Jean Knapp, Aged Four, Knocked Down by Motor.

NEWS OF THE VILLAGE
Death of Mrs. Samuel Pritchard, Aged 45, is Much Regretted.

Newboro, May 28.—A serious accident was narrowly averted on Saturday evening on Drummond street, when Jean Knapp, the four-year-old daughter of Elmer Knapp, was knocked down by an automobile driven by Wesley Botting, of Forfar. The car was running very slowly at the time and this perhaps prevented a fatality. As it was, the child was badly scratched and rendered senseless for a short time. A number of cars were lined up in front of the band stand before the opening of the band concert, and in playing around the cars with other children she ran out on the street just as the car came up and Mr. Botting had no chance to see the child until right upon her. The little girl was knocked under the car and was lucky in not having the wheel pass over her. She was picked up and taken to the office of Dr. King, who soon brought her around and after having her injuries dressed, she was taken home.

Beautiful Home Surroundings

By Franz A. Aust

Beautiful farm home-surroundings will do wonders toward keeping grouchy Old Man Drudge from invading the cheerful home spirit of the whole family.

In city and in town, man's business carries him away from home all day. Early in the morning or at night when he returns he often feels like putting around "fixing things up." It rests him. On the farm, however, it is different. Man's daily work and any effort to make the home surroundings attractive are so near one and the same thing that he often finds no joy in starting home work, especially alone. Very often the wife plants a few flowers and thus attempts to bring a bit of beauty into the surroundings. But a single flower-bed will not make a charming dooryard.

Time is very precious for farm work during the spring months, and a working plan made beforehand is a great advantage. Then you can see just what ought to be done to bring about greatest improvement with least effort and with almost no expense.

The boy or girl who goes to school will like to help, and some evening, with the assistance of a sheet of paper, a pencil, and a ruler, a plan of the home grounds can be made on the dining-room table after the dishes are cleared away.

Draw a Plan.

Draw the plan to a definite scale. Say, eight or ten feet of ground to equal one inch on the paper. Then the location of buildings, also drawn to scale, and the walks and drives, the trees, the garden, the laundry yard, can be shown and studied carefully.

What does the place need? With the plan on the table, take inventory. The house, of course, is the most important spot in the plan. Walks and drives leading to it, therefore, should be as inconspicuous as possible. Since the farmer will not cut across his best fields with lanes, neither should a drive cut in two an unbroken sweep of grassy lawn.

Notice next how the individual trees are placed about the house. They have three duties to perform. They should protect the place from sun and wind; they should frame the views to and from the house; they should screen any objects which are unsightly. If the family decides that one or more extra trees would be beneficial, a check mark can be placed on the exact spot on the plan, and the variety of tree to be planted can be determined.

Where a house is small, it is better not to choose trees which will grow large and tall if they are to be used for framing views. Tall trees only make a house look dwarfish. Wild crab or thorn-apple trees are better, or plum, or mountain-ash. Groups of several of these together will also screen that unsightly old shed, or milk-house, or clothes reel. Best of all, many times these trees can be found right on the farm and when father and the boys are out about their work, they can locate desirable ones and mark them, and the trees can quickly be brought to the house when the time comes to plant them.

Select Suitable Trees.

If large trees are to be selected, however, fast-growing varieties of soft wood, like the box-elder, soft maple, or poplar, are not good unless they can be alternated with long-lived trees, such as elm or oak or hard maple. Then, when the hard-wood trees are well started the others can be cut out. As a general rule, it is wiser, too, and more artistic, to avoid planting trees or shrubs in long straight rows.

Speaking of shrubs—there is nothing which will give the home dooryard a more settled, finished appearance than shrubs rightly placed. Even though there are some already growing, it is well to decide whether they are most suitably placed, and whether others can be added from time to time.

Lilacs, weigella or honeysuckle, with their flowers, will help to make the whole place a garden in early summer, and with their leaves they can not help brightening it the whole season through. Not all over the lawn, but along fences and borders, along walks and drives, these larger shrubs are good. Sumac is another hardy bush which can be dug and transplanted. Although not so beautiful for its flowers as some other shrubs, what a gorgeous splash of color it brings in the fall.

Little groups of smaller shrubs should not be forgotten at the corners and angles of the house. No matter how beautiful are the trees about a place, the house still looks bare if part of the foundation wall is not hidden.

Transplanting Trees and Shrubs.

In transplanting trees or shrubs, either from the woods or from nursery stock, great care must be taken to prevent the roots from drying out before they are set. Wrapping the roots in a moist gunny sack or putting them in a barrel or tub with water enough to cover them are good ways to prevent this.

Pruning of the roots should be attended to at once. This will insure smooth wounds which will heal readily. Any roots which have been badly injured in digging or in shipment should be removed. A long root should be cut back to correspond to the other roots. Only for these two purposes should roots be pruned.

Unless trees are too tall for convenience, top pruning can be left until after planting. Then the specimen can be sized up and the undesirable branches removed. For shrubs there are two methods—thinning out the growth and cutting back. Sometimes a combination of the two may be used. Some cutting back is desirable with most of them. Large plants are usually reduced from a third to a half; smaller ones from a fourth to a third. Shrubs which have many stems arising from the base should be thinned out; leave only the stronger ones. If these are long they should be cut back from a third to a half of their length.

Do Not Crowd the Roots.

The hole for planting should be large enough so that the roots will not be crowded. If the soil is heavy and compact, the hole should be larger than if the soil is light. The chief essential in any kind of planting is to have every part of the root system in close contact with the soil, and therefore fine soil must be used, and care must be taken in compacting it about the roots, leaving the top soil loose and fine and mounded high enough to allow for settling.

Many planters when working with dry soil, and especially when working with evergreens, practise "puddling" to save moisture. Puddling is dipping the roots into thin mud, so that all of them are covered with a layer of soil. Other than this, water in setting either trees or other plants usually does more harm than good. At any rate, it should not be applied to the surface of the soil after planting is finished. If it is to be used at all in an exceptionally dry soil, it should be poured into the hole before the plant is placed there, or after the plant is set and the hole is partly filled. Then the upper layer of soil will not become hard and moisture will not be lost. In a northern climate, in early spring, there is little need of additional water in planting.

Fresh manure should not come in contact with roots of newly-set trees or plants. If the soil needs to be fertilized, well rotted manure should be worked into it before planting. Even the rotted manure should not be put in the bottom of the hole, for it cuts off the water of the lower layer of soil, and the plant may suffer. Unless soil is very poor, it is better to wait a year or two before using fertilizer upon that which surrounds tree or shrub.

Two or three months after planting come the hot days of summer. To prevent the soil from drying out during this period, use a mulch. There is no protection better than cultivation where this is practical, as in a shelter-belt or about fruit trees; but where this is impossible a mulch of lawn clippings, or marsh hay, or manure, or anything to make a loose cover, is invaluable.

Ferns from the woods set out on the north side of the house will add to the foundation planting. These should be set as soon as possible after they are dug, but after that they need little care. Wild grape or five-leaf ivy or wild cucumber or morning-glory, most of which can be grown from a handful of seed will climb luxuriantly around the doorways, the porches, the fences, the clothes posts, or that homely windmill.

Last of all, there are mother's flowers which must not be neglected. Instead of a flower-bed on the lawn, which she herself usually has to spade and toil over, try this plan: Just outside the kitchen window, where the flowers can be seen from work-table and sink, plant some iris, or peonies, or phlox, or other flowers which need not be planted every year. It is so easy to water them, too, right there where they can't be forgotten. Asters, dahlias, verbenas, marigolds, cosmos, can be sown like vegetables, and the man and his horses can cultivate them on the way to the field, with scarcely any loss of time. Let some of the modern labor-saving devices extend to what mother wants out-of-doors.

Where perennial flowers are to be planted, the same principles as for trees and shrubs hold true. Shade them for the first few days if they are placed in the sun. This may be done by scattering over them thin layers of leaves or coarse grass, or by covering them with fine brush. Shallow hoeing will act as a good mulch during the dry summer days.

After the plan is finished on paper, the ideas can be gradually carried to the out-of-doors whenever opportunity comes. A few shrubs or a tree or some perennial flower can be added each year until the whole arrangement is complete. When too much is undertaken at a time the effort becomes irksome, and interest lags, but when the work is done by all members of the family, from father and mother down, the farm home surroundings will be more truly pleasing than the work of any landscape gardener.

covered pouring in and out of a large opening at the top. It was then marked, so we could find it again, and we returned home where the beeman prepared a hive to receive the new colony. I did not return with him the following day, but as the method of procedure in hiving is much the same in all cases, a description of the work, as I have since observed it, will serve.

A dark, cloudy and damp day is ideal for hiving a wild colony as the bees are then all at home and not active or aggressive enough to give much trouble. Bee-veils, gloves and thick clothing should be worn by all present, and the work should be conducted with the least possible fuss or disturbance.

It is usually necessary to cut down the bee-tree in order to get the bees and honey without waste, and this should be carefully done to see that it falls where it will do the least damage and also avoid danger of lodging in surrounding trees.

As soon as the tree is felled, hew away one side of the hollow portion and transfer the queen, together with the comb containing young bees, to the hive which should be near at hand. Most of the surplus honey may now be gathered in pails or other containers.

By evening of the second day the salvage of honey will usually be sufficiently completed for the removal of the hive to the apiary. It is best to close the entrance of the hive after sun-down when all the bees are likely to be within, and the moving should be done as carefully as possible. If the season is well advanced, be sure there is enough honey in the hive to feed the bees over winter.

It's faith in something and enthusiasm for something that makes life worth living.

Forgive, Forget.
When angry words in haste are said,
Why do we choose a friend to maim?
Why not select a fiend instead,
The target for our deadly aim?

When we speak out the cutting jest,
And try thereby to wound some one,
Why thrust at them we love the best,
For some misdeed they may have done?

When to us come suspicion deep,
Why place the blame on some dear friend,
The love of whom we fain would keep
Throughout all time till life shall end?

I fear we trifle most with them
To whom we owe the greatest debt,
Forgetting love, the priceless gem,
Is only claimed in friends we've met.

Our stay on earth is short at most,
Can we afford to selfish be,
Or shall we play the kindly host,
To those who dwell with you and me?

If others would our joy assail,
We still may hope that deep regret
To them will come, if on the trail
We post the words, "forgive, forget."

I'm sure our brightest, sweetest day,
Will really be when we have met
Them face to face, and frankly say
"We can forgive and will forget."

The Pure Water Problem.

Water from a driven well is more likely to be pure than that from a dug well because there is less danger of pollution from the open top, and seepage into the pipe in the first twenty-five feet is not likely to occur. But when a driven well is pumped beyond its capacity there is danger that pollution will be drawn in.

There are instances on record of driven wells which become polluted and spread typhoid when power pumps were used to pump the water from them.

As a rule deep wells furnish safe water if the top and upper stretches of the well are waterproof and properly protected.

Artesian Wells.
Artesian wells furnish safe water supplies almost without exception. Flowing wells are doubly safe because the water in its underground bed is safe and the pressure of the water in the pipe prevents inflow of pollution. Hard waters are not as harmful as some people think. They waste soap and are severe on some fabrics, but there is little proof that they are harmful to health.

Stored Waters.
Stored Waters tend to purify themselves. Any disease producing bacteria die off in a short time.

On the other hand, stored waters are sometimes made offensive by birds, rats, mice, insects and the various kinds of water weeds, particularly what are known as algae.

There is no fundamental objection to storing in underground cisterns. Such cisterns should have walls that are not porous and should be covered to prevent small animals from falling into them. There is no health objection to a cistern in the attic if it is properly protected. A glassed window in the top of a cistern, permitting sunlight to reach the water, increases its safety for drinking purposes.

An Ancient Hospital.

Few institutions can rival in antiquity St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, which this year celebrates its eight hundredth anniversary.

The hospital was founded in 1123, in the reign of Henry I, and it holds the record of being the oldest in England. Among its first patients were English lords and Norman squires, who went to get relief for their arrow wounds.

The story of Bart's is the story of progress in surgery and medicine. When it began patients were dosed with powdered snails and concoctions of adders, bats, and earthworms.

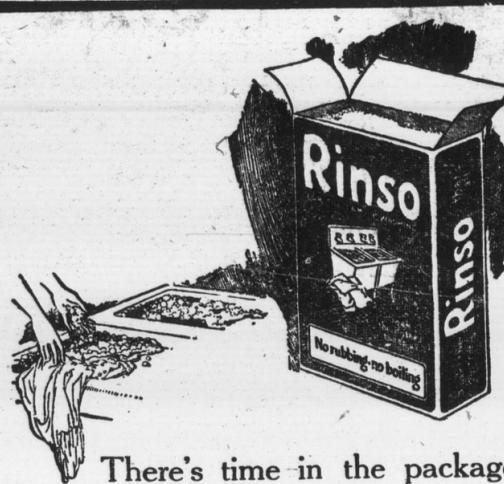

Many thrilling episodes have marked Bart's existence. The Black Death and the Great Plague crowded its limited accommodation, and both added materially to the medical knowledge which, as the years advanced, was being gathered within its walls.

Hogarth, the great painter, served Bart's as a governor, and his painting of the Pool of Bethesda hangs on the great staircase. Of this picture, doctors say it is possible for any medical man to diagnose the different ailments of the patients, so faithfully did Hogarth depict them.

In the course of its eight hundred years the hospital has been rebuilt three times.

The De Salaberry Monument.

The de Salaberry monument erected at Allan's Corner, Chateaugay county, Quebec, by the Department of Militia and Defence in 1895 to commemorate the famous stand of the troops under Lieut.-Colonel de Salaberry against the American invaders on October 26, 1813, in the action known in history as the battle of Chateaugay, has been transferred to the Canadian National Parks Branch of the Department of the Interior for care and maintenance as one of the chief historic sites of Canada.

The monument is a substantial obelisk with a base of 4 feet by 5 feet and height of 39½ feet and the site covers an area of a quarter of an acre. The monument is in a good state of preservation but certain repairs were necessary to fences and posts and these have been executed by the Branch. An inscription on the monument states that "the army invading Lower Canada and marching on Montreal was repulsed and routed by the militia of the province," on October 26, 1813.

The monument commemorates one of the most romantic military events in the history of Canada, which has been described as "a kind of modern Thermopylae blocking the open road to Montreal, and possible saving the state."

A French Cinderella.

With her departure from her home back of a druggist's shop to enter into the life of the Italian court, Claire Legue, a beautiful young French girl, takes rank with the Cinderellas of this world, says a despatch from Cannes, France.

Several months ago this seventeen-year-old orphan attracted the notice of Queen Helena of Italy. The Queen, passing through Cannes, visited the shop to see a collection of medals the girl had collected. She offered to buy sixty of them, but Mlle. Legue begged her royal visitor to accept them as a gift. Touched, the Queen invited the girl to Princess Yolanda's wedding.

"You know she is not marrying a prince," she explained. "I am giving her to a man of her own choice. I want you to come to the marriage."

