Men's Tailoring.

Spring & Summer, 1900

GENTLEMEN'S HIGH GRADE FURNISHINGS.

Men will be better dressed during the last part of the nineteenth century than ever before, since they began to wear clothes. There has been a time when men had to pay more for their outer garments; but there never was a time when men wanted such high-class work as they do now. We are prepared to do the high-class trade of the city. We employ only the best workmen.

THE FABRICS WHICH WE WILL SHOW FOR SPRING ARE THE FINEST EVER MADE, THE MOST VARIED AND BEAUTIFUL IN DESIGN AND COLORING.

The style of garment that is fashionable this season is by far the most artistic of the century.

The fly front Overcoat and the street-covert Overcoat will be more in demand than any other style of overcoat for spring wear.

More Sack Coats will be worn during the coming season than for many years. Almost everybody will wear a Sack coat of some kind. Three button sack, four button sack, straight-front sack, and double-breasted sack.

"Experience is the Best Teacher."

The experience of millions has demonstrated that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the perfect remedy for all troubles of the blood, stomach, nerves, bowels, liver and kidneys, and that it imparts strength, vigor and vitality. Every testimonial is the voice of experience to you.

Dyspepsia—Hood's Sarsaparilla is a grand medicine. It has cured me of dyspepsia. My blood was so poor that in the hottest weather I felt cold. This great medicine enriched my blood and made me feel warm. Mrs. James Malvey, 222 Pinnacle St., Belleville, Ont.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
NEVER DISAPPOINT

Gratitude for God's Benefits.

GENERAL INTENTION FOR APRIL, 1900.

Recommended to our Prayers by His Holiness Leo XIII.

(American Messenger of the Sacred Heart.)

Gratitude is the virtue by which we acknowledge gifts received from others and strive to make return for the same whenever it is in our power. Gratitude to our fellow men is part of the cardinal virtues of justice; gratitude to God, if not identical with the virtue of religion, is really one of its chief acts, and a work of prayer by which we keep our souls in submission to Him. "The chief thing in the worship of God," says St. Augustine, "is that we should not be ungrateful to Him, and hence in the only true sacrifice offered to God our Lord, we are reminded to give thanks" (1) The Preface of this Holy Sacrifice begins: "It is truly proper and just, right and salutary, that we give thanks always and in every place to Thee, Holy Lord, the Father Almighty, Eternal God."

"In all things give thanks," wrote St. Paul to the Thessalonians, "for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you all." (2) And again, "giving thanks always, for all things, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to God and the Father." (3) Members of the Apostleship of Prayer will recall the text of this great Apostle on which their organization is based: "I desire, therefore, first of all that supplications, prayers, intercessions, and thanksgivings be made by men." (4)

And if we ask why so much stress is laid on this virtue of gratitude, we need only consider how important it was in the eyes of Christ who exclaimed when about to raise Lazarus from the dead: "Father, I give Thee thanks that Thou hast heard me;" (5) who distributed the miraculously multiplied loaves only after He had given thanks; who gave thanks again, as He took the chalice to bless it; and who complained, after the ten lepers had been made clean: "Were not ten made clean? and where are the nine? There is no one found to return to give glory to God but this stranger." (6) And if we seek a reason beyond the Master's example, it is not right that we should acknowledge as the author of our very being, and of everything that we have, God from whom we received them all?

