

ONE CENT

ST. JOHN STAR, SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1904.

A KING'S MESSENGER.

By ETHEL M. NAIL.

Fifteen miles from Oxford! Would his strength hold out? There was no rest just ahead which looked peaceful enough, but in these troubled times men scarce knew friend from foe, and on his present errand the rider dared take no extra risks, for the fate of Lord Norton's garrison hung on the dispatches he was bearing to King Charles at Oxford.

Rupert was abroad, and a forced march and well-planned night attack would disperse the raw parliamentary levies which besieged them. So the weary horse and weary rider floundered on, over mazy roads, in part scarce better than morasses. Night was drawing on, and ghostly mists swept up from the rain-soaked marshes. It was a world of chill and unsubstantial as a dream.

The reins lay slack on the horse's neck, over fainter and fainter sounded the beat of hoofs, slower and slower grew the pace, till at last, where a hole yawned across the roadway, there came a sickening thud; horse and rider fell to the ground together and lay there stunned, while the rain crimson stream washed the precious packet which was to bring help to eight score starving men and women.

"Captain Vernon! Can it be he? Oh, he is wounded!"

The stricken man opened his eyes slowly. "Water," he murmured, and then he drank and felt the grateful shock of cold on his fevered brow, he gathered consciousness and struggled up in amazement at the sight of the pale, earnest face bending over him.

"Miss Warrcliffe! You here?"

"Yes, we are living close by now, my brother and I, but he is ill of fever, throw, and 'twere safer not to call out than if I could aid you."

"Oh, I can walk," she answered faintly. "But I must not seek your roof; 'twould bring suspicion on you, and Essex's men are on my track."

In reply she turned on him the smile he knew so well, the smile that had haunted him since first he met her, a mere country girl, at her aunt, Lady Fitz Osbourne's assemblies in Covent Garden, to which all the rank and beauty of London town were wont to go.

"I am sorry you should think so ill of our loyalty and hospitality," she smiled with grave courtesy, and just a hint of pretty coquetry. "But the night air is unwholesome for wounds, and 'twere well to get within before my Lord Puritan finds us here."

Vernon was in no condition to resist, and, supporting him with her arm, lovely Elizabeth Warrcliffe led him from the low, thatched hovel, half hidden in the bushes, that now formed her only home.

Francis Warrcliffe, her brother, rose from a low couch as the blood-stained figure confronted him in the doorway.

"Warrcliffe—I did not mean to home—I—your sister—the letters," Vernon muttered, and staggering blindly forward, he sank fainting into a chair. They hastily cut away his garments. A bullet had entered through the left shoulder, and penetrated the ribs. The wound needed a surgeon's probe, and was beyond their skill. Between them, the brother and sister washed and bound up the shoulder, and then, as Captain Vernon still remained unconscious, they carried him to a bed in an inner room. This done, the girl returned to the scene of the accident, and, unaided, for her brother was too ill to go abroad, and she feared to leave him alone, she succeeded in getting the horse to his feet, and had him limping slowly and painfully to a stable in the rear of the cottage. Her own pet horse turned his nose and whinnied at her approach.

"Ah, Laddie," she whispered caressingly, the beautiful creature's glossy back. "I have brought you a good horse, I trust, good Laddie, for your mistress's sake, for you know how soon more, and we are true to old friends, even though they may forget." Now that she was alone, she could not help how she gazed at the relative of the proud Earl of Fitz Osbourne.

In this cottage, the last bit of the estate left them by the parliamentary party, Elizabeth Warrcliffe was no better than the daughter of a poor peasant yeoman; nay, worse, for she was dowdier.

She retraced her steps to find her brother in a fever of anxiety and impatience. "A pretty eddy," he cried, "but I must move him. Dispatches, said he? There is no rest just ahead, and the rascals will track him here."

"Fret not thyself, brother," Elizabeth answered soothingly. "Be things as they may, we could not leave a friend to perish in distress."

"And who but thou wouldst do so?" he cried testily. "Does not see that thou art leaving his coat here, plain for all to learn a King's man has come this way?"

Elizabeth made no answer, her woman's sympathy divining the petulant that springs from illness. Moving softly around the floor she gathered up the young officer's torn and blood-stained clothing. "Rest burn this gear," she murmured, and not without a pang thrust the things into the kitchen furnace. She had just re-entered the dwelling room, after hiding the sword and pistol, when Vernon had called, beneath the thatch of the cottage roof, when the sound of horses' hoofs was heard rapidly approaching.

"They come! Brother, get you to the chamber and, fawn sickness. In half 'tis no more than the truth. Oh, quick, quick, are it be too late!"

Frank Warrcliffe caught her meaning and flung himself on the bed beside the wounded officer, drawing the covering over both. Elizabeth cast a frowning eye both. What was that heavy glance around? What was that stare in yonder dark corner overlooking before. The tin case containing despatches! There was no safe hiding within, and already the men were hammering at the door. With a sudden impulse begotten of despair, she darted into the little dairy adjacent, and a moment later emerged wiping her hands.

"Hush! Pray make no noise, there are only sick folk here!"

The commander of the little troop drew back in surprise. He had expected some peasant's buson wife, and this figure so tall and graceful in its clinging gown, revived the instincts of respect. He raised his hand with a clumsy gesture toward his hat; he called himself, and stood erect, a little post-prand man.

"We are looking for an officer of the malignants," he said harshly.

"There are none here save my brother and a friend, both sick. They are in yonder room," answered the girl calmly, but her heart beat fast as the men crowded past her, swords clashing, she was alone and very weak, yet in her hands lay the fate of many.

"Sick!" echoed the man, "what alas!"

"Nay, I am not a physician," she replied. "My brother hath had much fever, and the other seems unconscious."

"Belike 'tis smallpox," exclaimed a trooper, shouldering his way forward with licensed freedom.

Zachery Hazlerig shrank back. "Of a truth there is an evil odor," he said, sniffing the air suspiciously.

It was the smouldering ashes of the smoldering garments that he smelt, but Elizabeth did not enlighten him.

"There is a window without through which one can look," suggested the officer's aide.

Commander Hazlerig caught at the idea, and a moment later was standing on tiptoe flattening his nose against the window panes of the sleeping chamber. A rushlight burnt within, dimly revealing the outlines of two men beneath the covering table, get out with medicine bottles stood near the bed.

"Will you care to enter?" asked Miss Warrcliffe.

"Nay, nay, I have no mind to venture myself near the pest. I am a brave man, that's true, but I'm sick, yet there is the sign of presumption," muttered the captain. "But it grows late. I will bide here tonight while my men search the roads. Tomorrow we will continue on our route. It may be that the man Vernon will yet find his way hither."