One of the Queen's maids of honor came to Cannes to fetch Mlle. Legue, who attracted much attention among the bevy of beauties who attended Yolanda at her wedding. But Mlle. Legue did not return. She remains with the Royal Family at the Quirinal, treated as the Queen's own daughter, and it is even rumored she will be adopted by the Queen. If she is, the little French orphan may one day marry the Prince Yolanda could have had.

William's uncle was a very tall, fine-looking man, while his father was very small. William admired his uncle, and wished to grow up like him.

One day he said to his mother: "Mamma, how did uncle grow so big and tall?"

His mother said: "Well, when uncle was a small boy he was always a very good boy, so he was able to grow up big and tall."

William thought this over seriously for a few moments, then said: "Mamma, what kind of a boy was papa?"

Hymen, in classical mythology, was the God of Marriage, the original meaning of the word being "bridal song."

HEALTH EDUCATION

BY DR. J. J. MIDDLETON
Provincial Board of Health, Ontario

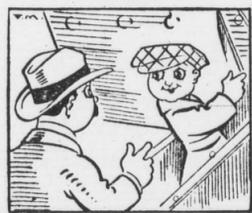

Dr. Middleton will be glad to answer questions on Public Health matters through this column. Address him at Spadina House, Spadina Crescent, Toronto.

Correcting wrong impressions is one of the most important tasks confronting those who try to do educational work along health lines. Habits and ideas once acquired, however erroneous they may be, are hard to dislodge. The old saying "What's good enough for my fathers is good enough for me" has upset many teachers. Every once in a while one meets prejudiced people—the type that know better than everybody else. No matter what the subject is—health or otherwise—they cannot be taught. Recently I met a man holding public office who held very skeptical views about the value of health education and the work of Health Departments in general. He did not know any details about the good work of the Health Department in his own city. He knew or pretended to know nothing about the disappearance of typhoid due to water filtration and chlorination, he knew nothing of milk inspection, he knew nothing of the work of the public health nurses in lowering the infant death rate and having physical defects corrected in children, he knew nothing of the Schick test or the value of antitoxin in diphtheria, he knew nothing about the work carried on in combating venereal disease, nothing about industrial hygiene that is aiming to raise health standards in industry and lower the rate of sickness and accident in plants, factories, and workshops of every description.

None of these things he knew about or appreciated, and yet he was willing to throw cold water on all health efforts. There are many such men and women. They are stumbling blocks everywhere you go. They take up the wrong side of the argument without any reason except prejudice, and why this prejudice has been developed nobody seems to know. Again, we see the type of individual who puts more confidence in a bottle of medicine than all the health talks or health articles that come his way. He doesn't want to know about the value of sleeping in well ventilated bedrooms. He doesn't want to know about the physical exercises and how they keep the body fit, nor does he care about the proper kinds of food to eat, or the value of a contented, happy outlook on life. What he does from day to day is to go along his own prejudiced path, disregarding the inevitable consequences of his wrong methods of living, trusting to medicine to put him right when the impending crash comes. How many wrecks of humanity we see around us as a result of such practices. How many untimely deaths occur through neglect of the principles that tend to prolong life! What is the moral of all this? What is the remedy? It seems to me that one important thing to do is to educate the young, to teach them the little simple facts of health, before they acquire wrong habits or impressions.

IS THERE A BABY IN YOUR HOME?

Is there a baby or young children in your home? If there is you should not be without a box of Baby's Own Tablets. Childhood ailments come quickly and means should always be at hand to promptly fight them. Baby's Own Tablets are the ideal home remedy. They regulate the bowels; sweeten the stomach; banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fevers—in fact they relieve all the minor ills of little ones. Concerning them Mrs. Moise Cadotte, Makamix, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets are the best remedy in the world for little ones. My baby suffered terribly from indigestion and vomiting, but the Tablets soon set her right and now she is in perfect health." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Population of Newfoundland.

The eighth decennial census of Newfoundland and Labrador, which has just been completed, gives the population as 262,979, which compares favorably with the census of 1911, when the total was 242,619, an increase of 20,360 or 8.39 per cent. Of this total, 259,358 represents the population of Newfoundland, and 3,621 Labrador, as against 238,670 and 3,949 respectively in 1911. A gradual increase in population since the official census of 1857 is shown by the report. In that year the population was only 124,288. In 1874 it had increased to 161,374; 1901, 220,984; and 1911, 242,619.

Newfoundland, for census purposes, is divided into eighteen districts, and all of these, with the exception of four, show increased population over the 1911 figures. The four districts to show decreases are Carbonear, Harbor Grace, Port de Grave and Harbor Maine. In the ten-year period ending 1921, the natural increase in population of the ancient colony was 31,347. In addition, immigration totalled 1,242. However, there was a loss of 12,229 due to emigration, leaving a net gain in population of 20,360.

Labrador's Population Declines.

Lack of development in Labrador has been the cause of a steady loss of population since 1884, when the total population was 4,211. Figures for each succeeding ten-year period show a slight decline, and the 1922 census returns record a falling off of 328 from the last report issued in 1911. There was no immigration to Labrador between 1911 and 1921, while there was a loss of 47 due to emigration. The natural increase in population shows a decline of 281, leaving a net loss to the territory of 328 persons.

An analysis of the report shows that while the figures regarding nationality have not yet been checked, there would appear to be 262,475 persons either born or naturalized British subjects in Labrador and Newfoundland, and only 504 persons of other nationalities.

The question "Why?" is for you to answer. After you learn how to do the trick, you may wish to know why it always "comes out right."

Write on a slip of paper "Twelve yards," fold it and hand it to a spectator to hold until the completion of the trick. Ask him to write on another piece of paper any distance he likes, expressing it in yards, feet and inches. The distance, however, must be greater than 12 yards. Ask him to reverse the numbers (as in the second line of the illustration) and subtract. Ask him to reverse the answer (as in the fourth line) and add. Next he is to subtract 1 foot, 11 inches from the sum. The result will be 12 yards. The trick ends when he looks at the slip of paper and discovers that you predicted the result of his calculations.

The answer will always be 12 yards if the spectator writes a distance in which the number of odd inches is less than the number of even yards. If the number of inches were greater it would be impossible to reverse and subtract.

(Clip this out and paste it, with others of the series, in a scrap-book.)

TO AVOID PAINS OF RHEUMATISM

This Trouble is Located in the Blood, and Relief Comes Through Better Blood.

Rheumatism comes with thin, impure blood, and can only be driven out of the system by enriching and purifying the blood.

The chief symptom of rheumatism is pain. The most successful treatment is the one that quickly banishes this disagreeable symptom. Many rheumatic people suffer pains that could be avoided by building up the blood. The value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in rheumatic troubles is proven by the testimony of Mrs. A. Bryson, Arthur, Ont., who says:—"I was used up with rheumatism in my shoulders and neck that I could not turn in bed without the help of my husband, and the pain at times was almost unbearable. I took doctors' medicine which did me little or no good. Then I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and have since been free from rheumatism. I can also recommend the pills to young mothers, as in my own case I found they are unexcelled. I may also add that I recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to a neighbor who took fainting spells at the change of life, and who could not walk any distance. She took the pills for nearly three months and they made her a strong well woman." You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Higher Tax, Lower Revenue.

An interesting example of the way in which high taxes defeat their own purpose is quoted by the Financial Post. At $6 a thousand, cigarettes were heavily taxed, but Canadians smoked nearly 2,500,000,000 a year. The tax was increased last year to $7.50 a thousand and smokers turned to pipes and to rolling their own. Cigarette consumption dropped by about half a billion a year and the government suffered a net loss in revenue of about $2,000,000. The higher tax actually provided a lower revenue. Taxes that are too high will always defeat revenue purposes.

Night Camp.

A horse to ride and a dog to love,
And a fire to warm me by,
End of the trail and high above
The sweep of the starlit sky—
And where is there more for a man's desire
Than a horse and a dog and a pine-wood fire?

The horse will bear me far and swift,
And the dog will guard my rest
When I lie me down on a dead leaf drift.
Close to the brown earth's breast.
But ah! the ache of an old desire,
And the face that glows in the pine-wood fire.

The Traveler's Slogan.

The seas beyond the Golden Gate
Like liquid sapphire run
To coral islands set in foam
And bright with sand and sun;
The cherry trees of old Japan
Are whiter than the snow
On Fujiyama's sacred crest—
Let's go.

The huddled roofs of Hongkong shine
Like jade beneath the moon,
At Singapore the temple bells
Boom out in solemn tune.
In all the Burmese women's ears
Red chips of rubies glow,
Big game still roams in Africa—
Let's go.

In Paris now the people slip
Their coffee out of doors,
All night the click of dancing feet
Is heard on polished floors,
The lilacs scent the misty air,
Romance glides to and fro
Across the bridges of the Seine—
Let's go.

In London streets the flower girls
Display their fragrant wares,
The Thames is gay with punts and skiffs
Propelled by loving pairs.
In dusky woods the nightingales
Are fluting sweet and low,
And lanes are pink with hawthorn buds—
Let's go.

White roads are winding east and west,
The boundless billow calls
To Moorish palaces in Spain
And Alpine waterfalls,
To sunrise on the Applan-Way,
The Tiber's turbid flow
And Venice with its long canals—
Let's go.

The liner's waiting at the pier,
The plane is ready, too,
And only needs a touch to soar
To spaces wide and blue.
I hear the panting limited
Its piercing whistle blow,
The travel itch is in my foot—
Let's go.

To Build Memorial of Zeebrugge Raid.

The foundation-stone of what will be a noble memorial to the famous British raid staged at Zeebrugge, Belgium, in wartime, was laid recently by the Governor of West Flanders, in the presence of a distinguished Anglo-Belgian company, including Admiral Sir Roger Keyes, Lord Burnham, Lord Emmott, the British Ambassador, Sir George Grahame, and the Belgian Minister of Public Works.

The memorial, which will stand near the shore end of the mole, will take the form of a granite column 70 feet high, surmounted by a figure of St. George slaying the dragon. It will be visible far out at sea, and will be inscribed on the side facing the sea with the words: "Saint George for England," and also, "United for Justice." Likewise on the monument will appear the names of the British who fell in the action and also the names of the participating warships.

The Governor, when performing the ceremony, described the landing of the British in the face of the German fire as one of the most brilliant deeds in naval history. Other speeches delivered at the ceremony and preceding the banquet in Bruges Town Hall stressed the close Anglo-Belgian ties. Magnificent wreaths were subsequently deposited.

HON. HOWARD FERGUSON VINDICATED.

There has never been a public man in Ontario whose official conduct has been so microscopically investigated, and who has come through the ordeal so unscathed, as the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson.

There has never been so exhaustive an inquisition into the administrative acts of an Ontario Minister as this commission conducted.

"I am not making any charge that Mr. Ferguson ever benefited to the extent of one dollar personally. I don't believe he did. I believe personally he is clean, and never administered for his own benefit."

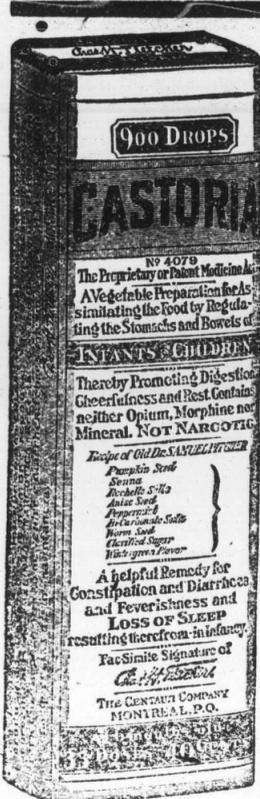

By the appointment of the commission, and the sensational way in which every bit of evidence was presented and commented upon by the commissioners, Mr. Ferguson was unjustly—and one might almost say maliciously—put under suspicion.

Could there be a more complete vindication than the statement we have quoted from the man who launched the attack upon him, and who pursued him with a vigor that was as merciless as it was persistent?

There are not many men in public life in Canada who could pass through such an experience so creditably. He was condemned by his political opponents before he was tried. The propaganda levelled against him unsettled the confidence even of some of his own political supporters.

It has been a gruelling experience, unequalled in its severity by that which any other public man in Ontario has ever had to endure. And now he stands before the electors of the Province as one who has been tried in the fire, submitted to the most crucial test that his bitterest political opponents could devise, and with a certain character of an honest upright and devoted servant of the people of Ontario, from the man who was responsible for the attack upon him.

What must be the effect on public opinion? Surely it cannot be otherwise than that this man so unjustly accused, meeting his accusers and their charges with manly courage so admirable, is a fit and proper person to be entrusted with the administration of the affairs of the Province as its Prime Minister.—Brampton Conservator.

UNVEILING MARTIN MEMORIAL

WHO was Abraham Martin? Had that question been asked one year ago probably not one Canadian in a hundred thousand would have been able to answer it. Today it is different. Most Canadians now know he was first King's pilot on the St. Lawrence river, and the first known Canadian of Scottish extraction—two claims to distinction either one of which might have made him famous. Latterly other things to his credit have come to be known, and they will be recorded in their due place.

In the meantime it is not remarkable how little Canadians know of Canada's history—as rich a bit of nation's history as ever was crowded into a space of three hundred odd years. The high points of the splendid story some of us know fairly well, but the little byways and side-lights, so full of human interest, they lie in a deep obscurity from which they are being rescued one by one, at the patient digging of this or that person or institution actuated by a love of the heroic past and a realization of its value in building the national life of the future.

Abraham Martin was some figure or a man in his day although most of his just claims to fame seem to have been thrust upon him. It was hardly more than a matter of accident that the "Plains of Abraham" should come to be named after him, and yet that was plenty to set all good Canadians wondering who he was and what manner of life he led. Much digging in the archives of Quebec, and there are none more interesting or more faithfully kept, has brought out much information about the man and his times. He was born in France, his father being a Scot, which is probably why Jesuit writings of the times refer to him as "Abraham Martin, called the Scot." His father probably came from Perthshire and was one of the Scottish Guards of Louis XI. In 1614 Abraham brought his French wife to Canada and that he saw the actual founding of New France may be gathered from the fact that his name was on the list of the 81 white persons who lived in Canada from 1629 to 1632, and he was then known as a pilot. He later had ten children from whom have come a vast number of descendants among whom are numbered some of Quebec's best families and leading citizens. Bishop Tache of St. Boniface is one of his descendants in direct line. Champlain gave Martin a deed to the farm land on the Plains of Abraham, and documents telling of his living there still exist. He apparently travelled greatly up and down the river for Cape Martin in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is also named after him.

