Music will be given by a chorus of children led by Mr. Alchib. This promises to be an attractive evening for the young people especially.

Local and Other Items
Henry Young, colored, the murderer of Frank Hahn, the Virginia drover, was hanged in Washington on Saturday.

Various plans were discussed in Washington as to the best method of raising money in case of war. An additional issue of greenbacks was thought to be most probable.

The thermometer registered 14 degrees below zero at Ottawa on Sunday night, at 9 o'clock, and on Monday it was 4 degrees below zero. Such intense cold has not been known at Ottawa in the memory of its oldest residents.

Before day-break yesterday, seven masked men, all young, boarded the brig Mattano, lying off the Battery, and severely shot in the leg the captain when challenged by him. They then gagged and bound the mate and steward, and while two of their number mounted guard over them the others valdly took from the captain's wife jewelry valued at $1,000.

About half-past three on Monday morning a fire broke out in the basement of Alice street Methodist Church, Toronto, which resulted in the total destruction of the edifice. The loss will be very heavy, though there is an insurance to the extent of $10,000. The walls, which are of brick, are still standing, and it is the opinion of the church authorities that $13,000 will suffice to re-construct the edifice. The snow, which was falling at the time acted as a reflector and gave the edifice an appearance of a great conflagration.

Railway By-Law Carried.
SARATOGA, Dec. 1.—The vote on the by-law of the County of Perth granting a bonus of $80,000 to the Stratford and Huron, and $40,000 to the Port Dover and Lake Huron Railroad, came off to-day in the face of the most determined opposition in the South Riding.

Hard Times in the Cities.
The Toronto correspondent of the Hamilton Times says:—
"The lessening of wages by the Grand Trunk Railway, the cessation of work by many contractors, the slackness among certain manufacturing businesses, the ingress of laborers from the United States at the beginning of winter, the high price of fuel, rents, taxes, etc., all combine to render the prospects for the poor gloomy, but gratifying for the winter."

A similar story comes from Montreal, thus:—
Great distress is being experienced here on account of a large number of large firms discharging a number of the hands in their factories, or else reducing the hours of labor to three-quarters time, or reducing wages 10 to 20 per cent. The large foundries have all done so, and still mechanics are flocking in from the States.

A Toronto correspondent says:—
"Mr. Moss' prospects in the Western Division are daily brightening, and a goodly number of Conservatives have not only promised him their personal support, but have allowed their name to be added to the working committee, and are canvassing for him. The result of the election in Lennox has given another blow to the Scandal party here, and they are working under the disadvantage of an anticipated defeat. Mr. Moss' return is scarcely questioned, the Mail to the contrary, notwithstanding."

Corrected returns give Mr. Cartwright's majority in Lennox as fifteen more than was at first reported. The correct figures are: Cartwright 1,531, Hooper 708; majority 823.

MANUFACTURER OF COCOA.—We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Epps & Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works in the Euston Road, London. See article in Cassell's Household Guide.

BY TELEGRAPH

THE MARINE DISASTER.
220 LIVES LOST.

Particulars of the Collision.

London, Dec. 1.—The ship Trimountain, from New York, arrived at Cardiff at an early hour this morning, bringing the intelligence of a dreadful disaster to the steamship Ville de Havre, under command of Captain Surmont, at two o'clock on the morning of the 23rd of November. The Ville de Havre collided with the British ship Lockearn, from London for New York, and sunk shortly after. Two hundred and twenty-six of the passengers on the steamer lost their lives. The Trimountain rescued 87 of her passengers and crew and brought them to Cardiff.

Later.—There were eighty-seven saved from the wreck of the Ville de Havre, with the Captain, five officers, fifty-four of the crew, and twenty-seven passengers, as follows: Miss Mary Hunter, Miss Annie Hunter, Miss Helene Mixer, Miss Madeline Mixer, Emile Cooke, Rev. N. Weiss, Mrs. H. & G. Spafford, James Bishop, Mr. Charles Creste, Miss Bresson, Frances Ideo, Hippolyte Vaisie, R. and A. Withams, Mr. F. Marconnet, Xavier Pequinot, Mr. Larus G. Burriet Carie, Miss Cornelia Edgar, M. B. Marie Bulkyer, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. R. Curts, Mr. Andrew B. McCreery, Mr. Francis Henry Bellman and Legrand—probably Bangrand.