This arrangement, seemed to please no one save its author. "The men were angry at the prospect of a cold, wet night's work, and to Elizabeth Warrcliffe the presence of the Puritan commander threatened plans with ruin. With many apologies for their scanty accommodation, she brought corn and water to a small shed at the back of the house, and here the commander stabled his horses, grumbling heartily the while. He had sent his men on ahead, though he had not himself to the discomfort of the way. The sight that met his eyes on re-entering the dwelling-room was a sight he would never forget. The utmost resources of the larder had been taxed to supply the meal, which now smoked appetizingly on the board.

"Of a verity 'tis a worthy maiden, and skilled in cunning cookery," murmured Zachery, washing down the remains of a savory stew with a brimming bumper of red port; the last bottle of the store her grandfather had hoarded, and which Elizabeth Drake thought Elizabeth with a sigh, as she watched from the little dairy where the homely room with an appetizing odor.

"Only leave all to me," Elizabeth whispered in his ear. He stared at her amazed. "Beside, if you can't whisper close to her and he put his arm round her neck and kissed her tenderly."

"I will," she answered firmly.

"I trust you have your things to your taste, sir," quoth Miss Warrcliffe next morning. The table groaned with good cheer; the Puritan groaned ruthlessly sacrificed, and rashes of ham, eggs—brought by their serving man—and several varieties of cakes lined the homely room with an appetizing odor.

"Verily, maiden," he quoth, taking a deep draught of the beer, "thou hast ordered all things well, say, exceeding well! I will remember it to thee hereafter."

"If it please you," Elizabeth was strangely white, and her voice shook in spite of her efforts, "I would ride out with you to seek help from a learned leech at Abingdon. Perchance he can do somewhat for the sickness. I would gladly journey with you, sir, for the roads are ill for lone women."

"Thou art right," said the doughty captain, swelling with just pride. "Get thy gear on and borrow thee a horse, and we will be jogging, thou and I together."

The girl's heart smote her at the friendly words, but she made haste to obey, and half an hour later, Elizabeth Warrcliffe was on horseback beside the Puritan captain, who was gallantly carrying her basket of market produce, butter and eggs, which she was hearing as payment to the doctor.

Thanks to her escort her ride was uneventful, though the patrols of mounted men, as they approached Abingdon, the position of parties was changed, and the captain himself began to show signs of uneasiness. At last he drew rein.

"They road lies straight ahead," he said. "Tis but a short distance to the village, and if thou dost ride past that castle some come by harn, Mark, a word in thy ear. Captain Vernon's father was my master in the days of my apprenticeship. Many is the kind turn he and his honored wife, now dead, have done me. Farewell, and may the leech bring thee good, help to thy patients."

He was gone before Elizabeth could reply, and, as she counted her grandfather's hoard, her eyes were dim with tears, and her head weighed heavily on her arm. So he had known! But did he know all?

WEATHER CONDITIONS ON THE FIELD OF THE WAR.

With the opening of the Russo-Japanese war, for the first time within almost a century climatic conditions have entered as an important feature, perhaps a controlling factor, among the elements to be considered in the conduct of the war. Not since Napoleon's fatal campaign, and never since the introduction of the railroad and the modern army commissary and arms, has a large army had to face really serious climatic obstacles. It so happens that the present war is occurring in a region of the most marked contrasts, and when the avenues of approach of the combatants to the actual battle-ground are considered we find a condition of affairs following schedule not duplicated in any other inhabited portion of the globe. It is of interest to consider these conditions as they may affect the movements of the combatants.

The climate of the whole region affected by the war is largely controlled by the continental atmospheric conditions in the interior of Siberia, and their resulting monsoon effects, which extend to a distance of thousands of miles from this center.

Throughout the whole of eastern Asia, the rule is a summer rainy season and a relatively dry winter. The summers are in general warm, with monsoon winds blowing from the ocean toward the interior of the continent, and the winters are cold, with the monsoon blowing from the continent seaward, and thus carrying the cold dry air of the interior to the coast.

Thanks to the system of weather observation in Japan, which owes its completeness to Professor Mendenhall, we know the climate of Japan about as well as we do that of New England for the past twenty-five years. Russia has carried on systematic meteorological observations in Siberia for upward of half a century, and has carefully published the results. For Manchuria and Korea, however, we have comparatively few accurate meteorological observations—From the Pacific to the Field of the Russo-Japanese War," by Frank Waldo, Ph. D., in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for May.

HOW JEFFRIES WILL TRY TO WHIP MUNROE.

Champion Jim Jeffries is jogging along lazily in his preparation for his battle with Jack Munroe, which takes place in San Francisco on June 17. The champion has been taking off weight gradually at his training quarters at Harbin Springs, which has been the favorite training camp for the big Californian in all his important battles. Jeffries is being taken good care of this time.

His wife, who is charged with the camp, and the big fellow has the best cooking, which is being supervised by Mrs. Jeffries. The manner in which the champion is following schedule would not indicate that he is the least bit worried over his coming encounter. In fact, there is an air of confidence about the big fellow when he speaks of the battle. He would give the impression that the result is a foregone conclusion, and it is only a question as to how many rounds Munroe will last.

Jeffries is placing no limit on the battle. He will be prepared to go the limit if necessary, but it will be the knockout that he will be after just as soon as the gong sounds. In speaking of the bout and its possible outcome, Jeffries said that he did not believe that there was a chance for the contest to go to the limit. If Munroe wanted to make a long fight of it and stay the limit, the champion said, he would go after him and force the fighting, as he did in his recent contest with Jim Corbett.

Heretofore Jeffries has permitted his opponents to cut out the pace. He would wait for them to come to him and cop them with his terrific left. In his bout with Corbett, Jeffries never let up on the former champion. He cut loose, and whenever Corbett was anxious to play for wind by side-stepping, Jeffries would be after him with the wallop. His wonderful speed was a revelation to Corbett, and the latter was beaten long before the limit.

Jeffries has the method for his bout with Munroe and the miner boxer will find a much more lively man before him than when he had thrashed, or, in fact, when he encountered Jeffries in his first bout in Butte, Mont., which lasted four rounds.

"I never try to beat any man in any particular round," said Jeffries. "It is a foolish matter to undertake when I enter the ring. I move or less cautious for the first round at least. I simply feel my opponent out. I do not do this because I fear a wallop, but find out his weak points and the easiest manner to defeat him. The idea is to get quick results without wasting your strength. When I have my man sized up I go after him. I pay little attention to the blow that he is sending in. Of course, I stop most of them, but those that get by do very little damage. In the first place I can stand a pretty good wallop without losing my balance, and that counts a great deal.

