President Harrison's Parting Kick at Canada.

Railway Trasportation Favors to be Curtailed.

Hon. Mackerzie Bowell's Views on the Matter - The Duty on Sugar and Molasses.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—It is said on trustworthy authority that President Harrison, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State have practically determined to make the outgoing of the Harrison Administration notable by a blow at Canada much more vital than the recent order imposing tolls on Canadian vessels passing through the Sault Ste. Marie ship canal at the entrance to Lake Superior. The blow will come in the shape of a long-threatened Presidential proclamation curtailing or abolishing the privilege now enjoyed by Canadian rairoads of transporting merchandise in bond through the United States free of duty under a system very advantageous to the roads at the expense of the American companies. There have been promises of such retaliation as this for several years, but there is every indication now that the step so long contemplated by the United States Government is about to be taken. The attorney of the Canadian Pacifio is here in conference with the congressional friends of the Canadian roads, and there is evidence of genuine alarm in the minds of the friends of Canadian interests. Senators Frye and Cullom are said to be advising the President to take some radical step in this direction to

DUTIES ON SUGAR AND MOLASSES.
OTTAWA, Jan. 1.—The Official Gazette contains three important proclamations suspending certain sections of acts passed in 1891 and 1892, which imposed suspending certain sections of acts passed in 1891 and 1892, which imposed certain rates of duties on sugars and molasses when imported directly from the country of production to the rates charged where the importation is direct. The result will be that during the continuance of these proclamations molasses and sugar combes in the country by indirect importation will be placed on an equal footing with direct importations. The duty on sugar coming in by indirect importation was 5 per cent. advalorem, and on molasses 2½ cents per gallon, and these duties are abolished by the proclamations. The result will be to take off she discriminating duties against indirect importations. These clauses of the acts mentioned have been quoted by the United States as evincing a disposition on the part of Canada to discriminate against the United States, while the United States makes no such discrimination against other countries, and it is presumed that the Deminion Government has thought it best, in order to remove any ground for irritation, to suppend by proclamation the discrimining clauses as an evidence of a good and riendly feeling. riendly feeling.

THE PRINCE OF SCALAWAGS.

Adventures of a Bigamist and Swindler.

He Married Nine Rich Women-Traced to New Zealand and Then Lost Sight Of.

Boston, Jan. 1.—"Rev." William Hammond, known throughout the United States as a confidence man, bigamist and swindler, has been up to his old tricks in Auckland, New Zealand. The police of this city have been applied to for information by the Auckland authorities. Hammond married a wealthy widow there, and after securing $8,000 of her money deserted her, leaving for Japan, where he is now supposed to be. This marriage makes his ninth, as far as known, and at least two of the victimized women are living.

He has acted as a Methodist, Unitarian, Free Will Baptist and Preshyterian minister, as a physician and lawyer, and had joined and been expelled from many secret societies. Yet, with all his misdeeds, he has been arrested but twice, and each time escaped panishment.

He appeared in Yuka, Cal., some years ago, and had with him two women, one of whom he called his wife and the other his sister. He preached in the Methodist Church. Complaints began to arise, however, of his attentions to women of his congregation, and while the citizens were preparing to investigate him his alleged wife and sister died within a week of each other. He collected some $2,000 on policies on their lives, and shortly afterward skipped the town, leaving a number of creditors.

At Soath Foultney, N.Y., he acted as a Catholic priest, and is said to have appropriated a sum of church money, when he left town suddenly. In Allentown, Pa., he is romembered as a Presbyterian minister and a "conscienceless liar and profigate," At Indian Lake, Ind., a house that he lived in was heaved and he cannot detail the lived in was heaved and he cannot detail the lived in was heaved and he cannot detail to heave and the lived in was heaved and he cannot detail town the lived in was heaved and he cannot detail the lived in was heaved and he cannot detail the lived in was heaved and he cannot detail the lived in was heaved and he cannot detail the lived in was heaved and he cannot detail the lived in was heaved and he cannot detail the lived in was heaved and Boston, Jan. 1 .- "Rev." AN INDEPENDENT CANADA.

