proposition of public ownership. Indeed, throughout the course of this debate I suggest that neither the Minister of Trade and Commerce nor the Minister of Finance has done very much to convince the house that public ownership is not practicable or desirable at the present time.

I note that both he and the hon. member for Provencher, who spoke earlier in the afternoon, tried to put up the proposition that the issue facing the house at the present time is simply a question of whether Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited is going to build this line on the one hand or whether no line at all is to be built. In other words, from among alternative schemes they have taken the worst scheme and then they have come to parliament and said, "It is either this or that; you will either accept this package deal which we are trying to ram down your throats or you will stand condemned for delaying this particular project". I think that is a false position the government is putting forward, because there are other alternatives which we should like to examine more closely.

One of the reasons we have submitted a subamendment calling on the house to refer this legislation to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines is that such a procedure will give members of the House of Commons an opportunity of hearing some of the reasons why this rather nefarious proposal is the only one the government will consider.

We have heard a great deal of talk about the chosen instrument. Apparently the government is exceedingly anxious to dissociate itself from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, although I was quite interested the other night in hearing the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) suggest that it was not true that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines was the chosen instrument of the government. I have before me his exact words as reported at page 4052 of Hansard.

Mr. Blackmore: I am not denying it.

Mr. Ellis: He said this:

> It is not true that the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company is in any way a favourite or pet of the government of Canada. It is simply the instrument chosen by the Alberta government, and it has done everything it possibly could to comply with the request of the dominion government.

Mr. Blackmore: That is right.

Mr. Ellis: What the government spokesmen have been trying to get across to this house is the proposition that you can get the pipe line built only through this particular arrangement. We do not accept that proposition, because we feel that the most practicable of all the suggestions that have been advanced have to do with public construction of the pipe line in order that it might be owned by the people of Canada. I suggest that the issue is not "Either Trans-Canada or no pipe line". I suggest the issue is whether the government is going to insist, in its folly, on backing up this company which has failed us over the past five years; which came to parliament and obtained a charter under false pretences; and which lied to parliament and to the committee. The sordid story has already been placed on the record.

This parliament obtained from the promoters of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines every assurance that they were ready to go ahead with the project; that all they required was the green light from parliament; that there was money available; that they would have no difficulty in financing the project; that they would use Canadian money; that they would build an all-Canadian pipe line and that they would serve an all-Canadian market. On the strength of these assurances they were granted a charter. Yet what has happened since then? We hear a great deal of talk about delay and about the necessity of going forward now with the immediate construction of the pipe line. I suggest that the main urgency now is of the government's own making. The urgency is that of getting the Liberal party off the hook and sparing Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company from the embarrassment which it so richly deserves having regard to its inaction in the past.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are several issues at stake at this time. The question of the pipe line itself is extremely important. Many hon. members have stressed the fact that there has not been a more important piece of legislation before the house in a long time. But even more important to the welfare of parliament and the future of the country is the manner in which the government is trying to ram this proposition through parliament. In this house in the last few days there has been a great deal of loose talk about filibuster.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hosking: We are getting one right now.

Mr. Ellis: When the matter was first brought up, or when notice to move closure at the next sitting was first brought up, I can recall hon. members opposite saying, "We are going to save the taxpayers some money". Is that not an amazing observation to make on this action taken by the government, a thing that has not been done since 1932? If you follow that line of reasoning, or lack of reasoning, a few steps further, you might say that the Liberals could then argue, I suppose with equal logic, that you could save the taxpayers a great deal of money by having no opposition at all.

The Liberals could then say, "We got rid of the opposition. What is the use of having other members of the house around? We might as well pack them up and send them off. They are serving no useful function". Then they could go a step further and say, "Why do we need all these members of the cabinet? They are not serving any particularly useful function. One man can run the government"; and it certainly would not be the Prime Minister. We have heard some talk from the United States in recent months about President Eisenhower perhaps being a part-time president. We are one jump ahead of them. We have a part-time Prime Minister who has abdicated his authority, and who has put control of the government in the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ellis: I suggest that during the course of this debate the government has been under continuous fire, yet the Prime Minister has not seen fit to take part in the debate. He has completely ignored everything that is going on in parliament. Of course if the main idea is to fight the next federal election, then perhaps there might be some logic to that particular point at issue.

Mr. Hosking: Talk about the pipe line.

An hon. Member: What are you suggesting?

Mr. Ellis: I am suggesting that in the action which this government has taken it is guilty of the very things which members of the opposition have been saying in recent days. I am not going to repeat them, other than to point out that the guillotine or closure, call it what you will, is certainly the extreme abuse of arbitrary power. In our parliament the opposition has certain duties and certain responsibilities. It has a responsibility to examine government legislation and to offer alternative proposals. Above all, the opposition have a duty to examine legislation, and when they find a piece of legislation which they feel to be against the interests of the Canadian people they have a duty to use all the methods within the rules—

An hon. Member: To obstruct.

Mr. Ellis: —to put up opposition to that particular measure. After all, if that is not done what is the function of an opposition in a democratic parliament? We hear hon. members opposite call themselves Liberals. The other evening I had occasion to go through a volume of speeches by Sir Wilfrid Laurier entitled "Wilfrid Laurier on the Platform, 1871 to 1890". I read through some of those speeches. Then we find the type of so-called Liberals that we have in this house today, people who will sit idly by and allow an autocratic government to destroy the effectiveness of the opposition by means of the guillotine.

Mr. Hosking: Talk about the pipe line.

Mr. Ellis: Naturally they do not like this line of discussion. I would draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the fact that there has been a course of reference to the procedure used by the government. I think the first of the three Liberal members who spoke this afternoon referred at some considerable length to the manner in which the government had put this legislation through the house. I believe it is generally accepted that in the final analysis there is only one weapon which the opposition has in a parliament in which the government has an overwhelming majority; and remember this. The domination of the House of Commons by the government is as absolute as is the obedience of its private members.

I suggest that perhaps as a result of the lecture given recently by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture, they have certainly indicated to us that they are toeing the party line. We have had Liberal members get up in this house and say, "Well, of course, this is going to pass the house; we know that." Under those circumstances I think it must be admitted that in the final analysis the only weapon the opposition has is opposing the legislation in the hope that eventually the government will be forced to make concessions and bring the legislation more into line with the needs and desires of the Canadian people.

Mr. Carrick: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Ellis: When there is closure put on by this government, then I think the hon. member should take whatever time he wants to discuss the matter. Some suggestion was made the other night that he was the spokesman for the oil industry. I took some exception to that because I felt that all government members were spokesmen for the oil industry, and I did not think it was fair to single out one particular backbencher.

We are told by the government that time is of the essence, and that those who are putting up any opposition to this particular bill are guilty of holding up the construction of the pipe line. This is a rather interesting assertion, because the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company, as I have pointed out, received its charter in 1951. If there has been any delay who is at fault? In his letter to the Minister of Trade and Commerce Mr. Manning says it is not the fault of Trans-Canada. I think the Canadian people have to decide who is at fault for the failure of this company to keep its commitments to parliament. We have been waiting around for five years.

Last November, as a matter of fact, the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company apparently came to some agreement with the government and they were prepared to go ahead. They had been given this big hand-out in the form of the construction of the northern Ontario section of the pipe line. We thought perhaps they were ready to go ahead with it; but oh, no. There was more delay. Finally we had the second part of this bill brought to our attention a few days ago.

The other night the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) wept crocodile tears over the fact that this delay was costing the producers in Alberta some $50,000 a day. We will accept those figures without comment for the moment, but I should like to point out how much money has been lost during the past two years through the inability of Trans-Canada to fulfil its commitments. The concern over this matter seems to have come a little late. It is only within the last month that there has been any realization that there was gas going to waste in Alberta, and that the Trans-Canada company was not doing the job it had promised parliament in 1951 it would do.

I suggest that if they count $50,000 a day back to November 1 they will find that the inability or refusal of the Trans-Canada company to commence this project has cost many millions of dollars. Who is at fault? Certainly it is not the opposition in parliament. The responsibility for the procrastination and delay in building this pipe line must be laid squarely at the doorstep of the federal government; that is where it belongs.

I do not think any hon. member will have the temerity to go into the country and suggest that because opposition members in parliament wanted to take a little time to discuss this matter they were delaying the construction of this particular pipe line. I want to suggest that if we had had a government that was a building government—the other day the minister referred to the fact that he was a builder and this was a building government—the pipe line would have been built a couple of years ago. The government would not be coming here trying to scuttle democratic processes and ram through a piece of legislation to bail out a company which has failed the people of Canada for the last five years. We are beginning to wonder just who has the influence and the power in this country, whether it is parliament or some United States-controlled company. If we had had a C.C.F. government on those benches the line would have been built a couple of years ago; there is no doubt about that. I shall make some slight reference to that a little later.

I want to refer now to the excuses being put forward on behalf of the Trans-Canada company by the government and by one of the opposition groups. The old Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company, as has been pointed out before, definitely stated that the export of gas to the United States was not necessary to their plan. They did not say to the Canadian parliament, "We will only be able to go forward with this plan if the federal power commission in Washington grants permission to some United States company to import Canadian gas". They did not say that. They assured parliament that a decision of the federal power commission was not necessary because they did not contemplate the export of gas to the United States.

Under those circumstances what right has this company now to argue that they cannot finance the line because they have not got a decision from Washington? It seems to me there are a lot of short memories on the government side of the house. How can you accept the alibi put forward by Trans-Canada with respect to their inability to finance because there has been no decision reached in Washington with respect to the application of the Tennessee transmission company. Under those circumstances I think the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company have prevailed long enough on the good offices of the people of Canada. They have been given every opportunity to do the job, but there has been nothing but procrastination and delay.

When this company finally decided it had received enough as a hand-out from the government to go ahead with a small part of the project, they said to the government, "You ram this through parliament by June 7 or the deal is off." They are assured that this will be done, so we have the government putting through parliament a piece of legislation which demands the closest scrutiny of every member. There are many unanswered questions, and every bit of information that has been obtained about this pipe line has been obtained only by tremendous effort to wrest details from the government regarding this scheme.

I suggest that in pursuing this course the government is answerable to the Canadian people. I know that once the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, "Who is going to stop us?" If we want to ram this thing through, who is going to stop us? I suggest that the way this thing will be stopped is by the force of public opinion, public opinion led by opposition members on the one hand and the press on the other.

I have had the opportunity since this pipeline issue came before the house of reading the daily newspapers from one end of the country to the other. I found that without exception there was condemnation by the daily press of Canada in connection with this closure motion.

An hon. Member: The Tory press.

Mr. Ellis: Indeed, the whole pipe-line issue was condemned. I could quote at some length the editorial opinion expressed in these newspapers, newspapers that have consistently, in season and out of season, supported the Liberal party. I have in my hand a copy of the newspaper that has never been particularly friendly to the C.C.F. Over the years this newspaper has given its support to the Liberal party. It is the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix for May 16, and in an editorial entitled "The Use of Closure", I find this:

> The federal government's decision to invoke the rarely-employed closure rule in order to limit parliamentary debate and so meet its own deadline for commons' approval of its massive financial aid to the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines interests is a further example of the administration's last-minute desperation in this monumental national issue. After a lengthy cabinet wrangle, the government has committed itself to advance funds so that construction of the western leg of the pipe line can begin this summer.

Oh, yes, they do not mind taking all sorts of time in cabinet, but once the cabinet has made up its mind they are going to ram this through the House of Commons. But to continue with the remarks of the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix; toward the end they speak about the "speed at all costs" policy of the government, and they say:

> Surely, then, the long-term interests of the nation require that caution—not "speed at all costs"—should be the watchword. But the federal government, after months of vacillation and confusion, has decided otherwise. The future will disclose how high a price the nation will be made to pay for this sudden jump into a maze of uncertainties.

This is an opinion from a Liberal newspaper. If I could take the time I could bring into the house ream after ream of editorial opinion from Liberal newspapers across this country. Even the Regina Leader-Post, perhaps the most slavish in its adherence to the Liberal party, has gone on record as opposing the use of closure. And I might say, apart from the closure issue itself, there has been generally speaking widespread condemnation of the legislation on which the government has seen fit to use closure to ram through the House of Commons.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have talked about the need for a different line of approach and about the necessity of constructing a pipe line at the earliest possible moment. We have talked about that throughout the years. We of the C.C.F. have always pointed out that Canada is rich in natural resources. We have always maintained that this government should have a public investment program in order to develop Canadian resources in the interests of the Canadian people. We have pointed to the depression years when the Canadian people were ill-housed and ill-clothed, and yet at the same time this country, with vast resources undeveloped, had a government which sat by and did nothing. We have always urged and advocated the maximum use of Canadian resources in interests of the Canadian people.

Our contention now is that it is not the question of whether a pipe line is going to be built at all, it is simply the question of whether the pipe line to be constructed is going to be a private pipe line controlled by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines or whether it is going to be a crown corporation working in the interests of the Canadian people.

We have had some reference to the difficulties of public ownership. The other night the hon. member for Peace River made a very interesting observation in this connection. When the hon. member for The Battlefords (Mr. Campbell) spoke he referred to the fact that Alberta had gas to sell and after all what real difference should it make who owns the pipe line as long as the province was able to bring this gas to market. I can recall the hon. member at that time saying, "Don't be too sure about that." Well, when he spoke the other evening he put the situation quite clearly, when at page 3931 of Hansard he said:

> The government could not possibly start a pipe line this year and I will tell you why. If the government of Canada were to enter into a nationalization program for the building of a pipe line today it would be up against the problem of getting a supply of gas, and I am telling you they would have a very difficult time getting a supply of gas.

If they have all the gas, and if they are losing $50,000 a day, what group of men in control of the gas reserves of this country would then say, "We are not going to make this gas available because we do not like a publicly-owned pipe line." But that is what the hon. member must have meant when he suggested that a government-owned pipe line would not get the gas. Well, of course, that was the story we heard last fall when Canadian Gulf made it known that they were not interested in supplying gas to a pipe line in which the people of Canada, through their government, had any interest.

Who are those producers who would hold up the supply of gas to a crown company? Well, the Minister of Trade and Commerce placed on the record the other day some very interesting information. He pointed out that the gas reserves of the province of Alberta are controlled by four major companies: Canadian Gulf, which controls about one-third of the reserves; Hudson Bay Oil and Gas; California Standard and Canadian Delhi. Then he made a very significant statement a few moments later when he pointed out that three of those four companies are principals in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. Therefore the situation is that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines are the same people who control the gas reserves in the province of Alberta.

In view of that fact there is a very interesting statement made in the letter from the premier of Alberta which was tabled in the house the other day. In that letter premier Manning stated, as reported at page 4027 of Hansard:

> If the project is delayed another year, all present permits, both federal and provincial, and all contracts entered into by the company will lapse by default. It will be extremely difficult to grant further indefinite extensions of the government permits, and almost impossible for the company to retain existing contracts with gas producers.

It is a very interesting situation. Here are the gas and oil companies which control, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed out, a major part of the gas reserves of the province of Alberta, who are the same people who control Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. He says they are going to have difficulty to get permission from themselves to sell gas to themselves. That is what it amounts to. All that would happen, I presume, is that the board of directors of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines would hold a board meeting, and they would not have to send a memorandum or a communique to the directors of the three or four major gas producers in the province of Alberta. They could hold a meeting, adjourn the meeting and a few seconds later hold another meeting of the same people. Under those circumstances, it is very difficult to understand why the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines would have difficulty in obtaining a supply of gas after those permits had lapsed.

That brings up a very interesting point. In this country we have anti-combine legislation of a sort. It has seldom worked very effectively, but at least we pay lip service to the idea of breaking up a monopoly situation. We find today we have most of the gas in the major gas-producing provinces of Canada owned by four major gas companies, and three of those four companies will own the pipe line. Therefore far from breaking the monopoly control over the gas resources in Alberta, we are going to hand to these companies a monopoly over the transportation of all gas to eastern Canada. Talk about creating monopolies; there you are going to have certainly one of the biggest monopolies in the country.

We talk about public ownership. I want to remind hon. members that in the province of Saskatchewan we discovered gas a few years ago. Within two months of the discovery of adequate gas reserves the Saskatchewan power corporation was building a pipe line. We build pipe lines in the province of Saskatchewan; we do not wait five years. No; we do not enter into all sorts of devious arrangements to get them built. We had a task to do and we went ahead and built the pipe line. The Saskatchewan power corporation built over 323 miles of pipe line in the province of Saskatchewan. What is more, under public ownership we are extending our grids and gas lines throughout the province. We are taking care of the needs of the future.

As a matter of fact, early in April an agreement was signed between the Saskatchewan power corporation, a crown company, and certain of the smaller producers of Alberta, and as a result of this agreement signed between the power corporation and the producers we shall have additional sources of supply which eventually we shall store in the Success field. Through public ownership we have proceeded efficiently and systematically to take care of the needs of the people of Saskatchewan. I suggest there is no reason whatsoever why the federal government could not be doing the same thing, instead of utterly refusing to consider the most practical way of building this particular pipe line.

I want to refer to a remark made by the Minister of Agriculture the other night. When he rose to his feet I thought he was going to tell us that the government are so solicitous of the needs of Canadians that they were going to agree to put up their share of the cost of the South Saskatchewan dam. Apparently he got up to say something about pipe lines and during the course of his address he made a statement that was amazing, to say the least. In the short space of about three lines the Minister of Agriculture deliberately misrepresented the case. What he did was to compare the retail price—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. If I heard the hon. member correctly he used the expression that the Minister of Agriculture "deliberately misrepresented" the case. It is, I think, the responsibility of the occupant of the chair to see that statements of that sort are not allowed to be put on the record and I feel it is my duty, particularly as the hon. member to whom it refers is not in the house, to raise the question myself. I would ask that that statement be withdrawn.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps we know the Minister of Agriculture a little better than do most hon. members of the house. We are used to this out in the province of Saskatchewan, but we are a little concerned about statements like that being made in the house.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Ellis: The minister the other night was quoting gas prices and he quoted the price to the consumer in Saskatchewan—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. It is not my job to determine the accuracy or otherwise of the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture, but it is my duty to request the hon. member to withdraw the statement "deliberately misrepresented".

Mr. Ellis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw that statement and simply say the minister made a misleading statement to this house. I am not going into motives at all.

Mr. Hellyer: Why judge other people's motives by your own?

Mr. Ellis: The minister quoted the price to the consumer in Saskatchewan and compared it with the price to the distributor in Winnipeg. There is a 50-cent spread there. I do not think anyone is going to suggest you make a slip when you create the impression in the House of Commons that the people of Winnipeg are going to get natural gas for 30 cents. Of course he was not right in the figure or the price in Saskatchewan. If there is a difference of a few cents we are not too concerned about a thing like that, but we are concerned when someone leaves an impression such as he did the other night.

In the last sentence of that statement, as reported at page 4060 of Hansard of May 17, the Minister of Agriculture said:

That is something that is happening under government ownership and control, and about which our friends do not tell us the whole story.

Mr. Hahn: Is 83 cents correct?

Mr. Castleden: You come out and have a look at it.

Mr. Hahn: We want to know.

Mr. Castleden: You will be there in a little while.

Mr. Argue: You would hand it over to some big American corporation.

Mr. Hahn: They charge two bits in Medicine Hat.

Mr. Ellis: The C.C.F. subamendment we are discussing at this stage calls on the house to refer this bill to a committee in order that consideration may be given to the advisability of constructing this pipe line as a public enterprise. Throughout the debate many valid reasons have been given as to why we should begin now with the construction of the pipe line as a public enterprise, but I do not think we have heard any valid reason as to why this course of action cannot be undertaken, nor have we heard any reasonable argument as to why public ownership would not be in the interests of the people of Canada.

We in this group have been consistent in our policy. We have argued that the natural resources of Canada belong to the people of Canada and that we should make them available as quickly as possible and in the greatest quantity possible to the people of Canada; but we argue that this can only be done through public ownership, because it is only in the motives behind economic endeavour that one can see the direction in which a particular policy is going.

We argue that if we are going to turn over the gas pipe line to private enterprise, whether they be Canadians or Americans—and I do not think it matters too much whether the exploitation is done by Canadians or Americans or the people of any other country—the only way in which Canadian control of the pipe line can be guaranteed is through public ownership. The Minister of Trade and Commerce admitted this in debate just a short while ago and I commend this to my Progressive Conservative friends. I might add that the only way in which the interests of the people of Canada can be protected is through the building of this pipe line as a public enterprise in order that the scheme will be of benefit to all Canadians and not to the financial advancement of a small group of people, whether they be Canadians or Americans.

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to deal with the question of closure which has been mentioned by the opposition. In the first place, when the rules were being revised last year I do not recall any suggestion that this provision be dropped from the rules providing for the step that has been taken to bring this debate to an end in time to have a decision made to avoid frustrating the program completely. In other words, as I recall it hon. members of all parties thought that rule was quite proper to be left in the rule book.

Mr. Knowles: We thought it was a dead letter.

Mr. Tucker: Therefore I take it that all parties agree that under certain circumstances it is quite a proper rule to use. Then the idea that there should be a fixed time for debates was also accepted by this house when it adopted the rules. At that time it was deemed wise to set a time limit on the debate on the address and on the budget, and I think the reason for that is that it was felt the objective for parliament is for the position of the various parties to be fully stated, and after that the time would come when a decision should be made. In other words it was considered that parliament has the right as part of its function to listen to the views of the various parties, but parliament should not be prevented from coming to a decision or handling business in a proper way. The idea of limited debate as required by the needs of public business was recognized when we passed those rules.

Some suggestion has been made with regard to this particular bill that it was unusual because it was indicated that closure would be applied the first day of the debate on the resolution. This matter, of course, had been before the house before, and when part of this particular legislation was introduced by way of resolution the C.C.F. party indicated their position concerning the matter by demanding a vote when the very first move was made. They indicated that they intended to fight this measure to the very last in an effort to prevent it going through.

The hon. member for Regina City, who has just spoken, said it was the duty of the opposition, if they do not agree to something, to oppose it with all the means the rules provide in an endeavour to prevent its passage. If that is the duty and obligation of an opposition, it certainly is the duty of a government which has been entrusted by the people with the administration of the affairs of the country to see to it that the opposition does not by doing that really decide what the policy is going to be. In other words, the effect of allowing an opposition to prevent a thing going through until it would be too late to have the policy decided and acted upon, as would be the case if a long debate were carried on here such as was carried on last summer, would mean that instead of the majority deciding what our policy would be it would be in effect decided by the minority through the use of the rules of the house.

I suggest that that is not democracy. Democracy is rule by the majority, not by the minority. It was very definitely indicated that the opposition, both Conservative and C.C.F., intended to use the rules to prevent this measure going through at all. Had they held it up until it was too late to start construction they would have defeated it just as effectively as if the people had entrusted them with a majority in this house. In other words we would have government by the minority instead of by the majority. I suggest that what we are upholding here is government by the people who were elected to govern this country.

When it is suggested that there is no time for the opposition to state their case against this measure, I submit that is a misrepresentation of the situation. During all the various stages through which this bill must go there are obviously plenty of opportunities for the opposition to state their case if they want to state it. Quite obviously they are more anxious to give the impression to the people of the country that they are being trodden upon than they are to present their case. I think when the debate is over the people in the country will realize that there was plenty of time to debate this matter. When the time comes to make a decision the people who were ready to use the rules and make dilatory motions should not be permitted to dominate this parliament. The majority should decide the policy.

The position of the Progressive Conservatives, for example, was quite clear on the matter, let me refer to what was said by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) on April 5 last:

> John Diefenbaker Thursday evening promised that "Texas buccaneers" would not get control of the natural gas outlet from western Canada. The M.P. for Prince Albert told a Saskatoon constituency nominating meeting that the Progressive Conservatives were preparing a fight in the House of Commons on the proposed trans-Canada pipe line that would make the recent filibuster on the Defence Production Act look like a mere skirmish.

I put it to hon. members; if that is the fixed policy of the Progressive Conservatives, would they not have prevented a decision being reached until such a late date that construction would not have been possible this year? In other words, they would have shown that they were masters of parliament instead of the majority. This is what the Progressive Conservatives boasted throughout the country that they were going to do. They object now because the government is using a rule which was introduced by the Conservatives in order to prevent that very thing happening.

Incidentally, when I read that item referring to Texas buccaneers getting control of the situation I noted that the director from Saskatchewan, whom I presume is one of these Texas buccaneers is none other than M. A. MacPherson, who was the runner-up for the leadership when the late Mr. Manion was elected to that position. He must be one of those buccaneers who is in control of this company. The hon. member for Prince Albert said he was going to see to it that Texas buccaneers like Mr. MacPherson would not take control of the situation.

My hon. friends talk about closure, but I never saw any worse closure than they are trying to put on the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Nickle). They talk about only having a couple of weeks to debate this thing, but if it had not been for the good will of the Liberal and Social Credit parties they would have prevented the hon. member for Calgary South from speaking at all. The hon. member for Calgary South tried to get the floor on two occasions and on each occasion the member speaking for the Progressive Conservative party objected.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member is now discussing a matter which was dealt with the other day when the house was in committee. In effect he is speaking about a ruling which was made. It so happens that Your Honour was in the chair on the first occasion to which the hon. member is referring. You will remember that two Conservatives rose to speak at the same time, and when the member who was next on our list was not seen I asked Your Honour why it was he was not given a chance to speak. It was then explained by Your Honour that Liberal time was being used by this speaker to whom you gave the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I suppose I had better rehash this situation. The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) is referring to what he describes as an effort by one party to stop one of their members from speaking. As I take it, he was not discussing a point of order. I am not able to quote from memory what has just been said by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), but I think unintentionally he attributed to the Speaker of that moment a more definite statement than was made.

However, the point to be decided is whether or not the hon. member for Rosthern is reopening a point of order or a decision of the house. I did not take it that he was doing so any more than every reference or speech which has been made in this house since the passing of the closure motion last week would also be a reopening of something which has already been decided by the house. As a similar notice has been formally announced for tomorrow I do not consider that a discussion of that motion is out of order.

I know that I rose at five o'clock on Friday to interrupt another hon. member who was in my opinion discussing a point of order from a different aspect entirely. At that time he was criticizing the Leader of the Opposition for a certain action which he had taken in a matter which had been decided and which I regarded as a closed incident. So far I do not consider the hon. member for Rosthern to be out of order.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the fact that the Progressive Conservatives have been taking great objection to the fact that they have not been permitted to speak on this measure. I was pointing out that when the member whom they held out as their expert on oil and gas matters saw fit not to be a trained seal, in the terms of the Leader of the Opposition, and not to line up with the Leader of the Opposition, the Progressive Conservative party objected each time that he tried to take the floor and endeavoured to close him off. I wonder whether the test is that you belong to this party, in which event if people do line up they are trained seals, or to the party who tried to keep their expert on these matters from taking the floor. Then we are told by the Leader of the Opposition that the members on this side are trained seals. I never thought to hear anybody belonging to one of the great parties of this country, who was regarded as one of their outstanding members and one of the experts on this matter, have to get up and thank the Social Credit party for being permitted to take the floor. Here is what the hon. member for Calgary South said, as recorded on page 4081 of Hansard:

> I should like to express my thanks to the Social Credit group in this house for assisting me by giving me the opportunity to present my views to this house.

These are the people who talk so much about not being able to speak at any length in parliament.

Mrs. Fairclough: How many of your members have spoken twice?

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite).]

Mr. Sinclair: No wonder Drew blushes.

Mr. Tucker: It has been said that the hon. member for Calgary South expressed the views of the Conservatives on matters of oil and gas. He was held out as one of the greatest experts in Canada on this matter.

Mr. Sinclair: And he is.

Mr. Tucker: When he is agreed with by the premier of Ontario, who is one of the leading Conservatives in this country—

Mr. Sinclair: The leading Conservative.

Mr. Tucker: It might be said that he is the leading Conservative, but I am speaking in deference to the Leader of the Opposition, and I am saying that he is one of the leading Conservatives. When the premier of Ontario is following the same line of thought as this outstanding expert, when he dares to disagree with the Leader of the Opposition then his followers try to prevent him from speaking in the house, and he has to thank the Social Credit party for the opportunity to present his views.

Mrs. Fairclough: Your members do not even dare. Show me somebody on your side who dares.

Mr. Tucker: In 1952 the hon. member for Calgary South spoke for the Conservative party and laid down at that time what he thought the policy should be. One of the main items of the policy was the trans-Canada pipe line. That seemed to be the policy of the progressive Conservatives, because in 1954, on the question of Niagara Gas Transmission Limited, the Leader of the Opposition wanted a very definite understanding from the government that when the Niagara Transmission bill passed it would not affect the trans-Canada line. He spoke about the statement of the Ontario fuel controller, Mr. Crozier. As recorded on page 2721 of Hansard of 1954, the Leader of the Opposition said at that time:

> It has been mentioned already that this in fact is expected to be a temporary arrangement. It was stated the day before yesterday by Mr. A. R. Crozier, the fuel controller of the province of Ontario, that it is expected that within two years there will be a pipe line from western Canada carrying Alberta natural gas to the Toronto field as well as to other parts of eastern Canada.
> What is important is the understanding very clearly expressed by Mr. Crozier, the Ontario fuel controller, and the Ontario minister of mines, to whose department Mr. Crozier is attached, that when western gas becomes available the flow will then be reversed through the pipe line to be constructed under the authority of this act, and Canadian gas will be carried to that area in Ontario through which the pipe line will pass coming from Niagara Falls. This, I think, is clearly understood. However, it should be remembered in considering this measure that in expressing their belief that it is desirable that authority be granted for the construction of this pipe line, the Ontario minister of mines and the Ontario fuel controller have both made it clear that this is related to an unqualified condition that this area will be available and will be supplied by gas from western Canada when the Canadian pipe line is constructed.

The Leader of the Opposition then went on to deal with this matter. He said that the demand for natural gas was going to be so great that he spoke in these terms, referring to northern Ontario, as recorded on page 2724 of Hansard of 1954:

The possible use of gas throughout that area is tremendous. Unless there were diversions of gas from this United States pipe line at different points, there would be nothing to equal the demand that would be created by those very active and important communities which would be using gas from this pipe line.

New demands are emerging almost every day. They are dramatic, they are romantic.

Here was the Leader of the Opposition saying two years ago that the demand was dramatic and romantic. He wanted explicit promises from the government that there would be a trans-Canada built in Canada.

An hon. Member: He still does.

Mr. Tucker: Now he says, "We want a committee set up; we want to find out what it is all about," this matter that was going to be dramatic and romantic and so on. Well, the romance seems to have gone out of the Leader of the Opposition's mind in that regard. There was however another statement made by the Leader of the Opposition which I would like to put to the house for its consideration. He said this, as recorded on page 2723 of Hansard:

In dealing with this we should all be assured the government has decided definitely that, subject to the availability of financial resources for that purpose, the all-Canadian route will be encouraged, and the encouragement of that route will not be adversely affected by the support of the measure now before us.

I would ask the house to note the words of the Leader of the Opposition endorsing the all-Canadian route, subject to the availability of financial resources for that purpose. I wonder whether it is unfair to suggest, if that represents the position of the Leader of the Opposition, that we should have an all-Canadian route if financial resources are available, that if he had been head of the government and we had been confronted by the present situation, whereby there would not be the financing from the sale of gas in the United States for some time until this importation was approved by the federal commission, there is the suggestion there that the all-Canadian pipe line would not have been put through. That is a fair inference from that statement of the opposition leader.

I want to say that I am glad we have a government in office which, when confronted with this opposition from the United States power commission, did not hesitate to promise to back $80 million worth of debentures, or rather to see to it that the money was loaned, to be returned with interest so it probably will not cost the government of Canada anything to bring about an all-Canadian pipe line, on which a billion dollars will be spent in the next three to five years. I am glad to support a government that is not ready to back down before a problem like that. I support it with a great deal of enthusiasm.

The Progressive Conservatives have gone about the country pretending that this is a government that is old and decrepit and unable to act. Who are the people who are providing the action today, and who are the people who are opposing it? The people will decide now who are the people who are ready to act and who are the people who are cautious and afraid to risk $80 million in a loan, under which this whole pipe line will ultimately be built in Canada, and which will do all the things the Leader of the Opposition found so romantic two years ago. If they do not repay the $80 million, we shall have the pipe line to Winnipeg at several million dollars less than it cost to build. Yet the opposition is afraid to go ahead with a scheme like that, saying this is a terrible and preposterous scheme and that they will fight it with all their power.

Mr. Fulton: Have an election. Go to the people and find out.

Mr. Tucker: The opposition have been trying since 1935 to get back the support of the people. They will not get it back again by this attitude of fear and caution, this attitude of being afraid to take the slightest chance and, when it is quite obvious that a decision must be made on this matter, saying it does not matter even if it does delay the thing for two years, that it does not matter if it costs western Canada a great deal, that it does not matter if Winnipeg does not get gas for a year or two years, we will make sure that we do not risk the $1 million or so that we might lose if this thing does not go through.

Mr. Fleming: What an imagination.

Mr. Tucker: If the government had been furnished in these last ten years by the Progressive Conservative party with that sort of timidity and fear in dealing with matters, I wonder if Canada would have gone ahead by leaps and bounds as she has, so that in the last ten years she has been the envy of the whole world. Mr. Speaker, we are just at the beginning. We have just laid the foundation for a still greater Canada. For the next government the people are not going to pick members who are timid and are afraid to take even a little bit of risk in preference to those who will go ahead and, if necessary, stand opprobrium for saying "If you are going to use the rules to prevent the majority from having their way, we will use closure and you can make the most of it". The people of Canada want action in the interests of a greater and better Canada.

I just wish to say a word or two in passing about the C.P.R. I looked up the act with regard to the C.P.R., and I was very much interested to find out that the government of that day wrote into the act, which is chapter 73 of the statutes of Canada of 1872, the following interesting clause to be found at the end of section 6:

> The said railway being in fact a public work constructed mainly at the expense of the dominion for the benefit of all the provinces thereof.

They put it right in the act that the C.P.R. was constructed mainly at public expense.

Mr. Small: And controlled by directors in Canada.

Mr. Tucker: It was no more under control of Canadian directors than this company will be, as pointed out by your colleague the hon. member for Calgary South. I point this out, however, that under this act shares could be transferred in London without any reference to the office located in Canada. Yet they tell us that full control was assured in Canada. They could have transferred all the shares of the C.P.R. right in London without reference to Canada.

For a moment I wish to deal with the position of the C.C.F. party.

Mr. Ellis: Be careful.

Mr. Castleden: On the Saskatchewan dam?

An hon. Member: What is the price of wheat?

Mr. Tucker: I have here the speech of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, the leader of the C.C.F. party, which was delivered over television on May 14, 1956. I should like to read to the house some of the things the leader of the C.C.F. party said.

An hon. Member: We heard him.

Mr. Tucker: Some people did not hear him.

Mr. Knowles: Nobody shot at him.

Mr. Tucker: This is what he said:

> I suppose I shall only be able to cover one, and that's the most outrageous proposal that I think has ever been brought before our parliament.

[Mr. Tucker.]

According to the leader of the C.C.F. party this is the most outrageous proposal that has ever been brought before our parliament.

Mr. Nicholson: Hear, hear.

Mr. Tucker: He continues:

> I refer, of course, to the pipe-line matter.

Then he says this:

> Now, closure means that the debate must end at a certain time after only a few hours of debate.

I wonder how many hours of debate we are going to have before this is over? I wonder if this is a correct statement of the situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nicholson: Before the very first speech in the debate.

Mr. MacDougall: Magpies, keep quiet.

Mr. Tucker: He said this:

> Now, closure means that the debate must end at a certain time after only a few hours debate.

I wonder if the C.C.F. still say that this debate on the pipe line can last only a few hours.

Mr. Castleden: What do you call a few hours?

Mr. Tucker: That was an obvious misstatement in the eyes of the whole country.

Mr. Castleden: Ridiculous.

Mr. Tucker: Then the leader of the C.C.F. party said this:

> And this new proposition is the strangest proposition of all. The proposal is, of course, to build a pipe line from the province of Alberta down to supply the cities and towns of the province of Ontario.

This is a strange proposition in the eyes of the C.C.F. What do they think about national development?

An hon. Member: Public ownership.

Mr. Tucker: Of course they think it should be done under public ownership and I shall deal with that matter in a moment. The leader of the C.C.F. also said this:

> . . . but surely no one wants to see this very important natural resource simply made the means of profits and gain for a group of American financiers.

Does anyone think this proposal as it is presently envisaged is only going to make some profits for American financiers? What is it going to do in stimulating development in Alberta? What is it going to do in stimulating development in Ontario? Where are these profits when they are under control by the provinces where the gas is sold and by the province of Alberta where it is produced? Obviously all that will be ensured to these people is a fair profit. The leader of the C.C.F.

in Saskatchewan who heads the government there assures the people that he does not mind these people coming in from the United States getting a fair profit, so where is their objection?

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar goes on to say this. He first of all speaks about $135 million to be put up by the federal government and the province of Ontario. Then he speaks about the $80 million, and then he proceeds to add the two amounts together. Then he says this:

> In other words, the governments of Canada will, together, give this project a backing of nearly two hundred million dollars.

They will give this project nothing. Nothing is being given. In one case they are building a crown pipe line which will be owned by a crown corporation. In the other case they are lending $80 million, and the crown corporation part will not be built until the $80 million is repaid. So the loan the dominion government will put into this scheme is $100 million, not $200 million. There is a case of a statement so incorrect as to prove irresponsibility in the eyes of the people. It was a misrepresentation of the first water.

Mr. Coldwell: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Tucker: When everybody else has been told that he should sit down and wait until the speaker is through, I do not know why I should not be able to go ahead as well as everyone else. Now I just wish to deal with what has been done in Saskatchewan. There the C.C.F. government under legislation just passed is providing a guarantee of $5½ million of the cost of building a cement plant. The promoters putting up approximately $3 million. It was said there and not very seriously denied that these promoters are going to make approximately $400,000 out of the scheme. This is the C.C.F. in action, much different from the C.C.F. down here. I have here the advertisement of the C.C.F. in the election campaign now going on. It says:

> The C.C.F. has helped attract more industry through personal contact with Canadian, American and European industrial leaders by the Premier and other top-level personnel . . . Financial assistance is available to industry.

In other words, their pose to the people of Saskatchewan is that they attracted industry in Saskatchewan by personal contacts with these big financiers in the United States, in order to get them to come into Saskatchewan.

Mr. Knight: Tucker or tyranny.

Mr. Tucker: This is the basis on which they are trying to get elected in Saskatchewan, yet listen to them in the house now.

Mr. Coldwell: We will debate this matter in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Tucker: I know you do not like to talk about this matter. You talk one way out there and act another way down here.

Mr. Castleden: We like the way you act out there.

Mr. Tucker: We have been told that delay does not matter. During the 1944 election the C.C.F. said they were fighting against the big financiers, against these people coming in from the United States and making vast profits. They believed in the Regina manifesto. They were going to eradicate capitalism. As a result of that, after the 1944 election the oil companies pulled out of Saskatchewan. They went to Alberta and there, in 1946, the Imperial Oil company discovered the Leduc oilfield. This set Alberta on the road to the great prosperity she has today. I am convinced that if the C.C.F. government had not driven out those people in 1944, we would have had those discoveries instead of Alberta.

Mr. Coldwell: Where were you in 1943 and in 1942?

Mr. Tucker: Then the C.C.F. government was almost beaten in 1948 because of this action in driving industry out of Saskatchewan. It was seen how Alberta was prospering. Then the premier did the thing he mentions here and began making his personal contacts begging these financiers from the United States to come into Canada and invest. He wrote them a letter guaranteeing that there would be no interference in the ownership of their industries; that they would have a fair profit, and on that basis he lured some industries back into Saskatchewan.

What was the effect? Not long ago there was a smelter being established to look after the ore being mined at Lynn Lake. If we had known we had this gas in Saskatchewan we now know we have; if this work had been done six months earlier and we had known that much earlier, this smelter would have been established in Saskatoon. However, enough natural gas to operate that smelter could not be guaranteed, and what happened? It was established in Edmonton, and all the subsidiary industries that will grow up about this smelter have gone to Edmonton instead of staying in Saskatoon. It was told by a prominent member of the C.C.F. government that if they had been able to develop these resources and learn their position six months sooner, they would have had all this great development around Saskatoon instead of Edmonton.

Does the C.C.F. mean to say that a six-months' delay has not cost Saskatchewan dearly? They say a delay of two years is not important. When one can see the possibilities for development in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba if we get this natural gas in sufficient quantities, I wonder how any member from western Canada can get up here and say he is so wedded to public enterprise that he is going to fight for it even if it means a delay of two or three years? In the light of the experience we have had in Saskatchewan, in the light of the fact that their own leader in Saskatchewan has had to crawl down from that position and beg for people to come into Saskatchewan to make investments, I wonder how they can continue along that line.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, in Saskatchewan are they going on the basis of no profits to United States investors? Are they going on the basis of eradicating capitalism? No, they are saying their premier induced capital to come into Saskatchewan, and we should elect them again to do more of the same. They talk to us about a chosen instrument and shady deal. I wonder if the C.C.F. party recalls the loan of $75,000 of Saskatchewan insurance office money to Mr. Bodnoff and then shortly afterwards $60,000 was lent by him to a company in which the premier and provincial treasurer were interested. I wonder if that is the sort of thing that gives them the right to talk to this government here in the way that they have?

Mr. Coldwell: You were all through that in the provincial election and you were proven to be wrong.

Mr. Tucker: I might say this, that the way the C.C.F. really thinks is the basis upon which they are appealing to the people of Saskatchewan, and not the nonsense they are talking on the floor of the house. I want to say that the C.C.F. did go to the people in Saskatchewan in 1944 on the basis of what they are talking now. Then they found that if they did not retreat from that position we were going to have no progress whatever. They now ask for support on the basis that under the C.C.F. financial assistance is available to industry. They are giving more financial assistance to the promoters of this cement plant proportionately than is promised to the promoters of this great pipe line project. The promoters of this cement proposition went out and bought a piece of land and obtained a lease for less than $50,000, and they are going to get from the company over $450,000 for that investment.

Mr. Coldwell: Oh, no.

[Mr. Tucker.]

Mr. Tucker: That was not denied. They said, "Oh, well the promoters had some other expenses such as the hiring of lawyers and engineers and so on." They said to a member of the opposition, "Well, that is no greater percentage than you get out of the companies you float". That was the sort of denial they gave. Yet these are the people who take the high stand here and talk about public ownership, talk about not encouraging United States financiers and say they should not be permitted to make great profits. The government told the opposition in Saskatchewan that they had a deadline to meet, and the opposition let second reading go through in less than an hour. That is the difference.

Mr. Castleden: They did not apply closure.

Mr. Tucker: No, because the opposition did not say they were going to fight the thing to the limit. Here are the people who are talking about public ownership, and the last big act of their government was to advance a guarantee of a loan to the company at the bank, $5·5 million, while the promoters of this cement plant are putting up $3 million.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his time is up.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Perhaps my voice was lost in the noise, but I had called the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. McLeod). Was the Leader of the Opposition rising to speak at this time?

Mr. Drew: I was rising to speak before you had called anyone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I had called the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke.

Mr. Drew: I had risen to speak before the hon. member had sat down. Your Honour will, of course, make such ruling as you see fit, but I want it understood it is not on the basis that Your Honour called anyone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I rather regret that the Leader of the Opposition put it that way, because I did call the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. However, it is quite customary to extend courtesy to both the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister, and if the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke so agrees the Leader of the Opposition may proceed. If the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke does not voluntarily give way, I must see him.

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the outset of this talk I want to advise the house, and especially the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough), that I have no shares in any oil company; that I am not a spokesman for any oil company, and I have no brief for either Mr. Tanner or Mr. Frank McMahon.

It is not often that I pay tribute to any Liberal speech that has been uttered in this house, but I cannot let this moment pass without saying how glad I am that I happened to be in the house before dinner to hear the straightforward denial made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) to all the criticism that has been offered.

I think most of us regret that in the debate thus far there has been so much bitterness over a topic that should have been considered very earnestly, quietly and sanely. I am glad, though, that this rancor seems to have disappeared and that we are taking a saner view of the problem which we are trying to solve by bringing out the pros and cons at this time.

There is another hon. member whom I should like to congratulate on this occasion, namely the hon. member for Calgary South, on his able presentation of so many indisputable facts for our consideration. A few days ago we heard a little about trained seals, but this one particular member seems to be one of those independent sort of people who will not submit to training. He just will not put up with the orders of his leader or possibly his so-called superiors. He does not like the Tory tactics. He believes in facts, not fables, and he is trying to live up to that adjective which the Conservatives have attached to the party name, namely "progressive".

For so doing and for having the courage of his convictions he has risked being disowned by his party that claims to be the last bulwark of personal freedom in this House of Commons. Blind to their own actions, they accuse others of obstructing debate; but I am sure the people of Canada will not be so blind to the action that has been demonstrated here.

Then we have the anti-American campaign which the Conservatives let loose in the hope that it would appeal to the people and form a weapon to spearhead their next federal election battle. I would like to put on record the opinion of the Vernon News, one of the leading papers in my riding, which dealt with this in an editorial on April 26, 1956. I shall not read the whole article, Mr. Speaker. The heading is:

Prosperity depends largely on United States capital in Canada.

The article goes on to say:

The dangerous luxury of belittling the United States, its people, and its objectives has assumed a new form in Canada.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

The Conservative group in parliament, surprising enough, seems to want to assume the leadership here, in its frantic attempt to grasp any stick that will prove a scourge to the government back.

The Conservatives know as well as anybody that if the flow of United States capital to their country was turned off suddenly, our vaunted prosperity would vanish overnight. Canada simply lacks the money to sustain the gigantic volume of investment required.

It is equally false to imply that we are simply hewers of wood and haulers of water for another's benefit. Statistics show that Canada is building a manufacturing plant for processing its own resources at a rate straining its economic being this year.

Anti-Americanism is at the root of such irresponsible talk as has recently come from some Conservatives in parliament. Hating the United States is a luxury far too rich for the Canadian diet.

To this I say amen. On Friday last reference was made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam to the British Columbia Social Credit members in this house. It is rather difficult to let this pass without notice. I know this hon. gentleman is in the habit of making irresponsible statements both in and out of the house and has embarrassed himself and his party thereby. Perhaps, like the kick from a mule, we should consider where it came from; but when he tries to imply that I show more allegiance to the treasury of the Manning government than to the welfare of the Canadian people he is going just a little too far. It is just another of his irresponsible statements that I am sure he regrets after he has had time to think and the emotional strain of trying to justify his foolishness has worn off.

Then the other day we Social Crediters had another indirect compliment paid to us. I take the remark of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam as an indirect compliment, but we had another compliment paid to us by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. I know it was unintentional; nevertheless I would like to express my appreciation. He was referring to another battle that took place in this house last year over the Columbia river, and expressed great surprise over the fact that Liberals and Social Crediters who opposed each other so bitterly at that time are allies here. At this point I believe it was the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) who interjected, "In the same bed".

I would say to the hon. member that we may be in the same bed but we in this corner are not asleep. I will tell the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich and the people of Canada that we Social Crediters look at each question that comes before us on its own merits. Last year we disagreed with the Liberals on the Columbia river question and we opposed them. Now we believe the Liberal plan for solving the pipe-line question is the best available and we are supporting them. I believe I can go further and say that we bring the same impersonal approach to any national problem that comes up in this house. We are prepared to support any group on any policy that, after careful consideration, we believe is worthy of our support.

In this issue we support the Liberals. That does not mean we have forgotten that our mission in the next federal election is to do our best to unseat them from the throne of government, but we do not believe it is our mission to create issues and try to mislead the Canadian people during this session to find material to work with.

I am glad the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich referred to our action on the Columbia river. What action did the Conservatives and the C.C.F. take then? The same as they are taking today, namely obstruction. What a wonderful record it is to place before the people of Canada at the election they are calling for so loudly at the present time, with their tongues in their cheeks.

Our previous speakers, the hon. members for Bow River (Mr. Johnston), Peace River (Mr. Low), Wetaskiwin (Mr. Thomas) and Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), have done such a noble job in presenting our views on this question that there is little left for me to say. We are concerned about possible regulations being made to assure control of this great project remaining within Canada. It is the duty of this government and every succeeding government not only to assure control of this company but of all business connected with the development of our resources and our industries, and we would ask the government very carefully to consider and try to formulate some plan to assure that at least 51 per cent of the stock of this company remains under Canadian ownership and control.

We hear about the new national policy of an all-Canadian pipe line, Canada first, and so forth. We believe that the people of Canada favour such a policy as this, and Social Crediters for years have endorsed such a policy. In fact, I remember a few years ago we were quite strongly criticized for advocating so vociferously the plan of Canada for Canadians.

In this connection we must admit the present government came out with this policy in connection with the pipe line, possibly with an eye to the 1953 election, at a very embarrassing time for the promoters of Trans-Canada. In negotiations and planning up to that time no such policy was announced by this government. This upset the plans of Trans-Canada, and through this new policy the whole problem of financing arose and created the present delay. In order to meet the changed position of the government and construct a line over an uneconomical route, it would not have been any great surprise if the matter of subsidy had entered the picture.

To the honour of the backers of Trans-Canada I will say they did not ask for subsidy; they have merely asked for a loan, although a great many hon. members of this house do not seem to know the difference between a subsidy or a direct grant and a loan. A subsidy would not have been any different from that which was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the construction of another great means of transportation across this country which meant so much in value to the east and the west. But instead of asking for a subsidy they asked for a loan in order to get on with the job more quickly than was possible with the finances they had at their disposal at that time, and in order to build the line to comply with the stipulations laid down by this government.

As I said, we support this national policy, but I believe it should not be a policy which this government may turn on or off in considering individual projects. I am glad to see it so rigidly adhered to in the development and control of our uranium industry. Why is it not applied to our iron ore development? Why do we not have a national policy with regard to iron ore that will build up industries in Canada to process the ore for our own use? Why did we not have a national policy with regard to the St. Lawrence seaway? I would suggest to this government that in all developments and in all projects of national interest the same yardstick of Canada for Canadians should apply. Then we will not have last minute obstacles thrust in the way of development as happened when the new national policy was applied to Trans-Canada.

Now I would like to stress a few points that are directly related to the urgency for immediate action. We have heard a great deal about this matter of urgency; we have some who think the project is not very urgent and of course we have others who believe it is something that should be proceeded with immediately. It is important and it is only right that every phase of this matter should be carefully discussed and the facts—and I stress the word facts—should be presented to the Canadian people. In the debate thus far I am afraid political expediency has been a major consideration in many of the speeches. Now, what are some of the facts?

First there is the urgency that has been stressed by the sponsor of this bill and by other speakers. I believe there is urgency. This pipe line is a means of distributing a wasting product from Alberta to parts of Canada and the United States where it could be used to advantage. Every day the project is delayed means a loss of $50,000 to Alberta producers. We have heard this laughed at in this house tonight, Mr. Speaker, yet I wonder if that is the way to treat a direct loss which is of such vital concern to the Alberta producers? Perhaps the amount of $50,000 a day does not seem very large, but if we total that sum for a year we have a figure of $18,250,000.

To my mind that is a lot of money; yet that will not be the greatest loss. Householders in eastern Canada are getting tired of shovelling United States coal into their furnaces. Industry is crying for natural gas and promises great expansion when this fuel is available. In this respect I am prepared to accept the words of Premier Frost of Ontario when speaking of this pipe-line deal. I know these words have been quoted many times in this house; nevertheless I am going to quote them again. Premier Frost said:

> Time is the very essence of this arrangement and every day's delay invites the most serious consequences to the national economy.

I like that word "national", Mr. Speaker, because it shows that the premier of Ontario is looking beyond the confines of his own province which plays such a vital role in this country of ours.

Agreed on urgency, the question then arises; how to get the line constructed in the least possible time? We have listened to the facts as presented by the minister in introducing the resolution and later the bill. We have made our own investigation and studies of the requirements for prompt action. We have talked with some of the principals involved in the plan and we find this. First, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has contracts for the purchase and delivery of the pipe necessary for immediate construction of the line. There is an extensive backlog of orders for such pipe, and if not accepted by Trans-Canada it would be immediately sold to others who are clamoring for it and who have unfilled orders waiting.

Second, Trans-Canada has connections and contracts with affiliated and independent producers who are in control of sufficient gas to feed the pipe line the moment it is ready to receive it. Third, Trans-Canada has distribution arrangements planned to take care of the gas as soon as it starts flowing to the eastern outlets. Fourth, Trans-Canada has the right of way, has completed surveys and preliminary planning, and has sufficient capital in cash to finance the 10 per cent of the cost of the western section of the line.

Knowing these facts, I believe no one will dispute the claim that Trans-Canada is the only company in a position to start work at once and satisfy the urgent demands for early construction of the line. With this established, the matter of the government plan for financing enters the picture. Again I would accept the view expressed by Premier Frost in these words:

> That the Howe plan for doing so through the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited deal . . . offers the only possibility of getting the line started this year.

In the matter of financing we hear queer statements, statements that I am afraid are irresponsible and made for the purpose of leaving a false impression in the minds of the Canadian people. Today our people are thinking for themselves and, thank goodness, arrive at their own conclusions regardless of political oratory. The Canadian people know the difference between a loan and a gift. They know that money loaned at a rate of 5 per cent interest and secured by all the assets, contracts and agreements of the party getting the loan is not a gift, and I am sure they will not seriously believe the wild statements of the C.C.F. and Conservative parties about the use of taxpayers' money to subsidize Trans-Canada. It is a hard and fast business deal, and in my estimation the government has driven a hard bargain. In fact I wonder that Trans-Canada would accept a loan under such strict terms. It certainly must have had every confidence that it will be able to meet the debt in full when it falls due in March, 1957.

Mr. Nesbitt: The hon. member who is now speaking, or rather reading every word of his speech, is I submit breaking the rule which Your Honour has mentioned on numerous occasions about reading speeches.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I think it has been decided quite often that the only decision which a Speaker can make is to request an hon. member to discontinue reading his speech if he is doing so. It has been decided by more than one Speaker during the last few months that there appears to be no provision in the rules which makes it possible to enforce a strict rule against the reading of a speech if the hon. member who has the floor states that he is following his notes very closely.

Mr. McLeod: I would inform the hon. member that I have quite copious notes in front of me. I will say that if he wishes to read what I have written here and what will appear in Hansard I am sure he will find there is some little difference.

We have heard much about the dangers of United States capital. I am not an advocate of foreign capital. I believe I made reference to this in my budget speech delivered in the house some time ago, and I have not changed my mind one iota. I believe it is certainly preferable to have our industry and other projects financed by Canadian capital. Only this evening I received a copy of the Manitoba Co-operator which I think every hon. member received. I commend to hon. members the article which appears on page 4 entitled "Yankee Dollar". That bears out what I said in my speech some weeks ago and what I have said in public in different parts of this country, that we in Canada are not very good investors when it comes to putting out money in what we call risk ventures.

Perhaps if our C.C.F. friends were in power they would find some means of forcing our citizens to invest their money, but we who deplore the fact that they are not doing so still believe it is the right of each individual to use his money as he sees fit. So long as Canadian capital is not available for development purposes I claim it is a good thing for Canada that outside capital is available. I contend that when outside capital crosses the Canadian boundary it ceases to be foreign and becomes Canadian capital.

I know that someone else is anxious to get the floor, and I shall gladly give it to him at this time.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I was pleased to join with the Prime Minister in the suggestion that all hon. members rise and sing "God Save the Queen". I wish it were possible to feel that there had been a continuing recognition throughout the day of the traditions expressed in that way when we first met this afternoon.

On this day when we were asked to pay our tribute to the Queen herself and in doing so to recognize the traditions of the crown and its relationship to parliament, we have seen once again the denial of a fundamental right of parliament by the introduction of closure without any real opportunity for debate. Hon. members on the other side who say the records will show that there has been plenty of debate seem to disregard completely the fact that we have seen closure applied in a way that it has never been applied before, either here or at Westminster.

An hon. Member: Baloney.

Mr. Drew: That is a typically intelligent interjection from the other side and from the hon. member who made it.

An hon. Member: By the meathead.

[Mr. McLeod.]

Mr. Drew: There has never been a similar application of closure in this parliament or at Westminster. On the first occasion when closure was applied here the bill was introduced on December 5, 1912, and closure was applied on April 10, 1913. On every occasion there has been an extended debate.

I am not going to argue the justification or otherwise of closure at some point in an extended debate. However, I am going to point out that members of the Liberal party used the term "dictatorship" and every other vigorous term they could think of to describe the application of closure even after the debate had been going on for some weeks. Never at any time has there been a case of the very first speaker in the debate giving notice of closure, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce did last week when this measure first came before us.

Let us remember that this is not the measure we discussed on March 15, nor is it the measure which was announced in the speech from the throne on January 10. This is a new measure with a new purpose and one which presents an entirely different aspect to the whole discussion. Nevertheless, without hearing even a single speaker the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that just as soon as the rules made it possible they were going to close off the debate.

Mr. Forgie: A businessman.

Mr. Fleming: A dictator.

Mr. Drew: I hope the remarks which are being placed on Hansard are being duly attributed to the hon. member who is making the interjections. The hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Forgie) is giving a fairly vigorous indication of the attitude of many of the members opposite to this extremely important subject of closure.

We had the ending of the discussion in the committee stage, when the house was called upon to express the opinion that it was expedient to introduce a bill. We were denied the opportunity to have a real debate on that motion. We now have second reading before us. After two days of debate the very first proceeding in the house today constituted a reassertion of the gag, and the indication that the government does not intend to permit a real debate.

To hear some hon. members opposite discuss this subject you would think it was a real privilege for members of the opposition to be heard at all. I would ask some hon. members opposite to remember that it was as the result of extended debate last year that the government finally came to its senses. As the result of expressions of opinion right across the country the wide powers sought by the Minister of Trade and Commerce under the Defence Production Act were not extended and made a part of the permanent laws of this country. This is the same minister, and in the same manner, at that time, who sought to have permanently embedded in our laws the dictatorial powers of that emergency wartime legislation. The government was saved from a very improper course by the expression of opinion right across Canada that this would be improper, and it is to the credit of those members of the government who heeded that expression of opinion that the opposition's proposal was accepted.

Now we seek the same democratic right to express our opinion here, which can explain to the public what the issue is and in turn give the government the advantage of an expression of opinion across Canada from the press and from the people. Surely the government is not unaware of what the press is saying about this extraordinary measure. Surely the government is not unaware of what the press is saying right across Canada about the gag rule. Surely the government is not unaware that almost without exception the press generally is expressing opposition to this government arbitrarily putting up the taxpayers' money from the treasury of Canada to the extent of 90 per cent of the cost of this operation, and then handing over the benefits of that operation to an organization which is 83 per cent owned by investors in the United States. Do not repeat that absurd talk about our being opposed to United States investment.

Some hon. Members: Oh! Look at the record.

Mr. Drew: We are asking the government to insist that the United States investment they claimed they had available should be put into this venture so it can be completed without government intervention. In view of the very familiar sounds I just heard, which unfortunately cannot be recorded in Hansard, and which I described on an earlier occasion in terms that I deemed appropriate, I perhaps should frankly admit that I have had a number of communications expressing criticism of my description of members opposite as trained seals, and I should place one of those letters on record because it is typical of the letters I have received.

An hon. Member: Identify it.

Mr. Drew: I shall identify it. It is written by a man named John R. Harger, the president of The Rapid 5 System of Canada, White Rock, British Columbia, and it was received in my office on May 14. It is addressed to me personally, not marked "confidential". It states:

Dear Mr. Drew,

I am a visitor in the fair city of Ottawa. I notice on the quaint old street cars a sign saying—Ottawa Be Kind to Animals Week.

Have you noticed that sign Mr. Drew? I fear not. Just the other day I read in the paper that you, publicly in the house compared the government backbenchers to an "anvil chorus of trained seals".

Mr. Drew this was a very unkind thing to do to the seals, the seal is a useful, valuable, and relatively intelligent animal (or mammal). In view of the fact that it is "be kind to animals week" Mr. Drew, you as the Leader of the Progressive Conservatives should set a better example to all good men, in fact you should apologize to the seals, publicly for this unkind thing you have done—perhaps thoughtlessly to them.

Yours truly,
John R. Harger.

An hon. Member: Is that the reaction?

Mr. Drew: Yes, that is the reaction of the public, that they think it was an unfair comparison because they think the seals show more sense.

Mr. Speaker, when we come to the question of closure, we are dealing here with the right of hon. members to be heard, and I would point out to Your Honour and to the members here that on this very important subject only a few speakers on this side have yet been heard. Only a few of the Conservative members have had an opportunity yet to speak.

An hon. Member: They have nothing to say.

Mr. Drew: Six out of 53 have been heard in this debate, and that is described by the hon. members opposite as placing obstruction in the way. I wish that we would hear from the Prime Minister how he justifies this arbitrary denial of the right of debate, which had such successful consequences last year and which brought him to a recognition of the fact that it would be wise to retain the authority of parliament over the business of the people of Canada. We have the right to use the only weapon the opposition has—

An hon. Member: Gas.

Mr. Drew: —and that is the expression of opinion conveyed through the press in the gallery to the public. That, after all, is the democratic system, about which some comment has been made. Let the members opposite permit this democratic system to work. Let there be time for the public to express their opinion. This government is afraid of public opinion. This government is afraid to let that opinion be formed. That is why they are applying closure, not because of any deadline date.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

This pipe has been contracted for; this pipe is ready for delivery. This government, under a method that would assure control to Canadians, could assure the construction of this pipe line this year without handing over the benefits of Canadian investment to an organization that is 83 per cent controlled in the United States. That would be democracy in action, and that is what we are asking when we object to closure in this manner.

There will be short speeches tomorrow. Others will have other matters to put forward. I shall at that time continue my remarks but, before I sit down tonight, I hope I may be permitted to draw a similarity between the attitude of this government and that of Oliver Cromwell many years ago. When we hear about the fact that there must be no opposition and no delay, I am reminded of the close of Oliver Cromwell's speech to parliament on January 22, 1655, just 301 years ago. This is Cromwell speaking to parliament. This is the dictator who was an admitted dictator:

> I think it my duty—to tell you, that it is not for the profit of these nations, nor fit for the common and public good, for you to continue here any longer, and therefore, I do declare unto you, That I do dissolve this parliament.

That, of course, was a dissolution that was intended to not permit the people of the British Isles at that time to express an opinion, but may I say once again that this government has no mandate to carry out this improper procedure. This government has no mandate to use the Canadian taxpayers' money to finance a venture to the advantage of United States investors. We ask the government to go to the people and let the people say what they want done on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I call it ten o'clock. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, before that is done, may I point out that in this debate we happen to have another party in the house which is in agreement with the government, and it has often been difficult to decide the sequence of speakers. Earlier, while Your Honour was not in the house, the Leader of the Opposition sought to speak at about, I think, twenty past nine; and quite properly, I think, having in mind the distribution that had been placed before him, the chairman of committees saw another member who had risen on one, if not two, previous occasions. Nevertheless, it is not the desire of the government that we should not hear the Leader of the Opposition at whatever reasonable length might be desirable. As a matter of fact, two members of the Progressive Conservative party this afternoon took part in this debate and three, I think, on the government side.

Mr. Nowlan: Four.

Mr. Harris: All right; four.

Mr. Nowlan: You forgot yourself.

Mr. Harris: At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the official opposition put their case in on this motion by the hon. member for Prince Albert, who I think spoke for about 1½ hours. Nevertheless, if it would meet the unanimous wish of the rest of the house, the government would be prepared to sit until 11 o'clock if the Leader of the Opposition desires to take that time now.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I rose at a time when I believed it was appropriate that I should be recognized. However, I was not recognized. I do not now question that decision. Permission to carry on the debate is not in the hands of the government alone. I therefore do not propose to seek consent from the house at this time. We shall be sitting until long after one o'clock tomorrow night. I do not propose to extend my remarks at this time and to seek from the members of the house any concession that is not appropriately provided under the rules.

On motion of Mr. Drew the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We shall continue with this debate tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE

Question No. 455—Mr. Stuart (Charlotte):

1. Have any of the provincial governments agreed to join with the federal government in a plan for national health insurance?
2. If so, which provinces?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1 and 2. The provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta have accepted in principle the federal proposal respecting hospital insurance and laboratory and radiological diagnostic services.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Question No. 458—Mr. Van Horne:

What action, if any, has been taken to pay family allowances for children of unknown parents to the persons or institutions who are taking care of such children?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

Those persons or agencies who have the care and custody of children and provide their maintenance may be paid family allowances for such children, if they are under 16 years of age and otherwise eligible. This applies equally to children of unknown parents.

Payment on behalf of such children may not, however, be made to institutions. Numerous children in institutions receive the benefit of family allowances since payment can be made to persons who qualify under the legislation as the parents of such children, providing these parents maintain the children substantially in the institutions.

Questions

PENITENTIARY RIOT, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 466—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has an investigation taken place into the causes of the riot in the Saskatchewan penitentiary last July?
2. If so, what were the basic causes?
3. What changes have been made in the penitentiary to remove the reasons which contributed thereto?

Answer by: Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice):

1. Yes.

2. The investigation disclosed that there were no basic causes which might have justified the riot in question. The disturbance was instigated and carried out by a small group of anti-social, ill-intentioned inmates, some of whom had participated in similar disturbances at other institutions.

3. Steps have been taken to restrict the activities of the ringleaders and to segregate them as much as possible from the rest of the prison population, the majority of whom took no part in the rioting and damage.

NON-CANADIAN INDUSTRIAL PLANTS, 1945-55

Question No. 500—Mr. Lafontaine:

1. How many firms from other countries have established industrial plants in Canada each year from 1945 to 1955 inclusive?
2. How many of these plants have been established each year in each province?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

1. 850 firms of foreign origin have established manufacturing facilities in Canada during the 10-year period 1946 to 1955, inclusive. Corresponding information for 1945 is not available.

2. The provincial breakdown of the manufacturing plants established by foreign firms follows:

Year	Nfld.	N.S.	N.B.	P.Q.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Total
1946		1		13	27	2		2	1	46

Note:—These are net totals, meaning that deductions have been made of companies that established facilities in Canada and subsequently discontinued operations.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

STRATFORD, ONT.—REPORTED ACTIONS OF OFFICER OF DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: I see three hon. members on their feet but not saying anything. The hon. member for Perth did not say, "Mr. Speaker".

Mr. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; I did not hear him. Perhaps it may be because my attention was concentrated on the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Monteith: I would like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a question on the basis of information appearing in the London Free Press, concerning which I have sent him the clipping. Has the minister any comment or explanation to offer with regard to the alleged actions of an officer of his department at Stratford, Ontario, in fleecing recent immigrants of money on the ground that he would use his influence with the department on their behalf?

Mr. Speaker: Before the minister answers, may I state to the house what I understand to be the position? Just before the orders of the day for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of the bill, the minister was in order in moving his motion that has just been carried by the house. I do not think that it was the intention to cut off the period of oral questions, but if it is to take place I want it to be understood that there cannot be any intervening motions during that period. As long as this position is protected, I think hon. members can have their questions, if that is the wish of hon. members.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The person referred to in the item in the London Free Press to which the hon. gentleman drew attention is an employee of my department against whom certain allegations of irregularities were received some little time ago. A preliminary investigation was launched immediately, and some two weeks ago the employee was suspended, and the investigation is continuing. In view of those circumstances, I do not think there is anything else it would be proper for me to say.

Mr. Monteith: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the hon. gentleman wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Monteith: Yes, I do. I wonder whether the minister would inquire into how many of these unfortunate people have been victimized, how much money is involved, and what action has been contemplated by the department.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said that an investigation had been launched some considerable time ago, and I do not think I should be a party to any trial of any person in the newspapers.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AMOUNT OF SALES CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. During the course of the pipe-line debate can the minister table in the house the total amount of Trans-Canada's sales contracts in terms of millions of cubic feet per annum excluding those contracts which, of course, are dependent on federal power commission approval?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not have that information in my possession. I will make inquiries and find out if it is in the possession of the government. If not, I will not be able to table it.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED DEPORTATION OF PAKISTAN STUDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Hunter (Parkdale): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is it true that the nephew of an Asian prime minister was deported, as is reported in the Globe and Mail today?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, sir, that statement is entirely false. I must say I was shocked that a member of the bar, for whom I have always had great personal respect, should have taken the affairs of one of his clients and used them apparently to make rather cheap politics. Practically every statement that appears in the story of the Globe and Mail is incorrect, and I have found that the Globe and Mail is generally very accurate in its news reports, whatever one may think of what appears in its editorial columns.

Mr. Fulton: Could the minister give us the correct version in view of the widespread interest this report has aroused?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, sir, I hate to take the time on a day like this—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but very briefly the situation is this. The young man referred to was admitted as a student. He failed in his examinations at the end of the first term. In fact, he came last in a very large class. Instead of going on with his studies, he then applied for permanent landing. To have landed him would have meant the denial of landing to someone else under our agreement with Pakistan. Under the law he was very properly ordered deported, and at the request of his solicitor ample time was provided for him to take voluntary departure, in fact, more than ample time.

He did take voluntary departure and he was assured that the fact that a deportation order had been issued against him would not be held against him if he applied for subsequent admission under the quota under the agreement we have with Pakistan. I do not think anyone could have been more fairly treated considering the law as it is, and I am all the more astonished, therefore, at what appears in the newspaper.

Mr. Fulton: The situation then is that his deportation from Canada was, in the minister's view, made obligatory because of the quota arrangement now prevailing.

Mr. Pickersgill: His deportation was ordered because he had come here as a non-immigrant and had ceased to be a non-immigrant under the terms of the act.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. Robinson (Bruce): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister attempt to have my question, No. 470, dealing with lighthouse keepers' appointments answered as soon as possible? I understand it was an order for return.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I can only say to the hon. gentleman that I shall look into the matter and see when the information can be given that he is seeking to obtain.

GRAIN

CHURCHILL—REPORTED INCREASE IN ELEVATOR SPACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has his attention been drawn to the Canadian Press story from Winnipeg in this morning's Globe and Mail that the elevator space at Churchill might be increased by 50 per cent this year?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I can answer the first part of the hon. member's question by saying that he drew my attention to the article in question earlier in the day, but I should like to reply more fully by telling him that though the grain facilities at Churchill are constantly under consideration by the national harbours board there are no plans for any immediate increase in the storage capacity at Churchill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

QUEBEC PROVINCIAL ELECTION—INQUIRY AS TO INTERVENTION BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that federal ministers and Liberal members have been taking part in the present Quebec provincial election campaign, would he tell us whether he intends taking part himself?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hardly think this is a matter for the federal House of Commons. I am a voter in the province of Quebec, as are also members who sit here for federal constituencies from that province, including those who sit on the government side, and every Quebec elector is free to act as he chooses as a citizen of that province.

Mr. J. Wilfrid Dufresne (Quebec West): May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question?

Could he tell us from whom those who are now taking part in the provincial elections in Quebec have received their orders?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, the members from the province of Quebec, including those who are ministers, receive no orders from anyone in this connection.

(Text):

NATIONAL DEFENCE

H.M.C.S. "PREVOST", LONDON, ONT.—ALLEGED DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): I should like to direct a question to either the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of National Defence. Since the new site for

H.M.C.S. Prevost has been acquired in London, Ontario, why the delay in the commencement of construction and when will construction begin?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): I think the completion of the transfer of the property took a good deal longer than was expected and has just recently been completed. At the moment I cannot tell the hon. member when construction will start but I understand the site has now been cleared legally so we can proceed.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Will construction begin before September?

Mr. Campney: I am sorry, but I cannot answer as to the date.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—REFERENCE TO ANSWER BY MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE ON MAY 18

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Friday of last week in response to a question I put to the Minister of Trade and Commerce on three occasions regarding Trans-Canada's option to purchase pipe in the United States the minister stated, as recorded on page 4068 of Hansard for May 18, that the option had been translated into a firm contract and that he would table a copy of that contract either Friday or Monday. Yesterday, his parliamentary assistant tabled a document which had been labelled as sessional paper No. 174-S, which I presume is the contract referred to by the minister on Friday.

My point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that since the minister said this was a firm contract there must be something missing from this voluminous sessional paper, for in at least three places in this sessional paper it says clearly that Trans-Canada's option to purchase the pipe is still contingent upon Tennessee letting Trans-Canada know that it has obtained all the necessary licences and permits to import gas into the United States. Therefore, I should like to know from the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether there are any other documents or any portions of this agreement which he has not tabled, in view of his statement last Friday that what he would table would be a firm contract.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My reference to a firm contract—a contract involving payments from a non-existent company cannot be a firm contract. If the hon. member will look at the correct document he will see that as soon as assurance can be given that the necessary legislation has been obtained on or before June 7 of this year, an indication of that fact will make the document a firm contract. Naturally, you just cannot get a firm contract until the government can do its part. By whom would the firm contract be implemented?

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister aware that the agreement itself which is at the beginning of this document tabled yesterday says that, in addition to the passing of the bill now before parliament, the conditions set out in exhibit A to exhibits I and II of this document must be met? Is he aware of the fact that in at least two covering letters it is stated by Tennessee, Hudson Bay and Canadian Gulf that clause 2 of the stock option agreement is still in force, and that that clause 2 of the stock option agreement which appears twice in this document says that, and I quote from clause 2:

> Tennessee shall assign such purchase orders to Trans-Canada within sixty (60) days after Tennessee has notified Trans-Canada that there have been obtained all certificates, licences and permits which, in the judgment of Tennessee, are necessary and sufficient to authorize Midwestern Gas Transmission Company, a Delaware corporation affiliated with Tennessee, to construct and operate a natural gas transmission pipe line system extending from the international boundary near Emerson, Manitoba, to connect in the state of Tennessee with the pipe line system of Tennessee and to take gas from Trans-Canada at Emerson, Manitoba.

Is the minister not aware that his whole case, which is based on getting this pipe, falls to the ground, since this is not a firm contract?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the contract can be firm the day after the legislation is passed.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you say that?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I said it was to be put in the form of a firm contract. In any event, I suggest this is a discussion which should take place in committee. We can hardly discuss the contents of a contract now.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the minister's words on Friday were these:

> In the meantime, the option has been translated into a firm contract, and the contract has attached to it certain mill orders and other documents which are now being examined, and I hope to be able to table the contract either today or Monday.

I am prepared to submit this document to any impartial examiner and I am sure he will agree with me it is not a firm contract but is a contract that is still conditional upon Tennessee being satisfied that it has what it regards as the appropriate permits and licences.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—REQUEST TO PURCHASE SABRE AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him what is the present position with regard to the request of the Israeli government for the shipment from Canada of Sabre aircraft and the like. Has a decision been made as yet by the Canadian government? If not, when is it expected?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the matter is still under consideration and I am unable at this time to say when that consideration will be completed.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—CHANGES IN LOCATION OR DESIGN AT NEW TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport to ascertain whether any changes in location or design are being considered for the new air terminal at Dorval.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I think none are being contemplated, but I would have to make inquiries in order to make certain.

BRIDGES

EDMUNDSTON, N.B.—REQUEST FOR APPROVAL BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Where have you been?

Mr. Van Horne: I was attending the funeral of the Liberal party in New Brunswick. I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Why is approval by Canadian National Railways, already specified before the Liberal convention in Madawaska county, now being held up for the building of a bridge in Edmundston by the province of New Brunswick?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. gentleman should realize that the actions of Canadian National Railways have nothing to do with his friends in New Brunswick, and that when a proposal is made by the province of New Brunswick in connection with the matter to which he has just referred it will be given every consideration.

CONSTITUTION OF CROWN COMPANY TO CONSTRUCT PIPE LINE, MAKE SHORT-TERM LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, May 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) for the second reading of Bill No. 298, to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the 20 minutes now allowed to us under the shadow of the axe I shall not be able to cover many of the subjects that I would have liked to discuss. I do wish to refer briefly once again to this extraordinary procedure in regard to which the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has not had a word to say. We have had here the unprecedented use, and I should say "abuse", of closure, and I would like to bring the memories of some hon. members back to the objections that were raised on two earlier occasions to a procedure which followed an extended debate. On August 29, 1917, as reported at page 5121 of Hansard for that day, Sir Wilfrid Laurier had this to say, and I suggest that the words perhaps have an almost reminiscent sound:

> The Minister of Finance has said that the debate upon this bill has lasted two weeks. I do not know that it should have lasted any shorter time than that. The question is one of the most important that we have ever had before us; it is full of complications; it is full of figures.

On this occasion, Mr. Speaker, the debate on the bill lasted two days before closure was moved, not two weeks, and when we had a motion before us for the introduction of this bill closure was moved before there had been any debate at all and before the minister introducing the measure had even heard a word of what the opposition had to say on this bill. Precedents have a habit of becoming established customs. This is a dangerous precedent, indeed. In the past, offensive though it may have been to many of the hon. members, closure followed extended debate and was employed at least with some colour of justification. Here closure is simply a bald threat to the opposition that they are not going to be permitted to place their case before parliament and above all before the people of Canada so that the opinion of the people of Canada can express itself.

These are dangerous precedents. This puts parliament in chains and, therefore, if carried a stage farther, would make parliament ineffective as a place for the conduct of the business of the people of Canada. What have we before us now? Something that the government knew about for a long time. When we heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) yesterday one would have thought that this was a perfectly obvious course which everyone would follow naturally. Why, the government itself did not know two weeks ago what it was going to do. The backbenchers opposite did not know until last week what the government had decided to do. For four months and more we have been waiting for word of what would be done, and it was only after long and painful discussion within the cabinet itself that a decision was reached, and now we are told that everybody should follow this course simply because it comes from this omniscient government. They say it is right and therefore it must be. That is as far as the argument goes. There was not one word from the Minister of Finance, and certainly not a word from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), as to why this mongrel bill has been placed before us in this manner.

We have two distinct measures incorporated in one bill, the one that they originally intended to present and the one that now really is the nub of the discussion before us. The bill that was announced on January 10 was an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, and that was to build the difficult stretch through northern Ontario. Now, we have something entirely different. Now we have the construction of the easiest part of all from the Alberta boundary to the vicinity of Winnipeg. This separate part is to be found on page 6 of Bill 298 as printed and handed out. It is headed "Part II. Western Section." Western section of what? Western section of the northern Ontario pipe line, to be built by the crown corporation. Well, it is just as fantastic as that because the earlier part of the bill deals entirely with the construction of the northern Ontario bridge with money provided by the government to the crown corporation. That is what it is, an outrageous transaction for which Canadian money is used to hand over the control of one of our greatest resources to a company that is 83 per cent owned by United States investors. Then, so that this transaction will look slightly palatable, an arrangement is made for the approximately 575 miles to be financed by the government by granting to the crown corporation $80 million which may be advanced by the crown corporation to the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines for the construction of this western section.

This mongrel bill has not been explained. There has been no attempt to tell us why we have not a single bill before us to incorporate the whole of this, or why we are not dealing with a single bill under which the government would frankly and honestly place before us its purpose today, and that is to advance the money to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines for the construction of that western section, because, Mr. Speaker, the northern Ontario bridge cannot be built as long as the transaction set out in part II stands. As long as that money is outstanding, the northern Ontario bridge cannot be built because there will not be the money in the treasury of the crown corporation to construct any substantial part of it.

On the face of it this bill is a fraud. Let the government honestly bring in a bill and, bad though the proposition may be, put that proposition frankly before us and ask for permission to advance money directly to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines for that western section and not pretend that that has anything whatever to do with the construction by a crown corporation, which is an agency of the government, of what has been described by the minister as the difficult northern Ontario bridge.

There is more than that in it, Mr. Speaker. There is also a joker clause in part II. In section 7, subsection (1), we find this at the very beginning:

> Pursuant to an agreement in that behalf made, with the approval of the governor in council, before or after the coming into force of this act . . .

Now, Mr. Speaker, that means that any measure coming in after this act would be covered by this act. We do not know whether the agreement tabled is the agreement that is binding upon the government. Any new agreement under this act brought in afterwards to amend that earlier act would be effective under the terms of this act. This is bad in every respect. It lacks frankness; it lacks candor and it provides a joker clause which makes it possible for this government once more to vary the transaction without parliament knowing what it is doing.

Then, in so far as the sessional paper that was tabled yesterday is concerned, to which reference has been made, there again is lack of frankness. That sessional paper makes it perfectly clear that the options on the pipe are not transferred by Tennessee Gas to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines until there is approval of the importation of gas into the United States by the agency of the government of the United States, namely, the federal power commission in Washington.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is not true.

Mr. Fulton: You have not read your own agreement.

Mr. Drew: Actually, there is one provision in this that will call for a lot of explanation and one reason why this should go before the committee. There is a great deal of doubt as to whether Tennessee Gas would give up the ownership of that pipe line at any time under this agreement which has been tabled until the federal power commission has actually given the permission that is sought. That is the reason we have asked that this whole matter go before a committee. On May 17 we moved that this be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. A sub-amendment was moved to the effect that these words be added:

> So that consideration might be given to the advisability of recommending the constructing and operating of a trans-Canada natural gas pipe line under public ownership.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out that our amendment referring this whole matter to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines embraces the subject matter of this sub-amendment, and on the other hand the sub-amendment would have the effect of limiting what could go before that committee. As this would read, it would be that this would be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines so that consideration might be given to the advisability of recommending the constructing and operating of a trans-Canada natural gas pipe line under public ownership. We do not intend to support a proposal that would strangle the committee which we have asked to have set up. The committee we have asked to have this referred to would have full power to inquire into the subject matter but it would also have power to inquire into some of the statements made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe).

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Another coalition ended.

Mr. Drew: It would have the power to find out what threat the Minister of Trade and Commerce made to get Mr. McMahon out of the way. It would make it possible to find out what Mr. McMahon's proposals really were, and if we could get answers we would find out from the Minister of Trade and Commerce what his replies were to these proposals which we have not seen yet and what suggestions he made. We would also know what the suggestion was with regard to the Gairdner proposals. Both of these proposals were put forward by highly reputable Canadian citizens who perhaps suffer from the disability that both are Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: It hurts, eh?

Mr. Drew: As far as that is concerned we would also be able to find out whether there are other proposals, as there likely are, and we would be able to find out what the possibility would be of using part of the rights of way of the railway, as has been done in other jurisdictions in constructing pipe lines of this kind. These are all matters that should go before a committee for inquiry. We are certainly anxious to have this committee conduct the widest possible inquiries. Our proposal would provide for no delay. Our proposal would simply mean that a standing committee could be set up on 24 hours' notice—when I say it could be set up on 24 hours' notice I mean it could be called upon to deal with this matter in 24 hours because the committee has actually been sitting. That committee could deal with this subject and we could have before us these people, who would give us the facts which we should really have.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the record of the Conservative party in regard to public ownership is perfectly clear and our record in regard to what is now before the house has been stated and I would repeat it again. I said this on March 15, as reported at page 2182 of Hansard:

> First, refer the whole question immediately to a committee of this house to obtain the facts and make appropriate recommendations. Second, insist upon the reorganization of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines as an all-Canadian company which can proceed immediately and under Canadian control. Third, if Trans-Canada cannot carry out its undertaking, then open the whole matter and permit new interests to make their proposals for an all-Canadian line, Canadian controlled. Fourth, if it can be shown, and I doubt that it is so, that part of the pipe line must be built as the government asserts on this occasion, then instead of building a part which could become an orphan under certain circumstances in the future, let them build the whole pipe line and lease it for operation under Canadian control.

Mr. Speaker, those words are clear; they are not open to mistake. We have asked that this procedure be followed and we ask that it be followed now. I ask the Prime Minister even at this stage of the debate to enter the debate to tell us why he has changed his mind; to tell us why he is now prepared to support something which last July he thought was not a good proposal; to tell us why he is prepared to support something that is infinitely worse than what he had before him last July. Let him also consider whether it would not be wise in the interests of Canada to refer this to the committee immediately and to give this House of Commons and the people of Canada a chance to really know the facts.

Surely the Prime Minister knows of the widespread objection from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Surely he knows of what the press in this country is saying about this. Hon. members opposite laugh, but let us recall the fact that a paper which is right in the heart of the oil and gas industry had this to say on May 10:

> On the pipe line, the government now proposes not only to turn over a vital natural resource to foreign control, permanently, but is actually prepared to finance this ill-conceived project with public money, the benefit to go mainly to the United States, and the profits to go to private United States interests.
> It is a most strange kind of "declaration of independence" to sell out part of our national heritage to private foreign interests and force the Canadian taxpayer to finance the sell-out.
> The Trans-Canada Pipe Lines deal is a bad dream of Mr. Howe's.
> To liken it to the seaway project is a hideous nightmare.

That appeared in the Calgary Herald on May 10; a responsible publication right in the very heart of the area from which this gas would be coming.

Let us go to Vancouver where on May 8 the Vancouver Province carried an editorial headed "All Canadian pipe line by force". Right across the country similar editorials are appearing particularly since the government used the gag. Particularly since that time, the strongest Liberal papers in this country have been criticizing the government's action in this respect.

It is not too late for the Prime Minister to restore some measure of parliamentary authority by stating that the gag will not be reimposed and by stating also that this will be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines so that we may get at the facts and the truth may know the light of day. It is the only way we will get the truth because we certainly have not been able to get the facts yet.

We have had the situation where during this vitally important debate the Prime Minister is still silent and the Minister of Trade and Commerce is still secretive—

An hon. Member: And wrong.

Mr. Drew: —and wrong.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce once again repeated the misstatement that the agreement between the companies who now have effective control of this operation provides that there will be an issue of 51 per cent of this stock to Canadians. That statement is absolutely inaccurate and without any foundation whatever. Section 6 of that agreement provides, not that there will be an issue to Canadians but that there will be an issue in Canada. It does not provide that there will be 51 per cent of the voting stock issued even in Canada, where all of it or portions of it could be sold to United States interests if they so desired. It does not say that at all. Actually under section 6 of the agreement all that needs to be issued in order to comply with that provision is 2,006,884 shares, or just over 20 per cent of the voting shares. That is actually what is called for by section 6 of the agreement. There is no question about the fact that such an issue would satisfy the requirements of section 6 if the company so desired. That is all they are compelled to do.

This is once again an opportunity for parliament to reassert itself. This is once again an opportunity for hon. members to show that they insist upon parliament having the right to debate. I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in all earnestness to reconsider the course which has been followed. Let him hear, let him read, let him follow the advice of public opinion across this country. Let us make a new start. It will not prevent the construction of the trans-Canada pipe line. I am indebted to the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) for emphasizing the fact by quotations yesterday that I have been doing my utmost, as well as other hon. members on this side, to persuade the government to proceed with the construction of this gas pipe line for well over two years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: If hon. members opposite want to laugh, let them laugh at the hon. member for Rosthern because he quoted my words yesterday to that effect.

I have stated our position. Let us have a committee; let us get the facts. I would hope that hon. members to our left will support that motion and will recognize that the subamendment they have moved would not permit a wide open inquiry, but that on the other hand we would be prevented from conducting the type of inquiry which we all desire.

Mr. Coldwell: How?

Mr. Drew: Because it is specifically stated that the committee shall be set up for a particular purpose. May I point out also that the amendment which we have now moved for reference to a committee clearly refers the whole subject, including the subject of probable construction and of the alternatives which have been placed before the committee. We want that inquiry. We want to know the facts. We want this great natural resource brought under the control of Canadians for the benefit of the people of Canada in the years ahead.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are two aspects of the matters involved in this debate about which I wish to speak. One has to do with the bill itself and the other has to do with the responsibility which the government has assumed to use the proceedings provided by the standing orders of this house to make it possible for this house to reach a decision in time for that decision to be effective if it is an affirmative decision.

As to the first point, I agree completely with the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. All of us want this to be an all-Canadian pipe line, to be a pipe line controlled under Canadian law and to be operated for the benefit of the development of Canada at large.

With respect to the ownership of shares, I have just looked at clause 6 to which the hon. member has referred. I cannot agree with him that the stipulation made there would be complied with by the issue or offering in Canada of 2,006,884 shares. I submit that it covers 51 per cent of all stock which will be issued by this company. This is not a country where the government, even if it were headed by the hon. gentleman, would control the actions of those who purchased shares in investment companies nor the time they held and retained ownership of such shares. That would be a totalitarian attitude which I am convinced the hon. gentleman himself would not contemplate.

Before going on with the rest, there is another matter I should like to dispose of immediately, that is that there would be a joker in the contract which has been made with respect to the transfer to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited of the options for the shares. I have that document before me and it says, in addition to what was read a few moments ago by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> 2. In addition to the provisions of exhibit A to exhibits I and II hereto, in the event the Canadian government bill providing for the construction of the natural gas pipe line from the Manitoba-Ontario boundary to Kapuskasing, Ontario, together with the supplement providing for Trans-Canada's interim financing covering the construction of Trans-Canada's natural gas pipe line from the Alberta-Saskatchewan boundary to Winnipeg, Manitoba is passed and becomes law and Trans-Canada has received written notice pursuant to clause 1 of the agreement dated 8th day of May, 1956 made between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada and Trans-Canada that the loans therein referred to have been authorized and can be made as therein provided, Hudson's Bay, Canadian Gulf and Tennessee hereby agree to and shall assign to Trans-Canada all such parties' interest and obligations in purchase orders covering pipe ordered for Trans-Canada's requirements as described in exhibits I and II hereof and will deliver to Trans-Canada pipe received prior thereto for Trans-Canada's requirements pursuant to such orders and on hand at the time. Trans-Canada will, upon assignment of such orders assume the obligations thereunder and pay the vendor thereunder directly for all pipe received thereafter against such orders.

Mr. Knowles: Does that not make it clear that the second condition is in addition to—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): With respect to the statement made by the hon. gentleman that there is a joker in the bill because it refers to contracts which have been made or which may be made, I would refer him to the first clause of the act which was passed by the legislature of Ontario and which is cited in the letter addressed by Mr. Porter to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). This letter was read into the record of this house on May 17. The second to the last paragraph of the letter reads:

> In any matter of such complexity and magnitude, we recognize that it may become necessary to consider changes in arrangements from time to time. At the last session of the legislature an act was passed, by the unanimous recorded vote of the house, giving authority to enter into such arrangements. The act allows for certain flexibility so as to meet changing situations as they may arise. Section 1 of the act is as follows:
> "1. For the purpose of implementing the arrangements made or to be made between the government of Canada and the government of Ontario to facilitate the construction of a connecting link through northern Ontario of a pipe line to transport natural gas from Alberta into central Ontario, the treasurer of Ontario is hereby authorized to loan from time to time—"

Why is this bill before the house? We submit that it is the first proper and necessary step to implement what has been Canadian policy for the last half century, a policy which was sanctioned by legislation introduced and recommended to this parliament in 1907, that is to say to preserve for Canadians energy and power produced in Canada to the full extent required by actual or future probable requirements of Canadians. That policy has been followed and has been approved—I think it is still approved—by every hon. member of this house and by the public generally.

A fact that cannot be denied is that there are tremendous amounts of gas being produced in Alberta beyond the requirements of that province, gas which those who produce it wish to dispose of and which people in other parts of Canada can use and wish to use, and which will in being properly used within Canada continue to promote and stimulate this era of extraordinary development that has been going on in this country for the last several years.

That requires the construction of the pipe line from Alberta to central Canada. That is the longest pipe line ever undertaken for the transmission of gas. It is a considerable undertaking. It is an undertaking which we and many others, including the prime minister of Manitoba, the government of Ontario and the prime minister of Alberta, felt should be started at the earliest possible moment. This bill is before the house because, after carefully considering all possibilities, we came to the conclusion that this was the only practicable way to get the construction of this line started this summer and completed from the Alberta boundary to Winnipeg before the end of this construction season.

I know that our socialist friends pretend that that is not the way to do it, that it should be done as a public enterprise owned and administered by a public authority in Canada. That has been carefully considered, and the reasons for the objections—they are not insuperable objections, but the reasons for objecting to that—as the most desirable course to be followed, are grave reasons, reasons that have impressed the government of Ontario, which gave them consideration too, as they have impressed us. The prime minister of Ontario has said—and his words have been read into the record here—that, if private industry can do the job, it is in the interests of Ontario and in the interests of all Canada that private enterprise do the job, but that, if it fails, if it cannot be done otherwise, it is a matter of such importance that the serious difficulties involved in public ownership would have to be faced and have to be overcome.

That line should be built and it will be built, and the future generations of Canadians will be glad that it will have been built. It is an important factor in maintaining the impetus of the Canadian economy that has been so gratifying during these last years. There have been suggestions that there were many other things that should be done. All those other things may be very desirable things, but they cannot all be done at once. I am sure all members of the house were impressed yesterday by the statement made by the Minister of Finance on the serious consideration his department gave—and it is not an attractive proposal to any Minister of Finance to make loans of public funds, even for a short term and even at the ordinary commercial rates of interest—but after examining the whole situation he came to the conclusion—and he stated that conclusion to the house yesterday—that it was a good thing for the economy of Canada generally and, incidentally, that it would be a very good thing for the public treasury because of the participation of the public treasury in the profits that are made out of any of the industries that are being established and exploited in the Canadian economy.

The hon. gentleman caused some amusement when he said that that would provide money with which all these other things could be done. He was then asked if that was a promise, that as soon as this was completed all those other things would be done. Well, that is something which no one could undertake, because careful consideration has to be given to all these enterprises that are all good and that all contribute to the welfare of the Canadian nation but that cannot all be accomplished at the same time.

Why did we come to the conclusion that Trans-Canada was the instrument that could and should be used to bring about the start of this line this season? It is because it appeared to us that it was the only practicable way in which work could be started this season and proceeded with in a manner that would make for completion of the leg from the Alberta boundary to Winnipeg before the close of this season. I think that that is a fact that cannot be disputed.

Why was it the only agency? It was the only agency that had the permits; the only agency that had the plans; the only agency that had the organization; the only agency that had the pipe, under these arrangements, which are covered by the agreements that have now been tabled in the house.

An hon. Member: And was broke.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I hear the hon. gentleman say, "And was broke". The company did not yet have the whole of the money required for the large expenditure that would be involved even in that preliminary leg, and that is the only justification for asking parliament to authorize the loan. It is something that is necessary, but it is a short-term loan made under conditions that can involve no possible loss to the Canadian taxpayer.

If it is returned, as it is undertaken to be returned, on April 2, 1957, what will have been gained? Well, there will have been a substantial portion of the pipe line built and put into operation, and the money will have been returned to the treasury with interest that represents some slight profit over the cost of money to the federal treasury. If not, it is security for the loan and can be taken over and the line proceeded with. And the taxpayers of Canada will have obtained that leg at 90 per cent of its cost instead of 100 per cent of its cost—and at the costs which prevail at this time, instead of the higher costs that were referred to in some of the speeches made from the other side yesterday, which are probable in view of what we expect with respect to the cost of steel.

Mr. Fleming: Will it be taken over if there is default?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): We shall come to that, and we shall endeavour to make the best possible decision in the light of our responsibility to the Canadian people. We shall cross all those bridges when we come to them, and we shall cross them in the expectation that they will still, when we come to an election, enable us to face the Canadian public and get the response we have been getting over the past years every time we faced them.

Mr. Rowe: Try that now.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): But I do want to say something about the reasons why the government took the responsibility of recommending the use of standing rules of this house to give this house an opportunity to make a decision upon this important matter in time for the decision to have some effect.

Hon. members opposite realize that, if they can succeed in preventing a decision on this matter from being made in this house in time for that decision to be effective, they will have achieved the same result as if they got a majority voting it down in the house. That is not a part of the ordinary regular procedure of parliamentary institutions. I confess quite freely that it is always distasteful to have to resort to measures of that kind, and I am sure that it was distasteful to every government that had to recommend to the house the adoption and application of these rules. But if we believe, as we do, that this is something that should be done now in the interests of the Canadian people, can we shirk whatever distasteful responsibility we have to take in order to get the matter before parliament in time for it to make a proper decision, a decision that can be implemented?

I have more than once had to face disagreeable duties that I felt were duties to be fulfilled in the discharge of my responsibilities, and I have never yet shirked any duty that appeared to me to be a duty that was imposed upon me by the responsibilities I had taken by my oaths of office. In my view the question turned upon whether or not we did believe that this was a good thing in the interests of the Canadian people. If we did believe that it was a good thing in the interests of the Canadian people, it was our duty to try to bring it to a decision in the house in time to make it possible for that decision to be executed. If we are wrong in our feeling that it is a good thing for the Canadian people it should be defeated in the house, and I would hope that any member of this house who felt that it was a wrong decision to be made in the interests of the Canadian people would vote against the implementing of such a decision.

An hon. Member: And speak against it.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): And speak against it, and do as some other hon. members of other parties in the house have found it was their responsibility to do, get up and honestly and frankly state their views even though they regretted that their views were not shared by the other members of the party with which they had been associated.

Having taken the responsibility of rising first to vote on the motion which brings into application this rule of the house, I must be prepared to obey fully the consequences of that motion and I am told that the consequences are such that I must now take my seat.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, we have at last heard from the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in this debate.

An hon. Member: You certainly have.

An hon. Member: And "Howe".

Mr. Fulton: We have heard from Howe before, unfortunately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: And what we have heard from the Prime Minister is that he puts himself on record as being on the side of those who are in favour of using the Canadian taxpayers' money to hand over control of a Canadian resource to American interests—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fulton: —and that the Prime Minister is amongst the ranks of those who not only will subscribe to that policy but will resort to the unjustified use of the gag and closure to force this measure through the house notwithstanding the fact that that course is not in the least necessary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: In what I have to say this afternoon I want to deal mainly with the two points chosen by the right hon. gentleman himself as the main subjects of his remarks. The first is the question of the abuse of this house and thus the abuse of the country by the methods resorted to and, second, the extent to which this is a surrender to American interests, a surrender supported, in fact, encouraged, by the Prime Minister of Canada.

We have heard from the right hon. gentleman and from his cohorts in the cabinet that closure is necessary because the members of the opposition have brought it upon themselves. Sir, I refer you to the remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in this house on May 18. He says that the opposition has invited the government to use closure. He says that we have brought it on ourselves and that we could have discussed the matter for 15 days if we had not followed the procedure we have been following of avoiding discussing it at every opportunity that we could. Let us see what the facts are.

An hon. Member: Just as you are doing now.

Mr. Harris: Starting with the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Fulton: First of all, in the course of this matter since the 9th of May there have been seven points of order raised. I am talking about substantial points of order.

Mr. Hellyer: Why do you not talk about the bill?

Mr. Fleming: Oh, be quiet. Another closure!

Mr. Fulton: Of these only two were raised during the time when otherwise debate on the measure itself might have been proceeding. The others were raised either before the resolution reached the order paper, that is at a time before it could possibly be debated, or else they were raised after one o'clock in the morning of last Wednesday after the time for debate on that particular stage had gone by.

The fact of the matter is therefore that every proper measure we took that was provided for under the rules to prevent this motion reaching the order paper in an improper form did not in fact delay the debate itself by one day, not by one hour, because the fact that the resolution did not come on for debate until a week ago last Monday was due exclusively and entirely to the fact that the government did not put it on the order paper before Thursday of the week before, and did not call it until Monday. That was a matter exclusively within the control of the government.

The matter could not have been debated before Monday of last week and yet the government has the effrontery to parliament, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture have the effrontery to parliament, to say that if we had wanted we could have been debating this matter for a great many more days than we did. Debate could not start until Monday of last week and since that time, as I say, there have been only two points of order of any substance raised during time that would otherwise have been available for debate.

Then, what about the votes? It is true there have been 18 votes since May 9, since the government first improperly gave notice of the resolution in Votes and Proceedings. Of these votes there have only been four in time which otherwise would have been available for debate on the measures, only four votes, including divisions in committee. Only four times have we divided the house or committee during the time when this matter was actually under debate. The other divisions have all been in time when the matter was not under debate and therefore the votes, any more than the points of order, could not interfere with the progress of the measure.

So what are we left with, sir? We are left with the conclusion that what the government resents is not obstruction, not attempts to delay the measure, but opposition and discussion. The Minister of Agriculture makes it quite clear in his remarks that what he resents is not delay, not the fact that we have tried to prevent this measure from being brought on improperly, but the fact that we have used the time available to debate it and to oppose it effectively in the only manner left open to us. Therefore we are left in the position that closure, invoked for the first time in the history of this or any other parliament at the outset of a debate before a word has been said in debate, is justified by the ministers opposite and today by the Prime Minister on grounds which leave no room for any other conclusion than that what they are concerned about, what they resent, what they regard as improper, is not obstruction but opposition. If the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues would have their way they would do away with all rights of opposition in this parliament under the guise of this false front, this false cover, of trying to say that what we have been doing is attempting to obstruct rather than to oppose.

We have the matter reduced to the cynical farce which was perpetrated on this house by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) only last Wednesday, May 16, when I asked the right hon. gentleman, as reported at page 3990 of Hansard for that day:

> . . . what was the tremendous and compelling urgency to bring the debate to a close yesterday by the application of the closure rule, in view of the fact the government is not prepared to go on with the debate today . . .

The Prime Minister gave this answer, which is the all time high for cynicism and effrontery to parliament:

> I will tell him that the reason it was not suggested we should go on today with the second reading of the bill was so that hon. members would have an opportunity to consider it before second reading was called.

What a cynical reply—so we would have opportunity to consider the bill! I ask you Mr. Speaker, and I ask the Prime Minister, and I challenge him to reply, of what avail is time to consider before second reading if you are not going to have time to discuss it on second reading? They have introduced closure now before there has been time for discussion, and they introduced it on the occasion of the debate on the resolution, when of course closure is most damaging to discussion.

I say to you, sir, and I challenge any hon. member over there to deny it, that the effect of closure at the resolution stage, and the reason for closure at the resolution stage, was that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and the Prime Minister knew, and all the others sitting over there knew that once they had introduced closure at the resolution stage they had precluded members of the opposition from asking questions and enforcing answers; that is the most damaging stage at which closure could be introduced. By virtue of the closure rule, you cannot insist upon an answer to questions, and the hon. gentlemen did not dare be placed in the position where they would have to answer questions, so closure was imposed right at the outset. It was imposed because hon. gentlemen opposite were afraid to be placed in a position where they would have to answer questions.

Mark my words, closure will be applied in the committee stage because otherwise the hon. gentlemen would be in a position where they have to answer questions and once again they will not dare answer questions about this measure. Then, they have the effrontery to tell parliament and the country they are applying it because the opposition is obstructing. We have only had four votes which have taken time which would otherwise have been available for debate. The Prime Minister pretends to be so concerned about the rights of this house, but he had better get a better explanation for applying closure than this before he will satisfy either this house or the people of Canada.

So much for that myth as to why closure is imposed. We have heard a certain amount about fables and one of the fables the government is trying to put up is that the reason for closure is the opposition is trying to obstruct. The reason for closure is because they resent opposition and they are afraid to answer questions.

I shall deal now with another of the chief fables which the government is trying to put up, and that is this question of Canadian control of the pipe line. They tell us first that it is necessary to pass this bill by means of closure before June 7 because it is urgent to get gas to Ontario. Sir, I say to you that while there may be urgency I do not accept the urgency which the government has attempted to ascribe to it, that it must be done by a deadline of June 7, because they have put on a self-imposed deadline to which they are now attempting to make parliament conform by the use of the gag or closure.

Delay would be most undesirable, but I put it to you, to the house and to the country, that while delay would be undesirable it would be better to have enough delay to make sure that the project is a taxable private enterprise than it be a burden on the taxpayers now and for all time to come. That is what the rush which the government is trying to impose upon the house and the country is going to lead to. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) speaks of the tremendous benefits which will follow the construction. These benefits, sir, will follow construction at any time. Would it not be better to have those benefits follow on the basis that it is a private enterprise taxable corporation rather than that the taxpayers' money, on which tax has already been paid, be used to hand it over to a United States enterprise where the primary benefits are going to flow across the border? For that reason, sir, any reasonable measure of delay calculated to lead to a better result would be well worthwhile in the national interest.

Now, let us look at this question of Canadian control. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says, in that sweeping manner of disregard for the facts for which he is so justly famous, that the present arrangement ensures Canadian control. Today the Prime Minister reads the agreement, without any word of detailed argument, and says that of course it means control by Canada. I say to you, sir, that not only does the agreement not mean control by Canadians it does not even mean that the majority of the voting stock must be offered to Canadians. It only covers one issue of stock, and in spite of the Prime Minister's words, he cannot read any other meaning into that agreement. It covers one issue of stock, and of that issue of stock it does not even say the majority must be offered to Canadians. It says it has to be offered in Canada. If they meant what they said—that they were concerned that Canadians should have the opportunity to buy this stock, why did they not say it must be offered to Canadians?

My hon. friends know quite well the arrangements that are made so often in these matters where control of the issue is under United States companies and it is arranged in advance that, although it is offered in Canada and through Canadian financial houses, it will be sold to friends of the promoters. Offered in Canada, yes, but to whom? Offered to American friends of the United States promoters. If he means what he says that this is designed to assure Canadians will have the opportunity to purchase, why does he not insist on that provision being written into the agreement? When it is said that you cannot get any more firm arrangements than they have got to assure control by Canadians, that is to mislead the house. What about Mr. McMahon's proposal?

The hon. gentleman who has misled the house in the past with respect to this and other matters said just the other day that he had never said he had no documents from McMahon. The other day when the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hees) was speaking, the minister said, as reported at page 4090 for Hansard May 18, 1956:

> We might as well be accurate. I never said that. I said I had never received a proposal from Mr. McMahon.

Here is what the minister said. There were two occasions, but I shall read only one. On April 16th, a motion was presented calling for the production of "all letters and other documents received by .... any minister, ... from Mr. Frank McMahon," and the minister said he had tabled them. Then the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) as reported at page 2940 of Hansard for that day, said that the McMahon documents were not tabled, and the record continues:

> Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There were no McMahon documents.

But now he says, "Let us be accurate. I never said I had no documents from McMahon." The minister has said so many things that are contradictory he does not know what he said because he, himself, does not believe in the principle of assuring Canadian control of this pipe line. He said that Mr. McMahon could not ensure it, that there is no way of ensuring it. Well, sir, I was interested to inquire recently about the details of the arrangement made by Mr. McMahon in connection with the Westcoast Transmission Company. It was reported in the press that Mr. McMahon had arranged—although the bulk of his capital was subscribed in the United States—to ensure that control would remain in the hands of Canadians, and so I made inquiries as to just how this would be ensured. I find there is available in the Montreal and Toronto offices of the Montreal Trust Company a voting trust agreement, which anyone who wishes has the opportunity to inspect. I have not time to read out all the details, but it is between the Westcoast Company and four Canadian trustees and two American trustees and the Montreal Trust Company. Under the provisions of that agreement all voting stock is to be deposited with the Montreal Trust Company, the depository, in return for which it issues voting trust certificates. The voting trustees who vote on behalf of the shareholders are comprised of six persons, four Canadians and two Americans, the Canadians being Frank L. McMahon, George L. McMahon, Douglas P. McDonald and Norman R. Whittall. The Americans are Lloyd S. Gilmour and Edward T. Herndon.

In the event of a vacancy occurring amongst any of the Canadian trustees, that trustee must be replaced by a Canadian citizen. In the event of a vacancy occurring amongst the two American trustees he can be replaced by any person, a Canadian or an American. The duration of the agreement is until 1970, and it may be extended beyond 1970.

So here is a case, sir, where a Canadian, a man who was brushed aside by this minister, a man who has been derided and ridiculed by his supporters, made this agreement which ensures control by Canadians. Why was he derided and ridiculed? Because he dared to get in the way of the minister and say: "I can do this trans-Canada proposal also under Canadian control without cost to the government". He has shown that he can do these things. Although a good deal of his capital for them comes from the United States, he is able to make arrangements so that the control of them will remain in Canada under the control of Canadians in a way in which this government neither is able to nor is concerned to do.

Yet we hear from the minister, we hear from the government and we hear from others that the way they are doing it now is the only way to do it, and that control will remain in Canada, and that they do not need any offer from Mr. McMahon, and that Mr. McMahon is not worthy of consideration—that is what the Minister of Agriculture said the other day. He said: "We would not have considered his offer if it had been presented to us". They would not have considered it even if it had been presented to the rest of the cabinet. Let us remember that on the basis of the record there is only one reason why that attitude is taken, and that is, they do not care whether control of another Canadian resource passes into American hands or not, and they are not concerned to take the simple steps that should be taken to ensure that control of this vital resource be kept in Canada for the benefit of the Canadian people.

Not only, sir, are they not concerned about the future of Canada in this regard, not only are they prepared to use the taxpayers' money to hand over a Canadian resource to Americans, but they are prepared to gag, to bind, to foreclose parliament in order to pursue their iniquitous course. Not only may they destroy and render inoperative for the benefit of Canadians a tremendous Canadian resource, but they may by their policy destroy parliament. I say to you, sir, let them talk about obstruction. It is not obstruction; it is opposition, and it will be exercised until the very last gasp so far as we in this house are concerned; and, sir, if this bill goes through—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Fulton: —they will know that they have had a fight which they will never forget and over which the Canadian people will turn them out of office.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I wish to offer my sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) on the discretion which he exercised in the choice of the subject matter of his speech. After complaining about the small amount of time which the application of the rules of the house has left to him to discuss the bill before the house, he spent about 80 per cent of his time discussing every subject under the sun except this bill in question.

One of the points that he referred to was this old chestnut of the alleged failure to provide control by Canada in the bill which is now before the house. I think perhaps I might say as a Canadian and as a Liberal that there are few statesmen in Canadian history who command the admiration of Canadians—and certainly I would hope the admiration of the Conservatives in Canada—to a greater degree than Sir John A. Macdonald. Of all of the great achievements to which he set his hand, in most cases fairly successfully, there was none that was greater than his effort in extending the transcontinental railway from coast to coast, for the first time to bind this Canada together as one nation.

Now, Sir John A. Macdonald, in those halcyon days when the Conservative party could stay in power for more than one term, and when they achieved a record which I believe that party will never equal and certainly never surpass at any future time, their leader then was no little Canadian who said in relation to the building of this railway that none but Canadians need apply, or that no capital but Canadian capital need apply.

Mr. Fulton: Your government says that no Canadian need apply.

Mr. Garson: Oh, no, not at all.

Mr. Fulton: Yes; you warned McMahon off.

Mr. Garson: Sir John was prepared to take, and he did take, capital from any place that could offer it. My hon. friends, if they know even the history of the Conservative party let alone that of Canada, must know that the Canadian Pacific shareholders have never, from the time that the company first came into being up until the time that we are discussing this matter in the house today, exceeded 17 per cent. Indeed they never at any time equalled the 17 per cent that my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), complains about in connection with this present pipe-line project. At the present time I suppose the number of Canadian shareholders in the Canadian Pacific Railway is not more than 12 per cent. The great majority of its stock is now held, as it has always been held, by British and United States investors. Does that mean that the Canadian Pacific Railway is under the control of those other countries or of their shareholders? Is it any the less subject to the Crowsnest pass agreement, for example, than it would be if it had 100 per cent Canadian shareholders?

Now, sir, my purpose in rising today is to examine, as a typical example, how this present arrangement will affect one city and how likewise I think it will affect nearly all of the cities to which it can be extended. The city to which I refer is my own city of Winnipeg. We in Manitoba have, I think, as great an interest in this project as any other province in Canada. Certainly, no metropolis in Canada has a greater interest in it than Winnipeg has. For that reason, I was quite concerned when I saw all of the members representing the constituencies of the city of Winnipeg engaged in bitter opposition to this measure; and I would like to add my words to those of other Manitoba members who have preceded me in stating the reasons why, from our point of view, this is a very excellent measure.

We have been in Winnipeg at the western end of the fuel movement of American coal coming in through the great lakes, and we have likewise paid the highest prices for Alberta coal. We would like to get some cheap fuel for a change. To that end we are very much interested that this project should begin immediately after the passage of this bill with movement of the pipe from the United States to its location of the right of way with the idea that the entrenchment of the pipe shall begin in the early part of July in order that it may be possible to complete the whole project before freeze-up this year. Therefore, when our hon. friends impute all sorts of ulterior motives to us, our simple answer is, as anyone who has given this matter any study at all knows, that unless this beginning is made and unless the work is executed with great vigour it will not be possible before freeze-up next fall to complete the western section of the pipe line. That is the reason and the only reason for the application of the rules of the house.

In order to consider what the effect would be in Winnipeg, I have sought the views of the Winnipeg and Central Gas Company, Mr. W. F. Davey—

Mr. Fulton: That is St. James Street, Montreal. Why did you not write direct to St. James Street and find out?

Mr. Garson: I have not been aware, when it comes to the proper management of utility companies, that the people who are experienced in that field are disqualified from expressing an opinion, and so far as this opinion is concerned, as my hon. friend will see from its text, it indicates the great need for urgency in this construction if each of the places which this pipe line will serve are to achieve that rearrangement of their load factor which will enable them to get at the least possible cost the gas which they are to buy.

Mr. Hodgson: Why didn't you build it last year then?

Mr. Garson: For reasons which have already been explained at great length. I am sorry my hon. friend did not listen to them. This wire reads as follows:

> Trans-Canada pipe line project of vital importance to future of Canada. Key industries require natural gas now and every delay of serious import.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—and I will do this very briefly because of the time limit—I would remind Your Honour of the rule against quoting opinions, telegrams, letters, et cetera from outside the house commenting on matters under discussion in the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman in his own seat?

Mr. Fulton: I would only say, if it is to be permitted in this case then I hope you will permit other speakers to do it. I think also it should be clearly on the record that what the minister is reading does not express the views of Winnipeg, but of some of his friends on St. James Street, Montreal.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why don't you join the C.C.F. and be done with it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Yesterday an hon. member wished to raise a similar point of order. The one which I think he wished to raise at that time was under citation 306 of Beauchesne's second edition. I would like to read that citation to hon. members:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

It seems to me the test is whether it reflects on what an hon. member has said within the house or on a proceeding within the house. I did not myself take that impression from the minister's words but I think that is the true test and I will be careful to apply it in that way.