3 p.m.—The eighty-seven persons saved from the wreck of the Ville de Havre were rescued by the Lockearn and not the Trimountain, as first stated. They were transferred from the Lockearn to the Trimountain. On the same day the survivors reached Bristol. To-day there is intense excitement in London over the disaster. The newspaper bulletins boards are surrounded by great crowds in quest of information.

A Herald special dated London, Dec. 1st says:—"The purser of the s. s. Ville de Havre gives the following narrative of the disaster:—We were seven days out. It was on Saturday night, I was sleeping when the collision occurred. Rushing on deck I descried a sailing ship, and three minutes later I gained a fearful conviction that the ship was going down by the bow. Thirty or forty passengers managed to get into the long boat, but when freed from the sinking ship the mizenmast suddenly fell over the left side of the vessel, killing or wounding nearly all of them. Immediately afterwards the main mast fell on the deck, killing and wounding more. The water was rushing down the wind-pipe with fearful velocity. When the vessel was sinking I jumped overboard with another person and swam toward the Lockearn, half a mile off. On looking around I saw the steamer disappear without realising, going down bow foremost. For a moment a mighty shriek rent the air, the last outbreak of agony; a deathlike calm succeeded the noise and tumult. The Captain remained on the bridge during the whole scene, and was rescued one hour later. Six officers out of fifteen were saved by swimming except the First Lieutenant, who went in a boat to the Lockearn." The purser gives a touching narrative of the presence of mind of a French priest, who stood in deathlike calmness on deck dispensing blessings. Boats crisped about until ten o'clock next morning in hopeless efforts to pick up other survivors. We remained on board the British ship until three o'clock p.m., and were then transferred to the American ship Trimountain, commanded by Capt. Urquhart, who gives the following narrative:—On Saturday morning we saw a vessel off our weather bow, with bowsprit gone and sails floating, which proved to be the Lockearn of Glasgow, bound for New York. Her captain asked to transfer the surviving passengers and crew of the steamer Ville de Havre which sank at two o'clock that morning. All except two, one a French priest and the other a person who remained to act as nurse, were transferred. It was a painful sight to see these human beings huddled together in a small cabin, heart-broken and destitute of clothing, but still thankful for their lives and grateful for the hospitality received on board the Lockearn. Many were hurt by fragments of the wreck. We arrived till nearly dark and then proceeded on our voyage to Bristol. Not a vestige of the Ville de Havre, man, woman or child could be discovered in the neighborhood of where the collision occurred. There was a rather heavy sea but little wind when the disaster occurred. The shock of the collision was fearful, and the rapidity in which the steamer went down prevented the launching of more than the whole boat and the captain's gig. In twelve minutes after being struck the ship went down. The terror among the passengers paralyzed all efforts to save them. Many never quitted their state-rooms, whole families meeting their death together.

HAVRE, Dec. 1.—The French authorities have ordered an investigation into the loss of the steamer Ville de Havre.

About Tweed.
New York, Dec. 1.—It is rumored that Tweed dropped dead this morning while leaving his cell.

New York, Dec. 1.—There are no fears of the death of Tweed at the Penitentiary, on Blackwell's Island. He is sick with an attack of the diarrhoea, and has been transferred to the hospital.

New York, Dec. 1.—The rumor that Tweed is dying is confirmed by the report at the Mayor's office. It is stated he is in the hospital with inflammation of the brain, and at ten o'clock he was not expected to live till evening.

New York, Dec. 1.—It was ascertained at the office of Commissioners of Charities and Correction that Tweed was not even unwell, on the contrary he had been appointed as one of the hospital orderlies, and had resumed his duties this evening.

ST. ANDREW'S DAY.

CELEBRATION IN GUELPH.
THE SONG AND DANCE.

Scotland's patron saint was honored right merrily in the Town Hall on Monday night. The annual gathering this year took the shape of a concert and ball, as for some years past; and the celebration had been postponed for a day, Nov. 30, 1873, being Sunday. The hall was decorated for the occasion in a manner which we think has not been equalled in Guelph before. Over the platform was a large painting of the Royal arms, with the national colors. Festoons of crimson and plaid drapery ornamented the upper part of the walls, and larger festoons crossed the ceiling. The windows were heavily curtained with looped-up drapery; and the walls were thickly covered with evergreens prettily arranged, amongst which pictures were placed at intervals. The warmth of the colours and the tastefulness of the arrangements gave an exceedingly rich and pleasant effect to the interior. The entire decorations reflect the greatest credit on the Committee, and on all who assisted them.