All this was distinctive enough to justify the memorial which has been raised to Martin in the Harbor Square at Quebec. The handsome shaft of granite, designed by Henri Hebert and T. Roxburg Smith, was unveiled early in May by Hon. Athanasie David, Quebec's Provincial Treasurer and the event was marked by a gathering of notables including the Governor of Quebec, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick. Among those who spoke were F. L. Wanklyn, representing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by whom the memorial was erected, Lieut.-Col. Alex. Fraser, A.D.C. to the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, Lawrence Burpee, President of the Canadian Historical Society and Monsiegnur Laflamme, Curé of the Basilica. The latter spoke as the successor of the first Curé of Quebec who was Martin's parish priest and who was afterwards martyred by the Iroquois. He read the baptismal certificate of Abraham Martin's first child who was also the first white child born in Canada. He also read the baptismal certificate of Martin's third child upon which appeared the name of Samuel de Champlain as godfather. The memorial has been set up by the Canadian Pacific in honor, not only of Abraham Martin but of the stout-hearted pilots who for over three hundred years have done so much to make the St. Lawrence River a safe and speedy route to and from Europe. That Company uses the route more than any other, and the arrival at Quebec of the great liner "Empress of Scotland" on her first trip of the season with 731 passengers from Europe later in the day of the unveiling sizes what has been accomplished in the St. Lawrence route a great highway borne commerce.

"You couldn't have married McNab for any reason of choice." Mrs. Cameron was torn between grief, bewilderment and compassion. "Davey is breaking his heart about it, out on the hills somewhere, now. I had to tell him when he came in, for fear—What's to be done about it, Deirdre? Oh, I'm not wanting to blame you. You did it for a good reason, I'm sure, and you love Davey. It's hard on you, Deirdre. Do you love him?"

"Yes," Deirdre said slowly.

Mrs. Cameron knelt beside the chair. Her hands trembled on the girl's arm.

"Don't touch me," Deirdre gasped, moving out of the reach of her hands. "Don't touch me," she whispered again, eyeing her strangely.

"Davey—I'm afraid what he'll do if he sees you" . . . Mrs. Cameron hesitated.

Deirdre sprang out of the chair, her eyes blazing.

"Davey! Davey! It's all Davey with you!" she cried. "You sacrificed father to him? You sent him to that trial. I know now. And Davey—why couldn't he have gone to goal instead? He's young and strong and it wouldn't have mattered so much to him. He's got all his life before him. But father—hadn't he done enough for you? Hasn't he given his eyes for you? Hasn't he worshipped you all these years? I've seen it since I was a child. And is this all you could do for him, send him to the Law Courts to get Davey off, knowing that it would be worse than death to him to have to go to prison again? Oh, you knew what he'd have to suffer in Davey's place!"

Mrs. Cameron put her hands over her face.

"You knew he couldn't afford to come under the notice of the law," Deirdre said. "But I shouldn't talk like this—"

Her voice trailed wearily.

"Only—I had to choose between father and Davey. McNab knows all the old story. You do, I know, Steve told me. McNab scared the wits out of Steve one day when he was by himself and got all the proofs he wanted, though he seems to have had the facts—most of them, anyway—before. Then he told me—what being at large before the expiration of sentence meant, and what his information would do if he used it, about father, when the trial was on. He said that he wouldn't use it if I'd marry him."

Mrs. Cameron stared at her.

Deirdre went on, her voice dragging as if she could scarcely put into words the pain and trouble of her mind.

"I couldn't let father suffer any more. I couldn't bear to think what it would be for him to go back there, and loving me so . . . and you—and both of us willing to sacrifice him to Davey. I could see him going over there, hurt and alone, in the dark, the dear, great, gentle heart of him crying for those he loved to be near him, to hear the sound of their voices, to touch their hands. I couldn't endure it. Oh, I couldn't."

Her head dropped.

"He has made sacrifices all his life. His eyes for you—"

"Don't say that, Deirdre!"

"It's the truth," the girl said fiercely. "That night of the fires he saw the branch falling. It would have think it may help you, Deirdre, now that your soul is in the deep waters, I want you to know . . . that something like what has happened to you happened to me, long ago. Only I had less excuse."

Her face was torn with grief; she turned from the girl, overwhelmed by the flood-tide of dark memories.

"Oh, I can't think of it without all the agony again," she cried.

And after a moment continued: "I didn't want to bring shame on my people by having it known . . . I had been the cause of death to a man . . . but the weight was on my soul. I had heard of people escaping public trial by condemning themselves to transportation. It was the only way I could have any peace of mind. I thought—taking on myself the punishment other women had got for doing what I did. But it was never as bad for me as for them. Davey's father saw me on the wharf among the emigrant women, and he wanted to marry me. There was a Government bounty—thirty pounds, I think it was—given to married couples coming to the colony, and he wanted the money to begin with in the new country. I told him why I was going out, and he was willing to take me. There were terrible days of fear among all the rough people I found myself with . . . till he came. I was grateful to him, and swore to be a good and faithful wife to him.

"I've not spoken of this since then, Deirdre. I'm telling you because I want you not to throw your life away—not to waste it. I know I was wrong. There was this difference between what you did and what I did. I was not in a corner, fighting for my life as you were. I did not mean to take life. I did not mean to. It was an accident, really. Right was on my side, but I was angry, or the accident would never have happened. I have suffered from knowing that. All these years have made little difference. That's why I was always wanting to help convicts and prisoners in the old days—and it angered Davey's father so. I felt that they were suffering what I ought to have been suffering too. . . ."

(To be concluded.)

The Hidden Heart.

I hid my heart away,
 It was my own,
 All of its hidden stores
 Were mine alone

I feared a thief might come
 Prowling in stealth—
 To rob my treasury,
 Steal all my wealth

Came Life, the trader, by
 Wishing to trade;
 Bright gauds he offered me
 That would not fade.

So Life, the trader, said—
 Ah, they shone fair—
 I brought my treasure forth
 To buy a share!

Passed Life, the trader, by
 With all my gold—
 I was quite satisfied
 With what he sold.

Ah, they did not last,
 Those gauds so bright!
 Soon passed their beauty—soon
 Passed my delight.

Again I hide my heart,
 Empty, alas!
 Lest they should pity me,
 All they who pass!
 —Roselle Mercier Montgomery.

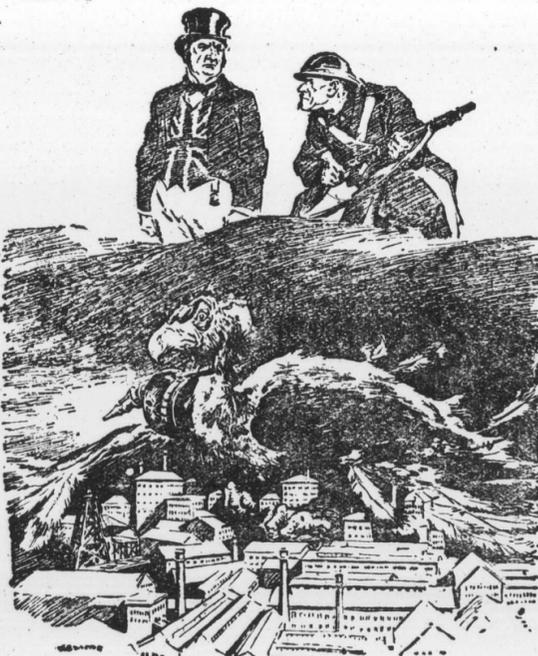

A Wrong Impression.

A young man, becoming engaged, was anxious to present his fiancée with a ring appropriately inscribed. Being at a loss what to have engraved upon it, he asked his father for advice.

"Well," said the latter, "put 'When this you see, remember me.'"

A few days later the young woman was surprised to receive a beautiful ring with this inscription: "When this you see, remember father."

A DIFFERENCE ABOUT A BIRD

"Here, Frenchy, that's no good. If you kill the goose, who'll lay our golden reparation eggs?"

"John, that bird isn't going to lay any golden eggs for us. It is only going to hatch more hawks."

About the House

EDUCATED BY A GRINDSTONE.

"I'll be fifty-seven tomorrow," smiled Mrs. Plaegar, rocking on the verandah of her white-and-green farm house, "and it seems as though it were only a few years ago when the boys were small."

She sighed again.

"Those were the years when it was hard pulling. My husband died when the children were very young. The farm was heavily mortgaged and we had to stretch the pennies until they fairly squeaked. My friends told me I ought to work in my spare time. Well, a farmer's wife hasn't much spare time and besides, who could I have done? I could not sew. My fingers had become too clumsy with farm work to handle a needle delicately and work of other kinds would demand that I leave the farm which I could not do.

"Well, things went on for a while. I continued to do the manual work to which I was accustomed. I had always liked a man's work better than a woman's and I had quite a knack for handling tools.

"One tool I liked especially was an old grindstone in the barnyard on which I sharpened my knives. One day a neighbor, viewing with envy my shining and keen steel knives said, 'I wonder if you would be willing to sharpen my knives? You do such splendid work and I would gladly pay you.'"

"I consented and that was the beginning of a little business. Other women brought me their knives and scissors and I charged according to the size of the utensils. I used to send the boys to 'gather them in' for me and sometimes they would bring home three or four dozen which they had labeled with the names of the owners. The next day they would return them, bright and sharp. And how farm women need keen tools!

"As my somewhat unique business increased, I bought a polishing machine and I soon received more orders than ever. One order which pleased me especially was from a hotel. They told me their employees were most deficient at polishing steel knives and, if I did good work, they would be willing to give all their work to me. With housewives, too, this task is a dreaded one, and my bank began to increase, accordingly. I followed up every opportunity and, of course, business brought more business.

"My business never forced me to neglect my farm duties. I always did the work on my own premises where I could oversee the work of the farm hands.

A "SERVANTLESS" HOME.

Ours is a "servantless house" and labor-saving devices have made this possible. First, the kitchen was rearranged, an unsightly pantry was converted into an attractive breakfast room, cupboards and cabinet built in kitchen, with a place for everything, including the fireless cooker.

A small sink was replaced with a large one, placed at the right height. A slop sink was removed and a long drain-board added, under which is a cupboard for kettles, pans, lids and pressure cooker. Also a drawer for linen, closet for garbage pail, shelf under sink for cleaners, soap and dishpan.

Above the sink is a shelf convenient for placing jars during canning or plates for a party. Below are hooks for dippers, small pans, soap shaker, fly swatter, scraper, bottle, vegetable and glass brushes, also homemade rack for knives, forks, spoons and spatula.

A rack of wooden spoons is placed at end of drain board with towel arms below.

On the shelf above the stove I keep salt, pepper, matches and a box in which to put burnt matches, and scraps of paper to be burned in the furnace later.

I keep steel wool for cleaning aluminum and glass baking dishes. I wash dishes in hot soap suds, place in a wire drainer and scald both sides. They dry perfectly without wiping.

A homemade tea wagon conveys the food to the dining room and the dishes to the kitchen.

Telephone on the farthest wall of the dining room was removed to a desk near the kitchen door, thus eliminating several steps when the 'phone is used and enabling me to sit while talking.

A vacuum cleaner is one of my greatest labor-savers. Then came dust mops, wall brush, chemically treated duster for baseboards and dustless duster cloths made of old stockings and a little furniture polish.

A long-handled dust pan saves stooping. With stationary tubs, running water, a power washer and wringer, a large washing is done in a few hours. The wide ironing board was made to order; a small clothes sprinker in a bottle soon prepares the clothes for the electric iron.

An extension telephone upstairs costs but little extra a month and saves many steps. A closet upstairs contains dustless mops, dust cloths, soap and cleaning fluids.

Other labor-savers that cost only a few cents are egg poacher, dish mop, long-handled fork, can opener, grater, mixing bowls, funnels, tea ball, potato ricer, egg beater and measuring cups.

A pressure cooker saves time, labor and fuel in cooking combination meals and canning vegetables, fruit and meat.

A homemade fireless cooker cooks the meal while I work or motor.

It is apparatus of this sort combined with common sense in house planning that makes the "servantless house" possible and the mistress of the home is not wearing herself out or useless annoyances that arise in housekeeping problems.—Mrs. G. E. S.

TO PATCH OVERALLS.

Since the price of denim and overalls continues high, it behooves the thrifty housemother to make each pair of these work garments serve its full time. Usually the front of the legs, especially the knees, receive the hardest wear, this part often reaching a "holey" stage while the remainder of the garment is still stout and capable of considerable wear. Instead of unsightly and laboriously applied hand patches, a neater and more durable piece of work can be done on the sewing machine.

First rip the inside leg seam from hem to hem, in order to get the garment under the foot of the machine. As this is a continuous seam, the ripping, as a rule, can easily be accomplished by cutting through the hem at the bottom of the leg and pulling on each side of the seam, as the stitches have been weakened by wear and washing. If the stitches hold, rip the seam with the discarded blade of a safety razor.

From the unworn portions from the back of the legs of a discarded pair of overalls—or from new denim, if no partly-worn material is at hand—cut patches almost the width of the leg and long enough to extend from the crotch to well below the knee, taking in all the worn portion. Pin the patches in place—the experienced seamstress will find basting unnecessary—turn under the edges at top, bottom and outside of leg, and stitch in place with number 40 thread. The fourth side of the patch is taken up in the inside leg seam.

Starting at the bottom of the leg, stitch up the leg seam from hem to hem in an ordinary raw seam, keeping to the outer row of former stitching to give a neat appearance to the finished work. This seam can not be felled on the ordinary household machine, nor is this necessary, as the width of the old seam is sufficient to prevent pulling out if coarse thread is used.

Health Before Beauty.

Two Irishmen who had not met for years ran across each other.

"Long time since we met, Clancy, isn't it? Great things have happened since then," said the first.

"Yes, indeed. Look at myself. Share it's married I am," replied Clancy.

"You don't tell me? Have you any family?" asked O'Grady.

"Faith and I have that. I've a fine healthy boy, and the neighbors say he's the picture of me."

O'Grady looked at Clancy, who wasn't built on the line of a prize beauty.

"Ah, well, what's the harm so long as the child's healthy?"

Our Most Powerful Light.

The discovery of X-rays was a lucky accident. Professor Rontgen, who died recently, was certainly not searching for them when in 1895 his eyes for the first time beheld a light more powerful than any ever known before.

He was experimenting in a darkened room with a Crookes tube, stimulated internally from an induction coil and covered by a shield of black cardboard when he became conscious of a faint, greenish, flickering light on a paper which he had painted with a fluorescent chemical preparation.

The value of this ray to medicine has been incalculable. Prior to its discovery the position of an internal injury had to be guessed, and a patient might even have had to be cut open so that the surgeon might see exactly where the mischief lay.

Now the Rontgen ray can disclose the exact position of the broken bone or foreign matter.

The rays have caused the death of many experimenters since their discovery by Rontgen, but, fortunately, those days are past, and the X-ray is doing ever-increasing work in the service of man.

A CANADIAN TOUR IN FRANCE.

The route indicated on the map is that to be taken by the Made-in-Canada exhibition, which is to travel in a convoy of forty huge motor lorries. The lorries, which are to be provided by the French Government, are used in preference to a train because they can be located in the heart of each town or city, instead of being kept on a railway track around a station, usually not a desirable part of the city in which to see an exhibition.

TRADE OF CANADA MAKES BIG ADVANCE

Exports Show Largest Gains in Year's Record of Increase.

A despatch from Ottawa says:—During the fiscal year ended March 31, Canada's total trade increased nearly a quarter of a billion dollars. Total trade during the year was $1,748,530,880, an increase over the previous year of $246,840,887. Export trade developed to the greater extent.