"The reason that you can't figure putting a man out in any particular round before the battle is because you can't tell what kind of condition he is in. If he is out of condition I could beat almost any man in the first round by giving him a good wallop in the stomach. That is where a blow tells when you're not trained to take the gaff. After the first round it is easy to figure on a knockout. I never try to punish an opponent with a single wallop. I find it more effective to distant. Since the performances of Ward and Richmond, every new rule has been made with a view to punishing the pitcher, until now, great performances are the result of head work and phenomenal skill, such as was shown by Young in the game against the hard hitting Athletics on Thursday. The performance of Young stands out as the record for pitching, with no chance of seeing a better one until the distance is shortened, if such a condition should ever again obtain.

From time to time some great pitcher shuts out a team, and does not allow a hit. This is hardly a new record, but shutting out a team without a map reaching first base, under the new rule, has never been done, and no impartial critic can compare Ward's or any one else's performance with Young's great feat. Moreover, it was all "Cy" on Thursday. There were no great blood-chilling plays here to help him out. He simply had the batters at his mercy. Seldom could they hit the ball hard, and when they did it was with uncertainty and directly to one of the Boston men. And "Cy" was taking chances all the time and working with the foul-strike rule, but all the time he was using his great curve ball, his jump ball, and putting in fast shots when they were unexpected, and when the ordinary great pitcher would take chances. And finally it should be remembered that baseball today is a science. No longer is it in the experimental stage, as when Ward and Richmond did their thing. Curve pitching was new and the man who could then curve the ball at all was a wonder. Thursday it was the handout of superior all-round baseball goods that placed the great "Cy" Young on his pinnacle.

INTERESTING FACTS CONCERNING "CY" YOUNG.

He was born in Gilmore, Tuscarawas county, O., March 29, 1887. Ball playing caught his fancy when a boy on his father's farm and long before reaching a majority he played amateur ball with the Red Cloud, Neb. team.

This pitching ability was recognized, and in 1899 he was engaged to pitch for the Canton, O., club. He took part in 37 championship games that season, pitching 29 of them.

Cleveland engaged him before the close of the 1899 season, and his effective delivery was a factor in enabling Cleveland to finish first in 1902.

While pitching for Canton against McKeesport he shut out the latter team without a hit, ghosting 18 men.

He pitched a sixteen-inning game with St. Louis in 1902 when only two hits were made off him for 12 consecutive innings.

Doesn't know when or where he was called "Cy" or when the epithet "rail-splitter of Tuscarawas" was first applied.

He has no bad habits, is a gentleman all the time, is always fit, always willing and has accumulated a considerable fortune.

Mr. Young is an early to bed and early to rise man. He is not a testator or an enemy of tobacco, but neither one or the other has ever been permitted to wean him from strict temperance.

THREE RESOLUTIONS.

Passed at Last Evening's Meeting of the Trades and Labor Council.

The Trades and Labor Council met last night in Labor Hall and transacted considerable business. Several resolutions were passed and reports were received from different unions, most of which were said to be in a favorable condition.

It was resolved that the council fully endorse the action of the tailors in their trouble, and do all in its power to aid them.

A resolution was also passed to the effect that the council does not deem it advisable under the present circumstances, for the local unions to take part in the Champlain demonstrations.

The question of opening a restaurant in Rockwood Park was discussed and the council passed a resolution in favor of having it opened.

HOSPITAL INVESTIGATION.

VICTORIA, B. C., May 12.—Government investigation into the affairs of the Ymca general hospital have developed a strange fact that the institution has been obtaining about four times as much of the province's money as it was entitled to, according to the work done. The hospital is under the management of the Ymca union, and the managing committee consists of the executive of that body.

Investigation has established the fact that returns of patients treated had been padded, that the province paid for 5,526 days, whereas the grant was only earned for 1,165 days, the hospital drawing $4,601 when it was only entitled to $999. The government has not yet decided what steps it will take to recover the unearned sum. One of the features of the case is that C. Bell Smith, editor of the Ymca Mirror, has been boycotted by the union and reduced to beggary for having shown up the affair in his paper. Local merchants were compelled to withdraw their advertisements under pain of having the boycott extended to them.

AN IMPORTANT CASE.

There is a case now on trial in Philadelphia upon the settlement of which hang issues of the gravest import to the land. The case is a breach of promise suit for $10,000, brought against the Rev. Edgar J. Hellman, of the Wyndmoor Lutheran church by Miss Blanch Gertrude Keck. The trial of the case is related by the Rev. Mr. Hellman upon the legal technicality that the contract of promise was first made on Christmas Day in 1888, which was on Sunday, and is, therefore, invalid, and that all subsequent promises were but a continuation of the original invalid promise.

It is quite natural that the clergy should resist every encroachment upon the sacredness of the Sabbath, but it seems to us that Rev. Mr. Hellman is carrying his resistance a little too far. Just think of the results if he wins his case and establishes such a potent precedent. What would become of all the sweet Sunday evenings? The long strolls through pleasant afternoons, the arm-in-arm walks home after church in the summer time and the lingering tete-a-tetes in the back parlor with the lamp turned low in the winter? What is to be the fate of the luckless girl whom table, desk or counter keeps busy during the week-day evenings? How, thereafter, can any maid whose lover happens to put the fateful question on Sunday refrain from wondering, wondering if he really and truly meant it?

Probably if statistics were compiled they would show that two-thirds of the girls who hold their lovers in the golden fetters of engagement have welded those fetters of a Sunday night. And if the law, invoked by a minister, is to come along and smother these fetters, the misery and uncertainty that will ensue will be hardly compensated by the victory for the unseemly Sunday. It is certainly to be hoped that the Lord's Day Alliance will temper their zeal in this case with discretion, and will for the ultimate good of their cause withhold their official endorsement from this rather merciless attempt to enforce the letter of the law.

ANOTHER SAVED.

The Moncton Transcript makes a great deal about the political change of one J. H. Haslam, formerly a resident of Moncton and now located in the Northwest. Mr. Haslam was the Conservative candidate in St. John's, in 1900. He now announces his happy and entire conversion to Liberalism, though, as every argument he uses to justify his position was as valid in 1900 as it is today, he fails to satisfactorily explain his reversal since that time. Naturally the Liberal papers rejoice in referring to him as a "prominent Conservative" and in holding him up as but one of a great throng who are soon to renounce the Tory heresy and embrace the one true faith. The Winnipeg Telegram has this to say of the defection:

"The Mr. Haslam, whose petty opposition to the Roblin government culminated in so ignominious a fiasco has written a letter containing a rather poor rehash of a few of the misleading or ignorant statements which appeared in the Liberal machine press some months ago, and long since thoroughly exploded. The contents of the letter require no further notice, but a word may be said as to the attempt to palm off Mr. Haslam as a leading Conservative."