Soon after seven o'clock the guests began to assemble, to the sound of stirring strathspeys played at intervals by Mr. John Watt, the Society's piper. The sloping gallery erected at the back of the hall had been removed, and the seats on the floor extended to the back of the hall, those on the eastern side being moved close up to the wall, bearing a broad aisle down the centre of the room. By the time of opening, every seat in the hall was full and some of the late arrivals were standing. On the platform were the leading officers of the Society, ex-presidents, Rev. Dr. Hogg, one of the Chaplains, Mr. F. J. Chadwick, President of St. Patrick's Society, and other gentlemen. At a few minutes after eight, the President, Mr. James Innes, rose and delivered the following:—

OPENING ADDRESS.
LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—I greet you to-night, on this the anniversary of the Patron Saint of Scotland, and in the name of the St. Andrew's Society of Guelph welcome you to its annual celebration. To us Scotchmen by birth or descent the day brings up many recollections of a sacred character, which, dimmed often though they may be, and sometimes buried beneath the cares and anxieties of our busy life, on such an occasion as this come out fresh and clear as though they were but the memories of yesterday's events. To you also who hail from other lands this day is of interest, were it only in giving you an opportunity of joining with us in the sacred duty of doing honour to our fatherland, and thus fostering your own patriotism in being witnesses of ours.

It was the good fortune of the three Presidents of the Guelph St. Andrew's Society to visit Scotland last summer, and you will on this account the more readily bear with me for a few moments if I attempt to tell you, however briefly and imperfectly, something of what I saw and how I felt in my visit to our native land.

I need not attempt to describe to you my emotions when first in the grey twilight of early morning the dim outline of the rugged hills of Cantire, the bold front of Arran, and the mist-covered top of Goatfell loomed in sight, or first beheld the wondrous panorama of the Clyde. As a stranger I looked on them with awe and delight, and yet not as a stranger. I claimed them as old and familiar friends. And so it was in every step of my progress through the land—whether gazing on the mountains, standing out in solemn majesty—their peaks hidden in cloud or mist, and their sides furrowed with innumerable torrents—or the secluded glens or fertile straths—or the lonely moors or the ruins of some hoary old fortress or once sacred abbey, the records of which go back till they are lost in the dim light of tradition—or the memorials of the past which you at every step, whose history recalls incidents and episodes which stir the blood, and awaken in us a new and livelier feeling and affection for the land which gave us birth, or to which we are proud to belong.

It would take hours instead of minutes for me to try to give you even the barest outline of my journeyings through Scotland. I found in its cities all the evidences of the enterprise, perseverance and energy which have kept Scotsmen in the front rank of all competitors. I found in the great centres of commerce, and in the great hubs of manufacturing industry, the restless activity, the bold speculation, combined with the careful calculation and incessant watchfulness which are the sure guarantees of success. I found there all the evidences of progress, of great and ever growing wealth, and of the refinement which wealth and prosperity bring in their train. Nor are the evidences of progress less real or less apparent in the rural districts. Bare and bleak hill-sides are year by year being converted into fertile fields. Skillful hands are year by year making profitable lands which in days gone by were covered with heather. And more than all, I found among the people in the rural districts the same qualities which for generations were the great characteristics of their fathers. In these quiet homes will to-day be found the thrift, the earnestness, the moral worth and the God-fearing spirit which constitute the crowning glory of Scotland's peasantry. In hundreds of such homes the picture of Burns' Cotter's Saturday Night can yet be realized to its fullest extent, and we can heartily take up the impassioned words and say with him:—