For the 12 months exports of Canadian merchandise were $932,229,443, or $191,988,763 over the previous year; imports were $822,457,043, an increase of $54,694,059. Foreign merchandise was exported to the value of $13,844,394.

Among Canada's domestic exports, agricultural products, with a value of $383,425,251, ranked first. Next came wood, wood products and paper, valued at $228,756,205.

Canadian exports during March increased to $78,566,675 from $58,646,312 in February. Exports in March of 1922 totalled $60,847,484. Dutiable imports into Canada during March were $30,250,433, a total of $91,870,427, compared with $65,307,696 in February, and $72,378,726 in March last year.

DE VALERA ISSUES TERMS FOR PEACE

Republican Leader Has Ordered Suspension of Hostilities in the Meantime.

A despatch from Dublin says:—A suspension of hostilities by the Irish Republicans against the forces of the Free State Government, and an offer to negotiate peace with the Free State on certain conditions were proclaimed on Friday night by Eamon de Valera, the Republican leader, and his Chief of Staff, E. F. Aitken.

De Valera's proclamation sets forth the general political principles of the Republicans and asserts that the ultimate Court of Appeals for deciding disputed questions is a majority vote of the people of Ireland, that resistance by violence should be excluded, but that adequate facilities should be afforded the people for the proper presentation of the issues involved.

The proclamation adds that nobody holding Republican principles should be excluded from Parliament and the council of nations. It says the military forces are servants of the nation and amenable to a freely elected national assembly.

De Valera expressed the belief that this declaration affords a basis for peace, and adds:

"We hope this advance will be met in the spirit in which we make it, and that it will be supported by all who love our country and desire a speedy and just ending to the present national troubles.

"As evidence of our own good will the army command is issuing hereby with an order to suspend aggressive action, to take effect as soon as may be, but not later than noon of Monday."

The effect of this proclamation is still doubtful. De Valera all along has declared his willingness to abide by a decision based on the free will of the people; but he is said still to maintain his original position that the British Government must not interfere in Ireland if the people decide in favor of a Republic.

Chief of Staff Aitken in his order for a cessation of offensive operations tells the Republican troops to remain on the defensive and protect themselves and their munitions. This is taken as implying that there is to be no yielding on the part of the Republicans to the Free State Government's demand for the surrender of all arms.

The opening of a new colonization land office in the Abitibi region has been announced by the Quebec Government. This office will be located at Senneterre, which is in the eastern section of the Abitibi, and the object is to allow settlers to establish themselves on the rich soil near the Bell River.

RUSSIA NO LONGER IN NEED OF HELP, SAYS U.S. RELIEF SOCIETY

American Relief Administration Spent About $70,000,000 in Russia but Expects to Withdraw Soon as Famine is Over and Crop Prospects Are Good.

A despatch from Moscow says:—Following a conference between Colonel William Haskell, head of the American Relief Administration in Russia, and his district superintendants, word is expected from Herbert Hoover, head of the organization, for withdrawal from the country.

Col. Haskell explained to newspapermen that after spending some $70,000,000 in Russia, the Administration finds the famine is over and there is no reason for it to remain. Furthermore, it is estimated Soviet confiscation of the church treasures has netted about $5,000,000, and the purpose for seizing these was announced to be famine relief. About $2,000,000 of the sum is still either unspent or not yet converted into cash.

Col. Haskell declares Russian crop prospects are excellent, and the Soviets are selling wheat abroad. In fact, in Orenburg, in the Volga region, once hard hit by famine, the Government is selling rye to the Quakers, who, in turn, hand it out to the Russian people, according to a report made to Col. Haskell.

Natural Resources Bulletin

The Natural Resources Intelligence Service of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, says:—

The study of the natural resources of Ontario is a fascinating one. From one season to another the situation changes. New natural resources are being discovered, new mines are opening up unforeseen wealth, and new conditions of development are making use of previously valueless resources. The story of the province's precious metals, gold and silver, reads almost like a fairy tale. In 1901 Ontario's gold production was but 11,844 ounces, of a value of $244,837. In 1922 the output was 1,000,199 ounces, valued at $20,674,109. In 1901 Ontario's silver output was 151,400 ounces, valued at $89,250, whereas, in 1922 this output had increased to 9,167,846 ounces, valued at $6,491,971.

The total value of gold production in Ontario to the end of 1922 was $108,300,000, and of silver $220,800,000. This has been produced almost exclusively from a portion of Northern Ontario heretofore regarded as valuable only for its timber. There are many thousands of square miles of similar country not yet explored.

One hundred pulp and paper mills are now in operation in Canada, of which number 40 are pulp mills, 33 paper mills, and 27 pulp and paper mills. Seventeen are newsprint plants. The present progress of the industry indicates an output of 1,500,000 tons of newsprint in 1924. This will mean the utilization of over 2,250,000 cords of pulpwood for a single year's newsprint paper output in the Dominion.

According to a despatch from Paris the Senate unanimously adopted a bill for the appropriation of 4,000,000 francs for a Canadian travelling exposition in France. The exhibition which is to be held this year is for the purpose of advertising Canada's manufactures and natural resources by means of motor cars, which will tour the principal districts of France.

Extensions, improvements, buildings, etc., involving an expenditure of $13,000,000 will be undertaken by the Bell Telephone Co. of Canada, according to C. S. Wise, vice-president and general manager of the company. The greater portion of this outlay, amounting to about $8,000,000, will be expended in Toronto and Montreal for new exchange buildings and apparatus.

A new cement company, to be known as the National Cement Co., has been incorporated with Federal charter and headquarters in Montreal. The plant of the new company will have a capacity of 3,000 barrels a day, and will be built of reinforced concrete at an approximate cost of $1,800,000. The estimated output of the plant will be about 900,000 barrels a year. Construction of the mill will be commenced about May 1 of this year and will probably take about nine months to complete.

Encouraging Immigration. W. J. Black, Deputy Minister of Immigration, who has arranged for the settlement of 13,000 British men, women and children in the Dominion, under the Empire Settlement Act.

FLOOD SUBSIDING ALONG ASSINIBOINE

Removal of Ice Jam by Government Corps Brings Relief to Manitoba.

A despatch from Winnipeg says:—Flood conditions in central and southern Manitoba, which caused great havoc during the past week, inundating thousands of acres of farm lands, disrupting transportation, forced families from their homes, isolated others from towns and turned low lands in many sections of the province into huge lakes, are now on the wane and the situation generally is much improved. Along the Assiniboine River, where extensive damage has resulted, the floods at Brandon, Portage La Prairie and territory to the east, the removal of ice jams by Government engineering corps has relieved the situation considerably and with the river comparatively free of ice, the water is receding. Many thousands of acres of land in the Poplar Point District, about forty miles west of this city, are still under water, but with the river now free of ice, the water is expected to flow back from the flooded areas rapidly.

Airplanes Pick Up Mails at Plymouth

A despatch from Plymouth, England, says:—The Plymouth Chamber of Commerce on Friday inaugurated a time-saving experiment in picking up the urgent mails dropped from incoming liners in Plymouth Sound. Dummy mail dropped overhead at six o'clock Friday morning was taken ashore in a fast motor launch and transferred to airplanes, which left for Cologne and Paris, arriving in those places at approximately three and four o'clock Friday afternoon.

The use of this scheme, it is contended, would enable the delivery of letters to business houses in time for the replies to catch the return air mails the following morning and reach Southampton for the mail boat that evening. The Air Ministry is said to be watching the experiment with great interest.

Bonar Law Takes Month's Sea Voyage

A despatch from London says:—It is announced that Premier Bonar Law, with the permission of the King, is leaving immediately for a month's sea voyage.

BRITISH GIRL SUFFERS DAYS OF TERROR

Youthful Daughter of Commander at Kohat Kidnapped by Afridi Tribesmen.

A despatch from Simla, British India, says:—The story of the sufferings of Molly Ellis, youthful daughter of the British commander of Kohat, while in the hands of Afridi Tribesmen, after she had seen them kill her mother in the early morning of April 14, is told in dispatches from Peshawar, where she is resting under the care of her father and Mrs. Starr, the woman physician who played a large part in her rescue.

After their murderous raid the kidnapers fled to the hills above Kohat, half driving, half carrying their captive up the steep, rocky paths. Throughout the following day she could see the searchers passing in automobiles below her. Her only protection from the severe cold of the hills was a coat belonging to a British Afridi named Shahazada, the man who killed her mother.

The next four days were a nightmare of alternate traveling and hiding, with the girl in an ever growing state of exhaustion from her physical efforts and apparently hopeless outlook. Her feet were lacerated from tramping over the stony tracks, and once, in the course of the terrible journey, she fell, fainting, at the top of a snow-covered mountain pass, upon which Shahazada lost patience and drew his dagger to kill her, being restrained only by his companions.

After six days of traveling they reached her captors' home in the Tirah country. Meanwhile, a search by friendly tribesmen was in progress under the direction of Kuli Khan, a native official, who on the twentieth reached Kanki Bazaar, the home of a famous and influential Mullah, or Mohammedan religious leader, named Mahmud Akhundzada, where, after much pressure, he ascertained that the captive was held in a mountain fortress eight miles away. Kuli Khan managed to have conveyed to the girl a parcel of comforts and a letter of encouragement, and in return learned that she was being reasonably treated by the women of the tribesmen.

Mrs. Starr at this time was near Kanki Bazaar, under a native escort, having arrived after adventures which seemed to threaten her mission with failure, and the Mullah, apparently fearing trouble, sent a letter to her party ordering them to turn back. This letter was ignored, and the party reached Kanki.

Shortly afterward Kuli Khan induced the Mullah to bring about the transfer of the captive girl to the Mullah's house, where she was eventually taken, being carried over the shoulder of one of the tribesmen. The meeting between the girl and Mrs. Starr was a joyful one, but the danger was not ended, for while they talked the abductors stood around menacingly, insisting that Molly was still their captive.

Presently the captors learned that a party of Afridi friendly to the British had arrived at their village and were attacking it, whereupon Shahazada seized Mrs. Starr and hustled her from the room, threatening both her and Miss Ellis. The Mullah became enraged at this insult to the sacred rights of hospitality under his roof and publicly cursed Shahazada and his fellows.

In this dramatic fashion the balance tilted to the side of the rescuers and the surrender of the captive was speedily arranged. The tribesmen's demands for a ransom and pardon were abandoned, and on Tuesday of this week Kuli Khan and the other rescuers started with the girl on the journey to Peshawar, where there was a joyful reunion between Molly and her father.

Mountain peaks 1,630 feet high have been discovered under the sea 100 miles off the Californian coast.

Death of Mrs. Samuel Pritchard, Aged 45, is Much Regretted.

Newboro, May 28.—A serious accident was narrowly averted on Saturday evening on Drummond street, when Jean Knapp, the four-year-old daughter of Elmer Knapp, was knocked down by an automobile driven by Wesley Botting, of Forfar. The car was running very slowly at the time and this perhaps prevented a fatality. As it was, the child was badly scratched and rendered senseless for a short time. A number of cars were lined up in front of the band stand before the opening of the band concert, and in playing around the cars with other children she ran out on the street just as the car came up and Mr. Botting had no chance to see the child until right upon her. The little girl was knocked under the car and was lucky in not having the wheel pass over her. She was picked up and taken to the office of Dr. King, who soon brought her around and after having her injuries dressed, she was taken home.

Beautiful Home Surroundings

By Franz A. Aust

Beautiful farm home-surroundings will do wonders toward keeping grouchy Old Man Drudge from invading the cheerful home spirit of the whole family.

In city and in town, man's business carries him away from home all day. Early in the morning or at night, when he returns he often feels like putting around "fixing things up." It rests him. On the farm, however, it is different. Man's daily work and any effort to make the home surroundings attractive are so near one and the same thing that he often finds no joy in starting home work, especially alone. Very often the wife plants a few flowers and thus attempts to bring a bit of beauty into the surroundings. But a single flower-bed will not make a charming dooryard.

Time is very precious for farm work during the spring months, and a working plan made beforehand is a great advantage. Then you can see just what ought to be done to bring about greatest improvement with least effort and with almost no expense.

The boy or girl who goes to school will like to help, and some evening, with the assistance of a sheet of paper, a pencil, and a ruler, a plan of the home grounds can be made on the dining-room table after the dishes are cleared away.

Draw a Plan.

Draw the plan to a definite scale. Say, eight or ten feet of ground to equal one inch on the paper. Then the location of buildings, also drawn to scale, and the walks and drives, the trees, the garden, the laundry yard, can be shown and studied carefully.

What does the place need? With the plan on the table, take inventory. The house, of course, is the most important spot in the plan. Walks and drives leading to it, therefore, should be as inconspicuous as possible. Since the farmer will not cut across his best fields with lanes, neither should a drive cut in two an unbroken sweep of grassy lawn.

Notice next how the individual trees are placed about the house. They have three duties to perform. They should protect the place from sun and wind; they should frame the views to and from the house; they should screen any objects which are unsightly. If the family decides that one or more extra trees would be beneficial, a check mark can be placed on the exact spot on the plan, and the variety of tree to be planted can be determined.

Where a house is small, it is better not to choose trees which will grow large and tall if they are to be used for framing views. Tall trees only make a house look dwarfish. Wild crab or thorn-apple trees are better, or plum, or mountain-ash. Groups of several of these together will also screen that unsightly old shed, or milk-house, or clothes reel. Best of all, many times these trees can be found right on the farm and when father and the boys are out about their work, they can locate desirable ones and mark them, and the trees can quickly be brought to the house when the time comes to plant them.

Select Suitable Trees.

If large trees are to be selected, however, fast-growing varieties of soft wood, like the box-elder, soft maple, or poplar, are not good unless they can be alternated with long-lived trees, such as elm or oak or hard maple. Then, when the hard-wood trees are well started the others can be cut out. As a general rule, it is wiser, too, and more artistic, to avoid planting trees or shrubs in long straight rows.

Speaking of shrubs—there is nothing which will give the home dooryard a more settled, finished appearance than shrubs rightly placed. Even though there are some already growing, it is well to decide whether they are most suitably placed, and whether others can be added from time to time.

Lilacs, weigella or honeysuckle, with their flowers, will help to make the whole place a garden in early summer, and with their leaves they can not help brightening it the whole season through. Not all over the lawn, but along fences and borders, along walks and drives, these larger shrubs are good. Sumac is another hardy bush which can be dug and transplanted. Although not so beautiful for its flowers as some other shrubs, what a gorgeous splash of color it brings in the fall.

Little groups of smaller shrubs should not be forgotten at the corners and angles of the house. No matter how beautiful are the trees about a place, the house still looks bare if part of the foundation wall is not hidden.

Transplanting Trees and Shrubs.

In transplanting trees or shrubs, either from the woods or from nursery stock, great care must be taken to prevent the roots from drying out before they are set. Wrapping the roots in a moist gunny sack or putting them in a barrel or tub with water enough to cover them are good ways to prevent this.