Portrayed by a Non-Political Centemperary.

[Toronto Week.]

Those who are studying the curents of public opinion in Canada at the present time can scarcely fail to have observed, notwithstanding their sluggish filw and somewhat bewildering eddies, that during the last few months some of then have been setting very perceptibly in the direction of national independence as the ultimate solution of the Canadan question. Having long been of opinion that an independent Canada was at once the noblest and most inspiring goal towards which the aspirations of our people could be directed, we confess that we have been often discouraged by the feebleness of the response that could be evoked from press or people to any such sentiment. The vote at the late public meeting in Montral was but one of a number of indications which seem to us to show that our people, especially many of the more ambitions and energotic of our young men, are beginning to shake off the lethargy which has so long paralyzed our national ambition.

Why should Canadians desire national independence? Why not remain as we are, seeing that every agitation for costitutional change is more or less distribing

Why should Canadians dosire majonal independence? Why not remain as we are, seeing that every agitation for constitutional change is more or less distribing and dangerous? We might ask in return, why does the spirited and self-reliat son prefer to leave the paternal home and act for himself when he has attained he majority? But more practical answers are many and obvious. Some of them have been so prominently before the public for some time past that it is unnecessary to do more than allude to them. The census of 1891, with its startling revelations; the loss of 1,000,000 of our best citizens, who have control states, nearly the growing unrest, manifesting itself in some quarters in a desire for political union with the United States, all foreibly suggest the necessity for a new departure. The tedious and roundabout process by which all our negotiations with the action neighbor, to whom we stand in so close relations in many ways, must be carried on, indicates the kind of change needed. And the almost universal feeling which has taken hold of our people that constitutional change of some kind is imminent, and which is working itself out in the various schemes for commercial union.

What is to be gained by Independence? It would bring us the power to make our own commercial treaties. a nation, as did Canadians 25 years ago in order to build a Federation, why should we be less successful? Nor should it be forgotten that precisely the same obstacles stand in the way of Imperial Federation, prolonged colonialism, and every other possible future, save perhaps political union, which few of our readers will admit to be as yet our "inevitable," much less our "ideal," destiny.

But we should be, we are told, incapable of defending ourselves against attack, or of protecting our commerce in all quarters of the world. The operation of removing the entire laryax from a living man has been successfully performed in a number of cases, and in several of these an artificial laryax, with reeds vibrating somewhat like the reed of a clarionet, has been constructed. In one case it was made of hard rubber and the man could speak in a loud, clear and distinct manner.

Peoples' Party national committee:

"The country is to be congratulated upon the fact that the loaders of one of the heretofore great parties have been ahardoned and overthrown by the people and their organization well-nigh annihilated. This leaves the former adiogents of that party free to align themse-wes with the great anti-monopoly and industrial movement. The accession of the other party to power is the result of violent reaction, and not, I am sure, of the deliberate judgment of the American people. The national leaders of the triumphant party are without and not, I am sure, of the deliberate integration ment of the American people. The national leaders of the triumphant party are without any well-defined policy except that of contemptuous disregard for every element of reform within the ranks of their own party and among the people at large. The new Administration will ignore the three great contentions of modern times relating to land, money and transportation, and will not attempt to solve either. The repressive policy, now fully inaugurated in this country, will not work well in the closing years of the nineteenth century. It is the fatab blunder of weak leaders who fail to comprehend the spirit of the age and the growth of independence among the people. It denies to labor the right to organize, rolles upon the military arm to sustain corporate pretensions, and, when labor organizations desend themselves against armed mercenaries, it windges the members thereof to be guilty of treason. Mr. Brady and the Furnace Questies

—Evidence From Detroit.