If we could judge by the language and manners of men it would seem that nothing is more common than gratitude. People thank one another profusely, even when refusing a service; a worldly politeness invents a thousand gracious ways of expressing gratitude; men readily, nay, greedily accept gifts, and thank God, these are often generously given; yet how few, after all, are noble enough to be grateful in the true sense even to their fellow-men on whom they feel themselves dependent? Fewer still have the ability to be truly grateful to God, and to say, as the Spanish phrase puts it, when someone thanks another: "No thanks to me; thank God." Now and then comes a solemn message from the head of a State bidding the people set apart a day for holding services of thanksgiving; but invariably the thanksgiving is proclaimed for benefits which are ascribed to the success of the State administration, or to the enterprise of the people, and the benefits for which men are asked to be grateful are the material good things of this world to the oversight of the spiritual good things for which God chiefly wants our appreciation and thanksgiving. The Pharisee and his race are not extinct, and men still presume to mock God by thanking Him—that they are not as other men. Too many of them take His gifts, and affect to ignore their source; others make an outward show of thanking Him for the very fear of being considered ungrateful. How few study the gifts of God, and stop to reflect "that every creature of God is good, and nothing to be rejected that is received with thanksgiving." (1) In the words of St. Paul men have become "ingrates" and lovers of themselves, and would make it the boast of the new century that they can do without God.

Gratitude would never permit us to deny the receipt of a favor, to ignore, or overlook, or forget it in any way; it makes us first acknowledge, then make much of the gift, and, above all, keep it in mind. I is this memory of favors received, or rather of our benefactors, which prompts us to praise them, and when opportune let others know of their goodness to us. Love of our benefactors, and a true esteem of their favors, grow naturally out of gratitude, and inspire us not only to treat them with honor and reverence, but also to confer on them even far greater gifts than they have bestowed on us. Thus gratitude is not, as some have cynically described it, thankfulness for favors to come; for it is of such a hope that the S-Scripture says: "the hope of the unthankful shall melt away as the winter's ice, and shall run off as unprofitable water." Nor is gratitude the mere eagerness to return gift for gift, since this eagerness may spring from a desire to be rid of obligations. True gratitude accepts with simplicity, and while it makes us appreciate the gift, it also makes us value more the friendship and goodness of the giver, and quite as glad to remain his debtor as to meet our obligation when occasion offers, though for one who has ever been truly grateful the obligation is interminable, and the truly grateful is glad it should be so.

Nothing can incite us more to the love and practice of this virtue than the baseness of ingratitude. "A blighting wind," St. Augustine calls it; more unkind than the chilling blasts of winter, Shakespeare makes Lear describe it, most hateful to gods and men, as Xenophon terms it; so baneful that it can destroy all the power of prayer, and force heaven to close its gates against us. It is prayer without gratitude that St. Bernard blames for failing to reach God. It is of ingratitude only that Christ complained when He manifested to Blessed Margaret Mary the love of His Heart for mankind, and bade her urge men to make reparation for the coldness and indignity shown Him in the Eucharist, which is primarily the Sacrament and ascription of thanksgiving.

To be grateful to God should be very natural and easy for us all. It needs but to consider His gifts, their beauty, variety and usefulness, all created by His hands, and given to us by Himself actually present to confer them on us, and what is more, operating in them so as to effect through them what is best for our spiritual and temporal welfare. It is difficult enough for us to recall the gifts of God and estimate them at their true worth,—gifts of soul and body, all the treasures of divine grace lavished on us so abundantly, all our mental faculties, and our senses through which we derive the blessings of knowledge and the necessary motives to exercise the power of free will with which God has endowed us, briefly that we may choose to acknowledge His goodness and show ourselves truly grateful for it. When we look about us and consider the multitude of creatures made for our benefit, and study how each contributes something which is indispensable for our existence, or at least highly conducive to our welfare, the heavens and the earth, and sea and air, the stars of the firmament and the minerals of the soil, the brute, vegetable and inanimate creations, and the wonderful way in which they sustain our lives, and quicken our activities, and enable us to do things which God deigns to consider creditable in His creatures, honor able to Himself, and beneficial to our fellow men; when further we penetrate from the material to the spiritual world, and value, as best we may, the dignity and power of the human soul and the marvellous play of its faculties, and then rise from the natural plane in which God might have left us, soul and body, capable merely of what our powers could naturally enable us to know or accomplish, to the super-natural plane, in which we contemplate the light of His own countenance, and with our minds enlightened enable us to look above the range of our natural reason by which we know Him as the Cause of all things, and to behold Him as he has revealed Himself in a vision darkly, with our hearts lifted up to aspire one day to behold Him face to face and dwell with Him in glory as the sons of His household; when further we consider how He restored to us this high estate when it had been lost to us, and renews our title to it again and again, when we ourselves have fallen from it, we should be impious not to cry out with Isaiah: "I will give thanks to thee, O Lord, for thou wert angry with me; thy wrath is turned away, and thou hast comforted me. Behold God is my Saviour, I will deal confidently, and will not fear: because the Lord is my strength, and my praise, and He is become my salvation. You shall draw water with joy out of the Saviour's fountain: and you shall say in that day: Praise ye the Lord, and call upon His name: make His works known among the people; remember that His name is high. Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath done great things; show this forth in all the earth. Rejoice with praise, O thou habitation of God, for great is He that is in the midst of thee, the Holy One of Israel." (1)