Pruning of the roots should be attended to at once. This will insure smooth wounds which will heal readily. Any roots which have been badly injured in digging or in shipment should be removed. A long root should be cut back to correspond to the other roots. Only for these two purposes should roots be pruned.

Unless trees are too tall for convenience, top pruning can be left until after planting. Then the specimen can be sized up and the undesirable branches removed. For shrubs there are two methods—thinning out the growth and cutting back. Sometimes a combination of the two may be used. Some cutting back is desirable with most of them. Large plants are usually reduced from a third to a half; smaller ones from a fourth to a third. Shrubs which have many stems arising from the base should be thinned out; leave only the stronger ones. If these are long they should be cut back from a third to a half of their length.

Do Not Crowd the Roots.

The hole for planting should be large enough so that the roots will not be crowded. If the soil is heavy and compact, the hole should be larger than if the soil is light. The chief essential in any kind of planting is to have every part of the root system in close contact with the soil, and therefore fine soil must be used, and care must be taken in compacting it about the roots, leaving the top soil loose and fine and mounded high enough to allow for settling.

Many planters when working with dry soil, and especially when working with evergreens, practise "puddling" to save moisture. Puddling is dipping the roots into thin mud, so that all of them are covered with a layer of soil. Other than this, water in setting either trees or other plants usually does more harm than good. At any rate, it should not be applied to the surface of the soil after planting is finished. If it is to be used at all in an exceptionally dry soil, it should be poured into the hole before the plant is placed there, or after the plant is set and the hole is partly filled. Then the upper layer of soil will not become hard and moisture will not be lost. In a northern climate, in early spring, there is little need of additional water in planting.

Fresh manure should not come in contact with roots of newly-set trees or plants. If the soil needs to be fertilized, well rotted manure should be worked into it before planting. Even the rotted manure should not be put in the bottom of the hole, for it cuts off the water of the lower layer of soil, and the plant may suffer. Unless soil is very poor, it is better to wait a year or two before using fertilizer upon that which surrounds tree or shrub.

Two or three months after planting come the hot days of summer. To prevent the soil from drying out during this period, use a mulch. There is no protection better than cultivation where this is practical, as in a shelter-belt or about fruit trees; but where this is impossible a mulch of lawn clippings, or marsh hay, or manure or anything to make a loose cover, is invaluable.

Ferns from the woods set out on the north side of the house will add to the foundation planting. These should be set as soon as possible after they are dug, but after that they need little care. Wild grape or five-leaf ivy or wild cucumber or morning-glory, most of which can be grown from a handful of seed will climb luxuriantly around the doorways, the porches, the fences, the clothes posts, or that homely windmill.

Last of all, there are mother's flowers which must not be neglected. Instead of a flower-bed on the lawn, which she herself usually has to spade and toil over, try this plan: Just outside the kitchen window, where the flowers can be seen from work-table and sink, plant some iris, or peonies, or phlox, or other flowers which need not be planted every year. It is so easy to water them, too, right there where they can't be forgotten. Asters, dahlias, verbenas, marigolds, cosmos, can be sown like vegetables, and the man and his horses can cultivate them on the way to the field, with scarcely any loss of time. Let some of the modern labor-saving devices extend to what mother wants out-of-doors.

Where perennial flowers are to be planted, the same principles as for trees and shrubs hold true. Shade them for the first few days if they are placed in the sun. This may be done by scattering over them thin layers of leaves or coarse grass, or by covering them with fine brush. Shallow hoeing will act as a good mulch during the dry summer days.

After the plan is finished on paper, the ideas can be gradually carried to the out-of-doors whenever opportunity comes. A few shrubs or a tree or some perennial flower can be added each year until the whole arrangement is complete. When too much is undertaken at a time the effort becomes irksome, and interest lags, but when the work is done by all members of the family, from father and mother down, the farm home surroundings will be more truly pleasing than the work of any landscape gardener.

covered pouring in and out of a large opening at the top. It was then marked, so we could find it again, and we returned home where the beekeeper prepared a hive to receive the new colony. I did not return with him the following day, but as the method of procedure in hiving is much the same in all cases, a description of the work, as I have since observed it, will serve.

A dark, cloudy and damp day is ideal for hiving a wild colony as the bees are then all at home and not active or aggressive enough to give much trouble. Bee-veils, gloves and thick clothing should be worn by all present, and the work should be conducted with the least possible fuss or disturbance.

It is usually necessary to cut down the bee-tree in order to get the bees and honey without waste, and this should be carefully done to see that falls where it will do the least damage and also avoid danger of lodging in surrounding trees.

As soon as the tree is felled, hew away one side of the hollow portion and transfer the queen, together with the comb containing young bees, to the hive which should be near at hand. Most of the surplus honey may now be gathered in pails or other containers.

By evening of the second day the salvage of honey will usually be sufficiently completed for the removal of the hive to the apiary. It is best to close the entrance of the hive after sun-down when all the bees are likely to be within, and the moving should be done as carefully as possible. If the season is well advanced, be sure there is enough honey in the hive to feed the bees over winter.

It's faith in something and enthusiasm for something that makes life worth living.

Forgive, Forget.

When angry words in haste are said, Why do we choose a friend to maim? Why not select a fiend instead, The target for our deadly aim?

When we speak out the cutting jest, And try thereby to wound some one, Why thrust at them we love the best, For some misdeed they may have done?

When to us come suspicion deep, Why place the blame on some dear friend, The love of whom we fain would keep Throughout all time till life shall end?

I fear we trifle most with them To whom we owe the greatest debt, Forgetting love, the priceless gem, Is only claimed in friends we've met.

Our stay on earth is short at most, Can we afford to selfish be, Or shall we play the kindly host, To those who dwell with you and me?

If others would our joy assail, We still may hope that deep regret To them will come, if on the trail We post the words, "forgive, forget."

I'm sure our brightest, sweetest day, Will really be when we have met Them face to face, and frankly say "We can forgive and will forget."

—Verne H. Church.

The Pure Water Problem.

Water from a driven well is more likely to be pure than that from a dug well because there is less danger of pollution from the open top, and seepage into the pipe in the first twenty-five feet is not likely to occur. But when a driven well is pumped beyond its capacity there is danger that pollution will be drawn in.

There are instances on record of driven wells which become polluted and spread typhoid when power pumps were used to pump the water from them.

As a rule deep wells furnish safe water if the top and upper stretches of the well are waterproof and properly protected.

Artesian Wells.

Artesian wells furnish safe water supplies almost without exception. Flowing wells are doubly safe because the water in its underground bed is safe and the pressure of the water in the pipe prevents inflow of pollution.

Hard waters are not as harmful as some people think. They waste soap and are severe on some fabrics, but there is little proof that they are harmful to health.

Stored Waters.

Stored waters tend to purify themselves. Any disease producing bacteria die off in a short time.

On the other hand, stored waters are sometimes made offensive by birds, rats, mice, insects and the various kinds of water weeds, particularly what are known as algae.

There is no fundamental objection to storing in underground cisterns. Such cisterns should have walls that are not porous and should be covered to prevent small animals from falling into them.

There is no health objection to a cistern in the attic if it is properly protected. A glassed window in the top of a cistern, permitting sunlight to reach the water, increases its safety for drinking purposes.

An Ancient Hospital.

Few institutions can rival in antiquity St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, which this year celebrates its eight hundredth anniversary.

The hospital was founded in 1123, in the reign of Henry I., and it holds the record of being the oldest in England. Among its first patients were English lords and Norman squires, who went to get relief for their arrow wounds.

The story of Bart's is the story of progress in surgery and medicine. When it began patients were dosed with powdered snails and concoctions of adders, bats, and earthworms.

Many thrilling episodes have marked Bart's existence. The Black Death and the Great Plague crowded its limited accommodation, and both added materially to the medical knowledge which, as the years advanced, was being gathered within its walls.

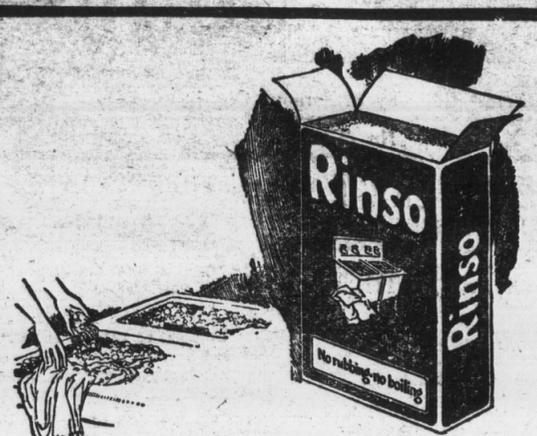

Hogarth, the great painter, served Bart's as a governor, and his painting of the Pool of Bethesda hangs on the great staircase. Of this picture, doctors say it is possible for any medical man to diagnose the different ailments of the patients, so faithfully did Hogarth depict them.

In the course of its eight hundred years the hospital has been rebuilt three times.

The De Salaberry Monument.

The de Salaberry monument erected at Allan's Corner, Chateauguay county, Quebec, by the Department of Militia and Defence in 1895 to commemorate the famous stand of the troops under Lieut.-Colonel de Salaberry against the American invaders on October 26, 1813, in the action known in history as the battle of Chateauguay, has been transferred to the Canadian National Parks Branch of the Department of the Interior for care and maintenance as one of the chief historic sites of Canada. The monument is a substantial obelisk with a base of 4 feet by 5 feet and height of 39½ feet and the site covers an area of a quarter of an acre. The monument is in a good state of preservation but certain repairs were necessary to fences and posts and these have been executed by the Branch. An inscription on the monument states that "the army invading Lower Canada and marching on Montreal was repulsed and routed by the militia of the province," on October 26, 1813.

The monument commemorates one of the most romantic military events in the history of Canada, which has been described as "a kind of modern Thermopylae blocking the open road to Montreal, and possible saving the state."

A French Cinderella.

With her departure from her home back of a druggist's shop to enter into the life of the Italian court, Claire Legue, a beautiful young French girl, takes rank with the Cinderellas of this world, says a despatch from Cannes, France.

Several months ago this seventeen-year-old orphan attracted the notice of Queen Helena of Italy. The Queen, passing through Cannes, visited the shop to see a collection of medals the girl had collected. She offered to buy sixty of them, but Mile. Legue begged her royal visitor to accept them as a gift to Princess Yolanda's wedding.

"You know she is not marrying a prince," she explained. "I am giving her to a man of her own choice. I want you to come to the marriage."

One of the Queen's maids of honor came to Cannes to fetch Mile. Legue, who attracted much attention among the bevy of beauties who attended Yolanda at her wedding. But Mile. Legue did not return. She remains with the Royal Family at the Quirinal, treated as the Queen's own daughter, and it is even rumored she will be adopted by the Queen. If she is, the little French orphan may one day marry the Prince Yolanda could have had.

One day he said to his mother: "Mamma, how did uncle grow so big and tall?"

His mother said: "Well, when uncle was a small boy he was always a very good boy, so he was able to grow up big and tall."

William thought this over seriously for a few moments, then said: "Mamma, what kind of a boy was papa?"

HUNTING WILD BEES.

My first experience on a wild bee hunt was gained in the company of an elderly beekeeper who indulged in such chases quite frequently, chiefly for the recreation afforded.

The only equipment carried was a cigar-box with a gatelike partition in the centre and a sliding-glass substituted for the wooden cover. The partition in the centre of the box worked on pivots or brads, in such a manner that it could be raised or lowered from the outside by a turn of a sort of thumb-nut. One section of the box contained a piece of uncaped comb-honey but the other part was empty.

Armed with this innocent looking outfit, my friend let the way to a small clearing in the midst of a timber of old-growth oak and after a brief search, captured an active honey-bee which he singled out from a dozen or so others among the flowers of a wild-rose bush. This selection, I understand, was made because his practiced eye had eliminated the less active bees on suspicion that they belonged to some neighboring apiary. As a general rule, wild bees are of a more nervous disposition and this is readily apparent to the experienced beekeeper.

I was surprised to note that he enclosed the bee within the empty compartment, but I said nothing, preferring to gain my knowledge by careful observation.

Confined to this tiny prison the bee flew about quite frantically for a few seconds until the box was covered with a handkerchief. Several minutes passed before it became quiet and it was then permitted to enter the compartment containing the honey. Immediately the little worker became busy filling its honey sac and my friend smiled his satisfaction.

Three or four minutes elapsed before the bee had gained its fill. It was then released and crawled slowly from the box, where it apparently took note of the location of the treasure before rising on leisurely wings to fly directly upward in a spiral course, almost out of sight. As it darted away to the southward, my friend left the box on a stump nearby and retreated to a shady spot to await further developments.

Ten minutes later, perhaps a dozen bees had returned with the first visitor as a pilot, and these were quickly imprisoned and transferred to the empty compartment. With the box then darkened we directed our footsteps southward, to a point about a mile from our first location. The bees were here allowed their feast of the honey and again released from the box which was placed upon a fallen log. Each and every one arose as the first had done, but this time the course was somewhat to the southeast and, after awaiting their return, we moved accordingly.

The first experiment was repeated several times before the bee-tree was finally located and the bees were dis-

HEALTH EDUCATION

BY DR. J. J. MIDDLETON
Provincial Board of Health, Ontario

Dr. Middleton will be glad to answer questions on Public Health matters through this column. Address him at Spadina House, Spadina Crescent, Toronto.

Correcting wrong impressions is one of the most important tasks confronting those who try to do educational work along health lines. Habits and ideas once acquired, however erroneous they may be, are hard to dislodge. The old saying "What's good enough for my forefathers is good enough for me" has upset many teachers. Every one in a while one meets prejudiced people—the type that know better than everybody else. No matter what the subject is—health or otherwise—they cannot be taught. Recently I met a man holding public office who held very skeptical views about the value of health education and the work of Health Departments in general. He did not know any details about the good work of the Health Department in his own city. He knew or pretended to know nothing about the disappearance of typhoid due to water filtration and chlorination, he knew nothing of the work of the public health nurses in lowering the infant death rate and having physical defects corrected in children, he knew nothing of the Schick test or the value of anti-toxin in diphtheria, he knew nothing about the work carried on in combating venereal disease, nothing about industrial hygiene that is aiming to raise health standards in industry and lower the rate of sickness and accident in plants, factories, and workshops of every description.

None of these things he knew about or appreciated, and yet he was willing to throw cold water on all health efforts. There are many such men and women. They are stumbling blocks everywhere you go. They take up the wrong side of the argument without any reason except prejudice, and why this prejudice has been developed nobody seems to know.

Again, we see the type of individual who puts more confidence in a bottle of medicine than all the health talks or health articles that come his way. He doesn't want to know about the value of sleeping in well ventilated bedrooms. He doesn't want to know about the physical exercises and how they keep the body fit, nor does he care about the proper kinds of food to eat, or the value of a contented, happy outlook on life. What he does from day to day is to go along his own prejudiced paths, disregarding the inevitable consequences of his wrong methods of living, trusting to medicine to put him right when the impending crash comes. How many wrecks of humanity we see around us as a result of such practices. How many untimely deaths occur through neglect of the principles that tend to prolong life!