Mr. Haslam never was a leading Conservative, though he once succeeded in getting a Conservative nomination, and made so poor a run that he elected Mr. Sifton's sole supporter from Manitoba. His only conspicuous appearance in politics was in opposition to the Conservative party, some three or four years ago. Then, also, he cut a very poor figure, and he discreetly retired into the tall timber."

G. H. Corson, one of Toronto's champion swimmers, gives a piece of advice which should be printed in every Canadian newspaper. It is: "Never enter a canoe if you cannot swim, and never take anybody into one who cannot."

If this were followed as it should be, there would be far fewer "Sad Drowning" headlines in the daily papers.

GODWARD.

I never talk about Providence and Design.

I do not presume to pray for victory over my enemies, or even for rain or fair weather.

I have not the slightest explanation to offer of the origin of envy and appendicitis and rattlesnakes.

I know as little about God as the newborn infant knows about its mother.

I only feel something infinitely warm and caring and sustaining and pushing around me—and am content.

—Ernest H. Crosby.

SATURDAY SERMONETTE.

Thinkst thou there are no serpents in the world,
But things who slide along the grassy sod,
And sting the luckless foot that presses them?
There are those who in the path of social life
Do bask their spotted skins in fortune's sun
And sting the soul.

—Joanna Baillie.

PIRE PROTECTION.

A joint meeting of the board of fire underwriters, common council and business men was held yesterday at City Hall, and the question of better fire protection for the city was fully discussed. The fire underwriters offer to decrease the insurance rates if two chemical engines are purchased by the city.

Mayor White made a proposition that met with general favor from the underwriters. He proposed the erection of a new fire station and the purchasing of a chemical engine and a combining engine.

Nothing definite was accomplished and the matter rests for the present. It is now up to the common council to submit propositions to the underwriters.

Lead us not into temptation; in other words, don't put on the open cars for six weeks yet.

OFFERED FROM GRIP

HEARS OF A FEW CURES.

"I've heard of the finest grip brace," said the energetic girl, at the boarding house, to her friend, who occupied the adjoining room and who was struggling to overcome the effects of a severe attack of grip, with the odds in favor of the enemy.

"Don't tell me," came the reply, in limp tones, "I've spent the day saying 'thank you' to folks who came in to see how I was and to suggest cures or remedies. Awfully good of them, but if I took all the things that have been suggested to me I'd need the digestion of an ostrich or a coffin."

"First Mrs. X. dropped in and talked for ten minutes about the weather, present and past. Then she asked what I was taking to tone up my stomach, and get strength. I pointed to that array of pill boxes and bottles, remarking 'doctor's prescriptions,' and hoped she'd be content. She surveyed the collection and said: 'You must get Blank's combination concoction of cod liver oil. It's great. There's everything in it to make you strong and you never taste the oil at all. When she finished the list of ingredients I concluded that I'd about have sampled a whole drug store if I took that. So I've made a memorandum for future use."

"Next came Mrs. Jones—was Sallie Smith, you know, and married a doctor—she thinks it's her duty to cure me. 'Ever tried Build 'Em Up's Emulsion?' she wanted to know? 'Well, you'd better, if you want to find out what's the best thing on the globe for grip. George is recommending it to all his patients. On commission? No, indeed; just because it's the best ever. It's made up of—and I most tell asleep before she stopped talking—all the things that masqueraded under the composite name. Memorandum No. 2."

"I was just getting into a nice little dose when Lou Robinson was shown in—breezy as a March zephyr, blooming and happy. 'So sorry you've had such a siege,' she said, in her most sympathetic tones. 'I know what it means to be laid low with grip. Nothing' worse unless it's typhoid. What are you building up on?' I waved toward the brace array and she looked up at me. 'You're line of bottles through her longnetta and then turned the crystal sun on me for a critical inspection. 'You haven't Dr. Know-It-All's sure cure and you must get it right away. It is a food, not a medicine, and it will fix you up in no time.' Memo No. 3."

"In the afternoon Mrs. W. and her daughter May came along. Each according to her own saying, had just recovered from grip. They had had entirely different experiences. They had tried different cures and braces, and tried different kinds of broths and foods. Then Lou Harris and her cousin Susie, Tess Watson, May Robinson and Mrs. Black came along in succession and each prescribed for me."

"The list included a variety of beef preparations, milk jelly, egg and cherry, milk punch, half a dozen kinds of prepared foods, broths, soups, wine—half a dozen patent tonics, iron and pepsin, under patent and fancy names, egg concoctions, and last, not least, Mrs. B. is going to send a list of invalid dishes for the boarding house lady to prepare for my special use. Dr. T. is to come in to let me another prescription, and advise massage. Mrs. Brown (the boarding house mistress) suggested mental science."

"But I've had one good cure suggested in a letter from Aunt Sallie. She lives over in Jersey in the pine belt and says, 'You poor dear, just pack your grip, or let someone else do it, and come out here for a month. Leave your medicine bottles and grip dopes behind. We'll give you plenty of rest and fresh air and milk and good things to eat and I'll give you a good grip cure. You know it.' I'm going to Aunt Sallie's tomorrow, but I'll leave the kind cure memorandum and those bottles and pills for anyone who wants to try 'em. They are recommended highly enough to suit royalty."

SEASONABLE RECIPES.

A saddle of lamb is a great delicacy. It is roasted in the same manner and carved like a saddle of mutton, the knife being inserted at each side of the backbone, cutting the meat across the grain lengthwise. Cucumber sauce is often served with saddle of lamb. It consists of two large cucumbers which have been cut in thick slices and soaked in cold water for an hour; drain them and put them in a sauce pan with one medium sized sliced onion and enough white soap stock to cover them. Stew gently for a quarter of an hour, season well with salt and pepper, add a little thickening, strain and serve in sauce-boat.

Leg of lamb à la Française. Put a good sized leg of lamb in a small kettle as will hold it. Put in muslin bag one onion, one small white turnip, three sprigs each of sweet marjoram and summer savory, four cloves; tie the bag and place it in the kettle with the lamb and pour over it two quarts of boiling water. Let this come to a boil, and then skim carefully; then add four heaping teaspoonful of flour which have been mixed with one cupful of cold water, two tablespoonfuls of salt and a dash of cayenne; cover tight and set back where it will just simmer for about two hours. In the meantime make a pint and a half of either chicken or veal forcing, which make into little balls and fry brown, boil six eggs hard, and when the lamb is cooked take it up and skim all the fat off the gravy and take out the bag of seasoning. Then put the kettle where the contents will boil rapidly for ten minutes. Put three tablespoonfuls of butter in the frying pan, and when hot stir into the flour; cook until a good, rich brown and stir into the gravy. Have the whites and yolks of the eggs chopped separately; pour the gravy over the lamb and garnish with the eggs and the forced meat balls, also parsley.