"From scenes like these, old Scotia's grandeur springs,
That makes her loved at home, revered abroad,
Princes and Lords are but the breath of Kings,
An honest man's the noblest work of God."
And well may we with fervour re-echo the prayer that follows, when the poet in the fullness of his heart says:—
"O! Scotia, my dear, my native soil,
For whom my warmest wish to Heaven is sent,
Long may the hardy sons of rustic toil
Be blest with health and wealth and sweet content.
And O! may Heaven their simple lives preserve
From luxury's contagion weak and vile;
Then, hallow'd crowns and coronets be rent,
A virtuous populace may rise the while
And stand a wall of fire around our much-loved isle."
From these quiet and obscure homes emerge every year hundreds of young men and women, who, thoroughly equipped for their life work, go out into the world, and who in many instances rise step by step until they obtain honourable—may be high—positions in society—the same of their deeds in after years going back to the old homesteads, brightening the fading years of aged parents, and throwing a halo around the place where they were reared. To me such pictures of honest toil and honest poverty—of genuine worth and unaffected simplicity—of manly struggle and ultimate success—were alone worth crossing the Atlantic to see and hear of. It makes one's heart swell with pride when he knows that Scotland can yet boast of such a people, and that so long as they exist, her prosperity will be secured and her glory will remain undimmed.

It would be equally impossible for me to touch on every point of interest I saw. In my wanderings I gazed on her loveliest as well as on her wildest scenery. I looked on spots which for beauty and fertility could scarcely be matched anywhere, and in the same day's journey I stood awe-struck in the presence of scenes which in their wild sublimity realized the most extravagant dream of the poet when he exclaims—
"Land of the forest and the rock—
Of dark blue lake and mighty river;
Of mountains reared aloft to mark
The storm's career, the lightning's shock
My own loved land for ever."
In viewing these scenes and recalling the history connected with many of them, what visions of ancient glory glided around their names—what associations of wild native grandeur—of exquisite beauty and rough magnificence—what gleams of poetic sunlight—what recollections of martial daring by field and flood—what hallowed faith and burning zeal—what martyr sufferings and martyr graves—monuments of freedom's struggles and freedom's triumphs in mountain, moor and glen—what lights and shadows of love and passion—what ancient songs and ballads and war odes echo among the hills—what blessed Sabbath calm and rest from the turmoil of every day life—what reverence for the Bible and the Covenant—in a word what dear and hallowed memories are revived and crystallized as we think of the Auld Lang Syne of dear Auld Scotland—
"As Auld Lang Syne brings Scotland one and all,
Scotch plaids, Scotch broods, the blue hills and clear streams,
The Dee, the Don, the Gowrie's brae,
The wail,
All our boy feelings—all our gentler dreams
Of what we dreamt; clothed in their own
Like Banquo's offspring; floating past me
My childhood. In this childishness of mind
I see not—'tis glimpses of Auld Lang Syne."
And looking at the social position of her people, we found the same characteristics prevailing which in times past distinguished our ancestors. Cautious and slow in many respects, they are in others bold and enterprising. The world to-day acknowledges what they have accomplished in literature, in science, in art, and in all the branches of industry. Their spirit of love and fealty is still predominant, their zeal heartedness, their contempt for shams and their passionate love of freedom is as strong as ever. With many failings—often rough and outspoken—sometimes impetuous in the expression of their opinions, and obstinate in their adherence to them—they have withal a profound enthusiasm and a deep-seated devotion—a keen sense of the grand and beautiful, and these form the main elements of their social and religious life. Of cathedrals old and dim—of cloistered cells, of chants and processions—the pomp and circumstance of insignificant ritual—they have none. But of old and glorious memories, ancient and solemn temples and churches among the woods and hills and in far off sheltered dells, hallowed graveyards, where repose the ashes of men who sternly fought and bravely died for the truth and for freedom—of all things which make a country dear to its people, they have abundance. Their religion strong and masculine as the everlasting hills among which it is reared is yet beautiful in its simplicity. It is a religion of faith and love, of the old Puritans, of the martyrs and confessors of primitive times. It has inwoven itself into the character and every day life of her people, and has become part and parcel of their existence.

When we reflect on all this, can you—can the world—wonder if we cherish a deep-seated, an intense and undying love for our native land? We would be false to our race, untrue to our country, and unworthy the name of Scotsmen, had we any other feeling. And to us who have left that land, and cast in our lot with the people of this country, the responsibility is all the greater, and the duty all the more sacred, to do what we can for this the land of our adoption, seeing that we are the heirs and possessors of such a record as our country furnishes, and the descendants of such ancestors. It is due to us that we should maintain in the home which has descended to us, and in this "Canada of ours"—which has been the scene of our struggles and to which it may be of our triumphs—pragmatic, too, as it is, with a future as glorious as that of Britain—so to labour and so to conduct ourselves as to keep up the credit of our name and of our mother land—to live in fellowship and friendship with those of other nationalities, and with them to work heartily, cordially and earnestly for the advancement of this vast and prosperous Dominion.