This is gratitude, the hymn of joy in the heart, mounting ever to the lips in words of praise and of blessing, abiding in the memory, illumining the intellect and quickening the will to do great things for the great God who is in the midst of us. Not a gift used and not a thing done, not a prayer uttered, but the grateful spirit utters thanks to God: "with thanksgiving, let your petitions be made known to God." Nor will it rest with the thought of its own gifts, needs and achievement, but is grateful because God has done great things, and because He is worthy of "Benediction, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and strength, for ever and ever." (2) We give Thee thanks, O God Almighty, who art, and who wert, and who art to come; because Thou hast taken to Thee Thy great power, and Thou hast reigned." (3) And since men do not return God's favors, since they conceal them from others, and forget them, or disparage and sometimes reckon them evil instead of good, the grateful spirit is prompted to repair their ingratitude by accepting as special blessings the afflictions which He sends for our trials, rejecting that they are considered worthy to suffer for Christ, and crying out with David, "Thy rod and Thy staff, they have comforted me."

As members of the Apostleship of Prayer we begin the day with thanksgiving as well as with reparation and petition, we live by devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, which is manifested principally by our gratitude in protest against the ingratitude which He is treated in the Sacrament of His love, we have special means of honoring Him, and of repairing the outrages heaped upon Him in the Sacrament and sacrifices of thanksgiving. We have, therefore, special motives for praying that men may come back to God by recognizing His goodness and submit to His law in gratitude for benefits He bountifully bestows on them.

Midnight Mass at Making Christmas Day.

The Reuter correspondent at Mafeking, South Africa, describes the desperate struggle made from there on December 26 and prefaces his account with the manner in which Christmas Day was spent: "The Roman Catholics had arranged to follow the old custom of celebrating Mass at midnight. It was close on that hour when I wended my way toward the convent. The whole town was enveloped in Stygian darkness, and I could only find my road by the aid of flashes of sheet lightning reflected from an oncoming storm. The convent has suffered severely from the shell fire of the enemy. As I passed through the ruined portico and shattered pillars I entered the great empty building, pierced in half" down places by the shells of the enemy. Through these holes the wind sighed mournfully. At the far end of the room six great tapers gleamed through the darkness. The windows had been covered with the veils of the nuns, lest the enemy seeing the light should be tempted to open fire. Around the altar the black robed figures of the kneeling sisters contrasted strangely with the white silken vestments of the priest. Behind the nuns was a motley group, mostly of men. Many of us were booted and spurred, and if one had looked into the passage outside the chapel he might have found the rifled and bandoliers of the worshippers, ready for use at any moment. The Mass began with the "Adeste Fideles," and the grand old Christian hymn echoed through the ruined convent. At the chapel door a group of Cape policemen were gathered, wondering and not quite understanding what it all meant. Vivid flashes of lightning illuminated the room, piercing the veiling of the windows; hailstones rattled on the roof, and gusts of wind, rushing through the passages, made the tapers flicker, till total darkness was threatened. A few who had the opportunity made confession and were communicated. Then the priest gave us his blessing and we went out into the early morning of Christmas Day.