Stewed Lamb—Lay a breast of lamb or two strags in a broad pot, meat downward; scatter over this a sliced turnip, a sliced onion and two sliced tomatoes, with a little pepper and salt.

Add a cupful of broth, and cook slowly one hour; then turn the meat and cook one hour longer very slowly. When tender, dish and keep hot. Strain the gravy, thicken with a little flour, season, let it boil up once and pour over the meat.

Lamb pudding consists of a sufficient quantity of cold lamb chopped fine and mixed with a little good gravy, a few bread crumbs, one tablespoonful of butter, two eggs, pepper and salt. Mix in one-fourth as many bread crumbs as there is meat. Beat in the melted butter, the eggs pour into a buttered mould, set it into a pan of water, and cook, covered, in a good oven for one hour. Turn out and pour the gravy over it.

Meat Mold—Chop very fine half a pound of any delicate meat, like chicken, tongue or veal. Mix with it two tablespoonfuls of cream, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, salt and pepper to taste. Prepare a jelly mould, add a teaspoonful of cold water. Put a pint of cold water in a small saucepan, adding to it a slice of onion, a few leaves of celery, half a bay leaf and a clove. Boil several minutes, add a teaspoonful of beet extract and stir until dissolved. Strain into the gelatine, salt lightly and set in a cool place to harden. And begins to stiffen pour half into a small mould. Spread the meat mixture evenly over the top, though not reaching quite to the edges. Pour the remainder of the jelly over the meat and set away to harden. When ready to serve turn on to a platter and garnish with olives, slices of pickle or cucumber. Cut in slices to serve, sending mayonnaise around with it if preferred. In what case put each slice on a leaf of lettuce.

WAISTS OF CALICO.

The washable waists are lovely in calico and they are making very useful and pretty ones out of old-fashioned calico which costs but a song and is very neat when tailored and finished in the new ways. There come designs in calico which are quite suitable for a fashionable suit. Four yards will make a waist and, for coloring, wash and dye with a little of the dyeing fluid. Buy a set of calico waist-stuffs to match the figures in the calico, blue, pink, brown, green or any color.

As for shirtwaist suits, there is nothing newer than calico, and the girls who go to the trouble of making these suits from shirtwaist calico will find them very useful. The design is the shirtwaist suit, and the calico is made up in the same way. The second point is the fit and the care in making the design. The third is the choice of the materials such as facings, button holes, cuffs and collar. And the fourth is the style which should be that of a full skirt and a modified blouse with low shoulders, full sleeve and dip front. Lovely shirtwaist suits are made of calico, and are built of lawn, mull, nainsook, batiste, Madras, linen, duck, cotton goods of all kinds and colors, and are made in a variety of styles, from the simple and the woman, with a shirtwaist of each, with three skirts to make, will go through the summer season fairly well equipped with afternoon gowns.

FAIDS IN RUCTIONS.

Among the worked things which require a woman's handiwork are the knitted buttons which are made by knitting a cover or slipper to the button mold covered with silk; button molds are covered with satin and worked by hand. Buttons are made of bone and button molds are covered with bead work. Then there are the porcelain buttons which are painted and glazed as one would glass to china. Pale pink and there are buttons that are covered with silk in such a manner that a tiny figured design comes out of the top of the button.

There is a fad for covering a button with a casing of gold foil. These little gold wire casings are slipped over the button and women who are handy with the fingers are buying the finest kind of wire and twisting it into shape and slipping it over the buttons after they have covered them. Canvas, too, all worked by hand, are another feature of the button mold industry.

A MODERN DIANA.

Texas boasts a young and pretty woman, Miss Fanny Vernon by name, who is distinguishing herself as a sort of modern Diana, and not only that, but she is making a good living out of the hunting business. Several years ago, when Miss Vernon was teacher in a little school on a Texas ranch, the sheep and cattle were devoured in such numbers by wild animals that large rewards were offered for the scalps of the marauders. On one occasion, while riding over the prairie, accompanied by her hunting dogs, Miss Vernon encountered a pair of panthers. Giving chase succeeded with the help of the dogs, in killing them and received a reward of $50. Since then she has made a business of hunting them. It is such a savage prey as wolves and mountain lions, her purpose being to save the ranches in the more remote localities from destruction of their flocks and herds by prowling wild beasts. For her daring and success she is generally riding over the prairie, accompanied by her hunting dogs. A medal awarded to the best wing shot in Western Texas was recently won by Miss Vernon in a contest which aroused interest in the entire Pecos country, and in which all the other competitors were men.

HEALING SKIN FOOD.

There are skin foods which are very healing not only to the skin but to the muscles. They feed the tissues. Pure glycerine and lanolin, mixed in equal parts, make a good massage lotion for those who can use glycerin. A cheaper skin food is white vasoline melted in a double boiler and thinned with almond oil. There are skin foods, made of that most soothing and most excellent skin tonic, mutton tallow, and to this is added enough red vasoline to make a paste. If too thick make thin with glycerin. If the skin will endure it, or with lanolin.

IT WAS LOADED.

On the tug boats moored at the outer end of South Market wharf yesterday afternoon there was a brief period when the officers and crews had considerable occasion to feel somewhat excited. A rifle is kept in the pilot house of the Winnie and Capt. Arthur McLean of the Mildred and a friend entered this place, Capt. McLean in company with the latter, and they inserted a cartridge in the gun and discharged it to have some fun at the expense of the others. But they did not have to insert any ammunition, for without their knowledge of the fact there was a cartridge in position.

Capt. McLean handling the rifle carelessly, was very much surprised when the thing went off. The contents of the cartridge passed out of the pilot house of the tug, penetrating through no less than three layers of boards and entered the side of the tug Mildred, which was tied alongside of the Winnie. Capt. McLean had one of his thumbs injured by the explosion. The mattress in the apartment caught fire and some oakum was also burned.

AFTERNOON FIRE.

What at one time looked like a serious fire occurred on Thorne's wharf between four and five o'clock yesterday afternoon. Fortunately the damage done was comparatively slight, and the fire was confined to the building in which it started. This building was a lean-to on the west end of the Lawton Saw Co.'s works. It was the tempering room, where the saws were heated by being dipped, while hot, in a large vat of oil.

It appears that one of the saws was overheated, and on account of this it took fire. The interior of the building was quite greasy, and in a very few seconds the flames spread. Some clouds of smoke pouring from all parts of the structure made the firemen believe that they had a hard fight ahead of them. Very few minutes work settled the business, but the building, which was merely a wooden shell, was badly scorched, and the roof was completely torn or burned off. The damage is estimated at between three and four hundred dollars, fully covered by insurance. The policy is for $400 in the Union Co.