"One Who Was There" writes: At the meeting held in Hamilton road school room on Wedneday night Mr. Brady, candidate for school trustee, strongly favored the Smead-Dowd system in preference to products of city factories. Indeed, he seemed to think that the School Board had a perfect right to boycott local dealer and favor the button-holing agents of the foreign company. To show the electron how very inefficient the furnaces indorse by Mr. Brady are, notwithst-anding they cost three times as much as Londar furnaces, guaranteed by our manufacturers, let me send you the following report copied from the Detroit Journal of the 191 December. Mr. Stevely, I understand would have theseenfly expressed the deal

THE VERDICT IN PEEL

There is nothing the matter with Mowat Government. Two years ag Liberal candidate in Peel was elected by majority of 250. He resigned, and his such cessor, elected last Friday, had a majority of over 900. The popular majori favor of Sir Oliver's Administration creases every time a contest is forced.

A SCANDAL AND ITS MORAL Much has been written regarding the great Panama Canal scandal, which has caused the downfall of one French Government, has brought another into great peril, and has ruined the reputation of many very prominent citizens of the Republic. It is therefore pertinent at this stage to recapitulate the principal facts leading up to these political and social upheavals.

Four years ago the failure of the schem for constructing the canal was placed beond all doubt by the appointment of a quidator. Since then many efforts have been made to reconstruct the company, but all have proven fruitless, owing, no doubt, to the growing conviction that something was radically wrong with the administra-tion of affairs. Liquidator succeeded liquidator, but all agreed in declaring that the books of the company were in perfect order, and that, though some of the disbursements might be questioned, their good faith poodling against members of the Government. Some of our contemporaries have been pointing the finger of scorn at the Republic. It will be time enough for Can-adians to seriously criticise the actors in the Panama Canal scandal when a com-plete investigation into the accusations against Mr. Haggart, Sir Adolphe Caron and others has been held.

THE EXAMPLE OF SWEDEN.

It is not generally known that Sweden, with nearly 5,000,000 of inhabitants, has n operation an advanced liquor law. The eature of it regulating the hours in which iquors may be sold is specially interesting Londoners at this time. It is enacted that all public houses must remain closed till 8 a.m., and that they must close at 12:30 p.m., reopening at 1:30 in the afternoon nd closing at 8 in the evening on each week day except Saturday, when the closing time in Bergen is 5 o'clock in the after-noon. The view which the Swedes mainained in passing this legislation was that the period in which drunkenness was most ncouraged and prevented to the greatest extent was the later hours of the evening. This seems to be a world-wide experience.

CLEVELAND TALKS OUT.

A Senatorial vacancy has to be filled in New York, and some of the Democratic osses desire to have a rich Albany brewer ppointed. President-elect Cleveland, eing interviewed, said he was averse to the selection on the ground that a brewer was not necessarily a statesman, and that ne was not well qualified to fill the posicourage of his convictions. His speaking out may result in a better choice. If the rich Albany brewer lived in Canada, he would be taken to the bosom of the present Ottawa Cabinet and requested to state the statesman he would get it. A full wallet would be his passport to honors and office.

TOPICS OF TO-DAY.

The old Teutons held that the moon was masculfee and the sun feminine, but the English have changed the moon to feminine and the sun to masculine. The dissipated habits of the moon—bound to get full—make it probable that the Teutons were right.

M. Henri Bouchet, in his new work, "L'Empire," makes public for the first time much interesting information about the profligacy of Napeleon I, the facts having been gathered from efficial documents to which until now no writer has had access. During his reign there was an extraordinary era of good stealing. The offices were filled with spendthrifts who were tools of the ruler. Many were lifted from poverty into luxurious living, and commanded to append money as freely as they received it. The attendants at court were most favored. The Duke of Padua received $65,000 an, nually and a mausion in Paris; Berthier was allowed $220,000 and the exclusive revenue of Neuchatel; Bessieres drew "L'Empire," makes public for the first time revenue of Neuchatel; Bessieres drew $263,122 a year; Caulalancourt, $300,882; Camhaceres, $450,000, and other sums varying from $63,000 to $180,000 a year. These were stated sums, and is most cases there was pilfering besides.