Prayers of the Sisters of St. Joseph.

"The Sisters of the Congregation of St. Joseph of the Archdiocese of Chicago," observe the pious custom of offering up to the Sacred Heart of Jesus all their prayers, mortifications, good works, special Masses, etc., during the entire month of March, May and June, for the spiritual and temporal welfare of all persons who may seek their aid in this way. Their suffrages are presented in particular for the benefit of their friends, enemies and benefactors; for the conversion of sinners, the spread of Christ's kingdom on earth, and for the release of the Poor Souls suffering untold agonies in Purgatory, who have no one to pray for them. Those persons who desire prayers, either for themselves or their friends, whether living or dead, including Catholics, Protestants, Jews and Atheists, are invited to write their request, sign the same with full name and address, and forward to Mother Superior, Convent of the Holy Saviour, La Grange, Chicago, Illinois. During the past year thousands of letters were received from all parts of the world expressing the gratitude of the recipient for favors obtained through the fervent supplications of God's devoted servants. The sick claim to have been healed in a miraculous manner; unhappy marriages have been reformed; the unemployed have procured lucrative positions; persons addicted to drink have become total abstainers; extraordinary vocations to the religious life have been obtained; sin has been overcome and virtue acquired.

May the Sacred Heart of Jesus, our Blessed Lady and St. Joseph be everywhere loved!

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who has written an affecting essay on the blessedness of being poor, has been seen by a business partner for a petty sum of millions, and the legal proceedings have brought out the interesting fact that the net profits of the Carnegie Company this year will amount to over $40,000,000. We hope we shall not be accused of socialist sympathies when we recall that it was this Company which could not afford to accede to the demands of the strikers for an advance of wages at Homestead a few years ago, when so many lives were lost in a riot. The annual revenues of the Standard Oil Company are said to reach the lump sum of $80,000,000. It is hardly within the bounds of possibility for any "plant" in the world to earn such fabulous profits in a perfectly legitimate way, and we shudder to think of the national cataclysm to which illegitimate methods must inevitably lead. If the Holy Father's Encyclical on the Condition of Labor—the great document issued during his great pontificate—could have appeared at the present moment, there is no calculating what its effect might be. —Ave Maria.

Reception and Profession at St. Joseph's Academy St. Paul, Minn.

ISLANDERS INTERESTED.

On St. Joseph's Day, March 19th, a beautiful and impressive ceremony took place in the chapel of St. Joseph's Academy, St. Paul, Minn.

At an early hour their relatives and friends began to assemble and when the procession of clergy filed into the sanctuary every seat, except those reserved for the candidates, was occupied.

When they reached their places Mass was celebrated by Archbishop Ireland and Holy Communion administered to them.

At the conclusion of the Mass the celebrant pointed out the beautiful lesson they should learn from the life of their patron St. Joseph. He laid special stress upon that true interior life of the soul which can only be obtained and fostered by constant communion with the Incarnate Jesus.

At the close of the sermon the postulants knelt at the altar and gave expression to their desire to enter that higher life of the soul which the speaker had portrayed.

Then the novices approached the altar and each one pronounced in clear and distinct tones the vows required by the order.

As the newly-made sisters retired to their places the postulants again entered. But what a transformation had been effected during their absence!

THE WAR!

The work of the pacification of the Free State goes on without interruption. The details are not of thrilling interest, but the results are practical and substantial.

Lord Roberts reports that small columns are going out in various directions to receive arms and regular names. One lowly farm another has been occupied on the line of railway south of Bloemfontein, and there have been cavalry circuits and infantry marches eastward to Thabanchu and Smithfield and westward to Philippolis and Faersmeith.