Mr. Garson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the comments in this wire have to do with the desirability and indeed the necessity for an early start on the construction of the pipe line.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that in response to a wire from yourself?

Mr. Garson: No, it is not. The wire continues:

> Key industries require natural gas now and every delay of serious import. Key industries essential to proper economic distribution of natural gas in Manitoba. All Canadian pipe line requires maximum support from Manitoba. This now available in 1956. Delays in pipe line could lead to destruction of economics arising out of availability of key industries as load balancers making economic distribution of gas to residential consumers extremely difficult if not impossible in reasonable length of time. Large potential industrial expansion awaiting arrival of natural gas. Original Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited plan requires obviously F.P.C. approval. No certainty this will be available in near future and perhaps for some time. Would appear therefore measures required to enable implementation independent of F.P.C. approval now. Should F.P.C. approval be forthcoming pipe line can proceed as originally planned; government leaving this door still open without jeopardizing markets by awaiting same. Should F.P.C. approval not be obtained government in position to take over project under way with most difficult work done and organization ready made; this is not mean accomplishment to have matter brought to this point. Should government not take this position might lead to many years of delay in implementation of pipe line. This would be disastrous to our company and deal a very serious blow to the future of Manitoba in the form of lost opportunities. Major Manitoba market now geared to major effort in natural gas. Delays possible could destroy years of preliminary effort; same applies to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited. Time is of essence and matter should be resolved forthwith. Have commended in light of all relevant factors that government adopt any and all measures essential to this end. This from point of view of Canada with whose interests ours happily coincide. Those who oppose same should weigh very heavily consequences of such action. All parties evidently agree on desirability of all Canadian pipe line. Government adopting only course of action which will realize this in reasonably near future.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is all hearsay. Why not call this person as a witness before the committee?

Mr. Garson: Now, sir, the reason we are particularly interested in the observations I have just quoted is that, as everyone knows, any pipe line company has to take care of three items. First of all the interest upon its debt, which in this case would be the 5 per cent to the government; second, its wages and other operating costs; third, the price of its gas. In that connection it is under the necessity in delivering this gas to take into account not only the distance from the place where the gas originates to the market but the character of the market itself. It is perfectly clear that the cost of the operation of a pipe line does not decrease very much regardless of the quantity of gas which is put through it during the course of a year. That being so, if it will put through, let us say, 1,000 million cubic feet per year at full operation but if the markets which it serves will only take 800 million cubic feet, then because under this 80 per cent load factor the smaller amount of gas is going through, a higher rate must be charged per unit in order to meet the cost of operation of the pipe line. The real significance so far as Winnipeg, Toronto or any other community that can be reached by the pipe line is concerned is the necessity for quick action. The necessity for quick action arises in order to enable those communities served to so arrange their load factors as to secure as fair a price as possible. For example, remarks have been made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Stewart) in which he cast reflection upon the cost of gas in Winnipeg as compared with the cost of gas going across the border at Emerson. The difference is due entirely to the fact that purchases for export are on a very much higher load factor than that which the city of Winnipeg could provide.

The national interest here can be shown in a number of different ways, but I know of no way which is more impressive than by examining the figures for our fuel imports which over several decades now we have had to bring in from the United States in order to keep our industries supplied with energy and without which our industries could not possibly have survived. In 1955 we imported $103 million worth of coal, $229 million worth of crude oil, $150 million worth of petroleum products, making a total of $482 million. I would point out that in relation to all of these purchases the employment, the wages, the profits and the taxes payable to the state were all in the United States.

As I understand it, the prime purpose of this pipe line is to take gaseous fuels from Alberta to other markets of Canada and to very greatly reduce our dependence upon the United States market for the import of that fuel. As a matter of fact it has been estimated that by the operation of this pipe line, immediately it becomes operative we will save between the gas which we export, 200 million cubic feet per day, and the 300 million cubic feet per day which goes into the Canadian market direct, some $43 million a year in American exchange.

The facts which have already come out in the debate indicate that if this project is delayed for two years, as it must be by this bill not going through and because of the project not being proceeded with at the present time, we shall have lost a reduction in our adverse balance of trade under that one heading alone in the course of two years a total of $86 million. In addition to that we will have lost all the gas which is going to waste each year in Alberta. We will have lost the favourable rates which can be supplied in the various markets served by this gas pipe line, and the particular ones I am thinking of are the cities of Winnipeg and Brandon, Manitoba, which would come about by our being able to utilize the industries and houses under the National Housing Act to the tune in the last two years of about 50,000 each year. If those houses are connected with that gas line the coal which we have had to import from the United States will enable us not only to save the individual people a great deal of money, but—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. minister but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I was interested a few minutes ago to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) speak of his sense of responsibility in these matters.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

I rather wished that his sense of responsibility had included giving a more careful perusal to the documents which were so hastily placed in his hands by his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). Those documents are the ones that were tabled last night after repeated requests from this side of the house. They contain the agreements made by the various companies which now make up Trans-Canada Pipe Lines.

The Prime Minister in refuting the contention that there was no firm order for pipe quoted one section of the agreement. I was not able, even taking that section alone, to take from it the meaning the Prime Minister took from it, and I was certainly quite unable to get over the first section which he failed to quote to this house. Referring to Tennessee Gas Transmission Company, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, Hudson Bay and Gulf Oil, that section reads:

1. Each of the parties hereto, to the full extent of each such respective party's rights and obligations thereunder, hereby confirm, adopt and ratify the provisions of exhibits I and II hereto, specifically including, but not limited to, section 2 of the stock option agreement of November 1, 1955, referred to above, which is attached as exhibit A to exhibits I and II hereto.

What is this exhibit A? Exhibit A is clause 2 of the stock option agreement which reads as follows:

Tennessee shall place purchase orders, substantially in the form set forth as exhibit B, for the 1956 requirements of Trans-Canada for pipe for its natural gas transmission pipe line system from the boundary of the province of Alberta to Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Emerson, Manitoba, and shall maintain such orders so as to facilitate completion in 1956 of the construction of this phase of Trans-Canada's proposed natural gas transmission pipe line system in Canada. Tennessee shall assign such purchase orders to Trans-Canada within sixty (60) days after Tennessee has notified Trans-Canada that there have been obtained all certificates, licences and permits which in the judgment of Tennessee are necessary and sufficient to authorize Midwestern Gas Transmission Company, a Delaware corporation affiliated with Tennessee, to construct and operate a natural gas transmission pipe line system extending from the international boundary near Emerson, Manitoba, to connect in the state of Tennessee with the pipe line system of Tennessee, and to take gas from Trans-Canada at Emerson, Manitoba.

What have we here? We have the fact that this so-called firm contract, of which the Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke, is dependent upon Tennessee Gas Transmission Company receiving a favourable judgment from the federal power commission of the United States to import gas into the United States.

Mr. Dickey: Not at all.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo).]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): The parliamentary assistant says, "Not at all." I am just reading what the agreement says. I might have been persuaded—

Mr. Dickey: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I would suggest that if the parliamentary assistant has something to contribute he should take up his own limited time to make that contribution. I might have been persuaded by the Prime Minister that the second clause in this agreement wiped out the first clause if there had not been included in this file a number of letters of transmissal.

Mr. Dickey: It is in addition to.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): In addition to certain things done by this parliament. In the letters of transmissal dated the same date as this agreement and which include a letter from Canadian Gulf Oil Company, Box 130, Calgary, Alberta, to Tennessee Gas Transmission Company, Houston, Texas, we find this clause:

(2) That all operative provisions of the aforementioned stock option agreement of November 1, 1955, except clause 2 thereof (exhibit A hereto)—

That is what I quoted.

—shall cease to have any further force or effect, but that said clause 2 shall not be affected and shall remain in force.

I do not quite see how even the parliamentary assistant can get around that very definite statement on the letterhead of one of the companies which has signed this agreement. No matter what he may think, no matter what the minister may think, no matter what the Prime Minister may think, quite obviously the companies which signed this agreement believe that clause 2 of the option agreement will remain in force. Clause 2 of the option agreement states quite clearly that the pipe shall not be delivered until after Tennessee Gas Transmission Company has received its import permit from the federal power commission.

Mr. Dickey: No.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): The parliamentary assistant can shake his head till it falls off, but it does not alter the words that are written here, and the words are quite conclusive. So I suggest that either these people with whom the minister has been dealing had deluded and deceived him into thinking that Trans-Canada has a firm contract for the delivery of pipe or the minister has been attempting to delude this house. It is one or the other. They can take their choice about the matter.

An hon. Member: Probably both.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Somebody says, "Probably both". I would not know, but I suggest that these documents prove beyond a doubt that one or other of these positions must be the case. A great deal of the minister's case for dealing with Trans-Canada and going through with this preposterous agreement was that they were the only people who had optional contracts for 34-inch pipe. These contracts are conditional upon something over which this parliament has no control, a ruling of the federal power commission. In addition to that I would point out that, as far as can be determined, there is no other place in the world at the present time where a 34-inch gas transmission line is contemplated. There is one market for it, and that of course is in the plains of Canada. If Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited is not able to go ahead because of its unfortunate impecunious condition, then any other organization or body that is prepared to go through with this pipe-line deal would obviously be the only other customer for the makers of this 34-inch pipe.

We are told that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited has run into trouble in financing. The reason why they have run into trouble in financing, we are told, is that they have not yet got the ruling from the federal power commission.

I am glad the minister is back in his seat again. I would like him to explain, some time during this debate perhaps, how he gets around the fact that exhibit A of these documents, which is clause 2 of the stock option agreement and sets forth quite plainly the conditions and terms upon which the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company agrees to deliver its option of pipe to Trans-Canada; and how he gets around the fact that these are dependent on a federal power commission ruling.

I heard the Prime Minister and other ministers suggest that the second section of this agreement quoted by the Prime Minister overrides the first one, but the transmittal letters, as I said before the minister came in, state quite clearly that clause 2 shall remain in effect. The minister tells us that there are firm contracts for pipe, but on the basis of these documents there can be no such firm contracts as far as Trans-Canada is concerned. No doubt there are firm contracts between the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company and the makers of the pipe, but that is a different proposition from a firm contract with Trans-Canada, which certainly was the impression given to this house by the minister.

We are told that these people are not able to finance this and that we must come to their rescue. Possibly they cannot, although I would suggest that, if there is any group in the United States of America that should be able to raise $80 million, it would be the group that has combined to form the Trans-Canada company. We have, for instance, the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company, which apparently is the one with the money, as it has total assets of $742 million. Then we have the Delhi Oil Corporation with assets of $59 million, and Gulf Oil with assets of $744 million. Of course, as many people know, the Mellon interests are a very important factor in the Gulf Oil Company, and they were also a very important factor in the aluminum interests with which this government had dealings in the past. I would suggest that the reason why these gentlemen come to us is not inability to raise funds but unwillingness to invest any more in Canada until they get a firm ruling from the federal power commission to permit them to import gas into the United States. It is quite obvious that the minister himself has had somewhat the same idea because on May 14 he had this to say in the house, as recorded on page 3861 of Hansard:

> We did not at that time expect extended delay in the approval of that contract by the federal power commission. Perhaps we should have, although I do not believe we could properly have assumed that there would be so long a delay. However, there has been, and there is no end clearly in sight.

That, I think, can be taken as an admission that the ruling of the federal power commission was a very important factor in the considerations of this government, and I suggest that, in the light of these papers tabled last night, it is still a factor of overriding importance, because I am unable to see how, by any interpretation of this agreement, the covering letters and clause 2 of the option agreement, anyone in this house could say that a firm contract for pipe had been made.

The minister had something else to say with regard to the federal power commission as far as back as March 15, as recorded on page 2167 of Hansard:

> All the evidence suggests that the responsible United States authorities feel as we do, that dependence upon foreign supplies can be accepted only cautiously and to a limited extent, and that commitments of gas to foreign markets can be entered into only in so far as the gas is clearly surplus to domestic requirements.

That would indicate that on March 15 the minister already had a few doubts as to whether the federal power commission would come through with a favourable ruling. Nevertheless, on the basis of his optimism, he went ahead, as he said on May 14. Perhaps they should have realized that it was a vain hope. Now we are told that we are going to go ahead without waiting for the federal power commission ruling. We are going to lend $80 million to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited to construct the western end of the line from Alberta to the city of Winnipeg. It has been suggested that, if the Trans-Canada company is unable to finance the repayment of this money at that time, then the government of Canada will be prepared to go ahead to take over the property and withhold the mortgage from them.

An hon. Member: Maybe.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Yes, definitely "maybe". I noted that in the bill presented to this house there was a reference to any agreement signed before or after this act comes into force. If words have any meaning, this surely must mean that as soon as this bill is passed by the House of Commons and the Senate there is nothing to prevent the Trans-Canada company and the Minister of Trade and Commerce from tearing up this agreement and signing another.

Mr. Harris: Except their public responsibility.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): The minister says "public responsibility".

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister undertake that there will be no change in that agreement?

Mr. Harris: He was referring to tearing up the agreement.

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister undertake that the agreement will not be changed?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): The fact that the government adopted a rather unusual course in regard to this agreement and did not, as my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre has pointed out, include it as a schedule to the bill, indicates that they wanted to leave some gate open for future negotiations with the Trans-Canada company, and certainly our past experiences with this company would indicate that almost anything might happen.

The other day I noticed that my friend, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) were digging into their scriptural inheritance of interesting texts. It stirred up some of the admittedly very faint scriptural memories of my own, but I thought of something else. I was reminded, Mr. Speaker, of the daughter of the horse leech forever shouting "more", and it occurred to me that the enterprising lady had moved to Texas or perhaps to Ottawa to carry on her operations. Or we might even have another scriptural reference, Mr. Speaker. We on this side of the house at least are left in the frame of mind of the queen of Sheba when she was confronted with all the glories of Solomon and said, "Behold, not half has been told me".

I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that not half has been told us yet. I suspect that as time goes on and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) continues his entertaining dance of the seven veils and reveals a little bit more with every turn we may find out some other things. In addition to finding out as we did today that there are no firm contracts for pipe, although the minister told us quite definitely there were some, we may also find that there are no firm agreements with respect to the construction of other parts of this line.

There has been what is to my mind a very interesting and rather suspicious silence on the part of the minister and other members of the government with regard to the construction of that part of the line that lies between Winnipeg and the Ontario boundary and that part of the line which lies between Kapuskasing and the eastern markets for Canadian gas. There may be some agreement. None has been tabled in the house and under the terms of this legislation it would make very little difference if one were tabled in the house because it might last for a week, it might last for a month, it might last for a year, depending, I presume, on the exigencies of this poverty stricken group of American financiers.

I see nothing in the agreement that we have before us which may not be superseded and nothing in the bill which tells me quite plainly, if and when Trans-Canada by some mysterious means gets the pipe before the F.P.C. gives them a ruling and constructs the western part of the line to Winnipeg, I see nothing in the statements of the minister or of the three or four of his colleagues who have spoken, nothing that indicates to me that this government has a firm undertaking from Trans-Canada to continue with the construction of that pipe line. If the company decides it will dig into its quite large resources or the resources of its parent companies and pay back the government loan of $80 million, is there anything to prevent the company deciding that it will then sit tight at Winnipeg and await the decision of the F.P.C. before embarking on the construction of the rest of the line from Winnipeg to the Ontario boundary and from Kapuskasing east? We have had nothing presented to the house to show that there is any firm commitment or agreement with the government signed by the company.

Last night, I think it was, we had a very eloquent speech by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker). Admittedly it did not have very much to do with the pipe line. It had a great deal to do with Saskatchewan politics. But I remember that in the course of that address he avowed his enthusiasm for a government that had the courage and determination to go ahead in the face of obstacles. Well, it may have. It has a great deal of courage, I must say, to come before the house with some of the measures it brings before the house. In fact, I have thought sometimes, Mr. Speaker, that people like the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and the leader of this group have perhaps been a little unjust when they have taken these measures so seriously and have perhaps mislaid their sense of humour because to my mind nothing so hilarious as this measure has come before the house. Surely this is another gigantic joke on the Canadian people.

But the hon. member for Rosthern is thrilled by the courage of the government in proceeding with this plan. What alternatives have we before us? As I say, we have no firm commitment that this company will build the rest of the line, and if it chose to reimburse the government for its $80 million it could sit tight at Winnipeg. We have, I think, fairly decisive evidence that the company at least considers that the sale of gas in the United States is an essential feature of its scheme, that otherwise it is not economically sound to bring the pipe line to eastern Canada. That would lead us to suppose that if there is any hold-up in the F.P.C. ruling this company is not going to risk any more of its money. Indeed, it has not risked any yet, but if it should decide to repay the government and risk $80 million there is nothing in their past record to suggest that they would be prepared to go on and risk more until they knew for certain that they were going to get into the United States market.

I suggest to the government, and would suggest to the hon. member for Rosthern if he were here, that if they were really contemplating a bold and courageous action they would do what almost inevitably they are going to be forced to do next year. They would take over the construction of this pipe line under a scheme of their own with an investment of Canadian public funds under public ownership. I think it is much wiser, Mr. Speaker, for people to go face first into a proposition rather than to back into it reluctantly and perhaps find themselves situated in an awkward position when they get there. I would suggest that it is not beyond the capacity of the government to undertake the construction of this pipe line to the eastern Canadian markets, and if it is true—I think it is a debatable point from all I have been able to read—that eastern Canadian markets will not provide a sound, economic basis for the line then we should make plans ourselves for the export of gas across the border to the important New York area market, usually considered, I believe, the most valuable and profitable market in the United States.

That, I think, would be a bold course for this government to take. The course they are taking now is one of being pushed from pillar to post inch by inch, listening to the advice and to the demands of people whose record, if the matter were not so serious for the Canadian people, would really be side-splittingly funny because I doubt if ever a company has fallen down so consistently on every one of its agreements. I doubt if there is any company which has been proven so often, time and again, to have miscalculated the propositions that it presented to the government. But our government is extremely benevolent and extremely lenient and is always prepared to give them another chance. Now we are prepared to give them a final and, I hope, last chance, but by all accounts we get from Washington the possibility of the federal power commission bringing in a favourable ruling by April of next year is almost nil. There are enormous and equally powerful interests in the United States who are determined to block that ruling for as long as possible, and even though the federal power commission may in the end permit the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company to import gas from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, even though they may decide to do so, I cannot see it happening until long after this question of the $80 million and when and how it is to be repaid comes again before the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I should like to know definitely that there will be no further revision of the terms that are offered to this already badly forsworn company, that we have at last seen the last of the mystery of the trans-Canada pipe line and that the minister has no more surprises up his sleeve because most of us are getting a little tired of finding that something that we had been told was assured and certain has now become uncertain and new arrangements must be made.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have come to the hour for private and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

TRANS-PRAIRIE PIPELINES OF CANADA, LTD.

Mr. G. D. Weaver (Churchill) moved the second reading of Bill No. 299, respecting Trans-Prairie Pipelines of Canada, Ltd.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very minor bill involving only a change of name. Hon. members will recall that last session there were several pipe-line bills, I believe three, which sought the incorporation of companies to build pipe lines in the general area of southwestern Manitoba and southeastern Saskatchewan crossing the Manitoba-Saskatchewan border. One of them was Trans-Prairie Pipelines of Canada, Ltd.; another one was Saskatchewan and Manitoba Pipeline Limited and the third was Westspur Pipe Line Company. Those three companies got incorporation and applied to the board of transport commissioners for permission to build an interprovincial line.

In this connection, I should like to read an extract from the decision of the board of transport commissioners. It says:

> None of the applications with which we are concerned is of a frivolous nature and, on the contrary all of them constitute serious submissions, well presented, and supported by detailed evidence of reputable experts.

Further down on the same page it says:

> As intimated in the course of the hearing, the board's ungrateful and peculiarly difficult task is to decide which is the best of three worthy applications.

It so happened that the board in that case finally decided in favour of the Westspur Pipe Line Company, which is a subsidiary of the Imperial Oil Company. Hon. members will also recall that Trans-Prairie Pipelines, the provincially incorporated company, were already in operation within the province of Manitoba. What they obtained was federal incorporation, so there are in existence two companies with practically the same name. The only difference is that Trans-Prairie Pipelines of Canada, Ltd., has federal incorporation. Since this company did not get permission to build into Saskatchewan from southwestern Manitoba, they are interested in building in some other part of western Canada. Since the names of the two companies are the same, they are desirous of changing the name of the company which was incorporated last year, as the bill says, to the Northwest Transmission Company Limited.

This change of name will enable them to take advantage of any opportunity which may develop elsewhere in western Canada for the construction of a pipe line across provincial borders without confusing with their local Manitoba pipe-line company. As hon. members will see, this bill has passed through the Senate and no objection was raised there at the proposed change of name. The powers and objects of the company will remain the same. The amendment, as I pointed out, is of a minor and technical nature. If there are any legitimate objections to the proposed change of name they can be considered by the committee on railways and telegraph lines, to which I suggest the bill be referred.

[Mr. Weaver.]

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): I shall only be a moment, Mr. Speaker. So far as we are concerned we are in agreement with what the hon. member has just said. The only confusion in my mind is with respect to the fact that in the one name the word "pipeline" appears and in the other the word "transmission" appears. However, that can be cleared up in committee. So far as we are concerned, we are in favour of the change of name.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

GRAND FALLS CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY LIMITED

Mr. T. G. W. Ashbourne (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador) moved the second reading of Bill No. 301, to incorporate Grand Falls Central Railway Company Limited.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to incorporate a railway company under the name of Grand Falls Central Railway Company Limited which will be a wholly owned subsidiary of the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, generally known in Newfoundland as the A.N.D. Company, which will carry on the existing railway operations of the A.N.D. Company. This company, when originally incorporated under the Newfoundland Act in 1905, was granted at the time of incorporation special rights pertaining to the operation of a railway. It last year celebrated its 50th anniversary.

The railway was constructed to enable the company to carry on its pulp and paper operations, and there are 22 miles of track servicing the towns of Grand Falls, Windsor, Bishop's Falls and Botwood. The railway, which carries the company's products from the Grand Falls paper mill is used also for the transportation of ore concentrate from Buchan's mines as well as the transportation of miscellaneous goods and passengers.

In addition to the railway itself the company maintains storage and wharf facilities at Botwood. The A.N.D. Company has invested in railway equipment a sum in excess of $2 million, and it is employed as a common carrier of goods. However, it is thought desirable that its operations should be in a separate corporation, owing to the magnitude and diversification of the A.N.D. Company operations. The railway company, servicing as it does four towns in Newfoundland, has an operational character quite distinct from that of the A.N.D. Company itself. One of the main reasons, therefore, for seeking a special bill to incorporate a railroad company is to separate the rail activities from those of the A.N.D. Company.

In addition, after the company is subjected to federal authority in its railway operations it will be a common carrier, and shippers, including not only the A.N.D. Company but all others at present existing or in the future, will be given the benefit of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. The Maritime Freight Rates Act, chapter 174 of the revised statutes of Canada, arbitrarily grants to industries shipping in and out of the maritime provinces a 20 per cent subsidy on rail movement. The statute was enacted to assist the industrial growth of the maritime provinces of Canada, and by section 12 of the act is applicable to the province of Newfoundland. The act was applied to the province in keeping with the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada.

The A. N. D. Company Railway at the present time is a provincial railway, being owned and operated by a company subject only to provincial authority. The operation of the A. N. D. Company railway by a company incorporated by federal act will subject the railway to federal authority in every regard. Principally, the maintenance and operation of the railway will be subject to the provisions of the Railway Act and the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners. The enactment of this act will bring this railway, which is in many regards public in its scope, within the standard pattern of railway operations found throughout Canada.

There exists somewhat similar circumstances where private railways are subject to federal authority, including in the maritimes Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway, Grand Lake and New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, Cumberland Railway and Coal Company, Dominion Atlantic Railway, and Sydney and Louisburg Railway. The bill asks for the incorporation of the railway and touches on the following points: The capital stock will be $100,000. It is proposed initially that the railway company will rent the railway from the A. N. D. Company, and accordingly the capital stock of the company need not be great at first.

Its head office will be at Grand Falls, Newfoundland. The issue of securities will be limited to $50,000 per mile. It is not intended at the present time to issue any securities, but if and when the railway company acquires the railroad it is thought this would provide adequate financing.

Authority is sought to issue preferred stock. It is not intended at the present time to issue preferred stock, but this might be desirable if and when the railway company purchases the railroad. Power is asked to generate and distribute electric energy. This is necessary to maintain the existing railway operations. It is necessary to have vessels, wharves and warehouses to enable the company to carry on its present operation. Hotels and restaurants are required to enable the company to provide for the convenience of passengers using the railway.

I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that about 411,000 tons of products were carried by the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company's railroad during 1955, which included 14,000 tons of coal, 12,000 tons of limestone, 170,000 tons of newsprint, 74,000 tons of oil and 110,000 tons of concentrates, as well as feeds, foodstuffs, firewood, general merchandise, live cattle and fresh vegetables.

I presume the order of the house will be that this bill be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate the general interest of the official opposition in this piece of legislation. This is a provincial company which has now decided to get federal incorporation of the railway aspect of its operations, and in future it will be governed by the board of transport commissioners.

This bill was considered in the other place and was gone into extensively. Their committee dealt with the various clauses of the bill and saw fit to delete at least the sections which concerned highway legislation. It has been suggested, Mr. Speaker, that one of the main reasons for this incorporation is to enable the company to receive the benefits of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. The benefits of this act are now available to Newfoundland since it joined the union, and we certainly welcome their participation in those benefits, if they are benefits, today.

I hope the company is not under any great illusions about what the benefits of the Maritime Freight Rates Act may be, because those across the board increases that have been effected in recent years have nullified a great many of the benefits that were seemingly there. This is another story, Mr. Speaker, and I only mention it to warn them that we may need some of their lobbying power in the future.

This is an extensive piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker. There are wide powers in it. I notice that in one of the clauses there is even power to construct and maintain a pipe line. I merely show approval and say that we hope the committee will consider this legislation in the comprehensive way that it does all other such railway operations.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this legislation appears to be to the general advantage of all the people concerned, and on that account this group support the principle of the bill. I want to thank the sponsor for supplying us with some information prior to the debate on second reading. Since the bill is to be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, we shall have an opportunity on that occasion to ask questions and get further details.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

MARITIME STOCKBREEDERS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. G. T. Purdy (Colchester-Hants) moved the second reading of Bill No. 340, respecting the Maritime Stockbreeders' Association.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to amend the act of incorporation of the maritime stockbreeders' association passed by this house in 1902, and also to add one additional clause. The chief object of the maritime stockbreeders' association, as indicated by the name, is to develop and improve the livestock industry in the maritime provinces, and their chief activity is the holding of the maritime winter fair at Amherst, Cumberland county, each fall, just prior to the Royal winter fair at Toronto. I believe any of the hon. members who have attended the Royal at Toronto will have been rather impressed with the type of livestock shown from the maritime provinces.

The purpose of this bill is briefly to amend one clause of section 2, which reads as follows:

To hold livestock exhibitions.

The amendment cancels that section and introduces a new section which is paragraph (c) of section 1, which reads as follows:

To hold exhibitions of livestock, agricultural produce and any other products, goods or services produced on or for a farm, and also to make available its facilities for the purchase or sale of any such livestock or other such agricultural produce, products, goods or services.

This brings the powers under the bill more in keeping with the type of shows and activities which they have at the present time. I might add, with some degree of pleasure, that although possibly the maritimes are not known as a stockbreeding country, yet for the first time in the history of Canada the president of the shorthorn association comes from my constituency and the town of Truro. He is Mr. W. A. Flemming, who is the breeder of a fine grade of shorthorns.

The second clause, and the new clause, give the association power to borrow money. Previously they did not have this power and they had to finance, when they needed assistance, through the help of the directors. The chief source of income of the association in carrying on the maritime winter fair is, in addition to the entrance tickets, the grants from the three maritime provinces as follows: Nova Scotia, $4,600; New Brunswick, $4,000; Prince Edward Island, $2,500. Up to last year those sums were increased by a grant of $5,500 from the federal government. I am pleased to say, sir, that, owing to representations by the livestock breeders of the maritime provinces, the federal government, in its wisdom, has now agreed to match the amount granted by the three maritime provinces.

For the most part, the purpose of the borrowing power is merely to enable the association to settle its accounts on the dot instead of waiting until the grants are received from the provinces and from the federal government. It may be that some other explanations will be required and I shall be glad to give them when the bill goes to a committee, as I suppose it will.

This bill has also been before the Senate. On behalf of the stockbreeders of the maritime provinces I should like to pay tribute to the senator from Milford-Hants and to the officials of the Senate for the assistance they have given us in getting this legislation in form. I trust that in due course, sir, I will convey similar thanks to the hon. members and the officials of this house at the appropriate time.

Mr. G. W. Montgomery (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, speaking for this party I am glad to say we will support this measure. The bill just reached us a few minutes ago and we have not had much opportunity to study it. However, in view of the explanation given by the hon. member we have no desire to hold it over. It is going before a committee.

I think all the encouragement that can be given to the stock breeders of the maritime provinces should be given to them. As far as I can learn the livestock industry is picking up considerably in the maritime provinces. In my own province of New Brunswick I know it is growing and becoming an extremely important part of the agricultural program. I think the maritime winter fair is an important winter fair. I know we have several breeders in my own constituency who go down there with livestock. The fair encourages stock breeders throughout the maritimes. For that reason, and without saying anything more, I shall conclude by saying we are very glad to give our support to this bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

OGDENSBURG BRIDGE AUTHORITY

The house resumed, from Friday, May 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Henderson for the second reading of Bill No. 300, respecting Ogdensburg bridge authority.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, apparently we cannot talk about the northern Ontario bridge but we are at least being given an opportunity to talk about the Ogdensburg bridge. I have had a chance to read over this very short amending act and I have only a few observations to make because, as in the case of the previous bills, the expectation is that this bill will be going to a committee where I am sure we will be able to get all the answers that are required.

I do not think there is any doubt that the more lines of communication of this type we have to the United States the better off we will be. I notice that in the previous debate in 1952 the attitude was that this bridge represents an opportunity for increasing the flow of tourists to this country, which in the long run will be of great benefit to us. From the standpoint of the exchange of tourists I am sure this bridge will serve a useful purpose. I know that our authority will be most interested in going along with any reasonable suggestion for getting this bridge built.

I notice that in the original incorporating act we again have a case where there are provisional directors. I think there are approximately eight directors from the state of New York and two from Canada. I am not sure whether this is going to be moved from the provisional stage to the permanent stage, but it is one of those frightening things in connection with the administration of anything which is a joint effort to always see the balance to the south of the border.

I might make this observation too, sir. One of the two gentlemen listed as a Canadian provisional director is the ubiquitous Mr. Duncan K. MacTavish, who is connected with almost every effort of this kind. How he manages these jobs along with that big political job of his, I cannot venture to suggest.

I notice too, sir, that in the remarks made by the hon. member for Kingston he indicated that at the end of the redemption period of the bonds which are being provided this bridge would revert to public ownership. I assume it would be jointly owned in equal proportions by the state of New York and whatever authority is designated here in Canada. I could not tell by the language he used in one place whether the state of New York was actually loaning this money or whether authority was being granted by the legislature of the state of New York to the corporation to borrow this amount of money. At page 4103 of Hansard the hon. member said:

> I might mention the fact that the legislature of the state of New York has just approved a bill authorizing the sum of $15 million to be lent to the company to be secured by debentures and to be used in the construction of this particular bridge.

Now, if in fact that wording indicates that the state of New York is going to loan all this money, that of course might indicate why the provisional board of directors is set up on the basis provided in the original act.

In addition I might point out that under section 18(1) of the original act, which is chapter 57 of the statutes of Canada, 1952, there is a provision that authority from the governor in council must be obtained within five years in order for this to be effective and to continue as good legislation. It seems to me that either now or at the committee stage, before authorizing this additional money we should have some indication as to whether this corporation is prepared to go ahead and whether it is now in a position to comply with the original provisions laid down in section 18. It seems to me if we are going to increase the authorization for the debentures and then wind up at a dead end we will have been put to a considerable waste of time. I think in committee the sponsor of the bill should be able to put us in possession of information of that kind.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

LA CORPORATION DU PONT DE TROIS-RIVIÈRES

The house resumed, from Friday, May 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Boisvert for the second reading of Bill No. 302, respecting the construction of a bridge over the St. Lawrence river near the city of Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be to tell the house that we on this side of the house intend to support this bill.

During the last federal election I became convinced of the need for such a bridge between the riding of the mover, the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska, and my riding, because I had the opportunity to go and speak against him in his riding, unfortunately with no success. I had to sleep overnight on the wharf at Ste. Angele because the ferry had ceased running for the night. I realized then the importance of a bridge between the ridings of Three Rivers and Nicolet-Yamaska.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, since the sponsor of the bill spoke French while explaining to the house the various points which commend this legislation to its attention, I would like to follow suit in offering a few remarks on this point.

First of all it must be noted that this bill represents the final result of a truly magnificent campaign undertaken by the whole population of the district of Three Rivers. This move for the construction of a bridge spanning the St. Lawrence river was sparked by the newspaper Le Nouvelliste which, by keeping at it, aroused public opinion in this connection. While a very large measure of credit must also go to the Three Rivers chamber of commerce, the whole population has expressed its determination to see this bridge built by providing some $35,000 for preliminary survey work. It is because of all this that this house is now being asked to consider this bill.

As is well known, Three Rivers is situated at the very heart of the province of Quebec; it is the largest paper-manufacturing centre in the world, and the development of the whole area is making giant strides. It can be seen that the northern shore of the river, in the centre of Quebec, is above all an industrial area. Indeed, the cities of Three Rivers, Cap de la Madeleine, Shawinigan, Grand Mere and La Tuque, whose population reaches at least 125,000, are enjoying great prosperity. There can be found diversified industries which were attracted there in the wake of power developments on the St. Maurice river.

Across the river, as pointed out by the mover of the bill, we have the largest agricultural county of the province of Quebec, namely Nicolet county, as well as other equally prosperous cities. Unfortunately there are no means of communication between both shores, except the ferry which has always more than it can carry, at least in the summer months. Therefore, I sincerely believe that hon. members should support the second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

[Mr. Balcer.]

CANADA GRAIN ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DISTRIBUTION OF BOX CARS

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia) moved the second reading of Bill No. 210, to amend the Canada Grain Act (distribution of box cars).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the principle of this bill is to give to the grain producers what I consider to be a fundamental democratic Canadian right, the right to do business with the firm of their own choice. Other Canadians in every walk of life when wishing to make purchases or sales are free to select the firms of their choice.

Because of the very severe congestion in the marketing of grain producers are able to deliver grain only to an elevator which has space, and space is made available in an elevator only when it receives box cars. The proportion by which box cars are allocated to the various elevators constitutes the proportion of deliveries to those elevators.

I have introduced a similar bill on previous occasions and the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said that it would interfere with the wheat board's buying and assembling of grain; if a rigid allocation were made based on the producers' choice, he said the wheat board would not be able to call out the grades and kinds of grain which were required at the time. Thinking there might be some validity in that argument I have placed the following proviso in this bill:

> —provided the Canadian wheat board may order cars loaded at any elevator for the purpose of shipping
> (i) out of condition grain or grain in danger of spoilage;
> (ii) grain of a kind and grade that cannot otherwise be acquired for the purpose of meeting Canadian wheat board sales or other requirements.

Apart from that the bill is exactly the same. The bill will allow producers at a given marketing point to allocate their acreage among the elevator companies at that point. After a certain period had elapsed the acreage would be added up and the railway companies would be required to spot box cars in the same proportion that producers had allocated their acreage among the elevator companies.

I might say that the principle of this bill has the support of the main farm organizations in western Canada. We have had a thorough discussion of this subject in the standing committee on agriculture and colonization last year and two years ago and it became clear, particularly last year, that the wheat pool organizations supported a system of box car allocations based upon the producers' choice. It is true that the suggestions they made took a somewhat different form, but the principle of their proposal is the same, namely that the producers themselves by way of ballot should be entitled to state the allocation of box cars.

Congestion in the west is still very severe at many if not nearly all marketing points. The highest delivery quota in effect today is, I believe, 6 bushels per acre. Of the some 2,000 marketing points, 15 are on a 2-bushel quota; 530 are on a 3-bushel quota; 533 on a 4-bushel quota; 510 on a 5-bushel quota, and 342 on a 6-bushel quota. In other words one-third of the marketing points today are on a low quota of 3 bushels per acre or less. Certainly at the vast majority of marketing points the elevators are plugged. Farmers are able to deliver grain only when box cars are spotted at the elevators.

This is not a situation brought about solely by large crops, or because of difficult marketing conditions, this is something which has been brought about by changed methods of harvesting and delivering grain. With modern methods of harvesting and delivery of grain to the elevators our farmers are able to deliver their whole crop in a very short space of time. That being the case, congestion is almost certain to be with us, at least for given periods during every crop year. With congestion on a semi-permanent basis, it is clear that some different form of allocation of box cars must be arrived at from the one presently in existence.

As I understand it, box cars today are allocated in this way. The wheat board hands out shipping orders to the various elevator companies and at various marketing points. The transport controller then may or may not discuss with the railway companies the overall total of box cars that must be made available within a given period of time, but when it comes to the actual number of box cars placed at a given elevator it is the responsibility of the railway company.

So the railway companies themselves are actually allocating the box cars as among elevators. Some elevator companies may complain of the distribution on the grounds that their company is receiving an unfair allocation of box cars. I am not particularly interested in whether a given elevator company claims it is getting fewer box cars than it is entitled to, but I am interested in establishing the principle that a producer shall have the right to deliver grain to the elevator of his choice.

I see no reason why the railway companies, instead of the producers, should be given the right to allocate box cars and to determine the number of box cars that will go to a given elevator company at a given point. If you have four elevator companies at a given point and it should happen that the railway companies spot box cars on an absolutely equal basis, one car for each elevator, that is precisely the allocation of the grain the farmers must make. If the railway company, for one reason or another, should spot twice as many box cars at one elevator as it does at some other elevator, the farmers must under the circumstances deliver twice as much grain to the elevator getting twice as many box cars.

We heard a great deal of evidence on this subject a year ago. We had some evidence two years ago, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that he was actively considering—and I took it to mean that he was going to establish—a system of box car cycles based on past experiences, with allocation at a given marketing point determined on a certain base period. The car cycle was never established.

Last year, before the agriculture committee, we had representatives from farm organizations, in particular representatives from the farmers' union and the wheat pools, speaking in favour of the principle of giving to the farmers once a year a chance to state where they wished to deliver their grain. On the basis of the statements of the producers, those instructions should go out to the railway companies to so apportion box cars. That has not been adopted. The government has said no.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What did the committee recommend?

Mr. Argue: That is not a very important question, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows full well that the committee was just an extension of the house and that on every committee of this house—as in committee of the whole—the government has an ample majority to make certain, if necessary, that the wishes of the producers themselves are denied; and the democratic wishes of a large section of Canadians are in fact denied. So the whitewash report that was brought in by the committee last year did not mean anything. It merely asks that consideration be given to the problem. I am not sure what consideration was given to it, but certainly no solution has yet been forthcoming.

The Saskatchewan wheat pool convention, again this past year, passed a resolution asking for this type of box car allocation. They have told me, and I am sure it is correct, that as an elevator system they are getting a somewhat larger percentage of box cars than they did a year ago, and that from the standpoint of the company there has been a slight increase in the allocation of box cars. I am not at all interested in knowing whether the wheat pool system or the McCabe elevator system or any other elevator company receives more box cars or fewer box cars. That is not the point.

The point is that a producer should have the right to do business with the elevator of his choice. If, when he is given that right, it happens that one elevator company may lose or may gain business, that is neither here nor there. What I am advancing today is the proposition that farmers, like other Canadians, should have the right to do business with the firms of their choice.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): As the hon. member for Assiniboia has already pointed out, this bill is similar to bills he has introduced to the house on previous occasions. On those occasions we always supported the bill.

The principle of this bill has been endorsed by the wheat pools and by farm organizations; and the principle, briefly, is that the box cars should be allocated on the basis of the farmer's choice in order to enable the farmer to deliver his grain to the elevator that he desires. We believe that principle is sound and, therefore, we intend to support the bill.

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill. I had not intended to get into the debate at this stage, but in view of the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia I think I particularly, as chairman of the agriculture committee, should say a few words on what faced us there.

This is the first time I have heard him refer to the committee report last year as a whitewash of government policy. I realize that the government members have a majority on that committee, but in all fairness I think other members, even from other parties, will agree with me that in our consideration of this matter last year we went to very great lengths and considered all angles of the problem. I am sure that many members of other parties will agree that we came to one conclusion. I am not referring to the report; I am referring to the minds of the members who heard all the evidence that was presented.

I think we will all agree, and we have to admit, that in the circumstances in which the Canadian wheat board and the board of grain commissioners are operating at the present time, and were operating last year, the one over-all and primary consideration that has to be kept in mind is that the grain has to be made available and brought in to a selling position, and that has to override any other consideration. To be able to do that, it was recognized by all that we had to give priority to the Canadian wheat board, and the right to proceed on the basis of shipping orders.

As I say, one of the important things is to get the grain in a position where we shall be able to deliver it when people ask to purchase grain from the Canadian wheat board. If we start from the assumption that shipping orders have a priority over everything else, then there is not much practical point in inserting new sections in the Canada Grain Act or putting in new provisions, because even these will have to take second place to the shipping orders of the Canadian wheat board. In effect you only add a new clause to an act, which clause cannot be operative under the circumstances. We went into this matter at very great length and came to the conclusion, which was an honest one, that in view of this over-all priority the best that could be done in the circumstances was to make sure that box cars would be spotted in the same proportion as the shipping orders issued by the Canadian wheat board.

The hon. member for Assiniboia made the statement a while ago that the railways were allocating the box cars. That statement is not quite accurate. It is true, and it is bound to be true, that the railways spot the cars. I do not think anybody would suggest that people from the Canadian wheat board should go out to all the stations and spot the cars. The spotting is done on instructions of the Canadian wheat board or the transport controller, and it has already been placed on the record that the railways have been instructed to spot the cars in proportion to the shipping orders issued by the Canadian wheat board, as was recommended by the standing committee on agriculture last year. I see the hon. member for Assiniboia shaking his head.

Mr. Argue: They do not do it.

Mr. Jutras: The claim is made by the hon. member that the railways are not doing that. My information is that they are, at least to a great degree. I should add here on this point that all last fall, all last year as a matter of fact, because of the unusual congestion period, possibly the worst, through which we went, I doubt if any wholly satisfactory system could have been devised and put into operation. For several months until winter there was no movement at all with the exception of malting barley, flax and grain in demand by the domestic millers of the country. As we know, Canadian millers, as is the case everywhere else but particularly in Canada, want special grades of grain from particular localities according to the protein content of that grain. Therefore when you have demands affecting special areas and only special areas, there is no system of allocation of box cars you can possibly institute that will spread box cars all over the three western provinces. These are very exceptional cases.

To try to judge at this time the attempt made last year as the result of the recommendation of the committee is, I think, premature because I do not think there has been sufficient time to put the plan into operation properly. I am informed that within the last few months another attempt has been made. I believe the railway agents have been asked to post the shipping orders of the various companies in their localities. Once they do that they give a clear indication to the various elevator houses at the particular point as to exactly what the Canadian wheat board shipping orders are. Thus the various companies are able to check and see whether this particular instruction about which I am talking, the spotting of box cars in proportion to shipping orders, is being carried out, and will be in a position to state definitely whether or not the railways are complying with the orders.

I have no doubt that once this system is in general use box cars will be spotted in accordance with the instructions issued by the transport controller. As we know, the railway companies as a whole are not there to make the situation more difficult. They are usually quite co-operative. They are quite prepared to do what is feasible and practical from their point of view. The only thing is that they want to know definitely what they are supposed to do before attempting to do it. With this latest development I have no doubt that box cars will be spotted in the same proportion as shipping orders are issued.

But the allocation of box cars and the actual sale of grain are, of course, two different things altogether. No matter what you do by way of allocating box cars it does not add to the number of box cars and does not add to the deliveries that are to be made. I must come back again to the point which was made in another debate. The hon. member for Assiniboia is very insistent with respect to the question of the 3-bushel quota or the 2-bushel quota or the 1 or the 5. I want to submit again that the quota does not tell the whole story. As I said previously, even with a higher quota in Manitoba our wheat deliveries for this crop year are below the average of the last ten years. Therefore the actual quota does not tell the whole story. What tells the whole story is the actual amount of grain that is delivered, and I submit that it is not right merely to take the quota if you want to make a fair comparison between districts or between provinces.

For instance, there may be a 5-bushel quota and not enough grain to deliver more than 2 bushels. That has occurred in many instances. I know of one case at a small point not very far from my home where there are only 25 producers. They already had an elevator and they built two annexes. Naturally with 5 and 8-bushel quotas they have practically enough space to take care of the whole crop. But to point to this situation and say that this is unfair to farmers in Saskatchewan or Alberta is to give an entirely wrong impression.

On motion of Mr. Jutras the debate was adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): At eight o'clock the house will resume consideration of the business interrupted at five o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CONSTITUTION OF CROWN COMPANY TO CONSTRUCT PIPE LINE, MAKE SHORT-TERM LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) for the second reading of Bill No. 298, to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I propose this evening to deal with one particular aspect of this pipe-line controversy. I should like to discuss public versus private ownership. The C.C.F. group in this debate, in accordance with its principles, has advocated public ownership and has moved an appropriate amendment. I think the house and taxpayers generally should realize that if this amendment carries, the taxpayers of Canada ultimately will probably have to find in the neighbourhood of $1 billion in investment funds.

The government, on the other hand, has suggested that it will build the pipe line by public ownership, only as a last resort. In trying to assess the relative merits of the two methods of ownership, it seems to me that hon. members might benefit from the experience of the Saskatchewan government since 1944 in experimenting with state ownership.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Twelve years ago, in an effort to diversify our economy and provide jobs for Saskatchewan citizens, the C.C.F. government embarked on a program of state ownership. They introduced a program of socialized industry. I think the objectives of the program were laudable. Certainly most people at that time were sympathetic with those objectives.

But in this pipe-line debate, where one of the major issues is public ownership, I suggest that two questions should be posed and considered. First, in Saskatchewan have publicly-owned companies been able to operate efficiently? Second, has the experiment as a whole been successful? I think the answers to those questions should be of value in these deliberations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since taking office in 1944 the C.C.F. government has either taken over or set up 19 different crown corporations. In those companies it has invested the sum of approximately $130 million. I suggest we take a look at each company individually to see how it has fared. One of the first enterprises set up was a leather tannery. The purpose of the industry was to tan Saskatchewan hides and make them into leather. Unfortunately its activities were ill-fated and short-lived. The company moved from one economic crisis to another until 1952. In that year it was leased to a private company, but only after the venture had cost the taxpayers of my province, in operating deficits, about $260,000.

A shoe factory was set up in 1945 to utilize the leather which was made in the tanning factory. I recall that Premier Douglas, speaking in Brandon, Manitoba, announced, and I quote from his speech:

> The tannery and shoe factory, now being operated by the C.C.F., can make shoes for $2.75 a pair and not lose money.

In spite of the premier's optimism on that occasion the shoe factory did lose money. So much so, in fact, that in 1948 it closed down after having accumulated deficits of more than $82,000.

A housing corporation was set up after the war to convert military huts into housing accommodation which could be rented. Despite the fact that its progress in building housing accommodation was extremely limited, after a very few months it was able to accumulate a deficit of $42,400. In 1947 this corporation closed down.

Very early in its first term of office the C.C.F. government set up a fish board and built a number of fish filleting plants in northern Saskatchewan for the purpose of helping northern fishermen. Every commercial fisherman in the province was compelled by law to sell his fish to the board. Despite this fact, almost from its inception the board lost money. After accumulating a deficit of roughly $400,000, the government was forced to close it down in 1949. The fish board was then replaced by the fish marketing service which was given annual grants by the government. This new service, up to the end of last year, had accumulated deficits of $180,000.

A woollen mill was set up in my home city of Moose Jaw. It was intended as a method of utilizing Saskatchewan wool. The theory behind it was excellent. This industry, however, was in difficulties from its opening day, and when it finally was forced to close in 1951 it had accumulated deficits of $830,000, and had paid no interest at all on its advances. The mill was transferred to a private company at bargain basement prices. That company finally moved the machinery out of the province, and today the whole operation is defunct.

In 1951 a lumber mill was set up at Big Beaver, Saskatchewan. Within a year and a half the mill had an operating deficit of almost $100,000, and had cost the treasury another $54,000 in interest on its advances. In 1951 the mill was merged with the provincial timber board, and since that time its losses have been concealed and absorbed by the board.

A brick plant was set up in the town of Estevan. From its incorporation that plant has run into engineering difficulties, technical difficulties, selling difficulties, overproduction; and high employee lay-offs. As a matter of fact, in nine years of operation the government sank $900,000 into the venture, which managed to pile up a deficit of $176,000 by the end of last year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in every one of the cases I have mentioned so far there was competition from private enterprise. It is significant to note that under those circumstances, in virtually every case the crown corporation was unable to compete effectively. Invariably they lost money, and usually they were forced to close their doors completely.

What of the other crown corporations? Superficially some of them have shown substantial profits, but again without exception, closer examination and analysis shows that they were able to do so because they enjoyed either government compulsion or some kind of monopoly privileges. The Saskatchewan telephone company is a very good example. Hon. members will realize that in Saskatchewan the telephone business is a complete monopoly. Since the end of the war the company has increased its rates numerous times, and very steeply. As a result the government has been able to show a profit of $3·8 million. In other words the crown corporation—

Mr. Nicholson: The lowest rates of any.

Mr. Thatcher: I will tell the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) that experience is a great teacher, and it is a very foolish man who will not benefit from experience.

Another two crown corporations which were set up were the Saskatchewan government insurance office and Saskatchewan Guarantee and Fidelity Limited. Last year these companies showed a combined profit of $460,000. At first glance this is very gratifying. However, when you examine the companies you find that much of the business has been obtained by compulsion. For instance, every person in Saskatchewan today who wants to licence his car or his truck, must at the same time take out an insurance policy from the government insurance office. There is another law which is equally interesting. This law says that every hospital, every sanatorium, university, every school or every orphanage which receives a grant from the provincial government, must take out its insurance with the Saskatchewan government insurance office. So I say it is small wonder that under those circumstances these companies can show a profit.

A printing company was set up by the provincial government, which over the years has accumulated profits of $470,000. Of course, I am very gratified that it has been able to make these profits. But once again it should be realized that the company enjoys a monopoly of government printing. There is no such thing as competition. It sets its own rates.

A sodium sulphate plant was set up in the town of Chaplin. Several private companies were already operating throughout the province at the time, but the government regulations were passed which either forced these companies out of business, or forced them to sell to the provincial government. One such plant was in my old riding of Moose Jaw at Bishopric. I say that as a result of the unfairest kind of competition that plant at Chaplin has been able to show a surplus.

The Saskatchewan timber board is one of the most profitable of all crown corporations. Up to the end of last year it had accumulated profits of $2·8 million. How did it do so? Because it has a complete monopoly of all the lumber harvested in the province of Saskatchewan. Every person is forced to sell his lumber to the timber board at relatively low prices. Then the government, in turn, sells the lumber on the high Canadian and United States markets.

The government has a fur marketing board, and at the end of 1955 that fur marketing board had accumulated a surplus of $346,000. Once again the reason is apparent. Every trapper in Saskatchewan, until recently, was forced by law to sell his skins to the fur marketing board.

A bus company was set up and it was given a monopoly of all the major routes within the province. Any companies which were then operating in the province were forced to sell out to the provincial monopoly. Despite that monopoly, last year this bus company on an investment of $1,900,000 was only able to make a nominal profit of $12,000, and if proper accounting methods had been used it would have lost money.

Now I wish to say a word about the Saskatchewan power commission, which distributes electricity, but which also has set up a gas monopoly quite recently in my province. I listened to the speech of the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) the other day, and on page 4096 of Hansard he is reported as having made this statement:

> I, together with my colleagues in the C.C.F. party, feel it is essential that this be a public undertaking, so the Canadian consumers of gas will not be fleeced by a monopoly in that field.

I suggest that we look at comparative rates for a moment to see what company is doing the fleecing. Today in Edmonton, which is roughly the same distance from the gas field as my home city of Moose Jaw, the domestic rate averages 29 cents. I am told that the Calgary rate is 30 cents, and in all the Alberta cities the rate is roughly comparable.

In Saskatchewan the C.C.F. government is charging 83 cents in the city of Saskatoon and it is proposing to charge a similar price in Moose Jaw and Regina. I say that such a price looks fantastically high to me. Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, the company we are discussing today, proposes to deliver gas in the province of Saskatchewan for 21·3 cents per thousand cubic feet, at 100 per cent load factor. In Manitoba they will deliver gas at 26·2 cents.

I admit at once that the cost of distribution would be over and above these figures. But I have discussed this matter with the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Nickle), and he informed me that the average cost of distribution in Alberta cities is 15 cents. In other words, I say that the government monopoly in the gas field in the province of Saskatchewan is charging more than double what private enterprise is charging in the province of Alberta.

I say that if any company is doing any fleecing in the gas industry today, it is the Saskatchewan power commission in my province. I also say, Mr. Speaker, that if such a high price is the main benefit that our people can expect from public ownership, then I think many citizens in my province are going to be very disappointed when they learn the facts.

I say tonight, Mr. Speaker, that the Saskatchewan program of socialization was born in high hopes and with laudable aspirations. But today it is apparent that the program has bogged down in a morass of bungling, red tape, inefficiency and inexperience. I say there is not a single Saskatchewan crown corporation that has operated in the black for a reasonable length of time without special privileges or compulsion of some kind. I say the program has been a tragedy and a very costly fiasco. I think it has been a dismal failure. At one time I believed in public ownership. But after holding office for 14 years I am absolutely convinced that public ownership should only be used under very special circumstances. Generally speaking people simply will not work for the government in business, as efficiently as they will for private enterprise.

Mr. Ellis: Nonsense.

Mr. Thatcher: I firmly believe that passage of the amendment which is before us tonight providing for a publicly-owned pipe line would mean that gas for the consumer in Canada would cost a good deal more money than it would if it were handled through Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. Surely the experience of the Saskatchewan power commission proves this contention. This is one of the main reasons why, tonight, I am supporting the government proposal, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, not finding any necessity to take part in the Saskatchewan election I shall have to assure my hon. friends that I cannot work up the head of steam that I have seen worked up here tonight nor, for that matter, that I saw worked up last night in connection with the Saskatchewan election.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I do feel that there is a great deal of responsibility on the shoulders of anyone who takes part in this debate. I wonder just how we can qualify to take part in it? For my part, sir, I can say that I have read the legislation; I have read the correspondence; I have read the contracts. As a matter of fact, sir, I have been in Alberta very recently and talked to people there, and as a further step I also visited a country where, after exploitation by certain gas companies, those natural resources were taken over by the state, and I saw a situation which I did not like. Whether or not these things qualify me to speak tonight I do not know, but it seems to me what is required in this debate is a true sincerity of approach to the problem we face.

I listened to the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hosking) who said this would be the most important debate that he would take part in during his lifetime in this house, and I think for the most of us that is very true. At the same time, we honestly come to different conclusions as the result of our feelings.

You know, sir, one of my best friends on the other side of the house said to me that one thing I should avoid is being personal in these debates. But I find that a debate of this kind brings us to the point where even personal friendships are being strained to the limit. Therefore if tonight I break the rule I have followed it is because I feel some things are so important that they must be said.

Sir, I should like to go over what the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said today. You know, he appeared to me to be presenting a brief, and I am sure he has had long experience in doing that job. Therefore I would like to take his case point by point. First of all, he said he would divide his address into two parts. He would first of all talk about the bill itself; and, second, he would refer to the problems of the rules as he saw them in connection with this debate.

The first thing he said was that there was an opportunity provided here for Canadians to have a 51 per cent interest in this pipe line. I say, sir, the time is long past when such a provision should have been made. Encouragement should have been given to Canadian investors by this government as it is given to foreign investors at the present time. The Prime Minister knows very well the many methods and subterfuge that may be used in connection with just such a provision as he read to the house this afternoon.

Oh, let us be quite clear about that, sir. There is no eventual guarantee that we shall not have all the straw men and the necessary trustees undisclosed to acquire the necessary stock to leave the control of this company where it is right now.

He mentioned as his second point that there was a problem concerning pipe, and that this company first of all had an option and then it acquired a contract to obtain the necessary pipe for this job. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that is the biggest stick we have seen used in business for a long time. The other night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) took us to task for saying we were dependent on an outside agency of some kind. It may not be a government agency in this case, but it certainly is an agency of American business.

In view of the fact we are having so much trouble obtaining pipe for this job I am wondering if it would not have been wise when we first started to discuss this matter five years ago for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to have devoted some thought to the question of fabricating this kind of pipe in Canada.

Mrs. Shipley: Why not join the C.C.F.?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): If he had done so I am sure we would not have found ourselves in this position today. Do not let us think there is not a big stick here. Do not let us think there is not a problem in connection with pipe. The government of Ontario found the same thing. If you look at their records you will find they would like to have seen another method of handling this proposition. I must say the Ontario government has worked out a very good deal. It has insured that as far as it is concerned not one dollar of Ontario money is going into the line unless the federal government can prove this job can be done. I say in all sincerity—and I say this to the hon. member for Wellington South—that Mr. Frost will look after himself and he will look after you people, too, as he does regularly every three years.

Why was the bill before the house necessary? That was the question the Prime Minister asked in his fourth point. Well, he said this was to implement a Canadian policy going back as far as 1907 dealing with the development of our natural resources. He was talking about our natural resources; but on the previous day the Minister of Finance was pointing out to us that it had nothing to do with natural resources, that it was only dealing with the pipe line and as far as natural resources were concerned that was a problem for the provinces. Therefore I say before we deal with the next point, perhaps the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance might compare notes before they make their speeches in the house.

The next point, of course, was that we adopted this policy because we had all the information that we required. We had looked the field over very well. I wonder who looked it over? The Prime Minister made the speech, but I say he had not looked all the information over; as a matter of fact, a great deal of it did not get to him.

I have heard a great deal about the problem of cost in connection with this line, and I think the Prime Minister mentioned it as well. There has been a great deal of reference to the fact that unless we get the line built this year then it is going to become too expensive. I suppose it will, sir, if the same people who have the pipe keep it and make a deal with us; they will ensure that they will sell it at a profit, there is no doubt about that. I am asking the Prime Minister if it would not have been possible to make a deal with this company to put up the money for the pipe, to have it delivered in Canada, and then ask them to come before a committee here and state their case and state it properly. If that had been done then I believe the great problem of urgency would have been removed and we would have had an opportunity of hearing all the pros and cons of this particular case.

An hon. Member: Ask your deskmate.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Well, I heard the remark about my deskmate. As a matter of fact if anybody has taken the "Nickle" course in this house I would say I have taken it more than anyone else. I remain unconvinced, and I want to say I have never cast a vote in this house because of political expediency and I am not casting one that way in this instance. I would like to ask each of you if you have not taken the "Nickle" course, too?

An hon. Member: They have taken the "Howe" course.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): It has been said it is necessary to remove from Alberta these vast reserves of gas. A great deal of attention has been paid to the fact that we have here a plan designed to ensure there will be a certain quantity of gas removed from Alberta, but at the same time there will also be enough conserved for use in eastern Canada. We have heard it said that this is the way it is going to be divided; there is going to be 200 million cubic feet per day exported and there will be enough left over for Canada. We have been told that no other plan envisages the actual amount of gas being exported.

I wonder how naive we can get. We know that in this arrangement there is an option to ship out 400 million cubic feet a day when available, and do not tell me about it not being available and whether it will be shipped out, because we know between the time this matter was first discussed here in the house and today the available resources of gas in Alberta have increased terrifically. As a matter of fact, whereas we had 2½ trillion cubic feet of gas six or seven years ago by way of gas reserves, we now have 22 trillion cubic feet. Mark my words, this company will be shipping out 400 million cubic feet of gas per day. I say that any criticism of this particular aspect of the case as we have stated it is groundless.

In view of the question of delay and the obstruction of which we have been accused I wonder why there has not been sufficient time for this government to bring in a better piece of legislation than it has in this particular instance. I say to the Prime Minister that I do not know who drafted this bill but it certainly leaves much to be desired and if, as he said today, this is a plan to bring gas from Alberta to Ontario he is not going to get it as a result of this piece of legislation. In addition to this we have seen the wide-open loopholes and particularly the one resulting from the fact that no time is provided for repayment in connection with the bill itself. There is no restriction whatsoever in connection with that.

In looking over this contract again I think we are going to have to depend on this government for some decision at some future time as to whether or not they are going to become involved in foreclosure, if I might use that expression, in connection with this contract which I see before me. It provides for notice of default but it leaves it wide open for this government to give any relief it wishes from forfeiture in connection with future operations. Perhaps I used the wrong term when I said "foreclosure", because it appears to be a contract under which a person could apply for relief from forfeiture. It could be that after the government had taken over this line and put it in a profitable position these people would apply to the courts to have their bonanza handed back to them.

It has been a poor brief which has been prepared in connection with this legislation. I am wondering why it has been such a poor brief. It seems to me that I might say to the Prime Minister, "I assume that the solicitor on the job was the Minister of Trade and Commerce." Perhaps this brief has been poor because he honestly does not have the time to do the job. I wonder if everyone realizes just what he is undertaking. He is Minister of Trade and Commerce and Minister of Defence Production.

An hon. Member: We know all about that.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): He looks after T.C.A.

An hon. Member: And does it well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member must not be interrupted while he has the floor without his consent.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): That is one of the things he might give to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler) so he could look after that job. If that had been done perhaps the brief which he handed today to the Prime Minister might have been a little better prepared. I wonder how the Minister of Transport feels when the T.C.A. statement comes up and he remains seated with the rest of us while the only available chair is occupied by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Then he runs Polymer as well.

Mr. McIlraith: And runs it very well.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): He runs national research and looks after atomic energy. When we talk about wheat we are apt to think about the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), but no, the Minister of Trade and Commerce looks after wheat as well. When we talk about planes for export we think about the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) or the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney), but no, the minister looks after that as well.

An hon. Member: We have been over all this.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Then I find also that he is looking after the manning of the D.E.W. line. The Secretary of State for External Affairs does not seem to know anything about that, and neither does the Minister of National Defence. I think the Prime Minister would perhaps obtain a better brief if we could just make clear to him that one man has been handling too many jobs for too long.

We had some rather big-time people speaking today. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) was talking about the rules of the house, but I should like to read to him a little paragraph which he will probably recognize:

> We know that the full political freedom which we enjoy today has come into being only within the most recent history. During that time it has been enjoyed by about only 4 per cent of human beings. We know that its existence is heavily threatened today by powerful nations which disbelieve in it and would destroy it. We know therefore that this freedom is something which we can continue to have and to deserve only by continuously understanding it, continuously cherishing it, and continuously defending it.

You know the ink is hardly dry on that. I wonder how much the Minister of Justice is defending the British institutions of government in this country. He referred to what Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald had done, and pointed out also that there were certain things which he had not been able to accomplish.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) has just stated that he has had a "Nickle" treatment. That "Nickle" treatment must have been good when we realize the words he has used in extolling the Minister of Trade and Commerce and telling us about what he has been able to do for this country.

The unusual interest shown by the people of my district in Bill No. 298 is an interest which goes back to the very beginning of the century. At that time a member of the Ontario legislature, who later became Senator McCoig, had a great deal to do with the gas which was discovered in southern Ontario. Senator McCoig represented the riding which I now represent from 1908 to 1922, when he was summoned to the Senate. Because of that interest which was created in my district many years ago we find today there is still a great interest in natural gas in that constituency.

A great deal has been said from time to time about press reports which have appeared throughout Canada with regard to Bill No. 298. In my constituency, which is in the heart of the natural gas district of Ontario, there is an independent newspaper, the Chatham Daily News, which published an editorial on Thursday, May 17, which reads as follows:

> Pipe Line Filibustering Should Arouse Suspicion
> In the squabble over the Trans-Canada pipe line proposal, it should not be forgotten that it was Premier Leslie Frost, who, years ago, took a lead in the proposal to bring Alberta natural gas to eastern Canada, and particularly to his own province of Ontario.
> From that beginning, the Trans-Canada project has gradually developed to the stage where, with a reasonable amount of support, the line is apt to be built and Alberta gas is likely to be delivered to Ontario consumers.
> It is at this critical stage of the project that we first find public men whose attitude, not so long ago, was one of benevolent neutrality, now vehemently assailing the project.
> It is at this critical stage that we begin to hear of rival promoters who are prepared—on paper or over the air—to do this and that.
> The suspicion will not down that the purpose of the sudden last minute flurry of political activity, the deluge of propaganda and the alluring "alternative offers" is, not to work out a better policy but to serve political ends—and to keep Alberta gas out of Ontario.
> In particular, the proposal the McMahon interests made, or are reported to have made, has all the earmarks of a dog-in-the-manger proposition; perhaps an attempt to delay the Trans-Canada enterprise till the McMahon interests have piped the lion's share of the gas to American markets.
> A significant fact is that the Conservative opposition who favour private enterprise and Canadian financing of a project which Canada is not equipped to finance, and the C.C.F. who favour public ownership financed wholly by the taxpayer, are ganging up to attack the one hope we have of bringing Alberta gas to Ontario consumers within the foreseeable future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should rise at this point. This afternoon a similar point of order was brought to my attention and I quoted citation 306 of Beauchesne's second edition. I have listened to the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) very carefully, because in my view the true test of the meaning of citation 306 is whether the statement which is being made in the house, in this case an editorial which is being read, reflects upon something which an hon. member has said in the house or reflects upon some proceeding in the house. Up to the time I rose I do not think the editorial offended, but I am afraid that it began to offend in that moment, applying the test that I applied this afternoon. I therefore felt that I should rise at this time.

Mr. Huffman: Mr. Speaker, just one last paragraph, if I may.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. These points seem to rise each day. Yesterday I think one of the hon. members to my right attempted to stop the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) from reading certain editorials. This afternoon the exchange went the opposite way across the chamber, but I feel I have stated the proper test and I would ask the hon. member to co-operate.

Mr. Huffman: I was looking through Hansard and I noted that the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), on page 4043, had quoted rather extensively from the Toronto Daily Star. So I was taking my cue from that quotation. Nevertheless there is a great deal to say in regard to Bill No. 298. I note that in my district the whole theme is that a party advantage is less important at this juncture than the national advantage to Canada.

I would just like to commend the action of the Liberal opposition in the province of Ontario who, when the government of the province of Ontario brought forth their bill to provide $35 million to assist with the northern Ontario leg of this pipe line, supported the government. They were very anxious to see this part of the pipe line built so the advantages of bringing Alberta gas to Ontario would accrue to the people living in the province of Ontario. That is what I would commend to the parties opposing this bill in this house.

I would say this as well, that you will find that the policy of Liberals, whether in the province of Ontario, in the province of Manitoba or in this house, is a national policy, and it redounds to the credit of Canadians everywhere when their policy is brought forward.

Yesterday afternoon my hon. friend from Lambton West made a few remarks in this house, and today he made a slight correction in what he had stated, but I was a little concerned about some of the rest of the remarks that were made because there might be some misapprehension as to the meaning of some of the words in his speech. May I refer to page 4126 of Hansard, where he says:

> In the meantime, we may be able to develop enough gas for ourselves. I think we will get the most out of it by finding markets close to home, and I hope we shall find a considerable flow of gas in southern Ontario.

I was speaking to the head of the Union Gas Company last night, and they have assured me that they will accept every bit of gas that is found in southern Ontario, and the price our producers will receive in that part of Canada is seven times greater at the wellhead than is received by the producers of gas in Alberta. Because they are receiving that amount and because the Union Gas Company will take every bit that they produce, our people should have no fear as to the disposition of the gas they produce.

Then again, on the following page, page 4127, the hon. member had this to say:

> I cannot see where these storage fields are going to be of any use because, after all is said and done, if this gas comes through to western Ontario through the Hamilton gate, in order to serve the most useful purpose it would have to go back there again.

Again, the president of the Union Gas Company assures me that the storage fields which are located in the riding of my colleague from Lambton West will be used very extensively by the Union Gas Company. Another feature is that the hon. member for Lambton West has said that we should not consider the load factor. The load factor is a very important feature in this contract.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I said we should consider the load factor.

Mr. Huffman: In this instance the load factor has a very important bearing, because the Union Gas Company has one of the best contracts that has been signed to date. I am very proud to state here tonight that the Union Gas Company was the first company to sign a contract with Trans-Canada for 300 billion cubic feet to be delivered over the next 25 years. Further, to indicate the importance of this contract, they would like to have it revised upward because there is a greater need for gas than they had expected when the contracts were signed. I think it is self-evident why we should proceed as quickly as possible with this pipe line, and I am proud to be associated with this government which is doing everything it can to bring Alberta gas to Ontario and supply the needs of the industries and the needs of homes in Ontario and eastern Canada.

In addition, I have learned from the heating and related industries in my district that they are today producing the highest amount of heating equipment in their history, and I contend that anything we were to do to delay this bill would provide a vacuum in our industries connected with heating and in the related industries. For that reason we must go forward with this bill, and I am certain there is no question about its outcome.

In addition, the Union Gas Company has an extension program of $25 million to service the areas from London, as my hon. friend from Lambton West said last night, to the Hamilton and Toronto areas. The only reason they cannot go forward with it at this time is that there is no assured supply of gas. Just as soon as the gas line has been indicated, the Union Gas Company will go forward with their plans.

This is just a small part of the whole feature the Minister of Finance related to us yesterday when he said this pipe line and all that is related to it will create an expenditure of somewhere about a billion dollars in the next five years. Surely this is something we should consider favourably, because it means jobs for Canadians. It is a Canadian resource, coming through a Canadian pipe line over an all-Canadian route under Canadian control, and it will help to provide a better future for all it serves and the country in which we live.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I did not rise when the hon. member was speaking because I understand that when I wish to rise on a point of order it must be done after the speaker has concluded his address. I wonder if the hon. member for Kent inquired from the president of the Union Gas Company what price they were going to pay Trans-Canada for the gas. Did he not say 39 cents to the distributor as to the Union Gas Company, as against 35 cents they are now paying on the gas they are now buying? Also, since you brought my name into the question—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, but I do not think what the hon. member is raising is a point of order or a question of privilege. In a fixed termination debate a few days ago I recall that I stopped an hon. member from asking a question at this time because I think it is fairer to allow each member his full allotted time.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): The reason I rose was that the hon. member was commenting on what I said in my speech yesterday relative to the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think perhaps the hon. member has had an opportunity already to clear up any misapprehensions he may have on that score.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Then I have another score with respect to which I should like to rise on a point of order. I referred yesterday to the non-use of the storage facilities in the county of Lambton, and I am wondering whether the president of the Union Gas Company said they were going to use that storage and if he knows the Minister of Trade and Commerce has indicated the storage in Lambton would not be used.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am afraid that is a matter of debate and not a question of privilege. The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I listened, as I am sure the whole house did, with great interest and some surprise to the unusual vehemence with which the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) expounded his medieval ideas. I should like to say that if he had fought as hard throughout the years for the people of Moose Jaw as he has fought the C.C.F. since he deserted it, the C.C.F. that elected him, I am sure he would have been a more effective member. I am also confident that the members of the government will not thank the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre for criticizing crown corporations, because there is a provision in the back of this legislation for crown corporations should the first efforts fail. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the answer to the wild statements made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre—

An hon. Member: He was right.

Mr. Herridge: —is simply this, that the majority of the people of Saskatchewan do not agree with him and on June 20 next that fact will be reconfirmed.

Having disposed of the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, Mr. Speaker, I now proceed to my argument. I rise to support the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, which suggests that this legislation should go to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines and that consideration should be given to the question of public ownership of this pipe line. I think, Mr. Speaker, that practically all the meat and gristle have been gnawed off this pipe-line bone, and I shall have to content myself with sucking at the marrow. Some marrow! I must say, though, regardless of the strong opposition of this group to the bill and the method it proposes for the building of the pipe line, that no member of this group questions the integrity, loyalty or capacity of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to get things done. I think it is only fair to say before proceeding with my criticisms that his days in public life are strewn with many accomplishments to the advantage of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: Having said that, I must change the direction of my remarks.

An hon. Member: Keep on. You are doing great.

Mr. Herridge: In my opinion the failure of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to live up to its definite and specific promises has caused the government considerable internal embarrassment and during recent days much external embarrassment, and has caused them to present this most unpalatable legislative nostrum to the house at this time. I have read the speech of the Minister of Finance yesterday carefully, and having watched his manner of delivery and his expression it would indicate to me that the government had not taken the plunge into the ice cold water of nation-wide criticism until after a lot of consideration, and with some hesitation and I believe even some doubts at the present time as to the course they are pursuing.

We oppose the bill, Mr. Speaker, because we believe the public interest would be best served by public ownership of the pipe line as a national transportation utility. Since this question was first mooted in the house some five or six years ago C.C.F. conventions, the C.C.F. national council and C.C.F. members of the house have consistently urged three things in particular in connection with this type of legislation. The first was the public ownership of a trans-Canada pipe line. The second was an all-Canadian route, and the third was the assured protection of Canadian consumers' interests and their future needs. All that is provided by the present pipe-line legislation is an all-Canadian route.

The record of Hansard, the record of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, the debates in the house on various bills and legislation and votes taken on various amendments all indicate the consistent advocacy by this group of the three things I have mentioned. I want to compare that consistent approach throughout the years with the record of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, and I should like to quote now from the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines for March 6, 1951, at page 10. This is what I read in the evidence:

The second consideration was that it should be an all-Canadian project, that it would be

Canadian gas transported over a Canadian line, and that 100 per cent of the consumption would be in Canadian cities.

Who made that statement? That statement was made by Mr. Frank A. Schultz, vice-president of the parent company. Other expert witnesses testified before the committee that the pipe line could be constructed on this basis, and it was on this basis that parliament finally gave the bill third reading on March 9, 1951.

To indicate how assured the government was in this matter and the government's confidence in the sponsors, on February 27, 1951, as recorded at page 735 of Hansard, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore) said:

All consumers will be in Canada. No gas will be exported out of Canada.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, no mention was made by the company that it would need financial assistance from the government. No mention was made of the necessity to export gas to the United States in order to make the operation sound. In the bill now before us the government is presenting an entirely different proposal.

What does it mean to Canada? I think this is a most important piece of legislation. I think there is some indication of what it means to Canada in the attitude and efforts of the opposition on this side of the house to prevent the legislation being passed. Another indication is the comments of editors all across the country. We must remember that these Liberal, Conservative and independent editors of these newspapers are close to the people, and when they write editorials they have their ears to the ground. In many cases they are writing what they think is the opinion of the people of the district in which their papers are published. We find, as I said, that Liberal, Conservative and independent newspapers across the country are criticizing this proposal in no uncertain terms.

I want to refer at this point to some remarks made yesterday by the Minister of Finance. I am glad to see that he is listening. He is a good listener. He held out as another bait the enormous amount of taxation the exchequer would receive. He said that 45 per cent to 50 per cent of the total profits would accrue to the treasury of this country, and he indicated that it would be a very large sum because he hinted it would be possible to do very big things with the money. We in this group believe that when the people provide the risk capital they should get all the profits, and not 45 or 50 per cent of them.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, we maintain that public ownership of the pipe line is to the great advantage of all Canadians, and on this foundation the C.C.F. rests its case in this debate. However, in this connection it is interesting to note that the accounting firm of Clarkson, Gordon and Company of Toronto, appointed by the Ontario government to look into the economics of the whole gas pipe line, declared in their report:

An all government owned pipe line would be economically feasible, even though no sales were made to the United States.

We are not saying that, but that is a prominent economist who says it after making a survey of this pipe line.

What are the advantages of public ownership of this pipe line? From our point of view they are these: The government can raise money cheaper than private enterprise. This was indicated again this afternoon when the Prime Minister was speaking. Second, no income or sales taxes need apply. Third, the government can amortize the scheme for this pipe line over a period of 40 years, whereas under private ownership it is usual to amortize a scheme of this sort over 20 years. Fourth, the annual carrying charges on a publicly-owned line are estimated by economists as from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, whereas on a privately-owned line they are from 13 per cent to 14 per cent. I suggest that the consumers of gas will pay for that difference. The last and very particular reason that there is advantage in public ownership is that the protection of Canadian consumers' interests is guaranteed, for the present and in the future.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer particularly to some remarks made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low). You will remember that he said that the producers in Alberta, that is the United States corporations, are opposed to public ownership of this pipe line. He indicated in general terms that the reason was that there are far more consumers of gas in Canada than there are producers of gas, and therefore a government-owned pipe line would naturally have to give consideration to the larger number, that is the Canadian consumers. They would have to consider the people first before the interests of the corporation. I think, Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent argument in favour of public ownership.

I want to make a few more references, but I find it very difficult to condense a speech. I have been sitting here for the last two or three days with a 30 or 40-minute speech prepared and I have to kiln dry it, as they say in the lumber industry. I want to refer to some remarks made by the hon. member for Calgary South. He said he deeply regretted that some had chosen to inject various elements of emotionalism. I find that the dictionary definition of emotion is feeling, passion, mental agitation or sentiment. I trust that the Canadian people will never lose emotion, sentiment or feeling. You do not find those things in corporations, you find them in human beings.

Canadian history is replete with examples of Canadians being stirred to action to defend the national interest by emotions, by sentiment and by feeling for this country. In the war of 1812, which I consider as the watershed of our national history, the French Canadians of this country fought valiantly to defend it, and why? Because they had a feeling for Canada. The first shot of the civil war in the United States was fired on April 12, 1861. This first shot created the national emotion, sentiment and feeling that finally brought about confederation in Canada in 1867. In world wars I and II the same emotion, the same sentiment, the same feeling for Canada that the hon. member regrets caused hundreds of thousands of men in this country to volunteer their services in its defence.

In that connection I want to quote briefly from Bruce Hutchison's book "Struggle for the Border", page 489. He said:

> A vague but undeniable force called "Canadianism" for lack of a better word, bestrides the upper slope of America. Inarticulate, puzzled, amorphous, incalculable in its outcome, with no visible limits to its future.

Then on page 488 he says:

> If the twentieth century does not belong to Canada, or indeed to any state or group of states, Canada clearly belongs to Canadians.

We in this group support that sentiment, that feeling and that emotion. Nations are not built in the brokerage shops and counting houses of the oil and gas businesses. They are built in the hearts of the Canadian people whose emotions, feelings and sentiments call us to rise in defence of this country when the occasion requires.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are our financial resources? Some may say it is not possible for the government to undertake this project. I find on reference to the Bank of Canada statistical summary that in December, 1955, we had $10,848 million in bank deposits by federal and provincial governments, corporations or individuals. Surely we know what Canadians are like. We have the human and we have the financial resources to build this pipe line at this time. We therefore urge the minister to allow this bill to go to a committee. This afternoon a bill was allowed to go to a committee to consider only a change in name, but this important matter is not going to be considered by a committee if the minister can avoid it. The minister should sponsor public ownership and this bill should be sent to the committee.

We in this group suggest this project should be financed by an issue of national development bonds in denominations which would make it possible for all Canadians to participate in public investment to their mutual advantage. Special issues could be floated for the trans-Canada pipe line, Mica creek, the South Saskatchewan dam and power development in the maritimes. We are confident the response to such an appeal would confirm the desire of Canadians for the public ownership of these projects by Canadians. With a hard-working and progressive population, and nearly $11,000 million on deposit in our banks, it is evident we have the human and financial resources to undertake this project satisfactorily. All that is required is the will and the leadership of this government.

This minister who has a great record in war and peace—we give him credit for that—this minister who has developed Trans-Canada Air Lines and the Polymer Corporation and who last year greatly assisted in protecting Canadian rights in international rivers, should send this bill to a committee and sponsor the public ownership of this pipe line as the commencement of a public investment program in this country to meet Canadian needs. I am sure this would receive the support of the majority of Canadians. Let Canadians be partners from sea to sea in building this great nation.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish first to deal with something the hon. member for Prince Albert had to say about me when he participated in this debate last Thursday. At page 4032 of Hansard for May 17, 1956, the hon. member referred to three cabinet ministers by saying that they have one kind of speech in parliament and when they go down to the province of Quebec they change their attitude as they campaign in provincial elections. The hon. member then mentioned the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler) and myself.

I wish to say first of all, sir, that I have not dealt with this question in the house yet in this debate, and second that I have made only two political speeches in the present campaign in Quebec. I have discussed neither foreign investment in Canada nor control over natural resources. My colleagues the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Minister of Transport have assured me that they have not dealt with these questions. It is true that the Liberal leader in Quebec, Mr. Lapalme, has criticized the government of the Union Nationale for its policy on the use and control of the natural resources, especially iron ore; but Mr. Lapalme has said publicly also that he favours foreign investment in Canada for the development of the natural resources of Canada and of Quebec in particular. As a matter of fact, when I myself heard the Quebec Liberal leader criticize the administration of the Union Nationale with regard to the exploitation of Ungava iron ore, he gave as an example of the policy he thought Quebec should follow the policy that has been followed in Alberta in the management of the oil and gas resources of that province.

It is clear, sir—it seems clear to me—that the hon. member for Prince Albert, along with other opposition members, and I could mention the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), this afternoon, and the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) tonight, are doing their best to try to blur and confuse the issue which is before this house. There is a clear distinction between foreign investment on the one hand, and on the other hand the use of and control over natural resources in Canada. The fact that a majority of the stock of a Canadian company is held by foreign interests does not transfer to that company the control over the natural resources which it exploits.

In dealing shortly with the question of financial ownership and control, I wish first to refer to the comparison which has been made with the manner in which things were handled in the good old days when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built. I have not been able to find any figures for 1881, the year in which the Canadian Pacific Railway was founded. In 1883, however, 290,000 shares out of a total of 550,000, which means more than half, were held in New York state. It was only somewhat later than this that the large volume of British capital entered the picture.

I could not secure the figures for 1885, the year when the railway was completed. I can, however, give the proportion of voting stock which was held in various countries in 1915. In 1915 Canada held 13·6 per cent; the United Kingdom and other commonwealth countries held 62·9 per cent, and the United States held 10·4 per cent. Other countries held 14·1 per cent.

In 1936 Canada's holding of the voting stock had fallen to 11·4 per cent; the United Kingdom and other commonwealth countries had risen to 65·6 per cent; and the United States holding to 17·6 per cent, leaving 6·4 per cent in the hands of other countries.

From then on there was a strong shift in the holdings as between the United Kingdom and the United States, but Canada's position changed only slightly. In December, 1954, that is a year and a half ago, residents of Canada held 12·2 per cent; residents of the United Kingdom and other British countries held 46·3 per cent; residents of the United States held 34·4 per cent, and other countries held 8·1 per cent. Never, therefore, as far as I can ascertain, have Canadians held more than about one-eighth of the voting stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

I would ask hon. members to compare this situation with the agreement that Trans-Canada has made to offer 51 per cent of its common shares in Canada, and that it intends to effect a wide distribution of those shares throughout Canada. Any amount of sneering at this agreement as a "shallow pretence" does not take away from the fact that it has been made, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, as a solemn covenant.

What other steps did Sir John A. Macdonald take to see that control of the Canadian Pacific Railway remained in Canada? The only other step was a provision in the railway's articles of incorporation that a majority of the board of directors should be British subjects. There was, of course, no such thing as Canadian citizenship in those days. However, a provision could have been inserted that the majority of the directors should be British subjects residing in Canada; but no such provision was in fact inserted. If we look at the original board of 1881, we find that it consisted of the following people: George Stephen and Duncan McIntyre, president and vice president, both of whom were Canadians; R. B. Angus, a Scotsman who was living in St. Paul, Minnesota when he was appointed but who spent much of his life in Canada; J. J. Hill, Canadian-born, who spent most of his business career in the United States and who was living in St. Paul when appointed; J. S. Kennedy, of New York; Baron J. de Reinach, of Paris; H. S. Northcote, of London, of the Hudson's Bay Company; P. duP. Grenfell, of London; and Sir John Rose, who had been minister of finance in Canada but had returned to London. However, sir, the point I wish to make is that under the law there was nothing at all to prevent all the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway from being British subjects living in London, who had never set foot in Canada.

How does this situation compare with the requirements in respect of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines? As hon. members know, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines was incorporated by special act of parliament under the Canadian Companies Act. The learned lawyers who sit in front of me now seem to have forgotten section 155 of the Companies Act, which applies to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, and I wish to quote it to hon. members:

> No person shall be elected as a director unless he is a shareholder owning shares absolutely in his own right, and not in arrear in respect of any call thereon; and the majority of the directors of the company so chosen shall, at all times, be persons resident in Canada, and subjects of Her Majesty, by birth or naturalization.

Far more effective steps, therefore, are taken in the case of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to ensure that Canadians have a share in the management of the company than was ever done in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Oh, I know, of course, that some of my hon. friends like to maintain that the fact that it was British capital rather than United States capital which built the Canadian Pacific Railway made a great deal of difference. I agree that it might have made a lot of difference, but I am not sure it is in the way they suggest. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, in reply to a question by the Minister of Justice, agreed that the bulk of investment in the Canadian Pacific Railway came from the United Kingdom, but he pointed out that Canada at that time was a dominion within the British commonwealth. He further pointed out that Canada is not now a dominion, nor is it a nation within the North American union of the United States, which is all correct. He implied that it was quite harmless for Canadian resources to be developed by British interests in our colonial days, but that it would be disastrous today for our resources to be developed by United States capital.

To me, sir, it seems that the hon. gentleman's argument should be turned around. It is, as you say, topsy-turvy. In the days when Canada was to a substantial degree under the control of Great Britain, the development of Canadian resources by British interests could entail the risk of both economic and political dependence. But today Canada is an independent nation, and we certainly can accept the foreign capital that we need for the development of our resources without endangering our independence or our sovereignty, just as the United States did 100 years ago.

This brings me to the final point I wish to make. I cannot understand how people can claim that the development of Canadian resources by Canadian companies when financed for the majority of their stock in the United States can represent United States control over Canadian resources. There is a difference between foreign investment and control over resources. In the first place, a Canadian company engaged in developing natural resources in Canada will tend to act in certain ways under certain circumstances, and will act in that fashion irrespective of whether or not the ownership of the company is in the majority Canadian or American. Moreover, natural resources which are developed by private companies are not in any real sense of the word controlled by those companies. The development of these resources is controlled by the whole complex of laws which have been passed by the federal and provincial governments of Canada.

Precisely what this complex of laws comprises depends upon the subject in question but what I have in mind is, for instance, the Companies Act, tax legislation, anti-combine legislation, labour legislation, tariff legislation and specific legislation referring to the development of the natural resource in question,

Surely, sir, Canada's governments, federal and provincial, have reached the stage of development where they can see to it that foreign investment does not develop our natural resources in a manner which is harmful to Canada's interests, and it is to ensure that Alberta natural gas will be used and developed in the interests of Canada first that we are now studying this legislation.

Surely, sir, we have now reached the point in our political development where we can accept all the assistance in developing our natural resources which may be offered by foreign capital, and yet manage without any difficulty whatsoever to keep control of these resources in our own hands.

Mr. Regier: That is wishful thinking.

Mr. Lesage: That is not wishful thinking; it is a fact that we can do that because although Canada has not yet reached the point of economic maturity where she can create sufficient capital to develop her own resources at the optimum rate—

Mr. Fleming: Why should she supply capital to these people, then?

Mr. Lesage: —Canada has reached the stage of political maturity where she can accept this foreign aid and still prevent any danger whatsoever of foreign economic or political domination.

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, a few of the speakers on the government side have said during the present debate that the western provinces and Ontario and Quebec are anxiously waiting for Trans-Canada to start its work on the pipe line as soon as possible. For my part, Mr. Speaker,

I have not heard a single person in my province make such a declaration, nor have I read a single newspaper published in the province of Quebec which carried that impression either in its editorials or in any articles.

There is no doubt that a new fuel would be welcome in Quebec, particularly in the Montreal area, but there is no vast urgency about this. I can tell you that after waiting for five years the people in the Montreal area as well as the rest of Canada can wait a few more days to make sure this legislation is studied properly. Also, as far as Quebec is concerned, let us not forget that Quebec has enough potential hydroelectric power to look after its future needs for many years to come, because that province is one of the greatest regions for electricity in the whole world.

The people of Quebec, like all other good Canadians, are interested in the development of the natural resources of this country because they know that prosperity in any corner of our country means prosperity for all. They know this is a good thing for our country.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) tonight told us something which any child knows, that we need capital to develop this country. Nobody argues against that, but what we argue against is that the capital to develop our natural resources should not be subsidized by the Canadian taxpayer, and an even break should be given to Canadian financiers as well as to American financiers. By the same token, the people of Quebec are not interested in the development of our natural resources for the greatest advantage of some American businessmen with the Canadian taxpayer footing all the bills, as is the case in the present bill we are studying tonight.

The people of my riding cannot understand why each taxpayer in Canada will have to pay $30 to help a company which is controlled to the extent of 83 per cent by United States capital. They will have to pay $30 each for a company whose main interest is supplying Chicago, Cleveland and other United States cities with Canadian gas at a cheaper rate than it will be supplied to consumers in Montreal and Toronto.

The Canadian taxpayer will not only pay for that part of the line from the Manitoba border to Kapuskasing; oh, no, the company does not stop there. They think the public of Canada are not generous enough, and now they want to force this house through the action of the government to lend them $80 million to construct the western part of this line which is the easiest part. This fantastic scheme is being forced upon this house by the government, the same government which sends its cabinet ministers and members to help Mr. Lapalme in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: We are not.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Balcer: Of course I do not blame them, because the Liberal leader in the province of Quebec in every speech attacks the provincial government for its handling of our iron ore. On the other hand you have the Prime Minister of Canada, the leader of the Liberal party in Ottawa, who makes a speech here in the House of Commons to approve 100 per cent of the actions of Mr. Duplessis in this iron ore development. It is small wonder you do not dare say a word about our iron ore in the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: I do.

Mr. Fleming: Who are you?

Mr. Balcer: The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources says that Mr. Lapalme would like the iron ore of Quebec to be administered in the same way as the oil and natural gas in Alberta. They are two absolutely different things. Also, what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has not said is that Mr. Lapalme did not only say that the provincial government could administer the iron ore like they administer gas in Alberta. He said that the iron ore in Quebec should be nationalized, just the same as Mossadegh did in Iran.

An hon. Member: He never said that.

Mr. Balcer: These same members of the cabinet and federal Liberal members go down to Quebec to support this man. These same people are the tools of this United States-controlled company which wants to use close to $200 million of the taxpayers' money under the pretext of developing one of our natural resources.

We often read of a system called "lobbyism" which is used in the United States, and we hear of its abuses. In the United States big industrialists and large associations maintain agents in Washington close to the executive and the legislators to look after their respective interests and to make sure they are in an advantageous position as far as the representatives and senators are concerned.

The present legislation is an example of lobbyism at probably its strongest. A small group of United States businessmen come here to obtain a charter under false pretences, or at least under false promises. We all know that before the committee these Texas millionaires practically ridiculed the hon. members who were questioning the possibility of their being able to finance this scheme. They contended that there was not a single doubt.

What they have succeeded in forcing the government to do in this last month is certainly the masterpiece of lobbyism of all times. Not only has the government forgiven them for having come and made false promises to the committee; the government has decided to make Trans-Canada Pipe Lines its adopted child and is ready to stop at absolutely nothing to make sure that this company, controlled 83 per cent by United States financiers, gets special treatment such as is unknown in the history of this country.

To these people who said to the committee that they did not need public money to build their pipe line, the government first decided to build for them the most difficult part of the whole line with a cool $80 million of the taxpayers' money. You would have thought that with that these financiers would have been satisfied, but no, sir, the government again went out of its way to make sure that this group of Americans could really live off the fat of the taxpayers' money. They decided to lend them 90 per cent of the cost of the western part of the line, which amounts to approximately another $80 million of good Canadian taxpayers' money.

In the meantime the government did everything it could to discourage Canadian financiers from trying to bid for the same project. You would have thought that with this favoured treatment that company would have kept quiet and would have been willing to wait for the representatives of the people of Canada to study at length such an expensive, awkward and unusual bit of financing; but no, again with the complicity of the government, they decided to pull a fast one. They got from the government the promise that the minister would stop at nothing to get all the legislation through by the date chosen by these lobbyists, who set June 7 as the time most suitable to them. These people must be really big operators to scare the government of a democracy into doing that type of railroading.

It is most interesting to compare these actions of the government with the attitude taken by Liberal federal members in the provincial campaign. Just a few days ago the Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard) was making a speech at a banquet held in the Windsor Hotel in support of the leader, Mr. Lapalme. The Secretary of State was making a grand oration on responsible government and the great fights of Papineau, Lafontaine, Mackenzie and the others. He was so taken up with his subject that he even said the Liberal party in Canada has a mission to accomplish for democracy and responsible government.

This type of guillotine that we see today is the democratic mission of the Liberal party. I am not surprised that they all sit in silence while the rights of parliament are being smashed in this way. I would be very much surprised if the real heroes of the democratic form of government of the people, by the people and for the people would have approved of a cabinet minister who walked into the chamber with a resolution and during his opening remarks, before any other representative of the people had had a chance to voice a word of opposition, announced that closure would be applied. He got the applause of all so-called Liberals who are not afraid to deny parliament the right to express the will of the people just to please some United States friends of the regime.

I do not think it can be called democracy when the length of discussion in the House of Commons is set by a contract for pipe between one United States company and another which is 83 per cent controlled by United States capital. It is a humiliating situation for the Canadian parliament, and at the same time I think it is unfair to the people of Canada who will have to pay $30 each for this scheme which is being proceeded with in such a strange fashion.

The government refuses to apply to this bill the procedure which it has applied to similar bills, that is to send it to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. A few years ago when the question of old age pensions was being discussed in this house many Canadian citizens were waiting just as anxiously for their money as are these financiers at the present time. It was just as important to a lot of our old age pensioners to get a necessary increase in their pensions, but the government took time to send that legislation to a select committee of both houses before making any decision.

Mr. Lesage: Not the legislation; the subject matter.

Mr. Dufresne: That is not brilliant.

Mr. Balcer: Why not follow the same sensible and democratic way of handling the taxpayers' money at this time? Let not the House of Commons and the parliament of Canada be run by a contract for pipe between two United States companies.

If the people of Canada have waited five years to get natural gas I am sure they will be ready to wait the time necessary to permit a committee to study such important legislation. After all, this legislation involves the spending and the lending of huge amounts of the people's money, and I see no reason why the promoters of such an ambitious scheme should not be submitted to the same rules as any Canadian citizen.

Has the government something to hide? Has this company something to hide? It is rather hard to come to a favourable conclusion when we see the stubbornness of the cabinet in connection with this matter and the undemocratic fashion in which this bill is being forced upon the people of Canada. I intend to vote for the amendment because in doing so I am convinced that I shall be doing exactly what my electors sent me here to do, that is to look after their interests and make sure that their money is spent wisely for the welfare, not only of a small group of friends of the government but of the whole of Canada.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Am I allowed to ask a question of the hon. member for Three Rivers?

Some hon. Members: No. We were refused an opportunity to ask Liberals questions in this debate. You gagged yourselves.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Steam it out. Are you through? I am asking, Mr. Speaker, whether I am allowed to ask a question of the hon. member for Three Rivers. If I am not allowed, I shall not ask it.

Mr. Rowe: Not under closure.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Three Rivers accedes to the request of the hon. member for Portneuf, the hon. member for Portneuf might ask a question, but the hon. member for Portneuf indicates that perhaps he may have many questions.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): I was disturbed by my friends over there.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, before you came into the chair a few moments ago I rose on a point of order during the speech of the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) to ask a question, and I was not permitted to ask it.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to spend the time of the house, but I take it that—

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): The hon. member for Kent (Ont.) referred to a speech I made yesterday. I rose on a point of order to ask a couple of questions.

An hon. Member: That was yesterday.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): The speaker who has just preceded—

Mr. Fleming: A limited debate. The Deputy Speaker took the point that questions would not be permitted because we were under limited time rules. He did not allow the question to be asked.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the point that is being raised is somewhat trivial, because the hon. member for Three Rivers certainly knows that we are under a time limit at the moment. When he is asked if he may be asked a question, all he has to do is say yes or no. In the circumstances I do not want to create any difficulties, and I would ask the hon. member for Portneuf—

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): It is very short.

Mr. Speaker: I know, but I would ask him to co-operate with me. To avoid any complaint I would ask him to desist from asking his question.

Mr. Ambrose Holowach (Edmonton East): I am very glad to have the opportunity of taking part in this discussion and expressing several convictions with respect to the subject before us. May I begin by saying that I have listened intently to the various speeches that have been made by those members who have participated in this debate. Whilst I do not question the sincerity of their views, which are different from my own, it has been for me a most dismal disappointment to find so little substance in the arguments that have been used against this proposition, a proposition which should mean the undertaking of one of the great engineering feats of our time, with immeasurable benefits to all Canada, namely the building of the trans-Canada pipe line from my native province of Alberta to the eastern provinces.

Sir, I respect every person's opinion provided it is honest and based on fact, but with the exception of creating a great deal of apprehension and doubt in the minds of the Canadian people, with the exception of giving a black eye to a vital industry, with the exception of doing great disservice to outside investors who have come to our country and made sizeable investments generously and in good faith, neither the C.C.F. nor the Conservatives have suggested one single alternative that is acceptable to this house and that would ensure the building of a natural gas pipe line to be completed by the end of this year. That is the real issue before us at this time. To continue stalling is to do irreparable harm to the economy of my province and foul up this project beyond any hope of repair.

I can appreciate the position of the C.C.F. in this debate. As usual they are taking the stand of advocating their pet doctrine of state ownership, state control and state monopoly—"the state is boss"—but for the Conservative members, members of that once great, proud and independent party which professes to be the champion of private enterprise, to be outmanoeuvred and led into the camp of the C.C.F., from which they are imposing further impediments in the way of private enterprise, is, to say the least shockingly sad. Surely they must understand that what they are doing is destroying little by little the last potential for private enterprise to undertake this pipe line and make it a success.

With each of the Social Credit members, my colleagues, I share a deep feeling of responsibility in taking part in this debate and expressing views on a matter which is as crucial to Alberta's and Canada's welfare as this issue before us. It is with such a sense of responsibility that we have placed politics aside and appraised this question strictly on its merits.

When one considers the fundamental point there is only one thing that can be done. There is no other course but to accept or reject this proposition. To deny this proposition at this time is to make certain that no pipe line will be built in the foreseeable future, for no other company than Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has spent $8 million or so of its capital in preparatory work, in surveying and acquiring rights of way. No company but Trans-Canada has, ordered and ready, the 34-inch diameter pipe required for the western portion of this line. No other company is prepared to call for tenders in order that machines and men can proceed with the job as quickly as possible.

An hon. Member: No other company is allowed to.

An hon. Member: Don't be silly.

Mr. Holowach: Further, no other organization has the present management, men who are familiar with the gas and oil business, headed by one who has for 17 years demonstrated his ability in that field and his concern for the public welfare. More important than all these, there is enough power vested in the provincial field with the government of Alberta and in the federal field with the federal government to make sure that the public welfare is at all times safeguarded.

These are some of the reasons we are voting for this bill. There are other reasons as well. My leader gave an indication of how urgent it is to undertake this pipe line at this time. We have waited for a long time to find a market for our great resource in the province of Alberta, and it is about time the politicians in the house got out of the way and allowed this line to be built. I think they have had plenty of time to play with the prosperity of the people in our province.

May I say further that there seems to be a lack of understanding of how great an urgency there is. Let me point out to this house that over 90 per cent of the gas and oil reserves of this country are in the province of Alberta. In addition to that, we have the Athabaska tar sands, which have billions of barrels of oil. Oil and gas are interlocked, and these industries are interdependent.

We cannot wait indefinitely. It represents monetary waste involving millions of dollars that would otherwise be flowing into our treasury in order to provide our people with the services they need. We cannot be indifferent to the situation. Let me tell those who are stalling this proposal that we in Alberta look very seriously on their attitude. Can we help it? We have billions of tons of coal for which there is no market, and with nuclear science and research devising new forms of energy it may well be that unless we move our surplus gas it will become as obsolete as our coal.

I am sorry to say that the C.C.F. and the Conservatives have ridden roughshod over some of these compelling facts. Now, they are speaking about a loan being made. So what? What is wrong with that? Is there any government in Canada that does not have some scheme by which it induces industrial development within a province?

Let us remember that Canada financed its share of the war to the tune of $20 billion. We made a gift of $2 billion to Great Britain alone. We did that voluntarily, and it was considered in the national interest. Since the termination of the war over $4 billion has been spent in building up the economies of south Asian countries. Is it wrong for us to invest our money in order to sustain our economy, that economy which is pulling the full load?

Mr. Ellis: Let us do it ourselves, then.

Mr. Holowach: Certainly not. The idea has been created that it would involve some sort of subsidy. I would suggest that my hon. friends read the agreement. Believe me, if anybody will get headaches from this it will certainly not be the government or the people of Canada but Trans-Canada Pipe Lines.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Oh, that is a laugh.

Mr. Holowach: I have listened very closely to the arguments the Conservatives have been making with respect to how small Canadian investment is in our own country. Certainly I agree with that. It is a matter of concern to us. For 20 years we have constantly advocated a fiscal policy which would enable us to finance any enterprise and would create new wealth without creating debt.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Twenty-five dollars a month.

Mr. Holowach: May I point out further that when we found that the geological picture in Alberta was promising for the discovery of oil and gas we sent men to eastern Canada in order to induce the financial interests there to help us to develop our resources. We were listened to but we were not successful. In 1939 we sent our minister of mines and resources to Great Britain. They too listened politely, and again we were unsuccessful. What alternative would the Conservatives suggest to the one source that was prepared to come into our country and help us develop this resource? Would they suggest that the resource remain in the ground unused and wasted?

Mr. Wylie: That is their policy.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Was it not a Canadian company that discovered oil there?

Mr. Holowach: Our support of the bill does not preclude legitimate criticism of the government. In my opinion the policy that has been followed for some time has been rather unrealistic by reason of the fact that it has denied that the only way to build a gas pipe line is to have a sizeable market. The best bargain for Canadians, both as consumers and producers, would have been created if we had allowed the export of our surplus gas in order that the export market might pay for the transportation of the gas through the line in Canada.

I have noticed that a great deal of attention has been paid to an editorial that appeared in the Calgary Herald. It was pointed out that this is a paper that is published in the heart of the oil industry. May I just say that a much more realistic position is taken by the Edmonton Journal in its editorial of Thursday, May 10, 1956. Edmonton is also in the heart of the oil industry and, I may say, is the oil capital of Canada.

An hon. Member: Pretty weak.

Mr. Holowach: The editorial reads in part as follows:

> The federal cabinet's policy on natural gas transmission from Alberta to eastern Canada, and particularly its recent decision to advance $72 million to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, have been sharply attacked by opposition parties in the House of Commons. It is the duty of the opposition to criticize and oppose government policies, but it is also their duty, in a question of this kind, to propose a better alternative; and this they have been unable to do.

Mr. Ellis: Public ownership.

[Mr. Holowach.]

Mr. Holowach: The hon. member says "public ownership". The editorial goes on to say:

> The only real alternative to the Trans-Canada plan is public construction and operation of the pipe line. A strong theoretical case can be made out for this solution. In practice, however, experience with such organizations as the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines suggests that federal ownership of transportation systems is not a satisfactory solution. Not only does state management tend to be unprogressive, inefficient and extravagant, but it is always subject to political and sectional pressure. . . . Generally speaking, a private corporation which is primarily interested in finding customers for its product is more likely to deal fairly with all parts of the country than a crown company which is under pressure by governments to remember the party faithful, . . .
> Of all the schemes proposed for distributing Alberta natural gas, the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines project seems, in balance, the best. It is to be hoped that parliament will ratify it without undue delay, so that construction may commence this year.

Mr. Ellis: They do not approve of closure, though.

Mr. Holowach: I certainly endorse the views contained in this editorial. I hope the passage of the bill will help to eliminate some of the hardship that has been caused by the delay in the export of our great gas surplus, and I am confident that it will make a great contribution to the growth and stability of our country.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I think it was citizen Tom Paine who said something to the effect that those who expect to reap the benefits of democracy must undergo the fatigues of supporting democracy. I am sure that before this debate concludes tonight, Mr. Speaker, most hon. members in the chamber will be heartily in agreement with that sentiment. Tom Paine suffered unusual tribulation during the age of enlightenment, and could well speak from experience. However, I do not think his difficulties in defending democracy were greater than those that face the members of the opposition in opposing this bill this evening. We have been accused of political expediency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wylie: A socialist speech.

Mr. Dinsdale: The hon. member for Medicine Hat has implied that I am going to give a socialist dissertation tonight.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You are married to them. Why not?

Mr. Fulton: When are you going to get out of bed with the Liberals?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dinsdale: We have been accused of emotionalism. I agree with the hon. member for Kootenay West on that score. I think this is an issue to become excited about. During recent days magazines and other publications in Canada have been criticizing parliament for its lack of aggressiveness, its lack of zeal in pursuit of the public business. Only on April 14 the leading editorial in Maclean's magazine, after very severely criticizing the lack of interest in public affairs on the national level, concluded with this statement:

> Doesn't anyone know of a small body buried somewhere on parliament hill? Isn't there a single fang in the mouths of a couple of hundred politicians in Ottawa? Surely there's something wrong in the country!

I think it is high time that the members of this house, and I include members on both sides of the house, stand up on their hind legs and fight—

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): How can seals do that?

Mr. Dinsdale: —on an issue that is really important in this country.

Now, unfortunately, we are debating under the pressure of closure and time is limited. I should like to make just a brief reference to this matter of closure. Students of public affairs, again in recent years, have been discussing the decline of parliament. I should like to suggest that here tonight, Mr. Speaker, we are seeing traditional parliamentary procedures being destroyed right before our eyes and the government rabble is howling for the death blow. We are discussing this issue and the bill largely in a vacuum of information, because there has been no very careful analysis of what has been described as the most important undertaking this country has ever assumed.

The Minister of Finance made that statement yesterday. The hon. member for Wellington South said he never expected within his lifetime to see an issue of greater importance than the one we have before us at the moment; yet we are being forced to discuss it largely in a vacuum of information because of the unseemly haste necessitated by the closure procedure.

We have to take it from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is subject to his advisers—and there is a tendency for the administration to become a government within a government—that everything is in the best interests of the country. Much worse still, we have to take it from the United States interests which are behind the promotion of this project, which I remind the house has been described as of momentous significance in the development of Canada, that this is in the best interests of Canada.

It has been said that at least proceeding with this measure now is building in the interests of the nation; it is getting things done. Well, I have heard that claim in other contexts in other countries. It was Mussolini who used to boast that he made the trains run on time and streamlined the mechanistic aspects of his fascist society. Hitler used to boast about his splendid autobahns, and of course we are all familiar with the five-year plans of the U.S.S.R. Perhaps it is a coincidence that this proposition we are discussing tonight has been on the way for five years; it dawdled along for five years, and then suddenly overnight parliament has to pass it on a sudden death basis.

During this discussion we have listened to a lot of friendly advice from our Social Credit friends.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Good advice, too.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am going to return the favour tonight, if I may. I just want to quote the nature of the advice we have been receiving so you will see we have been subjected to sufficient provocation. On page 3930 of Hansard for May 15, 1956, the leader of that party in referring to the Conservatives said:

> They are like a cat on a tin roof trying to find some dirt and manufacture for themselves an election issue. They have been so utterly bankrupt of ideas and propositions that they have to grasp at straws.

I could say that is the old psychological technique of projection, imputing motives and imputing ideas that you have yourself to those who have different ideas. I should like to suggest to my hon. friends that it is most regrettable that they, as an opposition group, saw fit to vote for closure this afternoon. Closure is being brought in under duress, so we have been told on several occasions, but certainly no opposition group which hopes to maintain itself in the confidence of the public of Canada should willingly stand up for the unprecedented method by which closure has been applied under the present circumstances. It is very dangerous for an opposition group to come too closely into the embrace of the government in power or the party in power. It tends to be the kiss of death. It is a vice-like grip, and I do not have any ulterior meaning when I use the words "vice-like grip".

We have been accused of political expediency because we fight for democratic principles that have been established by tradition and by painful struggle down through the centuries. As I examine those, other than the members of the government, who are in support of this measure it seems to me that economic expediency is dictating their actions in this regard. Economic expediency, for example, might be the explanation for the support of the Ontario government in this respect. They have nothing to lose in this deal. They have an opportunity of having this natural gas, which is peculiar to western Canada, piped in as the letter quoted in the house from the minister of finance of that province said, at no cost to themselves. I think that in itself rather refutes the charge of political expediency. If we were wishing to think in terms of political expediency we would be embracing the Ontario administration with all the enthusiasm we could muster. But we feel there is a national principle at stake.

I want to take this charge of expediency just a little farther and apply it to the supporters of the government. The main argument that has been put forward from the government side is to the effect that haste is necessary. We do not know why such haste is necessary, except that the line has to get through to Winnipeg during this year. I am from Manitoba, and we heartily agree with that. However, there is no reason why that line should not have been through two years ago. Let me quote from a Liberal member of the legislature in this regard. We have had quotations from Conservative members of the Ontario legislature, so let me quote from a Liberal member of the Manitoba legislature. On March 26, 1956, he said:

> I urge that the honourable the premier and the cabinet and every member of this house, regardless of party, make their views known and I hope their views coincide with mine. That is: Let private enterprise build the line and sell the gas where they can. If Ontario and Quebec want their gas to go over the top of the lakes . . . let them build the line there by all means, with their own money. Or, if they can't do that themselves, let it be built by the shortest route, which means they would get it via Sarnia . . . after all, Canada and United States have maintained the peace since Christmas 1814, and they're not likely to start seizing our property now!

That is from a Liberal spokesman in the Manitoba legislature. Going on to speak of Manitoba's position in this regard, he says:

> Mr. Speaker, for many years we in Manitoba have paid for transportation of goods from the east. We've been told that we had to face the facts of geography. Now the shoe is on the other foot. We happen, on this occasion, to be in an ideal geographic position to receive this wonderful fuel . . . and we shouldn't for one minute be subservient to the interests of the Port Arthur area, or any other areas in the east.
> It is high time western Canada was recognized as an important industrial area. Let our resources be made available first to the people here; and then proceed to pipe the gas east when the east can pay for it out of their own pockets.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

That is Liberal sentiment from Manitoba spoken by Mr. St. John, who has been actively pushing this pipe-line project for the past two years.

Why has this sense of urgency on the part of the government suddenly developed? I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is because an election is pending. If this line is not in the ground by next year, if this unholy mess that confronts us in the breakdown of negotiations over the past five years is not remedied in concrete terms by next year, of course this administration will be committing political suicide in a good many parts of Canada, particularly in western Canada. I would like to suggest that it is expediency of the worst kind. Let me quote a former prime minister of this country on this score, Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. In his book "Unrevised and Unrepentant", Mr. Meighen said, at page 319:

> I believe in the British system of democracy and would submit to almost anything before surrendering those liberties which we as British subjects enjoy, but if anyone tells me that fidelity to party and fidelity to country are always compatible, or that the wisdom of mere numbers is the wisdom of heaven, then I tell him that he loves applause far more than he loves truth.
> Loyalty to the ballot box is not necessarily loyalty to the nation; it is not even loyalty to the multitude. There must be something better than an ambition to be re-elected or democracy will fall even in this dominion.

I had the pleasure of listening to my neighbour from Manitoba speak on a similar level last Monday to the "adventurers in citizenship", and I agree heartily with the sentiments he expressed on that occasion.

An hon. Member: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Dinsdale: The Minister of Justice is my neighbour in Manitoba. This afternoon we had the pleasure of listening to the Prime Minister make a contribution to this discussion, and I felt an underlying sense of anxiety in what the Prime Minister had to say regarding this measure. He regretted that closure had to be applied; he regretted the unseemly haste, but it was one of the distasteful things that a leader of a nation had to face from time to time. I believe those were the words he used, "one of the distasteful things that the leader of the government faces from time to time." Well, now, I sense that he was very concerned about the unfortunate level to which parliament has descended because of the manner in which this measure is being pushed through the House of Commons at the present time.

I would like to suggest that the words of a former prime minister might well be taken to heart. There is a higher loyalty in this country than party affiliation. There is loyalty to the national interest; and when a political party begins to identify its welfare with the national welfare I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that party has outlived its usefulness to the nation.

The one answer we have received to all the questions we have asked on this subject up to the present time as to why we must proceed in ignorance as a parliamentary body, a body responsible to the people of this country, is the stock answer, "There is no other solution". We must continue to place our confidence in this United States-dominated company, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, even though it has failed to deliver the goods on all successive occasions, because there is no other solution. That is a tragic admission for an administration that has been in office for some 20 years to make, that they have no alternative policy for what they themselves have declared to be the most important development in the history of Canada up to the present time. I would suggest that the government should be ashamed to have to make an admission of that kind, particularly in a period when the Canadian economy is booming as it never has before, tied to the great United States boom to the south of us.

There are attempts to confuse the issue, of course. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) yesterday made one of those attempts. He suggested that on this particular issue we were criticizing United States investment. As I read the terms of the bill and as I listen to the discussion, United States investment has nothing to do with this particular issue. What we are opposing is Canadian investment in a United States company. We are opposing this unorthodox, reprehensible public financing which is being perpetrated on the people of Canada for the first time, and which was amazingly enough supported in the house as recently as yesterday by the Minister of Finance, though I thought he was a little bit sensitive on the subject.

A project of this magnitude, a project which has so much promise for the future development of Canada, should capture the imagination of Canadians from one coast of the country to the other; yet this government is forced to admit that it cannot get sufficient support from the Canadian public to finance it on a strictly Canadian basis, but must continue to work with the group which has broken all the promises it originally made. I would not attempt to prophesy, but, judging from the observation which was made at the opening of the session this afternoon regarding the purchase of suitable pipe for this undertaking, it seems that the project might once again blow up in the face of the government.

We are trying to be helpful and they will not let us. We can really be helpful. Let them refer this matter to a committee, and let us thoroughly analyse all the facts.

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this important debate to express what I believe is the attitude of those I represent in this House of Commons, the citizens of Kingston and district. I can say that I represent an area which is keenly interested in the transmission of a Canadian natural resource, namely natural gas, from the Canadian province of Alberta through Canadian territory to the Canadian province of Ontario, with as many distribution arteries and extensions as may be feasible to assist in reducing the price to the Ontario consumer while at the same time expanding our national economy.

We are what you might call a large potential consumer area. The evidence of this possible consumption of natural gas in our district of Kingston is supported by the Financial Post of May 12, 1956, when, on its front page, it shows a map of the area through which the pipe line will pass, with an indication of the title of each section, and I am pleased to note that the area from Toronto to Montreal along the north shores of lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence river is labelled, "Big Market Potential".

This area at the present time is experiencing an industrial boom in the wake of the St. Lawrence seaway project and the St. Lawrence hydro project. We might say that the known availability of hydroelectric energy is one of the chief contributing factors in the encouragement of heavy industry to settle in this area. For years the St. Lawrence seaway was delayed, with one of the chief factors of the delay being the United States lobbyists who were against the project. When our government indicated that we as Canadians would go it alone and build an all-Canadian St. Lawrence seaway, such opposition soon dwindled in the United States. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when the opposition presently being presented before the federal power commission in the United States to the export of gas from Canada realizes that Canada is once again taking the initiative, such opposition will soon dwindle.

This bill No. 298 presently before us, I suggest, removes the possibility of the shackles of United States control, either legislative by government bodies, or by private or corporate bodies, in preventing the development of the use of Canadian natural gas and the availability of this Canadian resource to the people of Ontario.

With the availability of natural gas to the Kingston area, I anticipate a great boom and as expansive a program as the St. Lawrence seaway is causing, and I know it is the wish of my constituents that this project should not be delayed further. What can we gain by delay? The lack of use of our natural resource, a higher cost of construction, a restriction on the development of Canada and particularly in the area which is described as being a big market potential.

Our neighbour to the south is in an enviable position. The United States has a network of gas pipe lines which run across it and currently energy from natural gas represents about 25 per cent of all the energy produced in the United States from coal, water power, petroleum and gas. To date we in Canada have been blessed with abundant resources of hydroelectric energy but our expansion program has caught up to our power potential and it is noted that in Ontario we might have a power shortage by 1962.

This expansion program has been stimulated by the atmosphere of good governments, and the reputation of this country for fair dealing has encouraged outside capital and personnel to be directed to Canada. The Canadian reputation to which I refer can best be described in the words of Hon. Leslie Frost, premier of Ontario, in a debate in the Ontario legislature on February 21, 1956, as reported at page 392 of Ontario legislature Hansard:

> Do not regard the fact that money comes here in large quantities as any deterrent. That is what has made and will make the wheels go around. Foreign capital is present in Canada in fabulous amounts, coming from various parts of the world, the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries. We have a reputation in this country for fair dealing.
> I said a moment ago that this pipe line is under the jurisdiction of Canada, subject to our legislative enactments. So are the great developments of this country which can be seen far and wide. They are in this country, because they know that Canada will treat capital from elsewhere fairly and justly, and may I say to all hon. members that we intend to maintain that reputation. The coming here of these vast sums of money, the coming of industry from other countries to Canada, have all added to Canadian independence, to our self-sufficiency as a nation, and this we intend to carry on.
> Bringing to central Canada and utilizing Canadian gas and oil is one of our greatest opportunities, one which a dozen years ago we did not think existed, and in this bill—"The Northern Ontario Pipe Line Act"—as placed before this house, there will be found an opportunity for expansion by the people of Ontario, an opportunity which is ours today.

Now, let us consider where a great deal of our fuel, consisting of coal and fuel oil, comes from to create our energy in Canada. Statistics have revealed that for the calendar year 1955 Canada imported from the United States 19,161,634 tons of coal at a cost of $102,418,429 and 171,660,357 gallons of fuel oil at a cost of $18,080,585.

Let us break this down by provinces. Manitoba imported 112,031 tons of coal from the United States at a cost of $1,094,872 and 1,045,420 gallons of fuel oil at a cost of $126,175. Ontario imported 16,056,600 tons of coal from the United States at a cost of $83,113,320 and 105,827,161 gallons of fuel oil at a cost of $11,829,771. Quebec imported 2,760,323 tons of coal, from the United States at a cost of $16,392,125 and 46,614,071 gallons of fuel oil at a cost of $4,607,533.

Therefore, when we consider that the total import of United States coal to Canada in 1955 was 19 million tons in round figures, of which some 16 million tons came from the United States into the province of Ontario; and that of the 171 million gallons of fuel oil imported from the United States 105 million gallons went to the province of Ontario, one realizes that this legislation is of the utmost importance to the province because it will provide an alternative source of energy selected from our own natural resources, developed in Canada and transported through Canada. I might add this is done entirely under federal and provincial legislation, and it makes no difference where the capital comes from.

We must remind ourselves, with special reference to Ontario, that the provincial government in its wisdom has established a fuel controller under the Ontario fuel board act. I should like to read sections 15 (1) and 16 (1) and 16 (2) of that act. Section 15 (1) reads as follows:

> The board may control and regulate the production, storage, transmission, distribution, sale, disposal, supply and use of natural gas in Ontario and may make orders with respect thereto.

Section 16, subsections 1 and 2, read as follows:

> (1) Without restricting the generality of section 15, the board may make orders fixing the rates, meter rentals and other charges to be paid by ultimate consumers of natural gas.
> (2) No new rates, meter rentals or other charges and no alteration of existing rates, meter rentals or other charges to be charged to ultimate consumers of natural gas shall be put into effect until ordered by the board.

Some people during the course of this debate have suggested that this bill will provide a sell-out to the Americans, that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited will be controlled by American capitalists. They must have forgotten or entirely disregarded the fact that there is ample legislation to control the development and sale of this Canadian source of energy.

May I now refer again to our present imports of coal and fuel oil from the United States. United States interests can regulate our imports of these goods to create energy with no control as far as Canadian consumers are concerned. They can tell us how much coal we will get, how much oil we will get, where and when we will receive delivery, and all the contributing factors to convenience and cost are out of the control of the Canadian consumer.

We in Kingston are not unmindful of these circumstances of the control of our elements of energy by American exporters of coal and fuel oil, because in this district we import all our coal and with very little exception all our fuel oil from the United States. We ask for the immediate availability of Canadian natural gas as a competitive source of energy, among other things, so that we as Canadians can have an opportunity to rule our own destiny. This legislation is the vehicle to answer both our requests. We need an immediate start on this project so that our expansion program will not be delayed due to a lack of energy.

I object very strongly to the calling of Americans who are interested in the investment of United States capital in Canada by such names as American or Texas buccaneers. Our economy in Kingston and district has been bolstered by the introduction of American capital along with capital from Britain, Germany and various other countries of the world. We have welcomed the introduction of capital and know-how to keep as many people as possible at work while contributing to the national economy.

I have been gratified to note that in this house on the votes on the introduction of this legislation, the Liberal members in the big market potential area along the north shores of lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence river have voted unanimously in favour of the introduction of this bill. In other words they have voted for the immediate transmission of natural gas to their areas as an alternative source of energy.

At the same time the Conservative members for Ontario, Prince Edward-Lennox and Leeds constituencies have voted against it. Why? Can they go home and say to their electorate, "Your need for an alternative source of fuel is different in Oshawa than in Belleville, is different in Napanee than in Kingston, is different in Brockville than in Cornwall," or can they say, "You do not need natural gas until years from now." I am sure we will note with interest their explanation to their electorate of their objections to this legislation.

Some hon. members have repeatedly used the word "subsidization" when referring to this legislation, but I think a more proper term might be interim financing, which is not uncommon in our economic methods of developing this country.

In concluding my remarks I should like to refer to a speech which I heard delivered by a distinguished American whose theme was "Build as Free Men". He stressed the things that Americans and Canadians have shared in common through the history of the two nations, things which have made them great and have had much to do with the fact that we have remained good neighbours for so many years. History demonstrates that certain things or principles have played a vital role in the development of our two countries and the prosperity of our peoples. He emphasized four specific points.

One, the driving force of great dreams and awareness of bigness.

Two, the realization that practically nothing is impossible as long as men are free.

Three, adherence to competition and free enterprise.

Four, a demonstrated willingness of both our governments and our peoples to accept change.

I commend the above thoughts to my hon. friends in the allied opposition parties who are opposing this bill, namely the Progressive Conservatives and the C.C.F.

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I consider it my duty to take part in this debate. As a member of the C.C.F. I have always considered it my duty to take part in debates, but it is apparent that the government of the day does not consider it to be their duty because through their closure motion they have made it little more than a privilege for hon. members of the opposition to take part in this debate.

I should like to review some of the procrastination which the government has shown over the past five years, and which has led us to the present situation. Hon. members who were here at that time will recall the procedure in 1951 when Trans-Canada Pipe Lines was incorporated. My colleagues have put some of the most damning evidence on the record showing the pack of lies which the proponents of this bill put forward, lies which have been proved to be such by the subsequent turn of events.

For a time the matter was allowed to remain relatively inactive. The government was playing a game of chess with a few pipeline companies until 1955, when we heard the announcement of the establishment of a crown corporation to build the northern section of the line. We did not hear anything from our Social Credit friends in the intervening period, our friends who now state that it is so urgent to dispose of the natural gas resources which they have in Alberta. Their vocalism of recent times has been prompted by a different motive, which I shall refer to at a later time.

The matter was left relatively dormant until 1956, when during the first several months of this session attempts were made to elicit information from a most reluctant government. Hon. members will recall the questions which were posed to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce in an effort to glean information as to their proposed policy. It was to no avail. We had announcements of confidential letters of which the Prime Minister had no knowledge, and it was apparent that the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be only too pleased if no one knew anything about it. With that turn of events things were relatively quiet until a full government caucus was called, at which all the sheep were herded into the railway committee room and the Minister of Trade and Commerce announced what the government was going to do.

The policy was received with the utmost docility. The Rip Van Winkle which had been sleeping for 20 years finally woke up, and it was decided that this legislation which they accepted with such ease and rapidity must be passed by June 7. Closure was announced and received without any protest by members of the so-called democratic Liberal party. All government members had been listening to the dissertations of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on previous occasions and were only too anxious to toe the party line.

Backbenchers, who are usually reluctant to take part in any debate—I have noticed this on past occasions—have been encouraged to take part in this debate because by taking 20 minutes here and there it will limit the chances of the opposition to expose this whole sordid scheme which the government of Canada has perpetrated on the people of Canada.

The government has selected Trans-Canada Pipe Lines as their chosen instrument. She has become their favoured daughter. The haste with which the government is giving this $80 million dowry to its daughter makes her past conduct very suspicious. The government has now proceeded at second reading to reintroduce closure. It was introduced at the resolution stage without any opportunity whatsoever to debate as the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave notice of closure in his opening remarks.

At the second reading stage there has been no regard for the democracy of parliament and free speech. It is true that they allowed us a day or two more to discuss some of the manifestations of this very complicated bill. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron) have pointed out, the pipe contract is something which will require a great deal of study before all the information is finally revealed.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has taken his traditional attitude. He says, "We are the government of Canada and we are going to do precisely what we want to do. Who is going to stop us?" It has been most amazing to notice the activity on the government benches during this whole debate. It is evidence to me that the Liberal party is stretching at the seams, that it is beginning to fall apart.

For some time now we have heard the rumour of the election of a new leader for that party. The reluctance of the Prime Minister to take part in this debate was apparent, because he waited until closure had been applied so he would be limited to 20 minutes. Then he could throw out a challenge to his colleagues that this was the last election in which he was going to run, that it was necessary that his mantle be placed on younger shoulders.

The challenge is out. In effect he said, "The colleague in the cabinet who can make the best speech on the pipe-line bill, regardless of his previous attitude, shall receive the party leadership." We have had the Minister of Finance vying for that position. We have heard the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, who generally admitted that he was not in favour of the proposal, vying for the leadership. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has entered the debate. It will be most interesting to see which speech receives the favourable nod by the Prime Minister.

The Conservative party objects to the loaning of money to a company controlled 83·4 per cent in the United States. They consider it not in good taste to lend $80 million to a Texas buccaneer, but it would be quite all right to loan that amount of money to a Canadian millionaire.

The Conservatives have drawn attention to the increased United States investment in Canada, and they have also pointed out the decline in the value of the Canadian dollar over the past number of years. I believe they said it was down to about 42 cents, but I think they are finding that the "Nickel" they have in their possession is worth less than nothing. Perhaps it is questionable if they still have that "Nickel". The position of the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Nickle) is understandable when one looks through the Parliamentary Guide and notices the various oil companies in which he has a very significant interest. It is natural to expect he would be out to get the maximum amount of money possible out of this deal. The more development there is in the oil industry, the more benefit is obtained by those financially interested in the operation of oil.

The position of the Social Credit party is also understandable, because their whole political atmosphere in Alberta is dependent on the development of oil and natural gas. I might also hazard a guess that the party revenues of the Social Credit party also come from exactly the same source. Not long ago a prominent Social Credit member stated, "You do not need to know what Social Credit is; you feel it in your heart." They are supporting this measure because they have a good idea they will feel it in their political pocketbooks. In fact, so confused are the Social Credit party that at the resolution stage they voted against closure whilst today we find them voting for closure.

An hon. Member: Because of your obstruction.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): When the Social Credit party was organized they devised the Social Credit policy of "phony" money. It was a program that Mr. Aberhart began in Alberta in the depression period, when he promised to give $25 a month to everyone, but it would seem to me that if the Social Credit party wanted to be consistent it should come out with its proposal to pay $25 to everyone in Canada with the proviso that $1 would be deducted to pay for the pipe line and help out the oil millionaires in Alberta.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Why don't you socialize the oil? You are socialists. Socialize the oil in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I have put some salt on the sore spot of the Social Credit party. The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) makes a strange bedfellow with the Liberals and the Social Credit party.

An hon. Member: No stranger than the C.C.F. with the Conservatives.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): He has the aptitude to distort the truth, which would qualify him as a Liberal. It is quite apparent that he was bought by Liberal money and will be seeking a Liberal nomination at the next election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I did not hear the hon. member's entire remarks, but what I did hear leads me to believe that they should be revised.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Pardon me, Mr. Speaker; I left the impression that the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre has been bought by the Liberal party. Perhaps that has not happened as yet. So I shall have to withdraw my statement.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the hon. member has withdrawn any imputation against a fellow member.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): That is right; I mentioned that I had withdrawn my statement, Mr. Speaker.

The C.C.F., the effective opposition, rather than the official opposition, has a stand which is perfectly clear. We have believed that a natural resource such as gas is so important that a pipe line should be built, operated and controlled by the people of Canada to serve the people of Canada. The first claim to public ownership is to prevent the present sell-out of our resources to the Americans.

The Minister of Finance very kindly quoted from a speech by Mr. Porter in the provincial legislature, as recorded on page 4142 of Hansard, as follows:

> The day will soon be upon us when with a continuing growth at the present rate, a shortage of energy resources will set in and progress will accordingly be limited and cut down. It is not only desirable, but is an absolute necessity, that every possible provision be made for access to the people of this province to an abundant supply of natural gas.

The Prime Minister, speaking today, said that future generations of Canada will be glad it will be built. Let us just look at the present proposal. It is a proposal that three-fifths of the gas which is being exported from Alberta will be used by Canadians, since of the 500 million cubic feet, 200 million are being exported to the United States. If Canada is going to grow, as the hon. member who has just spoken has indicated, and if, as the hon. member for Rosthern indicated, we are a great people making great strides, we are going to need that 200 million cubic feet of gas we are shipping to the United States, and we are never getting it back under the present proposal.

Mr. Harris: Nobody on this side said that.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): The only way to establish those resources for the people of Canada is by public ownership. This afternoon the Prime Minister said that the difficulties of public ownership are not insuperable. When he went on further to point out why the loan had to be made to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, a member of the Conservative party interjected, "They were broke." The Prime Minister said, "Yes, that was the only justification for making the loan."

Let us go back a few months and think of the debate that took place earlier this session, when a pipe-line company was not broke but thousands of western farmers were, through their inability to sell their grain. Was there any talk of giving them a cash advance because they were broke? Now they are loaning money to a crown corporation at 3½ per cent when farmers were being loaned money at 5 per cent.

The government has stated periodically that it is not opposed to public ownership; it just does not like public ownership. What arguments against public ownership has the government put forth? The Minister of Trade and Commerce put the only argument against public ownership on the record. At page 3862 of Hansard he pointed out that there was the necessity of setting up an organization. What is a government for but to set up an organization? Surely, as the Prime Minister said, it is not an insuperable task. They indicated they would be unable to get the gas from these sources in Alberta which are so closely allied with our Social Credit friends. Surely with the two parties together on this issue, they have made such a lasting friendship that they should have no difficulty, if necessary, in arranging with their Social Credit friends who have control of the gas to sell it to public ownership.

They also pointed out that one of the objections has been the limitation of pipe. They say that 34-inch pipe simply is not available. Admittedly Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited has an option on this pipe, but if it were not going to be used, surely it would not let $40 million go to waste with the pipe companies which manufactured the pipe. That pipe would become available for the country to utilize under public ownership.

The arguments which the government has used against public ownership are straw men. Some of them are United States straw men, some of them Canadian, but all of them are manufactured by the same imagination that dreamed up the use of the closure motion at this time. It has been proven that public ownership will work. The government has yet to prove that it will not work.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am appealing to the members of this house to support the amendment to the amendment moved by my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, requesting further consideration of this matter so we can go ahead and set up a public enterprise to handle natural gas in order that it can be utilized, in the words of the Prime Minister, for the generations to come and not for the benefit of a few Texas buccaneers.

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge I am the second member from northern Ontario to speak on the pipe-line bill. I feel that inasmuch as the legislation includes the northern Ontario pipe line which will be of great advantage to northern Ontario I should contribute something to the debate now taking place on this particular issue.

I have heard a great deal about closure being applied by the government with respect to this debate. The matter has been argued pro and con, and I believe I can clarify my stand on it by drawing the attention of the opposition to the fact that a certain committee was set up by the house last year, I believe, which had to do with the review of the rules and procedures of the House of Commons. To the best of my knowledge all parties were represented on that committee and all views with respect to the rules were discussed and agreement was reached thereon. To the best of my belief there was no argument at that time that the closure provision should be taken out of the rules. Therefore I assume that it still remains among the procedures of this house.

There is no doubt about the fact that the opposition have, within the rules of the house, used all means within their power to delay, obstruct and in every way possible stop the passing of the bill. They have done so within the rules of the house; therefore I do not see any reason why the government cannot apply the closure rule which also remains as one of the rules of the house. I understand that closure is used in the mother of parliaments which is referred to so frequently by the Leader of the Opposition as the outstanding example of procedure in any parliament. When the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mrs. Shipley) drew the attention of the house to the number of times that closure had been used at Westminster the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) interrupted and said "agreed to". I can agree with him, but I also have the number of closures which were not agreed to in the mother of parliaments, and in the last seven years the number happens to be 45 which, means that over six and a half closures per session were not agreed to. I will admit that 148 were agreed to, but the grand total of closures in the British parliament in the last seven years is 193.

Mr. Castleden: There are no provincial houses over there.

Mr. Mitchell (Sudbury): Therefore I feel that in spite of all this arguing and beefing about closure it is not the vicious weapon that the opposition would have us believe. Last night the leader of the official opposition was granted the privilege of continuing his speech without interruption for another hour. He saw fit to refuse that opportunity; nevertheless I imagine that he and his party will still say that they were prevented from saying anything further in this debate. He used 20 minutes today. I think possibly the press will be well advised to take note that he will still claim that he was shut off because of the closure motion before the house.

As I come from northern Ontario I must say something about a fellow named Frost, the premier of the province of Ontario. I do not wish to go into details, but he and his government have thoroughly endorsed that part of the pipe line through northern Ontario with which we who live there are particularly concerned. His acquiescence in the bill now before us is right down our alley as far as we in northern Ontario are concerned. I think he realizes that industrial and domestic use of natural gas is very necessary in our province.

Many years ago the Canadian Pacific Railway was extended to western Canada to promote markets for eastern Canada in the west. That added greatly to the industrial and general well-being of all the people of Canada. As I see the situation, the pipe line we are now discussing is the C.P.R. in reverse. It will bring to eastern Canada a certain commodity of which there is more than plenty in the province of Alberta, and provide a market in eastern Canada for that western product. To me the situation is the same only in reverse, and the pipe line will benefit all Canadians.

In northern Ontario we have a continual struggle to obtain power. A great many hydro projects have been launched and are in operation. However, in the particular area from which I come we still seem to worry about the possibility of obtaining further power. There is a certain company, of which you are all aware, which conducts its operations in the area I happen to represent and which supplies in the neighbourhood of 90 per cent of the world's nickel. They use a great amount of power. They are using as much power as the Ontario hydro can give them from various sources of supply, and in addition they have their own hydro development in reserve in case they do not receive enough power from Ontario hydro. In addition to that they use a great amount of coke, oil and coal. The company of which I am speaking uses 600,000 tons of United States coal per year. With the advent of this gas line I can see where our Canadian resources are going to be used instead of importing this great amount of United States coal.

The McMahon proposal has been held up in this house by a number of speakers as a shining example. I should like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the inadequacy of the amount of gas that would be transported to eastern Canada under that plan. I am authoritatively advised that the 500 million cubic feet of gas per day which the McMahon interests expected to transport east would shrink to 100 million cubic feet per day after the line left the Ontario-Manitoba border. The company of which I am speaking is prepared tomorrow to use 20 million cubic feet of that gas per day. Upon further conversion they are prepared to approve of the purchase of 50 million cubic feet of gas per day. In view of those circumstances, sir, you can see how inadequate the amount of gas under the McMahon proposal would be, not only for use in my own area but for those farther east.

Added to that, sir, we have a city of 52,000 people who would use a few cubic feet of gas. There would, therefore, be very little left over for the people farther east for whom we are trying to bring in gas. During this debate the Progressive Conservative party have done all in their power to delay this bill. I should like to rename that particular party, if I may, without changing the initial letters. The Progressive Conservative party name is shortened to P.C., and I wonder if I could, instead of the word "progressive" use the word "prohibitive" and call them the prohibitive Conservatives. In my view, and in the view of the people in my area, that is about the way it sounds when we want gas. Speaking for my constituency, I feel that what we want is a great deal of hurry. We need the gas; we want the gas, and we want it as quickly as we can get it.

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Mitchell), who has just taken his seat has made what I thought was a rather laboured defence of the government for inaugurating closure at this time. I thought, as Shakespeare said, "Methinks the lady doth protest too much." The hon. member said that last night the Leader of the Opposition was granted the privilege of speaking for an additional hour. That is the pass to which this parliament has come, that when the leader of the government has made a suggestion, parliament has granted some privilege or some right. I think that is indicative of the thinking by which this government was actuated when it inaugurated closure.

Since the hon. member did speak on that for a moment or two, I should like to deal with it as well because closure has an important part in this debate. This afternoon the Prime Minister said he intended to devote part of his time to closure and part to the bill itself. As a matter of fact I think he divided his time about equally between the two matters. The hon. member for Kamloops replied, and also referred to closure. The Minister of Justice said he spent about 90 per cent of his time on things other than the bill, and I think he was quite justified in doing that.

What is the situation with respect to closure? It is something which has been grafted upon our rules in very recent days, from a historical standpoint. Closure was a practice which developed in continental European parliaments, where they were riven with groups and divisions of all sorts and where certain groups were determined to obstruct parliament. Closure, or the old French word clôture, was first defined and incorporated in the rules in Britain during the days when the Irish nationalist group attempted to obstruct parliament in order to so nullify the actions of parliament that the British parliament, perhaps in disgust, would grant them Irish home rule; that is when it came to Britain. We adopted it later.

I venture to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that no parliament in the British commonwealth, leaving aside for a moment the British parliament itself, has ever adopted closure except after a long and protracted debate on the various stages of the bill. It is, as the Prime Minister suggested this afternoon, something which you reluctantly grasp; it is something with which you reluctantly deal, and why? Because it is a gag which nullifies parliament.

Never in the history of a parliament in the British commonwealth have we reached the stage which we have now reached in this parliament, where in the opening speech at the resolution stage the right hon. gentleman who speaks first says, "Parliament, you are through; I am giving notice that this debate concludes tomorrow night at one o'clock". It is true that closure was adopted in 1913; it is true that it was adopted in 1917 and sometime in 1926 and in 1932. You can count the number of times on the fingers of one hand. But never in this country or any other country has it been adopted during the preliminary stage as it was here.

There is one question we would like to have answered. Why it was done at that time? If you are going to introduce closure at the resolution stage, why summon parliament? You are negativing the whole procedure. As the hon. member for Kamloops pointed out very effectively this afternoon, the resolution stage is the most effective stage at which debate and inquiry can be conducted.

It is interwoven in our constitution that when a bill involving the expenditure of money is brought before the house it should be preceded by a resolution. Why? Because in the old days the king had to justify to parliament why it was even necessary to bring in a bill, and until that justification had been established the bill could not be introduced. In this case the resolution is introduced one day and debate finishes the next. As I said, it is a negation of parliament. It is now going to serve as a precedent because, since it has been done on this bill, it can be done again on some other bill.

This is the most important bill which has been before the House of Commons for 25 years, at any rate, and perhaps 50 years, and debate is precluded. Why do you not close up this place? The Minister of Trade and Commerce has not made a very successful job of selling wheat. Perhaps we could use this building more effectively to store wheat, rather than have a nullified debate such as we have now.

I read the speech the right hon. gentleman made at a meeting in the Chateau Laurier on the occasion of a birthday party, or a celebration of some kind, in that building in January or February, and he said: "I am afraid, like Churchill, that I am a House of Commons man". Well, Mr. Speaker, he does not have to be very much afraid. He is the only one that is afraid of it, I can tell you that, because Churchill suffered a lot of criticism and abuse but I do not think he ever had to stand a body blow like this. Anyone who introduces closure at the opening stage of a debate and then says, "I am a House of Commons man" is using his imagination.

Tonight we are on the second reading of the bill. It is now a quarter after eleven. An hour and 45 minutes from now, unless someone happens to have the floor for a few moments, this debate will be concluded and the guillotine will fall. This is the second reading of the bill, the time at which we are supposed to discuss the principle of the bill.

An hon. Member: When are you going to start?

Mr. Nowlan: When can you start when you have closure imposed on you? It is not only the principle of the bill, but the principle of whether parliament is going to be maintained at all in this country or whether the executive is going to rule supreme that we must discuss, because there is much more in this bill, Mr. Speaker, than simply the question of financing, important as that may be, and it is very important. One could make a speech or several speeches on that. It is the control of a great natural resource.

It is true that last night the Minister of Finance made a legalistic play on words and suggested it was not dealing with natural resources; it was only a pipe line to convey that natural resource. If the Minister of Finance drove a nail, or opened up the pipe line and held a match beside it, he would get burned by the natural resource which was escaping in the way his party is going to get burned because of the way this government has been treating the House of Commons.

He told us about the effects on other industries, of the great development of industry that will take place in this country through the use of gas. Of course that is so, and that is all the more reason why we should discuss this thing and why we should have time to debate it. We spend days in this House of Commons on minor, trifling and relatively unimportant bills, and quite properly so. Here the debate is stultified and virtually nullified by a party which is masquerading under the pseudonym of Liberal and which professes to be the friend of the people and representing the people.

Why is debate precluded, Mr. Speaker? It is not because the issue is clear-cut, not because it is simple. After all, this government has spent five years wrangling over it, trying to make up its mind as to what it is going to do. The cabinet met and met. One day last year the Prime Minister told us there were three alternatives, but he never told us what they were discussing. He said this was the worst one.

I guess we have it, Mr. Speaker. There is no question about it, we have the worst one. We know that the cabinet met for weeks and weeks this spring trying to deal with this matter. Then when it finally comes before the house, what are we told? This afternoon the right hon. gentleman said, "After considering all the alternatives we came to the conclusion". Then he went on to say, "It appeared to us". And later on, "If we believe, as we do, then we must do so and so".

Who is the "we", Mr. Speaker? That is the old imperial prescript. That is the language King Charles I used when he was quarrelling with parliament. Undoubtedly King Charles believed that he was right. However much they may have deplored his judgment, no one suggested he did not think he was right and was doing the right thing when he closed up parliament and said, "We, we, we". That is the royal "we" again.

An hon. Member: The divine right of kings.

Mr. Nowlan: The divine right mentality. That is the mentality of the Bourbons who said, "L'Etat c'est moi"—"I am the state". And so, Mr. Speaker, the wheel has come full circle again. We now have the executive having supremacy over parliament as it had in the days of King Charles. There is this difference at the moment, but I do not know whether it is such a difference. King Charles lost his head physically. This government lost their heads intellectually before they brought in this measure. They are going to lose their heads politically when they go to the country.

Unfortunately for myself I was away a week ago when this matter came up; I had to be home. A friend of mine told me the government had brought in closure at the resolution stage. I could not believe it, Mr. Speaker. I never heard of such an action of political lunacy in my life, and I could not believe it was possible.

Mr. Knowles: Whom the gods will destroy they first make mad.

Mr. Nowlan: Whom the gods will destroy they first make mad, and they have made this government mad and they are going to be destroyed. This afternoon the Prime Minister plaintively said, "Can we shirk whatever distasteful responsibility with which we are confronted?" What a pitiable statement, Mr. Speaker, to make on this great national undertaking of which we should all be proud and which they say is an undertaking which regretfully, hesitantly, almost crawling along, we now have to start.

The company, like Gaul, is divided into three parts. There is the leg running down to the United States, which cannot be built until we get permission from Washington; there is the bridge across northern Ontario which cannot be built until we have a connecting link, and they cannot build that until we lend them the money.

What position is this government in? Every promise this company has made to it has been broken. We have reached the position where the company apparently says to this government, "We want cash on the barrelhead before we will proceed with the part which we said was the easiest of all". We have reached a stage, Mr. Speaker, where no one trusts the company and the company does not trust our own government.

We had wheat legislation before this house a while ago. We did not entirely approve of the action, but we were told that the government wrote a letter to the banks and on the authority of that letter the banks accepted the undertaking of the government of Canada; but not these gentlemen from the United States; oh, no. The right hon. gentleman could say, "The government will carry through this legislation. The government has a big majority, and in time we will pass this bill through the house and we will give you the money", and in the meantime the company could start construction. But no, these gentlemen from Texas, or points south, say, "We must have the cash on the barrelhead," and so parliament is told by the executive that we have to ram this legislation through so we can satisfy them because they do not trust us, and that is the reason for closure. So much for closure, Mr. Speaker.

Someone said that I should discuss the principle, and I will tell him this. The hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Holowach) a while ago made a great plea for the province of Alberta, and I do not blame him for that. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Mitchell) spoke about the demands in his own district. But as the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) pointed out yesterday, there are parts of this country which will not benefit in any way, shape or form from this project, and I happen to come from one such part.

That does not mean that I would not support this project if I were convinced it was in the best interests of Canada and if it had to be done and could only be done as a public work. There was a time in this parliament two years ago when we dealt with the St. Lawrence seaway. That obviously was something which should have been constructed for the nation as a whole, and every one of us from every part of Canada supported it. Coming from the part of Canada I do, I say that every opportunity should be given to private enterprise to construct this project before the nation is involved in a huge expenditure.

Much has been said about the Tories and the Conservatives. I have a letter in my hand—and I know the same letter was received by other hon. members—from the united mine workers of America, no great capitalistic organization, asking me as a member from the maritimes, and asking every other hon. member from the maritimes, to vote against this bill if it involves government expenditure because, as they point out, they believe they are going to lose the market for hundreds of thousands of tons of coal in the St. Lawrence area if, as and when this legislation goes through. Whether that is right I do not know but I am passing on the fact and I do say that this is one real reason to object to the passing of legislation such as we now have before us involving a public expenditure, building first the bridge and then lending 90 per cent of the cost of construction of the line across the prairie provinces.

The fruit growers of the Annapolis valley a while ago tried to get some money from this government. They waited seven months for an answer. It was yes, no, and in and out and after a great deal of waiting they will receive approximately something between $100,000 and $200,000. As broke as they are, the fruit growers of the Annapolis valley could finance the pipe line if the government would advance 90 per cent of the cost. One could continue to deal with the situation down there. I know the guillotine will descend very soon. I am told I have two minutes to go; two minutes to go on a matter such as this, and this is parliament under a Liberal government.

Mr. Fleming: Under a fascist government.

Mr. Nowlan: I say this measure should not be rammed down our throats and the public should not be forced to put up money one way or another until at least every other avenue has been explored. Let me say this in conclusion, and I know it has to be the conclusion. The procedure of this house requires that any relatively minor bill must be sent to a committee for investigation and study. When the bill incorporating this company was before us five years ago it was sent to a committee for study. Last week we sent a bill to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines providing for the construction of a 20-mile railway branch line in New Brunswick which was important to the area—

An hon. Member: Very important.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, it was important to the area, of course, and it was sent to the committee. We are now asked to pass this bill, which is certainly more important than any other bill which has been sent to the committee for years, without having the opportunity of studying it in committee. Why, Mr. Speaker? Why is the government afraid to send this bill to a committee? Is it because of what happened last year?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is going to be sent to a committee.

An hon. Member: It will be sent to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Nowlan: Is it because of what happened last year, when there was a fairly prolonged debate and public opinion was aroused from one end of this country to the other? I suspect that is one of the reasons; the matter will be investigated and discussed if it is sent to the committee and public opinion across this country will be aroused. It is either that and/or, probably both, because the government does not want the facts to be disclosed.

Think of the questions which have already been raised in this strangled, abbreviated debate. Question after question has been raised going to the merits of this case, and we are precluded from getting answers. When we go into committee of the whole the rule of closure will probably be applied, and when we ask questions we will not get the answers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Rowe: You have been cut off.

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, if there is one quality which Canadians admire it is courage; therefore I must confess an admiration for the Leader of the official opposition, because during the past few days he has displayed a great degree of courage in that not only has he stood firm against the considered opinions of technical and financial experts, including that of a member of his own party, but he has had the courage to fly in the face of his own beliefs and policies.

Hon. members will recall, I am sure—

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make any unnecessary objections to any of these statements, but the hon. member has no right to make a completely false statement to the effect that I went in the face of my own convictions.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt.

Mr. Ellis: The hon. member is reading every word.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there was an imputation that the hon. member was saying something he did not believe, that remark, of course, must be withdrawn.

Mr. Ellis: Read on.

Mr. Macnaughton: Hon. members will recall—

Mr. Fleming: Withdraw.

Mr. Macnaughton: Hon. members will recall, I am sure, that it was during the Leader of the Opposition's distinguished tenure—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, did I understand you to say the hon. member must withdraw that remark?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I requested the hon. member to withdraw any imputation that the Leader of the official opposition had said anything in which he did not believe. I think that was the intent of the question of privilege.

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mr. Macnaughton: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad, of course, to withdraw if it hurts the Leader of the official opposition.

Mr. Fleming: That is not a withdrawal.

Mr. Macnaughton: In any event, as premier of Ontario, the Leader of the Opposition—he was a very distinguished premier—

An hon. Member: Distinguished looking.

Mr. Macnaughton: —established Ontario House in London, England. The avowed purpose of that government agency, a purpose which it has admirably fulfilled, was and is to attract to Canada the investment of foreign capital.

Mr. Trainor: Let us get to the pipe line.

Mr. Bell: Who wrote this?

Mr. Macnaughton: What difference, may I ask, is there between the investment of British capital in Canada's future, and the investment of capital from another country, whether it be the United States or not?

Mr. Bell: What book are you quoting from?

An hon. Member: Ding dong Bell.

Mr. Macnaughton: I should like, if I may, to quote from a recent issue of the Montreal Gazette, a newspaper which is a strong supporter of the Conservative party. On Monday, May 14, under the heading "Canada's Historic Problem—Distance". The Gazette said:

> Ever since—

And I insert the word "confederation".

> —new links have strengthened the bond between Canada's east and west—more railways, telegraph lines, the telephone, radio, the air lines. The trans-Canada highway when it is completed will become a further major link.

It went on to say:

> Today Canadian technological know-how makes the boldest engineering schemes feasible. But there remains the problem of finding money to pay for them. That problem is once again occupying Canada's parliament.

Mr. Trainor: Put the books away and stop quoting.

Mr. Macnaughton: The problem of finding the money to pay for another in the long line of major Canadian economic developments is indeed facing this parliament, but some of the members of parliament have shown themselves totally disinclined to face the problem.

Mr. Bell: Is this a radio speech you are reading?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): The Bell of peace.

Mr. Macnaughton: Perhaps they honestly feel that the people of Canada will be impressed by these forlorn, delaying tactics. If so, I would earnestly advise them to feel the public pulse a bit more professionally. When we consider the construction of a pipe line from the Canadian west to the Canadian east, we are considering a project of the relative magnitude and productive potential of the construction of the first transcontinental railway.

Mr. Bell: Are you speaking from the heart?

Mr. Fleming: He is reading from the heart, or from the desk.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Macnaughton: It is true that there were calamity howlers even then, nearly 90 years ago, people who had not the vision to see our country's future unfolding before them. Fortunately, their obstructive efforts—

Mr. Fleming: Dispense.

Mr. Macnaughton: —were insufficient to constitute an effective rail block, just as their present-day philosophical heirs will be unequal to the task of setting up a pipe block.

The trans-Canada pipe-line project is a billion dollar undertaking. Not only will it be the biggest thing of its kind in the world, it will involve ancillary industrial expansion which may well result in Canada moving on an up-draft of natural gas to a higher plateau of national greatness.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the hon. gentleman is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: My point of order is that under the circumstances I feel sure the house would give the hon. gentleman leave to file his speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the hon. gentleman will agree that that is not exactly a proper point of order.

Mr. Fulton: It is not proper that the hon. member should be reading his speech.

Mr. Macnaughton: There is one thing sure; the people of Kamloops will not need a gas pipe line into that district.

Mr. Fulton: We have one already, built by private enterprise without government assistance and under Canadian control, by Mr. McMahon.

Mr. Macnaughton: This building program will involve the expenditure of many millions of dollars in Canada. In addition, the knowledge that the pipe line exists will stimulate further exploration for potential gas sources and the development of those sources when found. This means more dollars spent in Canada. At the other end of the line, in Ontario and Quebec, large capital and maintenance investments will have to be made in the manufacture of equipment for the distribution of the gas. Hence there will be increased industrial activity, increased employment, increased national income.

The years since the second world war have been years of expansion in Canada on a scale so tremendous that if anyone had seriously predicted them two decades ago he would have been dismissed out of hand as an egg-headed visionary. We have had the expansion of the aluminum industry at Kitimat, the expansion of the iron ore industry at Steep Rock and in Labrador, the expansion of hydroelectric power facilities in Ontario and Quebec, the expansion of transportation facilities through the St. Lawrence seaway, the expansion of atomic energy facilities at Chalk River. And now we are on the threshold of another phase of expansion, the development of our natural gas resources.

I said a moment ago that this is a billion dollar project, and so it is, but the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues in this house are apparently unable to take in the entire picture. They apparently can see only a small corner of the canvas, that corner which is occupied by the short-term loan the government proposes to make to the private company which has undertaken to construct and operate the trans-Canada pipe line. The fact that many of the officers and principal shareholders of this company are Americans seems to offer irrefutable proof to the members of the Conservative party that the government of Canada is ready and willing to sell this country down the Mississippi.

May I ask why it is that these gentlemen from the United States are willing to take a multi-million dollar gamble here in Canada? Is it not because they have more faith in Canada than some Canadians themselves have? If there is a flow of United States risk capital into this country is it not because little or no Canadian risk capital can be found? It is an unfortunate fact that those who proclaim their love of Canada most loudly, and who are shrillest in their denunciation of foreign infiltration, economic, social or political, are least inclined to invest personally in any phase of Canada's development which has not already, through the courage and foresight of others, become established as a sure thing. They not only want to have their cake and eat it too, they want someone else to do the baking and take the first bite to make sure it is palatable.

On the subject of the suspected "sell-out" we have heard here in the house repeated references to the Minister of Trade and Commerce as a dictator, a man who is prepared to sacrifice public interest to political expediency. I think the answer to that is simply that if the people of Canada held this same belief there would now be a different Minister of Trade and Commerce.

But the people of Canada do not believe this. They know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is a doer, not a dictator. He is a bottleneck breaker, a production man turned to politics. If enterprise, to quote the Royal Bank letter of May 1956, is the doing of things, then the minister is a man of enterprise because he gets things done. Being a good production man he hates waste, either of money or of time. And at the present stage of the trans-Canada pipe-line project time is even more valuable than money.

We have reached a point in Canada's national progress where additional sources of energy are urgently required. Less than 10 per cent of our total energy is in the form of electricity. The remaining 90 per cent is found in fuel of one kind or another, coal, oil, wood or gas. Hence, natural gas is not in itself a competitor with electricity. Its development as a source of energy will take place within the 90 per cent non-electric area, and therefore its productive potential is almost unlimited.

The United States is now served by a tremendous network of natural gas pipe lines, pipe lines which provide about 25 per cent of all the energy consumed in that country. Moreover, it is predicted that in the near future natural gas consumption for domestic purposes will equal that of oil in the United States, and that within one year there will be no substantial section of the states which is not supplied with natural gas services. It is estimated that one out of every two houses in the United States is using natural gas at the present time. In comparison, gas provides only 6 per cent of the total energy consumed in Canada. Obviously there is a national need for making our western gas reserves available to the rest of the country.

The province of Ontario will require additional sources of energy, other than electricity, within the next six years. Ontario is looking for low-cost energy, and natural gas is the answer.

The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) stated this evening that Quebec is not interested in natural gas. I do not know about the city of Quebec or the city of Three Rivers, but I do know about Montreal. In Montreal there is no shortage of hydroelectric power, and there will be no shortage for at least 25 years. However, Montreal is one of the most expensive cities in America when it comes to buying coal. Because of Ontario's relative proximity to the Ohio and Pennsylvania coal fields coal laid down in Toronto is much cheaper than the same coal laid down in Montreal.

Consequently when the trans-Canada pipe line reaches Montreal it will have a beneficial effect upon the fuel situation. Because of its competitive qualities natural gas will not only provide an efficient and cheaper source of heat but it will also bring about a reduction in the consumer cost of coal and oil. This will of course be to the direct advantage of domestic consumers, householders and apartment dwellers.

Further, it will materially help Montreal to maintain its position as Canada's metropolis, in spite of the rapid expansion of other cities. The high cost of fuel in Montreal has had the effect in the past of discouraging the establishment of certain industries there, inasmuch as fuel is a major cost factor in the production of goods. As a result, the coming of natural gas to Montreal will place that city in a better competitive position with respect to other manufacturing and industrial centres.

The domestic consumer will benefit in many ways from the availability of natural gas. Like other large cities, Montreal is bursting at its residential seams. Areas which once were small suburbs are now the scene of great housing developments. Former country villages are now city suburbs. What a few years ago was farmland is now urban property. This movement toward the periphery will continue for many years to come.

Once the trans-Canada pipe line has been laid into Montreal, feeder lines can be hooked on to it to supply new residential districts. Thus there will not be the initial construction expense of providing for large central heating units in houses, nor the operating expense of buying more expensive fuels to heat the houses. Even in the older, long-established residential areas, where no gas supply system exists and where it would be uneconomic to introduce such a system now, residents will find the coming of natural gas a benefit, since it will bring down the price of other fuels.

There is also an important national defence aspect, so far as the Montreal area is concerned. Oil supplies to Montreal come from sources outside Canada, principally the South American countries, and during wartime the movement of tankers is seriously hampered. With the completion of an all-Canadian gas pipe line, adequate fuel supplies will be assured regardless of enemy action at sea.

A rather more specialized but none the less important field is the production of petrochemicals. A very limited supply of these hydrocarbon by-products is now obtained from Montreal oil refineries, but there is a virtual ceiling on their production. Natural gas will raise that ceiling substantially, if not remove it altogether.

I should like to restate a point upon which I touched earlier. When I speak of energy resulting from natural gas, I am speaking of the fuel aspect rather than the power aspect, the supplying of heat rather than lighting or the turning of wheels. The province of Quebec, and particularly the industrial and manufacturing area of Montreal, must adopt the use of low-cost natural gas if it is to keep pace with industrial development in Ontario.

Canada's economic and social development in recent years has not been the result of occult forces working beyond our human understanding. It has been the result of careful planning and courageous action. The prime function of good government is to create the atmosphere in which progressive planning can be done and productive action can be taken. The present government has created and maintained such an atmosphere. It has not rushed heedlessly into disaster, but neither has it hung back in indecision when the moment arrived for positive accomplishment.

An hon. Member: Give us the author.

Mr. Macnaughton: The time has arrived once again for such accomplishment, and once again the government has its carefully considered plan. In a democracy the essential economic factor is competition. The competitive spirit has brought the minerals from beneath the surface of Canadian soil, built Canadian cities, planted Canadian wheat fields, constructed roads and waterways. It follows, then, that the introduction of another and competitive fuel will stimulate our economy still further. It will lead to the further use of our ingenuity and skill. It will promote economic expansion in all its phases.

The proposition is simple. Natural gas is available in almost unlimited quantities in Alberta; the potential customers are for the most part concentrated in Ontario and Quebec. Therefore the need is to get the gas to the customers. Because of the difficulties of distance and geography, it will cost $375 million to build a pipe line across Canada. That is a great deal of money, so great in fact that it has apparently frightened our major Canadian investors out of their financial wits. The same thing happened in the early days of the Alberta oil fields. Anyone with $8 had a chance to get in on the ground floor there, but most Canadians were looking the other way, with their $8 pinned inside their pockets. Consequently the exploration and exploitation of Alberta oil had to be undertaken by United States capital and with the help of American technical knowledge and experience. The inevitable result is that the profits of American enterprise are now going to Americans, but no one has suggested that this is a national disaster.

The same situation exists with regard to Alberta natural gas. If Canadians had come forward with a satisfactory proposal, Canadians would now be building the trans-Canada pipe line. Since no Canadians did come forward, the government had no choice but to accept the offer of interests in the United States.

Is this not a prime illustration of democracy at work? The Leader of the Opposition does not think so. The Leader of the Opposition, who insists that his party, and his party alone, is the last outpost of sturdy free enterprise, refuses to recognize—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but it is my duty to tell him that his time has expired.

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): By the sounds that are coming from the other side, they are not all seals over there. There are some other types of animals. There are a number of bulls and horses over there.

An hon. Member: You have goats on that side.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): But I wish they would restrain their enthusiasm for just a few minutes so one could put forward a few ideas in connection with this bill. I realize that perhaps it is embarrassing to members of the government to have these arguments put forward. I realize that once closure has been introduced it is very much in their interest to harass, to rile and to make these cat-calls, but the time is getting toward twelve o'clock, and whatever time they can bring themselves to give me I shall be content to have.

Referring to the hon. member for Mount Royal, who just finished his speech—

Mr. Ellis: Reading an essay.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): —I must say that I attempted to follow him as well as I could. I think he established one small record for my time in the house. I have heard before now in the house speeches which I felt were being read, but this is the first time I have ever seen any member in the house construct his own lectern in front of him, composed of a couple of volumes of Hansards, to keep his speech up off the desk so he could read it.

Mr. Pickersgill: What has the hon. gentleman in front of him?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I challenge the hon. member for Mount Royal to take those so-called notes he had there and send them over to any member of the press gallery and let them compare those notes with what went down on Hansard so that we can see what difference, if any, there is. It is my personal opinion that, with the exception of one or two words, there will be no more difference—

An hon. Member: Make the same challenge with the hon. member for Three Rivers.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The hon. member for Mount Royal, toward the close of his remarks, made one statement to which I would just like to refer for a moment. I took it down quickly. As I remember it, he said that if Canadians had come forward with a satisfactory proposal, Canadians would be doing this job. I think that is a fair interpretation of his remarks.

I do not think we can remind this house too often that we have before us, filed after it was eventually turned out of the pockets of the Minister of Trade and Commerce or wherever he keeps his documents, a complete presentation by a Canadian named McMahon in which he sets out how he plans to build this project, sets out the source of supply for his pipe, and engages himself firmly to back his judgment with $500,000 of his own money as a bond which will be sacrificed if he does not perform. That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly $500,000 more than Mr. Murchison or anybody else interested in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines is putting up as a guarantee that their judgment is right or that they are going to be able to do this job.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Dickey: Eight million dollars.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Having dealt with at least that one point in the hon. member's speech, may I say that I listened carefully, Mr. Speaker, and I feel that not too many of the others, if any, bore directly on the pipe-line debate.

I should like to remind the house again of something which I think the government at least seems to have forgotten. This is not a mere single pipe line which is being constructed. This approach to the problem at this time is going to establish a basic definitive policy for the transportation of gas in Canada for all time to come. It is a historic breakthrough in that connection. It is not an isolated example. It is establishing a basic policy. Therefore when we consider this matter we have to look at it not in the light of a single isolated example, not in the light of particular geographical or local interests, but in the light of the future policy of Canada and the future development of this country.

Within that framework, Mr. Speaker, I think it is pretty generally agreed that if a country is to grow, prosper and develop, then control of its own economic interests must rest within its own borders. In that respect there is nothing wrong with the investment of foreign funds in a country. That is a good thing. But there is something radically wrong with foreign control of a country or foreign control of any major economic field in that country. That is bad. I suggest that as a touchstone in this whole matter, as a basic approach to it, we should be seeking something which will give us the maximum foreign investment needed in Canada with the minimum foreign control.

I suggest to you further, Mr. Speaker, that this particular bill is a complete reversal of that process. It gives us, as far as I can see, a minimum of foreign investment with a maximum of foreign control and is completely abhorrent to the other proposition I put forward, which I certainly think is in the best interests not only of the economy of Canada but of the economy of any country.

If we are going to encourage foreign investment in Canada it is certainly necessary that we know the fields in which this should be done, and I suggest that transportation is one field in which, while possibly welcoming investment, we should fight against control.

I think one can put forward in support of that argument something that one might call the vital industry theory. I suggest that there are the usual two breakdowns of any country's economy, the primary, which is the extraction of raw materials, and the secondary, which is their production into finished goods. But I suggest that beyond these two fields there is a third field of economic endeavour which we might call vital industry. That field can be broken down into three essential divisions, the banks and finance, because without finance we cannot build; energy supply, because without energy we cannot produce; and transportation, because without transportation we cannot market.

To date we in Canada have been fortunate in that our banking enterprises have developed as Canadian enterprises and under Canadian control. Our transportation, rail particularly which is the base but air lines and steamships as well, has again developed either under Canadian control or completely in Canadian hands.

Mr. Lesage: What about the C.P.R.?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): We have a system that is competitive with the C.P.R., Canadian National Railways, and as long as you have one particular company in a field—

Mr. Lesage: You are changing your story.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): —which is of major importance and which is under the control of Canadians we do not need to worry too much about what happens to the other competing interests in that field. But we must have first and foremost one Canadian operation in every one of these fields.

Having said that, I turn to the supply of energy, and here we find that while we have been reasonably successful in retaining control of some energy sources, coal, electric power and atomic power, control and domination of the sources of supply in the petroleum and natural gas field has fallen into the hands of United States interests. Nonetheless we as Canadians are still able to control our destiny and our future in that field if we control the transportation of that particular source of energy, the way in which it moves from one point in Canada to another. However, if we do not control the movement of that particular source of energy we have sold out to foreign interests what is perhaps the most important source of energy to come to our modern civilization.

Regrettably, because of time limitations, I shall not expand upon why natural gas is such a vitally important source of energy. However, I do feel the point should be made that it is not just another minor source of energy but is perhaps the principal source that we are going to see put to use in the next few years. We only have to look at the United States for evidence of the explosive nature of this particular commodity in so far as the supply of energy is concerned.

We know, because these arguments have been introduced and have been buttressed on this side, that in the first instance the bill before us gives no guarantee whatsoever of construction of this pipe line. Why, Mr. Speaker, in the agreement there are 27 escape clauses. They range from acts of God at the beginning down to wars and washouts at the end, and if ever there was a washout it is this bill as presented by the government.

I am being polite tonight, Mr. Speaker. I have restricted myself, and perhaps one good reason for 20 minute speeches is that they cut out some of the nicer things one could say to the government benches.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the hon. gentleman lost his place?

Mr. Fleming: You have lost your way.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Second, we also know that the bill proposes to use the Canadian taxpayers' funds to subsidize United States interests.

Mr. McIlraith: Not to subsidize; use better language than that.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): If some of these interrupters from the other side will stand up and make their own speeches instead of making these interjections, those of us on this side will be very glad to hear them. I repeat, the purpose of this bill is to use government funds, taxpayers' funds, for the subsidization and assistance of United States interests who propose to build the pipe line.

Mr. McIlraith: That is not an accurate way of stating it.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Does the house realize, and particularly does the government realize, that we are in the process of building the biggest monopoly in a tremendously important field that this country has ever seen? The reason I suggest that to you, Mr. Speaker, is this. One of the principal companies controlling the source of natural gas in Alberta is the Canadian Delhi Oil Company, and Mr. Murchison is the president. The largest single shareholder in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines is the Canadian Delhi Oil Company, and Mr. Murchison is president. In other words, here is something we have never seen to my knowledge in Canada before. We are not only turning over control of the pipe line to a United States corporation and a United States financier, but we are enabling him to integrate this trans-Canada pipe line into a system of supplying natural gas which he has already built up, so that immediately this bill goes through and he gains control, we will have a continuous flow from deep within the ground right down to the companies that consume it, all under the control of this single individual.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely this has been more than 20 minutes.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): No, but the facts make it sound longer when they are embarrassing.

I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce why on earth it is necessary to build a 34-inch pipe line from Alberta down to the Winnipeg border. I wonder if he knows, for example, that 34-inch pipe lines are almost unheard of even in the United States where they are servicing great cities. The "big inch" pipe line, which is one of their most important transportation units for natural gas, running from Texas—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Natural gas? The "big inch" was built for oil.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The "big inch" was built for oil, but there has been gas running through it for the last seven years.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): But it was not the "big inch" any more when they put gas through it.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): It is the "big inch" pipe line to which I am referring. The minister need not try to confuse the issue, because if he knows what the situation is he knows it is being used as one of the principal sources of supply for the city of New York, bringing gas from Texas. He knows it is a 24-inch pipe line.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): He knows that it is not the principal source of gas supply for New York.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): New York, which has within its boundaries as great a population as we have in all eastern Canada, or almost in Canada, is satisfied with a 24-inch pipe line. Pipe lines throughout the United States are 16, 20 or 24 inches in the majority of cases. We are proposing to construct a 34-inch pipe line from western Canada to Winnipeg, and a 30-inch pipe line from Winnipeg east.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I hope no one is taking you seriously on that information.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): This is contrary to every construction practice in the pipe-line industry that I have been able to discover. They prefer to build their pipe lines of a smaller diameter, and then repeat the process by looping them if and when necessary.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me leave on the record one last observation, and it will not be my own. It is an observation of the Toronto Daily Star and appeared in the issue of March 17, 1956. In the last paragraph of the editorial they say, and I must say I agree with them:

> The Trans-Canada deal is so bad that it deserves to be laughed out of parliament. But with the government standing pat, and the Liberal majority evidently ready to fall into line, it is no laughing matter. The stage is being set for a Canadian tragedy.

Mr. Donald D. Carrick (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, although it is late in the evening—

Mr. Nicholson: Early in the morning.

Mr. Carrick: Early in the morning, my friend has corrected me quite accurately, and this is the 65th address in the debate on this proposed legislation, I hope I will be able to add something to what has been said already.

In the course of this debate the position of the various parties has become transparently clear. The C.C.F. position from the first has been the support of public ownership of the line to transport gas across Canada. They brook no compromise with that position; it is outright public ownership. The position the Conservative party has now taken is that there should be a reference of this matter to a committee in order to determine whether the line can be financed by Canadian capital, and if it cannot then there should be public ownership. The position of the Liberal party, of course, is that this line should be constructed by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines.

In the course of this debate, when the house has been sitting long hours and when feelings have been strong on the issue, there have been many things said, attacks upon people, which I think will not commend themselves to the judgment of many of the electors. I do not propose to indulge in any way in that type of debate. I believe the facts in this case are so eloquent that if they are only stated to the people they will agree that the solution adopted by the Liberal government is the only possible solution under the circumstances. May I just remind hon. members that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines was incorporated in 1951, and Western Pipe Lines at about the same time. In 1953 when they applied to Premier Manning of Alberta for permission to export gas from Alberta, Mr. Manning said that neither, independently, was qualified, and he asked the Prime Minister if he would use his good offices to bring these two companies together.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce undertook that task and in January, 1954, he brought together the people who had backed Trans-Canada Pipe Lines and Western Pipe Lines Limited. The result was that this company, made up of new interests as well as the old but retaining the old name, made application to the premier of Alberta for permission to export gas from Alberta. I think, technically speaking, the application was made to the petroleum board of Alberta. In any event, permission was granted to Trans-Canada to export 500 million cubic feet daily from Alberta, of which 200 million cubic feet could be exported to the United States via Emerson and they were obliged to reserve 300 million cubic feet for Canadian use. I need not recall the debates that took place in this house when all parties were agreed that the trans-Canada pipe line should run through an all-Canadian route.

Following permission to export gas from Alberta, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines obtained permission from the board of transport commissioners to lay their pipe across Canada. They also proceeded to make arrangements with the suppliers of gas in Alberta, and they proceeded to arrange for the distribution of gas to the consumers. I believe that Trans-Canada does not deal with the consumers directly; it deals with distributing companies. The result was that in 1954 Trans-Canada was in a position where it could try to arrange its finances.

After investigation it found that it could not successfully finance the project under the set-up that existed at that time. It was not economically feasible; therefore an application was made to this government for help. The government refused to guarantee bonds, as was first requested, to be issued by the Trans-Canada company. The company then made application to the industrial development bank, but the terms laid down by the bank were such that they could not be accepted by the Trans-Canada company.

That brought the company up to 1955. In that year it made arrangements with Tennessee Gas Transmission Company to sell 200 million cubic feet daily in the Minneapolis market via Emerson. If it had been able to make those sales Trans-Canada was confident that it would be able to finance the line. As hon. members know, the right to transport and sell gas in the United States depends upon the permission of the federal power commission. The opponents of the backers of Trans-Canada opposed the application before the federal power commission. Northern Natural Gas Company had previously a contract with Trans-Canada and they spearheaded the attack before the federal power commission, as a result of which no decision has been given by the federal power commission.

It was under those circumstances that the Trans-Canada company approached the government, and the result is the proposal we now have before the house. It proposes that Trans-Canada construct the line from the western end of Alberta to Montreal, Quebec, and that the western section be financed to the extent of 90 per cent of the cost, not to exceed $80 million, by the government. The western section is to extend from Alberta to Winnipeg. Trans-Canada is to construct the line from Winnipeg to the western boundary of Ontario.

Under the proposal the federal government, together with the Ontario government, is to construct the line from the western border of Ontario to Kapuskasing, Ontario, at a cost of $118 million, and Trans-Canada is to carry the line from Kapuskasing, Ontario, down to Toronto and to Montreal, Quebec. This is the proposal now before the house.

The position of the Conservative party is that Trans-Canada should not be assisted as long as there is a possibility of the project being financed from Canadian capital. Anyone who has perused the documents of Mr. McMahon tabled by the Minister of Trade and Commerce will see, as has been mentioned on a number of occasions in this house, that they involve a condition which makes it absolutely impossible for the government to accept the proposal. The necessary condition of that proposal was that 400 million cubic feet daily be exported to the United States via Minneapolis, which would leave only 100 million cubic feet daily available for the Canadian market, which is only one-third of the requirement of the Canadian market.

The only other proposal put forward was put forward by Gairdner and Company. Their proposal was inadequate because, among other things, they asked for a 10-year exemption from income tax. That was unacceptable to the government. Even in their last letter they said that they might be able to eliminate that on certain conditions, but they did not say what the conditions were. Besides, the government were not satisfied, in spite of what they said, that Gairdner and Company could get the pipe.

I do not think it has been mentioned in the house that Gairdner and Company contemplated constituting a corporation in which Trans-Canada was to have a part of the equity. One needs only to state that to hon. members to indicate how impossible it would be for Gairdner and Company to make any such arrangement. So the net result was that there was no Canadian company that could possibly finance this project. The fact has been mentioned often that the only company that has pipe available to start construction in 1956 is the Trans-Canada company.

Now, it must be obvious to everyone that in these circumstances there was only one company available to carry on this project. It may have come as a surprise to some hon. members to see the urgency that was established by the evidence in the letters of Mr. Manning, premier of Alberta, and of Mr. Campbell, premier of Manitoba, and of Mr. Porter, treasurer of Ontario. Anyone reading those letters could have no doubt whatsoever why it was absolutely necessary to get the western end of the pipe line constructed this year. That was the situation in which the government found itself.

I would like to submit for the consideration of the house some suggestions in connection with the charge that has been made that the Canadian taxpayers' money should not be used to finance Trans-Canada because at the present time it is about 83 per cent controlled in the United States. I think all hon. members will agree with me that all parties in this house are in favour of importing capital from the United States. The Leader of the Opposition has made it quite clear that when he was premier of Ontario he took steps to see that this was done, and all parties are agreed upon that. I think all parties will agree that if imported capital is to be brought in from the United States, that capital is entitled to a fair return on its money.

I point out this fact to hon. members. What the government is doing in helping Trans-Canada in connection with the northern Ontario sector and in connection with the western section is to enable Trans-Canada to construct this pipe line and arrange its financing. This is the important point. It has been established that Trans-Canada will need to raise $257 million in order to construct this line in Canada. Well, that $257 million can be raised only in two places. It can be raised either in Canada or in the United States. If it is raised in Canada everybody is in agreement that it is a good thing; and if it is raised in the United States everybody is in agreement that it is a good thing because it imports capital into Canada. Under these circumstances, how can there be any reasonable objection to the proposal that the government makes to help the Trans-Canada line?

I wish to deal for the moment with the charge that this is a sell-out of Canada's natural resources. The owners and the large suppliers of gas in Alberta include Canadian Gulf, which owns about one-third of the supply and is the largest owner. I am now refreshing hon. members' memories on certain facts given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Hudson Bay Oil and Gas is the second largest owner and Canadian Delhi is the fourth. At the present time these three companies are backers of Trans-Canada to the extent of 58·9 per cent. In other words, the backers of Trans-Canada are merely trying to a large extent to sell their own gas. I ask hon. members in all fairness in these circumstances how it can be suggested that any group of persons who are trying to sell what they already own are selling out the natural resources of Canada?

A great deal has been made of the monopoly position of this company. I do not want to embark on a discussion of monopolies or the policy of this government as laid down under the Combines Investigation Act. I point out to hon. members, however, that under the Combines Investigation Act there is nothing wrong with being a monopoly. It is only when a monopoly operates or is likely to operate to the detriment of the public that there is anything objectionable to it. I think it would be a very difficult task to prove that the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company, with its rate of profits which can be controlled by the federal government and with the price the distributors can charge to the consumers controlled, would be acting in a way that is detrimental to the Canadian public.

Mr. Speaker, time alone will prove whether or not the legislation before the house is in the interest of Canada. I am confident that time will vindicate the judgment of this government and that the trans-Canada pipeline project will stand as a monument to the courage, foresight and wisdom of this government and the great Liberal party of Canada.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to find all the hon. members in such good humour so early in the morning. My first remarks must be directed to some of the problems affecting the province of Saskatchewan. I want to pass over the references made by the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Rosthern; one expects from them the sort of nonsense they presented to the house. The hon. member for Rosthern went back to Saskatchewan and tested public opinion on two occasions. The alternative he presented was Tucker or tyranny. Well, the people did not choose Tucker and I think even he would not suggest that the people of Saskatchewan chose tyranny or have had tyranny.

However, I am sure hon. members were somewhat surprised tonight to hear the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) make his assault on public ownership. I am sure hon. members in all sections of the house will agree we have not changed our fundamental principles since we came here. I am sure, too, hon. members are curious to know why the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre joined the C.C.F. party and why he stayed so long in the party when his views were those he expressed tonight.

I want to say if the hon. member knows as little about the business of hardware as he knows about the subjects he discussed tonight, the Moose Jaw hardware and Allied hardwares are in for rough weather. The hon. member stated that the people of Saskatchewan have no alternative but to sell lumber through the crown timber board. That is nonsense and if the hon. member knows anything about Saskatchewan he knows that any citizen in Saskatchewan who has timber on his land can sell his timber where he likes and at whatever price he can get. The hon. member should know that The Pas Lumber Company—although we have a very interesting Indian name, it is one of those companies with head offices in Minneapolis—has sold 200 million feet of lumber in the last ten years.

The government of Saskatchewan honoured the agreement which was made prior to 1930 when the natural resources were alienated by the federal government of that day before turning over the property to the government. This company has had the best timber in the province. It was in the most favoured freight rate area, and it sold most of its cut in the United States, as might have been expected. At the same time, when The Pas Lumber Company was paying $1 million for the best timber in the province the timber board was contributing to the treasury of the province $3 million in royalties in that period, and $3 million in profits. In other words, $6 million was paid by the crown corporation for harvesting the scattered lots of timber all over the province.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre referred to the fur marketing service and said it was compulsory to sell fur to the marketing agency—

Mr. Pickersgill: What has this to do with the bill? We are tired of the Saskatchewan elections.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member for Rosthern and the Minister of Agriculture and the—

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, but it gets boring after a while.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): You look after your babies.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre who took time during this debate when he had nothing more useful to do than talk about these things—

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I submit, sir, that there are members elected to this house from nine other provinces besides the province of Saskatchewan and this bill has nothing to do with the Saskatchewan provincial election.

Mrs. Fairclough: Why did you not tell that to the hon. member for Rosthern; it was all right for him to bring it up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I do not want to spend any more time than I have to on points of order. In view of the nature of the speech made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre in which he used a large number of examples to demonstrate the argument he was making that public ownership was not the solution to the present problem, I think the hon. member who has the floor might be permitted to reply; but I would advise him to bring his reply into line with the general argument and not to discuss matters that do not relate to the bill.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I must remind you that we are now under closure. I have only 20 minutes in which to reply, and I hope the interruptions of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will not further reduce my time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am also a member of this house and I do not take anything like the amount of time the hon. member takes. We get very tired of your box cars.

Mr. Dufresne: Go and have a good sleep. It is about time for babies to be in bed.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Who cares how tired you are?

Mr. Nicholson: I suggest that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration go home to bed if he is too tired to discharge the duties for which the taxpayers of Canada are paying him $27,000 a year. If he is too tired to listen he can go home to bed, because we can get along very well without him.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have spoiled that speech for circulation anyway, and that was my main objective.

Mr. Dufresne: Go and put the babies to bed.

Mr. Pickersgill: This speech will not be of any use to send out to your constituents now.

Mr. Nicholson: I was going to make a reference which would give the government a little comfort. Mr. C. M. Fines, the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan, in his budget speech admitted the fact that we have some problems in connection with public ownership in Saskatchewan. He referred to the fish board, the shoe factory, the tannery and the woollen mill. He said that in spite of that the experience in public ownership in Saskatchewan in the last 12 years has given us a record of achievement that no political party in Canada is going to challenge on June 20.

Mr. Tucker: Why didn't they build the cement plant under public ownership?

Mr. Nicholson: I shall not take time to deal with that.

Mr. Tucker: Just tell us why.

Mr. Nicholson: I want to say—

Mr. Ellis: You voted against the cement plant.

Mr. Tucker: I did not vote against it at all.

Mr. Ellis: You try to sabotage everything we do.

Mr. Tucker: Tell us about the cement plant and why you did not establish that under public ownership?

Mr. Charlton: What about your success out there?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Fines, our provincial treasurer, admits that we have had certain problems in the province of Saskatchewan; but in spite of that the government airways, the forest products, the government insurance office, the government fur marketing agency, Saskatchewan minerals, Saskatchewan government printing, Saskatchewan transportation, Saskatchewan power corporation and Saskatchewan government telephones have all had enviable records and have returned to the people of Saskatchewan a very substantial return on their investment.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre complained about our compulsory automobile insurance. I have here my registration certificate which shows that I paid $20 for compulsory insurance and $15 for my licence. We take the view in Saskatchewan that it is equally important to provide protection for the people of the province who are injured by automobiles as it is to provide licences. For the payment of $40.50 I have a policy with $50 deductible which compares with the policy that would cost me $100 in Ontario. In other words, the motorist in Ontario pays as much commission to the agent who writes his insurance as I pay for the insurance on my automobile.

An hon. Member: What about the pipe line?

Mr. Pickersgill: Sit down and let someone talk about the pipe line bill.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, over the week end I went up to my old home in Bruce county and a 14-year old school girl—

An hon. Member: We are not on divorces now.

Mr. Harris: I am sure that hon. members would like to hear what the hon. member for Mackenzie is saying, whether or not it would be in order. If he completes his remarks at about a quarter or ten minutes to one or thereabouts, it will mean only 20 minutes for the record. Even if his remarks do relate to matters in Saskatchewan rather than to the pipe line I suggest that perhaps our affairs this evening might be finished sooner if he were permitted to continue without interruption. Then those who support him will feel that he has done something for their cause and those on this side will feel the same.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I must thank the Minister of Finance for his interjection. I felt that I was in order in view of the hearty applause received by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre who went a considerable way in his references to Saskatchewan. This 14-year old girl who lost her father—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I am willing to assume that the hon. member is starting a sentence which will conclude with a reference to the pipe line, and I would request hon. members to proceed on the same assumption and permit the hon. member for Mackenzie to speak.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, this 14-year old school girl, whose father gave his life for Canada before this girl was one year old—her father was an eye specialist, who had spent three years in post-graduate training before he gave his life for Canada—asked me, "Are we going to give away this valuable natural resource to the Americans?" I submit that a great many people are not aware of the fact that opposition members cannot do everything. I had to explain to this school girl that I was only a member of the opposition. But it was interesting to note that in old Bruce county, where so many people have been Liberals for so many years this girl by the name of Mackenzie who had never heard about the C.C.F. was disturbed at the prospect presently before Canada.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier was one of my heroes when I was a lad, and he felt that closure was most unbecoming in this Canada of ours. He said:

> But, sir, I also have the honour to belong to the great Liberal party of Canada. I have occupied a position of some importance in it; nay, I may say that for twenty years and more I have been entrusted with its chief command. During the fifteen years I was in office it sometimes happened that friends came to me and told me that I was not doing justice to myself and to the party, but that I should impose closure, as had been done in many other parliaments. Sir, I am a Liberal of the old school; I have been brought up in the school of Fox and of the old leaders of the Liberal party; and I could not bring myself to the point of depriving a minority in parliament of such a valuable weapon as it would be deprived of by the introduction of closure.

And then later:

Let me repeat to my right honourable friend: As you sow, so shall you reap; as you are fair, so shall you meet with fairness; as you are unjust, so shall you meet with injustice. . . . The poison that he offers to us today will come to his own lips at some future day. We are in the minority; we can be gagged; we can be prevented from expressing our opinions; they can trample upon our rights; sir, the day of reckoning will come, and it will come as soon as we have a dissolution of the present parliament.

I submit that the performance we have witnessed here is unbecoming to any democratic country. The government has been unwilling to allow us to discuss this question at sufficient length, as is indicated by the interruptions I have had during the major part of my time tonight. I was simply trying to reply to remarks which were in order when the Minister of Agriculture was on his feet, when the hon. member for Rosthern was on his feet, and when the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was saying everything that was so pleasing to the government.

The proposal to build this pipe line under public ownership really would not place any strain on the resources of Canada, and no one knows this better than the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This is the minister who developed T.C.A. at a time when private enterprise was not prepared to put risk capital into such an uncertain venture. I remember when the Minister of Trade and Commerce got $50 million from the public treasury for Polymer. The large rubber and petroleum companies might have been expected to put in risk capital, but when we lost our source of natural rubber the Minister of Trade and Commerce risked his reputation and risked $50 million of the money of the Canadian people to try out this new process for the manufacture of rubber. I think the experience we have had in those two fields should demonstrate that this important development should be undertaken from the beginning under public ownership.

I know the problems of management that we have had in Saskatchewan. The Minister of Trade and Commerce knows that he has trained a great many young people in his department who have been picked up by private enterprise and paid double the salaries he was able to pay. That is a matter of real concern to every cabinet minister in this house. That is the retaining in the public service of some of our best people when such large salaries are being offered by private enterprise, when the corporations which pay these high salaries can dip into the public treasury by means of the corporation tax to compel the taxpayers to pay salaries which are sometimes three or four times as high as these men would have had in the public service.

So I suggest that the government should face up to the fact that it cannot ask the people of Canada to bail out a corporation of which 83 per cent is controlled south of the border when they are unwilling to risk more than a very small percentage, and when they refuse to move unless they are guaranteed that they will have the taxpayers of Canada run the real risks.

Mr. J. H. Dickey (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in rising—

Some hon. Members: No; sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What is the order now? I just came to the chair.

Mr. Richardson: May I move that the hon. member for Halifax be now heard?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Ellis: You have closure already. What more do you want?

Mr. Speaker: If the motion of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is to be proposed, it is one of those motions that must be put forthwith. If it is to provoke a division, then the time that is being left now will not be used by anyone. I would suggest to the hon. member that he would do well to withdraw his motion, if he has unanimous consent. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: According to the record here, prior to the hon. member for Mackenzie, the hon. member for Trinity had spoken. Prior to him the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace, and prior to him the hon. member for Queens and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings—

Some hon. Members: No. The hon. member for Mount Royal.

Mr. Speaker: Of course this matter could be easily settled. There is a possibility of 45 minutes left—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Fifteen minutes; but if the hon. member for Middlesex East were to conclude at one minute to one, the hon. member for Halifax could rise at one minute to one and speak for 19 minutes. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather historic occasion. It is 24 years since closure was last used in this house. I would point out that the history of closure has shown that it has not been a profitable course to follow. People generally look on it as a way of stopping free speech and as a way of circumventing parliament and the people; consequently they view it with a certain amount of alarm.

Changing the subject, I want to say something about the pipe line. There are a few questions that could be asked the government by the people as to just what is going on. One of the questions they are almost certain to ask is why the unseemly haste, when five years have elapsed since the granting of the charter to this company and their time has been extended from time to time. If there was all the urgency that the government would now like to convince parliament and the people exists, why did they not do it the first time the company defaulted some three years ago, and not wait until four months after parliament had convened to urge upon us that there was some emergency?

There is an answer behind this activity, too. Governments, whether they be paternal, autocratic, totalitarian or democratic, are not eternal. Therefore, in this government's lifetime, this line must be built for its friends. That is the motive behind this unseemly haste during the past few days. The question arises, who are the people that are actually behind this Trans-Canada Pipe Line company? They are primarily—not entirely, but primarily,—those Americans who now own and control the gas resources in Alberta.

Then there is another question that should be asked. What about Canadian markets? There is a very strange silence at that particular level. Apparently there is a wait and see attitude in the municipalities, towns and cities. There is one answer, however, that is obvious; and that answer is that the consumer will not buy unless it is sold at a competitive price. I would say from my talks with residents in Ontario that I cannot find any pronounced demand and enthusiasm or any crying need for immediate gas supplies. As a long-range proposition, I would say yes without hesitation; but even then there is a question mark in my mind. Will the atomic age make the gas pipe line obsolete just as the atomic age and the age of the airplane made the Maginot line in Europe obsolete?

Then another question arises. The company having assured the parliamentary committee that there was abundant financing available without any difficulty, that there were abundant supplies of gas and there was an eastern market and, above all, that there would be a Canadian line, what do we find? We find that until the federal power commission in the United States grants permission for the importation of Canadian gas into the United States the Trans-Canada company is not interested in proceeding. We find also that the original intention of the company, though well disguised, was not to supply eastern Canada but to supply a lucrative market south of the border.

So, after five years of jockeying for position, where do we find ourselves? Trans-Canada Pipe Lines have so manipulated the course of events that the Canadian people are being forced by the government under closure and threat of further closure to finance in large measure a privately-owned pipe-line venture largely for the direct benefit of a small number of United States interests holding vast supplies of Canadian gas.

Then there is another question. Will eastern Ontario and Quebec consumers benefit? I would say not appreciably, because the gas will be sold at the highest competitive price at which it can be sold. Then there are other considerations. As far as I can find out, no cities and towns have evinced publicly any great desire to secure western gas, and it is quite within the realm of possibility and, in fact, I would say it is more than likely that Canadians will be asked to subsidize this line further after it has been completed so that the price of gas in the east can be made competitive with the prices of other fuels. I think this matter should be very seriously considered. I can see deficits and further votes of public funds might well be the order of the day for parliaments of the future, maybe for years to come.

As far as the western leg of the line from Alberta to Winnipeg is concerned, I can understand and appreciate the interest and desire of those provinces to have the line completed at the earliest possible moment. I can see where it is a great asset to those western provinces, but once again I ask: Why should the province of British Columbia, all of the province of Quebec beyond the city of Montreal and the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland have any enthusiasm for such a project?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): How about the St. Lawrence seaway?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): That is a different proposition.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): All the other provinces have to contribute toward it.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): That is for the marketing of your western grain. Why should the maritimes be enthusiastic when the federal government has not been able to assist the maritimes with projects that have been on the drawing boards for many years and which have been promptly forgotten after every election? No farmer in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario and no person in the small communities or towns off the main line will benefit directly from the pipe line. It is worth noting that the province of Quebec has abstained from any participation in this questionable undertaking, and no one in the government has given any indication of what the delivered price will be in central Canada.

Then there are some other angles that should also be considered. Probably not many Canadians are aware of the fact that during the second great war thousands and thousands of users of gas were deprived of fuel because the Americans refused supplies to the southwestern Ontario region, particularly the city of London. During the war thousands of people had to remove the gas equipment from their furnaces and reconvert to some other fuel.

When the chips are down, Mr. Speaker, the Americans do not hesitate to look after their own interests first. Whether it be a gas line, whether it be tariffs or trade relations, the United States of America comes first on every occasion. The question arises whether we are prepared to subsidize private interests. I rather think we should not. But I believe Canadians are prepared to subsidize, if necessary, Canadian ownership, however distasteful it may be, rather than see the line owned and controlled by United States interests. It is my opinion that it is better to guarantee bonds sold to Canadians than to guarantee profits to Americans.

There is another question I want to bring to the attention of the house. I cannot support the C.C.F. amendment because it precludes all the other angles that we have sought to bring before a committee. I believe the line can be built by private industry and without the use of the taxpayers' money. Then there is another point. So far we have been talking about securing pipe in the United States of America. I understand a plant is under construction in Canada that will produce 34-inch pipe. If we were not in such a hurry we could use Canadian-made pipe and give employment to Canadian labour in the building of that pipe to be used in constructing a Canadian pipe line. But no, we are in such a hurry that we cannot even give these benefits to our Canadian people.

Mr. J. H. Dickey (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I shall undertake not to detain the house but there was one specific point that in view of the speech of the hon. member for Nanaimo, I thought should be dealt with before the vote is taken. I had thought that the Prime Minister had dealt adequately this afternoon with the situation in so far as it applies to the option agreement covering the pipe, but it was obvious from the speech of the hon. member for Nanaimo that he did not understand the situation and perhaps other members did not.

The situation is very clear and very simple. As stated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and as disclosed by the documents which have been tabled in the house, the original option agreement was operative in favour of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited on the granting of a favourable decision by the federal power commission with respect to the application for the import into the United States of Canadian natural gas. Those rights in favour of Trans-Canada are still in effect and can be exercised by Trans-Canada if events transpire in a way that they can be exercised. In other words, if the federal power commission were to grant a permit tomorrow, then under the original agreement Trans-Canada would still be in a position to exercise that option and get the pipe.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, but there is a big if there—if, if, if.

Mr. Dickey: Now, what is the effect of the agreement of May 11 which was also tabled in the house and which was quoted this afternoon by the Prime Minister? The effect of that agreement is first of all to keep in effect the original option agreement operative as I have described, and the second effect is to create a new and additional right on behalf of Trans-Canada to exercise that option in the event that the government of Canada is, by the 7th of June, in a position to act under clause 1 of the agreement between Trans-Canada and the federal government dated May 8. This is a new right. It is a right in addition, and it is within the power of Trans-Canada to exercise that option whenever the notice under clause 1 of the agreement of May 8 is given.

Mr. Hodgson: There is a lot of doubt there too.

Mr. Dickey: If the situation were as described by the hon. member for Nanaimo and previously described by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the effect of this agreement would be that the approval of the federal power commission is a condition precedent to the operation of both these options, which is not correct. There are two rights. There is the option to proceed on a favourable decision by the federal power commission, and there is the further option under the agreement of May 11 to proceed in spite of the federal power commission but on the basis of notice being given by this government under clause 1 of the agreement of May 8.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does the hon. member read the words "in addition to", as though they were "in spite of"?

Mr. Dickey: The hon. member misunderstands the meaning of an option agreement. An option agreement gives a right that can be exercised in certain circumstances, but it does not say that the right cannot be exercised in other circumstances. The situation under these agreements is as indicated in the house this afternoon by the Prime Minister that Trans-Canada under the agreement of May 11 has an option that it can exercise under the circumstances contained in that agreement, quite apart from the separate and prior option which is provided for in the original option agreement. I see the hon. member is trying to get to his feet to ask me another question. If he does not understand the situation I am afraid that I cannot explain it to him here in the house, because—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Has the hon. member read the letter of transmittal written by one of the companies which signed this agreement and written on the same day?

Mr. Dickey: Certainly.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Then has he noted the clause in which it says that clause 2 of the option agreement shall remain operative?

Mr. Dickey: Certainly, Mr. Speaker; that is what keeps in effect the right of Trans-Canada to exercise the original option.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): It sets forth the terms under which it can be exercised.

Mr. Dickey: The hon. member is misunderstanding me either intentionally or unintentionally, I do not know which. The agreements and documents are crystal clear. There are two options and Trans-Canada is free to proceed and exercise its options under either one, whichever happens first. That is clearly the situation.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, this is not in committee.

Mr. Knowles: The parliamentary assistant seems willing. I shall not pursue the other question. The hon. member has not convinced me, but our position is on the record. May I ask him this question. If he now refers to this as an option agreement, how does he square that with his minister's statement that this was a firm contract?

Mr. Dickey: Because it is stated in firm terms.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dickey: The terms which were put on the record this afternoon by the Prime Minister are, "hereby agrees to and shall assign to Trans-Canada and all such parties' interest and obligations in purchase orders..." etc, and it goes on to deal with the pipe. It says "shall" and not "may", which would be permissive.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I just want to call the attention of the house back to the commencement of the debate on the resolution which preceded this bill. At that time the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated, as reported at page 3860 of Hansard for May 14, 1956:

> The course of action the government proposes is based upon certain inescapable facts. The first of these is that if the western part of this pipe line system is not started this year it probably cannot be started before 1958. The second is that for the Alberta gas and oil producing industry, and for consumers eastward from Alberta to Montreal, 1958 or 1959 is uncomfortably far away for a start to be made. The third is that there is only one agency which can be placed in a position to build the western part of the pipe-line system this year.

Now, in more than four days of debate hon. members opposite have been trying to escape from those inescapable facts. The Minister of Trade and Commerce went on from the portion I have quoted to say that nothing that could be said in this house would change those facts.

I think the debate we have had amply justifies that statement. Those facts are before us. Hon. members opposite have spent many days of debate in trying to get around them, to escape from them, but they are inescapable. These are the reasons the government has brought this bill before the house. These are the reasons the members on this side will support that bill on second reading and right through third reading.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time under the provisions of standing order No. 11, which reads as follows:

> No member is entitled to vote upon any question in which he has a direct pecuniary interest, and a vote of any member so interested will be disallowed.

Under the provisions of that standing order, Mr. Speaker, I rise to challenge the vote just cast for the second reading of Bill No. 298 by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Nickle). I am prepared to state the basis of my challenge, and I have under my hand the appropriate motion so that, if I understand the rules correctly, the proper procedure can be followed, namely that the decision can be left to the house.

May I say that I am sure the hon. member for Calgary South will agree with me that this is the type of matter that we should approach very seriously; for he himself said on January 15, 1953, when he was criticizing the former Liberal member for Westmorland, as recorded at page 1053 of Hansard for that day:

> A member of parliament should be, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion.

I wish to make it perfectly clear that, as I understand the rules of the house, there is no question whatsoever as to the legal right of the hon. member for Calgary South, despite what I shall say in a moment, to speak as he has done on this legislation. For my part, I had nothing to do with any efforts to prevent him from speaking. It was his right to speak and he exercised that right. But, Mr. Speaker, the same rules make it quite clear that if one has a direct pecuniary interest in a measure he should not vote thereon, and if he does vote his vote should be disallowed.

The information on which I raise this point is found in documents which are matters of record. I refer to the Parliamentary Guide, and I also refer to the Financial Post's directory of boards of directors. One can ascertain from these documents that the hon. member for Calgary South is the president, the vice president or a director of at least nine oil, gas or pipe-line companies. I do not intend to take the time of the house, nor do I intend to confuse the issue, by reading the names of all the companies of which my hon. friend is president, a vice president, or a director, but I single out one in particular, namely Bailey-Selburn Oil and Gas Limited, of which my hon. friend is a director.

I find in the Financial Post survey of oils, 1956, that Bailey-Selburn Oil and Gas Limited has signed a contract with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited to supply gas from the Buffalo-Bindloss field to the pipe line when operations commence. That fact, namely that this company of which my hon. friend is a director has a contract with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to supply gas to that company when operations commence, is also indicated in the Financial Post for Saturday, December 24, 1955. The article I have in my hand, about half way down, indicates that in a list of Alberta fields dedicated to Trans-Canada there is the Atlee-Buffalo-Bindloss field, which is a holding of Bailey-Selburn Oil and Gas Limited.

I point out that this company is quite a substantial company, representing a merger of several other companies a few years ago, of one of which my hon. friend was a director before it was merged with Bailey-Selburn Oil and Gas Limited. I also find by referring to the publication "Oil In Canada", of which my hon. friend is one of the editors, in its issue of May 21, 1956, that Bailey-Selburn Oil and Gas Limited has increased its proven gas reserves by about 31·4 trillion cubic feet under the acquisition of all the shares of Selbay Exploration Limited.

It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that the contract which this company, of which my hon. friend is a director, now has with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited is, prior to the passing of this bill, just a piece of paper. When this bill is passed and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited is put in a position to commence operations, that piece of paper becomes a document worth a great deal in terms of dollars; and it is because of that direct pecuniary interest that it seems to me the vote of the hon. member for Calgary South should be challenged.

I wish to repeat, Mr. Speaker, that no one is to interpret from what I have said any reflection whatsoever on the speeches the hon. member has made in this house on this bill or on the amendments. The rules provide for that. He had the right to speak and he has done so, and if anyone had prevented him from speaking I would have supported his right to speak. Bearing in mind his concern for the proprieties of parliamentary behaviour, as he expressed them when he spoke in this house on January 15, 1953, at a time when he criticized the former member for Westmorland, I am sure he will agree with me that it was a duty that did devolve on some member of this house to raise this point at this time.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, at whatever point you deem it appropriate for me to do so, I am prepared to place in your hands a motion which I shall move, seconded by my colleague the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue):

> That the vote of the hon. member for Calgary South on the second reading of Bill No. 298 be disallowed.

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I regret that a member of this house has seen fit to raise the issue of what he has chosen to call my financial interest in oil companies debarring me from voting, not only on this issue but on any other issue affecting pipe lines in this house.

First of all may I say that my financial relationships with oil companies, all of which happen to be Canadian independent oil companies, are such as existed prior to my becoming a member of this house. I continued them during my period in this house, and in no way have they affected either my speeches in this house or my voting on any issue in this house.

Mr. Speaker, since the issue has been raised I feel the only thing I can do is make public at this time in this house something which has been known to some back in my home community but which, until the question was raised, I felt was a private matter and not one to be raised publicly. Under the circumstances I feel I must present the facts at this time.

When I entered politics in 1951 I did so with the pledge to myself that I would receive nothing from any government agency for services rendered to the government nor would I receive any financial benefit whatsoever from any decisions I might make as a member of this House of Commons were I elected. Under those circumstances, sir, in 1951 when I first sought election to this house I made a commitment to turn over to charities and a scholarship fund in Alberta every dollar I received as a member of this parliament.

In keeping with that commitment, Mr. Speaker—and I might say it has been honoured in full—every dollar I have received as a member of this house has been devoted to charities and to scholarships in the province of Alberta. Furthermore, as all hon. members of this house are aware, I opposed Trans-Canada for several years despite my interest in certain oil companies. My decision had been based upon several reasons which I have voiced many times in this house. I believe in sound economic planning. However, when it became apparent that I would have to take a stand in support of this particular company in order to get a pipe line built at all—and costs are certainly rising which rule out any further delay—and to avoid the building of a pipe line with a far higher cost to the taxpayers of this country, I then had to make another decision.

Two companies which have fairly recently become shareholders of Trans-Canada were companies in which I happened to have shares. I may say, sir, that when my decision to take a stand in support of Trans-Canada after my opposition to it for some years, I disposed of my stocks in those two particular companies which, incidentally, I bought some years ago not on the basis of Trans-Canada but on the basis of other assets and other developments. However, sir, those two stocks have since been disposed of, I might say at rather a considerable financial loss in the light of market developments since that time.

The next step taken concerns my relationship with the companies with which I have chosen to continue as a director during my term in this house. I emphasize again that the directorships of the several independent Canadian oil companies with which I was associated prior to becoming a member of this house are with companies in which I believe, and I shall do my best to support them as companies in which I think Canadians themselves can benefit through their participation as shareholders. I hope my position as a director of these companies has had some bearing on the investment of Canadians in those firms.

My shareholdings in these companies are not large. In order to eliminate any danger of my position as a director of these companies being considered to have any influence upon my votes in this house, I also made arrangements with regard to them which have already been carried into effect. What I have said regarding charities and scholarships and what I am now going to say are matters of fact and a part of the records of the appropriate department of this government, and have been for some time. I have made arrangements to turn over certain of my assets, again to a foundation devoted to charitable work in my home province, an amount far greater than any possible return that could be received from any sale of the gas reserves of those companies of which I am a director.

In those circumstances, sir, I regret that the question has been raised, but I say flatly that on this particular issue and all other issues in this house personal financial gains have had no part whatsoever in any decisions I have made, and I stand on that record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that this motion will not be supported by this house. Naturally I have had no opportunity to consult my colleagues in regard to the motion now presented, but I feel very strongly this is not a subject that can be dealt with in the way it is now presented.

I have resented very strongly some of the statements made by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Nickle), when he has imputed to my colleagues the suggestion of political expediency; but I defend his right to express his opinion, and I would hope that the right to express independent opinions will be recognized on both sides of this house.

The question of direct pecuniary interest is not an easy one to resolve. I need not mention the cases which have arisen in regard to certain hon. members wherein this problem has been raised. In this case I am not in any way referring to the question of the relationship of directorates or matters of that kind, but this problem in this complex system of ours is not an easy one. Many people may have holdings in certain companies without any possible suggestion of impropriety. I think it would be most unwise and most unfair if on a motion of this kind and on a bald declaration that an hon. member has certain shareholdings and certain associations, the right to vote, which after all is the right of membership in this house, should be dealt with by an arbitrary decision which permits of no examination of the facts.

There are procedures available. If any hon. member feels that any other hon. member is contravening the rights of membership in this house, we have a committee on privileges and elections before which such a subject can be properly raised. Under those circumstances the hon. member himself whose position is challenged would then be able to state the facts fully and answer any imputation that might be made as to a conflict of his own personal interests. The responsibility for that course is one that can be assumed by any hon. member. The course which is now proposed is one under which the members of this house would be asked to pass judgment upon another hon. member without an appropriate opportunity to examine the facts and to give that hon. member a chance to meet specifically the allegations that are made.

This is a difficult subject, one which has raised great difficulties, in this parliament, at Westminster and elsewhere in places which operate under a parliamentary system similar to ours. Certainly in this complex society of ours the personal interests of the hon. members of this house should not be dealt with in any arbitrary manner. They should certainly not be dealt with in a way which would deny full opportunity to meet any allegations stated in the most specific form.

For the reasons I have stated I hope the hon. members of this house will see fit to vote against the motion which has been made.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition has well said what should have been said at the right time in connection with this proposal put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Assiniboia. I draw the attention of hon. members, and especially the hon. member for Assiniboia, to the fact that the hon. member had a direct pecuniary interest in the $65 million farm payment for which he voted a few years ago. We would have been just as justified in challenging his right to vote then as he is justified in challenging the vote of the hon. member for Calgary South.

I think it is a dangerous thing to bring into the house a motion such as has been brought here and suggest that it be resolved by a vote of the membership of this house on the few facts we have available. So I would certainly suggest, as has the Leader of the Opposition, that we do not entertain this motion and try to resolve such a difficult problem in this way.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to comment on the subject matter brought before the house in this way. First, I do not question the right of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or any other hon. member to bring such a question before the house. It is an important question upon which the decision of the house is necessary.

Simply because I think it is desirable that the proprieties of the house be observed in a situation of this kind, I should like to draw the attention of Your Honour and the house to a passage in May's thirteenth edition upon which in my submission all these citations are based. At page 373—this is not the conclusion of my remarks, but simply in order that the proprieties of the house may be observed —we find the following:

> The member whose vote is under consideration on the ground of personal interest, having been heard in his place, should withdraw immediately, and before the question founded thereon has been proposed.

That is a propriety which I think should be observed. While the house decides what disposition it shall make of the matter, I would like to suggest to you, and to all hon. members who must be very much concerned about this matter, that so far as I have been able to discover in the limited time at my disposal since the matter was raised in the house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre all the citations in Beauchesne's second and third editions are based upon references to May. The references to May's thirteenth edition are to be found at pages 372 to 374.

I would direct the attention of Your Honour and of hon. members here to the fact that all references in May to the disqualification of a vote on the grounds of personal interest are based on references to votes in connection with private bills. For instance, at page 372 we find this:

> The extent to which the rule of personal interest in a vote given by a member against a private bill, which would create a project intended to compete with an undertaking in which he has a pecuniary interest, is as yet undecided.

Then at page 373 May refers to an actual decision given in the British House of Commons, but he is dealing again with the case of a private bill. He concludes on page 374 by saying:

> Since that time, committees on opposed private bills are constituted so as to exclude members locally or personally interested; and in committees on unopposed bills, such members are not entitled to vote. A member of a committee on an opposed private bill, or groups of bills, will be discharged from further attendance, if it be discovered, after his appointment, that he has a direct pecuniary interest in the bills, or one of them.

While I share with the Leader of the Opposition an intense personal resentment against the charges which have been made against us by the hon. member for Calgary South, I do invite your attention and that of the house to the fact that so far as the rules are applicable that I have been able to discover they are based upon the interest of a member in a private bill. Therefore I feel that we should not be invited at this time to express our opinion on a motion with relation to the bill now before us, which is a public bill.

I know I would be apt to be moved, I might say almost by personal resentment, with respect to the attacks made upon us by the hon. member for Calgary South. I do not think members of this party and of this house should be asked to vote at this time on a motion based upon the conduct of the hon. member with respect to a public bill, when the only precedents available to us are with respect to private bills.

While I am not going to express any opinion as to the conduct of the hon. member, I think in a matter of this kind we should be extremely clear as to what it is we are asked to do by the motion before us. I do not believe there are sound grounds for the motion which has been presented to Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: So this discussion may not be prolonged unduly, may I say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has sent to the chair a motion, but it seems to me that if one looks at the citations which have to do with standing order 11, namely citations 95 and 96 of Beauchesne's third edition and also the ruling by Mr. Speaker Bain at page 825 of Beauchesne's third edition it appears that the matter of a decision to be made with respect to what constitutes pecuniary interest in a vote given by a member is one thing and the procedure as to how that vote is to be challenged is another.

The ruling of Mr. Speaker Bain will be found in column 9688 of Hansard of July 10, 1900, and that ruling is inserted in Beauchesne at page 825. I cannot find exactly the moment at which the vote of an hon. member had been challenged, but there is one thing sure and certain; no action was taken that night. Hon. members can look in column 9680 where Mr. Foster said:

> I wish to remind Mr. Speaker that there is a decision due to the house on that point raised by Sir Charles Tupper, as to the right of directors, being members of the house, in a company, a bill with reference to which is before parliament, voting on that bill. The Speaker undertook to take the matter into his consideration and to give the house a formal decision upon it. We wish for that decision of the Speaker, so that there may be no doubt as to the proper mode of procedure in that respect.

It seems to me that Mr. Foster then was raising a point of order in anticipation. He wanted to know what would be the position of the members, directors of companies, having to do with a certain bill which was to be taken before the house. Then later, in column 9688, we find the ruling of Mr. Speaker Bain, in which he outlines the procedure, which is mainly that to be found in May, pages 373 to 375, as outlined by the hon. member for Kamloops. The case found there is not a ruling which should give us proper guidance in the circumstances in which we find ourselves now.

Surely the house is not going to decide just like this, on the spur of the moment, that an hon. member of this house had a pecuniary interest in giving a vote. That surely cannot be the procedure of this house. It is impossible, because in attacking a member in this fashion his character and his honour are also at stake, and that can only be done by a substantive motion. A substantive motion is one that is amendable and debatable, and I would suggest that the proper amendment to that motion, when it is taken, is that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections. It would seem to me that if the report of the standing committee on privileges and elections is that the hon. member in voting has had a pecuniary interest, then the motion is made that the vote be disallowed, but not immediately after a division like this evening.

Mr. Nickle: May I state unequivocally that I have no share interest whatsoever in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited and no shares whatsoever in any company which is a shareholder in Trans-Canada. I am quite prepared, and I would be most happy, to submit my record in regard to any of the oil companies of which I happen to be a director to the appropriate committee of this house for its examination.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that from his deep knowledge of procedure—

Some hon. Members: Oh! That is a joke.

Mr. Speaker: Let me say at once—it may be an opinion that some hon. members do not share with me, but I say it with sincerity—I take it that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a student of procedure and has a great knowledge of these matters. From his knowledge of procedure, does it not strike him that this procedure is impossible, because the house cannot be called upon to decide as to whether or not a vote is going to be disallowed just on the reasons he has advanced and on the explanations the hon. member for Calgary South has given? Surely this cannot take place. May's thirteenth edition, at page 373, says:

> An objection to a vote, on the ground of personal interest, cannot be raised except upon a substantive motion, that the vote given in a division be disallowed, and cannot be brought forward as a point of order.

There is a reference to page 271. If the hon. member refers to page 271 he will read:

> Certain matters cannot be debated, save upon a substantive motion which can be dealt with by amendment or by the distinct vote of the house.

But after debate and amendment.

> Among these may be mentioned the conduct of the sovereign, the heir to the throne, the Viceroy and Governor General of India, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the Governors General of the Dominions . . .

Therefore this matter is in the same category as an attack upon the sovereign, the heir to the throne, etc. It is a question of privilege.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, it will not be necessary for you to resolve this matter by any ruling on a point of order, and I can assure the house that my rising again at this time will be very brief and in a manner which will bring the incident to a close. I want to say—

An hon. Member: It should never have been opened.

Mr. Knowles: An hon. member says, "It should never have been opened." I have a different view. In my view, despite the remarks which my hon. friend from Calgary South has made, he has not denied or answered the basic statement I made—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member attempted to make the point that the hon. member for Calgary South should have his vote disallowed because he has a direct pecuniary interest in the matter that is now before the house. As soon as the hon. member has made his point, the hon. member for Calgary South had a right to make a personal explanation, which he did. It seems to me at this moment that I cannot allow the hon. member or any other hon. member to discuss the explanations given by the hon. member for Calgary South.

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me at this moment that the course which the hon. member may follow—and I think it is the one he was about to follow without any hint to that effect—would be simply to leave the matter at that because, if later he wishes on a question of privilege to deal with the matter, I think he can achieve the same purpose he is trying to achieve now. I did not read his motion. It is not in the possession of the house.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I shall not pursue what I was trying to say a moment ago in view of your suggestion that I should not do so. I am prepared to let the record of what has been said speak for itself on both sides of this question, but I think I should be permitted to point out that before I raised this matter tonight I did study the rule book and the authorities on this question very carefully, and it seemed to me that whether or not Your Honour or the house thinks the rules are set out satisfactorily, nevertheless they do provide no other way than by challenging a member's vote and following up that challenge with the motion which I was prepared to make.

There is some difference of opinion between us as to whether or not that was the way to do it. I did it in a way that I thought was the way to do it. The ruling of Mr. Speaker Bain reported on page 825 and 826 of Beauchesne's third edition says—

An hon. Member: It has been decided.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: I have no apologies to make for the important question I have brought to the attention of the house tonight.

Mr. McCann: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: If the Speaker allows, yes.

Mr. McCann: What is the position of the farmer members of this house who voted for the wheat bill?

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps Your Honour would answer that question.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask hon. members not to pursue the point unduly? There may be a difference of opinion between the hon. member and myself as to procedure. Let us say that perhaps some other time we can get together and arrive, I am sure, at the procedure for the future, but at the moment let us conclude this incident.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Mr. Knowles: I am trying to get the chance to read one sentence in a ruling by Mr. Speaker Bain, on the basis of which I shall make a request to the house. May I be permitted to answer in a sentence the question of the Minister of National Revenue?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McCann: Think it over.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member—

Mr. Knowles: Your Honour can answer it yourself.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member be good enough to pursue the point with a view to concluding it as soon as possible?

Mr. Knowles: I think we all know, Mr. Speaker, that benefits that partake of a general interest are different from those that partake of a specific and personal interest. However, in his ruling on July 10, 1900, Mr. Speaker Bain said:

> The question is one for the house to determine.

In my view it is obvious what this house would determine on this issue, particularly in view of what has been said by the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the Social Credit party, and in view of the applause the hon. member for Calgary South has drawn from the government side of the house. Therefore I shall not press the matter, and if Your Honour feels that in any sense I made a motion I have no hesitation, in view of what I have said, in asking the permission of the house to withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: Being of the view that the procedure with respect to these matters is not as the hon. member has outlined it, and that it must be raised in a different manner and provide for a debate and amendments, I do not accept the motion. Therefore the hon. member does not have to withdraw it. The question now is on the second reading of this bill. Those who are in favour—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: The motion for second reading has been carried. Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) moves, seconded by Mr. Harris—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: —that the house do go into committee of the whole on this bill at the next sitting of the house.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion, on a point of order may I ask this question? Perhaps I might be permitted to put a question to the Minister of Finance as leader of the house, because I think we should have some agreement on the point tonight. The question I have is this, whether this motion now made, the motion for Your Honour to leave the chair to go into committee, be put at the next sitting, will require a motion and a vote at the next sitting of the house. Is that the understanding?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I may answer that question. Of course the order will be on the order paper, "House in committee of the whole", and whenever the order is called I will have to put the motion that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole upon this bill. At that moment it will be votable if the hon. member wishes to provoke a vote.

Mr. Fulton: The question is on the motion of the minister that this motion be made at the next sitting. Is that correct?

Mr. Speaker: The situation now is simply that after second reading has been adopted—

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I can shorten it. What I am trying to determine is whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce has now made a motion that the motion for Your Honour to leave the chair be put at the next sitting. Your Honour has said that will be put at the next sitting. We now have a motion before the house, as I understand it, made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which itself should be subject to a division.

Mr. Speaker: When the hon. member says "which itself should be subject to a division"—

Mr. Fulton: Is open to a division.

Mr. Speaker: It is open. That is better. The hon. member is good at correcting himself whenever he wants to.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howe, Port Arthur) which was agreed to on the following division:

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CANADIAN-UNITED STATES EXAMINATION OF BOUNDARY WATERS

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an announcement, the text of which has been agreed to by the governments of Canada and the United States for simultaneous release today. It is as follows:

The Canadian and United States governments have decided to examine together the subject of waters which flow across the international boundary between the two countries.

The last time both governments examined this matter thoroughly together was before the conclusion of the boundary waters treaty of 1909. During the 46 years which have elapsed since its ratification, the international joint commission, which was established by the treaty, has worked with outstanding success in solving water problems within the framework of this treaty.

It has recently appeared, however, that the development of the resources of such basins as the Saint John, the Columbia and the Yukon requires, among other things, the solution of various complicated legal, economic and engineering questions. In agreeing to examine the matter of waters which cross the boundary, the two governments realize that there may be no easy or quick answer to the problems which are arising today in such areas and that the studies may reveal that the boundary waters treaty of 1909 is sufficiently broad to meet present problems. The two governments believe, however, that a full and confidential exchange of views may contribute to the resolution of these problems and it is in this spirit that the discussions have been agreed to. At the same time, the two governments desire that the international joint commission shall press forward its studies under the Columbia river basin reference of 1944 and the other similar references which it has under consideration.

I should like to add, Mr. Speaker, that I have written to the premiers of the provinces that are directly concerned with waters crossing the boundary and I have sent them copies of the announcement. I have told them that I will welcome any views or suggestions they may wish to make concerning the subject matter of the forthcoming discussions and I have added that I will be in touch with them further as matters develop.

I might also add that, in response to an invitation extended by the premier of British Columbia, I shall visit Victoria for discussions with Mr. Bennett on water problems on June 5.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell the house which department of the government will be carrying on these negotiations with the United States? The minister did not tell us whether it is to be a governmental body or one or more of the departments or in what manner these negotiations would be taking place. Could the minister also tell us whether the provincial governments will be allowed to have representatives sitting in on any of these conferences?

Mr. Lesage: The intention, Mr. Speaker, is to have a Canadian team for discussions with a United States team.

Mr. Green: Would that be at the ministerial level?

Mr. Lesage: It will be at first at the official level, for sure, sir, but the composition of the discussion team is not yet definite. There will be representatives of various departments of government on the team. We have asked the United States if there would be representatives of the states on their discussion team and they have told us there would not be. That is why I am securing the opinion of the premiers of the provinces interested and also that is why I am going to have full discussions with the premier of British Columbia on June 5.

Mr. Green: But no official representatives are to sit in on the conference?

Mr. Lesage: The studies will be made here by the interdepartmental committee on water use which is composed of representatives of various departments.

Mr. Green: Which departments?

Mr. Lesage: There is a long series; I believe it is six or seven departments, and also the international joint commission. The officials of the various provinces would have discussions with the members of this interdepartmental committee.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if General McNaughton will be a member of the team or an officer of the governmental team?

Mr. Lesage: General McNaughton attends the meetings of the interdepartmental committee on water use.

Mr. Fulton: Will he attend?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lesage: General McNaughton usually attends all meetings of the interdepartmental committee.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure this is a most welcome announcement. Could the minister tell the house when the discussions between Canada and the United States are likely to commence?

Mr. Lesage: It is expected, sir, that the question will be studied fully in the United States and in Canada for some time but during that time we expect that we will have informal communications between the two governments in preparation for the formal discussions later.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources arising out of the statement he made earlier today with regard to the discussions between the government of Canada and that of the United States in connection with waters which cross the international boundary. Will these discussions include the question of flood waters and soil erosion?

Mr. Lesage: I do not believe so, Mr. Speaker. I shall look into the matter and try to give a more extensive reply, but I do not believe so.

LATIN AMERICA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EXPORT OF SABRE AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the government has under consideration any requests from Latin American countries other than Colombia for Sabre jet fighter aircraft?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Not at this time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NICKLE—REQUEST FOR MEETING OF COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. In view of the question raised this morning as to my eligibility to vote on the measure before the house at that time, I rise to request that if possible the committee on privileges and elections be convened to investigate the matter in order that any remaining doubt as to my integrity and lack of personal financial interest in the matter may be fully cleared away.

Mr. Speaker: The committee on privileges and elections is a standing committee of this house. No doubt the chairman of that committee has taken note of the hon. gentleman's request and after consulting with him and others who are members of the committee whatever arrangements are required might be made.

MR. STARR—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "GLOBE AND MAIL" OF MAY 21

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which has to do with an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of Monday, May 21, 1956. It is a short article entitled "How to be Very, Very Audible" and it reads:

> Members of parliament have to be eye-catching if they want to speak to the house.
> It is this quality, rather than political affiliation, which determines an M.P.'s voice in national affairs, Speaker of the House Beaudoin explained Saturday.
> Addressing the Ukrainian national federation's annual convention in Toronto, Mr. Beaudoin denied that his deputy, William Robinson, neglected the rights of opposition speakers in the great pipe line debate.
> "It is a question of who catches your eye," he said. "We weren't trying to be partial."

Mr. Speaker, I was present at that meeting along with other hon. members of the house and I heard your speech with a great deal of interest. I wish to say at this time that I did not hear you make any such statement in your speech and I therefore assert that the statements in this article attributed to you are not true.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege merely to confirm what the hon. member has just said. I was present on that occasion and heard you make a thoughtful, courteous and informative speech which did not contain any of the words reported in the Globe and Mail.

Mr. Charles E. Rea (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I was present at the same meeting and I concur in what hon. members have said.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the hon. members who have come to my rescue, so to speak. It reminds me of an article which I read in a book on procedure which stated that if the Speaker were faced with any difficulty members would rise immediately to his defence. This has been done in the true traditional form.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN FINE ARTS—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Question No. 490—Mr. Holowach:

1. What amounts have been contributed by the federal government to individuals, institutions or organizations, for the promotion of drama, music or other fine arts, during the past five years?
2. Has any contribution ever been made during this period in the nature of grants, travelling or other expenses outside of Canada for such a purpose?
3. What is the total amount spent during the years, 1952, 1953, 1954, 1955, and to date in 1956, for acquisition of works of art (a) outside Canada; (b) in Canada?

LAND PURCHASES—DR. GROLEAU, SHERBROOKE, QUE.

Question No. 508—Mr. Balcer:

1. Have any parcels of land been purchased by the federal government from Dr. Leon Groleau, of Sherbrooke, Quebec, during the years 1948, 1949, 1950?
2. If so, what is the description of each parcel purchased and what amount was paid in each instance?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF FAUTEUX COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has yet made an announcement with regard to the filing of the report of the Fauteux commission.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Yes. I announced some two or three weeks ago that we would be filing the Fauteux commission report as soon as it had been printed in English and French.

Mr. Macdonnell: Can the minister say when that will be?

Mr. Garson: It will be a matter of days now.

MOONEY AND STOFFELS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO CONVICTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in connection with a Canadian Press dispatch dated today relative to two men, Daniel Mooney and Donald Stoffels, who were convicted in Toronto and are at present in Kingston penitentiary serving a two-year sentence. Has the minister received a letter from Magistrate McKeown to the effect that according to the evidence now available these men are indeed innocent? If so, will he immediately have an investigation launched into the question with a view to having a free pardon granted if the facts are as Magistrate McKeown has stated?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): The news-gathering facilities of our press are so efficient that the news of this letter has got into the newspapers before the letter itself has actually reached me. I prefer to withhold comment until I have received the letter and learned from it what it is that I would be talking about.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

BEER—ACTION TO BE TAKEN CONCERNING ALLEGED COMBINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the government yet reached a decision as to whether any action will be taken with respect to the report concerning an alleged combine in the manufacture, sale and distribution of beer in Canada?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I have explained on previous occasions, the preparation of an opinion has been delayed for the reasons which I then gave in detail. We are unable to reach a decision on this matter until we receive that opinion, which we expect shortly.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

WINNIPEG POST OFFICE—INQUIRY AS TO BUILDING MATERIAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. C. Trainor (Winnipeg South): May I thank hon. members for their recognition and also for the kind expressions of sympathy during my recent illness. I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works why greater use has not been made of building stone in the exterior walls of the new Winnipeg post office.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): First of all let me say that I am delighted, as all hon. members are, to see the hon. member for Winnipeg South back in his seat and apparently in good health. I presume the hon. member in his question referred to the large new post office nearing completion in Winnipeg. If that is the case, then I think he will agree with me that the building incorporates the materials which will make it a great credit to that fine city of Winnipeg.

Mr. Trainor: I do not entirely agree with the minister in that respect. As a matter of fact, I passed this building quite recently, and it conveys the impression of a rather imposing warehouse. The exterior walls are built of brick, and the minister no doubt is aware that within 25 miles of the city of Winnipeg, in the constituency of my hon. friend from Springfield, is a supply of the most beautiful building stone in the world. If any members are in doubt about that, they have only to step out into the corridor—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to have to remind the hon. member that, while he unfortunately was away, as we all know, because of sickness, the rules which were in effect before he left are still in effect.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

VANCOUVER-JOYCE SUB-POST OFFICE—CHANGE OF LOCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I ask a question of the Postmaster General? An order for return of papers was passed in my name on April 16. I wonder if the Postmaster General would be good enough to make inquiries as to when I shall get those papers.

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): I should be very glad to make inquiries. As a matter of fact, I was under the impression they had been tabled, but I shall look into it.

AIRPORTS—EXPROPRIATION OF PROPERTY, VIRDEN, MAN.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister inform the house when we may expect to receive the documents passed by motion on April 30 dealing with the case of August Fontana?

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this represents a great number of documents, but I will look into the matter.

PARLIAMENT HILL

CONSTRUCTION OF PLATFORM OUTSIDE CENTRE BLOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. On June 23 of last year I asked a question in regard to the use of new lumber every time there is a platform built in front of this building. At that time the minister said that a platform was being designed that could be used over and over again. I notice that they are using new lumber again at the present time. I wonder whether the minister has the newly designed platform ready.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The new platform has been designed and is being erected for the trooping the colour ceremony on Sunday, May 27. In addition to the standard sections which were designed, one row of additional seats is necessary and that row is being made of new lumber which was cut to a size which will permit its re-use from time to time.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Are the steel stanchions, and so on, owned by the government or are they rented? I heard today they were rented.

Mr. Winters: They are owned by the government.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

STRATFORD, ONT.—REIMBURSEMENT OF VICTIMIZED NEW CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is an official of the immigration department at present engaged in reimbursing victimized new Canadians residing in the Stratford area and, if so, what is the source of the funds?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know nothing whatever about the subject of possible reimbursement, but I will make inquiries.

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE CORPORATION

CONSTITUTION OF CROWN COMPANY TO CONSTRUCT PIPE LINE, MAKE SHORT-TERM LOANS, ETC.

On the order:

House in committee of the whole on Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation.—The Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, before the question is put I rise for the purpose of moving an instruction to the committee of the whole. I am not going to refer to it at the moment but I am sure Your Honour will agree with me this is the time and the only time at which such an instruction can be moved.

Mr. Speaker: I do not agree with the hon. member. The hon. member is probably going to deal with the period where the motion to commit was a debatable one and was amendable. At this moment the bill must be committed to committee of the whole. The order on the order paper is "House in committee of the whole", and therefore the motion must be put. It is a non-debatable and therefore a non-amendable motion. It is votable.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on the point you have raised, it is not my intention to try to amend the motion for the reason you have just given, namely that it is not debatable and therefore not capable of amendment. But it is possible to move a superseding motion and a motion for an instruction to the committee is, of course, of the nature of a substantive motion which supersedes the motion for committal. Your Honour has to put the motion that you do leave the chair for the house to go into committee. It is stated in the authorities that it is at this time that a member may move an instruction to the committee which supersedes the motion. It is not an amendment to it and, if carried, would of course supersede it. As a superseding motion, a substantive motion, it is in order at this time. I would therefore propose to move, seconded by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair):

That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to amend Bill 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, to provide that no loan or advance shall be made to, or agreement made with, Trans-Canada unless the majority of the issued shares of its capital stock is owned by Canadians.

Sir, the purpose of the instruction will, I think, be obvious. It is to ensure that thing which the Liberal party, using the trade-mark of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, has been trying to tell Canadians, its own supporters and others in Canada that the present proposal does. I have here in my hand a copy of The Liberal—

Mr. Speaker: If the motion should be in order and were it to be agreed upon the hon. member would have ample opportunity to make whatever points in debate he might wish to make, but I should like to refer the hon. member to Votes and Proceedings of yesterday, page 596. Following the division on the motion that the said bill be considered in committee of the whole at the next sitting of the house the said motion was carried and the entry in Votes and Proceedings is as follows:

The said bill was accordingly ordered for consideration in committee of the whole at the next sitting of the house.

What was the page to which the hon. member referred me?

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I did not have the page before me. I have now the reference in Bourinot at page 512—and there are also references in May—where Bourinot says this:

An "instruction",—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member having given me the reference of page 512, I have it before me. That is exactly the one I had in mind also. At page 511 we find the following:

When a bill has been read a second time by the clerk, the next question will be proposed.

"That the house go into committee on the bill (now, or on ———— next.)"

The house generally goes into committee on the bill at once—but when desired, the committee stage is postponed to another sitting of the house.

That is exactly what was done last evening.

The motion generally passes, nem. con., like all such formal motions; though it is quite regular to move an amendment as to the time of committal.

The hon. member at this moment must remember that this edition of Bourinot was published in 1916. He will find it impossible to find any precedent where the motion to commit has been amended.

Mr. Fulton: We are not amending it.

Mr. Speaker: Or that even a superseding motion has been moved.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, would you read the bottom paragraph on page 512 and headed by Roman numerals "VIII"?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I will read the bottom paragraph. I was prepared on that point last night, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Fulton: So were we.

Mr. Speaker: There is a little piece of paper that I unfortunately left on my desk in my office. However, I will read the balance of page 512 in Bourinot:

When the order of the day for committee has been reached and called in due form the speaker will put the question,

"That I do now leave the chair."

Now is the time to move any amendment to this question. Members opposed to the bill may move that the house resolve itself into committee on the bill that day three or six months; or may propose motions adverse to the principle or policy of the measure.

It has been frequently decided in the English house that, on the motion for the speaker to leave the chair, a member "is at liberty to discuss the main provisions, but not to proceed in detail through the clauses, nor to discuss amendments to the same, until the bill is regularly in committee".

Then at the bottom of the page there are various footnotes under various letters referring to the Canadian Commons Journals and also to the English Hansard.

Mr. Fulton: It is the succeeding paragraph to which I have reference, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: On "Instructions"?

Mr. Fulton: Yes; the paragraph dealing with instructions, not amendments.

Mr. Speaker: May I submit to the hon. member that instruction is either necessary or it is not. If the committee has power to deal with some of the matters upon which the hon. member wishes to instruct the committee, then the instruction is unnecessary and trivial and should not be entertained. But before the hon. member can move an instruction he must first of all have the right to do so. In my view at this juncture of our proceedings he has no alternative. The only thing that can happen is a division on the motion that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole, because last evening the house ordered that the bill be considered in committee of the whole at the next sitting. By "next sitting" is meant the one which by standing order 18 (2) the leader of the house announced as being the one on which the bill would be considered in committee of the whole and that is today. Therefore the order of the day having been called for that order, I have no alternative but to put the motion that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Mr. Fulton: May I with respect point out that the paragraph in Bourinot that I am directing attention to is one dealing with this question of instruction, not with amendments to the motion that you leave the chair, and I think it should be before the house. It is paragraph 8 on page 512, and reads as follows:

> An "instruction", empowering a committee to make those changes in a bill which otherwise it could not make, should be moved as soon as the order for the committee has been read by the clerk, and before the question is put, that the Speaker do leave the chair. An instruction, properly speaking, is not of the nature of an amendment, but of a substantive motion which ought to have precendence of the question that the Speaker do leave the chair.

Now, sir, we also anticipated this matter last night and when Your Honour read the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I think it was, that the house go into committee at its next sitting, we, I believe, protected the situation by the question we then asked which was whether that would require a motion to be put at the next sitting, "the next sitting" being the one that we have now embarked upon, and Your Honour answered, as reported at page 4246 of Hansard:

> . . . and whenever the order is called I will have to put the motion that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole upon this bill. At that moment it will be votable if the hon. member wishes to provoke a vote.

So that we did then establish that Your Honour has to put the question today, as is now about to be done, that it has been moved by Mr. Howe or Mr. Harris, as the case may be, that I do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee on this bill. Bourinot states, and in this respect and at this date I submit that he is still an authority on instructions, that this is the time and the only time at which an instruction can be moved, when the order is called and before you put the question. He points out clearly that instruction is not an amendment but is, properly speaking, a substantive motion which ought to have precedence over the question that the Speaker do leave the chair. Therefore, sir, in my submission it is not material that we have amended the rules to prevent debate on the motion that Your Honour leave the chair to go into committee, and we are not asking to debate that motion. The precedent still stands that whether or not that motion be debatable, the motion for an instruction is a different motion, a substantive motion, and has precedence over the motion that you leave the chair, so that this position is completely unaffected by the change that was made in the rules with respect to whether or not the motion to leave the chair is debatable.

As to the right of members to move instructions to the committee of the whole, I would refer of course to two precedents which were established in this house in the year 1948, and my first precedent is the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself who moved, on March 19, 1948, as recorded at page 2411 of Hansard, at this very stage, not to amend the motion for second reading, but an instruction and the Speaker of the day put the question as follows:

> Mr. Howe moves, seconded by Mr. Gardiner, that it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill No. 135 into two bills, in order . . .

For the purpose then mentioned. This was the exact stage in which that instruction was moved. It was dealt with as a separate, substantive motion, having priority over the motion that Your Honour leave the chair. In the same year and in the same volume, as recorded on page 2207 of Hansard of March 15, 1948, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre at this stage, immediately after the motion for the second reading had been carried and just before the question for Your Honour to leave the chair and the house to go into committee was put, moved an instruction to the committee of the whole that it have power to amend the bill by adding a clause, and that instruction, or the motion for an instruction, was accepted and allowed for debate. Debate took place upon it and then the motion was voted on. The other case was a motion for instruction made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It was debated. The minister made a statement with regard to it on the circumstances of its introduction when he was introducing it. It was debated shortly, it is true, but debated and then voted on.

Now, sir,—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member be good enough to extend his remarks on the last precedent that he mentioned? The instruction was to the committee to add a clause?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Was that to alter the title?

Mr. Fulton: No. Perhaps I should read it. At page 2207 of Hansard, in the middle of column 2, the following appears:

> That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to amend Bill 136 by inserting therein the following section:
> 2. Section four of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Then follow the details of the substitution. But this is the important point. The instruction did not instruct the committee to repeal a section of the bill that was going to be committed. The bill that was going to be committed was a bill itself repealing some provision of a former act. What the instruction asked the committee to do was to add a section to the bill; that is, to the bill that was about to be committed. It was argued on that occasion and on other occasions that without such an instruction the committee would have no power to make the change requested. The subject matter of the instruction, of course, had to relate to the subject matter of the bill; it could not be something entirely outside the legislation. The instruction has to be something that gives the committee of the whole power to do something which otherwise they could not do, and it has to be permissive and not mandatory. In other words, it has to give them power to do it; it has to be a power without which they could not perform the act requested. Therefore, I maintain the form of my instruction is clearly in order; it is permissive. This is the only way you can move an instruction to the committee of the whole. It relates to something connected with the bill, the Trans-Canada company and the circumstances under which loans and advances are to be made, all of which is a part of the subject matter of the bill. Without the instruction the committee could not make the particular change which I am now suggesting that it have power to make, so that the instruction is, in my submission, completely in order under the regulations governing the form of instruction. It is moved at the proper time in accordance with the precedents which I have cited and the authority of Bourinot.

Since it is a substantive motion it takes precedence over the motion that you leave the chair. It is not an amendment and therefore the propriety of moving it, and its effect, are not altered by the fact that we have altered the rules with regard to debating the motion that you leave the chair. This is a different motion, and it is clearly in order at this stage and is debatable and I submit, sir, that we should get on with the debate as to whether or not the house agrees that the committee should be so instructed.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say just a word?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Knowles: May I say a few words in support—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles: —of the point of order that has been made by the hon. member for Kamloops. I am sure that Your Honour will agree that he has done right in dividing the subject matter as you, sir, have done, into two questions. First, there is the question of whether or not we have the right to make an instruction at this stage at all. The second question would be as to whether or not the motion moved by the hon. member for Kamloops is a proper instruction. I shall not go into the latter question now except to say it does not seem to me it is a proper motion of instruction in that it does not give an order to the committee but rather gives the committee power to consider a certain motion if it wishes to do so.

With regard to the question as to whether we still have the right to move an instruction, it seems to me that the points the hon. member for Kamloops has made are clear cut and unanswerable. Bourinot's words on page 512 surely say that this is the time; namely, when the order for the second reading of the bill has been read by the Clerk and before the question is put that the Speaker do leave the chair.

May I remind Your Honour again of two instances and of yet a third one in 1948 along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Kamloops. In both of the instances to which the hon. member for Kamloops referred, the matter was not sprung on the house by way of surprise. In the case of the instruction I moved in connection with

Mr. Ilsley's Transitional Measures Act we had had discussion previously, in committee on the resolution, during which it was agreed across the floor that the proper way to deal with the matter was by moving an instruction at that point.

It is quite clear from Hansard at page 2207 for March 15, 1948, that just as soon as the motion for second reading had carried and before the motion was put that Your Honour leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole on the bill, the motion for instruction was entertained by the Speaker of that day. The debate continued for a number of pages in Hansard and the motion came to a vote.

Similarly, in the case of the bill amending the Canadian Wheat Board Act, there was discussion in committee. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave an undertaking in the committee that he would meet the wishes of the Progressive Conservatives of that day and present a motion of instruction to enable the committee to divide the bill into two parts if it wished to do so. It is clear again that this was not a direction to the committee which it had to carry out but rather it was an instruction empowering the committee to make that change if it wished to do so.

It is true that on both occasions the motions for instruction were defeated but the main point at this juncture is as to whether or not there are precedents. Your Honour said there were none but we are citing these instances from 1948 as precedents when this was done, and done at this very point.

The third occasion in 1948 is not exactly the same as the two which have been referred to but I think it does have significance for us. On that occasion the Export Permits Bill was under discussion and we had actually got beyond this stage. We were in committee on the bill. While we were in committee on the bill the Minister of Trade and Commerce sought to move an amendment which seemed to the committee to be quite substantial. There was discussion as to whether or not this was in order and it was agreed in the committee that it would be better for the committee to have an instruction from the house permitting it to make that amendment. A problem did arise as to how the house could move an instruction to the committee since there is a citation that says this can only be done on the first occasion when a bill is being referred to a committee. That difficulty was overcome by the giving of unanimous consent. The only point to which unanimous consent was given was to this being done at a stage later than the first occasion when the bill was committed to the committee of the whole.

Accordingly, on April 16, 1948, as recorded at page 3041 of Hansard, the hon. member for Ottawa West, then parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, moved an instruction to the committee giving it power to amend Bill 138 as follows—and the wording that follows is about half a column in length.

There was a debate. True, it was very short and only the then hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario spoke on it. At any rate that constituted a debate and the motion of instruction was agreed to.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the point is pretty clearly established that although the practice has been followed rarely, nevertheless it is an established practice that after second reading has been agreed to, before Your Honour leaves the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole it is proper to move a motion of instruction recognizing, of course, that the motion, so far as its substance is concerned, has to meet the other requirements respecting motions of instruction. I think that this one does, but the first point that has to be settled is the right of the hon. member for Kamloops to move a motion of instruction at this point.

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I do not like what is going on. I have a very high regard for our democratic process; I have a very high regard, therefore, for parliament and for what parliament means to everybody. I think it is most unfortunate that Your Honour is being apparently placed in the position almost every day of having to act almost as a proponent of one side of an argument. It should be the duty of the leader of the house or the Prime Minister to answer these arguments which are being put up by the opposition, whether they are right or wrong.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I think the Speaker of the house is being placed in a most invidious position when he is asked almost to act as a protagonist for the other side.

An hon. Member: There is only one side in this house anyway.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): For the sake of parliament we should let the leader of the house put up arguments against the arguments which are being advanced here and let the Speaker make his decision.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been under the impression through all these points of order—and I am speaking to the one raised now—that had anyone on this side given an opinion we would have had precisely the same answer that I received when I did express an opinion last week when the leader of the C.C.F. party commented that I directed the chairman to do something. I objected, Mr. Speaker, at that time that I did not ask for such a direction.

Mr. Coldwell: That is not the interpretation that should be placed on what I said.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I object that when an hon. member on this side of the house rises on a point of order the people on the other side shout "Sit down". Guy Fawkes tried to blow up the British parliament 300 years ago and this government has effectively blown up this parliament without the risk of being hanged.

Mr. Dechene: Are you afraid of the big bad wolf?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I should draw your attention to a ruling, or an explanation at any rate, of what I think is presently under consideration. It may not be complete but I read to you in the second edition an extract from Beauchesne which reads this way:

If an instruction is moved—

Mr. Fulton: What page, please?

Mr. Harris: In a moment.

Mr. Fulton: From what page are you reading?

Mr. Harris: Page 134, item 431. I continue:

If an instruction is moved when the motion to leave the chair is proposed, then it becomes an amendment which, if agreed to, supersedes the motion for the committee, and the bill consequently cannot be proceeded with for the time being.

Now, sir, you have already said, and I think it has been generally accepted, that the motion you are about to put to the house is not debatable and ergo not amendable. Under those circumstances, if the motion now proposed by my hon. friend is accepted and if it becomes an amendment then it violates the ruling you have already given and which we always understood has been the case.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the reason—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I am quite prepared now to give a preliminary view as to how I look upon this matter. It may be that if the hon. member wishes to argue the point further—

Mr. Fulton: I should like to reply to the minister.

An hon. Member: There is no debate.

Mr. Speaker: At this moment if hon. members wish to hear me in silence I will review the situation. Last evening the question was put, "When should we go into committee of the whole on this bill?" The answer is either now or at the next sitting. The motion was that we go into the committee of the whole at the next sitting. A division was asked for and the house carried that motion, and therefore the bill was ordered for committee of the whole at the next sitting. We are at the next sitting. The orders of the day having been called, the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) supported as he thinks by Bourinot at page 512, moved a motion which he contends is a substantive motion in the nature of an instruction to the committee to give the committee powers to do something which otherwise it may not do. Let us look at page 512 of Bourinot, which states:

An "instruction", empowering a committee to make those changes in a bill which otherwise it could not make,—

The first question which is raised here is: Could the committee of the whole make these changes without this instruction? We will keep that one in mind and deal with it later. I continue reading from Bourinot:

—should be moved as soon as the order for the committee has been read by the Clerk, and before the question is put, that the Speaker do leave the chair. An instruction, properly speaking, is not of the nature of an amendment, but of a substantive motion—

I interrupt there to comment as follows: Because Bourinot contends that an instruction is of the nature of a substantive motion does not make that motion for instruction a substantive motion. Bourinot likens it to a substantive motion, but that does not make that motion a substantive motion. I continue:

—which ought to have precedence of the question that the Speaker do leave the chair. If an instruction is moved when the latter motion is proposed, then it becomes an amendment, which, if agreed to, supersedes the motion for the committee, and the bill consequently cannot be proceeded with for the time being.

The motion proposed by the hon. member for Kamloops was sent to the chair before the motion that I leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole was proposed. Therefore this paragraph does not apply. I continue quoting Bourinot at page 513:

Considerable misapprehension appears to exist as to the meaning of an instruction. An instruction is given to a committee to confer on it that power which, without such instruction, it would not have. If the subject matter of an instruction is relevant to the subject matter and within the scope and title of a bill, then such instruction is irregular since the committee had the power to make the required amendment. The following precedents will illustrate the correct practice with respect to this class of motions.

Then Bourinot gives several examples of similar motions. If hon. members will carry on to pages 514 and 515 they will come to a ruling by Mr. Speaker Cockburn, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker Cockburn decided that the committee had the power to do what was proposed, and that consequently the motion was irregular. In 1872, when the question for committee on the bill to repeal the insolvency laws was under consideration in the Canadian House of Commons, Mr. Harrison moved that it be an instruction to the committee to except the province of Ontario from the operation of the bill. Mr. Blake having made objection to the motion, Mr. Speaker Cockburn ruled: "As the bill affected the whole dominion the committee have already the power asked for in the motion, and consequently it is out of order."

I quote this to show that it is within the power of the Speaker to reject a motion if it is his view that the committee has the power to deal with the subject matter of the instruction contained in the motion. Then I come to the various precedents which the hon. member for Kamloops has cited, as well as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Reference was made to an instruction to divide a bill. I think the hon. member could have quoted an instruction to consolidate a bill or an instruction to ask the committee to go beyond the title of the bill. If the hon. member will look at page 515 of Bourinot's fourth edition he will see the rules which have been laid down and he will see also that in certain cases the committee of the whole has no other choice but to receive an instruction if it is to divide a bill or consolidate a bill. In the instances quoted by the hon. member it seems to me that had the committee not received the instruction, because of the rules laid down by Bourinot and the decisions of English Speakers as outlined at page 515, the committee could not have proceeded. Here are the decisions:

Decisions of English Speakers have also laid down the following rules with respect to instruction:

"That it requires an instruction to divide a bill into two parts or to consolidate two bills into one.

That notice should be given of an instruction when a member has proposed such as a substantive motion, and not as an amendment to the question, that the Speaker do leave the chair."

When Bourinot says at the beginning of the section dealing with this subject that it is of the nature of a substantive motion, he is also noting that when it is to be considered as a substantive motion, therefore debatable and amendable, notice should be given. Those are the rules laid down by the decisions of English Speakers. I continue:

"That when a bill is simply a continuance bill of an act now in force, it is not competent for the committee to introduce a clause of a different nature to the simple scope of such bill, but it may be an instruction to the committee to introduce such a clause."

I have read the rules which have been laid down by English Speakers. I feel that I am justified, not by what the hon. member for Kamloops or the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, but what the English Speakers have said as laid down by Bourinot. I continue:

"That it is not regular to instruct a committee to entertain a question which is outside of the bill before them."

That is the end of the various decisions as to instruction. All this has to be read in conjunction with the paragraph on page 513, which reads:

Considerable misapprehension appears to exist as to the meaning of an instruction. An instruction is given to a committee to confer on it that power which, without such instruction, it would not have. If the subject matter of an instruction is relevant to the subject matter and within the scope and title of a bill, then such instruction is irregular since the committee had the power to make the required amendment.

I have already indicated that Mr. Speaker Cockburn and many others have ruled that in their view a certain instruction was one that the committee had power to do. I will read this proposed instruction in order to find out whether the committee could not have dealt with it in committee of the whole. The instruction is to provide that no loan or advance shall be made to or agreement made with Trans-Canada unless the majority of the issued shares of its capital stock is owned by Canadians. Clause 6(2) of the bill reads:

The Minister of Finance, at the request of the corporation and with the approval of the governor in council, may from time to time out of the consolidated revenue fund lend money to the corporation on such terms and conditions as the governor in council approves, but such loans to the corporation shall bear interest at a rate that is not less than three and one-quarter per cent per annum.

Do hon. members not think that an additional condition could be placed and be within the scope of the bill?

Mr. Fulton: I do not.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kamloops says, "No." If it were to be moved as an amendment what would be the condition required? The condition would be that it be relevant to the clause under consideration. Certainly this is relevant to clause 6(2). If I had a chance to read through the bill, as I am sure my hon. friend has, perhaps I could find many other spots where this thing could be moved as an amendment. Will he not agree that his instruction is not necessary because the committee of the whole has power to deal with the subject matter that he has in mind. In any event I see that there is no particular anxiety to argue against what I have said, but shall I rule now?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I could put a question to Your Honour.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is against the rules.

Mr. Fulton: I think it will save some time. Do I understand Your Honour to be about to rule on the basis that the terms of the instruction are not appropriate because of the citations you have read, or because you feel that the instruction cannot be moved at this stage? I would say that if it were the former, then there would be a difference of opinion between us as to whether in fact the terms of my instruction are proper. But if it is the latter that you are to rule, then there would be a fundamental difference of opinion as to the propriety of an hon. member moving an instruction at this moment. It might be helpful if we could have the discussion narrowed down.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could clarify that point. Generally when the order of the day is read, "House in committee of the whole" the Speaker puts the motion. My first remarks were made on the assumption that I had proposed the motion that I do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole at that moment. That motion is not debatable and I could not see how anyone could stand up and say anything even to move a superseding motion. This particular phase of our procedure is rather new because it is relatively recently that we have adopted new standing orders. Prior to the session of 1912-13 they were debatable. Citation 165 of Beauchesne's third edition reads:

> A motion for the adjournment of debate upon a question for the adjournment of the house will not be entertained because no adjournment motion can be debated or amended.

It will be seen that that citation has no relevancy to the point at issue, but I draw attention to the last clause which reads:

> —because no adjournment motion can be debated or amended.

He gives a reason in one instance, which is just as good as in any other, that if a motion is not debatable, it is not debatable and no one can stand up and say anything. We had a point like that the other day on the motion to adjourn the house. I will not make the point now, but I have studied the matter and have come to the conclusion that when a motion is made that is not debatable under our rules the only thing for the house to do is to vote.

The motion for instruction was made by the hon. member before I proposed the motion for the house to go into committee of the whole and therefore what applies is the first paragraph on page 512 of Bourinot. The hon. member has made a good case by virtue of the decisions of the English Speakers rather than what is outlined by Bourinot at page 515. He has indicated that in all the precedents he has quoted the house has done exactly as Bourinot says at page 515 should be done, when the house must divide a bill in two or consolidate two bills or when it wants to add a clause which it would not have the power to do otherwise.

I rule on this basis, that the motion of the hon. member for Kamloops at this point is one that is in order from the point of view of the moment at which it must be proposed. Secondly, I say that the instruction contained in there is one that gives the committee instruction to do something which it already has power to do and that, therefore, the instruction is not necessary.

Of course, if the hon. member were to be faced later in committee of the whole with a ruling by the chairman, that the subject matter of his amendment were not to be relevant to any sections, I would say to him that he has a recourse and that, when the bill comes back from committee, he can always move that the bill be referred back with instructions. As he knows, it is merely postponing the matter. So my decision now is that the committee, in my own view, has power to deal with the subject matter of the instructions contained in this motion, and therefore I will rule it out.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of your ruling that a motion of instruction if made at this juncture is made at the proper moment, provided it is a proper instruction, I rise to move:

> That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to consider amending Bill No. 298 by incorporating therein the agreement made on May 8, 1956, between Her Majesty the Queen—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member before he concludes reading his motion? Is it the contention of hon. members that the floor should be reserved to them with a view to putting these motions to give instructions to the committee of the whole? Hon. members know that it is customary, when there is an order of the house to go into committee of the whole, that the order is read, the minister indicates he is ready to have the motion proposed, and the Speaker proposes the motion. The hon. member for Kamloops has made one motion, and I have dealt with it. How long am I going to act as if the Minister of Trade and Commerce should not have his motion put forward from the chair and therefore should not be recognized at all, so as to give how many hon. members the chance to move many intervening motions in the meantime?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, may I refer you to Bourinot, page 516—

Some hon. Members: Oh! Nuisance.

Mr. Fulton: Bourinot at page 516 deals with that point specifically, where he says:

Mr. Speaker ruled, as above,...

"That any number of instructions may be moved successively to the committee on the same bill, as each question for an instruction is separate and independent of every other..."

That seems to dispose of the point raised.

Mr. Harris: Even assuming that is so, the remarks you made, sir, are extremely valid. Must the government wait while every member of the opposition moves a motion? We have placed one before you; we want it put.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The old steam roller.

Mr. Drew: The government says; it must be so.

Mr. Knowles: That is a point which Your Honour, of course, is in a position to answer. A matter is either right or wrong; it is not to be decided on the basis of whether or not—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Except when you do it; then it is always wrong.

Mr. Knowles: —it is inconvenient to the government.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. member that that is not the point at all. The point is that a member gets the floor when he catches the Speaker's eye. It is very simple. Standing order 29 only meets the case when two members rise at the same time, and it states that a motion may be made that a certain hon. member be now heard. But the question is that, when the hon. member rose—after I had just made my ruling, and I had not yet reached the comfort of my own chair, the hon. member was standing. I sincerely believed he was at that moment going to comment on the ruling I had just made. As a matter of fact, that is the way he started his comments, anyway. I did not know that he was going to conclude with another motion and I repeat the point. Whatever is done with respect to this motion one way or the other, I ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre: Am I going to give the floor to every hon. member who wishes to move any other motion but the one that the house do go into committee of the whole at the present moment?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that I waited, so far as making my own decision whether or not I would move this, until I heard your ruling on the motion made by the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Harris: How innocent!

Mr. Knowles: You made a very clear-cut ruling and divided it into two parts. If I may deal with the second part first, you said that his motion was out of order because of its substance, but before you ruled it out of order on that ground you said that he was in order at this point in seeking to move a motion of instruction. Therefore, relying on page 516 of Bourinot, I feel that if one motion of instruction is in order at this particular time, inconvenient though it may be to my hon. friends opposite, literally any number of such motions may be made provided they meet the conditions that you yourself have laid down. I say to you, sir, that you will be the judge as to whether or not the substance of the motion that I seek to make is in order, whether it is a proper instruction, but I rely on your own statement when you were answering the hon. member for Kamloops that it is appropriate at this point, before the question for going into committee of the whole is proposed, to move a motion of instruction. It was on the basis that I felt I was at exactly the same point in our proceedings that the member for Kamloops was when he rose some time ago and that I had exactly the same right he had then to propose a motion of instruction, subject only to Your Honour's verdict as to whether the substance of my motion of instruction is a proper instruction to the committee. It was on that basis I sought to move it. I should like to move it. I should like to repeat the whole of it, but of course whether or not I may proceed with it I am sure Your Honour will at least let me propose the motion so that you can decide if it is in order.

Mr. Speaker: At this moment the hon. member is in possession of the floor and I will allow him to move it, but perhaps I am a jump ahead. I would imagine that hon. members will be fair in this matter. Here is an order of the day, house in committee of the whole, and I am about to propose that I do now leave the chair, a motion moved by the minister who pilots this bill.

Mr. Fleming: He has not moved it yet.

Mr. Speaker: There are many things that are sometimes possible but do not happen in a house such as ours, and I would refer hon. members to Beauchesne, citation 227, where, talking about debate under closure, it says:

> The government members, in order to prevent the opposition from proposing such amendments, may keep up debate until two o'clock in the morning . . .

This does not happen because, as hon. members know, the Chair distributes the time among members, and we are faced with the same problem now. If I allow hon. members who want to move instructions to proceed before the question is proposed by the chair that the house go into committee of the whole on this bill, then I leave them in the position where they can move what they consider is a motion in the nature of a substantive motion, whereas if I put the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce they are then placed in the position set out in Bourinot at the top of page 513. I ask them: Am I going to delay the proposal of the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce if there are four, five, six or seven motions for instructions? Having said that, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre understands the situation and he can put his motion.

Mr. Fulton: Before that is done—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Fulton: —I wish to explain the situation. I have not intervened lately for this reason. When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rose I was rather under the impression that he was going to speak to the point of order that had been before us. It had been my intention to appeal your ruling on the motion I made. I would request that right now before the hon. member actually makes his motion.

Mr. Speaker: I submit that it is now too late for that to take place.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in view of Your Honour's ruling, which you have now made twice, that it is proper at this time to move a motion of instruction, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis):

> That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to consider amending Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, by incorporating therein the agreement made on May 8, 1956, between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited.

I am prepared to speak to the motion if Your Honour will allow it as in order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has moved that the committee have power to consider amending Bill No. 298 by incorporating therein an agreement made on May 8, 1956 between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited. The subject matter of this instruction, moved before the motion for the house to go into committee of the whole is proposed from the chair, is one which, as Bourinot says at page 512, is an instruction of the nature of a substantive motion and has to take precedence over the question that the Speaker do leave the chair. That type of instruction is one that is the subject of a distinct question which I believe requires notice. It falls under the decisions rendered by English Speakers that I referred to a moment ago in the second paragraph on page 515 of Bourinot where it says:

> That notice should be given of an instruction when a member has proposed such as a substantive motion, and not as an amendment to the question, that the Speaker do leave the chair.

If the question that the Speaker do leave the chair had been proposed I said earlier that the hon. member could not have moved his motion by way of amendment because the motion that the Speaker do leave the chair to go into committee of the whole is not debatable. He has moved it before, which is the only place at which it can be moved, but at this moment it is in the nature of something which is not in the bill. He wants to add a document to the bill which probably would be the subject matter of a schedule or an appendix, and it is my view that notice is required for an instruction of this type.

Mr. Coldwell: May I just say one word? An agreement is mentioned in the bill. Such mention is part of the bill. An agreement is clearly mentioned in it. If you look at part II you will find this language:

> (e) pursuant to any agreement in that behalf made, with the approval of the governor in council, before or after the coming into force of this act,. . .

Consequently I argued previously—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to give me the number of the clause again?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The clause is No. 7 (2) (e). I argued this matter on a previous occasion on second reading. Now we are at the point where I think it is crucial that the agreement should be a part of the bill itself. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that under your own ruling just now this is certainly the right place to move it and that the motion is in order at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) will, I think, agree with me in this. I may say that I had overlooked the fact that in one of the clauses of the bill mention was made of this agreement. But may I ask what there is to prevent the committee from dealing with this matter when the house is in committee of the whole?

An hon. Member: Nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Why should an instruction be given to the committee to incorporate the agreement therein?

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, may I submit that is not the point. The point is this. Is it in order to do this at this time?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McCann: The agreement is in possession of the house.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have participated before in these discussions of points of order and to hon. gentlemen opposite I would suggest that, since they have closure on their side and are muzzling parliament so effectively, I might be given an opportunity to express my views. I am wondering whether we are in the old German Reichstag or whether we are in the Canadian parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: If the matter is one that is completely outside of the bill and is in the nature of a substantive motion, it requires notice. Speaker's rulings given in Bourinot at page 515 so indicate. If the motion is an instruction to give it power to do something which it already has power to do, then this is the proper time to move it. But it is my duty to decide whether or not the instruction is one which is proper to give to a committee and to include in a motion. I am obliged to give the same ruling as I gave a moment ago based on what Bourinot says at page 513:

> If the subject matter of an instruction is relevant to the subject matter and within the scope and title of a bill, then such instruction is irregular since the committee had the power to make the required amendment.

Does the hon. gentleman wish to appeal my ruling?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, Mr. Speaker; I wish to appeal your ruling.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. Speaker: Those who are in favour of sustaining the Speaker's ruling will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Coldwell: I think we must be right occasionally.

Mr. Speaker: I did not hear that last remark.

Mr. Coldwell: I said that I think we must be right occasionally.

An hon. Member: A reflection on the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, in reply to my question whether he wished to appeal my ruling, answered yes and added these words, "I think we must be right on some occasions". On reflection I think the hon. member will agree that in those words there is an implication that, although he may be right on some occasions, I declare him to be wrong. I do not think he will want to leave any implication that the occupants of the Chair are not impartial. Do I take it that, in spite of what I have just said, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar wishes to rest on the words he has just used?

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I think you are human like the rest of us and that you err. In some of these rulings I think that right has been on our side, although you have seen the matter differently.

Mr. McCann: That is worse.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to comment on this matter. I will refer the hon. member to citation No. 1 in Beauchesne's third edition. I totally agree with the hon. member when he says that I am human and that I may err. But I should also like to remind him that the house, if they think that I have erred, have a recourse.

Mr. Coldwell: In order to save time, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw any reflection that you feel I made on Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of sustaining the Speaker's ruling will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

When "orders of the day" were called, Mr.

Knowles, seconded by Mr. MacInnis, moved that it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to consider amending Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, by incorporating therein the agreement made on May 8, 1956, between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited.

I ruled that the proposed motion was out of order on the ground that the subject matter of the instruction was within the terms of Bill No. 298, and since the committee had power to consider the proposition, the proposed instruction was not necessary. I based my ruling on the following comments in Bourinot's fourth edition at page 513:

"If the subject matter of an instruction is relevant to the subject matter and within the scope and title of a bill, then such instruction is irregular since the committee had the power to make the required amendment."

Whereupon Mr. Coldwell appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker—

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Two hon. members are on their feet at the same time.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I move the motion standing in my name.

Mr. Fleming: Could you not wait until the Speaker recognized you? We have to observe the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Leader of the Opposition risen on a point of order?

Mr. Drew: I propose to make a motion which is appropriate in relation to the ruling made by the Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would hon. members be kind enough to let me hear what is being said?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I intend to make a motion to divide the bill, a motion which can only be made at this time when the motion has been put that the Speaker leave the chair. In that respect I would refer to page 2411 of Hansard for March 19, 1948, and the statement attributed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce which reads:

> Mr. Howe: I am simply making a statement as I said I would at this time. I said that after the second reading of the bill, before the Speaker had left the chair, I would move to take the power in committee to divide the bill in order to report one section and to send another section to a committee.
> The purpose of that offer was to expedite the passage of the bill. I might point out that some eight days have elapsed since then, and every section of the bill has been thoroughly debated. The objective of saving time has not been achieved, and I see no purpose at the moment in putting this motion. However, having said I would do so I am willing to move it, but it is obvious, I think, that the motion will be voted down.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce then moved:

> Mr. Howe: I move, Mr. Speaker, that it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill No. 135 into two bills, in order that one may deal separately with oats and barley.

That motion was accepted and was voted on at that time on the understanding that it was appropriate that this motion to divide the bill be made before the bill went into committee, otherwise there could be no effective discussion on the basis of the division of the bill. Seeing that we have this precedent from the Minister of Trade and Commerce I would hope it would be acceptable, certainly to the Minister of Trade and Commerce if not to anyone else. Also I would point out a statement in Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, fourth edition, on page 515, which reads:

> That it requires an instruction to divide a bill into two parts or to consolidate two bills into one.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as has already been pointed out, we have before us one part of this bill dealing distinctly with the northern Ontario pipe-line section, what is described as the northern Ontario bridge. We have another part of that bill dealing with an entirely separate problem, separated in fact by a gap of 110 miles between Winnipeg and the Ontario boundary. There are two different projects which are appropriately the subject of two different bills. I submit, Mr. Speaker, the only time it is possible to raise this motion and to avoid unnecessary discussion which would later prove to be fruitless would be at this very moment, and I therefore move—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member to say that I agree with him and I will accept his motion. What he has said confirms the two rulings I made earlier.

Mr. Drew: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe):

> That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, into two bills in order that one may deal separately with the financing and construction of the proposed pipe line from the Alberta boundary to Winnipeg.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question but that this motion is in order, because it is an instruction to the committee of the whole that the bill be divided in two. It is also in order by virtue of Bourinot's comments on the decisions of English Speakers which have been laid down with respect to instructions as reported on page 515, one being as follows:

> That it requires an instruction to divide a bill into two parts or to consolidate two bills into one.

Naturally that motion has to be made before the motion is put for the house to go into committee of the whole. This is the type of instruction which is not in the nature of an amendment but rather of a substantive motion. The only point I would put to the house before I put the motion is one which I have some doubts about. I know the Clerk has gone to look up some references in this regard. I refer to the fact that this motion comes up without notice at this juncture of our proceedings when we have an order of the house to go into committee of the whole. The only formal procedure which separates us from reaching the committee is the motion that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole. The question as to whether this motion not being on the order paper is one that is debatable by virtue of standing order 32 must be decided. I would certainly prefer to delay having to rule on that point. Standing order 32(2) reads:

All other motions, including adjournment motions, shall be decided without debate or amendment.

I do not see listed in standing order 32(1) this type of motion, which if it were to be debatable would have had to be preceded by a notice by virtue of standing order 41.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I sat down because Your Honour had risen, but my remarks at this stage will not be extensive. I read the quotation from Hansard to show that a vote of this kind has already been accepted in the house and Your Honour has ruled that it can be accepted. I need not extend any comments on that point.

I would point out, however, that the minister in whose name the motion now before us stands has indicated his approval of this course on other occasions. I would point out that we have two distinct subject matters. We have already indicated our view in regard to that part of the measure which relates to the northern Ontario bridge. However, we have something entirely new, and that is the construction not by a crown corporation of any part of the proposed length of the pipe line, but rather we have the proposal for an advance of public money to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited to construct the western section from the Alberta boundary to the vicinity of Winnipeg.

Surely that subject can best be debated as a single subject. It stands alone. It is obvious that unless the purposes of that part of the act are fully carried out by next spring, then the whole question of the northern Ontario bridge is deferred because the crown corporation will not have enough money to proceed. Therefore it is appropriate and advisable that the discussion relate to a bill dealing with the advance of money to the western section, and that we should deal quite separately with what is an entirely different proposal, not the advance of money to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited but an advance of money to a crown corporation for the purpose of publicly building a segment of this pipe line through northern Ontario. Those are so distinctly different that I do not think they should have been incorporated in one bill, and my motion is designed to bring about that separation.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the Leader of the Opposition was just further explaining the purpose of his motion but, as I say, in my view this would not be debatable. Would the hon. member for Kamloops enlighten me?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Of course the precedents upon which we place most obvious reliance are the two that have already been referred to, in the year 1948. Standing order 32, I think it is now, was amongst our rules at that time though it was then under a different number. Yet in 1948 debate was permitted, occupying some 5½ pages of Hansard, on the motion of the member for Winnipeg North Centre to instruct the committee, a 5½ page debate on the merits of the motion itself, not on a point of order. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce —and of course this is a most compelling precedent—made the motion, exactly on all fours with the one now made by the Leader of the Opposition, to divide the bill into two in 1948, he spoke for a length of time which occupies about three-quarters of a column of Hansard.

It is, of course, axiomatic that if the motion is not debatable we cannot say anything about it. All you can do is move it; but the minister did say something about it. It is true we did not debate it at any length but he did speak about it, and no one challenged his right to do so, and the debate was allowed.

So on two occasions at least that have come to my notice, notwithstanding that we had the same rule to which you have now made reference, debate has taken place in this house, on one occasion debate on a motion exactly similar to that made by the same minister who is involved now, and that minister was allowed to debate it.

Surely there can be no question that there would be one facility extended to the government and not the same facility extended to the opposition. That, sir, is a proposition I know you will not permit to govern in this house. Therefore on the basis of the precedents of our own parliament, this motion is clearly debatable.

Mr. Speaker: I am really touched by the sensitiveness of some hon. members.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I just add as a third precedent the case of April 16, 1948, when the member for Ottawa West, on behalf of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, moved a motion of instruction. It appears on pages 3041 and 3042. It was spoken to by the then member for Muskoka-Ontario, the present member for Greenwood, and there was a further comment by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In other words, without any question that motion for an instruction was debated, and the result on that occasion was that the motion carried.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question that if the motion is debatable we have a debate. If the motion is not debatable, the fact that it might have been debated on two or three occasions does not make a motion any more debatable now. Standing order 32 outlines the motions that are debatable and indicates that all other motions are not debatable.

Hon. members know that sometimes debates take place when they are not supposed to take place. For instance, I can show hon. members five or six pages of debate when a member had moved a motion with an asterisk for the production of papers, and that surely is not debatable. Nevertheless, probably because of the indulgence of the house and because of the good nature of the Speaker, some of these things do take place. But is it debatable or is it not?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to prolong the point unduly, but I would like to have a chance to take a look at the references that have been referred to. I shall ask the Deputy Speaker to take my place while debate may be carried on, and I shall go and look at those—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Speaker: I think we shall gain more by patience than by anxiety. I want to have a look at these references because I take it that it is the contention of hon. members that, because of these various precedents, where some short discussion has taken place, it makes the motion debatable. My contention is that if it does not come within the specifications of standing order 32, it is not debatable. At any rate, I want to go and look at the references that the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Kamloops have quoted. To make sure that I have them right, I have one on April 16, 1948, pages 3041 and 3042, and would the hon. member for Kamloops be good enough to repeat the numbers of the pages for the other two references?

Mr. Fulton: I think they were pages 2207 and 2411 of Hansard of 1948. I can confirm that with Your Honour later. I believe also that there is a passage in May on this matter, on page 526, under the heading of "Debate thereon."

Mr. Speaker: I would not place much reliance on the subject headings because over there they have provisions for notices which we do not have. Although it may be brought to a debate in the United Kingdom house, I do not think the same provisions apply to us.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Fulton: I shall not read it, but I would refer Your Honour to page 526 of May. Those are the authorities that occur to me at the moment.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, there is a motion before the house. I therefore move:

That the house do now proceed to government order No. 2.

Mr. Fleming: More closure. One gag and one guillotine after another.

An hon. Member: Why not adjourn parliament?

Mr. Fulton: There is a motion now before the house. I think a substantive motion is always a superseding motion, in other words one that takes priority. We have had a discussion of that over the motion of Your Honour to leave the chair. The motion for Your Honour to leave the chair can only be put, in fact, after the orders of the day have been put, and I submit that no other superseding motion can be moved at this stage while the discussion in under way on the particular motion now before the house. It must have priority.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, one other point of order. If the motion of the Minister of Finance is regarded by Your Honour as in order, that means you are assuming that the motion before you is a debatable motion.

Mr. Speaker: I hope I shall not have to decide that point; but, while I am asking the house to give me a chance to look at the precedents that have been quoted, I want to say that in my view, if it were not my genuine desire to deal with the utmost fairness with respect to this particular matter, as I do with respect to any other, I would make a ruling now, and my ruling would be that this motion is not debatable. But I am giving latitude to debate while I go and look those up, and I shall be able to do that only inasmuch as I leave the chair. In the meantime, while this latitude of debate was being accorded, the minister has indulged in the same sort of latitude and said, "I shall move a motion. While this is allowed to be debated, I shall move my motion."

But I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would be good enough not to press this motion. At this moment I should like the house to consider that I am concerned not so much with procedural wrangles but to make sure that whatever motions are being made are dealt with in a proper manner. If hon. members are going to concentrate their efforts on throwing all kinds of motions my way, I want to tell them that they risk,—if they insist that

I make snappy rulings, I shall make them to the best of my ability—but if it happens that in the future they are not considered as being proper, then we will have precedents established that will not be the right ones.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Your Honour has said that if hon. members are throwing all sorts of motions at the Chair then members must accept the consequences, I would point out that this is the only time this motion can be made. There was no time before; there will be no time afterwards. Your Honour has already accepted that. Without in any way questioning the intent of what Your Honour said, I would not want any suggestion that this is just a motion thrown out for the purpose of adding a motion to these debates.

This is a motion which has itself been used by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on another occasion with the explanation as to why he thought it was appropriate. I would hope that it would be realized that there is a fundamental reason for considering this carefully. Certainly, whether it be to adjourn this discussion or to permit the discussion to proceed, I would strongly urge that Your Honour should not make any hasty decision, because this is something that has been dealt with and the practice has been accepted. I would certainly regret very greatly that any hasty ruling now would deny a long-established privilege to give instructions at this point before a committee goes into discussion of the bill, if in fact there is reason for dividing that bill as we suggest.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I quite appreciate the position in which you find yourself at the moment, as I am sure all hon. members do. It seems to me that if you were to rule that a motion presented by the Leader of the Opposition is non-debatable, then we would in fairly short order dispose of it by a vote. If on the other hand, you were to hold that it was debatable, you would have to deal with the motion I have presented to you.

Under those circumstances it would seem that if you feel the ruling which you want to make is a ruling on the first motion, as I presume you do, it would perhaps be in the best interests of ordinary procedure in the house, in view of the time we may take in coming to this question, to allow for a time of suspension for Your Honour to consider a ruling on the first motion of the Leader of the Opposition. It is a little unusual, perhaps, for the house to remain in what might be called suspended animation while you consider the situation; nevertheless it seems to me that is all that could be called for at the moment.

Mr. Speaker: I am positive that this motion is not debatable. I am sure that it cannot be debatable at this time, because you cannot have debate on a motion without notice. Here is a motion for which debate is certainly not provided for by standing order 32. What puzzles me is that I am quoted three precedents where, they say, five pages of Hansard covered the debate that took place.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to the fact that due notice was given that that motion would be made. It was given on second reading. In fact, an undertaking was given to the house.

Mr. Fleming: No formal notice.

Mr. Speaker: Precisely what I thought might have been the case.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: But I have no knowledge of these things at the moment. I cannot be expected to have precedents in my mind, the numerous precedents in every case. I think the suggestion I made a moment ago seems to be now generally acceptable, that the house allow me a few minutes to go and check these precedents that have been quoted, and in the meantime the debate will have to take place.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What debate?

Mr. Speaker: What do you suggest should take place; that we should suspend the house?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I do not suggest that we suspend the house. I thought I made it clear that I think all hon. members will be glad to remain where they are while you consider the matter in the same way that you would consider it if you remained in the chair. You often take time to look at the books before you, and I expect you would want to take a little longer to look at other books. Nevertheless, while you are doing that the house remains more or less silent and awaits your decision.

Mr. Hodgson: Why not dissolve the house and go to the country?

Mr. Fleming: May I give one brief reference that I hope will assist you in coming to your conclusion on the point of order that has been raised. You have had a reference to the discussion that took place on March 15, 1948, on a similar motion. It will be recalled that after the motion was introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre the member of the house who followed him was

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Mr. Ilsley, who was recognized as one of the leading authorities in the house on the rules of the house. Mr. Ilsley opened his remarks with these words, as recorded at page 2210 of Hansard:

> I presume I may now speak to the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The hon. gentleman gave no notice; therefore I have been able to give it consideration only during the last few minutes.

Then he went on and made his statement, and about half a dozen other members of the house also participated in that debate.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has just now made a reference to what occurred in the house on March 19, 1948, and has intimated to you that he gave notice.

Mr. McIlraith: He did.

Mr. Fleming: He did not give notice. There was no formal notice at all. Hon. members who were in the house at that time will remember what happened. At that time the minister said—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt to ask the hon. member for Kamloops, while I am listening to the hon. member for Eglinton, to bring me the Hansards in which are contained the previous references so I may be in a position to make a decision as soon as possible? Would the hon. member for Kamloops be good enough to send me the Hansards?

Mr. Fleming: I have the volume and I will pass it up to you.

Mr. Knowles: I will let you have mine, sir.

Mr. McCann: You sit down.

Mr. Fleming: I have nearly finished. The minister said today that he had given notice. He had not given notice. There was no formal notice at all as required by the rules if this was an amendment that required notice. All that was said in the course of the debate on an earlier day was that the minister gave an oral undertaking to the house that he would introduce this motion when that stage was reached. That was no notice at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: You can give notice in the house. It has been done over and over again.

Mr. Fleming: That is not the notice we are talking about at all. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is far astray of the mark. If notice is required it is a formal notice as prescribed by the rules. It is not a mere statement in the course of somebody's remarks in the house—

Mr. Pickersgill: There was already unanimous agreement on that occasion.

Mr. Fleming: —that he will make a proposal to the house. That is not the notice we are talking about at all. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is even more astray than he usually is.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was already unanimous agreement.

Mr. Fleming: In the light of the references that have been cited here today the integrity of those precedents in relation to the subject now under discussion is, in my submission, unchallengeable.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to comment on one point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He referred to the motion made by me on April 16, 1948, as found at page 3041 of Hansard, and used that as a precedent to indicate that there was a debate on a motion for an instruction to the committee. I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that one member rose and started to speak, the hon. member for the then constituency of Muskoka-Ontario. During the course of his remarks it was pointed out to him that he was asking questions and he immediately resumed his seat and the house went into committee. Then he proceeded with his speech.

Mr. Knowles: After a page of debate.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, but he immediately desisted from debate when the matter was drawn to his attention.

Mr. Tucker: May I draw one point to your attention, Mr. Speaker. At page 658 of Beauchesne, third edition, I find the following:

> The house cannot instruct a committee of the whole to amend a bill respecting public expenditure, so as to alter the nature of the expenditure recommended by the crown.

If you were to entertain the motion, Mr. Speaker, that the committee should divide the bill you would alter the whole foundation on which the bill is based. These two proposals are tied together and you would be changing the whole basis upon which this legislation has been recommended by the crown. Clearly a motion like that made by a private member of the house, not a minister of the crown, would be out of order because surely it would change the whole basis on which this recommendation by the crown is based. I cite that to Your Honour.

Mr. Knowles: May I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that you have already ruled that the motion is in order. You did that some time ago. The point you are considering now is whether or not the motion is debatable.

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I do not like these situations of indecision. Reference has been made by the hon. member for Kamloops to page 2411 of Hansard of March 19, 1948 as an instance when a motion to instruct the committee to divide a bill had been debated. I now have the text and at page 2411 I find the following:

> Mr. Howe: In the debate on the resolution, Mr. Speaker, in response to a motion from the C.C.F. party that the bill be divided and the coarse grains section sent to a committee—
> Mr. Coldwell: It did not come from the C.C.F.
> Mr. Wright: On a question of privilege—
> Mr. Howe: I am simply making a statement as I said I would at this time. I said that after the second reading of the bill, before the Speaker had left the chair, I would move to take the power in committee to divide the bill in order to report one section and to send another section to a committee.
> The purpose of that offer was to expedite the passage of the bill. I might point out that some eight days have elapsed since then, and every section of the bill has been thoroughly debated. The objective of saving time has not been achieved, and I see no purpose at the moment in putting this motion. However, having said I would do so I am willing to move it, but it is obvious, I think, that the motion will be voted down.
> Mr. Ross (Souris): The minister distinctly made the statement that he would adopt this procedure to divide the bill and refer section 5 to the agriculture committee.
> Mr. Howe: I move, Mr. Speaker, that it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill No. 135 into two bills, in order that one may deal separately with oats and barley.
>
> Some hon. Members: No.
> Mr. Speaker: Mr. Howe moves, seconded by Mr. Gardiner—
>
> Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.
> Mr. Speaker: —seconded by Mr. McIlraith, that it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill No. 135 into two bills, in order that one may deal separately with oats and barley.
> The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howe) which was negatived on the following division:

It seems obvious that in this case the motion to divide a bill took place in response to a request to that effect that had been made at a previous stage in committee, and that the debate that took place consisted of the statement of the minister that he had made a pledge that he would do so and he was going to do it. Then there is reiteration by the then hon. member for Souris that the minister had distinctly made the statement that he would move that the bill be divided. I do not think we can say because of this that the motion to instruct the committee to divide the bill was debated. Would the hon. member be good enough to give me the reference to the place where he found five pages in Hansard?

Mr. Knowles: Pages 2207 to 2213 of that same volume of mine that you have in your hand.

Mr. Fleming: The reference I gave was page 2210.

Mr. Speaker: I see that this volume belongs to the library.

Mr. Knowles: The library has it charged to me.

Mr. Speaker: Page 2207. I see now that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre keeps a good note of all the motions he proposes. On that occasion, as appears at page 2207 of Hansard of March 15, 1948, he proceeded to propose a motion and he said this:

> The procedure I wish to follow is identically the same as that which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) told us the other day it was his intention to follow with respect to Bill No. 135.

We have dealt with that matter. Then he gave all his authorities supporting the move he was proposing. It is true that his measure had to do with the Transitional Measures Act. I can see that he spoke at quite some length. However, I think he will agree with me that he was not so much debating the merits of the motion itself as the authorities supporting him in what he was doing. I note that at page 2208 he points out the citations in Beauchesne, Bourinot and May with respect to the differences between permissive and mandatory instructions. Then Mr. Smith, the then hon. member for Calgary West, asked a question and Mr. Knowles answered. Then Mr. W. Garfield Case spoke for about three paragraphs, then Mr. Ilsley and then Mr. Smith again.

What strikes me is this. Mr. Smith spoke three times. We can speak only once on a debatable motion.

Mr. Fulton: If he spoke three times, perhaps it is three times as debatable as any other motion.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Ilsley himself spoke and there was an interjection by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Then Mr. Ilsley continued. He was interrupted by Mr. Smith of Calgary West, who took the floor. Then Mr. Ilsley spoke again. Mr. Knowles spoke again. Mr. Ilsley spoke. Then Mr. Knowles made an interjection. Then Mr. Ilsley spoke again.

This was not a debate as we understand it, where a member speaks to a question only once. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will agree with me, I am sure, that this debate took place with the indulgence of the house upon a motion moved by the hon. member with respect to an extremely important measure, namely the Transitional Measures Act, and that it is evident—because if the motion was really debatable, all the rules of debate were violated during that particular debate by members speaking two or three times to the same question—that the debate took place because of the climate which prevailed in the house at that time and by unanimous consent.

Mr. Fleming: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Eglinton may say no, but I cannot conceive that a Speaker would allow the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to propose a debatable motion, then allow the then hon. member for Calgary West to speak three or four times and even the then minister of justice himself to speak three or four times and the original mover of the motion, without closing the debate, himself to speak again two or three times.

Mr. Fleming: With respect, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. You say that the then hon. member for Calgary West, Mr. Smith, spoke several times. With great respect, may I say that I think that is a misapprehension. If you will look at page 2209 you will find that he asked a question. That was all he did the first time.

Mr. McCann: He said he spoke.

Mr. Fleming: Just a minute. If you will look at page 2210, Mr. Speaker, you will find that he spoke in opposition to the motion. At page 2212, all he did was to throw in from his seat an interjection which Hansard caught. That was all he did. He said, "I am agreeing with you" in reply to an observation made by Mr. Zaplitny. This was not a free-wheeling discussion, Mr. Speaker, with all the rules waived. There is not a word said here to indicate that there was any consent on the part of the house that there was to be a free discussion on a motion that was not otherwise open to debate. With respect, Mr. Speaker, in your attempt to give a quick reading to some seven pages of Hansard under the pressures of the moment I think you have not correctly followed the discussion. With great respect, I do not see how anybody could hope to absorb the course of this discussion which is reported on seven pages of Hansard in the time that you have had available.

Mr. Pickersgill: Including the hon. member who is now speaking.

Mr. Fleming: Fortunately not including the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill), because in 1948 we were spared his silly interruptions. There were in the house in those days people who knew something about the rules and Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley was recognized as an authority on the rules.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Shall we discuss the point of order? Was the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre going to say something?

Mr. Fleming: I was in the middle of saying something.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the hon. member for Eglinton had not concluded his remarks. Will he speak to the point of order?

Mr. Fleming: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. I was observing that the member on the government side at that time who participated in that debate, namely Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley, then minister of justice speaking for the government, was recognized as an authority on the rules. There was on his part no objection whatever. There is not a suggestion, not a word on his part, to indicate that the motion was not debatable. On the contrary he takes note of the fact that no notice was given, and he is speaking to the motion with the handicap of not having that notice. But he uses these words, "I presume I may now speak to the motion". What could be plainer than that, Mr. Speaker? There is the voice of the government on that occasion, and an authoritative voice having regard to the knowledge of the rules of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I may be a very new member of the house and I may not know the rules very well. But when the hon. member said that Mr. Ilsley drew attention to the fact that this was done without notice, it seems to me that he implied that in the ordinary course it would require notice. Even in the short time during which I have been in the house I have seen a great many things that were contrary to the rules done in this house by general consent, though it was quite tacit consent. It is perfectly obvious that is what happened on this occasion. I should like to disabuse the mind of any hon. member who thinks there is any unanimous consent to go on with the debate on this motion today, because I for one would never give it.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, you were in the house on that occasion. You were a member of the house at that time. We have all this talk now conjuring up something that did not exist at the time, namely the idea of consent. Mr. Speaker, will you bear in mind the fact that this was a contested motion and that it resulted in a division in the house. There was no consent at all to its being proceeded with. On the contrary, it was formally contested, and it resulted in a division. Let there be no more silly talk about this debate having proceeded on the basis of consent. Talk of that kind comes from people who were not even in the house at the time.

Mr. Knowles: Your Honour will observe, because you have the Hansard in front of you, that Mr. Ilsley's reference to not having notice was a case of laying the foundation for the fact that his remarks had to be extemporaneous. He said in the next sentence—I have not the Hansard in front of me but I am familiar with the passage—that accordingly he had not had any more time than the time during which I had been speaking to collect his thoughts about this issue. He did not refer to lack of notice as an objection to the motion at all.

The other point that I was going to make, Mr. Speaker, was this. Your Honour and all of us are familiar with the practice of Hansard in that it puts members' names in Hansard in full when they are making formal speeches with the Speaker in the chair; whereas they put the member's surname only, just Mr. Fleming or Mr. Pickersgill, as the case may be, when he makes an interruption or asks a question of the member who is still on his feet. Since you have the Hansard in your hand and I have not, is it not correct to say that my name appears in full and so does Mr. Ilsley's; and one or two others may be there in full as well. It means that those so-called repeated speeches by Mr. Smith and Mr. Case were interruptions in the speeches of other hon. members who had the floor. It seems to me that when Your Honour is presented with this situation it is hard to deny that that was a formal debate on a contentious issue which, as the hon. member for Eglinton has pointed out, ended with a recorded division.

Mr. Fleming: May I add one sentence? May I draw your attention to the fact that every time on these pages the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre appears to have been speaking on the matter he spoke in reply to a question. In every case it was a reply to a question, nothing more; it was not an additional speech.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that there is only one way to settle this and that is to quote the passage in Hansard on which the whole argument is based to contend that this motion is debatable. I say that by virtue of standing order 32 this motion is not debatable, and I would go further and say that the first instance on which it was contended that the motion had been debated, namely when Mr. Howe moved a motion regarding the dividing of a bill which related to oats and coarse grains, at that time the motion was put to the house but was not debated except for a clarification which had to be made regarding the statement which the minister had made in committee and by virtue of which he had promised to make a motion to divide the bill later and that motion was defeated. The only other place that has been suggested as a precedent is where a debate took place when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved a motion to give instructions to a committee to divide a bill, and it appears on pages 2207 to 2213 of Hansard.

There are some differences of opinion as to whether or not this was a debate. It appears to me, from a quick reading of the various remarks that were made then, that it was not a debate on the merits of the motion proposed by the hon. member; it was rather a debate relating to the practical value and order of the motion which the hon. member had proposed. Mr. Knowles said:

> Before Your Honour accepts the motion that Mr. Speaker leave the chair and the house go into committee of the whole on Bill No. 136, I should like to propose a motion of instruction to the committee. The procedure I wish to follow is identically the same as that which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) told us the other day it was his intention to follow with respect to Bill No. 135. He indicated at that time that after the second reading of the bill had been passed he would move an instruction to the committee that they have power to do so and so with that bill. It is my intention at this identical stage to move as an instruction that the committee of the whole have power to carry out a certain procedure with respect to Bill No. 136 which is now before us. I do this, Mr. Speaker, under the authority of citation 407 of Beauchesne, third edition, which reads as follows:
> "An instruction is a motion empowering a committee to do something which it could not otherwise do, or to direct it to do something which it might otherwise not do. It directs the order and course of the committee's proceedings and extends or restricts the order of reference according to the discretion of the house."
> Citation 410 indicates when and where such a motion as I am about to make is in order. It reads:
>
> "An instruction to a committee of the whole is a motion which ought to have the right of way on the question that the Speaker do leave the chair."
> I take it that it was on the authority of that citation that the Minister of Trade and Commerce outlined his proposed procedure the other day. It is on the same basis that I now rise, Mr. Speaker. I think it is only fair I should not go any further without indicating the nature of the instruction which I wish to move. I shall move it at this time, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson):
> "That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to amend Bill 136 by inserting therein the following section:

Then follows section 2 and subsection 4. Then Mr. Knowles continued:

> The Minister of Justice will recognize immediately that this is a point we raised last year when we were in committee on the original bill which was then before us. At that time, since we had the bill before us, it was competent in committee of the whole to move an amendment to section 4. Section 4 was, as I say, at that time before the committee of the whole. This year however we have before us, as the Minister of Justice has just indicated, a very simple bill with only one section, and it could be argued that that bill will bring before the committee of the whole only section 7 of the original act. Therefore if in the committee of the whole I were to rise and attempt to move an amendment to section 4 of the original act, it is altogether likely I would be told that section 4 is not before us, and therefore I would not be able to move an amendment to it.

That is my reason for moving that the house now pass this instruction to the committee, giving the committee the authority to take up section 4 and amend it by inserting another section in the bill now before the house.

I draw to the attention of the minister the fact that last year when I proposed this matter I did so on April 17, suggesting a wording which I felt met my point. The minister, although he did not agree with my motion, treated it with respect and asked that the matter stand, and the next day he suggested an alternative wording which is to be found at page 2181 of Hansard of April 18, 1947. The amendment which the minister then said would meet my purpose was:

Then comes the amendment. The hon. member continued:

I accordingly withdrew the amendment in the form in which I had worded it in the first place and moved an amendment in the form in which the Minister of Justice suggested it to me.

I could carry on like this throughout the rest of the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and if I have to I shall do so. But it seems to me that what the hon. member did at that moment was to make his point that the motion he was proposing was one that was in order and one that he had to make if he were not to be deprived of the right of making some amendments in committee; and at the same time it was meeting the point the Chair might have made that his motion was not to be received because it was empowering the committee to do something which otherwise it would not have the power to do. It is true that the late hon. member for Calgary West, Mr. Smith, at one point asked a question only of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, to which the hon. member replied.

Then Mr. Garfield Case took the floor and said:

From what the Minister of Justice said the other day in explanation of the resolution I understood that the committee of the whole would have an opportunity to discuss any section of the act.

It is not the motion that is being discussed; it is the question of order and the question of the priority of the motion and the practical value of it that is being debated at the time. Mr. Case continued:

I am interested in one particular section. We have been told by the Minister of Finance that the law officers of the crown discovered a provision in the act which even the administration did not know existed, which they said would permit the government to carry out what we have been inclined to call the austerity program. I do not think the government itself expected that the measure presented and passed last session would delegate such wide powers to the administration. For that reason I think when the committee of the whole is considering this bill clause by clause, or any part of it, we should have the right to seek out and deprive the governor in council of the right to deal arbitrarily with any situation with which parliament itself should deal.

We have heard a good deal about the legality of the taxes which have been imposed, and so on. By the admission of the Minister of Finance himself the administration must find itself in an embarrassing situation today, when it is asking parliament to condone something which was done on November 17 and which it had or had not legal authority to do. So I think when the committee is considering this bill, if any direction is to be given we should be privileged to review the act and suggest amendments thereto, so we may feel more secure and may know that we are returning to at least some semblance of democratic government.

At this moment Mr. Ilsley took the floor and said that the matter had come before him without notice and therefore he was not as well prepared to discuss it as he otherwise might have been, but he went on to say:

I am inclined to think no harm would be done by giving this power to the committee. What we should do in committee is another matter. Last year I took the view first, I think, that I was indifferent to a similar motion, because I regarded it as an empty gesture; and I think it is not much more than an empty gesture at the present time. The preservation of the regulations of the wartime prices and trade board, exactly as they are contained in the schedule, gives the government full power to revoke individual controls under those regulations at any time they wish. For instance, they could remove any particular commodity from the operation of the regulations. It was for that reason last year that I thought it did not make any difference whether or not a similar provision passed. Finally, however, I stated that as a member of the committee I would vote against it. While expressing indifference as to whether it passed or not, I said I would vote against it, and it was voted down because it seemed to do something that actually it did not do.

The hon. member thinks that if this provision is added to the bill perhaps it will exercise some moral pressure upon the government to keep price controls on a little longer than they otherwise would. But that is the most that can be said for this resolution. In practice it may accomplish absolutely nothing. At the same time I do not think I can oppose the motion. I think the committee ought to have the power to make this amendment to the bill if it wishes. But what position I will take and what position the government will take on the amendment when the hon. member proposes it in committee is another matter.

Those who are more directly connected with the administration of this measure are giving it some attention at the present time. Perhaps there is some reason why it is important now that we do not surround the revocation of this order and the individual provisions of the order with these restrictions. Perhaps there is some reason why we should not now do that. It does seem somewhat illogical that the committee a year ago would vote against a provision like this.

From what I have read it appears obvious that Mr. Ilsley said the motion was an empty gesture, but nevertheless he was not going to oppose it.

Mr. Fleming: He discussed the motion on its merits.

Mr. Speaker: Well, it is very difficult to differentiate when a debate takes place, especially when it takes place as it did on that particular occasion, the minister supporting it and stating that while he was going to support it he might take a different attitude in committee.

Mr. Fleming: But the next two paragraphs make that very clear, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I know it is now 5.15 p.m., and if I am going to make my point I have two more pages to read and it is not my intention to read them simply because hon. members like to listen to me reading.

After what I read from Mr. Ilsley, the then member for Calgary West, Mr. Smith, did indicate he was opposed to the motion. Mr. Ilsley then asked a question and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre replied to that question, but it is interesting to note that when Mr. Ilsley asked the question he said:

> With the consent of the house, may I ask the hon. member a question? What were his reasons for thinking that the committee would not have the power to propose this amendment in the absence of such a direction from the House of Commons?

This proves that he was directing himself to the value and usefulness of the motion, and was therefore relating his remarks to the order. Then the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indicated what his views were on the matter. Mr. Ilsley then rose and said:

> I can speak again only with the consent of the house. What I intended to say the other day was that I thought amendments to the various provisions of the orders in council would be in order—

And so on. Then the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) took part in the debate in order to indicate his objection to the amendment because, as he said:

> . . . as it is set out now . . . it limits the part of section 4 that could be amended by the committee.

Then the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) gave the purpose of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The then member for Calgary West, Mr. Smith, indicated his agreement with the hon. member for Dauphin, and the hon. member for Dauphin spoke again. The then member for Welland, Ontario, Mr. Mitchell, asked a question. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre spoke again and was interrupted by the then member for New Westminster, now Senator Reid, who rose on a point of order and said:

> It seems to me that it would be out of order before the bill goes to second reading to give a restrictive direction to the committee. This amendment would restrict it to section 4 and I claim that that is entirely out of order. Surely to tell members of the committee of the whole after the bill passes second reading that we are to be restricted to section 4 is out of order.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis), who at that time was the member for Vancouver East, spoke to the matter; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre spoke to the point of order, and the matter came to a decision.

Now I think if hon. members want to be agreeable to what I consider to be a reasonable interpretation of what took place on that occasion they will agree the motion was not considered a debatable one. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre spoke at great length to make his point that his motion for instruction was in order and necessary. The then minister of justice indicated that in his view the motion was an empty gesture but that he would not oppose it. Then representatives of other parties in the house indicated their stand in expectation of the vote which was about to take place. That was done on behalf of the Conservative party by the then member for Calgary West, Mr. Smith, and the then member for Grey North, Mr. Case, and on behalf of the Social Credit party by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low).

A point of order was then raised and the matter came to a vote which was decided in the negative and the division appears on page 2213.

I think hon. members will give me credit for having carefully considered the precedents they have quoted to me. I have to take the view that considering what took place on that occasion when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved his motion to which the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Ilsley, spoke, that to take the view that this motion whenever it is proposed is debatable is taking a very narrow interpretation of what the precedents may be; but what is more important is the standing order. Standing order No. 32 says:

> The following motions are debatable—

Then it lists the motions that are debatable, and it concludes with paragraph 2 which says:

> All other motions, including adjournment motions, shall be decided without debate or amendment.

The motion which is now before the house is one which is not listed as being a debatable motion in standing order 32 and I take it, and I so rule, that this motion is not debatable. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Drew: With deference I appeal the ruling.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

When "orders of the day" were called, Mr. Drew, seconded by Mr. Rowe, moved the following motion:

"That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, into two bills in order that one may deal separately with the financing and construction of the proposed pipe line from the Alberta boundary to Winnipeg."

I ruled that, in accordance with standing order 32, the said motion was not debatable. Whereupon Mr. Drew appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

FEDERAL TAX COLLECTIONS

Question No. 478—Mr. Boisvert:

How much money has been collected by the federal government from each of the following provinces: Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, by way of taxes, including income and old age security tax, corporation tax, succession duties, for each of the years 1946 to 1955 inclusive?

Answer by: Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue):

Customs and Excise Division

It is impossible to know how much money has been collected from each of these provinces by way of customs duties, excise duties or sales or excise taxes. The duties and taxes on goods imported into Canada are paid not only by residents of these provinces, but also by others to whom the goods are sold or delivered in other parts of Canada and no statistical segregation of the duties or taxes is kept on this basis.

Questions

RAILWAY SERVICE CURTAILMENT, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 486—Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain):

How many Saskatchewan railway points have had a curtailment of service (a) during the calendar year 1955; (b) to date in the year 1956, (i) in respect to passenger train service; (ii) in respect to agent service?

Answer by: Mr. Langlois, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advise as follows:

(a) (i) The following curtailment of passenger train service occurred during the calendar year 1955:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 24, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. JOHNSTON (BOW RIVER)—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN OTTAWA "CITIZEN" OF MAY 23

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I want to draw your attention to an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen yesterday. You will recall it was only a day or two ago when the press misquoted you and you had no other alternative but to accept their wrongdoing until the question was brought forward here in the house.

I wish to refer to this article because it makes reference to myself and other hon. members of the house. It is headed, "Calgary's Mayor Backs Nickle on Pipe Line Bill". The section I want to deal with appears half way through the article under the subheading "All Wrong", and reads as follows:

> Mr. McKay, wearing his familiar white Stetson hat and avowing his loyalty to the Liberal party, felt that the Progressive Conservative and C.C.F. parties were "all wrong" in opposing the legislation.
> At the same time he was not personally opposed to another Calgary Progressive Conservative member, D. S. Harkness, member of parliament for Calgary North, for his going along with his party on the controversial issue.

I want particularly to draw attention to the next paragraph which reads:

> "We have three fine Calgary representatives in the House of Commons," he said. The third city member is C. E. Johnston, C.C.F. representative of the Bow River riding, who has been opposing the gas line measure.

I want to point out that the last sentence starts out with the words "The third city member", which words are not in quotation marks, so I assume they are the direct words of the reporter. I submit that if reporters in this house do not know the members, they should know them. After being 21 years in this house there should be no press reporter who thinks that I am connected with the C.C.F. party. Further, they should know that I have not, nor has this party, ever opposed the construction of an all-Canadian gas pipe line.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Sixth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. McCulloch (Pictou).

FRUIT

ORANGES—USE FOR MARMALADE WHEN COLOUR ADDED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, notice of which I sent him earlier this day. In view of a reply to questions 4 and 5 on sessional paper No. 224 tabled in my name respecting the use of orange peels with colour added for the purpose of making marmalade, that the colour so used contains a coal tar substance, and the suitability of this colour for foods is now under investigation, would the minister consider advising the public to the effect that orange peels so coloured possibly should not be used for the purpose of making marmalade until such time as the results of the investigation are made known?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, all I can say to my hon. friend is that my technical officers advise me that the evidence does not justify notifying the public that there is danger in the consumption of orange marmalade made with oranges coloured with the substance in question. I can only assure my hon. friend that the matter is being pursued further with great care.

CIVIL DEFENCE

EVACUATION OF CITIES—STATEMENT BY FIELD MARSHAL MONTGOMERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would he care to comment upon the reported statement by Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery with regard to the evacuation of cities?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in answer I would simply say that any observation made by Field Marshal Montgomery would be noted and considered with great respect. Taken in its context the statement referred primarily to conditions in Europe and apparently he was looking forward to the time when we would be faced with the actuality of intercontinental guided missiles. No one suggests, of course, that evacuation is the final answer to all the problems that civil defence may have to face when these weapons not now in being come into existence. Nor does anyone minimize the problems that will arise in any attempt to move large numbers of the population on short notice out of crowded cities into areas of greater safety. But it is equally clear, particularly against the background of last week end's detonation of an airborne hydrogen bomb—equivalent to ten million tons of t.n.t.—by the U.S. authorities at the Bikini proving grounds, that it will not be sufficient for civil defence purposes to counsel people to take shelter in their cellars. It will be recalled that at the first detonation two years ago a crater was created in the ground 178 feet deep. To protect ourselves against the menace of the H-bomb, something more than a policy of "duck and cover" is required; and that distance is, for the present at least, the only effective defence weapon against the H-bomb. It is because of our conviction that this is so that we, together with the other NATO countries, are testing evacuation to determine the extent to which it can provide an effective answer to the threat of this particular instrument of warfare.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Was not Field Marshal Montgomery referring to the protection from the fall-out which would be afforded in basements rather than the actual bursting of the bomb which might fall? Have the officials of the civil defence branch not been advocating the use of basements as protection against the fall-out?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, if Field Marshal Montgomery was referring to the dangers of the fall-out, then, of course, there is no disagreement as to what should be done. Obviously basements and shelters at least three feet in the ground are at the present time the known available effective defences against the fall-out. I was not present when Field Marshal Montgomery spoke to the newspapermen and I can only speak from hearsay and interpret what he actually did say, but my judgment is that he had reference to the European scene and that he was thinking particularly of the period when we might be confronted with intercontinental ballistic missiles.

HOUSING

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION —INQUIRY AS TO SUSPENSION OF LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the Minister of Public Works what consideration is being given to the situation arising out of the announcement by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that it is suspending all loans in the green belt area around Ottawa, particularly in the light of the fact that various persons have acquired properties and options on properties in that area, upon which they had expected to erect homes?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The decision to suspend loans has been made pending the report of the joint committee, which is now studying the operations of the federal district commission. What will happen beyond that depends on the nature of the report and perhaps on other circumstances that might have to be considered at the time. In the meantime, at least one of the builders who had options and had taken steps to proceed has had his loan reconsidered, and there has been an extension given to him. I know of no other outstanding cases that need to be considered at this time.

AGRICULTURE

ONTARIO—INQUIRY AS TO CURRENT SEEDING SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture, of which I have given him notice. Has the minister had any survey or investigation made regarding the critical situation that has arisen with respect to conditions on eastern Canadian farms due to the prolonged cold, wet weather that has delayed seeding? If so, has the minister any comment to make on the situation?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I might say there is a little more in it, as I have it here, than was just read. As to the first part of the question, we have general reports on the crop conditions, of course, right across Canada, but the detailed reports are taken by the departments of agriculture in the provinces, and we get detailed reports from them. The report that came over the radio last night, to which I listened, was to the effect that they were suggesting something should be done, as is the usual thing by the province, and expressed some appreciation to the federal government for having paid part of the freight costs of grain from the west, which does help, and suggesting that perhaps more consideration be given to that. The second part of the question has to do with that sort of thing. That is, of course, being continued.

Mr. Nesbitt: I may say that I intended to ask the minister a supplementary question, as follows. Is the government considering any plan for assisting farmers in eastern Canada to purchase feed grains from the west if the present serious situation continues with its ultimate result that local crops of feed grain for next winter will be enormously reduced?

Mr. Gardiner: Of course the answer to that, as I said a moment ago, is that we already support the shipment of feed grains from the west to the province of Ontario and the other eastern provinces as well, and to the province of British Columbia. Up to the moment there has not been consideration with respect to going any further because of what has happened in different parts of Canada but, as I said, the resolution which was passed by an organization yesterday expressed appreciation for assistance on freight and said that its continuance would be of assistance. It is being continued.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

STEEL AND WIRE FENCE COMPANIES—SUGGESTED IMPOSITION OF FURTHER PENALTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister state whether any action will be taken to make the six steel and wire fence companies which have been fined under the anti-combines section of the Criminal Code pay, in addition to the fine, costs of the trial and the costs of the investigation, which I understand began in 1952?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I may say, in reply to my hon. friend's question, that the fines which were imposed upon the accused corporations in this case were the maximum fines which were possible under the old Criminal Code section in respect of these offences which were committed while the old section was in effect; and it would not be possible to achieve the result that my hon. friend suggests.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

DEFENCE RESEARCH BOARD—INCREASE IN WORK WEEK OF SECURITY GUARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister say why the security guards at the defence research board have had their work week increased from 42½ to 48 hours?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. I shall be glad to take the hon. lady's question as notice.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MOONEY AND STOFFELS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO ACTION BY DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him whether, since the matter was brought up yesterday, he has heard from His Worship Magistrate McKeown, with reference to the case to which I alluded yesterday and, if so, the nature of the communication and the kind of action which his department intends to take with reference thereto.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend's question I might say that in the second mail this morning I received a letter from Mr. R. J. Hayward on the letterhead of the Toronto Telegram dated at Toronto on May 23, 1956, stating that Mr. Hayward was forwarding to me under separate cover a brief outlining the new evidence which had been unearthed in this case to which my hon. friend referred yesterday. Stapled to a filing folder in the middle of the said brief we found a letter from Mr. W. W. McKeown, Q.C., the magistrate, dated April 26, 1956, addressed to myself. This is the first notice, of course, that we have had of the magistrate's said letter. Needless to say, we shall investigate the matter at once and take the action which seems appropriate to the facts elicited by this investigation.

EGGS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED IMPORTS FROM POLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister any comment to make on the press report in yesterday's Montreal Gazette that 10,000 cases of eggs from Poland were landed at Montreal on Tuesday, May 22, and will this importation of eggs have the same effect on the domestic market as recent importations of cheese and skim milk powder from New Zealand had on the dairy industry?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of the matter. I did not notice the article in the Gazette. However, I will make inquiries and give the house a report.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

MAPLE SYRUP PAIL SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether his department is in a position to give me an answer to the question I asked on March 9 and which is No. 283 on the order paper?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize if the answer has not already been given. After my hon. friend spoke to me about it the other day I asked that the answer come forward. I will see whether it is ready.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RESUMPTION OF TUESDAY EVENING SHOWING OF FILMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, through you I should like to thank your officials for making it possible for us to see the outstanding educational films on Tuesday evening in the railway committee room. The showing of these films ceased for a while. Now we are to have them again. We hope they will continue to be shown. We appreciate this educational opportunity very much.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are in favour of this motion will please say yea.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed to this motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howe, Port Arthur) which was agreed to on the following division:

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, clause 1 is the short title clause, stating that the act may be cited as the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation Act. It is purely a formal clause and since we have had some six days of general discussion and a few days more of procedural discussion I move:

That further consideration of this clause be postponed.

The Chairman: Those in favour of the motion—

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, are you going to rule that the motion is not debatable, that there cannot be a word of discussion on this first clause of the bill where we always have a general discussion, and on which I wish to introduce an amendment?

The Chairman: I believe if the hon. gentleman will examine the authorities he will find that a motion of this kind is not debatable and I should so rule.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, that would mean that there is to be no discussion at all.

The Chairman: Order. Do I understand that the Leader of the Opposition is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Drew: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I would hope that Your Honour will permit me to present to the government a perfectly reasonable request, that they do not carry contempt of parliament this far and that they reconsider this motion.

The Chairman: Order. I hardly find that a true point of order.

Mr. Fleming: On a point of order, I ask you, if you have not already ruled on that motion that you now rule that the motion is debatable. If your ruling is that it is not debatable then I must regretfully and respectfully appeal your ruling.

The Chairman: My suggestion to the hon. member was that he examine the authorities which lead me to believe that it is not debatable, and I proposed so to rule. If the hon. member can assist me with a brief statement to the contrary I would be willing to hear him.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I believe that this is the first time that there has been such a motion in the sovereign Canadian House of Commons in the last 24 years. I point out to you that on that last occasion in 1932 it was introduced, not at the outset, as it is now, but only after debate had proceeded for some days in the committee of the whole. I would remind you that it is the custom of this house, particularly in connection with a new bill, one not amending an existing statute of this parliament, to permit general discussion on the first clause of the bill. That is the right of all members of the house.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Here we have the Minister of Trade and Commerce, even before anyone has said a word in this committee of the whole, rising to introduce this motion which apparently is intended to throttle all effort at discussion in this committee and to prevent any discussion of the first clause and deprive members of their undoubted right to have a general discussion on the first clause of the bill. I pointed out to you that far from this being simply a formal matter or a formal discussion, I have an amendment to move to this first clause of the bill which I am most anxious to introduce. May I tell you what that amendment is?

The Chairman: Order. I hope hon. members will maintain order in the committee. I have indicated to the hon. member that I wished to hear him and was permitting him to assist me if he had any authority contrary to the idea which I had gained from the authorities that a motion of this kind was not debatable. I hope hon. members will allow me to hear the hon. member, but on the other hand may I ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the authorities which I have asked him to give.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I have not before me the volume of Hansard for 1932 in which the discussion is contained, although I had it here the other day and read some extracts from it. If you will refer to Hansard of April 1, 1932 you will find that when on that occasion the government introduced a similar motion it was discussed. In the course of that discussion the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King made biting criticisms of the government for introducing such a motion. It was in the course of speaking to that motion in the committee of the whole that he referred to it as a procedure such as had never been introduced in a British parliament in reference to a money bill. He went on to say that such a motion would make a farce out of parliament and reduce to a nullity parliamentary institutions and the whole parliamentary process.

I submit that that is a perfectly good precedent. I cannot give you the page reference for Hansard of April 1, 1932 because I am sure no one expected a throttling motion like this to be introduced before a word had been said in this committee of the whole by way of discussion. Otherwise I would have had the volume here. In the face of that precedent I make the submission that this is a debatable motion.

The Chairman: I think I understand the situation. I also have not been—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are you not going to allow any discussion at all—

[Mr. Fleming.]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —on the point of order? Why not throw the key of parliament away?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Lock it up and throw the key of parliament away.

The Chairman: There cannot be more than one point of order raised at one time. I gave the floor to the Leader of the Opposition for the purpose of rising to a point of order and then, as is usual, allowed the hon. member for Eglinton to elaborate on it, inviting him to quote authorities. I must deal with the point of order which has been raised, which I understand is that this motion before the committee is debatable whereas I indicated and I proposed to rule that it is not debatable.

As I said, I do not have the 1932 volume of Hansard before me because I imagine that with such interest in this subject these volumes are very scarce at the present moment. But I have had the advantage of reading about the incident in 1932 and I do not think it interferes in any way with the incident which occurred during the session of 1912-13 on which I propose to base my ruling. Hon. members will find in column 9329 of Hansard for May 7, 1913, that Mr. Borden moved that further consideration of a section be postponed. Then I quote from that page:

> Mr. Oliver: When the postponement of the second clause was moved, it was stated that debate on the motion was not allowable. Might I ask what rule is invoked in that regard?
> Mr. Borden: I do not think it is a debatable motion.

After that, a certain amount of discussion took place and the chairman was obliged to make a ruling, which hon. members will find in column 9338 of that same volume of Hansard. The chairman said:

> I rule that the previous question cannot be put with reference to the motion now before the house because the motion is undebatable.

From that ruling, that the motion was undebatable, an appeal was taken, and hon. members will find the result of that appeal in columns 9339 and 9340.

Mr. Nicholson: What year?

The Chairman: 1912-1913. Hon. members will find the result of that appeal in columns 9339 and 9340, which was that the chairman's ruling was sustained. I therefore find, on this authority, that the motion made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not debatable, and I so rule.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, with great regret, and with deference, I must appeal your ruling.

The Chairman: I shall have the request reduced to writing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister is now the Lord High Executioner of parliament.

Mr. Nowlan: Another portfolio he has taken over.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was executed yesterday.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In committee of the whole, when it was considering clause 1 of Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) moved that further consideration of this clause be postponed. Mr. Fleming and others raised a point of order to the effect that this motion was debatable. I ruled that the said motion was not debatable. Whereupon Mr. Fleming and others appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is the following one. In committee of the whole, when it was considering clause 1 of Bill 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) moved that further consideration of this clause 1 be postponed. Mr. Fleming raised a point of order to the effect that the motion was debatable. The chairman ruled that the said motion was not debatable. Whereupon Mr. Fleming appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the chairman's ruling sustained.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I was paired with Madame Defarge, who presided at the guillotine.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis). Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain the chairman's ruling.

Mr. McGregor: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Ross). Had I voted, I would have voted against sustaining the chairman's ruling.

And the house having resumed in committee:

On clause 1—Short title.

The Chairman: The question is the following one—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. My point of order is that the motion moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is out of order. I base my contention on a clear-cut standing order, namely standing order No. 78, paragraph 1, which reads as follows:

> 78. (1) In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that standing order—and incidentally, I heard no standing order or citation produced in support of the motion presented by the Minister of Trade and Commerce—is a clear-cut direction to the committee that, apart from the preamble and the title, all of the other clauses must be considered by the committee in their proper order. Surely, the proper order is 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. In case it is contended that any consideration has been given to clause 1 because the Minister of Trade and Commerce was on his feet for a few seconds, may I remind you of a ruling that was given yesterday by Mr. Speaker on another matter. On that occasion some of us were trying to contend that in 1948, on the motion of instruction with regard to the bill amending the Canadian Wheat Board Act, there had been debate because the Minister of Trade and Commerce had spoken briefly introducing his motion on that occasion. Mr. Speaker ruled that those few words of explanation could not be regarded as debate. I could go on and give the Speaker's interpretation of another occasion when seven pages of speaking were ruled—by Mr. Speaker—as not constituting debate. However, I am not relying on that incident. I am relying on the first one I mentioned which is more akin to the one now before us because there was only a brief statement.

That brief statement which the Minister of Trade and Commerce made as reported at page 2411 of Hansard of March 19, 1948, was ruled by Mr. Speaker as not constituting debate. Relying on that ruling I insist that the few words of explanation as to why he was moving this motion today which were spoken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce do not constitute debate and that therefore there has been no consideration of clause 1. I will go further, Mr. Chairman, and say that the motion which you have before you, and which was given to you by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, contains a misstatement or a misnomer. It reads "That further consideration of clause 1 be postponed". I think it is clear to everyone that there has been no consideration of clause 1. How can there be accepted by Your Honour any language of that kind which suggests that further consideration of clause 1 be postponed? Therefore, Mr. Chairman, on the basis of my statement that the motion itself contains a false statement or a misnomer; on the basis of the ruling Mr. Speaker gave yesterday with regard to the few words spoken on an occasion such as this, and on the basis of standing order 78 (1) I contend that this motion at this time is out of order.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman,—

The Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member for Kamloops wishes to support the same point of order?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am speaking to the point of order. In support of the point of order raised I want to refer Your Honour to the precedents of the other occasions when closure has been applied in committee in 1913 and in 1917; that is in committee on the bill. I have before me the 1917 volume of Hansard. You will observe that closure was applied on August 27, 1917. On that day the committee resumed consideration of the bill from a previous day; as a matter of fact, it resumed consideration of the bill from several previous days' consideration. Clause 1 was still under consideration and was taken up as reported at page 4960 of Hansard. Clause 1 was considered until page 4989 of Hansard before the motion was made that the further consideration of this clause be now postponed. The same thing was true in 1913. But on both previous occasions when closure was applied in committee it was considered necessary—as of course it is necessary—that there be some consideration before the gag could be applied. There has, of course, been no consideration on this occasion. On the precedents of the former occasions I support fully the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman,—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Prince Albert rising to support the same point of order?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes; I intend to submit some further argument on the question. This matter was dealt with on March 31, 1932. At that time consideration of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Continuance Act had been before the house and in particular before the committee for some two weeks, that consideration commencing about March 1 and continuing on until March 31. On that day the following motion was made as reported at page 1605 of Hansard of 1932:

> I beg leave to give notice that, at the next sitting of the committee of the whole house, I shall move that the further consideration of the title and clauses 1, 2 and 3 of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Continuance Act, 1932, shall be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

Then on April 1 the motion was made as reported at page 1609 of Hansard:

> That further consideration of the title and clauses 1, 2 and 3 of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Continuance Act, 1932, shall be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

In other words, the emphasis is on the word "further", and there has been no consideration at any time of the title, indirectly or at all. The vote does take place, following which Mr. Mackenzie King spoke for a very considerable period of time and pointed out that under the proceedings parliament would be a mere futility and a complete farce. Incidentally, Mr. King hoped that such an event would never happen again in the parliament of this country. I submit, sir, that on the basis of previous experience, the motion made by the minister is as premature as the futility of parliament which will be created as a result.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Is the Leader of the Opposition rising to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Drew: Yes, Your Honour. I submit that Your Honour should examine this in the strictest possible terms. We are dealing here with a denial of any right whatever to the discussion of a bill, at the most important stage of that discussion, and that is at the time when the actual wording of the bill is before the house. This would absolutely deny the whole principle of parliamentary procedure. If it were possible, section by section, to move a motion of this kind it would mean that all that would be necessary for the government to do would be to say, in the first instance, "This is the bill we want passed." Then, they could sit back and wait for the majority to carry out their will. It denies the opportunity for questioning. It denies the opportunity to broaden information. It denies the basis of the life of parliament itself.

Now, for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I submit that standing order No. 78 should be examined in its very strictest terms. As has already been pointed out, it reads as follows:

> 78. (1) In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that unless it had been clearly intended that there be some action taken to postpone the preamble, then there would have been no need for such a reference and it would simply have been stated that the preamble will be considered after the sections are considered. The wording of this makes it quite clear that some initiative is necessary to postpone the preamble.

After all, there are sound reasons for that. The preamble might be in a form and in words that did not appropriately set forth what should be set forth in the preamble. It should not be taken for granted that it will be passed over by the committee and deferred until it has been considered and dealt with in the appropriate way.

If anyone should say that on other occasions the preamble has simply been disposed of without any formal motion, that means there has been tacit agreement given to that being done. In this case, no such tacit agreement is extended. In this case we want to discuss this bill at every stage. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that there are reasons why we should examine this in the most careful way. It is a rule of law, as it is a rule of parliament, that where there is uncertainty in an important issue, then a very strict examination must be given of the facts.

I wish to place on record a concept of the importance of the discussion in committee, not so that you may examine the merits of these motions in themselves, but rather that the full significance of any omissions under the rules may be recognized. I would point out that in 1913, when for the first time closure was introduced into this house, Sir Wilfrid Laurier used words which might well be remembered by some of those who have paid lip service to his memory so often. This is what Sir Wilfrid Laurier said, as reported in columns 9533 and 9534 of Hansard for May 9, 1913. I believe these words go directly to the point I am making as to the importance that should be attached to a ruling on this occasion. I quote his words:

> It has been stated frequently that the bill has been in the committee stage now for 20 days. I ventured earlier in the day to say that this was neither abnormal nor excessive, but that I could point out instances in England where, notwithstanding the gag, the guillotine and the kangaroo, which a member of this government could pray God we should not have in this country—he will not be able to pray God any more—notwithstanding all these obstacles to free speech, the debates in the committee stage on one bill occupied more than one, two, or three weeks. In these modern days the discussion of a bill in committee is the important part of it; indeed, it is stated by authorities that the most important part of the consideration of a bill has always been in the committee stage. The Austrian author, Redlich, who has written on the British parliamentary system perhaps with greater clearness than any British writer, has this to say with reference to the discussion of a bill in the committee of the whole:

Then, there is a quotation which is contained in Sir Wilfrid's speech, and I shall be quoting until I indicate that the quotation is finished.

> We may, then, say that the centre of the whole legislative action of the House of Commons lies in the region of the work of committee of the whole house. It is in committee that the fate of a bill is really decided; its ultimate form is there settled in the clash of parties and opinions or by the compromises made between them. In this stage debate is quite free; members may speak to each question as often as necessary. Speeches in committee are generally short, to the point, businesslike and simple.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: I hear laughter on the other side. Any length there has been in my statement is the length of only a partial, a very small partial quotation from the statement by Sir Wilfrid Laurier on this very subject when closure was first applied.

> Their manner is almost conversational and seldom tinged with rhetoric. The object of committee debate is to arrive at decisions upon special questions of substance and to settle the essential points of detail one by one. The aim of what is said is to convince, not to gain a mere debating advantage. Committee therefore offers to individual members the best scope for display of expert knowledge, untiring industry, capacity for routine work and ready action; many a new member makes his reputation there, especially a man whose claims to foremost rank in parliament are based upon ability and knowledge of political and administrative business rather than on brilliance of oratorical display. On a bill of first rate importance the committee stage may last for weeks.

Then I briefly return to the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself:

> Everybody will agree that this is a bill of first rate importance, and therefore it is nothing unusual, nothing extraordinary, that the committee stage should have lasted weeks, as it has already. Indeed, the very observation which I have read from Redlich is exemplified by a fact to which I desire to call the attention of the house. My hon. friend from Welland has proposed an amendment which goes to the root of this bill, which is of extraordinary importance, which was introduced only two or three days ago, and which has not occupied more than a couple of hours discussion. The second clause of the bill which we now have before us is in these terms:

Then I end the quotation from Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He went on to read the second clause of the bill. Mr. Chairman, in those words from Sir Wilfrid Laurier we find emphasized in simple, clear and understandable terms the full significance of the discussion in committee stage of the terms of the bill. No matter what differences of opinion there may have been in this house, there is not an hon. member who can fail to recall occasions on which argument and conviction and sound judgment did result in important changes in bills of far-reaching consequences to the people of Canada. As Sir Wilfrid said, this is not a time when any mere debating advantage is gained; this is not a time when the whole issue hangs on the principle of the bill as in second reading. This is the time when the government can concede—and can well afford to concede—changes in the wording of the bill itself. That is the reason why this subject should be examined in the strictest terms.

Mr. Chairman, you have made a ruling with regard to the motion before you. Nevertheless, a point of order has now been raised which is of vital concern. We come back to that point of order and I submit it is the duty of Your Honour to interpret in the very strictest meaning of the words the provisions of standing order 78 (1) that the preamble is first postponed and that this calls for some initiative on the part of the house, and until that has been postponed then the other sections cannot be dealt with.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important decisions that will ever be made by a chairman of a committee of this house or by a Speaker of this house because unless our appeal is heard on this occasion then the very root of parliamentary democracy would be destroyed by what is being done here this afternoon.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

The Chairman: A different point of order?

Mr. Nicholson: On the point of order.

The Chairman: I think I have heard sufficient to decide—

Mr. Nicholson: I wish to speak to the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I am sorry—

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, you have heard several hon. gentlemen from the official opposition. One of our members has spoken to the point of order and another desires to do so. Surely he can be given the courtesy of being heard. This whole procedure is an abomination to me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Even Louis XIV would blush.

The Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member for Mackenzie wishes to speak to the point of order of his colleague?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: There seems to be some misunderstanding. I asked the hon. member if he had a different point of order and I understood him to nod his head. There has been a misunderstanding.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to support the point of order which was presented so eloquently by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but before Your Honour makes his ruling, since you have the reference of Sir Wilfrid Laurier before you, I should like to have you give consideration to the additional point that Sir Wilfrid raised 43 years ago, when he said:

> We have heard it stated that these rules are antiquated. I do not admit that at all. These rules are not antiquated. They were not made for a day or for a period; they were made for the ages. It can be said of them, as has been said of the maxims of civil law which have come to us from the Roman jurists, and which are the basis of the civil law of most of the nations of Europe, that they are reason crystallized into writing. The maxims of the civil law have been applied to the relations of the people in civil life, and the maxims of our parliamentary procedure have been accepted as the basis of the transaction of business in all deliberative assemblies.

Mr. Dufresne: Sir Wilfrid was a great Liberal; there are no more of that kind today.

Mr. Nicholson:

> Sir, these rules are to be swept away, they are to be ridden over roughshod; they are to be put aside, and we are to have the gag substituted for them.

Mr. Bell: That is true Liberalism.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, before you make your ruling—

The Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member for Macleod is also rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Hansell: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fleming: So was I, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hansell: And this time, Mr. Chairman, I rise to talk about a matter that perhaps might result in your disallowance of the point of order. There seems to be some confusion in the discussion in respect to the motion being one of closure. It is not a motion of closure, it is a motion to postpone.

Mr. Fulton: It is a motion to get ready for closure.

Mr. Hansell: That may turn out to be the case. If the blocking tactics turn out to be what they have been in the past then I am sure this group will support closure when it comes.

Mr. Knowles: Who is blocking the discussion today?

Mr. Coldwell: Closure has caused the blocking.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Page Louis XIV.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, the motion does not mean that the title is not to be discussed; it means that the title is not to be discussed at the present time. The motion, if carried, means that we move on to another of the more important sections of the bill. Now, if those who are objecting at the present time are objecting on the ground that it does not give them opportunity for discussion, then by the same logical reasoning they should say, "Let us discuss the more important sections first and then come back to the title".

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am quite confident there is a time element in the bill which must be put through by a certain time. I am not one who wishes to block any reasonable discussion but up until now what has occurred has not been reasonable discussion but has rather been blocking tactics.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, you have now heard from—

The Chairman: In order that we may have the record clear, do I take it this is the same point of order?

Mr. Fleming: Quite, Mr. Chairman. You have heard on the same point of order from three parties in the house. You have heard a point of order raised by one hon. member of the C.C.F. party and supported by another. You have heard the point of order supported by hon. members of the official opposition and you have now heard a point taken against the point of order not by the government but by the hon. member for Macleod speaking for the Social Credit group in the house.

Mr. Rowe: Maybe he was speaking for the government, too.

Mr. Fleming: I draw your attention, sir, to the fact—and I think it is appropriate to do so—that you have not yet heard one word on the point of order from the government.

Now, the hon. member for Macleod, who is the only person in the house who so far apparently has had the courage to rise and seek to sustain what the government is now trying to do, has urged that this is not closure. A rose by any other name would smell as sweet as this.

I draw attention to the fact, sir,—and it is in keeping with the point submitted to you by my leader—that this is the most shocking, most effective and most immediate form of closure that could possibly be attempted in this house.

Some hon. Members: Boo.

Mr. Fleming: We have already had examples on two occasions within recent days of closure in this house. The first one gave an illustration of the effect of closure as such because as soon as notice of the motion could be given, a week ago Monday, the Minister of Trade and Commerce rose in his place and gave that notice and then the vote had to be taken the following night.

An hon. Member: Get to the point of order.

Mr. Fleming: But here the effect of this motion is that if the point of order is not sustained by the Chair the closure is immediate.

Mr. Harris: No, no.

Mr. Fleming: There is not another word to be said on this first section of the bill and you have been reminded, Mr. Chairman, how important to this house are these rights in respect to the first section of the bill. That is where we have the general discussion. That is where we get information. We have already told you, and we have told the house, that there is a mass of information that we want and that this house ought to have and which has thus far been withheld. If you take away our rights on this first clause you deny to us and you deny to the Canadian people the opportunity to get that information without which no House of Commons, no self-respecting Canadian House of Commons can proceed. I, therefore—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has raised a point of order which in my understanding involves two phases. First, he says that under standing order 78(1) this is not a proper motion. Second, as I understand his point of order, he says that it is faulty in form in that there has not been further consideration.

Mr. Knowles: There has not been any consideration.

The Chairman: Those were the two points which in my understanding were raised. I am grateful to hon. members for assisting me but I would like their assistance to be directed more particularly to the two points which have been raised.

Mr. Fleming: I had almost completed my remarks which were being directed, you will have noticed, as a reply to the point raised by the hon. member for Macleod, who is the only one we have heard so far in this discussion seeking to support the procedure of the government. As to the second point, I submit to you that in the light of what happened yesterday and what the Speaker said yesterday, the second point is unchallengeable.

On the first point, I submit to you that you could not have a clearer case than this when the motion before you talks about further consideration. I say to you that there has not been one iota or one second of consideration given to this clause as yet in this committee. The Minister of Trade and Commerce scrambled to his feet even before you had taken the chair and called the bill in order that he might offer this motion to gag the committee. In the face of that, how can it be contended that there has been any consideration of this bill at all?

I say to you in these closing words: It is a sad reflection, it is a sad state of affairs in the Canadian House of Commons, when the government that introduces a motion of this kind have not the courage to stand up to try to defend even their procedure. On the contrary, they are content to go ahead and in silence perpetrate upon a once-free Canadian parliament a foul, fascist deed like this.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Again in order to keep the record straight, do I understand that the minister is speaking to this same point of order?

Mr. Harris: As much as anyone else has. It must be evident that one of the reasons why we do not take up the time of the committee is that we think time is valuable in this connection. It would not be necessary for us surely to answer all the points of order raised by the opposition members; else we would never get to the real purpose, namely, a decision on this bill.

May I only say this to the point of order. I would have said what the hon. member for Macleod said, because in speaking to the point of order raised at an earlier time by the hon. member for Eglinton and again later by the Leader of the Opposition they repeated what both of them I am sure know is not so, namely, that this action would in effect carry the clause. Everything that they said would leave the impression that that was so. We have before us a motion which postpones consideration of the clause, and the clause must at a later time be called and disposed of.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege on this occasion.

The Chairman: I understand the Leader of the Opposition is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Drew: Yes. The question of privilege is simply that the Minister of Finance has sought to misinterpret the statement that I made. The motion that has been made is to postpone the discussion of this clause, but the Minister of Finance knows perfectly well that that is simply a preliminary step to an overriding closure of all debate in the committee stage.

Mr. Harris: If I offended the Leader of the Opposition, I did not do so intentionally. I was careful in the choice of my words. I merely said that this is a postponing motion and that the clause will be carried at a later time after consideration.

The Chairman: I really believe I have heard sufficient to decide the point.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the same question of privilege.

The Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is now rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Knowles: I rise on the same question of privilege raised by the Leader of the Opposition with respect to the statement made by the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance said that we were inferring in our opposition to this motion that it was a form of closure in that it was carrying the clause at this point. I certainly made no such claim whatsoever.

Mr. Harris: Nor did I say you did.

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of Finance, without naming people, referred to those on this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fleming: Whom did you mean?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am here too, and I am a member of the opposition in this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Knowles: The fact is that although this is only postponing, if the committee finds that it has to take all of its time on whatever clause or clauses the government lets us consider, we may never get back to clause 1 where general discussion is possible.

Mr. Harris: Quite so.

Mr. Fleming: On the question of privilege, the minister referred to me and he did so without any justification. I did not say that this gag motion if adopted would have the effect of adopting the clause. On the contrary, the motion will, in the light of the government's intention, have the effect of preventing the clause being discussed at any time.

Mr. Harris: At this moment.

Mr. Fleming: Then you will come along and prevent it being discussed at any other time by your next closure.

The Chairman: Order. I feel quite certain that I have heard quite sufficient from hon. members to decide the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. As I said before, I understand the point of order to be this: First, that the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce is out of order under standing order 78 (1), and, second, it is deficient in form in that it contains the words "further consideration" when no consideration has been given to the clause which I called earlier. Standing order 78 (1) reads:

> In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

In rising to support the point of order, the Leader of the Opposition spent part of his time in a discussion of the fact that the preamble had not been first postponed. In my opinion there is no preamble to this bill and therefore I cannot find any validity in that part of the point of order. Standing order 78 (1), I believe, was formerly standing order 76 in part. In the citation in Beauchesne's third edition, under the old standing order, hon. members will find the following, at page 235:

> 691. The consideration of a clause may, on motion made, be postponed, but the motion may not be made if the clause has been amended.

That is, I think, authority for my finding against the first part of the point of order. May I point out to hon. members that my attention was drawn—I did not happen to note which hon. member mentioned this—to the proceedings of 1912-13, and I find that a similar motion, which I mentioned when dealing with the previous point of order, is in almost the same terms as the motion before us today, and we recall that that motion was found in order by the chairman and by a decision of the house.

Mr. Fulton: But had not the clause, in fact, been under consideration for some time?

The Chairman: The further point has been raised with regard to the consideration or lack of consideration that has been given to this clause, the one that I called. In that connection, may I draw the attention of hon. members to May's fifteenth edition at page 527 under the heading "Clause under consideration". It reads as follows:

> Proceedings on a bill begin by the chairman calling the number of the first clause. The calling of a clause by the chairman brings it under the consideration of the committee, . . .

Further, on the same point, may I draw the attention of hon. members to the proceedings that took place in 1912-13, in volume IV of Hansard for that session, in columns 7535, 7536 and 7537. In this incident, a point of order was raised by Mr. German, and hon. members will find in these columns an interchange which took place between Mr. Meighen and Mr. German. I shall not take time to read the entire interchange, because hon. members may do so at their leisure, but I would draw their attention to the following words of Mr. Meighen in column 7537:

> Mr. Meighen: Yes. Nothing more, however, is done at that time and they pass to clause 3. That is the next thing to do, without a doubt. Clause 3 then becomes the subject of discussion in the committee. Clause 3 is under consideration and the committee discusses it also for a time, and the government takes the responsibility for the length of that time.

For all these reasons, I must find against the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I so rule.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I appeal your ruling to the House of Commons.

The Chairman: I shall reduce the question to writing.

Mr. Knowles: This is reducing parliament.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

> In committee of the whole when it was considering clause 1 of Bill 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Knowles raised a point of order to the effect that the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, namely, that the further consideration of clause 1 be postponed, was out of order on the ground that standing order 78 provides that in committee of the whole every clause of a bill must be considered in its proper order, and further the motion was faulty in form since it contained the words "further consideration", for the remarks of the minister could not be construed as being consideration of clause 1. I ruled that in accordance with citation 691, Beauchesne, third edition, it was in order to move to postpone the clause and also that May, fifteenth edition, page 527, states that the calling of a clause brings it under consideration and also that the debate in 1913 on the enactment of standing order 33 clearly contemplated the postponement of clauses of a bill. Whereupon Mr. Knowles appealed to the house from the ruling of the chair.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

> The question is the following one. In committee of the whole Mr. Knowles raised a point of order to the effect that the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, namely, that the further consideration of clause 1 be postponed, was out of order on the ground that standing order 78 provides that in committee of the whole every clause of a bill must be considered in its proper order, and further the motion was faulty in form since it contained the words "further consideration", for the remarks of the minister could not be construed as being consideration of clause 1. The chairman ruled that in accordance with citation 691, Beauchesne, third edition, it was in order to move to postpone the clause and also that May, fifteenth edition, page 527, states that the calling of a clause brings it under consideration, and also that the debate in 1913 on the enactment of standing order 33 clearly contemplated the postponement of clauses of a bill. Whereupon Mr. Knowles appealed to the house from the ruling of the chairman.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the chairman's ruling sustained.

And the house having resumed in committee:

On clause 1—Short title.

The Chairman: The question is the following: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) moves that further consideration of this clause be postponed.

Motion (Mr. Howe, Port Arthur) agreed to: Yeas, 145; nays, 60.

The Chairman: I declare the motion carried.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Clause 2 is the interpretation clause—

Mr. Fulton: I move that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard.

The Chairman: Order. Do I understand that—

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: I had granted the floor to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Fulton: I move that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard.

The Chairman: Mr. Fulton has moved that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard, in accordance with standing order 29.

Motion (Mr. Fulton) negatived: Yeas, 57; nays, 144.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost. The Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, clause 2 is the interpretation clause and is standard in form. It gives the definition of the "board"; "corporation"; what a director means; what the minister means—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): —the Northern Ontario section; "Trans-Canada" as the abbreviation of "Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited"; and the definition of "western section".

I move:

That further consideration of this clause be postponed.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

The Chairman: Order. Do I understand that the hon. member is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fleming: I rise to ask a question. By what rule or by what standard of fair play is it that the minister is permitted to rise first on both of these sections? You saw him first on the first section and nobody else had a chance. You saw him again on this section and the effect of this is that nobody else gets a chance to speak on this section. There are amendments that I wish to introduce to this section.

The Chairman: Order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

An hon. Member: Boo.

The Chairman: Order. I intend to see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre whom I imagine is rising on a point of order; am I correct?

Mr. Knowles: That is correct.

The Chairman: I must protest this noise when an hon. member is rising in accordance with the rules of this house. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak to a point of order. My point of order is that the motion moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is out of order. In case there are any hon. members of the committee who feel that this point of order which I now raise is a point of order which has already been decided—

The Chairman: Order. I understand the hon. member is rising on a point of order in connection with the motion which has been sent to me by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Knowles: That is correct.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Eglinton rose on a point of order and I did not have an opportunity of reading the question. May I read the question first? Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) moves:

> That further consideration of clause 2 be postponed.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make it clear to any hon. members who might wonder whether the point which I now raise has already been dealt with, that it is set out in citation 113 of Beauchesne's third edition that questions of order are decided only when they actually arise and not in anticipation. Therefore any ruling that may have been made with regard to a motion made earlier today was a ruling with respect to that motion only, and not a ruling with respect to the motion that has now been made or with respect to any other motions that may be made as this day goes along.

I base my objection to this motion which the minister has now made on standing order 78 (1)—and I hope before long the government will know it by heart—which reads:

> In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

We have, by a process which I shall not characterize because I have not the language, reached clause 2. Now the minister proposes that without any consideration of clause 2 we move on to clause 3. That is in absolute and utterly disgraceful violation of standing order 78(1) under which this house is supposed to operate, which says we must consider these clauses in their proper order.

The minister said a few words about what "the minister" means and what certain other words mean, and I suppose he contends that those few words of his constitute consideration. I remind him and you, sir, again of the ruling that Mr. Speaker made yesterday with regard to far more than this that the minister said on March 18, 1948, in presenting a motion for instruction to the house. What he said then was ruled as not being debate, in other words as not constituting consideration.

I am aware of the fact that in dealing with this point of order Your Honour might turn up citation 691 of Beauchesne's third edition which reads:

> The consideration of a clause may, on motion made, be postponed . . .

Mr. Chairman, how can you postpone consideration that has not begun? If there is no consideration, how can you postpone it? I submit it is quite clear that there has been no consideration whatsoever. I was going to read the dictionary meaning of the word "consideration" but surely that is elementary. Surely it is clear that there has been no consideration of clause 2, and therefore any attempt by Your Honour or anyone to rely on citation 691 of Beauchesne's third edition would be to rely on a citation that has no bearing at all because there has been no consideration of clause 2.

I am also aware of the fact, sir, that you might read to us a part of a sentence from page 527 of May's fifteenth edition, which part reads as follows:

> The calling of a clause by the chairman brings it under the consideration of the committee . . .

May I point out that to bring it under the consideration of the committee is something quite different from giving it consideration. If Your Honour calls a clause, that opens it for the consideration of the committee; but surely it cannot be said that merely because Your Honour has called the clause, therefore the clause has had consideration.

Further, Mr. Chairman, I submit that if you had any thought of reading to us from page 527 of May's fifteenth edition you should reconsider doing so, and I suggest that for two reasons. First of all I must say, with the greatest respect, that I am conscious of the fact that when some of us quote May from the floor, we are reminded from the chair that May is an English authority and does not always apply to the Canadian situation; yet there are other occasions when the chair chooses to quote from May despite the objections to May which are offered when we quote from May from the floor.

But in addition to that, my other reason for suggesting that Your Honour not quote to us from page 527 of May is that if you will read the entire sentence you will see how completely inapplicable it is to the Canadian situation. The entire sentence from which Your Honour might read a part, as you did on a previous occasion, is as follows:

> The calling of a clause by the chairman brings it under the consideration of the committee, but does not entitle a member to speak generally upon the clause, as there is no question before the committee until an amendment has been moved, or the question proposed "That this clause stand part of the bill".

I read that entire sentence rather than just a part of it so it would be clear to everyone that the sentence applies to the English practice, which is quite different from our practice. What is clear from that sentence is that the practice of calling clauses in committee of the whole in the United Kingdom parliament is that a clause is not debated until one of two things is done, until either someone moves an amendment or someone moves that the clause stand as part of the bill.

In Beauchesne's third edition, citation 669, there is a sentence that is relevant to this point which says—

The Chairman: Order. Would the hon. member give me this citation? I could not hear it.