in and around the Clarkson street pier as so dense that the police were summoned. Capt. Allaire and a squad of his men arrived shortly afterward, and it took all the policemen's patience to keep the enthusiantic and excited assemblage in order. The big steamer was finally docked and the passengers came down the gaugplank, while the great dock shed rang with cheers and shouts. There were many affecting scenes as friends on the pier greeted those who had been so long at sea. But he very short space of time the baggage was examined and the passengers and their friends left the pier, and only the usual bustle attending the arrival of an ocean steamship remained to mark the eventful voyage of brave Capt. McKay's big versel.

"Humph! it you are so proud of your American bride, why did you not bring her American bride, why did you not bring her home with you?" Lady Linton inquired, in a mocking tone, and then could have bitten her tongue through for having allowed herself to hetray her curiosity so far.

Sir William flushed hotly. It was evident that his sister was no more reconciled since seeing Virgie's pleture than before. Her pride of birth had received a shock which sha could neither overlook nor forgive.

"Lady Heath was not able to travel. Her physician told me that if she crossed the ocean it would be at the risk of her life. Miriam, Virgie will soon become a mother, God willing."

"The face is well enough," Lady Linton was forced to admit.

"You have oversterped all bounds."

Sir William Heath could hardly controll his impattence to fly to his dear ones across the water.

His found heart yearned mightily to behold his child and to clasp once more the beautiful with the who had now become dearer than ever to him.

But his mother's condition did not improve; she still lay hovering between life and death, and he knew that he must not leave her until there was some change either for the better or worse.

Her disease was partial paralysis, which however, had not affected her brain, and her son's return and presence appeared to be of the greatest comfort to her.

Still she was liable, at any hour, to have another shock, which would doubtless prove fatal, and Sir Herbert Randal—an eminent London physician—commanded perfect quiet and freedom from all exoitement, since the least anxiety or disturbance of any kind would bring the dread messenger which they all feared so much.

Thus it neemed as if the young baronet was hopelessly bound to Heathdale for the present.

"She is worthy of it in every respect," her hother resumed, a gleam of fite in his eye, "and will grace the position which I have given her as well as the most noted London belle could do. I have pictures of her here—perhaps you will do me the honor to look at them."

He laid two or three fine photographs of Virgie, taken in different attitudes, before her, as he concluded, and then leaned back in his chair watching her attentively to see what affect that beautiful face would have upon her.

pain entirely disappeared before a what affect that beautiful face would have upon her.

Her ladyship adjusted her eye-glasses with English precision, and taking up one of the pictures regarded it with all the indifference which she could muster. She was not, however, quite prepared for what she saw, and the squick, curious, half-admiring gleam which she into her eye told that she had not failed to acknowledge the exceeding loveliness of that fair face, and the natural grace and dignity displayed in the young wife's attitude.

She took up each picture separately, and her brother could see her indifference gradually melting away, a keen and critical look taking its place.

"Who was she?" she at length condessended to ask, though somewhat curtly. "The daughter of a California gentleman," with a scornial accent upon the last word. "You speak of him as of an equal," "Cortainly," returned the baronet, a smile of amusement slightly curling his lips, "Mr. Abbot was my equal, if not my supprior, in point of intellect, and all that goes to make a gentleman, while his daughter is in no wise my inferior."

Sir William laughed outright; then he said:

"Your lovalty to your family does you no credit, Miriam, but I imagine, if you should ever visit America—which I trust for your sake, you will do sometime—that you will return much wiser than you went. Your lovalty to your family does you no credit, Miriam, but I imagine, if you should ever visit America—which I trust for your sake, you will do sometime—that you will return much wiser than you went. extreme, for it made certain plans, which her fertile brain had begun to weave as good as she had learned that her brother had returned without his wife, all the more complicated, if not well-nigh impossible.