THE CONCERT.
Immediately on the conclusion of the President's address the concert was opened, under the management of Mr. H. K. Maitland. Solos, chiefly Scottish yet be realized to its fullest extent, and we can heartily take up the impassioned words and say with him:—

"From scenes like these, old Scotia's grandeur springs,
That makes her loved at home, revered abroad,
Princes and Lords are but the breath of Kings,
An honest man's the noblest work of God."

And well may we with fervour re-echo the prayer that follows, when the poet in the fullness of his heart says:—

"O! Scotia, my dear, my native soil,
For whom my warmest wish to Heaven is sent,
Long may the hardy sons of rustic toil
Be blest with health and wealth and sweet content.
And O! may Heaven their simple lives preserve
From luxury's contagion weak and vile;
Then, hallow'd crowns and coronets be rent,
A virtuous populace may rise the while
And stand a wall of fire around our much-loved isle."

From these quiet and obscure homes emerge every year hundreds of young men and women, who, thoroughly equipped for their life work, go out into the world, and who in many instances rise step by step until they obtain honourable—may be high—positions in society—the same of their deeds in after years going back to the old homesteads, brightening the fading years of aged parents, and throwing a halo around the place where they were reared. To me such pictures of honest toil and honest poverty—of genuine worth and unaffected simplicity—of manly struggle and ultimate success—were alone worth crossing the Atlantic to see and hear of. It makes one's heart swell with pride when he knows that Scotland can yet boast of such a people, and that so long as they exist, her prosperity will be secured and her glory will remain undimmed.

It would be equally impossible for me to touch on every point of interest I saw. In my wanderings I gazed on her loveliest as well as on her wildest scenery. I looked on spots which for beauty and fertility could scarcely be matched anywhere, and in the same day's journey I stood awe-struck in the presence of scenes which in their wild sublimity realized the most extravagant dream of the poet when he exclaims—

"Land of the forest and the rock—
Of dark blue lake and mighty river;
Of mountains reared aloft to mark
The storm's career, the lightning's shock
My own loved land for ever."

In viewing these scenes and recalling the history connected with many of them, what visions of ancient glory glided around their names—what associations of wild native grandeur—of exquisite beauty and rough magnificence—what gleams of poetic sunlight—what recollections of martial daring by field and flood—what hallowed faith and burning zeal—what martyr sufferings and martyr graves—monuments of freedom's struggles and freedom's triumphs in mountain, moor and glen—what lights and shadows of love and passion—what ancient songs and ballads and war odes echo among the hills—what blessed Sabbath calm and rest from the turmoil of every day life—what reverence for the Bible and the Covenant—in a word what dear and hallowed memories are revived and crystallized as we think of the Auld Lang Syne of dear Auld Scotland—

songs, made up the programme, with the exception of two selections played by Vale's Band. Mrs. Oaler (Fergus), Miss Barr, Mr. Maitland, Mr. T. H. Taylor, Mr. Yule, and Mr. McWhirter were the vocalists. "O' a' the Airts the Wind can Blaw" was Mrs. Oaler's first song, and the beauty of this touching ballad was well shown by the quiet unaffected grace and vocal sweetness of the singer. It was deservedly encored. Mrs. Oaler's other songs were "I Heard a Wee Birdie Sing" and that fine old air "The Lass o' Gowrie," both exceedingly well sung. Miss Barr's best song was "Under the Walnut Tree," a pretty piece, which was warmly encored by the audience. In reply "Whistle an' I'll come to ye my Lad" was given. Miss Barr also sang "Within a Mile o' Edinbro' Town" and "Will ye no come back again" the last of which was loudly encored. Mr. Maitland's two songs were "Hurrah for the Thistle" in the first part, and "Hail to the Chief" in the second part of the programme. This last fine song of Sir Walter Scott's, with its stirring refrain "Roderick, Roderick, Vich Alpine dhu ho," was well and expressively sung by Mr. Maitland. The loud encore it received brought Mr. Maitland up again with Burns' noble old strain "A Man's a Man for a' that." Mr. Yule, of Guelph, had a song in each part—"Willie's gane to Melville Castle," "Charlie Come Home"; and Mr. McWhirter sang "The Flowers of the Forest." Vale's band did themselves great credit by their admirable rendering of the overture to Guy Mannering, which was a real musical treat. Mr. Weir, of Galt, gave a characteristic Scotch recitation in a dry humorous manner that was irresistible, and provided a laughing encore. The old favorite, Mr. T. H. Taylor, sang "Barney Mavourneen;" encored, and responded to by "The Englishman," sung with a vigor of expression which told well. In the second part Mr. Taylor "brought down the house" by the humorous vivacity with which he sang "Come under my plaidie," and the exacting audience would not be satisfied until he had made them laugh heartily again by an affecting narrative of a jolly young oysterman who emulated Leander's feat of swimming the Hellespont to see his lady-love, and nearly got harpooned by her grim parent. It was remarkable how much better nearly all the vocalists sang on appearing the second time—in fact, the execution of the first few solos on the programme did not at all give promise of the enjoyable concert which developed itself as the music proceeded; and Mr. Maitland was scarcely himself in the opening song. Auld Lang Syne and God Save the Queen, sung by the audience standing, terminated the concert and ushered in