CHILD KILLED.

SYDNEY, N. S., May 12.—A woman named Mrs. Brown and her month old child were attacked by an infuriated cow near Sydney this evening. They were knocked down, and in her effort to protect the child, the woman rolled over it several times, injuring the infant so badly that it will not live. The cow made several attempts to gore the woman, but Mrs. Brown miraculously succeeded in evading the infuriated animal. An older child was walking with them at the time, but it escaped unhurt.

A girl is always willing to admit she is fat if she doesn't weigh more than 110 pounds.

HAS A HISTORY.

The Corner Lot where the New Bank of Commerce Will Stand.

As stated in the Sun yesterday morning workmen will at once begin tearing down the Hall building on the corner of King and Gorman streets, to make way for the new building to be occupied by the Bank of Commerce.

This lot has rather an interesting history, having always been in the possession of the Ward family. When St. John was first divided into lots for the Loyalists this particular lot was drawn by Major John Ward of the Royal American Regiment and grandfather of Clarence Ward, the mayor's clerk. About 1785 Mr. Ward built a large wooden two story house on the corner. The entrance was on Gorman street, while on the King street side were several large windows. Out of one of these windows a peculiar accident occurred, an account of which Clarence Ward has in his possession at the present time. It seems that the major's two grandchildren were playing with an old flint pistol in the front room, when it suddenly exploded, the bullet passing out through the window facing King street. Unfortunately, at that particular moment Daniel Devos, an old veteran of Major Ward's regiment, was walking up King street and being in front of the window, the bullet passed through his head, killing him instantly.

The building was rented by Mr. Ward some twenty years ago, and was used as book stores by Hall and Crawford. Mr. Hall was on the corner while Crawford's was one door above. Clarence Ward has a fine picture, a drawing of the original house, showing the entrance on Gorman street and the barn in the rear. It is needless to say that the controversy between King street at that time, as shown in the picture, and at the present time is exceedingly striking.

Bicycleists and all athletes depend on BENTLEY'S LINIMENT to keep their joints limber and muscles in trim.

BEATING RAILROADS.

Yesterday afternoon a policeman aroused from slumber a man who was enjoying some whisks on a bench on King square. The man was very sleepy. He had been awake all the previous night and had had a long and tiresome ride by rail. He was James Lafferty, a miner of Westville, Pictou county, and on his way to St. Louis, having accepted a bet to cover the distance in two weeks without paying a cent for transportation. Lafferty made a bet with William Sutherland, proprietor of the Westville Free Lance, the stakes being a month's pay, amounting to $240, against $100, that he could beat the railroads and reach St. Louis inside of fourteen days from the time he started. Lafferty has with him sufficient clothing and enough money to pay for his food on the trip.

He left Westville, curled up in a coal car, at ten o'clock on Thursday forenoon, and got to St. John by freight on Friday morning. From here he walked to Fairville, and it was his intention to board there a freight which was to leave early this morning.

GRAND GATHERING OF CLANS TONIGHT.

The various Scotch organizations who have determined to pay a tribute to J. H. Stoddart, and his beautiful play, The Robins and the Bells, Theatre, tonight, have agreed to meet at Oddfellows' Hall at 7:45, and proceed to the playhouse headed by pipes. Seats have been reserved for the party. Those of Scotch society who are not who have not been invited to form of this arrangement will take this as notification. Clan Macdonald, No. 96, will attend the play, and other clans, and those of the St. Andrew's Society to be present are to don their badges and handkerchiefs. It is expected that the management has been intending to see this final performance of the great play will wear a distinctive token of some kind, as it will be a thoroughly Scotch night. Honors will also thus be done a fellow Scotchman Mr. Stoddart, in very truly "the grand old man of the stage."

This afternoon's matinee administration will be a half dollar to all parts of the house.

LAZA-CARA TABLETS

DAZED-TIRED-LIFELESS

Every woman has times when she feels dazed, tired out, almost lifeless, when her work, which she usually contemplates with pleasure, seems almost past her strength. Are you that woman sometimes? Do you realize that it is simply time out of a hundred caused from too common, but dangerous constipation?

Mother Nature says, "I have given you a mouth and a stomach to receive food and send its strengthening parts through your system. I have given you bowels to discard the useless parts of that food and keep your system clean. I will do the best I can out of whatever food you give me. But unless the bowels are kept regular, I cannot prevent the poisoning of your whole system."

LaZA-Cara Tablets will do for you just what Nature asks. They will correct your clogged bowels; will put them on the road to regularity and health; will not strain or abuse them; will in a short time work a permanent cure and leave you permanently against constipation.

If you are taking nothing now, you ought to. If you are taking something already and feel pretty well suited with it, you won't feel that way if you try LaZA-Cara Tablets once.

JIU JITSU.

The System of Exercise and Diet That Makes the Japanese Strong.

Physical soundness is the watchword of the rising generation, if one may draw conclusions from the great amount of physical culture annually published, and from the various schools and "systems" which have enthusiastic following in all our large cities. Each of these systems has its own speciality based upon the originator's individual experience or investigation. All have in common the one aim—to increase the size of the gymnast's muscles, and indirectly, among adults, to aid impaired digestion and circulation, to take on flesh or to remove it.

It has remained for those clever Japs, however, in this as in other fields, to astonish us with a system remarkable for its ingenuity. Occasional travelers' tales in the past have aroused curiosity as to a wonderful method of gymnastics in practice among these people of the East, but this little book by Mr. Hancock is the first, we believe, to set before Western readers the system in detail.

Rarely is a treatise likely to attract so many readers from different motives. For Jiu-jitsu is not only a phase of gymnastics; it is a "system of exercise, diet and general mode of living," to quote the enthusiastic author—"that has made the Mikado's people the healthiest, strongest and happiest men and women in the world."

THE ORIGIN OF JIU-JITSU.

We quote the author's account of the origin and development of the system:—"The Japanese call their system of physical training 'jiu-jitsu.' Literally interpreted, this means 'muscle-breaking.' The term is not wholly an apt one, as the reader will discover further on.

"From the earliest periods of antiquity that are recorded, even in the legendary history of Japan, there existed a minor class of nobles who corresponded very closely with the knights of feudal Europe. These men, who were known as the samurai, were the fighting men of the empire. Each of the samurai carried two swords—his most precious possessions. Commoners were not allowed any other weapons than sticks or stones. Naturally the caste of the samurai was rigidly preserved. Any member of the caste, man or woman, might marry with propriety into a family of the superior nobility. Anyone who married beneath his caste was summarily degraded.