"It was a great trial for me to return without her," Sir William went on, with a regretful sigh, "but your summons was so imperative that I folt obliged to do so. My darling bore it very bravely, however, she regarded it as my duty to hasten to my mother, even though she would thus be left alone, a stranger in a great city, and at such a critical time."

"Of course it was your duty to return to your mother," Lady Lintou responded emphatically, and as if the young wife away upon the other side of the Atlantic was not worthy of consideration. "And," she added flashing a look of defiance at her companien. "I am free to confess to a feeling of selief that you had to core alone."

"Mera me out, if you please," she interposed. "Mamma's heart has been marry broken at the thought of this ill, assorted marriage, and I believe the excitement and grief would have killed her outright, if you had brought her," with a withering glance at Virgie's picture, "to Heathdale to reim as winistress."

kind would bring the dread messenger which they all feared so much.

Thus it recemed as if the young baronet was hopelessly bound to Heathdale for the present.

Not a word had passed between him and his mother regarding his marriage. Knowing how displeased she had been at the time of it, and fearing to excite her if he recalled the event to her mind, he had thought it best to say nothing, but leave her to broad the subject whenever he should feel inclined, although he wondered that she did not make some inquiry regarding his young wife, whom the Ismily had expected he would bring with his sister had been somewhat cold and formal, for he could not forget how harshly she had expressed her self regarding his choice, while she could not and would not forgive him for disappointing all her ambitious hopes for him.

Like his mother, she ignored the subject of his marriage, not designing to make the slightest fiquiry regarding his wife, although she had cxpressed hering with curiosity to know why he had returned alone.

This negligence on hor part made Sir William very indignant, and after the first or-citement consequent apon his strival had subsided he determined to assert himself, and have it distinctly understood that his wife was hunceforth to be recognized as member of and a power in his household. Therefore, the morning following his return he had drawn Lady Linton into the library, and after conducting her, with some thing of farmai politoness, to a scat, remarked;

"Miriam, you have not yot done me the honor to inquire after Lady Heath."

Lady Linton bowed coldly, and lifted her file eyelrows questioningly.

"It is evident that you are still very warry with me, and hired to annoy me upon this point," he continued, sternly, "aid we may see in understand each other at the outset. I shall domand and expect that my wife was hunceforth to among me his point," he continued, sternly, "aid we may see in the feath of the past."

Again Lady Linton bowed; but she did not deign to open her lips in response, altenches. (To be Continued.)

throughout Ontario.

—Mr. Franklin McLeay, the clever young Canadian who has won name and fame in the theatrical world, and is at present a leading member of the colebrated Wilson Barret's Company, was in the city yesterday calling on friends. He has been at his home in Watford, where his father is sick. He was on his return to join his company in Montreal. Mr. McLeay is a graduate of Woodstock College, holding the soholarship of that institution for three years at Toronto University. He has made rapiddadwance in his chosen profession, and his talents have been recognized in Europe as well as America. Friday with an all-day convention on "How to Save Souls."

A Great Play To-Night.

The plan indicates that a bumper house will great the popular Robert Mantell at the Grand to-night in the drama, "A Face in the Moonlight," which scored a triupphant run at Proctor's Theater, New York, this season. Mr. Mantell shows his versatility by assuming a dual role—that of Jacques Ferrand, a criminal, and Captain Victor Ambrose, a gallant officer in the French army. His changes from the defaut, reckless criminal to the brave, handsome soldier and vice versa are made with a startling suddenness that bewilders and fascinates. The gratitude of the phy-going public is due Mr. Mantell for the diligence he has displyed in giving to them an entirely new production nearly every season. As a portrayer of the romantic drama he has then to the highest plane in American art. Mr. Mantell has with him still that admirable actress Charlotte Behrens, who has been his leading lady for years, and is qualified by experience, association and thorough knowledge of Mr. Mantell's methods to support him. The other members of the company are in keeping with the principals.