THE BALL.

An old fashioned Scotch reel, to the music of the Society's piper, opened the ball. This so stirred the blood of some grave middle-aged residents present that they footed it as fealily as theyoungest men present. Quadrilles and round dances followed in rapid succession. The largeness of the attendance rendered movement somewhat difficult, but the arrangements of the committee were exceedingly complete in every respect and well carried out. Supper was laid in the outer portion of the Council Chamber by Mr. Edwards, whose catering gave general satisfaction. The space inside the hall was set apart for non-dancers, amusements such as draughts, cards, and carpet bowls being provided. Music was of course furnished by Vale's band. Sir Roger de Coverley concluded the dancing at some dim and far-off hour in the morning.

The celebration throughout was a brilliant affair, and the most successful and largely attended which has yet been held in Guelph. Besides a large proportion of the scottish element, there was a numerous attendance of the other nationalities, including many prominent citizens.

The President of the Society received a communication from the Memphis St. Andrew's Society, enclosing a complimentary ticket to their dinner, and the following:—

"The St. Andrew's Society of Memphis to the St. Andrew's Society of Guelph, Ont., greeting.

"Memphis at twelve will drink to Old Guelph.

"Old Guelph, whom ne'er a town surpasses "For honest men and bonnie lasses."

"H. T. TOMLINSON, President."

Unfortunately the communication was not received until Tuesday morning, too late for the Guelph Society to respond. It is gratifying to see, however, that in spite of the heavy calamity which has lately fallen upon Memphis, the Scotsmen of that town have still the spirit to devote a social evening to the memories of the old land, and to spare a kindly thought for Scotsmen in the sister land of Canada.

TUESDAY EVENING, DEC. 2, 1873.

Our Municipal Elections.

Some little interest is beginning to be manifested in the approaching Municipal elections. It is nearly a month yet to nomination day, but already our town politicians are speculating as to who will be the likely candidates for the various offices in the gift of the people, and what their chances will be in the event of their being opposed. We regard this early agitation as a healthy sign, inasmuch as it shows that the people are interesting themselves in the affairs of the town, and that they will weigh well the merits of the candidates before pledging them their vote or support. Our expenditure is every year necessarily increasing as the Town continues to grow, but it should be the constant care and study of the Council to keep that expenditure at the lowest point consistent with a due regard to the public interests, and the judicious development and encouragement of our various industries. The business of our Corporation is not what it was some years ago. It has been steadily growing in proportion to the growth of the Town, and the duties of our representatives at the Council Board are now of a more onerous character, and occupy much more of their time than in the good old days when the Municipal machinery would almost run of itself. What we want, therefore, are men whose ideas of their duties are above all petty, or personal, or political considerations, who can bring sound judgment and discretion to bear on questions as they come up for discussion, and who are willing to devote their time and give us the benefit of their experience in order to secure wise and economical management of our affairs.