Mr. Knowles: The one I am quoting now?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: It is citation 669 of Beauchesne's third edition. I mention this because it brings us back to the Canadian picture rather than suggesting that we rely on an English authority which does not apply to our situation. Beauchesne in citation 669 says:

> Each clause is a distinct question and must be separately discussed.

If there is any doubt at all about what "consideration" means, surely it is made clear by that citation from Beauchesne which applies to the Canadian situation, which calls for discussion. I recognize that frequently there are clauses that are passed without any discussion and it is regarded that they have had consideration. That applies only when the house is satisfied it does not need to discuss a matter, that it can pass as having had sufficient consideration.

No one can say there is no desire to discuss clause 2. The Leader of the Opposition amongst others attempted to get the floor. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it is quite clear this clause has not been considered at all; and because it is quite clear from standing order 78 (1) that the committee should consider these clauses in their proper order, I contend that this motion which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has now made is a misnomer—if anyone wants to put it in stronger language he may—and that it is out of order.

I wish also to point out that it is one of the duties of the government to let the house know the night before what the business is going to be the next day. I am not reflecting in any way upon the fact that there was not an announcement made last night, because we all knew that today's business would be the consideration of this bill in committee of the whole. But I think we have some right to know at this moment what is going to happen. We still do not know what clause the committee is going to be allowed to discuss, by the grace of the government. Is this going to go on with clause 3, clause 4, clause 5, clause 6 and clause 7? What is going on? What is the government leading up to in these utterly disgraceful proceedings and this crass violation of the rules of this house?

It seems to me that one does not need to go into all the books, as some of us may appear to like to do, because in this instance it is crystal clear in standing order 78(1)—which is a standing order, not a citation—which is one of the rules by which this house must operate. That standing order reads:

> In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

We must consider these clauses in their proper order. I appeal to Your Honour, despite any previous ruling you have made, to reconsider this matter, to reconsider the inapplicability of page 527 of May's fifteenth edition, and the inapplicability of citation 691 of Beauchesne's third edition to this present situation. I ask you to consider the clear-cut language of standing order 78(1), and to inform the Minister of Trade and Commerce that this motion is out of order at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member for Prince Albert is rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do.

The Chairman: May I point out just before the hon. member rises that I find the point of order now being raised to be very similar to the one raised on clause 1. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he cites citation 113 of Beauchesne's third edition to indicate that I should deal with points of order as they arise and not in anticipation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are we not to have the right to argue?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is parliament to be throttled?

The Chairman: May I point out to the hon. member for Prince Albert that I am elaborating on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I agree that I must decide points of order as they arise and not in anticipation in accordance with citation 113 of Beauchesne's third edition; nevertheless it is my duty to point out that I find the point of order which has now been raised to be very similar to the one raised on clause 1. From that point, I must draw the attention of hon. members to the provisions of standing order 34 (1) which reads:

> Mr. Speaker may permit debate on the point of order before giving his decision, but such debate must be strictly relevant to the point of order taken.

What I am doing at the present time is to indicate that I find this point of order to be very similar to the other one on which we have had a direction from the house. I am going to hear the hon. member for Prince Albert, but I hope he will give me authorities which I have not heard before.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I shall take the dictionary and place it before you. The standing order reads:

> In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

I ask you whether ordinary words are to have ordinary meanings or have we arrived at the position in parliament when the mere say-so of a minister gives consideration to a matter before this house. I have not the larger dictionary here, but the Concise Oxford dictionary defines "consider" as "contemplate mentally". Has parliament deliberated and contemplated mentally because the minister dares to rise and say, "Here are the sections; that is enough for me"? Surely we are not going to make a caricature of parliament in that way. Surely it was never intended that parliament should be throttled and imprisoned by a minister's say-so, supported by an overwhelming group in this house who regardless of argument stand up and are counted. Surely in your position as Deputy Speaker you have the right to consider words in their ordinary meaning. Surely because my right hon. friend is an engineer he cannot ditch, dam and drain parliamentary privileges in one afternoon.

I come now to the larger dictionary where "consideration" is defined as follows:

> 1. The act of considering, or taking into account and examining, as, after long consideration he declined.
> 2. Thoughtful and kindly feeling or treatment.

Of course the second meaning would have no application whatsoever to the term in question. The special circumstances here would deny the use of the expression "consideration" in that regard. Another definition is:

> 5. The taking into account of anything as a reason or motive; a circumstance or fact to be so taken into account.

There can be no other definition of the word "consideration" than in accordance with parliamentary privileges and traditions. Consideration means contemplation, discussion and the weighing of argument, and for you to decide otherwise—

The Chairman: May I interject at that point—

Mr. Diefenbaker: If you will allow me to complete the sentence. If you decide otherwise it will be simply to crucify the meaning of the word.

The Chairman: I wonder if the hon. member, who is a lawyer and who has quoted to me the definition of "consideration", intends to continue his remarks on this point of order. If so, will he call to my attention any new suggestions he has with regard to the clear words in May's fifteenth edition at page 527 where it states that the calling of a clause by the chairman brings it under consideration by the committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, as a lawyer you know that one rule that must be followed in interpretation is that you do not abstract from the entire sentence a word which you believe is applicable to the argument you wish to advance. May says that the calling of a clause by the chairman brings it under the consideration of the committee, but that does not bring about consideration by the committee. In other words the "bringing to" makes possible the consideration, but it does not say that it brings about consideration by simply calling the clause.

To hold otherwise would simply mean that we in parliament would be automatons. The minister would say, "Now, consider this," and he would give you his say-so. "This is what we want done," and the rest of us would stand up like so many nonentities or automatons. It was never intended that parliament should be treated in that way. This is indeed the sorriest day in Canadian history.

The Chairman: I feel that I have heard sufficient on the point.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I have a point to raise which has not been raised in any other discussion.

The Chairman: Does the hon. gentleman raise it as a distinct point of order? I am dealing now with the point of order and I am prepared to deal—

Mr. Drew: The same point of order, but an entirely different subject matter than has been raised before.

The Chairman: I am now prepared to deal with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Fulton: Your Honour invited consideration of May at page 527. May I reply to that invitation—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fulton: —or do you wish to rule without hearing argument?

The Chairman: Order. May I point out that under standing order 59 (4):

> The chairman shall maintain order in the committees of the whole house, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the house;

I also draw the attention of hon. members to standing order 34 (1), the latter part of which reads as follows:

> Mr. Speaker may permit debate on the point of order before giving his decision, but such debate must be strictly relevant to the point of order taken.

I am now prepared to give my ruling on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, without further debate. I have found nothing in the point of order raised at this period which would cause me to change my mind on the lengthy reasons which I gave before and which hon. members may find in Hansard if they did not hear me.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, with respect, you have indicated—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: I cannot assume the responsibility of overruling a decision made today by the house at an earlier time.

Mr. Fleming: Aren't you going to hear members on the point of order?

The Chairman: I rule against the point of order made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Do I understand the hon. member appeals?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the house.

The Chairman: I shall have it reduced to writing. While I am having the assistant reduce this to writing there is nothing further which I can hear.

Mr. Fleming: Will you include in the report to the Speaker of the house that there were members of the house who wished to address you on the point of order and said they had fresh points to make on the point of order, and you insisted on making your ruling without hearing the points that members wished to raise? I have not finished.

The Chairman: I am going to include something in that respect in the report, if necessary. I understand the rule to be—although it has not happened in my experience before—that while I am having this question reduced to writing we are, let us say, in a state of suspended animation. Until I can make my report no further proceedings can be taken.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, with great respect—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming: I say that all sense of fair play in this committee is in a state of suspended animation.

Some hon. Members: Oh! Smile.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

> In committee of the whole, when it was considering clause 2 of Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Knowles raised a point of order to the effect that, pursuant to standing order 78, the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that further consideration of clause 2 be postponed was out of order in that no consideration had been given to clause 2 so that further consideration of the question could not be postponed.
> I ruled that the point of order was one upon which the house had decided this day and that the chairman had no authority to disregard that decision of the house. One member was allowed to speak in support of the said point of order and, when others indicated that they wished to speak on the point, I indicated that I was prepared to decide the point of order and forthwith made my ruling.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, before you put the question, I wish to raise a question as to the accuracy of the report.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition will understand my position. Citation 428 of Beauchesne's third edition is to the effect that from the chairman's decision no appeal should be made to the Speaker. It states:

In case of an appeal to the house, it is the duty of the chairman to leave the chair immediately and report in writing the point of order which he has decided. The Speaker must then submit the matter to the determination of the house in the language reported to him and put the question: "That the decision of the chairman be confirmed." No discussion is allowed on the appeal.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I merely submit that the report is inaccurate and that there should be an opportunity for correction of the report on the basis of what actually took place.

Mr. Speaker: It is customary when the Speaker is standing for no other hon. member to take the floor. I would point out to the Leader of the Opposition that the remarks he has just attempted to make should have been made in the committee of the whole.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, that is what I tried to do.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: Don't make it a sham.

Mr. Speaker: If it happens that hon. members were not able to make their points in committee of the whole and an appeal has been taken, then the only recourse which hon. members have is as set out in citation No. 1, Beauchesne's third edition, and that is the reason for the report now about to be submitted to the house.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) of the committee of the whole reported that when the committee was considering clause 2 of Bill 298, an act to establish Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Knowles raised a point of order to the effect that pursuant to standing order 78 the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce was out of order in that no consideration had been given to clause 2 and so further consideration of the question could not be postponed. The chairman ruled that the point of order was one upon which the house had decided this day and that the chairman had no authority to disregard that decision. One member was allowed to speak in support of the said point of order and when other members indicated they wished to speak on the point the chairman indicated that he was prepared to decide the point of order and forthwith made his ruling. Whereupon Mr. Knowles and others appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

Motion (Mr. Howe, Port Arthur) agreed to: Yeas, 143; nays, 60.

The Chairman: I declare the motion carried.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

On clause 3—Establishment and constitution.

The Chairman: The Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Six o'clock.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I move that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard. I wish to refer you to citation 4, Beauchesne's third edition, which reads as follows:

> The proceedings of the houses (Senate and Commons) are governed by statutes, by rules and orders adopted by themselves, and by those usages which have grown up in the course of time and consequently become a part of their own practice or are derived from the common law of parliament by which they have consented to be guided in all matters of doubt.

I point out that, in accordance with this citation, it is the practice that the Leader of the Opposition be given the floor.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Kamloops has moved that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard. May I point out that under standing order 29 all these motions must be forthwith put without debate. I see it is six o'clock, so I do leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, may I rise on a question of privilege?

The Chairman: At six o'clock we had called clause 3 and there was a motion by the hon. member for Kamloops. I understand the hon. member for Macleod is now rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Hansell: Yes. I think it concerns the entire house. We do like to commend the press for correct reporting, but at the same time when things are incorrectly reported I think it should be drawn to the attention of the house. A report appears in this evening's Ottawa Journal a part of which is perfectly accurate. It appears under the heading, "Howe's motion Stirs New Protest" and the first paragraph reads:

> Opposition members rose with cries of protest this afternoon when, on the first clause of the pipe line bill, Trade Minister Howe moved that further consideration be postponed.

That part of the report is perfectly all right but the huge headline, which I am sure Your Honour can read from this distance, is extremely misleading.

Mr. Knowles: It is perfectly correct.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Some hon. Members: It is correct.

Mr. Hansell: I hear cries of "Perfectly correct", but it is perfectly incorrect. The headline reads: "Third Closure in House".

Mr. Fleming: That is perfectly accurate.

Mr. Hansell: There has not been a third motion for closure in this house.

The Chairman: Order. Before we rose at six o'clock I called clause 3 and recognized the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Leader of the Opposition had also risen to speak and the hon. member for Kamloops moved that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard. The question is the motion of Mr. Fulton that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard.

Motion (Mr. Fulton) negatived: Yeas, 45; nays, 108.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, when I came into this house—

The Chairman: Order. Do I understand that the hon. member for Kamloops has risen on a point of order?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: And the hon. member for Winnipeg North also?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I have.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Kamloops, I think, rose first. I will recognize the hon. member for Kamloops on his point of order.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, my point of order relates to the proceedings we have seen in this committee this afternoon and the last procedure we have just witnessed. My point is that these proceedings are entirely out of order and the whole proceedings in this committee today have been entirely out of order. I refer Your Honour to citation No. 1 in Beauchesne's third edition, which reads as follows:

The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law, as Bourinot so aptly says, are: "to protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner—

Mr. Harkness: There is no more improvidence than tyranny in this case.

Mr. Fulton: —and there I refer Your Honour to standing order 78 (1) which refers to taking the clauses in order——to enable every member to express his opinion within limits necessary to preserve decorum and prevent an unnecessary waste of time—

[Mr. Knowles.]

And who is wasting time? It is the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is wasting time by his repetitive motions.

An hon. Member: You are.

Mr. Fulton:

—to give abundant opportunity for the consideration of every measure, and to prevent any legislative action being taken upon sudden impulse."

That is the end of the quotation from Bourinot. Beauchesne continues in these words:

In a close contest—

An hon. Member: Close?

Mr. Fulton:

—when the house is considering a highly controversial measure, the positions of parties are equalized:

Is there an equalization of the position of the parties in this house when time after time the Leader of the Opposition is refused the right to be heard? Beauchesne continues:

. . . the government side may rely on its majority but the opposition is strengthened by the rules of procedure which both are bound to observe and which the Speaker must enforce.

Now, sir, I have already referred to citation No. 4 in Beauchesne's third edition, which says that parliament is governed by the usages and customs which have grown up; and it is a usage and custom of this parliament that each side should have an equal right to be heard. This is a usage and custom which the Chair is bound to enforce and which the government is bound to respect, that the opposition should have the right to be heard, and we have been denied that right today.

Mrs. Fairclough: Twice.

Mr. Fulton: In fact I will complete the citation in case anyone thinks I would be taking unfair advantage if I did not. Citation No. 1 of Beauchesne's third edition concludes:

Should there be dissatisfaction with his ruling—

That is, the Speaker's ruling.

—appeal can be made to the house, and each member will be answerable to his electors and to the country for the vote he gives on the division which then takes place.

Now, sir, what we have seen this afternoon is a complete disregard for the customs and usages of parliament. What is taking place now is the rape of our liberties. I demand that the Leader of the Opposition be given the right to be heard, which the customs and usages of parliament affords him, and that you, sir, and the government end your careers as rapists and get back to a position of respect for the customs and usages of parliament.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: In order to keep the record clear, may I ask if the minister is rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, if I say "yes" to that I will be admitting there was a point of order—

Mr. Rowe: What are you rising for? You had better sit down if you are not rising on the point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Harris: —when, as a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Ferguson: Closure.

Mr. Hodgson: If there is no point of order you should not be up.

Mr. Harris: We quite understand our neighbour from Simcoe North. I hope that as the evening goes on all members will avoid the unseemly display that sometimes we are apt to get into.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harris: If you will permit me to finish.

Mr. Rowe: Speak to your own fellows.

Mr. Harris: I am going to do that. I appeal to government followers to do that and I hope the opposition will do likewise.

An hon. Member: I hope they take you at your word.

Mr. Harris: I hope they do.

Mr. Harkness: It will be the first time they have.

Mr. Harris: I do not think my hon. friend has doubted my word either.

An hon. Member: We shall see.

Mr. Harris: Yes, we shall see.

An hon. Member: As time goes on.

Mr. Rowe: Are you on the point of order?

Mr. Harris: Yes, I am speaking to the point of order.

An hon. Member: It is the first time you have mentioned it.

Mr. Harris: Let us make it quite clear that the point of order was raised after a vote of this house had indicated that the motion would not be accepted. The same point of order was then raised, which was in effect a further argument in favour of the adoption of the motion made by the hon. member for Kamloops.

However, I want to take the opportunity of saying a few words, if the committee will permit me. I hope not to be argumentative about it, but this is prompted a little by what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said this afternoon, and prompted by what I think would be in the interests of parliamentary traditions as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Are we getting another lecture?

An hon. Member: Don't tell us that.

An hon. Member: Sabotage.

Mr. Harris: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre during the course of raising a point of order this afternoon—

An hon. Member: Always blame the other fellow.

Mr. Harris: —said that he wished to know what was the program of the government. I gather from that that perhaps if he knew there might be an effort made to do what we could to dispose of this legislation.

An hon. Member: What is the point of order?

Mr. Harris: I am coming to the point of order.

Mr. Rowe: You are making a long speech in advance.

Mr. Harris: All right; I have not—

An hon. Member: Where is the point of order?

Mr. Harris: I have not taken very much time, either of the committee or of the house, on this matter; and if my hon. friends opposite would like to have an answer to a question asked this afternoon I am prepared to give it. I think it will be useful to them as well as to the house.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the only basis upon which any hon. member can address the chair at this moment, as I understand it, is on the point of order which was introduced by the hon. member for Kamloops. As I understand it what the Minister of Finance is asking is the indulgence of the committee so he may make a statement which has nothing to do with the point of order.

Mr. Harris: I am going to speak to the point of order.

Mr. Fleming: The minister says he is coming to that later, but I draw to your attention the fact that no member of the committee except the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been permitted to say a word in debate, except on points of order. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has enjoyed that exclusive privilege. I submit to you—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Mr. Fleming: —that the only basis upon which—

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

The Chairman: Order.

An hon. Member: Here comes the axe again.

The Chairman: Order. Will the member kindly resume his seat when I have taken the floor. I was careful to ask the minister when he rose to his feet if he wanted to speak to the same point of order that had been raised by the hon. member for Kamloops.

An hon. Member: Did he?

The Chairman: He replied that in his opinion he did not consider it a proper point of order, if I understood him correctly.

Mrs. Fairclough: He is not the chairman.

An hon. Member: You are not either.

The Chairman: At that moment, and after some interruptions, I understood that he intended to ask the indulgence of the committee to answer a question which had been raised earlier this afternoon on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Indulgences.

Mr. Fulton: We want our rights, not indulgence.

The Chairman: If that indulgence is not granted, then I must rule on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Fleming: May I say that in view of the fact that our rights have been denied in this house today this is not the time for the government to be asking for indulgence.

The Chairman: I will then need to rule on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Kamloops. I am familiar, as are most hon. members, with citation 1 of Beauchesne which is of course the rule reading "to protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner". I hope all of us at all times try to do that.

The hon. member also drew my attention to citation 4 of Beauchesne dealing with customs and usages. I would draw the attention of the hon. member to the provisions of standing order 29 which reads:

> When two or more members rise to speak, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who first rose in his place.

There is a custom or usage also that when a minister of the crown rises at certain times he is given a certain priority. In any event, it is within the competence of the Chair and I refer hon. members, as I did several days ago, to citations 212, 213 and 214 of Beauchesne's third edition. Citation 214 reads:

> The succession of speakers is left entirely to the Speaker.

If one looks at Hansard I think one will see that the occupants of the chair, not only myself but others, have been fairly meticulous in trying to obtain the pro and con of the debate, as is mentioned in a later sentence of citation 214. The proceedings today are somewhat exceptional.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: They are becoming a standard practice.

An hon. Member: That is the understatement of the year.

The Chairman: I assure all hon. members that although the weatherman has indicated that we are having remarkably cold weather, this is a very hot seat. I hope I can allay some of the heat by speaking for a moment or two. At any rate I do not think that there has been any departure from usage or custom.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order. If my personal conduct in the chair is brought into question that can be dealt with in ordinary course by a substantive motion.

An hon. Member: We know what will happen to that.

Mr. Harkness: You would have the Liberal steamroller to sustain it.

The Chairman: There have been various appeals to the house this afternoon from my rulings, which have been sustained. A few minutes ago we had a vote under standing order 29 on the motion of the hon. member for Kamloops with regard to the order of speakers at this particular time. I rule now that the point of order raised by the hon. member for Kamloops is not a true point of order in that it reflects to some extent on the vote on his own motion. I so rule.

Mr. Fulton: I appeal your ruling. I take it that you are ruling that the Leader of the Opposition is not entitled to the floor because you do not see him, as well as on the point of order I raised. I appeal your ruling to the house because I am not content longer to see our liberties raped by the government.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Kamloops has appealed from my ruling, and I am now having the question reduced to writing. As I said this afternoon, while it is being so reduced our discussion is suspended.

Mr. Trainor: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: Order. I explained this afternoon that during this hiatus while I am trying to reduce the question to a form in which it can be presented to the Speaker, I cannot accept any other proceeding.

An hon. Member: The whole day has been a hiatus.

Mr. Trainor: This is a question of privilege.

The Chairman: I shall be glad to hear the hon. member at the proper time. At this moment I must reduce this question to writing.

Mr. Trainor: Is a question of privilege not presentable at this time?

The Chairman: I shall hear the hon. member at the proper time.

Mr. Trainor: Can you indicate to me when is the proper time?

The Chairman: I must deal with one matter at a time, and I must reduce this question to writing at the request of the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Fulton: But if the request relates to the appeal—

The Chairman: I can only do one thing at once.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, before you leave the chair, on a question of privilege I request you to read the report to the committee. The reason I make that request is that the last time a report was made to the house and there was an attempt made to question the completeness and accuracy of the report, Mr. Speaker told us that the question should have been raised in the committee and that he was bound by the terms of the report he received. That made it obvious that the only occasion upon which we have any right to discuss the contents of this report is at this time. I therefore request, sir, that you read the report you intend to make.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I request that in the report you be good enough to refer to the passage quoted earlier from Beauchesne's third edition, in regard to which you spoke of the necessity of hearing the pro and the con of the debate, and that you also state in your report that the only person you saw today on the first section of the bill was the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the only person you saw on the second section was the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the only person you saw on the third section was the Minister of Trade and Commerce; and that you report therefore that you have reduced the rights of the opposition and the Leader of the Opposition to a nullity and that you have overridden the plain provisions of the rules of this house, which require—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fleming: —that the house hear the pro and con of debate.

The Chairman: Order. May I refer hon. members to citation 428 of Beauchesne's third edition, from which I read as follows:

> In case of an appeal to the house, it is the duty of the chairman to leave the chair immediately and report in writing the point of order which he has decided.

That is obligatory, and I do so.

Mr. Fulton: Why do you apply the rules in this way when it suits—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh. Shut up.

Mr. Fulton: I object to the chairman making—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker having resumed the chair:

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: I object, sir, on a question of privilege, to this report being made at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that there are certain forms which have been traditionally followed in this house.

Mr. Knowles: Tell that to the government.

An hon. Member: They were before today.

Mr. Speaker: Would hon. members be good enough to understand my position?

Some hon. Members: We know.

Mr. Rowe: It is our position we are concerned about.

Mr. Speaker: I am not supposed to have a temper, so I shall keep it in my pocket.

An hon. Member: Vest pocket, just like the trained seals.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, surely you will listen to this question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Drew: The last time a report was presented—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Drew: —and an effort was made to point out to Your Honour that the report did not contain a correct description of what had taken place, Your Honour said it should have been raised while we were still in committee. We have sought that privilege, the chairman has denied it, and he is now presenting to you a report which he would not read to us. Therefore the very observation you made is denied by what is now being done.

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, in committee of the whole—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh. Trained seals.

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a question of privilege. I have a right to raise a question of privilege at this time, and I demand that I be heard on the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fulton: I demand the right to be heard.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Kamloops be good enough to recognize that there is such a thing as a report by the chairman from the committee of the whole to the Speaker—

An hon. Member: We do not recognize that report.

Mr. Speaker: —who in turn must present it to the house. The hon. member should know that rights and duties—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: —go hand in hand.

Mr. Fulton: There is no rule, sir, that says I may not raise a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: This is the first time in my experience that a member has tried to get the floor when the Speaker is on his feet and when the chairman is also—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member be good enough to let the Chair—

Mr. Fulton: I object to your receiving that report.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have the floor afterward.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: I object to your receiving that report.

Mr. Speaker: I have never seen this before, and I never thought I would see it.

Mr. Fulton: I have never seen any proceedings to equal what is being done.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, in committee of the whole, when it was considering an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege and I demand the right to be heard now, because if I do not get the right to be heard now—

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East): —Mr. Fulton raised a point of order to the effect that the proceedings of the committee were irregular—

Mr. Fulton: —it will be too late.

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East): —in that no opportunity was being afforded to the Leader of the Opposition to speak. I stated that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Leader of the Opposition rose in their places—

Mr. Fulton: This is the only time at which I can raise my question of privilege. I say you have no right to receive that report because the committee has not been given the right to hear the report.

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East): —I called the Minister of Trade and Commerce as is the custom in committee of the whole, and since the committee had negatived a motion that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East): —I ruled that Mr. Fulton's point of order was not a true point of order. Whereupon Mr. Fulton appealed to the house from the ruling of the chair.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Robinson of the committee of the whole—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, what am I to do?

Mr. Speaker: —reports that in committee of the whole when it was considering Bill No. 298, an act to establish Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, you leave me no alternative but to defy the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: —Mr. Fulton raised a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: British justice, this is.

An hon. Member: We demand British justice.

An hon. Member: A sorry day for the Canadian parliament.

Mr. Speaker: —Mr. Fulton raised a point of order—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Fulton: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I entreat you to hear me now.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I am still on my feet and I will first ask the hon. gentleman to resume his seat.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rely upon your fairness—

Mr. Speaker: It is not customary for any member to address the house when the Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Fulton: I will resume my seat on the understanding that you will hear me before you read the report.

Mr. Speaker: There is no time at which the hon. member can address the Chair, because I am here for one purpose and one purpose only—

An hon. Member: We know that.

An hon. Member: We know the purpose, too.

Mr. Speaker: I want to tell the hon. gentlemen who are making remarks such as those they have just made that I am very grateful for their generosity. I think they are all gentlemen and I thank them very much. I have had occasion earlier to explain exactly what my position is—

Mr. Lennard: We know all about that too.

Mr. Gardiner: You don't know anything.

Mr. Speaker: —when a report is made to the house by the chairman of the committee of the whole. This is citation 428 of Beauchesne's third edition and I read it earlier. When I resume the chair for that purpose only, why hon. members attempt to drag me into a discussion I really do not know. Anyway, I shall read the citation again. Citation 428, Beauchesne, third edition, reads as follows:

> In case of an appeal to the house, it is the duty of the chairman to leave the chair immediately and report in writing the point of order which he has decided. The Speaker must then submit the matter to the determination of the house in the language reported to him and put the question, "That the decision of the chairman be confirmed". No discussion is allowed on the appeal. . . .

This is clear language, and every time the chairman reports an appeal from a ruling in committee the Speaker has no other duty to perform than that which is provided by citation 428. See Mr. Speaker Lemieux's ruling, Hansard, volume IV, 1926, pages 3984-5.

Mr. Lennard: What do you do if the chairman is so dumb?

Mr. Speaker: Therefore I have at this moment the report that has just been made by the chairman as I received it, and I am going to submit it to the house for the house to determine whatever it pleases with respect to it.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, standing order 17, which takes precedence over any citation, says:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

Surely, sir, a rule of the house takes precedence over a citation. That was the point I was trying to make with Your Honour just a moment ago, and I carried my demand to be heard to the very limit because we insist on the maintenance of the rules. The rule is clear. I submit that the question of privilege which I have attempted to raise and which I demand the right to raise takes precedence and must be dealt with immediately. It should have been dealt with before you received the report. I claim that as you have received the report and refused to hear me, my question of privilege must be dealt with now before you submit the report to the house.

Mr. Speaker: What is the hon. gentleman's question of privilege?

Mr. Fulton: My question of privilege is simply this, that on a previous occasion when there was an appeal to the house from a ruling of the chair Your Honour said, when an attempt was made to question the accuracy of the report, that Your Honour was not able to deal with that matter, that it should have been raised in the committee. My question of privilege is that on this occasion we made every attempt to raise the question of the accuracy of the report in the committee before the chairman left the chair to make his report, the report you have in your hand, but the chairman left the chair without allowing us to hear his report and discuss its contents.

Therefore, sir, we say that you have no right to receive that report, or that if you receive it you must allow us now, because the chairman refused to allow a discussion at the proper stage, to discuss the contents of the report and, if necessary, amend it before you put it to the house.

Mr. Speaker: The report is not a substantive motion. It is not a matter which is debatable and amendable. The hon. member attempted, as he has said—and I have no reason not to believe what he says—to discuss the accuracy of the report in the committee of the whole. If he attempted to do so and did not succeed that is a matter the committee had in its own hands—

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: The chairman just got up and left.

Mr. Ellis: The chairman turned his back on the chair.

Mr. Speaker: I know the climate perhaps is not what we have known it to be at other times.

Mr. Lennard: It is not the climate, I can tell you that.

Mr. Speaker: I know there are some hon. members here who have had a great deal of experience in these matters, and know very well at this present moment I have no other duty to perform than to put the chairman's report to the house.

Mr. Trainor: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) of the committee of the whole reports that when it was considering an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Fulton raised a point of order to the effect that the proceedings of the committee were irregular in that no opportunity was being afforded for the Leader of the Opposition to speak.

The chairman stated that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Leader of the Opposition rose in their places he called the Minister of Trade and Commerce as is the custom in committee of the whole, and since the committee had negatived a motion that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard, he ruled that Mr. Fulton's point of order was not a true point of order. Whereupon Mr. Fulton appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

Mr. Martin: I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis). Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

Mr. McGregor: I was paired with the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Ross). Had I voted, I would have voted against sustaining your ruling.

And the house having resumed in committee:

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I have a point of order I want to raise.

The Chairman: Do I understand the Leader of the Opposition is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Drew: No, I am rising to speak.

The Chairman: Will all hon. members resume their seats? Just a few moments ago the motion of the hon. member for Kamloops that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard was negatived, and I had recognized the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, if you recognize anyone, I want to be recognized.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg North is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I certainly am.

The Chairman: I shall see the hon. member for Winnipeg North on a point of order.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I came into this chamber while you, sir, were in the process of putting the question to the committee. I did not hear you put the entire question, so I refrained from voting; but there were two other members of the Liberal party who came in after I did. One was the Minister of National Revenue and the other the hon. member for Vegreville, and both of them were allowed to vote. I ask that those votes be nullified.

The Chairman: Order. I meant to mention that, and I am grateful to the hon. member for drawing it to my attention. I had meant to mention it, but in the tenseness of the moment it escaped my attention.

Mr. Harkness: Naturally.

The Chairman: Some months ago, as hon. members will well recall, we had a similar situation on a committee vote, and hon. members arrived in the chamber while the question was being put. On that occasion I made the suggestion to members of the committee that I would use these words, "The question is the following one", and then proceed to put the question. I indicated to members of the committee that this would be what I think I called at that time "the cut-off point", up to which time they would feel free to either enter the committee or remain outside.

Hon. members will realize it is difficult to spot these things but I assure you that hon. members to my left transgressed this evening and hon. members to my right also transgressed, and I did not disallow any of the votes. As a matter of fact I did not see the hon. member for Winnipeg North enter the chamber but hon. members will realize it is very difficult for the Chair to spot these transgressions, and I do once more commend to the committee the suggestion I made before that the phrase, "The question is the following one," should be the cut-off point.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that these votes will not be disallowed?

The Chairman: If I were to rely on my own observation I would disallow—

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Do you dispute my accuracy?

The Chairman: If I were to rely on the basis of my observation, which I presume I must do, I think I would have been forced to disallow two votes on one side and two votes on the other.

Mr. Harkness: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: That was my observation, and I did not disallow any votes.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Chairman, I want my vote taken off the list. I should not have voted. I was late and I should not have voted. I know the rules. I stayed out of the chamber when I knew I was late and I should not have been permitted to vote.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member is rising on a point of order? I recognize the hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Ferguson: Take my name off.

Mr. Hees: Several days ago I rose in this debate, and I believe I was on my feet before the hon. member for Calgary South. At that time you gave the floor to the hon. member for Calgary South and I asked you on what basis you did so. You said you did so on the basis that you recognized the member who rose first. Now, I understand that a minister has no more rights in this house than a private member.

Mr. Fulton: That was so until yesterday.

Mr. Hees: I understand that a minister has no more rights than a private member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not so this year.

Mr. Hees: Before six o'clock the Leader of the Opposition rose and the Minister of Trade and Commerce rose. I watched both men very carefully and there was no doubt that the Leader of the Opposition rose more quickly than did the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Leader of the Opposition was on his feet before the Minister of Trade and Commerce was half way up. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, on what basis at that time you awarded the Minister of Trade and Commerce the right to speak in preference to the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: That question has already been decided by a vote of the committee just a few moments ago.

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Chairman; on a question of privilege—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The purpose of clause 3 of the bill—

Mr. Hees: On what basis did you award the right to speak to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: You have not answered my question.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The purpose of clause 3 of the bill—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The crown corporation consists of—

The Chairman: The hon. member cannot ask me to answer a question. The hon. member can rise to speak to a point of order, but I believe the point of order he is raising has been decided by a vote of the committee tonight. The question of precedence in speakers has already been decided by a vote of the committee.

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Chairman, that was not decided by a vote. I asked you—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles: Yes. On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wish you would examine the statement you have just made that the house has made a decision to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

An hon. Member: The committee.

Mr. Knowles: The only decision the house made was against hearing the Leader of the Opposition.

The Chairman: I hope the hon. member did not misunderstand me. I said that a vote of the committee had decided that the floor should be given to the minister.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly my point. The vote of the committee—

The Chairman: I beg the hon. member's pardon. The vote of the committee was that the floor should not be given to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Knowles: That is right. The committee has not decided to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Hees: And, Mr. Chairman, I asked you to tell me—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Harkness: Jumping Jack.

Mr. Bell: We want "Pick".

The Chairman: Will all hon. members please resume their seats.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I move that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration be now heard.

The Chairman: May I point out—

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: May I point out—

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: May I point out to the hon. member for Kamloops that I cannot entertain that motion because I am quite certain that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was not on his feet.

Some hon. Members: He was.

The Chairman: I recognize the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the motion that has been made is a motion which is certainly in order. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was on his feet to speak as every hon. member in this house has a right to be; therefore the motion that he be now heard is in order and should be entertained.

Mr. Gardiner: He had no right to be on his feet.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: We want "Pick"; we want "Pick".

The Chairman: Order. May I inquire if the Leader of the Opposition is seriously advancing that point of order?

An hon. Member: What a question.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I am advancing this in the utmost seriousness. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration not only was on his feet to speak but was asserting his right to speak with the Minister of Trade and Commerce as well as with his colleagues. There is now a motion before you that he be heard. He was on his feet; therefore I submit that you must recognize that fact and accept the motion.

Mr. Rowe: The Minister of Trade and Commerce is sitting down now.

Mr. Harris: May I speak to the point of order?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

The Chairman: I am in some doubt as to whether to entertain this point of order.

An hon. Member: Why not?

The Chairman: But I propose to do so.

Mr. Rowe: Ask him if he is speaking on the point of order.

The Chairman: I shall do so very quickly, and I hope my report will be satisfactory to hon. members of the committee if it is appealed. Standing order 29 reads as follows:

> When two or more members rise to speak, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who first rose in his place.

The moment I recognized the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce was before we rose at six o'clock, and I can assure hon. members that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was not on his feet at that time. Therefore I must rule against the point of order taken by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Fulton: There is no point of order; there is a motion. My first motion was that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard, and that motion was rejected by the committee. I then rose on a point of order, you received that point of order and ruled against it, and there was an appeal to the house. That was an intermediate proceeding. Therefore it is in order to make a further motion that a member be now heard. After that intermediate proceeding the Minister of Trade and Commerce rose, as also did the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, who wrestled with the Minister of Trade and Commerce for the floor. I accordingly then moved that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration be now heard. It is not a point of order, it is a motion which you must put to the committee. You have no option.

Mr. Harris: I hope I can be heard on the point of order.

An hon. Member: No point of order.

An hon. Member: It is a motion.

An hon. Member: An undebatable motion.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Harris: I heard the Leader of the Opposition rise on a point of order. If the Leader of the Opposition had a point of order anyone on this side may speak to it. The Leader of the Opposition raised a point of order as to whether this motion was in order.

Mr. Fulton: No, he did not.

Mr. Harris: All right, I am coming to that. Now, as I read the rule—

An hon. Member: The rule, oh, oh.

Mr. Harris: The rule provides for a motion of this kind.

Mr. Bell: You can't get out of this one, Walter; you can talk for two days but you can't get out of this one.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, two hon. members rose at five or ten minutes to six o'clock. One of them was recognized by the chair and the other was the subject of a motion to be heard as provided by the rules. Now, when that is disposed of the situation reverts to the former position, namely that you recognize the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order—

The Chairman: Would the Leader of the Opposition assist me to this extent. He and the hon. member for Kamloops appear to have stated the point of order in slightly different terms. Could I have a clear exposition of the point of order on which the Leader of the Opposition rose?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, the point of order is very simple. I recognize the fact that the motion was heard as to whether I should speak. There were two members on their feet at the same time, and every hon. member of this committee knows they were on their feet. At the time they were on their feet the hon. member for Kamloops moved that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration be heard. That motion is in order and I submit that it should be heard. The fact that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration sat down under the private closure of the Minister of Trade and Commerce has nothing to do with the fact that the motion is in order. I submit that you should put that motion.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Order. I must decide the point of order which has been raised.

An hon. Member: Not the point of order; it is a motion.

An hon. Member: Put the motion.

The Chairman: May I express it in these terms. The previous motion by the hon. member for Kamloops was that the Leader of the Opposition be now heard.

An hon. Member: That was decided.

The Chairman: Order. He was entitled—

An hon. Member: You are behind the times.

The Chairman: I can stand until we have order. Some hon. members are saying, "Put the motion", but may I point out to hon. members—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order.

An hon. Member: He is all wiggling to go.

The Chairman: May I point out to hon. members that the basis of the first motion of the hon. member for Kamloops was that two or more members had risen to speak. That occurrence took place before we rose at six o'clock. I cannot possibly entertain another motion to the same effect at this time, as I do recognize the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. Therefore I will not accept this motion, and so rule.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I appeal your ruling.

The Chairman: The hon. member has appealed my ruling.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In the committee of the whole, when it was considering Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Drew raised a point of order to the effect that a motion proposed by Mr. Fulton that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration be now heard must be put from the chair.

I ruled that I could not entertain the motion in view of the fact that a previous motion of the hon. member had decided the question as to who should now be heard. Whereupon Mr. Fulton appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

In the committee of the whole when it was considering Bill No. 298 the chairman reports that Mr. Drew raised a point of order to the effect that a motion proposed by Mr. Fulton that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration be now heard must be put from the chair. He ruled that he could not entertain the motion in view of the fact a previous motion of the hon. member had decided the question as to who should now be heard. Whereupon Mr. Fulton appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the chairman's ruling sustained.

And the house having resumed in committee:

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

On clause 3—Establishment and constitution.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, section 3 establishes a crown corporation in the form usual for crown corporations appointed by the federal government. The president and the four directors are appointed.

Mr. Trainor: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, may I ask if you have called section 3?

Mr. Harris: Yes, before six o'clock.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The head office of the corporation shall be in the city of Ottawa. The directors receive no salaries but are allowed their living expenses and the usual provisions are made for civil servants who may be employed entirely by the corporation.

Mr. Chairman, I move that further consideration of this clause be postponed.

Some hon. Members: Boo! Boo!

Mr. Fleming: Shame.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member speaking to a point of order?

Mr. Knowles: Yes, sir, I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) moves that further consideration of clause 3 be postponed.

Mr. Ellis: Why not close up parliament?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Merits have now been waived.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. It is my submission that this motion now moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is out of order on at least two counts. My first submission I shall state very briefly, because it is the same one I made with respect to two other motions the minister has moved in the committee this afternoon.

Before reminding you, Mr. Chairman, of my contention in that regard may I suggest that a great man once said that a precedent which has never been re-examined cannot be conclusive. I submit the fact that a precedent has been set—indeed set twice today—does not bind this committee now that we have at another stage another motion. After all, we have not previously had a motion that the further consideration of clause 3 of this bill be postponed. I therefore submit that it is a new motion and that it is the duty of Your Honour and of the committee to consider it in the light of the rules. If there are any previous rulings or previous votes of the house the other way I submit that it is the part of wisdom and responsibility that those precedents be re-examined.

I recognize the fact, Mr. Chairman, that as a result of my pressing the wording of standing order 78 (1) it may be said by some that I am pressing technicalities. But the wording is extremely clear:

78. (1) In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

I urge those words, that the committee is to consider the clauses of the bill in their proper order. I know there are those who would say that one is pressing a technicality with regard to this matter, but may I quote these words:

It will be argued, perhaps, that the reasons which I advance are purely legal subtleties. Name them as you please, "technical expressions", "these legal subtleties", it matters little; for my part, I say that these technical reasons, these legal subtleties are the guarantees of British liberty. Thanks to these technical expressions, these legal subtleties, no person on British soil can be arbitrarily deprived of what belongs to him. There was a time when the procedure was much simpler than it is today, when the will alone of one man was sufficient to deprive another of his liberty, his property, his honour and all that makes life dear.

Mr. Fleming: C. D. Howe.

Mr. Knowles: Let me continue:

But since the days of the Great Charter never has it been possible on British soil to rob a man of his liberty, his property or his honour, except under the safeguard of what has been termed in this debate technical expressions, and legal subtleties.

Those are not my words, Mr. Chairman, but I gladly re-echo them tonight. They are the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Another great man 22 centuries ago said this:

There is no free state where the laws are not supreme.

Those are the words of Aristotle. We in this House of Commons operate under laws. We call them our standing orders, our rules of debate. With all the seriousness I can command I submit that standing order 78(1) is being violated by the motion the minister now seeks to make, and that this house has the responsibility to consider the strict wording of standing order 78(1). If any precedents improperly established earlier today stand in the way, I submit it is our moral obligation to re-examine those precedents in line with the quotation I gave a while ago from Henry Clay.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge that you give this matter your most serious consideration. I point out also, for I said that I based my position with respect to the invalidity of this motion on two grounds—

The Chairman: Order. May I ask the hon. member who is raising the point of order if he would assist me in this respect. Standing order 78(1) to which he is referring was the old standing order 76 and in the "Annotations, Comments and Precedents" under the old standing order 76 we find citation 691, which I mentioned this afternoon and which says that the consideration of a clause may, on motion made, be postponed. I wonder if the hon. member would help me on that?

Mr. Knowles: I am very happy to help you, Mr. Chairman. I thought I dealt with that on the second or third occasion I was speaking this afternoon. Yes, citation 691 says:

The consideration of a clause may, on motion made, be postponed—

But I submit that there has to be consideration before consideration can be postponed. It may be satisfactory to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, it may be satisfactory to the Liberals generally that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has given the matter consideration, but for the rest of us that is consideration by only one man; it is not consideration by parliament and that is what is called for.

I wish to remind you, sir, that there is another citation which I think applies very appropriately to clause 3, and to the attempt to postpone consideration of that clause. After all, it is the clause which establishes the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. Without this clause, there is no bill. The pith of the bill is here in clause 3. May, at the top of page 537, in his fifteenth edition says this:

A proposal to postpone the only effective clause of a bill until the subordinate clauses have been considered, or to postpone part of a clause, is out of order.

Do I need to emphasize those words?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Yes, do it again.

Mr. Knowles: "Is out of order." There is no question, Mr. Chairman, that all the other clauses of the bill are subordinate to and dependent upon this operative clause which sets up the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. What does the Minister of Trade and Commerce take this parliament for? He wants us to bypass the most important, operative clause and go on to discuss clauses that are contingent and dependent upon the heart of the bill which is in this clause.

Mr. Chairman, if ever there was a demonstration of the validity of standing order 78 (1), it is being demonstrated now by what the minister asks us to do. Whoever drew these rules in the first place, let alone our committee which revised many of them last year, must have had some reasons for a rule such as this. Surely it is clear that parliament is being made a laughingstock if it is asked to consider the subordinate clauses before it considers the main ones.

Let me say another word about the importance of adhering to the rules. Again I quote from an ancient authority. This time it is from Hatsell, who a century and a half ago wrote four volumes on "Precedents in the Proceedings in the House of Commons."

An hon. Member: Is that the hon. member for Macleod?

Mr. Knowles: No, I am sorry; this name is Hatsell, not Hansell. At page 237 of volume 2, which is a musty volume to be found in the library, there is a citation which is included in Beauchesne's third edition as citation 818. This citation reads:

> So far the maxim is certainly true and founded on good sense that as it is always in the power of the majority by their numbers to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, the only weapon by which the minority can defend themselves from similar attempts from those in power are the forms and rules and proceedings which have been found necessary from time to time and are become the standing orders of the house—

I emphasize these next words, sir, for your benefit because this matter is in your hands.

> —by a strict adherence to which the weaker party can alone be protected from those irregularities and abuses which these forms were intended to check—

And I draw these words to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

> —and which the wantonness of power is but too often apt to suggest to large and successful majorities.

There is another principle, Mr. Chairman, that is involved in what the Minister of Trade and Commerce is seeking to do now, and I confess that I have not found this rule in any book. But I have heard it quoted from the government side and the opposition side time and time again. In fact I think it is a favourite of the Minister of Finance. It is to the effect that you cannot do indirectly what you may not do directly.

Mr. Chairman, is that not what the government is up to in this whole performance that has been going on today? The government knows that unless each of the seven clauses of this bill has had some consideration it will not be in a position, when the time it has chosen comes, to move closure, which calls for a motion that would prohibit the further postponement of any consideration. In other words, it is going through the farce today of getting what will technically be called some consideration of each of these clauses so that at a certain point in the proceedings it will be legally in a position to move that there be no further postponement of the consideration of clauses 1 to 7, or however far the government intends to go.

In other words, this whole farce to which the House of Commons has been subjected today appears to us on this side to be part of a plan to get ready for the imposition of closure, and in working out that plan the government has come to the realization that it might not be able to achieve closure on time because some of the clauses would not have been considered at all. We are therefore to be put through this farce of having clauses nominally considered because the minister has stood up and said two or three words.

I remind you that yesterday Mr. Speaker made it crystal clear that a certain speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in 1948 was not a debate. He even argued that a speech of mine that took half an hour was not a debate. Today we are being asked to accept these proceedings on clauses 1, 2, 3 and so on as consideration, so that when the time comes and the government wants to move closure it will legally from its point of view, but not legally from my point of view, be able to invoke the closure rule. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that is trying to do indirectly what the government cannot do directly.

The purpose of the closure rule—

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

The Chairman: I shall have over night to think about what the hon. member has said.

Mr. Knowles: I have a few more words to say, but I shall conclude my argument when this matter is called again.

Mr. Fleming: And I wish to be heard on the point of order.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I find that last evening I inadvertently thought we had an evening session and forgot to announce the business of the house. I think no hon. member misunderstood, and I know they will not tomorrow. We shall continue with this debate.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS, 1950-55

Question No. 502—Mr. Hahn:

1. How many automobile accidents were reported in each of the provinces for the years 1950 to 1955?
2. How many of these involved damage claims in excess of $200?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

1 and 2. Motor vehicle traffic accidents are tabulated by, or for, the various provinces based on their individual legislation concerning the minimum reportable amount of property damage resulting from each accident. (See statement.)

As the result of a dominion-provincial conference held in December, 1954, all provinces have agreed that accidents should be based on a reportable minimum of $100 per accident.

Information concerning accidents involving damage claims in excess of $200 is not available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 25, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

AMENDMENTS REMOVING LIMITATIONS RESPECTING DATE OF DEBT, ETC.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 350, to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Mr. Fleming: Explain.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to restore the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to some measure of usefulness. Certain limitations in the original act regarding the date prior to which debt must be incurred in order to qualify have rendered it useless and inoperative. The amendments eliminate those limitations and restore the act as an instrument of some little usefulness which was intended in the original legislation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REGISTRATION, CERTIFICATES, ETC.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport) moved the first reading of Bill No. 349 (from the Senate), to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF ALTERNATIVE PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement of May 7 that the government would welcome any proposals from responsible Canadians with regard to the construction of the pipe line, will the Prime Minister inform us if the government has in its possession any proposals or offers of proposals other than those which have already been discussed, namely, those of Mr. McMahon and Mr. Gairdner.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the letters given to the press by Mr. Champion could be regarded as a proposal. That is the only one of which I have any knowledge.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask when the Prime Minister received knowledge of the letters of Mr. Champion, or the first of them?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) spoke to me this morning about those letters and informed me that the proposal contained in the letter of May 10 was one which he felt could not be taken seriously and he would have been lacking in responsibility if he had taken up the time of his colleagues with it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The letter of May 22 had been brought to his notice but he had had no opportunity since to give it his personal attention and up until the time he had been informed that the letter of May 24 had been made public he himself had not received it.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Are we to take it from what the Prime Minister has said that these proposals have not been placed before the cabinet?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): They have not been placed before the cabinet, and if the letter had been addressed to me I would not have felt they were proposals that required to be placed before the cabinet.

Mr. Fleming: I take it from the Prime Minister's statement that this morning is the first time that the letters, or either of them, have been brought to the attention of the Prime Minister by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): That is quite correct, sir.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the Minister of Finance when it was that he received Mr. Champion's letter of May 10, and perhaps he could also indicate when he received the subsequent letter?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must have received the letter of the 10th on the 11th because I acknowledged it on the 11th.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister if he will table the correspondence with Mr. Champion.

Mr. Harris: Yes. I can read my acknowledgment now.

I have your letter of May 10, 1956, and I presume you have read the statement of government policy made in the House of Commons last week respecting the construction of an all-Canadian gas pipe line. The contents of your letter do not indicate that you have at the present time a specific, detailed and viable proposal. Your suggestion that the gas producers accept long-term notes of your company in payment for gas delivered to you does not appear to me to be one that the gas producers would be disposed to accept.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister if he would table all the correspondence—

Mr. Harris: Certainly.

Mr. Green: —including the letters from Mr. Champion.

Mr. Harris: Certainly.

Mr. Drew: May I ask the Prime Minister if his statement of May 7 still stands that the government is prepared to entertain any proposals from any responsible Canadians in regard to the construction of a trans-Canada pipe line?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The government has placed a proposal before the house and hopes it will be adopted in time to be effective. If it is, of course there would be no other proposal at this time for the construction of that pipe line that would be considered because no such proposal could be implemented without appropriate legislation in that regard being adopted by parliament, and I am quite sure, after the experience of the last couple of weeks, that it would not be possible to have any other legislation adopted in time to make it possible to have the first leg from Alberta to Winnipeg constructed during this construction season.

Mr. Drew: May I assure the Prime Minister that any sensible legislation will receive prompt consideration.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is familiar with the proposal that was put forward some years ago by Mr. Champion for the development of the Athabaska tar sands in Alberta and the opportunity the same gentleman had to perform according to his proposal?

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Harris: I must confess I am not familiar with that particular incident.

Mr. Low: Then I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? In view of the information just received, namely that a communication of May 10 had not been brought to the attention of the Prime Minister until today, will the Prime Minister assure the house that he will make appropriate inquiries in order to see whether any other offers have been made of which he is unaware?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it requires inquiries from my colleagues—

An hon. Member: Oh yes, it does.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): —to bring to our attention any serious proposal concerning public affairs that may be communicated to them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why was not the McMahon proposal brought to his attention?

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, from one of the Prime Minister's earlier answers—I think the last answer but one—should we take it that the only way in which it will be possible now to obtain submission to and consideration by the government of any other reasonable proposal would be to defeat this legislation?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): My hon. friend has a great imagination, and I would leave that matter to his imagination.

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister in view of his last answer. Was not the proposition from Mr. McMahon handed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) several weeks before he was aware of that fact?

Mr. Rowe: Surely; he told us that.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The Minister of Trade and Commerce had received a confidential communication under circumstances which have already been described to the house.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister: Has any other offer to build a Canadian pipe line, except the one owned 83 per cent in the United States, been considered by the cabinet as a whole?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I know of no proposal made by anyone for a pipe line to be built by a company owned 83 per cent in the United States.

Mr. Rowe: As a supplementary question, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he does not wish to answer my question? My question was, have any of the other offers been considered by the cabinet as a whole? The Minister of Finance had one and the Minister of Trade and Commerce had another, but you do not know anything about either of them. Have they been considered by the cabinet as a whole?

Mr. Sinclair: You do not even understand your own question.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I think all the facts are sufficiently before the house.

Mr. Campbell: As a supplementary question, I should like to ask, when does the government expect the roof of this building to fall down?

[Later:]

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—REQUEST FOR EXAMINATION OF ORDER OF TRANSPORT COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister examine the order issued yesterday by the board of transport commissioners to ascertain whether that board has adhered strictly to its position as a judicial body or whether, by the chairman's statement, it has become a cog in this pipe-line controversy?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): The answer to that question is no.

Mr. Knowles: No responsibility?

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO VISIT OF MINISTER WITH MR. MURCHISON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Did the minister visit and have certain conversations with Mr. Clint Murchison in either the United States or Mexico in 1950?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Well, Mr. Speaker, looking back from 1956, I cannot say.

Mr. Fleming: But you cannot deny it?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister had occasion to visit Mr. Clint Murchison's palatial ranch in Mexico?

Mr. Rowe: It could not have been very palatial or he would remember.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I did many years ago. How many years ago, again I would have to look up my correspondence; but it was many years ago. I have known Mr. Clint Murchison for at least 20 years.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether his answer to my previous question indicates that his friendship with Mr. Murchison extends back over many years?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that my hon. friend intends that as a snide remark. I have known a great many people through 40 years of professional work or work in government. Mr. Clint Murchison is one of that great number. The friendship is no more than a friendship I have with a few thousand people whom I happen to know.

Mr. Rowe: It is a lot more than the friendship with Mr. Frank McMahon.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, junior, think up another snide question and we will discuss it.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION TAKE PART IN DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, as he was not allowed to speak last night, whether we might have the pleasure of hearing from him today?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I hope not, sir.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVITATION TO RUSSIAN AVIATION DAY CELEBRATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has Canada received an invitation, similar to that reported sent to the United States and Great Britain, to send senior military officers to the Russian aviation day celebrations on June 24?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Not to my knowledge.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO SENSITIVE AREAS OF THE WORLD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Are all the sensitive areas of the world which he mentioned on January 24 outside of the Latin American regions?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would like the hon. gentleman to repeat that important question, Mr. Speaker, because I did not hear it.

Mr. Churchill: I would be glad to do so. By way of explanation, because I have taken the minister by surprise, on January 24 he announced that his department kept a list of sensitive areas in the world which he said numbered 34 with regard to the export of arms. My question is, are all those sensitive areas outside of the Latin American regions?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, at the time I indicated it would be unwise for obvious reasons to give a list of the sensitive areas which we have compiled for purposes of special precautions with regard to the export of arms but I can assure the hon. gentleman that the House of Commons is not included in that list of sensitive areas.

Mr. Drew: That is not a very intelligent answer.

LATIN AMERICA—REFERENCE TO EXPORT OF SABRE AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Perhaps the minister could give a more complete and more satisfactory answer to this question. Was the government of the United States consulted and its consent obtained before the cabinet approved of the export of Sabre jets to the republic of Colombia?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we do not require the consent of the United States government for exports from Canada.

An hon. Member: Only gas.

Mr. Rowe: Both ways.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the Prime Minister if he will give some explanation of the answer which he gave me the other day on this question of sending Sabre jets to Colombia, when he said that the application was examined in the light of the policies of other countries towards the export of this type of aircraft to South America? What, I would like to ask, is the policy of other countries with regard to export of this very superior fighter aircraft to South America?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I do not think that I could, on the orders of the day, elaborate. The hon. gentleman knows that the free countries are in almost constant consultation as to the best methods to be adopted to preserve peace in the world, and that is what we do in connection with such things as might appear to be possible of furthering or of creating the tenseness in sensitive areas.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the Prime Minister if the export of fighter aircraft to the republic of Colombia is, in his opinion, a contribution to maintaining the peace of the world?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The exportation of the Sabre aircraft to Colombia is a recognition that it is the right of every country to obtain proper defence equipment in its own interests and in the interests of the peace of the world.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

FORT ROUGE, WINNIPEG—INQUIRY AS TO REBUILDING OF CAR SHOP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? In view of the tragic fire which destroyed the Canadian National Railways car shop at Fort Rouge, Winnipeg, last Monday evening, can the minister obtain from the management of the Canadian National Railways an assurance that the car shop will be rebuilt in that area?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I have had no communication on the subject from the Canadian National Railways, and I shall have to make inquiries to know what the railway's plans are in that connection.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

OPENING CEREMONIES—SUGGESTED INVITATION TO HER MAJESTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask a question of the Prime Minister? Will the Prime Minister say whether consideration is being given to extending an invitation to Her Majesty to officially open the St. Lawrence seaway?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There have been suggestions in the press and elsewhere that that would be desirable, and the matter will be given consideration, but before there is anything of a formal nature done there will, of course, be informal inquiries made as to what may be Her Majesty's pleasure.

TRADE

TURKEYS—REQUEST FOR INCREASED TARIFFS ON UNITED STATES IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Haldimand): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government made any decision regarding the request of the Canadian turkey federation for an increase of the tariff on turkeys entering Canada from the United States?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I must say that the government has been considering the request now for some months, but the action that might be taken by that consideration could not be announced at this moment, but I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I shall, I think, have an announcement in a day or two.

Mr. Charlton: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Does the Minister of Finance realize that the turkey federation brought this to the government's attention as long as two or three years ago?

Mr. Harris: I myself received representations a year ago last fall, and again last fall, and we have been taking some action in the meantime.

CHINA—NEGOTIATIONS BY EAST WEST EXPORT IMPORT COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he is in a position to make a statement to the house concerning the outcome of negotiations between the communist government of Peking and the East West Export Import Company of Vancouver, under which the press reports that substantial exchanges of goods are to follow?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to give any information. I have none. As far as I know, the East West Export Import Company has been trying to interest a group of Canadians in visiting Peking under its auspices. I know that several persons have examined the auspices and are not satisfied to make the trip under those auspices. I know of no trade developments.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister whether in the course of negotiations there has been any request from these sources for any revision or modification of the list of strategic materials in relation to shipments from Canada to China or intended for China?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, through that organization several attempts have been made to break down the NATO strategic list but we are bound by the NATO list and we intend to be bound by it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PETAWAWA—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forgie (Renfrew North): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works. Have any arrangements been made to construct additional accommodation for the troops at Petawawa military camp? If so, will the minister kindly advise the house what those arrangements are?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): May I take that question as notice and answer it early next week?

CAMP GAGETOWN, N.B.—USE FOR TRAINING PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it the intention of the Department of National Defence to use Camp Gagetown for training purposes this summer and, if so, could the minister give the house an idea of the number of troops expected to be in training there? I should also like to ask him a further question: when will Camp Gagetown be open for training as a permanent camp?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): The answer to the first question is yes; Camp Gagetown will be and is being used for training this year. The second question asks as to the number of troops that will be trained there. Subject to correction, I think the figure is in the neighbourhood of 10,000 troops. Third, as to when the permanent camp will be established and in operation, again subject to correction, I should think some time probably toward the end of next year.

Mr. Brooks: There is no definite date?

Mr. Campney: There is no definite date as yet.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED APPOINTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is there any basis of fact to the recent newspaper stories to the effect that Mr. Walter Gordon and the Speaker of this house will soon be asked to join the cabinet?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Whenever there is any announcement that can properly be made in respect of any of those rumours, it will be made in the house.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF SESSIONAL WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of the apparent desire for haste on the part of the house in recent days, as evinced by the government, is it the intention of the government to endeavour to have the house closed by about June 20 to permit the Prime Minister to attend the prime ministers' conference in London, and also to have a session of parliament in the fall?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the course that may have to be determined in that regard will depend upon events as they develop.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the general plan of the Prime Minister at this time as to when the house will close? Does he intend to have it close before he attends the conference of prime ministers?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I think I must realize, Mr. Speaker, that that would be quite impossible.

CLOSURE—APPLICATION IN OTHER DEMOCRATIC COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister because we cannot get the information in committee. Would he, as a constitutional authority, inform the house and the country when in any other democratic assembly following British tradition notice of closure was given before discussion began or consideration of a bill?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I think we have sufficient problems in our own commonwealth country without discussing in this house the practices that may be followed in other commonwealth countries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, then let us come right home. Can he give any instance in Canada where anything similar to the denial of parliament has taken place previously?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The hon. gentleman speaks of the denial of parliament, and I do not admit there is any denial of parliament in trying to bring a proposal to the house and get a decision from the house on that proposal by a time when the decision can be effective.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Denying discussion.

REVISION OF SALARIES OF TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance inform the house whether the salary increases recently granted will be generally made applicable to employees of the House of Commons?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I understand the question. We provided increases for the one group of employees of the House of Commons some time ago by a motion of this house. At that time the only question left unsettled was the remaining group. I gave an undertaking at that time to the effect that that would be considered and I doubt if any action has been taken since, but I will check.

YORK SOUTH—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF BY-ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles E. Rea (Spadina): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. When will the government announce the date of the by-election for York South?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The matter has not yet received consideration.

INQUIRY AS TO CALLING OF EARLY ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, through you I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question. In view of his government's unprecedented gagging and stifling of the freedom of parliament—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Rowe: —to such an extent that it is now impossible for private members to represent their ridings properly—

Mr. Sinclair: You never did.

Mr. Rowe: —would he consider seeking an early dissolution of the house and an appeal to the country?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that question was answered the other day and I have nothing to add to the answer I then made.

INQUIRY AS TO NOTICE OF FILIBUSTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister recall any other incident in the history of Canada when the government was warned four months in advance that a bill to be introduced would be filibusted by the official opposition?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): At the moment I do not recall any.

REFERENCE TO PROCEDURE IN HOUSE ON MAY 24

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): I should like to direct a question to the leader of the house. I should like to know whether it is the intention of the government to take steps to prevent the procedure used in this house yesterday from becoming a precedent for parliamentary government in this country?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

FLOODS

FRASER RIVER—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL SANDBAGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I am sorry that I failed to send him notice earlier. In view of the rapid rise in the level of the Fraser river and the show of concern by certain municipal authorities that insufficient sandbags are available to fight a flood in that area, would the minister assure the house that sandbags will be made available and will be shipped to strategic points to allay such fears?

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Give the government a few more.

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, from information I have been receiving from time to time I understand that the services have been in close contact with the authorities with respect to preparation in the event that there should be a serious flood. I will check to see whether the facts as given to me by the hon. member are correct and, if so, will see what can be done.

MANITOBA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CONTROL OF ASSINIBOINE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister make a statement to the house relative to the government's intention in the matter of the draining of the Assiniboine river in western Canada?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a matter which I do not think should be called draining the Assiniboine river in western Canada, but a matter of attempting to control the flow of that river to such an extent as may be practicable to avoid the dangers of flooding. It is a matter that is receiving the attention of engineers as to how and to what extent that can be done and at what cost, and whether or not the economic benefits would be comparable to the costs of the works that might have to be undertaken.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Has any consideration been given to compensation to those who have suffered from the floods this year?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, Mr. Speaker. No consideration has been given to compensation to those who have suffered from floods this year.

POWER

PASSAMAQUODDY PROJECT—REPORTED APPOINTMENT OF JOINT CANADA-U.S. COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has a joint committee of the United States and Canada been appointed to inquire into the feasibility of the development of the Passamaquoddy tides for hydro-electric power? If so, how many are on the committee and who are the Canadian representatives?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, without notice I cannot answer that question offhand but I will look into it and give a reply early next week.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HAMILTON RIVER, LABRADOR—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): May I ask a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources? Press dispatches this morning indicate that plans are under consideration for the development of power on the Hamilton river in Labrador, with the transmission of that power to Sept Iles on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river. Can the minister give the house any report concerning that reported development?

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I have read the headlines this morning, but I did not have time to read the article. Of course, the water resources of Labrador are the property of the government of Newfoundland.

Mr. Green: Will the minister make some inquiries and let the house have a report, perhaps at the first of the week?

Mr. Lesage: I shall try to obtain what I can.

ONTARIO—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT OF VICE-CHAIRMAN OF POWER COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would he care to comment on the recent statement of the vice-chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission that there is no shortage of power in the province of Ontario?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have had no communication from the vice-chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission. I have had communications from the premier of Ontario and from the provincial treasurer of Ontario and from those I believe there is an impending shortage of power in Ontario. This is part of a statement by the premier of Ontario:

> Water-power sources would be almost exhausted by 1960, and other energies would have to replace them.
> That is one of the most important reasons for speeding the building of a proposed trans-Canada natural gas pipe line from Alberta to Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the hon. member for Nanaimo, who asked the first question, has a supplementary question.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce consider that the opinion of the premier of Ontario was more important in a technical matter of this sort than that of the actual head of the power commission?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The answer is yes.

[Mr. Pearson.]

AIRPORTS

PATRICIA BAY, B.C.—INQUIRY AS TO WATER SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has Elk lake been abandoned as a source of water supply for the Patricia Bay airport? If so, what alternative supply is contemplated?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the matter is under consideration. I shall be obliged to make inquiries to determine just exactly what is the status of this matter.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR ADMISSION OF EXPERIENCED TOBACCO WORKERS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to either the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) or the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Will the government give immediate consideration to a resolution passed by the flue-cured tobacco marketing association of Ontario to permit entry of sufficient experienced primers and tyers from the United States to assist in harvesting the tobacco crop this year?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I shall be glad to give the matter consideration.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT DRYDOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour of which I have given him notice. In the light of continued representations, is the minister now in a position to give further information on the drydock lay-offs in Saint John and the possibility of future federal government naval contracts?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I am aware that during recent weeks there have been some heavy lay-offs in the Saint John drydock. I have taken the situation up urgently with my colleagues, the ministers of the appropriate other departments and government agencies such as the maritime commission, and I am assured that any work along the Atlantic coast that comes up will be immediately directed to the plant at Saint John. In the meantime, our national employment service offices are suggesting interim work for those who are temporarily thrown out of employment.

MARITIME PROVINCES—COMPARISON BETWEEN SERVICE AND CIVILIAN WAGE RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister authorized a survey to be made in the maritime provinces for purposes of comparison of prevailing rates of pay paid at service establishments compared with civilian employment? Has that survey been authorized and, if so, when does the minister expect it will be completed and a report available?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Surveys of that kind are going forward all the time and as the results of the surveys are completed reports thereon are made available to the department that asked for the survey to be made.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CAPE BRETON COUNTY HOSPITAL—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Is the minister aware of, or has his attention been drawn to, an investigation which is currently being carried out with respect to the Cape Breton county hospital in Nova Scotia? Is that hospital receiving grants from his department?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Of course, that is a hospital that comes under the control of the provincial government, as my hon. friend knows. I am aware of the investigation that is taking place. I cannot say offhand whether or not federal assistance has been given to that hospital, but I suspect, in view of the record of this government, the likelihood is yes.

Mr. Nowlan: And in view of the record of the hospital.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER INTERIM SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. When does the minister intend to ask the house for further interim supply?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I presume in due course when I announce it in the house.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, may I ask the Minister of Finance what he intends to use for money when his present supply runs out?

Mr. Harris: I am afraid that I could not answer that because the occasion has not arisen yet.

ATOMIC ENERGY

URANIUM—ANNOUNCEMENT EXTENDING DATE OF PURCHASE TO 1966

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister make a statement on the announcement made in the United States this morning to the effect that the date of United States purchases of uranium has been extended to the year 1966?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In my previous announcements to the house regarding the uranium purchasing program I have made reference to the close relationship which exists with the United States atomic energy commission. One feature of this relationship has been the similarity between the uranium buying programs in Canada and the United States. The recent announcement of the United States atomic energy commission concerning the extension of its domestic uranium-buying program suggests that I should clarify the position with respect to the Canadian program.

It is not the intention of the government to extend the Canadian uranium-buying program at this time. In my announcement of last August concerning purchases under the special price contract arrangement I pointed out that there was a limit on the amount of uranium which the United States atomic energy commission would wish to purchase from Canadian sources. I made reference again to this limitation in my statement to the house on March 2 concerning modifications of the special price arrangement. The situation in this respect has not changed. The United States atomic energy commission has stated that the primary reason for the extension of its domestic buying program is the need to maintain ore reserves in the United States. For the most part, the mines found to date in the United States, while numerous, do not have large ore reserves. On the basis of current and projected production rates, the present reserves would be close to exhaustion by 1962 unless ore replacements are found. It is considered that this can best be accomplished by encouraging the continued search for new ore deposits. The Canadian position is quite different. Most of the new mines which have been discovered in Canada have very large ore reserves. Even when the current contracts are completed, these mines will have substantial ore reserves. The Canadian position differs in another respect, namely, the anticipated requirement of uranium for domestic use. Even on the basis of the most optimistic forecast that can now be made as to the role of nuclear power in the Canadian economy, our resources of uranium will be greatly in excess of our domestic requirements for many years to come and we shall need to obtain export markets. The anticipated level of requirements in the United States, both for military and civil purposes, is vastly in excess of the anticipated requirement in Canada.

With respect to the position of the Canadian producer after March 31, 1962—the present termination date for deliveries under existing contracts—it should be noted that the special price contracts contain a clause which provides that the purchaser will have an option to extend the contract. The house will appreciate the difficulty of estimating the level of uranium demand six years in advance of that demand. However, every effort will be made to clarify the position with respect to the exercise of these options at the earliest possible date. The government is anxious to ensure that this important new industry will have continuing markets beyond March 31, 1962.

Negotiations are now under way whereby the United Kingdom will obtain from Canada part of its requirements of uranium. This uranium will be supplied under an arrangement similar to that which now prevails with the United States atomic energy commission. The quantities involved will be supplied from the contracts which will be entered into under the existing special price arrangement. As the house is aware, the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada have had a very close relationship in the atomic energy program since its inception. The proposed arrangement is a continuation of this policy of tripartite co-operation.

As regards the export of uranium to other countries, the house will recall that in my announcement of August 3 and my announcement to the house of March 2 I stated that the government would take under consideration the establishment of an export policy for uranium. I pointed out that because uranium can be used for military purposes it was considered desirable that an export policy should be established with due regard to security provisions. It is the hope of the government that arrangements for the marketing of uranium for peaceful uses can be worked out within a suitable international framework. As the house is aware, a 12-nation conference was held in Washington during the month of March for the purpose of considering a draft statute for an international agency for atomic energy. Canada was an active participant in this conference. The statute agreed upon at that conference will be submitted to a general conference in September next, at which there will be in attendance representatives of all the member countries of the United Nations. In the circumstances, it is considered advisable that establishment of export policy should await the outcome of the discussions at the September conference.

My remarks up to this point refer to arrangements involving substantial quantities of uranium. The government is now prepared to consider arrangements for supplying research quantities of uranium to other countries under bilateral agreements.

INQUIRY AS TO USE IN PRODUCTION OF ELECTRICITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the one proposed to him by the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie). Can the minister tell this house when it may be expected that electricity will be generated in Canada from the use of atomic power?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour to secure the information and give it later. I would not like to give a date offhand.

FINANCE

REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF MINISTER IN DEBATE ON MAY 21

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister tell us what amount he had in mind when he said in his speech last Monday, as reported on page 4141 of Hansard:

"Bless your soul, if this project gets going we will have enough money for all the things you have asked for."

An hon. Member: It has only sunk in now.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I really understand the question.

Mr. Fleming: Do you understand the statement you made?

Mr. Harris: If my hon. friend reads my speech I am sure he will find I was referring directly to the speech made by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Pearkes) and without going into—

Mr. Macdonnell: And the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier).

Mr. Harris: I must say upon reading my own speech, which I regret I had to do, I found I had involved the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam who, so far as I know, had not made any proposals. At any rate I did not intend to include him in that. I was referring to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. My statement may have been somewhat rhetorical but the purpose of it undoubtedly was to indicate, as the rest of my speech also showed, that if there were profits to be made out of the sale of natural gas we would participate in those profits and the corporation income tax and the revenue of Canada would be greatly increased.

Mr. Macdonnell: The minister has really answered my supplementary question because I was going to ask him if it was not wholly rhetorical and I think he has pretty well admitted that it was. In other words, there was no figure in his mind.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I would like to take the opportunity to thank the Minister of Finance for his concern regarding the welfare of my soul.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

INSTALLATION OF SAFETY FEATURES IN MILITARY AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister comment on the report that we are lagging behind in the installation of special safety features in our military aircraft for the protection of our pilots?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement to which the hon. member refers but I am assured by our Royal Canadian Air Force officials that every proper precaution is being taken, every known new device is being studied and that our safety measures are certainly equal to if not better than those of most other countries.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister check the report, because it was made by a test pilot of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Campney: If the hon. member will give me the reference to the report or a copy of it I will certainly look into it.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN BUILDING DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. In view of the obvious anxiety to lend $80 million to a United States corporation, may I ask the minister when similar anxiety is going to be shown for making an appropriation to enable the building of the South Saskatchewan river dam?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I understand that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines is a Canadian corporation.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask a supplementary question? When may we expect similar anxiety on the part of the government to make an appropriation for the South Saskatchewan river dam?

Mr. McCann: Everything for Saskatchewan.

Mr. Harris: I thought I made it clear in whatever remarks I tried to make the other night that the policy of this government has in mind the welfare of all parts of Canada, and from time to time we shall announce the appropriate policy.

NATIONAL CAPITAL PLAN

GREEN BELT, OTTAWA—PURCHASE OF FARM LAND BY COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, speaking as the member for Carleton, may I ask the Prime Minister if he will take appropriate steps to ensure that the federal district commission will pay a fair price for the developed value of farm lands in Carleton county which have been approved as part of the green belt around Ottawa?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There has been no decision made by the government to acquire the lands included in the green belt.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

PROCEDURE FOLLOWED IN ARRANGING VISITS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the question asked earlier as to whether Her Majesty the Queen might visit Canada, and in view of considerable conjecture in the press that Her Majesty may be contemplating a state visit to a foreign country in Europe, would the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs say what is the position under present constitutional practice? Does Her Majesty under those circumstances, as head of the commonwealth, consult with and receive the advice of her prime ministers or her ministers in other parts of the commonwealth, and their consent, before such a visit can take place?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the practice has been for Her Majesty to have this government informed when she has accepted an invitation to make a state visit to a foreign country. That was done on the occasion of the visit to Norway last year, and we were informed as early as the end of last August that Her Majesty was accepting an invitation to make a state visit to Sweden this summer. It has never been the practice for the government of Canada to be consulted with respect to invitations that we presume were extended to Her Majesty through the channels of the United Kingdom government. We have been informed that the acceptance of these invitations had been made, but it has never been suggested that we should take the responsibility of advice to Her Majesty when she accepts an invitation as the sovereign of the United Kingdom. We have never felt that we should consult the governments of other countries when an invitation is being considered by His Excellency the Governor General as the representative of the head of the Canadian nation to visit a foreign country. In respect of those visits of Her Majesty it has not been the practice to regard them as visits being made on behalf of the commonwealth but rather as visits made by the sovereign of the state through the government of which the invitation was conveyed to Her Majesty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is very interesting. Is the Queen in a position therefore that she can make a visit to this foreign country as Queen of the United Kingdom and not in her position as Queen of Canada or one of the other several parts of the commonwealth? Has that matter been considered or is it a matter, having regard to the suggested visit, that is worthy of consideration at the prime ministers' conference?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): It might be worthy of consideration at the prime ministers' conference but so far state visits to foreign countries made by Her Majesty, in the same way as those that were made by her illustrious predecessors, have always been regarded as visits made in the capacity of sovereign of the United Kingdom.

PARLIAMENT HILL

SUGGESTED USES FOR TEMPORARY SCAFFOLDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the government decided to change the purpose for which the scaffolding is being erected in front of the parliament buildings to that of public observation of the execution of parliament?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I can think of one good application for that scaffolding for a certain purpose.

ALLEGED DANGER TO PUBLIC OF UNGUARDED PLATFORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): My question is to the Minister of Public Works and arises in part only out of the answer he gave to the question put to him a moment ago. Is the statement he made the reason why the scaffolding in front of the building was left unguarded last night, and is he aware that, for lack of guarding, there are places there where there is a 10-foot sheer drop off the edges of the platform that pedestrians are using in lieu of the steps? Will he take steps to see that it is not left in an unguarded condition tonight?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): To the best of my knowledge there are guards on duty around the House of Commons at all times.

Mr. Fleming: The minister has missed my point. I am speaking of the erection of the platform outside. Is he aware that there were sheer drops off the unguarded edges of that platform last night?

An hon. Member: Who drafted that one?

Mr. Fleming: Is he aware that, with the platform being unguarded and pedestrians still using the platform and the temporary wooden steps instead of the regular steps, there were drops of 10 feet off the edges of the unguarded platform where any pedestrian might have met with a severe accident? Will he take steps to see that the edges are properly barricaded tonight?

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENTS IN CHRYSANTHEMUM CULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the parliamentary assistant inform the house as to the results of the experiments that have been conducted at the experimental station at Saanichton, B.C., and which have received widespread press coverage today, involving developments in chrysanthemum culture?

Mr. Robert McCubbin (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): I am not able to make a report on that today but the first of the week I will.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he can tell us when it is proposed to introduce the revisions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act which were forecast in the speech from the throne?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): The answer to my hon. friend's question is that they will be introduced in the fairly near future.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—REMOVAL OF LIQUOR RESTRICTIONS IN MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the reported request of the attorney general of Manitoba, is the minister considering making a proclamation under the Indian Act to allow Indians in Manitoba to drink liquor?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): That matter is under consideration and the consideration is almost completed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DEFENCE RESEARCH BOARD—INCREASE IN WORK WEEK OF SECURITY GUARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister had an opportunity yet to inquire into the question I asked yesterday with reference to the increase in the work week of security guards?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have made inquiry but I have not yet received a report.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR MEETING TO PROVIDE AID TO MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As municipal tax bills are now being issued and and it is very evident that there will be increases this year, would the Prime Minister not reconsider his previous answer with respect to calling a dominion-provincial conference so that some direct aid may be given to municipal taxpayers?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate to call another dominion-provincial conference for the purpose of suggesting that aid be given to the municipalities.

Mr. Lennard: That is a good answer.

TRANSPORT

QUEBEC PROVINCIAL ELECTION—USE OF PRIVATE RAILWAY CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister take steps to see that members of the government travelling to Quebec to participate in the provincial election campaign there do not continue to use private railway cars of the government for the purpose?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that they have been used for that purpose and I think that the matter can be left to the discretion of my colleagues.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Drew: Oh, no.

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE CORPORATION

CONSTITUTION OF CROWN COMPANY TO CONSTRUCT PIPE LINE, MAKE SHORT-TERM LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, May 24, consideration in committee of Bill No. 298, to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

The Chairman: When the house adjourned last night clause 3 of the bill was before the committee and Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) had moved a motion that the further consideration of this clause be postponed. Mr. Knowles had raised a point of order. I note from Hansard that Mr. Fleming was on his feet exactly at ten o'clock. Mr. Knowles had indicated that he wished to proceed. I recognize Mr. Knowles on the point of order.

On clause 3—Establishment and constitution.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, as hon. members will recall, last night I argued that the motion proposed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is out of order on at least two counts, to which I added a third one. I will not take the time of the house to repeat the arguments, but may I just summarize them. First of all, I insist that it is out of order on the basis of standing order 78 (1) which requires that we consider bills in committee of the whole according to the proper order of their clauses. Since this is a new day and as some people who did not see yesterday's Hansard might see today's Hansard, perhaps there should be put on the record the terms of standing order 78 (1) which are as follows:

> 78. (1) In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

Mr. McIvor: Repetition.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I will not repeat the arguments which I made last evening calling for strict adherence to the rules except to say this. A friend who heard last evening's debate asked me later if my quotation from Hatsell meant that the rules of the house were meant only for the protection of the opposition. I was glad to have that question because it gives me the chance to give here the answer which I gave to the person who put that question to me last night. The quotation from Hatsell which is included in Beauchesne's third edition at citation 818, though in the language of a century and a half ago, makes this point crystal clear. The government has two protections. It has its majority and it has the rules. The opposition has only the rules. That is the reason that we are obliged to place special emphasis on strict adherence to the rules. That is the reason for the tremendous weight of the responsibility that rests upon the occupant of the chair in seeing to it that the one and only weapon available to the opposition is not lost to it. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am insisting on a strict interpretation of the wording of standing order 78 (1) which requires that clauses be taken up in their proper order.

I am also insisting on strict adherence to the sentence which appears at the top of page 537 of May's fifteenth edition. I am ready to admit, Mr. Chairman, that there are occasions when I point out that May is an English authority and that there are many portions of May which are not applicable to the Canadian situation. However, Mr. Chairman, yesterday in one of the rulings that you made as chairman of the committee of the whole house, you relied on May. You relied on May not only in your statements to us during the argument on the point of order but you included your reliance on May in your report to Mr. Speaker. Therefore, for purposes of this point of order, I suggest that you are obliged to give full weight to what May says at the top of page 537—it is his fifteenth edition that I have in my hand—which is as follows:

> A proposal to postpone the only effective clause of a bill until the subordinate clauses have been considered, or to postpone part of a clause, is out of order.

I think the point is quite understandable to all that this clause 3 which sets up the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation is the operative clause. Without this clause there is no bill. Without this clause there is no point in discussing anything else. I therefore submit that to postpone consideration of that clause is—as May, your own authority, says—out of order. If it is not clear enough from the language of May, surely it is clear on the basis of common sense that we cannot go on and discuss lending money to a corporation that we have not set up; that we cannot go on and discuss giving power to such a corporation; or go on and discuss any of the other things that are contained in the clauses that follow which are subordinate to and contingent upon clause 3 of the bill.

I also suggested last night—and I was in the midst of this part of my argument when we reached ten o'clock—that it is well established, and that it is often declared to us by no less a person than the Minister of Finance, that we must not try to do indirectly what we cannot do directly. It is my contention, Mr. Chairman, that this motion is not what it purports to be. This motion is an attempt to lay the basis for closure, and on that basis it should not be entertained at this time. Not only is it an attempt to lay the basis for closure, Mr. Chairman; it is in effect closure itself so far as present discussion on this clause is concerned.

In that connection, Mr. Chairman, may I give to my hon. friends opposite one more brief quotation from a person whose memory I believe they still revere. I refer to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In 1913 Sir Wilfrid Laurier stood in the House of Commons—not in this chamber, of course; it was in the one in the building that was destroyed by fire—on this, the opposition side, and said this:

> Heaven is my witness that I would rather stand here today defeated and in opposition by that appeal to the people than stand over there in office by the power of the gag.

Mr. Chairman, lest anyone think that I am taking these words out of context I shall read a few sentences that are prior to the one that I have just read. This was in 1913 when the Conservative government of that day had brought in the closure rule. Incidentally, I may say that there had been 22 days of debate on one clause when Sir Robert Borden moved closure. I am not defending Sir Robert Borden but at least there is quite a difference between that situation and what obtains now. My friend the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has put it well. He says that a period of 22 days is quite different from 22 seconds. In the course of that debate this is what Sir Wilfrid Laurier said and I think it is appropriate not only to what is happening here just now but also to some other questions that have been put to the Prime Minister as recently as this morning. Again this is that great Liberal who could call heaven as his witness—the Liberals cannot do that any more—speaking in the House of Commons in 1913:

> We introduced the reciprocity measure on the 26th of January and on the 28th of July we had not yet been able to obtain even a preliminary vote upon it.

What is that, six months? Yes, a little more than six months.

> We had been met at every step by obstruction from the Conservatives, then in opposition; dilatory motions of every kind were made,—

Mr. Sinclair: They have not changed.

Mr. Knowles: I invite the Minister of Fisheries to keep on making these interjections if he wishes but I suggest that if he does not know the whole quotation he would be wise to hold his peace.

> —speech after speech was delivered day in and day out, even in the dog days of summer.

Listen to what Sir Wilfrid Laurier says.

> I did not complain; I did not whine. Two courses were open to me. I could have done as is done today by the Prime Minister;

That is a reference to Sir Robert Borden.

> I could have introduced the closure and have said that we must carry on the business of the government and that, consistently with our dignity, we could not allow obstruction.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier knew he could do that; he knew he could do what his political descendant the present hon. member for Quebec East is prepared to support. I continue this quotation from Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

> But there was another course open to me, and that was an appeal to the people; and I advised my colleagues to give the hon. gentlemen of the opposition the opportunity of appealing to the people. We appealed to the people and we were defeated. Heaven is my witness that I would rather stand here today defeated and in opposition by that appeal to the people than stand over there in office by the power of the gag.

Mr. Rowe: They are afraid of an election.

Mr. Knowles: How the Liberals have changed. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had the patience to listen to a debate for six months and still he did not impose closure. Now, it is closure on the first speech on the resolution. Now, when we get into committee of the whole it is closure on each clause as we go along. I insist that this motion is not what it purports to be, just an innocent proposal to move on. It is, in fact, dishonest in that sense. It is laying the basis for closure, and I submit that Your Honour should not entertain such a motion in this place which we regard as a democratic assembly.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, for these three reasons, because of the clear-cut language of standing order 78 (1), which I insist is a rule of this house which under the rule of law must be obeyed; secondly, because of the clear-cut language on page 537 of May which you, sir, have held up to us as an authority, and in the third place because of the insistence we are entitled to make that the government should not try to do indirectly what it cannot do directly, I call upon you to tell the Minister of Trade and Commerce that his present motion is out of order.

The Chairman: Order. Do I understand the minister and the hon. member for Eglinton are rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fleming: I wish to speak to the same point of order as that to which I indicated last night I wished to speak.

The Chairman: May I take this opportunity of bringing this matter to the attention of the committee. I gather, from the remarks made by the hon. member for Eglinton, that he and I do not see eye to eye on this particular point. Now, we cannot have two points of order before the committee at the same time; I think that is agreed. We are now dealing with a point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I feel that I am bound by the provisions of standing order 34 which says:

Mr. Speaker may permit debate on the point of order—

I draw hon. members' attention to the word "may".

—before giving his decision, but such debate must be strictly relevant to the point of order taken.

Now, I feel from interchanges which have taken place between the hon. member for Eglinton and myself that he does not agree with my understanding of my position, in that once an hon. member has raised a point of order if I feel that I need assistance in deciding it I can hear other members who wish to speak to the point.

Mr. Coldwell: No, no.

The Chairman: Order; may I conclude my remarks?

Mr. Coldwell: May I say I think you are entirely wrong?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Coldwell: I think that what you have quoted does not give you the right not to see a member who rises.

The Chairman: May I finish? I should like to get this cleared up. I am asking assistance, and that is my interpretation of my position. The hon. member has raised a point of order and I think there is a citation somewhere—I can look it up later—which says these points of order must be decided immediately. I think it is standing order 34 which allows me to permit debate from hon. members if I need assistance in deciding a point of order. I have felt it is the duty of the chair to decide whether the chair needs that assistance. I know the hon. member disagrees with that view, and I now find that I think the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar disagrees with that view. However, we cannot get rid of the question at this time. I intend to see the hon. member for Eglinton, and I intend to see the minister—

Mr. Rowe: Why?

The Chairman: —as they both say they wish to speak on this point of order. I wish to obtain their views on it, but I wish later hon. members would raise, if they wish, another point of order if they disagree with me that it is permissive that this is being done. I wish they would raise it so that could be settled. Some hon. members seem to disagree with my view and I think if they disagree they may speak to me on the point and we can have that point of order decided later.

Mr. Macdonnell: I wish to be heard on that.

The Chairman: We cannot do that at this point. I will hear the hon. member for Eglinton on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Fleming: It is on the same point I wish to address you, but you seem to anticipate what I am going to say to you and I do not know how you can do that because I have not said a word on the point of order now raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and that is the one about which I wish to speak. You have invited hon. members to make their submissions to you in regard to the question whether hon. members could be heard on a point of order raised by another hon. member.

The Chairman: I wonder if I might make this clear to the hon. member for Eglinton at this time. I consider it is my decision to allow debate, and as I say I consider it is permissive in me, as Chairman, to allow debate if I feel I need further assistance in properly deciding a point of order. Now, if the hon. member wishes to speak in support of that, then that is one thing, but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has raised the point of order and I say, by permission of the chair, I should like to hear the hon. member's remarks. If he wishes to raise a point that he has a right to do so rather than that he is doing so by permission, I wonder if he would kindly leave that until after we have disposed of the present point of order and then I would be very glad to receive direction on that very point.

Mr. Fleming: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I may have misunderstood your earlier remarks. I say then I shall be happy to reserve anything I might have said to you on the point of order as to whether you should hear hon. members.

The Chairman: I would appreciate that very much because I may be under a misapprehension on the matter, but I should like to have the assistance of hon. members in order that we may all know our position. The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming: Wait a minute, sir.

The Chairman: I understood you were reserving your remarks.

Mr. Fleming: No. I said, if you note my last remarks, that I have reserved what I might wish to say to you on the point you have raised as to whether other members should be heard by the Chair.

The Chairman: The hon. member now wishes to talk on the point of order of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Mr. Fulton: That is what he first got up for.

Mr. Fleming: That is what I rose to my feet for, sir, and that is the purpose I declared last night at the moment of adjournment, as you recognized this morning.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to give full support to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for the reasons he gave and for additional ones as well, because the point can be fully supported on the grounds that he put forward, and in my respectful submission it can be supported on additional grounds also.

We cannot get away from the provisions of rule 78. They have been referred to several times but we must begin with them on this point. Clause 1 reads:

> In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

It is only natural, Mr. Chairman, that you should look around for precedents, and no doubt you have in your mind what occurred here yesterday. I think I should begin with some observations on that subject. In the first place, I submit to you that there is no precedent open to you in this respect to justify the course that the government is seeking to follow here except what occurred yesterday. There are no earlier precedents. Indeed, the precedents are all to the contrary. If the government is to be supported in this present motion to postpone consideration of clause 3 of the bill, then precedents for it cannot be found outside of yesterday's proceedings in this house.

I draw your attention, sir, to the submissions you have already heard—I do not take the time of the committee to repeat them—that the provisions of rule 78 must be given very strict interpretation. I simply recall to your mind what was said on that point yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition and what has already been said on the point by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

All that has been heard in debate on the bill so far in the committee has been a succession of three statements made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in each case moving a similar motion. I draw your attention to what was said in each case. I will do it as briefly as I can because I am now coming to the question as to whether what is now being done is a consideration of a clause under the provisions of standing order 78. In that regard, I think you have a very good guide in what was said by the minister in each case. At page 4283 of yesterday's Hansard the minister said, in introducing the same motion in respect to clause 1:

> Mr. Chairman, clause 1 is the short title clause, stating that the act may be cited as the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation Act. It is purely a formal clause and since we have had some six days of general discussion and a few days more of procedural discussion I move:
> "That further consideration of this clause be postponed".

Mr. Chairman, the minister was not pretending that that was consideration. The whole pith and substance of that very brief statement was that consideration is not necessary because it is a purely formal clause. Now, in the face of that, surely, when the minister, as the speaker recognized, and the only speaker recognized by the chair on the clause, stands up and says that there is no consideration required of this because it is a formal clause, no one in this committee can then pretend, let alone seriously argue, that there has been consideration of the clause.

Then, let us move forward and recall what the minister said in introducing the same motion with respect to clause 2. It is to be found on page 4293 of Hansard, and reads as follows:

> Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, clause 2 is the interpretation clause and is standard in form. It gives definition of the "board"; "corporation"; what a director means; what the minister means; the northern Ontario section; "Trans-Canada" as the abbreviation of "Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited"; and the definition of "western section".
> I move:
> "That further consideration of this clause be postponed.

What the minister was saying to you there, sir, was that there is no occasion for consideration of this clause because it is a purely standard clause, just a clause of definition, a standard clause that does not require consideration. Such was his submission. In the face of that, does anyone pretend, in the light of the course then taken by the government in moving the motion that the consideration of the clause be postponed, that there had been consideration? It is perfectly clear, sir, from what the minister said himself, he was arguing before you that consideration was not necessary.

Then, the last reference, Mr. Chairman, is to what the minister said in introducing the motion which is now before you. At page 4311 of Hansard he said:

> Mr. Chairman, section 3 establishes a crown corporation in the form usual for crown corporations appointed by the federal government. The president and the four directors are appointed. The head office of the corporation shall be in the city of Ottawa. The directors receive no salaries but are allowed their living expenses and the usual provisions are made for civil servants who may be employed entirely by the corporation.
> Mr. Chairman, I move that further consideration of this clause be postponed.

Again, sir, the whole pith and substance of the minister's statement was that this was just the usual form of clause in reference to crown corporations. He contended no consideration is necessary; therefore he moved that consideration be postponed. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the face of those statements whose aim and purpose are crystal clear, it is not going to be pretended, I am sure, by any hon. member that consideration has been given to the clause when the minister was saying throughout, in effect, consideration is not necessary; therefore, because it is not necessary he moved that consideration be postponed.

My submission to you is this, sir. The statement by the minister, which is all we have, is not consideration by the committee within the terms of standing order 78, clause 1. Indeed, it could not even be pretended that it is consideration by the minister, let alone by the committee of the whole.

Mr. Chairman, if you say that what occurred yesterday has established a precedent to dispose of that point I will take respectful issue with that view and say to you that what occurred yesterday, in my submission, is not a binding precedent; it is certainly not a contrary precedent. However, Mr. Chairman, if you do hold that there was a precedent created yesterday which precludes you from giving the interpretation to standing order 78, clause 1, in the light of the facts, that I am asking you to put upon that clause, then I move forward to the next submission.

I say to you, sir, that on a proper consideration of clause 3 of the bill now before us, that clause cannot be considered apart from the consideration of clauses 1 and 2 which the committee has now been precluded from considering by reason of the two motions of the government. We are being asked to say that further consideration of this clause be postponed. I submit to you that clause 3 has not been considered. I go farther and I say that clause 3 cannot be considered in accordance with any sensible interpretation of the word "considered" in the light of the action taken by the committee already in passing the government's motions to postpone consideration of clauses 1 and 2.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if you will look at the bill itself you will see that an understanding of clause 3 of the bill is impossible without reference to clauses 1 and 2. Clause 3 of the bill is a clause—perhaps it might be called the heart of the whole bill—by which there is created a crown corporation to be known as the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. The clause goes on to deal with the appointment of directors, their tenure of office and removal, the delegation of their powers to the president or general manager, the making of by-laws, location of the head office and directors' meetings, the payment of expenses, the appointment of a general manager, the employment of officers and servants and retirement from employment by the corporation.

Now, sir, I defy any member of this house to attempt consideration, within the meaning of the term as used in our standing order 78, of clause 3 apart from references to the two preceding clauses of the bill. When standing order 78 speaks about consideration it surely means sensible, intelligent, competent consideration. It does not mean wrenching a provision out of all context in the bill and trying to shut one's eyes to the meaning including essential definitions attached to terms in the section and other provisions of the bill. Therefore I say, sir, that the committee cannot, as matters now stand, give consideration to the provisions of clause 3 within the meaning of standing order 78 without reference to and consideration of clauses 1 and 2; and that is precluded.

I go further on my next point, sir, and say that the process grows as we proceed with the bill. We are at clause 3. The government wants to postpone consideration of clause 3 and to prevent any discussion of it whatever because you ruled yesterday that this motion is not debatable. Well, sir, we know what is going to happen. If consideration of clause 3 is postponed, then when we come to clause 4 the same thing is going to be attempted again by the government. I point out to you, and I think you must consider what has now become a settled course of action on the part of the government in the light of an unfolding pattern before our eyes of government purpose with respect to this bill in committee, that you have to look further and see what is going to be the effect of this motion upon the proceedings that are to follow.

This motion with respect to clause 3 of the bill would defeat any attempt at consideration of the subsequent clauses of the bill because, sir, this is the clause that sets up the corporation which was the original sole purpose of the legislation as indicated in the original resolution placed on the order paper by the government some months ago.

Now, sir, look at the other clauses, clauses 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the bill. They could not possibly be considered apart from clause 3. If this motion is now adopted, I submit to you that this house is not in a position to give consideration to clauses 4, 5, 6 or 7 within the terms of standing order 78.

I do not intend to dwell on the point, sir, but just look at clause 4 for a moment. It refers to a corporation. That is the corporation in clause 3. In clause 4 it is referred to as a body corporate having capacity to contract and to sue and be sued in the name of the corporation. And then it proceeds to deal with the status of the corporation as an agent of Her Majesty to deal with the holding of the property by the corporation, and so on. Then we come to clause 5 of the bill which establishes the purposes and powers of the corporation. What corporation? The corporation created by clause 3 of the bill, and yet the committee is being asked to say that clause 3 shall not be considered.

Go further, sir, and come to clause 6 of the bill. Again you have a provision that the corporation may borrow money from Her Majesty and certain provisions are contained therein in reference to the making of any such loans. What corporation, sir? It is the corporation created under clause 3 of the bill, and we are being asked now to pass over that clause without any consideration. How can it be said then that consideration could possibly be given to clause 6 within the meaning of standing order 78 if this motion is now accepted by you?

Finally we come to clause 7 of the bill which provides—and I am hurrying over this, Mr. Chairman—that:

> Pursuant to an agreement in that behalf made, with the approval of the governor in council, . . .

—between Her Majesty and Trans-Canada, the corporation may on behalf of Her Majesty make short-term loans to Trans-Canada. What corporation? It is the corporation created under clause 3 of the bill. How can it be pretended that the committee will be in a position to give consideration to clause 7 of the bill within the terms of standing order 78 in the light of the motion now proposed?

I submit to you, sir, that if you were to entertain this motion you would be in effect accepting a course of action by which the committee will preclude and disable itself from carrying out the duty laid upon it by standing order 78 with respect to clause 4, with respect to clause 5, with respect to clause 6 and with respect to clause 7. I submit that a motion so absurd on its face as that cannot be in order. A motion that would in itself defeat the application of standing order 78 and preclude the committee from discharging the plain duty laid upon it by standing order 78 cannot be in order.

I will not dwell further, Mr. Chairman, on the point that this motion would achieve a highly ludicrous result. It goes further, sir. If you receive this motion it will defeat the rules and I think it is quite obvious, sir, that that is so intended by the government. The pattern has emerged. In reaching your conclusion on this point of order in the light of the submission to you made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and in the light of what I am trying to submit respectfully to you now, I urge upon you that you cannot close your eyes to what happened yesterday. You cannot close your eyes to the clear pattern of action revealed yesterday in the succession of motions introduced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The pattern is clear and you have to look at that course of action with respect to the other two clauses and with respect to its application to the succeeding clauses of the bill because we know that is the government's intention. The conclusion is inescapable that this course of action of the government prevents, and is intended to prevent consideration of anything in the bill. It would tear the rules; it would tear our parliamentary safeguards to shreds and tatters.

Now, sir, I said that you cannot close your eyes to clause 3 in reaching your conclusion as to whether you may accept this motion, and you cannot close your eyes to what happened yesterday or what it is the government's intention to do with respect to later clauses. Here I come to another point, sir. All this flows logically, indeed sir it flows inevitably, from your recognition of the minister on this clause.

I wish now, sir, to turn to two of the citations which were dealt with in part by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and to develop my own particular submission on them. The essence of our parliamentary institutions surely rests upon the maintenance of the rights of all in this house as defined by the rules. You have had an abundance of citations as to the essential part, indeed the vital role, played by the rules and their maintenance in their full integrity in the preservation of the essence of parliament. It is not just a matter of the dry bones of procedural questions. Here we are dealing with matters that go to the very heart and vitals of our parliamentary institutions.

Now, sir, let me turn to the famous citation No. 1 in the third edition of Beauchesne in which Bourinot is quoted as stating:

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law, as Bourinot so aptly says, are: "to protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to enable every member to express his opinion within limits necessary to preserve decorum and prevent an unnecessary waste of time; to give abundant opportunity for the consideration of every measure, and to prevent any legislative action being taken upon sudden impulse."

Sir, you have been invited, and I invite you now, to give full weight to that unchallenged statement, binding upon you, binding upon anyone who sits in the place where you sit today and bears the important responsibility that rests upon you. I submit to you that the clear pattern of government action in this succession of motions will inevitably —indeed, it is designed to—defeat any possibility of permitting the committee to give consideration to this measure, let alone the abundant consideration that Bourinot says is the hallmark of English parliamentary law.

An hon. Member: Borneo.

Mr. Fleming: I hear Liberals in this house making jest of Bourinot and referring to him now as Borneo. Mr. Chairman, the authority of Bourinot as the first Canadian master of parliamentary procedure and understanding of the essence of our parliamentary institutions is beyond challenge by any member of this house.

There is the question of the protection of minorities in this house. I am going to have something to say about the wider context of this expression in a moment, but let us bear in mind what Bourinot said about the protection of a minority. I ask you, sir, where is there any pretense of protection of the right of any minority in this house, or any minority represented by anybody in this house, or indeed by all the house, if the only person to be seen on every clause is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when everybody in the house knows full well that his purpose is to get up and introduce motions, the whole purport and intent of which are to prevent any consideration and to prevent any other hon. member of this house from even so much as offering one word of comment on the substance of such a motion? This comes about because, three times in a row, on clause 1, then on clause 2 and then on clause 3, you chose to recognize the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Diefenbaker: More than coincidence.

Mr. Fleming: You justified your course by reliance upon citations in the third edition of Beauchesne, Nos. 212, 213 and 214. I wish to make a comment and submission to you upon those citations, because it seems to me that they go to the very essence of the point we are considering now, namely, the proper understanding of what is meant by interpretation of standing order 78. Citation 212 says:

There should not be a list of Speakers with an order of precedence in the House of Commons. Any member who wishes to speak may rise and endeavour to catch the Speaker's eye. He who is first seen has the right to speak. By old parliamentary usage, a member who wishes to make—

And so on.

213. It is a paramount principle that "no member may speak except when there is a question before the house". The only exceptions to this principle are the following: questions put before the commencement—

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am in some doubt here as to the relevancy to the present point of order. The hon. member will recall that I recognized the Minister of Trade and Commerce on three occasions. In each case the motion was made that another hon. member be now heard, and on the vote of the committee those motions were negatived. I am in doubt as to whether the hon. member is not transgressing the rule.

Mr. Fleming: I realize I may not go back and open up the discussion on that motion but I am accepting the fact that now, three times in a row, the minister has been seen and given the floor. I am pointing out to you the consequences that follow from that and their bearing upon the proper interpretation of standing order 78. I am saying to you, in effect, Mr. Chairman, that you have to have in mind what has occurred, and also the fact that we have a clear pattern established, now we know that this is going to be attempted to be repeated when we come to the next clause. The minister will be on his feet and we shall have the same performance of the minister trying to get consideration of the motion, that is, that the clause be postponed.

You said yesterday, in reference to these citations, as recorded on page 4302 of Hansard:

There is a custom or usage also that when a minister of the crown rises at certain times he is given a certain priority.

Then you went on to say:

Citation 214 reads:

"The succession of speakers is left entirely to the Speaker."

Now, sir, if you hold the view that the minister is entitled to be called upon on every clause of this bill as the first speaker, and we know that he is going to move that the consideration be precluded by the kind of motion he has brought in now on three occasions, I say to you that you cannot dismiss from your mind the fact that this is the settled course of action in this chamber and that is the course of action that is going to follow if you receive this motion and not rule it out, as I am submitting to you that you ought to do.

I had understood that, whilst there are certain special courtesies extended to ministers of the crown, equal courtesy was extended, by well-established usage of this house, to the Leader of the Opposition. That, I understood, was a fact in this house, an unquestionable convention, but if you, sir, do not recognize that, then I say to you that that buttresses and strengthens the submission I am making to you now with reference to the proper interpretation of standing order 78.

I said a word earlier on the subject of precedents. The question was put to the Prime Minister this morning on the orders of the day as to whether he could point to a precedent in any commonwealth parliament for what the government was endeavouring to do here in following this settled course of action with a view to gagging the committee of the whole on each of these clauses as it is reached. The Prime Minister, in his response to that question, lightly dismissed it and indicated in effect that the government is not interested in any precedent from any other commonwealth parliament. All I have to say, in a word, on that remark of the Prime Minister is that he should be ashamed of what he is saying.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Fleming: There is no time limit on points of order.

The Chairman: There is a time limit in committee.

Mr. Fleming: Not on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Filibustering your own point of order now.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, this has never been done before on a point of order in committee.

Mr. McCann: Nobody ever talked so long.

The Chairman: Standing order 59(3) reads:

> No member, except the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, shall speak for more than thirty minutes at a time in any committee of the whole house.

Mr. Fleming: I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that has never been applied on a point of order.

Mr. Sinclair: Because nobody ever spoke for 30 minutes.

The Chairman: I agree with the hon. member, and may I also say that we are now dealing with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I point out that in my view I have permitted the hon. member to express his views, and I think I have heard enough to enable me to decide the point. When the hon. member rose the Minister of Finance also rose, and I propose to hear what the Minister of Finance has to say about this same point of order.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, are you ruling that a member speaking to a point of order—

Mr. Sinclair: In committee.

Mr. Fleming: —in committee is limited to 30 minutes?

The Chairman: I am so ruling.

Mr. Fleming: Then, with respect, I must appeal your ruling.

The Chairman: Just one minute. We cannot have a point of order on a point of order. May I draw the attention of hon. members to Beauchesne, third edition, citation 110, the very last sentence of which reads as follows:

> A point of order cannot be raised on a point of order.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar indicated earlier this morning that he disagreed with my view as to my functions on the point of order raised originally by a member. The hon. member for Eglinton also disagrees with that and he disagrees on this point. Once the point of order of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been disposed of, I am going to give an opportunity to deal with that, as I said earlier, but at the present time I must recognize the Minister of Finance on the point of order of the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. I will not take half an hour, but let me answer the points made by both hon. members who have spoken on this point of order. I begin by saying what I would have said last night had I been permitted to do so at the time. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has used the word "dishonest" this morning in connection with the proceedings that we now have before the house, and at one time during the course of his remarks he said something like this: It would appear that in working out that plan the government has come to the realization that it might not be able to achieve closure on time because some of the clauses would not have been considered at all.

Ever since the hon. member for Prince Albert made a broadcast about the 8th or 9th of March it has been known that it is the intention of the official opposition to do what they can to prevent the passage of this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harris: At that time he is reported in a Canadian Press dispatch to have said—

An hon. Member: This is not a point of order.

Mr. Harris: This is a point of order because each of these hon. gentlemen has mentioned what we are doing by way of procedure.

Mr. Rowe: There is no point of order in that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this the explanation of the conspiracy here?

Mr. Harris: I read from the Ottawa Citizen of March 10, 1956, as follows:

> The defence production filibuster, highlight of the 1955 session of parliament, will look like a "skirmish" alongside planned Progressive Conservative opposition to the trans-Canada gas pipe line bill this session, John Diefenbaker said Friday night.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. This has nothing whatever to do with the point of order in question.

The Chairman: Order. In his remarks the hon. member for Eglinton—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just a dirty conspiracy on the part of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The Chairman: —was careful to draw certain things to my attention in a similar manner, and I intend to hear the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Fleming: —I drew your attention to what happened in the committee. This is the statement that the minister wanted to get in last night by indulgence of the committee and he has no right to do it.

Mr. Harris: I am speaking to the point of order precisely in the same manner that you did.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, do you rule that this is in order?

The Chairman: Order. We cannot have a point of order on a point of order.

Mr. Drew: Does Your Honour rule this is in order?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

The Chairman: Certainly.

Mr. Drew: Then I appeal your ruling.

The Chairman: I am deciding the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I have listened with patience to the two hon. members even though at some points I did not think their remarks were too relevant, and I think I can now hear the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Drew: I appeal your ruling that this is in order.

Mr. Harris: May I continue?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, do you entertain appeals from your rulings?

The Chairman: As I said, a point of order cannot be raised on a point of order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised a point of order and, by leave, I have allowed certain members to speak to it, one being the hon. member for Eglinton, and now the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, two or three days before that the hon. member for Assiniboia made a somewhat similar statement which I quote as follows:

> The government "ain't seen nothing yet" in the way of filibusters . . .

An hon. Member: This is not in order.

Mr. Harris: The report went on to say:

> He indicated the party's orators are geared to prolong the discussion to a greater extent than opposition leader Drew in last year's filibuster which forced amendment of the Emergency Powers Act . . .

Mr. Drew: And saved the rights of parliament.

Mr. McCann: Saved nothing.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I did not interrupt either one—

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, what has this to do with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre? It has nothing to do with the point of order. The minister is going on to deal with something that has nothing to do with what has occurred in this committee. I ask you to rule—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming: —that the minister is completely outside his rights.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Chairman, it is one o'clock.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Rowe: One o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman,—

The Chairman: Order. Is the minister rising to the point of order which we had before us prior to the luncheon recess?

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I shall be brief. In the course of his remarks yesterday, last evening and again today the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Eglinton imputed every possible motive to this government that they could find in the course of the particular proceedings we are taking. I only take the time of the committee to say this. This government made it clear by the statement of the Prime Minister not so long ago that we had decided on a course of action which had a deadline on it and that we were therefore obliged to take whatever action was necessary to have a decision of this committee and of the house on the point at issue. If that decision is not reached then, so far as we are concerned something has occurred which should not occur. The leader of the C.C.F. has, I think twice and perhaps more than that, referred to the fact that this government has closure and a majority and that therefore there is a corresponding balance with respect to the rules. May I point out to you, sir—without agreeing to that general proposition—that a majority means nothing if a majority cannot ultimately make a decision.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order—

The Chairman: Order. I have already seen the hon. gentleman and I am now in a position to make a decision.

Mr. Drew: Is this closure?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Drew: Does Your Honour say that you will hear no more speakers?

The Chairman: May I remind hon. members of the fact that when the chairman is standing other hon. members should resume their seats.

Mr. Drew: Just remain silent?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming: Are you not going to hear us on the point of order before you make your ruling?

The Chairman: Order. I indicated this morning that in my opinion I was hearing hon. members, by leave of myself, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I have now heard, in my opinion, sufficient to enable me to decide the point and I should like to do it at this moment.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, will you permit an observation?

The Chairman: No. I cannot do so at this moment.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: Order. May I advise hon. members that they may not rise while the Chairman is on his feet.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege?

Mr. Fleming: This is a question of privilege.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Drew: Has there been closure on privilege as well?

The Chairman: Order. I am about to make my ruling.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: I will hear the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles: My question of privilege is this. Earlier today, when the question was raised by the hon. member for Eglinton as to whether or not members had a right to speak in a debate on a point of order, you suggested that that was a separate question from the one that I raised and that it should be left to be settled later. It was because you said that that I did not rise to take part in that discussion at that time. I felt that there was implicit in your statement the view that you would not impose a limitation on the number of speakers on this point of order but that you would leave the question as to whether you have the right to prohibit speakers on a point of order to be settled later. I think it is quite unfair for Your Honour, having given that impression, to come along now and stop discussion when you admitted that your right to do so was a point that would have to be discussed later. In fact, I think you even said you might have to have advice on it. Now you are in effect ruling on the two points of order whereas you would not let us discuss the two points of order. You are by your action about to rule on the point of order that I raised and by cutting off other speakers you are ruling on the point of order as to whether a point of order is freely debatable. On reflection I think Your Honour will realize that the position you are about to take should be reconsidered.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: Order. That is not a true question of privilege.

Mr. Fleming: I wish to speak on a question of privilege.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, privileges have gone.

The Chairman: Order. I hope I did not leave any misapprehension this morning. I admitted some doubt as to the application—

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: I cannot hear the hon. member.

Mr. Nicholson: It is a question of privilege.

The Chairman: When I am on my feet and am about to give a ruling, I say it is impossible for members to raise a question of privilege.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: As a courtesy I am going to hear the hon. member. But will the hon. member resume his seat?

Mr. Macdonnell: Yes.

The Chairman: I should like to quote to hon. members from Cushing. May I say that I have extended every courtesy to hon. members. May I quote from Cushing in "The Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies". We simply cannot get business done in this way.

Mr. Drew: You mean you cannot get foreclosure done.

The Chairman: At page 569 of Cushing I read as follows:

> When, therefore, the presiding officer of an assembly is called upon by any individual member (and no seconder is necessary) to give his opinion as to a matter of order, arising, or which the member supposes to have arisen, as well as in those cases in which the presiding officer volunteers his opinion, he gives it at once, either with or without reasons, as he thinks proper, and proceeds to direct the assembly accordingly. Before, however, giving his opinion, the presiding officer may take the opinions of other members, at his pleasure, not in the shape of debate, on the question; but when he rises up to speak all the other members must at once resume their seats and be silent.

I indicated this morning that I heard the point of order of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and that I proposed to hear several members by leave, under section 34, discuss the question of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I have now come to the point where I feel that I am in a position to decide that point. I am not at this time obliged to accept any further advice, in my opinion. I may have given a wrong impression in this respect. I also cannot decide academic points. If hon. members wish to appeal from my present ruling that I am going to make, that I am not going to hear other hon. members, I can add it to any appeal that is made. However, I have risen to my feet, as is my right, to make my ruling on this point and I intend to do so.

Mr. Fleming: I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: I intend to make my ruling on this point and I must ask the hon. member—

Mr. Fleming: I wish to raise a question of privilege before you make your ruling, Mr. Chairman. There is no point in making it afterwards.

The Chairman: I intend to—

Mr. Fleming: If you do not hear me now, Mr. Chairman, you are refusing to hear my question of privilege. In other words, you are making a farce out of these proceedings and destroying the usefulness of this house. I demand the right to speak to the question of privilege.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming: I demand the right to state my question of privilege.

The Chairman: Order. I was on my feet when the hon. gentleman rose.

Mr. Fleming: I have every respect for you, Mr. Chairman, but I indicated to you that I was raising a question of privilege and you are trying to stifle us before we even state the question of privilege. This is not any way to run a peanut stand, let alone parliament. Surely you must have some regard for the rights of members of this house.

The Chairman: The hon. gentleman rose—

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, will you hear me on my question of privilege?

