Frimary Schooling. By JAMES RICHARDSON.	One thing can safely be predicted of the teaching of the future, and that is.	that it will be widely different from what is current now. Just how it will differ it may be impossible to say but	the direction of the change is plain smongh: - the children will be tasked est and taught more, while in sense and	intellect they will enjoy an amount of culture scarcely dreamed of by the pres-	who have not resources. Almost	any unsponed boy beginning at the age of twelve can master by his fifteenth	year all the lessons of the common school course, even if his earlier years	have not turned to good advantage edu- cationally. Yet the same boy might be	steadily overtasked to do the same work In treble the time at an earlier period.	It is untimely work that overtaxes, work which should not be attempted	until a later period of the pupil's devel- opment. Instruction like food, must be	suited to the receiver's power of assimi-	advout, clast the useress, it not injurates, and mental effort, like manual toil, must	be adapted to the doer's strength, or 1t is more likely to hurt them help him.	All this is wretchedly commonplace in theory, but in practice it is curiously	disregarded, especially in the conduct of primary education The early acquisition	of useful knowledge is accounted the first object of education by most feachers	and parents; and unhappily the useful- ness of knowledge is more frequently	estimated by its possible service to the man than by its power to stimulate the	development of the child studies hard, retains	little, and closes his school life impressed rather by the weariness of much study	tian by any sense of intellectual skill and nonzon-relat to be done with shird	rather than eager to go on in his en-	But as we have said, there is a better	ally changed: a time when to inform a	form in him we shought uses of thinking, a desire to knew. and a settled habit of	pursuing knowledge in the right way. A Mistake.	An absurd mistake led on one occasion to the temporary confinement of the late	Lord Chancellor of Ireland in a mad house. From their gee- graphical position Canadians will always	be in a special' favorable position for the European markets, and though there	may have been a great amount of very	Provinces by our neighbors, yet that can	only have effect for a short time. For really good flour Canadians can compete	in the markets of the Lower Provinces with the most pushing, go-shead Yan	kees, and can and do compete with suc- cess. What is imported into Ontario or Orehood is simulation is successive or if one	of this retained for consumption, it is in order to displace some of native growth	which is of superior quality, and will command, therefore, a superior price a-	broad. It is quite a possible thing that even Ontario farmers may sometimes	use American flour simply because they covet the better price for their own, and	are willing to put up with the inferior article for their own use. But even	though such cases could be adduced they would prove nothing in favor of an im-	port duty. Still it would be true that all the produce of the country could not	be consumed by its inhabitants, and the surplus, whatever that might be, would	nave to be taken ensewhere for a market and be disposed of at the prices ruling there There there is not seen by the	dental protection-the only kind, by the way rate can reasonably	be defended - while there would be the	of the Lower Provinces, as if there were the desire to benefit the Ontario farmer	at their expense when really there would be nothing of the kind either desired or	effected.