These are press summaries of these various episodes, but there are no incidents of special significance. In the southern section the Free State has ceased to be. When rifles have been collected and ammunition delivered.

THE MARCH NORTHWARD will be taken in easy stages and the same process of pacification be continued. Gatacre and Clements are carrying their columns northward to the capital east and west of the railroad line, and Roberts' army will have with their reinforcements 60,000 men for forcing the passage of the Vaal River.

The D. & L. Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil will build you up, will make you fat and healthy. Especially beneficial to those who are "all run down." Manufactured by the Davis & Lawrence Co., Ltd.

THE LEINSTER REGIMENTS left Halifax yesterday for England by the S. S. Vancouver. They were given a great send-off. One company remained and will go to the West Indies.

FIELD FODDINGS and MINOR PIES often had bad effects upon the small boy who indulges in them. Pain-Killer is a household medicine for all such ills in unequalled. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis', 25c. and 50c.

BRIDGES and dams along Dunk River suffered severely during the freshets of Friday last. Warren's mill dam at Norborne was nearly all carried away. All the streams in Lot 29 and 30 became rushing torrents, which did considerable damage.

THE EMPHATIC statement that the D. & L. Menlo plaster is doing a great deal to alleviate neuralgia and rheumatism is based upon facts. The D. & L. Plaster never fails to soothe and quickly cure. Manufactured by the Davis & Lawrence Co., Ltd.

WILD GESE were selling in the market yesterday for the first time this season. They brought as high as $1.25 in the morning, but towards evening 80c. would buy almost any offered. Butter has advanced and sold for 28c. There was very little hay in, and what there was brought 45c. Some oats exchanged hands at 80 cents.

A HYMN FOR LENT.

In temptation's dark distress, Lead us through the wilderness, In the way Thine own feet trod, Bleeding, tempted, up to God. Waiting, trembling and afraid, On the mount where Jesus prayed, Teach our humbled souls to share Thirst and pain, and midnight prayer.

Hand that breaks that bruised reed, Save us who are sore indeed! Voice that hushed the sea to peace, Bid our restless strivings cease, Eyes that 'neath their thorny crown, From the cross looked pitying down, Look on us in mercy sweet, Waiting at Thy blood-stained feet.

Waiting, with our sin and loss, In the dust beneath the cross, Bleeding heart and hands and head, All Thy drops for us were shed, And our sin makes all the gloom Of Thy dreary, rock-hewn tomb, Yet our tears that fall like rain, Soothe no wound and wash no stain.

O, forgive us—Heart of grace, Lift our eyes up to Thy face! Let the love that makes us free, Smile on us through Thine agony. Let our sin, our shame, our pride, In Thy death, be crucified; And our lives of love and praise Bless Thee on for Lenten days.

Dr. Low's Worm Syrup is pleasant to take, is always effective, and as it carries its own Cathartic, there is no need of giving Castor Oil or any purgative afterwards.

CHAPTER XXIV.

AT HOME AGAIN.

On the morning of the next day Loser repeated his self-accusation in presence of the Public Prosecutor, and his deposition was sent in to the Minister of Justice the same day. A cablegram was forthwith sent to the Governor of Port-de-France, ordering him immediately to strike number 5,348, Francis Montmoulin by name, off the roll of convicts, and send him, as a first-class passenger by the next ship that was sailing for France.

He was wanted to appear at a new trial, since the real perpetrator of the crime for which he had been wrongly condemned, had given himself up to justice. The message did not reach the Governor of New Caledonia for about a fortnight, as no steamer was leaving Brisbane for Port-de-France until some days after its arrival. The orders it contained were forwarded without delay to the commandant of the island; but number 5,348 was hundreds of miles away, at work in the copper mines in the north-western division of the larger island. A coasting vessel was at once despatched to bear the joyful tidings to the convict, but several weeks elapsed before Father Montmoulin learned that he was to return to his country, and that the restitution of his good name, of his liberty, of the right to exercise his sacerdotal functions was in store for him. He could hardly believe this to be true when he heard it; he sat down and cried like a child for very joy of heart.