From among the many reports, floating rumours and probabilities, we are able in some measure to indicate who will be the likely candidates, and proceed to give their names. With regard to the Mayorality Mr. John Harris is the only one as yet spoken of. We regret to say that Mr. Massie positively declines to run again for Reeve on account of his many business engagements, which occupy all his time. Mr. Massie has worked long and earnestly for the advancement of the Town. Possessing great energy, perseverance and public spirit, he has sought to infuse these elements into public affairs, to build up the Town, and foster its prosperity in every possible way. He has given much of his time and all his talents to this object, and thus put the people under obligations which we would like to see recognized. We trust, therefore, that at some future day, when he can spare more time, he will consent to run for Mayor, an honour which he richly deserves. Mr. George Howard, at the request of a large number of influential ratepayers, has consented to run for Reeve in Mr. Massie's place. He is well known to the electors as an old, faithful and valuable public servant. Clear headed, judicious, discreet, and withal thoroughly independent, he makes an excellent Councillor, and whenever he speaks his opinions carry weight. Mr. Howard has long stood high in the estimation of the ratepayers, and we feel sure they will give him their confidence and support on this occasion.

We are also glad to learn that Messrs Raymond and McLagan have acceded to the wishes of many of the ratepayers, and have consented to stand for the Deputy Reeves. A better choice could not have been made, for both gentlemen are popular. Representing as they do an important manufacturing industry in our midst, their presence in the Council will be beneficial in many ways. They will not sacrifice the interests of the Town for mere party feeling, but will act on the principle that their first and highest duty is to seek the public good. They will make a strong team, and if their friends work their election is assured.

As regards the Councillors we hear that Messrs. Elliott and Crowe will be asked to run again, and we trust they will consent. Mr. Elliott is an old, experienced and valuable Councillor, and can always command a large majority in the West Ward. Mr. Crowe has now got his hand well in as regards municipal business, and will be sure to run well should he come forward for re-election. Mr. Wilkie and Mr. George Bruce are also spoken of in connection with this Ward. Both are good men and true, and whoever is selected will secure a good vote.

Mr. Kennedy declares his intention not to run again in the South Ward. We trust he may be induced to reconsider his decision. Mr. D. Molton we are glad to learn has consented to run for this Ward. He will make a very efficient Councillor. Mr. Alex. Ferguson and Mr. James Cormack are also talked of, and in the event of Mr. Kennedy positively declining, we trust they will be induced to stand.

We have pleasure in stating that Mr. D. McCrae and Mr. Wm. Bell have consented to run in the East Ward, and we hope they will be elected. No doubt Mr. Davidson and Mr. Coffee will also be candidates again. Not a few are in favor of bringing out Mr. Dunbar, Barrister, who would make a good member. Mr. John C. Allan is also spoken of.

In the North Ward we are pleased to find that Mr. Robertson and Mr. Hogg will run again, and many of the electors are trying to induce Mr. Mills or Mr. Inglis to stand. We trust one or the other will consent. We have not heard whether Mr. Richard or Mr. Robt. Mitchell intend to run again.

The Rival Clansmen

A Scottish Vendetta.
CHAPTER X.

A REVELATION—MRS GORDON AGAIN THWARTS
IAN M'KENZIE—BROTHER AND SISTER MEET
FORWARD TO CASTLE M'LEOD.

Ian felt stung by her words. There was a low clamish pride in his nature. He could neither brook taunts nor jeers, and, with a muttered oath he exclaimed—

"You are mistaken, Flora Macgregor, you have had enough of license and trifling. Remember you have determined men to deal with, who can ill bear to be duped, and who will give you no further opportunity of exercising your talents upon them. Listen! I shall not again lose sight of you until you are my wife."

"Never, never," gasped Flora.

"You shall be my wife before another sun sets."

The words were hissed rather than spoken.

"No, I shall not. I swear it."

"And I have sworn you shall."

"Why are you so eager to marry me? Lie not by telling me it is because you love me."

Ian started and hesitated before he replied. Assuming a careless air, however, he said—

"That it does not at present suit me to tell you, since you are in a mood to question my statements. Before long you will be compelled to believe I have given you my hand, whether you think you have the heart with it or not."

"Is your hand your own to give?"

He started when he heard the question as if he had been stabbed, then reddened to the temples, while he clenched his hands, set his teeth, and glared wildly at the questioner with eyes in which gleamed an ominous light. Then he recovered himself, and forcing a laugh, replied—

"Enough of banter now. Come, prepare to go with me at once. But I forgot you had a companion. You had better bid her good-bye. But I will go forward to see her; she looks shy, but the shyness may be assumed, in which case there may be a reason why I should ascertain whether I know her."

"There may be a reason," replied Flora, significantly; "but I have received no answer to the question I put."