The Chairman: The hon. gentleman rose to his feet while I was on my feet making a ruling.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, you have just now said you would hear a question of privilege. I am standing up to put my question of privilege before the Chair. It is my right and I assert it.

The Chairman: I feel that I have extended every courtesy to the hon. member and I must now direct him to resume his seat.

Mr. Fleming: You have not recognized my right to raise my question of privilege.

The Chairman: I must direct the hon. member to resume his seat.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I assert my right to put my question of privilege before the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming: And I go further and I say this to you,—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming: —in the light of what you said earlier, if you do not hear my question of privilege you have misled the committee and every member of it. You said here earlier this morning that you would hear the members of the house on the question whether members could be heard on a question of privilege raised by another. Now you are making a decision and allowing no one to be heard. You will not even allow a member the right of raising a question of privilege.

The Chairman: I have asked the hon. member to resume his seat. He has not done so. Does the hon. member wish me to report the occurrence?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, if you wish to deny me my right as a member of the house and refuse to hear a question of privilege, you will take your own blind course, I assume. I assert my right as the right not only of myself but of every other member of the house.

The Chairman: Order. I shall stand here until there is absolute silence. It is impossible to conduct the business of parliament in this way. The hon. gentleman rose while I was on my feet—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming: We are agreed on that, and the responsibility rests with you.

The Chairman: I have asked the hon. member to resume his seat and he has refused to do so. I must, therefore, report the matter to the house.

Mr. Fleming: I rise on a question of privilege. Will you hear me on a question of privilege?

The Chairman: I leave the chair to report the matter to the house.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege; will you read the report to the committee before you make it.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

Mr. Speaker, in committee of the whole when it was considering clause 3 of Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, I was addressing the committee when Mr. Fleming rose on a question of privilege. I stated that a question of privilege could not be raised while I was addressing the committee and directed Mr. Fleming to resume his seat. This, Mr. Fleming refused to do.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) of the committee of the whole reports that when it was considering clause 3 of Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, the chairman was addressing the committee when Mr. Fleming rose on a question of privilege. The chairman stated that a question of privilege could not be raised while he was addressing the committee and directed Mr. Fleming to resume his seat. This, Mr. Fleming refused to do.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, may I be heard? I submit to you, sir, that that report is not a true and accurate report of the proceedings in committee. These are the facts, sir. A point of order was under discussion. The discussion had commenced last night on a point that was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I followed this morning on the point of order, supporting it. When I rose the chairman of the committee said that he, at some point, wished to hear argument as to whether he, as chairman, should hear more than the member raising or introducing the point of order. He did say, however, when I undertook to discuss that subject, that he did not wish the discussion at that point, but that he would reserve that as a separate point for later discussion. I proceeded then to discuss the original point and the second point has not yet been raised.

After I was heard in part, I may say that the chairman ruled that my time was up in committee about ten minutes to one although I had not quite completed, then he heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) on the same point of order. After the noon adjournment the committee resumed at 2.30 and the floor was given to the Minister of Finance to complete his observations and representations on the point of order. He was heard to the end, and then the chairman of the committee rose and stated that he was about to make his ruling. I rose and indicated that I wished to complete briefly some remarks on the point of order. Now, if he had given me an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, I would have said that another member of my own party who was going to make a submission on the same point of order had decided to withhold those remarks and let me complete my remarks instead of having a second speaker from my party on that point. I was not permitted even to say that.

At that point the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rose on a question of privilege. Will you bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was at that point heard on a question of privilege. The chairman of the committee had already said he was on his feet and was about to give his decision on the point of order, but even then, even having risen to his feet with that declared purpose, he heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a question of privilege. I said I wished then to be heard on a question of privilege. My question of privilege was similar to his, but I was entitled, I think, to state it. The chairman of the committee did not hear me.

Then, the hon. member to my right, my colleague the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), rose to his feet and said he wished to address the chair on a question of privilege. Still the chairman of the committee was on his feet and still purporting to make his ruling on a question of order, and without having heard all the discussion on that point, but he said, if you please, that he would hear the hon. member for Greenwood on his question of privilege. I then asked that I be heard on a question of privilege. I had already tried several times, even before, to be heard on a question of privilege, and although the chairman of the committee had heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a question of privilege and although he said he was going to hear my colleague the hon. member for Greenwood on a question of privilege, he refused to hear me on a question of privilege. I asserted, Mr. Speaker, my right to be heard on a question of privilege and not be debarred by a decision of the chair from being heard on an important question of privilege on an issue that is as important as any that will ever come before the Canadian House of Commons.

When others enjoy that right—it is not a privilege, it is a right to be heard on a question of privilege—under the same circumstances and while the same chairman was on his feet and engaged in delivering his decision on the same point of order, by what right does he accord to some members of the house the right to rise on a question of privilege and deny it to me? Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I stood my ground.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming: And I did so, Mr. Speaker, without departing one inch from the respect which, in the 11 years I have been in this house, I have always given to the Chair. But there comes a time when a higher duty is owed, and it is a duty to parliament itself, to the long centuries of tradition of parliamentary freedom. And, sir, the right that I assert here today I assert not for myself alone. I assert it for all members of this House of Commons, not just today, but in days to come, to stand up against discriminatory decisions, in fact, abuse of the rules of this house and denial to members of their clear and proper and constitutional rights to discharge their responsibilities to those who sent them here, the responsibilities to all Canadians, their responsibilities not only today but to generations yet unborn, and I abide by the consequences.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, because my name has been mentioned by the previous speaker, may I speak to the matter? I do not press it; I leave it in Your Honour's hands. Since I have your consent, I may say that the reason I feel I should say a few words is that the hon. member for Eglinton has indicated that his point of privilege arose partly because I had been permitted to speak to a point of privilege at the same juncture in the proceedings of the committee. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I should make it clear why I felt I had a point of privilege and in doing so I think I shall make it clear to Your Honour that underlying this whole incident is a very serious misunderstanding.

My point of privilege was that during the debate on a point of order which I had raised on the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce another point of order had been raised, namely, as to whether or not members had the right to speak to points of order. I listened very carefully to the chairman of the committee and I understood him to say—we have to wait until we get Hansard to see what was actually said—that two points of order could not be dealt with at the same time; that the one would have to be disposed of first, namely, my point of order against the minister's motion, and that the other point of order as to whether or not speaking on a point of order was a matter of right would be dealt with later. My point of privilege was that because I understood from the chairman that the question of the right of members to speak on a point of order would be dealt with later therefore I refrained from speaking to it at that time. am prepared to give the benefit of the doubt to the chairman in putting it this way, but I am sure there was a misunderstanding.

The chairman asserts that he did not intend to give the impression that I got from his words, but I certainly got that impression and I am positive that I am not alone. It is out of that misunderstanding that this whole question has arisen and because of that I think consideration has to be given to the position in which the hon. member for Eglinton has been placed. I pointed out in my question of privilege when we were in committee of the whole that in fact the chairman was doing what he said could not be done; that he was ruling on two points of order at the same time. He was attempting to rule on my point of order against the minister's motion and, in fact, by closing off discussion he was ruling on the point of order about members speaking to points of order, even though he had not permitted discussion on that second point of order. I say again, Mr. Speaker, that I am thoroughly satisfied that the chairman gave us the impression that we would be permitted to have that discussion later.

What the house does with the hon. member for Eglinton for having defied the chairman is up to the house, but it does seem to me that cognizance will have to be taken of the whole situation. I think, to put it in the best parliamentary words that I can, there was a serious misunderstanding between the chairman and the committee.

Mr. Harris: May I just say a few words, and in general agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, though not entirely. My understanding was that the chairman decided, or was about to decide, that he had heard sufficient advice from the committee with respect to the particular point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Now, it is true that at that point—I think I am reading the mind of the hon. member for Eglinton—he desired to argue, as had the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that in doing so; that is, in refusing to hear further advice from the house in committee, he was in fact making a decision that he was not obliged to hear every hon. member who rose in the committee to offer him advice. On the other hand, I distinctly heard the chairman of the committee say that he was not called upon to make academic decisions, and I took it from that he felt at that time that he was not in fact ruling on the point of order that had been originally raised as to whether or not he had been obliged to accept advice from any hon. member.

Now, in the course of that he did read—and this may have added somewhat to the confusion which exists, if there is any at all—an extract from a textbook which indicated—and I am only going to paraphrase the words that he used—he hears members giving him advice at his pleasure. However, I do not think that can be taken as his decision, and I am sure that he did not make a decision that in fact he would or would not accept advice from any member. As a matter of fact, when he used the word "academic" I took it for granted that at a later stage of these proceedings that point would be raised and that he would probably rule on it in due course.

Mr. Knowles: But he closed off the discussion on that point.

Mr. Harris: I beg your pardon. It is true, however, that if he were to continue, as I understood him to be about to do, and no doubt the hon. member for Eglinton understood, he would in fact at that point have rendered his decision on the point of order, having heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for Eglinton and myself. Now, if that were taken, as I say, by the hon. member for Eglinton as a decision by him on the point of order that he did not have to accept advice from every one of the 264 members, I suppose there may be some point in the explanation offered by the hon. member for Eglinton. Nevertheless, I would have assumed, as I said, that a later decision would have been made on that point of order at a later time, and that should not be taken as barring that future decision.

However, may I say this, Mr. Speaker, with all respect to everyone who has spoken in this debate and on this particular point, that parliament after all is a body in which the officers have to be respected. As the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said the other day, he thought that the chairman erred in some respects. I think he may have been addressing yourself. Every one of us realizes that we do err from time to time, but one thing we must not have happen, if we can possibly avoid it, is that the authority of both Mr. Speaker and the chairman of the committee should be defied in other than the normal method of appealing to the committee or to the house as a whole.

Mr. Pallett: Under the control of the government.

Mr. Harris: The government tries just as much as it can to obey the rules of this house. At this point, sir, may I say that I think Your Honour has been seized with the explanations made by the hon. member for Eglinton, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and myself. If it would appear that the first two are correct and that the chairman was about to rule on the point of order raised in the first instance by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I can suggest that the hon. member for Eglinton would not have been debarred from subsequently raising the other point, though I must say that it was hard to decide whether he was actually going to speak to the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or not. Nevertheless, sir, I have given such information to Your Honour as I could. I feel, as a matter of fact, that the chairman was going forward to make just the one ruling and not a second one and that the academic question he referred to could have been decided at a later date.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there should be any confusion added to this by the statements that have been made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris). The point at issue is perfectly clear. The hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) rose on a question of privilege. The issue before you is not whether there was further debate on a point of order. The question is whether it is appropriate that the chairman should indicate his willingness to hear other hon. members on a question of privilege and deny that right to the hon. member for Eglinton. That is the point at issue and it should not be obscured. The Minister of Finance has said that officers have to be respected. May I say that officers also must deserve respect.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Drew: I have stated a basic proposition that is fundamental to the whole procedure of parliament and it is appropriate that it be brought to your attention that an indication had clearly been given that two hon. members were to be accorded the right to speak on a question of privilege while that right was denied to the hon. member for Eglinton. That is the one issue before you on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) says that the issue before me is whether or not the hon. member for Eglinton had the right to rise in committee of the whole on a question of privilege. I think the Leader of the Opposition, by inadvertence I am sure, does not grasp exactly what is the reason for my having resumed the chair.

I cannot review what has happened in committee of the whole. I am not here called upon to make a ruling; I am here merely to put to the house the report that has been received from the chairman of the committee of the whole. On two earlier occasions when I thought that particular phase of my duties was misunderstood I did quote citation 428 of Beauchesne's third edition. I did that last evening. Citation 428 reads:

> In case of an appeal to the house, it is the duty of the Chairman to leave the chair immediately and report in writing the point of order which he has decided. The Speaker must then submit the matter to the determination of the house in the language reported to him and put the question. "That the decision of the Chairman be confirmed." No discussion is allowed on the appeal.

Then I added a reference of Mr. Speaker Lemieux which appears at pages 3984 and 3985 of Hansard, volume IV, of 1926. That ruling is to this effect; Mr. Speaker Lemieux said:

> The question is not debatable and the Speaker is bound to accept the memorandum prepared by the Chairman of the committee. I shall read it again for the information of the house—

And at that moment the then leader of the opposition, Mr. Arthur Meighen, rose to a point of order and said:

> The statement was never submitted to the committee before being submitted to the chair. Surely it is not the rule of this house that whatever the Chairman says is the point of order is really the point of order under review either by the committee or the house. The point of order was as clear as day. The Chairman stated it before the committee clearly, and he puts it in a different way to Mr. Speaker. That was the first I knew of it. He should have put it to the committee.

Mr. Speaker Lemieux said:

> I think I am bound to accept the statement of the Chairman.

Mr. Meighen replied:

> Then appeals are useless.

Mr. Speaker Lemieux said:

> The point of order is stated by the party who is to report it to the house, or when appeals are taken from the ruling of the chair, the Chairman states his point. The Chairman stated his point in this way:—

And then he goes on to read the report. Mr. Meighen intervened again. He said:

> I speak with some diffidence, because it is some time since there was a precedent, but, I think it is the duty of the Speaker to decide a point of order.

Mr. Lapointe joined in the discussion and said:

> Section 183 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms reads:
> "In case of an appeal to the house, it is the duty of the Chairman—"

This is probably taken from the second edition which is the same as citation 428 of Beauchesne's third edition. Mr. Lapointe concluded:

> I submit that even my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition should be amenable to the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker Lemieux then said:

> Might I respectfully call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to what May says under rule 14:
> "Note that the appeal from the Chairman's decision is to the house and not to the Speaker."

Then he put the question and the question was decided in the affirmative. I cite this just to point out to hon. members that whatever happens in committee of the whole, if it is an appeal from a ruling by the Chairman, that appeal is not to the Speaker but rather it is to the house. I resumed the chair merely for the purpose of taking the report and submitting it to the house which must decide one way or the other itself, a right provided by the rules of the house.

As far as the question of disorder is concerned, it is provided by standing order 59, paragraph 4, that:

> The chairman shall maintain order in the committees of the whole house, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the house; but disorder in a committee can only be censured by the house, on receiving a report thereof.

Now, it is to the latter part of this citation that the report apparently addresses itself. The report I have received is that "the chairman was addressing the committee when the hon. member for Eglinton rose on a question of privilege. The chairman stated that the question of privilege could not be raised while he was addressing the committee and directed the hon. member for Eglinton to resume his seat. This the hon. member refused to do."

To follow the procedure which obtains under our rules and practice with respect to a report of this kind, it is to allow the hon. member who is mentioned in the report to rise and explain. The hon. member for Eglinton was given that right. He stood up a moment ago and we heard him. Following that the practice is to the effect that the hon. member concerned in the report is to withdraw while the house decides what it is going to do about the report. Now, the hon. gentleman remained with us and I think we were all happy to see him with us. And the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), because he had been mentioned in the remarks made by the hon. member for Eglinton, explained further what the position was and so did the Minister of Finance. The Leader of the Opposition spoke too, but it was to indicate to me that what was before me was to decide whether or not the hon. member for Eglinton had a right to be heard on the question of privilege.

I think I have explained as fully as I can that it is not my duty at the moment to decide on that point. I have nothing to do with whatever has taken place in committee of the whole. All that I have to deal with is the report I have received and my duty consists merely of presenting that report to the house and this is what I have done. The matter is now entirely in the hands of the house and not in mine.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I regret greatly that this incident has arisen. I regret it doubly because of the fact that we were in the midst of a debate which is controversial and in which there appear to be strong feelings. Nevertheless, sir, we have had a good deal said about the rights and privileges of the opposition members. We have done our best not to argue too strongly about the rights and privileges of a government.

In this particular instance, you have indicated, Mr. Speaker, that you have no role to play in this particular incident except to accept on behalf of the house the report made by the chairman of the committee and that the remedy lies with the house. I take that to mean, therefore, that some action is necessary by the house, and I presume that I must accept that responsibility as house leader.

The hon. member for Eglinton has explained to the house the reasons why he felt obliged not to carry out the instructions of the chairman of the committee. It seems to me, sir, that what I said before is bound to occur in this house, that, even if perchance it may be that we believe that a chairman of committees or a Speaker may happen to be wrong at the moment, there are other forms of remedy at a later time which can be used to overcome that error, if it is one, rather than at the moment taking a position such as that which the hon. member did.

I realize that is something he chose to take on his own responsibility, as he has made it clear. Nevertheless, if the business of parliament is to be conducted in accordance with what I have always understood to be the traditions of supporting the chairman of committees and Your Honour in the house—

An hon. Member: And with respect to the rights of parliament to speak.

Mr. Harris: Those rights of parliament, as I have said, may very well be interpreted only by the presiding officers, and when they make an interpretation it is, I think, a duty of parliament to uphold them until a later time when another incident may occur. In these circumstances there appears to be, as I understand it from a very brief reading of the precedents, a reference of the matter to a committee; there seems to be a case of the suspension of the hon. member, if the house so determines, for the remainder of the sitting or at whatever length the house might decide.

I presume, sir, that the former, that is the question of the reference to a committee, has to do with a reference more inclined to his own personal interest perhaps of matters such as have been raised on other occasions. If that is so, and if this house is to indicate its support of the presiding officers in their decisions, the only possible motion which can be made is one of suspension. It is with the greatest regret that I am obliged to make that motion. I therefore move:

> That the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) be suspended from the service of the house for the remainder of this day's sitting.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Mr. Fulton: I move an amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after "That" and substituting therefor the following:

"this house record its support of the hon. member for Eglinton in his assertion of the historic and inalienable right of hon. members to rise and speak on a question of privilege in committee of the whole."

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Finance has moved a motion to the effect that the hon. member for Eglinton be suspended from the service of this house for the remainder of the present sitting. The hon. member for Kamloops rose and moved an amendment. I am informed that the motion to suspend the member is not debatable.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I shall hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on the point of order, but before he speaks I would tell him that I have just been informed that it is not debatable by virtue of standing order 32.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, at this point I shall confine myself solely to the question as to whether the motion of the Minister of Finance is debatable. If I establish my point with regard to its debatability I shall speak to the motion later, but I shall restrict myself at this time to the point of order as to whether or not this motion is debatable. I too, during the time we have had since this incident started to arise, have been reading the citations and standing orders that would seem to apply and I also sent to the library and got Hansard for July 31, 1944, when the former member for Parkdale was reported and suspended from the service of the house for the balance of that day. If Your Honour wishes the page, it is 5683 of Hansard for July 31, 1944.

Your Honour relies for your statement that the motion is not debatable on standing order 32. May I point out, however, that there does not seem to be any standing order that spells out the procedure in connection with the naming of a member. I realize that this is not what is technically called the naming of a member, but from standing order 34 (2) it is fairly clear that it is, with respect to something that happened in the committee of the whole, the same thing as would be applied in the house itself. Standing order 34 (2) reads:

Mr. Speaker or the chairman, after having called the attention of the house, or of the committee, to the conduct of a member who persists in irrelevance, or repetition, may direct him to discontinue his speech, and if then the member still continues to speak, Mr. Speaker shall name him, or, if in committee, the chairman shall report him to the house.

Then there is another standing order calling for a report by the chairman to the house of any alleged misconduct. The reason I read standing order 34 (2) is that, so far as I can find, that is the only place in our standing orders where the word "naming" appears. Now, if one looks at Beauchesne's third edition—

Mr. Speaker: May I say this, so that we understand each other? I do not think that in this instance the member concerned had to be named. He was not named. He disregarded the authority of the chair in committee, and whenever that is considered to be disorder and when there is disorder in committee according to standing order 59 (4), a report must be made. Since at that moment when I resumed the chair I merely had to read the report of the chairman to the house, I have no power to name anyone, but the house has it within its power to censure, in whatever form it sees fit, the member who is mentioned in the report of the chairman. As a result of that I take it that the Minister of Finance, as leader of the house, has moved the motion that is now before me. The hon. member will be good enough to address himself to the question whether or not this motion of suspension is debatable.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we are on common ground and in complete agreement that this is not naming because the incident took place in committee of the whole rather than in the house itself. But when we start to search the standing orders to find what course we will follow in a case such as this I think Your Honour will agree that we have to look at all of the standing orders that seem to apply. You are right in directing our attention to standing order 59(4) which says:

The chairman shall maintain order in the committees of the whole house, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the house; but disorder in a committee can only be censured by the house, on receiving a report thereof.

Now, whether it is naming, which this is not, or whether it is a case of the house dealing with the report that has come from the committee, the question arises, how does the house deal with it? There are citations in Beauchesne, limited in number, but nevertheless there are some that can give us guidance. The only standing order which seems to me to have application is standing order No. 30 which reads as follows:

If anything shall come in question touching the conduct of any member, or his election, or his right to hold his seat—

I make it quite clear that I am reading the whole standing order although those last two phrases do not apply.

—he may make a statement and shall withdraw during the time the matter is in debate.

I also draw your attention to citation 229 which is based on that standing order although, of course, it refers to it as standing order 36, which was the number of standing order 30 in the former rules. Citation 229 reads as follows:

Note that under standing order 36, the member shall withdraw during the time a matter touching his conduct is in debate.

I point out, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that both standing order 30, or 36 as it used to be, and citation 229 of Beauchesne, third edition, indicate that a matter of this kind is dealt with by a debate. Surely if it is dealt with in debate, or by debate, that involves a debate. Your Honour may say that you are stymied by standing order 32 because it does not include in the provisions from (a) to (l) thereof a reference to a motion of this kind. I do not think it is a matter of surprise that a motion of this kind is not included there because it does not come up very often. I do not think it has occurred since the occasion when Dr. Bruce was put out of the house on July 31, 1944. But please note that subparagraph (m) of paragraph 1 of standing order 32 says:

(m) such other motion, made upon routine proceedings,—

I am prepared to admit that Your Honour may try to rely on that phrase, that this is not being made on routine proceedings, but the question might be asked how have we got anything if we have not in effect reverted to routine proceedings?

—as may be required for the observance of the proprieties of the house, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, the management of its business, the arrangements of its proceedings, the correctness of its records, the fixing of its sitting days or the times of its meeting or adjournment.

I am sure it is quite clear from what the Minister of Finance said that his motion was made in his view—I am not arguing its merits now—under the general provisions of the maintenance of the authority of the house. Because it comes in there, the maintenance of the authority of the house, and that, I emphasize, is under the section that spells out debatable motions, it seems to me it is clear that it is debatable. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, to summarize, apart from the fact that the motion putting Dr. Bruce out was debated briefly on July 31, 1944, I would say that there are these three references: Standing order 30, which says that this is something that is dealt with in debate; citation 229 of Beauchesne, third edition, which refers to the matter being in debate, and third, there is the provision in standing order 32 (1) (m) which says that motions dealing with the maintenance of the authority of the house are debatable.

Mr. Fulton: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have some additional citations with respect to the debatability of the motion. I would refer you first to Beauchesne, third edition, citation 191, page 82. I had better read the full citation. It is as follows:

It is the practice in the House of Commons to bring up a question of privilege after prayers, and before the house has taken up the orders of the day. Only in very aggravated cases, requiring the immediate interposition of the house, will any business be suddenly interrupted. May says, page 241, twelfth edition, that "the proceedings of the house may be interrupted at any moment, save during the process of a division, by a motion based on a matter of privilege"—

Perhaps I might pause there to say that is exactly what was happening in committee.

—"when a matter has recently arisen which directly concerns the privileges of the house, and in that case the house will entertain the motion forthwith." Bourinot, page 303, quotes an ancient authority as saying: "Whether any question is or is not before the house, and even in the midst of another discussion, if a member should rise to complain of a breach of privileges of the house, they have always instantly heard him."

Then there is one further three line sentence in that citation which does not seem to have any bearing on this particular matter. If you turn to Bourinot, page 305, you will see the following authoritative statement:

The Canadian House of Commons, in its desire to deal promptly with all questions affecting its members, has generally waived the strict rules which govern matters of privilege, properly speaking, and given every possible facility for inquiry thereon.

May I pause there to say that it seems to me impossible to have an adequate inquiry without adequate discussion and debate. Continuing the citation:

When a member proposes to make a motion touching another member—

That is certainly what has happened in this case. The Minister of Finance has made a motion touching the member for Eglinton.

—it is frequently found convenient that he should state his intentions in his place, and then give notice that he will move it when motions are called in due order on a subsequent day.

Again interrupting the reading, I may say that it is made clear elsewhere that the house may take it under consideration immediately and therefore it is not necessary to give notice. Therefore I make no criticism on that ground although I think it might be argued that it would be more appropriate to do so. However, we seem to be seized of this matter at once, but I point out that the fact that you give notice would to my mind, at any rate, indicate that the purpose of giving notice is so that members can be adequately prepared to debate the matter. Now then, after the question of whether or not debate is allowed on such a matter, page 306 of Bourinot is absolutely in point, and it reads as follows:

When a debate on a question of privilege has been adjourned until a future day—

I would ask Your Honour to pay particular regard to this passage on page 306.

When a debate on a question of privilege has been adjourned until a future day, priority will still be given to it. This was done in the case of Louis Riel, mentioned in a previous page, and there are numerous precedents in the English and Canadian Journals illustrating the same point.

So that Bourinot is direct authority for the proposition that such a question is debatable because debate may be adjourned and, sir, if it is debatable then, of course, it is susceptible to amendment. It would, of course, be utterly improper, I think, in view of the importance of the matter and the desire to protect all matters touching upon the conduct and position of members, to dispose of such a question without a debate and without an opportunity to assert the contrary view which I have sought to do in the amendment that I have moved to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The two hon. members who have spoken on the point of order that has been raised have, I believe, confused a question of privilege which is raised as such by one complaining of a breach of privilege and concluding with a motion or by one making an attack against an hon. member and concluding by a motion which may be dealt with, because it is privilege, immediately or may be appointed for debate and disposal at another time, at which time an amendment may be moved or the matter may be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has quoted standing order 30 as having a bearing on the situation as it presents itself at the moment. Standing order 30 reads as follows:

30. If anything shall come in question touching the conduct of any member, or his election, or his right to hold his seat, he may make a statement and shall withdraw during the time the matter is in debate.

This is a standing order which is germane to the two standing orders, namely standing order 79 and standing order 80, which used to be under the one heading before the house sent the matter of controverted elections to the courts. They were under the title "Independence of Parliament". They affected the case where in a debate, while a debate is going on, an attack is made on a member. I think it happened here in the last parliament and the next day the said member came to the house and made a speech and then withdrew. As a matter of fact I think it happened twice during the last parliament that standing order 30 was applied. But at this moment we are not in a debate and a member has not been attacked as to his conduct or his right to hold his seat or in anything pertaining to his election. What has happened is a question of disorder which arose in committee. It is the matter of disregarding the authority of the Chair. That is the offence which has been reported by the chairman of committees. That report has been read to the house and the house has it within its power—because it may regulate its own proceedings and punish its own offenders—to decide what it will do. The hon. member for Eglinton had the right to explain, as in the case of Mr. Bruce who had been involved in a similar matter of misconduct. At page 5682 of Hansard of July 31, 1944 we find the following:

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Bradette, chairman of the committee of the whole, reports that in committee of the whole Mr. Bruce, hon. member for Parkdale, during an address directed to the Prime Minister and the committee, stated that Bill No. 161, an act to provide for family allowances, introduced by the government, was a bribe to the people of Canada. Mr. Bruce was asked by the chairman to withdraw the word "bribe" which he had used. Mr. Bruce refused to withdraw that expression and appealed to the house from the chairman's ruling.

Mr. Cassleman: On a question of privilege, may I ask how the chairman made this report, when he was not in the chair at six o'clock? He was not even in the house.

Mr. Bradette: I was in the house.

Mr. Rowe: No; you just heard about it during the dinner recess.

Mr. Bradette: On a question of privilege, I was in the house when the discussion took place and, more than that, I have read the report of Hansard.

Mr. Golding: I should have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rowe: You have been ignored all through.

Mr. Speaker: With regard to the question as to the chairman of committees making a report when he was not in the Chair, it is the duty of the Clerk to take a note of proceedings in committee, and I now have these notes.

Mr. Homuth: I rise to a question of privilege. I say that in the confusion just before six o'clock Hansard did not get everything the chairman had said, because he did accept the hon. member's word.

Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre): He did not.

Mr. Speaker: The only matter before the Chair is the report from the chairman of the committee. It is my duty to remind the house that the question is: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed?

Then the division took place. Then later, after the division, we find this:

Mr. Speaker: The decision of the house having been given, I wish to direct a remark to the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce). He is an old member of the house, accustomed to the dignity and decorum of assemblies. Under circumstances which are very painful to the house and to myself I would ask the hon. gentleman if he would withdraw his remark.

Mr. Bruce: Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I cannot and will not withdraw my remark.

Mr. Speaker: I must therefore ask the hon. member if he will withdraw from the chamber until the house decides what it will do.

Then there is a note:

And Mr. Bruce having withdrawn.

Then Mr. Mackenzie King spoke to the point as did Mr. Graydon. When Mr. Mackenzie King spoke he concluded his remarks with a motion:

That Mr. Bruce, member for Parkdale, be suspended from the service of this house for the remainder of today's sitting.

Then Mr. Graydon spoke and this is what he said:

Mr. Graydon: May I say to the Prime Minister that this pretty well indicates the degree of seriousness of the offence and, I think, shows the ridiculousness of the position which the Prime Minister and the government have taken in connection with it.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say "yea".

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against the motion will please say "nay".

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Then the members were called in and a division took place.

If a motion to censure a member were to be debatable and amendable, the purpose of the rule would be defeated. I am just told that in the case of Mr. Lacombe, the then member for Laval-Two Mountains, what happened was this. As soon as the motion was moved by Mr. Ilsley, as reported at page 1607 of Hansard of March 24, 1942, the Speaker said this:

It is moved by Mr. Ilsley, seconded by Mr. Crerar, that the hon. member, Mr. Liguori Lacombe, member for Laval-Two Mountains, be suspended from the service of the house during the present sitting. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Then the motion was agreed to and there was no debate.

It must be remembered that at this moment, when a report such as this is made by the chairman of committees, there is nothing before the house but the report of the chairman of committees. I think I have established sufficiently that I cannot deal with the report but that it is up to the house itself to deal with it. The hon. member concerned in the report has a right to explain and he has done so. If the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) had chosen, for instance, to say "Maybe I was too hasty" or if he had given the house to understand that if he had the thing to do over again he would not do it, the situation might be different. Then someone could have moved that the statement made by the hon. member for Eglinton be accepted and the house would have been called upon, without debate, to vote on that motion immediately. Some one has to take the lead in these matters when the house has decided this point, and citation 136 of Beauchesne's third edition does indicate that the leader of the house has certain responsibilities with respect to this matter. The motion that is now before the house is one that the house is called upon to dispose of one way or the other at the moment.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, do you rule it is—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member care to comment?

Mr. Drew: Is Your Honour ruling that this motion is not debatable?

Mr. Speaker: That is the ruling I have just made.

Mr. Drew: Then, Your Honour, with great respect I appeal that ruling because I believe it is scandalous that a decision of this kind be made without an opportunity to discuss the merits of what took place.

Mr. Speaker: Because of the remarks that have just been made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) that he appeals my ruling because it is scandalous that a decision of this kind be made without an opportunity of discussing the matter, may I say that these are difficult days for members on both sides of the house. I am going to volunteer certain remarks which I hope will help in the circumstances.

There are two sides in this house, members on my right and members on my left. No matter how serious, how difficult the political warfare or strategy between the two sides may be, I am now asking hon. members to keep in mind that the occupants of the chair are not concerned with and are not capable of intervening in the political warfare which takes place between the two sides. The occupants of the chair are forbidden by the rules from taking part in the debates. They have, for a long time, ruled themselves even out of debate in the committee of the whole. During the time they occupy the chair their constituencies are not to be heard through their voice. They are completely outside the discussion which takes place in the house.

Now, when a ruling is made hon. members have recourse to an appeal. No matter how useless they themselves may feel that recourse to be, nevertheless that is the only recourse they have. On the other hand, if they wish to criticize the occupants of the chair, not by way of appeal to the house on a ruling that has been made but because of their conduct, because of their partiality, because of their partisanship, because of any other reason, they also have a recourse and that recourse is, I think, one that should not be taken by devious means. I think it should be used in a straightforward manner. The occupants of the chair are deprived of so many rights as compared with other hon. members, for the purpose of doing their job, and if in the opinion of one hon. member or a group of hon. members the occupants of the chair are not deserving of the honour the house has given them; if they are not deserving of chairing any committees or the house itself; if they are not following the traditions and rules of the house as they should; if they are to be condemned in any way, I think the occupants of the chair are entitled to have their fate decided in the way the house has provided for centuries for doing this, and that is by way of a substantive motion after notice being placed on the order paper. I am sure it would be called at the earliest possible moment in order to have a debate brought about and the conduct of the occupant of the chair decided one way or the other.

I would beg hon. members, notwithstanding whatever heat is developed in debate, to understand that is the position of the occupants of the chair. When the Leader of the Opposition says, "I want to appeal from your ruling", he has that right, and that right I grant him. But to add that he appeals my ruling because it is scandalous that a decision of this kind, that this motion is not debatable, be made without hon. members being able to speak to the matter, I think is going beyond his right in asking for an appeal, a right which I never refused to him.

Mr. Drew: If you would permit me to point out, what I referred to was the procedure. I said it was scandalous that a matter of this kind could be decided without anything being said to explain the situation. I would point out that my remarks referred directly to something that has already been discussed. Your Honour has taken a decision, and I am not questioning the decision that you cannot go behind the report that comes to you.

Having regard to your ruling to that effect we have on several occasions sought to have the chairman read the report to us before it was presented to you. I am referring to the procedure which brings an issue of this kind to you without the opportunity to members to explain to you what actually did take place in the committee. It was in relation to that procedure that I used the term I did.

Mr. Speaker: Then if the Leader of the Opposition did not want to apply the term in a way that would cast reflection on the Chair, that is on myself at the moment, I am very pleased to hear that and I want to thank him for that clarification.

Here again, when he says it is because they have sought in committee of the whole to do a certain thing and the chairman did not let them do it, if the occupant of the chair did not do what he was supposed to do, then they are entitled to have the matter, not criticized by a sentence here and there, but by having a substantive motion placed on the order paper.

Mr. Drew: If I may clear that point up now, I wish to state that the chairman who was sitting in the chair does not command the confidence of the members on this side of the house, and such appropriate steps as should be taken will be followed.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Harris moves, seconded by Mr. Campney, that the hon. member for Eglinton be suspended for the remainder of this day's sitting.

Mr. Drew: Your Honour, I have appealed your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: That is right; I am sorry.

The question before the house is an appeal from the Speaker's ruling.

The Minister of Finance moved that the hon. member for Eglinton be suspended for the remainder of this day's sitting. The hon. member for Kamloops, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the Leader of the Opposition contended that this motion was debatable or amendable, and I ruled that the motion to suspend a member was not debatable under standing order 32.

Those who are in favour of sustaining the Speaker's ruling will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: The nays?

Mr. Speaker: I said the nays.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

Howe (Wellington-Huron)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

And Mr. Fleming having withdrawn:

Mr. Diefenbaker: Farewell, John Hampden.

And the house having resumed in committee:

On clause 3—Establishment and constitution.

The Chairman: Order.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Anything for headlines.

The Chairman: Order. I am on my feet and questions of privilege cannot be raised. I now propose—

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, earlier in the afternoon, as I understood it, you said that you would hear me on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: Order. While I am on my feet no hon. member may rise. I propose to give my ruling in connection with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in connection with the motion of Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) that further consideration of clause 3 of this bill be postponed.

As reported at page 4311 of Hansard of last evening the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised his point of order and, from the first paragraph, it is apparent that it is somewhat similar to points of order raised on two previous occasions in connection with similar motions. As reported at page 4312 of Hansard the hon. member raises a point which is somewhat different from the points previously raised. I refer to his reference to page 537 of May's fifteenth edition, which reads as follows:

> A proposal to postpone the only effective clause of a bill until the subordinate clauses have been considered, or to postpone part of a clause, is out of order.

I have examined the bill with some care and I find that I can distinguish a point of separation in that clause 3 is not the only effective clause of this bill, in my opinion. I shall not elaborate on this matter, but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre himself indicated that the English practice in these respects is sometimes different from our own.

The hon. member for Eglinton raised several points, one with regard to "consideration" or "further consideration", with which I think I dealt sufficiently at length on a previous occasion. He also introduced one subject which I thought was somewhat new in that he mentioned the point—I forget his exact words—that if we did not consider or did not pass clause 3, we could not deal with the later clauses because clause 3 deals with the setting up of the corporation.

I do not consider that point to be well taken, in that the motion proposes only that further consideration of the clause be postponed. It does not kill the clause.

I have therefore come to the conclusion that even after considering the new material, I am bound by the two precedents which have been set by decisions of the house. I rule accordingly that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. Knowles: I wish to appeal your ruling to the house and I ask you, sir, to include in your report to Mr. Speaker that my point of order was based on standing order 78 (1) and also on page 537 of May's fifteenth edition, and also on the principle that it is not proper to seek to do indirectly what cannot be done directly. At your option you may also include that the only answer made to my three points by the Minister of Finance was that the government has decided it has to take whatever action is necessary to reach a decision.

The Chairman: May I point out to the hon. member that some confusion seems to have arisen with regard to the question of a report. I think I drew the attention of hon. members previously to citation 428 of Beauchesne's third edition, which says that in case of an appeal to the house it is the duty of the chairman to leave the chair immediately and report in writing the point of order which he has decided. Hansard, of course, will give a complete report of what has taken place. I consider it my duty to reduce the matter to writing, and if I have not done so adequately Hansard will show that. In view of the fact that when the hon. gentleman appeals I must leave the chair immediately, I think that suspends the matter and it is my duty, I imagine during the time I have left the chair, to reduce the matter to writing. I consider that as my duty and I shall perform it now.

Mr. Knowles: Will you hear this point of privilege?

The Chairman: Since I have given my ruling on the point of order and it has been appealed, I feel it is my duty to leave the chair and present the matter to the house. I do so now.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In committee of the whole, when it was considering clause 3 of Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Knowles raised a point of order to the effect that standing order 78 (1) would be violated if the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to postpone the further consideration of clause 3 of the bill was carried, and it was his submission that there had to be consideration of a clause before it could be postponed; and further, that it was not in order to postpone the only effective clause of a bill until subordinate clauses had been considered, and for further considerations advanced.

After considering the question raised in this point of order, I thought the matter was similar to that raised on previous occasions, and I still felt bound by the precedents established yesterday. I therefore ruled that the point of order was not well taken. From this, Mr. Knowles appealed.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) of the committee of the whole reports that when in committee Mr. Knowles raised a point of order to the effect that standing order 78 (1) would be violated if the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to postpone the further consideration of clause 3 of the bill were carried, and it was his submission that there had to be consideration of a clause before it could be postponed; and further that it was not in order to postpone the only effective clause of a bill until the subordinate clauses had been considered; and for further considerations advanced.

After considering the question raised in the point of order the chairman thought the matter was similar to that raised on previous occasions, and he still felt bound by the precedents established yesterday and therefore he ruled that the point of order was not well taken. Whereupon Mr. Knowles appealed to the house from the chairman's ruling.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

REAL PERRAS

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston) moved the second reading of Bill No. 347, for the relief of Real Perras.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): I crave the indulgence of the house for a brief period on this bill. I should draw attention to the fact that 78 persons have been granted relief, or moved along one stage, in the last few minutes, but this is a case that was before parliament a year ago. On July 1 last year my colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier), discussed this case. Earlier in the session he referred to the fact that he had a letter from a Roman Catholic priest who had been a chaplain with the armed services, who had written to my colleague on behalf of this poor woman.

Apparently some hon. members on the other side of the house had some doubts about the accuracy of my colleague's statements, so in due course he received instructions from the priest to give whatever publicity he might wish to in connection with the case. I think hon. members at this point should pay attention to the letter which was put on Hansard on July 1 last year, as found on pages 5596 and 5597 of Hansard of 1955. The letter begins:

> The poor lady has been notified that the Senate committee for divorces will hear her case on Friday, March 11. For the last three weeks, she had been on the verge of a nervous collapse.

Then further on:

> The expectation was too much for her.

Then the hon. member made some interjections, and he was also interrupted.

> February the 26th, she fell sick and the doctor had to be called. She was sent to hospital and since then has been in bed under treatment. She had a blood transfusion—

My colleague then remarked that they do not give blood transfusions for the fun of it.

> —daily serum and was seen by the hospital's psychiatrist.
> Now, she will not be able to go to Ottawa this Friday. The lawyer asked for a written statement from her doctor and is going to present the committee with that letter. The doctor is even ready to go to Ottawa and testify if necessary.
>
> What I am afraid of is that the adverse party tries to pull a fast one on her and win the case by default.
> I simply think that it is criminal, even for a husband to frighten and torture his wife so much in order to get his goal that she totally collapses under the strain and tension. Such ignominious behaviour should be punished and I am really deeply shocked by the fact that our laws permit such events to happen.

I trust you to be able to stop a divorce that could be obtained under such circumstances. If you feel it may be useful to use my name and letters in that case, don't hesitate to do so.

May I thank you again for the care you took of that case.

I am very truly yours,

Capt. Rev. Robert M. Rivest,
Headquarters Quebec Command,
3530 Atwater Avenue,
Montreal.

Following the discussion in the house by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) debate on the case was adjourned; then later the case came before the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills. I find that on the July 8 I had occasion to discuss the case in the house. Hon. members will probably recall that one of the investigators in this particular case was employed by a firm known as Reliable Detective Agency, and he and one of the other members of the firm were charged with fabricating evidence. I made some mention of that, and on page 5900 of Hansard of July 8, 1955, I find the following taken from the judgment of the appeal court:

The appellants, desiring to obtain evidence for the purpose of enabling a married woman to secure a divorce, planned to trap the husband into a false position from which adultery might be inferred or found if evidence was later given in some proceeding for divorce. This plan was to have a woman go to a room in an hotel, register under an assumed name and give the room the appearance of the bed having been occupied. She was not required to do anything more. The husband was to be lured by a pretext to the room and, when there, could be found by the two appellants, who would then be in a position to give evidence as to his being found there with the woman. In carrying out this plan, the appellants arranged with woman "A" to obtain the hotel room and perform her part of the plot, which she did. In the meantime, the appellants arranged with woman "B" to call the husband, under an assumed name, which was the name which woman "A" was to use at the hotel, and invite him to come to the room. This was done by woman "B", but the husband was suspicious. Woman "B" claimed to be a friend of the husband's sister, and the husband took the precaution of calling his sister as to the friend whose name he had been given over the telephone. Instead of going to the hotel room as invited the husband went to the police, with the result that the plan at that stage miscarried and it was the police who went to the hotel room, instead of the two appellants who were endeavouring to mislead someone.

The two men involved were Messrs. Pichette and Santerre.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. member say what he is reading?

Mr. Nicholson: This is Hansard for July 8 of last year, page 5901. These are some details in connection with a case which was heard before Magistrate Strike in Ottawa. Hon. members will probably recall that the case was appealed and Mr. Justice MacKay of the appeal court of Ontario ruled:

The first ground of appeal is that the crown failed to prove the intent necessary to constitute the crime charged. It is argued that it was necessary, under the charge as made, to prove an intent to mislead a court of justice, and that the intent proved in this case was not an intent to mislead a court of justice but, at most, an intent to mislead the divorce committee of the Senate, and parliament which might act upon a recommendation of the divorce committee.

Since that time, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Senate has taken the necessary precautions so this will never happen again. At that particular time Mr. Justice MacKay apparently ruled that it was quite all right to fabricate evidence to mislead the Senate or mislead the House of Commons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that what the judge held?

Mr. Nicholson: At that time, yes. The ruling was that the Senate committee was not a court of justice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is quite a different thing.

Mr. Nicholson: They were acquitted. The judgment of Magistrate Strike was reversed and the detectives were given a clear sheet. But it is significant, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Pichette, who was involved in fabricating evidence in the case I have mentioned, was one of the witnesses who came here a year ago to support the petitioner, but when the case was heard this year Mr. Pichette did not come. There were three detectives a year ago who accompanied the petitioner and, gave evidence on which the Senate committee reached a decision, but it is significant that although two of them came back this year, the one who was involved in the fabricating of evidence did not return.

This case was contested a year ago when it was Bill No. 184. We are a little behind this year because this year it is Bill No. 347 on the order paper. Mr. Pichette was examined last year and he was asked about the details in connection with the charge of fabrication of evidence. As found at page 28 of the proceedings of the Senate committee, counsel for the petitioner said:

I object to that, because there has been a judgment of the appeal court of Ontario and the charge of fabricating evidence has been dismissed; therefore, I don't think this question can be brought up today.

Then the chairman of the committee, Senator Ross, said:

It goes to the credibility of the witness.

Counsel for the petitioner replied:

But there was a judgment dismissing it.

So counsel for the defendant was not able to present his case as effectively as I am sure he would have presented it if he had been here this year. As I recall the situation, the wife has had a very difficult time in securing enough funds to defend herself adequately. On the other hand, the husband apparently has adequate funds available.

This is the first instance since I first came to parliament in 1940, Mr. Speaker, when, a lobby has been conducted in connection with a divorce case. I resent very much being lobbied by people without first being notified by them that they wish to lobby. I do not think those who are asked to judge a case of this sort should have one of the parties to a dispute walk into their offices without first telephoning or asking if it would be convenient to discuss the case.

I have had access to the evidence given before the Senate committee; and the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, of which I was a member at that time, reviewed the case. I think it is also significant, Mr. Speaker, that although a whole year has passed since the case was before parliament there has been no attempt to secure any new evidence. Hon. members might think it queer that the wife was not here to defend herself, but I think those who were on the committee last year realize what a terrific nervous strain it is for a woman who has been in poor health to be under the sort of attack that Father Rivest describes in his letter to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the miscellaneous private bills committee is taking a step at the moment for which I think it is to be commended, and I think this procedure should be made known to others who might be in a similar position.

There is another case before us in which $175 was ordered by the other place toward the expenses of the witnesses coming to Ottawa. They were here on a Friday, they had to come back on a Monday, and the amount of money was not sufficient to cover the actual out of pocket expenses; so the counsel in this other case has made two trips to Ottawa and has not had a five-cent piece. Our committee thought his request was only reasonable that he should have an opportunity to go to the appropriate court in the province of Quebec in order to see whether that court will not order the husband to make available to the wife sufficient funds to carry out her defence.

In connection with this case I submit that apparently the husband has adequate funds available to give both himself and his wife adequate counsel on the case. Since the evidence on which we have been asked to pass judgment here was collected quite some long time ago—it would appear as though it would be August 3, 1954; that will soon be two years ago—and since no new evidence has been produced in connection with this unfortunate case for nearly two years, I should like to have the co-operation of the house in supporting, as unanimously as we have these other 78 bills that have gone through, my motion which is seconded by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough):

That the motion be amended by leaving out the word "now" and adding the words "this day six months' hence" at the end thereof.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As to the witnesses who gave evidence two years ago, were they the same witnesses with the exception of the one whose conviction was quashed in the court of appeal of Ontario, or were they a new set of witnesses to the same adultery?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes. Two of the three who were here on the previous occasion were back this year. The recommendation was granted on their evidence. The one witness who was involved in the case which went before Magistrate Strike was not back here, but the two who were here on the previous occasion were back, and the information which they secured nearly two years ago was accepted this year.

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, if I recall the case that the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Knowles: There is an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry.

Mr. Knowles: You are forgiven, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you very much. I am satisfied that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and all other hon. members appreciate the fact that I may be somewhat tired today.

An hon. Member: What about us?

Mr. Henderson: Speaking to the amendment moved by the hon. member who has just spoken to Bill No. 347, standing in my name, I first should like to say that with respect to the other case which the hon. member mentioned and the directing of funds to counsel on behalf of the respondent to come here, I do not want any wrong impression left. I think I could say this for all members of the committee on miscellaneous private bills. They do not in any way intend to interfere with the direction of a case by counsel appearing before them on behalf of their respective clients.

To get down to this particular case, namely the Perras case, if I am not mistaken it has been twice before the Senate committee and last year was before the House of Commons committee, but unfortunately was one of those that were considered by the committee, but not in time to be considered for third reading by the house.

I realize that this may not be the time to go into this matter more than on the principle of this bill before us. I think it might be summarized by saying that with regard to the rights of the petitioner—and he has a right—this might not be the appropriate time to set it over, but it should again be considered by the committee responsible for considering these matters.

I might say that I, as chairman of the committee, have been highly pleased with the conduct of hon. members of that committee, having regard to the close attention they have given to matters of this kind. I might say that in cases where there are paid investigators the committee members give them added scrutiny, and I believe do a very good job.

I had hoped that the hon. member would allow this bill to go to the committee for consideration before moving his six months' hoist. As I say again, we must respect the petitioner's right. The petitioner has come before the Senate and the House of Commons. This time I notice that the case has come unopposed, that the respondent was called but did not appear.

Mr. Nicholson: No money available.

Mr. Henderson: Nobody appeared for the respondent and the respondent herself did not appear. It has not come to my attention yet, as chairman of the committee, that any request was made for the $175, I believe it was, that was mentioned in another case by my hon. friend.

I think I am remembering the evidence correctly when I recall that this case was before the committee previously and in this previous instance I think it was the same army captain who was named as co-respondent by the petitioner. The unusual part of it, the part that struck me at the time, was the fact that this lady worked in an establishment in which the army captain worked, as I recall it. This was a very warm summer night. Something I really could not get through my mind was why he should be going back there to her residence and giving as an excuse that he was going to have a bath—

An hon. Member: Because he needed one.

Mr. Henderson: It was a hot day. I could not understand why he should give that excuse as partial explanation for being in this lady's residence. I know at that time that really caused some concern and consternation amongst the members of the committee. Possibly they were influenced by that evidence in arriving at a decision.

I might say that, as I recall, the investigators appeared before the committee at that time and were very carefully cross-examined by the members of all parties. The evidence which they gave, in the opinion of most members of the committee, stood up very well. I do not think the co-respondent relieved himself of the duty which was imposed on him to explain why he was in the room of the wife of another man on this hot day, other than to take this bath.

I presume the evidence is very much the same. I also direct the attention of hon. members of this house to the fact that we must remember that the petitioner has petitioned to the Senate. The evidence was carefully gone into by the members of the Senate committee, who collectively or individually would be qualified to judge the validity of that evidence and come to a conclusion based upon the facts presented to them. In this particular instance the bill has reached the point of second reading in this house, and it would appear that the very active members of the private bills committee, such as the hon. member who has just spoken, would be able not only to do their duty but to show respect for the rights and privileges of other citizens in this country, in this particular case the petitioner, if the bill were permitted to go to the committee.

As I recall it, the petitioner is making his third petition, according to his right, to have this marriage dissolved. It is not a right that is particular to him but is a right extended to all citizens who live within the jurisdictions that require this procedure. I would ask that this bill be permitted, in the usual course of events, to go to the private bills committee for consideration. Possibly there my hon. friend might find something with which he could convince both the members of the committee and the members of this house that this bill should not be further considered. Let me conclude by saying that at this stage I really believe it would be well considered in the committee.

NATIONAL HEALTH PLAN—INCLUSION OF MENTALLY ILL

Question No. 400—Mr. Diefenbaker:

2. If so, what decision has been reached?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Yes.

2. The details of the proposal made by the federal government to the provinces was conveyed by the Prime Minister to the House of Commons on January 26, 1956.

END OF VOLUME IV

Mr. McIvor: On a point of order, I would like to inform the hon. member that that—

An hon. Member: No point of order.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think we have decided more than once that you cannot meet a debatable point by calling it a point of order. If the hon. member for Fort William does not agree with the statement being made by the hon. member for Dauphin he will have an opportunity to correct it, but he cannot interrupt the hon. member in the middle of his speech without his permission to give his own views on a debatable point.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, it was a misrepresentation. That is why I stood up.

The Deputy Chairman: I am not concerned with whether it is a misrepresentation, I am concerned with whether the hon. member for Fort William has the right to butt in at this stage.

Mr. Zaplitny: I have no desire to misrepresent anyone. The hon. member will have an opportunity to straighten this out on his own time. I was referring to the attempt by the hon. member for Macleod to use the old McCarthy trick of guilt by association. He is trying to make a communist out of everyone who opposes this bill because he says the communists are opposed to it. Let me ask the Social Credit party: where do they find themselves in this debate? Here they are acting as a spare tire on the Liberal jalopy. If they believe in guilt by association then they are the tail end of the Liberal party. What is more, I would rather be associated with a party in this house which was opposed to this bill, even though we disagree on the details, than be the instrument of the oil oligarchy of Alberta, the timber tycoons of British Columbia and the beer barons of Saskatchewan—I mean Manitoba. The same thing may apply to Saskatchewan, but we have evidence from Manitoba to show that the breweries of Manitoba have been financing our Social Credit friends. If they believe in guilt by association, let them choose their own partners. May I call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, may I—

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

An hon. Member: Closure.

The Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock I leave the chair, unless the hon. member is rising on a question of privilege, which I think is unlikely, if I may say so.

Mr. Hansell: I was rising to correct a statement.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: I am afraid that we have ruled already that corrections of that sort cannot be made during the middle of a member's speech, and that is the stage at which technically we are at the moment.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We shall continue with this tomorrow.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

who sent us here, to ask them to dip into their pockets and pull out approximately $9 per capita—because that is about what it amounts to, $9 for every man, woman and child in this country—to make a contribution to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, a private monopoly.

So far as I am concerned personally, Mr. Chairman, even if Trans-Canada Pipe Lines were willing and able to build this pipe line with their own capital and were not dipping into the public treasury at all, I for one would still stand for a publicly owned pipe line system because I do not believe it is wise or prudent, and I do not believe we have the right to harness the people of Canada with a private monopoly and put it in the position of being able to squeeze our municipalities and consumers for the next century.

Let us not forget we are not building this pipe line for tomorrow or next year of for the next five years. It is something that is going to be here for perhaps 100 years or more. We hope this is true so far as this country is concerned because it is an important step. I for one would not be satisfied even if Trans-Canada could build this pipe line with their own money, because I do not believe it is a wise thing to grant a monopoly to a private company to operate a public utility. But the situation is infinitely worse then that because the government is asking us to go to our taxpayers and ask them to contribute $9 apiece for every man, woman and child in order to help a private company to set up a private monopoly in this country, and they wonder why the opposition has reacted so violently to this measure which they brought into the house. What would our taxpayers say? For example, in my constituency there are approximately 50,000 people. I would have to go to them and say, "I am asking you to donate $450,000 to the government so they can hand it over to a private company to build a gas line which will give them a private monopoly across this country." What would the response be?

Mr. Hansell: They are not handing it over; do not be silly.

Mr. Zaplitny: I shall come to my Social Credit friends in a moment. The stand this party has taken is the only logical stand any party could have taken if it had any respect for the public interest or the consumers of this country. I do not think it will be long before the people of Canada will feel they are thankful that there was at least one group in this house which in spite of the combined opposition made up of the huge Liberal majority and their Social Credit allies stood up in this house and fought for a principle which is in the public interest.

[Mr. Zaplitny.]

I have heard my friends to the left chipping in once in a while and I think I should devote a few minutes of my time for their benefit. The hon. member for Macleod made a speech yesterday in which he made a number of statements. I regret that I have to deal with them because some of our friends to the left who speak in this house occasionally speak with sense. The kind of speech the hon. member made yesterday did no credit to himself or to his party. What was his theme? His theme was that anyone who is opposed to the measure brought in by the government is following the communist line.

Mr. Hansell: Hear, hear.

Mr. Zaplitny: The hon. member says, "Hear, hear", which confirms it.

Mr. Hansell: Yes, sir.

Mr. Zaplitny: I am glad to have the hon. member's confirmation. Let me ask the hon. member for Macleod this question: Would he be in favour of a publicly-owned gas pipe line across Canada?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Zaplitny: The hon. member for Macleod does not reply, but an hon. member of his party with less experience says, "No." If we follow his own definition, his own logic, we must assume that if he is not in favour of a publicly-owned pipe line then he is following the communist line.

An hon. Member: Perfectly ridiculous.

Mr. Zaplitny: Let me quote his own words. He said that he believed that we were following the communist line, first because there is not a communist in this country who wants this pipe line. We are proposing that the pipe line be publicly built. The member of the Social Credit party says that he does not want it, so according to his own definition he is following the communist line. Let him say something in reply to that.

I have an article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of today in which it states that a United Church in downtown Toronto held a meeting and agreed to send a petition to the Governor General asking that he dissolve this house and call for an election. The article sets out the terms of the petition and it ends with these words:

> We are sending this petition because we feel our democratic rights as Canadians are being misused.

They were strenuously opposed to the government measure dealing with this pipe line. That was the United Church of Canada in Toronto. Does the hon. member for Macleod claim that—

Then later on, speaking in this house on May 22, the Minister of Trade and Commerce used these words, as recorded at page 4168 of Hansard. When he was questioned about the option on steel pipe the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> . . . I suggest this is a discussion which should take place in committee. We can hardly discuss the contents of a contract now.

Here we have two ministers of the government telling the opposition when questions were raised, "Why not wait until we get into committee on the resolution and then we can go into all the details of this bill?"

What happened when we reached the resolution stage? Before any hon. member of the opposition had uttered one word or asked one question the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave notice that on the following day closure would be moved and the debate ended. Is that the way the opposition in this house should be treated? Indeed, is that the way the private members who support the government should be treated? I say that because the speech that was made by the Minister of Finance in the house was just as interesting and important to hon. members sitting behind him as to those sitting in front of him and whether or not he meant it to be so it was a completely misleading statement to all hon. members of this house.

The Ottawa Journal in an editorial published on May 29 comments on the effect of such statements in these words:

> It is a grave thing for ministers to mislead the house; in Britain it is regarded as one of the deadly sins against parliament and public life.

Now, I endorse 100 per cent the opinion expressed in that editorial in the Journal. I believe it is a deadly sin against democracy and parliamentary life to mislead the members of this house by saying to them, "Let us not raise this question now. When we get into the committee stage you will have ample time to discuss every angle of this matter." And when we reached the committee stage, before anyone had uttered a word, the Minister of Trade and Commerce moved closure. That is one of the things that have stirred this country and given rise to a great many protests.

I come back now to what I consider to be the essential issue, and that is, what about the pipe line itself? We in this group stated in this house five years ago, and have stated over the years since then and from the beginning of this debate, that we want to see a gas pipe line built across Canada which is to serve the Canadian public. We have stated right from the beginning that we believe the only way in which that gas pipe line can serve the interests of the Canadian people fairly and impartially, and the only way in which it can be retained in Canadian hands, is through public ownership. I made that statement, Mr. Chairman, on March 15 when the original resolution which was abandoned by this government was under discussion. I spoke these words:

> So long as the issue of stock remains in public hands, there cannot be any guarantee that the ownership of the pipe line will remain in Canadian hands. We can ensure that this public utility can be retained in Canadian ownership only if it remains in public ownership.

Since that time, of course, that statement has been more than fully confirmed by what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said in this house and by what other hon. members have said. The only way in which we can assure the Canadian people that the gas pipe line will remain in Canadian hands, and therefore fully in Canadian control, is if it belongs to the people of Canada. There is no other way.

Now, that is one part of it and the other part of it is this. We talk about the reason for the gas pipe line. We want to serve the consumers across Canada. Our hon. friends to the left of us talk about the producers of gas in Alberta—

An hon. Member: And the consumers.

Mr. Zaplitny: —and the consumers also, of course. The question arises: If the Canadian people are going to be asked to raise approximately $130 million in order to finance this pipe line, then who should own it after it is built? That is an important question. That is the real issue. That is the bedrock question that has to be answered in this parliament and it is a question that cannot be answered by a snap decision. It is a question that requires full consideration without any closure because it is one of the most fateful decisions which this parliament will likely be called upon to make in this half century.

Think for a moment what has happened. We have had experiences in the past where Canadian resources have been sold down the river into private hands without much consideration and then perhaps half a century later people regretted that they had done so and could now do nothing about it. There are many examples of this sort of thing, if you look through the history of Canada, where people had reason to regret occasions when because of the illusory advantage of the moment they too hastily gave their resources away into private hands and then lived to regret it at their leisure.

What is the government asking parliament to do? They are asking us as public representatives to go to our taxpayers, the people of very great importance in this house, and that is the sovereignty of parliament itself.

In the last few days a great deal has been said about some of the danger to the democratic procedure in this house and to parliament itself. So far as the opposition members are concerned, at times it may appear as if we have become overexcited on this issue. But let me say, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. members who are now sitting on the other side and who are supporting the government found themselves sitting on this side of the house, as no doubt they will in due time, and if they were told that on an important issue such as this, which involves the expenditure of about $130 million of the Canadian taxpayers' money, they were not going to be able to take the time they required to discuss the issue properly, to inquire into all the details and to come to a sober and reasonable decision in the end, I am sure they would react with the same violence, perhaps greater, as has been witnessed in this house in the last few days.

Let me also say this. I address myself particularly to the private members on the other side of the house, for many of whom I have a great admiration. What has taken place in this house in the last few weeks has not been a credit to them because, even if they may feel obligated to support the measure that was brought into this house by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, they have no excuse whatever for allowing the government to ride rough-shod over the ordinary procedure of this house. Not only have they been a party to the attempt to break practically every rule in the rule book, but the abject obeisance with which they burned incense at the feet of the Minister of Trade and Commerce has come mighty close to breaking the first commandment.

This is confirmed by some of the statements that have been made in the heat of this debate by members of the Liberal party—when they are read in Hansard in more sober moments —by members of the Liberal party who, after all, have a great responsibility, because it is by the grace of the private member sitting on the Liberal side of the house that this government stays in power. Let there be no mistake about that. The government as a government has no status in this house. It is merely the temporary trustee of the public treasury. It is the members who support that government, or are willing to support it as long as they think the government is right, who give the government the power that it has.

Let me say that some of the things that they have done and some of the things they have said lead us to ask the question whether they believe the a.b.c. of Liberalism has now gone down to arrogance, bribery and corruption? Mr. Chairman, the newspapers across this country have taken up this question of what has happened in the house. I am glad to see that even a newspaper like the Winnipeg Free Press in my own province which ordinarily supports the Liberal cause has had some very strong words to say about what has happened in this house. In a recent editorial they quoted a speech made by the leader of this group in which he referred to what had happened here as "an abomination". In commenting upon that and in agreeing with my leader they add to that:

> It is an abomination to the heart of every man of every party who cares for free discussion and democratic institutions.

Then they go farther than that, as do other newspapers, and point out that one of the greatest sins has been committed by the the government. I am referring to the procedural wrangle we have had. That has been not only because the government has sought to ride roughshod over the ordinary procedures in this house but because in their very statements which are on the record they have either deliberately or otherwise sought to mislead this house and particularly to mislead the opposition.

The Minister of Finance, who I see is in his place, speaking in the house on May 7, said these words:

> It seems to me that when the present resolution on the order paper with respect to Trans-Canada is called for discussion, every avenue of discussion with respect to the building, the financing or the like is open to opposition members . . . On the Trans-Canada resolution all these things can be said.

Those words appear at page 3613 of Hansard.

The Minister of Finance was making that statement in order to prevent a discussion which had arisen and his statement was to the effect: "Why discuss it now? When we get to the resolution stage in this house you will have all the time you want to discuss whatever details you want to discuss."

Mr. Harris: I did not say that.

Mr. Zaplitny: That is the only interpretation you can take out of this statement. Certainly there was no hint whatsoever that there was going to be a time limit or that closure would be announced. The minister gave the opposition reason to believe in so many words that if the discussion which arose at that time were postponed then when we reached the normal resolution stage in the ordinary course of events hon. members of the opposition would have all the time they required to examine every part of that resolution. That was the statement.

away from anything personal and I shall always do so as long as my constituents allow me to stand in this house. I have been amazed, though, to find that he has become, even though he does not have a law degree as I understand it, the senior partner of a firm the junior partner of which is the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Pallett: And a very good firm it is, too.

Mr. Bell: You could not even carry the law books.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, I really thought that we as men who try to solve the real national problems of the country would get beyond what people in my profession call the pettifogging techniques.

An hon. Member: Of democracy.

Mr. Richardson: On that somewhat sordid and sombre note I close, Mr. Chairman, but I do not close before I say this. I ask myself only one question.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): You will get a damned silly answer.

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, if I relied upon that hon. member I would. I am satisfied that this measure before us is one that is important to this country; that no great question of procedure should dim our view of what are the real facts of the matter. Number one, most of the country wants this pipe line; most of the citizens of Canada will be grateful when we have it, and when we go to the country—

Mr. Rowe: You will never come back.

Mr. Richardson: —they will be glad that this party put it into effect.

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman, this has been a great debate up to this point at least. We have had just about everything that could be desired in a great debate. We have had a certain amount of humour, of pathos and even of near tragedy. When I see the hon. member for Eglinton back in his seat I see with what sweet sorrow he wears his crown of thorns and I ask myself, has parliament come to this? I say we have come to near tragedy because I think it would be a supreme tragedy, Mr. Chairman, if in the heat of this debate, in the cut and thrust of the charge and counter-charge that we have heard, the real issue were lost sight of. There is that danger, and that danger is all the greater when we realize that the time of this debate is limited by the threat of closure from day to day. Therefore, I should like to devote whatever time is left at my disposal this evening to what I consider to be the real issue in this debate.

In my opinion, what this parliament must be concerned with chiefly is the protection of the public interest in this matter. We may have differences of opinion about the method by which the pipe line should be built. There may be differences of opinion on many things, but I believe it is the duty of every hon. member who is sent here by the citizens of this country to see to it that the national interest and the public interest are protected by the action of this parliament. That is one of the reasons why I for one have been deeply concerned and anxious over what has taken place so far because the government is trying to put the opposition in the position of being the party which, in their view, is obstructing or preventing them from doing something.

We know, of course, that this is not a new subject in this house. We know that the government has had this question of a gas pipe line across Canada under consideration for almost five years. We also know that in 1951, when this question first came before the house and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines applied for their charter, the leader of this party and other members told the house and the country at that time that if we were to have a gas pipe line across Canada which would be in the best interests of the Canadian public and which would protect the public interest and the national interest, then it would have to be a publicly owned pipe line. If one reads the record carefully he will see that everything that has taken place in this house in the last two weeks indicates that the stand taken by the C.C.F. five years ago was the correct one. I believe it will not be very long before the government and those who are so vociferous in supporting the government on this particular bill are going to find themselves in that very position. I would advise my Liberal friends at this point not to come out too rabidly against the idea of a publicly owned pipe line because if they do they will have that much more to live down and that much more to take back when they come back to this house and ask this parliament to endorse a publicly owned pipe line. In my opinion it will not be very long before they will be back for that, if they are still here. That is the central issue. That is the desire of this group and for the last five years we have tried to protect the public interest by making sure that this monopoly—and that is what it is going to be; that has been confirmed by speakers on both sides of the house—shall be owned by the public and serve the public in order that the consumer in Canada will get a break. It is because of that fight that we have had this side issue that has loomed to the proportions

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Richardson: Certainly.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Just a few moments ago the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George made the statement that the leader of this party had made the statement yesterday that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines was the only company which was in a position to build this pipe line. I challenge him to read that statement.

Mr. Hees: That is what you said.

Mr. Richardson: Just a moment; I shall deal with that in my own time. I have recalled—

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Just as responsible as some of the other statements you have made.

Mr. Richardson: I have recalled for the benefit of hon. members and myself section 49 of the British North America Act. I also put on the record, because we have gone back on the other side hundreds of years to put quotations upon the record—Cromwell was put before us about 10 days ago and the hon. member for Prince Albert made some old quotations today—a quotation from Magna Carta.

Mr. Hees: Here comes Walter, so you had better shut up. Take my tip and sit down if you want to be a parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, I have heard that the hon. member for Broadview has his own particular personal ambitions, and that is quite all right.

Mr. Hodgson: Well, that is settling yours right now.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think perhaps the time has come when I should remind the committee that the hon. member who has the floor should be permitted to speak. A certain amount of interjection, of course, is regarded as part of the cut and thrust of debate, but there is a limit.

Mr. Hodgson: Two minutes overtime right now.

Mr. Richardson: If the great party of martyrdom does not want to hear Magna Carta, it is all right with me.

Mr. Knowles: Give us habeas corpus.

Mr. Richardson: I still propose, because I think it is a historic document, to give the quotation. I am sure that I have some friends within this house somewhere, probably in that corner; some I think in that corner; some in the centre there, and a good many right on this side,—

Mr. Hees: Do not forget Walter to your right.

Mr. Richardson: —who will still listen to a document to which this parliament owes some allegiance. Section 49 of Magna Carta reads thus:

> In all those things which are appointed to be done by these 25 barons, if it happen that all the 25 have been present and have differed in their opinions about anything, or if some of them who had been summoned would not or could not be present, that which the greater part of those who were present shall have provided and decreed, shall be held as firm and as valid as if all the 25 had agreed in it.

Mr. Knowles: Is there anything about closure in Magna Carta?

Mr. Fleming: Was that not before there was a parliament?

Mr. Richardson: You can continue to waste my allotment if you like, and I shall not complain. Perhaps that is one of the penalties and one of the virtues of legislative assemblies in which we give at least lip service to free speech.

An hon. Member: You said it.

Mr. Richardson: I had thought, Mr. Chairman, that all of us came here, and I do not doubt that we have, with great respect for the oath that we have taken. Do not let us be childish at all times. I am not trying to lecture anyone any more than myself. Within the country, in the galleries, at various places tonight throughout this country people are thinking, what are the 264 men, our representatives, doing in parliament? We shall have to come, sooner or later, to make a decision upon this question.

Mr. Ellis: Not knuckling down to one man.

Mr. Richardson: I do not, even as the hon. member for Regina City has suggested, knuckle down to one man or any number of men except those who have allegiance to the country, who have loyalty and are conscientiously trying to do the best they can under many difficult circumstances. Let some of those who bray so loudly come over and sit on the front benches. They are never likely to have that opportunity, but when they come, Mr. Chairman, they will go into the silent places to ask good Providence to sometimes ask the men who have differing opinions to hear them out and try to see if, as common, decent Canadian citizens they cannot do the right thing for this country.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been very kind, as he usually is, to me. I have tried to keep my remarks and I think they have two other members from two other provinces. Therefore I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that side of the opposition has not very much of a mandate at this moment.

Mr. Knowles: If the hon. member's arguments are not any better than his arithmetic he had better revise them.

Mr. Richardson: I will take a moment or two, then, to give you the arithmetic. I think you have 22 members in the house. We will say that you have 23 members perhaps. Six of those 23 members were elected on non-minority votes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: How many Liberals were elected on minority votes?

Mr. Knowles: On that argument the whole Liberal party should resign today.

Mr. Fleming: The government is a minority government.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, the point I am making on the question of public ownership is simply this. Those 22 or 23 members who sit in the house represent, according to the votes that were polled in the election, a minority of the electorate. They polled something in the neighbourhood of 200,000 votes out of how many votes throughout all of Canada? Therefore my proposition is this. Those who argue against this particular proposition at the moment on the ground of public ownership—and I am not against it at the proper time—speak, in my humble view, for relatively few of the people of Canada from the east to the west.

Mr. Hees: You will find out.

An hon. Member: And he speaks against closure.

Mr. Richardson: Somebody has raised the question of closure. I will speak about that.

An hon. Member: You people raised it.

Mr. Richardson: I as a member never interrupted any member on the opposite side except, as I understand it, within the bounds of courtesy. If hon. members opposite do not wish to extend courtesy to me, it is perfectly all right with me.

Mr. Rowe: Go ahead.

Mr. Richardson: As this debate has gone on, Mr. Chairman, I have been thinking how many members on the other side have risen and with a great flow of rhetoric have spoken about the rights of democracy. It is a very simple proposition, as we shall see if we come back to earth. I heard my friend the hon. member for Prince Albert today. I heard the Leader of the C.C.F. party last night. I heard him make two or three interjections. For myself as a member of this house I was really amazed that we could get into the attitude of high school children.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rowe: So were we.

An hon. Member: How long have you been here?

Mr. Richardson: Not very long but I will probably be here long after you have departed.

Mr. Hees: You hope.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Knowles: I hope the hon. member realizes that he is addressing the Chair. That last remark was addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, I will stand up here for the time allotted to me and if those gentlemen on the other side, in concerted action, want to interrupt me, it is perfectly all right by me. I want to come to a point that evidently most of us in this house have forgotten, namely, that our constitution is the British North America Act. On several occasions while members on the other side have been speaking, while they have said they were directing their thought and time to a proper consideration of this bill, I noted that they have spoken about almost everything they could speak about and still be on their feet, and that not one of them has referred to a cardinal principle in our British North America Act. It is there. Let me put it on the record. It is the basis upon which you and every one of us in this assembly have the right to rise as free men in a democratic group.

An hon. Member: No, we have not.

Mr. Dufresne: This sentence is in the wrong debate.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Hodgson: You know you are telling us an untruth.

Mr. Richardson: —no matter what the murmuring may be after I read it, let every one of us, including the speaker who is now on his feet, when this session closes tonight go into his chamber and read again and thoroughly digest this section which I recall for every one. The section is section 49 of the British North America Act. It reads:

> Questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a majority of voices—

If this assumption is even only reasonably fair, may I call a committee tonight, and I shall bring witnesses before that committee in the next 12 or 13 minutes. Certainly members across the way will disagree with me, but bear me out. First, I bring as a witness to this committee the premier of Alberta. I do not propose to be repetitious, but to my simple mind—

An hon. Member: I'll say.

Mr. Richardson: You can say what you like about my simple mind, but bear me out. I have heard that the premier and the people of Alberta want this gas transported out of the province as soon as that can be done. That is my first witness. The second witness I bring before the committee is the premier of Manitoba. If he were here he would say, as we have heard from the records already produced in the house, that the people of the great metropolitan city of Winnipeg and the people of the province of Manitoba want to receive natural gas as promptly as they can. I bring again to this committee, this group of 264 here in which we can allocate little groups of 20 men in that part of the house, 20 in another part and so on. I bring the next witness before this committee, namely the premier of Ontario and his provincial treasurer.

An hon. Member: I thought so.

Mr. Richardson: That is right. I am glad you had the time to have a thought. If my friend the hon. member for Broadview—

Mr. Hees: It was not I.

An hon. Member: Get it right.

Mr. Hees: Get your bifocals straight.

Mr. Richardson: If the opposition supporters or my friend the hon. member for Broadview would want to bring to this committee the premier of Ontario and the provincial treasurer of Ontario, they could not say any more than what they have already said in the matter of urgency. That is the affirmative side of the matter. What is the negative side apart from what we have heard in this debate so far? Have we really heard from those parts of Canada on the periphery, British Columbia or the Atlantic provinces, or from the province which I have the honour to represent any great outcries against building this great national project? None at all. Then I suggest that in the evidence of these witnesses that we bring before this committee we have heard—

Mr. Hees: Let us have the committee first.

Mr. Richardson: I have put before you the committee.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Mr. Hees: No. You will not bring the committee because you have not the nerve. Stop talking hypothetically and bring the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Richardson: I am satisfied—

Mr. Hees: You are satisfied with yourself.

Mr. Richardson: Even with the hon. member for Broadview constituting himself as one member of this committee, I am satisfied that this committee of 264 members is adequate and sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. Hees: We have everything but the witnesses.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, I submit that is the first proposition or the first assumption. Second, an amendment and a subamendment have been put before us. Let me deal briefly with them. I heard the leader of the C.C.F. party last night say that while he disagreed with this matter being made a matter for private ownership, he believed that this company about which we are now speaking was the only one that could do the job. Therefore, in the opposition against this proposition that the government have put forward, the opposition itself is divided. It is divided because on one side they do not want private ownership. I will agree with them that as a thesis it is all right and I will deal a little bit now with that point.

First of all may I say that as a member of the House of Commons or as a citizen of Canada I am not afraid of public ownership. If the day comes when this operation should be under public ownership, I shall not rebel against it. In our economic life there are many areas that require public ownership. It may well be that this will be one of them. If that is the case, I have no doubt that the present government being then in power, as it will be, it will be adequately operated; and even if by some miracle the present government were not in power I would be satisfied for some at least on the other side, if then in power, to run it under public ownership.

But the point I want to make here is that one group on the side against this proposition are dead against private ownership of any kind. Whom do these spokesmen for public ownership represent at this moment? We have heard it said, Mr. Chairman, that we have no mandate for this proposition but that they have a mandate. Yet if you look at the record of those who have been elected, Mr. Chairman, you will see that half of them come from one province. I think they have one member from Nova Scotia. They had one member, recently departed, from Ontario consumer is going to pay. No one knows anything at all, and yet the government want us, the people of Canada, to put money into a thing like this. I would not touch it with a 10 foot pole. With the small number of contracts secured we do not know how long it is going to be before we are able to get the cost out of it, and no one seems to know. That is the funny part about it. No one seems to know what is going to happen. Of course the people of Canada are not going to get a chance to vote on it.

My thought about the matter is just this. If the line cannot be financed by Canadian private enterprise then let the government construct it part by part on a good sound business basis. That is the way it should be done. Why not go directly from A to B, leave out the United States millionaire and do it, as I said, on a sound business basis? Why does this pipe line have to be started today and started in such a haphazard way? Who is yelling for gas in Canada right now? What industry?

An hon. Member: Premier Frost.

Mr. Rea: You have not read what he has said. He says that they do not need any gas until 1963. We all know who are doing the yelling for gas and who are short of gas. It is the people south of the border. There is no question about that. Murchison and Company do not give a darn about Canada. All they are concerned about is making money out of selling gas. If we have a surplus of gas, by all means sell it to our neighbours but let us not sell it on a long-term contract with low prices because they are going to need that gas very badly in a few years' time.

To me as an ordinary businessman this whole bill smells bad. It smells of poor security. It smells of sudden and unexplained haste. It smells of mystery and intrigue. It also smells of expensive perfume on the hands of millionaires reaching out to grab money from the little Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fulton: Here is St. James street.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, it sounds rather strange in this end of the chamber to hear a member from one of the Toronto constituencies rise in his seat as a member of one of the great parties of Canada, the Conservative party, and heap abuse upon these men who, whether with white collars or by their hands, have made some wealth in this country. I do not stand, Mr. Chairman, as other than one member among 264 other members in this House of Commons, and if I may have the indulgence of the house for a few minutes I should like to speak briefly. I shall be brief because so far as I am concerned, as I said in the first speech I made after entering this house as a new member, I do not need closure to keep me within a 20 minute time limit. I think that on most issues most of us who try to bring a note of seriousness to the matters that are brought before this, the great forum of Canada, should, except for the leaders of each of the parties, be prepared to discuss these matters within a period of not more than 20 minutes, and that I propose to do now.

First of all, if I heard the Leader of the Opposition correctly earlier this session and if I have read Hansard right, I understood him to say, and on this I think we are all in common agreement, that the pipe line should be built within Canada and that it should be controlled within Canada. Second, my understanding of all that I have heard, and I have listened diligently all through this debate, is that the line should be built as soon as possible. There may be some disagreement among us as reasonable men as to the proper time for the building of a great national undertaking. I suppose that all those who enter public life, and I am only a novice at it, acquire a certain amount of partisanship sooner or later and it stays with some more fully than others, but I suppose that in the area of party politics there may be reasonable disagreement between us as common-sense reasonable people as to when that time should be.

Members of the opposition have said to the ministers on the front benches, and rightly so, I submit, that the line should be built now, and that is the opinion of the cabinet at least. Members of the opposition have said: Let us put this matter before a committee. I submit that it has been before a committee. First of all, it has been before a committee of this very house, the cabinet. I am not one to say that the members of the cabinet are infallible, not at all. I stand here not necessarily as the member for St. Lawrence-St. George but, as I read the books, as a member of the whole Canadian parliament from east to west and from the north to the border. What does that mean to me as one member? It means, whether I sit on this side of the house or on the other, that I have to make certain assumptions.

One assumption that has to be made by every hon. member of this house, I submit with great respect, is that those members on the treasury benches tonight, those who have occupied the front benches since 1867, have had as much loyalty to this country and to the people at large, have had by and large as much information and have had as much integrity as any other 20 members among any of the 264 members of this house.

It will be a great changeover. It might be all right in a new area where the houses are just going up and these things have not been bought.

It seems to me as though the Social Credit party, which has reverted to a strictly provincial party and is no more a dominion party, along with the Alberta government and with this Liberal government have only one thing in mind—let us get this gas out of Alberta by any way we can; get it the heck out of Alberta, we do not care who pays for it, we do not care if we take money from the little taxpayer in Canada, get the gas out of Alberta. That is all they want; they do not care who is going to pay for it. Canada is going to have to use 300 million cubic feet per day. Who is going to use it? All these oil wells in Alberta are owned by multimillionaire oil companies which have made millions of dollars out of oil. Gas is just a by-product and now they want the people of Canada to help them make money out of that by-product.

Now for a few minutes let us talk about the "Trans-we can't raise the money-Canada Pipe Lines Limited." These poor little millionaires. Maybe they are broke. We know that they have broken every promise they have made since 1951. No doubt they have broken so many promises between themselves that they do not trust each other to put up the money. Let us look at the shareholders in Trans-Canada and analyse them for a minute to see who they are. Here is one called Tennessee Gas Transmission Company. I looked them up in Standard and Poor's, which is the United States book which tells you all about companies, and I find that this company has a total invested capital of $798 million. Let us take a look at International Utilities Corporation. Their total invested capital is $87 million. They are getting to be a poor company. Now we come to Canadian Delhi Petroleum Company, which has assets of only $8,250,000.

Now let us take one of the shareholders, Mr. Clint Murchison. Oh, boy, there is a man for you. He owns directly or indirectly and controls directly or indirectly—I shall name only some of the companies because it would take four years and a Philadelphia lawyer to find out everything he owns—companies such as the Investors Syndicate of the United States and Canada which has total assets of $1,250 million. Here are three life insurance companies which he controls, the Midland National Life Company of Watertown, South Dakota, the LaMar Life Insurance Company of Jackson, Missouri, and the Atlantic Life Insurance Company of Richmond, Virginia. Those companies have total assets of $142 million. I am not even mentioning American Airlines to which the minister referred. These I have mentioned give a total of $2,285,250,000, and yet they cannot raise $82 million. I cannot understand it.

An hon. Member: They come to Canada.

Mr. Rea: Certainly, they come to Canada. I do not know whether hon. members have ever listened to the T.V. program called "Person to Person" put on by Ed Murrow. Once a week for a half hour he goes into two different homes, 15 minutes each. He will visit the home of a movie star or someone who is well known. Last fall he visited the home of Clint Murchison. The television camera took you all through his house and you met his family and so forth. While this was going on Mr. Murrow kept up a running commentary with Mr. Murchison and one question he asked was this: "Mr. Murchison, is it true that you do not put up your own money on a lot of these deals you go into?" Clint came right back with, "Not unless I have to." There is a promoter for you. He always looks for sucker money to complete the deal. He believes in never putting up your own dough.

An hon. Member: As long as the government will put it up for him.

Mr. Rea: So he comes to Canada to take the hard-earned money of our working people so he can go into business and make a profit.

We have heard the initials "C.D." pushed around here a lot lately, but I wonder if hon. members know what they stand for—"Closed Debate". After listening to the Minister of Trade and Commerce I have come to the conclusion that the federal power commission certainly need a man like our Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Prime Minister ought to let the Minister of Trade and Commerce go to Washington. He would put closure on that deal and get it through some way. We would find out where we stood down there. There is no question about that. I also wondered whether, when the minister was visiting Murchison's ranch and wandering around shooting turkeys in Mexico—

An hon. Member: Crap.

Mr. Rea: —he sized up the place and has it in mind as good security if they do not pay what they owe. I have been in the mortgage business for a long time and I can tell you that the deal before us right now is one with respect to which I can easily understand why these people do not want to put their own money in it. No one seems to know how long it is going to take to amortize the cost of the project, as the hon. member for St. Paul's mentioned today. No one knows what the or five of the provinces in this country—before that can be done. That is something, of course, similar to the wish of the Leader of the Opposition to turn this matter over to a committee, which would delay the building of the western section of the pipe line this summer. I submit that from the arguments we have heard presented to the house the urgency which has been stressed has been proven, and consequently if you are going to have a commission set up or if you are going to turn it over to the provinces, as my hon. friends would suggest, it will mean a further delay in the pipe line, and surely that is not desirable at this point, Mr. Chairman,

We have heard a great deal about the so-called "iniquitous" arrangement concerning the western section of the pipe line being built this fall. Well, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me if the government of Canada is going to lend up to $80 million to build a pipe line there is a great deal to be said for that. The $80 million, which is the maximum amount, must be paid back by April 2, 1957. Now, if this section of the pipe line is built this year and if Trans-Canada can meet its obligations by April 2, 1957 the Canadian people will get back $80 million plus interest at 5 per cent. On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, if Trans-Canada does not meet its obligations, the government by bringing in its mortgage against all Trans-Canada assets will be getting the line. First of all the line will be built this year and secondly the government will be taking over the line at 90 per cent of the cost. As the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, certainly that would seem to be a good deal for the Canadian people. There is certainly no subsidy. This is an investment in western Canada. As I say, the Canadian people are not going to lose in any way and we are going to have the pipe line built this year in the west.

Finally, I think some of my hon. friends in the Social Credit group mentioned that the pipe line will be a development for the whole of Canada. It has been estimated that the whole development of the pipe line is going to mean an investment of about $1 billion in Canada. Of course, that is tremendously important. In Alberta alone a brand new petro chemical industry is going to be established. I understand there is already a petro chemical industry in Alberta but it is going to be greatly expanded.

Before the gas can go into the pipes it must be made dry and as a result of that process there are several by-products which result. These include butane, ethane and propane. I understand that Polymer of Canada alone will use half a million barrels of butane every year. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, one can quite readily see the tremendous development which is going to take place in the province of Alberta. Not only is the province of Alberta going to be assisted but, as was pointed out, in my own province of Ontario in which I am primarily interested the power shortage will be corrected. It is going to help industry in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and in northern Ontario and therefore I submit, Mr. Chairman, this pipe line is something that is going to be good for all of Canada. We have to look above any sectional interest in dealing with this matter. If it is going to help Alberta and Ontario it is also going to help the maritimes and Quebec. I would urge—

Mr. Bell: How is it going to help the maritimes?

Mr. Hollingworth: I would urge all hon. members, regardless of their differences to support this measure because this is something for the benefit of all Canada. So on with the pipe line.

Mr. Rea: Mr. Chairman, I think at the outset we can all agree on one thing. Alberta has a surplus of gas and there are other parts of Canada which want to use it. The natural thing to do is to bring those two factors together. I think we will all agree on that. But I am a little bit, in fact I am more than a little bit, I am greatly concerned about the method of bringing this gas from Alberta to other parts of Canada.

We have heard a nice speech by the hon. member for York Centre who has said that this gas is going to help industry. You can just see factories blooming up all over the place. However, no one has stopped to tell those industries what the gas is going to cost. I know if I were going to build a big factory I would certainly want to know what the gas was going to cost me. But no one seems to know.

They picture bringing the gas across the country to the edge of a town, and then what happens? Who is going to pay for laying pipe down the streets of that town? One house may want to buy gas but other houses may not want the gas. Somebody is going to have to do it. That town will find its tax rate will start to go up. They will have this gas at the edge of the town but someone will have to distribute it.

No one knows whether it is a good thing for a housewife to change her electric stove for a gas stove, to change her electric refrigerator for a gas refrigerator, to change her oil-burning furnace for a gas-burning furnace. No one has come out with that information in an effort to try to sell the consumer.

the province of Alberta; they have the necessary contract; they have the necessary technical know-how; and they have the necessary organization which is so vitally important to a tremendous undertaking of this kind.

We have heard a great deal in this house about United States control. As a matter of fact, it is my submission, Mr. Chairman, that the opposition have brazenly and irresponsibly distorted this whole question. We heard a long speech from the Leader of the Opposition yesterday to the effect that 51 per cent of the shares were not going to be issued to the public of Canada. We then heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce say, as he said on numerous occasions, that 51 per cent of the shares would be issued to the Canadian public. Mr. Tanner, president of Trans-Canada, has reiterated that on many occasions. But the important thing, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that this pipe line is being built entirely in Canada. Now, of course, hon. members opposite do not have to take my word as to the importance of that score. I will read from what should be an unimpeachable source to them; namely, the premier of Ontario. Premier Frost says, and I think it is worth repeating:

> In addition to what has been said about the control of this company, whether the Canadian shareholders have the opportunity to take 51 per cent of the stock, or anything of that sort, the fact of the matter is that the construction is in Canada, wholly within the jurisdiction of our country, and is subject to the legislative enactments not only of the government of Canada, but of the provinces through which it passes. That in itself is the real essential of control.

I repeat:

> That in itself is the real essential of control.

It strikes me that the Leader of the Opposition, with due respect, knows very well regardless of how many shares are issued to the Canadian public, as has been pointed out in this house, there is no guarantee that this pipe line will remain entirely in Canadian hands unless the government builds the pipe line, of course. He knows that very well and why he took up the time of this house yesterday to go into a long and detailed explanation concerning the 51 per cent, Mr. Chairman, I do not know unless it was his intention simply to waste time.

Another point about Canadian control, as the Leader of the Opposition very nicely pointed out yesterday, is that under section 151, part III, of the Companies Act a majority of the directors must be British subjects resident in Canada. That is important and it was extremely interesting to me that the Leader of the Opposition mentioned that point. I think that also constitutes Canadian control. It shows that this company is subject once again to the laws of this country and, as Premier Frost said, it is subject also to the laws of the different provinces through which the pipe line passes. This pipe line is running through Canada. It is subject to Canadian laws and Canadian jurisdiction and Canadian export permits. It is entirely subject to Canadian control and I do not think we can point that out too often in this house.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I come to the point of public ownership. I at least concede that my hon. friends opposite in the C.C.F. are consistent. At least they have some logic to their position. However, when I hear my hon. friends in the Conservative party talking about Canadian capitalists building this line I think sometimes they are speaking with their tongues in their cheeks.

Why should we not build this pipe line under public control? I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce has pointed out the nub of the matter and I think there are three compelling reasons why it is not practical, reasons which militate against the building of this pipe line under public ownership.

First of all, I might say I am in favour of any form of public ownership where there are conditions of complete monopoly, and when I say that I am talking about a public utility where there are conditions of complete monopoly. But here, surely the situation is different. First of all the government would be dealing with producers in Alberta and private interests at one end and with consumers in Ontario at the other, through private interests like the Consumers Gas. Surely it would put the government in a most unenviable position if it had to deal with people at one end who want the highest price and with people at the other end who want the lowest possible price. It is all right for my hon. friends in the opposition to say, "So what?". It certainly would be a most undesirable position in which to put the government unless it were absolutely necessary.

Also, we have the matter of competition. We have the coal and oil producers in Canada. Surely the people in the maritimes would not like to have natural gas controlled by the government competing against the coal producers in Nova Scotia. I submit to my hon. friends opposite in all sincerity that is an extremely important argument against public ownership which makes it difficult to concede that public control is the best method of handling this.

Another reason, as Premier Frost pointed out in the Ontario legislature, is that if we are going to build under public ownership we are going to have to obtain agreements with several of the provinces—at least four

Mr. Pallett: They are not to individuals. Those loans are not made to individuals, as this loan is. That is a loan to a public body.

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Chairman; they are to limited dividend companies.

Mr. Pallett: That is a limited dividend housing corporation loan, a non-profit organization. It is in effect the same as a government organization. Do not mislead the people with an answer like that. It is just another example of an attempt to mislead.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): How was the dinner?

Mr. Winters: He has not read the book.

Mr. Pallett: There is something that I should like to know. This government has not any money for municipalities. Oh, no, it has not any money for Canadians to help educate the people. It will not make money available to the municipalities so that they can keep the education standard at the height it is. Perhaps they feel that money invested in a gas pipe line is more important than money invested in Canadians as a whole. I wonder? The Prime Minister would not even see representatives of the university teachers federation when they came to see him. He refused to see them. This is, of course, a provincial matter.

Mr. Sinclair: Quite right.

Mr. Pallett: The education of Canadians is of no concern to this house; we will not make money available to the provinces so that they can pass it down to the municipalities to educate their children, oh, no.

Mr. Sinclair: The sum of $450 million a year.

Mr. Pallett: The Prime Minister says, "I will not even see these people when they come to see me". Clint Murchison, that is a different matter. Let us have a couple of answers to some more questions on the pipe line. Is this an economically sound scheme? The minister has not said so. Let us have an answer from the minister. Is it economically sound?

Mr. Hodgson: From the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pallett: Or from the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister does not deign to speak. If it is an economically sound scheme, let us be told. Let us know what we are getting into. There is a very strong suspicion that the reason the interest rate is 5 per cent is that there are 5 percenters working in Ottawa as well as in Washington. Let us have the answers to some of these questions. If the Prime Minister is doubtful about what the Canadian people think about this scheme, why does he not accept what he said previously and just go to the country on this matter. If it is such a good scheme and we think it is such a bad scheme let the jury of this country decide it.

Mr. Hollingworth: Mr. Chairman, I should like to participate briefly in this debate. I think the whole crux of the matter is time. Time is definitely of the essence. I congratulate the Minister of Trade and Commerce on putting his finger so succinctly on this point. To turn a Shavian phrase, those who can, do; those who cannot, talk. The minister belongs to the first category. Let not hon. members opposite forget that the hand at the throttle of this buoyant, bursting Canadian economy in the last 20 years has been that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. His detractors should hang their heads in shame.

Mr. Chairman, I am a representative from the province of Ontario. No less a person than the provincial treasurer, the Hon. Dana Porter, when speaking in the Ontario legislature on Tuesday, February 21, had this to say:

> It is not only desirable, but is an absolute necessity that every possible provision be made for access to the people of this province to an abundant supply of natural gas.

Hon. members know that industry is expanding rapidly throughout the country, probably in no place more than in the province of Ontario. We need gas, Mr. Chairman. The provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba need natural gas and the minister and this government are determined that the people of Canada shall have natural gas and have it now.

Mr. Castleden: Parliament or not.

Mr. Hollingworth: Hon. members have heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce say that Trans-Canada is the only possible vehicle to give it. This company gambled and took an option on pipe last fall, $40 million worth of it, and have an option until the end of this construction year. If this option is not exercised the requisite steel will not be forthcoming for a couple of years. It is all right for the hon. member for Peel to talk and say that we have steel pipe in Canada, but he did not substantiate his charges. As a matter of fact, I understand that there is one company in Canada which will be manufacturing 30-inch steel pipe by the end of 1957. But it will be a 30-inch steel pipe and not the 34-inch steel pipe required for the western section of the pipe line. Furthermore, it appears that Trans-Canada have the necessary government permits from you will not know how to handle when you get it if you have not got the personnel to look after it.

An hon. Member: We will hire you.

Mr. Pallett: What assurance does the government have from this unnamed corporation, as some other speaker has asked, that they will build this missing link from Winnipeg to the Ontario boundary? We have the northern Ontario section all set up; we have the Winnipeg section set up, but what is going to run in between? Are they going to come back with their hat in their hand and say, we set a date of June 7 before, but not this time. We need another $70 million or $80 million to build that missing link. Is there a performance bond filed anywhere? Even in the simplest contract they usually require something of that sort.

What is the population figure for the people who are actually going to be served by this pipe line in Canada? How many people are going to be served by the first link, the missing link and the northern Ontario link? Let us have the numbers.

Three weeks ago the minister said they suddenly found that this company could not borrow money. He sits in this house beside the Minister of Finance who dictates the financial policy of this country, but the two of them cannot get together so that this company can borrow money from private sources. It is a sorry sight to see that.

Mr. Hodgson: Why borrow it when the government will give it to you?

Mr. Pallett: Why borrow it when the government will give it to you? A very wise statement. Let us have the answer to the question of how much gas is going to go through this pipe line. How much is going to be needed by the people of Canada?

An hon. Member: It is all broken down.

Mr. Pallett: Show me on Hansard where it is. I do not want some representations by this company whose word, according to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, is no good. Let us have it from the minister himself. What pipe has been ordered from Canadian companies? The minister suggested that there is no company in Canada capable of making 34-inch pipe. I could tell him the name of one.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Give us the name of the company.

Mr. Pallett: Within 14 miles of my home town; you had better familiarize yourself with what is going on in this country.

Mr. Dickey: Put the name on the record.

Mr. Pallett: Anybody who knows anything about rolling pipe knows that a 34-inch pipe is the fatherless son type of pipe. It goes 18-inch, 24 and 30. I wonder if somebody is stuck with some steel somewhere and wants to get rid of it? I do not know.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend claims to know everything. He said he could tell me the name of a Canadian outfit that makes 34-inch pipe.

Some hon. Members: Name the company.

Mr. Pallett: I think it is only fair that we should have a little tit for tat and if the minister will answer my questions first, I will answer his.

Mr. Dickey: Welcher.

Mr. Pallett: What is the full cost of running this pipe line? Do you know what the estimated cost is? How much is it going to cost to operate it? What is the cost of operation from Alberta to Winnipeg and then on? We do not know. Let us have the answer. We may have to take over this pipe line and we want to know something about running it.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Who wrote that for you?

Mr. Pallett: Well, my friend, I can read it, which is probably more than you can do. There is one question that I think affects pretty well every Canadian, and it should be answered. Why is money being made available to this unnamed company at 5 per cent when national housing loans to Canadians are at 5½ per cent and the industrial development bank interest rate to Canadian companies is not anywhere near 5 per cent and Canadian money going through the Canadian farm loan board to Canadian farmers is only guaranteed at 5 per cent up to the end of this year? The suggestion is that it will be higher. Why do we lend money to Americans at a lower rate of interest than we are prepared to lend it to Canadians? I might also add that the percentage of the loan is higher. A 90 per cent percentage loan is higher than any National Housing Act loan on the books. The government will not authorize loans to Canadians higher than 60 per cent of the over-all National Housing Act loan.

Mr. Winters: The loans to limited dividend companies are 90 per cent.

Mr. Fleming: On your evaluation.

Mr. Pallett: Since the Minister of Public Works deigned to interject, what about the rate of interest on those loans?

An hon. Member: What terms?

Mr. Winters: Three and three-quarters per cent, Mr. Chairman.

when this pipe line is constructed to Winnipeg, it is not going to be taken down to Emerson? What assurance is before the house?

An hon. Member: That is not what McMahon wants.

Mr. Pallett: Never mind what McMahon wants. Have we unqualified assurance that when this pipe line comes to Winnipeg, before it goes to Emerson, it will come across into Ontario and Quebec? I have not seen it. I have read Hansard from the beginning and it is not there. There is no assurance.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Pallett: "Nonsense", the man says. That is the only speech he has made in this debate.

Mr. Hosking: The same as yours.

Mr. Pallett: I asked the minister last Friday on the orders of the day, what about atomic energy. I asked when is atomic energy going to be ready for the development of electrical energy. He did not know, he said.

Mr. MacDougall: No, do you know, John?

Mr. Pallett: He did not know. If I were the Minister of Trade and Commerce in charge of the resources of which he is in charge, I would know and I would get up and tell the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, you do not have to go to the Riverdale zoo to see the hyenas. Now, I think that is a question that should be answered. I think it is of vital importance. When will we have electricity available that has been made from atomic energy sources? Let us have the answer. We have asked, but we have not got an answer.

An hon. Member: Ask Mr. Frost.

Mr. Pallett: They say, "Ask Mr. Frost." I might point out that in the last provincial government publicity release gas and atomic power for energy were used at the same time. If you people know how to read, which I doubt, you could have read it. If atomic energy is not too far off, is this pipe line being rushed so that as much gas as possible can be sold before we get into the atomic field?

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Pallett: For the people of Alberta, perhaps nothing is wrong with that, but let us know.

An hon. Member: Is there anything wrong with Alberta?

Mr. Pallett: There is nothing wrong with Alberta, I agree with the members of the Social Credit party. But we should know that the principle behind this gas pipe line is to sell as much gas as possible before atomic energy is available. If that is the case, then perhaps the whole basis is wrong. Let us have the answer, so we can make up our minds about these things. Do not keep the iron curtain down, fellows. Let us get it up and have a look at some of these things.

There is one thing that I think is most important. Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, that is the company whose word apparently is not to be taken because the responsible minister in the house today said the statements they made were not accurate, has as a component part certain shareholders. Why have not those shareholders put up the money to build this line? Let us have an answer as to that. Why have not these shareholders bought more of the capital stock and put up the money themselves? I think we are entitled to know the reason behind that.

The next question is, who set this arbitrary date of June 7? Have you ever in your days seen a government let somebody outside set the date by which it must perform a contract? Usually the person comes to the government and says, "I should like this contract; I want to do business with you. Now, what date do you want me to perform by?" The government says, we would like you to perform by such and such a date and the private individual says he would be only too happy to do so. Did that happen in this case? Oh, no. Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company comes to the government and comes to the people of Canada and says, you must. I was in Belgium during the war and I was billeted there with a Belgian family who had suffered at the hands of the Germans. They said when you cross into Germany the only words you will use will be "Ich will, das muss, das soll." That is what Trans-Canada has said to this government, and that is what the minister is saying to the house.

Another question we should like answered is, what trained people are there in the minister's department or available to the government if the government ever takes over this line when the default is made? You have got a contract or you say you have a contract with an unnamed corporation. We have not seen the name of the corporation as yet. Remember, that has been denied to us. We do not even know the name of the corporation because of the use of closure tactics. We are assuming something. If this corporation defaults and you are obliged to exercise your powers under the terms of this agreement, what are you going to do with the line when you get it? What people have you got to manage it? You have something here that

Mr. Dickey: It is on Hansard three or four times. Where have you been? Either be here or read Hansard.

Mr. Pallett: There are a few magpies here, Mr. Chairman. I heard an expression about people who speak from such a position as theirs and it is this, namely that they have more brains in their seats than on their feet. Since we know the corporation we are dealing with by those statements made by the minister, what staff will be employed to ensure that the money advanced to this company will go into the pipe line? There is nothing I have seen that will ensure that. Here is another thing. They represent that they are going to build this pipe line. What have we before this house to show that they have options for rights of way or own rights of way? We may be giving money to a company that have no possibility of carrying out their contract. How much did they pay for those rights of way? What is their route? There may be something filed before other bodies in this country showing the route, but what does this house know about the route that this gas pipe line is supposed to take?

An hon. Member: We do not know.

Mr. Pallett: What localities will this gas line serve in each province? I think that is a matter of vital importance. What localities are going to be served? You say northern Ontario? I know for a fact that the present plan does not include the great city of Sault Ste. Marie, one of the big possible industrial users. I immediately accept the premise that gas going into northern Ontario will be of great benefit to that part of the country. But I say this to those hon. members who applaud that statement. In this system of democracy the end never justifies the means. What prices are to be paid for this gas at wellhead, at the gathering area? What price is the gas to be sold for at the various stages along the line? We heard some figures today but let us get them in a form that the average Canadian taxpayer can understand. Let us get them down to the consumer level, indicating how much the man who is going to heat his house is going to have to pay for this gas.

Is the gas going to be put in a competitive position with other fuels? Are we subsidizing one enterprise against other free enterprise industries? That is an answer we should have. If it is not in a competitive position, then is the fuel going to be used by consumers and what consumers are actually prepared to buy gas? We have heard vague references in this house about contracts and so forth. Let us have names. Let us have the quantities they are going to buy. Never mind these vague statements. We are asked to spend the money of the people of Canada in this house and we should know all the facts; we should not have just vague irrelevancies.

The Prime Minister was asked the other day what he knows about the hearings before the federal power commission. He did not even know whether we had a representative down there keeping an eye on things. We have not had that question answered. When does the government expect those hearings will be concluded down there? We do not know and they do not know. Hon. members across the floor of the house do not know. This is a gamble. It is worse than shooting crap with the dice loaded against you. Are there any guarantees obtained by the government considering the sale price of this gas? One company may own the gas, one company may own the pipe line. What assurance does the consumer have? When you have set up this monopoly, what assurance is there that the consumer is not going to be squeezed? Certainly the price may be favourable at this stage of the game. Let them into the market. When they get a monopolistic control, what assurance do the consumers of this country have that that gas made possible by the Canadian people's own money is going to be used for their benefit? No assurance has ever been given in this house by anybody that the consumer is not going to be squeezed in the price.

Mr. Hellyer: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Davenport has just chirped up. He had better look at the petition signed by the members of Olde Davenport United Church.

An hon. Member: Aren't you funny?

Mr. Pallett: There are other matters to be taken into consideration. Have the railways been approached with a view to running the pipe line along their rights of way? There you have a ready-made right of way that we should take advantage of where the toughest construction is going to take place. Have they been approached? If they have been approached, we have not heard about it. If not, why not? They are the two biggest companies in Canada and they are capable of doing almost anything. Have they been approached? We have not been told that they have been approached. We have not been given any answers if they have been approached. I suggest that the government explore that angle.

What assurance have we in this house that this pipe line is going to be constructed all-Canadian? What assurance have we that Mr. Coldwell: Would be called.

Mr. Knight: He said that tenders would be called for that particular part of the work. Therefore my fifth question to the minister is, just exactly what does that article mean?

I have already expressed myself at the beginning of my remarks with regard to the method by which the government has railroaded or is railroading—I think that is a correct expression—this legislation through the house. A former Liberal prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, expressed very strenuous objection to the gag or guillotine in 1932. Well, the gag, closure, the guillotine, call it what you will, is the method by which Mr. King's successors are forcing this pipe line bill upon a reluctant people about half of whom, I would say, are represented by the party on my right and our own party but have no respresentation or effective voice in this so-called representative assembly.

Then there was another and greater Liberal, and with his words I close. I think someone has already put them on the record. I refer to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the time when he had the opportunity to apply closure but refused to do so and went to the country instead where he suffered defeat. King also went to the country but he was returned victorious. Laurier was defeated and on his return to the house as a member of the opposition after that defeat he said:

> Heaven is my witness that I would rather stand here today, defeated and in opposition by that appeal to the people, than to stand over there in office by the power of the gag.

My last and concluding sentence is that there are no Lauriers on the treasury benches of today.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak in this debate I feel somewhat like a member of Sir Francis Drake's crew when he went out against the armada. They were facing bigger guns and bigger ships but they won because they had better ammunition and better leadership. In view of certain headlines I have seen in Ottawa papers today, I would remind the Prime Minister that at the beginning of this week he assured the house that we would have a debate all this week. I took it, and I believe most hon. members took it, that there would be a debate on the pipe line issue and that there would not be measures introduced by the government that would take the debate away from the pipe line issue to other matters of procedure that are necessary to us in the opposition when the government decides to use closure measures. I say that to the Prime Minister so that there will be no misunderstanding in his mind as to what was understood on this side of the house and what, I believe, was understood by the people of Canada. The Prime Minister has given an undertaking to this house that we would have debate this week on the pipe line. I remind hon. gentlemen as to that.

Mr. Hosking: Just read it.

Mr. Pallett: Certain headlines that have appeared in the Ottawa papers today do not indicate that. I certainly feel that those ideas do not come out of some reporter's own mind.

Last night the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his opening remarks said this as reported at page 4404 of Hansard:

> . . . I have spoken three times in this debate, and my purpose in rising now is to attempt to make this a committee where questions that are asked can be answered.

To that end I have prepared certain questions that I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I would suggest that if he likes I will send them over to him after I have finished and he can answer them in due course. I should like the answers to be answers from him, not references to agreements and not references to submissions that have been made by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines in any hearings or in any letters that have been filed before this house. I think it has been shown conclusively that any representations by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited in any hearings or in any agreements are not to be considered too seriously.

In this house today we heard the hon. member for Prince Albert read figures of the gas sale price filed by that company before the federal power commission of the United States. The first man on his feet to deny those figures was the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think that sets the stage exactly and shows how much reliance we can put in statements that are made on behalf of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited. The first man effectively to say that their word, filed before a judicial tribunal, is not to be taken as true was the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the sponsor of this bill.

The questions to which I referred are as follows. First I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce what has been done since January 1, 1951 up until the present time. Let us have the facts in relation to what has been done in the last five years. Why is it only now, or within the last few weeks, that this bill has been put down for consideration? What has been happening since January 10 when this session first started? I think that is a question that ought to be answered for the Canadian people.

to this company a section of the line and to finance another section to the tune of 90 per cent of the expenditures which the company will make. The company is only going to put up a tiny share of the expense.

Apparently that has been a fairly recent decision. The reason that they will not put up the money is not that they do not have the money. The existence of the Tennessee company in this project and its connection with the organization would provide for that, but apparently we cannot have the pipe line, so they say, unless we have permission from the United States federal power commission over which we have no control whatever. That commission has to give permission to import gas into the United States. Therefore, as the situation now stands, we are dependent for the existence of the pipe line on the permission of a commission of a foreign power. I ask you, where is our vaunted young nationhood? Where is our boasted independence?

It is fair to ask what our solution would be. I would say that if we are to provide 90 per cent of the funds to build part of the project and if we are to build the other part and hand it over to the company, why not provide 100 per cent of the funds and build the whole pipe line ourselves? It is just as simple as that. Let us have it 100 per cent Canadian owned and controlled. I am opposed to our building one section and providing most of the funds for the construction of another section and then handing over the whole thing to a foreign private company for their exploitation and profit. Make no mistake about it, this pipe line is going to be a private monopoly, and most of the profits from its operation will go to the owners in another country. It may well be that Canadian consumers by virtue of this monopoly and by reason of the higher price they will pay for gas will be in the position of subsidizing consumers in the United States where competition is keen.

For the information of hon. members, and because I do not have time to read it, I should like to refer them to a very relevant editorial in my own local paper, the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of Thursday, May 24. It is entitled, "Question Begging Answers". I too am begging answers, and I find that certain of the questions outlined in this editorial are ones I had jotted down myself. I should like the minister to answer these questions when he replies in committee and I shall try to make the questions quite definite.

First of all, in 1955 the minister said that the line could be privately financed. There was lots of money then. I should like to know why, after the wealthy Tennessee company came into the picture, the company was then unable to finance the proposition. Second, what arrangements are being made to build the sections not now provided for in the bill, the in between sections which have not been accounted for? Third, why is the new agreement between the government and Trans-Canada not attached to the bill or written into the bill? Has it been left out purposely so that it may be moderated, so that it can be changed in the future, perhaps to give the company more time? Fourth, is it correct as asserted that there will be a difference in prices as between distributors at Winnipeg and at Emerson amounting in that way to Canadian consumer subsidization of the United States consumer south of the border? Fifth, there is another thing that I am at a complete loss to understand. At this point I should like to quote from a dispatch in the Globe and Mail of May 29. I shall only read parts as my time is limited. The article is headed, "British Firm to Supply Pipe for Gas Line". The dispatch is from London under today's date and reads in part as follows:

> A $32 million contract for steel piping for the Trans-Canada Pipe Line company has been awarded to a British firm, it was announced today.

The next paragraph designates the firm as the South Durham Steel and Iron Company Limited. Then the next paragraph is somewhat of a revelation as to the time when we may expect that the gas line will be in operation. The article goes on to say:

> Delivery of the first pipe will be in May, 1957—

That is not 1956.

> —and the contract is expected to be completed by July, 1959.
> Asked about the controversy in Canada over the pipe line company's financing, a company official said: "The contract is with the pipe line company, not the government."
> Altogether 636 miles of 30-inch diameter piping will be used for the centre section of the natural gas line from Winnipeg to North Bay.

That is the relevant part of the article. I find myself in some difficulty in knowing whether, if in fact, it is correct. The bill we have before us, which we are going to be allowed to discuss for a limited period at the private dispensation of the Prime Minister, as I said, says that the government is to set up a crown corporation to construct the northern Ontario section. One would naturally suppose that this would include the purchase of the pipe and the laying of the pipe, but if this dispatch that I have quoted is correct it would appear that Trans-Canada seems to be quite sure—I was going to say had been assured—of the laying of it in spite of what the Prime Minister said this afternoon. If I recall correctly, he said that tenders were being let for that particular part of the work.

have it revoked. After all, this is the workers' money and I think he has a perfect right to say how it should be handled.

I recognize immediately that some abuses may creep in and I have expressed my opinion in that regard. I make no apology for having said that the unions should be very careful in the way they use the fees they obtain from labour, particularly as it would apply to political parties. I am not going to say any more on that on this occasion.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I have no hesitancy at all, but surely it should be clear to the members of this house that when six out of the ten provinces have this legislation there is no great abuse of the measure. I do not think it is asking too much of this government to ask them to incorporate this in their labour relations.

We in Alberta probably took the lead in this connection. We established the principle and five other provinces have also adopted it. I cannot for the life of me see how this would interfere in any way with free collective bargaining because it has nothing to do with the problems which ordinarily come under the heading of collective bargaining. This would be agreement between the employer and the employee, an agreement which would be voluntarily entered into it, an agreement which could be revoked if necessary.

After having said this I think you will understand that we are in favour of this bill. I have spoken in favour of it on many occasions and it is our intention at this time to support this bill.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member who just resumed his seat supplied the key to this problem when he said that after all this is the employee's own money. I submit that the employee should be free to determine just how his money is to be handled. The fact that five provinces have adopted this legislation is no reason why this government should follow their lead. We believe in free enterprise and we believe in a philosophy which stresses the importance of the individual. We have today systems of government which stress that the state is more important than the individual. This legislation implies that a union or a group is more important than the individual.

I cannot subscribe to that as a matter of principle, because certainly the big issue in the world today is freedom of the individual. There has been no attempt to interfere with those who want to pay dues to unions; they are free to do it. If any union wants to make a bargain with an employer and wants this clause inserted in the agreement, it is free to do so. Why should this government interfere in any way with that freedom? I think it would be a grave mistake on our part to interfere. This legislation not only insists that we interfere with the individual in connection with the spending or handling of his money, it insists also that we interfere with the freedom of the employer as to the use of his time and his accounts in collecting money for a union.