The Superior and some of the Marist Fathers from the mission at Balsad, as soon as the news reached them, hastened to congratulate the priest, of whose presence among the convicts they had till then been ignorant, on his release and the vindication of his innocence. They brought with them a cassock, in order that he might exchange the convict's garb for a more befitting habitment. With feelings of the deep and grateful gratitude to Almighty God, Father Montmoulin once more put on the clerical garment, and repaired to the simple little mission chapel, to offer the Holy Sacrifice for the first time in three years. The good Marist Fathers sympathized in his joy, and the native convicts, to whom they explained, as well as they could the severe trial that the holy man had undergone, pressed round him to kiss the hands that were adorned by the good wishes and prayers of missionaries and convicts, he set out on the long road voyage homeward, over a wide stretch of the Pacific, over the Indian Ocean, through the Red Sea. But as he neared the coast of Europe, and the shores of his native land, an element of anxiety, of dread, began to mingle with an anxiety in his happy anticipation, his eager longing. How would it all end? Would his innocence be fully, indubitably proved? He was still a condemned convict, under the surveillance of an agent of the police, who accompanied him. And his aged mother? Would he find her still alive, rejoicing to welcome back her dearly-loved Francis, once more free and acquitted of all stain, or would trouble and anguish of heart have brought her gray hairs in sorrow to the grave?

No, she was yet living, and awaiting with anxious expectancy the arrival of the steamer that had her son on board. On the day following that upon which Loser had so suddenly re-appeared, Mr. Meunier had gone into La Grange, to acquaint the venerable Father under whose hospitable roof Father Montmoulin's mother and sister had found a home with the joyful intelligence that their friend's character would now be cleared of reproach in the sight of all men. The old priest called his housekeeper, Mrs. Jardiner, and communicated to her the glad news; then they both went to her mother's room to prepare her to bear the good news. But before they could speak, the delight that beamed from their countenances pleased the old lady that something pleasant was to be announced to her, and her maternal affection quickly divined the message they were to bring, for what else could give her joy but good news about her son, of whom she thought day and night, for whose release she prayed day and night?

"You have come to tell me some news about Francis?" were the words wherewith she greeted them. "Yes, mother, the best news you can imagine," her daughter replied. "Has his innocence been proved at last?" she asked, pale and agitated.

"You have guessed aright," Mr. Meunier answered. "The real murderer has given himself up to justice. And what is more, not only is your son's innocence fully and firmly established, but every one will now see that he was a martyr to duty, a victim to the seal of confession."

"Glory be to God! Praise and thanks to His holy name," cried the aged mother, raising her hands to heaven, while her eyes brimmed over with happy tears. "Even if I never see my son again, I still say, May His holy name be praised and blessed evermore. My son's character is proved blameless, and the lamentable scandal that was given through him is oblated into a triumph and glory for the priesthood."

Many weeks came and went without Mrs. Montmoulin hearing anything more of her son. In fact she did not even know whether he was living or dead. At length a telegram came from the Government of New Caledonia, to the effect that Father Montmoulin had embarked on board the steamer Liberty for Europe, Mr. Meunier wrote to inform her of this, adding that the vessel might be expected in about six or seven weeks. At the end of the six weeks, the old lady could wait no longer, but must needs go to Marseilles, where a letter from the kind priest of La Grange procured for her a friendly reception in a convent. There she had an opportunity of seeing her grandson Charles every day. He was now almost twelve years old, and quite a favorite in the missionary college on account of his diligence and good conduct. Just then he was more than ever on his best behavior, as he was preparing to make his First Communion. He had never forgotten to pray for his uncle, and always said: "He is quite innocent, and I am sure God will make his innocence plain." How delighted he was to hear that his prayer was granted?

