WON BY A SCHOOL MA'AM.
The school directors of district No. 19, Perry township, were holding a meeting Monday morning at the residence of the chairman, when a paper was placed on the table, which had been sent them by the editor of the Observer, Hillsboro, N. B. The paper was a notice of a contest for the best paper written by a school child. The notice stated that the contest was open to all school children of the district, and that the prize was a gold watch valued at $100. The notice also stated that the contest was to be held on the 1st of October, and that the winner was to be named by the school directors.

Who is she? was his first question after the services were concluded, addressed, as it happened, to Miss M. Larkin, who had come in late. "That's the latter asked, in astonishment. 'Why, that's our teacher, that's my wife she's with, don't you see I am writing to take them home.' Steve Tenney found himself wishing quite frequently after that the new teacher would come to him about the broom and water-pail.

Not that he should furnish them if he found they were not needed, but he felt that he should not object to an interview with the school-teacher. He even mentioned the subject to Mr. Larkin carelessly, when he met him one day. "Well, you see," was the response, "she sort of hates to come to you. The way you left about her leaving the school has got all around town and I suppose she's heard of it. She can't help what her father was, Molly can't, and she's real smart."

The young man looked disturbed. Then after he left his work at an early hour—not, however, admitting to himself his purpose in doing so—he strolled down the street, turning off—but he persuaded himself that it was not intentional—in the direction of the school-house. The little teacher looked considerably startled when she opened the door to him. She dropped the spelling-book she held, and her voice was hardly steady as she expressed her gratification at seeing him.

Evidently, Steve reflected, some idiot pointed him out to her—at church the other evening. He sat down in a front seat, feeling unpleasantly queer. She was hearing the last spelling-class. How pretty she looked standing there in her dark blue calico dress and white apron. What a sweet voice she had, though putting out "hen, men, pen," to a lot of fidgeting youngsters could hardly do it to the best advantage.

When the class was dismissed and the last small student had rushed whooping down the street, the teacher and the young director stood looking at each other with some awkwardness. "I thought I'd come," said Steve, at last, apologetically, "and see if anything is needed."

He did not mention the fact of his being some six weeks late in the performance of his duty. The girl dropped her eyes timidly. "I don't think so," she murmured. "What a brute she must think me," Steve reflected, with some self-dignity. He turned carefully to the corner where the broom stood.

"Isn't this pretty far gone?" he said with a conscience stricken glance at his stony end. And the little teacher nodded. "Your water pail seems to leak," she remarked on entering the empty broom closet and wet floor.

"Yes," the girl assented. "I'll see that you have new ones," Steve concluded. And by eye, rewarded by a grateful glance from the teacher's soft eyes as he took her hat from its nail. He took her lunch-bucket from her hand as they started away together, and leaving taken it, could hardly surrender it to Mr. Larkin's care.

He was a little reluctant to surrender it even then, for their first awkwardness had quite worn off their walk had been more pleasant and they were feeling very well acquainted. He walked on in an appreciable amount of personal interest in the things she had said, and recalling her pretty face as he went.

It was the young director, and he was coming toward her. "I won't make any excuse, Miss Sanborn," he said, with a humorous salutation. "I won't say I'm going over to the river on business and happened to 'drop in' on you, but it's a carefully laid plot. Will you be an aider and abettor?"

The little teacher laughed appreciatively as he helped her into the buggy. "I must stop at Larkin's and leave my dinner-pail," she said demurely. Mr. Larkin was standing at the front gate. He stood staring at the young director, as the latter assisted the teacher to the ground and sat down on the horse block waiting for her.

"Lyme Day was here after Molly just now," he said gaily. "I sent him down to the school-house." "We met him," said Steve. "You see," he added, making a bold attempt at earnestness, but speaking, nevertheless, in a shamefaced way and avoiding the little man's eye. "You see, I feel as though I'm bound duty to keep Lyme Day away from her pure impunity."

The little teacher came tripping back, and the young director's guilty white face hid away in a cloud of dust. "Steve Tenney," said Mr. Larkin, joining his wife in the kitchen and sinking down into a chair. "I guess the world's coming to an end!"

"Steve Tenney ain't a fool," his wife responded, practically. "I knew he'd get over that ridiculous notion of his and specially after he'd seen Molly." "Says he's doing it from a sense of duty," said Larkin, chuckling slowly as he humor of the situation dawned upon him. "Wonder how far his sense of duty will take him?"

Shouldn't he be surprised at anything? said Mr. Larkin, mysteriously. The Larkins—and, perhaps, Lyme Day—were the only people who were not surprised when the new teacher gave the school at the end of the term and was quietly married to the young director. The chairman of the school board is wondering over it yet.

When the railroad was first opened between Moscow and St. Petersburg it was the subject of great rejoicing to the operations of the northward Russia, who thought there must certainly be some witchcraft or magic in an invention which could make a train of heavy cars run along without horses at the rate of twenty miles an hour, when the best speed of the wagons to which they were accustomed was only three miles an hour, or four at the very outside.

Some of them would not even go within sight of a train, and made the sign of the cross whenever they heard the rattle pass. Others peeped timidly over the railings of the railway station to catch a glimpse of the fearful monster, which they believed to be a living monster, and when the steam-whistle sounded they cried out, "Hear him screaming! He's hungry, and wants to eat somebody!" and took to their heels at once.

But little by little their terror began to wear away. The village priests were seen to go to and fro by train, and the simple country folk thought that what they did could not be wrong. By degrees the peasants themselves began to try the "smoke-wagon" too, and one day an old man named Ivan Petrovitch Masloff, who has never been out of his own village till then, made up his mind to go and have a look at "Mother Moscow," which all Russian possess reverence as the finest city in the world, and the real capital of Russia.

Before the middle of the last century Mr. Masloff's brother, Dr. Nevill Masloff, the astronomer-royal, went as a cadet to India, where he became acquainted with Mr. Clive, afterwards Lord Clive. The acquaintance ripened into intimate friendship and led up to constant association. There hung up in Mr. Masloff's room several portraits, among other a miniature which attracted Clive's frequent attention. One day after the English mail had arrived, Clive asked Masloff if he had received any English letters, adding, "We have been very much misinformed at home, and very much concerned in London circles," Masloff replied, "I had not received any English letter, but then I had in my hand a friend of two afterwards Clive came back to ask for the letter read to him."

"His sister," was the reply—"my sister, whose miniature hangs there." "Is she faithful representation?" further asked Clive. "It is a fine likeness," said Clive, "and her form; but it is unequal to represent the excellence of her mind and character." "Well, Masloff," said Clive, taking his hat and leaving the room, "I will see you, and as speak of me as I really am. Do you think that girl would be induced to come to India and marry me? In the present state of affairs, the less we are able to do to England. Masloff wrote home, and so recommended Clive's suit that the lady acquiesced, went India, and in 1782 was married at Madras to her betrothed husband, and the highest distinction.

GOOD EYESIGHT. So indifferent do many of us become to the common blessings of life that excellent eyesight, perhaps, may be called a source of unhappiness, but it is certainly true that the loss of eyesight is a source of unhappiness. Dr. C. I. Lundy presents the following rules for the better care of the eyes.

1. Do not read or study while suffering from colds, fever, or during recovery from illness.
2. Do not use the eyes too long at a time for near work, but give them an occasional period of rest.
3. Do not read or study while suffering from indigestion.
4. Do not use the eyes too long at a time for near work, but give them an occasional period of rest.
5. Do not use the eyes too long at a time for near work, but give them an occasional period of rest.

FARMING IN SWITZERLAND. FROM THE EXTENSIVE ELEVATION, AND HIGHER OF THE climate of the country, and is rendered useful. Good stable land is very limited and commands $300 per acre, while the choice vineyard lands range from $1,000 to $2,000 per acre. Every square foot of which is reckoned to produce annually two bottles of wine.

The Swiss peasant is an agriculturist, and his life is a study in itself. He is an industrious and conservative farmer, his economy is discernible, and he is not likely to be a speculator. While the land is out of its own money, it is in the hands of the peasant, who is the real owner of the soil. He is a man who is not likely to be a speculator, and he is not likely to be a speculator.

How to Clear Wood Land. It is not enough to go into the woods and clear them, it is also to clear them and to clear them. Long ago the practice of burning and logging ceased, and since then forests have only been thinned by the annual removal of wood as it was needed. The disadvantage of this was that the best trees were always left, leaving only the less valuable kinds of timber. Thus the valuable kinds of wood are constantly decreasing and in many places it consists only of scrubby and gnarled trees not worth the cost of working up.

Little Elsie—"Oh, Mr. Bell! When did you get well?" Street (who comes out of the Elsie's big sister "Get out, little girl! Why do you ask that?" "Little Elsie—" "Because I heard you say this morning that you were well, but you were so very sick that you were dead!" "You were sick, but you were not dead!" "You were sick, but you were not dead!" "You were sick, but you were not dead!"

What the new teacher closed school on Friday night she was feeling rather worn out, as she was off to bed at the end of the week, she did the best of the four miles' walk tomorrow to clear her. She looked the door and started down the path with a sigh. A neat little buggy was coming briskly up the road. Molly gave a start as the driver pulled up to the horse and opening to the ground.