Unions are good things and they serve a good purpose in our way of life, but if a union is to continue to serve the best interests of the employees or of the workers as a whole it must learn to stand on its own feet and prove itself worthy of the loyalty of its members so that fees will be paid without any compulsion from an outside source.

On motion of Mr. Carter the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that I leave the chair for the house to resume consideration of whatever business was under consideration at five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE CORPORATION

CONSTITUTION OF CROWN COMPANY TO CONSTRUCT PIPE LINE, MAKE SHORT-TERM LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 298, to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, at five o'clock I had been stating that when this company and its affairs were first considered by a committee of the House of Commons we were assured that the company would be created with Canadian funds, that it would build on Canadian territory, would be under Canadian control and all the rest of it. But what is the situation now? We find that three great American gas and oil companies will hold control to the extent of 84 per cent and that great quantities of gas are to be siphoned off from the pipe line at Emerson, Manitoba. The Canadian government together with the Ontario government are to use the Canadian taxpayers' money to do two things, to build and hand over

Mrs. Ann Shipley (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I am very hoarse today and I hope you will bear with me. My remarks will therefore of necessity be brief.

I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) in criticizing the argument presented by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour and I must say I could not follow his line of reasoning at all. The hon. member stated that the lack of voluntary revocable check-off denied free collective bargaining to the labour force in Canada. With all due deference to the hon. member I say that is a completely wrong statement because we now have free collective bargaining in Canada without any compulsory—revocable or otherwise—check-off. He also had something to say to the effect that if we had this legislation on the books it would prevent strikes. I may be wrong, but to the best of my knowledge it has been a long time since there has been a strike over this particular measure alone. I do not suggest it might not have been one of the bargaining points but I do not recall it as having been the principal one for some time.

The hon. member claims that we should pass this legislation to guarantee security to the unions. Well, there is just a little more to this measure than that. If we pass it we are compelling employers to guarantee their security willy-nilly regardless of the responsibility shown by the particular union concerned. Now, I have no objection to the check-off as such provided it has been accorded or won by the body of workmen because they have shown responsibility in their organization and as a group of employees, and that is the way we have it in Canada.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mrs. Shipley: Surely.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder if the hon. member could make just a little more clear to us, when she talks about showing responsibility, to whom she means the responsibility should be shown. Does she mean responsibility to the employer or does she mean the responsibility of a union to its own members?

Mrs. Shipley: I mean both, Mr. Speaker. I mean the responsibility to the community and the responsibility of the union to its members as part of the industry in which they are employed. In other words, there are some unions which have proven themselves by the actions of their leaders and some of their members to be very irresponsible citizens indeed. Now, mark me, I am not suggesting for a moment this is common to all unions. The majority of union bodies are fine bodies; but I see no reason why we should compel an employer to recognize a group that is not responsible nor indeed do I see any reason why we should put compulsion on the employer in any event. Compulsion is abhorrent to most Canadians. We have good free bargaining and negotiation laws in Canada and I feel that is the way this should be done.

I have forgotten the United States figures and indeed I do not have the most recent ones, but I put the last official figures on Hansard two sessions ago, I think. In the United States they had voluntary check-off as a compulsory measure in many states and in several of them they have taken that legislation off the books because they found it did not work in practice. It invariably leads to the closed shop, which I do not think is desired by many Canadians. That has been its history in the United States. Furthermore, in the cradle, shall we say, of the labour movement in Great Britain they have no check-off and they must have exceedingly good reasons for not having such a measure. We as a party are not against the check-off. The majority of the employees under our jurisdiction have the check-off and others are free to negotiate for it.

I understand that in the representations made to the government by various labour unions, while this point may have been mentioned in their briefs it was not one of the major points they brought up. In other words, it is my belief that the unions are not pressing strenuously for this measure at the present time and it is to my certain knowledge that a large number of men who are union members do not want it because under certain circumstances it is neither voluntary nor revocable. That is why I believe it should be obtained through bargaining negotiations.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take very long discussing this bill because I have expressed my opinion regarding it on numerous occasions. When the hon. member who has just resumed her seat speaks of irresponsible unions she must remember that this is applicable only to certified unions. Further, when she says that this would compel the employer to guarantee the union, I doubt if that is quite as accurate as it might be because the bill states specifically it is a voluntary and revocable check-off.

That means, first, that it must be voluntary on the part of the worker. The worker gives his consent in writing to have the deduction made. That is a common practice in more than one industry in this country. In the second place, if the worker desires he can of the question of union security, the admittance that the trade union movement, the collective bargaining process, is a legitimate thing in a democratic society. That is at the crux of the argument which has been advanced by the trade union movement of this country, that the question of the existence of unions, of the security of unions, should be taken outside of the field of collective bargaining as such.

If you take the line of reasoning which has been put forward by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour, then you are starting on the first step of a logical line of reasoning which admits that in fact the trade union movement, the collective bargaining process, is not a legitimate thing in this country. That is the important thing to realize. And more than that, Mr. Speaker, as members of this house, as citizens of this country, we should have come to the point where we are prepared to recognize that the proper role of legislation is to narrow down the field of the disputes that arise from time to time between management and labour to what is the real question involved in collective bargaining, namely, the improvement of working conditions, matters of hours of work and the remuneration which workers are to receive for their work, and that if labour legislation as such has any legitimate place at all on the statute books of this country that is one of the most important functions it can perform.

No one in this country likes to see disputes between management and labour reach the point where such things as strikes and lockouts and all that go with them become involved. No one who has been through a strike, no one who has had some responsibility as an officer of a union in conducting a strike, has any illusions whatsoever about the unfortunate results of labour being forced to take that action. It is something that can be measured to a degree in the loss of pay cheques that ensues. It is something that can be measured by the loss of valuable industrial production. Measured by any one of those terms by which one can assess the effects and the implications of strikes and lockouts, it is an unfortunate and undesirable situation to have arise. It seems to me that no hon. member of this house who is interested in the welfare of the working people of Canada, in the growth of our country, in the increase of the real wealth which we as citizens may be able to enjoy in our proper share, should for a moment hesitate to endorse a measure which will in some degree at least remove the possibility of the advent of such things as strikes and lockouts.

Without legislation which grants union security as a right to the trade union movement, the organized working people of Canada, you leave within the bargaining process and within the area of possible dispute the question of the very existence of the union as such and the right of the workers to bargain collectively. That, Mr. Speaker, is the real argument in favour of the adoption of this type of legislation in Canada. By its adoption you have put the collective bargaining process in its proper role. You have taken out of the area of dispute the question of the right of the workers to organize and bargain collectively.

This legislation proposes to introduce into our federal labour law the principle which, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicated when he introduced this bill, has been adopted in the legislatures of six of the ten provinces in this country up to the present time and which is in the process of coming into being in at least one of the other Canadian provinces.

It is all very well to argue that most of the working people in this country who come within the purview of federal labour legislation already have written into their contracts the provisions that are suggested here, or something better, but nevertheless that makes it all the more apparent that the time is long overdue when this should be a part of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

When a principle has become as well established as this has through the long and bitter process of collective bargaining, why should this parliament hesitate any longer to put this into the form of legislation so that the process need no longer be continued for the minority of those who may not enjoy it as a right? As long as the parliament of Canada refuses to recognize that this sort of thing is a right of the workers of Canada, then just so long are we giving tacit recognition to the fact that employers who come within the field of federal labour legislation have the right to go out on union busting tactics and that in fact, as well as in law, the workers have not really the right of collective bargaining.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest respectfully through you to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour that if he is going to get up in this house and argue against the adoption of this measure he is going to have to produce something much better than these quotations taken out of context from certain people, all of whom would be prepared to stand up in this house and advocate the adoption of this legislation.

On page 48 of Hansard for the same year the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) said:

> I am convinced that you cannot write a trade union agreement on the floor of the House of Commons.

Finally, on page 49 of that volume of Hansard the former member for York West said:

> I object as strenuously as does any member of this house to compulsion of any sort in labour-management disputes or in anything that has to do with collective bargaining.

Is not the point well taken, therefore, that if parliament should preserve by all possible means the freedom of action of both management and labour when they get together and attempt in good faith to reach a common agreement, then to a certain degree the present bill taints the healthy state of collective bargaining as we have it today? And are we not replacing a procedure which has given satisfactory results in the past for a principle about whose accomplishments in the future we may be in doubt?

I have stated that there is nothing in the industrial relations act that stands in the way of inserting in a collective agreement such a provision as is contained in the bill we are discussing. This assertion on my part cannot be better substantiated than by the following extract from an article in the April convention issue of the Canadian labour magazine entitled "The Future of Labour in Canada", by Donald MacDonald, secretary treasurer and chief executive officer, Canadian Congress of Labour, which reads:

> It is probable that as the process of collective bargaining continues, there will be a more stable, mature and effective type of labour-management relationship. Both employers and communities will, in all likelihood, come to accept unions in a more genuine sense, until they will be more or less taken for granted. This, in turn, should mean that there will be more bargaining in good faith, and that the area of bargaining, will broaden both as to subject matter, and scope of the bargaining agency.

In the face of these views on the legislation as it now stands, Mr. Speaker, and in consideration of the points mentioned, I feel that it would not be considered the course of wisdom to abandon now the well tried principle of free collective bargaining for the new principle contained in this bill.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have been very greatly impressed by the almost fantastic processes of logic which were put on the records of the house by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour. I have some admiration for his ingenuity in going to certain people whom he quoted, I agree, as authorities on this subject of labour legislation and, by using those quotations, attempting to justify his opposition to the bill which is now before the house. For example, he mentioned the former member for Spadina, the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) and Donald MacDonald, the former secretary of the Canadian Congress of Labour, now secretary of the Canadian Labour Congress, in an attempt to bolster what I have already termed his rather fantastic logic.

First of all, let me say that in quoting the present secretary of the Canadian Labour Congress in an attempt to bolster his arguments he has perhaps exceeded the limits, because undoubtedly he must be aware of the fact that the Canadian Labour Congress, newly formed as a united labour organization in this country, is definitely on record as being in favour of the principle of this bill and of its adoption in the field of labour legislation.

Perhaps I might expand a little on why I consider the hon. member's reasoning to be so strange. All of the quotations he used referred to another subject matter altogether, namely, the suggestion of the application of compulsory arbitration that has been discussed on some occasions in this house. How the hon. member can suggest that there is anything akin to the principles involved in compulsory arbitration and those contained in this bill is quite beyond my feeble mind to understand. Apparently, these quotations are being used by him in an attempt to suggest that what is proposed in his bill would interfere in some way or other with the process of free collective bargaining. Perhaps I do not need to take the time of the house to explain that I myself am certainly in favour of the free process of collective bargaining; but I think it is important for us to get something of the picture of what collective bargaining is and what it should be about and, incidentally, to get some picture of what the role of legislation, federal or provincial, in the field of labour activity, should be.

It seems to me that if collective bargaining means anything at all it means a group of workers joined together for the purpose of improving their conditions of work and of increasing the amount of remuneration they receive for performing that work. That to me is the essence of collective bargaining. To attempt to suggest that questions of union security properly belong to a sphere of the collective bargaining process to me just does not add up. If, as the parliamentary assistant admits and suggests, we should have collective bargaining in this, that to me, at least, is tantamount to doubting the legitimacy of the trade union as such. That is the crux aimed at the creation of the kind of climate that will encourage responsible and healthy industrial relations amongst all parties concerned?

I believe that our existing legislation serves that aim and purpose and leaves to the bargaining parties the responsibility of negotiating the substantial provisions of their collective agreements. That is where responsibility belongs and that is where it has become recognized as properly belonging by those who have been negotiating agreements in the federal field in recent years.

Do we not all agree that something which is arrived at voluntarily has more significance and offers a greater degree of satisfaction than something imposed from outside, since a voluntary agreement will have the support or at least the acceptance of both sides, all of which is of the greatest importance.

In arriving at such a voluntary agreement, is it not more likely to retain vitality and recognition if it must justify itself from year to year or from agreement to agreement; and that is very important for the long-pull angle of the situation, this being conducive to a quasi-permanency of amicable relations.

There are, of course, already in the industrial relations act provisions for protecting the rights of the employees to join unions and to carry on lawful activities. There is also the further assurance that nothing in the industrial relations act stands in the way of inserting in a collective agreement such a provision as is contained in the bill we are discussing. It would, therefore, appear to me that this assurance should warrant ample protection for unions which are able to enlist the support of a majority of their members who want the things set out in this bill.

In so far as union security is concerned the field in which the provisions of the bill could operate, even if it were law, is a very small one indeed. The security accruing to the unions therefrom would also be very small. Last year on February 8, at page 960 of Hansard, the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) gave a report on the result of a study of check-off provisions in collective agreements under federal labour laws. Other than employees of the government, of the total workers under such agreements more than 80 per cent already had obtained some form of the check-off agreements. Only about 19 per cent of the 80 per cent had apparently thought it worthwhile to bargain for and obtain the kind of check-offs set out in this bill. The remaining 81 per cent, of the 80 per cent group, had obtained forms of check-off which are, one must assume, more advantageous from their point of view.

Since last year there has been a slightly higher proportion of employees in some groups, notably air transport, covered by the check-off provision. The submission of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada stated that the provisions of the existing federal legislation "are reasonably adequate". Later in the same week the railway transportation brotherhood submitted their brief in which it was stated:

> It is the considered opinion of this committee that the provisions of the act are reasonably adequate for collective bargaining.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the present system of collective bargaining represents, to a certain extent, the quintessence of voluntary negotiation which, after all, is the democratic way of negotiating. It is held by some, and rightly so, I believe, that should this house enact the present bill we may be accused by some, and again rightly so, of setting a precedent of interference by parliament in collective bargaining which has been functioning rather well if we take all things into consideration. There is no one who will again say that everyone is for union security, and the difficulty arises not so much in connection with the aim to be attained but rather the procedure to be followed to attain that aim.

Had collective bargaining steered away from the principle of union security, then there might be some reason for the present bill. But the fact that collective bargaining has succeeded in establishing, whenever feasible, union security and this, by mutual and amicable procedure, then I believe that we should leave the matter to the scope and province of collective bargaining which has succeeded in the past and which will undoubtedly continue to bring practical results in this field in the future.

If we refer to past debates on the subject matter we find that members of this house have repeatedly expressed themselves on the freedom that should prevail in the establishment of management-labour relations. For example, in 1950, during the fall session, at page 51 of Hansard we find the following statement by the then member for Spadina:

> I believe that compulsory arbitration means the death of collective bargaining. It is all very well to say that we shall apply this principle only in one case, but we shall have done damage to a fundamental principle of freedom.

Again on the same page of Hansard we find this declaration by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> It is of primary importance, and in the public interest, that there be no interference with the principle of free collective bargaining.

benefit. Another thing which makes this amendment necessary today is the fact that some provincial governments have passed provincial debt adjustment legislation in an effort to protect the producer on the land and keep him from being victimized by foreclosure operations on the part of people who wish to foreclose against him. That provincial debt legislation saved many farms. However, the moratorium feature of the provincial debt legislation was questioned before the courts and later was taken, through appeal, to the Supreme Court of Canada. A final decision was brought down, I believe in 1955, which declared the provincial debt adjustment act to be ultra vires. The result is that the protection offered by the provincial legislation is no longer available. Hence the purpose of Bill No. 350 with its various amendments is to amend the original Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act so as to make it operative, to make it so that it will be applicable to farmers who find themselves in serious indebtedness at the present time and who are threatened with foreclosure and the possible loss of their lifelong earnings through no fault of their own.

It may seem odd that producers should require this kind of protection. However, they are operating in one of the most difficult industries in the country. Along with fishermen, they find that in some years they have crops and in other years they do not. As far as the national interest is concerned and as far as the production of food is concerned, I believe that here is a portion of the population that requires protection, having regard to the many dangers to which farm production is liable such as frost; drought; insects; the vagaries of the economic condition of the country; wars; the fact that other people enter into competition; the fact that perhaps through federal policies they fail to sell the farmers' product. On the western prairies we find hundreds of thousands of farmers deeply in debt and unable to meet their obligations from day to day while at the same time their bins are full of excellent wheat. They have produced the food which a hungry world requires but, through no fault of their own, they are unable to sell it. Along with that situation, they are faced with constantly increasing costs which must be met from day to day and they are placed in an extremely difficult position with regard to debt. In order to keep efficient producers on the land, I think it only right and proper that this type of protection should be available to them. The purpose of this bill is to amend the act and to make it available.

The royal commission on agricultural and rural life passed a recommendation to the effect that the provisions of all existing farm security and debt adjustment legislation should be consolidated and placed in a form where it should be available to farmers who are in need. It also recognized that such debt adjustment legislation should be associated with sound credit and supervision programs for the re-establishment of agriculture where conditions have made it almost impossible for the farmers to carry on.

That outlines briefly, Mr. Speaker, the reasons for the act, some of the history of the act and the reasons why I believe that this house should pass this bill in order that the original intentions of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act might be operative for people today.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Benidickson: In view of the illness of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Benidickson the debate was adjourned.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

AMENDMENT OF CHAPTER 152, REVISED STATUTES OF 1952—VOLUNTARY REVOCABLE CHECK-OFF OF UNION DUES

The house resumed, from Friday, February 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act (voluntary revocable check-off).

Mr. J. A. Blanchette (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I shall not pretend to have new arguments to place before the house on this bill, as practically all the arguments possible have been advanced, from year to year, each time that a similar bill has been discussed.

The devotion and interest of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who has presented this bill is to be highly commended; but I am wondering whether the progress which is being made, from year to year, in industrial relations has not somewhat reduced the significance of this cause which he has espoused so ardently by the presentation of this bill.

The developments in the field of labour-management relations have strengthened the convictions of many that legislative provisions for this check-off would not serve any useful purpose in our federal legislation. The role of governments in industrial relations has always been—and will continue to be—a very live topic for discussion. Moreover, is it not generally accepted that the primary role of government should be one that is for the introduction of the bill and some of the reasons why it should be passed by the house. The original legislation, the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act passed in 1934, was designed to give some security to the producers on the western plains against foreclosure for debt brought about by adverse agricultural conditions. The preamble of the original bill outlines that it was considered in the national interest that efficient producers of grain, cattle and farm produce on the prairies should be permitted to continue to produce.

As the result of the rather disastrous agricultural period that followed 1929 hundreds of thousands of farmers found themselves faced with economic conditions which necessitated that they should go to bankers and other credit institutions in order to obtain money to carry on their operations. Continued adverse conditions, which in some cases amounted to seven consecutive years of drought and practically no production, brought about a serious condition when the creditors sought to obtain repayment of the money they had lent and started to foreclose on the farmers in large numbers. Farmers who, through no fault of their own, had become bankrupt and did not have the means to carry on, found that their life savings and the work of themselves and their families were being wiped out. Foreclosures were extremely common. As a matter of fact, in many cases creditors who foreclosed obtained land and worn-out machinery and they were unable to make anything out of it afterwards.

In some cases the period of drought lasted for seven years, and in order to maintain the producers on the land this legislation was passed by the house in 1934. The procedure provided was that any producer, either before or after assignment under the Bankruptcy Act, could make an application before a court to file a proposal for the postponement or payment of his indebtedness over a period of years. The legislation made it possible for the farmer to take all the debts he owed to different people, lump them together and make some form of assignment under which he agreed to pay each of his creditors a certain amount each year out of the product of his toil.

I may say that the legislation, although limited in many respects and although it did not give complete justice, permitted the producer a period of time during which he could pay off his debts. It gave him an opportunity to produce and ultimately, in many cases, to pay off his indebtedness as soon as production was again possible. The return of rain, better weather conditions generally, better economic conditions and better prices in many cases made it possible for the farmer to carry on and the farmer was able to save his property and assets and to hand them down to someone else in his family. The farmer was able to continue on the farm.

It was a very fortunate thing that the legislation saved him. The efficient producer was still on the land and capable of carrying on production when it was necessary. Shortly after the drought period, when Canada found itself in the midst of a war and needed production very badly, these efficient producers were there and did an excellent job of producing with very little help. The reason for amendment of the act at this time is quite evident. The farmers again find that they are falling badly into debt, not so much because of adverse weather conditions which affect production but rather because of the fact that higher costs of production enter into the picture. The farmer has really been producing in an extremely efficient manner but in spite of increased production the fact that his costs of operation are higher and there has been a reduction in the prices for his produce when he goes to sell it, and that in some cases he is unable to sell the commodity, has resulted in the farmer again sinking seriously and rapidly into debt.

The very nature of the original Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act has made it inoperative. I should like to refer to the limitation found in section 7 of the act, which section reads in part as follows:

. . . if two-thirds of the total amount therof—

The reference is to his debt.

—are owing by him in respect of debts incurred before the first day of May, 1935 . . .

With that provision in the act there are practically no debts with respect to which use can be made of the act and no cases where the farmer can get any redress or have the opportunity to make any kind of arrangement or assignment providing for the adjustment of payment of his debts. The main purpose of the bill is to remove that portion of section 5 from the section, to amend the other sections of the act which limit its application to debts incurred prior to that time, and to remove any reference to the particular period referred to in the preamble, that reference being to the period immediately following 1929 when serious indebtedness in certain farm areas had certainly resulted in a situation where it was beyond the capacity of the farmers to repay. The purpose of the bill is merely to make the benefits of the act applicable to producers who find themselves in that position today.

I might say that although the act did not meet all needs it was certainly of some little

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

AMENDMENTS REMOVING LIMITATIONS RESPECTING DATE OF DEBT, ETC.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton) moved the second reading of Bill No. 350, to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion for second reading of Bill No. 350 I wish to say a few words by way of explanation of the history of this kind of debt adjustment legislation and to outline the reasons house that the cabinet might as well stop discussion here—they have virtually stopped it anyway—adjourn parliament, go home and proceed by order in council. It is not as bad as that because, thanks to some of the gentlemen of the press and to public opinion which has been created by the efforts of gentlemen of the press or those who have had the privilege of speaking in this house, the protests have been so great that the government has seen fit to open at least some of the clauses of the bill to a short discussion.

What is this shortage of time? If we examine the facts we know that it is five years—here I am bound to repeat—since this company was set up. I remember when the matter was before the committee. At that time there was no question of government assistance; this thing was going to be built by Canadian private funds. It was to be an all-Canadian route to serve Canadian consumers. When questions were put to those who were sponsoring the bill they scoffed at the idea or suggestion that it might be anything but Canadian controlled.

What is the picture now? Three United States gas and oil companies control this company to the extent of 84 per cent. My hon. friends to my left have talked about the producers; they say, "What about the poor producers in Alberta?" You can almost see a picture of a group of poor people with their knees out of their trousers as it were; underprivileged people with little farms. You get a picture of those people wanting to be able to sell this gas in order to make their fortunes. But who are the owners of this gas, who are these poor producers? They are the same companies which are going to build the line. We have been told today, with what authority I do not know, that it will be the same companies, or companies of a similar nature, which will do the distributing in the United States. The producers are the same people as those who will own the transportation system and those who will do the distributing at the other end of the line. It is true of course that the people of Alberta will receive royalties on the sale of this gas.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The poor people of Saskatchewan will be paying 84 cents for their gas.

Mr. Coldwell: That is the retail price of the gas. They are supplying small towns along the way.

Mr. Knight: My time is quite short and I shall deal only with one additional point. We have been told that this is to be an all-Canadian pipe line for the benefit of the Canadian people. Let us leave British Columbia out of this discussion for the moment as they have natural resources which will make them wealthy no matter what they do with them or what form of government they have.

But what about the maritimes? What is this going to do for the maritimes? They are going to have the privilege of putting their money into the kitty and taking nothing out. They have been doing that for the past 50 years and I suppose they are getting accustomed to it, but it is not a very satisfactory procedure.

The last great steal, and I am not making a pun, that was perpetrated on the people of this country was when we gave away the iron ore in Ungava. I see the minister of immigration looking at me and I imagine he would like to tell me that that is a provincial matter. I know all about that; I know that the province receives certain royalties; but nine years ago we made it possible for these people with their foreign capital to come in there to take out that iron ore. They built railroads and all the rest of it.

What do they get out of it down there? There are hundreds of unemployed in the maritimes and those people are constantly having to go to a foreign country in order to make a living, or else come up to Montreal or to the centres of industry in central Canada. Something should have been done for those people down there. If in the case of our natural resources we had done what the C.C.F. party would like to do with this particular pipe line, those people would not have to go to foreign soil in order to get jobs.

What is going to be left to those people? I was amused when the minister said that this was going to be an all-Canadian pipe line because the thing is going to be situated in Canada. What is going to happen will be the same as has happened in connection with our iron ore. In that case the people are going to be left simply with the hole out of which the iron ore has been taken. In the meantime the ore will have been transported to the United States where the smelters are located and where the secondary processing industries are located. The people of the maritimes have had to follow their own ore on United States boats in order to get jobs.

We are proceeding now to create another steal. We are doing exactly the same thing in regard to this pipe line.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

ANDREA MARIETTA HIEKISCH FARAGO

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston) moved the second reading of Bill No. 348, for the relief of Andrea Marietta Hiekisch Farago.

across the way in the Liberal party and my hon. friends in the Social Credit party to my left. Do you think I would stoop so low as to say, or do you think I would be justified in saying, because these people are temporarily agreed on a certain issue, that the Liberal party has gone crazy enough to become Social Crediters overnight? Would I be justified in making that accusation? Or would I be justified in saying that the Conservatives were showing communist tendencies because they laid on the desk of the hon. member of their group who was dismissed from this house the same flag carried in that procession outside?

Mr. McIlraith: The flag they brought into the house two hours before the session that day? We know all about that.

Mr. Knight: My hon. friend can keep quiet. I will deal with him and his party later. Do you think I would be justified in saying, with regard to the Grey North by-election in 1945, that because the Liberal association published large placards and advertisements in which they showed the pictures of prominent communists and said they were supporting the Liberal party in that particular election, my Liberal friend who just interrupted me was a member of the communist party? It is a low-down trick and I wish it would pass out of our national life.

Mr. Bennett: I do not see why you bring Grey North into it.

Mr. Rowe: Don't you remember?

Mr. Knight: It is a smear by association.

Mr. McIlraith: That was my point in the question I asked you.

Mr. Knight: It is a vicious and discredited practice and I hope it will not be used any more by decent and honourable men.

Mr. McIlraith: That was my point.

Mr. Knight: May I repeat that it is only among ignorant people that there can be any hope of smear campaigns being successful. Let me tell my hon. friend it was on that slippery path that the gentleman who was the leader of the Liberal party, to its sorrow, in Saskatchewan for seven or eight years embarked and upon which he foundered into failure and political oblivion. That is what happens to people who smear other people. In his particular constituency that technique was used and may I say that there it had a degree of success.

What kind of people are these who my hon. friend is suggesting might be communists? Is the press of this country communist? I have noticed articles in the last day or two in the Toronto Daily Star, the Windsor Star and the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix—which is published in my home town and is a very good paper I might say—in which the government was damned and indicted for following an undemocratic procedure in this house. Are those members of the press communists? Have they shown communist tendencies in their editorials?

I read a dispatch in one of those papers concerning ministers of the gospel in Toronto. I understand the hon. member for Macleod belongs to a religious denomination. I shall say nothing about that, but he is the same gentleman who smeared us with a communist tar brush. I understand that his profession is that of a minister of the gospel.

Mr. Coldwell: Of what?

Mr. Knight: Well, of something.

An hon. Member: What about the one in front of you?

Mr. Knight: I have ample reasons to be proud of my hon. friend to my right, and I know that in its heart this house is also proud of him.

Mr. Byrne: Don't kid yourself.

Mr. Knight: Well, I will tell you about what happened last Sunday in Toronto. These gentlemen of the cloth—they were Anglican and United Church ministers—met for special prayers asking that parliamentary freedom might be preserved in this country. Are they communists? Is everybody out of step but the hon. member for Macleod?

Now, sir, there are certain comments I would like to make on this bill. In the midst of this turmoil which we have had in the house there has been one noticeable thing—I was going to say one permanent thing but I hope it will not be permanent. We have had a government which has been determined to force upon parliament and upon the country a legislative measure without giving, I will say now, full opportunity to the opposition to discuss that measure. Thus it is that a large percentage of the people are practically unrepresented in this House of Commons today. Many of my constituents have written and asked me to speak on this matter but I have not had an opportunity to do so until this moment.

The government of the day claims that these severe methods are due to the shortage of time, that the agreement which they have signed with the company we are discussing, a company practically wholly United States owned and controlled, calls for the passing of this legislation at a date close in the future. The suggestion has been made outside this should a load factor enter into the distribution at that point? I might say this to the minister, Mr. Chairman. If he calculated the fares to be charged in the creation of Trans-Canada Air Lines on the same basis as he is doing here he would never have created the company because the load factor there would not have permitted him to do so.

Mr. Knight: It has been interesting to me, Mr. Chairman, to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his old position as a lecturer, and I hope that the classes he instructed before were more receptive of what he had to say than they were today.

Most of the arguments have not been advanced for and against what we consider to be an iniquitous proposition but the constituents here and there throughout the country like to have their own members express an opinion even if they must do something which I am not fond of doing, namely, repeat arguments which have already been advanced by other people. But they do say: "Yes, the man's party did say something about that or against that, but what did he say about it?"

Sir, never did I think when I was elected to parliament 11 years ago that I would have seen some of the turmoil, the anger and the consternation that I have seen in this house during the last three or four days, an institution which, temporarily at least, had passed completely from the control of the officers who preside over it; words of anger and bitter debate which appeared to have no end. That, of course, is a situation for which I can only blame the government that sits across the way. There was a loss of discipline and a loss of decorum which, to me, were deplorable. I almost said loss of debate and indeed that almost came about.

We are now in the position where we can debate, and to follow the precedent that has been set by other speakers I will speak generally on the topic because it has been wide open, as I see it. We are allowed to debate clause 4 and I think it is a reasonable question for me to ask the minister concerned, at what point is the axe next going to fall? Are we going to be allowed to debate clauses 5, 6 or 7? Well, government policy will be announced in due course. That is the phrase we have certainly heard before. If freedom of speech has not been totally denied, it certainly cannot be denied that freedom of speech has been curtailed.

We had the spectacle yesterday of the Prime Minister getting up and granting us a special dispensation, presumably out of the goodness of his heart. Sir, it was a humiliating situation to those who love the democratic procedure. Except for that, the Prime Minister has been almost silent. Let me say in all sincerity and honesty that I pity him in all this because I look upon him as a pawn of forces which he does not appear to recognize and which he perhaps does not or could not understand. It is peculiar that I say this. I readily admit that I could not understand them either, but I do understand something about the principles of democracy and how a democratic system works. The Prime Minister was treading upon dangerous ground when he put his stamp of approval upon the restriction of free speech in this house, because where freedom of speech is threatened liberty itself has begun to die. It has been really more in sadness than in anger that I have watched what has occurred during the last few days because I am a believer in democracy. I am also a believer in the rights of the majority, but the rights of the majority do not include the right to impose silence upon a minority either in this house or anywhere else.

Sir, I claim to be a patriotic Canadian. I love my country. I am proud of my country and I would like to be proud of my government. As I look across this house I say, "God help me, this is my government; I would like to be proud of it. And that is my Prime Minister". My country will never go back on me in the physical sense, but the government and the Prime Minister have done something to me in the last few days. I have not lost my trust in democracy nor have I lost my trust and belief in the democratic system, but I have lost some of my faith in the ability of this government to preserve them.

I have to refer to something which I would rather omit for the moment but I think I have time in which to deal with it. I want to refer to the speech of the hon. member for Macleod, a speech which I think shocked this house. In addition to saying we had lost the power to debate I was going to add that in view of the hon. member's speech we had lost something of the decency which we associate with this place. Here was a smearing process that would delight the heart of any McCarthy. Just because they disagreed with them the hon. member compared his opponents in this particular issue with the people who were walking up and down outside the house in that period. Well, there is no man in this house who can look me in the eye, and accuse me, my leader or any hon. member of this party of having communist leanings. In some places they get away with it. They get away with it in the country where people are sufficiently ignorant to be influenced by that sort of thing.

Here we have an alliance, which has been mentioned before, between my hon. friends

Special contract sale at Emerson, Manitoba, to Midwestern Gas Transmission Company

Contract No. 1, a high load factor, firm sale, "take or pay" contract for 200,000,000 cubic feet per day, for twenty-five year period. During first three years only, gas may be accepted at Canadian-U.S. border at 75 per cent load factor, with price payable to Trans-Canada 27.27c. per MCF. During balance of contract only 95 per cent and 100 per cent load factors apply. Contract prices for high load factors are as follows:

Contract No. 2, to take effect only when and if Alberta and Canada authorize export of additional gas reserves surplus to Canadian needs and the U.S. authorizes import, would also be a high load factor, firm sale, "take or pay" contract for 200,000,000 cubic feet per day. Costs to Midwestern for gas delivered to it at Emerson under this contract would be about three cents per MCF higher than under contract No. 1, and would also increase about one cent per MCF at end of each five years of the 25 year contract. During first three years only, gas may be accepted at 75 per cent load factor, at a price of 31.05c. per MCF. During balance of contract only 95 per cent and 100 per cent load factors apply. The contract prices for the high load factors are as follows:

Mr. Hamilton (York West): May I ask the minister a question about load factor: What justification is there for calculating the price in Saskatchewan and Manitoba on load factor when a common pipe is being used for the transportation of this gas to Winnipeg?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, what is the justification for calculating any price on load factor?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Certainly, sir, this pipe is a common carrier to that point and the whole benefit to the company is gained from the distribution from that point, and surely in those two areas at least load factor should not be taken into consideration.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, no gas pipe line is a common carrier or can be a common carrier. An oil pipe line can be a common carrier because batches of oil can be inserted into the line by a producer, kept intact and delivered at the other end of the pipe line to the producer or to his customer. That is not possible with natural gas, as my hon. friend will know, and no gas pipe line that I ever heard of, and I am sure none on the North American continent, is a common carrier.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I am not suggesting, Mr. Chairman, at this point, the legal definition of a common carrier. I mean that all of the gas is passing through for distribution from that area; therefore, why

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Save your efforts for another attempt to be disciplined by the Speaker.

An hon. Member: Is that a threat?

Mr. Fulton: Is that a threat?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You have tried, but it did not work. Has my hon. friend any questions he wants to put to me now?

Mr. Coldwell: Are you not going to tell us what a load factor is? Quite frankly, I do not know.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Gas delivered at 100 per cent load factor provides that if 100,000 cubic feet of gas per day are bought at 100 per cent load factor then the customer must pay for 100,000 cubic feet taken every day regardless of whether he takes it or not. It is very difficult for any organization, except a large distributing system, to buy gas at 100 per cent load factor. The Tennessee Transmission contract calls for gas delivered at 95 per cent load factor and, as I remember it, the city of Winnipeg contract provides that gas will be delivered at 30 per cent load factor.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Sixty per cent.

Mr. Rowe: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Winnipeg buys at a load factor of fifty per cent and then 60 per cent.

Mr. Rowe: I would like to ask the minister a question. It is certainly understood that 100 per cent load factor would be lower. Will he give the average cost, the average price throughout?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The average of what?

Mr. Rowe: The average rate.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): To whom, the distributing company?

Mr. Rowe: Yes.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The average rate to the Union Gas Company, if you like.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The average rate all the way through, as put out by your own pet company.

Mr. Rowe: You might as well give them as the other. Take the lid off.

Mr. Hodgson: The boys can give it to you; that is what they are there for.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): To give the average across the country you have to make adjustments for transmission costs. But the average over the life of the 20-year contract at Winnipeg is 28·3 cents. Over the 20-year contract at Emerson the average is 29·34 cents.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): There has been a lot of confusion about these prices. I wonder whether the minister would be permitted to place on the record these prices, which at least appear to be definitive. There are at least four sets of figures that I know of giving the price of gas. The minister's figures are the latest and I assume they are the final ones. I think it would be of interest to members of the committee at this time if they could be placed in Hansard.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): With the permission of the committee I will be very glad to do that. I have the rates here.

The Deputy Chairman: Just for clarification, may I ask what these figures are? They were prepared by whom?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): They are the revised figures prepared by Trans-Canada and on which contracts for the sale of gas by Trans-Canada are being arranged at the present time.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the unanimous wish of the committee that these figures be included in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The rates follow:

Contracts With Canadian Distributing Companies
(except special case, Union Gas Co.)

All contracts are for a 25-year period, with prices for the full period of the contract, without escalation. (Prices to U.S. customer, midwestern, increase about one per cent per 1,000 cubic feet at end of each 5-year period). Canada divided into six "rate zones", with rates equal for all customers within each zone. Distributors in each zone have choice between four schedules of general service rates, dependent upon the "load factor" each believes he can achieve in the type of market he serves, these being rate "A" (minimum load factor 75%), "B" (minimum load factor 63%), "C" (minimum load factor 50%), and "D" (minimum load factor 37%). A predominance of "space heating" market (winter sales) involves a low load factor. Year-round sales to industry, and interruptible sales to industry during summer months, make possible higher load factors, and hence lower average cost of gas to the distributor. Load factors will therefore vary widely between markets of the various distributors in each "rate zone", thus affecting the delivered cost of gas to each type of customer in the several markets. Following are examples of the actual average cost per MCF of gas that would be delivered by Trans-Canada at the distributors' gates in each rate zone, under the various load factor schedules (A to D) on firm contracts, together with the special rates for off-peak interruptible summer sales to the distributors in each rate zone.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There is no foundation in fact for that statement which Mr. Waring made. Who told Mr. Waring?

Mr. Small: Bring it before a committee.

An hon. Member: Why all the secrecy?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Secrecy? My hon. friend has long been corresponding with the opposition to the Trans-Canada application.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And I produced every line, but you did not.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I could produce one or two lines you did not produce, but I did not bother to do it because I did not think my hon. friend's opinion was worth the trouble. It is all very well to ignore load factors and to ignore pressures, as he has done in this case. He is comparing the unequal. I have the rate schedule of Trans-Canada here, and it is based on contracts that have been made by Trans-Canada from one end of Canada to the other.

In the first place we will take the 100 per cent load factor contracts, and I will give rates to you for the various load factors.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the date?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): This is the current revised rate schedule for about 140 million cubic feet of gas contracts for which have been based on this rate schedule. Taking 100 per cent load factor, and that means people will buy and pay for gas at 100 per cent of maximum load each year—

Mr. Hodgson: What if it is not a 100 per cent load?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is the comedians. We have had the cardboard hero, but let us leave the comedians for another time. Taking a 100 per cent load factor, the rate in Saskatchewan is 21·3 cents per thousand cubic feet; in Manitoba, 26·2 cents; for western Ontario, west of Nipigon 34·5 cents; northern Ontario, that is Nipigon to Cobalt, 43 cents; central Ontario, 44·5 cents, and Whitby to Montreal, 46·6 cents.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the undistributed price at Niagara; how much is that to be sold for?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There is no contract for gas at Niagara, undistributed, and no application for export of gas at Niagara. However, if you want the rates for interruptible gas, the interruptible in Manitoba is 23 cents; western Ontario, 28 cents; northern Ontario, 32 cents; central Ontario, 33 cents and eastern Ontario, Whitby to Montreal, 33 cents. Those are the prices for the sale of gas in Canada.*

Now, what load factor had my hon. friend in mind? I can give him the rates. He was mixing his load factors all over the map, but if he wants to compare rates under the same terms and conditions I can give him the rate based on any load factor he cares to name for any localities he may name.

Mr. Pearson: He does not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): He does not know what a load factor is. I am sorry that the opposition, which has given great study to the matter, seemed to believe the hon. member for Prince Albert because they were applauding his figures as though they were accurate, although a member of the Conservative party took the trouble to put accurate rates on the record several days ago amid dead silence from his party and no approbation whatever.

I think that answers the questions. I have already covered the ground about the Northern Natural contract. Trans-Canada had a contract with them at 29 cents. Northern Natural applied to the federal power commission. Such strong opposition came from the customers of Northern Natural that the application was shelved, and since the contract was dependent on approval within a certain date the contract lapsed with the expiry of time. An attempt was made later on to renew negotiations. I am told that Mr. Merriam went to Calgary and an attempt was made to arrive at a new rate basis, and that proved to be entirely impossible. At that time Mr. Merriam was not prepared to make any firm offer. Subsequent to that a contract was made with the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company and it was some months subsequent to that before Gardiner Symonds acquired an interest in Trans-Canada and became a member of the board.

The Minister of Finance has suggested that I say something about what a load factor is. If I have to start that far back it is rather hopeless, but I am sure that the hon. member for Prince Albert does not know what a load factor is.

Mr. Rowe: Tell the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Tell me what a 75 per cent load factor is, too.

Mr. Rowe: He would like to understand it. The Prime Minister does not seem to understand it. Tell the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fulton: Is that the same rule you used to put it through the House of Commons?

*See revised figures on page 4475, column 2.

That record cannot be contested; it is from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines itself. It shows that Canadians are to be taken for a ride for the benefit of Gardiner Symonds, the Midwestern pipe line company and the Tennessee pipe line company. We are to pay, they are to get and Canada is to guarantee. That to me is the terrible indictment with which this government stands charged; the hiding of information, the concealment of facts and the answering of argument by simply saying "It is a distortion". Facts are not answered by statements such as that, particularly when the person making them has fooled this House of Commons on so many occasions on so many matters.

I have only to recall, Mr. Chairman—even my hon. friends supporting the government cannot have forgotten the incident—that only a few weeks ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce denied that he had ever heard from McMahon, that he had any documents from him, over and over again. Then when finally he found out that one of the other members of the cabinet had a copy or that there was a third copy, he finally said, "Well, I did have correspondence, but that correspondence was private and confidential".

Let us pass on to the next argument about McMahon. They say that McMahon's proposition could not be accepted because it implied the export from Canada of 400 million cubic feet of gas—that is what the original proposition set forth—and that would be too great a proportion, the Minister of Agriculture said, of the amount available for export.

I am going to disagree with that, for the sake of argument, but I ask the Prime Minister to find out from his colleagues—just conduct a little Gallup poll—which of them communicated with the Northern Natural Gas Company in the United States to find out whether they would be prepared to give the same price to McMahon for 200 million cubic feet or 100 million, on the promise that in the future that would be reconsidered. I put it through you, sir, to the Prime Minister, that one of his colleagues did communicate with these people who said, "Yes, we will accept less than the 400 million cubic feet covered by the McMahon proposal, and we will pay 6 or 7 cents more per thousand cubic feet than that favourite of this government, the Midwestern pipe line company, the infant of the Tennessee corporation, under the presidency of Mr. Symonds, a director or executive of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines."

I have three minutes more, and I would have liked to ask quite a number of questions. Before I ask any more, I should like answers to those questions I placed before the house two weeks ago yesterday, for if we get answers to them we will certainly be in a position to ask further questions based upon those answers. I should like also to ask one additional question. At the time Mr. McMahon engaged in the telephone conversation with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and suddenly out of a blue sky withdrew the offers he had made which were so complete that they even covered the defects of the Trans-Canada proposal, did the minister pronounce a seven year curse on McMahon unless McMahon did withdraw that offer? I want Mr. McMahon brought here. I should like to see him before a committee, and I should like to be able to ask him what happened. What was the conversation between the Minister of Trade and Commerce and Mr. McMahon? Certainly I do not believe the minister would be careful of his language. He certainly has not been too careful in his desire to destroy parliament by the steamroller.

I should like also to ask a number of questions in regard to the proposition that was offered by Northern Natural Gas Company. I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether Gerald Waring was right when he quoted the reason Northern Natural Gas Company had its offer swept aside in July and August of 1955, an offer to pay some 6 or 7 cents more per thousand cubic feet in Minneapolis, the area served by that company. I should like to ask whether on that occasion, as reported by the gentleman I mentioned, on March 6, 1956, the minister said when speaking to Mr. Merriam, the president of Northern Natural Gas Company, as long as he was running the Canadian economy Northern would never get one cubic foot of Canada gas.

Was it because of that statement, which Mr. Waring says the Minister of Trade and Commerce made to Mr. Merriam, the president of Northern Natural Gas Company, that the Canadian people are to be mulcted in this way, the Canadian consumers are to pay more than the United States consumers, and the Canadian producers must thereby suffer?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that there is no foundation in fact for the last statement made by the hon. member. I had no such correspondence with Mr. Merriam and I had no such conversation with Mr. Merriam. I have not seen Mr. Merriam for at least 12 months.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was July, 1955.

Mr. Lennard: That could have been over the telephone.

in order to make up for the unusually low offering prices to the American companies.

Again I ask this question. Can you conceive of the presentation to parliament of a proposition whereby Gardiner Symonds, one of the heads of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, is himself the major purchaser in the United States? Who is going to win out in that proposition? The Canadian producer? The records tell the story as to what is happening. The Canadian consumer will pay through the nose in order to assist the United States company, namely the Tennessee company and its subsidiary, to secure gas at a price seven or eight cents per thousand cubic feet cheaper than the price Canadian consumers will pay, and let nobody deny it. I was waiting for some of the anvil chorus to deny it.

I have before me the presentation made with regard to Midwestern Gas Transmission Company, Docket No. 9, exhibit X-33, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited rate schedules. I wish I could put the whole record on Hansard, because it tells the story. However, I shall have to content myself with merely quoting from it. Between November 1, 1956, and November 1, 1957, the average rate per thousand cubic feet in Saskatchewan will be 26·6 cents; in Manitoba for Winnipeg and Central Gas, 32·9 cents; for other people in Manitoba, 40·9 cents. Midwestern will buy it at Emerson for 26·8 cents. Why does this Midwestern company become the beneficiary of Canada's public charity? Why is this company going to be able to buy at Emerson—when the price should be about one cent more per thousand cubic feet, having regard to the distance between Winnipeg and Emerson—at 26·8 cents while other people in Manitoba will pay 40·9 cents, and while Winnipeg and Central Gas Company will pay 32·9 cents?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why? What is the reason for this transaction? Why must we push through parliament by June 7 a bill to enable Canadians to be taken for a ride? That is the simple question. I go on from there. What is their schedule between November 1, 1957, and November 1, 1958? It is still 26·6 cents in Saskatchewan. In Manitoba for Winnipeg and Central Gas it is 32·9. For other companies in Manitoba it is 40·9. The Midwestern Gas Transmission Company will get the gas at 25·9. Now we come to what they are going to charge in Ontario. Western Ontario will pay 42·2; northern Ontario, 52·7; International Nickel, 51·5; North Bay to Toronto, 77·5; Provincial Gas Company, 46·1; Dominion Gas Company—these are the various rates for these other firms—66·2; Toronto and area, 51·5. At what price are we going to dispose of the undistributed part outside of Canada? At 35·67 cents at Niagara.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: Robbery.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): To what records is my hon. friend referring?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the submission I quoted from a moment ago.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is a complete distortion of the facts and no one knows it better than does my hon. friend.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister can make a statement afterwards.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask my hon. friend on what clause of the bill he is talking?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think it has been made clear to the committee on several occasions that unless an interruption is caused by a direct accusation or personal privilege, the hon. member who has the floor is entitled to be heard. If his descriptions or his conclusions from alleged facts are not agreed to by others, they will have the right to contest them at the conclusion of the member's speech. He cannot be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have heard my right hon. friend talking about distortion of the facts. There is no one who is a postgraduate in the way he is, having regard to the number of distortions he has made. I am quoting from the figures prepared by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited of room 208, 25 Adelaide Street West, Toronto 1, dated September 19 1955, and filed before the United States federal commission.

Mr. Hodgson: The cat is out of the bag.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank the Lord we have an application before the United States board that we can go to and find out the truth about this matter.

Mr. Rowe: You cannot find it out here.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask a question? Are those the wholesale prices?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes. Those are the prices that will be charged between November 1, 1958, and November 1, 1959. Here are the various prices, and they range from 39 to 77·5. The export price from Canada at Niagara will be 35·67; and so on it goes throughout the whole piece.

the days of John Wilkes in the mid-eighteenth century. It is, therefore, interesting to read that in 1621 parliament, then dominated by the sovereign, not by the sovereign's chief minister, asked that something be done to restore freedom to parliament, and that at that time this was said:

. . . in the handling . . . of those businesses every member of the house hath, and of right ought to have, freedom of speech to propound, treat, reason, and bring to conclusion the same.

An hon. Member: "Bring to a conclusion".

Mr. Diefenbaker: In 1956 the Prime Minister was afraid of parliament. He was afraid of discussion. He was fearful that if certain questions were asked the government would find itself in a difficult, if not impossible, position. What did James I do? Well, James I dealt with the situation very quickly. He answered the protestation. He sent for the journals of the house and with his own hand tore out the pages containing the protest. The Prime Minister did not do that. He only made it impossible for the journals to contain freedom of speech during the days that it was denied in this house. Yes, the last two weeks have been sorry days.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What an orator.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friends laugh—sorry days for the Canadian parliament, sorry days when a majority adopts "brutalitarian" tactics in order to deny this parliament freedom of speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes, they realize it is true. They have deprived us of our rights under the specious claim that there is a fixed date, June 7, a day beyond which men in Canada may not go in discussion, the zero hour, the end of all things. Mr. Chairman, it is ridiculous. I do not wonder that my hon. friends laugh. When they say to parliament that we have until June 7 and beyond that date there will be no more freedom of speech on this matter, who set the date? What have you been doing for five long years? Playing around with this corporation, with these adventurers from Texas and New York trading away Canada's natural resources at the expense of the Canadian people. No, we have not learned the answer yet as to why the government is so solicitous with respect to this company whose only capital is a few million dollars and, of course, all the power of the cabinet and those associated with them to force this matter through the House of Commons.

Is it for the benefit of the Canadian people? Is it to benefit the Canadian producer and consumer? I asked the Prime Minister a simple question yesterday, as to how the federal power commission is getting along; because after all, we will have a pipe line from Winnipeg onward provided the federal power commission of the United States allows us to have it. The Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke of the pipe line being under the laws of Canada. Yes, the statute, the incorporation, is under the laws of Canada, but the actions of this corporation are dependent on a corporate body under the United States government. I asked the Prime Minister how are things going over there, have you an observer, and the answer was that there was no information.

What are they doing over there? For the past three months they have been discussing the matter. They have 200 pounds of documents, and there are 118 lawyers discussing it. There are 112 different dissenting interests. Sometimes I think before they are through they will give us an idea as to the meaning of eternity. Yes, on and on they go; and we in Canada are to have a pipe line from Winnipeg onward to meet the demands of eastern Canada if the federal power commission in its wisdom, decides—its decision then being subject to appeal to the supreme court of the United States—that gas shall be imported into the United States.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce said last night that one of the reasons we are in this position where time is so much of the essence is the tightness of money, that recently the supply of money has become tight. Sir, money may have become tight, but money is still available for sound projects even though the interest rate may be a little higher. If Trans-Canada were a good risk it would not have to go begging all over Canada and the United States to get money and finally end by asking for a guarantee of the people of Canada. It is not that money is tight, but the fact that this company has nothing but the adventuresome spirit as capital in coming before the Canadian people and endeavouring to put over this proposition.

Is it beneficial to the people of Canada? Well, the place to go and find these things is in the records of the federal power commission. I have the record here showing the prices that are to be paid.

What are the prices that are to be paid by these American companies, including Mid-Western Pipe Line Company, the infant of the Tennessee corporation that is headed by Gardiner Symonds, who also happens to be a member of the executive of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines? They are going to see to it that the Canadian gas consumers will be obliged to pay unusually high retail prices

Secretary of State for External Affairs how different things would be. In the last few days considerable reference has been made to a book containing a compilation of certain addresses given by the hon. gentleman. While I cannot on this occasion, with my limitation of time, quote extensively from that book I do commend it to the Prime Minister. It is entitled "Democracy in World Politics". It is a work well worthy of study. The Prime Minister might permit the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce to have a look at it. The Prime Minister has learned in recent days that under our system of government the sovereign is the people, and I should like to quote from page 60 of this book where the following is stated:

> In the eighteenth century, the sovereigns in question were usually individuals. Today they are hundreds of legislators, millions of newspaper readers, radio listeners, or television viewers. Particularly our sovereigns are voters—

The Prime Minister found that out in the last two days, when on behalf of this government he embarked upon the most supercilious and cynical disregard for parliament, when he established executive absolutism, when he decided to place the party which he represents above parliament. The people of Canada spoke, and yesterday the Prime Minister made a partial retreat. It was not a retreat to restore to parliament its rights. I should like to quote from this book several particularly appropriate quotations. Speaking about the value of parliament, the hon. gentleman has this to say on page 68:

> A substantial part of their value, like that of national parliaments, lies precisely in the ability to mobilize and focus opinions, to encourage the formulation, expression, and dramatic confrontation, of major viewpoints.

I give that to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister tried to prevent that. Two weeks ago we asked a number of questions, and instead of answering any of those questions those associated with him hid behind their majority and tried to delude parliament and the Canadian people. Again my hon. friend had this to say:

> By bringing issues out into the public, and ventilating them, throwing light into dark places—

> —and thereby encouraging more care and responsibility by administrative authorities who understandably hesitate to do things of which they would be ashamed if they were publicly examined in a searching forum.

Then on another page he says in effect—I could give the exact quotation if necessary—that democracy is more than the counting of heads. I suggest that this book of wise information henceforth be the basis upon which the Prime Minister and those associated with him should endeavour once more to restore parliament to its former position. When the Minister of Finance endeavoured to explain why such devious methods were being used to ration freedom of speech and to deny it, he stood in his place and said there were two reasons, one being that on one occasion I had made a speech over the radio. I read that portion of the speech which he used, along with the triumvirate who have endeavoured to deny parliament its rights. The excuse given by the minister was not even subtle. This is what I said on that occasion:

> In July, 1955, the Conservative party fought, under the inspiring leadership and generalship of George Drew, for the restoration of parliamentary supremacy. That was when Mr. Howe tried to force through parliament the grant to himself of a blank cheque of absolute and dictatorial powers under the Defence Production Act. That battle we won. But let me tell you that the fight we put on then will appear but a skirmish beside the battle we shall wage when the bill respecting Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited comes before parliament.

The minister says, with that specious sanctimoniousness he displays—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that the reason they brought in closure, the reason we are denied free speech, the reason we have departed from the principles of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and others is that suggestion I made. What an explanation.

An hon. Member: What a speech.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yesterday the Prime Minister, finding that he was on a bed of public torture because of his own actions, was brought out of his position and, having found himself in that position, revealed in his speech that after all even a majority as great as he enjoys must have a conscience for parliament. Oh, you have the power; you count your heads, while the Secretary of State for External Affairs says that democracy is more than that. You thought you could override, that you could conceal by the overwhelming power of your majority, but the Prime Minister and those associated with him have learned that the men and women across Canada, the citizens, the press of this country, without regard to party considerations, will have none of it.

Yesterday the Prime Minister, endeavoured once more, by a technique so crude as to be transparent, to return out of the kindness of his heart a portion of the rights of parliament. The Prime Minister has always been a great student of history. One has to go back to the days of James or Charles in order to see similar conduct, conduct which was generally believed to have ended for all time; but that spirit of tyranny came back during of view being espoused by the hon. member for Peace River, coming as he does from the province of Alberta and to a certain extent being a spokesman for the oil producers of that province, but coming from the Minister of Trade and Commerce I do not think it is a legitimate argument. It seems to me it arises out of a complete misunderstanding of the whole basis of the function of a public carrier in this country.

To say that because a thing is publicly owned by a crown corporation which is not primarily concerned with the making of profits but only with returning to the general citizenry of Canada a reasonable return on the public funds which have been invested, it is going to be put in an awkward position or is going to work to the disadvantage of either the producers or the consumers, is not a reasonable statement in my view. It is obvious to me on which side of that proposition the balance of favour lies.

I am no expert in the transmission of gas, but I think everyone regards this pipe line as essentially a public carrier. What would have prevented the government from establishing a policy that would create a crown-owned corporation which would have required a producer pool on one end of the line, if you like, and a consumer pool on the other end of the line? These two groups could have negotiated the price of gas at arm's length and there could have been charged, for the purpose of carrying the gas through the line, a reasonable and proper cost of operation plus enough to provide a small return on the investment. There may be objections to that approach to the question, but frankly I have not been able to see them. That would mean a producer would receive as nearly as possible the full value of his product and the consumer would receive, as nearly as possible, gas at cost price plus the cost of transmission across the country.

Another objection which the minister raised was that there are other fuels besides gas in the picture in eastern Canada, and of course no one can deny that. Let me say first, however, that the statement made by the minister points up as clearly as anything can the correctness of the position so often taken in this house by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and other hon. members of this group, in which they advocated the development of a proper fuel policy in this country and the setting up of a national fuel board.

I would suggest that when we move into this field, which is so obviously an undertaking of national magnitude, it would be a good time to consider the development of that kind of policy. The best way to consider the development of that kind of policy would be to create this pipe line as a publicly-owned corporation so that the policies which were pursued by it would be under the responsibility of the government and of parliament and of the people of Canada. I would submit that the argument of the minister does not constitute a very adequate reason against the proposal which has been advanced by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and other members speaking on behalf of this group.

I did not take note of the time when I rose, but I imagine that my time has almost expired. In conclusion I wish to say that during the little opportunity there has been for this debate to progress I have been convinced of the soundness and the correctness of the position advanced by those in this corner of the house. If there might be some difficulty in implementing the policy which we are proposing at this time, if as the minister tries to maintain it would result in some little delay in starting the construction of the pipe line, it would be consistent with the statement he himself made that it would be more in the interests of long-term planning for us to avoid surrendering these things in the interests of a short-term advantage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, in the time at my disposal I intend to deal with two matters only. One is the action of the government in recent days and the effect of that action on parliamentary government, and, secondly, the fact that under the prices provided for the sale of this gas to United States interests, Canadian producers and consumers are being sacrificed on the altar of the overwhelming ambition of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

I like to recall the days when the Prime Minister was a democrat, when he was president of the Canadian Bar Association, and when he made some of the most attractive and alluring speeches on the subject of freedom and democracy. I was particularly impressed with his presidential address delivered in 1931, when he dealt with parliamentary government, and the need of preserving those things which are of the essence of democracy, and the grave danger of deviating from principles for immediate advantage. On that occasion he quoted with approval the words of Lord Bryce as follows:

> Few people stop to think of the principles. What interests them is the concrete instance and it would be deemed pedantic to suggest that an apparent immediate benefit should be forgone lest deviation from principle should set a dangerous precedent.

Never was that case better stated than 25 years or more ago by the present Prime Minister of Canada. Indeed, if the Prime Minister would take into his confidence the that this pipe line is going to remain in Canada. Nobody has disputed the fact that the board of transport commissioners will have jurisdiction over it. But the fact remains—and I think the minister will agree with this—that the management of an operating company does have something to do with the policies that are followed by that company, even though there are certain legislative controls over its operation, and that the policy of a company which is set by a board of directors has something to do with how the operations of that company are carried out. It seems to me that is the crux of the matter about which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar was speaking. For the minister to attempt to throw up this smoke screen about the pipe line still being in Canada and therefore under Canadian jurisdiction is to beg the question entirely.

Mr. Wylie: The majority of directors are going to be Canadians; by statute, they have to be.

Mr. Knight: So they have to be in the loan companies.

Mr. Barnett: I would suggest that across this country there is a genuine and increasing concern, particularly among the working people who are dependent upon the operations of industries of various kinds for their jobs, their incomes, for the maintenance of the stability of their homes and the welfare of their children, over the fact that more and more of the industrial policy of this country is being made by and is under the control of people who are outside of it.

When that condition prevails, where you have Canadian industry subsidiary to the operations of its counterpart across the line or under the control of people whose first loyalty as citizens is to another country, situations are going to arise in increasing measure whereby the welfare of the Canadian working people will be pushed to the sidelines in the interest, first of all, of the profits of the people who direct the private enterprise. Second, when it comes to a choice between the welfare of the working people in this country and those on the other side of the line, those in control quite naturally and properly are going to give their prior loyalty to the interests and welfare of the people in the country to which they belong. That, I submit, is a real and legitimate cause for concern on the part of hon. members of this group, and one which we certainly should put forward in connection with the proposal under discussion.

The minister has attempted to list some of the objections he sees to the proposal which this group has made that a project of this magnitude, which is in effect a national public utility, should be under the ownership and direction of a crown corporation. He has attempted to list some of the objections which he feels would prevent him from—as I recall his words—"grasping the nettle of public ownership". I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that I still have not been convinced by what the minister has had to say on that score.

The first objection, of course, was that apart from the deal which he is proposing, no pipe would be available. Well, in reply to that I would say that two things become evident. The first is that if no pipe is available for the construction of a utility of this kind in Canada, we are today reaping the seeds of the mismanagement or lack of management in the approach to this whole pipe-line question which has rested on the shoulders of the government over the last five years. Second, and apart from that, it is an admission that someone is holding a gun to the head of the government. Surely the minister does not expect the members of the Canadian parliament to welcome a situation wherein anybody is holding a gun to the head of the government, nor can we be expected to approve of a situation under which that possibility has been allowed to develop.

Another objection which has been raised is in connection with the policy it is suggested is held by the government of the province of Alberta or, as suggested by the hon. member for Peace River, the oil-producing interests. There again I suggest a situation is revealed which, if it is correct, is completely intolerable to self-respecting Canadian citizens and hon. members of parliament. No group of private interests, oil-producing or otherwise, and no single provincial government in Canada should be allowed to hold a gun against the heads of the rest of the people of Canada.

If those things are true then I would suggest there can be only two explanations. One is that the minister has lacked the courage to face up to the situation, a thing I would hesitate to suggest. The other is that over the course of the last few years the minister has not had the vision to foresee that this kind of situation was developing, and he did not take the proper action in the face of it.

Another objection brought up by the minister and elaborated upon to a certain extent by the hon. member for Peace River—and this relates specifically to the proposal that the pipe line should be a publicly-owned utility—was that the owners of the pipe line were going to be caught in a price squeeze between the producers on the one hand and the consumers on the other. Perhaps there might have been an excuse for that point last February when, as they will recall, they made a number of delaying motions of one kind or another, but when nevertheless an agreement was reached that the subject matter of that bill would be referred to a standing committee of the house where it did receive a very thorough discussion.

I am rather surprised that in the light of their experience last year and in the light of the kind of support they had last year for having what was known as the international rivers improvements bill referred to a standing committee of the house, this year they have not seen fit to support the idea of having this bill sent to a committee where it could have received proper and adequate study.

Mr. Wylie: You are only a new member; you will learn.

Mr. Barnett: One can reflect upon the situation that exists in this house, and in the light of the kind of approach that was taken by the hon. member for Macleod last night one can say that in view of the fact that the Social Credit group is playing footsie with the government party, if I were to—

Mr. Wylie: We would rather play footsie with them than play it with the communists.

Mr. Ellis: You are using the same tactics.

Mr. Barnett: If I were to follow the tactics that were employed last night by the hon. member for Macleod, in the light of this association, this playing footsie, I should be getting up here today and suggesting that I expect any day to hear that the premier of British Columbia is offering a cabinet post to the leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia. That makes just about as much sense as the kind of thing the hon. member for Macleod said in this house last night. I would suggest also that perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be well advised to have regard for the source from which the only support he has received in this house is coming, outside of that which is being given to him by his own followers, because it has become only too apparent to me that the members of the Social Credit group in this house seem only too willing not only last year but this year, to lend support to any proposition that is going to sell the birthright of the Canadian people for a mess of potage.

Mr. Wylie: You are nuts.

Mr. Barnett: And in so doing they appear to be only too ready to end up by backing any provincial government, be it that of British Columbia or of Alberta, which is about to do that kind of thing.

Mr. Wylie: He has the rope; all he has to do now is hang himself.

Mr. Barnett: If I were home in British Columbia—

Mr. Hansell: You had better go there.

Mr. Wylie: He will stay there, too.

Mr. Barnett: —I would not be very much surprised to see this kind of proposition being brought forward, because out there we are becoming used to this kind of thing under the leadership of the political maverick who is now premier of British Columbia. We scarcely lift an eyebrow any more when somebody brings in a proposal to give away valuable natural resources, a valuable part of the heritage, or the wealth of the Canadian people. But I must confess that I am still at the stage where I am rather surprised to see that sort of thing being brought in by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Last year he did take some action which, as is well known, was supported by the members of this group, to prevent the implementation of what quite frankly I and my colleagues considered to be a harebrained scheme that was going to be implemented by Mr. Bennett, the premier of British Columbia, with his colleagues, Mr. Bonner and Mr. Sommers, to name only some of them. On that occasion the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a statement which I think still stands. On February 4 of last year he made these remarks, which will be found at page 871 of Hansard:

> It will be the duty of the government of Canada to make sure that the short-run advantage is consistent with long-term planning.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have listened to some of the statements made by the minister in this debate, and the best I am able to say about them is that there may be some minor short-term advantage in what he is proposing to the house but, in my opinion, certainly this proposal is not, to use the minister's words, consistent with long-term planning.

I was rather surprised that again last night the minister should reiterate what he had previously said, and which had been seconded and repeated by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in his speech, about the control remaining in Canadian hands because the pipe line was being built in Canada. He went on to repeat a long list of controls that were exercised by the board of transport commissioners, by the governments of the provinces, by the power of the government over export permits for gas, and so on.

I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that the minister has obviously missed the whole point that my leader attempted to make in regard to this matter of Canadian control. Nobody in this house has disputed the fact

In any event, we are faced here with a patchwork solution which is part private enterprise and part public enterprise. Not only do we have a patchwork solution but we have had a patchwork procedure. The minister in his enthusiasm, and I think perhaps that is the key, because the minister is an enthusiast, felt he had to get this thing done and he found it was slipping out of his grasp. He not only got himself involved in a patchwork solution in order to get his result, but he has forced on this house a method of procedure which is also patchwork and wholly undesirable.

Mr. Barnett: I recall, Mr. Chairman, that quite some time ago now the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich was speaking about this bill and the pipe-line construction. He then drew to the attention of the house the fact that the passage or otherwise of this bill was not going to make much difference to the amount of natural gas that was going to be available on Vancouver island. The inference one could probably draw from his remarks at that time was that not many of his constituents or mine were very greatly concerned about this particular pipe line.

However, I have had one or two communications indicating that the situation in that respect has been changed. Perhaps the best example is a telegram which I received yesterday morning from the officers of the local union to which I happen to belong. Perhaps a little facetiously they suggest:

> Request you ask "Santa" Howe to loan us $10 million to build a hot air pipe line from east.

I bring that to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, to indicate that as this situation has developed, the question not only of a pipe line but of parliament itself seems to have become increasingly involved in this debate and is becoming of concern to the citizens of Canada even as far from Ottawa as Vancouver island. So, Mr. Chairman, I am quite happy to rise for the first time to take some part in this discussion.

During the course of this debate there have been various people quoted on a variety of subjects. I have a short quotation here which I should like to give to the committee at this time. It reads as follows:

> Mr. Blackmore: ...We are not staging a filibuster, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce unfairly suggested—
>
> Mr. Tucker: It is a good imitation.
> Mr. Blackmore: —on Friday, February 11, as reported at page 1100 of Hansard. I am really astounded that after the very small amount of discussion we carried on, our opposition should be talking about a filibuster. It indicates that in Canada parliament has fallen to a contemptibly low level when people cannot talk any longer than we have talked about a matter of the importance of this bill without having a smear made against them.

[Mr. Michener.]

That, Mr. Chairman, is a quotation taken from the remarks made on February 22, 1955, by the hon. member for Lethbridge, as found at page 1417 of Hansard for that date. Having read that, I must say I am rather reminded of the contribution, if one could call it that, which was made to this discussion last night by the hon. member for Macleod. I am reminded of his speech by the last phrase which I quoted from the hon. member for Lethbridge, in which he says:

> . . . we have talked about a matter of the importance of this bill without having a smear made against them.

Last night the hon. member for Macleod made one or two references, and I listened to him carefully, to people whom he described as communists.

Mr. Hansell: I did not say that.

Mr. Barnett: I am not suggesting whom he described as communists. He described some people out in front of the building as communists, and a number of other people. I would simply like to say that I happen to have had a little bit of experience in fighting communists a few years ago when the union to which I belonged was controlled by communist leadership. I want to say also that as a result of that experience I have a little bit of acquaintanceship and knowledge of what are often referred to as communist tactics and the communist approach. In the speech which was made last night by the hon. member for Macleod, I had no difficulty whatever in recognizing the use of the kind of tactics which, of my own knowledge, I know only too well are employed by communists, the technique of the smear and the big lie.

Having had some experience in dealing with people who are professionals in the use of those tactics, I can only add that I feel the hon. member for Macleod has quite a bit to learn; that his technique, to put it mildly, is rather clumsy, and that if he were to go to the Lenin institute and take a finishing course he might be more successful in fooling more of the people in Canada than his remarks last night are apt to do.

To come back to the remarks of the hon. member for Lethbridge of last February, I am reminded that not only the hon. member for Macleod but the leader of the Social Credit group, the hon. member for Peace River, at the outset of their speeches dwelt with the question of the filibuster which they accused the opponents of the present measure of carrying on. Because of that fact perhaps I should point out to them that there are some differences between the situation that prevails now and the situation that prevailed

What would make sense? I suggest that if Trans-Canada, who so confidently asserted their ability to build this all-Canadian natural gas pipe line were asked to perform, that would make sense to me. If they were asked to perform or forfeit their permit, that would make sense. Whether or not they will or whether or not they can is something the minister has probably concerned himself with over the last many months. I am sure he has been concerned about whether they can.

I have suggested that perhaps they do not want to, that they are not interested unless they can get gas across the border at Emerson. That is natural. The controlling interest in this company, the Tennessee company which appears to be making the decisions as far as the Trans-Canada company is concerned, want to distribute Alberta gas in the midwestern states.

As soon as they came into the picture last year the minister should have been on notice that there was trouble ahead, because here was this Tennessee company seeking to displace the natural purchasers of surplus gas in that area, the established distributing companies, Northern Natural, Peoples and others. Trans-Canada is making an attempt to displace them in going before the federal power commission for that purpose. Anyone who knows the economics and the control of public utilities as well as the minister does might well have been on guard, knowing that the federal authorities were not going to have an open and shut case before them but that they were going to have the most strenuous opposition to this project of Tennessee.

Even after the northern Ontario section was agreed upon the minister should then have been aware of the fact that his difficulties were not over. It has been said that the import of gas at Emerson by Tennessee will never be approved, and that may be so. But another warning was given in a report which the minister is certain to have read. I refer to the report of Clarkson, Gordon and Company dated November 18, 1955, which states:

> It would, therefore, appear desirable that further consideration should be given to the development of a plan of action to be adopted in the event that the company's plans should fail.

That was the company's plan under which the northern Ontario section would be built with the assistance of the Ontario government and of this government. There in November of last year was a distinct warning. If this project were to fail or were to depend upon the availability of pipe and the government were to be presented, in order to get something done, with demands of the kind that are embodied in this bill on the part of Trans-Canada, it seems to me that the government if it had been alert should have developed some alternative means of dealing with this project.

I should like to have seen the government at that stage explore the possibility of bringing pipe from the United Kingdom. It seems to me that with as much wheat as we have to sell, the difficulty about exchange and the difficulty of the United Kingdom in obtaining dollars, if the government is going to use public funds in any way in connection with this proposition and there is no pipe available in Canada, it would have been a natural trade arrangement to import pipe from the United Kingdom as an offset to our sales of wheat to that country.

Now, if what I have said is correct, it would make sense to cancel this contract with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. It would make sense to me, if that were done, to afford other Canadian companies—there are 22 that have been incorporated—an opportunity to build the pipe line. Some of them have the capacity, but whether they have the power is another matter. Canadian interests should be given an opportunity to carry on from the point where the others have left off. I do not think the government is lacking the power to bring that about. They could make an arrangement with Trans-Canada which would make the work of Trans-Canada available to their successors. It seems to me that would make sense.

We do not know, we are not in a position to say, but the minister says there is no other private company which will undertake the building of this line. We have heard of several and we should like to investigate those. It is for that reason we wanted this matter sent to a committee. Whether or not there are such companies, it seems to me it would make good sense to ascertain that fact and to really make sure there are no other Canadian interests capable of doing this work before we go on to the next stage which we have advocated as a policy, that is the use of public funds to build the line.

We have not advocated public operation of this system. We have agreed that if it cannot be constructed by private capital, then the project should be undertaken for the good of Canada as a whole and the construction should be undertaken as a public enterprise. That is not a difficult thing, either, to bring about in a sensible way. The Trans-Canada scheme is there, and it could be taken over. Before we go to that stage, because of the many complications that are involved we should like to be satisfied that it is necessary.

Mr. Tanner's answer was:

Oh, no, no, it could not develop upon that but that would be helpful to us in the early years . . . We feel it is not essential but we feel it is helpful . . .

So there we have the early promise, when this liaison between Trans-Canada and the government began, of construction of a line on an all-Canadian route without assistance. Then we have the next step when Trans-Canada found either that it had promised more than it could perform or than it wished to perform.

I raise that point because Trans-Canada, as has often been pointed out in the course of the last two days, is owned 83 per cent by three large United States corporations all interested in the transmission of oil and gas, namely the Tennessee Corporation, Gulf and Continental and their subsidiaries and it may be questioned whether their real interest in Alberta gas or western gas is not the imposition of that gas into the United States, and whether they have any serious intention of bringing gas to eastern Canada for the benefit of Canadians. If they had any serious intention of doing so, it is fairly evident that corporations with those resources could do it if they wished. So when they fail and come to the government for help, one is justified in questioning the wisdom of getting mixed up in a complicated arrangement that is neither private enterprise nor crown corporation but a confusing mixture of the two.

That was the situation that arose out of the first arrangement for the development of the northern Ontario section, which is part of this bill. But that has been worse confounded by the addition of another part of this bill which provides for the lending of money to build what is called the western section of the line, so that you have a mixture of ideas and a mixture of purposes and nobody can determine from this legislation what its real intent is and what it will lead to.

Several conjectures have been made, but I think it is a fair conjecture to say that the minister who said that he would never be party to building a line that started nowhere and ended nowhere is doing exactly that with this bill. He will have a 34-inch pipe line starting at the Alberta border and running to the vicinity of Winnipeg, and that is all there is to it. Here is $80 million to do that. What happens then? This bill does not say. This bill does not provide that.

This bill sets up a northern Ontario corporation. It would be much better called something else. It is not a northern Ontario corporation. It begins with a western pipe line, or a western section. It is at least a mid-Canada crown corporation or a Canadian crown corporation. It is a misnomer to call it a northern Ontario corporation, because it does not provide within its terms for the construction of the northern Ontario section. It only provides for this loan of $130 million, enough to build the western section and not enough in addition for the northern Ontario section. That is all the minister will have, as I say, a pipe line that begins nowhere and ends nowhere. He has a gap in Alberta from the producers, a gap from Winnipeg to the United States border, and he has a gap from Winnipeg to the Ontario border. There is not enough provision for building in northern Ontario, at least not in this bill.

Mr. Diefenbaker: East is east and west is west, and never the twain shall meet.

Mr. Michener: That is correct. At least it is not clear from this bill how east will meet west or how those gaps will be closed. That is the sort of patchwork policy we have presented to us as the epitome of this great government's national fuel policy, with questions innumerable unanswered, of which I have put only a few to the minister; I hope he will attempt to deal with them.

In any event, whatever may be the disposition of this bill, it is not clear what will be accomplished by it. I think it is proper that those of us who would like to see this project done in the right way—because we realize that it is important—should question the way in which it is being done. The minister and others may say, "What do you suggest?" The opposition are often asked to suggest a solution. Mr. Chairman, so far we have had only one day in which it has been possible to ask questions of the minister and to obtain information in the course of considering the government's policy, and it is not to be expected of any hon. member of this house that he should find out the alternatives and suggest them in positive terms. However, I should like to suggest what would make sense to me.

This is a project in which I think every member of this house believes. Certainly I do not yield place to any member in my desire to see this great reservoir of natural gas made available for use in Canada as far as possible. I think that is a common objective. We are not to be represented as trying to oppose the right solution of this very important project. It is not a problem that will be solved only for ourselves; it is a problem that will be solved for the future. It is therefore important that the right solution should be found. On that account I say we want the right solution now. We are concerned about having this job done, but we are concerned about having it done in the right way at this time.

has taken its part in regulating the distribution of oil. But now the government is concerned with bringing another fuel into competition with that same oil, and that will be the effect of introducing gas particularly for heating purposes in the eastern cities, where oil has become very largely used because of its convenience.

Then we have another field which perhaps should not be left unconsidered; that is the possibility of producing power from uranium. The government may have some views with respect to when hydroelectric power or heat or other energy from uranium will become commercially practicable and usable in Canada, and I should think this has a very important relation to the construction of a natural gas pipe line which will not be amortized within 20 or 25 years or perhaps more. If uranium should become a cheaper and better fuel within that time, then perhaps that is a consideration. We have heard nothing about that. When the minister speaks again on the bill I hope he will deal with these questions involving the relationship of natural gas to other fuels.

I come now to the natural gas transportation problem with which the bill attempts to deal. Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba all have natural gas in some quantity, Alberta and British Columbia particularly. Natural gas has long been known and used in Ontario, but there it was a matter of provincial concern. Now the problem of taking gas across provincial boundaries arises, and it is purely a transportation problem. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the government is up against a real test of its leadership when it attempts to solve this problem, and when it puts before the house the bill now before us the government must be judged with respect to whether it is giving that leadership in a national fuel policy which this country deserves.

It is necessarily a federal problem, as I have said, and it is basically a federal problem because the power of federal finance is the power which is capable of meeting the deficiencies of private finance if that is necessary. We all know that since the war the centralization of revenues in the federal government and the limited resources of the provinces have put a greater onus on the federal authority to give a lead and to make finances available for the development of Canadian resources and for the development of a fuel policy such as we are considering today.

In 1949 the pipe-line bill was introduced by the government, and in part 2 we have a recognition of the problem of transportation of oil. That part provides that oil pipe lines shall be common carriers and shall carry oil from the west to the east or to the Pacific coast as common carriers. There is also provision for tariffs and rates. But at that time at least the sponsors of the bill did not consider that natural gas was of sufficient importance to give it the same status. So we have part 3 of that legislation referring to natural gas but not providing that the operators of pipe lines shall be common carriers, and making no provision with respect to rates.

Therefore we see that the approach as long ago as 1949, when the policy was first developed, was one of a secondary position for natural gas. Subsequently under that legislation parliament incorporated 22 companies with the power to build pipe lines, and from that point on it seemed that the government was prepared to let nature take its course for the next two or three years. The government did accept and all parties in the house concurred in a policy which required natural gas pipe lines to be built over all-Canadian routes. We have that limitation and the limitation which the minister has indicated with respect to the export of gas, restricting it to gas which is not needed for present or future Canadian purposes. That is the additional development in respect of policy up to the point at which we have arrived today.

Now we have this bill, and it seems to embody the government's thinking with respect to the solution of the problem of transportation of natural gas. This at least is the first official measure that has come before the house. We have heard many announcements in the course of the past three years, and to some extent we have been able to follow the negotiations, manipulations and various machinations of those who have been interested in the transporting of natural gas. In 1954 the transport board gave authority to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, and from that time to the present it appears that this corporation has been the chosen instrument of policy of the government and still is today, notwithstanding its repeated failures.

It is perhaps worth while to draw attention at this moment to the terms under which Trans-Canada Pipe Lines undertook to perform if it were given a permit by the transport board. These words have not been quoted; they appear in the transcript of the hearing before the board of transport commissioners on June 15, 1954. Counsel for the company had Mr. Tanner, the president of Trans-Canada, in the box and asked him this question:

> In your opinion is the development and construction of the Trans-Canada line dependent upon the success or failure of that application before the federal power commission?

have a crown corporation for the purpose of lending money, not to Canadians but to non-Canadians.

I suppose we have to consider this bill as an expression of the national energy and fuel policy of this government in so far as it relates to natural gas. For at least five years and for most of ten prosperous years since the war Canadians have become aware that the discovery of natural gas in great quantities in the western provinces of Alberta and British Columbia, and more recently in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, has made available a great potential source of energy and power, not only for the areas in which the gas has been found but for other parts of Canada and adjoining areas in the United States.

In order that it may be used this new fuel must be moved from the part of Canada in which it has been discovered to the industrial and more populous areas of the country. Therefore it must cross provincial boundaries, and in doing so it becomes a subject of federal jurisdiction. How the federal government handles this problem is of great importance to the Canadian economy. It is of great importance to Canadians today and it will be of equal importance to generations of Canadians to come. We must examine this bill in the context of a national fuel policy. Its relationship to other sources of energy is certainly relevant when we examine the government's plan for making natural gas fit into any national energy policy.

We do not need to concern ourselves with wood any more, as that has ceased to be more than a local heating fuel, but I suggest that coal is of great importance and the relationship of this fuel to coal is something which the government must have under consideration. I should like to quote what one of our leading public servants, Dr. G. S. Hume, director general of scientific services, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, had to say about the importance of coal in February last:

> But it has been recognized that coal still fills the largest part of our energy requirements, and that the continued existence of coal mines is essential for national security.

No one would doubt that. I should like to ask the government what is their idea as to the relationship and effect of this program with respect to natural gas upon coal mines and coal distribution. All members of the house have seen the brief submitted by the coal dock owners' association and are aware of their concern over what will happen to the distribution of coal in the event that natural gas is made a competitive fuel through the use of public funds.

[Mr. Michener.]

Under the policy of the government the transportation of coal itself, both from Alberta and from the maritimes, has been subsidized by public funds. Here public funds are being used to introduce another fuel into central Canada in competition, and I should like to ask the government what it has to say about that. So far there has been no mention of that matter, but it seems to me it is relevant to know where the government stands on this very important issue.

Another source of energy is hydroelectric power, and the importance of an energy policy for Canada is well illustrated by the results of the use of hydro power in our three great industrial provinces, Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia. What has put those provinces ahead in industry is the use of power. One has only to consider that every person residing in those provinces has at his disposal through hydroelectric power the equivalent in slave labour of 10 or 12 people working for him day and night and that thereby his production and standard of living are increased. It is in line with that great increase in our material well-being that hydroelectric power has been so important.

However, hydroelectric power has been developed in some places through a public corporation at public expense and there the consideration arises, what price is to be charged the consumer? Are you to charge the user of hydroelectric power on a graded scale depending on his distance from the source of the power and the length of the line that reaches him, or are you to charge the same price everywhere in one system of generation and distribution? That is a problem that will arise in connection with natural gas distribution under public auspices. What will be the policy of the government?

(Translation):

What will the good people of Montreal say when they find that the gas is selling cheaper in Toronto than in Montreal?

(Text):

Out of deference to my constituents I have to use the language which I hope they will not understand. Now, Mr. Chairman, the next fuel of importance is oil. We have seen oil, largely from the same source as natural gas, transported to the Pacific coast and to eastern Canada at no expense to the public treasury but by private initiative and by pipe lines privately financed and built. Therefore the government has not the same responsibility there as it has in this case, where it is intervening in the project. Those lines are a matter of federal concern because they cross interprovincial and in some cases international boundaries, and the government

WATER RESOURCES

UPPER THAMES VALLEY AUTHORITY—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT DECISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the government as yet reached a decision with respect to whether or not it intends to contribute to the completion of the dams under the Upper Thames valley authority?

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

STATEMENT AS TO DEVELOPMENTS IN CHRYSANTHEMUM CULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCubbin (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich asked me a question with respect to chrysanthemum culture developments at the experimental station at Saanichton, British Columbia, and I wish to make a short statement in answer to that question.

It has been known for many years that the flowering of chrysanthemums may be controlled by manipulation of daylight. During the late forties it was conceived that this light and dark response reaction might be applied to schedule blooming on a year-round basis. Canadian producers who pioneered in this type of production soon encountered problems and studies were initiated at Ottawa to meet those problems.

At present the year-round schedules are so precise that the work of the horticulture division is directed toward the study of various factors affecting flower bud development.

At present roughly 70 per cent of the year-round production is located in Ontario, and this is relative to the portion of greenhouse space in Canada.

The possibility of greatly increasing year-round chrysanthemum production on Vancouver island depends on expansion of greenhouse space suitable for year-round production, and whether it is able to compete with local production on the very competitive eastern market.

Improvement in the quality of outdoor-grown chrysanthemums may be achieved by protection of the open blooms, and the experimental farm at Saanichton has conducted studies using plastic covers for this purpose. This will undoubtedly reduce the losses that growers experience during a rainy fall.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I direct a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, this time to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport. Will the parliamentary assistant bring that report to the attention of the proper authorities so they may make provision for additional aircraft to move this anticipated greater trade?

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE CORPORATION

CONSTITUTION OF CROWN COMPANY TO CONSTRUCT PIPE LINE, MAKE SHORT-TERM LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, May 28, consideration in committee of Bill No. 298, to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 4—Body corporate.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss clause 4 of Bill No. 298—

Mr. Boucher: Attaboy!

Mr. Michener: —which creates a crown corporation, or at least refers to a crown corporation which is for all purposes an agent of Her Majesty in the right of Canada. It is perhaps ironic that the ban which has prevented us from discussing clauses 1, 2 and 3 of the bill should be lifted at this point to give us a glimpse of the intention of the government to create another crown corporation.

This clause is precisely the same as the clauses in 20 other statutes of this parliament which have created crown corporations, most of them during the tenure in office of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I should think most of them at his instance. We have before us the prospect of a 21st crown corporation. Those who are card players may wonder whether it is a case of 21 or bust. In any event this is No. 21.

The Auditor General in his report refers to 9 proprietary crown corporations and 11 crown agencies. The proprietary corporations consist of the C.B.C., the farmers' loan board, Eldorado Mining and others, while the agencies cover a wide range of activities many of them normally provided by private corporations such as the lending of money to Canadians, mining, transportation, manufacturing, and aviation. These represent a broad field of government activity in business through crown corporations. Now we are to

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

SUGGESTED RELIEF TO TAXPAYERS THIS YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of a report in the Toronto Daily Star indicating a slow-down in business in the United States, and in order to help prevent the same thing happening here, would the Prime Minister consider affording some relief to taxpayers this year instead of waiting for an election year?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): It is not the Prime Minister who affords relief to the taxpayers. It is on the recommendation of the government that a budget is proposed, and we made the recommendation to the house that we felt was in the public interest this year.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE WITH MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Trade and Commerce say whether there has been any correspondence, confidential or otherwise, between himself and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines at any time since May 8 of this year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my offhand report is no, but to answer the question I would need to search my files. I shall be glad to do so and answer tomorrow.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—CONTRACT FOR PIPE FOR NORTHERN ONTARIO SECTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the report appearing in the press this morning about a contract for pipe for the northern Ontario section of the trans-Canada pipe line, is it the understanding of the government that the northern Ontario section is to be built by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines or, on the other hand, if the measure now before the house passes is it to be built by the crown corporation that the government proposes to set up?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): It would be built by the crown corporation, of course, under contracts for which tenders would be called in the usual way.

Mr. Drew: I would draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the press announcement today indicates a contract has been made for the purchase of pipe for the northern Ontario section by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I have not seen that report, nor did I inspire it.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REFERENCE TO DESIGN FOR NEW 4-CENT STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In using as its design for the new 4-cent stamp, which I have before me, a line of elk standing in military precision, is the government trying to portray as a national symbol the Liberal party toeing the line in parliament?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MAGOG, QUEBEC—STATEMENT ON REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT FRASER-BRACE CO.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Yesterday, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) asked me a question to which I wish to make this reply.

The Fraser-Brace employees involved at Magog, Quebec, were refused insurance benefits under subsection 2 of section 63 of the Unemployment Insurance Act on the grounds that they had lost their employment due to a labour dispute and had not proved that they were not participating in the dispute. However, an appeal of this refusal to the board of referees on behalf of 40 claimants has already been lodged.

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, based on his comment that an appeal has already been lodged on behalf of 40 of the 78 employees. My question yesterday was whether the minister would see that the claims were processed as quickly as possible. Did the minister intend to intimate that such is the intention of his department?

Mr. Gregg: I can assure the hon. member that the board of referees will process them just as quickly as possible, and whatever conclusion is arrived at on behalf of those 40 will apply to all of them, if they are of the same grade or class.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON—INQUIRY AS TO RESTORATION MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Will the question of restoration measures for the Atlantic salmon fisheries be on the agenda or be discussed at the meeting of the international commission on the northwest Atlantic fisheries being held in Halifax June 11 to June 16? If so, what measures are being recommended by the Department of Fisheries to make sure that the Atlantic salmon does not disappear from eastern Canadian waters?

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. The international commission on the northwest Atlantic fisheries is composed of ten nations which exploit the fishery resources of the high seas in the northwest Atlantic. As the Atlantic salmon is anadromous and is exploited only by a Canadian commercial fishing fleet, it does not come within the terms of this commission.

As far as the second part of the question is concerned, the federal government and the governments of the Atlantic provinces are all very much concerned about the great pressure which is now exerted on the Atlantic salmon fishery. That pressure is due to the increasing industrialization of the Atlantic provinces, with the greater use of streams for industrial and domestic purposes, and also the great increase in the number of fishermen who are trying to catch Atlantic salmon, that increase being due to the ever-increasing prosperity of the country; more people have more time and money to go fishing.

Since our governments are concerned, the federal government and the four Atlantic provinces some three years ago formed an Atlantic salmon co-ordinating committee, the chairman of which is the deputy minister of fisheries for Canada and the members of which are the deputy ministers of the appropriate departments in Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. I will be prepared to give a full account of their activities when my estimates are back before the house. In the meantime I can send to the hon. member the current copy of our fisheries publication Trade News, which has a 16-page report of the activities of that committee during the current year.

BRIDGES

SHIPPIGAN, N.B.—INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will he please inform the house if and when the necessary permit will be given to allow the Lameque-Shippigan Bridge Corporation to commence work on the Shippigan bridge?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member for Gloucester has been speaking to me almost daily on this project, which he considers of great importance. The fact is that an application has been made under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. It was returned for certain amendments which need to be made before it can be accepted. To the best of my knowledge it has not yet come forward again.

EDMUNDSTON, N.B.—REQUEST FOR APPROVAL BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport. Has the C.N.R. stopped sabotaging the Edmundston bridge project, and will the necessary permit be given now?

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member is getting his information, but I can tell him that the C.N.R. has never been guilty of any sabotage.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

ORENDA ENGINES LIMITED—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Does the report of lay-offs at the Orenda plant at Malton indicate any change of policy in the government buying of fighter aircraft?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): There is no change in the policy of the government. My department purchases the aircraft that are needed by the armed services. The lay-off, I understand, is the result of a cutback in the production of F-86 aircraft, which are becoming obsolete, with a consequent drop in the requirements for engines.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to all three questions is no.

CRIMINAL LAW

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION RESPECTING CRIMINAL SEXUAL PSYCHOPATHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. E. Lennard (Wentworth): In the absence of the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question. Because of the criminal assault on two little girls at Carlisle, near Hamilton, Ontario, yesterday, can he state when it is intended to bring down the McRuer report?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that report will be brought down just as soon as it is available.

PUBLIC WORKS

MA-ME-O BEACH—REPORTED DAMAGE TO WHARF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ray Thomas (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Unfortunately I did not give him notice but possibly he will have an answer to it. If not, he can take my question as notice. Has the minister received any report on the damage to the wharf at Ma-Me-O Beach in Alberta up to the present time? If so, when may we expect repairs to be made to it?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): I have received no report as yet. I have asked the engineers of the department to investigate.

POWER

BEECHWOOD PROJECT, N.B.—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF LOAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would he be so kind as to tell the house what line of reasoning compels his government on the one hand to bulldoze this $80 million loan to this American 34-inch gas pipe outfit, while on the other hand refusing a $45 million loan to the people of New Brunswick to develop urgently needed hydroelectric power?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a question that should be dealt with on the orders of the day.

Mr. Fulton: Can you deal with it at all?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

HAMILTON RIVER, LABRADOR—STATEMENT ON REPORTED DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) asked a question and referred to press dispatches of that morning which indicated that consideration was being given to the development of power on the Hamilton river in Newfoundland and the possible transmission of that power to Sept Iles on the north shore of the province of Quebec.

As I indicated at that time, the development of power on the Hamilton river is purely a provincial responsibility and, of course, so is the transmission of power from Labrador to any other province. However, I asked officials of my department to get in touch with the officials of the British Newfoundland Corporation and have obtained the following information.

The British Newfoundland Corporation was founded in 1953 to carry out exploration of the unknown mineral, waterpower and wood resources on the island of Newfoundland and in Labrador. The waterpower potential of the Hamilton river was early recognized as one of the principal assets of the area. Thus, an intensive survey and accompanying engineering investigation were conducted through the summer seasons of 1954 and 1955, with subsequent engineering studies which have given very encouraging results.

This survey was done for the corporation by Montreal Engineering Company Limited and the Shawinigan Engineering Company Limited and, because of its unique features, it was described to the Engineering Institute of Canada's annual conference in the technical paper referred to in the press dispatch mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. Since any such survey was bound to take into account possibilities for transmitting the electricity, a transmission line to Seven Islands was selected for examination as a typical case.

The present status of the investigation is understood to be that the corporation is ready to proceed with construction of a power plant as soon as there is definite demand for sufficient power to justify the project and as soon as the financing can be arranged. I understand that the stage has not yet been reached for any decision to be made on where the power could or should be utilized.

Mr. Green: Thank you very much.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 29, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO HON. MEMBER FOR HALTON ON HER RETURN FOLLOWING ILLNESS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I have the indulgence of the house to extend, I am sure on behalf of every hon. member, most happy and cordial greetings to the hon. lady member for Halton. We are delighted that she has been restored to good health and is now again in her seat in the house. I am sure we all are happy to extend to her our most sincere congratulations and our very best wishes.

Miss Sybil Bennett (Halton): Mr. Speaker, may I have just a few minutes of the time of the house to thank the Prime Minister for his most kind and gracious words. It is a very warm welcome that is given me today, and I am most happy to be back. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that if it had not been for the indulgence and kindness of my own constituents, the very many messages of good cheer and encouragement that I received from both sides of the house, and the faith and prayers of those around me, I fear I would not be back today. I am very happy to be with you.

COMMITTEE ON ESTIMATES

Fourth report of special committee on estimates.—Mr. Tucker.

IMMIGRATION

TABLING OF AMENDMENTS TO REGULATIONS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the recent amendments to the immigration regulations, in both the official languages.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if he can, without taking too much time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: May I rephrase my question. I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if he would be willing, if he considers the matter important enough, to make a short statement as to the effect of the main changes contained in the amendments to the immigration regulations he has just tabled.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe it would be of any advantage to anyone if I did so. I think the language of the regulations is clear. As a layman I would hesitate to interpret them to my learned colleague.

Mr. Rowe: If the minister cannot interpret them, who can?

STATEMENT ON ADMISSION OF EXPERIENCED TOBACCO WORKERS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can comment on the question which was asked of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration last Friday by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, and on which I have had correspondence with the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Clark) and others, as to the entry of primers and tyers for the tobacco crop this summer.

I have had correspondence with, and a copy of a resolution from, the secretary of the flue-cured tobacco marketing association of Ontario. If I were to quote one paragraph of my reply to the secretary perhaps it would answer the question:

> In view of the representations you and others have made we can assure you that should the necessity arise for bringing in more primers and tyers than can be provided in Canada, we will attempt to fill the need from the United States.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO RADIO REPORT OF VISIT TO CANADA BY KHRUSHCHEV AND BULGANIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and ask him whether there is any foundation for the radio report this morning that Khrushchev and Bulganin were coming to Canada. Has any such invitation been extended, or has there been any indication from the government of the U.S.S.R. in relation thereto?

WATER AND SEWER FACILITIES, AKLAVIK TOWNSITE, N.W.T.

Question No. 503—Mr. Hardie:

Is the Department of National Health and Welfare being consulted on water supply and sewage disposal requirements for the new Aklavik townsite?

Supplementary answer by: Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

Yes. This matter is receiving the closest attention by officers of the public health engineering division of the Department of National Health and Welfare. They are attending meetings of the Aklavik subcommittee of the advisory committee on northern development and are assisting in the field during preliminary studies for the collection of data and water quality determinations at the site. Engineering studies and preliminary plans with respect to water supply and sewage disposal, as prepared by the consulting engineers, have been reviewed by the public health engineering division. It is expected that the advice of the technical officers of that division will be sought before a final decision is made on the adoption of the requirements necessary to ensure adequate treatment and control of water and sewage for the protection of health.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

The first pipe-line bill that passed this house was Western Pipe Lines. This concerned a pipe line from Alberta to the United States border for export. It was brought into the house by the president of Osler, Hammond and Nanton Limited. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra will remember the circumstances. I think it was through his vigilance that it was the last bill that was designed entirely to cover the export of Alberta gas exclusively into the United States.

Shortly after that two or three other bills were passed by this house, and I think the fourth or fifth bill had to do with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. That bill was sponsored by the Canadian Delhi Gas Company. I had nothing to do with that pipe line. The sponsors merely came to see me, the bill came before the house, it went before a committee of the house and the charter was approved by the house.

It has been said that Clint Murchison is a friend of mine, but I will tell the committee about my contacts with Clint Murchison. Back in 1939 when I was Minister of Transport I was invited to the opening of LaGuardia airfield and was entertained at luncheon by American Airlines. They had their directors there. Clint Murchison was at that time and is today a director of American Airlines, and I met him at that time.

The second time I met him was on an occasion when I was invited along with two or three other Canadians by the president of American Airlines to spend a holiday in going over their routes. In the course of that holiday we stopped off in Mexico and spent a day or two at a ranch owned by Clint Murchison, where we shot turkeys. That was long before Clint Murchison had any interest in pipe lines in Canada, and nothing of that kind was discussed.

I think I have met the gentleman three times since. When he has been in Ottawa he has paid me a call. That is the extent of my acquaintance with Clint Murchison. The fact that I knew him years ago and have seen him from time to time since is being used as an indication that he and I are in conspiracy to rob Canada of its natural resources.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, the right hon. minister has a habit of interjecting something into the record which gets out to the press as though it were a statement by someone on the other side. No one has made a statement such as he has now mentioned. I think it is time to call a halt to the interjection of statements of this nature, which are then left on the record as though someone had used those words.

The Deputy Chairman: As I heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce I do not think he made any accusations. He said that certain impressions were being given, and I think that statement has been made in several remarks.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I might ask my hon. friend why he brought Clint Murchison into this subject and referred to my sinister association with him.

Mr. Drew: That is typical of the minister's misstatements. I said we should know when the first discussions between Clint Murchison and the minister took place in regard to Trans-Canada. Clint Murchison was the promoter. Clint Murchison had discussions. We have copies of the letters and I want to know, and I think the hon. members of this house should know, when those discussions started and ended, and what was the reason for the long delay between that time and the time the government came before the house with its proposals. There was no suggestion of anything sinister; that is something the minister has put on the record himself.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The fact of my visit to that particular ranch was brought up by one of the devoted followers of the Leader of the Opposition. It was brought up entirely in an attempt to smear my reputation. It has been said—

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):—that we do not need to worry about 30-inch pipe.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We shall continue with this tomorrow.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

it should have been well known to the government that the decision of the federal power commission would not be handed down in time to meet the construction deadline? The reason is this. A serious effort was made to obtain temporary financing for the western section. I am sure it would have been successful had it not been undertaken in a growing period of tight money. As hon. members know, the Bank of Canada has tightened its restrictions on loans of the type that are required. The same is true in the United States.

But I believed until three weeks before the amended resolution was brought into this house that temporary financing would be secured. However, at the last minute the negotiations broke down. They broke down, I think, for reasons that went beyond the bankers who had been dealing with the matter. I think they found that there were objections from the central banking authorities of the countries concerned, and we were faced with that situation.

Now, why are we pressing on; why are we pressing this? Well, I do not know; perhaps I get overenthusiastic about a project. I have been working on sizeable projects all my life, and somehow I reach a point in the development when I think a project is important; and if it is a serious enough project I begin to think it is the most important thing in the world and it does seem to me it is important that we do not lose a year in undertaking this pipe line.

Mr. Fulton: A year after five.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, it is a year, anyway. We are having the greatest possible pressure, as hon. members know, from the province of Alberta, where the situation is becoming almost intolerable. Gas is locked up in the ground; gas is being flared at the refineries, and it is a wasteful and unproductive situation.

We are being pressed by Manitoba, and I may say that Manitoba stands to benefit industrially from low-cost gas to a considerable extent. I come from nothern Ontario. Today northern Ontario is the highest cost fuel area in the world. Through this gas line they will be in the position of having a fuel cost lower than that of industrial Ontario. Well, I know something of the preparations that have been going on there to receive gas. Every community in northern Ontario has made arrangements for the distribution of gas. Industries there are dependent on a supply of natural gas to permit plant expansion. If any area of Canada requires a start on a gas pipe line this year it is northern Ontario.

Hon. members have seen something of the pressure from industrial Ontario for natural gas as expressed by the government of the province of Ontario. No later than last Saturday night the provincial treasurer of Ontario spoke in the Niagara peninsula, and again asserted the absolute necessity of another type of fuel for industrial Ontario. Well, with these pressures reinforcing my own belief that this is a natural resource project that should be pressed to a conclusion as rapidly as possible, I have perhaps given some leadership in the attempt to get this bill enacted by parliament in the 19 sitting days that were left available when the bill was introduced.

I have asserted that if arrangements made last August for pipe are not carried to their conclusion we might not be able to get 34-inch pipe until the last quarter of 1957 or the first quarter of 1958. I have been told by the Leader of the Opposition that this is absolute nonsense. He said that pipe was tight last October, but that today it is easy.

Mr. Drew: Oh, no, no.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You certainly did.

Mr. Drew: No.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What did you say?

Mr. Drew: I said steel was tight last October.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There is plenty of capacity to roll pipe. When we talk about a tight situation in pipe we mean a tight situation in the material from which pipe is made. There are only about three mills on this continent which can roll steel plate of a width that can be rolled into 34-inch pipe. I think there is also one in England and one in Germany. I believe those are the five mills in the world today capable of rolling plate from which 34-inch pipe can be rolled.

The Leader of the Opposition said there is no other place for this 34-inch pipe in North America. That is true enough, but there is a tremendous demand for it in the Middle East. If we released our option on that pipe it would be out of the United States just as quickly as it could be loaded on ships for that destination. If the Leader of the Opposition doubts that I will be glad to get him affidavits to that effect. We are fortunate in having that pipe.

I see it is getting on to ten o'clock and I shall not pursue that any further, but there is one subject I should like to discuss, the theory that I invented Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, that I was the man who brought it into being. I probably had as little to do with it in its first two or three years of existence as any man in this house.

days of this week in all sorts of shenanigans in order to block the passage of the bill rather than argue against it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Harkness: More closure.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): —I have spoken three times in this debate, and my purpose in rising now is to attempt to make this a committee where questions that are asked can be answered.

The Leader of the Opposition has asked some questions that should be answered. In the first place, there is a provision which started as a gentleman's agreement and was converted, when three new interests joined the groups sponsoring the pipe line, into an agreement within the group that 51 per cent of all common stock would be offered in Canada and to Canadians. "To Canadians" is not in the draft, but it has to be offered by three very reliable banking houses in this country, and I feel sure that an offer will be made to place that stock of Trans-Canada.

What was the purpose of that? It has been said a good many times I said that through it Canadians would have control. I said just the opposite. I said you could not guarantee control in that way; for there is no way by which you can prevent a purchaser of stock from selling his stock, and there is no guarantee that he will sell his stock to another Canadian.

I made it quite clear that the control of the pipe line would remain in Canada because the pipe line is located in Canada and subject to Canadian law. The province of Alberta has complete control over the gas that will enter the pipe line. The provinces of Canada have complete control over the conditions under which that gas may be sold within the borders of those provinces. The board of transport commissioners have overriding authority concerning the operation of the pipe line, and the government of Canada has complete authority over the export of any gas that may pass through the pipe line and move across an international border.

The reason I have been concerned to see that 51 per cent of the stock would be offered in Canada to Canadians is that if that can be brought about it will be the only pipe line ever built in Canada where that condition has obtained. We have had two pipe lines built in this country and a third is being built today. Well, I hesitate to estimate how much of the common stock of those pipeline companies has been offered in Canada, but I would think that 10 per cent would be a very high proportion of the common stock of any company.

[Mr. Hansell.]

Why is it important to have stock offered in Canada? The Leader of the Opposition—I forget his exact words—said the common stock was the gravy of the enterprise.

Mr. Drew: No, I did not use any such expression.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What did you say, or do you remember?

Mr. Drew: You make your own speech.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You at least said—

Mr. Drew: Don't use terms I did not use.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): —that is where the profits lie, in the common stock. All right; I hope he is right. But I would prefer to say that the common stock is where the gamble lies. If the pipe lines turns out to be profitable the common stock is the chief beneficiary. If it turns out to be unprofitable the common stock equity suffers most. In other words, it is at the lowest priority in the securities of the company, and it takes more than its share of the good and it also takes more than its share of the misfortune.

However, I know that Canadians have resented the fact that they could not acquire larger equities in the pipe-line financing that has been carried on to date. I believe it is desirable that Canadians have an opportunity to take as much of the common stock in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines as they wish to take. I want to make it quite clear that I am not advising anyone to buy it; nevertheless a great many people believe that it will be profitable investment, and if they do believe that I think they should have an opportunity to make that investment.

Mr. Fulton: Does the minister know that the Canadian Liberal quotes him as saying that 51 per cent of the voting stock will be owned by Canadians?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If they say it will be held by Canadians they are making promises that they cannot carry out.

Mr. Fulton: The Canadian Liberal magazine under the minister's picture says that 51 per cent of the voting stock will be owned by Canadians.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The minister sat for the picture but he was not responsible for what was underneath it.

Mr. Fulton: It is propaganda your party is putting out.

Mr. Sinclair: You are lapping it up.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The question has been asked, why was the bill delayed when that I did not like the principle of closure and my leader said, "Oh, yes, you do; otherwise you would not have it in the rules." There is a thought there, and it is worth something. We do believe in closure. We do not believe it should be applied except as a last resort. We believe there were extenuating circumstances which meant that this bill must be passed by a certain deadline. We are in favour of hearing every possible argument against the bill, but we are not in favour of blocking tactics.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a fourth reason why I am tying these boys in with the communists. I know this is something that will be received with some protest, but the fourth reason is that the communists are great on character assassination.

Mr. Ellis: You are past masters at that.

Mr. Hansell: Listen to that jackass braying.

An hon. Member: Carried unanimously.

Mr. Hansell: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Chairman, gets up with something he thinks is going to get some publicity; it is going to get him in the newspapers. He begins an attack on the hon. member for Calgary South, brings his name into the debate, and declares the hon. member has a financial interest in this pipe line. We know he is an oil man, but he got up and vindicated himself. "I own no shares in any company," he said, "that has any contract with Trans-Canada. I do not own one share in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines."

Mr. Knowles: He did not say that.

Mr. Hansell: Then the next day the hon. member for Calgary South turned around and asked that the whole matter be aired before the appropriate committee.

Mr. Fulton: Then he went home.

Mr. Hansell: All I say is this. I am not saying the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre intended to do it, but I am saying he followed the communist line of character assassination.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: You got applause from the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Hansell: One other point, and I am through. The fifth communist line is—

Mr. Castleden: Charlie McCarthy.

Mr. Hansell:—despising authority. I want to say something about this, because it is very important. We ourselves voted for the dismissal of a member from this house for a period of time.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Hansell: I am not ashamed of it.

Mr. Knowles: Character assassination if there ever was any.

The Deputy Chairman: I think it is my duty to draw to the attention of the hon. member who has the floor that the question to which he has just referred is a closed incident, and I do not consider it is a subject for debate at this time on this clause.

Mr. Hansell: I believe I have about five minutes more, Mr. Chairman. I was only going to take this opportunity of explaining why we voted for that motion. Since you have ruled, I am not one who is going to despise authority.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hansell: I will consider it, if you wish, a closed incident. I will say this, however, in connection with that incident, that the general tenor of the newspaper reports I have been able to read, except one by Doug Leiterman in the Citizen of last Saturday which gives a pretty good account, a truthful report, is that this man was fighting for the freedom of parliament to express itself. That is not the reason we voted for that—

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles: My point of order is that a few moments ago you indicated that the incident of last Friday was a closed incident and should not be discussed further. The hon. member who says he does not defy your authority is doing that right now.

Mr. Hansell: I would say, Mr. Chairman, we would be the first people in Canada to fight for the rights of parliament.

Mr. Harkness: You never showed it in Alberta.

Mr. Hansell: We have never had any contrary opinion. I will say this. This group respects parliamentary authority. I will digress no further. I should like to whittle somebody down to peanut size. Objection has been taken, and I shall not take up the point.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my time has gone and I say that we are going to support the pipeline bill. We will vote against any tactics of blocking. We do wish that members may have the opportunity of presenting arguments contrariwise if they wish, but let them present their arguments and not waste the remaining resources to a United States company? We are not giving anything away.

Mr. Knowles: The foreign exchange control board went out of existence several years ago.

Mr. Hansell: I may have used the wrong term. The government can control foreign exchange.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McGregor: Are you going to give the people $25 a month?

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, we are not giving any natural resources away any more—

Mr. McGregor: Are you going to give the people $25 a month?

Mr. Hansell: —any more than the agricultural industry gives wheat away when it sells to a foreign country; not any more.

Mr. Pallett: Can you replace gas as you replace wheat year after year?

Mr. Hansell: My hon. friend asks whether we can replace gas. What I am saying is this. There is gas being blown into the air—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGregor: There surely is.

Mr. Hees: Pipe it down to Montreal.

Mr. Hansell: I will enjoy the humour of the situation. I will enjoy the joke that my hon. friends are having at my expense.

An hon. Member: A lot of gas.

Mr. Hansell: I will enjoy it too. The only satisfaction I get out of it is that the gas I am blowing is pure instead of the rotten, stinking gas, such as we have been listening to for the past week.

Some hon. Members: Oh. oh.

Mr. Hansell: The third line the communists would use, and they are using it at the highest levels of diplomacy in the universe—

Mr. Ellis: McCarthy rides again!

Mr. Hansell: —is their delaying tactics. They say, "Let us play for time and in the process let us sow the seeds of confusion". That is what is being done here by the Conservative and C.C.F. opposition. Mr. Chairman, I want to tell you that a cold war is going on right here in this chamber.

An hon. Member: A hot war.

Mr. Hansell: The basis for the cold war is the pipe line, but the tactics that are used are no different from those that are used by the communists in high level conferences throughout the world. Mr. Chairman, we are not in favour of closure, and we voted against closure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hansell: Just hold onto yourselves.

Mr. Hees: You voted for it at every stage.

Mr. Hansell: Just hold onto yourselves.

Mr. Knowles: You voted both ways. That is the trouble with you fellows.

Mr. Hansell: Yes; we voted both ways. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce first introduced his motion for closure at the resolution stage, we thought he was premature. We thought further time should be given to discussion of the resolution and we voted against closure; and maybe we would still vote against it if those who have spoken in the opposition had advanced arguments one after another against the pipe line. That is not what they have done. We sat here until almost five o'clock one morning, and what was it that took up the time of the house then from one o'clock until five? Did they discuss anything but points of order in order to delay progress on this bill?

Mr. Fulton: Did we have the chance?

Mr. Hansell: Was the pipe line under discussion then? No, of course it was not. What happened? The bells rang and the members were called in. They challenged the Speaker's rulings—

Mr. Fulton: And we disturbed your sleep.

Mr. Hansell:—bells rang and the Speaker would rise and say, "may I conclude that members have already been called in?" "No, you must not do that" they said; and the bells would ring again. We would sit down, and we waited until five o'clock in the morning. What was it all for? It was delaying tactics; school-boy stuff.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hansell: We said right away, Mr. Chairman, if that is what we are going to experience when we vote against closure, then we are not going to vote against closure any more; that is the reason we have followed the government in voting for closure since that time.

Mr. Fulton: Where does that leave you?

Mr. Hees: Start that one over again; you got mixed up.

Mr. Hansell: We do not like closure.

Mr. Knowles: Better ring the bells again.

Mr. Hansell: We do not like closure. Nobody likes closure. I was arguing one time

Mr. Hansell: Listen to the next paragraph, Mr. Chairman:

You seem resolved to gag parliament and defy public opinion. . . .

Have we heard that before in this house?

Some hon. Members: And how!

Mr. Hansell: We hear it also outside from the communists. Again we find this:

. . . call a general election . . .

Have we heard that by the Conservatives on this side of the house?

Some hon. Members: And how!

Mr. Hansell: So we hear it outside from the communists parading this afternoon. I say those who oppose this bill are following the communist line. I may say that this document is signed by Tim Buck, national leader; Stewart Smith, for the Ontario committee; Gui Caron, for the Quebec committee, of the labour progressive party.

Talking of elections, Mr. Chairman, I wonder what would happen if the Prime Minister should rise in his place some time and accept the challenge of the Conservative party to call an election?

An hon. Member: He would be beaten.

Mr. Hansell: I am going to say that there would be no more dejected looking people in this country than these same gentlemen if he did that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: You talk for yourself.

Mr. Hansell: They would look like dying ducks in a thunderstorm.

Mr. Knowles: You are fairly close to the Prime Minister. Why don't you suggest it?

Mr. Hansell: There is no party in Canada that is less prepared for an election than are my hon. friends.

Mr. Fulton: Why don't you want one?

Mr. Hansell: You don't want one; of course you don't. Be that as it may, my time is fast running on.

Mr. Fulton: Not as fast as your tongue.