At length it was announced in the shipping news that the Liberty had left the Suez Canal, and would probably enter the harbor of Marseilles in four or five days. On hearing this Mr. Jardiner, having previously feigned her daughter from Arles, rejoiced to Marseilles, as did also Mr. Meunier, Father Regent and several of the clergy; so that when the Liberty steamed into port there was a goodly group of old friends assembled on the quay to welcome the home-coming priest. As soon as the vessel cast anchor, they hastened on board, and the Captain conducted Father Montmoulin to them. All stood aside respectfully, while he embraced his aged mother, his sister and her children. Tears filled the eyes of all the bystanders who witnessed the touching scene.

The joy of meeting again was not unmingled with grief; for both mother and son read in each other's countenance and a glance how grievously each had suffered in the three years that were past; the mother had become a feeble, tottering old woman, and the son's hair was prematurely thin and grey. "What does it matter," he said when his mother had expressed her regret at this change, what does it matter if my hair turns grey ten years sooner or later? My arms and hands are all the stronger," he added with a smile.

The mother kissed the consecrated hands, now roughened and hardened by compulsory labor, and said: "You are right, what does anything matter now that God has turned all to good; let us give Him thanks! Only do not grow proud through all the praise and notice that will be showered on you, in return of the shame and reproach of the last three years." Then the priest caught sight of his venerable friend Father Regent, and others whom he knew and loved; he went up to them, and shook them heartily by the hand, but he was too much agitated to reply to their kind speeches, otherwise than by a few broken sentences of grateful acknowledgment. Mr. Meunier handed him an official document, summoning him to appear in Court on Monday of the next week, and at the same time formally restoring him to liberty. A similar notification was delivered to the Police agent, who was in charge of him. That official withdrew at once, amid polite excuses, and Father Montmoulin was free to leave the steamer with his friends. Accompanied by them, he climbed the hill whereon stands the sanctuary of Notre Dame de la Garde; a place of pilgrimage whither the sailors and seafaring inhabitants of Marseilles are wont to repair after a prosperous voyage, to give thanks to the blessed Mother of God. Before leaving the shrine, Father Montmoulin was seen to hang up beside the miraculous image a portion of the manacles he wore in New Caledonia, and which he had brought away with him as a memento of the time he served there as a convict.

On the following Monday, the legal proceedings were reopened in Aix, Father Montmoulin, at the pressing invitation of His Grace the Archbishop, occupied apartments in the archiepiscopal palace; and when he appeared in Court, it was in the company of the Archbishop and several of the principal ecclesiastics of the diocese. The building was crowded, more so even than it was for the trial three years before, if that could be possible. Care had been taken to reserve good places for Father Montmoulin's former parishioners. Dr. Corbillard was there, and also the Mayor, on whom recent events had made a deep and salutary impression. Seeing old Susan, he actually went so far as to offer her his hand, and ask her to forgive him, whereas the aged servant was moved to tears. "Aye, aye, Sir," she said, "we were all blind about the matter. But whoever could have thought that Loser had been to confession to him, and that he would become quite a changed man. Even Mr. Prosecutor would sooner have believed that the devil carried him to the place of the murder."

Seats were reserved for Father Montmoulin's mother and sister, at their side were Charles and Julia and at no great distance Mr. and Mrs. Lenoir had places. The little woman could not refrain from reminding her husband how sorely he had been deceived in the opinion he formed of the sacrilegious Loser, and that she had been right about him all along. "Thank God," suggested the baker good humoredly, "but in this case you were right; but that we know you always are. Now do be good enough to hold your tongue for half an hour, if you please can, for the lawyers are coming into court. You shall talk as much as you like all this evening."