"Samurai rank went by hereditary. Every son of a samurai, unless he disgraced himself, kept his caste and took up the profession of arms. The comparatively few weaklings among these people retained their caste but did not marry.

"In battle the samurai carried no weight other than their swords and the clothing they wore. The commoners, who went along as camp-followers, bore all the baggage. It was considered utterly undignified for a samurai to per-so mainly as a matter of curiosity. Rice still continues to take the place of white wheat flour and of potatoes, the essential thing in the diet of the people of the Land of the Rising Sun? Which making their phenomenal marches Japanese troops often carry no food except a small bag of rice. When practicable, barley and beans are issued to the troops. The Japanese do not heat their houses. If they are cold they dress to meet the requirements of the outside weather. Of course the active outdoor life, combined with frugal, sensible diet, made these samurai powerful men.

"But there was yet vastly more to come in the physical development of these little men. One brief follow discovered that by pressing thumb or fingers against certain muscles of the neck, momentary paralysis could be produced. He also discovered that by employing the hardened edge of his hand to strike the plexus of bamboo at a certain angle, he could break the stick. If he could paralyze his own nerves, why not another's? If he could break a stick by a sharp blow with the edge of his hand, why could he not train himself in the same way to break the arm of a dangerous antagonist? And that was the beginning of the creation of the science of Jiu-jitsu.

"Probably one of the first additional discoveries, was that very severe pain may be inflicted upon the upper arm. Take a point about midway between the elbow and the shoulder of someone else's arm. Employ the grip in such a way that the fingers dig into the muscles behind the middle of the bone. The thumb's tip should press into the muscles over the front of the bone. Without in any way relaxing the grip, both fingers and thumb should be vigorously pressed over the parallel lines of muscles and nerves. Any expert can readily find on his own arm the exact locations of these muscles and nerves, and a little practice with a friend will teach him rapidly how to seize an antagonist's arm and to render that arm momentarily helpless.

A HEALTHY STOMACH THE BASIS OF ALL STRENGTH.

"What the Japanese eat in summer and in winter.

"In the opinion of the samurai of old Japan the first step to the upbuilding of the physical body lay in the direction of choosing a sound, sensible diet. This did not mean a diet in which meats and condiments figured largely. Unlike the Chinese, the Japanese seldom cared for meat, even when they could well afford it. In fact, meat was but little vogue among the natives of Japan today.

"In one often another rice finds its way to the Japanese table—or floor—at every meal. Of late years potatoes have found their way into Japan. These, tubers are to be found in the markets of all the large cities, but if the Japanese eat them at all, they do reluctance that all the muscles put into play by either of the antagonists are thoroughly exercised and as severely used as may be done without causing any physical distress to either.

"First of all the leg exercises directed in the average jiu-jitsu school is the one now to be described. He contestants are seated on the floor, or on the ground, facing each other. The legs are extended forward. The trunk of the body is erect, with the palms of the hands pressed against the ground or floor. In this work much support must come from the hands and arms. One man places the flat of his right foot against the flat of the other's left foot. At the start the heels of both rest upon the floor. Next, very slowly, each man raises the engaged foot as high as possible. All the while the greatest pressure possible is maintained.

"It is the object of each contestant to apply the pressure of his own foot to such an extent that he forces his adversary over on his back. At the outset it is much better to use this work along purely resistant lines, allowing each to gain the victory in turn. After a while this sport—for such it becomes—may be varied, when the strength of the contestants is about equal, by actual contests to determine which can force the other to his back. While this work may be done satisfactorily with gymnasium shoes on the engaged feet, it is usual for the Japanese to do it in their stocking feet.

"Neither the Japanese samurai, nor their descendants of today, believe in any superiority of one side of the body over the other. The left arm and left leg receive as careful attention as do the limbs of the right side.

Up to this point the author has dealt chiefly with matters of hygiene and with exercises for gaining strength. He now takes up the consideration of feats of attack and defense. Among the preliminary exercises of this class is one called the "come-along." The author's description follows:

"There is another feat employed by the Japanese that is simply itself. Nowadays, it is used mainly by the police. It is known as the 'come-along.' It is better to attack the opponent on the left side. While the attack is effective on either side, the left side assault will be described. The assailant throws his right arm over the left arm of his intended victim. In this clinch the tops of the opposing shoulders must be as close as possible. Just the second that the clinch has been made the assailant must grasp his own left wrist with his right hand. He then bends forward as much as is necessary. Except in actual combat the trick should not be carried to extremes. It will be noticed in the photograph that the assailant has his foot placed in advance of that of his intended victim. This is done in order that the man making the assault may be able to bend forward far enough and quickly enough to throw his man to the floor by a trip.

THE STRUGGLE.

"One of the next exercises to be taken up is one that should be practiced daily as long as the study of Jiu-jitsu is continued. The task is known among the Japanese as 'The Struggle.' The two opponents stand face to face, stretch out their arms laterally and clasp hands with palm to palm and fingers interlaced. Each falls forward, placing his chest against his antagonist's, feet as far back as possible, so that his body is in a slanting position, and at the same time with the feet spread as far apart as possible. In this attitude the opponents begin to struggle, each striving as hard as he can to press his chest so forcibly against the other's as to drive him back. Victory belongs to the man who can gradually force his adversary from the middle of the room to the wall. Out of doors the same feat can be practiced by starting at a middle line, with goal lines drawn on the soil behind each contestant.

EXERCISES THAT DEVELOP THE LEGS—THE INCIDENTAL BENEFIT TO THE ARMS.

"While the development of the portion of the body from the waist to the shoulders, and including, of course, the rigorous training of the arms, is considered by Japanese trainers as being of prime importance, only a few days are spent in the jiu-jitsu school before the student is taught how to strengthen his legs.

"In the leg exercises, as in the arm work, the resistant principle is the one employed. In all fastidiously trained who is 'fitted' yields gradually to the pressure of his assailant. It matters not which of the contestants is the stronger; the one on the defensive should yield by degrees, yet with such clinch in time he can push his assailant over backward to the ground, and land with his knee in the solar plexus of the man who has attacked him.

"The next trick is one that may be most simply described. It is so easy that it may be learned in a few minutes. The man on the attack throws his left arm with great suddenness around his adversary's waist, digging the fingers with great severity into the base of the spine. At the same time he presses his open hand right up under the chin in such a manner as to throw his enemy's head back. The man so attacked is likely to have his neck broken if the assault is made savagely enough. The assailant may, if he wishes, bring up his right knee against the abdomen of his adversary. This is such a dangerous form of attack that no Japanese will ever employ it except when it is necessary in a matter of life or death. If the man attacked receives the knee-blow in the abdomen he has no counter-blow. In breaking the clinch alone he can use the throw-off for the throat-hold that is illustrated in this volume.