What is the moral of all this? What is the remedy? It seems to me that one important thing to do is to educate the young, to teach them the little simple facts of health, before they acquire wrong habits or impressions.

IS THERE A BABY IN YOUR HOME?

Is there a baby or young children in your home? If there is you should not be without a box of Baby's Own Tablets. Childhood ailments come quickly and means should always be at hand to promptly fight them. Baby's Own Tablets are the ideal home remedy. They regulate the bowels; sweeten the stomach; banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fevers—in fact they relieve all the minor ills of little ones. Concerning them Mrs. Moise Cadotte, Makamik, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets are the best remedy in the world for little ones. My baby suffered terribly from indigestion and vomiting, but the Tablets soon set her right and now she is in perfect health." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Population of Newfoundland.

The eighth decennial census of Newfoundland and Labrador, which has just been completed, gives the population as 262,979, which compares favorably with the census of 1911, when the total was 242,619, an increase of 20,360, or 8.39 per cent. Of this total, 259,358 represents the population of Newfoundland, and 3,621 Labrador, as against 238,670 and 3,949 respectively in 1911. A gradual increase in population since the official census of 1857 is shown by the report. In that year the population was only 124,288. In 1874 it had increased to 161,374; 1901, 220,984; and 1911, 242,619.

Newfoundland, for census purposes, is divided into eighteen districts, and all of these, with the exception of four, show increased population over the 1911 figures. The four districts to show decreases are Carbonear, Harbor Grace, Port de Grave and Harbor Maine. In the ten-year period ending 1921, the natural increase in population of the ancient colony was 31,347. In addition, immigration totalled 1,242. However, there was a loss of 12,229 due to emigration, leaving a net gain in population of 20,360.

Labrador's Population Declines.

Lack of development in Labrador has been the cause of a steady loss of population since 1884, when the total population was 4,211. Figures for each succeeding ten-year period show a slight decline, and the 1922 census returns record a falling off of 328 from the last report issued in 1911. There was no immigration to Labrador between 1911 and 1921, while there was a loss of 47 due to emigration. The natural increase in population shows a decline of 231, leaving a net loss to the territory of 328 persons.

An analysis of the report shows that while the figures regarding nationality have not yet been checked, there would appear to be 262,475 persons either born or naturalized British subjects in Labrador and Newfoundland, and only 504 persons of other nationalities.

The question "Why?" is for you to answer. After you learn how to do the trick, you may wish to know why it always "comes out right."

Write on a slip of paper "Twelve yards," fold it and hand it to a spectator to hold until the completion of the trick. Ask him to write on another piece of paper any distance he likes, expressing it in yards, feet and inches. The distance, however, must be greater than 12 yards. Ask him to reverse the numbers (as in the second line of the illustration) and subtract. Ask him to reverse the answer (as in the fourth line) and add. Next he is to subtract 1 foot, 11 inches from the sum. The result will be 12 yards. The trick ends when he looks at the slip of paper and discovers that you predicted the result of his calculations.

The answer will always be 12 yards if the spectator writes a distance in which the number of odd inches is less than the number of even yards. If the number of inches were greater it would be impossible to reverse and subtract.

(Clip this out and paste it, with others of the series, in a scrap-book.)

TO AVOID PAINS OF RHEUMATISM

This Trouble is Located in the Blood, and Relief Comes Through Better Blood.

Rheumatism comes with thin, impure blood, and can only be driven out of the system by enriching and purifying the blood.

The chief symptom of rheumatism is pain. The most successful treatment is the one that quickly banishes this disagreeable symptom. Many rheumatic people suffer pains that could be avoided by building up the blood. The value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in rheumatic troubles is proven by the testimony of Mrs. A. Bryson, Arthur, Ont., who says:—"I was so used up with rheumatism in my shoulders and neck that I could not turn in bed without the help of my husband, and the pain at times was almost unbearable. I took doctors' medicine which did me little or no good. Then I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and have since been free from rheumatism. I can also recommend the pills to young mothers, as in my own case I found they are unexcelled. I may also add that I recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to a neighbor who took fainting spells at the change of life, and who could not walk any distance. She took the pills for nearly three months and they made her a strong well woman."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Higher Tax, Lower Revenue.

An interesting example of the way in which high taxes defeat their own purpose is quoted by the Financial Post. At $6 a thousand, cigarettes were heavily taxed, but Canadians smoked nearly 2,500,000,000 a year. The tax was increased last year to $7.50 a thousand and smokers turned to pipes and to rolling their own. Cigarette consumption dropped by about half a billion a year and the government suffered a net loss in revenue of about $2,000,000. The higher tax actually provided a lower revenue. Taxes that are too high will always defeat revenue purposes.

Night Camp.

A horse to ride and a dog to love,
And a fire to warm me by,
End of the trail and high above
The sweep of the starlit sky—
And where is there more for a man's desire
Than a horse and a dog and a pine-wood fire?

The horse will bear me far and swift,
And the dog will guard my rest
When I lie me down on a dead leaf drift,
Close to the brown earth's breast.
But ah! the ache of an old desire,
And the face that glows in the pine-wood fire.

The Traveler's Slogan.

The seas beyond the Golden Gate
Like liquid sapphires run
To coral islands set in foam
And bright with sand and sun;
The cherry trees of old Japan
Are whiter than the snow
On Fujiyama's sacred crest—
Let's go.

The huddled roofs of Hongkong shine
Like jade beneath the moon,
At Singapore the temple bells
Boom out in solemn tune.
In all the Burmese women's ears
Red chips of rubies glow,
Big game still roams in Africa—
Let's go.

In Paris now the people sip
Their coffee out of doors,
All night the click of dancing feet
Is heard on polished floors,
The lilacs scent the misty air,
Romance glides to and fro
Across the bridges of the Seine—
Let's go.

In London streets the flower girls
Display their fragrant wares,
The Thames is gay with punts and skiffs
Propelled by loving pairs.
In dusky woods the nightingales
Are fluting sweet and low,
And lanes are pink with hawthorn buds—
Let's go.

White roads are winding east and west,
The boundless billow calls
To Moorish palaces in Spain
And Alpine waterfalls,
To sunrise on the Applan Way,
The Tiber's turbid flow
And Venice with its long canals—
Let's go.

The liner's waiting at the pier,
The plane is ready, too,
And only needs a touch to soar
To spaces wide and blue.
I hear the panting limited
Its piercing whistle blow,
The travel itch is in my foot—
Let's go.

To Build Memorial of Zeebrugge Raid.

The foundation-stone of what will be a noble memorial to the famous British raid staged at Zeebrugge, Belgium, in wartime, was laid recently by the Governor of West Flanders, in the presence of a distinguished Anglo-Belgian company, including Admiral Sir Roger Keyes, Lord Burnham, Lord Emmott, the British Ambassador, Sir George Grahame, and the Belgian Minister of Public Works.

The memorial, which will stand near the shore end of the mole, will take the form of a granite column 70 feet high, surmounted by a figure of St. George slaying the dragon. It will be visible far out at sea, and will be inscribed on the side facing the sea with the words: "Saint George for England," and also, "United for Justice." Likewise on the monument will appear the names of the British who fell in the action and also the names of the participating warships.

The Governor, when performing the ceremony, described the landing of the British in the face of the German fire as one of the most brilliant deeds in naval history. Other speeches delivered at the ceremony and preceding the banquet in Bruges Town Hall stressed the close Anglo-Belgian ties. Magnificent wreaths were subsequently deposited.

HON. HOWARD FERGUSON VINDICATED.

There has never been a public man in Ontario whose official conduct has been so microscopically investigated, and who has come through the ordeal so unscathed, as the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson. When the Hearst Government was defeated in 1919 he was one of the two Ministers in that Cabinet who were returned to the Legislature. Appreciating the fact that he was a man with capacity for leadership, Mr. Drury singled him out as the one man in the Province whom he must destroy. He appointed a commission composed of two judges, who were life-long political opponents of Mr. Ferguson's party, to inquire into his administration of the Crown Lands of the Province.

There has never been so exhaustive an inquiry into the administrative acts of an Ontario Minister as this commission conducted. They sat nearly two years, gathering evidence from every available quarter, prying into all the details of the Crown Lands administration covering the period that Mr. Ferguson was Minister. The Government spent $170,000 in its effort to discredit Hon. G. Howard Ferguson. And when it was all over, Premier Drury, in a speech made at Grand Bend, Ont., on August 19, 1922, as reported in the Farmer's Sun, said:

"I am not making any charge that Mr. Ferguson ever benefitted to the extent of one dollar personally. I don't believe he did. I believe personally he is clean, and never administered for his own benefit."

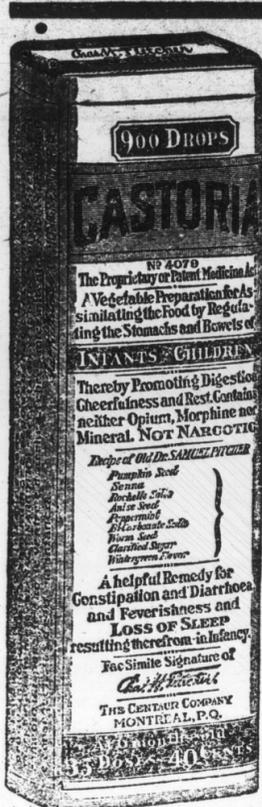

By the appointment of the commission, and the sensational way in which every bit of evidence was presented and commented upon by the commissioners, Mr. Ferguson was unjustly—and one might almost say maliciously—put under suspicion. He bore all the calumny that was levelled against him with the calmness and fortitude of one who was conscious of his own integrity, and knew that time would vindicate him.

Could there be a more complete vindication than the statement we have quoted from the man who launched the attack upon him, and who pursued him with a vigor that was as merciless as it was persistent?

There are not many men in public life in Canada who could pass through such an experience so creditably. He was condemned by his political opponents before he was tried. The propaganda levelled against him unsettled the confidence even of some of his own political supporters. He had simply to pursue his way—as he did, bravely and unflinchingly—through two years of what amounted practically to persecution, awaiting the day of his vindication. He knew that the day would come, because he, at least, was aware that no matter how deeply the commissioners might delve into his conduct, they could not produce a title of evidence that he had been in the smallest particular recreant to his trust as a Minister of the Crown.

It has been a gruelling experience, unequalled in its severity by that which any other public man in Ontario has ever had to endure. And now he stands before the electors of the Province as one who has been tried in the fire, submitted to the most crucial test that his bitterest political opponents could devise, and with a certificate of character as an honest upright and devoted servant of the people of Ontario, from the man who was responsible for the attack upon him.

What must be the effect on public opinion? Surely it cannot be otherwise than that this man so admirably, in a fit and proper person to be entrusted with the administration of the affairs of the Province as its Prime Minister.—Brampton, Conservator.

THE ONTARIO ELECTIONS.

With polling in Ontario for the election of a new Legislature only two weeks off, it is becoming apparent that there is ground for the feeling among Conservative partisans that, so far, the conditions favor their success and that, if not a majority, they will have such a strong membership in the new Assembly that a government in which they are not represented will not be able to continue. The Liberals throughout the constituencies are nominating candidates; but they are not making many efforts to arouse the enthusiasm of the electorate. The differences that arose between Mr. Drury and Mr. J. J. Morrison may have been healed outwardly; but the old cordiality has not been restored. At a U.F.O. meeting at Guelph, Mr. Morrison did not speak of the Drury Government's record, and he, it is declared, had no word of commendation for Mr. Drury himself. This led the London Advertiser to remark that "there is a growing feeling that Mr. Morrison is not at all concerned with the success or failure of Mr. Drury, and from present appearances Mr. Morrison is so shaping the course of the U.F.O. that he, and not Mr. Drury is going to be in control of the situation as far as that party is concerned." This gives some ground for thinking that the U.F.O. organization is disintegrating, and as it never controlled a majority of the Legislature, the process, if not checked, may end in its collapse as a political force like the Patrons of Industry a quarter of a century ago.

A WAGON AND A BOY

(By L. Glen Earl)

I bought a wagon for a kid, a "Yellow Demon Flyer." With rubber tires and Disco wheels, to please his young desires; And I figured it would bring me peace, while he would have some fun. But I found my tribulations had only just begun.

A pair of boots that one time lasted almost thirty days Now shows his toes a-peeping through 'most every time he plays. His knees are out his Sunday suit, his coat is just a wreck. But then I'm mighty thankful that he hasn't cracked his neck.

I've had to have the wheels re-tired, the box repainted new. And twice I straightened axles and I think the handle, too. I only paid the dealer-man a five-spot for the toy— And I don't begrudge the fun it brings to any little boy.

BUT I have a sneaking notion that the man whose brilliant mind Invented four-wheeled wagons and other such things of the kind, Has a lot of coin invested in a boot and shoe concern And holds some stock in cloth and wool and wants a big return.

Mother always seems a-darning on all the And I've had to ask the banker to renew the last two loans; And I'll have to dodge the coal man for another week or so. Just to keep a healthy, normal boy and his wagon on the go. But what a sorry life 'twould be if wagons, boys and shoes, And horns and drums and other things that little fellows use Were banished from the evening hour, and from our love and care! There will always be a joy in buying things for him to wear.

WHO was Abraham Martin? Had that question been asked one year ago probably not one Canadian in a hundred thousand would have been able to answer it. Today it is different. Most Canadians now know he was first King's pilot on the St. Lawrence river, and the first known Canadian of Scottish extraction—two claims to distinction either one of which might have made him famous. Latterly other things to his credit have come to be known; and they will be recorded in their due place.

In the meantime it is not remarkable how little Canadians know of Canada's history—as rich a bit of three hundred odd years. The high points of the little byways and side-lights, so full of human interest, they lie in a deep obscurity from which they are being rescued one by one, at the patient digging of this or that person or institution actuated by a love of the heroic past and a realization of its value in building the national life of the future.

Abraham Martin was some figure of a man in his day although most of his just claims to fame seem to have been thrust upon him. It was hardly more than a matter of accident that the "Plains of Abraham" should come to be named after him, and yet that was plenty to get all good Canadians wondering who he was and what manner of life he led. Much digging in the archives of Quebec, and there are none more interesting or more faithfully kept, has brought out much information about the man and his times. He was born in France, his father being a Scot, which is probably why Jesuit writings of the times refer to him as "Abraham Martin, called the Scot." His father probably came from Perthshire and was one of the Scottish guards of Louis XI. In 1614 Abraham brought his French wife to Canada and that he saw the actual founding of New France may be gathered from the fact that his name was on the list of the 81 white persons who lived in Canada from 1620 to 1632, and he was then known as a pilot. He later had ten children from whom have come a vast number of descendants among whom are numbered some of Quebec's best families and leading citizens. Bishop Tache of St. Boniface is one of his descendants in direct line. Champlain gave Martin a deed to the farm land on the Plains of Abraham, and documents telling of his living there still exist. He apparently travelled greatly up and down the river for Cape Martin in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is also named after him.