Mr. Hansell: The second reason they are following the line of the communists is this. They talk a great deal about United States investment. They all know this. They know that the communists from Bulganin and Khrushchev right down to the office boy want to see the destruction of United States economic power, and they use the same arguments with respect to United States investment in Canada. Let me also say this. My leader this afternoon was telling me that recent surveys showed—and this may be a remarkable piece of information for hon. members—that there is less United States per capita investment in Canada than there is Canadian per capita investment in the United States.

Mr. McGregor: So what?

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, they talk about the Americans coming over and controlling our natural resources.

Mr. Pallett: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Fulton: Here is democracy for you.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I shall be willing to answer any questions if I have time to do so when my 30 minutes have expired.

Mr. Pallett: Just keep the record straight on those per capita figures.

Mr. Hansell: They talk about control of our natural resources, or handing over control of our natural resources to some United States company. The Leader of the Opposition said it tonight. It has been repeated over and over again.

Mr. Fulton: The Prime Minister cannot stand his new ally.

Mr. Hansell: That is a false statement pure and simple. The hon. member for Calgary South the other day, in a speech he gave, went through the whole gamut of controls that can be exercised on this company from the time the gas leaves Alberta until the time it reaches the homes or the industries of this country. He told you how, from the very start, the Alberta petroleum and natural gas conservation board can control the amount of gas that is to be exported from the province of Alberta. That is the first control.

He told how the various public utilities of the provinces could control the price of gas within those provinces. That is the second control. He told how the federal government, through its transport board, has control of the transportation of that gas. That is the third control. He told also how the federal government has control of export permits. That is the fourth control.

He did not mention the fifth which I am going to mention tonight. The foreign exchange control board has control of how much money may leave Canada. If you want any more controls on the thing than that, I should like to know where you will get them. I might say this now, Mr. Chairman. In the light of those controls, how can it be said that we are giving away our natural

Mr. Hansell: I have five reasons to believe they are following the communist line. The first is that there is not a communist in the country who wants this pipe line.

Mr. McGregor: That is a great statement.

Mr. Hansell: My hon. friend says that is a great statement. I say there is not a communist in the country who wants the pipe line built. Why? Because they do not want Canada to become great. Furthermore, they do not want the solidarity of the North American continent, because if we have solidarity of the North American continent then with the great economic power that lies to the south plus our tremendous natural resources we can defy the world. The communists do not want Canada to become great.

I heard the Leader of the Opposition say in the course of the debate some days ago that this pipe-line measure was fantastic. I know the connotation he put on the word "fantastic". I am going to use the same word but with a different connotation. The pipe line is a big thing. It is tantamount to building a railroad. It is a big thing, and any government or any company that has vision enough and faith enough in Canada to build a pipe line of this kind is attempting a job that will make Canada great. We cannot lag behind any other nation in the world so far as our efforts are concerned in trying to make Canada what it ought to be. The communists do not want Canada to become great. May I say that the following of blocking tactics that would result in the defeat of the bill will mean that a pipe line may never be built in Canada.

Mr. Ellis: Is that the best argument you can put up?

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member forgets that Canada never built a railway for the benefit of the United States.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fulton: I know you do not like it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Hansell: I do not forget anything. I do not forget what the hon. member for Kamloops has been saying over the past few days and what he has been trying to do. I do not forget that.

Mr. Fulton: I have been trying to defeat this bill.

Mr. Pearson: Trying to become a martyr.

Mr. Hansell: What did I see in the Ottawa Journal of May 24?

An hon. Member: Closure.

Mr. Hansell: I saw a picture under which was a caption.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Fulton: A comic?

Mr. Hansell: Yes, it is a comic. I will tell you what it is. It is a picture of the attitude of the Conservatives and the C.C.F. in this house. That is what makes it comical. It is a picture of a truck. The truck has a sign on it, "Keep the gas pipe line all-Canadian". Then there are a number of other signs on it that are not too distinguishable.

Mr. Ellis: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hansell: Every time the hon. member for Regina City interrupts I feel like saying, "Foghorn Ellis blows again." Under the picture, Mr. Chairman, there is a caption reading as follows:

> Pipe line in effigy—The united electrical, radio and machine workers union of America, with a Canadian membership of 25,000, dislikes the government's Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited proposal. To show their displeasure, U.E. representatives drove this truck around Ottawa. Petitions and telegrams have been sent to members of parliament. The union wants the pipe line built by the Canadian government to "do away—

Listen to this and see if you cannot read in here something of the same flavour found in the tactics pursued by the members of the Conservative and C.C.F. parties in this debate.

> —"with the subsidy to a private corporation and the United States give-away."

Anyone who knows the history of the leaders of the united electrical, radio and machine workers union will know where they are headed. Some of us know that these leaders are communists. That is their line. Here is another example. As we came up to or left the building at noon what did we find outside this house?

Mr. Fulton: More sense than we have heard in it from you.

An hon. Member: Oh, keep quiet.

Mr. Hansell: We found a parade put on by the communists, and they were handing out leaflets. The title of the leaflet is, "Stop, Look, Listen, Premier St. Laurent!" The pamphlet continues:

> Open letter to the government of Canada
> Brought to Ottawa by a motor cavalcade from Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Kitchener, Windsor, Sudbury and other cities, May 28, 1956.

How does it read? I am not going to take the time to read it all but I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to note some of the phrases. To the Prime Minister they say:

> So far you have turned a deaf ear to the patriotic outcry of Canadians.

Who were these people who were parading outside here today to talk about patriotic Canadians?

Mr. Pickersgill: Tory photographers.

vested in the name of Her Majesty or in the name of the corporation.

What corporation? Again unnamed.

Actions, suits or other legal proceedings in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the corporation, whether in its name or in the name of Her Majesty, may be brought or taken by or against the corporation, in the name of the corporation, in any court that would have jurisdiction if the corporation were not an agent of Her Majesty.

What corporation? This is where we start. What corporation? I say that no opposition, no group of members of parliament in the history of parliament, have had to begin the discussion of an important measure like this—

Mr. Fulton: No parliament.

Mr. Coldwell: No parliament has had to discuss an important measure like this in the middle of a bill concerning an unnamed corporation. I cannot for the life of me understand why the government has allowed itself to be reduced to this stage. Of course I quite believe that the only reason we are discussing this clause tonight, instead of having it moved again that further consideration be postponed, is because of the public outcry from one end of this country to the other. This will not in any way allay that public outcry, nor will it reduce the efforts of those of us on this side of the house in opposing it, regardless of our party affiliations. It will not reduce the opposition that we have been carrying on against this particular measure. I very sincerely hope, because it is not in the best interests of Canada, that the opposition will be strong enough to prevent this bill from going through before the deadline. I see some on the other side of the house laughing. There is a powerful majority in this house.

Mr. Fulton: It is not so powerful.

Mr. Coldwell: It is so powerful it has become arrogant. It thinks that whatever it wishes to do it can do. Perhaps a demonstration can be given that it is not quite as powerful as it considers itself to be. We shall see.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Hansell: I am very glad that the opportunity at last has been given to this group to express its views in respect to the present bill.

An hon. Member: Turn on the closure now.

Mr. Hansell: We have taken very little of the time of this house in the past week, as we have not been too much interested in the blocking tactics.

Mr. Ellis: You were trying to railroad it through.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I only have half an hour in which to speak—

Mr. Brooks: Too long.

Mr. Hansell: —and I would ask that I at least be given the floor without too much interruption. If I should be interrupted I hope, Mr. Chairman, that you will take notice of it and give me some credit as far as time is concerned.

As I say, we have had very little to say on the pipe-line bill. We spoke on it when the first resolution was introduced in the house some weeks ago. Since that time we have had little to say. We have not joined in what we would call the blocking tactics of the Conservatives and the C.C.F. in the house. We have remained silent all the way through. We wish, however, to state our position on the bill. We support the pipe-line bill because we want the pipe line and at the earliest possible time.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another reason why we support this measure, and it may sound strange when I indicate to you what that reason is. You know, very often I have the habit of making a decision on the basis of what the enemies of democracy want, and if I determine what the enemies of democracy want then I do not want it. If I can determine what the enemies of democracy do not want, then I want it. I am on fairly safe ground in taking that as a barometer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to say this. With respect to the present pipe-line bill I ask this question: What do the communists want? I say to you, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Rowe: Closure.

Mr. Brooks: Dictatorship.

Mr. Hansell: —that the Conservatives and the C.C.F. are following the same line the communists want followed.

Mr. Ellis: They have closure in Russia.

Mr. Hansell: In saying that I am not implying in any way that any of our friends who sit on the opposition side are themselves communists.

An hon. Member: That is very decent of you.

Mr. Fulton: We are not even anti-Semitic.

Mr. Hansell: I am saying they are following the communist line and are playing into the hands of the communists.

Mr. Fulton: We are not even anti-Semitic.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Who is?

Mr. Fulton: You are.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You are a liar.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

of this whole thing is the debate which is going on in the province of Quebec where the Liberal leader in that province, if I read his speeches right, is criticizing Duplessis for giving away the natural resources of the country to United States corporations.

An hon. Member: That is right; giving away.

Mr. Coldwell: Giving away resources to United States corporations. May I ask my hon. friend what this government are doing—

An hon. Member: Giving away.

Mr. Coldwell: —if they are not entering into a plan which is a give-away—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Coldwell: —of a great Canadian resource? Mr. Duplessis gets some revenue by way of royalty from that resource in Quebec. The province of Alberta will get a royalty from the gas in that province. The analogy is just the same. And what are we doing?

Some hon. Members: Oh.

An hon. Member: We cannot give away what we do not own.

Mr. Coldwell: We cannot give away what we do not own, but I say that what we are doing is financing the project for them. The minister shakes his head, but there is $130 million; $80 million.

An hon. Member: What's a million?

Mr. McCann: To build a transportation system.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, to build a private transportation system.

Mr. McCann: You have been so used to getting everything for Saskatchewan that you deny anything for eastern and central Canada.

Mr. Coldwell: I am very glad to know that the government of Saskatchewan has been getting everything for Saskatchewan.

Mr. McCann: Millions of dollars worth.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, that is a very interesting statement from the minister. I am very glad to hear it, but may I say this to the minister—

Mr. Fulton: He has been taking everything away from Saskatchewan for so long.

Mr. Coldwell: —that the government, which can find approximately $200 million to assist in the financing of a United States-controlled project in this country, cannot find the money to build the South Saskatchewan dam—

Mr. McCann: The same old story.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. Coldwell: —to safeguard the people of that province from the recurrent drought. Unless I am provoked into doing it I am not at this point going to enter into the Saskatchewan provincial election in this chamber. I am not going to do it, but if I am provoked into it you will get a speech in which, I think, every criticism that has been made can be answered in full in this house. I am not afraid to do so, but I have always taken the view that this chamber is not the place in which to fight provincial elections and, unless I am provoked into it, I am not going to do so. But provoke me into it, mind, and I assure you I can and shall do it.

I have just been in the mood over the past week to be provoked. I have never felt quite as down in the mouth since I have been in the House of Commons as I have during the past week, when I have seen this overthrow of democratic procedures in this parliament. I have never felt as depressed about anything as I have felt about this during the past week in the House of Commons. My hon. friend says, "Some of you people have been blocking the discussion of this." Not at all. What we have been fighting for is the right of this house to discuss this measure in a proper manner.

Mr. Knowles: We have not got that right yet.

Mr. Coldwell: No, we have not got that right yet. This afternoon when the Prime Minister rose on a question of privilege, I hoped he was going back to start this discussion at the proper place, on clause 1. When my good friend the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis) rose in his place, against all the advice he has had over the past several months, to make a speech this afternoon, and made an excellent speech—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Coldwell: —I was hoping that when he stepped down the Prime Minister would cooperate with at least those of us who want to discuss things properly in this house and say, "We shall now go back and pick up the clauses that have been so—I shall use my own words—"improperly postponed". However, that has not been done, and the result is that we have only clause 4 of this bill before us. It states:

The corporation—

—unnamed—

—is for all purposes an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada and its powers under this act may be exercised by it only as such agent.

What corporation? It is unnamed.

Property acquired by the corporation is the property of Her Majesty and title thereto may be people of Canada should understand exactly the manner in which this project is being financed and undertaken.

I should like to draw further attention to the bill passed in the Ontario legislature. I shall not read the preamble, as I do not think that is necessary, but here is the operative part of the bill:

Therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario, enacts as follows:

1. For the purpose of implementing the arrangements made or to be made—

I want to get that on the record because that is the language of this particular bill in clause 7, which we shall discuss more fully when we come to it.

—between the government of Canada and the government of Ontario to facilitate the construction of a connecting link through northern Ontario of a pipe line to transport natural gas from Alberta into central Ontario, the treasurer of Ontario is hereby authorized to loan from time to time out of the consolidated revenue fund any sum of money, but not more than $35 million, to a corporation constituted or to be constituted on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada and having as a purpose the construction aforesaid.

There we have the Ontario act; there we have the reason the wording of that act is in the manner indicated. That is clearly set out in the Hansard of the province of Ontario.

I want to say that we are opposing this measure, not because we think there is another Canadian company which could undertake this construction but because we believe that this gigantic project which will have so much to do with the future welfare of this country should be a public utility, controlled, owned and operated by the people of Canada, particularly as the people of Canada are financing it to the extent I have already indicated.

We are told that we cannot get the pipe. I know nothing about the availability of steel, but I do know that when one of our provincial governments was about to enter into an arrangement with a European firm to establish a plant for the manufacture of pipe for the conveyance of gas the Steel Company of Canada, I believe it was, immediately placed before the tariff board of this country a demand for an increase in the tariff on steel plate or skelp for the making of steel pipe.

I can tell you the result. In spite of assurances which were given that this would take a long time on the part of the tariff board to examine, and even then it would have to be taken up with our co-operators in the general agreements on tariff and trade, or GATT, that European company was frightened and withdrew its consent to the building of that plant. I have the particulars in my office upstairs, and I know that what I am saying is quite correct. In spite of the fact that they were told authoritatively that they need not worry for at least a couple of years, that company did worry and the negotiations for the construction of that plant to manufacture steel pipe ended at that stage.

As I say, I do not know about the availability of steel pipe, but I do know that there are very powerful interests in this country which are determined to keep the natural resources and everything else they can put their hands on under their own control. I say that the Canadian people will never be free of those interests until those monopolies, for such they are, are made public utilities and taken out of private hands.

The other day when he was being pressed regarding Canadian control of this measure and the sale of stock to people in Canada, not necessarily to Canadians, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said there was no way short of public ownership to guarantee complete control of this project to the Canadian people.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I think I said majority ownership. I said rather that control by Canada did not rest in stock ownership but in the fact that the line is located in Canada.

Mr. Coldwell: I think I can pick up the words of the minister which will support what I have said, rather than the explanation given. The minister has said several things several times, and I am not quite clear as to what he has said; but I am pretty clear regarding this. May I say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that this project should have been publicly owned. However, when we moved that we stood alone in that regard in the house. I am convinced that the day will come when the Canadian people will see that what we suggested at that time was in the best interests of our country.

I do not say that the distribution of the gas in the provinces could not be undertaken, if a province desired, by private enterprise. I think sometimes private enterprise has a role to play in the economy, but I am certain that it has not a role to play when we are dealing with a gigantic project of this description, with a great public utility of this sort.

So I am standing here tonight and saying that if members of this House of Commons approve of this particular proposal they will be doing something which I believe will have repercussions in the future which will not be in the best interests of this country. Over the years most of us in this house have seen our natural resources slipping away from us. I think one of the most incongruous features of Commons; and with the introduction of that resolution closure was foreshadowed, closure moved.

Then when the bill comes before us, on the first clause of a bill such as I have in my hand it has always been the right of the members of this House of Commons to discuss the objectives and implications of the measure. What did the Minister of Trade and Commerce do? He moved not that consideration be postponed but that further consideration be postponed, putting on the record of this house something that was entirely false; for there had been no consideration. Further discussion postponed!

Clause 1 is the most important clause of this bill, but we were not allowed to discuss it. Clause 2 received the same treatment; clause 3 received the same treatment; and because of the outcry in the country, because of the violent criticism in the press as well as the criticism in this house, the Prime Minister rose this afternoon on a point of privilege and said that we were going to be allowed to discuss clause 4.

Mr. Fulton: Privilege which he denied to other members over here.

Mr. Coldwell: Privilege he was going to grant the house.

Mr. Rowe: Just until Friday, though.

Mr. Coldwell: To what have we come in this chamber when we are told that we are going to be permitted to begin a discussion of clause 4? Discussion of clauses 1, 2 and 3, a knowledge of which is required to understand clause 4, is denied to us. Clause 4 says that the corporation is a body corporate having capacity to contract and to sue and be sued in the name of the corporation.

Mr. Knight: What corporation?

Mr. Coldwell: What corporation? An unnamed corporation, just as we have in another part of this bill an unnamed company to carry out a very important part of this entire project.

The other day the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said this bill contained a joker, a joker that would enable this government, if it wished, to make another agreement. The Prime Minister said, and I have his words here as reported at page 4173 of Hansard:

> With respect to the statement made by the hon. gentleman that there is a joker in the bill because it refers to contracts which have been made or which may be made, I would refer him to the first clause of the act which was passed by the legislature of Ontario.

Had the Prime Minister read not only the first clause of that act of the Ontario legislature, but had he read what was said on that clause when it was introduced into the legislature of Ontario? This is what was said. I am quoting from page 382 of the Hansard of the Ontario legislature for Tuesday, February 21, 1956:

> The federal government have made their decision as to the most practical method of action under the present circumstances. That is their responsibility.

This is what Mr. Porter said; I continue:

> We believe that we are fully justified in giving the fullest co-operation and support financially and otherwise.
>
> This is the purpose of the bill, but on the other hand, the bill is couched in flexible terms. If, for any reason the present plan does not go through in its present form or if it fails entirely,—

And these are the significant words:

> —the bill will permit the government to consider alternatives and advance moneys within the stated limits to further any other arrangement that may be adopted.

In other words, the Ontario bill clearly indicated that in the event of any other agreement to be made by the federal government, their bill was flexible enough to enable them to come under it. That is why the words in the Ontario bill that the Prime Minister drew attention to were put in that bill. Is the same flexibility in the bill now before us? Was that the intention? We do not know.

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition completely when he says that this bill should be referred to the appropriate committee of the House of Commons where we could hear witnesses and go into all the aspects of the matter. I do not agree with the hon. gentlemen to my right that there is a possibility of a Canadian company undertaking this plan at the present time. Of course I believe that it should have been undertaken as a public enterprise, since we are putting up these large sums of money. I know that when I said we are financing this measure to the extent of approximately $200 million that statement was contradicted, but that is exactly what we are doing. We are appropriating $130 million in this bill and we are saying, "You can temporarily use $80 million of that to finance the prairie section of this project". In other words we are financing both the prairie section and the northern Ontario bridge section.

In other words the people of this country are financing—maybe some of the same money is used—some $200 million of this project, as the Leader of the Opposition has said and I repeat, for a United States corporation which is controlled 83·4 per cent by powerful gas and oil companies in the United States. I say this is a scandalous thing; it is an outrageous thing, and the Canada. We do not want to see this government use its power to put up Canadian taxpayers' money to finance an operation which will place the profits in the hands of a company 83 per cent owned in the United States, which has failed in its undertaking to finance this operation.

If that company is to be given permission to proceed with this, then let the government take the appropriate steps to demand the delivery of the equity stock which is not now outstanding. Let this government assure, by the steps it can take, that control of this company will really be kept in the hands of Canadians in the years ahead.

This is a great venture, an important venture, but not by any manner of means the largest that has been undertaken by Canadians. I still believe that if this government would only open this up and explore other channels, without any delay this could be a venture undertaken in the interests of Canada and under the control of Canadians in the years ahead.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult indeed to discuss this bill at the present time because we are on clause 4. Clause 4 speaks of a corporation, and that corporation is not defined in the clause. We have postponed the passage of clauses 1, 2 and 3 of this bill under what amounted to the most pernicious form of closure I have ever seen. I want to say at once, Mr. Chairman, that to my mind over the past week or so we have been witnessing in this house what is really a travesty of parliamentary procedure. I think you could search the records of any parliament within the commonwealth and you would find nothing similar to the travesty that we have witnessed in this chamber over the past week or ten days.

I want to say to hon. gentlemen opposite that they have been where they are for 21 years. Inevitably the time will come when the Canadian people will put another government in office and they will have to change sides. When they change sides and sit in the opposition they may find themselves faced with the precedents created in this debate. I want to say that no political party in Canadian history has ever made a rod as firm and effective as the rod that has been created in this house to frustrate an opposition in the days to come.

I am not going to criticize the chairman tonight. I am not going to join in the criticism of the Speaker of this house which is so prevalent in the newspapers of the country. But I am going to point this out to the house generally, that the rules of this house which have been formulated over the centuries were formulated not to preserve the power of governments but to protect the rights of those who criticize the government.

Just over a year ago I happened to be driving through the United Kingdom. One evening I stayed at a small hotel at a place called Burford in the Cotswolds. In the evening I met a gentleman whom I took to be an Anglican clergyman. He proved to be a Roman Catholic priest. He said to me, "If you are interested in things of the past, before you leave this town go down and see the Methodist chapel." I thought that was rather strange advice from a Roman Catholic priest. He said, "The Methodist chapel was the home of a man who did much to preserve the rights of democracy. I do not know what you do or where you come from." I said, "I happen to come from Canada, and I happen to be a member of the House of Commons there." He said, "Go down and see that house, the home of Mr. Speaker Lenthall who, when the government in the person of King Charles I went to the House of Commons to arrest five members whom he disliked, refused to bow to the power of that government, which was the king himself; and when Charles demanded that Mr. Speaker deliver those five members, Lenthall stood firm and established a sound democratic principle when he said this: 'May it please Your Majesty, I have neither eyes to see nor tongue to speak in this place but as the house is pleased to direct me, whose servant I am.' "

A servant of the House of Commons! In this past week or ten days we have seen a powerful government wreak its will on this institution. A week or so ago in the debate I interjected the remark that the actions of the government were worse than the actions of Guy Fawkes, who plotted the blowing up of the House of Commons in Britain over three and one-half centuries ago; for all Guy Fawkes was doing was plotting to set a match to a fuse to blow up a building, to blow up bricks and mortar, but what has been done in this house over the last week or 10 days was not a plot but an achievement to blow up the democratic rights of parliament itself.

I have been one of those who have said over and over again that I thought parliament was the finest institution that man had ever devised for his own self-government; but I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that over this last week I have sat here sick at heart at what has been done in this chamber to this institution of parliament in this country. Debate! A resolution was introduced in this house foreshadowing one of the most important bills that we have had to deal with since I have been a member of the House that is the only thing he has not done. He has placed it under control in the United States. The only thing he has not done is to say that it will be governed by the company laws of the United States.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I hear the usual thoughtful comments of "nonsense". These comments are typical of the extent to which members opposite take part in this debate. I hear one hon. member opposite say that is the finest word that has been said on this side. That word "nonsense" is just about the most intelligent remark that could be made on the other side, because everything that is being said on the other side is nonsense when they talk about the rights of Canadians being protected and when the Minister of Trade and Commerce talks about a declaration of independence—I hope that was not emotionalism, which the Minister of Trade and Commerce does not like—that places the control of this great resource at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer in a company that is 83 per cent American owned. If you want to describe that as nonsense, then applaud now and you will be showing some sense. Yes, that is really where this government is showing exactly what it is prepared to do.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this government has still some opportunity to keep this whole operation under Canadian control. An attempt was made to suggest that this is similar to the Canadian Pacific venture. I would point out that in the case of the Canadian Pacific it was not a case of the majority of the directors, practically all of whom are one-share directors, being Canadians. In the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, right from the beginning the act itself has provided that the president and the majority of the board of directors must be citizens of Canada.

Mr. Lesage: No, not for the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. Drew: Must be citizens of Canada and British subjects.

Mr. Lesage: British subjects.

Mr. Drew: Must be citizens of Canada and British subjects.

Mr. Boisvert: British subjects residing in Canada.

Mr. Drew: One of the hon. members opposite in the back row shows that he knows more about it than the minister who has intervened. He points out that they must reside in Canada. Of course, at that time any British subject who resided in Canada was a citizen of Canada, because at that time there were no separate citizens.

Mr. Lesage: There is nothing about residing in Canada.

Mr. Drew: Well, the minister can enter into an argument over that with the hon. member in the back row who has corrected him.

Mr. Rowe: You were too young to understand that.

Mr. Drew: At the very beginning—

Mr. Hunter: I can read the section to the Leader of the Opposition if he wishes to relieve his ignorance. It is right here.

The Deputy Chairman: I should point out the Leader of the Opposition cannot and must not be interrupted except with his consent.

Mr. Drew: The hon. member will have plenty of time to make his speech, that is until closure falls again.

We have not been permitted to obtain the information that could be obtained because of the procedure that has been followed. I still hope the Prime Minister will demonstrate some respect for parliamentary procedure by giving the appropriate directions, which all of us know will be accepted by hon. members opposite and supported, that we revert to section 1 of this measure so questions can be asked and information obtained.

We want to get certain information from the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to where the first discussions took place with Mr. Clint Murchison in regard to this deal we now have before us. We want to find out from the Minister of Finance what the actual reason was for presenting this, because it was not the reason given by the minister in his statement to the house. We want to find out from the Prime Minister why he is now supporting a measure of which he said last July he did not approve. We want to find out from the government generally why they waited right until the last minute without opening up any possibility of allowing anyone else to have an opportunity of building this pipe line and showing that this could be done by Canadian financing and kept under Canadian control.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is the wish of the people of Canada, and I would hope it would be the wish of the members of this house, that the great natural resource which we are told is needed so much in Winnipeg, in northern Ontario, in southern Ontario and in Quebec, will be made available to us under a company that is operated under the direction of Canadians and in the interests of company was well able to finance this whole venture. It was upon that basis that the committee passed this application. Then the next stage was before the board of transport commissioners, that judicial body which hears applications of this kind. Before that board evidence was presented that, without any export, a line from Alberta, through Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario, to Montreal could be built and financed by this company without any government assistance of any kind.

We have heard not one word of evidence to the contrary before any committee of this house or before the board of transport commissioners from the people who obtained their charter and franchise on that solemn undertaking. Yet we now have before us, first of all, the suggestion that a crown corporation should be set up to use the money of the Canadian taxpayers to build this line through northern Ontario. Then, finding they cannot proceed with that, the government proposes that $80 million of the $130 million to be financed through the crown corporation will be handed over to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to pay 90 per cent of the cost of the line from Alberta to the vicinity of Winnipeg. We are not allowed to have produced before a committee information as to why this is necessary or why this should be done.

The taxpayers of Canada are going to provide the capital. Do not let anyone on the other side talk about the advantage of bringing United States investment in here. They are not bringing United States investment in. This company is not doing it. This government is asking parliament to take the Canadian taxpayers' money to finance a venture which is 83 per cent United States controlled, and in that way to hand over the control of one of our greatest resources to that United States company. This is precisely the opposite of what was presented to us in the speech from the throne on January 10. This is precisely the opposite of what was presented to us on March 15 when the Minister of Trade and Commerce brought before us the motion which has now been abandoned.

Mr. Chairman, this is on the part of this government the abandonment of all responsibility to the people of Canada. We are told that Canadians cannot finance this venture. We are told they cannot put up the money. They are going to put up the money; and unless hon. members opposite assert their rights and do something about this matter, this government is going to conduct one of the most outrageous sell-outs there has ever been of Canadian rights and Canadian interests. There is going to be a sell-out of the major portion of our gas resources to a company which is 83 per cent United States controlled, and Canadians are going to be asked to finance that sell-out. They are going to hand over this resource.

Why is not this government asking for some compensating advantage? This company still retains its voting stock. It still retains its equity stock. If any private interests were putting up money in this way, they would demand delivery of most of the remaining equity stock in consideration for their efforts. Why does not the government demand that the remaining equity stock be handed over? That is not the stock that is going to finance the construction. That is the stock where the profit is going to be made. If this government really means that it has an interest in the welfare of the Canadian taxpayer, then let it get control of this company by getting over 50 per cent of the stock under the control of the government itself.

That, of course, is something which the government is showing no signs of doing. From the very beginning this government has been extremely solicitous, first of Clint Murchison, who had such ready access to this government. Then though Mr. Clint Murchison still holds one of the two largest blocks of shares in this company, it has now been handed over to the real and effective control of Mr. Gardiner Symonds of New York.

We have heard a great deal about the fact that there are a majority of Canadian directors of this company. You would almost think there was something virtuous about this fact. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has gone to some trouble to read into the record the names of these directors. Surely the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been informed that a company formed under the dominion Companies Act must have a majority of directors who are Canadians. I see an hon. member opposite shaking his head. Let him look up his Companies Act and he will find that this charter must comply with the dominion Companies Act, and that calls for a majority of the directors to be Canadian.

Mr. Chairman, I hear all the applause opposite. For what? For nothing; for the fact that this company is doing what every company must do which carries on similar operations under a Canadian charter. That is all; nothing else. I hear further applause from the opposite side. If ever there was applause for an extraordinary point of view, it is the present; because obviously hon. members opposite are applauding the minister's statement that he has not actually made this company subject to the company laws of the United States as well, because

But I think it might be well also to examine some of the documents that were filed in the house. One of the documents filed in the house by the Minister of Trade and Commerce just last week was a letter dated November 8, 1955, addressed to Mr. Gardiner Symonds of New York and signed by Mr. H. J. Wallace, vice-president of National Tube in the United States. Perhaps this paragraph of the letter would make interesting reading:

> This will confirm our agreement to extend to you such privilege in consideration of your commitment to us concerning the Winnipeg to Toronto section of the proposed trans-Canada pipe line. Such commitment is that if and when this section is constructed, Tennessee Gas Transmission will order a substantial portion of the pipe requirements from National Tube division, or, in the event Tennessee Gas Transmission is not the buyer of the pipe, you will use your best efforts to see to it that a substantial portion of the pipe is ordered from National Tube division. Please confirm that the above is your understanding by signing and returning the enclosed copy of this letter.

That was accepted on November 15, 1955, by Tennessee Gas Transmission Company and signed by the president of Tennessee Gas. Therefore we have Tennessee Gas Transmission Company, which now is the directing influence in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, assuring its favours to National Tube division in the construction of pipe. When we talk about the construction of pipe I am not in any doubt that when two experienced and highly efficient companies like Page-Hersey Tubes, Limited and the Steel Company of Canada build a plant and decide in partnership to proceed with the construction of pipe, they have made arrangements for the steel to produce that pipe, and I most earnestly hope that in every way possible the government will make sure that it will be this Canadian company that will roll the pipe for the Canadian gas pipe line when that pipe line is being constructed.

Mr. McCann: I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the vice president of Page-Hersey, who is a resident of the town where I live, told me within the last week, and also one of the officers of the Steel Company of Canada, that they do not intend to make pipe larger than 30 inches—

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McCann: —because there is no place to roll it.

Mr. Drew: In that case may I suggest to the Minister of National Revenue that he speak to the vice-president with whom he was in conversation and point out to him that it would be advisable to correct the statement they gave to the press in which they told the press that they intended to roll pipe up to the largest sizes that would be needed in Canada.

Mr. McCann: What size was that?

Mr. Drew: They said they would be ready to roll pipe up to 36 inches, which is two inches larger than the pipe now under discussion.

Mr. McCann: There is no company in Canada that rolls up to 36 inches.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, the statement that has been made can well be corrected if it is wrong, but this company, which is in a partnership with the Steel Company of Canada and our most experienced pipe company, has indicated that it is prepared to roll pipe up to the largest sizes required, and I repeat the statement that I would hope that in every way it can the government will assure that the pipe that goes into the trans-Canada pipe line, whatever may be the name of the company or organization that constructs the pipe line, will be Canadian pipe rolled here in Canada.

We have heard a good deal about the possibility of delay. Any delay that has taken place is delay for which this government is responsible. This government has had the whole subject under consideration for well over five years, and now it comes before the house just before a June deadline and says, "We have taken all this time to reach any conclusion and now you must abandon all the ordinary requirements, all the ordinary demands for information, and pass the measure that is before you or there will be delay." In this way, as has been said very appropriately, procrastination could be used as the thief of parliamentary rights and parliamentary procedures.

That is exactly what is being proposed here. What is being proposed is that because the government itself has procrastinated, we must abandon our rights of inquiry and examination. Under this proposal Canadians are going to be asked to do the financing that we were told this company could do on its own. Most of the hon. members in this house were here in the spring of 1951 when we were assured without reservation that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines could build this line in Canada, without any export, through to Montreal and could finance the whole thing.

The same statement was made and supported by evidence before the committee which sat to hear this application, the committee to which this bill had been referred. That committee, namely the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, was told without any qualification that this be long delay, into the years 1958 and 1959, if we do not proceed now to use the pipe that is available.

We should ask ourselves when this pipe was ordered. This particular 34-inch pipe was ordered only last October, and it was understood that manufacturing would begin by February of this year. Is there any reason to suppose that when a company could proceed with the production of pipe in five months, there is some insuperable reason why it would not be possible for other orders to be filled in a similar length of time?

There is, of course, another angle. There is no gas pipe line in the United States using 34-inch pipe. No gas pipe line now contemplated in the United States has any thought of using 34-inch pipe. The 34-inch pipe that is manufactured will be available to anyone who undertakes the building of this line. The people who built the pipe built it for a particular construction, and that was from the Alberta border to the vicinity of Winnipeg. This government, any private organization that could go ahead, or any other body that was anxious to build this pipe line and had the authority to do so could pick up that 34-inch pipe. To suggest otherwise is simply trying to bluff this parliament. It was ordered for that purpose; it will be available for that purpose. Again, even if it were not, what about delay? If it were ordered now, only five months would pass until the pipe would be available.

I hope every hon. member is well aware of the fact that, while there was a very real steel shortage last October when the order was placed for this 34-inch pipe in the United States, the situation is very different today. Because of the very sharp and very great reduction in the output of automobiles in the United States, steel is no longer in short supply.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: As a matter of fact, steel is no longer in short supply.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. Drew: I see that some of the hon. members opposite seem to think that steel is in short supply.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I have been trying to pick up some similar steel in the United States for some time. Can my hon. friend tell me a mill where I can perhaps get it?

Mr. Drew: The Minister of Trade and Commerce knows perfectly well that some of these people who were selling steel to the automobile companies are now out on the road trying to get orders for the steel they were going to sell to the automobile companies before they cut back production. He knows that perfectly well.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Will my hon. friend ask one of these salesmen to call on me?

Mr. Drew: The Minister of Trade and Commerce knows perfectly well what the figures are. He knows perfectly well that there has been a tremendous cut-back in the demand for steel in the United States, and that steel would be available for the production of pipe. What a remarkable thing it is that this company was able to place an order last October to start production in five months and now, when there is a great cut in the demand for steel, it should be more difficult to get that production. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is simply bluffing, as he does so often; as he does in other statements to the house.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If my hon. friend is not bluffing, perhaps tomorrow he will tell me of someone who will take an order for steel plate.

Mr. Drew: The Minister of Trade and Commerce has already told us about the extraordinary delay that would take place, yet he knows perfectly well that this particular company has made pipe that is available, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows that the 34-inch pipe would be available to whoever is going to construct the pipe line from Alberta to the vicinity of Winnipeg.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): He knows no such thing.

Mr. Drew: Then, of course, there is another thing that the Minister of Trade and Commerce should have in mind. He is well aware, because he has spoken about it in the house, that Page-Hersey Tubes, Limited, of Welland, in co-operation with the Steel Company of Canada, have recently announced that they are building a new pipe mill in Welland in partnership for the purpose of rolling pipe in sizes up to those which would be needed here in Canada, in the very largest size and any other size that would be required. This new mill is to be completed in December, 1956.

I should think the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be greatly interested in what is going to happen to that new mill, and would be greatly interested in the opportunity that the mill will give for the construction of pipe in Canada. Do not let it be pretended for one moment that it is not possible to proceed with the construction of the broad reaches of this pipe line in sections in different parts of Canada at the same time. Let them consider the possibility of using this pipe made in Canada.

14. The presentation of evidence and the questioning in relation to that evidence concluded on April 19. All these were dates that indicated a perfectly normal procedure before the federal power commission. Those hearings are now adjourned, as I assume most hon. members know, to give an opportunity to prepare direct evidence in reply.

Today the Prime Minister indicated that he did not know whether or not there is any Canadian observer who has been attending those hearings. In view of the interest of this government, I submit that there should be a representative of the Canadian government there. I submit, furthermore, that the Prime Minister should know what the facts are because, no matter who may put forward any motion or take the responsibility of letting any measure stand in his name, it is the Prime Minister as head of the government who must share the primary responsibility for what has been described as one of the greatest ventures undertaken in Canada.

It is hardly in keeping with that description of the importance of the Trans-Canada pipe-line development that the Prime Minister should be kept unaware of many of the developments that have taken place. He did not even know, during the period they were considering substitution of a new agreement with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, that there had been another offer. Whether they had on their offer the words "private and confidential" or otherwise is unimportant. The Prime Minister was uninformed. The Prime Minister was uninformed in regard to other discussions that have taken place, and now the Prime Minister is uninformed as to whether or not we have a representative at these hearings. I submit that this is not the business of the Minister of Trade and Commerce alone. I submit that we have had enough of this one-man operation of government.

Before any hon. members opposite raise the slightest suggestion of objection to the time that we are taking to try to ascertain the facts, let them recall how little the Prime Minister was informed with regard to the essential facts while the renewal of the contract of Trans-Canada was in fact before the government itself for some considerable time. There was no reason why any aspect of the proceedings at Washington should have been a secret to the government, and there was certainly no reason for any surprise that there should have been this delay in obtaining permission. In fact it was stated definitely in the most responsible publications dealing with problems of this kind, many months before the end of last year, that there was not the slightest chance of permission being obtained for Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to export natural gas to the United States.

I go further. The discussion proceeds as though it were merely a question of how long it would be before Trans-Canada Pipe Lines gets permission from Washington. It may well be a question of how long it is going to be before Washington refuses entirely the application of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. The reason for that is clear. Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has chosen to make arrangements with Tennessee Gas, which is in a gas war in the United States. The government has taken its part in entering that gas war. We should not be in that at all. Our main concern should be to get gas to eastern Canada. The government, on the other hand, persists in following a course which involves us in a struggle between great organizations in the United States for the control of certain fields of distribution.

I wish it were possible to place on Hansard a copy of the map showing the vast network of pipe lines in the United States. The whole of the United States is criss-crossed with gas pipe lines. There is the great gas pipe line, comparable in length with the ones we are discussing in Canada, which extends from the southwestern part of the United States right up to New York. Other gas pipe lines carry gas far into the northeastern part of the United States. The whole of that heavily populated territory is criss-crossed with pipe lines. The struggle that is taking place before the federal power commission is a struggle for markets.

That is one of the reasons the federal power commission holds these hearings. It is not merely a question of waiting until it hears evidence to give permission. It gives permission only upon evidence that it is desirable that a particular organization have the right to handle the gas in a particular area. What is happening in this case is that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has made arrangements for export to an organization that is in very keen competition with a number of other organizations in the United States. Not only may there be long delay in reaching a decision but, when that decision comes, it may well be an adverse decision for the very reason that hearings are held before that organization.

Another matter that I would like to raise, and that has been brought before this house by the government, is the suggestion that there would be such great delay if we did not unquestionably accede to the proposal that, no matter how bad this proposition is, it must go ahead because there is only one place from which 34-inch pipe can be obtained. We are even told that there might

What happens then? The Minister of Trade and Commerce left us with the impression that if it came to that point, unattractive though the proposition might be to the government, they would then be called upon to consider public ownership. We have the right to know exactly what the government has in mind. It has not stated yet what it really does intend to do. When the Prime Minister rose to deal with the statement I had made about the extraordinary effect of clause 7 he made it clear that this government did contemplate the possibility that there might be some agreement between Trans-Canada and the government after this bill goes into effect which would vary the existing agreement now placed before us. He made that abundantly clear. Therefore we are asked to pass this and other sections of the bill without knowing what the government intends to do next April if by that time Trans-Canada has not been able to get permission from the federal power commission at Washington to export gas to the United States.

The Prime Minister was asked the straight question: Does the government intend to take over this line at that time? The Prime Minister has made it clear that the government is not yet prepared to say definitely what it will or will not do at that time. I think we have the right to know. If the government says definitely that it intends to take over that western section in April of next year if Trans-Canada Pipe Lines have not been able to carry out their financing by March and repay whatever part of the $80 million has been put into the construction of this western section, it should tell us. We should know. So should Trans-Canada. So should the public of Canada. So should everyone. If the odds are that this is to be a public venture in any event by next April, let us know it now so we can discuss the whole subject with a recognition of that fact. That is the least we have the right to know.

I had certainly hoped that in the discussion of clause 1, long before we got to clause 4, we should have insisted upon a clear and unqualified answer to that proposal. I find it difficult to believe that there is not some private undertaking between the government and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines at this time which has not been disclosed to us. I find it difficult to believe that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines would be prepared to put up this additional money unless they had an unqualified secret agreement with the government that when next April comes there will be some new arrangement which has not been disclosed to us.

It is true that they are putting up only 10 per cent, but how many people would like to have a chance of that kind? They are putting up only 10 per cent of the cost of construction, but it does not make sense that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines would put up the number of millions of dollars they are called upon to put up, even though it is only one-tenth of what the Canadian taxpayer is going to put up; it does not make sense that they would put up that money unless there is right now an unqualified agreement that if permission has not been granted by the federal power commission to import gas into the United States by March of next year there will be some new arrangement entered into under which Trans-Canada Pipe Lines may well still be the favoured and chosen instrument of this government. This is another thing which should have been fully explained to us.

Do not let anyone on the side of the government suggest that we are putting forward questions which create uncertainty. We are putting forward the only obvious alternatives. Let them tell us which it is. Is there an agreement clearly understood between the government and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, or does the government intend to take this over if Trans-Canada Pipe Lines have not been able to repay whatever part of the $80 million has been put up when the time comes for repayment at the beginning of April next year?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Drew: The discussions that have taken place this afternoon have all related to the bill now before us and the clause we have under consideration, but I want to speak about some of the statements that were made by the government in the earlier stages of this discussion. I particularly want to refer to the suggestion that the government has been caught by surprise by the fact that the federal power commission has not granted permission to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to export gas to the United States through the instrument that will be handling it on the other side of the border.

The fact is that the federal power commission has moved at its ordinary pace. The government knew perfectly well what has been the ordinary method of handling business by the federal power commission. This application was filed on October 10, 1955. The order for hearing before the federal power commission was issued in January of 1956, and the hearings began on February

Canadian taxpayers' money to the extent of $130 million should be put up at the request of this government and with the support of parliament to make it possible for a company, which had said it could do it without any assistance, and which was 83 per cent owned outside of Canada, to build the line. The original motion was in conformity with that statement. Then this subject came forward for discussion on March 15. At that point apparently the government came to the realization that the company could not carry out any of its undertakings, and therefore it examined the possibility of some alternative plan.

When hon. members opposite object to our discussion of this measure let us remember that this government had been considering this subject not only for the nearly five months that have elapsed since the speech from the throne was presented, but it has been discussing it for months longer than that, and it did not come to a decision until the last three weeks as to the kind of proposal it was going to put before us. Why should hon. members opposite be so impatient if we seek to have some opportunity to examine, to consider and to discuss a proposal of this kind when the government itself found it impossible to reach a final decision until after all those many months?

Now we have before us something entirely different. The main purpose of the measure now before us is not the construction of the northern Ontario bridge. The primary purpose of what is before us is to siphon off money to be given to a crown corporation ostensibly formed for the purpose of building the northern Ontario bridge, and then use that public money for the construction of the pipe line from the Alberta boundary to the vicinity of Winnipeg. Surely that is one of the strangest devices ever put before parliament. Create a crown corporation to build the northern Ontario section of the pipe line, and then siphon off the funds made available to that corporation for the purpose of the construction of an entirely different segment of the whole pipe line.

Why, Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons why we should have been permitted to discuss the earlier sections—and I trust we can mention this much of the earlier part—is that this is called an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. That is not what we are talking about. What we are talking about now is a plan to advance money for the construction of a pipe line from western Canada. Why not call it that? Why not have two measures? If the government is determined to go through with this other measure, then bring in a bill to deal with that section and set aside whatever money is necessary for that. We do not believe it should be done, but that at least would be dealing with this frankly.

We have heard a good deal in the past days of not doing by indirection what cannot be done directly. Well, let us not do by indirection something in this case which has no direct relationship to the declared purpose of the bill now under consideration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the corporation which we are now discussing is a corporation for the nominal purpose of building the northern Ontario section. Just let us see exactly what strange result flows from what is placed before us. One hundred and thirty million dollars—and of course on this we can rely on the statements made in Hansard—is to be advanced from the public treasury to a crown corporation set up for the declared purpose of building that 675-mile section through northern Ontario from the Manitoba boundary to Kapuskasing. Out of that $130 million the corporation set up only for the purpose of building the northern Ontario section is to be permitted to advance to a private company, from money belonging to the Canadian taxpayers, up to $80 million. Surely that is one of the strangest devices ever put before this parliament. This crown corporation, set up for another purpose, is to advance 90 per cent of the cost of the construction of the western section of this pipe line. Control of that construction, the handling of the money, is to be in the hands of the private company.

What results from this remarkable beneficence of this government? What results from this strange diversion of funds? What results from this strange misapplication of the taxpayers' money? The pipe line will be built from Alberta to the vicinity of Winnipeg. The pipe line will be of a size which will assure the possibility of the export of gas at Emerson if permission can be obtained from the federal power commission at Washington.

What happens after that? Can Trans-Canada go ahead and place orders for the remaining part of the pipe line? We have been told that they cannot finance this portion until they get permission from the federal power commission. Every person who has had any contact with what is taking place at Washington is fully convinced that there is not a chance that permission will be granted by the federal power commission by the end of March of next year for the export at Emerson to the Midwestern gas company, which will be the designated company to handle the gas that would be carried by this pipe line.

line proposed to be built by Trans-Canada will include a public offering in Canada of the common shares of Trans-Canada's presently unissued capital stock in an amount of not less than 51 per cent of the total number of common shares of Trans-Canada to be outstanding after such offering has been made including the shares covered by such offering, and that it is Trans-Canada's intention to effect a wide distribution of such shares throughout Canada.

That is the section. I concede immediately, Mr. Chairman, that this section is not one that lends itself to a quick or easy interpretation. In fact it is one of those sections which needs very careful examination to ascertain exactly what it means. But there is one thing that does not require careful or extended examination. I should say it does need careful examination by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but it does not need extended examination even though the Minister of Trade and Commerce repeats over and over again in his public speeches, and here as well, that this is a public offering to Canadians. That is not what the section says. It says that it will include a public offering in Canada of common shares of Trans-Canada's presently unissued capital stock. It does not say 51 per cent of all the capital stock, and that is what the Minister of Trade and Commerce is trying to suggest. It says nothing of the kind.

All this says is that it is the present intention of these parties, under an agreement to which the government is not itself a party, to make an issue which will bear the relationship of 51 per cent to the 49 per cent which represents the issued capital stock at the time a public offering is made. Let us see exactly what is outstanding. The shares now issued are 1,928,183; that is the 49 per cent. This agreement would be fully complied with if an offering is made of shares which will be 51/49ths of those shares now outstanding, and that would be a relationship of 51 per cent to the stock outstanding.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. Drew: Certainly.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What about the words "issued or to be issued"?

Mr. Drew: It says:

—will include a public offering in Canada of Common shares of Trans-Canada's presently unissued capital stock in an amount not less than 51 per cent of the total number of common shares of Trans-Canada to be outstanding after such offering has been made including the shares covered by such offering—

It does not say anything about any offering from time to time. It is one offer; and whatever the intention may be, a single offering of 2,006,884 shares would fully comply with this agreement. This would mean there would be 3,935,067 shares outstanding altogether, and this agreement will have been fully complied with. That would leave a total of 6,064,933 treasury shares still in the treasury to be disposed of and to be handled by the majority holders as they see fit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said before and I repeat that all this calls for, and all that needs to be done, in order to comply with section VI is that approximately 20 per cent of the voting stock of this company be sold to the public in Canada, and that agreement will have been fully complied with in its exact terms.

Mr. Rowe: Not necessarily to Canadians.

Mr. Drew: I would point out that this does not mean a sale to Canadians; it means a sale in Canada. I think we can very definitely take it for granted that those who hold those shares are not going to give over their control which they now exercise to the extent of 83 per cent. That is the percentage of the shares of this company now outstanding which is held by investors in the United States.

I would like to make another point clear. It is not with these shares that this company is going to be financed in its construction. If all these 10 million shares were sold they would not begin to have enough money to construct this pipe line. This pipe line is going to be financed by other types of securities, and this is where the profit comes; this is where the control is exercised in the United States.

One of the reasons given for extending such an extraordinary concession to this company in the first instance was that it was able to finance this whole venture without the intervention of the government. If United States investment had come in here and had built this line, then the original undertaking, whether or not it was desirable in its original form, would at least have been carried out in conformity with the representations made to this House of Commons, to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and to the board of transport commissioners.

Here before us now we have the remarkable proposal that a company, 83 per cent owned in the United States, is to be financed by the Canadian taxpayer through the intervention of this government. First, on January 10, in the speech from the throne, we were told that a measure would be placed before us to create a crown corporation that would construct that part of the pipe line through the 675 miles of northern Ontario from the Manitoba boundary to Kapuskasing.

Well, that in itself seemed an extraordinary plan. It seemed an extraordinary thing that Mr. Fleming: It might have been amended.

Mr. Drew: It might have been amended to embrace two separate corporations. It might have been amended to embrace an entirely different type of corporation from that which is actually described in the words that have not yet been dealt with.

There are many reasons why this matter should have been dealt with in an orderly way. Intentionally or unintentionally, the government has been far from frank with this house in the explanation of why it was following this course. Let us take the explanation given by the Minister of Finance as to the reason it was suggested that this government undertake the construction of a pipe line through northern Ontario. I read from Hansard for Monday, May 21, at page 4140, from the statement of the Minister of Finance. These are his words:

> Mr. Speaker, the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines company found last year that this government and indeed the government of Ontario as well were insisting that the pipe line go through not the shortest northern Ontario route but a northern Ontario route which is longer than they normally would survey, and the result was they expected the government of Ontario and Canada to contribute in some way to the construction of that line which would be at an extra cost because of its length and direction.

Mr. Chairman, that is the only explanation that has been given for this course that is being followed, other than the statement that it is difficult country through which to build a pipe line. It was explained that the government had asked that a longer line be followed and the result was that they expected the government of Canada to contribute in some way to the construction of that line because there would be extra cost.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that simply is not so. If the Minister of Finance did not know what the facts were, then he made a very careless statement in such emphatic terms. After all, he was giving the explanation of the government for this course. The fact is quite the contrary, that the longer line will not cost more but will cost less. Let me read from the judgment of the board of transport commissioners, at page 379, following the hearing on August 18, 1955. This is what the judgment says, and just recall when I read this that the explanation that has been given for the government undertaking this strange device is that it would cost more:

> The route suggested by the company—

That is this longer route.

> —would cost approximately $1,500,000 less to construct than the alternative, and also the portion of the route along the gravelled country road will be less difficult of access than the alternative north of lake Nipissing where the line would have to leave the highway to avoid the muskeg swamp. There would also be a saving in operating costs made possible by not having to compress the Sudbury area gas through station No. 11 in the early years.

There is an explanation due to this house from the Minister of Finance as to the explanation he has given for the government presenting to this house this remarkable proposal to build the northern Ontario section. If the arguments of the government are as reliable as this in other cases, then surely the Prime Minister should be prepared to consider reasons why we should get back to a careful examination of every section of this measure, and indeed a thorough examination of this whole proposition.

Nor was it only in that case that we have seen the determined refusal of the government to accept the facts as they really are. I know what the purpose is when the Minister of Trade and Commerce, over and over again, repeats the statement that those who are the majority shareholders of this company have agreed to offer 51 per cent of the outstanding stock to Canadians. It has been pointed out on a number of occasions that there is no support for that contention. The section itself denies the accuracy of the statement, and still the minister comes back to it and came back to it as recently as May 14 during the discussion of this subject. Once again he repeated the statement that 51 per cent of the common stock was to be offered to Canadians.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is not so and I think it is appropriate to put on the record exactly what the facts are so those who examine Hansard may understand why we have challenged that statement, and why we object to the repeated inaccuracies of the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he says there has been a proposal to offer 51 per cent to Canadians. This is the section to which he refers, and it is section VI of an agreement dated February 18, 1956, between Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, of the first part; Tennessee Gas Transmission Company, of the second part; Canadian Gulf Oil Company, of the third part; and Hudson Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited, of the fourth part. May I point out that this is not an agreement with the government. The government is not in a position to enforce any section of this agreement. This is simply a voluntary agreement among the various corporations which make up this transaction, and this agreement could be varied at any time by agreement among the same parties and the government would have no legal power to intervene at that time.

This is the wording of section VI:

> Trans-Canada declares and agrees that its arrangements for the financing of the cost of construction of the west-east natural gas transmission

This building, in fact, is a building which shows the nature of this parliament. It is divided down the middle, showing the separation between the government and the opposition. The Speaker's chair is at the end of this hall in the centre. At the moment the chairman sits at the table which is in front of the Speaker's chair. Here in this house, to the right and to the left, are the two sides of parliament, a fact which indicates the balance between the statements and the actions of the government in power, and the right and, even more, the duty of the opposition to examine with the greatest care and to oppose with the utmost vigour where they believe opposition is wise and desirable.

An hon. Member: Obstruction.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend even to put into the record the word I just heard uttered on the other side. However, I want to say I would hope that an hon. member who uses the kind of remark I just heard —and I imagine it probably was not heard by Hansard—is completely out of touch with the traditions of this institution and the solemnity with which we should regard anything that diminishes its strength and its responsibility.

An hon. Member: Obstruction.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I would hope the hon. member who is making these offensive interjections would rise and identify himself, because it would be appropriate that Hansard should know by whom statements of this kind are made.

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the invitation of the Leader of the Opposition in order to say that I feel that the hon. member is absolutely out of order and is not speaking on the bill.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, we have not yet reached the point where it is out of order to talk about the rights of parliament and the rights of the members of parliament.

Mr. Knowles: Not yet.

Mr. Drew: I am, however, inclined to think there are some in this house who think it is out of order to talk about the rights of parliament. The interjection that has just been made is one which correctly interprets the attitude that has been expressed by the government and supported by its followers in these past few days. I would hope that even yet—

An hon. Member: Do we have to listen to more of this lecture?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I just heard from the opposite side the remark "We have to listen to more of this lecture". If they are not getting from their own side, in caucus or elsewhere, any lectures on the rights of parliament, perhaps it is appropriate that some of the hon. members who find it so objectionable might listen to what is being said about parliament and its traditions, particularly about this parliament of our own.

When this building was damaged by fire and this new House of Commons was rebuilt and constructed in the way it now stands, it was constructed with a full recognition of the place of the opposition as well the place of the government and its followers. It is to that thought that I would direct the attention of hon. members; and even now at this stage I would ask the Prime Minister and his associates in the government to consider the position they have created by postponing the first three clauses and then bringing us to clause 4 without any of the defining clauses having been passed.

The Prime Minister by his words makes it quite clear that it was not the intention of the government to revert to clauses 1, 2 and 3 but rather that it is the intention to proceed to the termination of the consideration of this bill in its remaining stages. Mr. Chairman, this procedure destroys the effectiveness of our parliamentary system. In propriety, I cannot at this point deal with the contents of clause 1, clause 2 and clause 3; yet it is in clause 3 that we find defined all the terms which give the subsequent clauses any meaning. Then also clause 3 has been passed under this particularly—

Mr. Coldwell: Obnoxious.

Mr. Drew: —obnoxious form of closure, and clause 3 is the one that would bring the corporation into existence. It has not done so. The corporation has not yet been dealt with. If the government recognizes any rights of the opposition, then it recognizes the possibility that clause 3 might have varied the form of that corporation and that, when we came to clause 4, we would be discussing a different type of corporation from that which was contemplated in the original stages.

There are many reasons why that should have been the case. When we read the words "the corporation" in clause 4, why are we to assume that we are not dealing with a separate corporation to deal with the construction of the pipe line from the Alberta boundary to the vicinity of Winnipeg? In fact it would be much more sensible if that were so. I would point out that, far from our debate being narrowed by this situation, it has been extended because I have the right to assume that this corporation embraces any type of corporation that could have been created by the judgment of this house in the earlier clauses.

other occasions it may have been Liberals expressing criticism of a course of action followed by Conservatives in no way changes the nature of the sentiments that were expressed nor the cogency of the remarks. On the contrary they gain more weight by virtue of the fact that they were directed to proceedings much less objectionable than these. They were directed to the closing of debate by closure even after there had been substantial discussion of every section. Discussion on the earlier occasions when closure was first applied and on the succeeding occasions occupied weeks.

In the case, for instance, of the debate on the naval bill every section was discussed at great length. When objection was taken to the closing of debate in committee it was after the debate had been continuously before the house for three weeks in the committee stage alone. Never before was anything of this kind attempted. Therefore it is worth while to go back to what was said on August 28, 1917, by Hon. Ernest Lapointe, as found at page 5039 of Hansard:

> I contend that this house has neither the mandate nor the authority to pass such a measure. Now, this action on the part of the government becomes even more arbitrary when it is accompanied by the rigorous application of the rules of this house which are actually imposed upon us. It is assuredly tyrannical—I believe the word is still within the limits of moderation—to employ the gag in order to have such a measure passed by a parliament such as we constitute just now.

I go back to that point, and I wish to refer to this subject before I pass on to the general remarks I propose to make, because I do not think it is sufficiently understood that what the Prime Minister has placed before us this afternoon is no concession of any kind. Even if the government had kept to its planned schedule of postponing each clause as it came before the committee and then applying a blanket closure after 24 hours' notice there would not have been a closure of the debate in committee in any event until Wednesday night. Then with respect to third reading, under the rules the earliest that closure could have taken place would have been after 24 hours' notice, which would mean that in any event Friday would have been the earliest time the subsequent proceeding could have been brought to an end.

Therefore it is in that light that we must examine what the Prime Minister has said today when he tells us, and I use his words: "I want to state emphatically that as soon as the motion before the committee is disposed of, further debate on the bill can begin and there will be all this week for it to be continued in its remaining stages." We had all the balance of this week in any event, Mr. Chairman, to discuss the bill in its remaining stages, so this is no concession whatever. It is no concession of any kind, and I think it is regrettable that the Prime Minister should come before us and, in an attempt to meet the criticism that has been made public that this is an effort to prevent discussion of the bill, make what appears to be an offer when as a matter of fact there is no offer at all.

I said immediately that if the Prime Minister were to make any offer on this occasion it certainly should be an offer to revert to the first clause of the bill and then to proceed through the bill in an orderly way. I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that if that course had been adopted we probably would have been further on in the bill now than we actually are, and with all the debate having taken place that would be appropriate under the circumstances.

I wish to repeat that while I have used a colloquial comparison that indicates something of the extent to which we feel the rights of parliament are being destroyed, we want no thought in anybody's mind that because we use such a colloquial comparison we do not mean exactly what we say when we place before the house that the precedent that is now being established, if it becomes accepted practice, ends for all practical purposes the existence of an effective opposition in this house. It is just as serious as that. I think every hon. member of the house who still recalls the great traditions of this institution will accept the proposition that it is the existence of an opposition which is in fact the hallmarks of our parliamentary democracy.

After a bomb had fallen through the roof of the building at Westminster during the war and the ensuing fire had gutted the House of Commons, a committee was appointed by Right Hon. Winston Churchill to consider the reconstruction of the House of Commons. I do not have his speech before me, but in making a short quotation from that speech I believe my words are accurate; in any event they are an accurate interpretation of words that were used by Sir Winston Churchill at that time. In going back through the history of the House of Commons and speaking of its traditions he said he hoped that it would be the decision of the committee to retain all the earlier characteristics of the ancient House of Commons. Then he used these words: "We shape our buildings, and then in time our buildings shape us".

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

And the house having resumed in committee:

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Clause 4. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I have already made certain remarks in regard to clause 4 which I shall not repeat because they will appear in Hansard in the same record. I did so thinking that a point of order had been disposed of, and the remarks I was making earlier were based upon the assumption that we were now dealing with clause 4 and for the first time, therefore, in a position to debate directly upon the bill since it came to the committee stage.

I would point out that to many of the hon. members opposite it must seem that some of the statements that have been made are very extreme in their nature. I want to make it clear that no statement that has been made is more extreme than the sentiment we feel about what is being done to the regular proceedings in parliament on this occasion. I would have hoped that we might have gone back to clause 1 either by the voluntary action of the Prime Minister or in acceptance of a motion which was made, because of the difficulties that are presented in dealing with this clause as it now stands.

I want to point out that it is not on this occasion alone that hon. members of this house have held very strong views about procedure of this nature. The fact that on

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, in order that we may test what the Prime Minister's offer means, and so that we may have an orderly debate on the bill in committee, I move:

That the consideration of this clause be postponed in order that the committee may revert to the consideration of clause 1.

The Deputy Chairman: It has been moved by Mr. Fulton:

That the consideration of this clause—

I interpolate that is clause 4.

—be postponed in order that the committee may revert to the consideration of clause 1.

Standing order 78(1) reads:

In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Deputy Chairman: Under my reading of standing order 78(1) it would not be possible to revert to clause 1 until we had once gone through the clauses in their proper order; that is, in their chronological order. On that basis—

Mr. Fulton: Before you make your ruling may I say just a word? Citation 691 of Beauchesne's third edition, at page 235, reads as follows:

The consideration of a clause may, on motion made, be postponed, but the motion may not be made if the clause has been amended. A postponed clause is, in the absence of an order to the contrary, considered after the other clauses of the bill have been disposed of and before new clauses, if any, are brought up.

My motion gives the committee the opportunity to make a motion to the contrary. The citation clearly shows it is contemplated that it may be ordered by the committee that they revert to a postponed clause before considering the remainder. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that you would press strongly the argument that standing order 78(1) precludes us from going back since 78(1) has been relied upon by the government in the past as the basis for their contention that the clauses may be taken up out of their proper order.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fulton: Therefore, I think the government is hoist on its own petard in this case and the motion is in order on that basis and on the basis of citation 691, which clearly contemplates, if the committee so desires, it may revert to a postponed clause.

The Deputy Chairman: Despite the rather persuasive argument just introduced by the hon. member for Kamloops, I am of the opinion that so far we have not taken the clauses in their improper—that is, not in their chronological—order. Although I have no citation to quote, it is my reading of citation 691, which says:

A postponed clause is, in the absence of an order to the contrary, considered after the other clauses of the bill have been disposed of . . . .

I think that would imply of necessity that an order to the contrary would be made at the time the clause was postponed and therefore with regret I rule the motion of the hon. member for Kamloops out of order.

Mr. Fulton: I appeal your ruling.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I at this time make it clear to the committee that the reduction of the appeal to writing is entirely the responsibility of the chairman. However, for the information of the hon. member who has appealed I would advise him I propose to submit, after the preliminaries, that I ruled that the motion was out of order on the ground that it was not in order to revert to a postponed clause until all clauses of the bill had been called in their proper order.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

Mr. Speaker, in committee of the whole, when it was considering clause 4 of Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Fulton moved that the consideration of this clause be postponed in order that the committee may revert to the consideration of clause 1. I ruled that the motion was out of order on the ground that it was not in order to revert to a postponed clause until all clauses of the bill had been called in their proper order.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

Mr. Applewhaite of the committee of the whole reports that when in committee of the whole on clause 4 of Bill No. 298, Mr. Fulton moved that the consideration of clause 4 be postponed in order that the committee may revert to the consideration of clause 1. The chairman ruled that the motion was out of order on the ground that it was not in order to revert to postponed clauses until all clauses of the bill had been called in their proper order. Whereupon Mr. Fulton appealed to the house from the ruling of the chairman.

Those who are in favour of sustaining the ruling of the chairman please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed to sustaining the ruling of the chairman will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In committee of the whole, when it was considering clause 4 of Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Mr. Knowles raised a point of order to the effect that the committee was not properly on clause 4 of the bill on the ground that the house had had no opportunity to discuss clauses 1, 2 and 3. The chairman ruled that the committee was regularly on clause 4, since clause 3 was duly and regularly postponed by motion this day. Whereupon Mr. Knowles appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: Just before I put the question, I may say how pleased we all are to see the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Casselman) back with us. We have all missed him, and I want to assure him we are all very happy to see him back with us.

The question is the following one:

In committee of the whole Mr. Knowles raised a point of order to the effect that the committee was not properly on clause 4 of the bill on the ground that the house had had no opportunity to discuss clauses 1, 2 and 3. The chairman ruled that the committee was regularly on clause 4 since clause 3 was duly and regularly postponed by motion this day. Whereupon Mr. Knowles appealed to the house from the ruling of the chairman.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

And the house having resumed in committee:

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Leader of the Opposition.

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the Leader of the Opposition a question? I trust he has not forgotten that there is before the Chair a point of order which I raised?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I concede immediately that when the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was speaking I had assumed that the point of order of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had been brushed aside and that we were debating on the measure. If that is not so, I immediately give way to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to proceed with his point of order, but I admit quite frankly that I had assumed that when the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway made his eloquent, impassioned and great contribution to this debate he was in fact speaking in the debate on the bill itself. I give way to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the Leader of the Opposition for his gesture. It is true that when the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway concluded his remarks I did not rise immediately. I waited a few seconds because I thought that in response to that appeal the Prime Minister would suggest that we revert to clause 1. When, in the speech he made in reply to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, he indicated his unwillingness to do so, I realized that it left me no alternative but to press my point of order that we are not properly on clause 4.

In pressing that point of order may I point out once again that what has been offered to us today by the Prime Minister, and I say this after giving it a great deal of thought, is literally nothing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a sop.

Mr. Knowles: He tells us that we are to be allowed all this week to debate the bill, and I think these were his words—if I am incorrect he can correct me—"on its remaining stages". I point out, Mr. Chairman, that it is fairly obvious that the committee would take at least today and tomorrow from the way we have been going to get as far as clause 7. That means that if the Prime Minister had not made that offer today it would be some time tomorrow before the government could give notice of closure at the committee stage which would mean that closure could not be brought into effect with respect to the committee stage until Wednesday night.

That being the case, the earliest time that notice of closure could be given with respect to third reading would be Thursday and the earliest it could come into effect would be Friday night or Saturday morning at one o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I think I should point out to him that it was he who reminded the Leader of the Opposition that we were supposed to be discussing a point of order.

Mr. Knowles: The point is well taken, Mr. Chairman. I got carried away with the reply made by the Leader of the Opposition to the Prime Minister. I think I have made my point that we have not been given a thing this afternoon by the Prime Minister. Therefore we have to stand by strict adherence to the rules and I insist that you make a ruling whether or not we are properly on clause 4. It is my submission that because we have not discussed clauses 1, 2 or 3 you should rule that we are not properly on clause 4 but that we should revert to clause 1.

The Deputy Chairman: It is suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the committee is not properly on clause 4, the preceding clauses not having been properly considered. I think that is a fair summary of his position.

Mr. Knowles: It is the same contention that the other Mr. Knowles made in 1913.

The Deputy Chairman: The decisions made by this committee and confirmed by the house by vote on the 24th of May, as found at page 617 of Votes and Proceedings, and on the 25th of May, as found at page 634 of Votes and Proceedings, are the same proposition in reverse, namely, that we could not proceed away from these clauses because they had not been properly considered. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says that we are not properly on the next clause because they were not properly considered. I rule that the committee is properly on clause 4, clauses 1, 2 and 3 having been called and considered within the terms of the standing order.

Mr. Knowles: Then, Mr. Chairman, for the reasons I have already stated and because the Prime Minister refuses to let the committee revert to clause 1, I appeal your ruling.

The Deputy Chairman: The appeal will be put in writing, and I trust that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who has raised this question, will be satisfied if the report is in exactly the same terms as in the incident on which he based his point of order.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Chairman, you can take it almost exactly from column 9377 of Hansard for May 8, 1913.

out that the consideration of a bill in committee is the very core of parliamentary democracy, the very core of our whole parliamentary procedure in relation to bills that are brought before this house. There in the committee stage there is an opportunity for members to examine the words of the bill; there in the committee stage there is an opportunity for members opposite, as well as on the government side, to make suggestions as to the way in which the bill can be improved. On other and happier occasions when this government recognized parliamentary procedure, there have been occasions when bills have been greatly improved by the acceptance on the part of the government of suggestions that have come from members of the opposition. Who knows that in this case, in the consideration of clause 1, of clause 2, of clause 3, there might not have been changes made which would have a very considerable bearing on the whole application of this act and a better understanding of what the problem is that is now before us?

When was this arbitrary suppression of free discussion first planned? Do not let the Prime Minister tell us that it was parliament that decided this. It was his followers, who obeyed the crack of the whip. That was the way that the right of discussion was denied.

Mr. Fleming: Shame on them.

Mr. Drew: That was the reason why there has been all this discussion taking place on points of order. That is the reason why there has been in this house a series of discussions which all members doubtless regret in their impact on the orderly business of this house. But let one thing be said to those who speak about procedure and privilege: that the government bears 100 per cent of the responsibility for any disorder that has occurred in this house. For any diminution of respect for the Chair or for the position of other officers of this house, the government bears full responsibility.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Drew: I hear the comment "Carried" from the other side. This is not carried. We have now our first democratic right in this present hour to discuss in the committee stage this bill which is before us, and then we hear shouts of "Carried" from those who have given their unthinking subservience to this government, which has sought to throttle parliament. Even the apparent concession made by the Prime Minister this afternoon is no real concession at all, because all it says is, "We now have come to the conclusion that we should permit some appearance of debate, and therefore, for the present week, you may go ahead and discuss these clauses." That gives us no assurance that we go back to our real discussion of the earlier and operative clauses which bring this corporation into existence and define its names and purposes.

This procedure that we have seen in the past few days is something that it has not been possible to discuss in the way we can now discuss it, in a debate. We have seen here a barefaced attempt to render parliament ineffective, and what single explanation has been given for that? The only explanation offered was the explanation given by the Minister of Finance when he referred to a statement that had been made on an earlier occasion that there was going to be vigorous opposition to this bill. Therefore this government repudiates all the ordinary traditions of debate, all the ordinary procedure upheld by Liberals of the past with whose names no member of this government has any right to be associated. Do we hear from them the suggestion that there has been delay, that there has been an assurance that there would be opposition to this bill and, therefore, there must be no debate? That is the only explanation.

If we were to accept that explanation, it would be the end of the existence of an opposition in anything but name. We are standing here today, not speaking alone on this bobtailed debate with a truncated consideration of the bill. We are not here speaking on clause 4 or the succeeding clauses alone. We are speaking here for the right of the existence of an opposition in this House of Commons. Concede for one moment the validity of the argument put forward by the Minister of Finance in this discussion which has already taken place; concede for a moment the validity of the statement put forward by the Prime Minister today; and you will concede that the opposition has no place in this House of Commons. It is nothing less than that. This can only be described in terms that I thought would never be used here in Canada to describe the system under which we would carry on our public affairs. Guy Fawkes was a mere piker compared with the Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He worked from outside then.

Mr. Drew: Guy Fawkes at least went into the cellar when he tried to destroy parliament. We had to wait for this government to try to destroy parliament in the broad light of day in the way it has in these past few days.

deal. When I made a statement at the opening of the house I did not attempt to say what might be debated according to my will or what might not be debated. I was conscious that two clauses had been postponed by decision, not my decision but of the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): —And that there was a third clause in connection with which there was a motion of postponement that was before the chair for decision; but that as soon as that motion was disposed of I hoped hon. gentlemen would attempt to discuss the bill instead of discussing questions of procedure.

Mr. Rowe: How can you proceed without procedure?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, what has happened today has only served to emphasize the seriousness of the situation with which this house is confronted. The words which the Prime Minister has just uttered have not in any way explained what has taken place, nor have they in any way minimized the menace of the proposal placed before us today. The Prime Minister says that he did not attempt to say what might be done, that it was not his decision but the decision of the house.

I assume that the Prime Minister knew what the Minister of Trade and Commerce was going to do. I assume that the Prime Minister knew what the Minister of Finance was going to do. I assume that the Prime Minister knew that the most vicious type of closure was going to be introduced when this bill came into committee stage. What he has just said now has only aggravated the situation which has just been discussed in such eloquent and moving terms by the member who has just taken his seat.

The Prime Minister rose on a question of privilege when the house opened today. He was forced to do that because the closure imposed by his colleague prevented him from speaking, just as it has prevented all the rest of us from speaking until this time. When we hear that he would like to hear us talking in debate instead of on questions of privilege, who does he think, and who do the Liberals who applaud that statement think, forced these discussions on privilege? We have been denied one word of debate on this bill in the committee stage until right now. We have been denied that right by the government, which I assume the Prime Minister still claims to lead. Unless he repudiates publicly his leadership of that government he as Prime Minister must accept responsibility for all the dangerous things which have happened in this past week.

When the Prime Minister rose on a question of privilege today he said:

> The procedure followed by the government has been represented as an effort to prevent debate on the pipe line bill, and I want to state emphatically that as soon as the motion before the committee is disposed of further debate on the bill can continue and there will be all this week for it to be continued on its remaining stages.

What further debate on the bill? There has been no debate until now. There has been no debate on this bill in the committee stage; none whatever, not one word.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: The derisive shouts of the Liberal members opposite indicate the extent to which they have apparently deluded themselves as to what has been taking place. Not one word have we been allowed. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, rising at the calling of the bill and rising twice after at least one other member who already standing, was recognized and, after a few words that meant little, then moved the adjournment of the consideration of that section.

Where do we find ourselves at this time? We find ourselves in the position where we are called upon to discuss clause 4 without clauses 1, 2 or 3 having been discussed. Let us see what the first subclause of clause 4 says:

> The corporation is a body corporate having capacity to contract and to sue and be sued in the name of the corporation.

What corporation, Mr. Prime Minister? You cannot tell us. You cannot tell us because you have no right to say it is printed in the bill which is in the hands of the members and that is what it is going to be. You must at least give sufficient lip service to the procedure of this house to admit that the definition of the corporation and the name of the corporation and the other details could be changed if there were consideration of the earlier clauses. This corporation has not yet been defined. We are asked to debate on a clause which refers to an undefined corporation. That merely indicates what a vicious and improper procedure has been imposed upon us by this statement for which the Prime Minister claims some consideration.

Do not let anyone say that this has not been foreclosure. This has been foreclosure of a kind that goes to the very root of our whole parliamentary system. Already there have been placed on record, in the discussions that have taken place under the rules in an attempt to obtain proper parliamentary consideration of this subject, the words of great leaders of the past who have pointed

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I am in a somewhat similar position to that of the hon. member for Vancouver East. This is the first word that I have uttered in this debate, and I would not have risen now if it had not been for what has happened since this house opened today. At the opening of the house the Prime Minister made a statement that after we had disposed of the motion before us, then we could proceed with debating the bill. Now, in view of the fact that the decision has been taken that the postponing of the sections of the bill already postponed was out of order unless we go back to section 1, I declare that the statement made by the Prime Minister is an insult to this house. It is intolerable that free men should come here and be told what they may or may not discuss on the word of the Prime Minister or anyone else. Mr. Chairman, we have got into a sort of tailspin in this matter. I am quite sure that every member of this house who has any responsibility at all, or any sense of responsibility, feels that something should be done; that we should get back to the ordinary dignity and decorum of this house. I do not know, sir, how it is to be done but it cannot be done by putting our stamp of approval on wrongs already done.

I think the initial issue in this debate is the question of closure. May I tell hon. members, government members, official opposition members, C.C.F. members and Social Credit members, that I favour closure. The government has a perfect right—not only a right but a duty—to invoke closure at the right time; that is, when it has been demonstrated that the business of the house cannot be carried on in any other way but by closure. I said I am in favour of closure. I am in favour of closure, old style. I am not in favour of closure, new style. I do not believe that the members of this house, I do not believe that the members of the government understand, indeed I cannot believe that the Prime Minister understands what has happened. If he had understood it, it is my humble opinion that he is too much of a democrat, too much of a gentleman, too much of a believer in parliamentary institutions to continue this any further.

What has happened, and this was the initial mistake that was made, was that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce introduced the resolution preceding this bill he also made a motion that closure would be applied. Closure would be applied, why? Because the debate had been obstructed? No, closure was to be applied because the government had set a time limit to the debate and because it was anticipated that there would be obstruction. We do not carry on business in this house on the basis of anticipation. I have been here for over a quarter of a century and I have never yet seen a Speaker who would make a ruling on an anticipated situation.

However, rulings and decisions have been made and the decisions made today will be the precedents for tomorrow. I suggest to my hon. friends on the Liberal side of the house that they read the speech which their former leader, the late W. L. Mackenzie King, made when he was leader of the opposition in connection with a motion for closure moved in 1932. In all of the illustrations he gave to show the effect the action of the Prime Minister and government was likely to have in the future, he referred to things that might happen should a socialist government take office. The things which the late Mackenzie King said were going to happen have happened, and they have happened in a worse form than Mr. Bennett ever thought or conceived of. They have all happened under a Liberal government.

What has happened is that from now on any time the government introduces a resolution preceding a bill and there is some talk that the opposition is opposed to it—that is why the opposition is here; it is their duty to obstruct from time to time; that is their right. I have seen my friends over here put on a filibuster.

Mr. Blackmore: On a high principle.

Mr. MacInnis: I think we all remember when the premier of British Columbia wanted to give away the resources of British Columbia and the Minister of Trade and Commerce succeeded in stopping it. That is their right, but from now on we will have no right because whoever introduces a resolution may also introduce a notice of closure. Freedom of debate has died in this house during the last two or three weeks.

I do not know what can be done, but I do know that you cannot say that these things have not happened. I would suggest that we try to find a way out of this situation. An opposition can be irresponsible because they are not in positions of responsibility. But in this case the government has been irresponsible and it is in a position of responsibility. I submit that the government and opposition leaders should get together to see if we cannot wipe the slate clean of what has happened and get back to sanity, get back again to parliamentary procedure, get back to rules of order that cannot be changed from day to day according to the wishes of those sitting on the other side of the house.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, there is just one point in the hon. gentleman's speech with which I wish to refer the matter to His Honour the Speaker for direction and advice; but, of course, if you refuse to do that, notwithstanding that there is precedent for it, then I have no alternative but to appeal your ruling to the house. I request you to give consideration to the question of whether you should not refer it to His Honour the Speaker for consideration and direction.

The Deputy Chairman: I regret, because I would very much like to have the position clarified for my own personal satisfaction, that there is nothing that I can refer to the house at the moment. The question as to whether or not the motion made by Mr. Howe was debatable was appealed to the house and decided on two or three occasions. Therefore, I am bound by that decision. As Chairman of this committee I have not the right to ask the house immediately to reverse itself. The decision will be found on page 4285 of Hansard. Therefore, the only matter that is before the committee, as I understand it, is that the hon. member for Kamloops is raising the question as to whether or not the vote of the committee was properly taken. I put the question. Members on both sides of the house stood and were recorded. As far as I am concerned I regret that I must close the incident on clause 3 for the moment. Clause 4 is before the committee.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. My point of order is that you, sir, as chairman, should not call clause 4 at this time. I base my point of order on a similar incident that occurred in this house on May 8, 1913. On that occasion the naval aid bill was before the house and in column 9372 of Hansard for May 8, 1913, appear the words:

The Chairman: Clause 4.

It may come as a bit of a surprise to some hon. members if I tell them that at that point a member by the name of Mr. Knowles rose and contended that clause 4 had been improperly called. The Mr. Knowles of that day gave as his reasons why it was improper for the chair to call clause 4 the fact that clauses 2 and 3 had not been discussed. He admitted that it would have been possible to call clause 2 because there had been some discussion on clause 1. He argued his point I think very effectively as recorded on several pages of Hansard. He was interrupted in due course by Mr. Arthur Meighen, the member for Portage la Prairie, and as a result of the interruption the chairman of the day cut off that Mr. Knowles from any further discussion on the point of order, and Mr. Knowles of that day objected to the gag being put in his mouth and as a result he appealed the chairman's ruling. I point out, Mr. Chairman, that when the Mr. Knowles of 1913, who was a Liberal member for Moose Jaw, argued as he did and appealed the chairman's ruling he was supported as being correct in his position by every Liberal member in the house. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Liberal members of 1956 will support the Mr. Knowles of 1956 in making precisely the same point, namely that it is improper for you to call clause 4 when we have not had a discussion on clauses 1, 2 and 3. I raise this as a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the hon. member assist me by giving me the decision of the house on that occasion?

Mr. Knowles: The decision of the house, with the Conservatives in the majority, was against Mr. Knowles.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friends, the Liberals in this house, are laughing at the decision; they are laughing boisterously at the Liberals of 1913; laughing indeed at the vote cast on that occasion by their revered former leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I suggest that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. W. E. Knowles of Moose Jaw, Mr. Lapointe and the other Liberals who voted on that occasion were correct in their insistence that it was improper to discuss clause 4 when clauses 2 and 3 had not been discussed. You, sir, sought to ascertain what the decision of the house was on that occasion. You, sir, know that across the years there are many instances when decisions have been reversed in succeeding parliaments and I submit that the Liberals were right in supporting Mr. Knowles in 1913 and I call on the Liberals to be consistent and take the same position when Mr. Knowles raises the same point of order again in 1956.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, may I point out that it is the very same point of order that was raised on the preceding clauses though the hon. member has now carefully avoided citing any particular rule as he did on previous occasions. So far as our laughing is concerned, I shall begin laughing soon if we do not get down to debating the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I tell the Minister of Finance that the only reason I did not read the rule that I read before was that it is already on the pages of Hansard; but I might point out that Mr. Knowles in 1913 put on the record as part of his argument the very same rule which is now 78 (1), which Mr. Knowles in 1956 has been doing his best to get this house to adhere to strictly.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; I challenge the vote and I challenge the right to declare the motion carried on the ground that before you put the motion I rose to my feet to move an amendment. You ruled the amendment out of order and I raised a point of order, again before you put the question. You refused to hear me. In my submission, the question should not have been put until the amendment was considered and disposed of. You refused that right, and I therefore challenge your right to declare this motion carried and I request a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. Winch: If I could ever get the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, I should like to rise on a point of privilege. My question of privilege, sir, and no one can say I have taken up the time of this house, is this. On the last vote I rose immediately you put the question, and I was on my feet continuously until the vote was taken. It was not my desire to rise to a point of order, or a question of privilege. It was my desire to be recognized and to speak on the motion before this committee. I was on my feet, and I know that was recognized by the other side, continuously until the motion was put, but I was not recognized or granted the right to speak to the motion before the house. I say, sir, that is a gag and I am not going to sit here and take it. I raise it as a question of privilege, being denied the right to speak to the motion.

The Deputy Chairman: I have heard both the point of order and the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. member for Vancouver East. They are both exactly the same as the point which was decided two or three times in the debate on this particular bill, that is, they wish to speak or to amend a motion that further consideration of a clause be postponed. It has been ruled, appealed and confirmed on at least two occasions that these motions are neither debatable nor amendable. I, therefore, found myself in the position, as soon as I took the chair, that a motion be put to the house. As to whether or not it was in order, that had been appealed and the chairman's ruling had been upheld. I therefore was in the position, as soon as I took my seat, that the first and only business I had was to put that motion and that, in accordance with my duty, I did. Clause 4?

Mr. Fulton: I appeal your ruling and I wish to appeal your ruling not to the house but I wish you, sir, to refer this matter to Mr. Speaker for his advice, consideration and recommendation in accordance with previously established practice in this committee.

In connection with the point which I asked you to state for His Honour's consideration I refer you to standing order 44 which says:

> When a question is under debate no motion is received unless to amend it; to postpone it to a day certain; for the previous question; for reading the orders of the day; for proceeding to another order; to adjourn the debate; or for the adjournment of the house.

What we had under consideration was a motion to postpone consideration. I wished to move as an amendment or superseding order, had I had a moment to make myself clear, that the purpose of the postponement was in order that we might revert to consideration of clause 1. Whether you choose to regard that as a superseding motion or an amendment is immaterial, but I maintain it is in order, if not under one heading, then under the other. You having refused to entertain the motion, I appeal from your right to declare the minister's motion carried and I appeal your refusal and I wish you to refer it to the Speaker for his consideration and advice.

The Deputy Chairman: If I understand the point raised by the hon. member for Kamloops, he wants to appeal the decision of the committee. I am unable to learn of any procedure, whereby I can submit that decision to the house until such time as the committee rises and reports. He has also requested a reference as to certain matters to the Speaker of the house. I take it he means a personal reference to Mr. Speaker, as an individual. I have not the power, as chairman of this committee, to do that. I decide points of order, subject to an appeal to the house. I have not just decided a point of order in connection with the last point raised. I have announced the decision of a vote taken by this committee. Clause 4 is now before the committee.

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order. You cannot dispose of this matter in that manner. I rose on a point of order, and challenged your right to put the vote. I challenged your right to put the question at the point when you did, and I asked you to rule upon the point. As you have ruled apparently that you had the right to put the question, I have challenged your ruling on a point of order.

What I have challenged is your right to put the question when you did and to declare the result on a question improperly placed before the committee at that time. I raise that as a point of order. I understand you have ruled upon it. I have said that I appeal your ruling. I have requested you first to

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to say a word, just in order to avoid any misinterpretation of what I said, may I point out that I said "just as soon as the motion now before the committee has been disposed of".

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I continue on my point of privilege.

Mr. McIlraith: No. You were heard once.

Mr. Knowles: My question of privilege is this. The offer made by the Prime Minister carries with it the implication that parliament is to have freedom to discuss this legislation. In support of my question of privilege I quote just a few words uttered on April 16, 1913, by the former member for Quebec East, then the member for Kamouraska, namely Ernest Lapointe. As reported in column 7872 of Hansard of April 16, 1913, he said this:

> Freedom of speech will be reserved exclusively to the men in power, and subject at all times to be denied to others. Freedom which is granted only by way of sufferance is really not freedom. We will then have a parody and a sham of the parliamentary system.

My question of privilege is this. If we are to be free to discuss matters only when the Prime Minister says so,—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Knowles: —that is not freedom to discuss at all.

The Deputy Chairman: I have heard the hon. member and, as I suspected, I do not consider the question he raised was a question of privilege but one as to the advisability or not of passing the motion. I repeat that whatever my personal views may be it is my considered opinion that at this stage of the committee it is my duty to put the question on the motion moved by Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, before you put the motion, I have a motion.

The Deputy Chairman: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: Those against the motion please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Fulton: I ask to be given the opportunity to put my motion before the motion is put.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am on my feet putting a motion and I was on my feet to put the motion before you put the question. The motion I make is that the motion of the minister be amended by adding thereto the following words:

> In order that the committee may revert to the consideration of clause 1.

The Deputy Chairman: I have heard the hon. member for Kamloops. I would point out to him that it has been decided two or three times in this debate that this is a superseding or procedural motion, not debatable and therefore not amendable.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I direct your attention—

The Deputy Chairman: Those in favour of the motion will please rise.

Mr. Fulton: I direct your attention to the provisions of standing order 44 which clearly provide for an amendment to this motion. Mr. Chairman, I direct your attention to the provisions of the standing order. Mr. Chairman, what kind of farce are you trying to make out of this House of Commons? Standing order 44—

Mr. McCann: Whom are you talking to? Talk to the clock.

The Deputy Chairman: First row please be seated.

During the taking of the vote:

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am on my feet to raise a point of order which I raised before you put the question.

The Deputy Chairman: Will those opposed to the motion please rise?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am on my feet in the course of raising a point of order which I raised before you put the question.

The Deputy Chairman: May I say this to the committee, although I am sure they know it. Even though points of privilege or points of order are always in order, there are certain times that cannot be included in the word "always", such as a taking of the division,—

Mr. Fulton: I raised this point before you put the question.

The Deputy Chairman: —whether the chairman is in the chair or the Speaker is in the chair. Will those opposed to the motion please rise?

After the taking of the vote:

Motion (Mr. Howe, Port Arthur) agreed to: Yeas, 124; nays, 53.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it is a time-honoured rule of this house that government policy is not announced in reply to questions on orders of the day.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED USE OF R.C.A.F. PLANE BY FORMER MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Was it in order for the former minister of transport to fly an R.C.A.F. plane into my riding to a general meeting in the last election?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I have all I can do to look after my own actions.

PETAWAWA—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, May 25, the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Forgie) asked me a question about further housing developments at Petawawa.

The situation is that the Department of National Defence requested Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to plan, design and build an additional 350 housing units. The proposed project is divided into two phases. The planning of the first phase involving approximately 175 housing units is advanced to the point where we expect to call tenders for ground services during the month of June. Tenders for the houses will be called shortly following this. The planning for the balance of the houses is currently under way.

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE CORPORATION

CONSTITUTION OF CROWN COMPANY TO CONSTRUCT PIPE LINE, MAKE SHORT-TERM LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, May 25, consideration in committee of Bill No. 298, to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) —Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: The position is that clause 3 was called and it was moved by Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) that further consideration of this clause be postponed. The question is on the motion of Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).

Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation

On clause 3—Establishment and constitution.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, may I rise on a question of order arising out of the discussion the other day?

The Deputy Chairman: I might inform the hon. member for Prince Albert and others who are speaking, that the question as to whether this motion is or is not in order was referred to the house and an appeal from the chairman's ruling was taken. A vote was held in the house and the vote was that the motion was not out of order. In other words, the chairman's ruling that the motion was not out of order was confirmed by the house. Therefore, in so far as this particular motion is concerned, I regret that I have no other alternative at this moment than to put the question. As to whether or not this particular motion is in order is a matter that was decided at the last sitting.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege under standing order 17.

The Deputy Chairman: May I just point this out. I realize the difficulties that we are in. A question of general privilege could, of course, be raised only with Mr. Speaker in the chair. A question of privilege arising out of debate held in this committee could, I am afraid, hardly have arisen this afternoon because there has been no debate. I am not endeavouring to make it impossible for members of the opposition to be heard. I am stating that it is my opinion that it is my duty to put this motion first. Then if there is any question of privilege, of course, one will have to hear it.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I can put my question of privilege very briefly and I leave it to Your Honour to decide whether or not it is a proper question of privilege to be raised under standing order 17 which reads as follows:

17. Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

My point of privilege is this. Since the last time we were in committee of the whole on this motion which you are now seeking to put, Mr. Chairman, a statement has been made by the Prime Minister to the effect that the house is to be free this week to discuss this legislation. In view of that statement my question of privilege is this. Should not the government withdraw the motion to postpone consideration of clause 3 which was made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and let us revert to clause 1?

yet to be able to give the house some information on the question I asked him last Thursday regarding the importation of 10,000 cases of Polish eggs into Canada?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Throughout many years certain eggs have been exported from Canada and certain eggs have been imported into Canada. It is a two-way trade. In 1951 195,000 cases were exported from Canada and 95,000 cases were imported into Canada. In 1953 232,000 cases were exported and 4,000 cases were imported. In the year 1954 191,000 cases were exported and 4,000 cases were imported. In the year 1955 126,000 cases were exported and 21,000 cases were imported.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED RELIEF TO TAXPAYERS THIS YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As the Minister of Finance has a reported surplus in the first month of the fiscal year three times greater than last year, would the Prime Minister consider affording some relief to the taxpayers this year instead of waiting for an election year to do so?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think those who have made the payments that figure in the increase reported for the first month of this fiscal year have discharged what would otherwise have been an indebtedness they would have had to discharge at other seasons in the year and that the surplus cannot be an indication of what the revenue will be in the course of the year.

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF FLOOR PRICE ON DOGFISH LIVERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister tell the house whether an agreement has yet been reached between the fishermen's union and the fishing companies in British Columbia on the price to be paid for dogfish?

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): They are still in the process of negotiation.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MAGOG, QUEBEC—REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT FRASER-BRACE CO.

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to the plight of some 78 men at Magog employed by the Fraser-Brace Company who have been thrown out of work by reason of a strike in another plant with which they have no contractual connection, and will he see that their applications for unemployment insurance are processed as quickly as possible?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): My attention was drawn to the matter this morning and I have asked the commission to give me a report on it.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF LIQUOR RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. C. Trainor (Winnipeg South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a report in the Winnipeg Tribune of May 24 to the effect that the government contemplates an amendment to the Indian Act which will have the effect of allowing Indians equality of opportunity for the consumption of alcoholic beverages? If so, does this foreshadow the establishment of beer parlours and liquor stores on Indian reservations?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The Winnipeg Tribune happens to be a newspaper I never read if I can possibly avoid it, for reasons which I am sure are obvious to all hon. members.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a question in view of his last answer? I wonder whether he has given up reading the Winnipeg Free Press and the Toronto Star?

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

Mr. Trainor: Mr. Speaker, may I ask for a comment on the answer given by the minister? I am not particularly interested in his reading habits, but would he kindly answer my question?

a way that I can perceive that there may be doubt as to whether I am performing my duty in an impartial manner.

No doubt something will have to be done. It was my intention, after careful consideration, to let matters go for the time being, because the climate is not such as that which can study the position of the Speaker at the moment. Some hon. members have interjected remarks which I confess I did not hear at the moment. Of those I have heard, I immediately asked clarification. But there were remarks that I did not hear; they are on the record, and it may be a little late now to ask hon. members to do anything about them.

My request to the house—and this is a request I am going to address to all hon. members—is that at the first opportunity the question of my leadership as far as the Speakership is concerned—as a matter of fact, you can go throughout my term of office—be placed before the committee on privileges and elections, and that committee be composed exclusively of members of the opposition—and I would suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre be made the chairman—

Mr. Knowles: That would deny me the right to speak.

Mr. Speaker: —and that before that committee be called gentlemen like Mr. MacGregor Dawson who have written books on procedure, and Dr. Beauchesne, who was a clerk of this house for over 30 years, and that it go thoroughly into my own dealings with the rulings I have had to make in the past few weeks, and I myself shall abide by the report of that committee.

Mr. Fulton: I would suggest that the government put the bill before the committee.

TRANSPORT

QUEBEC PROVINCIAL ELECTION—USE OF PRIVATE RAILWAY CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the minister travelled in government private car No. 104 on train 504 to Montreal on May 14 and immediately following his arrival attended as a principal speaker a provincial Liberal party banquet and later returned to Ottawa that evening on the same car, will he explain his statement of Friday that he did not know that government private railway cars were being used to carry members of the government to Quebec to participate in the provincial election campaign?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman well knew, of course, that I went to Montreal on May 14 on that particular train because I had the opportunity of conveying him from the House of Commons to the station.

Mr. Rowe: Not to Montreal, though.

Mr. Marler: But, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that although my attendance at a Liberal meeting that evening was one of the purposes of my going to Montreal I did not return on my private car that evening but stayed over until the following day to attend to departmental matters. I was unable to return on the car that night and had not planned to do so. I hope that will satisfy the hon. gentleman. I assure him that the next time I am going to Montreal in my private car I shall think of him and perhaps I might ask him to go with me.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement that he stayed in Montreal to do business the following day would he explain how it was that he voted in the house the next afternoon?

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, I am flattered by the interest of the hon. gentleman opposite. I may say it is not reciprocated. I do not wish to create a precedent with regard to saying what my movements are outside of this house but I should like to say that I returned on the "Canadian", leaving Montreal at 2.05 p.m. and arriving here shortly after four o'clock. I at once came to the House of Commons and I voted soon after.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER INTERIM SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister in a position yet to answer my question of Friday respecting when he is going to ask the house for interim supply so he will have some money in June? In the meantime, can he assure civil servants that the present interim supply he has will make it possible for him to pay salaries on the 31st of May?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I am not in a position to answer the question, but I will make inquiries.

EGGS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED IMPORTS FROM POLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister in a position

Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has his notice been directed to a statement by Mr. Marshall A. Johnson of Vancouver, representative of the East West Export Import Company, who is in Peking, China, representing 14 Canadian firms with a view to opening up trade in China? What is the attitude of the government toward this matter?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have already referred to the East West trading company in this house. Perhaps my hon. friend was not present. I have said that it has been a channel through which efforts have been made to break down the NATO list of strategic materials. The firm has been investigated by a number of men who have been invited to visit China under the auspices of the firm, and I may say that the reports are not good.

The position of China, as regards purchasing goods from abroad, has been examined carefully by our officers, who have questioned men who have been in China. The chairman of the wheat board was recently in the Orient. In Hong Kong he had the opportunity to question a number of people who I think were in a position to give an accurate version. A representative of Australia visited China officially a short time ago and he reported that he was advised that the government is not interested in the purchase of any foodstuffs or of wool or cotton. I think that we must assume that the reports being sent out by the gentleman referred to are not accurate reports.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In further reference to Mr. Marshall A. Johnson who is now in Peking, the representative of these companies, would the Prime Minister consider that it would be a proper course to have Mr. Johnson while there try to collect something on the $12 million on the Ming Sung ships that pass in the night? He is there now.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker; I do not think that procedure would be very effective.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAMERON, NANAIMO—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE" OF MAY 28

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of privilege. I hold in my hand a copy of the Montreal Gazette dated Monday, May 28, in which there is an editorial containing the following paragraph:

> Nor was this all. To make matters worse, the Speaker of the House of Commons, and his deputies, were inevitably dragged into the struggle on behalf of the government. Instead of playing an impartial role, they were required, whatever their own opinions may have been, to play their parts in chipping and chopping at parliament rights and privileges—all in the interests of stifling the voice of the house and getting the bill through.

Mr. Speaker, that is a reflection upon yourself and your deputies and also, therefore, a reflection on every hon. member of this house, and I suggest to you that, if it is not true, then some action should be taken with regard to the publishers of this particular newspaper. If, on the other hand, it should be true, then some action should be taken with regard to the government.

Mr. Speaker: I am very glad that the hon. member brought that up. During the week end I reread all the rulings that I have made since the beginning of this pipe-line legislation. I have checked and rechecked them. I have found this: that in the case of the motion of the Leader of the Opposition to divide the bill in two, which I accepted, I should have ruled it out of order because notice had to be given for a motion of that kind. Secondly, I accepted a motion to adjourn the house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and later, while discussing other matters, I did express the view that, although standing order 25 says that a motion to adjourn the house shall always be in order, I was coming to the view that if a motion is not debatable it would be difficult for anyone to stand up and say even, "I move that the house be now adjourned."

On that score I was wrong. I think that a motion to adjourn the house is always in order, and I have rallied myself, and I am glad to have an opportunity, in case this motion is desired to be used, to say now that, even on a non-debatable motion, a motion to adjourn the house is in order.

Except for those two instances, I stand by all the rulings that I have made. Now, I do not like what has happened and what has appeared in the press any more than any hon. members do. I want to tell this to hon. members, that my record since I have occupied the chair—and that is since 1949—is there to prove it. Furthermore, I will say this. I have a family and I have children who are old enough to understand what the word "impartial" means, and I do not want my children, when I go home, after they have read the newspaper, to look at me in such

Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister indicate what information he has as to when it may be expected the federal power commission in Washington is going to render a decision on the application by Midwestern pipe line company to import gas from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited into the United States? When is that decision expected? Is there any observer there for the Canadian government? What is the position in general with regard to that application?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give the hon. member any information. I shall inquire whether there is a Canadian observer there. I am not in a position at the moment to state if the proceedings are being followed by a Canadian observer.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AMOUNT OF SALES CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is he in a position yet to answer the question I asked last week about the sales contracts of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited? The minister will remember that I asked whether he had any information about the total amount of sales contracts in terms of millions of cubic feet per annum.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have only an approximation. I had our files searched, and I find an approximation made three or four weeks ago that the quantity is about 140 million cubic feet.

GRAIN

RYE—REQUEST FOR HANDLING BY WHEAT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a statement attributed to Mr. Zyto, Poland's commercial attaché at Ottawa, which appeared in the Leader-Post of May 22, that "if rye had been under the control of the Canadian wheat board Poland would have purchased considerable quantities of that grain"?

Would the government, in view of this statement, give consideration to including the handling of rye by the Canadian wheat board for the next crop year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My hon. friend was good enough to give me notice of the question. I have not seen the newspaper dispatch. However, the position regarding rye is that there has not been any difficulty whatever in selling rye as quickly as it has been delivered to the country elevators, and selling it at favourable prices. Whether Poland would or would not have bought rye is a question that I doubt is relevant, since all the rye has been sold as it has been delivered. There are strong reasons why the government does not believe that the handling of rye by the Canadian wheat board is desirable. I see nothing in the Polish situation that would change its views in that direction.

CHURCHILL—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE REDUCTION OF RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister state if any consideration has been given by the government to reducing shipping rates through the port of Churchill? If so, what decision has been arrived at?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I think I should explain to the hon. gentleman that the shipping rates through the port of Churchill are not regulated by the government. As he is probably aware, they are set more or less by agreement among the shipping companies. The government has no part in the setting of the rates so it is not a matter over which the government has control or to which it has given consideration.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Has any consideration been given by the government to the extension of the normal shipping season through the port of Churchill?

Mr. Marler: We have taken some action by way of providing information by means of an aerial patrol as to ice in the Hudson strait. We have taken one or two other steps at Churchill itself. However, I do not think that the length of the shipping season depends on actions that we take but rather on the presence of ice in Hudson strait and the rate at which insurance on shipping is set for service to Churchill.

TRADE

CHINA—NEGOTIATIONS BY EAST WEST EXPORT IMPORT COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the by the standing orders which are affected by the disappearance of this notice of motion, as was decided last year. There is a distinction. The one that we are talking about now is not a private member's notice of motion under standing order 48. We are talking about a very serious type of motion which is a preferred one, which is of a privileged character, and that is to challenge the conduct of an officer of this house. I say that this is the course to follow and I do undertake now, unless I die in the meantime, to rule that whenever that motion comes up it will be debatable under routine proceedings. If that motion is put on the order paper I undertake to instruct the Clerk to put it under motions and routine proceedings in the same manner as we decided last year to put other routine proceedings such as motions for concurrence in reports of committees. We would be only 48 hours away, if hon. members wished to take that course, for discussing in a proper manner the conduct of the chairman of the committee of the whole. So it is with regret that I cannot accept the motion.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

FORT ROUGE, WINNIPEG—INQUIRY AS TO REBUILDING OF CAR SHOP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. C. Trainor (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister say whether it is the intention of Canadian National Railways to reconstruct the Fort Rouge shops recently destroyed by fire on the present site? In any event will he give the house the assurance that before any final action is taken in this regard the wishes of the employees concerned will be considered.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked a similar question about the Fort Rouge shop. I am informed by the management of Canadian National Railways that fire destroyed one building, the main freight car shop. The wood mill, power plant and other ancillary buildings were not destroyed. Plans are under study as to the handling of the work formerly produced by the shop and almost all of the employees involved have been absorbed in the Fort Rouge or Transcona areas and the remainder will be placed shortly. While the management has no plans to rebuild the facility at the present location it is the intention to continue general repairs to freight cars in the Winnipeg area. I think that answers the questions asked just a moment ago.

Mr. Trainor: A supplementary question. Is the minister aware that there is a very strong opinion among the employees that the facilities at Fort Rouge ought to be continued in that area and not transferred to Transcona?

Mr. Marler: I think when the hon. gentleman reads my reply in Hansard he will see that management has no plans to rebuild the facilities at the present location but that it is the intention to continue general repairs to freight cars in the Winnipeg area.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if he will ask the management of the Canadian National Railways to hear representations from the employees concerned in connection with this matter. May I not have an answer?

Mr. Marler: I do not think I could give any such assurance as the hon. gentleman requests, but I shall be glad to transmit to management the views which he has expressed.

CHIBOUGAMAU-ST. FELICIEN BRANCH LINE —ALLEGED VIOLATION OF LORD'S DAY ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister's attention been directed to a press report that appeared in the Gazette of Friday, May 25, to the effect that the construction companies engaged in the construction of the Chibougamau-St. Felicien railroad are violating the law respecting observance of the Lord's day and that workers who refuse to work on Sundays are gradually liquidated by these companies? If so, what is the minister's department going to do about it?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell the hon. gentleman that I did read the report in the Gazette. It seems to me this is a matter for the contractors and also a matter for the provincial authorities to enforce the Lord's Day Act. So far as I am concerned, I have directed inquiries through Canadian National Railways to ascertain what are the facts.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO DECISION BY FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the a matter of urgent public importance, namely the subordination by the government of the office of chairman, and that raises the position of the government as the primary issue in this motion. It is drawn expressly for that purpose because our opinion is that it is the government that has offended in this case and that position is not met by the reference which Your Honour has made.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when we are called upon to carry forward debate, even under the very limited extension of the right of debate that has been implied by the Prime Minister's statement this afternoon, we would be doing so without disposing by an orderly discussion of an issue which is of concern to every hon. member here. The role of Speaker and the role of chairman of the committee is of just as much concern to me and to every private member as it is to those who occupy that office. This is part of the whole procedure of parliament. What we are complaining about is the extent to which this government has shamelessly subordinated the office of chairman to its personal interests. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the motion by notice is one which is limited expressly to the condemnation of the chairman as its primary purpose, whereas our motion is clearly drawn to deal with a situation in which the government has exercised its authority to damage an office which is of immense importance not only to the members of this house but to all the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Notwithstanding what may be the purpose of the Leader of the Opposition's motion, he has not convinced me that the person himself, that is the chairman of committees, would not, in the course of the debate on this motion, have his conduct criticized and I still say that it is not possible to divorce the two. If certain hon. members want to blame the government for the conduct of the chairman, well, that is their privilege; but if, in the motion in which they want to do that, the chairman of committees is to be involved, he has the right to have his own conduct properly debated in a separate and distinct motion, and that is the procedure I outlined a moment ago. Now, I would hope that hon. members would rally themselves to that procedure rather than to follow the indirect course which is submitted in this motion. In any event—

Mr. Fulton: May I raise one point, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: I do so with deference, but I ask you to realize the implication of the ruling which I understand you are about to make; that is, when the conduct of a private member is brought into question it is apparently to be disposed of without debate, as was done on Friday afternoon in accordance with the ruling which you made; yet you say, sir, or I understand you are about to say, that when the conduct of the Deputy Speaker is brought into question there must be notice and debate. I fail to see why there should be any distinction between the two and I suggest to you—

Some hon. Members: Rules of the house.

Mr. Fulton: —that the reasons which you have given do not actually apply. In fact, we have been told by Speakers on numerous occasions that notwithstanding the provision that motions must be brought up after notice there is no way in which a private member can give notice, and it is for that reason that this matter is brought forward in this manner today, in the only way in which we can get it before the house. My main reason for rising was to point out the implication of the ruling which I understand you are about to make, that there is one course of procedure which should prevail with respect to the conduct of a private member and another one for the Deputy Speaker, which is a proposition we cannot accept.

Mr. Sinclair: It is according to the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I have listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Kamloops and in making his submission how he can indicate that there is on my part a ruling for one case and another one for another case I really cannot see.

Mr. Fulton: I was pointing out the facts.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wishes to take the case of last Friday in point he is forgetting that before the motion was made there was discussion as to the type of motion that would be moved. If at that moment instead of three or four hon. members only rising there had been 264 I would have had to see them all. From the moment the motion is made it is not debatable. There is the distinction.

In this case the hon. member for Kamloops insists, after I have indicated to the house: that a motion such as the one that is contemplated by citation 225 is one that must come up under routine proceedings, I say that it is debatable and do undertake to rule so, as I am positive that that is the way under standing order 32 (m), he still insists that there is no way that he can bring this about because there is no way a private member can give a notice of motion at this time. There is a distinction between a private member's notice of motion contemplated

House of Commons

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the time for private members' motions has expired.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It does not come under that heading, may I submit with respect, because this is a matter which is covered by standing order 32, paragraph (m), which reads as follows:

32. (1) (m) such other motion, made upon routine proceedings, as may be required for the observance of the proprieties of the house, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, . . .

I submit that the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker and chairman of committees and the deputy chairman of committees are officers of the house. There is therefore no doubt in my mind that the proper course to be followed is for notice to be given of a substantive motion. Once the notice time has elapsed for the motion on the order paper, it is placed upon the routine proceedings, namely under "motions". By virtue of standing order 32 (1) (m) it is debatable and must be taken up when it comes up.

Mr. Coldwell: May I say a word, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Coldwell: I certainly think it would be an ill-advised move to turn down this proposal on a technical question. There is no doubt about it that there is in the house a feeling with regard to the Chair—and I am using the word "Chair"—in this debate which I think is most unfortunate. I have been one of those, I think, who have respected the Chair generally and who have respected this institution and I think it would be well to have this matter cleared up before we proceed any further with the debate that is under way. From the point of view of the house and from the point of view of Your Honour I think it would be a mistake to refuse to accept this motion on the ground that the proper thing to do is to introduce a substantive motion which could be debated only after this debate is over.

Mr. Speaker: No. I want to make the matter clear. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) seems to be under the impression that the motion could be debated only after this debate is concluded. Of course I do not know how long it will take to conclude this debate, but the debate could take place 48 hours from now.

Mr. Coldwell: I am wondering whether the government would allow that, having in mind what has occurred on this pipe-line bill. The government brooks no delay, no discussion and no debate. It invokes closure at every stage.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: May I submit to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar that it is not a matter for the government or for the opposition to decide. It is a motion which, as the standing orders provide, must follow its course.

Mr. Knowles: Except that the government may move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Is that not so with regard to any substantive motion? There is no question that the mover, in making his motion, or in taking up his order, has the right to make a speech. Just to go a little bit further—of course we are anticipating what may happen, but I do so just in order to elucidate the position as I see it—I submit that the person concerned in the motion, namely the chairman of committees, should be heard as soon as the motion is made and the speech of the mover is heard. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar says it would be a mistake to turn down this motion; there may be something in what he says. But I submit that, if the course that he suggests—that of accepting the motion—is to be followed, it is one that should be adopted by the house itself. So far as I am concerned, as Speaker, I am interested in only one thing, and that is to give the proper ruling, and I stand by that statement.

So far as this motion is concerned, in my opinion the right ruling to give, since it is a motion in which the conduct of the deputy chairman is necessarily involved—I do not think anyone will construe this motion otherwise—under our rules and under our practice is that there is a procedure provided with which to deal with this matter. I think I have tried to clear up the apprehensions of hon. members as to whether or not this motion is debatable when it comes up, and what happens to it. The motion goes on the notice paper, and after it has served its 48 hours' time as determined by standing order 41, the motion comes up during routine proceedings under "motions". By virtue of standing order 32 (m), I am advising the house immediately that in my humble opinion the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, and deputy chairman of committees are officers of the house. At that moment, when the motion comes up, the same as a motion for concurrence in a committee report, it is taken up and the mover has the floor. What happens to the motion after that is the same as what happens to any substantive motion.

Mr. Drew: I had not completed my remarks, but I sat down when you rose. What I would point out is this. I submit there is a distinct difference between this motion and the manner in which it has been interpreted. What we are asking is permission to debate

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 28, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PIPE-LINE DEBATE—PROCEDURE IN COMMITTEE

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The procedure followed by the government has been represented as an effort to prevent debate on the pipe-line bill, and I want to state emphatically that as soon as the motion before the committee is disposed of, further debate on the bill can begin and there will be all this week for it to be continued on its remaining stages.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The retreat from Moscow.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Do I take that to mean, Mr. Speaker, that the debate will not be continued on the committee stage?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, Mr. Speaker. I say that, as soon as the motion before the committee has been disposed of, debate can begin either on clause 4 or, if hon. members wish to postpone clause 4, on clauses 5, 6 and 7, those we had thought would be the operative clauses on which it would be most interesting to have the debate develop.

Mr. Drew: While welcoming any acceptance of the need for debate on the committee stage, I would point out that the appropriate procedure would be to revert to clause 1 because—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Drew: —unless we have dealt with clause 1 and particularly with clause 2, discussion of subsequent clauses becomes almost meaningless.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Complete the retreat from Moscow.

STANDING ORDERS

Second report of standing committee on standing orders.—Mr. Harrison.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OFFICE OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by Mr. Diefenbaker, under standing order 26 to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the subordination by the government of the office of chairman of the committee of the whole to serve the partisan interests of the government.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has submitted a statement of what he considers a matter of urgent public importance in which he refers to the subordination by the government of the office of chairman of the committee of the whole to serve the partisan interests of the government. This motion could not in any shape or form be construed as not being a reflection on the holder of the office of chairman of the committee of the whole, and it is doing by indirection what must be done in a direct manner. Citation 432 of Beauchesne, third edition, reads as follows:

> If a member wishes at any time to call in question the conduct of the chairman in the execution of his duties, the proper course is to give notice of a motion to that effect in due course.

Citation 225 of Beauchesne, third edition, is to the following effect:

> Certain matters cannot be debated save upon a substantive motion which can be dealt with by amendment or by distinct vote of the house, such as the conduct of the Governor General, the Speaker or Deputy Speaker, members of either house of parliament or judges. These questions cannot therefore be discussed by way of amendment nor upon a motion for adjournment by way of standing order 31.

That is now standing order 26.

> For the same reason, no charges of personal character can be raised save upon a distinct and substantive motion to that effect.

The corresponding paragraphs in Bourinot pertaining to the same subject are to be found at page 397 and page 177. Although I am not called upon to give advice, perhaps I could say to the Leader of the Opposition that with respect to a matter such as the one contemplated in his motion the procedure is to put a notice of motion on the order paper and as soon as the 48 hours' notice as required by standing order 41 has been spent the matter is placed upon routine proceedings under "motions" and must be dealt with as soon as routine motions are called. It is a debatable motion. I would therefore submit that the proper way in which to deal with the matter would be to follow the course which is indicated must be followed.