"The feat above described is practiced in the jiu-jitsu schools with great accuracy. It is one that calls for the utmost agility. It is a form of assault that cannot be countered if it is used with enough swiftness. But where the attack is meant to be decisive and ugly the knee must be brought to the abdomen at the very instant of attack. After one experiment it will be evident by the student that his left arm must go between his opponent's right arm and the body. If his arm goes around outside of his opponent's right arm the man attacked will have some added advantage in resisting the assault."

GATES'S REASSURANCE.

(New York Times.)

In one of the recent stock collapses in Wall street, a reporter approached John W. Gates with the question whether he believed an improvement soon was likely.

"All I can say," replied the Western leader, "is to tell you a story which accurately describes how I feel about it. When I was in Satouga, two years ago, I heard of an English chap who went driving one morning in an open carriage. He had on his light white top and looked very swell. When he got out in the country several miles he started to rain. The Englishman did not know whether to go on or turn back. He saw a countryman plodding along in the distance, so he drove up to him.

"Now, my man," said the Britisher, "can you tell me if it is likely to stop raining?"

The countryman paused a moment, surveyed the outfit in silence, and replied:—

"Well, it always has."

"What," said Mr. Gates, "that is what I'll say to you."

NEW TERCENTENARY POST CARD

Miss Martin, the librarian of the public library, has designed a Tercenary post card which is winning much favorable comment. The design, which is an original as it is artistic, is based on the fact that the discovery which we are to celebrate was made on the anniversary of the rising sun of St. John's day and a dove bearing in its beak a scroll with the inscription, "Our S. Jean, 1604." Underneath is a picture of Champlain's vessel entering the harbor, and a typical view of the busy St. John of today.

The card is especially an improvement on those already issued, in that it has, on the stamp side, space for advertising and, on the reverse, a place where the sender may write his message and his name.

A SLIGHT MISCALCULATION.

RALEIGH, N. C., May 12.—Enchanted in fame, Prof. Danton, the Hungarian High Diver, one of the attractions of the Goldenboro carnival tonight, shot downward from the little platform at the top of his 110 feet ladder into the tank of water and lambent fire below, but in doing so he made a slight miscalculation, his head and shoulders coming in contact with the side of the tank with such violence that he died soon afterward.

LABOR MEN WON'T HELP.

Decide Not to Take Part in the Tercentenary Celebration—Dissatisfied with Grant Given Them

Some of the members of the Trades and Labor Council were seen this morning expressing their decided refusal to take part in the tercentenary celebration. They declare that the circumstances under which they were invited to take part in the celebration were not at all of a satisfactory kind. In the first place they say that the grant of $500 which the managing committee of the Tercentenary allotted them was altogether insufficient for its purpose. They were simply surprised when they heard the size of the grant. Last Labor Day parade cost the labor bodies in the vicinity of $2,000 and they say that $500 would accomplish hardly anything.

Another reason of the Trades and Labor Council for refusing to take part in the Tercentenary celebration is the action of the Tercentenary management in placing the grant of $500 in the hands of a person who is outside and not connected in any way with the labor bodies of the city. If they desire the labor people to participate in the celebration they should have given them the control of their own money. The labor people seem to regard the action of the Tercentenary management as a want of confidence in the ability of the Trades and Labor Council to handle their own money.

BASEBALL SEASON BEGINS.

Mayor White Will Put the First One Over Monday Night.

Everything is in readiness for the opening of the baseball season next Monday evening on the Victoria grounds. Mayor White has consented to throw the first ball.

A feature on the openings of the American and National league is the throwing of the first ball by the mayor and the presence of a band. These features will be duplicated here, for this purpose the Carleton Cornet Band have been engaged and will parade from the head of King street at 6 o'clock to the grounds. After the game the first band concert of the season will be held and no doubt if the evening is fine a large crowd will be in attendance.

The line up of the teams it is expected will be as follows:

Franklin's St. Joseph's
Grace catcher Fitchey
Grace pitcher Fitchey
Carson 1st base Britt
McGulgan 2nd base Whately
Conboy 3rd base Burke
Kearns short stop Long
Harris right field McKinnon
Creagan centre field McCafferty
Donovan spare Simpson

Game will be called shortly after six by Umpire McAllister.

THE MARKET TODAY.

The market today is refreshed by the presence of a considerable quantity of green stuff. Rhubarb for the first time this year made its appearance today. It is very good and makes good sale. Lettuce and radishes are also plentiful.

Butter by the roll is going at from 17 to 20 cents per pound, and at from 20 to 22 cents per tub. Veal has gone up slightly, and was bringing this morning 5 to 6 cents wholesale and 7 to 10 cents retail. Beef, of which there is very little, averages from 7 to 9 cents.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

On review from the parish of Hopeville civil court in the case of Jones v. Oliver, argument was heard today before Judge McLeod at Chatham.

The principal grounds on which the defendant applied to set aside the judgment, were that when the statute of limitations is set up to defeat a note, it is not defeated, as a set off, when one of the parties lay by in case of mutual dealings between them, the other party's claim is barred, and that the statute does not run on a note with interest, when no definite time is stated for payment until actual demand of payment is made.

C. A. Peck, K. C., and Dr. Stockton argued for the defendant, who made the application and Freeman & Jonah for defendant. Judgment reserved.

POLICE COURT.

Out Again, in Again—Geary the Miscellaneous Thief, Again Before the Court.

Last night must have been rather quiet around the streets for only one unfortunate faced the magistrate from the curved bench in the police court this morning. She was Maria Perry, who was only released from jail yesterday for being drunk on Rodney street, Carleton, last night, went back today for two months more.

One Frank, who was arrested last night was allowed to go on deposit and failed to appear.

The man Geary, who has already been committed on the charge of stealing some razors and small trunk was up this morning charged with stealing a bicycle, the property of Miss Alice Green of Duke street.

Little Miss Green, who, by the way, was the first witness to kiss the new police court Bible, identified the wheel.

Officer White, who arrested Geary identified the wheel found on the prisoner, which N. Drucker, of Dock street, identified as the one he gave the prisoner in part payment for Miss Green's bicycle.

Detective Killen told of his discovery of the wheel in a second-hand shop and of Drucker's subsequent identification of the prisoner as the man who brought it.

Geary questioned the detective closely on several points brought out the fact that Drucker had at first been unable to identify him.

The magistrate remanded the prisoner until Monday.

"The technical capacity of Mr. Farland on the banjo seemed to know no limit. But it is not merely technical proficiency that strikes the listener—it is particularly the delicate poetry, expression, and refinement with which he plays that compels attention."

Farland's date here is next Wednesday evening, May 18th. Seats now on sale at box office.

So far no result has been reached as both sides refuse to make concessions.