All this was distinctive enough to justify the memorial which has been raised to Martin in the Harbor Square at Quebec. The handsome shaft of granite, designed by Henri Hébert and T. Roxburg Smith, was unveiled early in May by Hon. Athanasius David, Quebec's Provincial Treasurer and the event was marked by a gathering of notables including the Governor of Quebec, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick. Among those who spoke were F. L. Wanklyn, representing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by whom the memorial was erected. Lieut.-Col. Alex. Fraser, A.D.C. to the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, Lawrence Burpee, President of the Canadian Historical Society and Monseigneur Laflamme, Curé of the Basilica. The latter spoke as the successor of the first Curé of Quebec who was Martin's parish priest and who was afterwards martyred by the Iroquois. He read the baptismal certificate of Abraham Martin's first child who was also the first white child born in Canada. He also read the baptismal certificate of Martin's third child upon which appeared the name of Samuel de Champlain as godfather. The memorial has been set up by the Canadian Pacific in honor, not only of Abraham Martin but of the stout-hearted pilots who for over three hundred years have done so much to make the St. Lawrence River a safe and speedy route to and from Europe. That Company uses the route more than any other, and the arrival at Quebec of the great liner "Empress of Scotland" on her first trip of the season with 731 passengers from Europe later in the day of the unveiling emphasizes what has been accomplished in the making of the St. Lawrence route a great highway for ocean-borne commerce.

"You couldn't have married McNab for any reason of choice." Mrs. Cameron was torn between grief, bewilderment and compassion. "Davey is breaking his heart about it, out on the hills somewhere, now. I had to tell him when he came in, for fear—What's to be done about it, Deirdre? Oh, I'm not wanting to blame you. You did it for a good reason, I'm sure, and you love Davey. It's hard on you, Deirdre. You do love him?"
"Yes," Deirdre said slowly.
Mrs. Cameron knelt beside the chair. Her hands trembled on the girl's arm.
"Don't touch me," Deirdre gasped, moving out of the reach of her hands. "Don't touch me," she whispered again, eyeing her strangely.
"Davey—I'm afraid what he'll do if he sees you!" Mrs. Cameron hesitated.
Deirdre sprang out of the chair, her eyes blazing.
"Davey! Davey! It's all Davey with you!" she cried. "You sacrificed father to him. You sent him to that trial. I know now. And Davey—why couldn't he have gone to goal instead? He's young and strong and it wouldn't have mattered so much to him. He's got all his life before him. But father—hadn't he given his eyes for you? Hasn't he worshipped you all these years? I've seen it since I was a child. And is this all you could do for him, send him to the Law Courts to get Davey off, knowing that it would be worse than death to him to have to go to prison again? Oh, you knew what he'd have to suffer in Davey's place."
Mrs. Cameron put her hands over her face.
"You knew he couldn't afford to come under the notice of the law," Deirdre said. "But I shouldn't talk like this."
Her voice trailed wearily.
"Only—I had to choose between father and Davey. McNab knows all the old story. You do, I know. Steve told me. McNab scared the wits out of Steve one day when he was by himself and got all the proofs he wanted, though he seems to have had the facts—most of them, anyway—before. Then he told me—what being at large before the expiration of sentence meant, and what his information would do if he used it about father, when the trial was on. He said that wouldn't use it if I'd marry him."
Mrs. Cameron stared at her.
Deirdre went on, her voice dragging as if she could scarcely put into words the pain and trouble of her mind.
"I couldn't let father suffer any more. I couldn't bear to think what it would be for him to go back there, to the island," she said. "He, blind . . . and loving me so . . . and you—both of us willing to sacrifice him to Davey. I could see him going over there, hurt and alone, in the dark, the dear, great, gentle heart of him crying for those he loved to be near him, to hear the sound of their voices, to touch their hands. I couldn't endure it. Oh, I couldn't."
Her head dropped.
"He has made sacrifices all his life. His eyes for you."
"Don't say that, Deirdre!"
"It's the truth," the girl said fiercely. "That night of the fires he saw the branch falling. It would have think it may help you, Deirdre, now that your soul is in the deep waters. I want you to know . . . that something like what has happened to you happened to me, long ago. Only I had less excuse."

Her face was torn with grief; she turned from the girl, overwhelmed by the flood-tide of dark memories.
"Oh, I can't think of it without all the agony again," she cried.
"I didn't want to bring shame on my people by having it known . . . I had been the cause of death to a man . . . but the weight was on my soul. I had heard of people escaping public trial by condemning themselves to transportation. It was the only way I could have any peace of mind. I thought—taking on myself the punishment other women had got for doing what I did. But it was never as bad for me as for them. Davey's father saw me on the wharf among the emigrant women, and he wanted to marry me. There was a Government bounty—thirty pounds, I think it was—given to married couples coming to the colony, and he wanted the money to begin with in the new country. I told him why I was going out, and he was willing to take me. There were terrible days of fear among all the rough people I found myself with . . . till he came. I was grateful to him, and swore to be a good and faithful wife to him."
"I've not spoken of this since then, Deirdre. I'm telling you because I want you not to throw your life away—not to waste it. I know I was wrong. There was this difference between what you did and what I did. I was not in a corner, fighting for my life as you were. I did not mean to take life. I did not mean to. It was an accident, really. Right was on my side, but I was angry, or the accident would never have happened. I have suffered from knowing that. All these years have made little difference. That's why I was always wanting to help convicts and prisoners in the old days—and it angered Davey's father so. I felt that they were suffering what I ought to have been suffering too. . . ."

"I'll be fifty-seven to-morrow," smiled Mrs. Plaegar, rocking on the verandah of her white-and-green farm house, "and it seems as though it were only a few years ago when the boys were small."
She sighed again.
"Those were the years when it was hard pulling. My husband died when the children were very young. The farm was heavily mortgaged and we had to stretch the pennies until they fairly squealed. My friends told me I ought to work in my spare time. Well, a farmer's wife hasn't much spare time and besides, who could I have done? I could not sew. My fingers had become too clumsy with farm work to handle a needle delicately and work of other kinds would demand that I leave the farm which I could not do."
"Well, things went on for a while. I continued to do the manual work, to which I was accustomed. I had always liked a man's work better than a woman's and I had quite a knack for handling tools."
"One tool I liked especially was an old grindstone in the barnyard on which I sharpened my knives. One day a neighbor, viewing with envy my shining and keen steel knives said, 'I wonder if you would be willing to sharpen my knives? You do such splendid work and I would gladly pay you.'"
"I consented and that was the beginning of a little business. Other women brought me their knives and scissors and I charged according to the size of the utensils. I used to send the boys to 'gather them in' for me and sometimes they would bring home three or four dozen which they had labeled with the names of the owners. The next day they would return them, bright and sharp. And how farm women need keen tools!"
"As my somewhat unique business increased, I bought a polishing machine and I soon received more orders than ever. One order which pleased me especially was from a hotel. They told me their employees were most deficient at polishing steel knives and, if I did good work, they would be willing to give all their work to me. With housewives, too, this task is a dreaded one, and my bank began to increase, accordingly. I followed up every opportunity and, of course, business brought more business."
"My business never forced me to neglect my farm duties. I always did the work on my own premises where I could oversee the work of the farm hands."
"The boys say they owe their college education to the old grindstone and that is perhaps the reason we never parted with it. To us, it shall always be a much loved, and honored member of the family."

(To be concluded.)

The Hidden Heart.

I hid my heart away,
It was my own,
All of its hidden stores
Were mine alone
I feared a thief might come
Prowling in stealth
To rob my treasury,
Steal all my wealth
Come Life, the trader, by
Wishing to trade;
Bright gauds he offered me
That would not fade.
So Life, the trader, said—
Ah, they shone fair—
I brought my treasure forth
To buy a share!
Passed Life, the trader, by
With all my gold—
I was quite satisfied
With what he sold.
Ah, but they did not last,
Those gauds so bright:
Soon passed their beauty—soon
Passed my delight.
Again I hide my heart,
Empty, alas!
Lest they should pity me,
All they who pass!
—Roselle Mercier Montgomery.

A Wrong Impression.

A young man, becoming engaged, was anxious to present his fiancée with a ring appropriately inscribed. Being at a loss what to have engraved upon it, he asked his father for advice.
"Well," said the latter, "put 'When this you see, remember me.'"
A few days later the young woman was surprised to receive a beautiful ring with this inscription: "When this you see, remember father."

On the shelf above the stove I keep salt, pepper, matches and a box in which to put burnt matches and scraps of paper to be burned in the furnace later.
I keep steel wool for cleaning aluminum and glass baking dishes. I wash dishes in hot soap suds, place in a wire drainer and scald both sides. They dry perfectly without wiping.
A homemade tea wagon conveys the food to the dining room and the dishes to the kitchen.
Telephone on the farthest wall of the dining room was removed to a desk near the kitchen door, thus eliminating several steps when the 'phone is used and enabling me to sit while talking.
A vacuum cleaner is one of my greatest labor-savers. Then came dust mops, wall brush, chemically treated duster for baseboards and dustless duster cloths made of old stockings and a little furniture polish.
A long-handled dust pan saves stooping. With stationary tubs, running water, a power washer and wringer, a large washing is done in a few hours. The wide ironing board was made to order; a small clothes sprinkler in a bottle soon prepares the clothes for the electric iron.
An extension telephone upstairs costs but little extra a month and saves many steps. A closet upstairs contains dustless mops, dust cloths, soap and cleaning fluids.
Other labor-savers that cost only a few cents are egg poacher, dish mop, long-handled fork, can opener, grater, mixing bowls, funnels, tea ball, potato ricer, egg beater and measuring cups.
A pressure cooker saves time, labor and fuel in cooking combination meals and canning vegetables, fruit and meat.
A homemade fireless cooker cooks the meal while I work or motor.
It is apparatus of this sort combined with common sense in house planning that makes the "servantless house" possible and the mistress of the home is not wearing herself out or useless annoyances that arise in housekeeping problems.—Mrs. G. E. S.

TO PATCH OVERALLS.

Since the price of denim and overalls continues high, it behooves the thrifty housemother to make each pair of these work garments serve its full time. Usually the front of the legs, especially the knees, receive the hardest wear, this part often reaching a "holey" stage while the remainder of the garment is still stout and capable of considerable wear. Instead of unsightly and laboriously applied hand patches, a neater and more durable piece of work can be done on the sewing machine.
First rip the inside leg seam from hem to hem, in order to get the garment under the foot of the machine. As this is a continuous seam, the ripping, as a rule, can easily be accomplished by cutting through the hem at the bottom of the leg and pulling on each side of the seam, as the stitches have been weakened by wear and washing. If the stitches hold, rip the seam with the discarded blade of a safety razor.
From the unworn portions from the back of the legs of a discarded pair of overalls—or from new denim, if no partly-worn material is at hand—cut patches almost the width of the leg and long enough to extend from the crotch to well below the knee, taking in all the worn portion. Pin the patches in place—the experienced seamstress will find basting unnecessary—turn under the edges at top, bottom and outside of leg, and stitch in place with number 40 thread. The fourth side of the patch is taken up in the inside leg seam.
Starting at the bottom of the leg, stitch up the leg seam from hem to hem in an ordinary raw seam, keeping to the outer row of former stitching to give a neat appearance to the finished work. This seam can not be felled on the ordinary household machine, nor is this necessary, as the width of the old seam is sufficient to prevent pulling out if coarse thread is used.

Health Before Beauty.

Two Irishmen who had not met for years ran across each other.
"Long time since we met, Clancy, isn't it? Great things have happened since then," said the first.
"Yes, indeed. Look at myself. Sure I'm married I am," replied Clancy.
"You don't tell me? Have you any family?" asked O'Grady.
"Faith and I have that. I've a fine healthy boy, and the neighbors say he's the picture of me."
O'Grady looked at Clancy, who wasn't built on the line of a prize beauty.
"Ah, well, what's the harm so long as the child's healthy?"

Our Most Powerful Light.

The discovery of X-rays was a lucky accident. Professor Rontgen, who died recently, was certainly not searching for them when in 1895 his eyes for the first time beheld a light more powerful than any ever known before.
He was experimenting in a darkened room with a Crookes tube, stimulated internally from an induction coil and covered by a shield of black cardboard when he became conscious of a faint, greenish, flickering light on a paper which he had painted with a fluorescent chemical preparation.
The value of this ray to medicine has been incalculable. Prior to its discovery the position of an internal injury had to be guessed, and a patient might even have had to be cut open so that the surgeon might see exactly where the mischief lay.
Now the Rontgen ray can disclose the exact position of the broken bone or foreign matter.
The rays have caused the death of many experimenters since their discovery by Rontgen, but, fortunately, those days are past, and the X-ray is doing ever-increasing work in the service of man.

A DIFFERENCE ABOUT A BIRD

Dominion News in Brief

Dawson City, Y.T.—When the first steamers reach Mayo Landing with the opening of navigation this year, approximately 8,000 tons of silver ore from the mines of Keno Hill will await shipment. This quantity will represent the winter haul, and another two thousand tons may be moved this summer, making the total shipments ten thousand tons for 1923.

Nelson, B.C.—The lumber industry in this district continues active, about 50 per cent. of the lumber shipments going to the United States. The demand has been good, although there is a slackening of orders from the United States. The Prairie Provinces, however, have come into the market as buyers, and purchases have been heavier than for some months past.

Regina, Sask.—In 1922 Canada produced 2,418 tons of salt cake, valued at $54,804, and 1,329 tons of glauber salts, valued at $42,719, according to government figures. There are a number of immense deposits of glauber salt in this province which at the present time, are only in the initial stages of development, but it is anticipated that the next few years will see a considerable increase in production.

Timmins, Ont.—Announcement comes from Quebec City that a lease is to be granted on April 25 to interests who will develop Des Quinze Rapids, at the north end of Lake Temiskaming. The development of Des Quinze will undoubtedly solve the power problems of the various mining companies operating in that district, and increased activity is anticipated as soon as the new power station begins operations.

Quebec, Que.—Effective April 1, a permit is necessary to enter and travel in the forests of Quebec until the 15th of November. This is in accordance with a system inaugurated to control those entering the forests and check, as far as possible, the outbreak of forest fires.

North Sydney, N.S.—Active preparations to meet the demands of the expected gold rush to Labrador and to make North Sydney the base for the traffic, have been commenced here at the instance of the Board of Trade. It is expected that several hundred prospectors will leave for the north as soon as the ice clears and the merchants of North Sydney have organized a co-operative syndicate for the merchandizing of equipment and supplies.

Summerside, P. E. I.—Reports submitted at the annual meeting here of the Canadian Silver Fox Association showed a membership of 300 from all parts of Canada, and a registration of 6,000 silver foxes. The membership is expected to be doubled during the coming year, and a large increase in the number of registered foxes is anticipated.

FLOOD SUBSIDING ALONG ASSINIBOINE

Removal of Ice Jam by Government Corps Brings Relief to Manitoba.