With a muttered oath, Ian strode past her without deigning to reply, and now Flora's heart fluttered as she turned to watch how Jeannie Gordon would meet him.

As he approached, Jeannie rose slowly and calmly to her feet, and in a voice which sounded thrilling in its deep terrible expressiveness, said—

"Yes, Randal Murray, there may be a reason why you should know me."

With what an intense, eager interest did Flora watch the effect of the words! And it was such as caused her heart to bound with joy, replaced by a deeper sorrow for the girl who stood beside her.

Ian started, then stood as if transfixed, gazing at Jeannie with eyes that seemed about to start from their sockets—his face white and bloodless as that of a corpse. Then he involuntarily staggered back a pace, his whole frame quivering with furious excitement, as he hoarsely exclaimed—

"Who are you? What fiend sent you here?"

There was no sign of weakness about Jeannie Gordon now. Her cold, sad eyes gazed steadily at M'Kenzie, and without moving a muscle, she replied—

"Who am I? Why should you ask? I am Jeannie Gordon, the innocent girl whom I do now from the bottom of my heart believe that you purposely betrayed and ruined. I am the mother of your child, and before Heaven, if not before men, your wife. It was no fiend that sent me here, but a wise and good Providence, that I might check you in the performance of another act of villainy."

Guilt was manifest in every feature of M'Kenzie's face; but nevertheless he braved it out. Bestowing a glance of malignant hatred upon Jeannie, he cried fiercely—

"Woman, you lie. I know nothing of you. Nor shall your presence here cause me to quit my purpose. You are without the shadow of a claim. Come, Flora Macgregor; it is with you I have to deal at present. Step into this boat."

"No," replied Flora, indignation and contempt beaming in every feature. "Now you can desire nothing with me. It is impossible for you now to consummate your desire, while your own wife lives; still less possible is it for me to consent to any such proceeding while she stands beside you."

Ian had now somewhat recovered his composure.

"A pretty little plot," he sneered; "but it shall be unsuccessful." Then he stepped forward to Flora with a determined air as he continued—"If not with your consent, you must accompany me without it. Come away, I have your uncle's sanction."

Just as he was about to seize our heroine's wrist, Jeannie stepped forward, and with tears in her eyes, said mournfully—

"Randal, Randal, for the sake of your child, will you not recognise me, and forego your intention?"

"Curse you, woman! go and leave me, else I will—" and he scowled significantly as he clenched his fist, and assumed a threatening attitude.

Again did the tears vanish from the fair face, and the strange lustre return to the eyes.

"Randal Murray, you may think you have done well; you may live to realise that you have erred. For years with a woman's devotion I have endeavoured to search you out and show to you my love. I have found you, and you have changed my love into hatred. Henceforth I will devote my whole energies to prevent this child—yours and mine—lawfully begotten—from growing up with the brand of disgrace and infamy upon it. When that is accomplished, then will I live only as an avenger—to avenge myself and it upon you for the misery you have caused us. For your own sake, I earnestly implore you to leave Miss Macgregor. Heaven will not permit its holiest laws to be constantly broken with impunity."

Cuba is represented as arming, determined to resist any demand that may be made for the punishment of General Burriel.

JACKSON & HALLETT,
Lower Wyndham-street, Guelph.

A St. John telegram, dated Dec 1st, says that Messrs. Burpee and De-veber were elected by acclamation. Mr. Deveber spoke briefly, promising the Government a hearty support, in so far as they acted fairly by the whole country. Mr. Burpee reviewed the general policy of the late Govern-ment, showing that whilst he desired to stand by them, he could not con-sistently do so. Mr. Palmer spoke and declared Mr. Huntington an annexationist. There were loud calls for Mr. Anglin, but he declined to speak, merely contradicting Mr. Palmer's statement as to Mr. Hun-tington.

The Ottawa correspondent of the Hamilton Times says:—Mr. Cart-wright's great victory in Lennox has completely discouraged the Tory party here, and it is astonishing how public opinion has changed. Were an election to take place in Ottawa to-morrow, it would be carried by a Reform candidate.

The Ministers in town are Messrs. Mackenzie, Dorion, D. A. McDonald and Letellier de St. Just.

A large new stock of dolls, ladies' companions, buildin' blocks, games, toys and other goods suited for this season now opened up at Day's Bookstore.