The proceedings did not occupy much time. As a matter of form Father Montmoulin had to take his place in the dock. The President reopened the case in a brief speech, in which he dwelt on the fallibility of the decisions of human justice, and expressed the gratification it gave him that a verdict, wrongfully given in consequence of delusive appearances, could on that day be at least in some measure set right. Loser was then brought forward; his declaration was read aloud, and he himself cross-examined. In a clear voice, audible throughout the court he acknowledged his guilt, and said that he confessed the crime the same day to Father Montmoulin. This statement produced a stir among the audience, as the speaker evidently intended it to do, by the emphatic manner in which he made it. When he had ended, the President asked him what was his motive that prompted him to make this self-accusation. He answered; "partly the reproaches of my conscience, but principally the heroic devotion to duty exhibited by the clergyman, who chose rather to be condemned although innocent, in my place than in the slightest degree violate the seal of the confessional." Here again a murmur of applause was heard in the assembly.

It is simply wonderful the number of western women who are coming forward to tell of the curative powers of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. This time it is Mrs. Geo. Hobbs, druggist of Morden, Man., a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, as I was very bad with heart trouble at the time. I used the one box and got almost instant relief. I then bought another box, but only had to use a few of the pills, as I have never been troubled with palpitation since using them. I am very thankful that I got the pills, and if it will be of any use to others suffering as I did you may publish it in the papers."

Chest Feels Tight. You seem all choked up and stuffed up with the cold—and it hard to breathe. Cough that rages and tears you—but little phlegm get going. Now's the time to take Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup before things get too serious. There is no remedy equal to it for making the breathing easy, loosening the phlegm and removing all the alarming symptoms of a severe cold. I caught a severe cold which settled on my chest, making it feel raw and tight. Seeing Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup advertised I procured a bottle, which greatly relieved me. It loosened the phlegm, healed the lungs, and soon had me perfectly well. NARR. McKEE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

March and the Lion. SOMETHING BETTER THAN THE OLD SAW. The saying about the lion and the lamb in March often proves false, but there is another and a better one which is literally true. When March comes in and finds you taking Hood's Sarsaparilla to purify, enrich and vitalize your blood, you may expect, when it goes out, that it will leave you free from that tired feeling, and with none of the boils, pimples and eruptions which manifest themselves because of impure blood in the spring. If you have not already begun taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for your spring medicine, we advise you to begin to-day. We assure you it will make you feel better all through the coming summer.

Ask for Minard's and take no other, Foreman—We need a few lines to fill up a column. Society Editor (wearily)—Well, say "The Prince of Wales has begun wearing old clothes, because they are more comfortable." Perhaps it will start a fashion that you and I can follow.

Rheumatism. It is completely driven from the system by Minard's Rheumatic Pills. They give relief from the pain, limber up the stiff joints and cure when other methods of treatment fail.

"He is the only survivor of the thirty years' war, in which he was a participant." "Nonsense! The thirty years' war occurred centuries ago."

"Not the one I mean. It ended only last week with the death of his wife."

Minard's Liniment Lun-berman's friend. Optimist—Don't you know thoroughly enjoy these prosperous times? Pessimist—No; they make me awfully sad. You know very well that when we have good weather it always means that sooner or later we are going to have bad weather.

"And what do you call that wheel whizzing around there?" inquired a visitor in the machinery department. "South American republic, sir," answered the guide. "That's odd. What do you call it that for?" "Owing to the number of its revolutions, sir."

Minard's Liniment is used by Physicians. COVERED WITH SORES. It is practically impossible to heal up sores or ulcers, especially the old chronic kind, with ordinary remedies. No matter how large or of how long standing they may be, however, they heal up readily and stay healed permanently when Burdock Blood Purifiers are used.

Haszard and Moore, Printers, Book-binders, Booksellers, Seedsmen, Fancy Goods, HASZARD MOORE'S Sunnyside. High Grade Kerosene Oil.

Our Kerosene Oil is giving splendid satisfaction this year. It burns both bright and clear and does not smoke up the Lamp Chimneys. Our sales of it are steadily increasing, showing that the people know a good thing when they get it. When your can is empty again, bring it to us and have it filled with our high-grade Oil at a very low price.
