They contradicted one another, appealed to the House on points late law examination held in Toronto the of order, and were defeated. They were Schoiarship awarded by the Law Society so justly and severely lashed by Mr. Blake that they alternately stormed and Wade of Brockville, along with the usual IN THE NEW BUILDING, whined. But the conduct of the Premier and the mis-statements of the Provincial Secretary were so unusual and extraordinary, that not even their own supporters manifested the least sympathy for them: but really seem to be amused with tne entertainment afforded them."

Turkey and Greece.

The relations of the Greek government and that of the Ottoman Porte have at last reached a crisis. As will be seen by our despatch, the Sultan has sent his ultimatum to King George. The Turkish Ambassador at the Court of Athens has been recalled, and the Greek Ambassador in Constantinople has received his passports. The next thing naturally would be a proclamation of war. Late advices say that Russia has interfered with friendly counsel. It remains to be seen whether Russia will be able to prevent hostilities. The presumption is that we shall have a fresh council of all the great Pow ers on this vexed Eastern question.

More T ouble in Spain.

As will be seen by our Cable despatch. the demonstration by the republicans in Cadiz has assumed serious proportions. The government troops were called out to put down a procession, and a fight ensued The insurgents had erected barricades and were in possession of some of the strongholds in the city. At latest advices an armistice was agreed on, but we are afraid the trouble is not yet ended.

County Court and Quarter Sessions.

George Fladd was acquitted on the charge of having stolen a heifer from Joel Boyle, of Peel. Mr. Peterson and Mr. Palmer for the prosecution; Mr. Drew for the defence.

THE QUEEN vs. JAMES GIBSON.—The charge against the prisoner was the same as that against Fladd, it being alleged that he was concerned in the theft. A jury was empannelled and a verdict of not guilty accepted by the prosecution.—Counsel the same as in the last case.

THE QUEEN vs. SUSANNAH WISE.—The prisoner, a little girl of 12 or 13 years of age, was charged with stealing a dress and a pair of gaiter boots from Agnes Bell, of Puslinch. She had no one to appear for her, but the prosecution dealt very leniently with her. The their was clearly proved, and a verdict of guilty rendered. Sentenced to one month in gaol.

Before being discharged, which they were about noon to-day, the Grand Jury brought in the following PRESEXTMENT.

We, the Grand Jury, beg to make the following presentment: In accordance with your Honour's lucid charge, we have endeavoured to dispose of the several bills of indictment to the best of our ability. We are sorry for the sake of morality that each of the offences that have come before us has been of a character so strongly supported by positive evidence that we were left no alternative but to find true bills, excepting in one case; and we find the use of intoxicating beverages has been to a great extent the cause of the crimes that have been brought befori us.

Restive Followers

The Toronto correspondent of the Hamilton Times gives us in the following extract an idea of the degree of harmony which exists among the friends and supporters of the Patent Combination:—

"A singular change has come over a large portion of the Conservative supporters of the Patent Combination:—

"A singular change has come over a large portion of the Conservative supporters of the Patent which the Premier so frequently and unmercifully flagellates them. The member for South Norfolk has boilted, and may be ranked with the Opposition, thus offsetting the addition of Carling of South Huron to the Ministerial ranks. The Ministry itself is in the condition of the 'happy family," in the show, and several of their Conservative supporters complain bitterly, while others have made up their minds to bolt should a suitable opportunity to annoy the 'crotchety Premier, in retaliation for the insults he has occasionally cast upon the crotchety Premier, in retaliation for the insults he has occasionally cast upon the crotchety Premier, in retaliation for the insults he has occasionally cast upon the crotchety Premier, in retaliation for the insults he has occasionally cast upon the crotchety Premier, in retaliation for the insults he has occasionally cast upon the crotchety Premier, in retaliation for the insults he has occasionally cast upon the crotchety Premier, in retaliation for the insults he has occasionally cast upon the crotchety Premier, in retaliation for the insults he has occasionally cast upon the crotchety Premier, in retaliation for the insults he has occasionally cast upo that this support is given because of the coarse personal and offensive attack made by the Premier upon Mr. Barber. It only proves the amiable and forgiving spirit of the member for Halton.