A despatch from Winnipeg says:—Flood conditions in central and southern Manitoba, which caused great havoc during the past week, inundating thousands of acres of farm lands, disrupting transportation, forced families from their homes, isolated others from towns and turned low lands in many sections of the province into huge lakes, are now on the wane and the situation generally is much improved. Along the Assiniboine River, where extensive damage has resulted, the floods at Brandon, Portage La Prairie and territory to the east, the removal of ice jams by Government engineering corps has relieved the situation considerably and with the river comparatively free of ice, the water is receding. Many thousands of acres of land in the Popular Point District, about forty miles west of this city, are still under water, but with the river now free of ice, the water is expected to flow back from the flooded areas rapidly.

Airplanes Pick Up Mails at Plymouth

A despatch from Plymouth, England, says:—The Plymouth Chamber of Commerce on Friday inaugurated a time-saving experiment in picking up the urgent mails dropped from incoming liners in Plymouth Sound. Dummy mail dropped overhead at six o'clock Friday morning was taken ashore in a fast motor launch and transferred to airplanes, which left for Cologne and Paris, arriving in those places at approximately three and four o'clock Friday afternoon.

The use of this scheme, it is contended, would enable the delivery of letters to business houses in time for the replies to catch the return air mails the following morning and reach Southampton for the mail boat that evening. The Air Ministry is said to be watching the experiment with great interest.

Bonar Law Takes Month's Sea Voyage

A despatch from London says:—It is announced that Premier Bonar Law, with the permission of the King, is leaving immediately for a month's sea voyage.

Official word from Downing Street says his medical advisers insist there is every reason to believe the Premier's voice will be restored completely at the end of the month. The destination of his voyage is not revealed.

BRITISH GIRL SUFFERS DAYS OF TERROR

Youthful Daughter of Commander at Kohat Kidnapped by Afridi Tribesmen.

A despatch from Simla, British India, says:—The story of the sufferings of Molly Ellis, youthful daughter of the British commander of Kohat, while in the hands of Afridi Tribesmen, after she had seen them kill her mother in the early morning of April 14, is told in dispatches from Peshawar, where she is resting under the care of her father and Mrs. Starr, the woman physician who played a large part in her rescue.

After their murderous raid the kidnappers fled to the hills above Kohat, half driving, half carrying their captive up the steep, rocky paths. Throughout the following day she could see the searchers passing in automobiles below her. Her only protection from the severe cold of the hills was a coat belonging to a British Afridi named Shahazada, the man who killed her mother.

The next four days were a nightmare of alternate traveling and hiding, with the girl in an ever growing state of exhaustion from her physical efforts and apparently hopeless outlook. Her feet were lacerated from tramping over the stony tracks, and once, in the course of the terrible journey, she fell, fainting, at the top of a snow-covered mountain pass, upon which Shahazada lost patience and drew his dagger to kill her, being restrained only by his companions.

After six days of traveling they reached her captors' home in the Tirah country. Meanwhile, a search by friendly tribesmen was in progress under the direction of Kuli Khan, a native official, who on the twentieth reached Kanki Bazaar, the home of a famous and influential Mullah, or Mohammedan religious leader, named Mahmud Akhundzada, where, after much pressure, he ascertained that the captive was held in a mountain fortress eight miles away. Kuli Khan managed to have conveyed to the girl a parcel of comforts and a letter of encouragement, and in return learned that she was being reasonably treated by the women of the tribesmen.

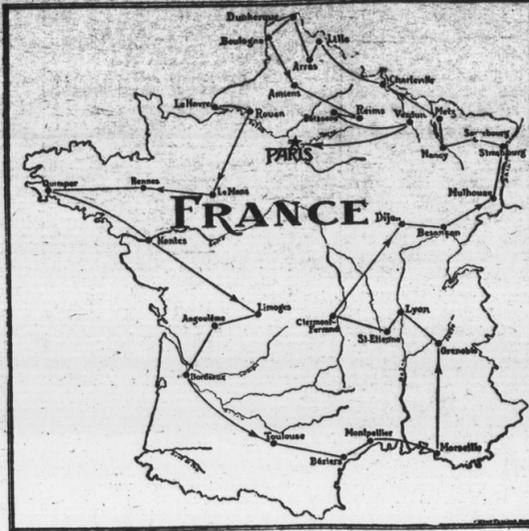

Mrs. Starr at this time was near Kanki Bazaar, under a native escort, having arrived after adventures which seemed to threaten her mission with failure, and the Mullah, apparently fearing trouble, sent a letter to her party ordering them to turn back. This letter was ignored, and the party reached Kanki.

Shortly afterward Kuli Khan induced the Mullah to bring about the transfer of the captive girl to the Mullah's house, where she was eventually taken, being carried over the shoulder of one of the tribesmen. The meeting between the girl and Mrs. Starr was a joyful one, but the danger was not ended, for while they talked the abductors stood around menacingly, insisting that Molly was still their captive.

Presently the captors learned that a party of Afridi friendly to the British had arrived at their village and were attacking it, whereupon Shahazada seized Mrs. Starr and hustled her from the room, threatening both her and Miss Ellis. The Mullah became enraged at this insult to the sacred rights of hospitality under his roof and publicly cursed Shahazada and his fellows.

In this dramatic fashion the balance tilted to the side of the rescuers and the surrender of the captive was speedily arranged. The tribesmen's demands for a ransom and pardon were abandoned, and on Tuesday of this week Kuli Khan and the other rescuers started with the girl on the journey to Peshawar, where there was a joyful reunion between Molly and her father.

A CANADIAN TOUR IN FRANCE.

The route indicated on the map is that to be taken by the Made-in-Canada exhibition, which is to travel in a convoy of forty huge motor lorries. The lorries, which are to be provided by the French Government, are used in preference to a train because they can be located in the heart of each town or city, instead of being kept on a railway track around a station, usually not a desirable part of the city in which to see an exhibition.

TRADE OF CANADA MAKES BIG ADVANCE

Exports Show Largest Gains in Year's Record of Increase.

A despatch from Ottawa says:—During the fiscal year ended March 31, Canada's total trade increased nearly a quarter of a billion dollars. Total trade during the year was $1,748,530,880, an increase over the previous year of $246,840,887. Export trade developed to the greater extent. For the 12 months exports of Canadian merchandise were $932,229,443, or $191,988,763 over the previous year; imports were $802,457,043, an increase of $54,694,059. Foreign merchandise was exported to the value of $13,844,394.

Among Canada's domestic exports, agricultural products, with a value of $383,425,251, ranked first. Next came wood, wood products and paper, valued at $228,756,205.

Canadian exports during March increased to $78,566,675 from $58,646,312 in February. Exports in March of 1922 totalled $60,847,484. Dutiable imports into Canada during March totalled $61,619,994, and free imports were $30,250,433, a total of $91,870,427, compared with $65,307,696 in February, and $72,378,726 in March last year.

DE VALERA ISSUES TERMS FOR PEACE

Republican Leader Has Ordered Suspension of Hostilities in the Meantime.

A despatch from Dublin says:—A suspension of hostilities by the Irish Republicans against the forces of the Free State Government, and an offer to negotiate peace with the Free State on certain conditions were proclaimed on Friday night by Eamon de Valera, the Republican leader, and his Chief of Staff, E. F. Aitken.

De Valera's proclamation sets forth the general political principles of the Republicans and asserts that the ultimate Court of Appeals for deciding disputed questions is a majority vote of the people of Ireland, that resistance by violence should be excluded, but that adequate facilities should be afforded the people for the proper presentation of the issues involved.

The proclamation adds that nobody holding Republican principles should be excluded from Parliament and the council of nations. It says the military forces are servants of the nation and amenable to a freely elected national assembly.

De Valera expressed the belief that this declaration affords a basis for peace, and adds:

"We hope this advance will be met in the spirit in which we make it, and that it will be supported by all who love our country and desire a speedy and just ending to the present national troubles.

"As evidence of our own good will the army command is issuing here-with an order to suspend aggressive action, to take effect as soon as may be, but not later than noon of Monday."

The effect of this proclamation is still doubtful. De Valera all along has declared his willingness to abide by a decision based on the free will of the people; but he is said still to maintain his original position that the British Government must not interfere in Ireland if the people decide in favor of a Republic.

Chief of Staff Aitken in his order for a cessation of offensive operations tells the Republican troops to remain on the defensive and protect themselves and their munitions. This is taken as implying that there is to be no yielding on the part of the Republicans to the Free State Government's demand for the surrender of all arms.

RUSSIA NO LONGER IN NEED OF HELP, SAYS U.S. RELIEF SOCIETY

American Relief Administration Spent About $70,000,000 in Russia but Expects to Withdraw Soon as Famine is Over and Crop Prospects Are Good.

A despatch from Moscow says:—Following a conference between Colonel William Haskell, head of the American Relief Administration in Russia, and his district superintendants, word is expected from Herbert Hoover, head of the organization, for withdrawal from the country. Col. Haskell explained to newspapermen that after spending some $70,000,000 in Russia, the Administration finds the famine is over and there is no reason for it to remain. Furthermore, it is estimated Soviet confiscation of the church treasures has netted about $5,000,000, and the purpose for seizing these was announced to be famine relief. About $2,000,000 of the sum is still either unspent or not yet converted into cash.

Col. Haskell declares Russian crop prospects are excellent, and the Soviets are selling wheat abroad. In fact, in Orenburg, in the Volga region, once hard hit by famine, the Government is selling rye to the Quakers, who, in turn, hand it out to the Russian people, according to a report made to Col. Haskell.

Natural Resources Bulletin

The Natural Resources Intelligence Service of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, says:—

The study of the natural resources of Ontario is a fascinating one. From one season to another the situation changes. New natural resources are being discovered, new mines are opening up unforeseen wealth, and new conditions of development are making use of previously valueless resources. The story of the province's precious metals, gold and silver, reads almost like a fairy tale. In 1901 Ontario's gold production was but 11,844 ounces, of a value of $244,837. In 1922 the output was 1,000,199 ounces, valued at $20,674,109. In 1901 Ontario's silver output was 151,400 ounces, valued at $89,250, whereas, in 1922 this output had increased to 9,167,846 ounces, valued at $6,491,971.

The total value of gold production in Ontario to the end of 1922 was $108,300,000, and of silver $220,800,000. This has been produced almost exclusively from a portion of Northern Ontario heretofore regarded as valuable only for its timber. There are many thousands of square miles of similar country not yet explored.

One hundred pulp and paper mills are now in operation in Canada, of which number 40 are pulp mills, 33 paper mills, and 27 pulp and paper mills. Seventeen are newsprint plants. The present progress of the industry indicates an output of 1,500,000 tons of newsprint in 1924. This will mean the utilization of over 2,250,000 cords of pulpwood for a single year's newsprint paper output in the Dominion.

According to a despatch from Paris the Senate unanimously adopted a bill for the appropriation of 4,000,000 francs for a Canadian travelling exposition in France. The exhibition which is to be held this year is for the purpose of advertising Canada's manufactures and natural resources by means of motor cars, which will tour the principal districts of France.

Extensions, improvements, buildings, etc., involving an expenditure of $13,000,000 will be undertaken by the Bell Telephone Co. of Canada, according to C. S. Wise, vice-president and general manager of the company. The greater portion of this outlay, amounting to about $8,000,000, will be expended in Toronto and Montreal for new exchange buildings and apparatus.

A new cement company, to be known as the National Cement Co., has been incorporated with Federal charter and headquarters in Montreal. The plant of the new company will have a capacity of 3,000 barrels a day, and will be built of reinforced concrete at an approximate cost of $1,800,000. The estimated output of the plant will be about 900,000 barrels a year. Construction of the mill will be commenced about May 1 of this year and will probably take about nine months to complete.

On Tuesday afternoon we were favored with a visit from Dr. Chamberlain, for many years a leader in the political life of the Province. The Dr. was formerly a resident of Morrisburg, Dundas County, and in 1886 defeated the late Sir James Whitney, who, however, held no grudge and continued to employ him in the capacity of family doctor. When the excitement of an election subsided, they were always the best of friends. Dr. Chamberlain is now in his 85th year and remarkably bright and active for his age. At the present time he resides at Chaffey's Locks, where he owns 1,100 acres of timber land. He has had a very eventful career and is thoroughly conversant with the political life and history of Canada. It may interest "Reporter" readers to know that the Dr., in the early seventies, was initiated at the regular meeting of the "Rising Sun" Lodge and is still a member. He claims that the Masonic Lodge here is the second oldest in the Province of Ontario. It was first organized at Washburn's Corners, and in a short time was transferred to Athens, where the prospects for a successful future were much brighter. It was a real pleasure to meet with Dr. Chamberlain and discuss the past. His life and career would certainly make very interesting reading matter, as he knew and was familiar with all the leading public men of this country.

COURTESY.

The season of the year when automobiles are in vogue is advancing; therefore the writer considers an article on courtesy opportune, being of the opinion that no class of individuals is so forgetful of good breeding as the chauffeur.

The largest cars are generally driven on your side of the road, the smaller cars in the centre and the Fords a trifle to the right. A horseman must take the ditch, drive in the corner of the fence, or when meeting a large car, get over the fence to let them pass.

A system in practice soon becomes the custom and the question is, where are we drifting?

There is a lack of knowledge. Bluff is having its day. The people who have their manners with them are in the minority. The tendency of the time is to strengthen one's self by tramping upon the weaker.

Are we becoming slaves to our passions, appetites and indecencies to the extent that we can no longer control ourselves?

The young man who will give himself to the studying of etiquette and the practice of its ideals will save himself being chagrined at critical moments. The knowledge of how to act and speak with the easy grace of habit will make him an accomplished diplomat.

How often we hear the remark, "I put my foot in it that time." Sometimes the consequences are expensive. There is no need for one of ordinary intelligence making such blunders. Do the right thing in an acceptable manner. Say the correct words in good English. Look Pleasant. Be happy. There is such a thing as a million dollar smile.

LEEDS BOYS ORGANIZE COUNTY COUNCIL.

The Tuxis Movement in Ontario is making progress. Ontario has been more backward along this line of work than the Western Provinces, and this has been rather discouraging to our leaders, that is, the members of our Provincial Boys' Work Board in Toronto. During the past year, however, and especially since the meeting of second Older Boys' Parliament, held in Toronto in December, 1922, a new impetus has been given to the movement.

A few weeks ago the Tuxis Boys of Brockville organized a Town Council, and now we have a County Council. On June 2nd, at 2 p. m., the Tuxis representatives from different parts of Leeds County met in Victoria Hall, Brockville, to organize a County Council.

As the attendance was small the officers were elected protem, to be confirmed at a meeting which will be held in Toledo on Friday evening, June 15. The following officers were elected unanimously:

Warden—Hon. "Bob" Rourke, M.P. P., Brockville.

Deputy Warden—Yates Marshall, Toledo.

County Clerk—Stuart Tennant, M. P., Mallorytown.

Treasurer—Hugh Reynolds, Brockville.

Chairman of Organization Committee—Earle Lyman, Brockville.

Chairman of Program Committee—Clarence Curtis, Athens.

It is recognized from coast to coast, as being one of the strongest, brightest, most complete and capable organizations ever sent on a tour.