So you play with these things; then I will give you a chance for life,,—he snatched up a petronel as he spoke—'if you be a witch, common lead will not hurt you, but if you be more than the false Jezbel I take you for, then you shall say good bye to earth—aha, play you so hot?'
She had fired and missed. Before abe could make an effort to save herself, he had fired, and she fell with a wild shrick to the floor. Father, son and mother have fellen to the who neard it, when strange sounds were heard! that seemed to be token of its speedy fulliment.

There was a rushing sound as of a great see breaking upon shore, a confusion of voices, and a tramp of many feet, and then before the mosstroopers had sufficiently recovered from their aurprise a host of armed men burst in upon them.

There was a wild din and clatter of arms, shricks, groans, and oaths. Above the babble rose the voice of Sir Walter Spens—

Now, Tushielaw, if you be not as much coward as villain, detend yourself.

"To me Barras, shouted Gilbert, encountering the cunning serpent, as he was quietly seeking some loophole to escape from the place in the confusion of the fray.

With a venemous flash in his red eyes, he crossed swords with Gilbert, acting wholly in defensive for some minutes, and retreating to the wall before his opponent. Then suddenly darting forward he nearly succeeded in throwing Gilbert off his balance, and took advantage of the movement to make a savage thurst at his antagonist. With the rapidity of thought Gilbert regained his balance, and with a dexterous swirl of his sword wrenched the weapon from the hand of Barras and run him through the body.

The man's countenance was distorted by an expression of hate and defiance as he foll dead.

At the same time Tushielaw was crushed to the floor and the sword of Snons was events.

'I seek no mercy,' was the surly and fierce response.

Then die.'
But the Lord Warden of the Middle Marches, who had been brought thither by a messenger from Spens, stayed his hand.

'I have another fate for the villian. Away with him to the gallows tree, on which too many honest men have perished at his command.'

Four sturdy fall ows saired the second stayed the second second many honest men have perished at his command.

Four sturdy fellows seized the now defence less Tashielaw and dragged him to the gallows tree, the main branch of which was notched with ropes used in hanging the victims of his hate or cupidity, and where he now was to perish himself.

A stout cord was at hand, and a noose was speedily made, and in the red glare of the torches Adam Scott, dour, bold and defiant to the last, was strung up, and died the most ignominious of deaths, as he had lived the most lawless of lives.

The brief contest was over. Lady Spens had at the beginning of the strife been led away to a chamber, where she found Mistress Douglas in the highest glee, only regretting that she had not been allowed to war hose and jerkin for the occasion.

The prison of the occasion was not unfortunate Kirsty Hyslop, who was care every formulate and the sight of her son Gliph Horour restored her to sensibility and hope as with the touch of a magician's wand.

The prison of the dwarf and the fate that had been insteaded for him had been revealed by Yetholm Will in the hope of finding some favour for land aware of the change of affairs in the tower. Hornie went out to have a look at his late master. He gave one of his great laughs as he saw the huge form dangling lifeless in mid air, gave a wild caper of delight around it, then hield him to his mother, whose venege.

The party remained till morning in the tower, and before quitting it, Spens, in the presence of Gilbert and Mary Douglas, presented to his wife the letter he had received from Barras in the Hospice.

Laty Spens took Mary, whose face was erimson, by the hand and led her forward.

This is the lady."
Gilbert dropped upon his knees betore her. 'Madam' he said carnestly, 'my life is yours, my heart you have taken long ago, and therefore I have nought to offer you, but can only pray that you will be merciful to one who loves you truly.'

Despite her confusion, Mary cast a sly coquettish glance upon the gainly youth at herefeet.

'Perhaps I will be merciful, Master Elliot—when we are alone,' she said in an undertone. 'Take this to remind me of my pledge.' She gave him the small golden crucifus she had received from Crawford: He recognised it; she explained how she had obtained it, and Lady Spens informed him that it had been his mother's, showing her name and his father's engraven on it.

'Then by this it was Barras recognised me,' he said, remembring the scene in the dungeon of the tower, of which they were now masters.

The joy of all was great, a bright sun seemed to have dawned upon the morning of their happier life. It is no marvel that they were filled with excess of gladness in this happy meeting, to whigh they had passed through so many cruel ordeals.

A METEOR.—A night or two since, the moon was partially obscured by a light, fleecy cloud, a moteor ball, very luminous, of a silvery hue, extremely brilliant, and to the eye somewhat harger in appearance than the moon isself. At first it appeared in the shape of a perfect globe, then gradually curled itself until it spread into one immense sheet of liquid fire, and formed letters reading nearly as follows:
